It seems to me that the government could very easily have found a more logical and simple way of accomplishing a pretty laudable objective, but just as the government did in the case of the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc) with respect to lobster regulations, and in the case of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) in attempting to bring some logic into the Anti-Inflation Board procedures, it has messed it up again, which it has a propensity for doing. Just as the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) have had to admit that they had to abandon their plans for a levy on exports, and just as the Minister of State (Fisheries) has had to modify his lobster regulations, so I fear will the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General—

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I really do not want to contradict the hon. member, but if he had attended the session which most of his colleagues attended, he would have found that we did not change the policy. We simply explained it, and it is proceeding as planned.

Mr. MacKay: I appreciate those remarks from the Minister of State (Fisheries) but I think his troubles are not yet over, judging by the response of the fishermen in my constituency. It may be a little premature for him to say that he will not have to change his policy, judging by the type of reaction—

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I said we have not changed it.

Mr. MacKay: I say that perhaps the minister is a bit premature in assuming that he will not have to change that policy.

In any event, as far as these particular provisions are concerned, I will deal with the bill. I am sure hon. members will appreciate my passing references to the bill, although I intend to mention some other matters tonight involving civil liberties and types of legislation which I am sure Your Honour will find relevant.

The proposed section 103 is a very interesting provision. It provides the following:

> Whenever a peace officer believes on reasonable grounds that an offence is being committed or has been committed against any of the provisions of this Act relating to prohibited weapons, restricted weapons, other firearms or ammunition, he may search, without warrant, a person or vehicle, or place or premises other than a dwelling-house, and may seize anything by means of or in relation to which he reasonably believes the offence is being committed or has been committed.

To begin with, why without warrant? This sets the tone for all this legislation. I suggest—and this is what people in my constituency believe—that this legislation is a needless encroachment on the civil liberties of people. Clause 83 of the bill reads as follows:

> Every one who carries or has in his possession a weapon or imitation thereof, for a purpose dangerous to the public peace or for the purpose of committing an offence, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for ten years.

What sort of offence is meant by that?

Then there is another interesting provision clause, clause 86, which says:

> Every one who is an occupant of a motor vehicle in which he knows there is a prohibited weapon
>
> (a) is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for five years, or
>
> (b) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

What about the case of a person being in a car before he knows that there is one of these so-called dangerous or prohibited weapons present? Is he supposed to request the driver to stop the car in the middle of a lonely road so that he can get out?

These are only a couple of examples, and they just underline the ludicrousness of what is attempted to be done here. This is like hunting squirrels with an elephant gun, and I hope the Minister of Justice will do as he did with the criminal law amendments bill—change some sections in committee—and give a little bit of thought to improving and making a bit more workable and a bit more sensible what is essentially not a bad idea, in theory.

As I said earlier, I have been receiving a tremendous amount of mail and telegrams—some orchestrated, some not orchestrated—from people in my constituency whom I know to be honest and responsible people. They are not extremists or people who are alarmed that the government is suddenly going to declare a dictatorship because they do not have any guns with which to defend themselves, but they resent sincerely this further encroachment on what they consider to be a reasonable privilege, that is, to possess rifles, or in some cases pistols, for a legitimate use.

I will read one letter. It is very typical and very short. It is dated March 1, and says:

> Dear Mr. MacKay: This is to voice my opinion with regards to the proposed legislation on private ownership of long guns . . . This could be just one more case where the private citizen has a privilege lost or restricted. The restriction in my opinion as well as many others would be in vain as common sense no doubt has told you, as it has me, that criminals will be no harder put to obtain such firearms. I fear that government will be swayed by the anti-gun lobbyists whom I am confident do not represent the opinion of the majority. Hoping my opinions are worth your attention. Yours sincerely,
>
> (Signed) James Langille
>
> Sunny Brae
>
> Pictou County.

Surely there must be a bit of common sense involved here in assessing the priorities of this type of legislation. Some time ago there was a statistical analysis saying that most murders in Canada were committed in the kitchen. Probably the Minister of Justice ought to consider abolishing kitchens; that might help the situation.

There is another school of thought which says that if guns are dangerous, so are knives and so is gunpowder, One could go on to ludicrous lengths, and I do not intend to do that tonight in suggesting dangerous objects that might be restricted,—but I do want to say to the Minister of Justice that I hope he will take the type of approach he took when the Criminal Lawyers' Association of Ontario and other concerned people pointed out to him some of the dangers implicit in unduly restricting, in the name of bureaucratic convenience, some of the privileges and some of the rights of his fellow citizens. I think it was the proposed section 440 of the criminal law amendments bill where in the name of bureaucratic convenience it was proposed to do away with some pretty fundamental procedural rights enjoyed by people charged under the law. As I remember it, the minister was going to waive to quite an extent the safe-guards to an accused having to do with procedural rules of court, and he had this section sandwiched in between a section dealing with preserving order and dealing with the public trial of juveniles. I know he did not do it on purpose, but it was a fundamental loss of privilege, and to the credit of the minister, he realized that and withdrew it.

The type of legislation, as the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) pointed out, which is most needed does not even appear in this package, and that has to do with problems involving the use of hard drugs, the concept of rehabilitation, and doing something about the inordinately high rate of crime in which, unfortunately, native people find themselves involved. These are the types of things that the government ought to be concerned about, and I find it passing strange that it is placing such a priority on guns at this particular time.

I suggest that the government ought to be more concerned about the feelings of Canadians who right now are being confronted with a bewildering variety of bureaucrats, such as the statistician at Statistics Canada who can threaten—with some justification because of that legislation,—that he can put people in jail if they do not give him statistics. Also people are confronted with another type of bureaucrat, the man who comes along and demands to see their books for income tax purposes, and countless other types of the species who are empowered to encroach upon the privacy of people.

There are all kinds of bureaucrats in this country, and Canadians are beginning to resent them more and more. I suggest that in this case what Canadians are most concerned about is the fact that they are getting foisted on them another type of procedure which will interfere with something they consider pretty basic, owning a gun, and I say with all respect that that is not necessary.

I for one have a pretty healthy skepticism of the motives of the government in bringing forward this type of legislation at this time. As far as I am concerned its record in fostering or promoting the well-being of our country leaves much to be desired. The very term peace and security is a semantic trick. I always thought peace and security were the function of our armed forces. If the government wants to give us peace and security in the true national sense it will pay more attention to our defence needs, otherwise we will have the kind of peace and security they have in Russia and Cuba. I suggest it get down to the business of law and order. That is what we are talking about tonight, not peace and security.

[Mr. MacKay.]

• (2040)

When you look at the government's record, and its responsibility for protecting people's peace and security and rights, it is interesting to look at other legislation. Let us look at the Federal Court Act, Mr. Speaker. There is an interesting provision, a fairly recent one, in section 41(2) which says:

> When a minister of the Crown certifies to any court by affidavit that the production or discovery of a document or its contents would be injurious to international relations, national defence or security, or to federal-provincial relations, or that it would disclose a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada—

That is interesting.

> —discovery and production shall be refused without any examination of the document by the court.

This is a fairly new phenomenon. It used to require a judicial act; at least the court or judge had a right to look at the document and decide whether the Crown's representations were sufficient to stop production of the document. It is a strictly fundamental right—we no longer have it!

Let us look at another type of security for a certain type of Canadian. Take the 15,000, 16,000 or 17,000 people in the RCMP who are subject to the dictates—and I use the word advisedly—of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act and regulations. I have had occasion recently to look into the circumstances involved in the discharge of two RCMP veterans who were supposed all of a sudden to be unsuitable after 20 years of the highest type of service. They were discharged under regulation 173 and I think there is a good possibility they were erroneously discharged. But regulation 155 reads:

> Where the discharge of a member other than an officer is ordered the commanding officer of the member shall cause a discharge board to be convened.

This was never done in the case of Messrs. McCleery and Brunet. Instead they were tossed down the garbage chute under regulation 173 which provides, the way the minister interprets it that all of a sudden a person can be declared unsuitable and be thrown out of a force he served with distinction for 20 years. This type of conduct does not give me much confidence when considering legislation like that before us, and the motives of the Solicitor General.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: How will these rules and regulations regarding the use of guns by ordinary Canadians be interpreted? How many bureaucrats will it take to interpret them? When this bill goes to committee, and I shall certainly vote to send it there, I hope we will find a way to simplify the provisions and make them more equitable. If that is not done it will cause many Canadians to become law breakers. People who have not broken the law before will, I think, refuse to accept the type of regulation that I see embedded in this bill.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) had some interesting things to say when he commented on the wire tape provisions in the bill. It seems to me the Minister of Justice would be ill-advised to hurry to change these provisions as they now exist.

I understand that the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice have had occasion to study the national commission for the review of federal and state laws relating to wire tapping and electronic surveillance in the United States, and some mention may be made of these as the days go by in regard to the provisions of these proposed laws in the United States.

It seems to me that people who say that wire tapping is some kind of panacea or some great solution for controlling the activities of the criminal element are exaggerating. I think it is a valuable tool but I do not think the extension of the power merits the consequent menacing of civil rights that this implies. It seems to me that the judiciary must be relied upon to a greater and greater extent in supervising application under this type of legislative application, and indeed in supervising and taking part in the whole structure of law and order as they used to do.

The position of judges today is being eroded. There is no question about that. It seems to me that a judge is about the only one in our system whose only mandate it is to do the right thing. Sometimes politicians cannot do it for political reasons; sometimes lawyers cannot do it because of certain pressures so judges are the persons to whom the average Canadian looks to protect his civil liberties. When the Minister of Justice or anyone else starts to undermine a judge's discretion by introducing the concept of mandatory sentences, even in a small way, it makes me uneasy. You do not have to be a judge to hear a guilty plea and give a mandatory sentence. Anyone could do that.

The way the parole system works now pretty well isolates the judge. I am sure many a competent justice or magistrate agonized over what he considers an appropriate sentence for a particular case, has given what he considers a fair verdict and much to his surprise when going down the street a few months later, meets the person he sentenced to a term of several years.

Surely there must be some way that judges can be brought closer to the parole board in reassessing whether it is appropriate to allow the criminals they have sentenced to be put back on the street. I think the minister should address himself to this.

There is one other thing I should like to suggest to the minister tonight, Mr. Speaker, and I say it without malice and I mean no harm to the Solicitor General either. One of the most interesting things the minister could do in gathering together the elements of law enforcement in this country and the reassessment and readjustment of the judicial and police processes, would be to be less concerned about abolishing capital punishment and more concerned about abolishing the office of solicitor general altogether. That is not an original idea. I am looking back some years at things that were said and the warnings given by a former minister of justice.

In the Toronto Star of December 22, 1965, a former minister of justice, Davie Fulton, was quoted as saying when the Solicitor General's department was taken out of the Department of Justice: It would be far more likely under the new setup that an RCMP report would never get to the Department of Justice.

That is from a former and respected minister of justice in those days who made the prediction of trouble ahead. Another former minister of justice, the former minister of finance who has recently resigned from this place, also had misgivings about the duality of responsibility between the Ministry of Justice and the office of the Solicitor General. He must have felt, as I do, that it is rather incongruous that the Attorney General of Canada, the chief legal adviser to the government, does not have direct command of the national police force.

In an old newspaper article entitled "Justice Department—How to Re-Create the Image" there are a few very interesting quotes which I should like to put on the record.

> For decades, justice was one of the prime seats of power in Ottawa, the justice portfolio ranked second only to the prime minister's job; the minister who held the post had political power and prestige almost unmatched in the federal government.

I think this is particularly vital at this time when public confidence in the administration of justice is, to put it charitably, pretty well shaken. The article continues:

> Then something happened. Justice went into a nosedive from which it still has not recovered.

This article appeared in 1969 and there is no reason to believe that justice has made any great strides since then. It continues:

> The decline began during the late fifties and early sixties.

The article then refers to some of the factors.

> ... the damaging involvement of two Liberal justice ministers in the scandals of the mid sixties. The late Guy Favreau left the post under a cloud as a result of the Rivard affair.

It goes on to trace the history and points out that during his brief stint as minister of justice the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) managed to swing the spotlight back on his portfolio by putting through controversial and very famous amendments to the Criminal Code.

● (2050)

The article goes on to say that Mr. Turner, then minister of justice, had several new bills he would like to bring before the Commons. It states what they were. The article continues:

> So he's turning his attention to re-establishing justice as a power centre of government—"putting the department back in the ball game", as he calls it.

That is interesting. In 1969 the then minister of justice wanted to put his department back in the ballgame. Instead, he recently left the ballpark. I wonder if that frustration had anything to do with his decision to go. The feeling in the department at that time was that the minister was making some progress. Obviously that was not the case.

I want to say again that this is something the Minister of Justice ought to consider very seriously. He ought to ask himself whether, in billing this piece of legislation as part of a so-called peace and security package, he can honestly do that in conjunction with a minister, however honest and sincere in his feelings, who differs philosophically from him. It is said that a house divided against itself cannot stand. It seems that the Department of Justice and the Department of the Solicitor General are pretty well divided against themselves. As these articles point out, justice has lost control over many of the functions that once made it a vital and prestigious department.

The portfolio of Solicitor General has as it its present incumbent a minister who has said unequivocally that he cannot live with capital punishment. What happens if the capital punishment legislation does not turn out the way the Solicitor General wants it? Will he resign? If that is the case, the Minister of Justice will have to break in a new sidekick. He should seriously suggest to the Prime Minister and his cabinet colleagues that he draw back into his portfolio the Solicitor General's duties. If there is an extra cabinet slot around, probably the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) could use it to create a ministry of air. He needs more help in transport than the Minister of Justice, capable as he is, needs in administering justice, as difficult a job as that may be.

I urge the minister to consider changing in committee, along the lines suggested so ably by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), some of the unnecessary and counter-productive things presently contained in his rather cumbersome legislation. I urge him to give a lot of thought to the very fine speech made by the hon. member for New Westminster. He pointed out very dramatically some of the deficiencies in this legislation in the sense that it overlooks completely some of the relevant things that should logically be a much higher priority than interfering with the rights of people, particularly those in rural areas who want to continue having rifles and shotguns which, for the most part, they use very sensibly. In many cases they are essential tools to shoot vermin. They use these guns for purposes which no one, by the remotest stretch of the imagination, could say was a menace to law-abiding citizens.

If a person wishes to commit an act of violence, he does not need a gun. Also, there is no guarantee that if a commissioner of official feels that a person is entitled to have a gun by reason of his present sanity that he may not within a couple of weeks turn into a depraved maniac.

A couple of amendments to the Criminal Code with very minor penalties, at least initially, would have the desired effect of encouraging law-abiding people to register their guns, in a more conscientious way then at present. That is all that is needed.

An hon. Member: It is not in the bill.

Mr. MacKay: No, but it certainly could be in the bill. The authorities would then know where any guns happen to be at any given moment and who had them. It is ridiculous to try to equate a trade-off in two separate philosophical areas and set this off to the Canadian people as some kind of tit for tat arrangement, gun control for abolition of the death penalty.

If we should abolish capital punishment, fine, but let us debate it. If we should do certain things to rehabilitate prisoners, let us consider that. If we should regulate guns, let us consider that. However, let us not have a dishonest and semantic practice where something is done in order to compensate for doing something else. That is absolutely dishonest.

Mr. Woolliams: Deliberately.

Mr. MacKay: Yes, probably deliberately as a calculated measure. If the minister will let the committee have a long time to study this legislation and permit people from a broad spectrum of society to present their views and opinions, he will eventually become convinced that he is, as I said, hunting squirrels with an elephant gun. He does not need this regressive and restrictive legislation to accomplish that which should be a very laudable objective. Instead, what he has done is arouse a lot of needless alarm, cause a lot of hard feelings and worry among decent law-abiding citizens who have never broken the law in their lives and never will, unless they get caught as a result of some stupid legislative procedure.

[Mr. MacKay.]

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to participate in the debate on the peace and security legislation brought in by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), as it is an honour to be a sitting member of the Thirtieth Parliament, a parliament that has been highlighted by controversial but progressive legislation.

All members of this House know that there is a growing public concern about the rising number of firearms incidents in Canada. Statistics show that from one year to the next there are more murders, armed robberies, suicides and accidents than the previous year. In 1974 almost 1,500 Canadians were killed from the use of firearms, an increase of over 30 per cent since 1970. Statistics also show that our population has not increased by 30 per cent. Therefore there has been an actual growth of death from gunshot wounds outside of our normal population increase.

During the same time period, 1974, firearms were used in half of Canada's 543 murders and in 30 per cent of Canada's 15,000 robberies. This, Mr. Speaker, is unacceptable, not only to this House but also to the majority of Canadians who are appalled at the indiscriminate use of firearms. Canadian people have asked the government for remedial legislation and I congratulate the Minister of Justice for providing that leadership to bring in tough, but rational legislation to make this country of ours a better place for all of us. As all hon. members know, Canada has had strict controls for many years regarding handguns. In this class of weapons, Canada's record is excellent.

I would like to curtail my remarks regarding the peace and security measures to gun control since my constituency is primarily a rural constituency and the proposed legislation will have a very direct impact on the riding of Comox-Alberni. I might say that the Minister of Justice is aware of this and has hunted in this area.

First, let me state that we in the government realize that long rifles or shotguns are not lethal themselves; it is the person pulling the trigger who may be dangerous, and the proposed legislation deals with the user of the firearm rather than with the firearm itself. This is a correct assessment, in my opinion, and therefore I support the licensing of the individual and not the registration of firearms as the most rational way of dealing with the prevention of abuse of rifles and shotguns.

U.S. studies suggest death is at least five times as likely in an incident involving a gun as opposed to some other weapon. If the government seeks a reduction in the level of firearm violence, it cannot simply be obtained by punishing severely those who are responsible for firearm incidents but a program must be initiated, preventive in nature, to screen out those people who are potentially dangerous or irresponsible, judging from their past histories.

● (2100)

We as a government cannot provide unrestricted access to a means of destruction any longer, and if this is seriously questioned then our whole policy must fail. We must pursue the philosophy of reducing the misuse of firearms. Not one hon. member of this House would suggest that an 8-year old child should be given the care and custody of a rifle since we are all aware that a child of that age does not have the background to operate a weapon safely. Using the example of a child may appear far-fetched. However, we know there are people who are mentally incapable of possessing firearms with any degree of responsibility, yet up to this date we have made no provision for those who are mentally handicapped. We also know that in each of our communities there are people who, because of their aggressive nature, are a danger to their families and neighbours if they are allowed weapons during a moment of rage. To state otherwise would be a complete abrogation of the situation as we know it.

Mr. Epp: "Abrogation of the situation"? What does that mean?

Mr. Anderson: There are people in our society who are not responsible. By the same token, hon. members of this House would in no way give an absolute right to any Canadian to operate a motor vehicle, knowing there are many people in our society who cannot handle this responsibility.

The right to possess or own a firearm is not an inviolate law of God carved in stone. Rights imply responsibility, and those who do not have sufficient responsibility should not have such rights.

I would like briefly to review the thrust of the government's legislation and comment on the different aspects of this legislation as they affect the average Canadian citizen's use and control of firearms. First, the federal government will attempt to collect guns that are not being used, and encourage Canadians to turn them in. This seems to be an eminently reasonable stance for the government to take since it is well known that many pistols, rifles, and shotguns are passed on from one generation to another, whether there is a need for them or not. Firearms kept in many homes in this country have parts missing, or are slightly damaged and will probably never be used. But the danger still exists that either someone in the family or someone outside the family may be injured or killed by these unwanted firearms, due entirely to the proximity of these weapons during a family argument or, as so often happens with weapons which are left unattended, because children become involved with them.

I understand the government will back up this campaign with a media educational effort and I trust this will be an on-going process, not merely a campaign of one or two months' duration. I believe it is important to carry on gun education on a full time basis in order that we attain a responsible citizenry well aware of the dangers of the uncontrolled use of firearms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anderson: The government's position of eliminating certain weapons from the Canadian scene, for example, Saturday night specials, long guns which have been sawed off, and fully automatic weapons, should be supported, and it is my understanding that this legislation will prohibit their use in Canada. As well, tighter controls will be exercised over the manufacture and importation of firearms into Canada. I applaud the intention to issue permits to manufacturers, wholesalers and importers of weapons.

One of the greatest fears felt by my constituents is that the federal government will either restrict the use of long rifles to an extent that would be unacceptable to them or, second, that we in government would abolish their use totally. Registration of long guns, with all the bureaucratic red tape involved, was not seen as a solution to the restriction of firearms by my constituents. I was personally very pleased that the government did not take the bureaucratic route but that it chose the sensible route, not of registering firearms but of licensing the individual.

We are all aware that in order to drive a motor vehicle a licence is required, and this licence is obtained by achieving a certain level of competence on the road. This does not guarantee that everyone who has a driver's licence will behave in a responsible manner. However, it does guarantee that an individual has attained a certain level of competence before being allowed to operate a motor vehicle on the highway. The stand the government has taken with respect to the ownership of firearms is very similar. Basically our position is that if one is competent to own a firearm, then the number of firearms owned is not important. It is the stress on the original licence, showing competence to own a firearm in the first place, in which the government is interested. A federal firearm licence will be required by anyone who owns a firearm, whether he be a hunter, skeet-shooter, or for whatever reason he wishes to own a gun. Persons who have a history of violent behaviour or of drug or alcohol abuse, or mental instability, will not be able to obtain a licence to possess firearms or ammunition. I applaud this measure. As I stated earlier, it is my sincere belief that the weapon itself is not dangerous, but that it is the person who pulls the trigger who can be potentially dangerous.

An application for a federal licence to own firearms will require certification by two guarantors drawn from an approved class of persons—similar to the requirements for Canadian passport applications—who will be required to certify that they know of no reason why the applicant is unfit to possess a gun or ammunition. The application would then be considered by a licensing officer or a registrar of firearms and, if approved, the licence would be issued for a period of five years. The system will be administered by the province and the RCMP, and will be totally self-financed with licence fees set at a level sufficient to cover costs.

I must also commend the government on its provisions governing the revocation of licences: reasons will be provided in writing and a right of appeal to a court of law will exist. The concept of licensing the individual rather than the firearms will, I believe, be accepted by the majority of hunters and participants in gun clubs, as they realize better than anyone else that restricting the use of guns to the responsible segment of our community is not only desirable but a necessity in order that law-abiding citizens can continue to enjoy the use of long guns or shot guns. They, above all other citizens, realize that continued abuse of gun ownership would only result in a decline of their freedom, freedom they rightly cherish, and a right they should continue to enjoy as a result of their responsibility.

● (2110)

I realize that the section dealing with the age requirements for obtaining a licence is going to cause a certain amount of controversy, and that the provision that only those of 18 years of age will be able to obtain a firearm licence will be viewed as excessively restrictive, especially to rural areas. I also realize there is a special permit that can be obtained by minors over 14 for target shooting, game hunting, and instruction in the use of firearms; but there again that in itself may be unduly restrictive in rural communities.

I believe that the bill may be better served if a further clause were added to provide that children under the age of 18, with parental approval and when accompanied by an adult, could obtain a special permit without any restriction upon age. This special permit could then be modified so as not to allow for the purchase of firearms or ammunition and could only be used for purposes of target shooting, game hunting or instruction in the use of firearms. I hope the minister will take this into consideration as discussion of this bill proceeds.

Under the new law, Mr. Speaker, in order to implement the licensing aspect of this legislation all dealers in firearms will require a permit to engage in such a business. It is my understanding that this permit will be issued only when the registrar is satisfied that the dealer meets conditions specified in regulations; for example, that the dealer's premises are secure and the firearms and ammunition themselves are secure. If I may say so, Mr. Speaker, surely those people who are opposing this legislation cannot oppose a simple, straightforward, and logical situation which requires a dealer in firearms to have a secure premises. We should have had this requirement years ago, yet I have not heard one word said on items in this bill that I think we all agree are necessary and long overdue.

This will impose a certain hardship upon the gun and ammunition dealer since he will also be required to keep a record of all firearm and ammunition transactions in order to ensure that these transactions take place only with valid licence holders. This, of course, is going to be an imposition upon the small businessmen across Canada who are engaged in this type of business. Knowing this I can only comment that the inconvenience of recording these transactions are less severe than a total abolition of guns and ammunition. The present mood of the country is such that without this type of legislation the sale of firearms and ammunition conceivably could have been banned by this parliament.

The government's attempt to ensure that both buyer and seller are responsible is important but is only one half of the answer. Responsibility of those qualifying will not end with the issuing of a permit or licence. Those who possess firearms must use them with all due care for the safety not only of themselves but of those around them. The owner of a gun must take reasonable precaution in its use, carriage, handling or storage, and will now be liable to prosecution if those reasonable precautions are not taken.

This is again very similar to licensing an individual to operate a motor vehicle. The licence is not an absolute right, and the prosecution and conviction of a person operating a motor vehicle in a negligent manner are well understood in our society, especially by some of the lawyers on the other side of the House. Penalties for the owners who fail to take reasonable precautions in the use of a weapon should necessarily follow, just as negligent driving results in penalties to the owner of a motor vehicle. If there is disagreement with that, Mr. Speaker, then we had better go back to square one and to the law of negligence as it applies to motor vehicles. As I said earlier, I hope a right also carries with it a responsibility.

To those gun owners who may object to this part of the legislation, I would only bring their attention to what they have been saying, which is do not impose penalties on the responsible sector of our community or society. To this I say amen. What the gun clubs have not said is that that responsibility extends to the home and to the storage of these weapons. This, I believe, is a logical step in the carrying and handling of a weapon since most of the time the weapon is in the home and not being used. It is therefore imperative that, during these long periods of time when the weapon is not being used, it should be stored in a safe manner. Again, Mr. Speaker, I feel that is common sense.

Another aspect of the gun control legislation is the proposed change to the Criminal Code that will allow the police to seize a firearm without a warrant if, in their opinion, it constitutes an imminent danger to the safety of some person. An excellent example of why this amendment to the Criminal Code has been introduced is the threatening situation that may arise, for example, if the police are called to a domestic dispute and discover a firearm on the premises. It takes no great amount of intelligence to realize that there is potential danger, and it would be an irresponsible police officer who did not take appropriate action. We are now giving him discretionary power to do so.

Under the old legislation the police were powerless to take action. Under the proposed new legislation the weapon could be seized in order to protect the individual or individuals involved in the domestic dispute. It is my understanding that upon seizure a hearing would be held in court to determine the disposition of such a weapon, depending on the circumstances. It might be returned, destroyed or disposed of, depending on the court's decision. Once again the courts are drawn into it but, as I say, I welcome the discretionary power that is given to the police.

This may be regarded by many Canadians as a step toward a dictatorial government relying upon discretion and not upon the commission of the act itself. It may be argued that this allows too much discrimination to the police, and that if an officer makes a bad decision then it is the law abiding citizen who suffers. By the same token it is ridiculous to allow a group of terrorists to accumulate a cache of weapons and the police have to wait until a crime or act of terrorism is under way before these weapons can be confiscated. I realize the problem of discretionary power given to the police. They can be wrong on occasion. However, the greater weight of evidence would show that most police officers are responsible, and if the seizure of weapons would prevent the loss of life then I think that most members of this parliament would accept the discretionary powers of the police in dangerous situations.

In discussing gun control I, as with other members of this House, must accept the reality that criminal conduct will continue. Criminals must be made aware that the use of a firearm in the conduct of a crime will be severely punished, something that has not been the case to date. The new legislation specifically provides that when a firearm crime does occur the courts must have the power to demonstrate society's repudiation of such conduct. To deter the use of offensive weapons in the commission of crimes a separate offence to this effect will be created.

A person convicted of using an offensive weapon while committing an indictable offence will be subject to imprisonment for at least one year and possibly up to 14 years, regardless of what sentence has been imposed for the actual commission of the crime itself. This in itself should deter criminals from using firearms in the commission of a crime; if it does not, then what will result are longer sentences for criminals using weapons. I believe that this is a realistic step and I applaud the minister for his recognition of this very important fact of criminal life. We all deplore organized crime in our country, and all Canadians, including members of this House, will applaud laws to toughen the law.

● (2120)

In summary, I support the gun control legislation included in the peace and security measures of this legislation. To those who oppose this gun control legislation I say, what are the alternatives? Our society is based on the rights of the individual and the responsibilities of the individual. If, in society, use and ownership of firearms are permitted, such rights must be given with responsibilities attached to them.

For too long we have skirted the issue of gun control. Our neighbour to the south is an example of what can happen when gun control is not enforced. I do not think that we, in this country, want to restrict the use of firearms by law abiding, responsible segments of our communities; on the other hand we wish to restrict the ownership and use of firearms on the part of those not mentally competent, or those who, in their day to day life, have shown themselves to be not responsible. The present gun control legislation will not solve all our country's problems to do with weapons; but certainly it is a significant step forward in making sure that only those who are socially responsible will possess weapons.

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, it is a delight to participate in this debate. Since the opening remarks I have listened to it with interest. Let me tell the members of this House, and those who can make any sense of this complex legislation, that its deterrent effect, which is what the government intends, will be negligible.

This House again is being subjected to debate on legislation which divides this great nation. We are debating an emotional issue, misunderstood by too many, but only too well understood by serious thinking Canadians who find this legislation abhorrent.

This is another example of the deceit and deception the government practises for achieving yet unknown goals. Surely we should discourage the practice of introducing controversial legislation in omnibus form. If the government were sure of its ground, the gun law would be introduced by itself. The government would have tried to sell it to the Canadian people on its merits. But the legislation has no merits. The gun control provisions are part of Bill C-83, and to secure passage the government was forced to introduce it in its present form. Members like myself favour certain portions of the bill. Yet because I cannot support one provision I may be forced to vote against the entire bill. That situation is reprehensible.

The minister knows that not all of Bill C-83 is controversial. Many members can accept and support much of Bill C-83. Why then is it in omnibus form? The reason is simply fear.

I take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) for moving an amendment to sever the 39 pages of the bill to do with gun control from the remainder of the bill consisting only of amendments to existing law. Moving that motion demonstrates the concern of this party in attempting to debate, analyze, and come to reasonable and sensible conclusions on gun control legislation. We do not want to be under the stigma of having been influenced by the issues in the remainder of Bill C-83. We in this party believe certain gun control measures ought to be taken and are long overdue. In my opinion there is a more sensible and reasonable approach to the control of guns than is demonstrated in this bill.

No one denies the sincerity with which both ministers approached this subject. Yet all must agree that they are naive. What is the intent of Bill C-83? As presently constituted, it will require the registration of all firearms known, or prescribed, as restricted weapons. It will require the registration by licence of every gun. The provision will apply to all guns other than restricted guns. But the existing law—I am not talking of Bill C-83 but of law which has existed up to the time of the introduction of Bill C-83—contains provision for registration of sidearms. Guns with barrels shorter than 26 inches are illegal.

The present law does not deal specifically with exotic weapons, which are usually in the possession of private gun collectors who have owned them for years, usually because they served in the armed forces of Canada in one of the last two great wars. These are rifles which have sentimental value beyond evaluation. Some have been in families from one generation to another. This bill will make such rifles, by reason of their function, either prohibited or restricted weapons. None of these weapons has ever been used in the commission of a felony. Now they are on the restricted list.

Sidearms are the most commonly used weapons in the commission of crime. They are available, and have been for years, on demand. The underworld has never experienced difficulty in obtaining whatever weapons it needed when it needed them. The weakness in the law has been that, on arrest and conviction for possession of an illegal sidearm, the penalty has been a small fine and, in some cases, a slap on the wrist with a suspended sentence.

Instead of licensing sport shotguns and sporting rifles, which are legal game guns, we need stiffer penalties for illegal possession of restricted or prohibited guns. In other words, guns which are today known as restricted, namely, sidearms or weapons which can be fired with one hand, should carry an automatic penalty of five years in prison for illegal possession.

A Canadian should be able to own an exotic gun. If a free thinking Canadian attaches symbolic or sentimental value to that device, he should be able to register it and commit it to a place in his or her residence. The address can be known to the police. Removal of that weapon from its registered address should become an offence, unless authorization is obtained. The government need merely publish a list of restricted and prohibited weapons and request the people of Canada to register these weapons. Failure to comply within a certain time frame should become a serious offence. Compliance would be as under Bill C-83, but the provisions of such law would not challenge the law-abiding Canadian's right to own any number of sporting guns under penalty of a registration fee.

The premise that guns are responsible for so many homocides is most irresponsible. So are knives, fists, face towels, and hair brushes responsible for homocides. Is the government to ban all these? Ridiculous, you say. Sure it is. But to say that a registered weapon in a home will never be used in homocide is equally stupid. The problem of homocides in society is not that of guns per se. It is the people who use them, and for what purpose. Registration does not get at the reason for using a gun—

● (2130)

An hon. Member: Why do you say "registration"?

Mr. Skoreyko: Registration or licensing. Whoever the member is, if he ever owned a gun he would know that licensing is registration. Registration does not get at the reason for using a gun contrary to law. Anxiety, the struggle to keep one's head above financially troubled waters, lead to behaviour patterns we have experienced in recent years. What causes these undesirable behaviour patterns that confuse and compound the problem? The answer is taxation, double taxation as practised by this government, and simply the cost to the wage earner of earning a dollar. Then there is inflation which is the root of family problems in Canada, indeed in the world. The breadwinner works his guts out to better himself and his family, only to find that he is a little short in every pay cheque each month.

Also there is materialism. There is a tendency on the part of younger people in our society to start off a marriage at the top, something that traditionally has taken people of my generation years to accomplish. Sometimes it was never achieved in terms of the amenities upon which one may have targeted. However, that is life. One should set a pace, a pattern for achievement, material and professional. Too many times today we find, because certain projected goals have not been reached in time or seem out of reach, drastic steps have been taken to end it all in a "what's the use" sort of attitude. Government can play a role in easing the burden on society by relaxing controls—less government, not more.

[Mr. Skoreyko.]

Bill C-83 represents more controls, unnecessary controls, unworkable controls, expensive controls, and controls which can only be described as subversive. If you disarm the populace as was done in Hitler's time, in Stalin's time, and in Ireland, you leave the people at the mercy of unscrupulous politicians. Why do I say this, Mr. Speaker? The evidence is clear.

What kind of bureaucracy will it take to administer the gun control act? Will it take a bureaucracy of 50, 100 or 500 people? What will the cost be to the taxpayer? Since it is clear that the government wants this law to be self-supporting, what fees will be charged for the registration of a gun? What will be the cost of registering all guns? What sort of bureaucracy will be established?

Will it be a bureaucracy like the Anti-Inflation Board in respect of which it was said that no more than 200 people would be required to administer it? The figure is now nearly 500. Mr. Pepin says he will worry when the number goes over that figure.

The price of the Anti-inflation Board is no more than its worth to date, which is nothing. Is the same thing to happen in respect of this new branch of the Department of the Solicitor General? Will there be an additional 500 to 1,000 people; will there be another indirect tax, another intrusion into the Canadian way of life, and another step which will bring the government closer to defeat?

In recent years a burdensome, progressive or graduated income tax has been introduced. The government has abolished the right of inheritance. It has controlled the means of communication and indeed of transportation. The year 1968, by specious argument, contributed to the breakdown of moral virtues, honesty, sobriety, self-restraint, and the pioneering spirit. The government has attempted to shift people's minds off government by focusing their attention on the now infamous imposition of the War Measures Act, the Languages Act, the attack on the business community, wage and price controls, and the outburst in respect of the Quebec premier last week end. Mr. Speaker, what about that outburst?

An hon. Member: What about the bill?

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what it is about the junior members of the caucus over there that makes them think that anything we on this side of the House say is not good.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member address his remarks to Bill C-83.

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Speaker, I am addressing my remarks specifically to Bill C-83. I am trying to point out, for the benefit of those who do not know, the direction in which we are moving. The outburst in Quebec over the week end was referred to by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) simply as kibitzing on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). We do not have to be told that he is a kibitzer. We knew that in 1968. When we have things such as the introduction in this House of the War Measures Act, wage and price controls and the statements during the 1974 election that wage and price controls were not good for Canadians, it is evident that only a kibitzer could be that phony.

Mr. Benjamin: You voted for those things.

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister may have tried to fool some English-speaking Canadians of this country, particularly westerners, by what he said in Quebec, but he will not succeed because the Liberal Party knows that his usefulness to that party has come to an end and in the next election the Liberals will enter the election campaign with a new leader.

Worst of all, Mr. Speaker, is what has happened in recent times in this House. The government has attempted to cast a shadow over the judiciary. This is unforgivable. We had the OFY and the CYC. We saw the corruption of the young. We saw them move away from religion and to an interest in sex, alcohol and drugs. Finally we have the registration of firearms on the pretext of elimination of crime in our society, with a further view to their confiscation which would leave our society defenceless. This, to me, smacks of a communist doctrine.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Speaker, for the vociferous junior members of the caucus opposite let me say that the prospect of an authoritarian government in this country is not an impossibility. The Liberals have effectively controlled one out of the ten provinces for 50 years. Through that power base the judiciary is now regulated; publicity, television and the media are regulated. Transport is regulated, as are magazines. Wage and price controls are in place. In other words, with the passage of this bill the machinery for a demagogue, to be turned into a benevolent dictator, is in place.

The gun clubs of this country are concerned about this legislation. They have had competent solicitors analyze the bill. The message contained in this bill has been conveyed to them. The gun clubs have said that they will monitor the vote on this legislation, and will attempt to defeat at the next election any member of parliament who supports this measure. You know, as I know, Mr. Speaker, that they cannot achieve that end, but God bless them for having the guts to try.

● (2140)

As a Senator said not too long ago, let us start treating criminal as criminals—let us start by replacing bleeding heart cabinet ministers with ones who have enough courage to administer the law of the land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skoreyko: Let us get away from the attitude that a criminal is an object of sympathy because he committed a crime and could be dealt with harshly. This attitude encourages crime, does nothing to curtail it. Let us not impose upon hundreds of thousands of law abiding Canadians a law which is punitive, unnecessary, and one that will create a bureaucracy that is uncontrolled, unbridled, and unforgiving in the administration of a law which requires citizens to register guns which play no part in the commitment of a crime but which denies the right of citizens to do something they have the right to do, namely, to own a firearm.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Measures Against Crime

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the wide variety of speeches I must conclude that it is a very fortunate thing that we do not carry guns into the House of Commons, otherwise we would have 264 by-elections within a very short time! I imagine that the strength of a democracy lies in the diversity of opinion on many subjects. We have certainly heard a real diversity of opinion with regard to gun control and the other aspects of the bill before us.

The law and order legislation contained in Bill C-83 euphemistically called peace and security is the government's response to increasing crime and rampant violence in Canada and to the serious fears with regard to personal security in the minds of most Canadians today. The five areas dealt with in the bill, namely, gun control, dangerous offenders, parole, electronic surveillance, and special crime commissions are but a tip of the iceberg approach to achieve a society free of fear, safe and secure. The legislation is a reaction to problems rather than an action. It is a response rather than an approach to problems.

What is needed is action in three areas: the area of prevention, the area of detection, and the area of treatment, so that when persons are apprehended and convicted there should be treatment programs based on reformation and rehabilitation in order that when prisoners are released they can take their rightful place in the community.

Now I should like to speak briefly on the question of prevention. Let me say that the bill goes only a short distance with regard to prevention. We do not have legislation here with regard to drugs. I thought that my colleague, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), and the lead-off spokesman for the Conservative party underlined very well the necessity for legislation dealing with hard drugs and the control of people who use them, because we have a very high rate of violent crimes among drug offenders. It is not only legislation that is needed, we also need programs.

Similarly, we do not have legislation and programs with regard to native people. We have heard comments from several hon. members, which is to their credit, emphasizing the need for programs with regard to the native people in Canada. They commented on the need for a change in attitude among them. It is not only necessary to have court workers and community centres. There is also a need for programs to give the native people a positive attitude and a direction within the community.

We also need legislation and programs to control the problem of child abuse, a problem of which we are increasingly more aware in Canada. When I hear of the federal and provincial governments cutting back on health and medical costs, this indicates to me a lack of appreciation of the growing problem of child abuse and of the necessity of having programs to control this problem and to assist in solving it.

I recall the time when, back in 1967, a bill was brought before us with regard to young offenders. This problem has been studied but there is no legislation, and there are no programs to deal with the problems of young offenders. One of the serious criticisms against the last bill on young offenders was directed at the lack of diagnostic and treatment centres. These are vitally important in order that any legislation with regard to young offenders may be effective.

We need legislation and programs on housing, on full employment, on energy, and on inflation, because it is in these areas that the government has been a tragic failure. It is the government which is to blame for the devastating stress and strain on the individual, on family life, and on community life. What we need is priority with regard to spending.

When I hear of the millions of dollars that have been spent on EXPO and the millions of dollars which we anticipate spending on the acquisition of new aircraft it makes me realize that our priorities are probably at fault. The indictment does not lie on the shoulders of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) or the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), but the indictment with regard to the problems of violence and fear lies on all of us. As Canadians we have failed miserably in bringing forth social programs to help solve these problems.

May I direct the attention of members to the problems of violence today, because the violence which we are experiencing in our society is putting fear into the minds of the people, a fear which must be combatted. I recall the statement of the late President Roosevelt who said that the only thing we have to fear is fear itself. We have this problem of fear with regard to violence.

I should like to direct the attention of the Minister of Justice to the evidence given by Professor Greenland before the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare when he set forth some of the research that he has done on violence. Professor Greenland is a professor in social work at McMaster University. He specialized for the past seven years in research concerning violence. He spoke about some of the results of his study and he said that he had studied five different groups—one a group of 100 persons who have committed violent crimes against persons but have been found not guilty by reason of insanity, plus another group detained in Ontario mental hospitals who were found unfit to stand trial. These were serious offences that were committed by these people, offences such as murder, manslaughter and other serious crimes, often involving children.

The second group which he studied was composed of 100 persons who are inmates of penitentiaries and were found guilty of the same offences, namely, murder, manslaughter, and crimes involving children.

The third group was composed of 96 people currently incarcerated as dangerous sexual offenders.

The fourth group were people involved in murder followed by suicide. He pointed out that in Ontario in the last five years 65 individuals murdered, usually their children, then their spouses, and then destroyed themselves. He made a particular study with regard to that.

The final area he studied was the problem of child abuse.

● (2150)

There were four conclusions he reached about the problem of violence which were sent to the committee. The first conclusion was that there is a tremendous overlap in all these groups. In other words, the same people and the same members of families appear in each of the five studies, and even though violence takes on many manifestations and appears in many different forms, in many cases it involves the same individuals and the same families. That was one striking point.

The second striking point was that almost all the individuals studied had a common experience of severe deprivation in childhood. They were victims of inadequate child welfare and health services which failed to provide them with a basic system of care and protection. He pointed out that this severe deprivation in childhood is a cycle of deprivation which is passed on from one generation to another, with a multiplying effect with regard to violence and abuse within our society.

His third observation was that between one third and one half of violent criminal cases involve alcohol and drug abuse. His fourth was that in one half of all cases involved there was an adequate warning through help-seeking behaviour. In other words, people with mental conditions or mothers who were operating under great stress attempted to acquire help before an offence was committed; there was a failure in providing the proper health and mental care, and the result was that these people committed serious offences.

He underlined the programs which are necessary to deal with the environmental stresses of poor housing, poverty, and unemployment, and the necessity of having research to identify problems and to set forth programs to meet the problem of violence today.

If there is one thing the Minister of Justice should do it is to pay heed to the findings of Professor Greenland and other men within society who have made particular studies with regard to violence, because violence is the base and the rock bottom of many of our problems today. It is the rock bottom with regard to the fears people have, and the rock bottom with regard to the resultant actions.

When I consider the matter of gun control, which is dealt with in this bill, I notice that the main purpose of the gun control legislation is to control the availability of guns, to promote increased public responsibility in relation to firearms, and to increase the penalties for the use of guns during the commission of offences.

Right here and now I should like to give credit to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) who set forth tonight in detail his views with regard to gun control in Canada. He is to be credited for this because it was a detailed explanation.

One of the problems which besets most Canadians is the availability of guns. It is really shocking how easy it is to obtain a firearm. When we consider the figures involved we realize that guns claim one half of our murdered victims, that murders committed with the use of firearms in 1970 amounted to 178, whereas in 1974 they amounted to 272, that one third of Canada's 2,500 suicide victims clearly died as a result of the use of fireams, and that over 100 accidental deaths were caused by the use of firearms. Is it any wonder that we are reaping a whirlwind of violence when we have the availability of guns which exists today?

I am sure that I and most of the hon. members in my party welcome the licensing of persons and limitations on the use of guns by young people. I think the licensing provisions for five year periods are a step in the right direction because having a gun must be a privilege and not a right, and in order to obtain a gun surely people should be able to prove their fitness, should be able to comply with the fitness test, plus produce the recommendation of guarantors with regard to their fitness to have a gun. That is only right and proper.

The expansion of the registration of restricted weapons, which will include pistols, automatic guns, sawed off guns, and Saturday night specials, is welcome, and so is the requirement of a test. The test is the protection of life, but allows the lawful occupation, authorized target shooting, and bona fide collecting. I could not agree more with the expansion with regard to registered guns because it was pointed out very effectively by the hon. member for New Westminster yesterday that in Canada only 10 per cent of murders are committed with registered firearms, whereas in the United States where they do not have registration of firearms more than 50 per cent of all murders are committed with firearms.

I hope that the three year phasing in period concerning licensing, educational programs, and research programs can be stepped up so that all Canadians can become fully aware of the problem.

When I hear some hon. members speak about the unwieldy and bureaucratic procedures which may be adopted for licensing guns I am inclined to think that they are nit picking and failing to recognize that the main purpose of the legislation is to control the availability of guns and to impose responsibility upon the public with regard to firearms. I hope that the licensing provisions will bring with them the necessity of a competency test, because every hunting season there are senseless deaths because of the incompetence of people who have control of guns. This not only applies with regard to the hunting season but also with regard to the accidental deaths which occur in homes.

It seems to me that the Minister of Justice and the committee should study the approach which has been adopted in England where there are strict requirements concerning licensing and registration, because here in Canada there is a sharp difference between people who own guns in the city and people who own guns in the country. I am led to believe that in England people who have guns, live in cities, and belong to gun clubs, obtain their licenses, and their guns are kept at gun clubs. They are not permitted to be taken home and left in closets or other places in the home, something which increases the availability of guns and the possibility of their misuse. I think we should give that some study and give it a try. Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

IMMIGRATION—ADMITTANCE OF MEMBERS OF PALESTINIAN LIBERATION ORGANIZATION TO HABITAT CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) said in the House of Commons on November 18, 1975, that members of the Palestine Liberation Organization, and I quote:

● (2200)

> . . . who are not themselves known terrorists are not denied ministerial permits. They require them and they are granted when the person concerned is invited by a reputable Canadian organization and if the visit is to be a short and specific period.

In other words the policy of the government as stated by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration last November 18 was that PLO members who were known terrorists would not be granted ministerial permits to enter Canada for any reason or any purpose.

However, on December 22, 1975, Canada entered into an agreement with the United Nations regarding arrangements for Habitat, the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, planned to take place in Vancouver later this year. Article II of the agreement says that "participation should be open to the following upon invitation or designation by the Secretary General". It goes on to list not only article II(A) "Representatives of States", but also article II(E) "Observers from national liberation movements and organizations entitled to participate in the conference". The latter would include the PLO.

Article XVII of that agreement states:

> All participants referred to in article II above and all other persons performing functions in connection with the conference, who are not nationals of Canada, shall be granted visas and entry permits, where required, free of charge and as speedily as possible, so as to permit the applicant to participate in the conference without undue inconvenience.

There is no reservation whatsoever by Canada in this agreement of the right to exclude anyone listed in article II(E), even on the grounds that they are known terrorists and therefore clearly ineligible for entry into Canada under Canadian immigration law and the government's policy for its administration.

But what about Bill C-85 which the House approved some weeks ago? This bill gave the Minister of Manpower and Immigration the authority to refuse to allow visitors into the country without first having formal deportation proceedings and without giving reasons for such exclusion. This bill applies for the period ending next December. But the bill states that the minister "may" use this authority; he is not bound to do so. It is at his discretion.

The minister's use of this discretion will obviously be subject to and limited by the commitment the government made to the United Nations last December 22 when it signed the agreement to hold Habitat in Canada. The wording of that agreement is such that it obliges the government to admit even those the government considers to be known terrorists if they are invited or designated by the Secretary General of the United Nations to attend. The clear words of the agreement seem to clash with the answer given by the government House leader to my question in the House on March 1 when, as Acting Prime Minister on that date, he said:

As far as I know, the Canadian government has never changed its view which was that we would admit observers from the PLO, but not known terrorists.

I therefore ask again, Mr. Speaker, as I did on March 1, how can the Canadian government, after signing the agreement with the United Nations last December, continue to say it will exclude from Canada members of the PLO who are known terrorists? That agreement obliges it to admit them when they are invited or designated by the United Nations Secretary General to attend Habitat.

Does not the signing of this agreement mean that to this extent the policy stated by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration last November 18 has been changed by the government? Also, how and why has this been done without a word of explanation and justification by the government to parliament and the Canadian people?

A more complete answer to these questions would be of interest, I think, to the many Canadians who, like myself, want to see the Habitat conference held in Canada next summer but who do not believe that to do so it is necessary for the government to abandon completely Canadian sovereignty when it comes to enforcing our law as to who is admissible to our country.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister, and because of the illness of his parliamentary secretary, I have been asked to answer tonight to the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

[English]

When the hon. member for Windsor West raised the question concerning the admittance of members of the PLO to the Habitat Conference to be held later this year in Vancouver, the Acting Prime Minister replied that, as far as he knew, the Canadian government has never changed its view, which was that we would admit observers from the PLO and other groups, but not known terrorists.

I wish to re-assure the hon. member that the government has not changed its policy in this regard and Bill C-85 reinforces, in fact, the government's position on exclusion of terrorists. It is important to point out that the hon. members agreed to Bill C-85. It passed all stages in this House in one day.

The agreement between Canada and the United Nations with respect to the Habitat Conference authorizes the Secretary General of the United Nations to invite observers from groups such as the Palestinian Liberation Organization. However, we reserve the right to refuse individual members should they be known terrorists.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—REASON FOR REFUSAL TO PERMIT AIR LINE EMPLOYEES TO PROSECUTE AIR CANADA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, on February 26 I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) to say what criteria he used for withholding of the granting of consent pursuant to section 194 of Part V of the Canada Labour Code to CALEA to prosecute Air Canada and two of its officials. I became suspicious of the minister's proper use of his power when in 1973 he delayed giving his consent under the relevant section when an application was made by CALEA to proceed against Air Canada at that time. The minister witheld his consent until the time limitations of the statute made the consent useless and, needless to say, the counsel for Air Canada, Mr. P. E. Armstrong, was not too happy and on September 25, 1973, he stated, by letter to the president of CALEA, the following:

The application for the minister's consent was filed on May 30, 1973 and, as you will recall, remained in the hands of the minister for a considerable period of time, a formal consent being received in this office on July 27, 1973. It is perhaps more than coincidental that by the time the consent of the minister was received, the time prescribed by the Canada Labour Code for filing a complaint with the board had expired.

In 1976 we find another scenario when CALEA once more sought the minister's consent pursuant to Section 194 to proceed against Air Canada. This time the consent was refused and again we find the counsel for CALEA protesting vigorously.

On December 17, 1975, Mr. MacGregor, counsel for CALEA, sent a telegram to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in which he clearly outlined the situation with respect to a required consent so that certain employees of Air Canada, and the company itself, could be taken to task for violating Section 184 of the Canada Labour Code because of their actions in interfering with the representation of employees of Air Canada by the Canadian Airline Employees Association. In addition counsel pointed out that Air Canada and the individuals involved had not followed Section 136 of the Canada Labour Code which grants to the Canadian Airline Employees Association, a certified bargaining agent, exclusive authority to bargain collectively on behalf of employees in the bargaining unit.

On January 26, Shirley Carr, Executive Vice-President of the Canada Labour Congress, contacted the Minister of Labour, pointed out that the CLC had reviewed the supporting material supplied with the application for leave to prosecute Air Canada, the manager of Labour Relations, Mr. Norm Radford, and Mr. Dale Akinson, the general manager of Finance Branch. Mrs. Carr pointed out that on the basis of the information available there appeared to be ample ground to grant leave to prosecute. In any event the minister refused his consent and as Mr. MacGregor, the counsel for CALEA points out in a letter written to Mr. Kelly of the minister's department of February 24 of this year, and I quote, in part:

I do not understand your statement that the minister had little alternative but to deny consent to prosecute when our application follows quite clearly Section 8 of the Canada Industrial Relations Regulations. You have shown us in no area that we have been deficient in our particular application—rather you have attempted to convince us to follow one of two alternative remedies open to us under the Canada Labour Code. For obvious reasons which are outlined above we have chosen not to seek a remedy which would have no effect whatsoever upon the corporation or persons complained against but rather we have sought a remedy which would, if we are able to prove our case, provide to the parties involved and to the public clear indication that those sections of the Canada Labour Code shall not be breached or if they are going to be breached they would be breached under fear of penalty by a court of competent jurisdiction.

● (2210)

At the same time, in addition to alleging a violation of section 136 of the Canada Labour Code it would be quite simple for us to allege a violation of section 148 of the Canada Labour Code covering the duty to bargain with a certified bargaining agent. If such were the case, no doubt the position of the department would be the same—that the Canada Labour Relations Board has exclusive jurisdiction to determine the issue. I need not repeat my previous remarks about what appears to be a total misstatement of the law, at least to me.

He went on to say:

The reasoning underlying the minister's evident decision in this matter is somewhat hazy but I think it is incumbent upon you to consider that the interpretation of the Canada Labour Code as expressed in your letter of February 18, 1976, is not, in fact, totally correct and does not represent the wishes of parliament in regard to the amendments which were made in 1972 and 1973. Carrying your logic to its ultimate extreme I would say that whenever I act for an employer in a difficult bargaining situation I would feel almost bound to advise my client that he could breach section 184(1), as the Department of Labour does not feel that such a breach constitutes an unfair labour practice which would amount to an offence which could be prosecuted.

Counsel continued:

I would feel bound to tell my client that the Department of Labour has stated that we would go to the Canada Labour Board who could say my client was wrong in doing what he had done and perhaps add that he should not do the same in the future. The damage would, of course, already have been done and the position of the union could be totally destroyed at that time. Such a course would not be followed if that particular employer were aware that he was open to penal sanctions for such action.

That is one scenario, and this is where I come to my point. This is a case where the Minister of Labour and his department are dealing with a powerful Crown corporation and appear to be taking a very generous attitude. Look at the other side of the question. By coincidence, I have documentation of a case where consent to prosecute was given by the minister pursuant to the same section, section 194.

Here is the case of two seamen, Garry Ward and Roland Moreau, employed by Upper Lakes Shipping Limited. They were prosecuted, and on the date Garry Ward was to appear he was in fact anchored in the bay in Toronto Harbour and could not get to shore. On the day Moreau was to appear he was in transit to Chicago, somewhere on the Great Lakes, and could not appear either. A summons was issued in the case of Garry Ward, and he must appear in the Toronto provincial court on April 22 in courtroom No. 37.

I must admit I am astounded the minister would grant consent in such an instance. There is ample jurisprudence to support the proposition that when discretion is exercised, such as was done in this case, such discretion must be founded in reason and must be based upon a reasonable evaluation of all the surrounding circumstances. It would be interesting to know what the positive circumstances were in this case which dictated the granting of consent to prosecute. I hope the minister will enlighten the House as to the criteria he uses in granting this consent because I believe that in this case he has left a lot to be desired.

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's question the following will serve to explain why the minister refused consent to prosecute Air Canada and two of its representatives.

First, the union's application alleged unfair labour practices by Air Canada and its representatives resulting in a violation of sections 184 and 136 of the Canada Labour Code. Since matters pertaining to unfair labour practices with respect to violations of sections 148, 184 and 185 are the responsibility of the Canada Labour Relations Board and are not subject to prosecution proceedings, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) could not exercise the authority granted him under section 194. The exemption of section 148, 184 and 185 from prosecution proceedings through summary conviction is reinforced by section 191(2) of the Canada Labour Code.

Second, with respect to section 136 of the Code, also alleged to have been violated, the applicant was advised by the Department of Labour that the minister's decision to refuse consent to prosecute was not directed at section 136 in isolation but to the union's application as presented, taking into account the whole of the union's application which was considered to be predicated on a violation of section 184.

In notifying the applicant of the decision to refuse consent the applicant was also advised that should an application be resubmitted in accordance with the requirements of the Canada Industrial Regulations, addressing itself to section 136 or any other section of the Code other than sections 148, 184 or 185 coming within the Labour Relation Board's responsibility, deemed by the applicant to have been breached, the minister would consider such an application in the usual manner with a view to granting consent to prosecute.

TRANSPORT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF FULL USE OF EAST COAST PORTS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I hope my speech will be regarded as the opening shot in a fight to have grain and flour traffic continue through Atlantic Canada. It is promised by the government's program recently announced, which was followed up by a question that I and my colleague from Dartmouth-Halifax East asked of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) on February 26 last. That is the reason for this awe-inspiring assembly this evening.

I had originally asked, as reported at page 11270 of Hansard:

In the interests of sharing whatever transportation dollars can be made available among the Canadians, would the minister and the government consider measures which will keep goods moving into or out of Canada moving as much as possible through Canadian transportation systems, not United States ports?

I had in mind when I asked that question the roughly $12 million a year traffic in flour and grain that goes through the port of Halifax, our small portion of the rather massive traffic in one of our greatest products from western Canada. While the minister said that he would not consider any draconian measures against the port of Halifax, the fact is that we know that the subsidy under section 272 of the Railway Act for the carriage of grain and flour to the eastern ports will disappear under the government's program.

This has prompted a telegram from the chairman of the Halifax-Dartmouth port commission, Mr. J. W. E. Mingo, to the Minister of Transport. I should like to point out that Mr. Mingo has been a lifelong supporter of the party to which the minister has the misfortune to belong. The telegram, in part, said this:

Termination of the subsidy and the statutory rates will cost Halifax its export flour trade, estimated at 200,000 tons in 1976, and will greatly reduce the throughput of grain at its elevator, thereby increasing the operating deficit of the elevator to the point where its closure will be inevitable.

I thoroughly agree with Mr. Mingo. It is a very marginal operation. The telegram then makes this point:

Prairie grain moves at statutory rates to Vancouver and Thunder Bay, at an annual loss to the railroads which is now estimated at $150 million or more (and which has to be subsidized by other traffic, including export-import traffic moving to and from the port of Halifax), and from Thunder Bay via the St. Lawrence Seaway at highly subsidized tolls to Montreal, Bay Comeau, and the other river and gulf ports. How is it that this $11 million subsidy on the movement of grain to eastern ports in singled out for termination?

That is a very good question. Why do we get hit, and other places in Canada do not get hit at all? I suggest no political reason for that. Rather, it is a convenient figure to pick out because it happens to relate to a particular region of Canada. If we had been part of the St. Lawrence Seaway system, for example, we would never have been picked out, yet we receive less than one tenth of subsidies paid elsewhere. I think this is an injustice.

I see the Minister of Transport is not in the House tonight, but he will be for the debate, and it is going to be a long one. We will see that the minister is here and that he answers. There will be a day of accounting, and I will tell the House why. There are three main reasons.

● (2220)

First, the government's proposed measure makes the people of Halifax—probably the people of Saint John feel the same way—feel less part of Canada. Anything which limits their ability to participate in the transportation of any one of the great products of this country makes them feel less part of this country.

Second, the government's measure will mean that Halifax is less than a totally effective port. We have been crippled, in one sense, as a small but vital part of our trade is being taken from us. That, very likely, is the position we shall be in.

Third, the government is ignoring the concept that transportation should be a bond holding Canada together. It should bring us together, I am never sure what one means when one says that transportation should pay its way. Heavens, we have all watched the "National Dream" and learned of the great risks our forebears took to unite Canada and to make all Canadians from, in those days, Cape Breton to Vancouver Island, feel they belonged to one country. Now one must talk of all Canadians from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island.

I do not know why the government has suddenly ignored those aspirations for the sake of a small sum here or a small sum there, although the budget is tight. The government's action is one with which we do not want to live.

If we have in mind what we want to achieve together as a nation would it not be better to pay a $12-million shot, and thus make the people of Nova Scotia feel that they belong to Canada? Would that not be better than taking their business away, and leaving them to look at things happening along the St. Lawrence Seaway and elsewhere?

[Mr. McCleave.]

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, and I want the parliamentary secretary to assure the minister, that this is the opening shot in the battle. It will be a long battle. The point will be raised time and again. We in Halifax feel that we should be part of the national transportation system. We do not think any minister, or any government, should take that concept away from us.

Earlier I tried to arrange a 30-minute meeting between the Minister of Transport and longshoremen of Halifax for the purpose of discussing this very issue. I wanted the minister and longshoremen to discuss measures which would prevent much of our trade coming through the United States. We are in favour of our trade coming through Canadian ports like Halifax, Saint John, Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, and the like. But my request was refused. Now it is war. The minister will have to account for his position.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to respond to the question raised first in this House on February 26, 1976, by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) requesting assurance of the full use of east coast ports. I trust that I will be able to offer my hon. friend some comfort in connection with the concerns he raised.

Several of the ports under the jurisdiction of the National Harbours Board compete for business with ports in the United States. Evidence of any specific traffic leaving from or destined to points in Canada which is handled at U.S. ports is carefully investigated to determine the reason. Action is taken to recapture the traffic at Canadian ports, and the quality of port services is under constant review to ensure that Canada's ports are competitive in every possible way.

It is the policy of the Ministry of Transport that port charges will be based as far as reasonably possible upon the user pay principle. Over-investment or under-utilization of port facilities could therefore lead to increased charges, and the problem facing government is to maintain a balance between the over-all investment in and the demand for such facilities in order to keep Canada's ports competitive. In addition to ensuring that ports are competitive in terms of over-all transportation costs, some other contributing factors are: the ability to provide fast turn around times to vessels, and labour stability. The minister must look at the over-all system on the east coast to satisfy himself that a particular port is competitive with others on the Atlantic seaboard.

To the best knowledge of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), major Canadian ports are competitive, reflecting the continued interest of local government, provincial governments, and the Government of Canada in keeping them as competitive as possible.

At the port of Halifax, which understandably is very dear to the heart of the hon. member, there has been a great deal of publicity concerning expansion of the existing container terminal facilities. The present terminal was completed in 1971 and containerized cargo has increased steadily. In 1975 a total of more than 126,000 loaded 20-foot equivalent boxes were handled, which accounted for nearly 1.4 million tons of cargo. Recent general economic conditions have been responsible for a drop in the level of activity during the past several months, but it is anticipated that recovery will start to take place during the next year and a half or so.

A small joint federal-provincial task force has been appointed to assess the report of a consultants' firm concerning a proposed extension of these facilities in the port. The deputy minister of development of the province of Nova Scotia and the Chairman of the National Harbours Board will direct the work of the task force which will examine the impact of the consultants' recommendations, review traffic projections, and consider the short-term operational improvements for the port that are outlined in the consultants' report. The task force is expected to report to the minister within the next two months.

The consultants were retained by the provincial government in December after the Department of National Defence advised the government of a number of conditions that would have to be met if the container terminal were to be built in Wright's Cove.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I am sorry to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but his time has expired.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 10, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROPOSAL THAT MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS MAKE A STATEMENT OUTLINING HIS CONVERSATION WITH JUDGE HUGESSEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Considering the fundamental importance of the right of the people of Canada to be certain that the executive branch of our government does not interfere with the judicial branch; considering also that the Prime Minister has asserted that the government will take no further action on the alleged impropriety in this respect on the part of some of his ministers unless a specific grievance is made by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court; and following the report made last night that the Minister of Public Works specifically attempted to ascertain the conditions of a judicial settlement on behalf of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urges the Minister of Public Works to make a statement in the House outlining the exact nature of his conversation with Judge Hugessen, so that members of the House and the public will have the opportunity of judging, independent of the opinion of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec, whether or not the Minister violated his obligations as a minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HEALTH

SUGGESTED CONSTRUCTION OF TUNNEL TO CONFEDERATION BUILDING TO PERMIT MEMBERS TO JOG AND IMPROVE FITNESS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the minister of health has just introduced the fit kit, and in view of the fact that the government is spending several thousands of dollars annually on bus transportation, gasoline and oil, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds):

That the government give immediate consideration to the construction of a tunnel connecting the Confederation Building to the existing West Block tunnel so that the minister of health can jog along with Mitch and members and staff of Confederation in order to save fuel and tax dollars and improve his fitness and our physical fitness.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER OUTLINE PROPOSAL TO BRING CONSTITUTION TO CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of the House to present a motion under Standing Order 43 regarding a matter of urgent importance. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House urges the Prime Minister, at the earliest opportunity, to make a speech or a statement in the House of Commons, outlining clearly the precise steps he has in mind in connection with his proposal to bring the British North America Act to Canada and under Canadian control.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—INQUIRY AS TO CONTENT OF CONVERSATION OF MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS WITH JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Last Wednesday, as reported at page 11457 of Hansard, the Minister of Public Works said that, along with other persons, he had contacted the Associate Chief Justice of Quebec to "effect a solution to" the appeal of court proceedings. In trying to find a solution, did the minister, as was alleged last night, try to sound out the presiding judge as to how the court would respond to an apology by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think I made it clear, and the Leader of the Opposition must be aware, that this particular incident is currently under review by the Chief Justice of Quebec. The Prime Minister has suggested—I am in full concurrence and I think the House will be—that the Chief Justice should be allowed time to conduct his inquiries and to reach a judgment, rather than have a number of other individuals concurrently exploring the matter.

● (1410)

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, as the minister well knows, the inquiry by the Chief Justice of Quebec is into a matter related to judges. What this parliament and the people of Canada are interested in has to do with the conduct of ministers of the Crown.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Let me repeat the question to the minister. There have now been public allegations as to the content of his conversation which he admitted having with a member of the Bench of Quebec. Will the minister now stop dodging and tell the House whether he tried to sound out the presiding judge as to the question of the response of the court to an apology by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect, as the Leader of the Opposition stated, that is a repetition of the question. The minister made an answer, such as that answer may be, but that is the answer that has been given. I cannot really, in view of the rules, permit a repeat of the question.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—KNOWLEDGE OF PRIME MINISTER OF CONTENT OF CONVERSATION BY MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS WITH JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister said yesterday in answer to a question that I posed, and I quote:

> I have heard from the three ministers who were mentioned in Justice Mackay's letter . . .
>
> I listened to their version and feel that their explanations indicated clearly that they were not attempting to influence in any way the judgment of the courts.

That is the position of the Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister ask the Minister of Public Works what the minister said to the judge, particularly with regard to the statement to effect a solution made by the Minister of Public Works and the statement relevant to the full knowledge of the facts being possessed by the judge? If so, did the Minister of Public Works raise with the judge the matter of a response to an apology and the political impact of the verdict by the courts? Will the Prime Minister give that information to the House of Commons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the House that I had raised this matter with the ministers and that they had given me an answer which I found satisfactory. However, I conceded from the very first day that this important matter was discussed that the view of the courts may be different. I think that the Minister of Public Works in his answer just now stated in the most perfect way possible the attitude of the government, that attitude being that we in this House should not be telling the chief justice what his court should feel and not feel and we should leave that for him to decide.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—VIEW OF PRIME MINISTER ON WHETHER OR NOT THERE WAS INTERFERENCE

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Whatever the report of the Chief Justice of Quebec, is the Prime Minister prepared to tell this House whether there was intervention by ministers of his Crown—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —with the courts of Quebec and what was the nature of that intervention? Is he prepared to tell this House that, instead of shunting it off to a judge? Does he deny this House the right to that kind of information?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Leader of the Opposition is back on track. Yesterday he was worried about what ministers were telling each other. Now, he is back to the really important question of what ministers may have been saying to judges and whether this did or did not constitute an attempt to influence the course of justice. I have reached the conclusion unilaterally, a one-sided point of view if you wish, that there was no such attempt. I am, of course, prepared to hear the courts argue the contrary and demonstrate the contrary. If the courts feel aggrieved and feel there has been an attempt to influence the course of justice, that indeed will be a very serious matter. At that point we will have to establish whether the court's or ministers' version is correct. Of course, at that point I cannot pretend that I will be the judge of a matter in which I was involved. I will then discuss with the opposition ways in which we can seek out the truth in this matter.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS CALLED JUDGE HUGESSEN ON OWN INITIATIVE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief supplementary for the Minister of Public works which might be described perhaps as a point of clarification. Would the hon. gentleman state unequivocally whether the telephone call he made to Chief Justice Hugessen was done solely on the minister's own initiative or whether it came following conversations and consultations with any of his colleagues?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this is only slightly less direct than the previous questions.

VIEW OF PRIME MINISTER ON POLITICAL INTERFERENCE WITH JUDICIARY

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly amazed at the minister's reticence, but let me ask one more supplementary of the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister seems satisfied with the Minister of Public Works' statement to the House last Wednesday and his private explanation, does the Prime Minister accept any kind of political interference with the judiciary on matters immediately before the courts so long as it cannot be proven. Is that the rule over there, that you can behave as you like so long as you can get away with it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the member is forgetting a very important fact, that the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec is an independent agent and that he will make his decision on this very matter which is of such concern to the opposition.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—DECISION AS TO WHETHER OR NOT THERE WAS INTERFERENCE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is his view that this issue is to be resolved entirely on the basis of the judgment of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec; is he to be the judge of whether or not there was interference which is to be considered? Does the Prime Minister not agree that it is even more importantly a matter of the Prime Minister himself or one of his ministers deciding whether or not they took the right or wrong course of action, independent of whether or not the chief justice agrees with it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that if the action is said to be wrong, as the hon. member puts it, it will be wrong because the courts come to the conclusion that they have been interfered with.

Mr. Fairweather: Oh, no!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if there was no interference with the course of justice in the very judgment of those who in this House are claiming the contrary, then surely it is not for Parliament and certainly not for this government to tell the courts how they should feel about whether they are discharging their duties freely or not.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I could not agree less with what the Prime Minister just said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to ask the Prime Minister whether it is not possible that the Chief Justice of the Province of Quebec can reach a conclusion—and I am not questioning his motives—that the conversation that was alleged to have taken place last night between the Minister of Public Works and the Chief Justice did in fact take place and that he, the judge, decides that it was not political interference. The Prime Minister, I am sure, will agree that is a possibility, but I should like to ask him if that is so would he not, as Prime Minister, judge that that kind of conversation if it is true, does constitute interference with the courts.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I think I can be quite clear on that. If the courts say they have not been interfered with I shall not argue that with them and say that they should know they have been interfered with.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—POSSIBILITY OF MEMBERS LEARNING CONTENT OF CONVERSATION OF MINISTER WITH JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, then I should like to get clear a matter which follows from that. Is the Prime Minister also saying to the House today, as in the past, that we will not learn the nature of the conversation that took place between the Minister of Public Works and Judge Hugessen unless the chief Justice of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec decides there was interference.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, they shall not learn certainly by way of a public inquiry set up by the government.

Mr. Broadbent: Any other way?

Mr. Trudeau: Or any other way; I suppose they can attempt to learn any way they want. Apparently the press is informing them on what happened. But in our view the essence of the question is whether the courts have been in some way interfered with in the discharge of their duties. Surely, that is the question which should occupy the House. We have before the House one piece of evidence, a letter by Mr. Justice Mackay which, it is now well known, contains some inaccuracies. I think it would be improper for the House to try to examine in any depth the nature and the extent of these inaccuracies.

● (1420)

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Trudeau: Because if the hon. member wants to do it, it must be done by way of impeachment, and I do not intend to bring such a motion.

Some hon. Members: Absolute nonsense!

Mr. Trudeau: How else can you examine a judge but by bringing him here before the House?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: You are sucking and blowing at the same time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL MEET MILK PRODUCERS BEFORE NEW POLICY ANNOUNCED

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question of the right hon. Prime Minister, who appoints judges.

I take the liberty of changing the subject. Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether industrial milk producers, who are feeling rather tense now because of the apprehension caused by the official announcement of the policies of the government which is forthcoming, could relax if the Prime Minister agreed to meet the representatives of these producers? Would the Prime Minister tell the House whether he is willing to meet them before the deadline of April 1?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is probably not aware that a great number of milk producers came here to Ottawa last night. There was an important meeting between the members of our caucus and these milk producers. I regret that the hon. member was not informed.

INQUIRY WHETHER EASTERN MILK PRODUCERS WILL BE GIVEN SAME TREATMENT AS WESTERN PRODUCERS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister another supplementary question.

Can the right hon. Prime Minister assure the House that he will show as much consideration for eastern milk producers as for their western counterparts, so that eastern producers not be the only category of workers in Canada who not only will not have to comply with anti-inflationary measures but will, in addition, following last night's meeting, see their incomes shrink below the 10.2 per cent inflation spiral?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the latter hon. member is as ill-informed as the former. A meeting took place last night between four ministers, thirty odd Liberal members and milk producers, and what the hon. member reported is not what actually did take place.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL MEET WITH FLUID MILK PRODUCERS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would also appreciate it if the right hon. Prime Minister would indicate clearly whether he is willing to meet fluid milk producers from Quebec or the representatives of the Agricultural Producers' Union, because we know quite well that last night the dairy producers did not see the Prime Minister. They only got evasive promises. This morning, they are deceived. They would like to be sure today that they will meet the right hon. Prime Minister and no one else.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am obviously pleased to hear the hon. member say that four ministers and thirty odd members of the House are not as important, to the dairy producers, as the Prime Minister. I think that this is not very nice for the leader of the Social Credit Party, who is not always there to meet the people when hon. members receive delegations.

Mr. Speaker, before a fourth Social Credit member rises to make inaccurate allegations, I would like to say to the third member that the discussion in Ottawa relates to industrial milk and not fluid milk. The hon. member is in the wrong House, he should discuss fluid milk in Quebec City because here we are dealing with industrial milk.

* * *

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—KNOWLEDGE OF PRIME MINISTER OF MINISTERS' INTENTION TO APPROACH JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to get on to the topic of spilled milk. I should like to address my question to the Prime Minister. Last Thursday at page 11486 of Hansard the Prime Minister said he had not been told by the Minister of Public Works about his conversation with the judge. I wonder if it is agreed by the Prime Minister that the problem of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, as it is alleged, was a matter of intense concern within the government and at the highest levels of the Liberal Party. Did the Prime Minister have no other indication that the ministers of the government and eminent citizens had and were considering approaching the judge?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must complete the premise of the question. What I indicated to the House was that I had no knowledge when the Minister of Public Works was doing it or after he had done it. He did not tell me he was going to, nor did he tell me, until this whole thing came before the House, that he had approached Judge Hugessen, so that is the context in which I replied.

On the other matter, I believe the hon. member is asking if high members of the Liberal Party were concerned about the matter. Perhaps the hon. member could be allowed to rephrase the question because I am stuck on the premise and I want to make sure it is precise.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: For clarification, the question I asked was whether any other minister of the Crown in fact communicated with the Prime Minister with respect to the approaching of the judge at the time this incident took place. The Prime Minister referred to no communication being had with the Minister of Public Works. I am asking whether there were other ministers or other persons who made approaches so that the Prime Minister had knowledge in advance of the intended approach to the judge.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, I know of no other minister who approached the judge in this case.

Some hon. Members: Who approached you?

Mr. Trudeau: Who approached me about approaching the judge? No, I indicated that I did not know the Minister of Public Works had approached the judge.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—BASIS ON WHICH MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS INTERVENED WITH JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like then to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. Yesterday the minister once again raised, as a means of avoiding answering questions directed to him with regard to any instructions received from or discussions held with cabinet colleagues, the suggestion that there is privilege in this whole area on the basis of Privy Council confidentiality. Does the minister take the position that his intervention on behalf of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was a matter of governmental business? I hope the answer will not be in the affirmative.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the circumstances surrounding the conversation I think I would continue to say I would prefer not to answer specific questions and not to have the inquiry conducted piecemeal in the House.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—KNOWLEDGE OF PRIME MINISTER OF CONTENT OF CONVERSATION BETWEEN MINISTER AND JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister about a matter which is not before the chief justice of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: Yesterday the Prime Minister informed the House that he had received an explanation of what was said by his Minister of Public Works in relation to this matter, so I now ask the Prime Minister, did the version of what transpired, indicated to him by the Minister of Public Works, include the allegation that the Minister of Public Works attempted to ask the justice if an apology and retraction by his cabinet colleague would affect the result of the determination of the court? That is in respect of a conversation between the minister and the Prime Minister. That is not before the chief justice of Quebec.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, but that is between the minister and myself. I want to make it very clear, if I want to enlarge the area of suspicion, that I also talked to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs about the matter which was before the court. I am sure he consulted other of his colleagues than the Minister of Public Works.

● (1430)

An hon. Member: That is not the question.

Mr. Trudeau: What he told me in this conversation and what he asked me is not a matter I intend to put before the House.

Mr. Lawrence: Why not?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure hon. members opposite understand why not. They are members of parliament. Surely, it must happen that they have perhaps constituents who approach them about a matter that is before the courts—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —and who ask for advice about a matter which is before the courts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I would not expect a member of parliament to tell this House what he was asked.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS HAS BEEN INTERROGATED BY CHIEF JUSTICE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In a matter such as this which cannot possibly affect government business—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: —but which affects the honour and integrity of the caucus—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: —sir, my appeal to you is that in respect of the privileges of this House how can a member of the Crown—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we have to be clear that if there is some appeal in respect of the privileges of the House, that will have to be heard at three o'clock. If the hon. member has a supplementary question he can put it now.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, in order to differentiate this whole matter may I ask the Minister of Public Works whether the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec has yet interrogated him on what he said to the Associate Chief Justice of that court.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lawrence: Did you say no? That is the whole point.

Mr. Sharp: What point?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Annapolis Valley.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

VIEW OF PRIME MINISTER ON WHETHER PEOPLE SHOULD CALL JUDGES ABOUT CASES—REASON MINISTERS SHOULD CALL JUDGES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I hope the thump of approval—

Mr. Fairweather: "Thump" has gone!

Mr. Nowlan: —will not deflect from the thrust of my question. I have enjoyed sitting here these past days after a couple of days away, to find out how the government of Canada can carry on. I should like to ask a very simple question of a very simple man, the Prime Minister of this land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: In view of the questions and answers given by the Minister of Public Works, for whom I have a great deal of personal regard—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: —and the Prime Minister on this whole question of phone calls and privilege and all the hocus pocus that might be around the questions, is the Prime Minister suggesting today, in view of his answers and the talk of constituents and the fact that there seems to be a bar of privilege that those involved Canadians who happen to find themselves before the courts of their land should phone one of the judges to talk about their case or have their friends phone one of the judges to talk about the case?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I did not fully hear the Prime Minister's answer.

Mr. Speaker: The answer was no.

Mr. Nowlan: I am glad the Prime Minister at least goes that far, that all Canadians should not phone judges.

An hon. Member: Just ask the question.

Mr. Nowlan: The question, man from Thunder Bay, McRae, is this, to the Prime Minister: If all Canadians involved in the courts should not phone judges can he explain to me, with his knowledge of constitutional law, why any cabinet minister should phone a friend on the bench to discuss a case involving a colleague, or, even to ask him for a gold date let alone anything else. Why did he phone?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think by asking the question the hon. member has really supplied me with an answer. I gave it in the House last week.

Mr. Nowlan: I was not here last week; I was taking a break.

Mr. Trudeau: It would be interesting to know if the hon. member was holding a golf date with a judge, Mr. Speaker. The answer really is the answer I gave last week. It is possible, and happens frequently, that citizens, not only members of parliament but citizens, talk to judges.

An hon. Member: Not about cases.

Mr. Trudeau: I have talked to judges frequently, Mr. Speaker. The essence of the question is "Did you talk to the judge in order to influence the judgment or to influence the course of justice"? That is the relevant—

An hon. Member: Or to try.

Mr. Trudeau: That is the relevant question. I say that to my knowledge, to my information which I acquired after the fact because I did not know from one minister or the other that they were going to do this, having listened to them after this was done I came to the conclusion that they did not attempt to influence the course of justice.

Mr. Lawrence: Tell us upon what you based your conclusions.

Mr. Trudeau: If the courts feel otherwise, I believe we should hear to that effect from the courts. That is the position of the government. Now, that the hon. member has been refreshed perhaps he wants to ask a third question.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the indulgence of the Prime Minister in allowing me another supplementary. It is just with regard to part of his answer that I have found myself in this tangled web because I was away from this scene when the news broke.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: My question to the Prime Minister is this: again with his knowledge of constitutional law, let alone parliamentary practice—and that I am not so sure about—does not the Prime Minister of this land think that the very fact of a phone call to a judge sitting in decision on a colleague in cabinet is interference, either direct or implied, or could be considered that way by the judge who received the phone call regardless of the intentions of the government friend who might have made it?

Mr. Trudeau: Of course it can be considered that way, Mr. Speaker, and that is why it is a very serious question. But we have an example of one judge, Justice Mackay, who indeed considers it that way then we have the example of another judge, Judge Aronovitch who says he does not agree with Judge Mackay that he consider it that way. Surely this is relevant. We have to know if the judges got that kind of phone call and they are the people who can tell us, not hearsay from members of parliament.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): So can Drury tell us. Drury can tell us, too. Why don't you tell us?

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED REMOVAL OF TOLLS CHARGED PUBLIC TRANSPORT ON CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question which has nothing to do with sugar? They have just understood.

Can the minister inform this House whether he intends to remove tolls for public transport on Champlain Bridge, between Montreal and the south shore, in agreement with the province of Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I considered action along these lines after submissions were made to me by the hon. member and several others. I am certainly sympathetic to the principle involved. There are some discussions going on with the province of Quebec in connection with the operation of the whole enterprise, and I thought that for the moment at least it would be better to let those discussions continue before reaching any firm conclusion.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—INQUIRY AS TO TERMS OF REFERENCE AND REPORT OF CHIEF JUSTICE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In answer to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby the Prime Minister continued to refer to whether the courts had been influenced. My question is whether the terms of reference given to the department of justice of Quebec are beyond whether the courts were influenced. Surely, those terms of reference refer to whether there was any attempt whatsoever to influence. I should like the Prime Minister to confirm whether the judge has those terms of reference. Further, if the chief justice reports that no influence was exercised, and no attempt was made to exercise it, has the Prime Minister still not a political responsibility to this House for the conduct of his ministers?

● (1440)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member listened to the Minister of Justice the other day, he will realize that "terms of reference" is perhaps used in a loose sense by the hon. member. We did not give terms of reference to the chief justice of the Superior Court as to how he should inquire from his own judges about certain things. We asked the judge to inform us. More precisely, the Minister of Justice asked the judge to inform him or to give him any information which might be in his possession. How he will come in possession of it is his problem and privilege. Whether it will be through a full inquiry, through talking to his judges or reading the correspondence I do not know. We are asking him to give us information that might be in his possession respecting any unwarranted attempts to interfere with proper administration.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Can there be warranted attempts?

Mr. Trudeau: That is what we are talking about.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Can there be warranted attempts?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member cannot have missed the point I am making. We are not defining. He should not latch on to particular words. We are not telling the judge what to do.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am more worried about what the Prime Minister may do.

Mr. Trudeau: We asked him to inform the Minister of Justice if he feels there have been unwarranted attempts to influence the course of justice.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Yes, but can there be warranted attempts?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, of course there are warranted attempts. Any lawyer pleading a case is attempting that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): What a shameful display.

Mr. Paproski: Where do you think you are, in Quebec city?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: As for the second question the hon. member asked, namely, even if the chief justice finds that there have been no unwarranted attempts, does the matter rest there, or will I not be concerned and look into the matter further, the answer is that, in this whole system of allegations, that will have been the answer which satisfies me. If the judge feels that his court has not been the victim or object of unwarranted attempts, I will then have the word of the court and the word of my ministers that they have not attempted to influence the course of justice, and I do not see how I could listen to the opposition which is basing its position on hearsay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Now we know what the Prime Minister thinks.

Mr. Clark: We are just a bunch of nobodies.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, apparently there is one law for cabinet ministers and another law in Canada applying to the general public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: I asked my question because I wanted to know how the Prime Minister feels about these two standards. If the chief justice of Quebec is not given terms of reference relating to what he shall study and report on, how can the Prime Minister rely on that report in terms of anything other than what the judge says vis-à-vis the courts? What about the political ramifications of this whole affair? I ask this, since the Prime Minister has now closed his options with regard to the conduct of his own ministers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member for New Westminster will be the first to agree that his question was largely argument.

POSSIBILITY OF NEW TRIAL FOR KEITH LATTA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I change the subject and direct a question to the Minister of Justice which relates to his ministerial discretion to order a new trial in a certain case? Will the minister order a new trial for Professor Keith Latta, of Queen's University, who was convicted of murder? I ask this as I understand that Department of Justice officials, the police of Edmonton, the defence attorney involved in the case and others are to meet with a certain witness, Sylvia McCauley, alias Le Tendress, to determine facts which were either suppressed at the trial of Mr. Latta, who is convicted of murder, or which came to light after the trial was completed. It is alleged that she knew certain facts which were suppressed during the trial. I ask, is that meeting taking place and will the minister, at his discretion, keep the door open for Mr. Latta, so that there may be a new trial of this matter?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the precise meetings to which the hon. member refers are taking place, but discussions are going on between my officials and authorities in Alberta for the purpose of making recommendations to me, or rendering advice to me as to whether a new trial should be ordered or other procedure undertaken pursuant to section 617 of the Criminal Code. As I explained to the hon. member previously, I hoped to make a decision before now, but have not.

POSSIBILITY OF NEW TRIAL FOR KEITH LATTA—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE WITNESS NOT SUBJECT TO DURESS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a most serious supplementary question to the minister? Apparently the witness signed a statement, but the evidence came to light after the trial ended and the appeal procedure was completed. As she signed the statement, will the minister make certain that no pressure is brought to bear on the witness and that she is not put under any duress to change her statement. This is a most serious matter affecting Mr. Latta, and there are some grave irregularities which could affect all in this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Leggatt.]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why hon. members opposite are hollering. This is an important matter involving the life and liberty of one of our country's citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was under the impression the minister was about to answer.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member. The question is serious and the matter is serious. I think I am properly entitled to assume that the appropriate authorities in Alberta will not apply duress which the hon. member suggested might be applied. I understand that interviews with Mrs. McCauley would be conducted in the presence of an officer of my department. One of his duties and obligations would be to assure that no duress is applied.

* * *

● (1450)

FISHERIES

EFFORTS TO ADVISE GREENPEACE ORGANIZATION ON CONSERVATION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State for Fisheries. Now that the Greenpeace organization has shown the good sense not to interfere with the seal hunt by marking the seals, possibly because the minister amended the sealing regulations, for which he should be commended, but more likely because 200 Newfoundlanders stopped them, may I ask the minister this question: since the Greepeace organization is now turning its efforts toward the whole area of conservation, and since it is obvious they do not know anything about conservation, what action is the minister taking to educate or advise them?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): I thank the hon. member for his kind words. I always thought that anyone who spent a couple of days in Newfoundland would better understand something, and they have in this case. I see through press reports that the leader of the New Democratic Party, who also spent a couple of days in Newfoundland, supports our position.

I would say to the Greenpeace organization—and I do not doubt the sincerity of their minds and hearts—that if they do want to discuss conservation there are avenues open to them, including a committee of advisers on seals, chaired by Professor Ronald, who is not an employee of the government. This committee has gone along, with some doubts, with the hunt this year on condition that we be very careful, and carefully assess the stocks for next year. This, we shall do. I rejoice that the confrontation which seemed to be on the horizon may not take place. I hope everyone is very cautious since the ice is dangerous. I also hope that the Greenpeace movement will take advantage of the fact that the parliamentary committee on fisheries and forestry is sitting in the next few days. If they want to attend and be heard or discuss matters with the officials, we are perfectly open to that.

AIRPORTS

INCREASE IN USER CHARGES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Might I ask the Minister of Transport whether it is now departmental policy that a 60-cent per hour fee be charged for flying training plus a $1.30 last landing charge at MOT airports? Does the minister think these charges are justifiable in the light of the heavy taxes and duties which are already being paid on these very small aircraft?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I would not try to deal with the question as it concerns excise tax. It is our proposal, however, to increase the whole series of user charges so as to move basically to the position that those who use the facilities should pay a larger proportion of the cost rather than leave the cost to be borne by the taxpayers generally. The charge in this case has not been increased for a long time and the landing fee to which the hon. member referred is a last landing fee with application to training aircraft and I think it is reasonable in the circumstances. I am quite prepared to discuss the exact nature and administrative details of any user charge with those who are having to pay them.

* * *

SPORTS

SUMMER GAMES AT ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND—AWARDING OF CONTRACT FOR MAIN COMPLEX WITHOUT TENDER

Mr. Dave Rooney (Bonavista-Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and it concerns the Canada Summer Games to be held in St. John's in 1977. Have the minister or designated officials of his department concluded negotiations with Newfoundland regarding federal funding of this event? If not, is the minister aware that the main contract for the games facilities valued at $4.47 million has already been awarded without public tender to the chairman of the Summer Games Committee?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but he has put a question which was asked just a few days ago.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DELAY IN PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS COVERING EXPLORATION FOR OIL AND GAS IN NORTH—POSSIBILITY OF COMPANIES CONTINUING IN INTERIM

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the minister's announcement recently that publication of the northern land regulations would be delayed until the fall of 1976 at the earliest, has the minister proposed any plan or made any promise to the oil companies to induce them to carry on exploration in the Arctic in the meantime?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): It is our hope we would be able to make the intent of the regulations, the regime under the regulations, known in the next six weeks or so; it will be longer before we can put it into legislation.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I gather from the minister that he still made no offer or inducement to the companies to carry on in the meantime.

Mr. Buchanan: It is our hope that this will be the result of the publication of the regulations.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBILITY OF COMPENSATION FOR EXPROPRIATION OF PROPRIETARY RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister since it arises out of one piece of legislation and one piece of regulation which deal with different departments. One concerns the expropriation of arms under the gun control law, and the other the expropriation of fishing licences under the change in the lobster fishery.

Has the Prime Minister considered or set any force to work to deal with compensation for the expropriation of proprietary rights?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I think this is an important question and one which has obvious legal implications. I must ask the hon. member to let me take notice of it and determine whether in fact what he describes as proprietary rights are such, either in law or in equity, as to give rise to a requirement for any compensation.

* * *

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

POSSIBILITY OF LOAN TO LOCKHEED—PROVISION OF INTERIM FINANCING

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I will address my question to the Minister of Supply and Services in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board. Can the minister inform the House whether the government is now considering lending something over $100 million to the Lockheed Aircraft Company?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, we never talked about lending money to Lockheed Aircraft Corporation, Ltd. In fact, the contract to be signed did not provide for any down payment and the contract which was negotiated and was to be signed never mentioned that Lockheed would finance the government.

[English]

Mr. McKinnon: I should like to thank the minister for the openness of that answer. The Minister of National Defence, however, is on record in Hansard at page 11402 as saying an extra $111 million must now be added to the cost of the LRPA to cover interest payments on interim financing. Can the minister advise the House who is providing such interim financing and to whom is the $111 million in interest being paid?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence could answer this question. Unfortunately, this does not fall within the realm of my responsibilities.

* * *

[English]

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED CURTAILMENT OF IMPORTS OF MILK PRODUCTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and it relates to the dairy industry and its associated problems. In a recent speech to dairymen in Uxbridge, the minister gave an indication that he was looking into the possibility of cutting off imports of milk products, which were being heavily subsidised by exporting countries. This is encouraging news, and since the situation referred to contributes largely to our own domestic surplus position, could the hon. gentleman give us some indication of his progress in this regard?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I understand meetings are to take place next Tuesday to discuss the subsidies which vary from week to week and sometimes from day to day on dairy products, the specialty cheeses to which I was referring. We have made a decision, and my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce announced recently there would be no increase in the 50 million pound quota. Since then, we also decided that we would be reviewing the subsidies, as has been done in the United States where they have been successful in removing the subsidies from cheese products entering that country in 90 per cent of the cases.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RETURN OF SPENT FUEL FROM NUCLEAR REACTORS ABROAD—ENVIRONMENTAL PROBLEMS CONNECTED WITH DISPOSAL AND STORAGE

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the minister's statement with reference to the Korean reactor that we have not required the spent fuel to be returned to Canada—that we did consider such a course seriously but abandoned it because of the environmental implications—what are the environmental implications of returning the spent fuel to Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, the question which has been put did not actually arise in the form in which it had originally been considered, because the Koreans decided not to proceed with the acquisition of a reprocessing plant.

Mr. Wenman: Having regard to the agreement with India presently under discussion, may I ask whether spent fuel from that reactor will be returned to Canada for reprocessing to make sure that Canadian material will not be used to produce further nuclear explosions. Further, can environmentally sound methods of the storage and disposal of waste be found?

Mr. MacEachen: I think I should explain to the hon. member, to avoid misunderstanding, that while the issue, as an issue, disappeared because of the decision of the government of South Korea not to acquire a reprocessing plant, the main reason for not insisting upon the particular provision referred to was that upon analysis it was not felt to be anything but a marginal safeguard. In other words, even if this particular provision were insisted upon it would be possible for a country wishing to do so to proceed to make a bomb. It was not an important item in the system of safeguards. We have no such line of discussion at work with the Indians at the present time.

* * *

● (1500)

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

JUSTIFICATION OF INCREASE IN PRICE OF BREAD BY McGAVIN TOASTMASTER

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday the Anti-Inflation Board announced that it would permit McGavin Toastmaster, a subsidiary of Labatts and Ogilvie Flour, and Weston Bakeries to raise the wholesale price of bread by one cent. This means an increase in the retail price of two cents for Weston, which owns both the bakery and the supermarket. In view of the preliminary Food Prices Review Board study, which found that concentration in the food industry has resulted in Canadians paying 4 per cent too much for their food, would the minister explain how this increase is justified; and if the minister cannot do so, would he ask the Anti-Inflation Board if it will give an explanation to the public, in view of the public's concern that price increases are not being restricted by the board?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): My answer to the first part of the question is no, to the second part, it is yes.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL MEET MILK PRODUCERS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago the Prime Minister answered my colleague from Champlain who asked him whether he was prepared to meet the farmers and the milk producers whom the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada was not always available to meet. He is right in saying so. What we did ask and again I repeat is whether the Prime Minister is prepared to meet the farmers whom the members of his caucus met last night, whom we met this morning at eleven o'clock and who express the wish to meet the right hon. Prime Minister. I realize that he cannot see them at any time during the day, but if he sets a date, day or time, these people, the farmers, would like to discuss their problems with the Prime Minister of Canada. This is the only thing we ask him, that is whether he would meet the farmers and when.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I often meet delegations throughout the year, and of course a delegation as important as an agricultural one would have priority on my agenda. In fact, every year I have met groups from the Federation of Agriculture or other farming organizations. It will be a matter of finding, if possible, a date that suits both parties.

I merely wish to add, for the benefit of the leader of the Social Credit Party, what I have already told other members of his party, that is to say, that in our party, it is at times as useful, if not more so, to meet, as was the case yesterday, extremely active and energetic members, four ministers who know far more about the subject than I do, since my responsibilities are somewhat broader. The idea is to get the farmers the best audience possible. I thought they had had it yesterday. Now if it simply a matter of having the pleasure of seeing me, of shaking my hand, Mr. Speaker, I should be happy to meet them. If they are still here, I shall see them when I leave the House shortly. As for the presentation of arguments, I believe that was done yesterday. I trust my hon. members and ministers to give me a reliable report on what occurred. I will merely add that if the leader of the Social Credit Party wants to welcome all the delegations that come to Ottawa and I must meet, I shall be pleased to oblige and will ask him why, last week, he did not meet the eight bishops who came to Ottawa to discuss serious problems. Why did the Social Credit Party of Canada not meet them? Did they not have time to meet those bishops and religious leaders? Mr. Speaker, one cannot do everything one would like to do in a day. We try to share the responsibilities as best we can.

[English]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A few moments ago there was a question from the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Rooney) about the Canada Summer Games.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the House would permit me to hear the point so I can decide whether there is a point of order.

Mr. Lalonde: Your Honour ruled at the time that the question had previously been asked. That is true. I think it was asked last Friday of the Acting Prime Minister, who replied that he was not aware of the situation but would look into it. Therefore no answer was provided to that question. I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that today when the hon. member raised the question he was asking for information that was not available to the House last Friday, and therefore the hon. member should have been entitled to ask the question again.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Speaking on behalf of my colleagues we would willingly give the minister an opportunity to answer, and I hope the House does, since we asked that very serious question on Friday.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The fact is that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has raised a point of order which is well taken. The test is not, as I have phrased it, whether or not the question has been asked previously; the test is whether the question has been answered previously. The fact is that a minister of the Crown undertook to look into the matter and to bring in an answer later. If I took that as a non-answer in this particular situation I would have a number of grievances on my hands, something which I have faced before.

Perhaps the best solution would be for the hon. member tomorrow to put the question to the same minister who undertook to give an answer, or at least by way of some preamble to indicate that he is seeking an answer which was previously sought. The custom of the House is that if a member, having asked a question on Friday, is expecting to be given an answer today, the courtesy of the House ought to be extended in such a way that the member who asked the question originally should be the one who should ask the question the second time.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege relates to the question of whether privilege applies in a given set of circumstances. I want to determine if, in a matter that does not relate to government business or parliamentary affairs, any parliamentary or statutory privilege lies in conversations between ministers of the Crown and/or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

My understanding is that the Speaker must rule on whether a prima facie question actually exists before a motion is framed for reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. Therefore I am giving your Honour notice now that I desire to frame such a motion, but I would ask the Chair to give consideration to whether or not such a motion is receivable.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is referring to any lack of response to a question put during the question period—

Mr. Lawrence: No, sir, I am not.

Mr. Speaker: —then, of course, it is the right of any minister to refuse to answer any question during the question period. If the hon. member was referring to that, then no question of privilege arises because there is no obligation on a minister ever to make any answer to any question in the question period. If the hon. member has something else in mind, perhaps he might put it to the Chair.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the fact that ministers of the Crown are pleading privilege in answer to questions during the question period. I understand that they do not have to give an answer to a question if they do not want to; but if they plead privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may be able to argue that privilege has been pleaded which is fallacious or which has some loophole in it either in law or parliamentary procedure, but the fact is that the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) has asked the Chair whether or not a prima facie question of privilege exists. My answer is that a prima facie question of privilege does not exist, because there can be no obligation upon a minister to answer.

The reason the minister gives for not answering may be weak and might be subject to political commentary, but this cannot found a question of privilege because, as I have already said, there is no obligation upon a minister to make any answer.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order that is related to matters which have been put before Your Honour on which you have made a statement respecting the refusal of ministers to answer, particularly with respect to the exchanges which have taken place in this House over the last little while in regard to ministerial intervention in the Quebec courts.

I understand what Your Honour has said, that if ministers feel it proper or necessary they can refuse to answer questions that are put to them during the question period. But what I very strongly object to is the usurpation by a minister of the Speaker's authority by attempting to invoke, improperly as it happens, rules of the House which would help the minister to avoid admitting that he does not want to answer.

● (1510)

When asked about direct interventions with the judiciary, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) invoked the sub judice rule on the grounds that he is involved in a contempt of court proceeding. It is obvious that when a question is put in the House, it is up to Mr. Speaker to intervene if the rules are offended. I suggest that the minister examine Standing Order 12(1) which reads:

> Mr. Speaker shall preserve order and decorum, and shall decide questions of order. In deciding a point of order or practice, he shall state the Standing Order or other authority applicable to the case.

I wish to point out respectfully to the House that at no time has the occupant of the Chair, including Your Honour, intervened to cite the sub judice rule. The minister decided to do so on his own. Aside from whether the minister should be judging the procedural acceptability of questions put to him, I wonder whether that rule helps him in this case because on February 11 Your Honour stated, as reported at page 10844 of Hansard, and I quote:

> It is clear to me at this point, however, that in any event no restriction ought to exist on the right of any member to put questions respecting any matter before the courts particularly those relating to a civil matter, unless and until that matter is at least at trial.

Sir, you also indicated that you wanted a little more time to deal further with the matter. I hope that the time has come when you are ready to make a detailed statement on the subject of sub judice, with relation to both civil and criminal proceedings at all stages, so that we will be spared the kind of evasive nonsense being built up into a question-proof barrier around the ministers concerned with these events.

[Mr. Lawrence.]

However, even if the doubts about when a question is or is not "before the courts" cannot be immediately cleared up, I want to join other members in saying that the sub judice rule is no defence at all anyway, because the subject matter of our questions does not concern the minister's loquacious clumsiness in getting into a contempt of court proceeding, but the nature of his extra-legal attempts to get out of it. That is the issue in the questions we have been putting before this House. It is in that light and in those circumstances that this rule ought to be examined. This rule ought not to be invoked by any minister of the Crown; if a minister of the Crown attempts to invoke it, he ought to be told plainly and clearly.

The line of questioning has dealt with the activities of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) and his conversations with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which come very close to a prima facie case of infringement of a section of the Criminal Code. That only follows, incidentally, matters which are before the court as a result of the improper words, so found by a court of law, of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. They do not have anything to do with any matter that is before the court and which could be sub judice and ought to be so found by you, Mr. Speaker.

The minister has implicitly invoked Beauchesne, citation 181, to avoid answering questions on this matter. If he went no further, he would at least be on firm ground procedurally. Whether he would be doing himself or the House any favour is another question. I hope he realizes the opposition has an obligation to pursue this, as he has an as yet unfulfilled obligation to tell the House whether he did or did not instigate an interference with the course of justice.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) will agree that I have allowed him a great deal of leeway on what in fact amounts to substantive criticism of the minister for failing to answer questions. While the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton had the floor on a point of order, he raised the question of sub judice. At no time has the Chair ruled on any question that has been raised. There has never been an interference, either under the guise of privilege or the sub judice rule, with the right of hon. members to put questions. There has, however, been a refusal by ministers to answer questions, on whatever grounds. Those grounds are limitless.

It is in fact the right of the ministry at any time simply to fail to make an answer, or to make a response which gives some reason for failing to make an answer. The criticism of that response, such as it may be, is always a matter of political or public comment. The question is, does it offend the rules of this House?

I repeat, at no time has the Chair intervened to interfere with the right of any member to put questions under those rules in respect of this particular matter. Therefore it would seem there has never been any application by the Chair of the rule as has been described by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

The refusal of the minister to answer questions, on which the hon. member was beginning to comment, is indeed a matter for fair comment. However, it does not constitute a point of order in view of the fact ministers that have the right at all times simply to refuse to make answers.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would not quarrel with your comment in respect of this matter because I think you have stated the obvious in a very clear and succinct way. What I would like to say is that it would be very helpful to this House, in view of the matters in which we are involved as well as those previously before us, if Your Honour could give us the benefit of your reflections on the sub judice rule so that it will at least be clear that the minister's refusal to answer our questions can have nothing to do, from a procedural viewpoint, with anything directly before the courts.

Mr. Speaker: I hope I made that perfectly clear. I should say to the House that in light of the establishment of the committee, of which evidently I will be the chairman, which has been brought into existence largely at the instigation and initiative of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), which I think will inquire into the rights and immunities of members of the House of Commons, I had intended to reserve any further comment, unless it was necessary, with respect to the sub judice rule. I hope that will be one of the first matters the committee will examine.

I think I made it clear in the circumstance with respect to the case of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), that there would be no interference with his right, or the right of other members, to put questions reflecting on that matter unless and until it was at trial, and perhaps not even then.

With respect to questions put to the ministry in this matter, I have again made it clear there has been no interference with hon. members under the sub judice rule. If I were to attempt to interfere with the right of a member and get into difficulty there, it might be necessary to interpose some discussion and a finalization of that. However, up until the time there is some difficulty with the right of members to put questions, the position is clearly understood. Certainly at the moment that point has not arrived.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. May I ask Your Honour to direct your mind to one brief question? It relates not only to the sub judice rule but to the question of privilege. When Your Honour is directing your consideration to this matter, would you direct it to one further question, a small one?

As I understand the position of the Chair it is that ministers do not have to reply. However, if they do reply that is the end of the matter as far as the Chair is concerned. May I simply ask this: if a reply comes which is quite patently false to the knowledge of the Chair and the knowledge of hon. members of the House, surely that is a matter of misleading the House and is obviously a question of privilege before the House? Could Your Honour direct your consideration to an answer coming from the ministry which is patently false?

Mr. Speaker: That consideration, of course, also involves a great deal of judgment which would have to be exercised in the circumstances.

● (1520)

[Translation]

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Following the oral question period this afternoon, I wish to point out to the House that more than 40 Liberal members met the directors of the Agricultural Producers' Union yesterday, and it has not been seen fit, after the very amiable discussions that took place—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to set the facts straight. After this meeting attended by 40 Liberal members and four ministers from the province of Quebec, it has not been seen fit to ask to meet the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, if it is possible to turn a point of order into a question of privilege, I feel also that my rights are encroached upon. The farmers probably knew that the Liberals are stronger in caucus than in the House of Commons, this is perhaps why this morning they took up the matter strongly with the Social Crediters.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took advantage of a slip of the tongue to refrain from answering one of my very serious questions, to wit whether he would be willing to meet a representative of the dairy industry.

Since the farmers have attempted to—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Shefford understands quite well that the Prime Minister has indeed answered that question this afternoon during the oral question period and if he has anything to say on the content of the answer given, it is not through a point of order or a question of privilege.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I merely want to know whether the Prime Minister will meet the representatives of the dairy industry as readily as he met the Canadian bishops last week?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Order Paper Questions

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION MOTION FOR SECOND READING STAGE ON BILL TO AMEND MEDICAL CARE ACT

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move, seconded by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury):

That, in relation to Bill C-68, an Act to amend the Medical Care Act, five hours shall be allotted to the further consideration of the second reading stage of the Bill; and

That, at the expiry of the fifth such hour, Mr. Speaker shall interrupt any proceeding before the House, if required for the purpose of this Order, and shall forthwith put, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary for the disposal of the second reading stage of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. All hon. members will realize that the provisions of Standing Order 75c require that such a motion can be put only when the minister has announced his intention so to do at a previous sitting, which the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) did at the sitting of the House last evening. Accordingly, pursuant to the provisions of Standing 75c, when the motion is put today, which can be at this moment or at this hour, a two hour debate is precipitated, leading to a vote on the terms of the motion.

There being only the matter of Questions on the Order Paper remaining in Routine Proceedings may I refer back to the procedure we followed in the last instance, which was that Routine Proceedings were finalized and then the first order of business to be considered was the motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council. Would it be in order to proceed in that fashion at this moment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,540, 3,717, 3,933 3,975, 3,978, 3,991, 4,111, 4,128 and 4,148.

[Text]

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,540—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the recent agreement on Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan, will any aspects of the Community Resources Programme be designed to facilitate or maximize citizen feedback to government and, if so, what specific channels and/or projects will be created to ensure citizen input into discussions preceding Phase 3 of the Plan?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is: Yes. The question of channels and/or projects for input into discussions about any further phase would only arise when such further action is contemplated.

SURPLUS ASSETS

Question No. 3,717—Mr. Reynolds:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,015 regarding transfers of surplus assets purchased from one department to another, does the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation always receive remuneration?

2. Would the Minister of Supply and Services provide case histories of all authorized transfers in 1974 that were without remuneration for the owner department?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is concerned: 1. No.

2. In accordance with the records of this corporation, the following is a list representing case histories of all authorized transfers in 1974 where the owner department did not receive remuneration:

Date	Department	Items
January 10, 1974	National Defence	Naval Service cap ribbons
January 10, 1974	Environment Canada	26 Displacement Type Launch
January 11, 1974	National Research Council	Four Royal Standard Typewriters
January 31, 1974	Health and Welfare	Addressograph plates
February 4, 1974	National Defence	Anti-G flying suit, fying helmet
February 5, 1974	National Research Council	Six paper tape punches, and three tool kits
February 25, 1974	National Research Council	Air survey camera calibrator
March 6, 1974	Dominion Council of Health	Functions and equipment
April 3, 1974	National Defence	Car 45-86827
April 10, 1974	National Research Council	Kuiper stereo plotter
April 26, 1974	National Research Council	Serial Sound Structure Generator
June 12, 1974	National Research Council	26 surplus electronic components
June 13, 1974	Supply and Services	Bindery equipment
July 22, 1974	National Defence	Signal flags
September 11, 1974	Supply and Services	Regent Paper cutter
September 16, 1974	National Research Council	Fuel Coker Unit
		Turborater
		Digital Stepping Recorder with Coupler
		Wang Loci Desk Top Calculator
		Wang Data Logging Control
September 16, 1974	National Research Council	Tape Transport Recorder
September 16, 1974	National Research Council	4-channel Sanborn Recorder
October 9, 1974	National Defence	Torpedo MK 14 Mod 3
October 15, 1974	National Defence	Base Insulator, Receiving whip Antenna
October 25, 1974	Regional Economic Expansion	Transit, Gauge and Caliper
November 5, 1974	External Affairs	Uniforms for six hostesses
November 29, 1974	Transport Canada	Marconi Company Radio Range Transmitters
November 29, 1974	National Research Council	Stoddard Horn Antenna

FEDERAL TAX ON FARM FUELS

Question No. 3,933—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Is the government giving consideration to deducting the federal tax on farm fuels at the time of purchase?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The Excise Tax Act, which imposes the 10 cents a gallon excise tax on gasoline, requires users of gasoline who qualify for relief to recover the tax paid on their purchases by filing refund claims. However, the legislation also provides authority under which the Governor-in-Council may make regulations pertaining to relief from the tax for qualified users. On December 23, 1975, under PC 1975/3017 amendments to the Gasoline Tax Regulations were issued. These amendments provide that from March 1, 1976 users, including farmers, who qualify for relief from the tax and who purchase more than 2,000 gallons per month, may purchase gasoline exempt from the special excise tax rather than going through the refund claim procedure.

FREIGHT CARS—TADANAC YARDS, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 3,975—Mr. Brisco:

1. Was there a runaway of freight cars at Tadanac Yards, Trail, British Columbia on December 19 or 20, 1975 and, if so, how many (a) contained SO_2 (b) had (i) Ajax type brakes (ii) stem wind brakes (vertical mast) (iii) composition brake-shoes (iv) steel brake-shoes?

2. How many (a) CP freight cars (b) CN freight cars are equipped with (i) Ajax brakes (ii) stem wind brakes?

3. How many (a) CP freight cars (b) CN freight cars per year are being converted from stem wind brakes to Ajax brakes?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes, December 20, 1975; (a) Ten; (b) (i) eight; (ii) ten; (iii) one; (iv) seventeen.

2. There is no consolidated record of railway cars in operation with such equipment.

3. There is no conversion program. The old stem type brakes are being phased out throught retirement.

SPECIFICATIONS IN TENDERS FOR LABORATORY FURNITURE

Question No. 3,978—Mr. Fleming:

Do specifications in tenders for laboratory furniture by the Department of Supply and Services often specify the product or material of a particular company instead of offering a list of companies (Canadian, if possible) with products that would meet the same required standards, particularly, if the specified product is produced by one of the expected tendering companies or an affiliate company and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): A recent survey indicated that the purchase description in invitations to tender for laboratory furniture which were obtained from requisitions submitted by customer departments, were almost equally divided between those quoting a trade reference, those quoting a trade reference and indicating that an equivalent was acceptable, and those quoting a customer's detailed specification. It is left for firms to decide which of their products they consider is the equivalent to the trade name quoted and bids are judged accordingly. Often, a trade name is quoted on a no substitute basis because laboratory furniture or equipment required is to complement an existing installation which may have been supplied off a previous competitive tender, to the customer's specification, or as provided by a building contractor. In all instances, except when a trade name item on a no substitute basis is required, all firms on the Department's Office Product Centre's source list or on the applicable Regional Supply Centre's source list are invited to tender on the requirement.

POST OFFICE GUARANTEE FUND

Question No. 3,991—Mr. MacKay:

1. For each year since 1965, by province, what were the payouts from the Post Office Guaranty Fund?

2. Is such money used to reimburse persons who have had mail lost by the Post Office Department and, if not, what is the purpose of the Fund?

3. From what part of the Post Office budget is the money taken for the Fund?

4. In each fiscal year, is the Fund allotted a set amount of money and, if not, is the amount limitless?

5. In each year since 1965, under the terms of the Fund, how many cases of (a) inefficiency (b) criminal action have been investigated?

6. In each year since 1965, how many postal employees and/or others have been (a) prosecuted (b) dismissed for inefficiency or criminal action as covered under the terms of the Fund?

7. How much was recovered as a result of such prosecutions or dismissals and was the money added to the Fund?

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): 1. See table below.

2. The purpose of the Fund is to pay out losses as stipulated in Section 5, subsection (1), paragraph (1) of the Post Office Act.

3. The fund is not sustained by the Post Office budget nor derived from parliamentary appropriations but consists of assessments against postal employees and mail contractors made prior to 1920, and any interest earned, less the net charges on the fund since its inception.

4. See (3) above.

5. The statutory provisions for the fund and the regulations for its administration do not specify categorization of cases according to inefficiency and criminal action. Nevertheless every loss is thoroughly investigated with a view to obtaining recovery, before recourse is made to the fund.

6. See (5) above.

7. Recoveries of losses in whole or in part previously charged to the fund amounted to $99,036 during the period April 1, 1965 to March 31, 1975. These moneys were credited to the fund at the time of recovery.

Order Paper Questions

Disbursements from Post Office Guarantee Fund, Years 1965-66 to 1974-75

	Newfoundland	Prince Edward Island	Nova Scotia	New Brunswick	Quebec	Ontario	Manitoba	Saskatchewan	Alberta	British Columbia	Yukon	North West Territories	Total
1965-66	$9,953.87	—	$1,292.09	$1,154.22	$ 2,100.66	$ 1,824.58	—	—	—	$ 357.56	—	—	$ 16,682.98
1966-67	3,633.17	—	1,901.35	259.93	9,447.46	3,132.36	$ 467.86	—	$ 414.68	—	$1,795.04	—	21,051,85
1967-68	4,962.08	—	—	1,028.68	2,388.85	4,157.35	235.25	—	—	1,039.68	—	$1,635.67	15,447.56
1968-69	2,346.07	—	—	—	7,123.28	366.30	—	—	—	2,274.74	—	—	12,110.39
1969-70	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
1970-71	2,889.31	—	—	1,869.31	15,614.59	7,646.98	—	227.98	—	6,195.68	—	1,207.41	35,651.26
1971-72	—	—	—	761.43	23,977.04	3,810.09	—	—	—	—	—	—	28,548.56
1972-73	31.81	—	—	—	11,605.02	7,085.36	—	220.08	6.31	163.06	—	78.36	19,190.00
1973-74	25,577.66	—	—	—	69,585.09	6,384.52	1,013.13	—	830.11	73.36	—	3,086.24	106,550.11
1974-75	3,180.05	—	—	—	23,467.41	18,942.29	18,335.76	—	564.63	—	—	—	64,490.14
Totals	$52,574.02	—	$3,193.44	$5,073.57	$165,309.40	$53,349.83	$20,052.00	$448.06	$1,815.73	$10,104.08	$1,795.04	$6,007.68	$319,722.85

CUSTOMS EMPLOYEES AT DOUGLAS-BLAINE BORDER CROSSING

Question No. 4,111—Mr. Reynolds:

1. (a) How many persons are employed at the Blaine Border crossing (b) what are the duties of each individual (c) how many are bilingual?

2. In the peak periods of traffic returning from the United States, are there normally only three or four out of a possible seven re-entry gates in operation and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): 1. (a) Sixty-five; (b) one Collector, one Secretary to the Collector, one Operational Superintendent, four Shift Superintendents, eight Shift Supervisors, 32 two Customs Inspectors, Traffic at Douglas, 15 Customs Inspectors, Traffic at Pacific Highway, three Support Clerks; (c) There are five positions designated as bilingual: One officer has been certified bilingual. One is presently on language training. Two are scheduled to take a language test. One is awaiting appointment to language training.

2. There are two Canadian entrance points opposite the Blaine, Washington crossing, Pacific Highway and Douglas, with the bulk of the tourist traffic passing through the Douglas entrance. There are three to four re-entry gates normally in operation at the Douglas office. Five to six are in operation during the summer months when student casuals are available. Both points are staffed on a three shift twenty-four hour basis. With the manpower available, coupled with the shift scheduling requirements under the collective agreement, it is impossible to open all entry gates during peak traffic periods.

GRANTS TO CONSTITUENCY OF CHAMPLAIN FOR WINTER PROJECTS

Question No. 4,128—Mr. Matte:

1. Since 1970, has the Department of Finance granted money to the Constituency of Champlain as investment funds for winter projects and, if so, in what amounts?

2. For each such grant, what was (a) its purpose (b) the area concerned (c) the amount (d) the year it was made?

[Mr. McRae.]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. Loans totalling $571,704 have been approved under the Winter Capital Projects Fund for capital projects in the Constituency of Champlain.

2. The details of these loans are as follows:

Projet	Location	Loan Approved	Approval Date
Construct Recreation Center and Ice Rink	Ville de St-Tite	$199,258	1973
Renovate Pumping Station and Extend Water System	Paroisse de St-Narcisse	58,901	1973
Watermain Construction and Pumping Station	Village de Ste Thècle	53,749	1973
Construct Municipal Park	Village de Ste Thècle	9,796	1973
Construct Social Center	Ville de La Tuque	250,000	1973

SAINT JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK TRANSIT FARE INCREASES

Question No. 4,148—Mr. Landers:

1. Is the Minister of Finance aware that City Transit of Saint John, New Brunswick has recently raised bus fares by 30 per cent?

2. Will the Minister bring this to the attention of the Anti-Inflation Board and request the Board to rule on the admissibility of such an increase under the Anti-Inflation guidelines?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): It is our understanding that the City Transit of Saint John, New Brunswick is a privately owned company. If this company is part of a group with 500 or more employees, its recent action in raising bus fares would automatically be subject to review by the Anti-Inflation Board. The matter has been drawn to the attention of the Anti-Inflation Board.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether we are still on the subject of Questions on the Order Paper. I had a question on the order paper, question No. 3171, which appears at page 10793 of Hansard, involving a project at Place du Portage in Hull. The contract totals $28 million for the building of a garage, a simple steel and concrete structure.

I wonder why the minister of Public Works has not answered my question. There are 501 charge orders totalling $4.5 million. This is very serious. As I have said, the contract is for $28 million. The minister does not tell us whether he authorized any of these expenditures. I would very much appreciate if he would do this. Is this an indication of the type of control the minister has over these projects, or does he really know what is going on and what he is doing over there?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 94 is acceptable to the government.

[Text]

COPY OF MOST RECENT MAGAZINE, NEWSPAPER OR NEWSLETTER PUBLISHED BY EACH DEPARTMENT, AGENCY OR CROWN CORPORATION

Motion No. 94—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the most recent magazine, newspaper or newsletter published by each department, agency or Crown corporation.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 69, 71 and 93 are acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and to the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the notices of motions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary in those circumstances shall be deemed to have been adopted.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

COPIES OF CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO CONTINENTAL BOUNDARY DISPUTES

Motion No. 69—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all minutes of meetings, letters and telegrams pertaining to the negotiations which have taken place between the government and the United States on the continental shelf boundary disputes with regard to the Greenland-Canada Boundary in the Davis Strait.

Motion agreed to.

COPIES OF CORRESPONDENCE PERTAINING TO CONTINENTAL SHELF BOUNDARY DISPUTES MAINE AND NOVA SCOTIA

Motion No. 71—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all minutes of meetings, letters and telegrams pertaining to the negotiations which have taken place between the government and the United States on the continental shelf boundary disputes with regard to the Maine-Nova Scotia Boundary.

Motion agreed to.

COPIES OF AUDITED FINANCIAL STATEMENTS OF NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

Motion No. 93—Mr. Firth:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the audited financial statements of the Northern Canada Power Commission for the years 1970-71, 1971-72, 1972-73, 1973-74, 1974-75.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Blais: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the other notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I simply indicate to the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) that if he has any difficulty in obtaining replies to his questions a simple private word would be of considerable assistance in first of all identifying the question the reply to which has been delayed. This is the first I have heard of a delay in the reply to this particular question.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, my notice of motion for the production of papers No. 68 requires a simple yes or no answer. I wonder why it has taken so long, since January 26, to answer No. 68.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTION RESPECTING BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker), the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Skoreyko), the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston), and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), has been filed with me, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, chapter E-2, R.S.C., 1970, to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of British Columbia.

In accordance with the previous practice already adopted by the House, I would assume that we will print the text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION MOTION FOR SECOND READING STAGE ON BILL TO AMEND MEDICAL CARE ACT

Mr. Speaker: The motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) having been put forward, may I ask whether it is the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Never!

● (1530)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion with some reluctance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: It had been my hope that the House would have been ready before now to refer this bill to the standing committee where there would be plenty of opportunity for hon. members to ask questions, to propose their amendments, and to listen to the amendments that might be proposed by the government. However, I did seek agreement among the House leaders under Standing Order 75A or 75B under which there could have been an agreed allocation of time but, as I said last night, I failed.

It will be clear to the House—although it did not seem to be clear to the CBC this morning—that this motion does not put closure on the bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: It simply provides an additional five hours for discussion on second reading.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: This bill—I am sure it is well known but I seem to have to impress this upon the House—will still be considered in committee, it may be considered at the report stage, and it will certainly be considered on third reading. All we have done is to bring to a conclusion the debate on second reading, and this is simply a motion to refer the bill to committee.

So that the government is not accused of having throttled debate, let me put on the record the length of the debate on second reading and the extent of the participation by hon. members so far. I say "so far" because there will be another five hours of debate, of which I have no doubt hon. members will wish to take advantage, and we will have an even longer list, this altogether apart from the discussions that will take place in the committee, on the report stage and at third reading.

This bill was introduced on July 8, 1975. Debate on the motion for second reading and reference to the standing committee took place during 11 days for a total of 30 hours.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I would now like to indicate the number of hon. members who have participated.

There have been altogether 63 speeches and there have been 56 members who have participated in the debate, 8 from this side of the House, including the minister and the parliamentary secretary, 32 from the official opposition, 13 from the NDP, and 3 from the Social Credit party. Of the above, 1 Liberal, the parliamentary secretary, spoke twice, once on the main motion and once on the amendment proposed by the NDP, 2 Conservative members spoke twice, and 4 members of the NDP spoke twice.

In justification—which I think I hardly need in the light of this account of the length of the debate and the number of hon. members who have participated in it—I would just like to say that there are a number of other important bills before the House and I trust there is agreement in the House that, in order to deal with them, there is need for reasonable restraint on the length of the debate on any one of them, and certainly on any particular stage.

The government had hoped for agreement by members of all parties. I failed to get it, and we had to take our responsibility. I am sure the public and this House ought to applaud.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some amusement to the government House leader a few moments ago saying that he approached with reluctance this whole question of closure in introducing this motion at this stage. I hope he will forgive me if I suggest to him that his approach bore all the semblance of the reluctance of a vulture approaching a fallen deer.

I want to say to the minister very clearly that when the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) described this bill as a treacherous act by a treacherous government—I think I quote him pretty accurately—the minister by this motion has merely added to that treachery by attempting to cut off this very important debate at a time when this House is considering a piece of legislation which not only affects the relationship between the provinces and the federal government in Canada—every member of the House knows this—but also affects something that is very basic to Canadians, that is that the burden of what the government intends to do by this bill will fall very heavily on those parts of the country which are less able to afford sophisticated medical care, and the minister knows this.

It was an act of treachery to deal with it unilaterally and without consultation in the course of the budget speech, as the government chose to do. It was another act of treachery in bringing in this bill to change arrangements unilaterally for provinces which in some cases were persuaded, bludgeoned or cajoled by the government to enter into the agreement built their health care delivery services on the basis of it.

Mr. Blais: There is no treachery there.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am not surprised at the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais). I believe he would not recognize an act of treachery if he stumbled on one.

It was a triple act of treachery, and this is a black day for this parliament and for this country. It seems to have become the rule of the government to cut off debate on a matter of some importance, one which has been before the House since July 8, 1975, and which could have been brought forward by the government House leader, if it is so important, suddenly after only 11 days of debate—

Mr. Sharp: And 63 speeches.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —involving only 63 members out of 264. If that is deemed to be over debating an important principle, and if that is the position which the government holds, then I think it has lost all sense of reason and direction, not only in terms of the operation of this House but in terms of the feelings of the country.

There is a good reason why there has been a prolonged debate on the bill. It is because there has been large scale and widespread doubt among the public about the utility of this bill. All the provinces have criticized both the substance of the bill and the manner in which the legislation was introduced. At one point one of the provinces, Ontario, threatened to withdraw from the cost-sharing program. The so called have not provinces fear that their own budgetary exigencies will not allow them to take on new services or even to maintain old services. The Canadian Medical Association reacted to it by saying flatly and without equivocation that the actions of the government could endanger the quality of medical services available to Canadians.

Is there any reason to suggest that it is improper in the parliamentary sense for merely a few speakers to come forward and debate this bill? Has the government forgotten that this parliament is not its servant, that the government is the servant of the parliament and of the public we represent? I believe its attitude throughout this debate, in bringing forward the bill in the first place and then having the temerity to move closure, is an indication that it has decided that, unlike the session of 1972 to 1974 it will go back to ramroding legislation through the House regardless of its importance. This bill reflects that style and attitude and so does this motion for closure.

There is no way that the official opposition or any other party in opposition, faced with the objections of the provinces, faced with the objections of the Canadian Medical Association, and faced with the objections of people who are concerned about the level of medicare and the areas where a curtailment would hurt, would not use one of the weapons that it has at its disposal, namely, the right to debate the bill, to point out its inequities, to point out its deficiencies, and to point out the treachery of the government that brought it forward.

● (1540)

It has become pretty self-evident that this bill is dangerous to the level of medicare in this country, and this motion is dangerous to the operation of this parliament. If this is to be the way the government is to proceed on important matters, suggesting it is improper to debate them at length, then the attitude of the government is wrong. The government might remember that not too long ago a similar government with similar attitudes foundered on the basis of an arrogance which this motion for closure indicates.

The government House leader talks about other House business. Of course there is other House business. I said long before I became the House leader of this party—and I echoed the sentiments of the former leader—that the opposition would not stand in the way and would, in fact, help the government with legislation which is reasonable and sound in principle. However, I want this parliament and the government to know that this opposition does not intend to stand idly by and be beaten away from the right to debate because the government has decided it wants to get a piece of legislation through, if we decide, honestly and fairly, that the principle of that legislation is wrong.

We made the decision a long time ago that this piece of legislation is wrong in principle, is a breach of a contract, and is a vehicle by which medical care will be diminished in terms of Canadians, where there will be an emphasis directed toward regional disparity, and an assault on our confederation. We hold those views today and resist this motion for closure because this motion indicates that the government just does not care. It wants to arrogate more and more power to itself, irresponsibly in a majority situation.

That is the position we take in this matter, and if the government House leader is suggesting to us that we can debate the matter on third reading he is quite right because, unless there are to be substantial amendments, which would be more than merely procedural amendments but which would go to the heart and substance of the bill to put back into the law of this country, or to allow to remain in the law of this country the medical care scheme which the government proposed and which was accepted in good faith by all the provinces, then the government can expect our position to be no different on third reading than it is on second reading.

This bill will be just as irresponsible, unchanged, on third reading as it is on second reading, and the government is just as irresponsible, in terms of the provisions of this closure motion, as it could possibly be. I for one cannot understand what moved the government to this stupidity in the circumstances of this debate.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are totally and unalterably opposed to the motion made this afternoon by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). He has moved this motion under Standing Order 75C, and I want to say again, as I have been saying ever since this rule was forced upon us in July, 1969, that it is a bad rule. Some of my friends are reminding me, as if I need to be reminded, that it was brought in by the use of the other closure rule, Standing Order 33. The entire opposition was opposed to it. There was a special committee on rule changes and we agreed to quite a few things, but the government was not satisfied. It wanted this one more weapon which it could use unilaterally to choke off debate in the House of Commons. It was a bad day or a bad night in July, 1969, when Rule 75C was passed, and I regard the act of the minister today in applying Rule 75C to Bill C-68 as infamous.

I do not know whether the ministers opposite want to listen to us over here or not. If those two want to joke, they should go behind the curtain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister tried to say that this is not closure because it permits another five hours of debate. In other words he is saying he is going to use the guillotine and it will come down on our necks, but not right away, but after five more hours of debate.

The old closure rule, Standing Order 33, which Sir Robert Borden brought in back in 1913 and which the Liberals called everything under the sun but have since used a number of times, provided that on its application debate could go on until one o'clock at night. In other words, under Standing Order 33 more debate on the measure before the House would be guaranteed than the minister is allowing under 75C. If it is closure—and that is what it is called in the book—to end debate at one o'clock the next morning, I suggest that it is closure to tell us that after five more hours of debate the proceedings on second reading of Bill C-68 must end.

The minister also indulged in statistics—and they can always be used on either side of an argument—about the number of speeches which have been made in this debate and about the number who have spoken a second time. The implication in that, of course, is that we have had enough speeches. I say to the minister that I think we have had more speeches already than we should have had, but the purpose of speaking from this side of the House on Bill C-68 has been to try to persuade the government to withdraw the bill.

It is a bad bill. It was well put by my friend David Croll in the other place—he has been quoted often and does not mind it—when he said it is wrong, wrong, wrong. What we in the opposition have been trying to do in the course of this debate is not just to talk for the fun of it, day in and day out, but to persuade the government that the measure itself is a mistake, it is wrong, and that it should be withdrawn.

Mr. Sharp: That is only a minority view.

Mr. Blais: A small minority view.

Mr. Railton: That is just a pronouncement; it is not an argument.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It happens to be a pronouncement which is true, and I say to the hon. member who has recently joined the Liberal party in this House of Commons that what the government is now doing in Bill C-68 is reversing fifty years of the history of the Liberal Party. It was way back in 1919 when the Liberal party of this country first committed itself to old age pensions, unemployment insurance, and health insurance. It took an awfully long while to get these things. Old age pensions came along in 1926 or 1927, unemployment insurance in 1940 or 1941, but we did not get hospitalization until the middle fifties and medical care until the sixties. It took an awful lot of work and an awful lot of prodding, but as long as we had Mackenzie King, Louis St. Laurent or Lester Pearson as prime ministers, there seemed to be a desire, even though moving slowly, to move in the direction of providing these things.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

An hon. Member: But they did it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member says they did it. Yes, they did, and they did it in the belief that it would be good for Canadian unity to have a standard of medical care which would be the same right across the country. For that reason a formula was worked out and a commitment made to the provinces which, in practical terms, means that the federal government pays 50 per cent of the cost of hospitalization and 50 per cent of the cost of medicare. I know in medicare the formula is 25 per cent in one respect and 25 per cent in another, but that is a detail that I will not elaborate on at this point, for it adds up to 50 per cent, more or less.

● (1550)

Up to this point an effort has been made to achieve some uniformity by having medical care equally available across this country. But this bill makes provision in the next few years and down the road even more so, for the government to pay less than 50 per cent of the cost of medical care. It is planning the same thing for hospitalization. It is freezing funds for medical research. The result is going to be that in a few years medical care will not be equal across this country because the provinces will get from the federal government not 50 per cent but 45 per cent, 40 per cent, or 35 per cent. The provinces that can afford medical care programs will have them and those that cannot will have to cut services or put on extra taxes or deterrent fees.

I say to my friends over there who boast of what the Liberals did over a 50 year period—and they should not boast because it took that length of time—what the government under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is doing is to reverse the Liberal trend that was developed under Mackenzie King, under Louis St. Laurent, and, under Lester Pearson. I say therefore that we who are opposing the action of the government are in effect trying to save the soul, if it has one, of the Liberal party on this issue.

I point out also, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps this is my greater concern rather than the soul of the Liberal party, that I am concerned for what this is doing to Canada. When we get medical care and hospitalization on a basis where the wealthier provinces have it and the poorer provinces have less in terms of service or more to pay, this will do great damage to Canadian unity. That is why I regard this as an infamous act on the part of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), who has bungled a few other things in this parliament as well, to be asking us now to close off debate on Bill C-68.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) on a point of order.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have only ten minutes, but as long as the House will permit I will accept a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his ten minutes have expired. Will the House allow the hon. member for Mississauga to ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): With the unanimous consent of the House the hon. member for Mississauga may put a question to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Broadbent: Make it a good one.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, it may not be a good one but, as a relative newcomer, I want to ask the hon. member, as one who has been in the House as long as he has, is he saying it is an infamous act, after a debate has taken place in which exhaustive interventions have been made by almost every interested member of the opposition, that the government should never be permitted to bring the issue to a vote? Does he think the government should let those interventions go on and on in order to exhaust the government? Does he deny the right of the government to bring this matter to a vote ultimately?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the rules the government has the right to do it, and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) said today that the government is taking its political responsibility in this matter. I say to the hon. member for Mississauga and I say to the government that there are times in human history when minorities are right. I think the minority in this House is right in saying that Bill C-68 ought to be withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is why we are opposing this motion under Standing Order 75C.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, it is rather reluctantly that I take part in this debate, since the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) is now putting this House in a bind by having recourse to Standing Order 75A, 75B and 75C which had been passed by the House or rather imposed on the House by another motion of closure in July 1969.

Today the government uses this procedure to impose a bill which Canadians do not want, not any more than the provinces, and on which it has not been able to obtain unanimous consent of the House. Here is the real situation: the government is doing it alone with Bill C-68, by imposing by force its financial participation in a very important program, by limiting it now at 50 per cent and at less in future years. Thus the government imposes its law, it withdraws from a program it had forced upon the country, and it is taking this decision by imposing its will upon the House of Commons and using the muzzle, the guillotine.

For the moment, neither the government nor any government member can tell whether at least one province has given its full support to the passing of Bill C-68. In fact, discussions have not even begun. No province has given its agreement. The federal government does not care anyway. They are the federal government. They go over the provinces, and we see now that they will go over Parliament, and that after five hours of discussion, three quarters of which will be taken up in procedural debates, this legislation will have to be passed by this Parliament. Why? Because the government rely on their parliamentary majority, but they cannot pretend that they represent the majority of Canadians. That is not true, Mr. Speaker.

In that way, democracy is altered. The Liberals represent only 47 per cent of the electorate, and thus the majority of the population is on the opposition side. Whether the electoral system makes them the majority party is a different matter. That is why we find ourselves today passed the point of no return, that is we are simply facing closure. Let the provinces fend for themselves! It is up to them now to find the money required to finance the difference in the medical care cost, no matter whether or not it is the federal government which put them into this mess.

When the government introduced the anti-inflation legislation, it ordered a freeze on one item, among others, in order to put money aside because, it said, we had to save money. Well, what did it freeze? Family allowances. To save $200 million, the biggest budget cut was made at the expense of children. Now they are going to cut the social affairs budget again. What is rather surprising is that the government keeps changing its position on social security and this unilaterally. It strictly imposes its rule.

● (1600)

Mr. Speaker, that kind of attitude is non-parliamentary and non-democratic. Once the guillotine has fallen, that's it, we are soon going to vote this afternoon, and with the majority, the force of numbers, Bill C-68 will certainly be adopted. We will see the usual scenario being played. We will hear government members burst into applause. But the day those same members and ministers are on the opposition side, they will be the first to use the same language we are using today.

Mr. Speaker, almost everything is allowed in this House except when it comes to preventing a member from talking on behalf of his fellow citizens. Standing Orders 75(A), (B) and (C) are infamous since they deprive members of the House from the right to express their opinion. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take very much time talking about this since several other members will certainly want to state their views. The Liberals are arrogant. They impose their legislation on us. And when something is not to their liking, they resort to heckling, shouting and applause to impose their legislation.

A few years ago, they tried to make us believe that medicare was extraordinary—I know this since I was in the gallery at that time as secretary to the leader of the Social Credit Party. I recall that time very clearly. Today the government is using closure simply to withdraw unilaterally its participation in the financing of the health insurance scheme. In the next election, these same Liberals will use fine sounding words to proclaim that because of them Canada has the best and the greatest social security system in the world.

Mr. Speaker, this is nonsense. The attitude taken by the President of Privy Council in imposing his social security legislation, the attitude taken by Prime Minister Trudeau last weekend in Quebec City concerning a provincial premier, all this amounts to the same thing. It shows that this government thinks that it is infallible. Liberals have been in power more than 47 years out of 56. This shows their arrogance, and it is time for democracy to really come through in Canada. Mr. Speaker, the way the government imposes its will is revolting.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: The hon. member for Lévis is protesting because of the way I am talking. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I would point out to him that I have the right to say what I want in this House during the time alloted to me under the rules laid down by his party. I imagine that one day the same member for Lévis will be in the opposition. I hope so for his sake. It will do him good, Mr. Speaker. He will fall back on his feet in democracy and stop thinking he is someone else because he is on the government side. At that time he will probably talk in the same way as I am doing, and he will be given the chance to either sit in the opposition or stay at home. I urge him to try and understand the Canadian parliamentary system and stop flouting the right of members to express openly the opinion of their voters.

Mr. Speaker, the use of the closure in an area as crucial as social security in a field of jurisdiction where there is so much money involved as medicare shows how little social security matters to this government. To them, they are only words uttered in a strictly electoral purpose. Mr. Speaker, unless it changes its attitude the days of this government are certainly numbered.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): The hon. member for Lotbinière said at least one thing on which I agree. He pointed out that if the opposition were in the place of the government it would do precisely the same thing the government is doing now, that is opposing—

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Mr. Speaker, I am really quite surprised by what my hon. friend who misinterpreted my words just said. I suggested that if the Liberals were in the oppostion, they would probably say the same thing. But I am not surprised the hon. member should, intentionally twist my words to use them. When arrogance reaches the point where closure is imposed, one can resort to just about anything.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): I wonder if the words of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) were not misinterpreted, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I thank him for having proclaimed my election in 1978 by telling me that, either in the opposition or in power, I shall then sit in this House. I thank him very much.

I am told now that there is talk of closure. We have had a debate, Mr. Speaker, on this bill, for eleven days now. Is that democracy, is that reaching decisions or is it filibustering? If that is what the hon. member for Lotbinière is suggesting to the Canadian people, then I wish he would go and say it outside the House.

[Mr. Fortin.]

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Withdraw the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. That is not a point of order, that is a point of debate.

Mr. Kaplan: I apologize to the hon. member if I misunderstood his remarks. I did not intend to misinterpret, and I apologize if I did.

It is important to make the point, as the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) did, that this is not to be the end of debate on this bill. The bill has a long way to go. We are only on second reading. It must go to committee, where, as the minister said, amendments will be moved. The bill will be reported back to the House, and there will be further opportunities at the report stage as well as at third reading for discussion. Any who say that limiting debate at this stage will be the end of the bill and that the government is arrogantly going its own way are totally misrepresenting the facts.

On second reading we deal with the principles of the bill. Surely the opposition cannot dispute that it has made known its views on the principles of the bill. Thirty Conservative members spoke once, and two spoke twice on the principle of the bill. Of the NDP, nine members spoke once and four spoke twice on the principle of the bill. Without doubt, the country has been given the opportunity to know the views of the opposition on the principle of the bill, and the government has had full opportunity to understand the opposition's view on that principle. I ask, when will debate end? When will the government be allowed to exercise its responsibilities?

I am, as you know, parliamentary secretary and have had the pleasure of listening to the entire debate. From time to time I have tried to discover if and when the debate is to come to a natural end. I have checked with members of the Conservative party, and met with virtually the same response every time, "There are 15 more speakers." Well, there were 15 more speakers on the first day of debate, 15 more on the ninth day, and 15 more on the last day we debated this bill. I asked NDP members when they thought debate on this bill would come to a natural end. I learned that the NDP does not want debate on the bill to come to a natural end. It does not want debate to end. It wants the bill to be withdrawn.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: NDP members are entitled to their opinion but are they entitled to prolong debate forever and prevent a vote on the bill?

An hon. Member: Sometimes the opposition is right, you know.

Mr. Kaplan: If hon. members opposite think that is their right, they misunderstand the role of the opposition in this Chamber. Their attitude makes it impossible to deal with this legislation. How can one pass legislation if it is not allowed to come to a vote? The NDP are entitled to want the bill withdrawn, and entitled to so argue. But there are rights on the other side. Surely they have no right to prevent a vote on this bill, they cannot prolong debate so long that parliament will be obliged, in following its natural sense of priorities, to turn to other pieces of legislation. Surely this is not the purpose of parliamentary debate.

Conservative party spokemen complained they had not enought time to debate the bill on second reading. They do not suggest what is enough time. How much time do you need to show how you feel about the principle of the bill? When the government learns there is an indefinitely long line of members waiting, ready to speak on the bill and fill the time of the House, it is entitled to draw its own conclusions.

I remind the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that when the government recently resorted to Standing Order 75C, two members of his party spoke in support of the use of it. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) said on December 2 of last year—I am paraphrasing—that the opposition should be given a fair chance, but it is necessary for the government to govern. He said he would do the same if he were in the government's shoes. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) said much the same. In other words, both hon. members agreed that Standing Order 75C is a legitimate device which the government may use at a certain point.

After the opposition has made its points and expressed its objections, one hopes it will allow the House to proceed with its business. We must change from being a debating society to being a legislative body and do what must be done with legislation. Having inquired with hon. members opposite, it appears to me that they do not intend to let this debate come to a natural end.

Infamy has been alleged; treachery has been alleged. It has been said that parliament is the servant of the government and not the servant of the people of Canada. Certainly, parliament should not be the servant of the government. But should it be the servant of the opposition? Shall members of the opposition determine when parliamentary debate shall end, when a principle shall be considered as established and when bills shall be proceeded with? The President of the Privy Council indicated that there is much other business on the order paper. He is right. And there is a lot of other business which should be on the order paper.

● (1610)

We should dispose of this legislation, we should pass it through our normal procedures and move on to deal with other important matters which affect the people of Canada. Parliament is the servant of the people and I would urge members of the opposition not to prolong this debate to the full two hours permitted, or to the additional five hours. Let us get the bill in committee and then proceed to other business in this Chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I take part in this debate as one who did not speak during the discussion on the second reading of the bill. I may say I take strong issue with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), and with the parliamentary secretary who has just spoken. My position is certainly far removed from theirs.

It seems to me the government demonstrated a desire to downgrade parliament as an institution and to downgrade the right of each of us here to speak on behalf of our constituents. This is one of the issues which brought me into politics. When the government decided to bring forward this motion under Standing Order 75C it seemed to me it was not only missing the spirit of the rule but abusing it to a serious degree. Clearly the President of the Privy Council has the right, within the rules, to bring forward such a motion if no agreement can be reached with respect to the progress of legislation. In a technical sense he has acted in accordance with that Standing Order. But I submit that he, and the members who support him, miss the whole point of that rule.

The concept of closure was indeed established here by Sir Robert Borden, but hon. members should bear in mind that this was during the first world war at a time when an external threat was facing our country. Closure was not envisaged merely for the purpose of facilitating government business, as seems to be the case now. It was not used merely because the government was dissatisfied with the speed at which a particular piece of legislation was progressing. We have a duty and an obligation to speak on measures such as Bill C-68 when we feel it is in the interests of our constituents to do so.

The President of the Privy Council talks about 63 speeches having been made. Well, 63 speeches out of 264 is still a low percentage. What is going to happen when we have 400 members as a result of the redistribution proposals? I suppose the whole question of the rights and privileges of members will have to be redefined at that point, but I do not think it is incumbent upon the government to invoke closure under a provision of this sort whenever it feels a bill is not moving as quickly as it would like.

I have to agree with the parliamentary secretary to some extent. I found the attitude of the New Democratic Party toward this issue to be disappointing. I thought the NDP did a disservice by making it clear that it was their intention to filibuster the bill, appearing in the Chamber with large filibuster books, and so on. This, naturally, would egg on the government and play into its hands. I do not think the NDP did any good by showing such a flippant attitude toward the legislation, by having those books displayed in the House of Commons indicating they intended to participate in a filibuster.

The motion put before us by the President of the Privy Council is becoming an increasingly common procedure. It is becoming a mark of Liberal administration. I recall my first involvement in politics when I was a university student; it was brought about by the arrogance of the government in imposing closure at the time of the pipe line debate. I have just finished reading a book written by a former member for Bonavista-Twillingate, Mr. Pickersgill, in which he indicated that when he and his cabinet colleagues moved closure at the time of the pipe line debate in 1956 they worried and fretted for a long time because they did not want the Liberal party to be identified with the imposition of closure.

What do we find today? The only reason the minister gives us for his action is that the bill is not progressing as quickly as the government would like. If the government is dissatisfied with the progress of legislation the way to deal with that situation is to come forward with constructive suggestions with respect to amending the present procedure, not to abridge the rights of individual members to express their points of view freely.

Some time ago before I came to this House the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) referred to members of parliament as nobodies when they were 50 yards away from Parliament Hill. That was some time ago, so perhaps he has changed his mind since. But my concern is that he should be treating us as nobodies when we are, in fact, on Parliament Hill. The government has demonstrated its arrogance, as has been pointed out by the press on a number of occasions recently. The government should be careful about pressing its luck this afternoon. Supported by its majority, it has forgotten the lessons learned while it was a minority government. It has forgotten the motion of dealing reasonably with the opposition. We have not yet concluded the longest session in the history of our country.

There has been no Speech from the Throne for a period longer than ever before in history. This demonstrates that the government is incompetent when it comes to running the business of the House. I attribute it to the fact that the government cares nothing about the House of Commons; its flippancy and arrogance with respect to all these matters and, some people say, even with respect to approaching the judiciary, have been without parallel since Confederation. Mr. Pickersgill claimed that as a Liberal he was concerned about the use of closure. I can only say that a lot of real Liberals would be whirling in their graves today if they knew the attitude the government was taking toward the curtailment of the rights of members.

The reason the government is taking this step is clear. It wants to ram this bill through so that when the provincial ministers of health get together in Ottawa they can be told exactly what the federal government proposes to do as far as the allocation of funds is concerned. This summarizes the whole approach of the government toward the provinces. In other words, the attitude of the government is one of confrontation as opposed to discussion and negotiation. The government is to be not only chastised for this attitude; every member of the House should give very serious consideration to permitting this kind of procedure to be introduced with a lack of thought for a most important piece of legislation and without giving every member of the House an opportunity to speak on the legislation. Even backbenchers should have that opportunity. They should be able to express the point of view of their constituents—

● (1620)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) introduced this guillotine motion he said he did so with reluctance. And well he might. Not only should he have a feeling of reluctance; he ought to be ashamed at introducing a motion relating to a matter on which only about one quarter of the members of this House have spoken and which has far-reaching consequences for the people of Canada.

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

What we ought to ask ourselves is why this closure motion is being introduced. It is being introduced to enable the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to sit down and negotiate with the provincial ministers of health with a loaded gun on the table. As a matter of fact, there will be two loaded guns. The first gun will be the termination notice that the government issued last June with respect to its contributions to hospital insurance. The second loaded gun will be Bill C-68, which is to limit the contribution that the federal government will make to national medicare.

The government is anxious to get this bill through second reading so that when the provincial ministers of health meet with the federal representatives this legislation will have passed at least through second reading and the minister will be able to say to his provincial conterparts, "Parliament has approved our position; you can either take it or leave it".

I think it is important, Mr. Speaker, to look at the sequence of events which have taken place and the moves which the Minister of National Health and Welfare has made to avoid meeting the provincial ministers of health until he has this legislation through second reading. Let me remind the House that in May of 1973 the federal government proposed to the provincial governments that the federal government's contribution to medicare should be tied to the gross national product. We have only to look at what happened to the gross national product last year to realize what would happen if the provinces accepted that proposal. But in September of 1974 the provinces unanimously rejected the proposal. They not only rejected the proposal, they made an alternative proposal. They said, "We can help save money both for the federal and the provincial governments by having lower cost services, and we are prepared to sit down and discuss that".

At the last federal-provincial health ministers' conference in January, 1975, the Minister of National Health and Welfare agreed with the provincial representatives that this was the best way to go about cutting down costs both with regard to hospital insurance and medicare. As the minister admitted in the House on January 28 of this year, it was agreed that officials of both the federal government and the provincial governments were authorized to get together to begin working out programs by which lower cost services would be introduced, thereby eliminating many of the high cost services. That was a good arrangement, one that was entered into in good faith by both the provinces and the federal government.

On June 23 last the federal government pulled the rug from under these arrangements by announcing in the budget of the minister of finance, first that it would give a termination notice with regard to hospital insurance, and second, that it would introduce the measures contained in Bill C-68 to put a cap on the federal government's contribution to medicare.

The provinces were aghast. They felt they had been cheated and betrayed and they discontinued discussions. They felt there was no value in holding discussions in view of the two decisions that the federal government announced in the minister of finance's budget. I do not wonder that the provinces are outraged.

Mr. Railton: What do they want today?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I will tell the hon. member what they want today. They have asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare to hold a federal-provincial conference of health ministers. The minister promised that the conference would be held in October. He put it off until December, then he put it off until January of 1976, and the conference has not been held yet. Why is the Minister of National Health and Welfare afraid to meet his provincial counterparts? I have no doubt why—they would accuse him of bad faith, of breaking the commitment he made in January, 1975. He does not want to go to them unless he has a bill that has been approved in principle by parliament, which would give him authority to say, "This is what we are going to do; you can either like it or lump it".

The minister is asking the House to allow him to ram this legislation through so that he can go to the provinces with a fait accompli and say, "This is what you are going to do and you will have to do it". I say that this is contrary to all the principles that the government has so eloquently espoused on co-operative federalism. This is arrant arrogance and nothing less. That arrogance was further expressed today by the President of the Privy Council in bringing in a closure motion so as to permit only another five hours of discussion on second reading of Bill C-68.

When the President of the Privy Council and his parliamentary secretary get up in this House and say, "Ah, but you will have plenty of opportunity to discuss this matter in the standing committee, on report stage and on third reading", we have no assurance, Mr. Speaker, that a closure motion will not be used again in the course of the passage of this bill through the House. The government is using its muscle to ram legislation through the House without giving the provincial governments the opportunity at a federal-provincial conference of health ministers to express their opinions or explore other means—and there are other means—by which the cost of both medicare and hospital insurance can be reduced. Rather than meet the provinces, this group of people who have grown so mighty that they do not need to sit down and talk to the provinces now want parliament to give them the authority to force the provinces to do what the federal government wants them to do.

A Greek playwright—I think it was Sophocles—said some 2,300 years ago: "Whom the Gods would destroy they first make mad". This government is mad with power. The government's arrogance has gone beyond anything I have ever seen in any government over the last three or four decades.

● (1630)

The provincial governments, which are unanimous in opposing this legislation, and the people of Canada once they understand the implications of it, will be roused as they have not been roused for a long time. The government may win this vote today by invoking closure, but it will not convince the people of Canada that the action which it is taking is either fair or equitable. The Canadian people know perfectly well that all the federal government is seeking to do is to transfer the financial cost of providing health service in this country over to the provincial governments so that it can evade its just responsibility.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, contrary to what the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) has done, I will try to speak to the motion before the House. The speech made by the hon. member is admirable, one that he should repeat during the five hours that will be allocated after this motion has been accepted by the House. I note he is not on the list of the 13 speakers who have spoken on behalf of the socialist party. Undoubtedly he will have an opportunity to deal with this particular—

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member better get his facts straight. If the rest of his speech is going to be as inaccurate as his opening statement, it will be a very bad speech. If he will look up the list of speakers he will find that I did speak in this debate on second reading. I was ready to speak again on the amendment motion had the government not introduced this closure motion.

Mr. Blais: I note, Mr. Speaker, from glancing at the list that the hon. member was the third speaker on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I stand corrected. It was probably one of the better speeches because, as the debate progressed, the quality of the speeches decreased. That is understandable when the indicated aim of the NDP is not to present arguments that will persuade any member to change his view, but to try to persuade the executive to withdraw a particular piece of legislation.

I will now turn my attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn). I would have expected that, as a young member who is very interested in matters of procedure in this House, he would have taken a more reasonable and tempered attitude vis-à-vis what the government is attempting to do in this instance. Contrary to what the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands failed to do, the hon. member should have recognized that what the government is doing in this instance is trying to give effect to the changes in the rules passed in 1969. They, in effect, attempted to shift the attention of the House from second reading, which is approval in principle, to the committee stage by the creation of committees with wider powers, and then to the report stage, which is the report stage from the committees, including amendments, and then to third reading.

That has basically been accepted by the House leader and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). They both indicated in papers presented to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization that they felt, as did the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that there was a great waste of time in the House and that there ought to be a better allocation and administration of time so that legislation would be dealt with expeditiously.

I draw Your Honour's attention and that of the House to statements made in committee by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). I quote from page 30 of issue 9 of the committee proceedings:

Since it is the government's program, the government must take the responsibility for taking steps to put it through parliament. At the same time, the Commons must be in a position to resist arbitrary actions and to attempt to mobilize public opinion.

These two principles are well accepted. As a parliamentarian of more recent vintage than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, I hope they will guide this House in the future when both hon. members will not be with us.

In Canada, the principal battle on a bill has usually been fought at the second reading stage. This makes little sense since the second reading stage is really merely a motion to refer a bill to a committee.

Yesterday when dealing with a point of order on Bill C-83 the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre confirmed that view. He indicated that there are two portions to the second reading stage, second reading being the first, and referral to a committee the second. He attached quite a bit of importance to the latter part, namely, referral to a committee for study.

The quotation continues:

A delay at second reading not only creates log jams down the system, but it results in undue pressure on committees, when they get difficult bills, to proceed in a more hasty and more partisan manner, thereby detracting from the serious work of hearing representations and making amendments.

Here again this is crucial to the procedures of this House. The committee is set up with a limited number of members and is ready to deal with a specific subject matter. They are usually more informed with reference to the particular subject matter. I refer here to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. The committee will deal with this bill and receive representations from interested parties who wish to attend before the committee to testify in the hope of persuading the members of the committee to present a report different from what has been submitted to it for consideration.

I continue to quote:

The committee stage becomes a rather repetitive and boring (and unobserved) prelude for an equally repetitive and boring report stage, when the House is often asked to spend much time re-confirming the partisan positions taken in committee. Ironically, by the time the third reading stage is reached, i.e. the stage at which the House is asked the essential question, "Shall the bill pass?", opposition to a bill has usually worn itself out and, if there is any debate at this stage, it is a dreary dénouement. While the political effects of this system can be impressive, it usually does little to improve the bill and nothing to assist the over-all legislative program. The system to be sought should be aimed at preserving the political potentials but, at the same time, increasing the likelihood of improving the legislation.

That is fundamental to this debate. The facts are not in dispute. This bill has been before the House for 11 different sittings. There have been 30 hours of debate on second reading.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Kaplan) indicated that after five additional hours of debate this bill will proceed to a committee. Every member of this House is permitted to attend the committee and to present amendments. Those amendments will be deliberated and voted upon. If they are unable to get the committee to accept the amendments, prior to the matter coming before this House at report stage, they can move any amendment that is in order.

[Mr. Blais.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is in order.

Mr. Blais: Yes, that deals with the subject matter of the bill, including a motion to repeal or do away with a clause or to reject a whole clause within a particular bill.

● (1640)

We had the same experience when dealing with Bill C-68. Members on the government benches introduced at the report stage major amendments that were debated at length if not ad nauseam. After this particular matter is dealt with at that stage we will then proceed to third reading. This is not closure. This is simply an allocation of time on an elementary portion of the debate, second reading.

We have heard from the opposition, time and time again, expressions and mouthings of good intention relating to changes in the rules of this House. If the attitude manifested by speakers at this time is any indication of the success we will meet in effecting these major rule changes I am indeed very disappointed. The effect of what was said by the President of the Privy Council is not disputed by anyone. I am a parliamentarian and have a good deal of respect for this place, but I am also interested in having here a quality of debate which is worthy of the institution. Filibusters are not conducive to a high quality of debate despite the preachings we get from opposition members. We hear rantings, ravings, repetition, and remarks of absolutely no worth or weight.

Mr. McCleave: What about your raving?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I heard the co-chairman of the Committee on Statutory Instruments, who was a deputy speaker of this House. He is well aware of the feelings in respect of the rules of procedure. I would expect him to agree with the view I expressed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but his time has expired.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when he stated that even at the time of the introduction of closure in the Borden years during the First World War more time was allowed for debate than there will be at this time. I think this is significant.

This is a very important piece of legislation. We really are starting all over again the medical care and hospital care debate. I suggest one of the great weaknesses of the government is that it has not brought forward a throne speech to indicate how it will react in respect of the financial, economic, and social life of the country. This is the longest period in which we have been without a throne speech. We have no indication concerning the direction in which we are headed. I think it is high time there was some direction.

The internal deficit of something in the order of $6 billion is throwing some of the cost of programs on to the provinces. In addition there is an external deficit of something in the order of $6 billion. This and the rise in the value of the dollar make the situation more difficult in respect of our exports and easier in respect of imports.

There can be only difficulty ahead. The government does not make known its intentions in respect of dealing with these serious problems. I do not think it is possible to debate this particular piece of legislation intelligently without knowing what the government has in mind and how it intends to face the over-all situation. The talk at this time about repatriation of the constitution is so much rhetoric. It is like saying we should paint the lifeboat while the main boat is sinking.

In this bill the government really has neglected the interests of the provinces. It has given no indication of an attempt to reach agreement with the provinces. The reduction in the amount of money available will mean a reduction in the services the provinces can provide. The government has not indicated that it has even attempted to reach an agreement with the provinces. The action has been unilateral. It has been indicated by other members that the government intends to go to these provincial conferences with a fait accompli, saying that the provinces will be cut back unilaterally.

This is one of the most anti-provincial pieces of legislation we have seen. The BNA act gave the provinces jurisdiction in respect of health, welfare, and education. I feel that, on the whole, this was a wise move even if 100 years later we have a different social order. What was not clear at that time was that the federal government would usurp most of the tax structure to its own advantage. In effect the provinces have been left with large social problems and debts in respect of the provision of health, welfare, and education, without the corresponding tax structure with which to take care of them.

There have been a series of agreements whereby the wealthier provinces, through the tax structure, have given to the less wealthy provinces grants from taxes collected through the federal treasury. This has reduced some of the strain on Confederation. In my opinion the usurpation of health, welfare, and partially education, has created the greatest strain we have had on Confederation. I think the federal government of ten years ago decided the provinces were not to be trusted to look after their citizens to the best of their ability, and therefore they were not to be trusted to evolve medical care plans, health care plans or hospital plans that would be suitable.

The government forced on the provinces the most expensive type of hospital and medical care plans, on a 50-50 basis, whereby a province which would not take advantage of every health service found that its citizens were contributing to the general tax structure in Ottawa but were not receiving from it. The shared-cost program lead to over-expansion and over-utilization.

The government has given no hint concerning what it thinks the health care situation should be and how the provinces can carry the burden of health care. Is it willing to give up tax points and, if so, how many? Is it willing to make uncommitted grants which the provinces may use as they see fit? I agree that the cost of health care, medical care, and particularly hospital care, is severe. It is a problem that must be faced by this country. But there is no point in merely trying to attempt to slough off the burden on to the provinces which already are over-burdened and which do not have the tax structure with which to continue.

We shall have to make some decisions. The government must accept guilt for the burden of programs that are beyond the ability of the tax structure to bear. This bill should not pass until the government has given some indication of the situation this country is in and the serious financial burdens that are ahead of us.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the filibuster in respect to Bill C-68 with increasing puzzlement. We have heard statements of how the government is about to do dreadful things to sick people.

What has been proposed in fact is that, instead of having the present open-ended situation in respect of health costs, some reasonable figure should be set. The escalation being discussed is 14½ per cent the first year, 11 per cent or 12 per cent the second year, and 10 per cent thereafter. These really are not ungenerous figures. They are figures which run ahead of inflation. They are in line with the whole thrust of medical practice at the present time which is very much in the direction of looking at preventive medicine and the low cost alternatives which often are alternatives that best suit the sick person, such as care in the home with additional nursing care, rather than the use of expensive teaching hospital resources which are sometimes inappropriate and unnecessary.

● (1650)

We find that the Canadian Medical Association is quite ready to join the government in looking at constructive alternatives. The president of CMA appeared before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs and indicated a willingness to try to find ways of reducing costs while not reducing the quality of care.

Opposition members have also been saying that they want to see more efficiency in government sponsored programs and a reduction in government spending. That being so, it is a puzzle to me why they are not prepared to allow this bill to go to committee where amendments can be made and where, if the bill is as imperfect as they say, it can be improved.

With regard to the motion under Standing Order 75C, we have heard very harsh words about the government imposing legislation under the provisions of that Standing Order. What has in fact happened? The request is that the bill be sent to committee for a careful clause by clause examination, which surely must be an improvement on the broad generalities which we have heard from the opposition in the debate up to now. If the bill is imperfect, then surely what the opposition should want is to send it to committee where it can be improved by amendment. There will be opportunities for amending it again at the report stage or on third reading.

We have also heard much said this afternoon about respect for parliament, but how can the public respect parliament if parliament continues to be as inefficient as this in doing its business? Some of the opposition members who have been here for 20 years may not realize how the system appears to those of us who have come here more recently and who have really been surprised at the repetitive nature of many of the speeches and at the reading-in of quotations from newspapers in speeches made at the second reading stage.

I should like to echo the words uttered by my colleague earlier on when he said that some opposition members would like to use this House as a debating society rather than as a legislative body. During some of the other filibusters to which I have listened in the 18 months that I have been here I noticed that precisely the same speech is often made at the second reading stage, at the report stage, and at the third reading stage, not to mention in committees.

In contrast to all this are the very constructive and thoughtful suggestions that have been made in the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization by opposition members, many of whom seem to have taken the position that it would be a great saving to have the major debate on bills at third reading. Many members from both sides of the House have suggested that the second reading should be preliminary, with committee and report stage investigative and orderly, and the major debate coming at the third reading stage after hon. members have had the opportunity to study the intent of the bill carefully and to give it a clause by clause examination.

Some members of the opposition have said today that the government side is confrontational in its attitude. I do not think that any party has a monopoly on confrontation, but I think it is a matter of great urgency that there be more co-operation on all sides of the House and that we stop these absurd filibusters and get on with the business of the nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Nicholson: I recognize the right of the opposition parties to make known their points of view clearly, but not to delay and indulge in repetitive and lengthy speeches which are quite devoid of constructive suggestions. Sending work to committees is one of the methods that was devised to deal with parliament's ever increasing work load. May I suggest that it would be in our interest to send this bill to committee and for those members who wish to improve it to move amendments there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Cease your applause, you fellows, you are cutting down on my time.

I was very interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). It is nice to have the contribution of a lady's comments in the House, even though she views the situation through rose coloured glasses. When she speaks about preventive medical care as something which we see every day in medical practice, the fact is that so far as looking after all the ills of humanity is concerned preventive medical care in the context referred to by the hon. member for Trinity is years down the line. She also referred to the presence of the CMA president before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, but she failed to mention that it was not in the context of Bill C-68. That bill was not before the committee then, and that will be the time for the hon. member to make that statement. It certainly does not apply right now.

[Miss Nicholson.]

Let us get on with the problem of Bill C-68 and why we are talking about it today.

Miss Nicholson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Brisco: I will accept a question but only after I have finished my comments in ten minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I remind the hon. member that if he speaks for ten minutes he will need unanimous consent to reply to the question.

Mr. Brisco: I will take that chance, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Chicken.

Mr. Brisco: It is patently obvious that on the subject of closure the skulk of foxes on the other side have turned into a flurry of rabbits. Last night the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) informed the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs that on March 16 and 17 a contingent of provincial deputy ministers will arrive in Ottawa. And certainly they do not want to be greeted by the fact that Bill C-68 is still before the House at second reading in April, on the 27th and 28th, when a contingent of provincial ministers of health arrive in Ottawa. It would be the hope of the government that it could by then have forced this bill through committee and through third reading. That is why we are going through this exercise.

● (1700)

The government House leader today complained bitterly about the filibustering of this bill. He said it has been before the House since July 6. I remind the minister that Bill C-58 was before the House from April 5 until very recently. There was no attempt at that time to filibuster; he failed to mention that.

Mr. Sharp: I used 75c on that bill too.

Mr. Brisco: The comparisons are just not the same. Let us consider the terms of Bill C-58 and Bill C-68. Which is of the most national importance, the health of Canadians or whether we read Time and Reader's Digest?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brisco: What it really amounts to is a question of priorities and the old game of confrontation. The hon. member for Trinity referred to confrontation. Let me assure the hon. member that there is only one party in this House which can engage in the game of confrontation, and that is the government party. We cannot engage in it. We engage in valuable debate, and if hon. members would care to read some of the intelligent remarks made by hon. members on this side they would understand why we have addressed our concerns so sincerely and in such a dedicated fashion time and time again with reference to this bill. They just do not get the message. It is the old game of Liberal arrogance and confrontation.

We saw the same thing when the former minister of finance introduced federal mining legislation taxing all mines and raw resource industries. That was the old game of confrontation with the provinces, and this is the same thing. It is historical. It is endemic, and a disease which I think is bred into the party sitting on the other side.

What is the stance of the provinces? It is very interesting that in not one address given by hon. members on the government side which I have read have they made reference to the fact that there is not one provincial government in this nation which has approved of this bill. Surely there must be some province, perhaps a little one like Prince Edward Island, or a big, wealthy one like Alberta, which feels that it can stand the gaff, but that is not the point. The point is, who will this type of program affect? It will affect the poor. And who are the poor? They are the sick. I have said before in this House in debate on this same bill that the sick get sicker, the poor get poorer, and the pensioner gets it in the neck because he is often the one who is both poor and sick.

What options has the government offered? I noted with interest last night in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs that the minister made a remark with regard to guaranteed annual income, that carrot he has been dangling before the Canadian public for many years. In making reference to that I can only ask, when he feels the Canadian people and the government can afford it and when it does come in, how long will it be before there is a deduction for medical costs or a deduction because of pensions, old age, veterans or whatever?

Why can the government not introduce legislation concerning the health of Canadians which it knows will be valid, stop messing around with the health of Canadians, and stick to its guns? Why get into a program of a guaranteed annual income if the government cannot afford it? If only there were some hon. members on the other side of the House who would just take the time in caucus to ask the minister why this is going on and why the Conservatives, members of the NDP, and the Creditistes are speaking so vehemently and sincerely about this bill. Are hon. members opposite afraid of a little self-examination?

I congratulate those hon. members on the government side who have contributed in debate. It at least indicates that they have done some measure of homework, but frankly I think that the majority of hon. members opposite just do not care. They do not understand the thrust or effect of the bill. They do not recognize the fact there is not a province in Canada which approves of the bill. They do not accept the fact that there is not a medical association, be it federal or provincial, which accepts the bill. They do not understand that there is not a paramedical organization in Canada which approves or endorses this bill. They do not understand these things because they have not bothered to pay attention. Well, so be it.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said in committee and in the House—and how true it is—that you do not mess around with the health care of Canadians without the chickens coming home to roost. Hon. members opposite cannot say they have not been warned, and it will be the ultimate delight for me to see those chickens come home to roost when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) faces the people in the next federal election.

Now I am prepared to answer the question of the hon. member for Trinity.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite correct when he points out that this bill has not gone to committee. That is the point of today's exercise, I trust.

However, is the hon. member aware that the provisions of Bill C-68 were foreshadowed in the June, 1975, budget when guidelines were laid down, and that acceptance of those guidelines was indicated by the president of the Canadian Medical Association when he appeared before the standing committee, I believe in October, 1975?

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I think I can confirm in part what the hon. member has said, having served on the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs since I came into this House in July of 1974. I and all hon. members of this House are well aware that that allusion was made by the then minister of finance, now Mr. Turner, but the simple fact remains that if the hon. member for Trinity would care to read the documentation and the material available from the Canadian Medical Association at this time, its posture has indeed changed, and I can well understand why.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, in line with my usual philosophy, since I understand there are probably at least two other hon. members who wish to speak before the debate closes at 5:35, I will try to shorten my remarks, make my points as quickly as possible, make points which I do not think have been adequately explored here this afternoon, and leave aside the temptation to go down the trails which have been trodden so many times before, although through very exceptional speeches. I have no quarrel with any one of them, though I have some quarrels with some of the ideas which have been expressed in them.

First I should like to make the point—and it really is the role of an opposition in a very major debate and one which does not come along very often in any session of parliament—and to ask the question, how far is an opposition allowed to go to express its displeasure with a measure which is proposed by the government? Perhaps it becomes a little more complicated when one is dealing with a person such as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). I have decided to make my argument on a generality, however, and not allow myself to get sidetracked by the personal preferences and disposition or way of doing things that certain of the ministry have followed; so I shall take it as a general issue and not mention the Minister of National Health and Welfare in the next ten minutes.

● (1710)

The measure we are debating amounts to one-sided divorce, Mr. Speaker, that is, it is a decision by one of the partners to a federal-provincial partnership in the field of health care to change its role, to change the amount of money it is willing to put into the partnership. It has done this, as far as I can see, without the blessing of any one of the provincial governments, or the two territories. If someone cannot get up in this place and make an argument about that sort of arbitrary procedure, we are not worthy of being considered a parliament at all.

I think the point that has been missed by those who say that once a government proposes a measure and it has been debated for a few days the measure then has inevitably to come to a vote, is that we have to reach beyond the press gallery—I see two of them here this afternoon, which is double the advantage we usually enjoy at this hour—and go to the people of Canada to whip up public opinion on whether the measure is a good thing or a poor thing.

In this respect I suggest to the press, to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), and to the parliamentary secretary that the government has failed. There has been no compelling rush of public opinion on this matter saying that the measure should pass because it has been thought up by a wise and omnipotent government. As far as I can see the government does not have a friend across the land on this issue and until it can show me some—I do not speak about friends on the other side of the House because obviously it is full of friends—then I think we can argue this case until the end of this year or any year. I think it is that important. Ministers have not made a case. They have taken an arbitrary position and decided to impose it on provincial governments and territorial governments, scream as they will. I think that is wrong, Mr. Speaker.

I would immediately remove that side of the argument from any abstract of the will of the majority prevailing. If the will of the majority were to make itself known to the people of Canada, the people would say, "Let us call a general election and get rid of these people who obstruct the will of the majority."

I say this as a corollary to what I have said so far: must opposition always be considered to reflect the minority view? Is there not a point that my colleagues, myself and some people on the other side, should stand up to show that we somehow do happen to reflect the will of the majority of Canadians? I think we did it with regard to Reader's Digest in some ways. Somehow an accommodation on that particular issue was found within the government. Why can it not find it on this particular issue?

I spent most of my early life in politics fighting over the issue that I thought nobody should ever be sold down the drain because of illness within the family. I always thought that medicare and hospital plans were two of the brightest adornments of this particular parliament. If it will please anybody, one of them was the work of a Conservative prime minister and the other the work of a Liberal prime minister.

Mr. Benjamin: After Tommy Douglas.

Mr. McCleave: Yes, indeed. May I pay my respects to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas)? I thank the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) for his intervention; he is quite right. It was the work of a good number of well meaning people, some of whom did not have a role in government but at least had a role in the public conscience. I am saying the public conscience is very much at stake in the argument we are getting into now.

I promised I would try to divide my time with other people, Mr. Speaker. I should like to answer the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) about cures being made in committee. But let us face it, that is not always practicable or possible under the scheme of things. With our very aggressive whips such as the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) I am sure a cure in committee would be as likely as reduced taxes before the end of the current parliament.

[Mr. McCleave.]

I have other thoughts but the time runs short, Mr. Speaker, so I will sum up what I have attempted to say. There is a public conscience on this thing that is not reflected in the very arbitrary action that is proposed here this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Although it is not written into our Standing Orders, I am looking at the clock and see there are 13 minutes left before the taking of the vote on this matter. I would be ready to recognize the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). I saw two hon. members interested in speaking, and now I see three. I hope they might consider allowing other members a little time so that they can share whatever time is available.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall try to take only half the time remaining so that hon. members to my right may have an opportunity to speak.

I want to say that even with a majority government there still is and there has been in the past the odd occasion, the rare occasion, when a government should decide not to proceed with a measure it has been attempting to get through parliament, not just because opposition parties are united in opposition to the measure but because it is so apparent that not only every province but the great majority of Canadians are opposed to the legislation.

This is one of those rare occasions of unanimity among all provinces and unanimity among all opposition parties—which by the way represent a majority of the voters in Canada. Given that unanimity, given what has been said by medical authorities, members of hospital associations and those associated with health care, surely this is one of those rare occasions when the government should not proceed with a measure which it originally thought was worth while. Surely it is now obvious to the government that this should not be proceeded with.

In a democratic system majority also means responsible government. I submit that the attempt by the government to bring in rule 75c, the attempt to proceed with this legislation, is the height of irresponsibility. The government keeps claiming it is second to none in fighting for national unity, in standing for Confederation, in consulting for co-operative federalism with the provinces, etc. But here we see a betrayal of the principles of Confederation and co-operative federalism. What do the Liberals say now about national unity and Confederation?

● (1720)

Surely in these times when the government says it must practise so-called restraint to fight inflation we should not attack the health services of this country. They are basic to the well-being of our citizens. They should be the last to feel the effects of restraint. We should spend more on them, not less. Not only should the government spend more on the program; it should embark with the provinces on other shared-cost programs for pharmacare, dental care, preventive medicine, home nursing care, and so on. A host of measures is yet to be enacted, measures which countries much poorer than ours have already adopted.

The government wants to chisel. It wishes to cheat the people of this country of their right to available, accessible health services. It wishes to bring down the guillotine, to limit debate on second reading of this measure. That makes the chiselling worse.

Sometimes the opposition is right, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes even my friends opposite will concede that the opposition is right. In this instance all three opposition parties are unanimous in opposing this bill. Provincial governments of all political stripes are unanimous in condemning the government. Surely that is signal enough. Surely the government House leader and government members are aware of representations of provincial governments, including Liberal provincial governments, to the effect that this bill should not be proceeded with. Surely it is patently obvious that this is a rare occasion on which a majority government should be courageous enough to withdraw a measure.

I readily admit that it takes courage to proceed with an unpopular measure. It also takes courage not to proceed with a measure, and it is patently obvious that the government should not proceed with this measure. The government's invoking of Standing Order 75c makes its refusal to withdraw all the more horrendous. At least let it have the decency to allow debate to proceed normally. But no, it will not listen. It ignores the wishes of all opposition parties and all provinces of Canada. I hope the House will defeat this attempt to impose closure.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes available I shall expound a little ancient history. I am disappointed because I have been unable to speak in the debate, and am disappointed because I will not be able to speak in the remaining five hours allotted, if the motion passes. Not only am I disappointed; I resent it deeply. This afternoon I shall say concisely what I hoped to say at greater length in the normal debate. I resent being gagged and not being able to make known my views.

Mr. Abbott: Where have you been?

Mr. Lawrence: I have been in the House, attempting to get on the whip's list. Because of the widespread interest in the legislation many wanted to speak and I was unable to get on his list. I understand that. I say, for the benefit of the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott), that I am still unable to get on the whip's list; it is too long.

Some feel that the federal level of the government is the senior level of government. Yes, I know some look down their noses at other levels of government. But let me tell you, Sir, that in many ways junior levels are more realistic and responsive simply because they are closer to the people.

I want to remind the House of the attitude taken more than ten years ago by two great Canadians on medicare. I am referring to Hon. Leslie Frost and Hon. John Robarts, and I wish, in the short time available, to tell the House what they thought.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I assure the hon. member—what's his riding—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Northumberland-Durham.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I assure the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) that he will have an opportunity to speak on the bill. I will put him on my list. He can speak in the allotted five hours.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, because the government is to gag us I shall be unable to say in full what I wanted to say in a normal debate. As I said, between ten and 15 years ago the leaders of the political parties in Ontario foretold exactly what is happening today. I well remember John Robarts saying to the people of Ontario, "You will regret the day you let the federal camel into the provincial medicare tent."

Some 15 years ago 85 per cent of the people of Ontario were covered by a privately financed medicare system.

Mr. Benjamin: Which was a mess.

Mr. Lawrence: At the same time everyone on welfare who could pass the means test was eligible for medicare paid for by the province.

An hon. Member: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps, as time is limited, the hon. member should be allowed to continue.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, plans were afoot in Ontario to make certain that 100 per cent of the population was covered by an efficient medicare plan, a plan which would not involve the waste, abuse, administrative machinery and extravagance resulting from the federal government's blackmail and coercion of the provinces. The government forced on the people of this country a plan not needed, required or wanted. Nevertheless provincial governments, aided and abetted by provincial NDP and Liberal parties, had to give in to the blackmail at that time.

Now the chickens have come home to roost. The government foisted on the people of this country a blundering, bungling medicare system. The government now sees the error of its ways and is trying to pull the rug from under provincial governments. That attempt, and its attempt to impose the guillotine, are despicable.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the behaviour of the government in this matter calls in question the morality of government. The government placed before the House legislation which it knew was not acceptable. It then complained when the House debated at some length—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1730)

Mr. McCain: You don't like what I am saying, so you just don't want to hear any more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lawrence: Privilege! A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will hear the hon. member's question of privilege after the vote has been taken.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 5:31 p.m., the two hours provided for consideration of the motion now before the House pursuant to Standing Order 75C have now expired. Therefore, pursuant to that Standing Order I must interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary for the disposal of that motion.

[English]

The question is on the motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp).

All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Sharp) which was agreed to on the following division:

● (1740)

(Division No. 116)

YEAS

Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Andres
(Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Breau
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss)
(South Western Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle-Émard-Côte
Saint-Paul)
Chrétien
Clermont
Comtois
Condon
Corriveau
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
De Bané
Demers
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas
(Bruce-Grey)

Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Duquet
Ethier
Faulkner
Fleming
Flynn
Foster
Fox
Francis
Gauthier
(Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Goyer
Guay
(St. Boniface)
Guay
(Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harquail
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Isabelle
Joyal
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lang
Langlois
Leblanc
(Laurier)
LeBlanc
(Westmorland-Kent)
Lee
Lefebvre
Lessard

Loiselle
(Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacEachen
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Maine
Marceau
Marchand
(Langelier)
Marchand
(Kamloops-Cariboo)
Martin
McIsaac
McRae
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
O'Connell
Olivier
Ouellet
Parent
Pearsall
Penner
Pinard
Poulin
Railton
Raines
Reid
Roberts
Robinson
Rooney
Roy
(Timmins)
Roy
(Laval)
Sharp
Smith
(Saint-Jean)

[Mr. Lawrence.]

Messrs.

Stanbury
Stollery
Tessier

Trudeau
Trudel
Turner

Whelan
Yanakis
Young—105.

NAYS

Messrs.

Alkenbrack
Andre
(Calgary Centre)
Baker
(Grenville-Carleton)
Bawden
Benjamin
Brisco
Broadbent
Caouette
(Villeneuve)
Clark
(Rocky Mountain)
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Crouse
Darling
Dick
Dionne
(Kamouraska)
Douglas
(Nanaimo-Cowichan-
The Islands)
Ellis
Fairweather
Forrestall
Fortin
Gauthier
(Roberval)
Gilbert

Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton
(Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hogan
Holmes
Jarvis
Johnston
Jones
Kempling
Knowles
(Winnipeg
North Centre)
Knowles
(Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
La Salle
Lawrence
Leggatt
MacDonald (Miss)
(Kingston and the Islands)
MacKay
MacLean
Malone
Marshall

Masniuk
Matte
Mazankowski
McCain
McCleave
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinley
McKinnon
Mitges
Muir
Neil
Orlikow
Paproski
Reynolds
Ritchie
Rondeau
Saltsman
Schellenberger
Scott
Smith
(Churchill)
Stanfield
Stewart
(Marquette)
Symes
Towers
Wenman
Whittaker
Wise
Woolliams—72.

● (1750)

During the taking of the vote:

Mr. Speaker: Before calling those opposed to the motion, may I indicate that, in my view, Mr. Demers was identified as Mr. Caron.

After the taking of the vote:

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion carried.

Motion (Mr. Sharp) agreed to.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTION RESPECTING PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the hon. members for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne), Champlain (Mr. Matte), Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan), Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) and Moncton (Mr. Jones) has been filed with me, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

[English]

FILING OF OBJECTION RESPECTING PROVINCE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Speaker: May I also inform the House that an objection signed by the hon. members for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan), Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) has been filed with me pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, chapter E-2, R.S.C., 1970, to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of British Columbia.

If the House agrees, I would suggest we follow past practice and print the texts of the objections as appendices to this day's Votes and Proceedings. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 11, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL HOUSING CONFERENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion is prompted by figures contained in the consumer price index released today which show a further increase in the price of housing in Canada making for an over-all yearly increase of 11.5 per cent, the highest yearly increase in the history of this country since records have been kept of housing statistics. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the Minister of State for Urban Affairs immediately convene a federal provincial housing conference.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The presentation of this motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AUDITOR GENERAL

PROPOSED IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF INDEPENDENT REVIEW COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I also have a motion under Standing Order 43. The urgent and pressing necessity is based on the dramatic increase in government spending coupled with the continual refusal by the government to be accountable for and explain this escalation, as well as the failure of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) to introduce legislation based on a report of the Independent Review Committee on the Office of the Auditor General. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), if unanimous consent is given:

That this House calls on the government to immediately introduce a bill to deal with the recommendations of the Independent Review Committee on the Office of the Auditor General as called for in the report of the committee given to the government approximately one year ago and thereby ease concern of Canadians as to the new levels of government spending and extravagance and give some credibility to the currently discredited restraint program.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF OPERATION OF COMPENSATION BRANCH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that it has been over four months since the 600 Sudbury district elementary teachers reached an agreement with their employers and submitted it to the compensation branch of the Anti-Inflation Board, and in view of the fact that in speaking with a senior staff member of the compensation branch he expressed complete frustration with the board for not defining the roles of the employees in that branch of the AIB resulting in foul-ups and delays in approving agreements such as this one, and in view of the fact that the employee was very emphatic when he said—and I quote him—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not like to interrupt the hon. member but I feel he is transferring to the side of debate as opposed to the motion. Would the hon. member put the motion?

Mr. Rodriguez: I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

● (1410)

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to investigate the manner in which the compensation branch of the AIB is presently operating, with a view to clarifying the confusion which exists and to ensure that all agreements are expeditiously handled.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43 unanimous consent is required before the motion can be put. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Administration of Justice

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY ON ALLEGED INTERVENTION OF MINISTERS WITH QUEBEC JUDGES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning an important question.

Taking into account the revelations made by special attorney Richard Holden concerning the intervention by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) in judicial proceedings, and the inexcusable leaks which happened at Mr. Holden's office to the profit of the media, particularly the Globe and Mail, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House order the federal government to request a special inquiry by an independent group on the whole question of intervention by members of the cabinet with different judges in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

[English]

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGATIONS THAT MINISTERS INTERFERED WITH JUDICIARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the Prime Minister has declined to give the House and the country any assurances that the conduct of his ministers vis-à-vis the judiciary will be subjected to the scrutiny of a public inquiry, and since his predecessor, the late Lester B. Pearson, at the time of the Dorion inquiry, clearly outlined by letter to his ministers that there must be no attitudes of mind or standards of conduct which could effect the full confidence of the people in the proper conduct of public affairs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That this House reject the Prime Minister's unilateral imposition of his own personal standards of what is right and proper in terms of his ministers' behaviour, and calls upon him to make public all of the evidence upon which he has come to such a conclusion and to institute a full public inquiry.

Mr. Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43 unanimous consent is required. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO BAR ASSOCIATIONS OF APPROACHES TO JUDGES BY MINISTERS WHO ARE LAWYERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of allegations against certain cabinet ministers who are also lawyers that they have intervened with members of the judiciary with respect to matters before the court, and in view of the statement in the code of professional conduct of the Canadian Bar Association that a lawyer must not "endeavour or allow anyone else to endeavour, directly or indirectly, to influence the decision or action of a tribunal or any of its officials in any case or matter, whether by bribery, personal approach or any means other than open persuasion as an advocate", and in view of the fact that there have been admissions of personal approaches to members of the judiciary by certain cabinet ministers who are also lawyers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That this House direct the Minister of Justice and the chief law officer of the Crown to refer the matter of the personal approaches made to members of the judiciary by cabinet ministers who are also lawyers to the respective law societies of which the said cabinet ministers are members for investigation or appropriate disciplinary action.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can only be presented with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—PRIME MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF CONTENTS OF CONVERSATIONS BETWEEN MR. DRURY AND JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister who, naturally, must take responsibility for the conduct of his ministers and answer to Parliament for the ethics of his government. Would the right hon. gentleman tell us whether, in his explanation to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Public Works completely denied the allegation that he had tried to effect a solution in the court case by seeking an indication from the judge as to how the judge would respond to an apology from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would say, because it is relevant to my statement that the minister in my view was not guilty of any attempt to influence the court, that effectively the minister did deny that he in any way attempted to influence the court. Beyond that, I repeat what I have said to the House on previous occasions. The relevant subject is, surely, whether the courts were interfered with and not what ministers said to each other. I hear the hon. lady over there snorting.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: She does that all the time.

An hon. Member: That is one of her better speeches. She was at her most eloquent.

Mr. Trudeau: Therefore, I would urge the opposition to get back to the main question of the relationship between the ministers and the judges and not the relationship between ministers.

Mr. Clark: On behalf of the House I must, I suppose, congratulate the Prime Minister on his extraordinary range—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Wait till you hear it.

Mr. Clark: —his extraordinary range of evasion. He does not miss a chance or a snort.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister of course once again did not answer the specific question as to whether or not there was a denial by the Minister of Public Works of an attempt to seek from the judge an indication of how the judge would respond to an apology. Since raising with the judge any suggestion of the political impact of a verdict and any suggestion of the regard in which an accused is held by the government could certainly constitute both an attempt to influence and intimidate, I would like to ask the Prime Minister—and I wish he would be specific in his response—whether the Minister of Public Works has categorically denied to the Prime Minister that he reminded the judge that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is an important person and that the verdict is an extremely sensible and potentially explosive matter? Has the Minister of Public Works explicitly denied that he made that kind of representation to the judge in this case?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, nor did he specifically deny that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is about five feet ten inches and has brown hair.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: It would of course be easier for us all if the Prime Minister would simply come clean with the House of Commons—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —and tell us what the minister did say to the judge so that we and not he, the interested party, can come to some conclusion as to whether or not there was an attempt to act in an improper way. Yesterday the Prime Minister said that he has asked the chief justice:

> . . . to give us information that might be in his possession respecting any unwarranted attempts to interfere with proper administration.

I wonder if the Prime Minister would spell out for this House the circumstances in which he believes it would be warranted for a minister of the Crown to attempt to influence the decision of a judge in a case then before the courts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S CONVERSATION WITH CONSUMER MINISTER CONCERNING APPROACH TO JUDGE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. The Prime Minister has said that he received private explanations from the three ministers who reported—

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot hear you with all the noise.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry the Prime Minister cannot hear me. The Prime Minister said he received private explanations from the three ministers who were reported to have approached the judge. Without accepting in any way that that constitutes an adequate response in terms of the Prime Minister's duty to parliament, I would like to ask him whether he has had a similar conversation with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who has been found guilty of contempt in court, who alledgedly requested one reported intervention.

● (1420)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I told the House that I spoke to all three ministers, that they gave me the substance of what they had said to the particular judge, and that I had reached the conclusion they were not attempting to influence the outcome of the case. I can understand the House wanting to pursue that knowledge, but I suggest the proper course would be to pursue it with the courts themselves, who are surely the best judges of whether they have been influenced. If they say they were, obviously we might have to follow a course which would be announced. However, this is the whole purport of the letter of the Minister of Justice to the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec.

CONTENT OF CONVERSATION BETWEEN MR. DRURY AND JUDGE HUGESSEN CONCERNING CONSUMERS MINISTER

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Yesterday the Prime Minister stated that unilaterally he had made a decision that there was no intervention, and he said any attempt made would be wrong. Then he said, and I quote:

> The essence of the question is "Did you talk to the judge in order to influence the judgment or to influence the course of justice"? That is the relevant—

If that is a relevant question, is the Prime Minister now prepared to give a relevant answer that the ministers made to him, referring to the Minister of Public Works and others talking to the judges, and what the Minister of Public Works said to the associate chief justice as to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs? In other words, if the question is relevant, let us have relevant answers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I agree completely with the hon. member for Calgary North. The question is relevant. I did say it was relevant, and it was in order to have relevant answers that I was suggesting we hear the views—if he wants to make them heard—of the chief justice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member wants to hear answers from me.

Mr. Clark: Indeed.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition says, indeed. I gave answers. The opposition does not think I am impartial or qualified to give such answers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: You are right.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member says I am right, and the Leader of the Opposition suggested I should come clean. I have given answers to the best of my ability.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: You can do better than that.

An hon. Member: Yesterday you were claiming privilege.

Mr. Forrestall: Even Joe Guay could do a better job.

Mr. Trudeau: Obviously, hon. members are not attaching a high value to my answers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Therefore the best course surely would be for them to stop asking me questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

DATE OF CONVERSATION BETWEEN MR. DRURY AND JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I will do precisely that right now and direct my question to the Minister of Public Works. The minister has indicated to the House in the past that he did in fact have a conversation with Justice Hugessen. Would the minister tell us today if that conversation took place on a date before the hearing began into the case of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs? If that was not the date, what date was it, and from whom did he obtain the information that it was going to be Judge Hugessen who was to be hearing the case?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the telephone conversation to which reference has been made took place the day following the first of the series of hearings conducted by Judge Hugessen, who was in charge of this particular case.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

POSSIBILITY MR. DRURY TOLD JUDGE HUGESSEN CONSUMER'S MINISTER IMPORTANT PERSON

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Then the minister is confirming that the conversation he had with Judge Hugessen took place after the hearing had begun and while the judge was in the process of making up his mind on the matter. He has indicated to the House that he would not reveal positively—and we have heard his reasons, without necessarily accepting them—what was said to Judge Hugessen. In view of the importance of the allegations that were made in today's press would the minister take this opportunity to at least deny that he made any reference to the fact that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was either a French Canadian or likely to be a very important person, to Judge Hugessen?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member cannot really be serious in his intention when he says he respects my refusal to comment on speculative stories in one respect, but I should take the opportunity to deny another sort of speculative story.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister clearly misunderstood me. I said that I understood from his earlier answers he was not going to tell us in a positive sense what he did say to the judge. He has already said that. I do not accept that answer but I am not pursuing it any longer. The question I am putting to him is, would he at least take the opportunity of clarifying, and I hope denying, that he made any reference to the fact that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was a French Canadian and that he was a very important person? Surely, the minister can at least do that, since it is outside his own terms of reference within which he has answered questions in the House before. Why can he not at least deny that?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised the hon. gentleman is falling for the tactic of ascertaining, rather inefficiently, a fact by setting up a series of straw men to be knocked down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The straw man is already going.

* * *

[Translation]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO ADVERTISEMENTS BY AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS RELATING TO GAS MILEAGE

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Does the minister intend to take particular steps to check the figures on gas consumption put out by automobile manufacturers in their advertisements, and find out whether they correspond to the facts so that Canadian consumers do not become victims of misleading advertisements in this regard?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has specific examples to give me, I shall be pleased to convey them to the director of investigations of my department who, as required by law, will make an investigation under the Combines Investigation Act.

* * *

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REFERENCE TO CANADIAN BAR ASSOCIATION CODE OF ETHICS FOR LAWYERS IN PUBLIC OFFICE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question. In reaching a decision about the efficacy of ministerial conduct will the Prime Minister direct his attention to the code of professional conduct of the Canadian Bar Association and most especially that section dealing with the ethical standard expected of the lawyer in public office?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to direct my attention to that. Perhaps the hon. member could send a copy of the respective statutes or regulations.

An hon. Member: Obviously, you have not read it.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, some hon. members opposite do not seem to realize there are ten different bars in the ten different provinces and they may have different sets of regulations. I should be interested to hear not only what the Canadian bar has to say but what the bar of New Brunswick has to say. I am sure what the bar of Alberta has to say would be of no interest at all to the hon. member opposite who probably would not even understand it.

An hon. Member: You are getting a little testy there, Pierre.

An hon. Member: Boiling point is approaching.

Mr. Trudeau: Pretty close.

POSSIBILITY QUESTION OF MINISTERIAL ETHICS LEFT TO COURTS TO DECIDE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I accept the high karate. It would be quite an interesting experience. The Prime Minister told us yesterday relative to ministerial conduct that if an action is said to be wrong it will be wrong because the court comes to the conclusion it has been interfered with. I want to ask the Prime Minister if it is his opinion that the question of ministerial ethics and intent which after all must be one of his prime responsibilities and for which he would set the tone of any government, is to be left to the discretion of the courts or the chief justice?

● (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, certainly not the principle or rules of conduct. But there have been allegations of facts, that the courts were interfered with. In some cases these facts have been demolished. In other cases they are being analysed by the chief justice. My whole case rests not on the application of the principle itself, because I said, clearly, that it was wrong for anyone, not only a minister, to try to influence a judge of the court in the discharge of his duties.

Mr. Lawrence: Especially a minister.

Mr. Trudeau: It will not apply to the hon. gentleman opposite, who will never again be a minister.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Such modesty.

Mr. Lawrence: I will join the Prime Minister in the has beens club.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the issue, therefore, is not one of principle, on which I have stated my views which, I believe, are not different from those of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. The issue is one of fact: whether, in fact, these courts in some way or other have been aggrieved; whether, in fact, there has been an attempt to interfere in the discharge of the judge's duties. It is a question of fact. I repeat, if hon. members opposite do not want to take my word for it, I do not blame them. I think we should wait to hear what the chief justice of the superior court feels about the facts.

* * *

ELECTIONS

WILLINGNESS OF PRIME MINISTER TO SUBMIT ISSUES TO ELECTORS IN BY-ELECTION IN OTTAWA-CARLETON

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister? Yesterday the Prime Minister refused to give an account to this House, and has refused today. My question is this: rather than delegating the question of ministerial ethics to a judge, and trying to find an election issue in the constitution, is the Prime Minister prepared to call immediately a by-election in Ottawa-Carleton and put his conduct on this and other immediate matters before the voters?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Will the Prime Minister not answer?

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY OR STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister told the House that the chief justice would not normally be called upon to look into conversations between "members of my cabinet," stating that this was "quite proper." The Minister of Public Works indicated that the chief justice has not interviewed him in this regard. As it seems unlikely that the chief justice will investigate ministerial intent, one of the crucial issues here and a central responsibility of the Prime Minister, does the Prime Minister intend to make a statement or initiate an inquiry into the conduct of his ministers in this regard, since he is the only person with access to this information?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have been sorting out questions carefully and watching for repetitions. There has been a recurrence of questions, with slight variation, on the same theme. I think, in this case, there is not a variation. The hon. member has put a question which has been put previously to the Prime Minister and answered by the Prime Minister.

REQUEST FOR IDENTIFICATION OF PUBLIC-SPIRITED CITIZENS WHO APPROACHED JUDGE ON BEHALF OF CONSUMER'S MINISTER

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am trying to elicit information, with all due deference. I am asking the minister for further clarification. As the Minister of Public Works has referred to a number of public spirited citizens who also approached the judge, has the Prime Minister, as leader of the Liberal party, looked into the matter. Has he any idea who those people are and will he identify them if he knows who they are?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no more idea than the hon. member opposite might have.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You should have.

* * *

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR SUBSIDY FOR OIL FOR GENERATION OF ELECTRICITY IN NOVA SCOTIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As power rates in Nova Scotia have now risen beyond the reach of ordinary working men and pensioners, and in view of the rough reception given to federal cabinet representatives from Nova Scotia at last weekend's Liberal convention by Liberals, particularly the finance minister of that province and others, with respect to the need for a subsidy for oil for power generation purposes, can the minister say if Nova Scotia is to be given assistance in this regard?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Nova Scotia is already receiving assistance in two forms. It is receiving assistance under the oil compensation account. If Nova Scotia were to pay the world price, it would pay much more than it is now being asked to pay. To be specific, may I refer to the price that the power utility pays for its coal. If that coal were sold at world prices, power would be much more expensive. Actually, that coal is being sold at the equivalent of the Canadian oil price, which is held down well below the world price. As a result DEVCO is assuming greater losses than it otherwise would. This form of subsidy is to the benefit of citizens of Nova Scotia.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED SUPPLEMENTARY ASSISTANCE TO PENSIONERS IN NOVA SCOTIA IN VIEW OF HIGH COST OF ELECTRICITY

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the rate has more than doubled. May I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs? As recipients of disability pensions and war veterans allowances are finding it almost impossible to survive and pay their power bills, would the minister consider granting special supplementary assistance to recipients of DVA pensions?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, according to our last assessment, recipients of WVA and disability pensions, after receiving the indexed adjustment, are in a position to pay for their energy.

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST OF INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, while waiting for the report of the chief justice on the matter in which the Progressive Conservatives are interested, I should like to put to the right hon. Prime Minister a very serious question on a matter of interest to thousands of Canadians.

Following the meeting held by the members of the Quebec Liberal caucus with industrial milk producers—for we now understand—and the most positive representations of those producers, will the Prime Minister and his cabinet give serious consideration to the requests of the producers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, of course, Mr. Speaker; I shall be helped in this regard by the very important brief handed over to me by the members of the Quebec Liberal caucus.

* * *

[English]

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CONTRACT WITH LOCKHEED—REASON FOR MINISTER'S ASSURANCE OF DELIVERY OF AIRCRAFT—POSSIBILITY OF UNITED STATES GUARANTEES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. In answer to a question I asked him on Tuesday of this week, he said that he was reassured about the Lockheed Orion contract as two thirds of Lockheed orders are for U.S. domestic contracts. As the United States does not guarantee Lockheed more than $250 million for all contracts, how can the minister indicate that he is reassured? Also, will he advise the House if he sought U.S. guarantees that Canada is to get what it pays for under that contract?

● (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is obviously a matter of judgment not easy to deal with, but following our discussions with the U.S. government and those we had with Lockheed Aircraft Corporation, Ltd., we have obviously sufficient ground to believe that Lockheed will be able, if an agreement is entered into, to deliver the aircraft we intend to order.

[English]

CONTRACT WITH LOCKHEED—INVOLVEMENT OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—PRESENT LIABILITY OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was the Department of Justice involved in initial negotiations and in the declaration of principle or intent to purchase? Second, can the minister say how great a liability Lockheed has incurred so far with respect to this contract? In other words, what liabilities are we looking at today?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider the questions put by the hon. member and give him the information as soon as I have it.

* * *

[English]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSSIBILITY OF INVESTIGATION INTO ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY MINISTERS WITH QUEBEC JUDGES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It having been held in law, and I quote, that "it is a grave contempt of court to communicate with, or to seek in any way to influence a judge upon the subject of any matter he has to determine", and in view of the clear provisions in Section 127(2) of the Criminal Code covering such perversion of justice, will the minister indicate if he has asked the investigatory authorities who report to him to investigate the circumstances which led the Minister of Public Works to make the statement appearing at page 11457 of Hansard of March 3 to the effect that he had a conversation with Mr. Justice Hugessen touching on a subject matter before him?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the enforcement of the Criminal Code is under the jurisdiction of the attorneys general of the provinces and I am sure they will do a good job.

Mr. Stevens: In view of the circumstances I just outlined in my question, and bearing in mind that the actual laying of a charge may be in the hands of an attorney general of any province, will the minister indicate if he will ask for an investigation to be conducted by the authorities under his department?

Mr. Allmand: No, Mr. Speaker. As the Prime Minister pointed out, if the Chief Justice of Quebec thinks that an investigation should take place, he will ask for one.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—INTENT OF MR. DRURY IN CALLING JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Public Works. As the minister will not give details of his conversation, is the hon. gentleman able to deny to this House that when he, as a minister of the Crown, communicated with the judge charged with the responsibility of trying this case, it was his intention to convey to the judge his viewpoint with regard to the charge?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think I did make a statement to the effect that it was not my intention to influence the course of justice.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY OF TRINIDAD CONCERNING TRIAL OF STUDENTS IN MONTREAL—MANNER IN WHICH INQUIRY CONVEYED TO JUDGE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I will try to bring somebody else into the net. My supplementary is directed to my distinguished friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, one of our best parliamentarians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCleave: I would not want to leave him out of something like this. I direct my question to him because we are trying to pin down the role of the present Minister of National Health and Welfare. Perhaps his grandson once removed, the President of the Privy Council, should really be answering the question. Has the minister or anyone in the department satisfied themselves as to the propriety of the request from the Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago concerning the trial in Montreal a number of years back, and whether that request was properly transmitted and dealt with?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have ascertained that indeed such a request was made, as was mentioned by the Prime Minister. The record indicates that various steps were taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at that time with respect to that request. There is no information that I have been able to find on the record that would illuminate the particular aspect of the question raised by the hon. member, except that there were discussions at that time which involved representatives other than those in the Department of External Affairs, including representatives, I believe, from the Prime Minister's office. However, this particular aspect is not covered.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I think that probably this is the field in which we in this parliament really have to make a final decision. However, with regard to the propriety of it, would it not have been better if the then Secretary of State for External Affairs had approached the Minister of Justice rather than leaving it to the principal secretary of the Prime Minister?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that is a matter of opinion upon which the hon. member is as equipped as I to form a judgment.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the minister described the Prime Minister's speech in Quebec last Friday as a combination of kibitzing and jocular remarks, will he give the House a few examples of this good, boyish fun which evidently had the delegates rolling in the aisles for the best part of 90 minutes because this House is overdue a little humour and a few laughs to alleviate the jaundiced picture of ministers trying to influence the judiciary?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF SAFEGUARDS CONNECTED WITH RESUMPTION OF NUCLEAR AID

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question refers to the understandings on nuclear aid to India which the minister stated had been reached by the negotiating team which recently visited India. Now that the Prime Minister's political advisor, Ivan Head, has stated publicly "The key to agreement as far as we were concerned was that India accept longlasting international safeguards on the use of nuclear reactors. We were successful in this", is the Secretary of State for External Affairs now in a position to tell the House what these long-lasting international safeguards are and whether they have received cabinet approval?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the negotiating team was acting under instructions. Its terms of reference were established by me. I have not yet received a detailed report nor indeed a copy of the understandings reached at the discussions at New Delhi. I would underline that these have not been approved. They will be examined by myself and, if found appropriate, sent on to cabinet for consideration. None of these steps have been taken or completed at the present time.

INDIA—SUGGESTED DEBATE PRIOR TO SIGNING AGREEMENT FOR RESUMPTION OF NUCLEAR AID

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs might have some discussion with the Prime Minister's principal advisor to find out on what his statements are based. In view of the implications for world security of Canada's nuclear export policy, will the minister, and I put this question to him because I believe he is a more considerate and compassionate man than the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: It is obvious from the replies we receive that he is more considerate. Will the minister seek to have the government reverse its decision of not having the pending agreements with India debated in the House but rather bring full information as to safeguards, accords, length of time of agreements into this chamber for debate and discussion before we take any final step in ratifying the accord? I ask this question because the Canadian people have much more interest in this information than the Prime Minister appears to have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of the tabling of the nuclear co-operation agreements with the Republic of South Korea and Argentina, I tabled a very extensive background paper on the whole question of nuclear safeguards in an effort to provide the greatest possible amount of available information on this subject. As the hon. lady recalls, there was a rather extensive question and answer period at that time on the significance of these agreements. It has never been the practice in Canada to submit such agreements to the House of Commons prior to approval, and that is the traditional practice that is being followed in this case. However, I have no objection to having this subject matter debated at any time that the opposition decides to bring it forward, or indeed to co-operating with any effort that might be made on a bilateral basis to have the subject ventilated in the House.

* * *

● (1450)

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid my question is going to be anti-climactic. I just want to ask my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who received a communication from the Minister of National Health and Welfare who did not seem to like his response very much to the question asked by my colleague from Halifax-East Hants, if it is not a breach of privilege, whether he would disclose the contents of the note handed him by the minister?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would have no difficulty except it might create an unfortunate precedent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF INFORMING UNITED STATES SENATE COMMITTEE REASON CANADA NEGOTIATING WITH INDIA FOR RESUMPTION OF NUCLEAR AID

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to those asked by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands relating to the intended agreement with India and the continuation of nuclear aid. In view of the concern shown last night in Washington by members of the U.S. Senate in attempting to find out why Canada is now negotiating with India for the continuation of this nuclear aid, I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs is taking steps to indicate Canada's position to that Senate committee in Washington?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand the report to which the hon. member refers relates to fuel shipped by the United States to the United States supplied reactor in India. That is my understanding of the news report. Obviously, if United States congressmen have certain views on this question, that is their concern. We will attempt to decide whether we ought to resume nuclear shipments to India on the basis of Canadian policy and our adherence to the nuclear suppliers' consensus which was recently certified by Canada.

Mr. Lawrence: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My question is related to the concern shown by U.S. Senators in a Senate sub-committee last night, who were asking why Canada was renegotiating nuclear aid to India. My supplementary question to the minister is this. If he is going to be good enough to indicate that reason to the Americans, would he also have the courtesy to indicate to the House of Commons why this is so?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would have no difficulty indicating the reason that we are having these discussions with the government of India. Following the explosion in India, nuclear co-operation between Canada and India was terminated, despite the fact that there was an outstanding requirement to provide equipment for the uncompleted reactor in India. We have not resumed shipments and would not do so unless we were assured, as a result of these discussions and any agreement entered into, that the cause of non-proliferation had been advanced rather than retarded by entering into the agreement. At the very end of the analysis, we will have to make a judgment whether in all the circumstances any understanding arrived at will have advanced that cause, rather than leave the situation as it is now with this particular uncompleted reactor unsafeguarded to the extent of Canadian standards.

FINANCE

DECLINE OF THE POUND—POSSIBILITY OF ASSISTING UNITED KINGDOM WITH VIEW TO MAINTAINING FLOW OF EXPORTS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the decline in the purchasing power of the British pound and the effect of this decline on exports from Canada to that country, will the government be holding any special meetings with British government officials in the hope at least of retaining our present flow of exports to that country while at the same time assisting Britain during this period of extreme economic difficulty, in the same way that we have assisted other countries?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we would, of course, be concerned about this to be helpful to the British government through our affiliation with the International Monetary Fund during the period of exchange difficulties through which they are passing at the moment. On a longer term basis—that is to say, the balance of trade between the two countries—I would have to defer responding on that matter until I can talk to my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who would have the prime responsibility.

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

INDUSTRIAL MILK—REQUEST THAT LEVY NOT BE INCREASED AND STORAGE CHARGES NOT COLLECTED

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

I was very interested in the answer he gave to the hon. member for Levis when he said that on the one hand he has received a brief from dairy producers and on the other another brief from his caucus, and in those circumstances I would like to know whether the Prime Minister would be prepared to assure the dairy producers that the present 65 cents levy will not be increased for the next dairy year and that storage charges will not be collected directly from the producers. If so, I would guarantee the Prime Minister full cooperation from this side of the House.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking me to comment on the brief drafted by the caucus of Quebec, which I mentioned yesterday. May I tell him that I intend to give my answer to the caucus before giving it to him.

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

POSSIBILITY OF EXTENDING WESTERN OIL PIPELINE EAST OF MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of energy. Can he shed any light at this point in time on the status of the government's planning to push the so-called western pipeline east at least as far as salt water?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member would want to read the transcript of the proceedings of the standing committee which was putting some questions to me on supplementary estimates the other day; he might be able to get a fair appreciation of the kind of problems I was describing. I think the subject is too technical and too general to give an answer in the House.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON DEVELOPMENT OF CABIN CREEK COAL DEPOSITS ON BRITISH COLUMBIA-MONTANA BORDER

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the recent meeting on Tuesday between the United States delegation from the state department, department of agriculture, department of the interior and the state of Montana, with their Canadian counterparts, the Department of the Environment, the Department of External Affairs and the provincial government, in connection with Cabin Creek coal development, would the minister make a statement today on his department's views concerning the development of Cabin Creek coal at the B.C.-Montana border?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which I discussed with Mr. Neilson when I was in British Columbia. I have already discussed this question with the U.S. ambassador and I intend very shortly to meet with the director responsible for the environment in Washington. We want to discuss all problems, not only in B.C. but in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and the Great Lakes, and reach a solution.

Mr. Brisco: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the minister's intention to table in the House or to provide in the form of a press release specific information to the House regarding Cabin Creek border coal development?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I will look into that, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

APPEAL OF ADMINISTRATOR'S DECISION IN IRVING CASE—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE TO PERMIT UNION TO MAKE ORAL PRESENTATION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the Canadian Paper Workers Union submitted their appeal of the Administrator's decision in the Irving case on March 9 and I believe the cabinet is going to make a decision on Monday, owing to an error in the Privy Council office in announcing the deadline would the cabinet consider extending the deadline so they may deal with this complicated brief in some considerable detail and allow the union to make an oral presentation?

[Mr. Forrestall.]

● (1500)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): We do not have the right under the law to extend the deadline, but we have considered the submission of the paperworkers. In the analysis, we have not seen fit to grant their request. However, as we have stated, we are bringing forward amendments to permit appeal procedures and that option will be open to the paper workers as a result.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, could I ask the House leader to let us know his intentions with respect to the business of the House today, for the balance of the week and perhaps even for next week.

Mr. Sharp: This afternoon we shall resume consideration of Bill C-83. You are aware, Mr. Speaker, that the House must take under consideration objections which have been filed respecting the provisions of the reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commissions. Discussions have taken place among representatives of the parties, and as a result I should like to propose an order of the House which would set the process in train. The time for taking into consideration the objections filed to the Nova Scotia redistribution expires tonight; that in respect of British Columbia expires on March 27; and that in respect of Alberta, on April 3.

It will be my intention to ask the House to set aside some time later for the consideration of all the objections which will have been filed by March 28, which I am given to understand is the final date for the filing of objections. This would include any of the objections to be discussed later today, the consideration of which is not completed. I should, therefore, like to move, seconded by my colleague, the Minister of Public Works:

That at 8:00 p.m. this day the House shall take up consideration of objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Nova Scotia;

That, after completion of consideration of the said report, the House shall take up consideration of objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the British Columbia, but, if consideration of the report for Nova Scotia has not been completed at 8:40 p.m., the said consideration shall be adjourned and the House shall proceed forthwith to consideration of the report for British Columbia; and

That, after completion of consideration of the said report for British Columbia, the House shall take up consideration of objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Alberta, but, if consideration of the report for British Columbia has not been completed at 9:20 p.m., the said consideration shall be adjourned and the House shall proceed forthwith to consideration of the report for Alberta;

Mr. Speaker: Order. Such a motion is normally receivable only during the time set aside for motions. However, if the House is disposed to make this arrangement, it might be simpler to dispose of the matter now. Does the President of the Privy Council have the consent of the House to move the motion?

Mr. Nowlan: Might I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council?

Mr. Speaker: If there are questions to be asked, it might be better if we adhered to our usual practice. The motion is more properly receivable when we get to that point in our procedure.

Mr. Sharp: Might I continue my report to the House on business? I had to interrupt it in order to explain what the government proposed we should do at eight o'clock. We shall proceed to the consideration of those objections, if the House so agrees. Tomorrow will be an opposition day. On Monday we shall resume consideration of the second reading of Bill C-68. Tuesday is an opposition day. On Wednesday, if Bill C-68 has not been completed, its consideration will be continued. Then we shall resume consideration of Bill C-83.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I understand that it is the intention of the government House leader, with respect to the electoral boundaries matters, that there shall be, following the time set aside this evening, a time appointed to complete consideration of the Nova Scotia, British Columbia and Alberta objections, if necessary, as well as any others consideration of which might have been begun. That is my understanding, and I see that the hon. gentleman is confirming it.

As to one other aspect, I really must protest. Yesterday this House endured an unwarranted intrusion into its regular proceedings in the form of a closure motion with respect to Bill C-68. Instead of dealing with this important bill at the first available opportunity, we find the government today moving on to the revision of the peace and security legislation. I suggest it is improper not to consider Bill C-68 if the need for it was so urgent as to lead to the introduction of the closure motion yesterday. I believe the House leader owes us an explanation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the business of the House, may I say it will not bother me if the House leader puts Bill C-68 off for six months or a year. We do not want it at all. But may I ask a question which relates to the very welcome announcement, which pleased us all two weeks ago, about legislation respecting Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war. Despite our pleasure at this announcement, some of us are getting anxious as time goes by. Can we be told on what day the bill will be introduced?

Mr. Sharp: I do not think I am privileged to answer the House leader of the official opposition, but may I reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre? The bill is in course of preparation, and I expect it will be given first reading soon.

Mr. McGrath: Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order you directed that the Minister of National Health and Welfare would be given an opportunity today—provided, of course, that the hon. member who raised the question in the first instance, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, put the question to him—to carry out an undertaking the minister gave last Friday to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby having to do with the Canada Games to be held at St. John's, with federal participation. Since the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby did not raise the subject today, perhaps the House might agree to allow the minister to answer the question now.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair certainly has no objection to following that course. I recognize the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the federal government participates in the Canada Summer and Winter Games and shares in the operating cost and capital cost of those games on the basis of an agreed budget. Although the games have been awarded to St. John's for 1977, no agreement has yet been signed with the organizing committee of the games. In the meantime, the organizing committee has proceeded, as was mentioned yesterday, to award a contract for a sportsplex without consulting with us. It is clear we shall share only the cost of the agreed budget, and after we have signed an agreement with the organizing committee we shall cost-share only according to an arrangement in which there would be provision to ensure that normal tendering practices will be observed in the expenditure of federal funds.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order occasioned by an answer given earlier in the House by the Minister of Public Works. Last Wednesday, when the issue of alleged interference with judges by members of the cabinet first arose, the minister stated, as reported at page 11457 of Hansard:

● (1510)

I think it would be only an irresponsible member who would try to persist in having an effect or influence on a judgment on appeal.

Later in the same answer he said:

I would have refrained from intervening or from having any conversation with him.

That referred to a judge considering an appeal. In respect of a question I put to him today, the minister has raised a very serious matter, it seems to me, when it is considered in conjunction with the answer he gave in the House last Wednesday. When he gave the answer, I think a number of people understood that the intervention of the phone call which the minister had admitted he made to Judge Hugessen in fact took place prior to the commencement of the hearing. A number of us would have had objections about that in principle, but at least it might have been contended that what was being done then was simply an attempt to ascertain some information about, for example, the date of the commencement of the hearing.

Now, as a result of what the minister said today, namely, that his phone call was made to the judge a day after the appeal started, I submit that such a phone call could not—I repeat, "could not"—have any other effect except to be some kind of intervention in the judicial process. My point is that given the fact that the minister acknowledged today that he made the phone call to the judge after the appeal was under way, he has an obligation to explain his earlier comments which many people interpreted as meaning that his phone call took place prior to the commencement of the appeal. He inadvertently, or otherwise, misled the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby may, of course, have a very valid comment on the relationship between the two answers given by the minister or the quality of either, or both, but this does not technically constitute a point of order.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a point of order to seek clarification of the point of order raised by Your Honour yesterday. The hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception asked a question and Your Honour stated he could not receive an answer to the question because it had been previously asked. Then, on a later point of order, when Your Honour was asked further about the situation, Your Honour stated that the test is not whether or not the question had been raised previously but whether or not it had been answered previously.

Clearly, we on this side of the House, particularly on the backbenches, have very limited opportunity to ask questions. I should like to bring to Your Honour's attention the fact that in the past few days we have had repeated questions on the matter of the judicial difficulty in the city of Montreal relating to ministers, and there has been repeated repetition of all points. I shall deal in specifics. On March 3, as reported at page 11457 of Hansard, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby asked whether the Prime Minister did not think it appropriate to have a public inquiry, and so on. On March 4, as recorded at page 11484 of Hansard, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby asked whether the Prime Minister was prepared to appoint an independent commission, and so on.

Then on March 4, as recorded at page 11486 of Hansard, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby asked for a public inquiry. Also, as recorded on the same page, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby asked for a public inquiry and whether the public would have access to the written report. As recorded at page 11490 of Hansard, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands asked for a public inquiry. On March 8 the hon. member for Central Nova asked for a special inquiry. On March 9, as recorded at page 11613 of Hansard, the Leader of the Opposition made a request for publication of the report of the judge. Yesterday, as recorded at page 11660 of Hansard, the Leader of the Opposition asked whether or not there was interference. As recorded at page 11661, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby asked whether or not there was interference. All I say—

An hon. Member: We want some answers.

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member says they want some answers. Answers have been given. I suggest there is a grave inequity in respect of some members of this House who must sit here day after day listening to repetitive questions: the same questions are asked over and over again. Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that if the backbench members on this side of the House are to be governed by such a rule, I would respectfully ask Your Honour to apply the same rule to the opposition.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise that there have been repeated questions, but if the member feels there have been repeated questions with regard to the matter I wish to say to you, sir, and through you to him, that there has been repeated evasion in respect of an answer on the matter of a public inquiry. I hope the hon. member is not saying that the members of the opposition ought to sit quietly by and accept evasive and non-answers. Does he suggest that we should sit quietly by, retire, and leave a public matter like this hang the way it is, a matter which day by day is bringing disrepute to this government? I say "Shame" to the member who just raised the point of order.

In so far as the operation of the question period is concerned, aside from the question of the stonewalling which I think is apparent to everyone, the member has raised a point of order with regard to the way in which the Chair is handling this House. I want to say to you, sir, that if the question period is to be used for the answering of questions that can be raised by the member in another forum where may not be the same retiscence to confess wrongdoing, then I think that would be an improper use of the question period. By tradition you, Mr. Speaker, have made a ruling in respect of the position of parliamentary secretaries because they are privy to certain information.

In regard to the operation of this House, the question period is a place in which to attempt to elicit information. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that you have been extremely generous, having regard to the conduct of some of your predecessors, in respect of questions by government members. It is my duty and part of my function as a member of the opposition to very carefully monitor the operation of the question period. I do not say this as a criticism of you, sir—quite the contrary; but I say that the hon. member is not making a valid point when he says that you have been unfair in terms of the question period, having regard to questioning by the opposition.

I have done some research in respect of the operation of the question period in the past. The fact of the matter is that to a greater extent government members are being recognized. I suggest to you, sir, with great respect—and great respect to my friends as well, because I can understand their frustration in having to sit behind a government like that—that you must exercise a great deal of care in that regard because of the position of the Chair having regard to the traditions over the years as to the use of the question period. If there has been what my friend calls repetition with regard to this matter, I want to say to him that if this government would come clean, if this Prime Minister would answer the questions we have asked, if the Minister of Public Works would answer the questions we have asked, and if they would give the country the public inquiry for which we have asked from the first day, we would ask no more questions in this regard.

● (1520)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in just a word or two may I say to the hon. member for Mississauga that the most effective way to avoid repetition of questions is for the government to answer the questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As for his delight in giving instances when the same questions have been asked a number of times, I can tell him that some of us have had to ask questions year after year and decade after decade, and I know of no rule which prevents the asking of questions, especially when they have not been satisfactorily answered.

Frankly, I am surprised that my friend, the hon. member for Mississauga, should be raising this point of order. I have seen some bad times in this House of Commons, but I have never seen such calculated evasion of questions put by members of the opposition. If there is anything that has been wrong in the last week or so, it has been the unwillingness of the Prime Minister and his colleagues to answer questions to which the people of this country want answers.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief contribution to this point of order, in view of the fact that during the course of the question period Your Honour saw fit to make an assessment with regard to a question I asked of the Prime Minister. I should like to say to Your Honour that I realize that this matter has received great interest both within the House and publicly, and I know that the Prime Minister has indicated on different occasions in his answers that he is awaiting the reply of the chief justice and that is his position. But if Your Honour has an opportunity to reconsider the question that I asked, I would point out that there was no time parameter with respect to the position of the government regarding the action to be taken by the Prime Minister.

In other words, I was trying to determine whether the Prime Minister at any time, whether before or after he receives the answer of the chief justice, would conduct his own investigation among his colleagues or in cabinet to see whether, from the point of view of parliamentary procedure and propriety, in a political sense, the action of the various ministers was in order. That was the point of my question. I have followed in great detail the questions that have been asked, and I venture to say that this is one instance where there has been no repetition of a previous question. I suggest that Your Honour's assessment was not quite fair to me, in the sense that mine was a quite unique question regarding the intention of the Prime Minister in this respect.

With your indulgence, I ask Your Honour to reflect on the question which I asked, which was possibly more verbose than normally, and allow me to pursue it at a later time.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I support the hon. member for Mississauga in his remarks.

An hon. Member: Surprise, surprise!

Mr. Blais: Like him, I was very encouraged by your remarks to the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception yesterday when he put his question. It is evident, from the comments made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, that the opposition tactic in this instance is simply to repeat the same questions. They are not interested at all in replies, because the replies were given earlier in these exchanges.

The Prime Minister indicated the attitude of the government. I suggest to Your Honour that those were acceptable replies. The Prime Minister stated exactly what the government's position was with reference to the matters raised by members of the opposition. As you have indicated before, sir, it is the right of ministers to give replies. They may not be acceptable to members of the opposition because they do not want to recognize the worth of those particular replies. The tactic of opposition members in this instance is not to seek information as the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton stated. With his usual hyperbolic terminology, he is attempting to say that he is seeking information. Nothing could be further from the collective mind of members of the opposition. What they are seeking to do is to impress the scribes in the press gallery by repeating the same questions that have been replied to previously.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question of whether or not the Chair should intervene to prevent questions because they are identical to questions which have already been answered is one which the Chair has been reluctant to invoke in the past and will continue to be reluctant to invoke. It is a very technical rule. However, there are blatant circumstances in which repetitions are clear. Usually they are even so described by hon. members themselves, who say that because of lack of an answer, he or she wishes to repeat the question. Blatant repetitions of questions cannot be permitted.

However, the rule itself calls into play a judgment to be made by the Chair as to the exact wording of the question, as to any variations that might take place, and as to whether the question has been replied to in the past. It is not possible for any presiding officer to remember, particularly on an important matter of this nature, from day to day and several days back the exact wording of the question and whether or not it has been previously answered. Attempts which I have made to exercise that discretion in the past have never been successful. Indeed, the question put by the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception was identical to a question that was asked previously which, however, had not received an answer, and that should have been the test. That is some indication of the difficulty of the Chair in attempting to invoke the rule. I will do it when it is blatant repetition, but I am reluctant to invoke it otherwise.

However, may I say to all hon. members—and I am sure the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar is aware of it—that the Chair will enforce the rule from time to time. The expression of dissatisfaction at the Chair not invoking the rule often enough on one side of the House, and the dissatisfaction on the other side at the Chair having invoked it too often, gives some indication of the great assistance which the Chair has received in these interventions by hon. members.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order, just before we leave the matter. The hon. member for Nipissing imputed a motive to me with respect to my conduct as a member of the House of Commons. Quite frankly, I would ask the hon. member, through you, Mr. Speaker, to look at the "blues" a little later and see whether or not that remark was justified in the circumstances. I do not think it is a proper thing for him to do, and I would certainly not do that to him.

Mr. Speaker: With due respect, this is one of the difficulties when procedural arguments get to the substance of the matter. I think an examination of the "blues" or of Hansard tomorrow might indicate that with respect to what has happened on both sides of the House this afternoon—and it is an indication of what might happen when we get into discussions which are intended to be procedural—it would be better if we stuck to procedural grounds and stayed away from substance.

* * *

[Translation]

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Tenth report of Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, in both official languages—Mr. Langlois.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

TABLING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND QUEBEC

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am tabling a copy of an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of Quebec on the Anti-Inflation Program.

* * *

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO ADD NEW DEFINITIONS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-89, to amend the Anti-Inflation Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

● (1530)

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSIONS' REPORTS RESPECTING NOVA SCOTIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA, AND ALBERTA

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) moved:

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

That at 8:00 p.m. this day the House shall take up consideration of objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Nova Scotia;

That, after completion of consideration of the said report, the House shall take up consideration of objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the British Columbia, but, if consideration of the report for Nova Scotia has not been completed at 8:40 p.m., the said consideration shall be adjourned and the House shall proceed forthwith to consideration of the report for British Columbia; and

That, after completion of consideration of the said report for British Columbia, the House shall take up consideration of objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Alberta, but, if consideration of the report for British Columbia has not been completed at 9:20 p.m., the said consideration shall be adjourned and the House shall proceed forthwith to consideration of the report for Alberta—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would remind the House that subject to discussion and agreement, the President of the Privy Council earlier indicated his intention to move a motion at this time. The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it understood and agreed that the terms of the motion put forward by the President of the Privy Council are agreed to?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, before this motion is passed I should like to know if time will be left for orderly discussion. It is all right to introduce a motion, but I think normally they should be introduced one at a time. However, I should like to know whether, because of the difficulty we are getting into with an extended session, we are going to have time before something has to happen—and, Mr. Speaker, we have to have some additional time rather than just the introduction to each redistribution debate to which we are agreeing.

Mr. Sharp: I have had some discussions with the respresentatives of the various parties on this very point, and in the explanation I gave preliminary to reading the terms of the motion I indicated that the intention would be to set the process in train tonight on three of the objections which must be dealt with before April 3. As I said, it would be my intention at that time to seek the agreement of the House or on my own motion to set aside some time after March 28, by which time all the objections must have been filed, to discuss not only those which will be introduced tonight but also others which are already with the Chair or which may be filed before March 28. We do not consider that the discussion tonight does anything more than set the process in train.

Mr. Peters: I should like to ask an additional question. We have gone through this once or twice before. In terms of the discussions, will an attempt be made to keep the objections in a series, rather than introducing them all in a group? We may have someone talking about Quebec and someone else talking about the Northwest Territories. Is it the intention to keep them in some kind of order so that there will be a termination of the debate on one set of objections before another one is commenced?

Mr. Sharp: If I may speak again, I will put before the House leaders some proposals along these lines. Of course, it will be necessary to reach agreement. I hope we can reach agreement on some allocation of time so that the objections can be dealt with in a series in the most effective way.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there was a bill introduced just a few moments ago by the Minister of Finance and it was given first reading. Is there a time problem with respect to that bill?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I want to have a discussion with the House leaders about the opening of the discussion on second reading. As the House is aware, we have a number of opposition days: tomorrow, next Tuesday, next Friday, and in the following week I think there are several before we reach the date for the end of this semester. I will want to talk with the House leaders about when might be an appropriate time to open the debate. I indicated that on Monday we would resume consideration of second reading of Bill C-68. It probably cannot be finished on Monday, and probably will have to be resumed on Wednesday at the opening, for a short time. Then we could go back to Bill C-83.

However, I should perhaps enter the caveat that if, as a result of discussions, it is deemed advisable to revert instead to the amendments to the Anti-Inflation Act, I would later indicate that intention. At the moment, however, I think it is better to indicate that we will revert to Bill C-83.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,035, 4,063, 4,077, 4,079, 4,084, 4,100, 4,101, 4,140 and 4,141.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

WINTER WORKS PROGRAM—CARETAKERS' WAGES

Question No. 4,035—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Will the government give consideration to making caretakers' wages allowable expenses under the Winter Works Programme, as outlined in the resolution passed at the Saskatchewan Urban Municipalities Association Convention in January 1976?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Under the Winter Capital Projects fund, portions of loans (equivalent to: 100 per cent in winter; or 50 per cent in summer of direct, on-site labour costs) can be forgiven and outstanding loan repayment obligations reduced accordingly. Loan forgiveness applies in respect of those on-site payroll costs directly related to construction activity. Caretakers' wages are considered to be an indirect or overhead cost and as such would not be an eligible forgiveness cost. Many loan arrangements have now been finalized according to established fund guidelines and federal-provincial agreements. It is not the government's intention to modify the terms of these agreements at this time.

PUBLIC WORKS IN CONSTITUENCY OF ROBERVAL

Question No. 4,063—Mr. Gauthier (Roberval):

1. Between 1963 and 1975, did the Department of Public Works grant money for public works in the Constituency of Roberval and, if so, in what amount?

2. For each such grant, what was the (a) nature of the project (b) amount granted (c) municipality concerned?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. We are unable to provide information prior to April 1, 1969 as the "General Records Disposal Schedules of the Government of Canada second Edition 1968"—amendment list No. 3, requires that financial records be kept for 6 complete years only. The Department of Public Works has made no grants for works in the constituency of Roberval between April 1, 1969 and December 31, 1975.

2. Not applicable.

LRC TRAINS

Question No. 4,077—Mr. Gillies:

Are there currently negotiations under way between the government and the American rail corporation Amtrak with reference to the possible purchase by the latter Corporation of light, rapid and comfortable (LRC) trains and, if not, will they begin in the near future?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The joint venture companies responsible for development of the LRC train have been in contact with Amtrak and will respond to a request for quotation when this is issued by Amtrak in the near future. The government is encouraging and supporting the joint venture in its efforts to sell LRC equipment to Amtrak but the government is not directly participating in the negotiations.

MAN-HOURS LOST BY LANGUAGE TRAINING IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 4,079—Mr. Elzinga:

In each department, by province, how many employable man-hours were lost for language training in the Public Service for (a) English (b) French language training for (i) 1970 (ii) 1971 (iii) 1972 (iv) 1973 (v) 1974 (vi) 1975?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: During the years in question, 1970 to 1975, many different methods of language training have been used in the public service. These have included full-time and part-time training. Part-time training for an individual student may vary from a few hours a week up to 250 hours a year, and over a period of two to three years. Given this variety of methods and periods of training, the commission has not kept statistical records of individual man-hours involved; nor could it answer for the departments and agencies which engage in additional training on their own initiative. An attempt to answer this question would require a large amount of work and considerable cost by all of the departments and agencies of the public service, and it is unlikely to produce results that would be statistically valid.

STATISTICS CANADA—FRENCH LANGUAGE UNITS

Question No. 4,084—Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton):

1. How many employees are there in the census processing division of Statistics Canada?

2. What section of the division has been designated as units working in French under the Phase II Programme?

3. How many persons are employed in each section within the designated unit?

4. What is the number of persons in each designated unit who are (a) unilingual French speaking (b) French speaking bilingual (c) English speaking bilingual (d) unilingual English speaking?

5. What criteria were used to establish which unit or units within the section would become a bilingual unit working in French?

6. In terms of the service that the unit was to provide to the public of Canada what, if any, were the complaints received from the public as to language usage for the period January 1, 1974 to January 1, 1976?

7. Was there any unit within the section on January 1, 1976 incapable of providing services to the Canadian public in both official languages?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as Statistics Canada is concerned: 1. There are 119 employees in the census processing division of Statistics Canada.

2. To date, no departmental unit has been formally designated as a unit working in French. Current proposals now under discussion with bargaining agents would have the division as a whole identified as a unit working in French.

3. Name	No. of Employees
Spatial Systems	60
Retrieval	47
Edit & Imputation	5
Quality Assurance	2
Future Systems	1
Administration	4
	119

4.	(a) Unilingual French	(b) Bilingual French	(c) Unilingual English	(d) Bilingual English	Total
Spatial Systems	11	17	29	3	60
Retrieval	2	10	30	5	47
Edit & Imputation	—	2	2	1	5
Quality Assurance	—	—	—	2	2
Future Systems	—	—	1	—	1
Administration	—	1	2	1	4
	13	30	64	12	119

5. The criteria used to establish the census processing division as a unit working in French are described in Treasury Board circular No. 1975-111 (Section B) dated September 25, 1975. In particular, it contributed to the requirement that 10 per cent of the encumbered positions in the National Capital Region complement at the departmental level be maintained in units working in French by specific categories. It also complied with the hierarchical reporting structure set out in the circular.

[Miss Campbell (South Western Nova).]

6. There were no complaints received from the public as to language usage for the period January 1, 1974 to January 1, 1976.

7. While the spatial systems section has contact with the public and can give service in both official languages, the contacts of the remaining sections of the division tend to be mostly with other departmental units.

COMPANY TAKEOVERS

Question No. 4,100—Mr. Nystrom:

1. In the takeover of Gilron Holdings Limited of Scarborough, Ontario, by Roboserve Limited of London, England, what percentage of control will Roboserve Limited acquire?

2. What is the total and/or per share price of the transaction, including the value of share transfers or other considerations?

3. Who were the principal shareholders of Gilron Holdings Limited and what control, if any, will they retain in the company?

4. Who are the principal shareholders of Roboserve Limited and what are their holdings in the company?

5. Does Roboserve Limited control and/or partially own, directly or indirectly, any other businesses in Canada and, if so, in each case, what are the holdings by per cent of control and value?

6. What will be the effect of the takeover on (a) the level and nature of economic activity in Canada (b) resource processing in Canada (c) utilization of parts, components, materials and services produced in Canada (d) exports from Canada (e) productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada (f) competition within any industry or industries in Canada (g) employment within Gilron Holdings Limited and within the industry?

7. (a) How many persons did Gilron Holdings Limited employ before the takeover (b) how many are presently employed?

8. (a) What are the unions, if any, who represented the employees (b) did they approve or disapprove of the takeover (c) was their opinion sought?

9. What is the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise or new business and in any industry or industries in Canada of which the business enterprise or new business forms or will form?

10. How is the takeover (a) compatible (b) incompatible with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives of any province likely to be affected by the takeover?

11. What is the significant benefit to Canada of the takeover?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): See reply to question No. 3,954 answered on March 2, 1976.

COMPANY TAKEOVERS

Question No. 4,101—Mr. Nystrom:

1. In the takeover of Pacific Inland Resources Ltd., of Smithers, British Columbia, by West Fraser Timber Co. Ltd., of Vancouver, British Columbia, what percentage of control will West Fraser Timber Co. Ltd. acquire?

2. What is the total and/or per share price of the transaction, including the value of share transfers or other considerations?

3. Who were the principal shareholders of Pacific Inland Resources Ltd. and what control, if any, will they retain in the company?

4. Who are the principal shareholders of West Fraser Timber Co. Ltd. and what are their holdings in the company?

5. Does West Fraser Timber Co. Ltd. control and/or partially own, directly or indirectly, any other businesses in Canada and, if so, in each case, what are the holdings by per cent of control and value?

6. What will be the effect of the takeover on (a) the level and nature of economic activity in Canada (b) resource processing in Canada (c) utilization of parts, components, materials and services produced in Canada (d) exports from Canada (e) productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada (f) competition within any industry or industries in Canada (g) employment within Pacific Inland Resources Ltd. and within the industry?

7. (a) How many persons did Pacific Inland Resources Ltd. employ before the takeover (b) how many are presently employed?

8. (a) What are the unions, if any, who represented the employees (b) did they approve or disapprove of the takeover (c) was their opinion sought?

9. What is the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise or new business and in any industry or industries in Canada of which the business enterprise or new business forms or will form?

10. How is the takeover (a) compatible (b) incompatible with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives of any province likely to be affected by the takeover?

11. What is the significant benefit to Canada of the takeover?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): See reply to question No. 3,954 answered on March 2, 1976.

COMPANY TAKEOVERS

Question No. 4,140—Mr. Nystrom:

1. In the takeover of United Dental Supply Corp. of Montreal, wholly owned by Sybron, Inc. of Rochester, N.Y. by Dental Depot (Canada) Ltd. of Montreal, wholly owned by Healthco Inc. of Boston, Massachusetts what percentage of control will Dental Depot-Healthco Inc. acquire?

2. What is the total and/or per share price of the transaction, including the value of share transfers or other considerations?

3. Who were the principal shareholders of Sybron, Inc. and what control, if any, will they retain in the company?

4. Who are the principal shareholders of Healthco Inc. and what are their holdings in the company?

5. Does Healthco Inc. or Sybron, Inc. control and/or partially own, directly or indirectly, any other businesses in Canada and, if so, in each case, what are the holdings by per cent of control and value?

6. What will be the effect of the takeover on (a) the level and nature of economic activity in Canada (b) resource processing in Canada (c) utilization of parts, components, materials and services produced in Canada (d) exports from Canada (e) productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada (f) competition within any industry or industries in Canada (g) employment within United Dental Supply and within the industry?

7. (a) How many persons did United Dental Supply employ before the takeover (b) how many are presently employed?

8. (a) What are the unions, if any, who represented the employees (b) did they approve or disapprove of the takeover (c) was their opinion sought?

9. What is the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise or new business and in any industry or industries in Canada of which the business enterprise or new business forms or will form?

10. How is the takeover (a) compatible (b) incompatible with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives of any province likely to be affected by the takeover?

11. What is the significant benefit to Canada of the takeover?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): See reply to question No. 3,954 answered on March 2, 1976.

Measures Against Crime

COMPANY TAKEOVERS

Question No. 4,141—Mr. Nystrom:

1. In the takeover of Japan Oil Sands Co. Primrose Ltd. of Calgary, Alberta by Japan Oil Sands Company Ltd. of Tokyo, Japan what percentage of control will Japan Oil Sands Co. Ltd. of Tokyo acquire?

2. What is the total and/or per share price of the transaction, including the value of share transfers or other considerations?

3. Who were the principal shareholders of Japan Oil Sands Co. Primrose Ltd. of Calgary and what control, if any, will they retain in the company?

4. Who are the principal shareholders of Japan Oil Sands Co. Ltd. of Tokyo and what are their holdings in the company?

5. Does Japan Oil Sands or Japan Oil Sands Primrose control and/or partially own, directly or indirectly, any other businesses in Canada and, if so, in each case, what are the holdings by per cent of control and value?

6. What will be the effect of the takeover on (a) the level and nature of economic activity in Canada (b) resource processing in Canada (c) utilization of parts, components, materials and services produced in Canada (d) exports from Canada (e) productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada (f) competition within any industry or industries in Canada (g) employment within Japan Oil Sands Primrose Ltd. of Calgary and within the industry?

7. (a) How many persons did Japan Oil Sands Co. Primrose Ltd. of Calgary employ before the takeover (b) how many are presently employed?

8. (a) What are the unions, if any, who represented the employees (b) did they approve or disapprove of the takeover (c) was their opinion sought?

9. What is the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise or new business and in any industry or industries in Canada of which the business enterprise or new business forms or will form?

10. How is the takeover (a) compatible (b) incompatible with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives of any province likely to be affected by the takeover?

11. What is the significant benefit to Canada of the takeover?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): See reply to question No. 3,954 answered on March 2, 1976.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT (NO. 1), 1976

MEASURES FOR BETTER PROTECTION OF CANADIAN SOCIETY AGAINST CRIME

The House resumed, from Tuesday, March 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-83, for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violence and other crime, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee of Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday evening, prior to the adjournment, I outlined my general criticisms on the shortcomings of Bill C-83. I also made some observations about the problem of violence in today's society. Then I made comments on the first of the five areas which are covered by the bill—and the first one was gun control. I said that I welcomed the legislation with regard to gun control because it sets forth the general principle that the availability of guns should be controlled, that we should promote public responsibility in the use of firearms, and that the penalties should be increased for persons who commit indictable offences while carrying firearms. There are six or seven proposals with regard to gun legislation, and I support most of them. I support licensing for a five-year period rather than registration of guns, the fitness test and in addition the two guarantors with regard to fitness. I also ask that we include a competency test because I feel no person should have a gun unless he is competent to use it.

The proposal of issuing special permits with conditions attached to persons between 14 and 18 years of age and also of requiring guarantors, one of which should be a parent, is a good move. The special provision for persons under 18 using firearms to provide food for their families in areas where hunting and fishing are a way of life is a good change, and the registration of restricted weapons which is now going to be expanded with regard to short firearms is a good change. The test of need to be applied is also welcomed.

The increased responsibility on dealers and importers of firearms and ammunition to record sales and ensure safety of storage is a move in the right direction. Seizure of firearms by the police in situations where possession constitutes a potential danger to the lives and safety of others is an excellent move because of the problems we have had with regard to domestic quarrels within families. Increased penalties to person carrying firearms during the commission of an offence is something which will be accepted by most people.

In addition to the observations I made last Tuesday evening, I should like to point out a criticism which was conveyed to me by my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), who has had discussions with gun store operators. Out of those discussions has come a good suggestion, and that is to have gun stores solely and completely responsible for the sale, purchase and repair of guns. There is an analogy in the liquor stores in Ontario where beer and alcohol are sold, and I think that analogy should apply with regard to guns, because there is something wrong when guns are made available for sale in department and hardware stores. If we are going to control the sale, importation and repair of guns, it should be exclusively within the control of gun stores which would be able to issue licences, make sales and record those sales. That would make this process much easier.

● (1540)

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the gun control legislation provides a reasonable balance between public concern for safety and the legitimate use of firearms by persons interested in hunting, target-shooting or gun collecting; therefore, I will support that section of the bill.

I notice the minister is now taking his seat, and I want to direct my criticism to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). I am terribly disappointed with the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) with regard to the provision concerning electronic surveillance or wiretapping contained in Bill C-83. It is a complete surrender by the Minister of Justice to the police. It is an abrogation of and failure to maintain the strong civil liberties approach which members of the Conservative party and the New Democratic Party fought for when the bill was presented and passed in 1974.

It is necessary to maintain a balance between the possible police abuse of electronic surveillance and the protection of civil liberties. When I heard the minister say that there is an approach by the opposition with regard to coddling criminals concerning electronic surveillance, it seemed to me he was drawing a red herring into the debate and not taking account of the basic principle of civil liberties and the possible abuse by police of the use of electronic surveillance. We in the opposition are not soft on criminals but we are strong on civil rights and persons who live in Canadian society.

There are four areas of concern with regard to the amendments that the minister has set forth. First, the area of the intercepts is to be expanded from some selected, indictable offences to all indictable offences and to a pattern of behaviour constituting criminal activity. Mr. Speaker, if you knew how hard we fought to contain the government with regard to the selection of indictable offences you would appreciate how strongly we are opposed to that expansion. With regard to the extension of the authorizations from 30 days to 60 days and the extension of renewals from 30 days to 60 days, I do not think we have much objection to that. I have none, personally.

The third area is with regard to the repeal of the notification procedure within 90 days of the termination of the tap. We find this most unacceptable. We also have objections to derivative evidence admissible on an illegal tap. The reason we disagree with these three areas is that the principle of the right to privacy has been rendered ineffectual and meaningless by this legislation. To reward the police for attempting to illegally obtain evidence is to downgrade the judicial process.

Mr. Speaker, I never thought I would see the day when I would seek to persuade the Minister of Justice to follow the United States rule with regard to wiretaps where evidence obtained on an illegal tap is admissible in court. Here we have a complete abrogation of a fundamental principle by the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General. May I remind Your Honour, and the minister, of the evidence given to a committee by Ramsey Clarke, former attorney general of the United States, the man who worked with Senator Kennedy on the crime commission, the man who had a strong job to convince Senator Kennedy of some of the pitfalls of wiretapping. In the final analysis, Senator Kennedy was persuaded of the dangers of the practice. In substance, in his appearance before the committee Ramsey Clarke said that wiretapping is enormously expensive, it is wasteful of police time and talent, it is inefficient, it is ineffective on street-corner crime, and it is erosive of police dignity.

Why do we support that general proposition put forward by the former attorney general of the United States which I am sure would have had the support of Senator Kennedy? All you have to do, Mr. Speaker, is look at the reports submitted to the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General concerning the wiretaps that took place in 1975. In 1975, under section 178.12 and 178.15 of the Criminal Code, 564 taps were applied for by the police. Of these, 563 were granted and one was denied. The average time of these taps was 54.1 days, and the number of charges arising from the 563 days was 18. Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General were very careful to say that only 18 charges were preferred against people, not how many convictions were obtained. I am sure it would be far less than 18. With regard to the security taps by the Solicitor General—and this is where the figures become very striking—there were 465 in 1975, each taking an average of 239.7 days. But not one charge was laid. Is it any wonder that Ramsey Clarke said it is expensive, it is inefficient, it is ineffective and it is erosive of police dignity? There are other methods of detection for some of the problems we have today. Ramsey Clarke and others have suggested special strike forces and the use of informers. These have been far more successful than the approach we are taking under these amendments.

I am not the least bit impressed by the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice saying they are not able to get at organized crime, that they are not able to get at the "untouchables". By using electronic surveillance methods they will never be able to get at the top group in organized crime. What they need is other methods of surveillance which will strengthen their approach and their ability to arrest. With regard to dangerous offenders, I think it would be fair to say we have learned from experience the two major mistakes concerning habitual offenders and the dangerous sexual offenders provisions in the present legislation. There was a lack of uniformity in the application of the law. There was a gap with regard to the question of violence of some of the acts of offenders. The Klippert case in the Supreme Court of Canada underlined the question of lack of violence.

We now have a new definition, with "dangerous offenders" replacing "habitual offenders". The new definition emphasizes violence with regard to an indictable offence where there is a pattern of behaviour shown not only of violence in the particular crime but violence in other crimes. There is also another application concerning sexual offenders and the pattern of behaviour with regard to lack of control of sexual impulses. I draw to the attention of the Minister of Justice that he is following the Ouimet report is some aspects but he is not following the definition. I think the definition proposed by the Ouimet report is probably better than the definition set forth in the amendment. At page 258, the Ouimet report reads:

> Dangerous offender means an offender who has been convicted of an offence specified in this part of the Criminal Code who by reason of character disorder, emotional disorder, mental disorder or defect constitutes a continuing danger and who is likely to kill, inflict serious bodily injury, endanger life, inflict severe psychological damage or otherwise seriously endanger the personal safety of others.

● (1550)

I submit that we should study the expanded definition given by the Ouimet report. The Ouimet report makes other important and interesting recommendations. For instance, before a dangerous offender is sentenced to an indeterminate sentence, he should be directed to a place where diagnosis and, if necessary, a cure can be undertaken. He should be there not more than six months. After that period of treatment there would at least be evidence about the serious problem affecting that person. Therefore, before we pass this law we should study what we are to do with those in custody. I support the diagnostic and cure approach. Before a person is declared a dangerous offender he should be sent to a centre where his condition can be determined and, if necessary, treated.

The bill requires certain other things to be done in the case of dangerous offenders. It requires, in certain circumstances, the consent of the attorney general; it requires expert evidence of psyschologists and others to be given at trial; it makes provisions with respect to the right of appeal, and the necessity of review by the National Parole Board prior to the termination of three years of the sentence and every two years thereafter. That approach is good. I hope the government will pay heed to my observations.

May I say a word about parole. Most of us agree that statutory parole should be abolished and that parole should be based on earned remission. The maximum penalty for prison escape should be increased from five to ten years, and the membership of the Parole Board should be increased from 19 to 26. Therefore, the provisions of the bill dealing with these matters are welcomed. We do not object to the government's position as set out in the "The Highlights of the Peace and Security Program," page 7. I quote from the pamphlet as follows:

> Some procedural safeguards will be introduced into parole hearings to ensure that the process by which the board reaches its decisions will meet the expectations of natural justice. These will include assistance to the applicant, further information to the applicant and stated reason for refusal of parole.

One cannot object to such procedural safeguards which would correct shortcomings. I draw particular attention to the last sentence of the paragraph just quoted, which reads:

> These will be defined in regulations and will be phased in over a period of several years.

Why will the government take several years? Considering the number of prisoners who have escaped recently, and the problems we have encountered with parole, why will the Solicitor General not implement such regulations immediately? When the committee studies the bill, why can it not also study the regulations? If we are to maintain law and order—which is the aim of this bill—and make our parole system better, we must devise the very best procedures. Good parole procedures are a necessity. As it is likely that passage of this bill will result in more convictions and longer sentences, it is incumbent upon the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice to make certain that our parole system meets at least some of the conditions set out in the government pamphlet.

I now turn to special crime inquiries. Not many will complain about legislation permitting provinces to set up special commissions to inquire, when it is deemed necessary, into crime and criminal organizations. I am talking of organizations which may not be uncovered with ordinary investigative procedures. I suppose the latest crime commission in Quebec is responsible for this provision. I notice that some of the amendments to do with special crime commissions protect individuals who may appear before the commissions or whose names may be mentioned although the individuals themselves may not appear before the commissions. These are good amendments.

When the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) congratulated the Quebec crime commission because its work resulted in charges and convictions after bad meat had been sold in Quebec, I realized how our police are hampered by present investigative methods. Why should the police need to go on a witch hunt before they can lay charges in cases where offenders sell bad meat? This shows what has happened in Quebec with regard to the detection of crime. We must strengthen preventive measures and measures leading to the detection of crime. Frankly, I do not think we will accomplish much by appointing special crime commissions.

My party generally supports the legislation, although we do not think it should pass lightly. We do not appreciate the approach of the Minister of Justice to electronic surveillance, and we do not entirely agree with the approach of the Solicitor General to parole. Nevertheless, we recognize the necessity for preventive measures, for better detection and for the treatment of certain individuals.

I end by referring to the speech which the Minister of Justice made a week ago to the Second Commonwealth Caribbean-Canadian Law Conference. As he said the Galilean carpenter said we should never hide our light under a bushel: we should let our light shine so that all men can see our good works. The great Galilean carpenter also said that he came not to abolish the law but to bring perfection. When I consider the actions of the government, including the actions of the Minister of Justice and of the Solicitor General, when I consider what has been done about poverty, housing, employment and our other problems, I realize that the light of the Minister of Justice and of the Solicitor General is dim: they are far from attaining perfection.

Mr. Allmand: Perhaps the hon. member is suggesting I will go to Hull!

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise to enter this debate regarding Bill C-83 because of its importance to me as an urban representative of the city of Vancouver. I am very well aware that the peace and security package will not solve all the problems or the causes of crime. Other hon. members, like the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), have dealt very ably and adequately with the sociological causes of crime and the role of the criminal legal system as an institution in the pluralistic, democratic system that we have in Canada. Suffice it to say that the solution to crime will not be answered by simplistic answers or slogans.

As a representative from the city of Vancouver, I am very familiar with the complaints levelled at the criminal judicial system. To a large extent, these complaints are reactions to spectacular crimes which have occurred in my city and elsewhere in Canada. I am informed by Inspector Cummings of the Vancouver city police that the east end of the city has a higher rate of violent crime than other areas. For the year 1974, violent crime in the federal riding of Vancouver East disclosed the following statistics: homicide, murders and attempts, 15. With regard to sexual assaults, male or female there were, 49, and rape and attempts, 26. That totals 75. Assaults on the police were 50; bodily harm and wounding, 352, for a total of 402. Robberies, strong-arming, 404; armed hold-up, 103, for a total of 507. The total in this category is 999.

● (1600)

For the first six months of 1975 violent crime for the federal riding of Vancouver East disclosed the following statistics: homicide, murders and attempts, 9; sexual assault, male or female, 23; rape and attempts, 13; total 36. Assault, police, 27; bodily harm and wounding, 162; total 189. Robberies, strong-arming, 243; armed hold-up, 44; total 287. The total in this category is 521. By reading the total statistics for the city of Vancouver, hon. members will see that the east end of the city is subjected to a high rate of violent crime. For the year 1974, violent crime for the city of Vancouver disclosed the following statistics: homicide, murders and attempts, 52; sexual assault, male or female, 251; rape and attempts, 136; total 387. Assault, police, 100; bodily harm and wounding, 937; total 1,037. Robberies, strong arming, 919; armed hold-up, 510; total 1,429. The total in this category is 2,905. During the first six months of 1975, violent crime for the city of Vancouver disclosed the following statistics: homicide, murders and attempts, total 24; sexual assault, male or female, 129; rape and attempts, 56; total 185. Assault on police, 59; bodily harm and wounding, 476; total 535. Robberies, strong-arming, 436; armed holdups, 276; total 712. The total in this category is 1,456.

What these statistics mean, Mr. Speaker, is that women in my riding are afraid to walk the streets or to park their automobiles in underground parking lots. What these statistics mean is that in my riding, my city and other areas of Canada, there is an aura of insecurity for one's property and one's life and a sense of frustration by many law-abiding citizens that our criminal legal system cares too little about the victim and coddles the criminal. These statistics also represent the unnecessary waste of human life.

Recently, in Vancouver, there was a shooting. The scenario was like a story that could be taken from the plethora of police television programs that we are being inundated with day after day. A man troubled by his inability to participate in our economic system threatens action against his former employer. Threats not being enough, he visits his former employer with a .30-06 rifle. Doreen Garbutt happens to be in his way, and she is "wasted." She becomes a statistic, one of those who will be a number under the category of "homicide and attempts" for the city of Vancouver for 1976. Although I and my colleagues in this House did not know Doreen personally, I feel that we would share with her parents and her friend, Jeffrey, in asking, "Why Doreen?" Another friend of Doreen's, Jack Wasserman, a columnist for the Vancouver Sun, expressed it better than I could. I quote:

> Up until shortly before noon on Friday, I'd planned to get back to the regular column grind by explaining an absence of two days, and saying how I loved my mother, who died on Wednesday. She'd been out of it for nearly five years, and death was merciful. And then a guy with a .30-06 walked into an office on Fourth Avenue and wasted a friend of mine.
>
> Death comes close to home twice in one week. And you accept it in the way it comes, once with a sigh of relief, because it is an end to suffering, and once with a deep feeling of loss because the victim is young and vital and just happened to be in the way of a bullet that exploded inside her and snuffed out the life of someone who had never done anything to anyone, except give love.

There is a higher entity, they say, who figures out all these things, and there is an order to the universe. No capital letter. Just a ridiculous sense of inadequacy, trying to find the right words that will give consolation to the friends who have lost a loved one in a meaningless act of violence.

Doreen Garbutt was my friend, and she was my friend, Jeffrey's friend for nine years. She was a woman of talent, humour, warmth, and also, incidentally, a woman of great beauty. Please forgive the chauvinism. She had native Indian blood, and such was the grossness of our society that she hadn't quite come to terms with that part of herself. Given time, which was not to be her destiny, she would have accepted and reveled in her roots, but it was still something to work out when we last talked.

By now you recognize that Doreen's death is not an abstraction for me. I hate to say it, but it's not an abstraction for most of you either. Doreen is someone you've seen in your own homes, on television, as a key part of the annual Variety Club Telethon. Each year, she was the pretty lady who posted the totals on the telethon board. Hit the fanfare, Dal. And Doreen would take down the numbers and post the new total. She wasn't there this year, because she was home with the flu, but for the eight years previous she was the one on whom all eyes focused during the Variety Club's annual fund-raising gig. In fact, she'd been off work for a couple of weeks and only came back to her job the day before yesterday.

And while she was home in her apartment, worrying about her inability to participate once more, there was this guy sitting in a furnished room on the other side of town, nagging himself into the tank because, in his view, he was not being allowed to participate in the system.

I didn't know him, but there is evidence to indicate that he'd worked himself into a state of mind whereby an act of violence could make everything right. There is no evidence that he ever painted a picture, as Doreen had done. Just that he bought a gun, and a scope, and a 100 rounds of ammunition, and a gas mask and a jumpsuit.

He, too, might have been dead, if the special weapons officer who had him in his sights had received the order to press the trigger. Not that it would have mattered, because Doreen was already dead.

When you're in this kind of business, that's what life is all about. Death. And shattered dreams. My mother was 75, which isn't all that great an age. She was young and vital, too, until she was 69. Without even trying, or tinting her hair, she always looked 20 years younger than her age. And then she took ill and she looked 20 year older than her age. She withered up and died and we buried her.

Doreen didn't have time to wither. She was snuffed out in the midst of life. Her friends and her family were cheated of her continuing presence in their lives. Perhaps it was preordained somewhere. Perhaps she even knew it. She would talk about certain heavy things that left you with the feeling that she had a premonition that her life would be short. It wasn't that she was self-destructive. On the contrary. But she had this feeling. And she and Jeffrey often discussed what would happen when they died.

So that was my week. Rabbi Marvin Hier conducted the service for my mother, and he told the story from Talmud of the man who went to the Great Sage and asked a dumb question. The Great Sage refused to answer and the dummy pressed him.

And finally the Great Sage explained that all of life is a matter of questions. It is not important to find the answers for most of the questions that occur to us.

It is important to be able to live with the questions and accept the fact that there are no simple answers. In fact, there may not be any kind of answers. For Doreen's friends and family, there is one question for which not even the Great Sage has an answer—the question is, "Why?"

● (1610)

I will not pretend to have the answer to the question, "Why Doreen?", for other people wiser than I cannot answer it either. What I can say as a comment is that maybe the proposed provisions regarding gun control could have prevented the unnecessary "wasting" of Doreen. That is, in essence the more salient purpose of the peace and security program. I ask those critics, some hon. members in this chamber, and in particular rod and gun clubs, to think about Doreen when they denounce the gun control provisions of the peace and security program. It is a matter of prevention, not a matter of denying the use of firearms by legitimate users thereof. It is a matter of licensing legitimate users of firearms, not the registration of their firearms.

As a part of the program and the commitment of the government to peace and security, Bill C-83 is of great assistance in waging war against crime, an enemy that provokes hatred, suspicion, the unnecessary and inexplicable harm to human life, and even death. It is not my intention to speak on all the provisions of Bill C-83, as other members have done so ably. My intention is to speak on a problem I have spoken on before, namely, the matter of hard drugs. Undoubtedly, Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments to the wiretap provisions will greatly assist our investigative forces in bringing to trial those individuals engaged in the illicit trafficking of hard drugs. However, what the bill fails to recognize is the cause of most of the violent crime in Vancouver or, for that matter in Canada, namely, the use of hard drugs. I say this not as a criticism of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), but suggest that action be taken now or within the near future to deal with a matter that I know he is deeply and compassionately concerned about.

The immensity of the hard drug problem in my city and province was related to the House by me during debate on Bill C-71, particularly in relation to the amendments to the Bail Reform Act. I should draw the attention of all hon. members to the fact that it was due to the Minister of Justice's appreciation of the problem that he amended the law, placing the onus of proof on individuals charged with trafficking when applying for bail. What I shall deal with now is the fact that between 60 per cent and 70 per cent of all property crime in Vancouver is attributable to drug addicts. I quote from the second report on organized crime in British Columbia, issued by the department of the attorney general:

> Criminal activity still remains a major source of revenue for the heroin addict, who frequently engages in drug trafficking, prostitution, theft, shoplifting, breaking and entering, and robberies. In a recent Vancouver police department study of the 196 robberies committed in Vancouver between August 10 and September 20, 1975, it was found that, of 56 people arrested, 33, or 59 per cent, where known heroin addicts. Another crime that has increased noticeably is contract killing.

This report continues, at page 71:

> In 1975, there have been nine murders directly associated with the illicit drug trade. There is no real explanation for this increase over recent years, but it may be significant that it has corresponded with an increase in the effectiveness of enforcement agencies and a reduction in the supply of good quality heroin. The murders may be the final result of the pressures which have been applied inside the organization by the lack of good heroin, and on the outside by the police. It has been reported that several of the murders are the results of "rip-offs", and have been committed as an act of enforcement, or as a warning to other people who might disrupt the trade from within. It is possible that the organizations are feeling the pressure from poor quality supplies and, because of the large numbers of recent seizures, perhaps suspect members of the drug trade of being informers. It may be that, if police pressure continues to be effective, the number of drug-related murders will continue to increase, for organizations will become distrustful of each other and eventually attempt to reorganize the trade.

Although I congratulate our law investigators for the major drug busts in Vancouver, the result has been a limitation of supply, driving the price up and causing old addicts to commit more crimes to obtain more money to support their habit. What, then, may be required if we are to reduce the level of crime attributable to heroin addicts in Vancouver is a measure of forced treatment of these users. This would take these addicts off the streets so they would not be in a position to commit more crimes. Such a system of forced treatment has worked with success in Japan. To cut off the demand, the government of Japan required that every user caught be confined for at least 30 days of treatment. The result has been that in Japan the use of heroin as a medical problem has become as scarce as smallpox. In fact, we have in our laws a similar system of forced treatment, although not as draconian as the Japanese system.

● (1620)

Part II of the Narcotic Control Act provides for the preventive detention and custody for treatment of addicts who have had previous convictions. However, these provisions are not used because they were not proclaimed. In my investigation of the reasons why such provisions were not proclaimed, I have found that the provisions were not clear because of doubts about the constitutional validity of the provisions or the failure to develop suitable treatment methods and facilities, or later reservations as to the advisability of compulsory treatment in principle, or some combination thereof.

Given the successful results in Japan which may, or may not be applicable to Canada because of different cultural background, I strongly urge my colleagues, particularly the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), on the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to examine in detail this matter of forced treatment of addicts. During such examination members of the Standing Committee of Justice and Legal Affairs will find that the LeDain commission, in its final report into the non-medical use of drugs recommended temporary, involuntary commitment. I quote from this report:

> While we do not see how, as a practical matter, we can withdraw at this time from the use of the criminal law against the user of opiate narcotics, we are not in favour of introducing long periods of civil commitment. We do not believe that the results obtained elsewhere with this approach justify the extended deprivation of liberty in cases in which there has not been a criminal conviction. We do believe, however, that there is a strong case to be made for the use of compulsory confinement for a short time to oblige the opiate dependent to confront his situation and to consider, in an atmosphere in which he is free from the pressures of "hustling" in the illicit market and has access to good diagnosis and advice, whether he desires to pursue one of the treatment or management options open to him.
>
> We recommend that provincial legislation confer power on police officers to bring any person whom they have reasonable and probable grounds for believing to be dependent on opiate narcotics before a magistrate, in order that it may be determined, upon prima facie evidence, whether the person should be committed to custody for medical examination for a period up to seventy-two hours. If the person is found to be drug-dependent, the examining physician and another physician who confirms the diagnosis should have power to commit the person to a residential treatment facility for a period of not less than one month and not more than three months. The purpose of such confinement would be to permit further examination and observation of the drug-dependent person, to permit him to confront his situation and to consider the various treatment or management options open to him, and to afford an opportunity for a commencement of treatment including extended detoxification, the technique of the therapeutic community or stabilization on methadone maintenance. The chief purpose would be to acquaint the patient with the possibilities of treatment, to encourage him to decide in favour of some course of treatment, and to begin the treatment process. If, at the end of the stipulated period, the patient refuses to follow a course of treatment he should be discharged. The period of residential confinement would also afford an opportunity for advice and assistance with other problems having a bearing on the patient's drug use. The residential facility should have access to the necessary counselling personnel to assist with problems of social rehabilitation.

[Mr. Lee.]

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it very clear that in my opinion the forced treatment of addicts might help reduce the level of crime attributable to them. I think the adoption of such a system after careful examination by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs may well be a step in the right direction in eliminating one of the major causes of crime, namely, hard drugs.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, with the introduction of Bill C-83, the abolition of Bill C-84 and calling both bills together peace and security legislation, the government continues its record of putting together piecemeal legislation to calm irate public opinion. One need only look at the economic policies of the present administration. The Canadian people were, and continue to be, dissatisfied with the ever-increasing rate of inflation, so the government threw together a package in the hope of changing public opinion in their favour. The anti-inflation propaganda did not work, and neither will their public relations effort on crime.

In the past several weeks I have received a very considerable amount of correspondence from my constituents on crime. The consensus is that the government has been responsible for creating an atmosphere that makes it easy for criminals. The laws of a nation are respected only if the government enforces them. This government has for nearly a decade given the impression it is easy on criminals, and now the people are reacting. Any government that would try to lull people into believing it can reverse the crime rate by a slick public relations job is guilty of a sinister hoax. The time has come for leadership in facing this cancer on our society.

Now that the government is feeling the pressure of an annoyed public, I believe their dismal performance in law enforcement bears repeating. There was a time when the conviction of criminals was within the aims of the law and we were not so lenient. That is no longer the case. The Canadian criminal justice system has been drastically weakened, and the spiral has continued to the point where fewer and fewer criminals are being jailed or made to feel the punishment of the laws, they have broken. Parole and probation policies have become far too lenient, restrictions have been placed upon the law enforcement officers, and one need not look far to find the culprit. The government must take the responsibility for creating this lax approach to the law. Criminals and potential criminals are very aware that a permissive society has been encouraged by this administration, and there should be little wonder why crime is escalating. Criminals operate on the way they interpret the odds of getting caught, punished, and so on. With this government in office, they have been given encouragement.

It is generally accepted that the role of government is to give leadership in the best interests of the public. When a government fails to give the quality of leadership necessary in any aspect of society, where are the people to turn? That is the sad state in which we find ourselves with this government's approach to crime. It has failed to give leadership and now expects us to believe that its peace and security legislation will solve the problem. The law abiding citizens of our country deserve more than that. How can any government that has been lenient in its approach to law enforcement expect legislation such as gun control suddenly to stop the increasing crime rates?

● (1630)

Gun-related crimes have been steadily increasing. Consequently, the problem of gun control has become an emotional issue and has led many astray from the real problems at hand. There are those who would have us believe that there is a significant relationship between strict gun control laws and gun-related crime. Without getting into a statistical war, I should like to suggest, based on various studies, that unless there are other crime deterrents, crimes carried out with guns do not significantly drop. Canada, for example, has what are accepted to be very tight laws with regard to handguns. Yet in 1973 there were 56 persons murdered with handguns, and another 71 victims in 1974.

A criminal will obtain weapons regardless of laws. Most owners of firearms in this country are law-abiding people. They are equally concerned about crime. Though it is a simplistic statement, let us remember that crime will not be stopped by the elimination of guns. In the many letters I have received from avid sportsmen, fish and game associations, gun collectors, and concerned citizens, the overriding point has been that concrete and positive steps must be taken to decrease gun crimes, but that it must be done in a manner that will protect society and at the same time really reverse the climbing gun crime rate.

Putting aside for a few moments the argument as to whether gun control will stop crime, I would like to expand upon the question my colleague from Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) raised in the House with regard to the administration of gun control. With over six million guns in this country, one begins to wonder if this government does indeed have a system that will not create an unmanageable bureaucracy. The question has to be raised concerning how much this will cost the Canadian taxpayers and, furthermore, how effective it will be. The government is consistent on this subject: it failed to give answers on its anti-inflation program, and will continue to do so on its gun control program.

Even with its proposed licensing of guns, the government is not being very specific. The suggestion is that a licence will only be issued if certain criteria are met, such as records and statements. No provisions are made, however, for gun safety, competency testing, and so on. These are necessary if the government really means what it says. Then, again, maybe this government will be satisfied with a half-hearted program.

The Trudeau government is straying away from the real problem, which is: How do we effectively reduce the commission of gun-related crimes? Canada's gun laws are already restrictive. So it is the crime rate with which we must concern ourselves. Most law-abiding people favour some sort of controls, because this will assist in the war against crime. But, again, there is more to the issue. I feel we have a moral responsibility to the Canadian public to make a concerted effort to hinder crime.

I, for one, am not in favour of a grab-bag of gun control proposals that will not effectively deal with crime. That is why I support the motion of my colleague, the member for Calgary North, in moving that Bill C-83 be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Like the hundreds of people who have taken the time to write me, I feel that now, more than ever, we must come up with a law enforcement package that will protect society from criminals. It is not fair to ask parliament to consider a piecemeal effort. Responsibility is the only approach we can take if Canadians are to be guaranteed a true sense of law and order.

Many positive proposals have been put forward by those who have an interest in guns and their relation to crime. I should like to discuss with this House some of those ideas. It is generally felt that regulation of the criminal use of firearms should be in a manner that does not infringe upon the rights of law-abiding citizens. This government has not given satisfactory answers on how it proposes to do that. Many people are calling for stricter enforcement of the law in respect of gun crimes. This government has not given assurances that this will be the case—and we want the answer. There are those who feel that safety courses should be conducted. This government has not given any satisfactory answers in this regard. The fact of the matter is that there are just too many unanswered questions. This parliament should be very careful in allowing such a piece of legislation to pass unaltered. This government owes the Canadian people some answers. There is no choice but that this bill should be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Crime can no longer go uncontrolled in this country. Many people have been hurt by this government's persistent efforts to be lenient on the criminal element. When I first sought election to this House, I did so because of my personal belief that parliament is the one body that can set the direction of this country and that the tone it sets affects all of society. My belief has been strengthened; but I have also learned that a government can inflict negative effects upon society. That has been the record of this government on crime. In their brief on gun control, the Canadian chiefs of police said:

A fuller evaluation and assessment of many more points of view reveal a rationale that some "control" is desirable.

I believe most of us would accept that concept, but it must not be forgotten that controls alone will not be the solution. It is an impossible task to outline every comment and proposal for new gun legislation by every individual and interest group. However, a few shorter statements and suggestions on gun legislation are worth noting. The majority of gun control proponents favour mandatory terms for crimes involving firearms. The Ontario Association of Chiefs of Police lists as one of its main proposals a mandatory jail term of three years for crimes involving firearms. Contrary to rifle associations, they have called for the compulsory registration of all firearms. The association also proposes that the purchaser of a firearm would have to have a government certificate to purchase a gun and this permit would have to be carried whenever the gun was in use. Failure to do so would mean a mandatory sentence of one year.

A former Ontario attorney general also studied a series of measures to tighten the offensive weapons section of the Criminal Code. He says that Ontario is considering the licensing of outlets or salesmen of guns, the introduction of a "cooling-off" period of 48 hours or more from the time of application of purchase of a weapon, the banning of the sale or possession of semi-automatic weapons, and an increase from the minimum age of 16 years for the purchase of a rifle or a shotgun.

The Canadian Wildlife Federation is opposed to the compulsory registration of rifles and shotguns because it does not believe this would reduce the number of murders with guns. The Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police notes that before any legislation of gun control is introduced the administration of that legislation must be given first priority. If any new system could not be operated feasibly, it should be scrapped and we should remain with the legislation that currently exists. The Canadian Wildlife Federation's paper outlines very well the administrative costs of registration of all firearms.

Last summer The Canadian Institute of Public Opinion conducted a national poll, questioning whether the Canadian public favoured or opposed the registration of all firearms. Nationally, 83 per cent favoured the registration of all firearms, while only 13 per cent opposed such registration. It is interesting to note that there was widespread agreement respecting compulsory registration among all socioeconomic and language groups. In the United States, where the crime rate is increasing at a far greater rate than in Canada, only 67 per cent supported registration of all firearms.

Although in the U.S. the House judicial subcommittee hearings on crime are still taking place, President Ford has proposed some specific gun control legislation. President Ford's main proposal would set mandatory prison sentences for armed criminals who commit violent crimes under federal jurisdiction and would compensate victims of such crimes for losses as high as $50,000. But under U.S. law, mandatory sentences would not affect such persons as murderers and rapists unless the crime was committed on federal property. Such crimes can seldom be attacked by the federal government because most are violations of state or local laws. Consequently, Ford has asked state and local governments to follow suit in respect of jail terms. Other options submitted by the Ford administration would tighten the restrictions concerning the licensing of gun dealers and would ban the manufacture and sale of cheap handguns known as Saturday night specials.

● (1640)

The issue of firearms' ownership is an emotional and ambiguous one. Research into the problem is limited, and when available it is prejudicial and interpreted to advance the cause either for or against stricter gun control. There is little doubt that some form of stricter gun control will provide the means for an effective attack on crime. But there is more to the issue than just the registration or non-registration of all firearms. Mass ownership may aid in the commission of violent crimes, but it is seriously questionable whether it actually causes them. Since most murders involving firearms take place in a domestic environment, it is doubtful whether compulsory registration would reduce crimes or violence by way of this medium. The fundamental causes of increasing violence go much deeper than simply the ownership of firearms. The increase in violent crimes in Canada has caused many people to drastically rearrange their lives.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

The Conservative party does not want a grab-bag of gun control proposals that will not lend themselves to a sharply focused campaign for public support. Efforts to regulate the criminal use of firearms must be carried out with justice and fairness in order not to infringe upon the rights of law-abiding citizens. Any legislation respecting gun control must primarily concern itself with the rights of the people it exists to protect. The Conservative party supports the concept of mandatory sentences for crimes involving the use of firearms. At present, sentencing is erratic and inconsistent and therefore provides little deterrence to offenders. More financial and technical assistance should be provided to all levels of police forces, thereby enhancing their ability to enforce the law.

I should also like to point out that nearly every country with high homicide rates has gun laws which, for the average citizen, can be considered confiscatory or prohibitive, particularly with regard to the handling of guns. The availability of firearms has no bearing on the murder rate. Murder will be committed by whatever means are available. Just this week I received a letter from a prison guard in a Canadian federal penitentiary in which he stated:

> I wish to point out that being associated with the criminal element for 40 hours a week, I have been able to get their reaction to the gun law as it is being presented for a vote.
>
> Frankly, they think of it as more of a joke than gun owners do. They have told me that there is no legislation that can prevent them from acquiring weapons. One in particular volunteered to get me a 38 revolver for the mere sum of $46, much less than I would pay through legal channels.

The answer to all of this is that there must be heavy penalties for anyone selling or buying small handguns illegally. Harassment, or making things difficult for gun collectors and legitimate hunters or sportsmen, is not the answer to Canada's crime problems. Earlier in my remarks I pointed out that the government must take the responsibility for the present criminal attitudes and, indeed, share the blame for the rise in crime. I should like to stress that I do not feel comfortable about the fact that this government has tried to make political hay with Bill C-83. I am relieved that the government realizes that the public is fed up with criminals and wants action; but I am saddened that, instead of action and leadership, all we get is a piecemeal effort. Crime should not be a political issue. Far too many law-abiding and innocent citizens have suffered. We can only hope that in the weeks ahead a more positive bill will emerge from this parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, it is not with pleasure that I take part in this debate on Bill C-83. I would like it a lot more if the government had not introduced this useless legislation and instead put before legislation to solve the serious economic problems facing all Canadians.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that all Canadians understood at first glance that the government is trying to have the people forget about the real problems—which are of an economic nature—by introducing bills on firearm controls. It is true that Canadians are concerned about the dramatic increase in the crime rate but it is also true that people do not believe firearm controls to be a serious solution. I will have an opportunity to demonstrate later on in my remarks that honest citizens are the only ones inconvenienced by this control. In fact, knowing the famous peace and security program which the government introduced a few days and which is aimed at abolishing capital punishment while controlling firearms, one comes to wonder whether the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) thinks that firearms are dangerous, not criminals. Already, Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to point out the absurd consequences of that approach, and it can be expected that one day the Minister of Justice will introduce a bill to throw firearms in jail while keeping criminals on the loose. Tackling inanimate objects and making them responsible for human acts by criminals and loathsome assassins is what this same government is proposing today. I do not think that firearms can kill by themselves. When did you see a revolver walking down the street? In my opinion, it does not move by itself. To punish it for acts of individuals who want to violate the law is absolutely ridiculous. Yet that is what the Minister of Justice is proposing today.

As I pointed out earlier, the victims of firearm controls are honest citizens, game hunters, sportsmen who will have to comply with those controls while criminals continue to do what they have always done—disobey the law.

Mr. Speaker, again today I received a telegram from the Abitibi East Regional Wildlife Council. That association of honest and law-abiding citizens refuses to accept the line of thinking of the government with respect to firearm controls. I would like to quote that telegram, Mr. Speaker.

Asking for your opposition to Basford-Allmand bill regarding firearm controls. Illogical bill. Punishes and inconveniences good citizens. Law should deal with real criminals, not peaceful citizens.

● (1650)

Mr. Speaker, I represent an area where hunting is a common activity for the large majority of the people. In the northwest of the province of Quebec, we have huge forests and many species of game. Then, it is not surprising if the people of my area and my riding are hunters. They are honest and law-abiding citizens. They have rifles, shotguns, but they always obeyed the law and acted like good citizens.

Mr. Speaker, the main effect of the bill before us will be to penalize these citizens, to prevent them from practicing their favorite sport freely and without restriction. A popular slogan says: Firearms control disarms honest citizens and only criminals will be armed.

However, Mr. Speaker, it is true that this government is trying to restrict firearms possession for honest citizens through Bill C-83 but it means that criminals will be the only ones with arms.

Criminals are happy with this bill. Not only they will not be disturbed by the law, but furthermore they will be sure that their potential victims will be disarmed.

Mr. Speaker, even if this bill for firearms control is not to make us believe that the Minister of Justice is a particularly clever man, I do not think that the minister is naive enough to believe that when his bill is passed, criminals will wait in line to have their firearms registered.

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He might do it only with the consent of the hon. member and—

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): I regret, Mr. Speaker, but I did not understand—

Mr. Fox: I asked the hon. member if he would allow me to ask him a question. I wonder whether the hon. member could tell us how the bill now before us will prevent hunters from owning firearms? How could it oblige them to get rid of their firearms since no provision in this legislation would compel them to do so. It is only a matter of asking them to obtain a license that would be valid for five years.

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. member would come to my office and I will show him what hunting and fishing associations think of this legislation.

As I said earlier, the main effect of the bill before us would be to punish our citizens and prevent them from practicing their favourite sport freely and without restraint.

Let us try to imagine for one moment a situation in which a guy about to hold up a bank or commit murder says to himself: I forgot to register my gun. I will have to postpone my murder until tomorrow. Otherwise, the Minister of Justice will be angry. I do not think that this will happen when the legislation is enacted. And yet this is the impression one gets when reading the legislation put forward by the Minister of Justice. The minister knows as well as we do that it is useless and nonsense to have honest citizens register their firearms, and yet he wants us to approve a legislation to control firearms.

An hon. Member: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Later, the question.

Mr. Speaker, we believe the minister thinks or tries to make people think that criminals are stupid enough to register their firearms to please him.

As members of the Social Credit Party, we cannot accept such insignificant reasoning and the people from the northwest and from the rest of Canada will not accept it more than we do.

Mr. Speaker, I have received dozens of letters about the bill which we are dealing with today from all areas of the riding that I represent in the House. I have just quoted a telegram which was sent to me by the Abitibi East Regional Wildlife Council. I have received very interesting letters and briefs from hunting and fishing clubs of all areas of my riding. These people, from what I see, are honest and respectable citizens. All of them without exception are opposed to the bill as I am, because it has been drafted by people who never set a foot in a forest or who have never been hunting in their life. They would probably see no difference between a telephone pole and a pine tree. And yet, Mr. Speaker, those very individuals who know nothing about hunting want to make laws to prevent sportsmen and people who like forests from practicing their favorite sports, something these people would like to be able to do without being harassed by a bunch of officials busily trying to see to it that only criminals have weapons.

I want the minister to know this: People in northwestern Quebec and all other areas of Canada do not like Bill C-83. They reject its false solutions. They refuse to be treated like criminals and will not let this useless if not dangerous bill restrict their freedom to have in their possession guns for hunting and target shooting.

If the minister is not completely deaf and blind, he must realize that the great majority of Canadians are opposed to this bill on gun control. He showed this a first time by trying to hide these control provisions in an omnibus bill which was introduced a few years ago and which proposed longer sentences for dangerous criminals, which everyone wants except the criminals themselves.

The minister seems to think that he will be able to mislead people freely by hiding gun control in a series of popular measures. His violent opposition to the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) to divide the bill so as to allow members to vote for certain provisions without having to approve gun control is another manoeuvre which shows that the minister really knows that gun control is as unpopular as it is useless.

What is even more serious concerning gun control, Mr. Speaker, is that people in my area and other rural areas where nearly everyone hunts will be penalized because of the lack of understanding of public servants and people who live in cities and do not understand the use of owning guns and rifles for hunting.

As the representative of the constituency of Villeveuve, where the great majority of people own guns for hunting, it is my duty, Mr. Speaker, to tell the minister that he is making a serious mistake and taking clearly unjust action by penalizing in this way whole groups of honest citizens while criminals will always be able to find prohibited weapons like machine guns even if these weapons are supposed to be controlled.

Mr. Speaker, the bill now before us will penalize honest citizens instead of criminals. If the minister wants proof of what I say, I could give him loads of it, as I was telling the hon. member earlier.

[Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve).]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment this evening are as follows: the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger)—Transport—Request that departmental contracts specify use of Canadian ceramics; the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—National Defence—Possible closure of bases in Nova Scotia—Request for consultation with provincial authorities.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions for papers. However, I understand that there is agreement that all notices of motions will stand at the present time, which leads us to further consideration of private members' bills, which would return for consideration private bill S-30 which was before the House for consideration one week ago today at this time. Is that understood and agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is understood.

PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

CONTINENTAL BANK OF CANADA

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 4, consideration of Bill S-30, to incorporate Continental Bank of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Before turning the discussion to the consideration of motion No. 1 in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) a week ago, discussion was closed by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) arguing a point of order in respect of motion No. 1 in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge in that on the one hand it constituted an expanded negative or, on the other hand, if acceptable, it ran contrary to the provisions of the Bank Act.

● (1700)

The motion would propose the deletion of subclause (2) of clause 2. It is therefore certainly within the procedural definition of this kind of motion at this stage. It cannot, therefore, be viewed, in the eye of the Chair, as an expanded negative. Notwithstanding the argument, it might have the effect in this instance of establishing powers and principles which would contravene the provisions of the Bank Act.

The fact of the matter is, it is the area of the private members' bill to propose legislative enactment by this House which relieves individuals from the operations of existing statutes. An example is bills to relieve operations of the Criminal Code with respect to penalties and jail terms vis-à-vis persons imprisoned under the general law. It has been held that if it is the effect of a bill to exempt an individual from the operation of the general law, it is a proper subject matter for a private right and public bill. Since this is a private bill, one would have to make the corollary, if it does establish an exemption with respect to the general law, that it must be taken to be within the purview of a private bill.

Whether that is a desirable objective is a matter for debate and division. After extensive discussion and consideration, I think that motion No. 1 ought to be put and considered for discussion and division forthwith.

It is moved by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

Motion No. 1.

February 25, 1976—That Bill S-30, to incorporate Continental Bank of Canada, be amended in clause 2 by striking out lines 23 to 30 at page 1 and lines 1 to 3 at page 2.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to preface my remarks on the specific amendment by putting it in perspective and outlining my party's position on the matter. Our position on the bill itself and the reason for this amendment, and the others, is that we do not believe that the conversion is clearly in the public interest. There are many unanswered questions. There are questions about whether a conversion of this type will create a tax shelter, not only for IAC as it moves into the Continental Bank but whether by setting the precedent it will also create a tax shelter for other chartered banks which, I am quite certain, will seek the same kind of opportunities that this bill affords to IAC.

The figures show what this tax shelter would represent by way of housing, depreciation allowance, etc. Witnesses before the committee indicated that the shelter effect might be from $40 million to $60 million for IAC for the ten-year period of the transition of one to the other. But in the case of the chartered banks we may be looking at half a billion dollars if this is extended to cover them. The committee received argument that this is not possible. Yet the argument of the tax shelter came from a very reputable group, Equipment Lessors Association who represent some of the biggest financial institutions in Canada and the United States. Their tax consultants and lawyers appeared before the committee to speak of this strong possibility.

I recognize that the brief of the Equipment Lessors Association was self-serving and that they did not want IAC to become a stronger competitor by becoming a bank. I could read the long list of members of the association. It would look like the "Who's Who" of the leasing and financial institutions in this country, but I believe it has to be taken seriously. We should look at it carefully before passing a bill of this kind.

Certain questions arose in the course of the committee examination about public disclosure. Because of the special nature of the transition from a finance company to a bank, there is not going to be the same kind of public disclosure of the assets of the operation of the Continental Bank that now applies to banks in general. This has become one of the exemptions being sought in this bill. We will have an opportunity to talk of that particular exemption later, in another motion. I simply want to point out that important considerations are involved here beyond doing a favour for a good corporate citizen.

What this clause deals with very specifically is the question of interlocking directors. The clause that we are seeking to amend would knock out that section which says that provisional directors of the Continental Bank all have to hold a certain number of shares in IAC. A technical amendment was made to this bill in committee which had the same effect as the reading of the bill at the moment, but the point is that one of the provisions of the Bank Act is to avoid interlocking directors. For a brief time there are obviously going to be interlocking directors.

There is also some question of how much insider information was going out. At a fortuitous moment, Carena Bancorp bought something over 19 per cent of the stock of IAC. It may have been accidental or fortuitous, but it is interesting how the whole thing interlocks.

One of the arguments put forward by the sponsors of the bill is that we need more banking competition in this country. If we do—and I am not at all sure we do have that kind of competition—it is obvious it is a very cozy-cozy kind of competition. I wish I could be sure these people never talk to each other. If we look at the directors and major officers of IAC, these are the people the clause we are seeking to amend refers to, and if not these people specifically, then other major shareholders of IAC. Let me go down the list: Lyndon E. Nichol, now a director, formerly chairman; director of Ultramar, which is holding company for Golden Eagle Ltd., oil refiner and marketer in eastern Canada; K. H. MacDonald, chairman, director of Uniroyal, Zellers; J. S. Land, president, director of Canborough Corp., Premier Property Ltd; Ronald L. Cliff, adviser, National Trust.

There are something like the representatives of eight chartered banks on this particular board. Then we have F. M. Covert, director of Petrofina, Royal Bank, National Sea Products, Standard Brands, Trizec, Sun Life; J. S. Dewar, president of Union Carbide, director of Manufacturers Life, Toronto Dominion Bank; C. F. Harrington, chairman, Royal Trust, director of Redpath Industries, Domco, trustee BM-RT Realty Investments, jointly owned by Bank of Montreal, Royal Trust; Peter Kilburn, chairman of Greenshields, director of Zellers, Sicard, Inc; David Kinnear, vice-chairman, Bank of Montreal, director of Canadian Pacific Ltd., T. Eaton Co., and a number of Eaton-related companies; L. A. Lapointe, director of Brascan, Goodyear Tire and Rubber, Hilton of Canada, Rio Algom, Toronto Dominion Bank, Trizec;

You will notice how frequently Trizec keeps coming up. Also we have Paul Paré, president, chief executive officer of Imasco Ltd., formerly Imperial Tobacco, director of Canadian Pacific Ltd., Canron, Royal Bank; Charles I. Rathgeb, president of Comstock International Ltd., director of Algoma Steel, Canadair, Royal Bank; Renault St. Laurent, chairman of Canadian Breweries, director of Banque Canadienne Nationale, Sicard, Anglo Canadian Pulp and Paper, Imperial Life, Scott Paper, Home Oil, Rothmans of Pall Mall, and son of Louis St. Laurent who was a director of IAC.

● (1710)

Then we have D. K. Yorath, vice chairman, IU International Ltd., director of Montreal Trust. IU International Ltd. is the new name for a hugh American utility company which owns Canadian Utilities Ltd., Alberta Power, Yukon Electric and a number of other power companies. Also, D. W. Maloney, director of a number of IAC affiliates; Harold Corrigan, president Alcan Canada, director of a number of other Alcan associated companies and current president of Canadian Manufacturers Association; J. C. Thackray, executive vice president of Bell Canada and director of Bank of Montreal, Union Carbide; Peter F. Bronfman, president of Edper Investments, chairman Canadian Arena Company, director of Trizec; E. J. Courtois, director of the Bank of Nova Scotia, Brinco, Canada Life, Trizec; president of Canadian Arena Co.

The committees of both places were concerned about one question: Was insider information given? We were assured over and over again in committee that the purchases were made by Carena Bancorp, without inside knowledge. Apparently nobody anticipated that IAC would try to convert itself into a bank. We are asked to believe that this large investment, involving almost one-fifth of the shares of a large company, was not made on the basis of inside information, that is, information that IAC would try to convert itself to Continental Bank of Canada. We know that someone inside the corporation had been thinking of this move for a long time, perhaps three years. Yet apparently no information was given to the directors before the announcement was made to them. Under the company's charter, an announcement of that kind to the directors apparently had to be made public. Well, we are asked to believe that the directors had no prior knowledge and that there was no discussion among them. It takes a lot of believing. It may be so. That question, among others, I want to examine.

The ultimate holding company involved in this complex seems to be Edper Investments, which holds Carena Bancorp, which in turn holds both Canadian Arena Co. and a roughly 20 per cent share in IAC Ltd. as well as a number of other investments. As well as Peter Bronfman, mentioned previously, the other major interest in Edper-Carena is Edward Bronfman who is chairman of Edper and a director of Canadian Arena Co. and of Trizec.

There are a number of connections between IAC and Carena Bancorp. For instance, E. J. Courtois has been a long-time director of Trizec, of the Bank of Nova Scotia, Brinco, Canada Life, and so on. Others involved with IAC are also on the board of Trizec. Yet we are asked to believe that no insider information was given, that shares were bought on the open market without prior knowledge that IAC would try to convert itself into Continental Bank of Canada and take advantage of all benefits available to banks.

Mr. Speaker, there is a coziness here which disturbs me. It may not be against the law, but when people say they want to establish another bank and compete it is pertinent to ask, what kind of competition are they talking about? Are they talking about deals to be made on the golf course, or similar kinds of business deals and competition? We need clear evidence that this conversion is in the national interest. In the absence of any clear evidence we must look at how corporate arrangements are made. We need to know a lot more about this deal.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, not at the moment, if the hon. member does not mind. I would be glad to receive his question when I have concluded my initial remarks. As I said, we are concerned about unanswered questions. We want to know about the question of tax shelter, of public disclosure, about interlocking directives, about the possibility of insider information, and so on.

A serious question is at issue. If the bill were to pass it would anticipate the legislative decision parliament should properly make in revising the Bank Act when a full examination of the future of banking and financial institutions can be made. The Bank Act is reviewed every so often, and I understand the next review will be next year. This bill provides for exemptions which negate the Bank Act. If the bill passes, you might as well say the Bank Act does not exist. I know that certain agreements have been reached with the powers that be. I do not suppose the company is doing anything illegal. I do not suggest for a moment that it is. Nor am I trying to say anything about IAC shares. But we wonder who exactly is interested in this IAC conversion. We have embarked on many long discussions in committee. I have talked privately with the IAC people and with the sponsor of the bill who has been a good advocate on their behalf, and I realize that we cannot take this matter lightly.

Here is a large, important Canadian company coming to parliament and asking for something to be done on its behalf. Let me say that we would like to help. We are not refusing to help; that is not our attitude. We should like to be persuaded of the worthiness of their cause so that we can accommodate them. We are open to any argument any hon. member may want to put forward. We know the importance of what we are doing. We are not doing it casually, and we are not delaying anything. My colleagues and I have discussed this among ourselves and we are persuaded that there must be a fight on this question. As I say, we will listen to arguments, and if someone makes an argument showing that this conversion is in the national interest we will look at it. Let me say this: it is the strategy of the government to let the opposition talk itself out. Well, we will not talk ourselves out. We will need to be persuaded out, if I may put it that way, so hon. members might as well get up and say what they must say either in defence of or against the bill.

The Bank Act must be revised. It is significant that not one of the chartered banks appeared before the committee to say, "We do not want another competitor" or, "We think there is something wrong with what is going on." There was a conspiracy of silence. Not all committee members have been so silent. This matter is something of a precedent. We must consider the Bank Act and the implications of the Bank Act. As I say, if this bill passes in its present form there will, in effect, have been a revision of the Bank Act. That, exactly, is what will have happened. I suggest that one cannot lightly pass a bill whose effect will involve a revision of the Bank Act.

We should not pass a bill of this importance so lightly. It has not been given more than cursory attention by a committee of this House. A few witnesses were called. There were hearings and meetings in the Senate, and I believe there were four references in the debates of the other place to this question. There were few committee hearings into a bill of such complex and enormous implications. There were some hearings in the House of Commons committee. Nevertheless, not one of us would dream of amending the Bank Act in this manner. You cannot, by hearing a few witnesses and saying, "Yes, we know all about it; we understand the situation exactly", amend the Bank Act by passing this bill. Interestingly enough, there are two senators who in fact are directors of banks: Senator Molson and Senator Desruisseaux.

● (1720)

An hon. Member: Only two?

Mr. Saltsman: Those are the only two on the committee. There may be others; we did not look into that. The point is that both these senators declared in committee their conflict of interest and said they could not vote on the bill. Nevertheless, they did not consider it a conflict of interest to say it was a very good idea that the IAC conversion into the Continental Bank go ahead. What strikes me about this whole thing is the coziness. For instance, Senator Macnaughton went out of his way, whenever questions were raised, to say, "We have to get this through as these boys are in a hurry." When we held it up, he indicated solicitude by asking how much time we needed. He emphasized that the thing was to get it pushed through. If it were a minor bill being dealt with in the face of some national emergency or some compelling interest, I would not be reluctant to see it expedited through this House. There is no reason to argue against that. However, it is a bill that raises all kinds of questions. There are more unanswered questions than questions that have been answered. It should not go through without serious consideration on the part of the House of Commons.

I see that Your Honour is about ready to remind me how the clock works. I appreciate that hint. I have other things I would like to say, but I am sure my colleagues will be only too happy to enlarge on them. There was a question being directed to me. I would appreciate it if Your Honour would permit that question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That could be done with unanimous consent. Does the House agree to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) asking a question even though the hon. member's time is completed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I was not on the committee, as was the hon. member. The only thing I did was read the brief. Therefore, I am asking this question to solicit information. As I take it, in the transition from IAC to the Continental Bank, the problem of transition, which is sometimes normal when there is an amalgamation of trust companies—and I have had some experience in this—is that they are trying to keep the same directors for the bank as with IAC, and that is why they have had to have this change in certain sections. If IAC were ready to compromise and waive that, would the hon. member then see things in a different light?

Mr. Saltsman: It would certainly improve the light, Mr. Speaker, but there are a lot of other questions. We have ten amendments, so this is not our only objection. The hon. member is quite correct. It is a question of what kind of assets you transfer. Two general kinds of assets are now held by IAC. Some are eligible assets for a bank to hold, and some are ineligible assets. The question of an amendment to the Bank Act arises in permitting the ineligible assets to be transferred to Continental Bank and dissipated or used up over a period of ten years. Although they will not all be used up over that period, it is anticipated they can use enough to at least make it manageable at the end of that ten-year period. This is what the chartered banks have been asking us for a long time—the right to hold and to deal in these kinds of ineligible assets. This is the kind of thing the Bank Act has refused to give them. This is more properly the province of other financial institutions.

Our concern is simply this: if we grant this sanction to the IAC—and, admittedly, IAC has no real, practical way of transforming these present assets into a bank without this special agreement—where does that leave us with regard to the Bank Act? The banks would say we did the right thing with IAC—in fact, they are saying it now—and surely we could do the right thing for them. We will have created—this will be confirmed at a later date—a precedent that will be looked upon by everyone in the industry. Certain competitors of IAC see it that way. The quietness of the banks, their unwillingness to say anything at all except indirectly, as they did in the other House and in a private capacity, is a clear indication there would be great joy in the boardrooms of the banking institutions if this bill passes.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), I will try to be brief because I would very much like to see the bill proceed through this reading to enactment. I want to reflect upon the observations of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) that this is not a bill which they are prepared to let be talked out. They intend to carry on the debate as long as they feel it is necessary for their purposes. What I want to do, in very brief compass, is appeal to the sense of fairness of the hon. members of the New Democratic Party.

The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge took a considerable amount of his time today to develop the allegations that there may have been some advance knowledge by certain shareholder groups about the bank application. I am not familiar with the details of the structure of the company. However, I listened to what he said and listened to the allegations which are very serious and which might at least give rights to the vendors of the interest that he referred to to have their sales set aside and reacquire the shares and perhaps rights under the provincial securities legislation. But, after laying all that out, he then indicated he is not questioning the propriety of it.

I attended a couple of the committee meetings. As a result of the questions that were asked and the forthright replies that were given, I took it that this House ought to be satisfied there is no impropriety relating to acquisition of the shares in question. I very much regret hearing the hon. member referring to the issue again. I was surprised at the end of it to hear him say that is not an issue as far as he is concerned.

I want only to make three points. I think it is totally unfair to hold up the bill on the basis of these three points. First, he stated that there was a failure of the government or of this parliament to enact a general procedure for the incorporation of banks. We have had such a bill kicking around for a long time. It is regrettable that the bill has not yet been brought into law. If it had been, this whole procedure might well be unnecessary, although there are a lot of aspects of this incorporation which would be looked at in the course of reincorporation. They would have been looked at in some other way if that bill had been brought forward.

I want to argue that the NDP, if anyone, should know how scarce the time of this parliament is, how important it is that we try to organize our time better and that all sides of the House try to co-operate with that objective so that it would be possible to get more legislation considered in this chamber. Certainly, if we had other rules an allocation of time or a better spirit of co-operation among all parties it might well have been possible to have had that banking bill made law by now. In any event, I argue that it is totally unfair for these applicants to be made the whipping-boy for the failure of parliament to deal with that legislation and make it law.

Second, the hon. member raised some objections, which I share, with regard to members of the Senate serving as bank directors. In the case of the banking group which is before us, if what he says is true—and I do not question it—there are some senators who will be directors of the new bank. That may well be agreed to be improper, but there are other banks which have senators as directors.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I left that impression, I should correct it. The two Senators I referred to were not directly involved in the IAC conversion, and in fairness to them I should point that out. They are involved in the banking industry generally, so I am sorry if I left the other impression.

● (1730)

Mr. Kaplan: I accept, of course, the hon. member's statement, but in view of what he says I think his criticism is even more unfair. We have before us innocent applicants who do not include Senators, and they are being made the whipping boy for a standard of conduct by Senators to which the NDP, or at least the hon. member, objects. I do not think it is fair that an application which is otherwise valid should be held up and debate prolonged because some other standard ought to be imposed in the other place governing the conduct of Senators. I would urge the hon. member to withdraw his objection to this application on that ground.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would argue that he is using this application as a whipping boy for the whole capitalist system. He does not believe it is in the public interest as a whole for banks "to do their thing," if I can put it that way, and participate in the market place in a way they consider to be in their own interests. We believe that the public interest is served by private corporations operating toward private objectives. He may have a great many complaints about the banking system in Canada and about whether the banks work well for us, but he has not said anything to indicate that this bank will work in any worse way than the others.

If the hon. member has an objection to the banking system it should not be used to prevent a new bank from coming on the scene and participating as a bank in the market place. If our banks have not served Canada well, that certainly is not something that should be laid at the doorstep of IAC and the new Continental Bank which hopefully is to be shortly incorporated.

For my part, although I think the banking system has flaws, it is an industry that is constantly under review by government and is reviewed every ten years by parliament. On the whole I think Canadians have good reason to be proud of their banks and the role they play in the development of our country. If he has objections to them, again I urge the hon. member not to use those objections as a means of preventing this particular worth-while application from proceeding.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we have before us a proposal to permit establishment of a new bank to join the banks we already have in our country. This application comes at a very interesting time. I am not surprised that some new group wants to get part of the action because bank profits have been rising very sharply, by anywhere from 25 to 50 per cent per year, over the past three or four years. Last week in fact the Toronto Globe and Mail reported that bank profits for the previous quarter had increased by 35 per cent over the same period a year earlier.

It is somewhat ironic, to put it mildly, that the newspaper reports which indicated that bank profits for that quarter were up by 35 per cent also indicated that this, what I consider to be massive increase in profits, was within the guidelines established by the Anti-Inflation Board.

The Government of Canada is proposing, and parliament is approving, legislation that restricts the increase in wages and salaries which most citizens in Canada will be able to receive, which interferes with the free collective bargaining system as we have known it. The legislation, in effect, says to any group of workers that they may not get an increase in wages in 1976 of more than 10 per cent over what they received in 1975 except under very special circumstances, which have never really been spelt out by the government in the law or regulations, or in any kind of detail by the Anti-Inflation Board.

In the city of Winnipeg the transit workers are on strike. These workers run the buses upon which so many people depend; workers need them to go to work and senior citizens depend on them to visit friends and relatives. These workers have been on strike for over 7 weeks because the city of Winnipeg has said that its interpretation of the Anti-Inflation Board ruling is that these transit workers cannot receive more than a 9.5 per cent wage increase. Indeed the city of Winnipeg will not even agree to let a higher proposal go to the Anti-Inflation Board for a ruling. Yet the banks had an increase in profits during the last quarter of 35 per cent over the same period in 1974, and this is within the guidelines set by the Anti-Inflation Board. I am therefore not surprised that we have an application from a group that wants to establish a new bank. I am only surprised that we do not have more applications. Why should not a group of well to do citizens in Canada want to get in on what is obviously a very lucrative kind of enterprise?

The question we have to ask ourselves is not whether this is good business for this particular group of directors and shareholders of IAC. Unlike the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) who has just spoken, who obviously follows the precept of the famous—or rather infamous—Charlie Wilson of the United States, who on one occasion said that what is good for General Motors is good for the country, we believe that what is good for IAC is not necessarily good for the people of Canada. We want to know what the benefits will be to the people of Canada from this new bank before we approve its establishment.

Similarly I should like to believe that the owners of IAC will at least have to live by the same rules and laws as all other banks, in accordance with the Bank Act. I see no reason to hurry this, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe that the people of Canada will be at all harmed if this matter stands over. If the directors and shareholders of IAC cannot qualify as a bank under the present regulations set out in the Bank Act, then I think representations should be made on their behalf when the Bank Act undergoes its regular revision which takes place every ten years, and which I think is due in 1977.

As I say, I do not believe there will be much harm done to the ordinary people of this country if IAC has to wait until 1977 when perhaps its directors will be able to persuade—and they may be right—the majority of the members of this parliament that the Bank Act as we know it at present should be revised so that IAC, a financial corporation, is able under the regular standard provisions of the act to change its organization and become the Continental Bank, a bank that will need no special consideration or exemptions from the parliament of Canada.

● (1740)

I cannot accept the suggestion by the hon. member for York Centre that we ought to pass a bill which was designed substantially to meet the needs, not of the people of Canada, but of the shareholders and the directors of IAC.

The purpose of this bill is to establish a new bank which will be able to take all the assets and operations of IAC Limited, with some exceptions, and operate them as a bank. One of the problems which IAC is currently having is that, because it is not a bank, the leverage on its money, the multiple of its assets that it can loan out to customers, or more simply, the number of times it can turn over its money in the form of loans and mortgages, is much lower than that of the chartered banks.

Normally trust companies, according to the testimony before the Commons finance committee, achieve a leverage ratio of about 6 to 1. IAC, because it is the largest Canadian controlled finance company, with huge assets and a reputation for careful management, has been able to achieve a leverage ratio of some 7 to 1 on its money. This is considered high for such financial institutions, but it is much lower than the chartered banks achieve: they are in the range of 25-35 to 1. This is because of the prestige involved in the status of chartered banks, and also because the chartered banks are more closely watched and more closely regulated by the Bank Act than are some other financial institutions. So there is a lot of money involved, all other things being equal, in being a chartered bank.

Basically, then, IAC has grown as big as it is likely to get unless it is allowed to convert itself into a bank. In recent years, since the Bank Act revisions of 1967, the banks have been growing faster than other types of financial institutions. Figures prepared by Statistics Canada indicate that the banks have outstripped all other financial institutions in terms of asset growth and consumer loans.

Looking at the annual average growth rates for the years between 1964 and 1974 we see that the chartered banks showed an annual growth rate of 17.5 per cent; credit unions, 17.3 per cent; trust companies, 15.9 per cent; mortgage loan companies, 13.6 per cent; trustee pension funds, 12.4 per cent; fire and casualty companies, 11.2 per cent; sales finance and consumer loan companies, 10.9 per cent; and life insurance companies, 8.2 per cent.

In an area of particular significance to IAC—consumer credit—the growth of the banks has been even greater. This is illustrated by the figures for the years between 1964 and 1974 where the percentage increase has been as follows: chartered banks, 19.8 per cent; credit unions, 14.6 per cent; retail dealers, 7 per cent; sales finance and consumer loan companies, 4.5 per cent. In other words the banks had an average annual growth of almost twice as much as the average for all business institutions. It is no wonder the directors of IAC would like to convert that corporation into a bank.

One of the advantages the banks have is that they are deposit-taking institutions. They can bring in money at relatively small interest rates and loan it out at an interest rate that brings them in a steady profit but is lower than that of the other types of financial institutions such as IAC, which has to get its money through notes and debentures at a higher cost than that of the banks. IAC, in other words, has to borrow its money, sometimes from the chartered banks themselves, and loan it out at a higher rate, and the spread on the rates is its source of profit.

The banks, paying relatively low interest rates on deposits and no interest on a great deal of the money that comes in in the form of deposits, have a secure and steady source of low cost money that is not available to IAC. As I said earlier, it is no wonder that IAC would like to get into the act. As one of the officers of the bank replied in the Finance Committee a few weeks ago, "We want to play in the major leagues". There is no doubt that moving into the major leagues would be immensely profitable for IAC and its shareholders. That is enough reason for them to approve the bid to convert into a bank. But shareholders' profit is not a reason that should be so compelling to parliament. In order for parliament to pass this bill it should satisfy itself that the bill is in the public interest. That, it would appear, is difficult to do.

IAC Limited was first known as Industrial Acceptance Corporation when it was set up in Windsor in 1925. Its business at that time was almost wholly dealer loans, lending money to car dealers to finance their inventory of new cars. Its business, in other words, was in commercial loans rather than consumer loans. It stayed primarily in this business for several years, and is still in it, but over the years it has broadened its base to other financial activities. It is now involved in wholesale and retail sales financing, dealer loans and business loans, mortgages for both homes and businesses, leasing of capital equipment, and consumer loans. In fact most of its advertisements in recent times have dealt with other aspects of business rather than consumer loans. I have noticed heavy emphasis, for example, on the leasing of capital equipment.

The activities of the corporation, to put it mildly, have been very successful. Among Canadian financial institutions, leaving aside insurance companies, it ranks eleventh in assets and sixth in terms of equity. The following table gives some idea of its place in the Canadian financial world.

	Assets ($ millions)
Royal Bank of Canada	$21,669.9
Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce	18,946.9
Bank of Montreal	17,651.0
The Bank of Nova Scotia	13,462.5
The Toronto-Dominion Bank	11,857.0
Banque Canadienne Nationale	4,125.9
The Royal Trust Company	3,122.0
Banque Provinciale du Canada	2,556.8
The Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation	2,223.6
Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation	2,212.8

Then we come down to the various trust companies and smaller institutions. The years 1974 and 1975 have been very good for IAC. It had net income, (profits) of some $23,336,000 in the year ending December 31, 1974. In the year ended December, 1975, its profits zoomed up to $30,450,000, an increase of some 30 per cent. Dividends paid out jumped from $1.69 a share in 1974 to $2.18 a share in 1975, a healthy jump of some 29 per cent. So IAC is not doing badly for itself as it is presently constituted.

As the IAC people freely admit, IAC, with consolidated assets of well over $2 billion, is Canada's largest sales finance and consumer loan company. If IAC were a chartered bank it would be Canada's sixth bank in terms of equity and eighth in terms of assets. From a humble beginning IAC is already in the major leagues.

IAC has seven subsidiaries. The first is Niagara Finance Company Limited, a wholly owned subsidiary. It is the largest Canadian-owned consumer loan company, with some 260 branches all across Canada, and with some operations in the United Kingdom. It does sales financing and personal loans, which are usually secured through a chattel mortgage.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

● (1750)

Capital Funds IAC Ltd., and Capital Funds (IAC Ontario) Ltd. are both wholly owned subsidiaries which deal mostly in commercial loans. Both of these, plus Niagara Finance, can be absorbed virtually whole by the new bank, except for the leasing of capital equipment which is done by the two Capital Funds companies and which is not presently allowed to a bank under the Bank Act.

It is widely assumed, incidentally, that the revision of the Bank Act in 1977 will allow banks to get into leasing of capital equipment since it is a highly lucrative field that is at present being left to other financial institutions. If this is so, then by the time the bank sets up for business this type of business will be eligible to be included also, and can simply be absorbed directly.

When I first heard of this bill I wondered why the banks were not objecting to it. After all, it is not usual for a group of six large corporations which have virtually a monopoly among themselves not to object in such a case. I was puzzled. In my blissful ignorance of business I assumed that the banks would, either publicly or privately, have been opposed to the IAC application. I wondered why there was no opposition. An hon. member over there is pointing in this direction. I assume he means that someone on this side of the House could give an explanation. My suggestion to the hon. member is that he should make his own speech. We would be glad to hear from him rather than have the type of pointing of fingers and verbal objections to which we are so accustomed.

As I said a moment ago, I was puzzled why the banks were not defending their interests and making sure that there was not a new competitor. I was puzzled until it was pointed our to me that, if this bill should pass, IAC in 1976 under its new name Continental Bank of Canada would be involved in business which is not now permitted under the Bank Act, business which the Royal Bank of Canada, the Bank of Montreal, the Imperial Bank of Canada, and the Bank of Nova Scotia are not permitted to transact.

It is obvious from what I have placed on the record in respect of the operation of IAC that this is a very lucrative field of business. Of course the banks would like to have a piece of the action which is now permitted them. Those of us who were here before 1966 and remember the debate which took place at that time—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has now expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Reid: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I listened to the statements made by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I was astounded that neither member spoke about the amendments which are before the House. It is my understanding that at the report stage we are supposed to confine our remarks to the amendments before the House. Perhaps if Your Honour would care to look at Hansard tomorrow he would find that my point is verified. I believe we should be paying more attention to the legislation before us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair tried to follow what was said, and although perhaps I should not become involved in the debate I think it was closely enough related to the amendment.

Is it agreed that the hon. member may conclude his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wish to complete my remarks simply by saying I am amazed that, on the government side at least, there seems to be a disposition on the part of members, who have much more experience in the business world that I and most if not all members of our party, to support this legislation which will benefit so tremendously one specific corporation, and will do so by a change in the rules which will apply to all the banks which now must follow the rules which are set out clearly and explicitly in the Bank Act. Moreoever, this is being done at a time when we are just one year away from a major revision, if we so desire, of the Bank Act which was passed in 1966.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is on a very rare occasion that I become involved in a debate dealing with financial institutions. However, at this time I should like to lay before the House my bias in this connection. I have found that banks and trust companies are the least desireble institutions to which an individual, a private person, should go in order to obtain a loan. I have always found, on the contrary, that credit unions are much more co-operative and are much more mindful of the reason why banking, financial institutions, and trust companies exist.

Bill S-30 is designed to establish a new bank which will convert the assets of IAC Limited into its operation. The point of our opposition to this bill and of the amendment we recently placed before the House is that this is a most irregular way of attempting to convert a finance company into a bank. I notice that the company chose first to introduce this bill in the Senate in the hope, quite understandably, it would receive a much more positive reception there because of the number of Senators who have an interest in banks. Indeed the bill was quite speedily approved there.

I think it is important that this House should examine a little more closely the bill which is before us. We should consider the dangerous precedent involved in allowing a finance institution such as this to avoid the carefully thought out provisions and safeguards contained in the Bank Act of Canada. We believe the amendment we suggest should be carefully considered because what we have here is the thin edge of the wedge in subverting the Bank Act which has been set up to protect the people of Canada. Mr. Speaker, I see it is six o'clock. May I call it six o'clock at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill S-32, to implement conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium, and Canada and Israel, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

● (1800)

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6.04 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to order made this day the House will now proceed to the consideration of objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Nova Scotia.

* * *

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTION TO COMMISSION'S REPORT RESPECTING NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: I do not want to be distracted by some former adversaries on the football field who know a little bit about the Maritimes, but because of their interest in the Maritimes they will understand why I am rising tonight pursuant to an objection filed under the act protesting the proposal of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Nova Scotia, and in particular how that proposal affects the riding I have the honour to represent, the historic riding of Annapolis Valley, which the proposal would change.

Our time is rather limited tonight but at the outset I should like to thank the House leaders for mutually agreeing to arrange this time for debate on the last day I could rise in this House to bring a formal objection under the act to the attention of hon. members. I also want to thank the hon. members who joined with me in filing the formal objection and those hon. members who have indicated to me, to amplify the objection, that they are prepared to speak tonight and/or any other time this matter might come before the House.

It might seem rather peculiar to those in the gallery, let alone hon. members opposite and perhaps hon. members on all sides, what is going on here tonight, but the fact is that I am rising at the last stage of the legislative machinery to protest a proposal by the Electoral Boundaries Commission suggesting new boundaries for the riding I represent. I feel very strongly about this. I made representations before the Electoral Boundaries Commission in Halifax when it had its hearings there, the same as it had its hearings across the country, and there is no doubt that there is a certain quirk in the act whereby, under the law of the land, anything we say tonight is read by the same commissioners who made the proposal. Therefore we have a situation like the original judge and jury deciding whether their verdict was correct, and this does pose difficulties.

● (2010)

I can certainly say to you, Sir, that since this proposal has been laid upon the Table of this House, pursuant to the law of the land, my office has been swamped with letters, petitions, and protests over the proposal to cut the Annapolis Valley in half and join it with other parts of the beautiful province of Nova Scotia.

I want to say at the outset that I have nothing against any part of Nova Scotia. I should like to be the member for any part of it, any part of the Annapolis Valley, any part of the district of Halifax, or anywhere else, but at this point I happen to be the member for the riding called Annapolis Valley.

In my view there are few parts of this country that have such an identity of interest as the Annapolis Valley in generic terms. There is the Niagara Peninsula, but it is being paved and having condominiums built upon it, and its apple orchards and vineyards being ruined. The Okanagan Valley, if you mention the name—

Mr. MacFarlane: What about Acadia?

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member for Mount Allison and/or Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane)—Mr. Speaker, I am not going to be sidetracked because my time is limited and I want to say a few serious things.

There are very few parts of Canada where you can say the name and immediately Canadians, rightly or wrongly, will identify with it. Annapolis Valley is one, the Niagara Peninsula is another, so are the prairies and also the Okanagan Valley. Try to visualize the beautiful open sky of the prairies and put that into a specific area that could be a riding. There is the Annapolis Valley—

Mr. Broadbent: What about Oshawa-Whitby?

Mr. Nowlan: That area has grown. The hon. member is lucky to be its representative at the moment but, as it grows, he may not be.

At the moment there is a community of interest in the riding I represent, yet the proposal of the commissioners, albeit sincere and based on statistics, fits the electoral factors, and they have suggested a riding called Kings-Hants. In the 1920's there was a riding called Kings-Hants but tonight I am pleading through you, Mr. Speaker, that the soul of an area is so much more important than the statistics which make up an electoral boundary district.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: I thank my colleagues for their endorsement of that principle. That is the reason why I am taking the time of the House tonight.

I do not blame the commissioners, but I have been rather involved with the public of Canada in the last six months,

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Speaker, and there is no doubt that there is an alienation factor between the public and the politician—that is me, that is you, that is every member of this House. There is an alienation factor between the public and the elected person because the public wonders what its small voice has to say in something to do with government. What is more basic to government and the law of the land than the ridings from which we come?

I wish I had more time, Mr. Speaker, and I hope I can have it extended with the help of my colleagues before the debate concludes. I hope there will be an opportunity to file a petition that is now being circulated in the Annapolis Valley, with X number of names for the moment. There are already 1,000 to 1,500 names on file, and I suggest in terms of the specific issue there are very few things I have been involved with in the ten years that I have been a member of this House that have produced 1,500 letters or coupons, individually signed and individually written, such as this one protesting the proposal of the commissioners.

I say in all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, that the voice of Canadians from coast to coast, the voice of particular Canadians in my riding who protest this change, has to be heard. It has to be heard more than in just the formal procedures of the electoral boundary commission holding hearings in different parts of Nova Scotia.

I suggest the very fact that the Gazette notice of the hearings was published on July 29, in the middle of summer, did not help generate public interest in the proposal for the new riding. I think the House should look at the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and make sure that the Gazette notices will never again be published in the middle of summer when Canadians are involved in other things.

I wish the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain, who has such gusto, would contain it when I am speaking about something I know is dear to his heart, that is, the representation of people. It is up to us to bring their views to the floor of this House and deal with them here rather than have them going to a hearing. The people in my riding, Mr. Speaker, did not have the opportunity to give their—

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane) rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member mentioned Hamilton Mountain. It is true I have a very strong feeling for the Maritimes and it is true I have a great knowledge of the Annapolis area, but I would say it would be wrong for a person who now represents Hamilton Mountain to make any comments concerning what those people should think. Those who represent the Maritimes should represent them. I think the hon. member should check whether he really represents the entire Annapolis area or whether that is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There is nothing to prevent the hon. member from making his own remarks in due time. This is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member who just spoke was getting some advice from the member behind him, the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell). Interestingly enough she has not made any representation at all and this is going to affect her as much as it is going to affect me. But let us leave that alone, Mr. Speaker.

The fact of the matter is that the Gazette notice was published on July 29 when most Canadians were enjoying vacations. Then under the auspices of the government we had a postal strike that went on for weeks so it was difficult for the public to register objection to the proposal or get in touch with their member.

These are some things which adversely affected the public interest, which kept individual Canadians from raising their collective voice as 2,000 of them have done in these files that I hold. These letters are trying to tell the commissioners that their proposal to cut the Annapolis Valley in half is against geography, against history, against the economy, and against the very community of interests that has made the Annapolis Valley a very valuable part of the fabric of Canada since 1604.

Our problems are different from those of larger areas such as Oshawa, and urban areas that grow overnight, where it is difficult to have a definable community of interests. My area has had that for almost 300 years. But because of the machinations of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, and on the basis of statistics, it is going to be cut in two.

The main interest in many parts of the riding of South Western Nova is fishing, and under the proposal it is suggested that Annapolis Valley will be incorporated into that riding. Historically, geographically, and economically the main occupation of Annapolis Valley is agriculture. You can see a real division of interest right there, Mr. Speaker.

I would be the last one to claim pride of authorship for words of wisdom that I think should be followed. In the submission I filed several months ago with the commission I objected on the basis of history, geography, economy and education to changing the name of the riding to Kings-Hants. After all we want names to mean something in this country.

● (2020)

We have heard much talk of Canadian content. Pierre Berton wrote "The Last Spike", a saga of the Canadian Pacific Railway, because he was interested in Canadian history. You have Peter Newman, who now has a virtual monopoly with Maclean's with the help of the government, trying to foster Canadianism. My hon. friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) wears the kilt on the historic days of which he is so proud. We are proud of our history. My part of the country has history coming out of its ears, yet the Electoral Boundaries Commission wants to cut up a district which has been a unit for the past 200 or 300 years.

I appreciate that in older, historically significant regions it is more difficult to make boundary changes. Few communities in Canada have such a community of interest as the Annapolis Valley, the place where European civilization first flourished in this country. After all, western civilization first established itself in eastern Canada at Port Royal, in 1604. European civilization flourished there and grew from there.

Not only is the valley a unit historically; it is a unit topographically, educationally, and economically. A long time ago Edmund Burke defined a community of interest in "Reflections on a Revolution in France", page 399, as follows:

> Society becomes a partnership between those who are living, those who are dead, and those who are to be born.

Mr. Broadbent: We're sad.

Mr. Nowlan: I ask the hon. member to constrain his tears. I know his speech.

My family is from the Annapolis Valley. My good friend, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), is from the valley too. We have extensive roots there. Now the place which is one historic unit, the unity of which I consider as my historic birthright, is to be severed, separated, no longer to be known as one riding, Annapolis Valley.

Mr. Broadbent: Come off it!

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member does not know what he is talking about. He is oohing and aahing. That is the hot gas socialists produce. What's more, the hon. member is not being sociable.

I know the Electoral Boundaries Commission is sincere. Its members should look at the area not from the viewpoint of statistics but from the much broader viewpoint of community of interest. I say that the valley is a community and, as such, its wishes should be respected. I know that the commission is sensitive about electoral boundaries and splitting regions. You know, it is one thing to divide a community, quite another to define it. Our community has been defined for hundreds of years. Now the commission wants to divide it and make it into two new ridings.

The area has produced at least three Canadian prime ministers. The Secretary of State for External Affairs no doubt has heard of Right Hon. Lorimer Ilsley, who was one of the best ministers of finance we have ever had. He came from the area.

An hon. Member: Was he a Liberal?

Mr. Nowlan: He was a classical Liberal, and he would be completely appalled by the Trudeau government of today. He was a true liberal, not a Liberal of the type who sits opposite now.

Mr. MacEachen: He would not be too happy with today's Conservative party, either.

Mr. Nowlan: At present Acadia University serves Annapolis Valley. Between 60 per cent and 70 per cent of all students come from the counties of Annapolis and Kings. The university was built to serve the regions—with all respect to my hon. friend from Halifax.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): This speech is better than the one you made at the leadership convention.

Mr. Nowlan: No, Joe, it isn't. The commission cannot ignore deeply rooted traditions. The area is one unit educationally, served by a university attended by between 60 per cent and 70 per cent of students who come from the valley. Why, if this proposal carries, the people in the valley will be divided. How can they ask with one voice for manpower programs which may be necessary, or for OFY grants, if the government continues to give them? The governemnt isn't sure of anything. I do not suppose the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) knows what he will do next. He probably isn't sure if he should shave his beard tonight. That's how unsettled he is.

Why should you divide the region? Why should some students at Acadia University be represented by one member and some students by another, which will happen if you establish the new riding of Kings-Hants?

Think also of what will happen to CFB Greenwood, part of which is in Kings county and the other part in Annapolis. Under this proposal some of the married service personnel living at Middleton will vote in one riding; others at the base will vote in the other. That is preposterous. Greenwood is right on the borderline of the proposed riding. CFB Greenwood, incidentally, is the largest base east of Montreal and the large NATO base in Canada. Why create such problems at the base? Our school systems are also involved in the proposed change.

The two towns affected, Middleton and Bridgetown, are none too happy with the proposed change. The clerk of the town of Middleton wrote me the following letter, a copy of which went to the chief commissioner. It says:

> The town of Middleton wishes to make known its views and opinions regarding the proposed federal electoral boundaries changes in the Annapolis Valley.
>
> Although approximately one half of Annapolis county is now included in the Digby-Yarmouth electoral boundaries region, the town feels that should any changes be made in these boundaries, that Annapolis county in its totality, should be included with the Kings-Hants riding.
>
> Annapolis county has traditionally been closely linked with the rest of Annapolis Valley community, not only in its history but in its present economic ties.
>
> The economic mainstay of the Annapolis Valley is agriculture; the mainstay for the Yarmouth-Digby riding is fishing. Should Annapolis county be included in the Yarmouth-Digby riding, the federal representative would then have to be well experienced in agriculture and fishing as well and would, of necessity, have to have close liaison with the other MP representing the valley riding. This condition could cause a great deal of unco-ordination in efforts to assist the agricultural community of the Annapolis Valley as a whole and further complicate the position of the representative were he to try to represent these two economic mainstays in the Annapolis-Digby-Yarmouth region.
>
> For these reasons the town of Middleton feels that rather than change the boundaries to include the Annapolis county with Digby-Yarmouth counties, that the commission should give serious consideration if any change is made at all, to include Annapolis county with the Kings-Hants riding. The town of Middleton wishes that the Annapolis Valley be left intact as one historical and economic entity and that one federal representative for the Valley should speak for the entire Valley community.

● (2030)

I could not agree more with those thoughts and sentiments. They were filed after the representation hearings were held because of the difficulty of summertime and the postal strike.

The mayor of Bridgetown has written to the commissioner. I quote from his letter:

> On the 8th of October 1975 our Town Council addressed a letter to Judge Angus MacDonald expressing our dissatisfaction and opposition to the proposed changes in electoral boundaries which would attach all of Annapolis County to the South Nova constituency.

[Mr. Guay (St. Boniface).]

> We understand the Nova Scotia commission on electoral boundaries has now submitted its report, which does approve the change noted above, even though there is widespread and strong opposition from this part of the province.

This is the dilemma that faces Canadians because they do not understand the legislative machinery that has to be followed. Quite frankly I hope we have some effect in going through this procedure tonight. The mayor continued:

> While not fully aware of the procedure in such instances, we understand that the only recourse now—

Again, this came late in the day because of the summer recess, vacations, and the postal strike.

> —is an appeal on the part of a number of elected members of the House of Commons. Just how this is accomplished we do not know, and would welcome advice from you as to what we might do to assure further careful consideration to this very serious and disruptive proposed electoral change.
>
> We recognize that this is a late hour appeal, but at the same time it is due only to the fact that our appeal of October 8, 1975, was not favourably received.
>
> I'm sure you will recognize at once that this request comes from a responsible elected body, and reflects the apprehension and concern of the people of our area.
>
> Without being more specific, it must be quite clear that the proposed change would be both disturbing and disruptive. It follows quite logically too that all possible should be done to retain the harmony and satisfaction which presently prevails.
>
> We urge you to consider this letter as a reasoned and well-considered appeal for further study of a proposal which promises to promote dissatisfaction and disharmony.

Those are submissions from two of the larger towns in the area that is going to be cut back and tied into another constituency, which is undoubtedly tremendous, but one with which they have never been associated in any way whatsoever.

I have a resolution from 17 or 18 Annapolis Valley boards of trade who also protest this move. I have a petition signed by over 2,000 people that I hope to file before this hearing is concluded in this House.

It is very difficult in this formal Chamber to try to relate the serious personal concern and confusion of people who have always been a part of an area and overnight their boundaries are going to be changed. As I said, this is not a new area. For the past 50 years Annapolis Valley has been an electoral unit and this proposal is cutting it up. It does not have to happen.

When I made my representation to the regional commissioner in Halifax, it so happened that Mr. Castonguay was there. He is a very respected Canadian who knows more about the electoral procedure and boundary changes than any other Canadian. In my submission I stated that all of Annapolis County, all of Kings County, and at least half of East Hants, which I now represent, should be in the constituency of Annapolis Valley. In fact, as far as I am concerned, it should be all of Annapolis County, Kings County and Hants County.

My friend who represents East Hants is prepared to speak on my proposal. He will say that East Hants has a community interest with either Truro or Windsor and no community interest with Annapolis Valley. It is not even part of the Annapolis Blossom Festival. It is not related with regard to newspapers or radio. Mr. Castonguay stated that I was the first member to appeal before a commission hearing and advocate taking on more people, rather than less. Mr. Castonguay caught the point completely because in terms of the Annapolis Valley community interest, I or whoever is the member, would serve more people. That is because the community interest is so definable. The interests are similar. To divide Annapolis Valley in two and add a portion to one part, with all respect to the lovely people of East Hants there would not be the same community interest that is historic in the Annapolis Valley. I hope the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) will say a few words.

With the consent of the House, I or another member on my behalf, will file the necessary petitions and formal signatures. This can be done at a later date. However, I plead that statistics not be the determining factor for a constitutency that has been a historic part of the land for 300 years. It is the soul of the Annapolis Valley that I plead for in terms of electoral representation rather than just the cold, formal statistics that are applied to determining electoral boundaries. There is now a definable boundary in terms of Annapolis Valley. I do not understand why the commission should use statistics to cut it in half.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave).

Mr. Blais: You only have one minute.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, it is always nice to support a colleague and have so much gratuitous advice thrown across the floor from people who have forsaken the maritime way and gone to other places, but still have the interests of the maritimes at heart.

My purpose in rising is to suggest a way out of the dilemma posed by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan). I rarely rise in this place to scold, but only when I think of some kind of remedy that might or might not be applied, or at least should be considered. It is my purpose to follow that sort of course this evening.

I do not know whether hon. members realize it or not, members like the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) would realize it, but the hon. member for Annapolis Valley is telling it exactly as it is. There has developed a rather explosive situation in Nova Scotia in connection with the redistribution of seats.

Knowing the people who sat on the commission I must say I thought that, by and large, they did an excellent job. Mr. Justice Angus MacDonald has been a friend and associate of mine for years and years. His father was the distinguished premier of Nova Scotia for years back. Knowing him and others who sat on the commission, they did the best they could. The fact is, however, that once in a while one is allowed to blunder. In the case of Annapolis Valley, probably they have made a blunder. There is certainly very strong feeling there that the division of seats should be in a different direction than is proposed. I gather the procedure is for Hansard for this debate to be forwarded to them so that they can make up their minds whether they did a wise thing or bad thing originally. That is their obligation at this point.

● (2040)

I hope I can appeal through you, Mr. Speaker, to the members of the commission to accept the argument by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan). I say that because I have to be a practical politician in this sense and acknowledge what has been said by people in Nova Scotia. I think Mr. Justice MacDonald and his group would accommodate him in that regard.

If I may just take another 30 seconds to make another additional point, perhaps the most practical argument I can advance to Your Honour is that I believe in the county distribution system, or in division along county lines. There is a part of the riding of Halifax-East Hants known as Mount Uniacke which could probably adjust itself to another riding. So if Mr. Justice MacDonald and his group need an area that has to be adjustable, they might look at the Mount Uniacke area, a very large and growing area of Nova Scotia, an area that does not necessarily have to be tagged—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it being 8.40 o'clock p.m., pursuant to the order made earlier this day the debate on the objection to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Nova Scotia is adjourned.

The House will now proceed to the consideration of the objection to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of British Columbia.

OBJECTION TO COMMISSION'S REPORT RESPECTING BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, it is nice to see us going from one end of the country to the other and eliminating most of the stuff in the middle for a change. It is my privilege tonight to speak on behalf of a couple of other members from British Columbia who happen to be away from this House on very important business, namely, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt).

The points I wish to make touch on three types of characteristics: geographical, political and demographic. Specifically I wish to inform you that the Creston Valley area of the present day riding of Kootenay West should not be redistributed into the new riding of Kootenay East, and that the Christina Lake area should remain in Okanagan Boundary rather than be added to Kootenay West. The hon. member for Kootenay West, who has asked me to speak on his behalf in his absence, states that he would like to make it absolutely clear at the outset that he personally has no objections to serving and representing the Christina Lake area; indeed he has many friends in that community. None the less, he does not feel it to be fair to either the people of Christina Lake or of Creston or even of Trout Lake that the proposed redistribution take place.

Geographically speaking, the Creston Valley area forms a natural boundary for the southeastern limits of Kootenay West, as does the Rossland range of mountains in the southwest, and as do the Monashees on the north end of the Arrow Lakes. By contrast, Christina Lake and its environs are at the base of a natural obstruction, namely, a high mountain pass known as the Blueberry-Paulson, and does not geographically belong to the natural boundaries of present day Kootenay West.

In effect what the proposed redistribution does is oblige the member for Kootenay West to travel over an additional mountain pass, which in winter is not only time consuming but also difficult and hazardous. Anyone who has lived in the Kootenays for a winter will know that eastern Canada's snowfalls are minor compared to those in his area. There is no permanent habitation along the 60 odd miles of this pass. In order to cover the east side of Kootenay Lake in the redistributed riding, the hon. member would have two choices before him. He can take the ferry at the north end of the lake and, on reaching the east side, swing 40 miles south. This ferry runs once every 45 minutes, but is frequently delayed in winter due to weather, and in summer due to heavy tourist traffic. Or he could travel over the Salmo-Creston Skyway through what would become his former riding and then drive approximately 40 miles north. Either way, he is severely inconvenienced.

Further to this, should it prove impossible to persuade the commission to leave Creston in Kootenay West, surely they can leave the north end of Kootenay Lake in his riding. This would be an improvement in that it is far easier to travel the few extra miles to this remote part of his riding, a part which shares in the concerns of Kootenay West as it now exists, than to service the Christina Lake area.

Politically speaking he would like to draw the commission's attention to the fact that two community bodies which are representative of a cross-section of the people in the Creston area have rejected any inclusion of Creston into the new Kootenay East riding. The Creston Chamber of Commerce spoke against the proposed redistribution and, as well, the Creston Town Council unanimously voted to reject the proposed change. The stand taken by these two bodies is understandable in light of the fact that prior to 1952 Creston was in the riding of Kootenay East and was moved back to Kootenay West in 1965. Another move back to Kootenay East would only confirm the feeling of the local populace that their fate is to be a political football approximately once every 10 to 15 years, serving only to satisfy the whims of redistribution and the numerical population needs of redistribution. He would suggest to members of the commission that this is totally unnecessary in light of the following demographic considerations.

In November of 1974 the British Columbia Research Council issued a report entitled "Population Projection" wherein it outlined the following statistics. In the regional district of Kootenay Boundary in 1974 the population was 31,407; the projection for 1980 is 30,763. In the central Kootenay area in 1974 the population was 44,670; the projection for 1980 is 47,265. In Columbia Shuswap the population in 1974 was 30,811; the projection for 1980 is 40,647. In East Kootenay the population in 1974 was 39,735; the projection for 1980 is 52,475.

The first two regional districts, corresponding roughly to the land area of Kootenay West, will experience approximately 7.8 per cent growth by 1980. The second two regional districts, corresponding almost exactly to the new riding of Kootenay East, will experience a 63.3 per cent growth by 1980. Even if we tend to be pessimistic about future economic growth, Kootenay East will more than make up for the 5,000 or so constituents it will not get if Kootenay East keeps its present proportions.

It is pertinent to note in this connection the statement by Premier Bennett of British Columbia that coal is going to play a major part in the provincial economy and that it is going to be a part of the new economic prosperity. The riding of Kootenay East encompasses the largest and most development-ready coal mining area in all of British Columbia. At the rates predicted by the British Columbia Research Council, Kootenay East will, in a matter of 4.8 years, have gained about 5,000 people, already sufficient to make the addition of Creston superfluous. It is therefore highly likely that after the next census Creston will once again be redistributed back to Kootenay West.

The hon. member would also like to point out that economic trading patterns presently exist between Creston, Nelson, and Trail, rather than between Creston and Cranbrook. Similarly, the people of Christina Lake do their trading mainly with Grand Forks. It is not appropriate or fair to the people of Christina Lake that the economic concerns of Christina Lake be included in those of Kootenay West, just as it is not appropriate or fair that the economic concerns of Creston be included in those of Kootenay East, an area whose economic concerns differ widely from those encountered in Kootenay West.

Finally the hon. member would like to make a point about the peculiar manner in which the commission has drawn the boundaries in his present riding across areas that are virtually uninhabited the year round, presumably in the name of fair redistribution. He asks that you take note of the fact that the commission has drawn a line through hundreds of square miles of Kootenay West in an area bounding the Salmo-Creston Skyway, the area north of Creston, and the area bounding Trout Lake and Upper Arrow Lake. It is inconceivable to him how the mere addition of hundreds of square miles of bush can be justification for the commission's supposed aim of fair apportionment of constituents to every member's riding.

Did the commission find any great and pressing concerns in these areas of forests, high mountain peaks, and surging creeks which would cause it to put them into either Kootenay East or Okanagan North? If so, the hon. member is most anxious to hear about them. He does not think it too much to ask that at least those portions which play no part in this population redistribution be left in Kootenay West since these areas are ones of present and future environmental, economic, and other concerns to those constituents left in Kootenay West after redistribution.

In any case the hon. member would like to demand from the commission a full explanation as to why it insisted on such a move. Perhaps such an explanation will remove the lingering doubts in his mind, and in the minds of other members of parliament who have suffered the same fate as he, as to whether or not the commission's work is serious 100 per cent of the time, or whether it redistributes ridings in a manner akin to shuffleboard.

● (2050)

I should like to talk now about some ridings on the lower mainland of British Columbia. I propose that the electoral district of Burnaby-New Westminster be formed by joining that section of the proposed Burnaby riding which is west of Sperling Avenue and Kingsway to the city of New Westminster. An electoral district of Burnaby-Capitol Hill can be formed by joining the Capitol Hill district to the section of the proposed Burnaby riding which is east of Sperling and the Kingsway. An electoral district of Coquitlam, Port Coquitlam and Port Moody can be formed by joining these three districts.

The following reasons are urged for my proposals: Capitol Hill, proposed now as part of North Vancouver-Burnaby, should be electorally associated with Burnaby. Geographically being separated from the rest of its proposed constituency by Burrard Inlet, the residents of Capitol Hill have little or no association with North Vancouver. Consider the separation, the inconvenience; there is not even a bridge to the North Vancouver district within the Capitol Hill section, therefore all social and commercial relations flow south connecting Capitol Hill easily with Burnaby. Culturally and socio-economically, the Capitol Hill quarter is associated with Burnaby and not with North Vancouver.

It is obvious that the interests and concerns of Capitol Hill residents are similar to those of Burnaby, while in an enlarged North Vancouver-Burnaby electoral district they will be an unrepresented minority. In this area I feel sympathy for the present member for New Westminster because the riding I now represent, Burnaby-Richmond-Delta, has a part of Burnaby that is totally separated from Richmond-Delta. From either end of my riding I have to drive about ten miles through the ridings of a couple of other members to get to the rest of my riding in Burnaby. From the Delta end of my constituency I have to drive through the ridings of other members and across a bridge to get to the other section of my riding. The people living in that area of Burnaby really have no relation with those living in Richmond and Delta which are brand new areas, growing fast, whereas Burnaby has been there for much longer.

That has been a hardship for this member mainly because of the distance one has to drive around there and because of the disassociation, not being next door neighbours. I would have hoped the commission, when drawing up these boundaries, would have given more attention to these factors because the people in Capitol Hill, who will now have a representative who most likely will be on the north shore, will not even have a bridge—they will have to drive through the ridings of other members to get to the rest of the area of the riding they will be associated with. I can't understand the members of the commission when they draw things up like this because certainly some of the members of that commission know British Columbia better than would seem from the lines that are on the maps.

The western section of the proposed Burnaby riding should be joined to the city of New Westminster since the historic, commercial, and social relationships of a large part of that section have been with the city of New Westminster. Again the hon. member is pointing out that people who are socially and economically in the same area should be left in the same area.

Coquitlam should be in the same riding as Port Coquitlam and Port Moody. All are new suburbs, all are within the same school district, and all have similar socio-economic mixes. By putting those areas together, Coquitlam would then become the centre of a major riding, and this again would serve the people of that area much better.

Now that I have made some comments for the member for New Westminster and the hon. member for Kootenay West I might make some on my own area and also on the province in general. I have attended all the public hearings and a number of the meetings which have been held. I remember the debates in the last parliament when redistribution got shot down, much to my dismay because of the fact that I represent one of the largest ridings in the country, in excess of 200,000 people. I am disturbed that once again I have to go back to an election with the same large group of people which is awfully tough to represent, especially when you look at members from Newfoundland and the smaller provinces who have only 30,000 electors. You then think it would be nice if you could get your riding down to the same size and maybe give the people a little more service.

An hon. Member: How many blocks is it?

Mr. Reynolds: I hear someone down there yelling "How many blocks is it?" Mine is also a large riding geographically. Certainly in the rush hour I could not drive around my riding in seven hours the way the traffic is blocked up at tunnels and bridges. Some of the members who represent rural areas must think it would be awfully nice to represent an urban area, but they do not realize that people disappear into their cars in the morning and do not come back until late at night. It is not always that easy. Besides, the people in the urban areas tend to become more involved in politics.

The point I am making is that British Columbia was alloted only five new seats in the redistribution and the way I heard some of the members talk in the House it was great we were getting so many. But the main error of the whole redistribution setup is that it was taken on the basis of a census which was so old. If it had been based on the 1971 census British Columbia would have qualified for a lot more seats than five. Members might say that this would apply to every other area, but no province in this country has shown the growth rate of British Columbia.

We are the fastest growing province in the country and the reason is obvious to everyone who lives there. The hon. member who is speaking has lived in two eastern provinces; he happened to be born down here and has lived in two of the western provinces, but the province of British Columbia seems to have nicer weather which attracts a lot of people from this area to live there, and maybe that is why our growth rate is so great. Certainly after this redistribution, even if it takes place within a very short period of time, most of the members from British Columbia will represent constituencies with far more people in them than members in other parts of the country. I think this is a shame.

We should look toward a system of redistribution which would redistribute the ridings on the basis of population figures much more up to date than those we are using. I was looking at the map, and looking at the numbers of people I am going to have in my riding, and I was amazed to find that the figure is roughly 83,000—that is the number the commission says will be in the new riding of Richmond-South Delta. Well, there are already in excess of 90,000 people in the Richmond area alone, and in excess of 30,000 in the South Delta area. So the minimum population by the time redistribution comes in will give me at least 120,000 constituents. This is a considerable number to represent.

The way they split up my riding, I cannot complain. After saying there are so many people to look after, I am very pleased that those people in the Burnaby area will be going into a riding represented for the first time. Right now there is no one member who represents Burnaby. My riding is Burnaby-Richmond-Delta and there is a member on the other side of the House who represents Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Raines), but there is no member who represents Burnaby only. That is the one good thing this commission has brought out after recommendations from members on both sides of the House, that Burnaby should have one member to represent the area, one of our larger municipalities. I am very happy, and I am sure the people of Burnaby South, who I have been proud to represent in two elections and who in the last election, in every poll, voted for me with over 50 per cent of the vote, will be pleased that they will now be represented by a member who lives in Burnaby, althouth I am sure they feel they are well represented, and have been, not only by this member but by other members in the past who, by the way, mostly all lived in the Richmond or Delta area.

As far as Richmond goes, those people will still have a member of parliament to represent them, and that member will only have to represent South Delta as well as Richmond I still feel that if the redistribution were carried out on a more up to date basis the community of Richmond should have a member of parliament of its own. A community with a population in excess of 90,000 should not have to share its member of parliament with another community in the area, especially when one considers the size of some other ridings in the country.

When it comes to the Delta area I shall be losing the North Delta area to a riding that will be called North Delta-Surrey-White Rock. That might fit well together geographically, but again it is a shame because Delta encompasses three distinct communities. It is the southeasternmost part of the mainland of Canada, it borders on the United States, and it is called the sun capital of Canada. This area receives less rain and more sunshine than anywhere else in the country. It is a shame this area has to be split in half through redistribution when it has in excess of 65,000 to 70,000 people and could qualify in most regions of the country as a riding in its own right.

● (2100)

I must say in all fairness that the commissioners had to take into consideration the old census. This is the only way they could do it and we will have to go along with it. However, I am looking forward to the day that Delta will be a riding on its own. I am sure it will reach that point at the next redistribution after this.

I hope that as soon as this redistribution is completed the House will set up a committee to review and redistribute seats. I know that the Committee on Privileges and Elections is looking into the area of permanent voters' lists and so on, which ought to speed up many of those things and perhaps make us look a little more professional to the people of Canada than we do at the present time when we try to redistribute our seats. Mr. Speaker, that is about all I have to say about redistribution. I thank the House for listening to my remarks about my area, the area of the hon. member for Kootenay West, and that of the hon. member for New Westminster.

[Mr. Reynolds.]

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take a few minutes tonight to speak about the redistribution in British Columbia, and more specifically in my constituency of Kamloops-Cariboo. By and large the Commission has done a fantastic job in the province of British Columbia. Many of us are concerned about the rapid growth in the province. We are very happy to see that finally we are to be allocated five new constituencies. My representation was that we should have six new constituencies, but five is pretty close.

British Columbia has been one of the most rapid growth provinces in the country. Five new seats reflect this new growth. This growth has been all over. It is in the lower mainland and also in the upper interior in places such as Prince George, Kamloops, Kelowna, and Penticton. These cities have grown extremely rapidly. I want to congratulate the commission for having taken all these factors into consideration.

As I said before, the commission really has done a pretty fantastic job in British Columbia. Some pretty strong representations have been made to me from the city of Merritt. Hearings were held in Kamloops at which presentations were made. There was one presentation by the Shulus Indian Band on behalf of the Indians in that part of the constituency, and another by the Merritt Chamber of Commerce. These people were extremely concerned about the city of Merritt no longer being included in a constituency with Kamloops.

The old constituency of Kamloops-Cariboo had about 140,000 people. It covered an area of about 25,000 square miles. There were some anomalies in the old distribution. It was necessary to try to fit people into some areas which were very large. In some instances there was no relationship between one area and the other in respect of, for instance, Kamloops and Quesnel. When the last redistribution took place there was much concern that Quesnel, so many miles away from Kamloops, had to be in the same constituency. In any event it all worked out. After all the shouting was over it was fantastic for me to represent Kamloops-Cariboo along with the city of Quesnel.

I want to say I hope the commission will look again at the matter of including Merritt with Kamloops in a constituency. In the redistribution it is now with Okanagan-Similkameen. Merritt really has no connection with the area of Okanagan-Similkameen except perhaps with Princeton. It has no affinity with Penticton or the Okanagan part of British Columbia. The real connection of Merritt is with Kamloops. Its connection with Kamloops is in such areas as the newspapers. The people in Merritt read the Daily Sentinel and the Kamloops News. Many people in Kamloops also read the Merritt Herald and the Merrittonian and so on. There is a natural connection also through television and radio. Radio Station CHNL Kamloops has an outlet in Merritt and Princeton as well as in Clearwater which is up the North River. The same thing applies to the mining industry and the forest industry.

With these few comments may I say, on behalf of the people of Merritt, that I hope I have registered with the commission their concern so that the commission may take another look at the situation in an effort to ensure that the Merritt-Quilchena area will be included with Kamloops where they want it to be, and with which there is a natural connection geographically, socially, and economically.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the commissioners for the good job they have done in the basic redistribution of the ridings in British Columbia. They do not have an easy job in the mountainous area of British Columbia. It really is not too easy to get everybody in exactly the areas where they would like to be. I should also say that probably they recognized at the outset that the city of Merritt needed some really good representation. Perhaps that is the reason why they included that city in the new riding of Okanagan-Similkameen. I think I must agree with the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) that the basic economic community is joined to the city of Kamloops and that area more than it is to the rest of the new riding that is being created, Okanagan-Similkameen. So I would think that even though the commissioners wanted to get better representation for the people there, the area really should be included in the Kamloops areas.

● (2110)

Also in the redistribution the new riding is called Okanagan-Similkameen. The name of the riding now is Okanagan Boundary and the only difference between Okanagan Boundary and what we would have is the inclusion of the city of Merritt at the north western extremity and the exclusion of the small community of Christina Lake in the southeastern boundary, and then dividing it up into another riding which would include Kelowna, Vernon and Enderby. Actually we are getting in the very high growth area, bearing in mind that the riding of Okanagan Boundary has the third largest population in British Columbia, and that takes in all the ridings in the area, including Vancouver. It is a big riding with a large population.

You might get many complaints from city ridings, but I know that in most of them you can cover the whole area on a bicycle. There is no way that you can do that in a riding such as Okanagan Boundary. Many of the city ridings in Canada have small populations, such as Vancouver East and Vancouver-Kingsway. They contain not much more than half of the population of the riding of Okanagan Boundary.

I also agree with the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Brisco) that Christina Lake should not be included in the riding of Kootenay West. There is a mountain range between the city of Castlegar and Christina Lake. In May of 1974 when I went over to the nomination meeting of the hon. member who now sits for Kootenay West—I hope I did a little bit to help him get here—I came back that evening over the mountain range, with mountains on both sides of the highway covered with snow, and on the way I encountered a bear and her cub. The bear cub had just been born up high on the mountain range which was covered with snow, and this was in May. This is the kind of thing we are talking about in British Columbia and these are the kinds of roads we have to travel on in these areas.

Christina Lake is a community which the CRTC and CBC do not consider as having a sufficiently large population to qualify for television coverage under the accelerated program, although there are more than 500 people living there. I believe they went back to the 1971 census in making their decision to exclude that community, a community which is cut off by a mountain range which, at the best of times, is hazardous to cross. Yet the commissioners have decided to include it in the riding of Kootenay West. These people are only seven miles away from the city of Grand Forks. Christina Lake was at one time a resort. Now it is one of the better places in which to live in Canada, as is most of the area that I represent. Many people from all over Canada come to live there. Even a relative of the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) lives there. These are the type of people who move in from all over Canada to live in this community. That is why it is growing so fast.

I think that more study should be devoted to this matter of excluding a community such as Christina Lake and putting it into the riding of Kootenay West, and also including in the riding a community such as Merritt which is closely connected with the city of Kamloops.

I know this has not been an easy task and I would not like to see any of these representations upset the designation given by the commissioners because, as I said at the outset, it is not at all easy to designate ridings in this type of mountainous area. When you consider any interior riding such as mine, with a population which is so much greater than ridings in the great metropolis of Vancouver, you realize that there is an inequality there and that to represent these people properly we must have more seats in the area.

I agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) when he says we are not overjoyed at receiving five new seats in British Columbia. All we received were five new seats in British Columbia. When you compare that with ridings in other areas of Canada such as in the Atlantic provinces, in Quebec, and in many parts of Ontario, you find that we are not getting our just due in British Columbia. More seats should have been given to us. When I look at the redistribution in Ontario I see that ridings in the south and central area of Ontario have a smaller population than some of the great spread-out ridings in British Columbia. I do not understand why we should not get more seats.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. It being 9.20 p.m., pursuant to the order made this day, the debate on the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of British Columbia is adjourned. Shall I call it ten o'clock? This would need unanimous consent.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, Alberta comes next.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that five or six minutes are left in the debate on British Columbia redistribution and I think hon. members would like to speak for a few minutes on that subject.

● (2120)

Mr. Blais: What is wrong with Alberta?

Mr. Paproski: It will be next.

Mr. Blais: He is finished.

Mr. Paproski: No, he still has two or three minutes left. He still has four minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I must remind the hon. member that the order states that the debate with respect to British Columbia should adjourn at 9:20 p.m. This is why I called the debate adjourned. Unless there is unanimous consent, we will proceed to the next objection.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I believe each province under this redistribution is to have 40 minutes. There are still three minutes left of the 40 minute period, and the hon. member could be given three minutes before we commence the Alberta objection.

Mr. Blais: The order says 9:20 p.m. I think upon consent of the House we could permit three or four minutes; but simply to make sure the order is understood, it spoke of 9:20 p.m. and not 40 minutes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let us agree and not use up the three or four minutes on this point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it agreed that the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston) shall have three or four more minutes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the very brief time I have I should like to make only two points, and that will take about all the time I have.

One can hardly be too critical of redistribution which in a sense does what I suggested it should do, which is to create two Kootenay and two Okanagan seats, as it was historically. However, an examination of the map shows that it has not really solved some of the problems which existed previously. The large size of Okanagan-Kootenay has been a difficulty to overcome, for any hon. member representing that area, and yet if we look at the proposed Kootenay East, it reaches into north Okanagan on the one end and west Kootenay on the other, and carries for whoever represents it in the future parliament the same difficulties which exist in Okanagan-Kootenay today.

The distances will be tremendous, and if one looks at the Okanagan side of it one sees that north Okanagan has been divided three ways, whereas it was divided two ways before. The Shuswap Sicamous area has been included with Kamloops. It is a great reaching over for that area, so I hope the redistribution commission will consider what it has done because it could have been done differently if the Kootenays had been regarded as Kootenays and given two seats. If the whole Okanagan had been treated as a unit and divided into two, a more sensible redistribution would have been made.

[Mr. Paproski.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The House will now proceed to the consideration of the objection to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Alberta.

OBJECTION TO COMMISSION'S REPORT RESPECTING ALBERTA

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, as we move eastward into the province of Alberta I think even the most solidly entrenched member of parliament would agree that the process whereby riding boundaries are regularly re-evaluated is desirable and necessary in order to ensure adequate representation to fast growing ares and to reflect the experience of those who have been elected to represent a given district. Accepting as we do the necessity, and indeed, the value of redistribution, changes in the province of Alberta must be made with a minimum of major surgery on constituency boundaries except where we must repair anomalies which were introduced in prior redistributions. With respect, I find that some changes in the electoral map which the commission has proposed this time are unacceptable.

As the commission should be aware, the provisions of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act permit certain considerations to influence the delineation of each riding, namely, special geographical considerations, including particularly the sparsity, density or relative rate of growth of various regions of the province, the accessibility of such regions or the shape and size thereof, and any special community or diversity of interests of the inhabitants of various regions of the province.

The tolerance of 25 per cent in either direction from the established quota for each province was written into the act to benefit rural areas. This was much discussed at the time of the last distribution. I know a number of my colleagues will be bringing this point up again tonight. This is to allow rural constituencies to retain their distinctive character and to continue to exist within a representable framework even if, as a result, their population is substantially on the low side of the deviation permitted. I contend that in some respect the commission has ignored these provisions and the intent of the framers of the act.

With specific reference to my riding of Wetaskiwin I cannot comprehend why the commission found it more reasonable to carve out the commuter area south west of Edmonton and move it into the Yellowhead riding. Surely the commuter towns of Spruce Grove, Stony Plain and Winterburn—and the acreages which are adjacent—should not have been taken out of Wetaskiwin because they have much more in common with the suburban area communities of Devon, Leduc and New Sarepta, the demographic interests of which are more urban oriented than that of the large area of Yellowhead where the primary occupations are lumbering, mining, tourism, and agriculture.

Stony Plain, Spruce Grove and Winterburn are situated in an agricultural area dominated principally by hobby and dairy farms, a characteristic similar to that of the Leduc-Devon area. Wetaskiwin is made up of a rich agricultural area with largely a preponderance of dairy farming and other cereal crop farming. It is surrounded by large towns which service that area, along with the commuter area which is south and west of Edmonton.

Growth and growth patterns come into this picture as well. The towns of Spruce Grove, Stony Plain, Devon and Leduc have all experienced rapid growth which has virtually doubled their populations over the past few years. Without becoming urbanized these communities will more and more attract light mobile industry which does not need to be located within the city, but which does need to be close to its facilities and transport routes. The employees of these industries, as well as those who commute to and from Edmonton, have special needs and interests. These individuals, along with the specialized farmers, constitute the two readily identifiable and not incompatible populations of the riding. To extract a large group of persons, some 6,000, from this territory and place them in a constituency where the terrain, working pattern and orientation are totally dissimilar to the riding in which they are presently located is contrary to the sense, spirit and letter of the act.

The accomplishment of what has been done is to make Yellowhead riding 71,000 people and the Wetaskiwin riding 64,900 instead of the reverse as it was on the pre-public hearing map of Wetaskiwin, which was 71,700, and the Yellowhead riding 64,044. In our motion in section 8 we suggest that the commission has not established the rationale of the decision to limit the urban city ridings at the boundary limits of the cities of Edmonton and Calgary in order to eliminate a possible urban domination of the adjacent rural populations. It then immediately reversed itself in its designation of adjacent constituencies where the rural populations are entirely dominated by those of suburban communities, the demographic interests of which are solely urban orientated.

● (2130)

The commission decided to limit the urban city ridings at the boundary limits of the cities of Edmonton and Calgary. How can it then justify its delineation of boundaries where, quite obviously, the rural population will be entirely dominated by the suburban communities whose democratic interests are wholly urban orientated? Again I must refer to the Wetaskiwin-Yellowhead situation. The density of the urban-orientated population concentrated in the commuter towns of Spruce Grove, Stony Plain and Winterburn and surrounding acreage, is not comparable to the population dispersal in the farmland and national park area to the west of this region. There is a disparity, and the denser populated region will almost certainly be the dominating influence in the proposed Yellowhead riding.

The situation in which any member representing Yellowhead constituency will find himself cannot be overlooked in the examination of the proposed electoral boundaries. It is entirely conceivable that this individual will be placed in a position where he cannot adequately pursue and forward the interests of agriculture, natural resources, tourism, and the urban commuters in the eastern part of his constituency. The emphasis attached to tourism and the urgency of the development of our natural resources may well overshadow the concerns of the Edmonton oriented suburban group.

Indeed the issues and problems of Jasper National Park and the town of Jasper alone are quite complex. The interests and goals of individuals living in the present Rocky Mountain constituency are peculiar to that area alone and demand the full and individual attention of their member of parliament. Will that member be able to represent adequately the divergent interests of the socio-economic composition of both the eastern and western parts of the proposed electoral district?

Since the electoral system is for the primary benefit of the electorate, constituency boundaries must be easily defined and readily identifiable by the constituency population. Riding units should be cohesive and possess as great a common community interest as possible, recognizing working patterns, marketing areas, and demographic factors.

A constituency deserves and should expect the close attention of its member; by this I mean his intimate knowledge of its communities, people, and particular problems, and his regular personal contact throughout that riding. Rural areas generally have been deprived of representation equal to that of urban areas simply because of the distance factor. Because of the increasing difficulty involved in representing a rural constituency, in particular the distance a representative must travel, it is reasonable to expect a rural riding to have a smaller population than an urban riding which is much easier to service.

In the case of the change being made to the Wetaskiwin and Yellowhead constituencies I submit that it would be much easier for the member from Wetaskiwin to serve some 6,000 people living in the commuter towns just outside of Edmonton. The member for Yellowhead, who already has a riding almost three times the size, would be much freer to serve his much larger, more sparsely settled riding than at present. The fact that the urban-orientated area has now entered into a slower expansion era and must now catch up with services such as sewer, water, health and recreational facilities, should not concern the commissioners with regard to projected growth in the area.

Even though the river is a natural boundary, the fifth meridian that was used prior to public hearings adequately divides the commuter area from the other demographic region. This area is used to being in the constituency of Wetaskiwin; it has been there for the past ten years.

I must complain about the fact that no reasons were given for the change from the pre-public hearings to the after public hearings maps. The people in the area extracted from Wetaskiwin and placed in Yellowhead constituency were extremely surprised by the move. They submitted no briefs to the public hearings because they were satisfied with the original delineation. In fact I believe that only one brief was submitted from that area and it was in support of the boundaries as they were then drawn.

I must voice my frustration, and the frustration of some of my colleagues, with the fact that the commissioners did not cite reasons for making changes. The whole burden for launching an attack lies upon the shoulders of the general populace of the area, the members of parliament, and interested organizations. The commissioners in turn never are required to justify their decisions. How are individuals supposed to understand why they have suddenly, for no seemingly apparent reason, been pulled out of one constituency and thrust into another?

At the present time Alberta has 19 seats in the House of Commons, seven of which are totally urban and 12 of which are rural. With the new proposed boundaries the province will gain two seats. The urban-rural breakdown will be ten to 11. In other words one rural constituency will be lost, therefore making all rural ridings larger than at present. While we recognize that a reasonable effort has been made to delineate boundaries on the east-west line rather than on the pattern as it was before on the north-south boundary, making the riding of Rocky Mountain House very large and hard to represent, we must still complain to the commissioners about the size of the rural constituencies.

I realize that the task of the commission is an extremely difficult one. It is no simple matter to undertake to draw lines on maps, and regardless of where the boundaries are drawn some people will, of course, complain. Admittedly many of the inadequacies of the last redistribution have been rectified. However, I must in conclusion re-emphasize that we now have something new in Alberta since the distribution of 1961, and that is the commuter acreage areas around the two large cities of Edmonton and Calgary. This recent development was taken into consideration and recognized when the boundaries were drawn on the pre-hearing map. The riding of Pembina encompassed the commuter population to the north and east of Edmonton, and Wetaskiwin the towns to the south and west of Edmonton. In the recent map, for unknown reasons, this has been changed.

The danger of dominance of thicker density populated areas over more sparsely populated regions should not be underestimated in deciding upon boundary lines. This can and will create very real and serious problems for constituents and members of parliament. We must recommend in all sincerity that the commission reflect upon these objections and recommendations and reconsider its decision.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, as an opening comment in this debate about the new proposals for the Alberta redistribution of federal seats I should like to say it is really much better than the previous attempt in 1973. Of course that one never became operative. This one is much better for my Medicine Hat federal riding.

I would go on to say that, if the only criteria for change were to increase both area and population, then the new proposal that we are discussing tonight for my Medicine Hat riding is both fair and proper as it accomplishes this with the least disruption. It extends the northwest corner and the north side to include the town of Brooks and Bassano and those areas up to the Red Deer River.

● (2140)

I agree with point No. 5 on the objection's statement, which reads:

The commission has failed to take into consideration the size of some of the rural constituencies it has created, and the difficulty involved in representing an area that large. Although Alberta's representation has increased from 19 to 21, three of these go to Edmonton and Calgary, so that rural Alberta loses one seat.

I suggest sincerely that the 25 per cent variation rule has not been used sufficiently in large, rural constituencies such as Medicine Hat. I am well aware of the principle of representation by population and the specific reference to this principle in the Canada Gazette edition of February 21, 1973, outlining Alberta's federal redistribution and later references for Alberta. However, I seriously ask this question: is it right and proper that Calgary and Edmonton, with 52 per cent of our provincial population—that figure was used in the proposal—should have almost as many seats as all the remaining cities and towns and, most important, the entire rural areas combined? My answer of course is that the proposed new electoral boundaries are inequitable and ignore the well founded and continuing importance of agriculture and of rural cities, towns, and villages, to our total Alberta economy.

[Mr. Schellenberger.]

There is now reasonable agreement by governments that the present trends to large super cities should be altered in favour of population and industry dispersal policies. I cannot argue that the "rep-by-pop" principle is unfair when population only is considered; but in view of static or even shrinking rural populations over vast areas we must surely recognize that crowded city living is not in itself justification for over representation in our large cities. Our shrinking rural populations have been due to a vastly increased size of farms brought on by modern agricultural technology and the need for production efficiency. There are now clear signs that the exodus from rural areas may be ending, and in Alberta new provincial policies are being introduced to point out once more that rural industry and living should indeed be considered and encouraged.

The question of enlarging the number of seats in our House of Commons has now achieved some reality. Passage of time and Canadian population growth will make still further enlargement necessary. When this point in our history does arrive I, for one, sincerely hope that these lessons in economic and political disparity, together with the development of our north, will not be sacrificed completely to the cold analytical approach of a purely academic "rep-by-pop" system.

While I have been a member of parliament for only three and a half years I am already acutely aware of the physical problems in properly representing the Medicine Hat federal constituency. It is almost 300 miles by road from Empress, in the northeast corner, to the opposite corner on the U.S. border southwest of Lethbridge. One half of the present population resides in Medicine Hat and Redcliff. The other half includes all the remaining towns and rural residents. With the obvious requirements for House attendance, regular weekend constituency visits are impossible. Travelling schedules from Ottawa to Medicine Hat are such that it takes me much longer to travel from Calgary to my home than from Ottawa to Calgary. A Friday afternoon to Monday noon week end away from Ottawa nets me only about 24 hours in my constituency. I have partially resolved this problem with a constituency office in the city of Medicine Hat. It is run by a very competent secretary five days a week. The proposed new Medicine Hat boundaries will still further aggravate these physical problems, due to a larger area and a larger proportion of the population coming from rural towns and strictly rural areas.

May I make some appropriate comments about the new areas to be added to my riding? I am genuinely pleased to see the addition to my riding to the intensive irrigation districts adjacent to Brooks and Bassano. These regions are surely among the most extensively developed irrigation communities in Alberta, which of course means in all Canada. This means that my Medicine Hat riding would include nearly all of the intensive irrigation areas of Alberta and, therefore, of Canada. The beautiful towns of Brooks and Bassano are really the products of 70 years of progressive irrigation. The growth of trees, orchards, lawns and shrubs is a joy to behold after one has travelled across the dry land prairies.

I would be remiss in my duty if I did not refer to the new addition across the north side of Medicine Hat riding, that area adjacent to the Red Deer river, east to the Saskatchewan border. This addition contains some of the finest ranch lands in Alberta's short grass, chinook country. It also contains the historic and scenic Dinosaur Park and Bad Lands along the Red Deer River. I also point out that the well known Suffield military reserve of some 1,000 square miles, about which I have been so concerned this last month, will now be totally within Medicine Hat riding.

While I am deeply disturbed and concerned about the physical aspects of representing an ever increasing rural constituency, and although I worry about the dwindling voice of agriculture in this parliament, I am genuinely pleased at the prospect of representing these new additions to my Medicine Hat riding.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this occasion to place before the House and government a proposal to honour the memory of a great citizen and chief magistrate of Edmonton, the late William Hawrelak.

Mr. Andre: A Grit.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): And a great Canadian.

Mr. Paproski: It is the desire of large numbers of citizens of the community to which Bill Hawrelak devoted himself that his memory should be preserved in a tangible and appropriate manner. I am therefore proposing, with the support of a great many citizens of Edmonton, regardless of political affiliation, that Edmonton Centre riding be named Edmonton Hawrelak, in order to perpetuate the service and the memory of this great Canadian who did so much for the citizens of this community.

Bill Hawrelak came from the Ukrainian community of Alberta. He was a son of one of those numerous families who came from the Ukraine in search of freedom. Bill grew up in the farm community of Wassel, Alberta, northeast of Edmonton, and came to Edmonton where he entered municipal politics, finally becoming mayor, and serving for many years. The modern city of Edmonton is Bill Hawrelak's monument. His monument lies also in the hearts of the various groups to whom he dedicated himself so unstintingly. I feel that in giving Bill Hawrelak's name to this riding in the city of Edmonton a well merited action would be taken to perpetuate his work and his service to his community, his province, and his country. I am hopeful that this proposal from this community will be given to the proper authorities for implementation. I am certain that it will receive a wide cross-section of support, regardless of political affiliation or racial descent. Bill Hawrelak was a man who put people first and I am deeply convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Edmonton Centre and, indeed, the entire community, would be deeply appreciative of this action.

Mr. Blais: What's the angle?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What about calling the constituency Edmonton-Paproski?

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would move that the constituency be renamed Edmonton-Paproski, I would second the motion.

Mr. Paproski: What about calling Winnipeg North Centre Winnipeg-Knowles?

● (2150)

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, this debate is one step in what has turned out to be a very long process of arriving at new maps for redistributing the electoral districts of Canada from which the members of this House are elected.

The House of course knows that according to the old act the redistribution was to occur as soon as practicable after the 1971 census. This procedure caused new maps to be presented early in 1973, which was in the midst of the term of a minority government. I think it is fair to say that in addition to the reasons given, namely, that the previous act was not truly satisfactory, the fact that with a minority government an election could occur at almost any time had a lot to do with causing members of the House to respond favourably to the suggestion that redistribution be set aside and that a new method be found for deciding upon the electoral districts in the provinces of Canada.

I might say that in terms of my own constituency of Calgary Centre the 1973 map was not that great. It was not that suitable. Basically, it was cutting off one third of the existing constituency of Calgary Centre and adding the equivalent amount of population and geography from other constituencies, but in a manner which dissected existing communities and associated people together who really did not have a common community of interest.

As a result of this decision to set aside redistribution, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections was presented with a reference from the House and a proposal from the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) on how a new House might be constituted and how the electoral district maps might be decided upon.

I might say in passing that that proposal for deciding upon the basis of the new House did not meet with my approval for the simple reason that it called for an increase in the size of the House. I do not think that would contribute to more efficient conduct of the House of Commons or of the Government of Canada.

As a result of a process of debate and discussion this new procedure was decided upon. It was very similar, except for the number of seats allocated per province, to the old procedure in that an "independent commission" was to be established in each province with a mandate for deciding upon the electoral districts within each province, based roughly on the concept that each electoral district should have an equal number of electors within it.

There were a couple of changes made. One change in particular was unfortunate. The change was that the commissions could no longer take into account trends but rather should be restricted to the data available from the most recent biennial census. As a result of that we had a situation in Alberta where the constituencies very rigorously followed the act, as is most proper, and therefore the commission cannot be faulted, but that resulted in some anomalies that, although not severe now, will be severe in the near future because of growth patterns within the existing cities. One possible consequence was talked about by my colleague, the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger).

As I understand the commissions will have the benefit of this debate, I must state that the commission in the province of Alberta produced a map in 1975 that was a considerable improvement over the map produced in 1973. It was not perfection, and that is a subjective thing, but it was nonetheless a considerable improvement.

There were a few things in association with Calgary Centre to which we took exception. This was with regard to where the boundaries cut through existing communities. As a result of our feelings on this we made representation to the commission. I am pleased to say the commission accepted the recommendations we made. I suppose I feel that way because they did, but nonetheless I think it demostrates the responsiveness of the Alberta commission to reasonable suggestions. Therefore they should be applauded. Consequently in terms of the last issue of maps produced in January, in terms of my constituency and the city of Calgary in general, the map meets with the approval of the members and the people of the city, at least as far as I can see.

In the last minute before ten o'clock I wish to acknowledge the problem raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), respecting the inability of our existing system to acknowledge the need for regional representation. This would acknowledge the fact that somehow there is a difference in terms of population within densely populated cities and within rural areas. Somehow that should be reflected in our system. That problem, and the fact that the committee of the House of Commons when looking at redistribution the last time overlooked this, constitute something that is unfortunate. One never knows the schedule of this House, but I hope that sometime in the not too distant future this House will address itself to the question of how we can provide representation in the House of Commons that is fair and equitable, taking into consideration regions, areas, remoteness from existing communications, travel centres, Ottawa, and so on.

I see that it is now ten o'clock. I merely want to repeat that in my opinion the commission for Alberta, given the existing act, has done a very credible job. I have to voice my approval of that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being ten o'clock, the debate on the objection to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Alberta is adjourned.

[Mr. Andre.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENTAL CONTRACTS SPECIFY USE OF CANADIAN CERAMICS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, it is not often one gets to speak twice in a matter of half an hour.

The only way that small secondary industry is going to get ahead in Canada is if it receives the support in many cases of the federal government. An article in the March 6, 1976, edition of the Financial Post states that imports are strangling Canadian secondary industry. It is no wonder. A case in point was brought out by my question of December 12, 1975, when I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), and I quote:

● (2200)

Because of the comparative advantage we enjoy in the ceramics industry in Canada—

I am not so sure we can maintain this advantage if the government keeps acting in the manner it did with regard to the Calgary airport contract.

—will the minister, together with the Minister of Supply and Services and Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, assure this industry that government contracts will specify the use of available Canadian ceramic products and that we will not follow the practice followed in the case of the new Calgary airport?

The minister replied that the government observes some broad rules—and I emphasize the word broad—in connection with Canadian materials. He continued:

I do not know if they apply in the particular case in question, or to a specific tendering operation, but I will look into the matter.

The case I am referring to concerned the letting of tenders for ceramic tile for the new airport at Calgary. The specifications stated a Canadian tile should be used. Canadian tile and German tile were tested by the Alberta Research Council; both were deficient in some areas, but the German tile had more deficiencies. Then it was brought to the attention of the government that the specifications were more stringent than Canadian government specifications board standard No. 75-GP-1B. Subsequently, the tenders were issued on the revised specifications to which Canadian tile could subscribe. Tenders were submitted; Frontenac Tile and International Brick and Tile, both Canadian companies, and a Germany company submitted quotations, and International Brick and Tile was the lowest Canadian bid.

The architect stated he wanted German tile because he was familiar with it and would guarantee it. But the Research Council of Alberta had done extensive study and tests on Alberta tile, and had in fact helped set up the process and kilns and was prepared to stand behind it. The province of Alberta's minister of transport was prepared to give assurances as to the ability to deliver on time and would give written guarantees. Federal people on site seemed satisfied at the time. However, after all these assurances the government gave the contract to a German company and based its decision on the uncertainty of deliverability. Unreal, Mr. Speaker!

I can only say that I hope that after the minister looks into this situation he will see that this does not happen again. International Brick and Tile now is making pottery and is intending to sell its tile kiln as it cannot get the reputation needed to break into local markets. The ceramic industry in Canada is viable and competitive, but it is just getting started and needs the kind of help that government can give it by awarding contracts for this type of tile to Canadian owned companies whenever possible, even if the process is a little more complicated.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will be pleased to know that we have advised the Calgary project office to revise the specification to a Canadian government specifications board standard which had been developed in conjunction with Canadian industry. However, as it was too late to issue that change before tenders closed, the general contract was awarded but the contractor was instructed to obtain quotations on the revised specification and specifically to invite tenders from two Canadian manufacturers who had questioned the specification.

In the re-tendering, International Brick and Tile of Edmonton submitted an identical price to that of Darlington-Haskins and Company of Vancouver, the original low bidder who was supplying a tile manufactured in Germany. Both companies were asked to supply test reports to show that they could meet the CGBS standards. The Darlington-Haskins test exceeded the specification while International Brick and Tile were not able to furnish test reports. This company, Mr. Speaker, was in the process of developing a tile and had not yet produced one which would meet the standards. We have been in contact with them since, and as of October they still did not have satisfactory test results to show us. Therefore the contractor was authorized, on June 30, to place an order with Darlington-Haskins and Company for the supply of quarry tile in the interest of permitting the job to remain on schedule.

As a result of the above, its associated problems and other objectives of the ministry, the following actions are taking place. First, as a participant on the interdepartmental policy committee for the Government of Canada master specifications we are formulating a uniform course of action with all five member departments, Public Works, National Defence, Industry, Trade and Commerce, Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Transport with respect to both Treasury Board's policy and guidelines on contracting, and Ministry of Transport contract regulations on the use of Canadian products.

Second, the implementation of the use of the master specification for projects within the regions is at a high degree of achievement. An integral part of the master specifications is the standards which are set by the Canadian government specification board, which includes ceramic tile.

Finally, it is now mandatory for all consultants engaged by the Ministry of Transport to use the master specification exclusively.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF BASES IN NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions in the last couple of weeks, and indeed over the last number of years, I have found myself raising in this Chamber what I consider to be serious questions with respect to programs of base consolidation and closure.

This evening I find myself at it again because rumours continue to flourish with respect to bases at Moncton, Chatham, the airborne regiment at Namao, part of base Calgary, London, my own base at Shearwater and Dartmouth—

An hon. Member: Winnipeg.

Mr. Forrestall: Winnipeg will not do too badly from what I gather, because they are going to move the research station from Medicine Hat over to Winnipeg. That is decentralization à la Winnipeg Richardson.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: When there was a fire at Greenwood, for example, the people at the base there, businessmen in the surrounding community, went into Halifax, sat down in the premier's office, called the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) and forced him to give a clear undertaking that nothing would happen to Greenwood. That is fine for Greenwood. But what do we do at Shearwater? Do we burn down the gymnasium? Do we burn down half of Dartmouth and then get on the phone to ask for some assurance that this base will not be so seriously disrupted in a precipitous way that the civilian employees and the surrounding economy will suffer unduly?

I have asked the government, if it insists on going ahead with widespread closures, to establish an interdepartmental committee within the cabinet which would take into account the sociology of the question, the background of the civilians concerned. I have pointed out that these men are, by the government's own definition, technology redundant people, people who would not in most cases have more than a 20 per cent opportunity of ever regaining permanent employment.

We need an interdepartmental committee, on top of which must be a cabinet committee, which would look at the sociological and economic impact of these moves, which would consider the relocation and retraining of those people with some humane concern. I find myself speaking here this evening because at the root of all this is clearly the avowed intention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to reduce the Canadian armed forces to a level below which they cannot posture as a defence force but merely as a para-military police force functioning in aid of the civil power. That is not good enough.

● (2210)

So that my words of wisdom will fall clearly on all ears let me repeat them. When I first came to this Chamber ten or 11 years ago the armed forces had their share of the gross national product. They played their part in the ability of the country to grow. We maintained an adequate posture in the eyes of our neighbours to the south and our allies in Europe. We were able to play a meaningful part in collective continental defence and elsewhere. This had an influence on our export trade. We had good will, in other words. We were treated at a high level in respect of need to know. Ten years later we have lost access to partnership on a need to know basis.

Our Prime Minister is being told to put up or shut up. I find it offensive that anyone would have to speak that way to my Prime Minister. I would remind the members of this Chamber of that. These are matters of concern. I suggest that they are emphasized by the continuing rumours. We understand it is the clear intention of the Department of National Defence to submit to its minister, and subsequently to cabinet, a list of recommendations that will include not only the bases I have mentioned but possibly seven or eight more. These closures or consolidations will affect some 7,000 or 8,000 civilian employees, their wives and families, and the communities in which they live. We should not do this lightly. I wonder whether tonight we might hear more about when this report will be presented to the minister, when it will go to the cabinet, and what generally is the attitude of the government in respect of handling this very serious and important departmental report.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) said a few moments ago, it is not too often one has an opportunity to speak twice in this Chamber during a short period of time.

I was beginning to wonder whether the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) had a question or was merely making a speech. In any event I will try to meet some of the issues he raised. I must say I agree with him that most of the questions I have heard the hon. member put in the House are serious questions. I certainly understand his concern with regard to Shearwater and Greenwood. I would, however, like to try to correct a couple of misrepresentations of fact he made which I am sure he did not make intentionally. Certainly the Premier of Nova Scotia did not have to force out of my minister a statement concerning the future status of Greenwood.

Mr. Forrestall: Read the Halifax Herald.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I did read the Halifax Herald, but that is not necessarily the most credible voice in the country either. The situation of course is that the minister is endeavouring to use the budget of the department as wisely and efficiently as he possibly can. It is a well known fact that the armed forces have a very large overhead, so to speak, or infrastructure.

I must take issue with the hon. member's contention that it is the intention of our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to reduce our armed forces to a paramilitary force. That, of course, is patent nonsense. We have undoubtedly the most professional armed forces in the world today. We have one of the most efficient forces in the world. The fact is that the minister has asked within his department for a review of the infrastructure of the armed forces. He now has the report of the group that carried out the study. He is working on it at the present time. It has not been presented to cabinet and therefore no decisions have been made with regard to the closure of any base, the phase out or the reduction of any base to this date. There may well be some.

The hon. member's statement that seven or eight bases would be closed is probably a gross exaggeration. The statement that 7,000 or 8,000 employees would lose their jobs is also probably an exaggeration. The hon. member also suggested that an interdepartmental committee be established to look into the economic and social effects of this kind of government action on the communities involved. I want to tell the hon. member that such a committee exists. It was set up in the fall of 1974 or the spring of 1975, at my request to the Prime Minister after the closing of a military base in my constituency was announced.

In summary let me say that no decision has been made to close, reduce, or alter any base in the country. The minister has made no recommendations to cabinet to date, and therefore no decision can be made until cabinet considers the minister's recommendation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:17 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 12, 1976

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Proceedings under Standing Order 43. Before we proceed with the oral question period, may I say that hon. members probably are aware that I have received a notification from the Minister of Justice of his intention and desire to table a letter that I think has been referred to previously. In addition, in respect thereto I have received notices of intention by three ministers to raise a question of privilege. In all four instances there is an indication, with the letter that has come to the Chair, that because of the importance of the subject matter it would likely be in the best interests of relevant proceedings that these events take place prior to the question period. Of course, that would set aside the procedure which we have followed since last Easter.

May I first, therefore, indicate that I think it would be the desire of the House to accommodate that point of view in order to make for a more relevant question period. It would seem that the question period, if it were concerned with these events, would become somewhat of an anti-climax.

Therefore may I ask, before considering that request, whether or not the House gives its unanimous consent to allow the tabling of the document by the Minister of Justice and the proposed questions of privilege by these three ministers.

May I say to the House, before asking the House for its consent, however, that rather than attempt to follow each proposed question of privilege with a discussion by the House in respect of the question of privilege on its merits, it would seem to me that a more orderly procedure would be to take all three statements in respect of the notices of privilege given by the ministers, and then the Chair would have to decide, in order to accommodate the opposition in respect of the right it might ordinarily enjoy in those circumstances, either on a question of privilege or whatever content may develop, whether the Chair ought to extend its discretion at least in a question period which would run until, in my opinion, the matter had been thoroughly explored.

● (1110)

Possibly, depending upon the content of the declarations made by the minister in respect of the proposed questions of privilege, all the declarations might be followed by a statement by one spokesman for each party. But that is a decision which will have to be made only after the House has heard the content of the statements. If the House is agreed on that general procedure, may I ask that hon. members give their unanimous consent to proceeding in that manner. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TABLING OF REPORT OF CHIEF JUSTICE DESCHÊNES AND STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the unanimous consent just given, I wish to seek leave of the House to table, in both official languages, a letter from me to the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec dated March 4, 1976, and the reply from the Chief Justice of the Superior Court to me in its original form, dated March 10. I will make available, if I may table in the same motion in a few moments, two additional texts of the same letter, one in the English language and one in the French language in that the original letter of the Chief Justice is in both languages. I would ask that these two letters be appended to today's Hansard, if that is the wish of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing one of the ministers, may I ask whether copies of the correspondence have been made available to opposition parties.

Mr. Clark: Just now, Mr. Speaker.

[Editor's Note: For correspondence referred to, see Appendices "A" and "B".]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I first want to tell the House that this morning the Globe and Mail published an article containing an apology.

[English]

The Globe and Mail regrets any embarrassment caused to Mr. Chrétien by publication of the allegations made by Mr. Justice Mackay.

[Translation]

I thank the Globe and Mail for publishing that retraction.

Mr. Speaker, last week I tabled in the House a letter I sent to the right hon. Prime Minister in which I established the facts. Later the House also allowed me to table a letter from Mr. Justice Mackay in which he withdrew his previous statements. This morning I would like to complete the record by reading to the House a letter I am sending immediately to Mr. Justice Aronovitch, which reads as follows:

[English]

Dear Mr. Justice Aronovitch:

Needless to say, I was very upset when I heard last week of the allegations to be published in the Globe and Mail that I had once interfered improperly in a case before you.

I am writing to express my appreciation to you for having acted quickly last week. As you know, once the facts were made known, the allegations about me were withdrawn by Mr. Justice Mackay.

When I called you originally, I did so as a member of parliament on behalf of the unemployed of my constituency. In your report to Chief Justice Deschênes of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, you recognize this fact, and I am pleased that you "did not consider it to be interference or intervention calling for formal protest". On the other hand, you did not consider my call to be "proper practice"; and therefore I regret any embarrassment this episode might have caused you.

Sincerely yours,

Jean Chrétien.

I did explain myself in the House last Wednesday. If I annoyed Mr. Justice Aronovitch, I am sorry. As the member of parliament for the riding of Saint-Maurice who was confronted with a very difficult situation, and because I acted in good faith, I am sorry if I annoyed Mr. Aronovitch, but I did that for the purpose I explained to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have read Mr. Justice Mackay's report to Chief Justice Deschênes on the circumstances of my visit to him, on March 8, 1970. I should like to make one or two observations.

First, I did not tell the judge that a telegram had been received by the Prime Minister from Prime Minister Williams, but that the Department of External Affairs had received a telegram from the Canadian High Commissioner, on Friday, March 6, transmitting a request from Prime Minister Williams that he be informed when the verdict could be expected. The Prime Minister of Trinidad stated that he made this request in view of his grave concern that riots and bloodshed would break out at that time.

Second, during my visit to Mr. Justice Mackay, I repeated to him the information available to us about the situation in Trinidad. I informed him of the request by Prime Minister Williams. In the course of our conversation, I also indicated to him that our High Commissioner had reported that the Governor General of Trinidad had called him to his office to inform him that he was most seriously worried about the situation. The Governor General of Trinidad expressed the hope that tempers would have time to cool down before the verdict.

Third my visit followed urgent representations made to the Prime Minister's Office by the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, late on Friday, March 6, informing us of those facts and requesting our assistance in order to determine the time at which the trial would be concluded. The Prime Minister was then on an official visit in the Arctic and was in the region of Igloolik and Spence Bay.

Fourth, my visit had no other purpose than to determine the approximate time when a verdict would be rendered and I deeply regret that Mr. Justice Mackay may have interpreted my visit as aiming to delay the conclusion of the trial. I wish to state, without any reservation, that such was not my intention.

Fifth, I sincerely regret any embarrassment I may have caused Mr. Justice Mackay.

Sixth, I am grateful to Mr. Justice Mackay for stating his view that my visit "was clearly inspired by (a) great concern for the nation's interests and not by personal reasons".

[English]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Drury: —I stated in the House on March 3 that in the matter of my communicating with the Associate Chief Justice of the Superior Court in Montreal I did not attempt to influence the decision. I have read the report by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec to the Minister of Justice, and in particular Mr. Justice Hugessen's account of this event. I was pleased to note that the Associate Chief Justice expressed the view that he did not think I, and I quote, "was attempting to influence his judgment."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Drury: I have long respected and endeavoured to the best of my ability to protect the independence of the judiciary, and with the remarks of the Chief Justice on the necessity of this I am also in full agreement. I very much regret taking the action which I did and which the Associate Chief Justice has characterized as improper, and for this I sincerely and deeply apologize to all those affected.

I have, accordingly, tendered to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) my resignation from the ministry.

Mr. Speaker: Having indicated earlier that some decision would have to be made as to whether opposition comments should be made before the question period begins, I might first of all say that in order to keep things in an orderly proceeding, three notices of privilege were received by the Chair and the three ministers involved, or hon. members involved, who gave the Chair notice of the intention to raise a question of privilege have done so.

● (1120)

It would have to be without any further discussion that the Chair ought to find that there is no prima facie question of privilege that ought to be put, under that heading, to a decision of the House. However, I think it might be appropriate that each of the opposition parties be now given an opportunity to make a brief comment on those three questions of privilege before we proceed. The hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my comments in response to the three questions of privilege just raised will be brief. I want to begin by making it clear that as far as members of my party are concerned, we believe that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) has taken an honourable course in offering his resignation from the cabinet. I think there can be no cause in this House or anywhere else in the country for any pleasure at that decision. I think all of us recognize that the action he has taken is entirely consistent with the very high standard of public service and dedication to public service which have marked his distinguished career in Canada through the years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My colleagues and I, and, I am sure, the whole House, are pleased to have now received the apology of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) relative to his involvement in this matter, and the expression of regret of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) relative to actions in which he was involved prior to his election to the House and during the period when he was on the staff of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau).

I think that without expanding upon the comment any further, it is entirely appropriate for us to say that the events here today indicate the very clear need to establish firm, unequivocal standards relative to the absolute independence of the judiciary in Canada and absolute restraint from any kind of involvement or intervention by ministers of the Crown with any court anywhere in the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I should also say that we remain interested in determining the exact nature of the involvement in any of these events of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), and we intend over the next days in this parliament to follow every course we can to ensure there is placed upon the full public record an indication of any activities by that minister which were involved in this affair.

I want to deal very quickly with the report of Chief Justice Deschênes, which I appreciate having. I have to say, however, without wanting to enter a serious complaint, that I regret this was made available to me and to representatives of other parties only moments before proceedings began in this House of Commons. I think there are some matters of particular import in that report which I should like to put on the record of the House of Commons. I should like particularly to quote from the report of Chief Justice Deschênes, page 4 of the English version, as follows:

> I was not appointed to conduct a commission of inquiry and of course it is obviously not one of my functions to set myself up as a semi-official investigator on behalf of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: That is an entirely appropriate position by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec. In my view, it served to underline the point that has been made frequently in this House, that it is not sufficient to limit an inquiry into this question which involves the conduct of ministers and the propriety of that conduct to a judge of the Supreme Court of Quebec. That inquiry is not one for the Superior Court of Quebec but is, rather, one for the highest court in this land, the Parliament of Canada.

We expect, and we will certainly request, that there be now established a full public inquiry whose terms of reference will be determined not simply by the government but also by representatives of other parties in this parliament. It will be a public inquiry to look into all aspects of this case which has led to the regrettable resignation of the Minister of Public Works and statements of apology and regret by other ministers of the Crown.

I want to bring to the attention of the House the concluding paragraph in the report of Chief Justice Deschênes in which he explicitly requested that the report be made public. He said:

> Indeed I would see some advantage in doing so, so that the public may be reassured of the integrity of the judiciary, in view of the negative results of the approaches of which my colleagues were the object.

I draw to the attention of the House that Chief Justice Deschênes referred to "approaches," in the plural, and was concerned that more than one approach of the three under this consideration raised questions relative to the reputation and integrity of the courts of Canada.

Sir, I will not go on further. I repeat, on behalf of my party and, I think, all members of the House, our appreciation of the action that has been taken by the Minister of Public Works.

An hon. Member: And your pleasure.

Mr. Clark: It is not at all our pleasure. We think it is a matter of great regret that events should have forced a man of his reputation and deserved respect in the land to come to this point.

We of the official opposition are not satisfied that the matter has ended here. The report of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court indicates that he recognizes that he was to undertake a limited inquiry. The report also indicates that actions were undertaken by ministers of the Crown which put in jeopardy the independence of the courts of Canada. We in this parliament want to know what kinds of conversations led to these interventions. We in this parliament want to know what kind of standard will be established in future to ensure that this kind of attack, this kind of intervention which may affect the integrity of our courts, will not recur. We intend to insist with all our vigour upon a full and open public inquiry into all the aspects, including the participation of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, concerning the events which led to the statements of privilege which we heard today.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I begin by congratulating the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) for taking an honourable position in the matter, one which is in the highest traditions of parliamentary democracy as practised in our country and abroad.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The minister in question, after a distinguished career in the service of the people of Canada, recognizes the distinction to be made between matters of a strictly legal nature and those involving a minister's moral responsibility. That distinction is evident, but unstated, throughout the report submitted by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec. The Chief Justice recognized the limited nature of his inquiry and saw, as I understand from a brief reading of the report, that he has one set of responsibilities and ministers of the Crown, including particularly the Prime Minister, have a different set of responsibilities.

● (1130)

In my view, the Minister of Public Works drew the full, logical and traditional conclusion from the facts as presented in the Chief Justice's report and submitted his resignation to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I note that the Chief Justice said in the report that Mr. Justice Hugessen does not consider himself to have been influenced by the intervention of the Minister of Public Works. That having been said, the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec said!

I have little doubt that the facts related by Mr. Justice Hugessen are grave, considering the stature of the person making the call and the circumstances in which the call was made to him.

In other words, he is saying—not directly but implying it and leaving it to our wisdom—that we, as politicians, and ministers of the Crown should make the correct inference that such behaviour by a politician or a minister of the Crown is inappropriate. I repeat, in commendation of the minister, that he has taken the honourable course in submitting his resignation.

I want to say, also, that we accept the conclusion in the report concerning the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien). We have some reservations about the position taken by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) in which the principal element of moderating circumstances is that his intervention, which is also a grave one, took place some six years ago. I think the minister is required to explain earlier statements in which it was said by him, if I recall correctly, that he was simply trying to ascertain the date of commencement of the proceedings. That is flatly contradicted in this report that we have today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The serious implication in the report of the Chief Justice and the course of action taken by the Minister of Public Works in relation thereto flatly contradicts the whole line of argument made by the Prime Minister of Canada during the past ten days.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I say this most seriously, because my party is maintaining a call for the need of a public inquiry into this situation in order to get firmly established, publicly-known general principles about the division of responsibility between the executive branch of government and the judicial branch. The line of reasoning of the Prime Minister during the past ten days has been that no interference or no involvement by a minister of the Crown can be deemed to be inappropriate unless it has been perceived to have been such by the judges involved. That has been his consistent case. I submit, in that case, that he has been consistently wrong, and the evidence for it is the resignation of the Minister of Public Works.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Broadbent: The report of the Chief Justice, including the quotation from Mr. Justice Hugessen, states that he did not perceive an interference to have taken place. The wording is:

—I did not think that he was attempting to influence my judgment.

However, the conclusion drawn by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, and by the minister himself, is that the kind of action he did take, even if it did not influence the final outcome of the judge, was inappropriate action—and the minister resigned on that basis. I submit that the logic of the minister's course of action is that the Prime Minister's position for the past ten days has been incorrect and that there is a certain line of behaviour that is inappropriate for a minister to take, whether or not a judge on the case reports that he has been influenced. To push the Prime Minister's argument to its logical conclusion, to the point of absurdity—and I do so because it is a grave point the Prime Minister has made and this is why we want a public inquiry—is to say that if a judge of the courts of Canada accepts a bribe, he is not likely to say he has been interfered with. Does that mean that no wrong has been done?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The point at issue is not the subjective interpretation of members of the Bench of Canada, but what is or is not appropriate behaviour by ministers of the Crown. That is the issue, and that is the issue the Prime Minister has refused to recognize. I conclude by saying we will continue to insist upon a public inquiry into the broader aspects of this question. We will have particular questions for other ministers, notably the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet).

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I think the event which concerns us this morning must be a landmark in the judicial history of our country. And I hope that after all the events of the last few days, today's discussions and actions will result in a warranty of the integrity of our judicial system all over Canada.

This morning, we heard excuses from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and also from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) and we consider that these statements are made by responsible people, and I hope they did not go further than they said in their excuses.

This morning, we accept, not lightheartedly, the resignation of a minister. He is one of the ministers I admired most in the House for his honesty and integrity. This probably shows that we the people—I want to be the people's voice—see that the function of minister is not always a sinecure, that this function brings some responsibilities. Above all, the ministers being surrounded as they are by people who constantly clamour for more, I can understand that they, or hon. members, might be tempted to try and give more help to those around them who exert pressures ceaselessly. That is how I see the work the minister did with the judge, and I congratulate him for his action this morning; it is a guarantee for Canada that, among parliamentarians, there are still people who can recognize that they may have gone too far, who can go back and bow before the requirements of public interest.

I do not wish to blame anyone this morning but I do blame our judicial system. That is where the evil lies. As long as it is not reformed, as long as appointments are political in nature, more specifically those of judges, they as well as ministers will at times be forced to act as some ministers are being accused of having done this morning.

I will say no more. But I do hope sincerely that the Judges Act will be amended in such a way that a judicial reform will be undertaken so that, at long last, we will have independent judges in a judicial system that is free of all political influence. In politics, there are games, and ministers do make promises as everyone does in times of elections—promises that are never lived up to—but the judiciary should never be mixed up with politics. In closing, I express the wish that a bill will be introduced to free judges from political influence.

● (1140)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have now heard comments from representatives of all parties in the House. I would think the decision as to the length of the question period ought to rest with the Chair. It will be determined, basically, by a consideration of whether, in terms of our Standing Orders, opposition members have a reasonable opportunity of exploring these issues without giving rise to a further question period today. In any event, the subject will not be fully dealt with today. I feel I ought to exercise discretion in determining the length of the question period, while giving hon. members a reasonable opportunity to put questions to the ministers concerned with these problems and other problems today.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY AND CODE GOVERNING CONDUCT OF MINISTERS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Since the report of Chief Justice Deschênes emphasizes that his inquiry was limited to the question whether the court was aggrieved and could not consider the question of the conduct of ministers, will the right hon. gentleman now meet with representatives of other parties in this parliament to determine the terms of reference of a full public inquiry into all aspects of this matter, including the conduct of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the standards which will be established with regard to the future conduct of ministers in their relations with the courts of the land?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As to the question of standards, I feel it will be my duty now to make a statement on that aspect and I intend to do so later in the day if the House gives me an opportunity. I wanted to hear the remarks of the leaders of the different parties on that matter and reflect on them, then speak later in the day if I have permission. I would suggest four o'clock, Mr. Speaker. On that occasion I would expect the opposition parties to agree or disagree with the standards I propose to initiate, and then we can consider further if consultation or inquiries are needed at this point. I do not, for my part, see at this time that an inquiry would be helpful in setting standards. It might be that the opposition would wish to have an inquiry for other purposes. I will reflect on that.

Mr. Clark: I would say, just in passing, that if the Prime Minister intends to take time to prepare his code of standards for his ministers I hope he will give representatives of opposition parties equal time in which to consider that newly developed code to which we shall be expected to respond.

I take it that the Prime Minister is not at this stage ruling out the possibility of a full public inquiry. I would ask him whether, if he is given the permission of the House to make a statement this afternoon, he intends to say that a full public inquiry will be held, not simply—though including this purpose—an inquiry for the purpose of establishing future standards but also for the purpose of determining precisely what went on prior to the call by the Minister of Public Works to Mr. Justice Hugessen and other matters referred to in the report submitted by Mr. Justice Deschênes, including any conduct by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which is germane to the subject. Will he give us a firm answer today relative to this question concerning a full public inquiry into these areas of past conduct which have not been investigated and about which the parliament and public of Canada have a right to be informed?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Clark: I understand the Prime Minister said, yes. He is nodding agreement. I wish to refer to page 11613 of Hansard at which the Prime Minister is reported to have said: "I listened to their version and feel that their explanations indicated clearly that they were not attempting to influence in any way the judgment of the courts." That indicates the conclusion of the Prime Minister on the basis of what he refers to as the version offered to him by his colleagues. Will the Prime Minister tell us, either immediately or later today, all the details of any information on this whole matter conveyed to the Prime Minister by the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or any other minister?

Mr. Trudeau: I am glad the Leader of the Opposition referred to my statement in the House because I think it was the most relevant issue to be determined. I think we have it clearly now from Chief Justice Deschênes and the court that there was no attempt to influence any judgment in a case which was before the court.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: This is stated quite clearly and unequivocally. What does remain is what some hon. members have referred to—the appearance, and the fact the judges feel this was not proper. The lack of propriety, I repeat, had nothing to do with any criminal action or any action improper in the sense that it was an attempt to influence a judgment. But it is the appearance of ministers phoning judges which is found improper by the judges, and it is this matter on which I shall have to state some code of ethics.

Mr. Clark: Do I understand, then, that the Prime Minister, if he is contemplating a public inquiry, intends to limit any such inquiry to the narrow question of the appearance of impropriety on the part of his ministers? What the House wants and what I am asking for now is a full public inquiry into all aspects of this case, including any conversations between the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister of Public Works or any other minister relative to questions brought before the courts of Canada.

● (1150)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand what the Leader of the Opposition wants, and it was in order to hear his remarks and those of other leaders that I waited before saying I would make my statement later today. I will then say if I believe an inquiry is warranted and, if not, what other measures I propose to take.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER HAS UPDATED THE PEARSON CODE OF ETHICS FOR MINISTERS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Prime Minister. The late Prime Minister Pearson, on November 30, 1964, by letter outlined a very admirable code of ethics for ministers of the Crown and employees of government. Has the Prime Minister ever taken any action up to this point to update or make formal these guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that statement was referred to at considerable length when we tabled in this House the rules relating to conflict of interest in the case of ministers, officials, members of the civil service and other sectors of the Public Service. We did not at that time consider the question of the relationship between the ministry and the judges.

KNOWLEDGE OF PRIME MINISTER OF REQUEST BY CONSUMER MINISTER FOR A MINISTER TO APPROACH JUDGE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): May I thank the Prime Minister for his answer and ask him a more specific question. To his knowledge did the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs at any time—I repeat, to the knowledge of the Prime Minister—request or even suggest any intervention or approach by a cabinet minister or anybody else directly to a judge?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister did not make any such request of me; I do not know that he made any request of any other minister. I repeat that the case was discussed with me by the minister, and no doubt with other ministers, just as I am sure the hon. member for Central Nova would discuss with some of his colleagues the matter of Sky Shops which he has pursued. I suspect that the hon. member would expect conversations with his colleagues, whether in or out of the House, not to be revealed unless ordered to be revealed by an order of the court.

KNOWLEDGE OF PRIME MINISTER OF APPROACHES TO JUDGES BY MEMBERS OF HIS STAFF

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Keeping in mind the apparently activist role played by the present Minister of National Health and Welfare when he was principal secretary to the Prime Minister, can the Prime Minister say whether to his knowledge any of the successors to the present Minister of National Health and Welfare in the office which he once held contacted judges for any reason?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Certainly not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY WHETHER CONSUMER MINISTER REQUESTED MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS TO INTERVENE WITH JUDGE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to indicate my party's agreement with the Prime Minister's suggestion that he make a statement at four o'clock on the issue of the public inquiry, and whether or not he plans to go ahead with the public inquiry. I wish simply to reassert our own strong plea that such is desirable.

Putting that to one side, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs a question. Following the decision of the Minister of Public Works to resign as a result of action that he took subsequent to a conversation with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I should like now to ask the minister whether he would show the same sense of propriety in telling the House the nature of the conversation that he had with the Minister of Public Works, and specifically did he in any way request that the Minister of Public Works intervene with the judge on his behalf?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all hon. members know that my case is on appeal. Therefore I have nothing to add at this time to what I already said to the House in that respect.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: There is no such tradition, Mr. Speaker, in the House of Commons of Canada or of Great Britain for that kind of position. If it is not improper to pass judgment on a judge, I consider that this has been a very sound approach taken by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec in separating his comments on judicial matters from those on political matters. I should now like to ask the minister to do the same thing and assume his political responsibilities. Is he saying that until the judicial proceedings and difficulties in which he is involved outside this House are concluded, he will not make any statement in the House concerning his political responsibilities, particularly following the resignation of one of his colleagues?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member approaches the issue not as a lawyer who respects the rights of a defendant before the court, but as a simple political maneuverer.

[English]

ACCEPTANCE BY PRIME MINISTER OF DIFFERENCE BETWEEN RESPONSIBILITIES OF MINISTERS TOWARDS JUDICIARY AND TOWARDS PARLIAMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put my final supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister accept the distinction made in the report submitted by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec, namely that the responsibilities of ministers vis-à-vis the judiciary are different responsibilities from ministers of the Crown? If so, would the Prime Minister tell the House whether he thinks it is a responsibility of his ministers to answer questions in the House at this stage, following a report on this important matter concerning their political responsibilities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do accept the distinction. Three ministers stood up in the House this morning to make a statement and they indicated that they did see that distinction. The question of a conversation between ministers, or indeed between any two ministers or members of this House or for that matter members of the public, relating to advice that one is seeking from the other is, by its very nature, something that people do not reveal unless there is some order to reveal it. A conversation between any gentlemen talking together, one asking another about advice on a difficult matter—

Mr. Broadbent: But was it advice? That is the question.

Mr. Trudeau: —or about a case before the courts, of for that matter any financial problem that one of them is having, I would not expect to be revealed. It is not a question of judicial privilege but of gentlemanly conduct, and I am sure it would apply to members on the other side of the House as well.

I think the issue is as stated earlier by the Leader of the Opposition and by me last week, namely: Was there an attempt to influence the judiciary? We have the judiciary's opinion on that and the answer is negative. There was, in their words, improper conduct and that gives rise to an appearance that is not good and on which I intend to make a statement later today. But what two gentlemen or ladies state to each other, whether under their oath as Privy Councillors or without that oath and simply as members of the House, to me is not a proper matter for inquiry. I do not say that privilege is absolute. I admit it could be dispensed with by order of the court in some criminal proceeding. But I do not think it is relevant to this line of inquiry.

Mr. Broadbent: May I put a further supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. While accepting his general point about privacy of conversations, do we not have a very important exception to that general rule now? The Prime Minister presumably having accepted the resignation of the Minister of Public Works, does he not think it very germane to the case whether or not the Minister of Public Works was requested by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—I am not talking about seeking advice but requesting him—to intervene in this case?

● (1200)

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a matter for the two gentleman to discuss between themselves.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, in the conversations I had I have no knowledge of wrongdoing of any kind or any attempt to influence indirectly. I do know of conversations between two members of my cabinet. Unless I have cause to believe there was something illegal or improper about those conversations I think that ends the matter.

POSSIBILITY PRIME MINISTER WOULD REQUEST CONSUMER MINISTER TO RESIGN IN VIEW OF ALLEGED REQUEST TO APPROACH JUDGE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister who obviously must assume, in respect of the conduct of his cabinet, the same role and responsibility the associate Chief Justice of Quebec had to accept with regard to the conduct of the judges in his jurisdiction. I would therefore ask the Prime Minister, bearing in mind that the Chief Justice of Quebec has ruled that the conduct of the three ministers was in fact improper, and bearing in mind the fact that the Minister of Public Works only approached the Associate Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec after a conversation with his colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, whether it is the intention of the Prime Minister to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to submit his resignation in light of his improper conduct.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must disagree with the premise stated by the hon. gentleman. It is certainly very misleading. The Chief Justice did not use the word "improper" as regards the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the President of the Treasury Board. In one case, the case of a now minister, he said it was unusual, "insolite," and in the case of the President of the Treasury Board he said he considered the matter closed.

INQUIRY WHETHER CONSUMER MINISTER REQUESTED A MEMBER OF CABINET TO APPROACH JUDGE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whose petulant and irresponsible outburst touched off this whole unhappy affair in the first instance. I should like to ask the minister, bearing in mind that Your Honour will have the responsibility to rule whether or not this is sub judicie, whether during the course of the conversation the minister had with the Minister of Public Works he had requested the Minister of Public Works or any other of his cabinet colleagues to intervene with the Superior Court of Quebec on his behalf.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to recall to the hon. member that the statements I made before Christmas were from a Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs defending the Canadian consumers, and he was deeply disappointed by the judgment rendered in the sugar case. As to the remainder of the question, I have no other comments.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs if during the course of his conversation with the Prime Minister he had in fact informed the Prime Minister that he had requested the Minister of Public Works to intervene on his behalf.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—POSSIBILITY CROWN AND DEFENCE NOTIFIED OF VISIT TO JUDGE BY MR. LALONDE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Were the Crown, and most especially the defence, notified of the extraordinary visit to Mr. Justice Mackay.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Moncton.

PRIME MINISTER'S VIEW ON PROTECTION OF JUDICIARY FROM INTERVENTION BY MINISTERS

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The report of the Chief Justice on page two reads in part:

> More particularly, it—

Meaning the judiciary.

> —must remain protected from interventions from members of the cabinet, whatever may be the quality of the intentions that inspire them.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask whether this statement conforms with the present view of the Prime Minister or his previous view, and will it be considered in his preparation of a so-called code of ethics for cabinet members?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is the matter to which I will address myself this afternoon.

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF BILL C-2 TO SUPREME COURT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Inasmuch as the minister has asked the Supreme Court to give an opinion on the constitutionality of the anti-inflation legislation, is the minister now considering, or will he consider, referring Bill C-2 dealing with amendments to the Combines Investigation Act to the Supreme Court of Canada as a very detailed study which was done on the constitutional aspects of Bill C-2 for the C. D. Howe Research Institute by a very senior legal counsel, who is now an Ontario Supreme Court judge, raised serious doubts about this legislation.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker; it is not the intention to refer Bill C-2 to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs was overruled in respect of the hearing of witnesses on the constitutional aspects of Bill C-2, and inasmuch as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs refused to table the legal opinion of the Department of Justice on this aspect of Bill C-2, and inasmuch as our amendment for reference to the Supreme Court was turned aside, will the minister examine the matter in depth before we find this legislation tied up in lower court litigation.

Mr. Basford: Obviously and naturally, those questions were examined very carefully indeed in preparation of the legislation.

KNOWLEDGE OF CONSUMER MINISTER OF POSSIBILITY MR. DRURY WOULD APPROACH JUDGE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Accepting for the moment his proposition that he cannot tell the House about the communications he had, I wish to ask him a question. Did he have evidence that the former minister of public works was going to communicate with the judge who was dealing with the contempt proceedings and if he did know this did he, as a lawyer and one concerned with this matter, suggest that he should not approach the judge?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a repetition of questions which have already been put to me indirectly and I do not see why I should answer them now.

Some hon. Members: That's not true!

[English]

Mr. Brewin: Perhaps I did not put the question as clearly as I should have to the minister. I will put it again.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question has now been put and the suggestion has been put forward that it is a repetition. I have listened carefully. I do not think it is repetition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: But I certainly do not want to invite the hon. member to now repeat it because if he is about to do what he said it will be a repetition.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I will not repeat it. I will just ask the minister to answer a question which Mr. Speaker said is relevant.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Toronto Davenport.

* * *

THE MINISTRY

REQUEST THAT RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS BE NOT ACCEPTED

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister give consideration, as the majority of the members of this House hope he would, to not accepting the resignation offered by the Minister of Public Works.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We will accept an exchange.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That is a matter to which I am giving consideration, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RECOMMENDATIONS OF MINISTER FOLLOWING RECEIPT OF CHIEF JUSTICE DESCHÊNES' REPORT

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. On March 9, as recorded at page 11613 of Hansard, the minister indicated that once he received the report of Chief Justice Deschenes he would then be making recommendations on the basis of that report. I wonder if the minister could tell us what his recommendations are now that he has received the report?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Well, Mr. Speaker, I think, as the Chief Justice points out, my duty is to see that the administration of public affairs is in accordance with the law. Accordingly, I have had the letter of the Chief Justice reviewed by the law officers of the Crown to determine whether it discloses any conduct constituting a wilful intent to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice within the meaning of the Criminal Code or is conduct interfering with the course of justice amounting in law to contempt. I am advised there is nothing disclosed in the letter of the Chief Justice which dictates further action by me in accordance with my duties under the law and I have so advised the Prime Minister. However, I also have responsibilities with regard to the independence of the judiciary. In this respect, the Chief Justice does say:

> It is of the utmost importance that this independence of the judiciary, achieved through great effort during the course of the last three centuries, be jealously guarded against all attacks.

● (1210)

> More particularly, it must remain protected from interventions by members of the cabinet, whatever may be the quality of the intentions that inspire them.

He also added, and I add that—> —in the light of recent events, that it must also be protected from interventions from parliament.

That is a statement which I, as Minister of Justice, in terms of protecting the judiciary fully support and concur with. In line with that, I have been conferring with the Prime Minister with regard to the statement he will be making in due course.

KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE OF ATTEMPTS TO INFLUENCE JUDGES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Because this whole matter would never have even seen the light of day if we had not had a disgruntled lawyer in Montreal asking for his fees to be paid—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: —I wonder if the Minister of Justice, either himself or through his ministry, knows of any other attempt by ministers of the Crown, or anyone else for that matter, to speak to members of the judiciary when they have been seized of a case with the very obvious attempt to at least influence the judge if not the judgment.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): The answer to that is no. I made it clear in the House the other day that in the course of my duties I have had occasion, since I have been minister, to confer with chief justices on a regular basis about a whole range of proper matters, and at no time since I have been Minister of Justice has any of them indicated to me their awareness of any improper approaches to them by ministers. Last week the deputy attorney general of Canada was out of the country, and I checked with him via long distance to ask him whether during his conversations with judges in the course of duty any such complaint had been made to him, and the answer was no.

Mr. Lawrence: Could the Minister of Justice then please ascertain and report back to the House whether any complaint of a similar nature has ever been made to the Canadian Judicial Council.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, as the chief justice properly stated in his letter, that would not be a matter before the Canadian Judicial Council. The Canadian Judicial Council is in that regard not seized with the conduct of ministers, it is seized with the conduct of judges. Therefore, I am not sure that it is even appropriate for me to ask the Canadian Judicial Council the question put to me by the hon. member.

Oral Questions

POSSIBLE REVISION OF CODE OF ETHICS FOR MINISTERS DEALING WITH JUDICIARY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that the letter from the chief justice indicates that the three judges concerned—and this is either said expressly or by very strong implication—who were approached were concerned or disturbed by the nature of the communication made to them and the character of the person who made it to them, has the Prime Minister now revised the standards of conduct of ministers in dealing with the judiciary?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Prime Minister has already indicated—we might now usefully for the benefit of members formalize this—his intention to return to the House at the suggested hour of 4 p.m. for the purpose of making a statement. If that is a definite undertaking, it would affect the question put by the hon. member for Peace River. Perhaps we might clarify that to see whether the order is now being sought. If so, will the House give its consent that later this day, specifically at 4 p.m. to revert to statements by ministers for the purpose of receiving a statement by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the subject standards formerly outlined?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Clark: I would simply like to say that while we are very much in agreement with that procedure, I should like to repeat my request, on behalf of all parties I think, that we receive a copy of the Prime Minister's statement well in advance of its delivery in the House.

Mr. Trudeau: As soon as it is ready I will send a copy to all hon. members, but I cannot promise it will be ready much before 4 o'clock. I realize the inconvenience of the weekend and that is why I am making it as late as possible before the weekend, but I will certainly do my best. If hon. members do not want to hear it, they can wait until Monday or they can read it in the press meanwhile.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I will do my best. If the opposition wants to take more time, I think we on this side would certainly agree to them making their response to my statement on Monday. We would have no objection to that. I do not want to catch them by surprise and I realize that the approaching weekend is causing difficulty.

Mr. Stanfield: Don't be so unfair.

Mr. Broadbent: As I said earlier, I would agree with the procedure, but I should like to get one point understood by the Prime Minister. I understand him to wish to make a general statement at 4 o'clock not, for example, to announce at that time the formation of a public inquiry, because if he does that it would mean that he alone would presumably determine, without some consultation with others in the House, what the terms of reference should be. So, I should like to have the undertaking of the Prime Minister that he would just be announcing the general intention at that time.

[Mr. Basford.]

Mr. Speaker: I think that either we give consent to the order that the House will revert to statements at that time or we do not. If we begin to attach conditions to it, there could be as many conditions as there are members. Indeed, under our Standing Order—the provisional orders under which we have been operating since Easter—there is a certain discretion as to what follows statements. After the Prime Minister has made his statement it is left to the discretion of the Chair to limit the time for further questions. Those decisions can only be made after the content of the statements is known. The order has now been made that the House will revert to statements at 4 p.m.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—BASIS ON WHICH PRIME MINISTER DECIDED MINISTERS' EXPLANATIONS SATISFACTORY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): My supplementay question is for the Prime Minister and it refers to his statement on page 11660 of Hansard in which he said:

> Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the House that I had raised this matter with the ministers and that they had given me an answer which I found satisfactory.

I wonder if the Prime Minister would now be prepared to tell the House, given the report of Mr. Justice Deschenes which includes such words as "gravely disturbed" and "improper", on what basis he considered these answers from the ministers satisfactory?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the same basis as the judges themselves, who made it quite clear that there was no attempt to influence the course of justice. The question of propriety is another one, and that is the one that I intend to speak about this afternoon.

Miss MacDonald: Would the Prime Minister be prepared to expand on that explanation this afternoon at 4 o'clock and undertake to tell the House what he found satisfactory about the discussions he had with his cabinet ministers?

Mr. Trudeau: I will expand on it right now and I will repeat what I just said, that in my judgment, which is now confirmed by the three judges who were spoken to, and in their judgment there was no attempt to do anything which would be either illegal or considered to be contempt of court or which would in any way attempt to influence their judgment.

● (1220)

Miss MacDonald: That isn't satisfactory.

Mr. Trudeau: That is satisfactory to the issue that I raised with them. The question of appearance is another one.

Mr. Clark: The question of propriety is another.

Mr. Trudeau: The question of propriety is another, which is very much the same as the question of appearances.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: This is my thinking, and members of the opposition will have a chance to disagree if they wish this afternoon.

KNOWLEDGE OF CONSUMER MINISTER OF POSSIBILITY MR. DRURY WOULD APPROACH JUDGE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. If my question sounds a bit like the question asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood, I hope Your Honour will extend me a bit of latitude. I should just like to be sure the minister understands the question we are trying to put to him.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Public Works has now resigned because of something he did for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, can the minister tell us whether he knew what his colleague was going to do and whether he made any effort to persuade him not to do it?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member who is asking me if I have anything to say, I have already indicated to the House that I would not make any comments since my case is before the Court of Appeal.

[English]

REQUEST PRIME MINISTER STATE CRITERIA FOR PROPER INTERVENTIONS BY MINISTERS WITH JUDICIARY

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister, and it follows on some comments made by the Prime Minister on March 4 as recorded in Hansard when he stated that it is possible that Justice Mackay found it to be an improper intervention. If so, it was surprising to the Prime Minister, to say the least. The implication was that there might be some intervention the Prime Minister assumes proper. That implication was also in yesterday's question period, and I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he will take the opportunity at four o'clock to state whether he does consider some interventions proper, and if so, for those which he may consider proper, what would be the criteria of a proper intervention to a court?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not like to interfere with the right to ask questions, but that is precisely what the Prime Minister indicated would be the nature of a statement this afternoon. I just do not want to duplicate questions unnecessarily.

* * *

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON LOSS OF PATROL VESSEL "CAPE FREELS"

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. I wonder if the minister has heard a report on the loss of the Cape Freels fishing patrol vessel, and if he has, would he advise the House whether the life boat has been located?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have had a report on the fire on board the Cape Freels, its sighting, apparently with no one on board, and the absence from it of a life craft large enough to hold the persons who were on board. There has been no report yet of a sighting of that craft. There are some vessels en route, including three coastguard and a number of foreign vessels, one of which is a German vessel which may be the first to reach the vessel which is on fire.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of National Defence. I wonder if the minister has that report, and has he taken any action to direct action by the air-sea rescue unit?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the rescue centre was alerted at one o'clock this morning, and a tracker was dispatched immediately. It was the tracker aircraft which discovered the Cape Freels. The position of the lifeboat is not known, and our search at the present time is to try to find the lifeboat. There are at least eight ships in the area. We are putting other aircraft into the search, and I think the rescue centre is doing everything possible.

* * *

HOUSING

GOVERNMENT ACTION IN VIEW OF INCREASED COSTS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. According to the latest CPI figures housing costs are up 0.8 per cent for the past month of February. There has been an 11.5 per cent increase in the past 12 months, and a 13.8 per cent increase in the cost of home ownership. My question is, what does the minister contemplate doing about these continued increases in order that housing starts will not be decreased because of the tremendously high cost?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have already taken action along these lines, and indeed, the recent amendments to the National Housing Act which were passed by this House should go a long way toward increasing production and creating more efficiency in the building and lending institutions as well as the supply industries. Still, of course, building, like anything else, is subject to inflation, but the initiatives already taken by this government should go a long way toward increasing efficiency and keeping down costs.

Mr. Darling: They are still going up.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONTRACT WITH LOCKHEED—ALLEGATION COMPANY MISLED DEPARTMENT ON FINANCING—PROVISION OF INTERIM FINANCING

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. The Minister has stated that Lockheed Aircraft Corporation misled his negotiators concerning all the major initial financing of the LRPA. Could the minister inform the House when it became apparent to him that Lockheed had misled his negotiators?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the word misled was used by the press. It was not used directly by me. There was a misunderstanding. There have been difficulties in achieving the bridge financing, that is, the financing during the production phase. More recently there have also been difficulties concerning the Lockheed company's financial viability. What we have been seeking is an assurance that the company can in fact manufacture and deliver these aircraft. I may say that in recent conversations with officials of the United States government—and from other sources—we have been receiving the assurances that we believe are necessary in that respect.

I have also been preparing a presentation to cabinet to solve the other difficulty with regard to the financing. In other words, we are moving ahead to complete that contract because we believe it is absolutely essential that we acquire those aircraft for the Canadian armed forces.

Mr. McKinnon: The minister referred to it as a misunderstanding, but the managing director of Lockheed says that the payment schedule in its proposed contract with the Canadian government has not changed significantly since last August. Could the minister inform the House who is now going to provide the interim financing in this deal, if it is consummated, and to whom is his department going to pay the $111 million in interest on interim financing, which the minister referred to at page 11402 of Hansard?

Mr. Richardson: It is obvious that the interest payments would be made to whoever we borrow the money from, but I have options going forward to cabinet, as I said a moment ago, which will provide an answer to this problem of interim financing. When cabinet has reached a decision, I hope to be able to announce a successful conclusion to these difficulties.

* * *

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DATE WHEN DOLBEAU AND ROBERVAL OFFICES WILL BE COMPLETED

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will he advise the House whether he has received a lot of correspondence from the authorities and associations of Roberval constituency concerning unemployment insurance offices? Second, when will the minister be able to complete the organization of the Dolbeau and Roberval unemployment insurance offices according to plans in order to make them more functional?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall having received the communications to which the hon. member refers, unless they have appeared in my office within the last 10 days, during which time I have been away, but I will look into the matter and try to obtain the information he seeks.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REGULATIONS FOR CONTROLLING PROFESSIONAL FEES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask him whether he is aware of the statement made in the last day or two by a senior official of the prices division of the Anti-Inflation Board to the effect that professionals like doctors and lawyers, of whom there are some 75,000, will simply have to certify through a declaration to the board that their fee schedules and billing practices are unchanged and will not be required to produce detailed documentation. Has this been approved by the government?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in general terms the purpose would not be to require, but really to give professionals the option of figuring it two ways. The board, of course, would be scrutinizing, through a spot check of individual cases, to make sure that professional income is indeed within the limits set by the person's certificate.

● (1230)

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question. Is the minister suggesting that this spot check, which is obviously nothing more than self-regulation by professionals, is in any way comparable and fair in comparison with the very specific and tough limits put on wage and salary earners by the board which would be further aggravated by the long delay in making decisions in many cases by the board?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman says it is self-regulating but it is no more self-regulating than making out the income tax is.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR NAME OF REPLACEMENT OF SCIENTIST DOING RESEARCH ON WHITE BEANS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. As Dr. Jerry Haas who was doing a considerable amount of research work on white beans at the research station at Harrow has now left for Israel, can the minister advise whether he has engaged a pathologist to carry on this research work as producers have requested and if so, could he give us the name of the replacement?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that a replacement has been appointed, but I shall check and let the hon. member know.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Bearing in mind the number of members who waited through the rather extended proceedings today, and now seek the floor to ask questions on subjects not related to the subject matter of the statements made by ministers today, I thought it would be fair to now give some definition to the procedure to conclude the question period by recognizing the following members: the hon. member for Dauphin, (Mr. Ritchie) the hon. member for York-Sunbury, (Mr. Howie), the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay, (Mr. Johnston) the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Lavoie) and the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes).

* * *

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN TAXES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the determination of the Bank of Canada to squeeze the money supply still further by raising the bank rate and with the continued escalation of government spending, is the minister contemplating further increases in taxes, especially personal income tax, in his next budget in order to raise money for the government?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am contemplating presenting a budget.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROPOSED STUDY OF INDUSTRIAL POTENTIAL ASSOCIATED WITH FUNDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicates that work in respect of the Fundy Tidal Power project study has commenced, will the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion take steps to see that the industrial development potential associated with this great project is studied and developed at the same time?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think this work is really started now. It is obvious that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will follow carefully the analysis and studies required and more than probably actively take part in them to help bring in greater benefits to the economy of the province of New Brunswick as well as that of the whole Atlantic area.

[English]

URBAN AFFAIRS

EFFLUENT DISPOSAL SYSTEMS—SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF CO-ORDINATOR TO ASSIST MUNICIPALITIES IN PLANNING

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. As at the present any municipality planning an effluent disposal system must be involved not only with the Department of Urban Affairs but also with the Department of the Environment, the Department of Agriculture and possibly with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and very likely with the Department of Science and Technology as well as the Department of Natioal Health and Welfare, may I ask if the minister has given any consideration to designating one person in his department as an interdepartmental co-ordinator whose task would be one of assisting municipalities planning spray projects?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not given any special consideration to that but I shall.

Mr. Johnston: A supplementary question. Would the minister endeavour in every way to hasten the reprinting of the brochure on the present sewage aid and assistance program which seems to be out of print and still in demand?

Mr. Danson: Yes, I shall, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION ON TERMS OF REFERENCE FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Prime Minister. If the Prime Minister sets up a public inquiry will he undertake that it will be done only after consultation with the leaders of the other parties as to the terms of reference?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have concluded questions related to this subject.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR INCREASED SUBSIDIES FOR RENOVATION OF OLD BUILDINGS

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of State responsible for Urban Affairs.

Since inflation is a major problem in this country and in particular in Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, and knowing that renovation entails totally destroying the interior of buildings before estimating what costs will be involved in the structure, can the minister tell the House whether he expects to increase subsidies agreed to in the National Housing Act, to make sure that rents will really be low and allow greater access to suitable housing for low income people?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am encouraged by the response we have had to the housing starts this year and new programs which were introduced in the recent amendments to the National Housing Act. That is indicated by the extraordinary success we are having in housing starts so far. Because this housing funding will come mainly from the private sector which we are encouraging, we should have sufficient funds to look after the rehabilitation needs of constituencies such as that of the hon. member. Indeed, we have an arrangement with the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal for major rehabilitation programs. I hope this will help alleviate the situation in his constituency but I am not sure of the boundaries of the improvement program in so far as it involves specific constituencies.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

COST OF EXPERIMENTAL SATELLITE—LOSS RESULTING FROM WITHDRAWAL FROM SERVICE

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. In light of the fact that the Department of Communications has publicly stated as late as December, 1975 that the cost of the new experimental satellite known as CTS is $60 million and bearing in mind this estimate has escalated from the 1972 evaluation of $20 million, would the minister please inform the House whether that January, 1976 cost analysis by the Department of Communications placed the actual cost of the satellite at $100 million?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know the cost of that satellite is $60 million. The next thing I know is that we got a lot for our money out of that satellite. This is one of the most advanced technologies in that type of satellite in the world. It is now performing to the satisfaction of all those who have participated in the experiment. As to the cost escalation, I cannot answer the hon. member's question on that specific point. If the cost has escalated as he says—and I am not sure that he is right—from $20 million to $60 million then I can find out what happened in between. At this point, however, I cannot answer that specific question. The hon. member should bear in mind that the launching of this satellite is the result of a science policy which was enunciated by this government in the area of space and it has been extremely successful. The hon. member should be the last one to complain.

Mr. Symes: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister inform the House whether the communications technology satellite has been withdrawn from service as of this month until September 1976 due to technical difficulties and that in fact, given the two year use-life of this satellite with the cost, from my source of $100 million, this suspension will mean a loss of $25 million to the Canadian government?

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, we have had some battery troubles with the satellite in that period of time when it was not facing the sun. To find out the cause of the difficulty the satellite has been set aside in a sort of parking space we have up there. Our technicians and those of NASA are looking at ways and means of remedying this. The satellite is capable of functioning, however, and there is no suggestion that the two year lifespan of that satellite is in question at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which has nothing to do with the matters that have been under discussion this morning. Yesterday at about six o'clock when Mr. Deputy Speaker was in the chair he announced, and I noticed it particularly, that another objection under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act had been filed, and he gave the names of about ten or twelve hon. members who signed it. He asked if the House would agree to the usual practice of entering it as an appendix to yesterday's Votes and Proceedings. On checking Hansard today I find that the total reference is missing and that there is nothing in Votes and Proceedings about this matter. I do not recall any questions later in the day about any changes needing to be made in Hansard. Would Your Honour look into this matter?

● (1240)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is familiar with the circumstances. The refiling of a previous objection in its original form was my error. Since the previous objection was correctly filed and correctly appended to Votes and Proceedings on the day of original filing and since the second filing was in error, the hon. member who was responsible for the filing of both objections, or for putting forward both notices, was informed that in the circumstances, if he was agreeable, since the matter had already been filed and since the rights of all hon. members to participate in the discussion on the objection were protected, and the proper notation having been made on March 8 in Votes and Proceedings, it ought not to be repeated.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AND CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO ENSURE DEMOCRATIC RIGHT OF ELECTORS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-427, to amend the House of Commons Act and the Canada Elections Act (by-elections).

An hon. Member: Explain.

[Mr. Lavoie.]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I introduce this bill because of the procrastination of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in calling by-elections. The purpose of these amendments is to ensure that the basic democratic right of representation of electors in a constituency in the House of Commons by duly elected representatives is maintained as fully as possible and that a minimum of time is allowed to elapse without proper democratic representation should a vacancy occur.

By these amendments, a maximum of 120 days shall pass between the time of receipt by the Chief Electoral Officer of the warrant for the issue of a new writ for the election of a member of the House of Commons to fill a vacancy therein and the polling date of the by-election to fill such a vacancy.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

FINANCE

MEASURE TO AVOID DOUBLE INCOME TAXATION BETWEEN CANADA AND CERTAIN OTHER COUNTRIES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (for the Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill S-32 (from the Senate) to implement conventions for the avoidance of double-taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium and Canada and Israel.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Mike Landers (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On March 9, 1976, as reported on page 11632 of Hansard, a personal attack was launched on me by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). My initial reaction was one of anger. The first day I arrived in the House, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker)—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member refers to an occurrence reported in Hansard on a date some time removed from today. The hon. member was good enough to send the Chair notice of his intention to raise this question of privilege. I am not certain his notice is in time. In any event, the hon. member should explain, since the matter relates to a previous occurrence in the House and comes under the established practices of the House, why the matter was not raised at the first opportunity available to the hon. member. Perhaps the hon. member can explain.

Mr. Landers: Mr. Speaker, I was not present in the House on the day the attack was made on me. It was a Tuesday. On Wednesday I was in my riding with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald). I arrived back on Thursday, my brother was with me and I did not have the opportunity to raise a question of privilege; also, I needed time to cool down.

Mr. Speaker: In the circumstances, I may want to hear from the hon. member on the question of privilege.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Landers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On my first day in this House, the right hon. member for Prince Albert extended to me the courtesy of congratulating me upon my election to this esteemed House. Since then I have had the opportunity to congratulate the new leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition (Mr. Clark) upon his recent election.

I thought that when a member on either side of the House accomplishes some personal achievement, other hon. members, according to tradition, wish him well. That should be the tradition. Instead, I discovered that not all hon. members follow this time honoured tradition. Having been angered by the hon. member's actions, I inquired of people who know him why he would act in so reprehensible a manner. Having discovered the reason for his bizarre behavior, I wish to put on record the fact that I forgive him.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,500, 3,834, 3,852, 4,034, 4,057, 4,070, 4,110 and 4,445.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

CROWN LIABILITY ACT

Question No. 3,500—Mr. Fortin:

1. Does the government intend to make a full revision of the Crown Liability Act and, if so, on what date?

2. For the past year (a) how many legal actions have been taken against the government (b) what is the total amount of the claims?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): 1. The Attorney General of Canada indicated at the federal-provincial conference of the attorneys general which was held in Halifax on the October 23 and 24, 1975, that he was considering amendments to the Crown Liability Act. That consideration is continuing but at this time no decision has been made as to when any amendments could be introduced.

2. According to information which has been obtained from the registry of the federal court, it would appear that: (a) from the January 1, 1974 until the December 31, 1974, 210 legal actions seeking damages pursuant to the provisions of the Crown Liability Act were instituted against the government of Canada. (b) the total amount of damages as disclosed in the statements of claim or declarations was $14,060,205.00.

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Question No. 3,834—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, have measures been taken since the Plan's inception to develop an offshore fishing fleet based in PEI which has the flexibility to operate both in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and off the Atlantic Coast and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: No.

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Question No. 3,852—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, have specific measures been implemented to restrict the entry of new persons who wish to engage in fishing as a livelihood and, if so (a) on what dates (b) at what costs (c) with what effectiveness?

2. Have the measures been evaluated and, if so (a) on what date (b) by whom (c) with what specific implications for Phase 2 sectoral programme?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

RCMP—SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 4,034—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Is it the intention of the government to give consideration to station RCMP officers in towns of over 600 population, as outlined in the resolution passed at the recent Saskatchewan Urban Municipalities Association Convention?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): No. The attorney general for the province of Saskatchewan is responsible for law enforcement and, under the Provincial Policing Agreement, he is also responsible for the location of Royal Canadian Mounted Police detachments.

APPOINTMENT OF FEDERAL COURT JUDGES 1974-75

Question No. 4,057—Mr. Matte:

1. Has the Minister of Justice announced the 1974-75 appointments to the Federal Court of Canada and, if so, how many?

2. In each case (a) what is the name of the judge (b) the province from which he was appointed?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): 1. Yes, seven.

2.

(a) Appointee	(b) Province
	Bar Membership	Residence at Time of Appointment
Hon. W. F. Ryan	New Brunswick	Ontario
Hon. R. Kerr[i]	Nova Scotia	Ontario
Hon. J.-E. Dubé	New Brunswick	New Brunswick
Hon. G. E. LeDain	Quebec Ontario	Ontario
Hon. D. V. Heald[i]	Saskatchewan	Ontario
Hon. A. L. Thurlow[ii]	Nova Scotia	Ontario
Hon. L. Marceau	Quebec	Quebec

[i] Appointed from Trial to Appeal Division

[ii] Appointed Associate Chief Justice from Appeal Division

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD OFFICE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 4,070—Mr. Marshall:

Is it the intention of the Anti-Inflation Board to establish an office in the Province of Newfoundland as a result of a request made by the responsible provincial minister and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): I have been advised by the Anti-Inflation Board as follows: the Anti-Inflation Board has not determined its policy with respect to the opening of additional regional offices. The regional offices now established are located in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, Quebec City and Halifax.

PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP, FEBRUARY 13, 1976

Question No. 4,110—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Prime Minister or any member of the Prime Minister's family use any government aircraft on or about February 13, 1976 and, if so (a) what is a complete description of the aircraft (b) what flights did it make including places of origin and destination (c) what are the names and addresses of all persons that were on board?

2. What was the total cost to the taxpayer of the use of such aircraft including flying time, waiting time, salaries of crew etc.?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. Yes—the Prime Minister. (a) MOT Jetstar CF-DTF. (b) Vancouver to Kamloops. (c) Rt. Hon. P. E. Trudeau, Prime Minister; Mr. R. W. Murdoch, PMO; Mr. T. Axworthy, PMO; Mr. I. MacDonald, PMO; Mr. J. G. Moore, PMO.

2. $970 per hour (includes flight crew salaries travelling expenses, fuel, operations overhead, supervisory overhead, etc.). See reply to question 69 answered February 3, 1976.

HISTORIC MONUMENTS—CONSTITUENCY OF CHAMPLAIN

Question No. 4,445—Mr. Matte:

1. Did the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs allocate grants to private and agencies for the (a) acquisition (b) restoration (c) reconstruction of historic monuments in the Constituency of Champlain and, if so, in what amount?

2. What is the (a) site name (b) municipality involved (c) work performed (d) amount allocated (e) year each grant was made?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—FISHERIES—SUGGESTED PROCLAMATION OF 200-MILE COASTAL ZONE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe) moved:

That in the opinion of this House the government must unilaterally proclaim its exclusive jurisdiction over a-200 mile coastal fisheries zone to stop critical depletion of Canada's fisheries resources.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to focus attention of the House on the serious problems confronting the fishery on both coasts of Canada. Although the motion speaks of a 200-mile coastal fisheries zone to stop critical depletion of Canada's fisheries resources, we support the extension of jurisdiction to the edge of the continental shelf and my party supports the government's stand on that matter. That position does not preclude our supporting a 200-mile coastal economic zone, or fisheries zone, in order to protect our depleting fisheries stocks. Other countries have realized the need to extend their fisheries limits. Most recently, the United States introduced legislation in the House of Representatives and the Senate to extend its fisheries limits. I feel that this is the right time for Canada to follow suit because our two great nations face common problems. Negotiations are going on between our two countries.

Incidentally, it is not my purpose today to criticize for the sake of criticizing. Hopefully, we shall make the government realize that time is of the essence, that the fishery is in a state of bankruptcy and that we cannot afford to wait longer. I hope that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of State for Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) will put forward Canada's position at the Law of the Sea Conference to ensure that Canada will extend its fisheries zones in order to protect fish stocks which provide the livelihood of many thousands of Canadians.

The Minister of State for Fisheries is not present in the House. Yesterday he explained to me that he could not change his commitments. I accept that. I know his interest in the fisheries of Canada, and we do not hold him responsible for his absence from the House. I wish to first read from a booklet put out by the Department of External Affairs, entitled "The Future of the Oceans". It reads in part:

● (1250)

For the coastal fisherman, dependent on the stocks that in turn depend upon his home waters, overfishing by others can spell the end of his livelihood. This is where fisheries management comes in. The whole point of management is (ideally) to harvest the greatest yield that the complex of fish stocks in an area can replace annually. Only by applying management controls, such as quotas and seasonal limits (for example, during spawning), can the maximum yield be available each year to coastal fishermen and long-range ships alike.

I quote from the conclusions in the booklet:

The priority interests of the coastal state in all marine activities adjacent to its shores must be appropriately recognized and reflected in international law;

Much of the administration of the law of the future must be based on resource and environmental management concepts;

For any agreement to endure, there must be a better balance between the rights of individual states, whether flag or coastal, and the responsibilities which these rights carry with them regarding vital community interests in the uses of the sea.

The problem of extending our limits has been recurring each year. Everyone in Canada, with the exception of the federal government, agrees that we must take action to extend our limits in order to protect our fish stocks. The government is going a different route by having bilateral agreements with many nations. While we hope this will come about, they are taking the back route. The government should have extended the limits and then made bilateral agreements with other nations for economic and other purposes. To give some indication of the decrease in catches of fish stocks, I wish to quote from the Fisheries Prices Support Board 1974-75 annual report:

Preliminary figures indicate total Canadian landings of fish and shellfish, including freshwater fish, amounted to 1.9 billion pounds in 1974, a decrease of 14 per cent as against 1973. The landed value of $293 million represented a decrease of 9 per cent from the 1973 landed value of $320 million.

On the Atlantic coast landings were 1,532 million pounds in 1974, a decline of 14 per cent in weight and 1 per cent in value as compared with 1973. The decrease in landings was attributable to several factors including the over-exploited state of certain species, severe ice conditions late into the spring of 1974 and a six-week strike by the Newfoundland trawler fishermen during the summer of 1974. Groundfish accounted for 55 per cent of the total Atlantic Coast catch by weight and 45 per cent in terms of landed value.

Fish landings on the Pacific coast also dropped in 1974. The total landed catch on the west coast was 298 million pounds, a decline of 23 per cent by weight and 22 per cent by value as compared with 1973. Salmon landings amounted to 134 million pounds, a drop of 28 per cent in weight and 36 per cent in landed value as compared with 1973.

Government agency figures show that with regard to fisheries we are almost in a state of bankruptcy. Our fisheries' management is not at the level where we should brag about the fact that we are the best catchers and managers of fish in the world. It is surprising to note that in 1973 we imported $111 million worth of fish, and in 1974 $120 million. This is our own fish. It is fish we sell to other nations because we do not have proper management and processing facilities. We send it out of the country and buy it back at three or four times the price. That is not good, and must be corrected. However, we must first protect, conserve and control our resources which are vital to the livelihood of those in the eastern and western regions of Canada and, indeed, right across this country. I hope that when the minister replies—if there is time with all that is going on—he will give the House some indication of the direction that Canada intends to follow at the Law of the Sea Conference which begins next week.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Marshall: When I called it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was attempting to discuss the effect of the continued restrictions and the need for placing quotas on many species of fish in Canada. It is a wonder to me that on the one hand—and I must give credit to the Minister of State for Fisheries because he is trying his best to give the infrastructure support to fishermen by way of small craft harbours and vessel subsidies—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: We are providing the subsidies and the infrastructure support, we are providing the vessels and the small craft harbours for the fishermen, but that at the same time, because of the depletion and deterioration of our stocks, we have on the other hand to give subsidies because there are no fish left. One course is certainly working against the other. For example, the minister announced the other day a $44 million temporary assistance program for Canada's troubled fishing industry. He is to be given credit for that. But I have to emphasize the point that on one hand we are giving bigger quotas through ICNAF to foreign nations which are taking away fish which rightfully belong to eastern Canada; then, when there are no fish, we have to pay the fishermen subsidies, and so on.

The other effect of the restrictions on fishermen is the destructive impact it is having on the morale of the fishermen, particularly in the Atlantic region. Every year another species of fish is added to those under quota. Every year—almost every few months—more regulations are established. Recently, one which caused great confusion right across the country was that which dealt with the lobster fishing regulation. Then there is the restriction of the salmon catch and the provision for the licensing of boats. It is getting to the point at which the industry is fast becoming a police state fishery, and this is really having a harmful effect on the morale of the fishermen.

The incidents which arose just before the seal hunt are a perfect example of the fact that for the first time the peaceful fishermen of Newfoundland reacted, and about 200 appeared at a meeting designed to stop the "Greenpeace" organization interfering with their livelihood from the seal hunt. As the need for restrictions, licensing regulations and stricter regulations keeps coming forward, the fishermen are getting exasperated, disappointed, discouraged and will also react to the great deterioration and rape of our inshore and offshore fisheries and our banks fisheries. We go to ICNAF like a big brother and we allow them bigger quotas than we have ourselves. Our own fishermen are left without fish, without a livelihood, and they have to go on welfare.

The most recent problem which arises concerns the restrictions on the catching of red fish or ocean perch. I am sure my hon. friend from South Shore (Mr. Crouse) will elaborate on this aspect because it concerns him in Nova Scotia as much as it does me. But to show the reaction of Newfoundland, when it became necessary to restrict the catch of red fish to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, this is the content of a telegram sent to the minister, of which I had a copy yesterday:

[Mr. Speaker.]

> Restrictions on red fish fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence for the balance of 1976 will have a most damaging effect not only on the fish processors, plant workers and fishermen, but on the province's entire fishing industry.
>
> It is obvious that officials of your department have been aware of the need for a reduction in gulf red fish landings from 1975 levels for some time and it is difficult to understand why this crucial factor was not taken into account in establishing 1976 ICNAF quotas last June at which time some 100,000 metric tons outside the Gulf were allocated to other nations with less than 20 per cent going to Canadian fishermen and requesting that any reduced red fish catch in excess of inshore requirements should be divided among all vessels fishing red fish on a pro rata base according to past fishing practices.

My hon. friend recommends that the federal government take steps to call a special session of ICNAF to raise the quotas established, especially outside the Gulf, to prevent the deterioration of the red fish section of the industry, and that Canada should withdraw from ICNAF because we are being locked into the present arrangement. I was sure, Mr. Speaker, that in the last few months the government was going to take the unilateral action which was so necessary.

● (1410)

It might be of interest to put on record some of the statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of State for Fisheries, as well as some of the experts in the Department of Fisheries and those who attend the Law of the Sea Conferences. I was very surprised at the ocean colloquium in Halifax to find our expert on the Law of the Sea, Mr. Beazley, so concerned and disappointed, and to hear him say that we would be continuing with Law of the Sea Conferences since we had come to no final conclusion. This was the first time I had seen him so disappointed and discouraged. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, speaking in Halifax, had this to say:

> —an international solution is by far preferable to unilateral or even regional action. But time is of the essence . . .
>
> Should the Law of the Sea Conference fail or procrastinate, we will reassess all options . . .
>
> Unilateral action is one of the options open to the government of Canada—

That is what the minister said in February, 1975. Then the Minister of State for Fisheries, speaking in Geneva on April 29 of last year, had this to say:

> Fishermen cannot eat negotiating texts.

Then on April 30, 1975, in announcing in Geneva that Canada would press for a 40 per cent cutback in foreign fishing efforts at the June meeting of ICNAF, he said:

> I would find it difficult to ask fishermen to wait beyond the end of another conference . . . It would be a question of determining what would be an unacceptable delay.

Then Mr. Lucas, one of our experts, speaking in Halifax had this to say:

> The bottom line is that we cannot wait forever.

Then, again, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, on May 8 last in Geneva said:

> Unilateral action is a more lively option today than it was after the Caracas session in 1974.

I would be less than candid... if I were to leave you with the implication that we are entirely satisfied with the results of the conference.

Dr. Needler, head of Canada's delegation at the ICNAF meeting in Edinburgh on June 20, 1975 told reporters at the end of the session that in his opinion Canada might declare a 200-mile limit unilaterally within 12 months if no international agreement is reached. Then on July 22, 1975, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in this House:

I just want to remind the House that half of the European nations and others have exercised historic rights over what has been known for many hundreds of years as the high seas and a unilateral declaration of law as we see it would withdraw from these nations rights which they have been exercising, I repeat for hundreds of years.

They have rights, Mr. Speaker, but the Newfoundland fishermen also have traditional rights going back 600 or 700 years, and they are wondering what has happened to those rights. I am asking the minister to take this factor into consideration. Morale is worsening day by day and I cannot guarantee what is going to happen when the fishing season opens and foreign nations start fishing off our shores. I realize the minister has a problem, but we must extend our fishing limits at least for the time being, just as the United States has. Then we can have bilateral discussions on economic matters and on the continental slope.

When we do extend our limits—as I hope we will after the conference—we must also take measures to protect our fishermen. This is a matter I know the minister is concerned about, just as is the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) and the Minister of State for Fisheries.

The capability of Canada's air and sea rescue and lifeboat service and patrol aircraft is much less than desired. I should like to give the House an example of just what goes on in the Atlantic region. We have eight lifeboat bases in Newfoundland whose duty it is to protect and help save lost fishermen, as the name implies. On May 16, 1975, four new lifeboat bases were established, namely, in Shippegan, New Brunswick, Souris, Prince Edward Island, and Louisbourg and Sambro, Nova Scotia. On the west coast of Newfoundland there is not one single lifeboat base. I should like to refer to a letter that I received from the executive assistant to the then minister of transport:

I am writing on behalf of Mr. Marchand in reply to your letter of May 21, 1975 in which you request that the Ministry reconsider its plan for basing 44 ft search and rescue lifeboats with a view to basing two of these lifeboats on the west coast of Newfoundland.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, two fishermen were lost out of Moreton's harbour. There is a lifeboat base at Twillingate, and I asked the minister what action that base had taken. I do not have the exact answer before me, but if I may paraphrase it, the answer was that unfortunately their 44-foot boat could not even go out because it is only capable of cutting through about two inches of ice. There are eight lifeboat bases, yet their boats can only cut through two inches of ice. I hope the minister will take these matters into consideration and discuss them with his responsible colleagues; and when he does extend the limit, as I know he will, I remind him that the fishermen must be protected and our air and sea rescue capability must be improved.

In view of the fact that time is short, Mr. Speaker, I will leave the rest of the wise advice that we are going to give the minister to my other colleagues.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTION TO COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING ONTARIO

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order. Before I recognize the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), perhaps I may be allowed to put the following on record. It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the hon. members for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas), Kent-Essex (Mr. Daudlin), York East (Mr. Collenette), York South (Mrs. Appolloni), Lincoln (Mr. Andres), Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley), Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), Welland (Mr. Railton), York West (Mr. Fleming) and Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) has been filed with me pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, RSC 1970, to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario.

If the House is agreeable, I suggest we follow past practice and print the text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—FISHERIES—SUGGESTED PROCLAMATION OF 200-MILE COASTAL ZONE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marshall:

That in the opinion of this House the government must unilaterally proclaim its exclusive jurisdiction over a 200-mile coastal fisheries zone to stop critical depletion of Canada's fisheries resources.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this discussion on the extension of Canada's fisheries jurisdiction. In a sense, I have no complaint with the motion itself; basically it suggests unilateral action as an option open to Canada in extending our fisheries' jurisdiction. In the motion itself there is no reference to the timing or the preparations that are necessary in order to undertake such unilateral extension. Indeed, there is no recognition or analysis in the motion or in the speech as to what the immediate effect would be for Canada and for Canada's fisheries if today the government accepted the invitation of the hon. member and extended, unilaterally, Canada's fisheries' jurisdiction. But I want to tell the hon. member, as I have said before, that unilateral action is one of the possibilities we have had under consideration and that it may be exercised at a time when it will achieve real advantages for Canada.

● (1420)

The hon. member, in his speech, said we ought to do it right away. I think that was more of an encouragement of the government to continue its efforts than a clear decision on his part that action ought to be taken at this time. The Law of the Sea Conference is opening on Monday. It is a crucial conference for Canada. The hon. member probably will be present, as I will be present, at the conference next week. We will make every effort to make progress on all the issues affecting Canada, but particularly on the fisheries issue because we know, as the hon. member has pointed out, that the fisheries need protection on the east coast and on the west coast. On the east coast, stocks of fish that are vital to the future of Canadian fisheries are seriously depleted. That is the underlying concern behind the energetic efforts that are being undertaken by my colleague, the Minister of State for Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc), by his officials and by my officials in a variety of ways.

On the west coast, the new emerging regime of extended jurisdiction is also necessary and any future regime must take into account the special problem of the salmon fishery which is of importance to the west coast of Canada. We have not been idle. As the hon. member knows, there has been action over the years—action which the government of Canada has taken sometimes unilaterally and sometimes ahead of other countries. First, in 1964 the government unilaterally extended Canada's fishing limits to 12 miles. That is taken for granted today, but at that time it was a very important step ahead. We found that countries which has opposed us in taking that unilateral step quickly followed in adopting the 12-mile limit. Second, in 1974 we went a step forward and closed the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the Bay of Fundy, Queen Charlotte Sound, Dixon Entrance and Hecate Strait as exclusive Canadian fishing zones. These waters are so extensive that they would exceed the 200-mile area of many countries.

In taking that action, we negotiated a phasing-out of the operations of fishing fleets of other countries and today they are almost at the end of their participation in these waters. Last year, as a third point of our emphasis on the importance of the fisheries, we took very strong action in closing the Atlantic ports to the Soviet fishery fleet, with beneficial results in terms of the acknowledgement by the Soviet Union and other countries of the serious overruns that had been taking place in the catch of fish.

Of course, at ICNAF as well we were able to secure a 40 per cent reduction in foreign fishing efforts in respect of ground fish, as well as a reduction in the total allowable catch of depleted stocks and higher quotas for Canadian fishermen in respect of particular stocks which are important to them. These have been important actions. We do not, however, regard them as a substitute for extended Canadian fisheries which we still have as a primary objective of Canadian policy. In my opinion, Canada will soon have a fisheries zone of 200 miles.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member overlooked mentioning my most recent quote on this subject which was made last weekend: I said it was not a question of "if", but a question of "when". We want to take action at a time when it will be effective and at a time when it will be timely. There is no doubt that we have made progress at the Law of the Sea Conference. Unfortunately, we have not made progress rapidly enough to wrap up an over-all treaty including a definition of the jurisdiction of coastal states over their extended jurisdictions. But the single negotiating text that came forward at the conclusion of the last Law of the Sea Conference included most of the concerns Canada has had in respect of the fisheries, and met most of our fisheries' objectives.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

At this particular conference we propose to build upon that text and to make further progress where possible in order to solidify, in the text and in the understandings, the position of the Canadian government. I have always said it is the preference of the government of Canada to have its extended jurisdiction, the 200-mile economic zone, accepted as part of an over-all, multilateral settlement engaging in and involving all the countries of the world. In addition to the question of the 200-mile economic zone, there are other various interests involved, including the proper role of salmon and also a host of interests affecting Canada. At the present time, at the Law of the Sea Conference all these issues are treated as a package. Up to the present time, few countries have been ready to settle on the fisheries alone until they know how their interests will be treated in all the other aspects of the conference.

So far as Canada is concerned, we would be prepared, if it were possible, to settle on a treaty at an early date that would include provisions that we find acceptable with regard to the fisheries, provided it would not at the same time prejudice other important Canadian interests. We would be prepared to do that. I am doubtful, however, whether it will happen at this particular Law of the Sea Conference.

● (1430)

In addition to the conference which is beginning in New York next week, it is our expectation—and indeed our firm desire—that the conference in New York be succeeded by a further conference in the summer to carry forward the work that has been accomplished in New York. At the end of that conference, although we know progress will be made, we are not quite certain, at this point, of the extent of the progress but we will be working with other delegations to bring off the greatest possible success. Hon. members who have attended these conferences know that the Canadian delegation has continually played an innovative and responsible role at the conference, and it will be working actively at the upcoming conference to ensure that the provisions that emerge are equitable, effective and responsive to current needs and realities. That is one aspect of the situation and it is an important one. We will be watching results there to determine what course of action we might take.

At the same time, we have been negotiating bilateral agreements with distant fishing countries exploiting the waters which at some future time will be under Canadian jurisdiction. Just yesterday we initialled a further agreement with Portugal, an agreement which of course is initialled ad referendum but which deals with Portuguese fishing in our 200-mile zone.

An hon. Member: What did you give up for it?

Mr. MacEachen: That is the fourth bilateral agreement that we have succeeded in negotiating, at least ad referendum in the case of Portugal. Previously we had achieved similar results with Norway, Poland and Spain, and negotiations are under way with the Soviet Union. I hope they can be completed successfully in the near future. We have had discussions with the Soviet Union, and we hope that we will have a further round of meetings with them in May. If we succeed in getting a bilateral agreement with the Soviet Union, it will be quite dramatic progress because, having concluded and initialled an agreement with other countries and now with the Soviet Union, we will have covered a substantial portion of the fishing catch of foreign countries in an extended 200-mile zone. I will come back to that in a moment.

What do these bilateral agreements contain? They are all based on the elements of the emerging consensus of the Law of the Sea Conference. Under these agreements, when Canada extends its 200-miles it will be Canada that decides the total allowable catch from each stock; it will be Canada that determines the stocks that may be surplus to Canadian requirements; and it will be Canada that decides the allotments for the foreign fleets from these surpluses. These are the provisions in these agreements.

The four countries that I have mentioned—namely, Norway, Poland, Spain and Portugal—include 30 per cent of the fishing catch of foreign fleets in this extended zone. When we conclude the agreement, as I hope we will, with the Soviet Union, 88 per cent of the fishing catch in these waters by foreign fleets will have been covered by bilateral agreement. That is a major achievement and it is very much related to the question of unilateral jurisdiction, or the extension of unilateral jurisdiction, because if and when we extend our jurisdiction we will have in place, with the major countries now fishing in these waters, agreements that will recognize Canadian extended jurisdiction and the ability of Canada to decide the total allowable catch, to decide what Canada would take, what is surplus to Canada's requirements and how that surplus will be allotted among foreign fishing fleets. It seems to me that it is a very good thing to have these agreements in place before Canada takes a unilateral action and is faced with the problem, for example, that Iceland is presently facing in implementing its unilateral extension of the 200-mile limit.

Mr. McGrath: Iceland has no problem. She demonstrated she can take on Her Majesty's fleet.

Mr. MacEachen: I do not want to get into a discussion on Iceland's position and the British position, but it is a fact that the Icelandic government has taken action to extend its jurisdiction to 200-miles. They say, now, that we should control these waters in so far as fisheries are concerned, and the British government has stated that these are international waters and they do not recognize Icelandic jurisdiction and intend to continue fishing there. Now both countries are involved in an effort to negotiate an agreement which will accommodate the interests of both countries in an extended Icelandic jurisdiction.

What we have been doing is to arrive at these agreements before the extension is undertaken, rather than afterwards, in an effort to avoid the futile, sterile and dangerous confrontation that might take place if we proceeded unilaterally without having in place this kind of agreement. I believe that if in May we succeed as I hope we will in negotiating this agreement with the Soviet Union, we will have put in place a groundwork and a foundation that will make an extension of our jurisdiction effective when it does take place. I believe hon. members will recognize that as being an extremely important aspect of Canadian fisheries' policy.

The hon. member has properly referred to the effect on Canada if other countries extend their jurisdiction prior to Canada doing so. Obviously, we are watching the probable timing of extension by other countries. It is expected that the Mexican 200-mile economic zone, including not only fisheries but minerals, marine pollution and marine scientific research, will come into effect in June. A number of developing countries have enabling legislation so that they will be able to extend their 200-mile fishing zones at a relatively early date. Of course, we are all watching what is happening in the United States where it is expected there will emerge soon, from the congressional conference committee, which is now reconciling the House and Senate versions of the bill, a final version which will probably establish an effective date of enforcement of United States jurisdiction early in 1977.

● (1440)

We do not know what the date will be. One bill called for January 1, 1977, another the middle of the year, and the effort is to reconcile them. We do not know what will happen, but probably it will be an effective date of early 1977. We are taking steps to ensure that any U.S. extension will not affect the continuing right of Canadian and U.S. fishermen to enjoy reciprocal fishing privileges in each other's zones, and that our position on unsettled Canada-United States maritime boundary questions will not be prejudiced by any such action. These include such unsettled questions as the Gulf of Maine area, off Juan de Fuca Strait and off Dixon Entrance. So it is obviously realized by hon. members that negotiations with the United States on fisheries are a crucial part of our preparations for the extension of fisheries jurisdiction, and as a neighbouring coastal state there are special concerns to be taken into account. Canadian fishermen fish off the United States coast, and vice versa, and their interests are important. Some fish stocks migrate up and down the coast, and these must be properly managed. We must also try to ensure that there will be no problems of enforcement in the new zone, both as between our two countries and vis-à-vis third countries.

There is also the special problem of salmon fishing by both countries. All these problems are complex and difficult which exist and which must be resolved between Canada and the United States. Consultations have begun and I am sure solutions will be found. A great deal of attention has been focused on the legislation in the United States. It should not be forgotten that in Canada no new enabling legislation is required. We are ready to move on very short notice, because under the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act our extension of fisheries jurisdiction can be accomplished after giving 60 days' notice by order in council. So we do have legislative authority from parliament. It requires executive action and after 60 days' notice an effective date of enforcement can come into play. So we are prepared legislatively. We have been preparing, through our discussions with the distant fishing states, for the eventual extension of our jurisdiction.

I have already stated that extended Canadian jurisdiction is a certainty. It is not in the distant future. I regret that I cannot give a precise date, but it is a certainty and it is not in the distant future. It will depend upon a number of factors, including the progress made at the Law of the Sea Conference, the further success made in our bilateral negotiations with other countries, and also the steps taken by other countries, especially our friend and neighbour the United States.

I want to assure the hon. member that the government is quite alive to the urgency of the seriously depleted stock situation on the east coast. It is quite alive to the concerns of west coast fishermen. A firm and stated objective of our policy is to achieve extended fisheries jurisdiction at the earliest possible date, and we have placed ourselves in a position to bring it off in a timely and effective way.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the debate today seems to be more a case of agreement than of confrontation. As the Secretary of State for External (Mr. MacEachen) has pointed out, the question is not "if," but "when" Canada is to extend its control over the fishing areas off our coasts. I regret that the experts in this field in our party, the hon. member for New Westminister (Mr. Leggatt), the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) and the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) are all away this afternoon, leaving it to me to speak briefly on our behalf. I may say that I had also hoped that the leader of our party, who was in Newfoundland a few days ago dealing with these very matters, might be able to take part, but he, too, is tied up.

I want to indicate our support of the motion put forward by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), and I am glad to note that the Secretary of State for External Affairs regards it as a motion of encouragement rather than argument.

I must point out to the hon. member that last June, I believe it was, we had a debate on a similar subject when a motion was put down by the then member for St. John's West. He called for the extension of our control out to the end of the continental shelf and we had to point out that he forgot to mention the 200-mile zone. Today, my good friend, the hon. member for Humber-St. St. Barbe has put on a motion calling for control out to the 200-mile limit and he forgot to mention in his motion the continental shelf. However, in his speech he made it clear that he means both, and we are supporting his intention, not just the words of the motion.

I also welcome the statement which has been made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in which he quite properly referred to the bilateral agreements which have been achieved and to the fact that if Canada is able to achieve one with the Soviet Union, we will be awfully close to having a 200-mile zone so far as Canada is concerned. One has to say that the minister is doing a good job in that regard, and I want also to join the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe in paying tribute to the good job being done in this field by the Minister of State for Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In fact, I hope it will not hurt him if I suggest he is doing such a good job that he should not be a minister on half pay. He should be a full minister because of the efforts he is making on behalf of the fisheries industry of this country.

I think we are all aware of the fact that the reason something has to be done about the fishing areas off our coasts, both east and west, is because at the present time, when we only have a 12-mile limit, fleets of foreign vessels are engaged in massive fishing operations to such a degree that they are fish mining rather than just fish harvesting. They are treating fish not as a renewable resource but as an ore to be removed and processed, and let that be the end of it. The result of this, of course, is that there has been a tremendous decline in fish harvesting by our Canadian fishermen, a tremendous decline in the landings and, what is even more serious, a decline in the stocks. The situation has reached the point where something has to be done about it very soon. I think the most serious problem is on the east coast, as has been indicated by both previous speakers, but there is also a special problem on the west coast, particularly in respect of the salmon fishery.

● (1450)

We are aware of the fact that the Law of the Sea Conference will resume this coming week in New York city. I had hoped that the minister might be able to express his confidence that out of that conference would come an agreement on a 200-mile zone or a continental shelf. At least he is keeping his options open in that respect. It is still our view, along with the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, that if agreement on that is not reached, Canada should still assert its intention, even if we have to do it unilaterally, of going for a 200-mile zone or a zone out to the end of the continental shelf.

When the day comes that we do get control over the waters on our coast, we want to emphasize, of course, that in addition to the control of fishing in those waters which would give Canada the right to say how much we would take and how much would be available for other nations, the day must also come when we should have control over pollution in those waters, control over the right of passage, control over scientific research. In other words, there are a number of other matters in relation to the actual fisheries that are of concern to us in the areas off our coasts whether 200 miles or out to the end of the continental shelf.

So, Mr. Speaker, we express our pleasure that this motion has been put down today. We express our pleasure that there is agreement amongst us that the principle proposed in the motion is one that has to be implemented in one way or another. We hope the seriousness of the matter, in terms of not letting time go by, will impress itself upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of State for Fisheries and that action in this area will be taken with the least possible delay.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate on Canadian fisheries. Much of the constituency that I represent in this House depends in whole or in part on the economic future of this important primary industry. Throughout Atlantic Canada it is estimated that some 20,000 fishermen and 12,000 plant workers depend on the fishing industry for their livelihood. Naturally, when this industry suffers economic hardship or sets sail on the wrong course, members of parliament representing Atlantic Canada are soon made aware of the fact. It is our responsibility to try to assist those who look to us for guidance and leadership.

With each passing day I begin to have a clearer realization of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) meant when he said that when members of parliament get 50 feet from Parliament Hill, they are nobodies. It would appear that not only the Prime Minister subscribes to that belief, but it is also held by ministers of the cabinet and other ministers of the Crown as well as the Minister of State for Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc). Let us consider, for example, the announcements that have been made outside this House by the Minister of Fisheries when he is, in effect, by ministerial decree, altering the lives and livelihood of thousands of Canadians in Atlantic Canada.

On December 30, for example, the minister issued a news release announcing tighter controls on the east coast lobster fishery. This announcement could well have been made prior to the adjournment of the House for the Christmas recess, when the representatives of the people would have had an opportunity to respond to these arbitrary new measures which have caused heartache and hardship to hundreds of lobster fishermen in Atlantic Canada this year. Heaven knows how many will be affected next year.

The minister's opening line of, "New measures coming into effect today to exclude from the lobster fishery those who earn their living elsewhere", was enough to cause consternation among all lobster fishermen, for each and every one of them earn part of their living doing some other work besides lobster fishing. I submit it is desirable to get the doctors, the dentists, the lawyers and the professional people out of the lobster fishery, and almost everyone agrees with this. The minister obviously failed to realize, however, that in our mixed economy it is necessary for many men and women to work at different trades in order to provide for the financial needs of their families. For example, here is a typical letter from a constituent residing in Lockport, Shelbourne county, which I should like to put on the record. It is dated January 1, 1976, and he writes:

> I received a letter saying my lobster fishing licence would not be renewed in 1976, as I don't make my living at fishing, that I have a full-time job. I don't think working at a fish plant can be called a full-time job. I have to work all hours of the day or night in order to make between $5,000 and $6,000 (before deductions) at a fish plant. Therefore, I depend on lobster fishing for part of my income. I don't think any fisherman makes this small income for a year. It seems very odd to me that a Canadian can't make a living for himself yet foreign vessels are allowed to come into Canadian waters and take whatever kind of fish they want and destroy the fishing grounds.

He finishes by saying:

> I would like to know why my lobster licence will not be renewed in 1976. What crime have I done? If it's a crime to try and make a living, then I am guilty.

I am withholding the writer's name, but this is indicative of many letters I have received concerning this matter. Even bona fide fishermen were concerned with the wording of the minister's letter. In addition to lobstering, many of the fishermen, if not all of them, haul and paint their own boats, thereby infringing on the shipyards which depend upon refitting ships for part of their livelihood. Others paint their own homes or maintain market gardens, thereby earning part of their living from moonlighting as farmers or housepainters. Under this government it is apparently acceptable for Canadians to moonlight in some fields, but is not acceptable to moonlight in others. This double standard has not been lost among all lobster fishermen, those who have their licences this year and those whose licence has been denied.

As far as I can determine, most lobstermen were opposed to the procedure being followed: they were not opposed to the end to be obtained. It would have been more humane and just, in my view, to let attrition within the industry take its course. If licensed fishermen stopped fishing for more than one year, other than those who could not fish due to illness, then the licence should not be renewed.

I submit there are other steps that should be taken, Mr. Speaker. Steps should be taken to restock lobster fishing areas. This could be done by the fisheries department offering to pay a premium for seed or berried lobsters landed by our offshore or inshore lobster fishing fleets. These seeded lobsters could be returned to the sea by our fisheries officers, thereby helping to build up depleted stocks. Money spent in this manner would be a positive step toward rebuilding this very important segment of the industry.

Parliament was in session on February 11 when the Minister of State for Fisheries announced outside this House a modified fisheries assistance program. The House was also sitting on March 3 when he announced the closure of the Gulf of St. Lawrence red fish fishery. The continued refusal by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), ministers of the Crown and the Minister of State for Fisheries to appear before the peoples' representatives to explain what they are doing and to make statements which gravely affect the livelihood of Canadians is, at best, arrogant and, at worst, unmitigated gall. When this course is followed we, in the official opposition, who are elected to parliament, have no opportunity to comment, to amend, to suggest or to improve the minister's dictatorial statement.

● (1500)

I accept that the minister cannot be here today. The minister may say we are debating the statement today; but now it is fait accompli. The gulf closure is in effect, as of March 6. Those affected by this decree must suffer the economic hardship emanating from this action. One thing is certain. The Minister of State for Fisheries will go down in the history of Atlantic Canada as one who closed more fisheries industries than any previous minister in our history.

An hon. Member: Baloney.

Mr. Crouse: The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) says baloney. If he wants to speak, let him stand. Why does he comment sitting down? What does the hon. member think about the fishing industry and processing plants formerly active in Port Beckerton, Canso, Petit de Grat and Lockeport going bankrupt? What would the hon. member call that kind of operation? It all happened within the last six months, and under this particular government. Can the hon. member call that baloney? Does the hon. member not want to protect fishermen? He should be ashamed to claim his seat in this House.

An hon. Member: Holy mackerel!

Mr. Crouse: As one of my seafaring constituents said to me, "When policies are required to help Canadian fishermen, the minister sure has a hole in his seabag." Many of my constituents also ask when we are to see the appointment of a full-time minister of fisheries, as promised by the Prime Minister and other cabinet ministers in Nova Scotia and Atlantic Canada during the 1974 election campaign. I can only answer that obviously the Prime Minister does not give high priority to the fishing industry or to his promises once the election campaign is over.

Anyone who compares Liberal promises made to Atlantic fishermen during the 1974 campaign with the record of the government to date will gain some idea of the deceit and deception practised on our people by the government. I say this to the government: you promised, for example, to expand the area within Canada's jurisdiction for fisheries to the edge of the continental edge and slope, or 200 miles, whichever is greater; you said this will be achieved through action at the international conference on the Law of the Sea at Caracas. The Caracas conference concluded without action being taken. We witnessed the Geneva conference of last March. There was no international agreement. We now know that another conference will open on Monday in New York.

According to a report in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of Wednesday, March 10, the Canadian government does not expect the next Law of the Sea conference, which opens in New York on March 15, to succeed in producing any international agreement. Realistically we do not expect that any over-all law of the sea treaty will be completed at New York. That was the opinion of External Affairs officials. The minister endorsed that statement today in his speech made to the House. So we have promises but no action. While we are jawing other nations are warring on our fisheries resources and depleting them below sustainable yield levels. That is the reason for our motion today. We are simply asking you, the government, to take the action you promised more than two years ago.

The Minister of State for Fisheries said at last year's conference in Geneva that time is running out on this issue, that fishermen cannot eat negotiating texts, and that fish stocks cannot be rebuilt on negotiating texts. He made the headlines, and I supported him in his views. But I point out to the minister that we require action, not words, to bring about a solution to our problems. We need only look at the decline in total fish landings in the Maritimes for 1975 to realize the severe effects of massive over-fishing by foreign fleets on our fish stocks during the last ten years.

Total fish landings were down to 889 million pounds from 905 million pounds in 1974. Obviously, unless the Minister of State for Fisheries and the government move quickly to declare a 200 mile fishing zone on our continental shelf, the fishing industry of Atlantic Canada is doomed to economic collapse. The wreckage of its destruction must be placed squarely on the backs of the present federal government. The government alone has the responsibility, the obligation, and the power to act. By refusing to act the government stands indicted not only by the people of Atlantic Canada but indeed by all Canadians. It is responsible for allowing the collapse of this industry which is the mainstay, literally, of thousands of Canadians in an area with few alternative forms of employment.

You promised to provide means for proper offshore surveillance. You would do this by increasing the number and size of our fisheries patrol vessels. This has not been done. Only yesterday we learned in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, from the Minister of State for Fisheries, that in order to carry out fisheries surveillance the department was forced to employ oceanographic and fisheries research vessels at a cost of $360,000. While this was going on the normal work of these ships was not being done, which accounts for the spotty oceanographic work and the lack of research carried out by the department prior to making decisions which have a detrimental effect on the economy of Atlantic Canada.

You promised in the 1974 campaign that our fisheries resources, to the maximum extent possible, would be harvested, processed, and marketed by Canadians. The truth is that foreigners are still harvesting the largest percentage of the stocks taken from our waters.

You promised to provide additional financial support for the construction, conversion, and modification of fishing vessels. Yet in actual cases some fishermen have built new boats and are still waiting for subsidy payments.

You promised to provide improved marine facilities, such as wharves, breakwaters and haul-outs, under your small craft harbour policy, and pledged a budget of $30 million for the fiscal year 1974-75. It was to be maintained for four years. What happened? The very first year, when cuts had to be made, you did not cut down on the CBC, or on the National Art Centre, or on CIDA aid to Cuba; but you did cut from $30 million to $20 million your program of assistance—

Mr. Faulkner: Philistine.

Mr. Crouse: The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) said something like "horse nonsense."

Mr. Faulkner: I said, Philistine.

Mr. Crouse: I wish the minister would stand instead of making these remarks from his seat. He said it is horse nonsense. It certainly is horse nonsense to give money to Cuba, yet to deny that type of assistance to Canadian fishermen. The government has cut $10 million from funds much needed for the construction of wharves, skidways, breakwaters, etc. Our people are losing their ships. Just consider the damage done to the Nova Scotia fishery a few weeks ago by high winds; there was lack of protection, responsibility for which must be laid at the feet of this government, and in fact of the Secretary of State. And the Secretary of State says, "horseradish."

Mr. Faulkner: I did not say horseradish.

Mr. Crouse: Why does the minister not stand up and tell the House what he said?

Mr. Faulkner: I said, Philistine.

Mr. Crouse: Or, let the minister be quiet and make his contribution at the proper time.

The government promised to develop our recreational fisheries through the rebuilding of fisheries stocks. It was to build hatcheries and spawning channels. So far all that the government has done is close down the fish hatchery at Kedgemakooge. I could go on and on. The list of broken promises is endless.

Frankly, the statement of the Minister of State for Fisheries establishing a quota of 30,000 tons of redfish for the 1976 Gulf of St. Lawrence fishery is totally unacceptable to the members of the official opposition. I say it is unacceptable because it is unjust, divisive, and indefensible. It is an unjust policy. The basis on which these quotas is established is false and deceitful.

To date the large trawlers owned and operated by Nova Scotians and Newfoundlanders landed approximately one half of all the redfish processed by plants in Prince Edward Island, Georgetown and Shippegan. The tonnage landed at these points came from only part of the fleet operating and based in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. By using the landings of the entire Canadian Atlantic fleet as a basis the government is setting up arbitrary quotas for the catching of redfish which apply only to those ships based in St. Lawrence River ports.

I say this closure is unjust because Nova Scotia, for example, has already landed most of its allowable quotas during the months of January and February. This, really, is a retroactive ruling. It does not permit the Canadian companies affected any time to plan or reorganize their operations. It is unjust because it works its greatest hardship among Canadians, ashore and afloat, in an area of Canada which cannot stand this further blow to its economy.

• (1510)

This is a divisive regulation. It divides one Canadian against another. If federalism is to mean anything, if we in Atlantic Canada are to be considered part of the Dominion of Canada, then the Gulf of St. Lawrence is owned as much by Newfoundlanders and Nova Scotians as it is by anyone else. Either we are all Canadians and all share equally, or federalism as we know it no longer interests. However, this regulation would imply that Nova Scotians and Newfoundlanders do not have the same fishing rights in the Gulf of St. Lawrence as other Canadians. It seeks to imply that we are little more than second class citizens, a title which we do not, will not and cannot accept.

I say this regulation is indefensible because the government gave no notice of its plans to the Canadian fishing industry. It is indefensible because the government is robbing Canadians of a fishing right which it is not prepared to take away from foreign trawlers fishing in these same Canadian waters. For example, let us look at the agreement signed between Canada and France on March 27, 1972. Article 3 reads:

—fishing vessels registered in metropolitan France may continue to fish from January 15 to May 15 each year, up to May 15, 1986, on an equal footing with Canadian vessels in the Canadian fishing zone within the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Foreign fleets are phased out, but Canadian fleets are ordered out by this cabinet and by this government. How in the name of reason can this be called a conservation measure when foreign fleets, fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence primarily for cod, will throw back into the sea hundreds of thousands of pounds of dead fish; flounder, redfish, yellowtail, or any other kind of fish caught in their trawls?

In my opinion this action is indefensible because the government has gone ahead with regulations without conducting an impact analysis of the effects of its actions on the economy of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. How many more fish plants must close down in Nova Scotia besides the four I already placed on record before the government wakes up and stops its nonsensical approach to this important primary industry?

The government's actions are indefensible because it announced control regulations before establishing a management plan for the fisheries on the Canadian continental shelf, a management plan which should project our fisheries objectives for no less than five and at least ten years ahead. We desperately need this plan for it was only in 1973 that government fisheries scientists were saying that redfish in the gulf were dying of old age.

The industry was told to modernize its trawlers and take advantage of these fish stocks. The industry did modernize. New ships and plants were built. New equipment was purchased. However, the government is now saying, "Sorry, gentlemen, you must cut back. You must shut down operations."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, there was no time allotment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Twenty minutes.

Mr. Crouse: There was no 20 minute allotment arrangement made.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is the rule.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I do not have the Standing Order before me, but the time limit is 20 minutes. It is Standing Order 58(13).

Mr. Crouse: May I have sufficient time to finish my remarks?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I am in the hands of hon. members. Does the House agree to allow the hon. member more time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crouse: I am grateful to the House for allowing me to finish. I shall not burden hon. members for more than three minutes.

Mr. MacEachen: A minute or two.

Mr. Crouse: The minister says a minute or two.

The industry did modernize. It improved its operations. I say to this House that you cannot treat the fishing industry like a light switch. It does not turn on and off that easily. It is too big and its ancilliary industries are so massive that it is time the government recognized its importance by appointing a full time minister to look after its problems.

The Minister of State (Fisheries) has not provided this House or the industry with one shred of evidence to prove that the stocks of redfish have declined below the sustainable yield level. How many tests were made, and what scientists carried out the studies? How much intermingling is there of stocks of redfish inside and outside the gulf? How big are the schools of redfish that surge into the gulf from St. Pierre banks, when do those migrations occur, and how long do they last?

There are questions the minister will not or cannot answer because his regulations are based on conclusions reached by bureaucrats in the ivory towers of Ottawa. The government moved the mint to Winnipeg. In my opinion the fisheries department should have great presence in Atlantic Canada as well as on the west coast. Civil servants should get out of the city, go to where the action is, and work with the industry. They would quickly learn that the big need of this industry is not marketing, which seems to occupy so much time of the minister's staff, but rather the big requirement is resource management.

Instead of carrying out isolated resource management on one or two species, as is being done on haddock and redfish in the gulf, the government should, in fact must concentrate its efforts on managing all the stocks on our continental shelf. You simply cannot manage fish stocks by selecting one or two species in isolation from the rest.

Finally, 1976 must be the year of action on the management of fish stocks by Canada. We must give notice by June, 1976, of any change of intent to withdraw from ICNAF, six months' notice, before we can act to set up our own management for our 200 mile economic zone.

Unfortunately at this time the government has no management plan and no stock assessment. In fact, this government is in a panic on this issue. It is signing away phasing-out rights to other countries without actually knowing the quantity of the remaining resource. Treaties are being made with foreign countries on a ten year basis, but Canadians are not being given ten days' consultation.

The government's information from its scientists is limited, garbled, hazy and, in many cases, incorrect. Not one scientist accompanied the winter fleet into the gulf this year. Why not make a start today on a resource management analysis? Get the scientists out of Ottawa, contact the industry and place at least six men on six different boats in the deep sea fleet for six months. Let them make soundings, age tests of fish caught, size and quantity of fish caught in every two hour tow, and the species landed.

In conclusion, this industry deserves better treatment than being put out of business by the wrong decisions being made by the wrong people living in the wrong places.

[Mr. Crouse.]

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I think that after the speech of the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) it is appropriate for me to read Standing Order 58(13).

(13) During proceedings on any item of business under the provisions of this Standing Order except when the House is in a committee of the whole, no Member may speak more than once or longer than twenty minutes, except that both the mover of a debatable motion and the Member speaking immediately in reply thereto may speak for thirty minutes.

[English]

Hon. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Look at the great fisherman.

Mr. McGrath: There are no fish in the Humber.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, when I have risen to speak on this subject in the past there has been a similar elitist attitude on the part of maritime members on the opposite side which I do not think serves well the interests of their constituents. If they should take the same attitude as a former member from Toronto did, that matters of particular interest to other parts of Canada were of no interest to him, this would be a lesser country and a lesser parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Do you know where the fish market is, Bob? The fish market is at Lapointe's.

● (1520)

Mr. Stanbury: Perhaps unsuccessful leadership candidates on the other side can draw a lesson from the success of their winning candidate who took a highly national view and thereby won national support at their leadership convention.

The fact is that the resources of the sea are not solely the concern of maritime members, but the concern of all Canadians, indeed of all the people of the world. The sooner we appreciate this the more importance these resources will be accorded in terms of public policy, and the greater recognition there will be by government that they must be managed with care.

As the Law of the Sea Conference resumes in New York next week I am sure all hon. members will wish to express support for our negotiating team, our representatives at that conference who have conducted themselves so well on behalf of Canada in the past and who will be doing so over the next few weeks as well. I believe we have a first class negotiating team, headed on the professional side by one of our outstanding public servants. It has had the leadership of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), and the former Secretary of State for External Affairs, the present President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp).

We have not been followers in this matter. We have been leaders, and I think we should be proud of the performance of our ministers and our public servants in the leadership they have given to the world in the field of the rule of law in all matters pertaining to the sea.

I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs acknowledged, as I would like to do, that the mover of this motion, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) is motivated by a desire to support the negotiators at the conference. I am sure this is his desire. However, in dealing with the motion itself we must recognize that it is sadly deficient.

One needs only to listen to the spokesmen for the opposition to realize that the wording of the motion demonstrates as well as anything the difference between the approach of the government and of the opposition to Canada's foreign relations. The opposition seeks confrontation. The government seeks co-operation. It is surely apparent now, if it has never been in the past, that solutions to the interlocking world crises will not come about through expressions of self-interest on the part of each of us, but rather through a lot of hard work in co-operating among peoples and in improving respect for international law.

I admire the patience and the persistence which the government has shown in pursuing the establishment of the rule of law in matters pertaining to the sea and I believe all members, including the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, wish our negotiators success as they continue this very important work on behalf of Canada.

The hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) emphasized the importance of having a strong voice speak for the fisheries of Canada. I believe we have that strong voice in the person of the Minister of State for Fisheries. We do need a full time Minister of Fisheries and we have a full time minister.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On half pay!

Mr. Stanbury: Well, if he is as effective and as hard working as he is at the pay he is getting I do not know that it would be fair to him to increase his pay, because he would feel he should work that much harder, and I don't think that is possible. He has been a most effective champion of Canadian fishermen, but beyond this he has been a most effective champion of the importance of the resources of the sea to all of us. This is something of which we must all become more conscious.

The motion before us says the government must unilaterally proclaim its exclusive jurisdication over a 200-mile coastal fisheries zone. This is the kind of gauntlet-throwing which does not contribute to progress in negotiations. It represents the ultimate option we may have to exercise, and the government has made it clear that we shall unilaterally proclaim a coastal fishing zone if necessary. But the motion says very little on close examination, and I suggest that to adopt it would achieve even less. To paraphrase the Minister of State for Fisheries who said in Geneva, "Fishermen cannot eat negotiating texts and fish stocks cannot be rebuilt with negotiating texts", I would suggest that fish stocks cannot be built on motions, nor can fishermen eat such motions.

Opposition spokesmen are ignoring what the government has already done and is doing for Canadian fishermen. This work is not about to start next week, Mr. Speaker. It began years ago. The Secretary of State for External Affairs mentioned that in 1964 the government did take unilateral action to extend Canada's fishing limit to 12 miles. It did so as a last resort, only after all possibility of agreement had been exhausted. In 1970 the government went further and closed certain areas, reserving them as exclusive Canadian fishing zones, and negotiated phase-out agreements with countries affected. As a result very substantial foreign operations off our coasts are already coming to an end. I believe this demonstrates the kind of effective action the government is prepared to take without leading to a "cod war" or a challenge before the International Court of Justice. Those are very real dangers which the motion before us ignores.

● (1530)

Canada has taken a back seat to no nation in the law of the sea discussions. The reason we have succeeded as well as we have is that we have always gone that extra mile toward seeking international agreement before striking out on our own. We have done this not because we are Boy Scouts, though some of us may have been, but because we are realists. Canada is and continues to be in the vanguard of countries pressing for a further extension of fisheries jurisdiction. We have already gained overwhelming recognition for the concept of the 200-mile limit.

The Geneva session of the Law of the Sea Conference last spring did not result in a Law of the Sea Convention, but it did produce a single negotiating text which represents a very significant step forward in these proceedings. The fisheries articles of the text are deficient in some points in terms of our objectives, but they reflect our interests in most respects and offer a sound basis for further negotiations which are now under way in New York.

We hope that the Law of the Sea Conference can succeed this year, but in any event the Secretary of State for External Affairs has reiterated today the firm commitment of the government to a timely and effective extension of Canada's fisheries jurisdiction to 200 miles. While the government would prefer to extend jurisdiction on the basis of a new Law of the Sea Convention, it has not awaited the conclusion of that convention to take action.

The House will recall that last July the government closed Canada's Atlantic ports to the Soviet fishing fleet in response to evidence of overruns of quotas agreed in ICNAF. At the same time Spain and Portugal were warned that the same action would be taken against them if their adherence to the ICNAF regulations did not improve. The response was quite satisfactory; within two months arrangements had been negotiated with the USSR to establish procedures which should guarantee compliance with ICNAF arrangements in the future. Appropriate arrangements have also been worked out with Spain and Portugal.

For the 1976 fishing season the government recently obtained through ICNAF a 40 per cent reduction in foreign fishing efforts for groundfish as well as a reduction in the total allowable catches for depleted stocks and higher quotas for Canadian fishermen on stocks of particular importance to them. These measures are not a substitute for the 200-mile limit but they will help provide for a smooth transition to extended jurisdiction.

To prepare further the way for extension of jurisdiction, Canadian officials have begun discussions with a number of governments whose fishing operations will be affected by Canada's adoption of the 200-mile limit. These negotiations anticipate the results of the Law of the Sea Conference and are intended to fix the terms and conditions under which foreign vessels would be permitted to fish in Canada's extended fishing zones, under Canadian authority and control, for resources surplus to Canadian requirements as determined by Canada.

We are informed that bilateral agreements along these lines have already been negotiated with Norway, Poland, Spain, and only yesterday with Portugal. In other words we have in place agreements that cover some 30 per cent of the total foreign catch in the ICNAF area off the Canadian coast, and an agreement with the USSR would bring this figure up to 88 per cent.

Surely it is important, Mr. Speaker, that Canada's extension of jurisdiction be achieved in such a way as to avoid "cod war" confrontations and keep enforcement costs to a manageable level. We do not want the kind of confrontation with other countries that has been cited with approval by members opposite.

I believe the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) interjected, while the minister was speaking, that Iceland has demonstrated she can take on Britain. Does the opposition really want Canada to have to demonstrate that she can take on Britain, or any other country? Surely not! This is a time when the rule of law should be improved in the world and extended, not a time for the rule of force.

At least for the present, negotiations offer many advantages and no disadvantages. The timing of the actual extension of jurisdiction will be important, but the government is now doing everything that could be done after extension of jurisdiction to make this extension truly effective. Whatever may happen in coming months the steps now being taken will contribute to the early attainment of Canadian objectives.

A so-called unilateral declaration is an option which could be exercised at very short notice in view of the fact that the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act empowers the government to extend further Canada's fisheries jurisdiction by simple order in council. Thus, unlike such countries as the U.S.A., Mexico and Norway, Canada has long had in place the necessary enabling legislation for adoption of the 200-mile limit.

We must continue our efforts to reach international agreement on fisheries problems at the Law of the Sea Conference, through ICNAF and other international fisheries commissions as well as through bilateral negotiations. I suggest that these efforts are not incompatible with other forms of action that may prove necessary. Indeed they would prepare the way for such forms of action. There is a limit not only to our patience but to the ability of stocks and our fishing industry to survive under present conditions.

Unilateral action is one of the options open to us. However, even unilateral action requires negotiation if it is to be effective and successful, as it was when Canada moved unilaterally in 1964 and 1970. It is always tempting to take unilateral action, but unilateral action is not particularly rewarding unless it can be made to work. No government in this country or in any other country has demonstrated greater concern for the fisheries and fishermen and the resources of the sea than has the present Government of Canada. No government has done more than ours in the way of both national and international action to protect coastal fisheries and coastal fishermen.

We know that the future of our coastal communities is inseparably linked with the future of our fisheries, and I might go so far as to say with the future of all Canadian communities, and indeed of mankind. We intend not only to protect that future but to make it better than ever. We will take the measures that are necessary, but we will always act, I hope, in a responsible, reasonable, and realistic manner. We owe it to ourselves and to our fishermen to proceed in this way.

We are almost home, Mr. Speaker, and it would be folly at this point, simply for the sake of a dramatic entrance, to break down the door that is already opening.

● (1540)

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member who just spoke before me stated, we have almost made it home. History tells me we have known for many years that Jack did make it down the beanstalk with the golden goose, but I am not quite so sure our minister is as nimble, and I think, having heard him today, he may be caught in his own bear trap which he set at the bottom of the stalk.

Canada has set forward two thrusts in international negotiations in the past few years. We have been engaged in bilateral negotiations and in a unilateral declaration of the 200-mile limit. Although I do not predict this I wonder whether history will show that in our enthusiasm we have been too hasty and aggressive on the one count, and too slow on the other. It is not too many years ago that in British Columbia we climbed out of the hills after having gotten on a ladder, and having arrived at the top we found we had given away 50 per cent of the salmon run on a great river.

As the Canadian negotiators climbed that ladder I imagine they felt quite enthusiastic, smug, and self-satisfied that Canada was getting a good deal. I am sure they must have felt that way in respect of the negotiations on the Columbia River Treaty and the Skagit River Treaty. I am concerned, however, about that attitude.

The minister tells us we have in some way almost won the battle; that we have signed spectacular agreements with Norway, Portugal, Poland, and Spain and that he is pretty sure Russia will get to her knees and give us a tremendous deal. Personally I have some question about that. I would be suspicious under any circumstances, but having heard the minister today I am even more suspicious. While I agree in principle with the philosophy of dealing with cod wars and this type of thing through negotiated settlements, I wonder whether by taking that course of action we might well be sealing our heritage in vested sovereign rights unnecessarily and prematurely.

Any negotiation indicates a give and take. I ask the minister what we are giving up? What are they taking for these agreements? As I looked at the agreement with Norway I thought it looked a progressive step because it stated very simply that Norwegian vessels would be permitted to fish in the area concerned under Canadian authority and control for resources surplus to Canadian requirements. That is pretty easy to agree to but today we have started to find out what really is behind the agreement. We have started to find out not only that we are talking about a surplus of Canadian fisheries requirements but are dividing that surplus up in given percentages. We have already given away percentages.

The minister made some sort of statement — at least I thought he did and I would ask him if he made the statement — that Norway, Poland, Portugal, and Spain have agreements, and that at the time we finish with Russia we will have given away the right to 88 per cent of our surplus. He shakes his head. I will be interested in hearing his explanation of that. At any rate he is giving away a guaranteed percentage of our fishing surplus.

That statement requires clarification because if we give away 88 per cent that leaves 12 per cent. Is that 12 per cent for East Germany, for the Koreas, and for the Third World? Is this not a dangerous and greedy precedent? That is certainly an area which the minister will have to clarify, and I will try to finish my speech as quickly as I can so that he will have that opportunity. I suggest that well might be the bear trap. If you give away 88 per cent here and 12 per cent there, you still have not mentioned the requirement of the Third World countries, the Koreas, East Germany or other areas.

I suggest that perhaps in his negotiations the minister should include some kind of a Third World option so that if these percentages are to be determined there will be a way out of them. Again, so far as I can see, he was talking about a surplus. I want to know, if he is referring to a surplus beyond Canadian requirements, where the requirements, of the United States come into the picture. Does he include the requirements of the United States and Canada as one and the same? Then I question, if he is already talking about giving away a majority or the greater part of our surplus, who it is being given to and how it is being given to them.

The rationale seems to be to ensure that our 200-mile limit will be respected. I am not sure I like to have it respected in that order of precedence. I think I might have preferred to see the precedence first through bilateral negotiations with the United States, our traditional friend and supporter. At any rate I am sure the minister will have some clarification in this regard. If he is walking into this trap, I urge caution. I urge him not to be too hasty in further negotiations with Russia. I urge him to be cautious in this area.

The time to be aggressive is in the declaration of the 200-mile limit. That is where he is moving cautiously. I ask him to move in that direction. This in effect is what this motion talks about. I do not in any way underrate not only the important implication of this 200-mile limit but also the effect it will have on the Canadian body of law and Canadian fishermen. Of course I support it. I do not underestimate its significance as a step forward in enlarging, and focusing on, the direction of international law. The implications for international law here surely are as great as the implications for fishing or for Canada itself.

But as I see Canada and our minister participating in this great international arena, and as I see him floundering when he says we have much planning to do in Canada before we are ready to make a declaration, I say that if we wait for the planning in Canada we will wait forever because there is so much that needs to be done at home. We might look at one absurd example. We talk in terms of international agreement and of us being a dominant factor in showing leadership and innovation. Yet this is a country which cannot even decide who has jurisdiction for the safety of our fishermen. I point out this is an absurdity, and question the ability of the minister in the broader and much more difficult problems which cannot be solved this simply.

In essence the problem stems from the fact that the federal and provincial governments have neglected to institute safety programs for the fishing fleets to prevent further loss of life on the coast of British Columbia. The situation is drastic and the outcome inevitable if the federal government insists on delaying safety provisions any longer. Last year some 14 lives were lost during the herring season alone, and some 13 vessels either capsized or went down. I think those 14 lives have some value and warrant the minister's time, concern, and energy. Those are the important values. So far this season one life has been lost and six vessels have either capsized or gone down. This was in the herring season alone and we can cite statistics in other areas.

● (1550)

This concern is recognized, but Ottawa is so busy playing little games that the provincial government tries to step in by bringing in Workmen's Compensation Board regulations overlapping and intruding on federal jurisdiction, with hundreds of pages of regulations which cannot possibly be met and might do more harm to individual fishermen than protect them as workers. Certainly that problem needs to be straightened out. Federal inspection has long been the responsibility of MOT and is clearly and historically a matter of federal jurisdiction. Any change in the regulations should be made through these channels. A separate and unrelated government department also inspecting fishing vessels is certainly not required.

There is no need for this loss of life and property which I have mentioned, and which goes on while we negotiate elsewhere. Fishermen, and more specifically the fishermen's union on the west coast, have urged the federal government for some years now to give this matter its immediate attention. The fishermen's proposals are most acceptable and quite logical. They are simply asking for a more effective air-sea rescue squad. This squad, which already exists, could be supplemented by the use of all available vessels, helicopters, and fixed-wing aircraft in the immediate vicinity. These other vessels exist in the form of RCMP boats, naval vessels, and naval helicopters. Certainly it would seem that in times of tragedy or possible death using these available vessels in an organized, effective, and efficient way is the only recourse and logical step of action.

Canadian fishermen are too often forced to rely on their U.S. counterparts for air-sea rescue. Their forces are well equipped, they are efficient, and Canada could learn much from them. Perhaps on his next international foray the minister could take some time to find out about the simple problem of the safety of our fishermen and inquire of his U.S. counterparts how they can be so much more efficient and competent in this area.

It is no secret that these fishermen—

An hon. Member: The minister is not here to listen.

Mr. Wenman: I suggested a trip to the United States where he can meet with the delegates and obtain some information for our fishermen.

It is no secret that these fishermen who have a great deal of overhead are not well off by today's standards. These same fishermen on the west coast have asked for federal assistance grants to supplement their income. These grants are not for frills or lavish accessories for their vessels. These grants would be used for better equipping and reinforcing their boats and communications equipment. Constant communication is an absolute necessity in times of disaster. It is their only link to life.

These same fishermen, represented by their union, were quite prepared to sit down with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc), and whatever power the cabinet can muster to look at this problem. Their intention was to meet with these ministers jointly with the minister of labour from British Columbia and representatives from the ministry of transport in British Columbia. Their plans were scuttled in every instance. I think those ministers responsible should plan to solve this problem expeditiously. It is not understating the situation to say that the lives of 7,000 people in British Columbia fishermen's union are at stake.

While I encourage aggressiveness in the declaration of the 200 mile, I also encourage caution in bilateral negotiations where a government may well be giving away our heritage. I ask the minister to qualify that. I wish the minister success in these negotiations, and although many say that the minister's efforts will not be fully rewarded and fruitful I am sure that Canada's position will be well expressed by a competent negotiating team. I hope the minister will listen to them and act accordingly.

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the speech which I had prepared for today cannot be delivered but I hope in the three minutes I have, to express the concerns of the people on the northwest coast in British Columbia as they relate to the opposition motion of today, which requests that an extension of Canada's territorial waters by 200 miles be undertaken unilaterally by Canada. This brings to mind many reasonable concerns of fishermen and mariners on the north coast of British Columbia because, of course, one of the major enterprises of that part of the world is the anadromous species on which we have heard a great deal of discussion at the Law of the Sea conferences.

When we have salmon which come to life in the waters of our rivers, which go to sea and know no restraints in their travels across the seas—there are also herring and other types of anadromous species—they do not stop at the 200-mile limit, turn around and come back in, but go much farther out to sea than the 200 miles. Therefore it is essential that in the negotiations that are taking place in New York, and that have taken place in Caracas and Geneva, the anadromous species be absolutely and completely cared for so that management of high seas fisheries by Canada can continue beyond the 200-mile limit.

What we are waiting for until we have negotiated a reasonable status for the high seas salmon and other anadromous species is that we make certain, beyond the 200 mile limit, that they are still under our economic control and that we have an economic zone of influence over these fish. I feel that it would be absolutely foolhardy to make a unilateral attendant upon our seas. What are we going to do about surveillance? Will we have one, single, unified coastguard in this country? Unless we do, I submit it will be impossible for us to declare unilaterally a 200-mile limit.

I cannot understand why the opposition finds it necessary to come up with this disease every once in a while of precipitous unilateralism, the symptoms of which are absolute myopia.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the order made earlier this day the House will now revert to routine proceedings, specifically to statements by ministers.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—MINISTERIAL CONDUCT

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) tabled a report of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec with regard to allegations that certain ministers of the government had approached judges of the Superior Court of Quebec during the course of the last few years.

In the case five years ago of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) the Chief Justice concurred with the view of the judge concerned that while the approach in question was not proper practice, it did not constitute interference or intervention calling for formal protest and he recommends that the incident should be considered closed.

In the case involving the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) before he was elected to this House and while he was employed in the Prime Minister's Office six years ago, Mr. Justice Mackay decided not to take any formal action because it was clearly inspired by great concern for the nation's interest and not by personal reasons. The Chief Justice describes the approach as unusual—insolite is the word in French—but also believes this file should not be reopened.

● (1600)

In the recent case of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury), while the associate chief justice did not regard the approach as an attempt to influence his judgment and so took no action, he did regard the approach, despite its good intentions, as improper, and the Chief Justice found the facts related grave, given the stature of the person making the call and the circumstances in which the call was made. In the light of this finding the minister last night tendered to me his resignation.

After receiving the report of the Chief Justice, I consulted the Minister of Justice to ascertain if it contained any information which would justify the laying of formal charges of interference in the judicial process. I have been advised by the minister that it is the opinion of the law officers of the Crown that in none of the cases do they find grounds for charges that any of the ministers concerned acted illegally.

To conclude that there has not been illegal action is not, however, to say that there has been no impropriety. Indeed, in the case of the Minister of Public Works the Chief Justice has noted the gravity of the facts which led Mr. Justice Hugessen to regard the call to him as improper, however well motivated it may have been.

Had the associate chief justice felt the matter so serious as to take formal action to have it reported at the time to the Chief Justice, and through him to me or to the Minister of Justice, there is no doubt that I would have taken immediate steps to have an investigation made and, in the light of what was revealed, would if necessary have requested the resignation of the minister. I entirely concur with the view of the Chief Justice that the independence of the judiciary must remain protected from interventions from members of the cabinet, whatever may be the quality of the intentions which inspire them, and I believe the course of action I have described is the appropriate one which should be followed where members of the judiciary perceive that their independence is in any way being affected by members of the executive.

But the associate chief justice clearly was of the view that the call from the Minister of Public Works did not warrant formal protest. I do not excuse the minister's lapse of judgment in this matter. I sympathize with his good intentions, but I do not condone what he did. We have heard his apology this morning, and the way in which hon. members in all parties in this House received his apology and spoke of his distinguished career. After considering his long service to this House and to our country, and his well recognized stature as a man of honour without peer amongst us, I have come to the conclusion that I should not accept his resignation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Trudeau: Nothing further would be gained by my acceptance of it, and much would most assuredly be lost, not only to the government but to parliament and to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: As regards the other two cases, though the judges concerned did not feel that any formal action should be taken and the Chief Justice has concluded that these incidents should be considered closed, I believe them to be sufficiently serious to warrant not only the sincere regret which the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, expressed this morning, but also that there should be an immediate clarification of the regime which under this and, I hope, any future government will govern the relationship of members of the cabinet with members of the judiciary.

I agree with the Chief Justice that the independence of the judiciary is a cornerstone of our democratic system and must be jealously guarded against all attacks. Indeed, I would go further and say that we must do what we can to avoid affecting the principle of judicial independence with even the appearance of possible compromise.

An hon. Member: Gee!

Mr. Trudeau: This clearly must not be achieved by saying that ministers may have no contact with judges. That would be ridiculous, not only for its effects on purely social relationships but also because a number of ministers must in the course of their duties discuss matters of government business with members of the judiciary. Indeed, it is clear that the rules on contact with judges vary somewhat not only in what they say, but in how they are customarily applied in the various jurisdictions of this country. Some hon. members of this House may even have different views as to what their duties to their constituents require them to do from time to time in getting in touch with judges.

But, in so far as this government is concerned, I believe that it must be clearly established that in future no member of the cabinet may communicate with members of the judiciary concerning any matter which they have before them in their judicial capacities, except through the Minister of Justice, his duly authorized officials or counsel acting for him, nor may any member of the cabinet communicate with members of quasi-judicial bodies which are constituted as courts of record concerning any matter which they have before them in their judicial capacities except through the minister responsible, his duly authorized officials, or counsel acting for him.

I turn now to the matter of public inquiry, such as is being requested by the opposition. I continue to hold the view that such inquiries are, by definition, related to inquisitory concepts of justice and should not be resorted to except when the rule of law cannot be relied upon to ensure that justice is done.

In the present case, in so far as relations between certain ministers and judges are concerned, the facts are known since both the ministers and judges have from personal knowledge stated those facts. it is also known that in the opinion of the law officers of the Crown those facts do not give rise to criminal or contempt action.

In so far as relations between ministers themselves are concerned, I stated this morning and I repeat now that, in my view, the privacy of conversations between any two individuals in society should be respected, except when the greater good of society demands otherwise. Since it is not improper to seek counsel and advice from a friend, even be he a minister, in any grave matter of personal concern, and since there is no reason to believe, nor has anyone in this House or outside alleged, that any conversation between ministers has resulted in any crime or conspiracy, there is no prima facie case to demand that secrecy of private communications be broken.

For these reasons, unless allegations or facts are brought to my attention of which I presently know nothing, I conclude that there is no need in this case for a public inquiry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I, like other leaders of parties in this House, respond under a certain difficulty because only moments before the reading of this statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did we receive copies of it. We were denied the opportunity to have those copies delivered in advance. That is at least uncivil behaviour on the part of the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: But that is not the worst of his performance here today or the worst element of what he has just had to say.

● (1610)

It was clear when the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) spoke today in the House that there was a feeling that he had acted, in offering his resignation, with the propriety that one would come to expect of a man with his distinguished record of public service in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: He indicated, in the act of offering his resignation, a set of high standards and a consciousness of public responsibility; the Prime Minister has just indicated that his standards personally and as leader of the government are not as high.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I have a great respect as a man for the Minister of Public Works. I think it was entirely appropriate for him to present his resignation and I believe that in the circumstances, having regard to a judgment by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Quebec that the minister had acted in a way which the judge characterized as improper, it is inexcusable for the Prime Minister now not to accept that resignation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: The arrogance of power.

Mr. Lang: Except you recognize his honour and his distinction.

An hon. Member: Not yours, Otto.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the honour and distinction of the Minister of Public Works and I regret it is not shared by his leader and perhaps by some of his colleagues.

I want to turn for a moment to the question of a public inquiry and the Prime Minister's refusal to widen the ambit of an investigation which the Chief Justice in his report indicated was limited and restricted to very narrow grounds. The Prime Minister has said in his statement that the facts are known.

Mr. Stanfield: To whom?

Mr. Clark: To whom? The answer is the facts are not known to the parliament of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: They are not known to the people of Canada, and they are not known to the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec. If they are known to anyone they are known only to the Prime Minister of Canada and he has indicated to us today that despite the evidence of impropriety, despite actions which the Chief Justice of Quebec has described as improper, his standards do not lead him to accept the resignation which the standard of the Minister of Public Works caused him to offer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: So the facts are not known, Mr. Speaker. Since those facts relate to the ethics of ministers of the Crown, to the relations between ministers of the Crown and the courts of the land, it is important that the facts be known. It is important that the House of Commons know what the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) said to the Prime Minister relative to his own involvement in this affair. It is important that we know what other ministers, if any, what other citizens, if any, were involved in any attempt to intervene, to use the words of the Minister of Public Works, in decisions by the courts of the country. These are the facts which the parliament of Canada and the people of Canada have a right to know—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —if there is to be, in fact, a safeguarding of the independence of the judiciary in Canada.

From time to time, Mr. Speaker, Canadians ask about the distinction between major political parties in this country. The distinction is perhaps evident here today. The Prime Minister has indicated that he is satisfied there has been no impropriety; we, Sir, are not satisfied that there has been no impropriety.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We will not be so satisfied until the Prime Minister has come clean with the House of Commons and the people of Canada and laid before us, this highest court in the land, the facts—all of the facts relating to the activities of the ministers of his government and their attempts at intervention in the processes of justice and the activities of the courts of this land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I want to say just one more thing on this matter, Mr. Speaker, that is, that to many of us who are not lawyers, who are innocent of the law, it is well established and well known—

An hon. Member: Ignorant.

Mr. Clark: —that there are certain ethical standards which should apply to individual Canadians, whether they sit in high positions or in low, relative to the independence of the courts and the integrity of the institutions of this country.

We know that any of us who attempted to intervene in court proceedings would be, at the least, acting in an improper way. That same standard should apply to ministers of the Crown much more strongly, if anything, than to ordinary citizens. What we have had indicated to us today by the decision of the Prime Minister, first not to accept the resignation, and second, not to launch an inquiry, is that in the view of his government there is an acceptable double standard which allows one code of conduct for ministers of the Crown—

An hon. Member: Liberals.

Mr. Clark: —and a more stringent code of conduct for the ordinary people of Canada.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Clark: That double standard is not good enough.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: That is utter nonsense.

Mr. Clark: I trust that the reference to utter nonsense did not come from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) of the land who is responsible—

Mr. Basford: Yes, it did.

Mr. Clark: It deepens my concern even more if it did. We have not had the four hours to consider this infamous document that the Prime Minister had to prepare it. I can say to the House that we do not accept at all his refusal to accept a resignation which should have been accepted; we do not accept his suggestion that, because he knows facts which he believes it would be inconvenient for the people of Canada to know, he will not establish a full inquiry.

We intend to continue in this House to press with every means at our disposal for a full and complete public inquiry that will cast public light upon the activities and involvement of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and any other minister in this activity. We expect and we hope in light of the gravity of this question, however constrained we are by the rules of the House, however stonewalled we are by the refusal of the Government of Canada to give parliament information that parliament has a right to have, that we will at least enjoy the support of the people of Canada in this conflict.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Ordinary Canadians will not accept a government which insists upon a double standard of law where there is one code for ministers who can get away with intervention and a very different code for the ordinary people of the land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Nonsense!

● (1620)

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the profound disservice the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has done to this country's history of parliamentary government. Not only am I disturbed; I am surprised. I thought that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) recognized the important tradition of our system of government, a tradition established in our country and followed elsewhere for hundreds of years, which distinguished between moral conduct of a minister and strict legalisms. He submitted, on the basis of the report tabled earlier today, his resignation to the Prime Minister. Many in this House had kind, indeed honest things to say about the past performance of the minister. We meant what we said.

We thought that the Prime Minister would recognize the seriousness of that resignation. Obviously it was not tendered on the spur of the moment, as some kind of gimmick. The Minister who submitted his resignation knows something of the traditions of parliamentary government and knows that one should comply with those traditions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I am sure the minister submitted his resignation in good faith, and I expected the Prime Minister to accept it in equal good faith. This afternoon he reneged. He did a great disservice to the history of democratic government in our country. When making his statement the Prime Minister said:

> Insofar as this government is concerned, I believe that it must be clearly established that in future no member of the cabinet may communicate with members of the judiciary concerning any matter that they have before them in their judicial capacities, except through the Minister of Justice . . .

Members on my side of the House and, I am sure, some on the other side consider that these words the Prime Minister uttered today represent the norm. He said that which is always expected in a parliamentary government. It was unnecessary to refer to future courses of action. We have always understood the rules which must guide a minister's conduct. Because the Minister of Public Works in a brief, temporary, single act violated that code, violated that principle of our system of government, he submitted his resignation this morning. On that basis the Prime Minister ought to have accepted it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: By turning down the minister's resignation the Prime Minister will increase the cynicism of the population of Canada. Some in society—I will not exaggerate their numbers but there are quite a few—believe that there is one law for the rich and powerful and another law for those not so rich or powerful. In my view the Prime Minister is saying that behaviour inappropriate to his own criteria will not be tolerated in future, but that he is going to accept such behaviour for the immediate past on the part of his ministers. The Prime Minister knows the traditions of our system of government and knows that the principle he enunciated in the House this afternoon has always existed.

The Prime Minister also knows that if this had taken place in Westminster, not only would the minister's resignation have been accepted today, it would have been forthcoming many days ago. If it had not been offered, a conscientious Prime Minister would have asked for it. I regret having to say this, but I believe it strongly.

The Prime Minister also said that he rejects the need for a public inquiry. What will be the effect of this rejection? Many opposition members have directed questions, serious questions, to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), not about the proceedings in which he is involved before the courts but about his involvement with the activities of the Minister of Public Works. So far he has adopted a totally inappropriate attitude in the House and refused to answer questions. Without an inquiry, how is it possible for the House and the people of Canada to know what he said to the Minister of Public Works? Did he persuade that minister to influence, or attempt to influence, the judge? Surely we should know that.

If the minister was innocent, all he needed to do before today was get up, describe the conversation which took place and establish his innocence. He has systematically refused to answer questions in the House. Thus the clear possibility remains that one minister of the Crown directly requested another minister of the Crown to interfere in the judicial process. Without a public inquiry that whole relationship, that whole course of events, will remain obscure. The people of Canada, the people out there, outside the House, who want some ground for respecting our parliamentary government and who support the separation of the judiciary from the executive, will remain cynical. They will say, "This is a cover-up; there they are, those powerful people. They make the law; they implement the law. They even mingle with the judiciary; and they get away with violations." Cab drivers, fishermen, and other working people know in their hearts that they would not get away with such violations.

I repeat, the members of my party are profoundly disturbed with this decision. We think it does a great disservice to our country, to our country's history and will not reflect favourably on the government. We intend in the days ahead to pursue the matter with great determination because we think it is absolutely essential to separate the judicial from the executive functions of government. We are not going to let a renegade government abuse that principle.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my intervention will be quite short. I would have liked to give my view on the Prime Minister's statement, but I do not know what happened, I have not yet received the French copy.

I have tried by all possible means to get that famous copy; I do not want to accuse the Prime Minister, he may not be responsible, but I have tried everything but I did not obtain that copy. I should not be told that there was not enough time to make a translation, because the Prime Minister has enough secretaries and bureaucrats in his office to write both statements in French and in English I do not accept that. I will keep my comments for some other time, just as long as it takes to get a French copy.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. According to the practice established last Easter, there should now follow a short question period in which brief questions may be directed only to the minister who made the statement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, out of sheer disgust, I move:

That the House do now adjourn.

● (1630)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In accordance with the Standing Orders of this House it is well established that such a motion, as long as it is in writing and is in good form, is always in order and is not debatable. I have received in the proper form the motion now put by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: This House therefore stands adjourned until 2 p.m. on Monday.

On motion of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) the House adjourned at 4:33 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA

March 4, 1976

The Honourable Jules Deschênes,
Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec, Quebec District,
Court House,
Montreal, Quebec.

Dear Chief Justice Deschênes:

You will be aware that in his letter to me dated February 20, 1976, Mr. Justice Mackay drew to my attention three incidents which, in his view, constituted unwarranted attempts by Ministers of the Government of Canada to interfere with the judicial process in cases that were before judges of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec.

As I indicated in my remarks in the House of Commons yesterday which are set out in the enclosed copy of the Debates, I feel that this is a matter on which I, as Minister of Justice should communicate with you as Chief Justice of the Court in question. In this regard, you will note that the transcript of the debates makes reference throughout to the Chief Justice of the Province of Quebec; it should of course refer to the Chief Justice of the Superior Court.

My reason for believing that the communication should be with you is set forth in the Debates. Put simply, I feel that if there is information indicating that anyone is or has been seeking improperly to interfere with the due administration of justice in a court, by approaches to a judge or otherwise, this is a matter of which the Chief Justice of the Court, as the judge principally responsible for the management of the Court and for protecting its independence and integrity, would be made fully aware.

I am therefore writing to you to invite you to draw to my attention, if you deem such action appropriate, information that may be in your possession respecting any unwarranted attempts to interfere with the proper administration of justice in your Court in respect of matters that should be of concern to me.

Yours sincerely,

Ron Basford.

APPENDIX "B"

CHIEF JUSTICE
SUPERIOR COURT OF QUEBEC

11776 March 12, 1976

Montreal, March 10, 1976.

The Honourable Ron Basford, M.P., Q.C., Minister of Justice,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Mr. Minister:

By your letter of March 4 last, you forwarded to me an invitation which, in its essential parts, read as follows:

> "My reason for believing that the communication should be with you is set forth in the Debates. Put simply, I feel that if there is information indicating tht anyone is or has been seeking improperly to interfere with the due administration of justice in a court, by approaches to a judge or otherwise, this is a matter of which thee Chief Justice of the Court, as the judge principally responsible for the management of the Court and for protecting its independence and integrity, would be made fully aware.
>
> I am therefore writing to you to invite you to draw to my attention, if you deem such action appropriate, information that may be in your possession respecting any unwarranted attempts to interfere with the proper administration of justice in your Court in respect of matters that should be of concern to me."

This invitation was extended against the background of allegations which had recently been made public to the effect that on three occasions Ministers of the Government of Canada had approached judges of the Superior Court of Quebec during the course of the last few years.

At the outset it is important to recall the basic principles which govern the relations between the judiciary and the other two branches of government in our country.

The British North America Act of 1867 deals with the executive branch in chapter III, the legislative branch in chapter IV and the judiciary (Judicature) in chapter VIII.

Sections 96, 99 and 100 of the B.N.A. Act assure the judiciary the guarantees of independence and security which are essential to its impartiality and which have been guaranteed by long tradition since the Act of Settlement of 1700 (12-13 William III, Chapter 2), notwithstanding the Constitutional Act of 1791 (31 George III, Chapter 31), in conformity with the recommendation of Lord Durham in his Report of January 31, 1839 (Lucas, II, page 327) and by virtue of the two acts enacted under the Union in 1843 (7 Victoria, Chapter 15 and Chapter 65).

It is of the utmost importance that this independence of the judiciary, achieved through great effort during the course of the last three centuries, be jealously guarded against all attacks.

More particularly, it must remain protected from interventions from Members of the Cabinet, whatever may be the quality of the intentions that inspire them.

It remains to add, in the light of recent events that it must also be protected from interventions from Parliament. I can do no better than to recall the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the House of Commons on September 15, 1903:

> "It is a strange doctrine to preach that the judges are responsible to Parliament. Where is that responsibility? I have always understood that the judges were responsible only to their own conscience, and Parliament has no power over them. True, they can be removed, but only on an address of both Houses of Parliament. That law has been adopted to make them absolutely independent of Parliament, and they are only responsible to Parliament in extreme cases of malfeasance."
>
> (Can. H. of C. Debates, Sept. 15, 1903, p. 11313).

Within this system, certain persons hold the responsibility for ensuring the integrity and the efficacy of the functioning of the judicial system.

From the outset, considering the nature of the events which cause me to write to you and in order to avoid any confusion, it seems to me that we must discard any suggestion that the Canadian Judicial Council has a role to play in this matter. its jurisdiction relates to an examination of complaints relating to the conduct of judges and not to complaints that might concern the conduct of third parties in relation to them. (Judges Act, 1970 R.S.C. chapter J-1, section 30-32).

This having been said, the Department of Justice Act (1970 R.S.C. chapter J-2) provides in section 4 that

> "The Minister of Justice shall
>
> . . .
>
> c) have the superintendence of all matters connected with the administration of justice in Canada, not within the jurisdiction of the governments of the provinces;"

On the other hand, my duties as Chief Justice are described in part in section 21a of the Courts of Justice Act of Quebec (1964 R.S.Q., chapter 20, as amended by 1974 S.Q. chapter 11, section 13):

> "21a. The Chief Justice, the Senior Associate Chief Justice and the Associate Chief Justice of the Superior Court shall coordinate and apportion the work of the judges of such court.
>
> The judges of such court shall be under the supervision of the Chief Justice, the Senior Associate Chief Justice and of the Associate Chief Justice and must comply with their orders and directives as regards the carrying out of their work.

Such paragraphs apply subject to the provisions which follow."

As everyone knows however, this statutory provision describes but one part of the total duties of the Chief Justice, and that his duties derive even more from unwritten practice and tradition.

One thing is certain, I have a profound concern for the integrity of the Superior Court, the independence of its members and the efficacy of its work.

There exists then a definite point of contact between your obligations and mine, though they may come from different sources: it is for this reason that I consider it my duty to respond to your invitation.

I consider myself however under no obligation in relation to Parliament—save that of good behaviour—nor towards the government and the invitations to undertake an inquiry which have been addressed to me in the House of Commons appear to me to be out of place.

Even more out of place appears to me to be the suggestion, also expressed in the House of Commons, that there would exist a "cosy 'All in the family' arrangement" (H. of C. Deb., March 4, 1976, page 11490).

I can also only dismiss the proposition that I proceed to interview privately one or other Members of the Cabinet whose names were mentioned in the House. I was not appointed to conduct a commission of inquiry and of course it is obviously not one of my functions to set myself up as a semi-official investigator on behalf of the House of Commons.

I have therefore not met with your colleagues nor had the least contact with them, either directly or indirectly.

I have learned through the media, these past few days, the allegations of unwarranted interventions that the Honourable Judge Kenneth C. Mackay forwarded to you by letter of February 20, 1976 concerning the Honourable Marc Lalonde, the Honourable Jean Chrétien and the Honourable Charles M. Drury.

These are obviously matters of concern to me, and concerned me as soon as they came to my attention. I must point out however that no one had made the least mention of them to me before the reports of the Globe & Mail of Toronto on March 3. Moreover, the first two incidents arose during the term of my predecessor who, to the best of my knowledge, had not been made aware of them, at least officially.

I therefore do not want to set myself up here as a judge neither of your colleague nor of mine. But in view of the publicity that these incidents have attracted and considering the effect that they are likely to have on the conception that the public holds and should hold concerning the administration of justice, I believe it opportune to forward to you the information that I have so that you may, in respect of your responsibilities, adopt such measures as appear to you to be appropriate. I will do the same, as may be appropriate, within the sphere of my responsibilities.

The three incidents arose in the Province of Quebec and involved three members of the Bar. It therefore appears to be in order to recall certain rules which regulate the conduct of lawyers.

Section 2 of the Bar Act (1967 S.Q. chapter 77) came into force on June 29, 1967 and has not since been amended:

"2. An advocate is an officer of the court and participates in the administration of justice.

2. L'avocat exerce une fonction publique auprès du tribunal et collabore à l'administration de la justice."

Regulation number 1 of the Bar of Quebec was adopted on October 20, 1967 and came into force on February 1, 1968. The sections which follow, taken from this regulation, have not been amended since:

"29. 1. An advocate must serve justice and uphold the authority of the Courts. He must never compromise the honour and dignity of the Bar. He must be faithful to his clients and honest and courteous to other advocates. So he must scrupulously discharge the duties imposed by the rules, traditions and customs of the profession."

"43. 3. In the absence or without the knowledge of the other party or of his advocate, he shall not make, before judgment or decision, on behalf of a party in a contested matter, any verbal or written representations to a judge, a court or the members of a judicial or quasi-judicial body."

"68. An advocate shall not, by fraudulent or illegal acts, try to prevent that justice be done."

I now propose to deal briefly with each one of the incidents in question.

One of them involved the Honourable Jean Chrétien and Mr. Justice Harry L. Aronovitch, in the fall of 1971.

Mr. Justice Aronovitch has provided me with the following description of the event which he has authorized me to transmit to you:

"On September 30, 1971, I heard the following matters: 1. Petition to ratify proposal; 2. Opposition to ratification of proposal; 3. Motion to delay ratification of proposal. At the termination of the hearing, it was agreed that written notes were to be submitted within one week, and, then, I was to make all the afore said matters under advisement.

Some time in October 1971, Mr. Jean Chrétien, whom I did not (and still do not) know, telephoned to find out when I would render judgment. He identified himself to me, not as a cabinet minister, but as a member of Parliament interested in the people in his riding or constituency where apparently the petitioner was operating.

As occurs on the rare occasion when such a call is received from a lawyer, I told him that I would render judgment when ready, or something to that effect. In any event, as I recall, I made it clear that his telephoning me would have no bearing on the date of the judgment which, again, was the only subject raised in the call.

I subsequently conveyed my feelings to some of our colleagues, at lunch, but did not consider the matter serious enough to report it to the Chief Justice; that is, while I consider the telephone call was not proper practice, I did not consider it to be interference or intervention calling for formal protest.

On November 3, 1971, my judgment was drafted, and on November 9, 1971, judgments were signed whereby I ratified the propoasl, as amended, dismissed the opposition, as well as the Motion to delay the ratification."

I share the views of Mr. Justice Aronovitch and, like him, I consider that the incident should be considered closed.

The second incident involved Mr. Marc Lalonde, at that time employed in the Prime Minister's office, and Mr. Justice MacKay.

Mr. Justice MacKay provided me with the version of the facts which he has authorized me to transmit to you:

"On Friday, March 6, 1970, the Crown led by Mr. Fred Kaufman (as he then was), completed its address to the jury sitting in the trial of Regina v. Robinson and eleven other persons accused of several charges of conspiracy arising out of the destruction of a computer at Sir George Williams University in 1969. I dined out that evening and when I arrived at my home at 3275 Cedar Avenue, I found that there was a message to call Mr. Marc Lalonde with whom I was slightly acquainted. The message gave no particulars as to the reasons for the call and I decided to call him in the morning. When I called there was no answer. During the day I worked in the library of my home on the preparation of my address to the jury. When I completed my work for that day—it was about six I would say—I called Mr. Lalonde again. He said he had been skiing with his family that day but would like to . . . drop around and see me the next day, which was Sunday. No reason was given for his wish to see me and both my wife and I were curious as to the purpose of such a visit. I did know of course that he was in charge of the Prime Minister's office, and we conjectured that it might have something to do with the possibility of another appointment.

In any event, late on Sunday morning, while I was working in my library, Mr. Lalonde arrived and I greeted him cordially, gave him a drink and mentioned that he was fortunate to have been able to ski the day before although he must find it awkward to rush down every weekend to be with his family since his many duties must interfere with this. We then exchanged a few more such banalities in French, which was the language in which our entire conversation was conducted.

He then came to the point of his visit: he told me that on Friday a telegram had been sent to the Prime Minister by Prime Minister Williams of Trinidad in which the latter had said that if the accused—who were natives of Trinidad—were found guilty before he could get control of the local disturbed situation, that there was a very real possibility of a violent uprising in Trinidad. Mr. Lalonde said that when the telegram was received the Prime Minister had already taken off for a skiing holiday in the West, but that he—Lalonde—and others in the Prime Minister's office felt that the situation was so serious that it was decided to see me with a view to delaying the jury's decision. He pointed out that Canada had many interests in Trinidad and that these might well be affected if an uprising occurred in that country. I told him that I was about to charge the jury the next day and that there was nothing I could or would do to delay the jury's decision. I also told him that due to the complexity of the charges it would in my opinion be unlikely that a jury would come to any decision until the end of the week at the earliest. He repeated that the situation was one of grave concern.

As I showed him out we exchanged a few more general comments. The interview lasted for at least thirty minutes and although it continued to be cordial I was, inwardly at least, disturbed by this visit. Not only did I feel that I was being asked to see that the jury's decision was delayed, but that if for any reason the defence attorneys learned of the visit there was a possibility of a mistrial after an arduous and expensive eight week trial. I expressed this concern to my wife and requested that nothing be said about the visit at least until after the case was concluded.

I would add that I also decided not to say anything further about the matter, because Mr. Lalonde's visit was clearly inspired by his great concern for the nation's interests and not by personal reasons.

I subsequently reported this incident to a few of my colleagues including the late Associate Chief Justice Challies. But I did no informally after the case had been disposed of. I also told two or three friends who are members of the Bar.

I enclose my entire file relating to this matter. If some references may cause you offence I regret it, but as I have already assured you, all these letters were sent with the certainty that they would be read only by the recipients. I might also say that my purpose in bringing up the incidents set out in my letter to Mr. Basford, was simply to reply with particulars to the question he put in his letter to me. Although I was shocked to learn that my correspondence had been leaked to the press, nevertheless I believe that the publicity will have at least one beneficial effect. Never again will a member of the executive branch of the Government communicate with a judge about a case which he is trying."

I do not know the Honourable Marc Lalonde's version of the facts and I therefore do not wish to pass judgment on his conduct.

However, considering the particular circumstances surrounding this affair, I understand Mr. Justice Mackay's reaction in face of this unusual approach and I do not believe that it behooves me, six years later, to reopen the file.

The last incident involved, approximately two months ago, the Honourable Charles M. Drury and the Associate Chief Justice James K. Hugessen.

I can do no better than to transmit to you, with his authorization, Mr. Justice Hugessen's recital of the events that he provided to me on March 5:

> "Mr. Drury telephoned me during the hearing of the contempt proceedings against André Ouellet. The call came to my home, in the evening, after dinner, when I was in the basement helping my youngest son to assemble a model train set which he had received for his birthday, a few days before. I took the call where I was and did not make any notes of it. The date was between the first and second days of the hearing, which were respectively January 8 and January 16, 1976. I am almost certain that the actual date of the call was Wednesday, January 14.
>
> I have known Mr. Drury for many years and, while we are not intimate, we are on first-name terms.
>
> The conversation dealt with two aspects of the Ouellet case:
>
> 1. Whether it would be possible for Mr. Ouellet to make a formal apology and thereby bring the proceedings to an end, and
>
> 2. The view which Mr. Drury felt was being expressed in some quarters in Ottawa that the proceedings against Mr. Ouellet were in some way a ganging up of the English speaking Establishment against prominently placed French speaking persons.
>
> With regard to the first point, I simply told Mr. Drury that a person accused of contempt could always attempt to purge his offence by making a full and complete apology and that any such action would undoubtedly be taken into account by the Court in its final disposition of the matter. I also told him that the working out of the terms of the apology and any related matters should be discussed between counsel in the case and that I should not be involved until counsel had reached an agreement and were prepared to see me jointly. In fact, I had had . . . a rather similar discussion with both counsel in my chambers immediately before the case started, on January 8. In both cases, the discussion was very short and came to an end when, in the first case, Mr. Ouellet's counsel and, in the second case, Mr. Drury said that Mr. Ouellet denied having spoken the words attributed to him. Since an apology would necessarily involve an admission of the words alleged, any further discussion was futile.
>
> On the second point raised by Mr. Drury, I simply told him that I had never heard of any such thing, that I considered it to be ridiculous, and that, in any event, as a judge these matters were completely beyond my competence and I could not even consider them.
>
> While I felt at the time that the call was improper (and I believe I said so to Mr. Drury), I did not think that he was attempting to influence my judgment. I rather had the impression that he was attempting, if possible, to head off a confrontation between the executive and judicial branches of government. In any event, rightly or wrongly, I did not take any action with regard to the call and dismissed it from my mind. To the extent that one can determine one's own mental processes, I am quite convinced that the call did not influence my decision one way or the other."

In fact, as you know, Mr. Justice Hugessen upheld the request for a citation for contempt of court by judgment dated January 23, 1976, which judgment is now under appeal.

I have little doubt that the facts related by Mr. Justice Hugessen are grave, considering the stature of the person making the call and the circumstances in which the call was made to him.

However, I do not know the Honourable Mr. Drury's version of the facts and I imagine there were no witnesses to the event.

Therefore, I abstain from passing judgment, except to note that Mr. Justice Hugessen played but a passive role here and was the victim of circumstances.

These are, Mr. Minister, the facts that I consider it my duty to bring to your attention.

Considering the very special circumstances that have surrounded the revelation of these incidents and the debates in Parliament to which they have given rise, I have no objections to your making this letter public, if you consider that appropriate. My three colleagues whose version of the events is set out above, have also consented to the publication of this letter.

Indeed I would see some advantage in doing so, so that the public may be reassured of the integrity of the judiciary, in view of the negative results of the approaches of which my colleagues were the object.

Yours truly,

Chief Justice,
(signed) Jules Deschênes

Quebec, March 10, 1976.

Chief Justice Deschênes submitted this account to me in my capacity of Senior Associate Chief Justice of the Superior Court especially responsible for the administration of the Superior Court in the Quebec Appeal Division.

After consideration and discussion, I agree entirely with the views expressed by my colleague.

Senior Associate Chief Justice,
(signed) Eugène Marquis

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday March 15, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROPOSED DISCUSSION OF RULES GOVERNING BAIL FOR DANGEROUS OFFENDERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity. All of Canada was shocked at the murder of yet another policeman in the city of Calgary. It was a further shock when the public was informed that the two main figures involved in this tragic weekend drama, William Nichols and John Gamble, were released on bail after having been charged with attempted murder and murder respectively. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre):

That this House urge the Attorney General of Canada to contact all provincial attorneys general in order to discuss and set out rules and criteria regarding the granting of bail to dangerous offenders such as the said Nichols and Gamble who committed another horrible deed in Calgary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House before presentation pursuant to Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Woolliams: The Minister of Justice wants to agree to it.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, the motion cannot be put.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED APPEAL TO URUGUAY TO END REIGN OF TERROR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. According to the research department of Amnesty International at least 6,000 persons in Uruguay, about one in every 450 of that country's 2.5 million people, is a political prisoner. During the last few years one in every 50 persons has been subjected to interrogation, arrest, imprisonment or torture. The rule of terror in Uruguay is brutal and as far reaching as any in the world. I therefore, move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That our Department of State for External Affairs send a controlled and dignified appeal to President Bardaberry of Uruguay seeking an end to such monstrous crimes in his nation.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion can only be presented with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF REFUSAL TO ACCEPT RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since, according to the basic rules of our judiciary system, a Canadian citizen cannot intervene in the affairs of a court concerning a case submitted to justice and acts illegally if he does, and since members of a government must not only abide by the same rules as every other citizen but should also make it a duty, as established authority, to set the example by taking on, as it were, the leadership of integrity, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House discuss immediately the statement made Friday by the Prime Minister to explain his refusal to accept the resignation of the Minister of Public Works, with a view to finding out whether in fact the rule of law can guarantee that justice be done in a case in which politics are involved, such as "the judges' affair", which concerns the House, and also to discuss the need to set up strict rules of professional ethics for parliamentarians in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

[English]

SPORTS

CONGRATULATIONS TO NEWFOUNDLAND ON WINNING THE CANADIAN BRIER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 with the indulgence of the House. On Saturday, March 13, in the city of Regina four of Newfoundland's finest took on the best curlers the mainland could muster and walked away with the Canadian Brier. Now, it is on to Duluth for the world's championship and in the words of Shakespeare: "Lead on McDuff—damn'd be he that first cries hold, enough". I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour):

That the House extend its congratulations to Newfoundland on winning the Canadian Brier and further that this House direct that they bring home the world cup from Duluth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to the presentation of the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSAL TO INVESTIGATE INCREASE IN PASSENGER RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The application of CNR to increase its passengers rates in Newfoundland is contrary to an announcement by the Minister of Transport on November 14, 1975 that all federal Crown corporations whose rates are subject to review or regulation by federal regulatory authorities will be subject to the government's anti-inflation guidelines. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the application of the CNR to increase passenger rates by some 250 per cent in the province of Newfoundland be investigated by the Canadian Transport Commission and that CNR be directed to cancel advertising which states: "Your money goes further when you go CN" and that "one of the few bargains left these days is a CN train ticket".

Mr. Speaker: The motion can only be presented with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST THAT CONSUMER MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT ON CONVERSATIONS WITH MR. DRURY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion. Because statements made by the Minister of Public Works have raised serious doubts about the propriety of the actions of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urges the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to make a full and complete statement on his discussions with the Minister of Public Works concerning the making of representations on his behalf to Associate Chief Justice Hugessen or any other members of the judiciary.

● (1410)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF BILINGUAL COURSES AT ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the federal government will have to pay an estimated $122,000 to put each of the Francophone cadets through the new bilingualism course at the Royal Military Academy and $72,000 for each English speaking cadet, and in light of present economic conditions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That the matter of the bilingual courses at the Royal Military College be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for an evaluation of these courses to determine if the Canadian taxpayer is receiving his money's worth and that a report be prepared by April 30.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ENVIRONMENTAL EFFECTS OF DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion is prompted by the fears of many Canadians who live near the Beaufort Sea and who depend on it for their livelihoods that the offshore drilling program proposed by Canmar for the summer could result in serious pollution damage to the area. In light of the fact that Mr. Justice Berger has already taken evidence about the possible effect of the program I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes):

That this House strongly recommends to the cabinet that it seeks a special report from the Mackenzie Pipeline Inquiry before making a final decision on Canadian Marine Drilling Ltd.'s application to drill in the Beaufort Sea.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

SPORTS

CONGRATULATIONS TO EGON BEILER ON WINNING WORLD WRESTLING CHAMPIONSHIPS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Flynn (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Mr. Egon Beiler of Kitchener, Ontario is a winner of gold medals at the British Empire Games, the Pan-American Games and the World Cup Games, and now is the first Canadian wrestler to win a gold medal at the World Championships, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont (Mr. Lachance):

That the House convey through Mr. Speaker heartiest congratulations to Egon Beiler of Kitchener for being the first Canadian to win a gold medal at the World Championships of Wrestling.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: Get him to wrestle inflation.

Mr. Speaker: Having heard the terms of the motion, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF FACTS SURROUNDING ALLEGED INTERFERENCE OF MINISTERS WITH JUDICIARY

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Since the Deschênes report has determined the exemplary conduct of the judges involved and pointedly excluded any examination of the ministers involved, does the Prime Minister intend to continue to keep from parliament the facts about the conduct of the ministers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Chief Justice Deschênes makes it clear why he does not comment on the ministers themselves and why he does not make an investigation of the ministers, and perhaps the Leader of the Opposition might want to refresh his memory on that. In so far as investigation of the facts, we believe that the facts which have to be known, in so far as they might or might not have consisted of contempt of court or interference with justice, have now been made known by the courts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Ridiculous!

An hon. Member: Stonewall.

Mr. Trudeau: Unless hon. members opposite believe that the Chief Justice is not telling all the truth—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are not telling all the truth.

Mr. Clark: We on this side of the House are confident that the Chief Justice has made public all the information which was available to him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We only wish the Prime Minister of Canada would follow that tradition and make available to the House of Commons the information he possesses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Since the matter of intent, as alleged by Mr. Justice Mackay, related to conversations among ministers which the Chief Justice did not, because he could not, investigate, will the Prime Minister tell the House why he asked the Department of Justice strictly to advise whether the letter of the Chief Justice provided grounds for laying charges? Since the reported approach contained statements that could have constituted an attempt to influence the court, why does the Prime Minister refuse to allow investigation of the events that led to a calculated approach to Mr. Justice Hugessen?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the premise of the hon. member's question is erroneous—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —when he indicates in some way that Mr. Justice Mackay is concerned about conversations between ministers. I know of nothing in Justice Mackay's allegations that would support that premise. Therefore, the conclusion is false.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I suggest the premise of the Prime Minister's response is evasive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: As a supplementary question I should like to ask the Prime Minister, just so that we might be clear as to where we stand on the rights of parliament to have the facts of this case, does it remain the position of the Prime Minister that the House of Commons and the people of Canada have no right to know about the events which the Prime Minister knows about—the events that led to an intervention by a minister of the Crown with the courts of the land?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think all the facts about that are known—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Not at all.

Mr. Trudeau: —in so far as they relate to the contempt proceedings. In so far as they relate to conversations between any two members of cabinet, I explained yesterday that that, like any conversation between any two members here, should not be the concern of parliament.

An hon. Member: Conspiracy.

Mr. Trudeau: If parliament suspects, as one member shouts, that there has been conspiracy or indeed something illegal there, I suggest they should make an accusation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crouse: Double standard Grits.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—INQUIRY WHETHER MR. DRURY ASKED ABOUT APOLOGY BY CONSUMER MINISTER

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. Chief Justice Deschênes said that an invitation to undertake an inquiry addressed to him in the House of Commons appeared out of place and he said that he was not going to act as any investigator for the House of Commons. May I put my question to the Minister of Public Works? Mr. Justice Hugessen stated that the Minister of Public Works asked:

> ... whether it would be possible for Mr. Ouellet to make a formal apology and thereby bring the proceedings to an end.

Is that in fact what the minister did and in doing so did he advise the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and "the other party" to the proceedings of his intention to try to solve the matter?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the question is in two parts. The answer to the first part is in the affirmative. The second part will not be answered by me for reasons given by the Prime Minister—

An hon. Member: Oh, come on!

An hon. Member: Come clean!

Mr. Clark: These are the facts that we have, are they?

Mr. Drury: —relating to the privacy of communications as between colleagues and myself.

Mr. Clark: Relating to the arrogance of the government.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—POSSIBLE REFERENCE BY MR. DRURY TO GANGING UP OF THE ENGLISH AGAINST THE FRENCH

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Public Works another question in light of the fact that we are trying to get the facts. In the Deschênes report it is stated by the Chief Justice that:

> The view which Mr. Drury felt was being expressed in some quarters in Ottawa that the proceedings against Mr. Ouellet were in some way a ganging up of the English-speaking establishment against prominently placed French-speaking persons.

Is that what happened and in light of the judge's comment that he thought the minister was attempting to head off a confrontation between the judiciary and the executive, did the minister, in effect, warn the judge that the outcome of the case would have serious political repercussions and could threaten the courts?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): I think the answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is that the conversation I had with Judge Hugessen was in no way either intended by me, and I am quite sure from reading his report, interpreted by him as a threat of any sort, shape or form.

An hon. Member: That is not the question.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—INQUIRY WHETHER MR. DRURY ACTED ON OWN INITIATIVE IN CALLING JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Public Works. The minister was asked outside this House if he went to Judge Hugessen on his own initiative. There was a slight pause and he said, as I saw it on television, that he went on his own responsibility. I should like to ask him if he was requested by any other minister of the Crown to have a conversation on that matter with Judge Hugessen and if so, by what minister?

● (1420)

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised. The hon. gentleman watched the television program. I am surprised that he should pose the same question, because, on that television program, I made it clear I acted on my own responsibility and that I accepted responsibility for what I did.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: At whose initiative?

Mr. Broadbent: You have not accepted it yet.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, please allow me to finish.

Mr. Clark: We will allow you to resign.

Mr. Drury: I made it clear that I accepted responsibility for what I did or did not do. It would be less than proper to shift the blame onto other shoulders. That is was the hon. gentleman is encouraging me to do.

Mr. Broadbent: Not at all.

Mr. Drury: I refuse.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, in a democracy a government does not conduct its affairs as if it were a gentleman's club.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the serious allegations about the minister's own conduct contained in the report of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec, tabled in this House on Friday, and implicating the minister in wrong behaviour, which he acknowledged last Friday morning, does he not think it is in the public interest for the public to know whether such course of action was proposed to him by another minister of the Crown?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is, categorically, no. There is a public curiosity. If I accept responsibility for what is done, it would be shameful of me to try to push it off onto others, in order to protect myself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBILITY CONSUMER MINISTER SHOULD MAKE STATEMENT ON TALKS WITH MR. DRURY CONCERNING INTERVENTION WITH JUDGE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, although I accept the minister's view that he is responsible for his actions—

An hon. Member: Beware the Ides of March.

Mr. Broadbent: —may I ask the Prime Minister if he does not think that the kind of private conversation to which he referred before must be made public, if there is the possibility that one minister asked another minister to take inappropriate action vis-à-vis the judiciary. I ask this as it is on public record that a minister approached Mr. John Turner. Mr. Justice Mackay alleges that a minister then approached the Minister of Public Works, with no other intent, obviously, than that of influencing the judiciary. I ask the Prime Minister if he does not think that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who saw fit not to be in the House today, should make a statement on the matter.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope I misunderstood. I think the hon. gentleman, in asking the question, suggested that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had approached the Minister of Public Works, with the intent that they should interfere with the judiciary. Surely, in the first place, that is against the rules, and the hon. member should withdraw.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Whose rules, Pierre? Yours?

An hon. Member: Rules according to St. Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, some hon. members opposite seem to have some doubt about ascribing intent to the ministers.

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question.

An hon. Member: The rules according to St. Pierre.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Don't get excited over there.

Mr. Broadbent: You are not answering.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on matters of rules, hon. members can always appeal to you. I was going to say, so far as the question is concerned, that the reasoning of the hon. member would only be valid if there had either been some conspiracy or some illegality.

Mr. Stanfield: That was not the position on Friday.

Mr. Trudeau: It has been established, Mr. Speaker, that neither of these is the case.

Mr. Andre: Who established it first?

[Editor's note: At this point there was an interruption from the gallery.]

Mr. Trudeau: I wonder who that is.

Mr. Paproski: That is the voice of the people.

Mr. Trudeau: I suggest the gentleman in the gallery is a few weeks late for the Tory convention.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY WHETHER CONSTITUTION PATRIATED BEFORE AMENDMENT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. We are lucky to live in a democracy, which enables us to have the parliamentary system we have here today, quite under the constitution.

Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the constitution. For the last three or four days, we have seen on television and heard over the radio the comments by provincial premiers who fear that the constitution which the Prime Minister is prepared to bring back to Canada will include amendments. I understand it is a matter of patriating the document to Canada and the Prime Minister as well as the Parliament of Canada, have no right to amend this constitution as long as both the provinces and the federal government will not agree. Therefore, to put it clear in the mind of Mr. Bourassa or Mr. Moores or anyone else in Canada, does the matter of bringing home the constitution include the matter of amendments or do we patriate the constitution with a view to amending it after discussions between the provinces and the federal government? I think that the Prime Minister owes it to the country and to himself to clarify the issue so that we stop fooling around with public opinion throughout Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member gives me the opportunity to shed light for the benefit of the public. I suspect he has a clear mind on this matter, but he is right to say that the declaration I made eight days ago was quite distorted. In answer to the hon. member and this can be checked by any member or reporter by refering to the text, I never said that I would act unilaterally. I said I would consult the provinces . . .

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: So, hon. members are surprised. They just have to refer to the text rather than to newspapers. I very clearly indicated that I would continue to consult the provinces and that I hoped we would reach an agreement with all provinces and, if not, then the government should consider introducing a motion before both Houses so that Parliament could act without the provinces. It is important that this first point be understood.

As to the second point, once again, Mr. Speaker, I think someone is trying, for reasons I ignore, to distort my words. I never said that once the constitution is back home the federal government intended to act unilaterally to give itself more powers or take some away from the provinces. On the contrary, I said that we should first patriate the constitution and then, between Canadians, we should continue to discuss the issue of sharing powers rather than go on discussing like we have been doing for one hundred years, when we have not even have patriated the constitution. I hope my answer is clear. Perhaps the hon. member wishes to ask a supplementary question? I would be glad to answer.

● (1430)

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

As I understand, instead of speaking of the patriation of the constitution to Canada as such, the provincial authorities of Quebec and other provinces speak of the amendments which the federal government would like to bring to it unilaterally. Now, people are left to believe, and even some newspapermen seem to be under that impression, that the right hon. Prime Minister wants to patriate the constitution and amend it unilaterally, while I understand that, first, if we patriate the constitution nothing will be changed and, second, if it is amended it will be amended once it has been brought back to Canada. So I would like to know if the Prime Minister fully agrees with this interpretation and if he can assure the House that there will be no constraint or abuse of power against any province once the constitution has been brought back to Canada.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that is a position I explained very clearly to the premiers of all provinces, and which I also publicly stated. It is this: as the hon. member said, it is a question of bringing back the constitution without in any way giving more power to the federal government, nor less to the provinces.

The premiers know that because this was the subject of our meeting of last April. I will even go further, Mr. Speaker, if people wanted to understand, and say that in the present situation, legally—not on the basis of tradition, but legally—being the only one empowered to deal with Westminster, the federal government could change this separation of powers. It would not be wise nor politically profitable, it would not be in conformity with tradition, but it would be legally possible. If we do as I propose, this will no longer be legally possible.

* * *

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF POSSIBLE INVESTIGATION BY QUEBEC BAR OF ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH JUDICIARY

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice. In the midst of the strange controversy involving the executive branch of government and the judiciary of Quebec, and in view of the fact that one minister of the Crown finds it proper to resign whereas the Prime Minister finds it improper for him to do so, has the Minister of Justice noted the clear references by Chief Justice Deschênes to the rules and regulations of the bar act in Quebec, specifically sections 1 and 2, and regulations 29, 43 and 68; and will the minister advise parliament whether he has knowledge from his colleagues or other parties that the Quebec Bar Association intends to assume its full responsibilities in this matter by setting up a disciplinary committee to investigate the facts brought to light by the Superior Court of Quebec and affecting the judges' prerogatives and authorities?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the latter part of the question I have no such knowledge, as I understand the question. With regard to the first part of the question, I would also draw the attention of the hon. member to page 3 of Judge Deschênes' letter, in which he quotes the Department of Justice Act, which provides:

The Minister of Justice shall . . .

(c) have the superintendence of all matters connected with the administration of justice in Canada, not within the jurisdiction of the governments of the provinces—

Of course, the provincial law societies acts and governing bodies are clearly within provincial jurisdiction.

KNOWLEDGE OF CONSUMER MINISTER OF POSSIBLE INVESTIGATION BY QUEBEC BAR OF ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH JUDICIARY

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

[Translation]

I am being asked to reply in French, and I shall answer in French or in English, whatever I choose.

Without referring in any way to the proceedings that are now sub judice, I would ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to tell the House or to advise Parliament whether, directly or indirectly, he has been made aware of steps taken by the Quebec Bar Association concerning the so-called Ouellet case. If so, and if he is aware that the Bar Association intends to assume its responsibilities, could he table any correspondence or documents that either he or his lawyers may have received to that effect?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I note that the hon. member does not know my title. I remind him that I am the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Secondly, in reply to his question, I simply want to answer no.

[English]

POSSIBILITY OF GUIDELINES FOR PROPER INTERVENTIONS WITH JUDICIARY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct the attention of the House to the statement on ethics on Friday. My question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Now that the Minister of Justice has been set up as a sort of clearing house for ethical standards for ministerial interventions with the courts—having just read the statement and listened to the Prime Minister I can draw no other conclusion—does the right hon. gentleman intend to make public some sort of set of guidelines so that we will all know what standards are established for proper and correct interventions that the Minister of Justice is to monitor?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion is that the Minister of Justice would monitor. Surely that is a misstatement, a misreading of what I said on Friday. What I indicated quite clearly in Hansard was that the communications would be through the Minister of Justice or through his officials. That is a different thing entirely.

Mr. Fairweather: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The embattled Mr. Justice Mackay stated in his letter that he believes the publicity will at least assure that never again will a member of the executive branch of the government communicate with a judge about a case which he is trying. Apparently the judge was optimistic.

Mr. Trudeau: Did you say optimistic?

Mr. Fairweather: Optimistic. That is a word that apparently is not much used these days. I want to know whether some time we will have an indication of what the Minister of Justice's role will be in—I do not know what word to use. Each word we use is apparently being shot down by the Prime Minister. How will anyone know what interventions can occur if ethical and proper standards are not established?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are clear ethical standards which apply to me and members of my department, and it is those that will apply.

INQUIRY WHETHER MR. DRURY ACTED ON OWN INITIATIVE IN CALLING JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to follow up the questioning of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, and my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. The Minister of Public Works—I assume today he is still Minister of Public Works—has just stated again that he takes full responsibility for his action of making representations to Justice Hugessen, but again he refused to say on whose initiative he acted. The Prime Minister implied on Friday afternoon that the conversations by the Minister of Public Works were in the nature of "seeking counsel and advice". Was the Prime Minister personally given that assurance by Mr. Turner and by the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In other words, is it the position of the Prime Minister that the minister acted strictly on his own initiative.

● (1440)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, it is, Mr. Speaker. I cannot, of course, speak for the other ministers or for Mr. Turner, but I can speak for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in relation to myself and what he said about other ministers. I do know that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs came to me and said: "Well, you know, what should I be doing; I have this case against me; here is my defence and what do you think?" I am revealing these conversations, perhaps improperly, but I want to indicate, Mr. Speaker, that I have discussed this matter with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and there has been no illegality or appearance of illegality between us.

If hon. members want to make any such allegations concerning the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs' conversations with me or with any other minister that, of course, is their right under the rules of this House. The procedure has been established for them to make this allegation and to defend it.

Mr. Clark: Give us the facts.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I am indebted to the Prime Minister for indicating at least some of the content of the conversation between one of his ministers and himself, but my question was directed to the conversation between the Minister of Public Works and himself. I am asking him again now, is it his understanding that the Minister of Public Works indicated to the Prime Minister that the Minister of Public Works, in making the improper approach he did to Mr. Justice Hugessen, did so on his own initiative.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have not only the word of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs but also the public statement of the Minister of Public Works that he did this, was not pushed to do it by anyone and that he took full responsibility.

REFUSAL OF CONSUMER MINISTER TO ANSWER CONCERNING ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE WITH JUDICIARY—OPINION OF PARLIAMENTARY COUNSEL

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I want to say to him by way of preface that he has refused repeatedly to disclose the nature of his conversation with Mr. Turner and the Minister of Public Works, and indeed has refused to say whether he was aware that the Minister of Public Works was making a representation on his behalf. I should like to ask him whether he has sought the view of the parliamentary counsel in respect of his claim that these matters are properly sub judice to the pending appeal in the contempt case so that we will know whether there is any solid basis of parliamentary practice or law for refusing to answer the questions put to him in this House.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): My answer is no.

[English]

REFUSAL OF CONSUMER MINISTER TO ANSWER BASED ON PRINCIPLE OF "SUB JUDICE"—POSSIBILITY JUSTICE MINISTER WILL SEEK LEGAL OPINION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the Minister of Justice, because this is an important matter we are discussing. Will the Minister of Justice consult the parliamentary counsel and make his advice available to this House so that we will know whether the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is resting his case on a fraudulent claim of privilege.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the parliamentary counsel is the adviser to the House on matters of the rules and not the Minister of Justice who, throughout the years, has assiduously avoided being a legal adviser to parliament.

* * *

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

MEASURES TO ASSURE CONTINUATION OF MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE HEARINGS IN VIEW OF COURT DECISION ON MR. CROWE

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the recent Supreme Court decision in the Marshall Crowe matter and its relationship to the Mackenzie Valley pipeline hearings before the National Energy Board, will the minister indicate what measures the government is now taking in order to ensure that these hearings may proceed without further delay.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Board have had, I think, two meetings and are meeting right now considering this important question of how the panel should be struck so that the hearing can proceed. I think that by the end of the day or very shortly we will have an answer to the question asked by the hon. member.

COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN MINISTER AND BOARD

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister say whether he has had any telephone conversations or communications with the National Energy Board during the last two months.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—RESIGNATION OF MR. DRURY—INSISTENCE ON ACCEPTANCE BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works who I know has been undergoing some soul-searching. Outside the House on Thursday, March 11, the Minister of Public Works denied reports that he had tendered his resignation by stating: "I have not resigned; I have not offered to resign—don't offer to resign". This would seem to imply that on Thursday at any rate the minister regarded the tendering of the resignation to be tantamount to a resignation itself. My question to the Minister of Public Works is: would he tell the House the reason for his apparent change of heart in this regard in a period of less than 12 hours. Is the minister now stating that his resignation was without foundation and without basis in fact?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interest of the hon. gentleman in a human interest story. I think it should be apparent to him that the basis on which I declined to answer the question in the House regarding what had happened was that until the Chief Justice had expressed his view, his judgment, it would be inappropriate either to make any comment or indeed to take any decision. It was only on receipt of the copy that was furnished to me of the opinion of the Chief Justice that I was able to come to a conclusion.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I find that answer of the Minister of Public Works most strange. The Minister of Public Works has ample opportunity to search his soul, to look into the matter, after which he took a very curious step. He submitted his resignation. Now, I want to ask the minister this: After considering the entire matter at this particular point, knowing that it was serious, does the minister still feel he was right in submitting his resignation on Friday?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House is grateful for this theosophical ramble. Yes. I thought then I was right. I still think I was right.

Some hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for that answer. Will the minister now, because he has stated he was right in submitting his resignation, resubmit the same to the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Alexander: —and insist that the Prime Minister accept his resignation.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, from a member of a democratic parliament, I find this doctrine passing strange.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Who is being philosophical now?

Mr. Drury: The hon. gentleman is suggesting I make up my mind on what is right and insist on everyone else following it.

Mr. Paproski: No; just the Prime Minister.

Mr. Drury: In tendering my resignation, in effect, I was putting myself to the judgment of my peers. I was not making the judgment unilaterally, as the hon. gentleman is inviting me to do. I put myself before the judgment of my peers, and if I do this I am required to accept that judgment, not, as the hon. member suggests, make a shambles of parliamentary democracy.

● (1450)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGESTION BY JUDGE HUGESSEN OF POSSIBLE CONFRONTATION BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND JUDICIARY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works who may have brought in a new parliamentary concept, namely, a conditional resignation with an option of non-acceptance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: In that section of the letter of the chief justice dealing specifically with the attempt to effect a solution undertaken by the Minister of Public Works, Justice Hugessen states that the minister was attempting, if possible, to head off a confrontation between the executive and the judicial branches of government. Can the minister indicate to the House precisely what Judge Hugessen meant by this statement, and can he say whether the Minister of Public Works or the Prime Minister did in fact anticipate a confrontation between the cabinet and the judiciary over the contempt proceedings launched against the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, quite clearly it would be inappropriate for me to try to tell the hon. member what Judge Hugessen meant in writing the letter to the chief justice. I think the hon. member would agree that the words speak for themselves. I think he has as much intelligence as I have to read English.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Much more.

Mr. Drury: Perhaps he has more. I am not sure that I would accept that definition in respect of some other people.

Mr. Clark: Call them, Bud.

Mr. Drury: I am sorry; I have forgotten the second part of the question.

Mr. Clark: You have forgotten a great deal.

Mr. MacKay: I appreciate the answers of the minister. Perhaps I could ask my supplementary of the Prime Minister. Was there or is there any substance to the proposition that the Prime Minister had suggested to him that a confrontation loomed between the executive and judicial branches of government over the case of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs because, if so, this is a very serious matter indeed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Certainly I never discussed anything of that nature with the Minister of Public Works or, to my recollection, with any other minister. But I would not hesitate to say that I was concerned with that possibility and I take it that hon. members are concerned with that possibility too, except obviously the leader of the NDP. That is the very fear that surely every member must have when there is a question of the executive and judicial powers relating to each other. Surely, that is the basis of the fear which underlies this whole attitude of the opposition. So, I should not be surprised if that had crossed the mind of the judges or of any other ministers or even of hon. members opposite. It certainly crossed my mind.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER ON APPROACHING A JUDGE ON A CONSTITUENCY MATTER

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question as well to the Prime Minister. On Friday, the President of the Treasury Board indicated that he approached Judge Aronovitch "on behalf of the unemployment of my constituency" which the judge considered to be "not proper practice". Is it the policy of the Prime Minister that approaching a judge on a constituency matter is considered one of those warranted attempts to interfere with the proper administration of justice?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I dealt with that question in my statement on Friday, March 12. If the hon. member reads the words on page 11771 of Hansard he would see I said:

Indeed, it is clear that the rules on contact with judges vary somewhat not only in what they say, but in how they are customarily applied in the various jurisdictions of this country. Some hon. members of this House may even have different views as to what their duties to their constituents require them to do from time to time in getting in touch with judges.

I leave that to the hon. members to decide for themselves. In so far as ministers are concerned, I go on in the next paragraph to indicate what the rule is. Therefore, I have settled it for the ministers. Perhaps the hon. members opposite and other members of the House might want to address this question in the future: what is their duty to their constituents as an ombudsman if the case drags on? Are they or are they not entitled to find out, when a case drags on—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not giving the answer to that but hon. members opposite have to read Judge Aronovitch to know that this practice, although he does not condone it, is one which has taken place in rare cases.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member has stated his code of ethics for himself, and that is fine. I stated it for the cabinet. I would not want to impose any particular code on parliament. I hope that parliament will make that decision for itself.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister and hopefully get an answer this time. The minister stated on Friday that he would reconsider any future attempts to influence the judiciary and he stated "of course I would not call Aronovitch. He does not like it". The question I want to ask the Prime Minister is whether he can assure the House that members of his cabinet will refrain in future from approaching members of the judiciary on matters before the court, whether they like it or not?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I expect this is a rhetorical question. If the hon. member looks at the code of conduct I spelled out on Friday he would obviously have the answer.

INQUIRY WHETHER CONSUMER MINISTER SPOKE TO MR. DRURY CONCERNING POSSIBLE INTERVENTION WITH JUDGE

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, without accepting for a minute the premise enunciated by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that he has privilege to hide behind in that some matter is sub judice but recognizing the minister's lack of candour and desire for self-protection, I should like to ask a question, which is not in any way to be considered sub judice in that it is not part of any of the facts in the case dealing with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs now on appeal nor would affect the interpretation of the law in relation to the case—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Dick: —did the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs talk to the Minister of Public Works regarding his case of alleged contempt of court prior to the trial of that case and prior to the phone call of the Minister of Public Works to the associate chief justice?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what I have already said last week.

INQUIRY WHETHER CITIZEN CAN EXPRESS DISAPPROVAL OF JUDGMENT

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): In compliance with the ethical standards outlined by the Prime Minister, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

After all that has happened to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, could the Minister of Justice tell the House whether the average Canadian citizen will be allowed, in the future, to express publicly his disagreement with the decision made by a judge, without being charged with contempt of court or risking imprisonment?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think that is quite an improper question. It obviously invites me to comment directly on a judicial decision.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—VIEW OF MR. LALONDE ON STATEMENT HE SOUGHT DELAY OF JURY DECISION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the statements contained in the report of Chief Justice Deschênes quoting Mr. Justice Mackay to the effect that in the half hour visit which the minister had with Mr. Justice Mackay on Sunday, March 8, 1970, he said he was there to seek a delay in the jury's decision, would the minister now like to correct the statements he has made to this House to the effect that all he was doing was asking a question as to when the decision would be made?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Certainly not, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBILITY OF ACTION BY PRIME MINISTER OF DIFFERENCE BETWEEN STATEMENTS BY MR. LALONDE AND JUDGE MACKAY

● (1500)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister said today that Chief Justice Deschênes was telling the truth, and that he has said one thing and the Minister of National Health and Welfare has said another about the visit on Sunday, March 8, 1970, and since obviously one of these distinguished gentlemen is not telling the truth, should the Prime Minister not take his responsibility in this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member made an error when speaking of Chief Justice Deschênes. He was problably talking about Justice Mackay.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As quoted by the Chief Justice.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, yes, the hon. member is right. As between Mr. Justice Mackay's version and the version of the Minister of National Health and Welfare there is a difference, shall we say, of memory of the facts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I find myself in a difficult position to see how this House or I can ascertain which of the two is right in his memory.

Mr. Broadbent: A public inquiry would help.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): That wouldn't change anything.

Mr. Trudeau: A public inquiry would have to weigh the memory of these two men.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Cross-Examine the minister.

Mr. Trudeau: Let me just say that Mr. Justice Mackay's memory has proved faulty in at least two instances.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Say that again, will you?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And say it outside the house.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister's judgment has proved wrong a number of times.

Mr. Trudeau: I will say it again, if the hon. member would like me to. Mr. Justice Mackay's memory has proved faulty on at least two facts. The first time was in his original letter when he said that the events took place in 1969, whereas in his later letter to Chief Justice Deschênes, he corrects that and says 1970. His memory slipped. It is not a serious matter.

An hon. Member: You didn't know how old you were.

Mr. Trudeau: As a matter of fact, there is another fact on which his memory obviously slipped. He said that my then principal secretary said I was skiing in the west, but it is established I was at that time doing an official tour up in Igloolik, and it is not possible—

An hon. Member: That's the same thing.

Mr. Trudeau: So obviously five, six or seven years later memories can be inaccurate, and in this case the judge was inaccurate in at least two instances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Then let us cross-examine the minister.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO ADJOURN

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, until the government comes to its senses, I see no reason for this House sitting. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin):

That the House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. By virtue of the Standing Orders, a motion to adjourn is always in order and is not debatable. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen.

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)) which was negatived on the following division.

(Division No. 117)

YEAS

Messrs.

Alexander
Alkenbrack
Andre (Calgary Centre)
Baker (Grenville-Carleton)
Baldwin
Balfour
Benjamin
Brewin
Broadbent
Clark (Rocky Mountain)
Coates
Crouse
Ellis
Epp
Fairweather
Firth
Friesen
Gilbert
Grafftey
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hnatyshyn
Hogan
Huntington
Jarvis
Jelinek
Kempling
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lavoie
Lawrence
MacDonald (Egmont)
MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)
MacLean
Marshall
McCain
McGrath
McKinnon
Mitges
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nystrom
O'Sullivan
Paproski
Patterson
Peters
Ritchie
Rynard
Scott
Stanfield
Stevens
Wagner
Wenman
Woolliams
Yewchuk—56

NAYS
Messrs.

Abbott	Dupras	Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Allard	Faulkner	Martin
Allmand	Fleming	Matte
Anderson	Flynn	McIsaac
Andras (Port Arthur)	Francis	McRae
Andres (Lincoln)	Gauthier (Roberval)	Milne
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)	Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)	Munro (Hamilton East)
Basford	Gendron	O'Connell
Beaudoin	Gillespie	Ouellet
Béchard	Goodale	Parent
Bégin (Miss)	Goyer	Penner
Blais	Gray	Portelance
Blaker	Guay (St. Boniface)	Poulin
Boulanger	Harquail	Railton
Breau	Herbert	Raines
Buchanan	Hopkins	Reid
Caccia	Isabelle	Richardson
Cafik	Jamieson	Rooney
Campagnolo (Mrs.)	Kaplan	Roy (Timmins)
Caouette (Témiscamingue)	Lachance	Roy (Laval)
Clermont	Lajoie	Sauvé (Mrs.)
Comtois	Lalonde	Sharp
Condon	Lang	Smith (Saint-Jean)
Cyr	Langlois	Stollery
Danson	Laniel	Tessier
De Bané	Lapointe	Trudeau
Demers	Leblanc (Laurier)	Trudel
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)	Lessard	Turner
Douglas (Bruce-Grey)	Lumley	Watson
Drury	Macdonald (Rosedale)	Whelan
Duclos	MacEachen	Yanakis
	Marchand (Langelier)	Young—95

● (1620)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,966 and 4,076.

[Text]

DREE—ALLOTMENTS 1975

Question No. 3,966—Mr. McKinnon:

By province, how much money was allotted by DREE, either on a loan or grant basis, for all projects in 1975?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: By province, contribution and loan expenditures for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975 for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion are:

Expenditures 1974-75	Contributions	Loans
Newfoundland	$55,925,525	$11,781,117
Nova Scotia	29,205,264	10,471,733
New Brunswick	51,345,654	11,279,816
Prince Edward Island	19,152,309	3,325,000
Other Atlantic Region activities	4,405,147	—
Quebec	103,348,702	15,739,211
Ontario	17,583,078	—
Manitoba	21,034,250	1,580,548
Saskatchewan	7,535,006	1,689,603
Alberta	8,442,655	1,105,668
British Columbia	5,463,845	—

GRANTS TO ST-FÉLICIEN ZOOLOGICAL GARDEN

Question No. 4,076—Mr. Gauthier (Roberval):

Were grants given to the St-Félicien Zoological Garden since the adoption of the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act and, if so, in what amount up to and including 1974?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer for the Department of Regional Expansion is as follows: Yes, at 31/12/74, $1,123,655 had been committed to the development of the St-Félicien Zoological Garden under the terms and provisions of the Agricultural and Rural Development Act, DREE's share being $561,878.

[English]

Mr. Blais: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REFUSAL OF PRIME MINISTER TO ACCEPT RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I served you with the appropriate notice under the Standing Orders of the House of my intention to move today for the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration by the House, namely, the Prime Minister's refusal to accept the resignation which was of necessity submitted to him on Friday, thereby rejecting parliamentary principles which are the basis of the moral authority of this House. If there was ever an indication of the necessity of that, it is that which occurred today—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The provisions of Standing Order 26 are well known to hon. members. I have indeed received the notice referred to by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). There will be no attempt to get into any complicated analysis of the subject matter or its reference to the Standing Orders. The fact is that one of the best known provisions of Standing Order 26 is that which relates to the considerations that should be in the mind of the Chair in taking into account whether or not such matter is proper to be discussed within the terms of the rules. I am referring of course, to section (5) of the rule which indicates that Mr. Speaker will have regard to the reasonable opportunity of the House to discuss the matter put forward in the motion in some other way. In that regard, of course, tomorrow and Friday have already been designated as allotted days in which the opposition will control the subject matter of debate.

I think it would fly directly in the face of the provisions and the intent of such a rule if I were to hold this afternoon that the House would not enjoy a reasonable opportunity to discuss this matter when, in fact, tomorrow is a very excellent and forthcoming opportunity. I therefore would have to consider that at this moment at least the subject matter put forward in the notice of motion by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is not a proper matter to be discussed within the provisions of Standing Order 26.

Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, March 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in this debate I should like to say, first of all, that I regret the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would want to delay my speaking in the debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Breau: I regret they would want to frustrate the proceedings of this House to the point of stopping us from speaking in the debate.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Call up the judge.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Breau: I hear my friend from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) asking about closure. This is not closure, because I am still speaking in the debate. The hon. member obviously does not know the difference between Standing Order 33 and Standing Order 75C. I would encourage him to read the rules; they are very interesting. The fact of the matter is that we are not applying closure in this debate. We are proceeding with allocation of time because the opposition has been irresponsible.

An hon. Member: Nonsense!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Withdraw!

Mr. Breau: They have distorted the debate. I am happy that the hon. member for St. John's East is interested in my speech. I was interested in his speech on March 3, and I will refer to it later. It was clear that either he had not read the bill or had not read the Medical Care Act, because I have some quotes from his speech and they have absolutely nothing to do with this debate, nothing to do with Bill C-68. The point I want to make is that members opposite have frustrated the proceedings of this House for many days to try to bring before the public—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Breau: I congratulate them for the frustrations they have brought to the proceedings.

An hon. Member: What happened to your majority?

Mr. Breau: To that effect they have been successful, but they have distorted the debate. Most of their arguments have nothing to do with the Medical Care Act, they have nothing to do with the capping of expenditures of the federal government under the Medical Care Act, and most of their arguments have nothing to do even with the federal government in the area of hospital insurance. I wonder if many of them have read this bill and have taken the time to read the Medical Care Act.

An hon. Member: Have you read it?

Mr. Breau: Yes, I read it with particular interest. It is evident, if one examines interventions to federal bills, that most of the time they are the sorts of distortions one hears from hon. members opposite.

• (1630)

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) moved the time allocation motion under Standing Order 75C. He did this because he feels that after parliament has had ample time to study and debate proposed government legislation, at a certain point it is in the public interest to allocate time to vote on the bill and allow parliament to consider something else. The majority in this House should be allowed to vote on the bill and dispose of it.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) walked between the Chair and the member who now has the floor.

I would like to read Standing Order 12(3):

(3) When a Member is speaking, no Member shall pass between him and the Chair, nor interrupt him, except to raise a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I have been speaking to the bill for the last few minutes.

Mr. Peters: Say something.

Mr. Breau: Members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition are particularly concerned about the effects of this bill on the have-not provinces. They are worried about its so-called terrible effect on New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. I suggest that hon. members voicing such concerns either have not read the Medical Care Act and Bill C-68 or, if they have, they did not understand what they read. I should be happy to explain what this bill is all about.

Mr. Fairweather: Grand Falls hospital.

Mr. Breau: I missed the relevance of the point raised by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather).

Mr. McGrath: Tell that to the north shore of New Brunswick.

Mr. Breau: They have supported me up to now. If you want an excellent example of distorsion, read what the hon. member for St. John's East is reported to have said on page 11468 of Hansard. I heard what he said and read his speech in Hansard the next day. I cannot accept his statement. I do not accept that the hon. member for St. John's East would tell the House something that is not exactly factual. I read what he was reported to have said. I hope he made a mistake and that he will correct it. I will gladly give him that opportunity now. According to Hansard, page 11468, he said:

> Perhaps one could argue that the best ceiling that could be imposed upon the lower income provinces is their own capacity to meet their 50 per cent share of the cost.

He spoke about provinces sharing 50 per cent of the costs. In the next breath he mentioned lower income provinces. Let me point out that no low income province pays 50 per cent of the cost of the medicare program. The federal government pays 50 per cent of the average, national cost of medicare. I hope the hon. member slipped and did not intend to leave the impression that low income provinces pay 50 per cent of their own costs. He went on to say:

> No one knows better than the minister of finance of the province of Newfoundland, who has to bring in a budget within a few days, that he must place restrictions on medical care payments in Newfoundland in order to keep our own health care cost under the 50-50 agreement within line. I think that fact has been lost sight of.

I hope the hon. member for St. John's East will admit he made a mistake. Or perhaps this was a typing error or a slip. Newfoundland does not pay 50 per cent of medicare costs. The provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island do not pay 50 per cent of their medical care costs. Their payments are based on the formula adopted by parliament when it passed the original bill in 1966 or 1967. I repeat, the federal government pays 50 per cent of the average, national cost of medicare. In the case of Newfoundland, the government pays 74 per cent of the cost, not 50 per cent. I hope that the hon. member for St. John's East, who is a respected parliamentarian, will agree that he made an unfortunate misstatement.

I think all hon. members ought to read Bill C-68 carefully.

Mr. Alexander: You are right.

Mr. Breau: I am glad to hear the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) confirming my view. I say this because it is not apparent that those who have spoken in the debate so far read the bill. Their speeches do not make sense. Or if they read it, they cannot understand either the English or French versions. Clearly, the proposed cap of 13 per cent is not rigid. There will be increases of 13 per cent, plus provisions to take care of population increases.

The hon. member for St. John's East is concerned about Newfoundland. He thinks the province's high birth rate merits special consideration. I am glad the Newfoundland birth rate is high. Provisions governing population increases will take care of the extra population. Bear in mind that although the hon. member for St. John's East is concerned about hospital costs, we are talking about doctors' fees. Does he think that doctors in Newfoundland do not earn enough? Does he think they should charge more? Well, Bill C-68 applies to doctors' fees; it does not apply to hospital insurance or hospital costs. So the opposition has debated this bill for 13 days on second reading because it thinks doctors are not making enough. It thinks doctors should get more than the 13 per cent increase proposed under this bill. The bill provides, as I say, for an increase of 13 per cent, plus an increase to take care of larger populations. I am not saying doctors should not get more. I think some sectors of society, doctors included, should be well paid. Doctors perform a valuable service, under tough conditions, particularly outside big cities.

Is the party opposite, which for years has chastised this government for spending too much on shared-cost programs and on institutional programs which the Liberal government first implemented in the 1960s, now suggesting that doctors should be paid more than 13 per cent extra in these times of restraint? I cannot take those members seriously. They are playing politics. Mind you, there is nothing wrong with playing politics. I enjoy it. If you want to play politics, do not stop the business of the country for 13 days while you play games. Go on a trip; come to my constituency and we will play political games. The previous Leader of the Opposition came to my home-town during the election campaign. I enjoyed his visit.

An hon. Member: You won't enjoy the next one.

Mr. Breau: The opposition is concerned that this bill does undue, harsh damage to the provinces. It says that doctor's fees should go up more than 13 per cent. It says that there should be no cap at all. That is the same party that has been telling us that medicare, the Canada Assistance Plan, higher education programs, and all the other shared programs have no built-in safeguards from the point of view of the federal taxpayer to control costs or spending. We are now asking the provinces to please keep their increase for doctors' fees to 13 per cent, plus the provision for any increase in population, and what does the opposition do: they filibuster the bill, saying that it is dangerous for the provinces.

● (1640)

The 13 per cent does not apply to every particular province. It is a capping of 13 per cent of the federal share of the national plan. If a province has controlled its costs, it might get more than 13 per cent. Other provinces might get less. The cost of the medical care program has been increasing at a much more modest rate than that of hospital insurance. It is now beginning to feel the inflationary effect. For example, during the current fiscal year which ends this March 31 costs are expected to rise 16 per cent over the 1974-75 costs. While some controlling measures are needed, the proposed ceilings are not out of line with actual experience in recent years. Nor should there be any unfavourable effect upon the quality of care provided or the level of coverage enjoyed by the people of Canada.

I read that the leader of the New Democratic Party made a big case out of the fact that some communities and some provinces want to encourage less expensive institutions and clinics. There should be no system to indirectly encourage communities and provinces to give expensive health and hospital care to those who are really in need of care in a community clinic. One thing that was done in the June 23, 1975, budget concurrent with this bill was to give notice to the provinces as provided by the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. Formal notice was given to the provinces that in 1980 we would review our agreements on hospital care. One reason we want to review it is—as suggested by the leader of the NDP—to provide less expensive institutions. If some system can be developed that will be less expensive than a conventional hospital bed, it should be included in the agreement.

No one has suggested that we want to reduce the federal expenditure for health care. Again, the leader of the New Democratic Party, like other members of the opposition—

Mr. Kempling: Give him an aspirin.

Mr. Breau: I don't take aspirin. The hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) might be interested to know that according to the latest statistics, people from the maritimes take less aspirin than those from Ontario. The reason is probably because we have less pressure and need less attention than more sensitive people like the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): They don't have to suffer the pressures of a Conservative government.

Mr. Breau: I say to my friend, the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas), that we do suffer from the pressures of a provincial Conservative government. When the Conservative administrations in New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Ontario, who have friends here—and there is nothing wrong with that—have to make tough decisions or readjust their spending by, for example, reducing hospital beds or hospital services in some communities, I sometimes support them: I say it has to be done. However, the federal Conservatives try to drag in the federal government so that it will not appear as though this is being done by the provincial Conservative government but the federal anti-inflation program. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), who has proven that she is a very shrewd politician, smiles at what I say.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Breau: The record cannot show that she was smiling unless I mention it. That is why I do so. She knows that is the way politicians operate, especially in the maritimes. When her friend who supported her at the convention hears people condemning the federal government for cuts in health and hospital care, he does not say he was responsible for that. He hears his friends in the federal parliament give us hell for Bill C-68, which has nothing to do with hospital cuts, so that it will be reported as coming from us and people will become confused. The people will begin to believe that it is not Hatfield who is responsible, but the federal government. When I am approached by my constituents, I do not say that the hospital cuts in New Brunswick are not needed. I say that they are needed and that Mr. Hatfield is doing something that is his responsibility. I would not lie to my constituents.

Bill C-68 does not have anything to do with cutbacks in hospital care. The reason for this filibuster is that the Conservatives wanted to drag us into their petty political games. If they want to play political games, let us play them some place where we will not frustrate the workings and proceedings of the Parliament of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) has the floor.

Mr. Breau: I say that the opposition are pretty inefficient and ineffective when they cannot put their point across after 13 days of debate. With their research, their new leader and their shadow cabinet, they should be able to do that in one, two or three days. After that, the bill should be sent to committee for study. The bill is only 1½ or 2½ pages. Those who have not yet done so can read it in committee. If they do not understand it, we can go there to explain what the bill means.

The annual federal contribution to each participating province equals 50 per cent of the per capita cost for the year of all insured services of the national program which are furnished pursuant to the medical care insurance plans of the participating provinces, multiplied by the number of insured persons in the province. The per capita cost for a year of all insured services of the national program is an amount equal to the aggregate of the cost of the insured services of the national program which are incurred by each of the participating provinces, divided by the number of insured persons in each of the participating provinces. I do not expect members of the opposition to understand that too quickly, so I suggest that they read Hansard tomorrow.

Some fears have been expressed that the capping of federal contributions will have a relatively greater adverse effect on some provinces. The hon. member for St. John's East and others have suggested that would be the Atlantic provinces. This is not so during the period covered by the definitive ceilings. The capping applies to the national average per capita cost and not to the cost of individual provincial plans. The present characteristics of the Medical Care Act remain; contributions will continue to take into account the varying annual rates of population growth between provinces. The implicit equalization of the national average contribution will continue. The incentive to control costs in each province in order to increase relative federal contributions will remain. The resulting variable rates of the federal share of provincial medical care costs will also remain.

● (1650)

It is particularly Ontario and British Columbia which have experienced the highest costs in medicare. Provinces like the Atlantic provinces have not been the highest, and that is the reason: by paying 50 per cent, the federal government pays 50 per cent of the average national cost, so it happens in the case of Newfoundland we get 74 per cent and in the case of British Columbia only 45 per cent—less than 50 per cent. As a matter of interest, Nova Scotia gets 56 per cent, New Brunswick 74 per cent and Prince Edward Island 67 per cent. In 1976-77, the proposed ceiling will raise the per capita contribution by 13 per cent, from $37 to approximately $47. It should be clear to everyone that there is an incentive for lower income provinces such as Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, to control their costs because if they do so, historically we see that costs in Ontario and British Columbia will go higher. If they control their costs they will get even more than 74 per cent.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member has kindly agreed to permit a question. Since he is citing the provinces to support his argument, can he explain to the House how he can reconcile his speech and his argument with the statement of the government of Prince Edward Island, which is a Liberal government, that under the new proposal "it will be difficult to maintain present standards of health care, with no hope of ever attaining the national standard"?

Mr. Breau: I agree with what the hon. member has read as being the position of the government of Prince Edward Island. It will be difficult. I am not suggesting it is not going to be difficult for anyone. It will be difficult, but it will be possible. It is members of the Conservative party who have been telling us for years that under the shared-cost program affecting medicare we should control costs. There was a galloping increase in costs. The hon. member will have to reconcile that position with his position that it is going to be difficult in P.E.I. I suggest that in Prince Edward Island, as in New Brunswick, as in Nova Scotia, it will be difficult to increase the health care standard to the national standard.

Even if you gave $1 billion to New Brunswick today, or $100 million to New Brunswick, to improve health care, I suggest that the problem of health care, or medical care particularly, is not a financial one. The problem is that any new doctor who is originally from New Brunswick or who comes from outside and wants to live in New Brunswick would prefer to live in the cities. I believe that in certain cities in New Brunswick there is an overabundance of doctors, but in the rural areas there are none. In my area, for example, there is a shortage of doctors. We have hospitals which are inefficiently used because there are no doctors. My answer to the hon. member for St. John's East is that I agree it is going to be difficult for the government of Prince Edward Island. The governments of the Atlantic provinces are in a difficult situation with this.

Mr. McGrath: That is what I have been saying.

Mr. Breau: Well, I have read what the hon. member said as reported at page 11468. He said it would not only be difficult but that it would have a disastrous effect and that Newfoundland would have to pay 50 per cent of the health service costs. I have just pointed out to him that he made an unfortunate error in fact.

Mr. McGrath: You are sounding more like the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) every day.

Mr. Breau: That is a nice compliment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: A double-standard guy. One standard for Grits and another for the rest of the country.

Mr. Breau: I am sorry. I did not catch the hon. member's last statement.

Mr. Crouse: I said you were a double-standard guy when you said you would like to be like the Prime Minister. We shall never accept that double standard on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) may have a grievance, but he will have to wait for the hon. member to complete his remarks.

Mr. Breau: It is obvious that the hon. member for South Shore—

Mr. Crouse: South Shore. Get it right.

Mr. Breau: I said South Shore. I know it is South Shore. The hon. member either did not hear what I said or he did not understand it. I never uttered any kind of words such as he has attributed to me. I would like to review Hansard with him if he wishes. I would invite him to review it. I do not recall anything I have said, jokingly or otherwise, that would indicate the sort of thing he is accusing me of. I invite him to check the record. I think he misunderstood or misheard something from someone. I was making the point that for the lower income provinces there is an incentive to control costs, because the more they reduce their costs—

Mr. McGrath: —the more they reduce their services.

Mr. Breau: No. The hon. member for St. John's East is either making fun of a very serious situation, or he doesn't understand. They control their costs because the formula—which might be complicated, but I know the hon. member has sufficient intelligence to understand it—in the act provides for the federal government to pay 50 per cent of the national cost, and not 50 per cent of the cost to any particular province this means that if his province and my province control their costs and keep them that much below the national cost, their share of the federal participation will be even greater. Right now we are getting more than 50 per cent: his province gets 74 per cent and my province gets 74 per cent.

The federal government is expected next year to contribute $124 million more toward the cost of provincial medicare plans than is the case this year. In addition, we expect to be paying an additional $340 million or so toward the cost of the provincial hospital plans which, incidentally, includes the services of most of the radiologists and pathologists in the country.

It is difficult to understand how people can refer to increased federal contributions of this magnitude as being a cutback. Next year, under the ceilings, the resources available to the provinces will be 13 per cent larger, in per capita terms, so not only will there be a 13 per cent increase but the sharing formula will automatically make allowance for a population increase. I hope we have more babies in Newfoundland again next year, and if we do there is provision for them.

The funds will be distributed among the provinces in exactly the same way as in the past. Since provincial costs vary from year to year in relation to each other—they never have have the same relativity two years in a row—some provinces will have more than a 13 per cent increase, some less. Next year, the range of provincial recoveries under medicare will again be from a high of around 74 per cent in two provinces to a low of approximately 44 per cent in the highest cost province. Without ceilings, the cost recovery range would be about 1 per cent higher on both ends. I should like to emphasize again that the provinces which keep their costs below the national average—which includes the less affluent provinces—will continue to receive a larger proportionate share of the costs than other provinces which are less careful about their costs.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Air Transport; the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan)—The Canadian economy; the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens)—Finance.

● (1700)

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, may I bring to your attention that on March 11, 1976, as recorded at page 11737 of Hansard—this is the first opportunity I have had to raise this matter—there is a printer's error in the debate at that time. It refers to:

His monument lies also in the hearts of the various groups to whom he dedicated himself so undistinctly.

That last word should be "unstintingly". I wish that to be corrected, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock p.m, pursuant to the order made Friday February 27, 1976, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the House leader of the other parties we have agreed that the matter to be dealt with is at page 59 of the order paper, motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald).

Mr. Paproski: It is so agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the hon. member. Is it agreed to proceed with the consideration of motion No. 1, appearing in the name of the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), and that all other notices of motions standing before this motion be stood at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF WORLD COMMISSION ON FOOD AND RESOURCES

The House resumed, from Monday, October 21, 1974, consideration of the motion of the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald):

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should take the lead in establishing a world commission on food and resources, under the auspices of the United nations, to compile a comprehensive and regular inventory of the existing world foodstuffs and resources essential for sustenance; each nation shall be required to report annually (with quarterly amendments) on the state of its own self-sufficiency and on its ability to transfer key foodstuffs and resources to more needy nations; the commission shall have the authority to transfer designated food and resources from member nations equal in amount to their expenditures on defence.

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make on the motion. Most certainly it is a timely motion that the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) has put forward, but I think we must take a close look at it in order to ascertain exactly what is being asked, what is the cost of duplication of committees and services, and so on. The motion states that the government should take the lead in establishing a world commission on food and resources, under the auspices of the United Nations, to compile a comprehensive and regular inventory of the existing world foodstuffs and resources essential for sustenance.

What is being done in this regard at the present time? The world's shortage of food has attracted, over past months and years, the attention of many people. Many efforts have been made by other countries as well as Canada to try to solve the problem. In November, 1974, a world conference was held, with 1,000 representatives from 130 countries, determined at that time to find solutions to food shortages and the relatively slow pace of agricultural development to feed the four billion people who now exist in this world.

The courses of action proposed at that time to help increase food production include some of the following. First of all, it was proposed to make available large quantities of agricultural inputs such as fertilizers, water resources, high-quality seeds and improved management, all of which are essential to upgrading food production not only in Canada but everywhere throughout the world, more specifically in the underdeveloped countries. Also put forward was the idea of an expansion of research resources so as to evolve an appropriate technology in given conditions.

We must realize that those conditions vary greatly throughout the world. In Canada food production is limited to a very narrow belt across the country owing to extreme weather conditions in the north. On the other hand, the United States is a large country, able to produce vast quantities of foodstuffs primarily because of the favourable climatic conditions which they experience. The same is true of many other countries throughout the world.

The Soviet Union is faced with much the same problem as we in Canada. Their climate restricts the production of food to a very narrow growing belt across that large country. Food production is also limited in the underdeveloped countries in Africa, Asia and South America. There are so many conditions that must be taken into consideration in putting forth a program that will allow peoples of the world down through the years properly to feed themselves. Suggested, also, was a comprehensive rural development program that involves the people, particularly the small farmer and landless worker, as well as a major increase in the small amount of funds available for investment in agricultural development. This was urged at the conference for all countries of the world, not just Canada and the United States.

It will be noted that all the proposals dealt with increasing food production in developing countries as a means of solving the world food shortage. This, of course, is one of the features I would be glad to see put into the motion. The underdeveloped countries must be encouraged and given practical assistance and every other kind of assistance that we and other developed nations can give them so as to increase the ability of the developing nations and the underdeveloped nations to produce food.

In his November 11 speech to the eighteenth session of the FAO conference in November, 1975, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) had this to say:

> Over the next five years, the need for substantive increased food production in the developed countries will be of much greater importance for world food supplies than was thought at the beginning of the 1970s.

This was true then and it is true now. We refer these days to the oil powers of the world. In 1980 the power that will be of utmost importance to world development will not be oil power but agrapower. We have discussed in the House from time to time the importance of petropower and where petrodollars are spent, but we must also give clear and concise consideration to the agricultural producing nations of the world and the power they will have in their hands by 1980.

To solve the food problem, developing countries and the FAO must give high priority to agricultural and fisheries development and adopt policies which give adequate incentive to agricultural producers if real progress is to be made. We must also assure the agricultural producers not only of Canada but the United States, Russia and wherever they may be, adequate returns for the work they do in producing the world's food that will be required and which indeed is required at the present time. Today there are admitted problems with the production of powdered milk, and in the matter of food storage of items like powdered milk, butter and agricultural and dairy products we must remember it is the farmer who pays the shot. The farmer has to pay for storage so that this food is available in times of crisis and need.

A top priority in the interests of all countries is to ensure the vigour of the world's economy. This requires from our standpoint an efficient agriculture which produces enough food for all. This cannot be done without providing a reasonable livelihood to the farmers of the world who over the next 15 to 20 years will be performing a task of the utmost importance to the whole world. We know that without farmers, without the tools of production and necessary incentives, food production will fall short of our growing needs.

Canada maintains that it is unwise to form another committee or commission on a worldwide basis—I think this is a correct decision—for the purpose of compiling more information on the inventory of world food stocks. A number of commissions are already in existence to do that. Their purpose was underscored by events at the World Food Conference.

● (1710)

First, experience has shown that some countries cannot, or perhaps will not, make reports about food stocks. While there is a reporting system, unless there is one which all countries follow and use, and unless there is a complete reporting on the food stocks, that reporting system will not function properly. I am glad to note that Canada has always co-operated in making known our position in respect of food stocks and our ability to meet food aid targets. However, this is not the case in respect of some other countries.

Second, the government opposes the creation of new institutions, especially when there are institutions already in existence that seem able to do the work requested. In this connection, I would point out that four new committees or councils have recently been established. They are designed to work on specific problem areas yet interact with one another toward a common objective.

One committee I might mention is the World Food Council which has governmental representation at the ministerial level. This council is designed to deal with the political aspects of the food problem. It will receive regular reports on the world trade situation and on progress of food exports to developing countries. Another new committee is one that will be reporting to the World Food Council. I refer to the Committee on World Food Security. This committee will submit periodic and special reports on such things as current and prospective supply and stock positions of basic foodstuffs, the adequacy of stock levels and the evaluation of governmental actions to implement proposals on world food stock security.

Another committee, restructured from the World Food Program Intergovernmental Committee, is the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programs. In our view, this will serve as a forum to improve co-ordination between bilateral and multilateral food aid programs. It will periodically review general trends in food aid requirements and food aid availability and will make recommendations to the various governments on food aid policies and operations.

While this is a very worth-while motion, it is simply an attempt to set up another committee to be stacked on top of other already existing committees which can provide the information that is being requested by the hon. member for Egmont in his motion. Also established is the consultative group on food production and investment. This group reports on activities to increase, co-ordinate and improve efficiency of financial and technical assistance to agricultural production in developing countries. This is of great importance in respect of the stocks of food in the world and the stocks that will be in the world.

Information in respect of technological advances in the developing countries is important because it may well be we would say to the people in China, Asia or India that they should eat more wheat but they still must be able to grow this wheat. It would also mean a switch in their basic diet, which now is mainly rice. If we ask such a person to change his eating habits and consume larger quantities of wheat, whether in the form of flour or other finished products, I think we would be taking a lot for granted. We cannot expect this to be done overnight.

When one considers the work being carried out by the Food and Agricultural Organization, plus the work that these new groups will be engaging in, I am sure all hon. members of this House will readily see there is substantial activity already under way to cover the very areas mentioned in the motion. It would be a needless duplication of effort to formulate another worldwide commission to deal with the very aspects now under study by these capable commissions of FAO.

I would also like to point out that the FAO has an international undertaking on world food security that deals in large measure with the very points covered by this motion. I should like to review the common purposes and responsibilities of this undertaking. The undertaking states that to assure a minimum level of world food security, member governments of FAO must take measures to ensure an adequate level of cereal supplies in the world so as to avoid acute food shortages in the event of widespread crop failures or natural disasters. To meet this objective, the members pledge to follow stock policies which in total will maintain at least a minimum safe level of basic food stocks in the world.

Member governments will also review or establish national stock targets or objectives with the aim of keeping sufficient levels to cover domestic and export requirements, including a security margin in case of disaster in a given country such as Canada. I am sure many members will remember the dust-bowl days on the prairies with very few fond memories. That was agreed to by Canada. It has also been agreed that the stocks will be maintained at such a level as will provide for emergency situations in all parts of the world where people may be less fortunate in recovering from a disaster. The member governments have also pledged to take measures to make sure stocks are replenished whenever they have been drawn below minimum levels.

It is of the utmost importance, if emergency assistance is to be provided with any hope of help, that we have information on stockpiling so that the supply will not go below a certain level. Member nations agree to furnish, on a regular basis, information on national stock levels, government stock holding programs and policies, current and prospective export availability and import requirements for cereals and relevant aspects of the supply and demand situation. Such a situation arose just last year in the Soviet Union. A much larger wheat crop had been expected, as well as an increase in livestock production. Now, however, that country has found itself in a position where it must bring in new orders of Canadian and American stocks in order to cover the inadequacy it experienced during the past year.

● (1720)

To meet these requirements for timely and adequate information, a global information and early warning system on food and agriculture has been established under FAO supervision and operation. The main aims of the system are, first, to monitor continuously the world food supply and demand conditions, including fertilizers and key inputs, so as to assist governments in taking timely and appropriate measures in the light of quickly changing conditions. It is interesting, when I look at our friends in the opposition, to see that almost none of our socialist friends in the NDP have considered the problem of world food stocks to be of sufficient importance to be here and take part in the debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has just arrived, I see.

Mr. Blais: You're a fixture, Stanley; you don't count.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Yes, possibly. I am so used to seeing the hon. member in his seat that even when he leaves it, goes behind the curtains and walks around from time to time, his presence is hardly missed because one sees a small image of what is usually there all the time. What I say is not meant to be one bit against the hon. member, and I am glad that he, of all people in his party, has condescended to come and perhaps join in the debate later this afternoon to let the people of Canada know that the NDP's interest in the food stocks of this nation is at least signified by his presence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Another aim of the system is to indentify countries or regions where serious food shortages and other nutritional conditions are imminent, to assess the possible emergency food requirements of those nations and therefore take action to bring in to being a program that would fulfil those requirements. To date, 68 countries including Canada—I might say that Canada took a very strong stand on this—have joined that very worthwhile global system, a system of reporting, of stock-taking and generally of keeping tabs on the food situation in the world so that emergency conditions, disaster conditions and famine conditions can properly be met when they exist.

It is clearly evident that Canada is following the spirit of this international undertaking. We believe that sufficient supplies of grains should, and must, be made available to cover any disasters, although the Minister of Agriculture has often stated that the burden of carrying these stocks should not—I would go further and say they must not—rest entirely on the shoulders of the producers. We must not allow our farmers to bear all the costs and all the responsibilities for keeping these most important stocks in place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He can continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe).

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, the motion put forward by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) is still of current interest, even though the World Food Conference which was held in November 1974 did provide a specific solution to that problem by laying the foundations for joint action in trying to solve the problem of world hunger. In addition, apart from that World Food Conference, the 7th special session of the United Nations General Assembly which met in New York last fall, reiterated its full endorsement of the resolutions adopted at the World Food Conference. The twofold objective of these resolutions was to cope adequately and immediately with the crises that regularly develop in the world and, in the long run, to increase the food production of the developing nations.

In order to achieve this twofold objective, the Conference has asked the developing countries to supply food assistance totalling 10 million tons of cereals each year for the next three years. In order to build up this world food bank, the Conference has recommended the setting up of a variety of agencies such as the World Food Council, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the Advisory Group on Food Production and Financing and the addition of a Committee on Food Assistance Policies and Programs within the World Food Program. Under the same program, the Special Assembly of the United Nations also suggested setting up an assessment committee of world food resources which would see to the creation of world stocks of cereals and would compile statistics on both needs and food production to avert emergency situations like those we have witnessed in the last few years.

In addition, one should mention the international agricultural research advisory group which also studied very specifically the best means of avoiding recurrent crisis situations. The committees I have just mentioned generally come under the FAO and should all contribute toward increasing food production in developing countries.

I shall not insist further, Mr. Speaker, on the various mechanisms that exist throughout the world and which were set up as a result of the World Food Conference. I believe they will meet the aspirations of the hon. member for Egmont who advocated an international organization to meet the food needs of the world community.

I should like to elaborate on this and direct mainly my remarks to the Canadian reactions to the various resolutions passed by the Rome Conference, and the conferences held in Rome and in New York last fall. First, allow me to mention that Canada played a prominent role at the food conference and that since then its representatives have been working closely at the establishment of authorities and various committees recommended by the conference and that Canadian government officials still take an active part in setting up all those committees. To illustrate this Canadian participation, I wish to point out that Canada is one of the founding members of the World Food Council.

Moreover, Canada, through the Canadian International Development Agency, has geared its aid program to meet the urgent or long term requests in the agricultural field. Then, Canada's short term action as regards world food problems is more or less as follows: At the conference itself, Canada pledged 1 million tons of grain per year for the years 1975. 1976, and 1977, out of the 10 million tons requested by the Conference yearly. It is fair to say that this commitment has been a decisive factor in urging other donors to make firm commitments.

● (1730)

Canada, which has already endorsed the concept of a world food reserve, is now working within various international organizations to define the modus operandi of this reserve. And later in my speech, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with the interesting suggestion we find in the motion introduced by the hon. member for Egmont, namely that food assistance could be in some way related to the budget of national defence of the donor countries.

Canada has also undertaken to provide food assistance this year for up to $45 million, excluding grains but including fertilizers. Our food assistance program is increasingly being implemented through multilateral organizations such as the World Food Program and UNICEF in an effort to reach the most needy people in the developing countries. These organizations have shown their ability in the past to stimulate the authorities of these countries into accelerating their own agricultural development. Even if we are increasingly relying on multilateral organizations to convey our food assistance, the greatest part of it, namely 60 percent in 1975-76, is still being provided under bilateral agreements. To stress the importance of food assistance in the Canadian Co-operation Assistance Program, I would say that 30 percent of the budget, namely $255 million in 1975-76, were allocated in that area.

In the long run, the Canadian government's action in terms of food assistance could be summed up as follows: food assistance is only a short-term paliative, and according to the Canadian government and to experts development of the Canadian agency, only increased agricultural production in developing countries could resolve in the long run the world food shortage.

So, the new Canadian "Strategy for International Development Cooperation", for the period 1975-80 will stress better living conditions for peasants by promoting the extension of rural development programs, especially in agriculture, forestry and fisheries.

This trend will encourage not only the programs of agricultural production and infrastructure, but also those in research. By agricultural infrastructure, we mean upgraded rural electrical power grids, for instance, access roads, land irrigation projects, programs for setting-up agricultural credit, a forest inventory and retimbering programs.

Canada has always considered agricultural research as one of the principal means to deal on a long term basis with the chronic food shortages of the most deprived countries. This research represents for those populations the determining factor of improved living conditions because it makes it possible to find permanent solutions to their problems and is likely to yield such economic benefits that those countries may hope to become self-sufficient some day.

Canada continues to support the research bodies of the third world, of which I shall list a few: For example, Canada provides funds for the International Development Research Centre in Ottawa, as well as for the International Institute for Tropical Agriculture in Nigeria. There are also funds made available by the Canadian government to the International Research Institute on Agriculture in semi-arid tropical areas in India. And we are also involved in the International Centre for the study of the potato in Peru. Moreover, we have made a financial contribution to the International Research Laboratory on animal diseases, an international government agency in Kenya. In addition, we participate in the West Africa Association for the development of rice production. And I could also mention, Mr. Speaker, organizations like the International Centre for Tropical Agriculture in Colombia, the International Centre for the Improvement of Corn and Wheat in Mexico, and the International Research Institute on Rice in the Philippines.

I therefore believe, Mr. Speaker, that international authorities have created adequate structures to try and solve the problem of feeding the hungry, and that we should be proud of the leadership given by Canada under these circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, I now return more specifically to the motion of the member for Egmont who suggests in the latter part of his motion the establishment of a commission which shall have the authority to transfer designated food and resources from member nations equal in amount to their expenditures on defence. So, if I understand, this part of the motion of the member for Egmont means that the countries which would be on that international commission and could create a food bank would be urged to provide food assistance in a proportion equal to their expenses for defence. This idea seems very interesting to me even though it might be difficult to implement, because if we ponder for a moment over the amount of money spent for military hardware across the world, we find that unfortunately these expenses result in an enormous wasting.

In 1974, for instance, the trade of conventional weapons exceeded $20 billion across the world. The industrial nations have earmarked an average of 8 per cent of their national budget but the average is rather low in Canada, when it is noted that some industrialized countries have allotted 18 to 20 per cent of their budgets. Now an average of 8 per cent of the gross national product is set aside for armament, while not a single one of those industrialized countries or only a few seem to have set 1980 as the year to reach 0.7 per cent of assistance which is the objective of the United Nations.

Food and Resources

Total world expenditures for armament, Mr. Speaker, are 30 times higher than development aid. The armament budget represents a percentage so high in comparison with our limited resources that it prevents us from coping with urgent economic and social problems in our industrial communities as well as in underdeveloped countries.

I think, as the member for Egmont seems to suggest in his motion, that it is essential that we take efficient steps for disarmament. In my opinion, we must extend the motion of the hon. member for Egmont which deals more especially with food assistance and cover the entire issue of the arms race throughout the world and we, parliamentarians, must try to drum up support among our colleagues and our electors for the importance of disarmament throughout the world. Mr. Speaker, I believe that even if this might seem utopian, the emphasis should be shifted from weapon sales to development assistance and that this is an ideal that we should try to reach. This is why I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Egmont for having proposed this motion relating development assistance to the defence budget.

However, there are very serious obstacles to disarmement if we think of all our military agreements, that is NATO on the western side, and the Warsaw Pact on the eastern side. It is unthinkable that those two military pact will have disappeared in five or even ten years. However, especially now when we are discussing a new world economic order, I believe that we should all stop and think how we could best achieve a shift from our present armament efforts to development assistance. I am convinced that with the good will of all the affluent people, and I am talking especially about parliamentarians, of all the people who have any influence on the international scene, if all parliamentarians make an effort in this direction, we shall be able to find solutions to the difficulties that we will meet when we try to put a stop to the armament race.

I therefore believe that it is our duty to galvanize, and I quote, Mr. Speaker:

To galvanize the world community towards more direct and more efficient action to stop the armaments race and change its orientation.

Former United Nations Secretary General U Thant said these words in 1966, I think.

Therefore, in my opinion, in view of the moral implications and the possibility that we could meet such an objective in the long term, we must start the fight for disarmament as soon as possible. We must also impress the importance of food assistance on industrialized countries, as well as developing countries, which very often, urged by industrialized countries, unfortunately enter the armament race with great enthusiasm.

● (1740)

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Egmont succeeds one day in dividing or extending his motion so as to relate general assistance problems to world disarmament problems, I would be happy to support such a motion if he should propose it.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, ever since I have been a member of this House I was always surprised when we had to consider a motion similar to the one that is now before the House that there was not unanimity and the House did not simply adopt. it. That was always a surprise, as I say, since reading the motion is of course admitting it, just thinking about what it implies is admitting it even altogether.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take only a few minutes to submit brief arguments on the necessity of accepting such a thing. A list was just given of a whole series of things involving Canadian participation. In fact, it was nearly said that it is now being done, that there are world agreements sponsored by the United Nations or international organizations, so that what is called for in this motion is currently being done.

Mr. Speaker, one must be realistic and see things as they are. What do we see now when a country like ours is faced with a food surplus problem and cannot find any solution? That is the situation at present in the field of agriculture. While a general trend of the agricultural policy for industrial milk producers is being justified, a trend that goes against the interests of those Canadian producers is being justified by saying: Unfortunately, we cannot get rid of those products in Canada, and we cannot either get rid of them abroad. Mr. Speaker, I said on many occasions—and I take this opportunity to repeat it—it is a sacrilege, a scandal to talk about food surpluses when we know that one third of the world is literally starving to death.

The motion is presented at a time when we could help those who in the world are having difficulty living because they cannot find all the food they would need. There should be one organization in charge of this inventory, in order to record what we have and and what could be exchanged between countries, and of course this should not be only a simple wish but something which should have been already realized.

Mr. Speaker, it is rather odd to speak about world food needs while declaring that we cannot find an outlet for our surplus of food supplies. As recently as last week, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was saying in answer to a question that our producers were badly organized, produced too much and were too efficient.

Mr. Speaker, I read just recently that here in Canada the consumption of essential goods was insufficient to ensure a healthy balance. At the moment, in our country for example, the consumption of dairy products is not sufficient.

Consumption should be increased in that area. I do not say that only to solve the industrial milk producers' problem but also our underconsumption problems since here in Canada we are faced with poverty. Mr. Speaker, we must not make a secret of it, but face the situation.

We should proceed to a very concrete, very real inventory of our possibilities in order, first, to help Canada, then our own consumers and also all countries of the world which need it. It is not merely a wish, it should be all hon. members' avowed intention.

[English]

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak on the motion before the House. It seems to me, on reading the motion proposed by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), that it closely resembles another motion the House debated on an allotted day. I think the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) raised the matter. Many of the arguments advanced that day in support of that motion are relevant in the present debate. I appreciate this opportunity to raise a couple of matters.

The previous speaker mentioned several things which, in my view, illustrate difficulties we might encounter if we accept this motion. If time permits I shall return to that topic later. The difficulties we could encounter are serious. They merit long and careful consideration. We should not lightly adopt the motion proposed by the hon. member.

The historic conference in Rome on world food supplies was convened about one year ago. Fortunately in the past year there has been an improvement in world food stocks. Conditions are somewhat better in areas formerly stricken with famine. At the same time there is little over-all improvement in the world crop and there has been little opportunity for rebuilding the world's depleted food reserves. Food shortages were the gravest concern facing the world's developing countries last year. We were all worried about the small reserves of world food. There was only enough food to feed the world for a few days. If there had been any disaster, or more drought, the consequences would have been serious indeed. That is not to say that the world food shortage is not still critical and that we should not do everything possible to improve world food stocks.

Before disagreeing with the hon. member for Egmont may I congratulate him for putting forward this motion? He has moved similar motions in the House on a number of occasions. I know he speaks on the subject with conviction. I congratulate him on it. I take issue with some of the points he raised today. I took issue with similar points which were raised on an allotted day. In short, I take issue with the means by which he seeks to achieve his aims.

The hon. member proposes that this House should urge the government to press for the establishment of a world commission on food and resources under the auspices of the United Nations. He further proposes that this commission should undertake broad responsibility for maintaining an inventory of world food supplies, for maintaining a reporting system on world food needs and availabilities, and for arranging an annual transfer of food resources from have to have-not countries. The value of the food transfer, he suggests, should equal what the have nations spend annually on defence.

The implication of this proposal which I find hardest to accept is that it involves the establishment of a new, major international body which would be of large proportions and whose functions would duplicate those of other large bureaucracies. Its functions would duplicate activity already being undertaken by other institutions both within and outside the United Nations, as one hon. member said.

Before agreeing to adopt the motion we should reflect carefully on whether we need another large bureaucracy to do something already being done. Do we need another large, powerful organization like that? I say this, because the motion reads in part:

> . . . the commission shall have the authority to transfer designated food and resources from member nations . . .

What does that operation involve? It seems easy to do it, but is it that simple? Really, transferring food from one country to another is just about the most complicated thing you can do. Consider the past history of such operations. They involve shipping, storage, and payment of storage costs. They involve the payment of compensation to producers. I am most concerned about compensation to producers. If you analyse the motion, it suggests that we should ask farmers to produce food and then donate it to the world's needy. I would not want to see the farm community shoulder this kind of responsibility on behalf of all Canadians.

Other problems I foresee involve policies and programs of national governments, and the overlapping jurisdictions of international bodies. In relation to the latter point, liaison between these bodies would require a larger establishment just to negotiate the politics that would be involved. If actual operations—procurement, transport, distribution—also fell under the commission's jurisdiction, the staff and facilities required would be enormous, and so would its budget. I have not even come to the question of compensation yet.

● (1750)

I know the forces that play on a situation like this. In my constituency, a year ago last crop year, we had an early frost. Thousands of acres of potatoes were slightly frozen. There was a good deal of urgency with respect to what could be done about the situation. The growers approached the government to see if there was some program under which they could qualify. They made the point that many countries around the world would have a need for powdered or flaked potatoes, or potatoes in some other form like that. They were amazed to find it would cost more to prepare the potatoes in that form to be used by people who have the need than what the potatoes were worth, or that they could procure that protein food value a good deal closer to where the need was at a considerable smaller cost.

The previous speaker mentioned the situation in the dairy industry today. Admittedly there is a very large surplus, not only in this country but in the United States and most of the European Economic Community countries. He stated we should have a very high social conscience and distribute dried milk powder in great quantity to many of these countries. That is an over-simplification of the argument. In many countries that have a need, this is not a type of food that they use. In fact it might do damage to the health standards of people there.

This was established in the Guatemala situation. Canada distinguished herself by the amount of aid that was sent there; some $3 million worth of material for the construction of temporary shelters for about 40,000 people, some 125 tons of food, and another three quarters of a million dollars for emergency aid. The point there was the kind of aid that could have been given by sending more dry skim milk powder. That would have been easy for us to do. It would have decreased inventories and assisted our dairy industry. However, it would have been counterproductive to the people there. They are not used to that form of food in their diet. If it were all of a sudden to become a part of their diet, many problems could arise. In fact we might even contribute to the problem rather than help it.

I just wanted to make that point because I think the previous speaker over-simplified how easy it is to take any surplus commodity in our agricultural community and give it to the world food aid program. I am sorry he is leaving the Chamber. I wanted to ask him who he intended would pay for that, and whether in fact he thought that was an assistance to the program rather than working to the detriment of the people.

Having some background in the agricultural industry I feel somewhat strongly about it. If you have a situation that we often argue in this country where we have a surplus of food, and the producers say to the government it should buy it and give it to countries which need it, while that may have some short-term benefit, in the long run it might well harm the basic agricultural industry in the country we are trying to assist.

I ask hon. members to contemplate the effect in this country if we were trying to establish an agricultural industry in a particular sector and if another country with a surplus moved a lot of its food into this country. It might be good in the short period for consumer prices and even the nutrition of people. However, it would set back our own industry to the point where it might not even develop and in fact might be destroyed. As a result we would be further away from being self-sufficient in food rather than being closer to it. This is particularly important in the developing nations.

I had the opportunity to discuss this point of view at some length with some of my classmates who, in the last few years since our graduation, have spent a good deal of time in the developing countries. They are supplying technical assistance and knowledge to the government of those countries to see if they can help them become more self sufficient. Most of them have come back from their tour of duty from the underdeveloped countries unanimous in their point of view that perhaps the worst thing we can do as a country in assisting others is to send in large amounts of food. That would work to the detriment of those countries developing their own agricultural industry and achieving their goal of becoming self-sufficient.

I realize that in the motion, if I read it correctly, the hon. member is not suggesting that we override the attempts of underdeveloped countries to establish their own agricultural industry. He is really making the point that we move in areas of real need. We all have a great deal of sympathy with that. Whenever a crisis or a real need arises, one of the biggest problems is the time lag between the need arising and the time people can respond.

The hon. member's point in terms of having some type of data bank to indicate where certain food is available in surplus situation and can be moved very quickly, is probably the strength of the motion. I always worry when there is a great need, even in the Guatemala situation, about the length of response time.

Experience shows that it takes a long time to research within a country as to what it can best do. I suggest the hon. member has a good point and that maybe the reverse side is just as important. It is just as important for countries that are not strong agriculturally to have an inventory of the types of food they can most readily use. I would argue that this might be even more important.

I return to the argument of the previous speaker. It is automatically assumed that, because we have a large surplus of dairy products in this country, Guatemala can use all of it if we ship it there. Perhaps having countries around the world that have a history of drought or overpopulation—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, when my speech was interrupted at five o'clock by the private members' hour I was in the process of explaining to the House that Bill C-68 applies to expenditure capping by the federal government under the medical care program and that it had nothing to do with the hospital insurance program in which the federal government participates on a 50 per cent basis.

I indicated also that the 13 per cent capping did not apply to any particular province but that it applied to the federal share of the program. It could happen, therefore, that if some provinces controlled their costs effectively they would receive more than 13 per cent. Provinces with lesser revenues could receive a way more than 50 per cent, and they could receive more than 13 per cent if they are effective in controlling their costs.

I should like to deal briefly with the arguments put forward by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). I regret to say I see few members of his party in the House this evening. He made a plea that the government should increase its expenditures to cover alternatives which would be of long term benefit. In other words, they would constitute a social investment. Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what the government is attempting to do. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has made a commitment to the provinces, restated by the former minister of finance last year, that the federal government is prepared to extend cost-sharing in alternative areas provided the federal government can obtain a firm commitment from the provinces to restrain the rate of escalation of costs in the hospital-medical field.

Over the past year we have held discussions with the provinces on many of the lower cost options mentioned by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, for example, increased use of paramedical care and institutional care at lower cost. The hon. member made a great deal about the need for community clinics. I would mention to him, though he be in absentia, that nothing in the Medical Care Act prevents such a development. What we have to get at is the hospital insurance program and provide for those kinds of institutions toward whose cost the federal government can participate. It should follow that the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby supports the Minister of National Health and Welfare in giving formal notice to the provinces that five years from June 23 last we will review that particular program with the provinces so that we can do the sort of thing the hon. member has in mind.

In addition, the new amendments provide an exemption from the ceiling for the first three years of any new extension of benefits under the act. They provide further that any ceilings which may be imposed after the third year can be varied according to the nature of the service provided. Thus the federal contribution in respect of each class of new insured service will be appropriate to the cost of that program and not simply averaged in with all other services covered by the act.

In conclusion may I say that in my view the government is not one which wants to restrict social expenditures.

An hon. Member: Is that so?

Mr. Breau: They do not. I explained very clearly this afternoon that we are not in favour of such a position. But at a time when parliamentarians on both sides of the House are vitally concerned about the galloping increase in the cost of shared-cost programs it is surely not unreasonable for the federal government to say in a period of restraint, "Let us try, at least, in the case of doctors' fees to, restrain our share to 13 per cent, with a provision for increases in population." That is all the bill is doing.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Nonsense!

Mr. Breau: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) shouts "Nonsense". Has he read the bill? I challenge him. Let him show me where, in the bill, we do anything else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Breau: Now that he has become a House leader the hon. member should be responsible and be more careful before he makes that kind of gratuitous remark. This bill does not deal with hospital costs or hospital care. It deals with medicare, and the medicare legislation deals with payment for services by doctors. We are saying that our share will be capped at 13 per cent, with provision for increases in population.

I regret it has taken 13 days or so for the opposition to understand this. I hope they have understood by now, and I hope we can get this two and a half page bill into committee without further delay. If hon. members opposite cannot understand it in committee I will be happy to go there myself and read it for them, line by line.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not want the hon. member for Gloucester

(Mr. Breau) to go away from this debate believing that all the people on this side of the House are completely without intelligence. When he says this bill deals only with medicare and not with hospitalization I would point out that the biggest cost in medicare is, as he said, payments to medical doctors. But without these medical doctors filling up our hospitals with patients we would not be in the mess we are in presently. Therefore there is a very tight connection between medicare and hospitalization.

The main point I want to make is that here we are engaged in a debate under an allocation of time order and, whether we call it this, or that, or the other thing, it is still part of a closure operation. What the opposition has been doing is attempting to convince the government that we in opposition are trying to help it make the medicare system work. I do not think there is any quarrel whatsoever with the statement I am about to make: every party in this House for many years has accepted the need for medicare for our people on a universal basis. If all parties accept this principle then surely the government should pay us the compliment of listening to our attempts to try to help it get at these escalating costs which are rising so fast that they are endangering the social welfare schemes.

● (2010)

In view of the accumulated experience in this type of legislation having to do with delivery of health services of many members on this side of the House, surely the government has a duty to listen to some of their proposals in this debate. If I may go back to February 17 when I spoke on the original motion to send this bill to committee, I would like to remind hon. members that the question of universal health services is not new in North America. I happen to have been one of the two who in 1936, 40 years ago, moved a motion calling for prepaid medical and hospital services in Saskatchewan. Eventually Saskatchewan got them; in 1946 it got hospitalization and in 1960 prepaid medical care. So I have some experience in this matter.

I sat in a cabinet that saw the mistakes that had been made in the United Kingdom when they brought in their hospital and medical care schemes, and which saw the mistakes made by a very sincere government in Saskatchewan when it brought in its hospital care scheme. So we set up a royal commission, with the other man who was with me in 1936 in moving that the Conservative party of Saskatchewan support pre-paid medical and hospitalization services, Mr. Hall, as commissioner, to propose a series of steps that would move forward more rapidly the concept of a universal medical care scheme in Canada in addition to hospitalization, a move designed to avoid the mistakes of uncontrolled costs both of hospitalization and medicare.

I do not quarrel with the sincerity of the Liberal government when it says it believes in medicare. I accept that. But what I do question is its sincerity in not listening to those of us who have fought the battle much longer than they for these universal schemes and who are now trying to save these schemes. We must listen to arguments from the financial side that if costs continue to rise these schemes will be destroyed.

Having made that opening point, namely, that we are not here to scuttle the medicare scheme but that we of the opposition are trying to help the government save it, let me go back to the games the hon. member from New Brunswick referred to which politicians play. In spite of the fact that the Liberal party, in opposition from 1957 to 1963, fought like tigers ad infinitum—because there was no closure in those days—against all forms of co-operative enterprise between the federal government and the provinces, when finally they were elected as a minority government in 1963, and again in 1965, they encouraged the provinces to opt out of joint enterprises that the federal government had embarked on with the provinces during the years 1957-1963. They were the great supporters of allowing the provinces to opt out of co-operative schemes.

Then in the election of 1968 we suddenly found the Liberal party advocating cooperation of government and the provinces on medicare, with the federal government providing 50 per cent of the cost. In effect, the pressure of offering 50 per cent of the cost to the provinces forced the provinces to come into the scheme, but long before they had built up the infrastructure required to keep the cost of such a universal scheme down. Everyone remembers the protests of the province of Ontario, and today the province of Ontario is paying a heavy price for having been forced into this scheme. Now eight years later the very party that forms the Government of Canada, which was once against co-operative enterprises but which turned around in 1968 and literally forced, by economic pressure, the provinces to come into its scheme, with no financial control mechanism provided for, is deliberately opting out of its own scheme into which it forced the provinces to enter.

Mr. Railton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong about Ontario being forced to go into a medical scheme. It was the Hon. Leslie Frost, a former premier of Ontario, who led the request for federal sharing with the provinces in the cost of hospital insurance. My authority is a letter of October 10, 1975, from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). I think that should go on the record, because we have had an incorrect statement from across the aisle.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that that is not a point of order but a point for debate.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): May I thank Your Honour for pointing out the preposterous point brought up by the hon. member. He mentioned hospitalization. There is no question that the federal government, under the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), took the lead in asking all provinces to join together in a hospitalization plan on a co-operative basis, and that is what the hon. member referred to in his quotation.

Let me repeat what I said. With the pressure of the federal government's offering a 50 per cent contribution to medicare, any province literally had to join with the scheme for political reasons. But they joined the scheme without proper preparation of the infrastructure to keep costs under some form of control.

It is on the question of control that I want once again, as we move into the final hours of this closure debate, to plead with the government when the bill gets to committee to consider the proposals I am making as positive proposals that would get it out of its problems. All parties—I should speak only for the official opposition—want to do what we can to stop this ever-rising expenditure by governments which is breaking the country. This bill is legislating that the increase this year will not be stopped but will only be allowed to rise by 13 per cent. That amount of increase is being legislated.

We are not proposing that the increase be cut to zero. What we are asking is that the government get at the basic causes of rising costs. The fact is that these schemes are universal, but insufficient care is taken to see that the schemes are not abused. Many people ask me whether I have any positive evidence, if incentive is provided not to abuse universal programs, that the people will respond. I do have examples, Mr. Speaker, and I will quote just one in the city of Saskatoon.

In Saskatoon there is a labour union, small in number, comprising about 200 members. Following completion of negotiations on wages and working conditions one of the union members in the negotiating team proposed that they discuss, without controversy being raised, the idea that the sick leave that the city granted these workers amounting to 18 days a year be banked, to the benefit of the city. If there were 20 sick leave days a year in a union contract, over a 40-45 year life of a contract an individual would have a right to 800 or 900 days of sick leave. Human nature being what it is, if the sick leave were 18 or 20 days a year many workers would take the full amount. This particular union had a record of about 14 or 15 days of sick leave per person per year, which meant that the city had to pay the full wages of the replacement for that person who was sick according to the contract.

● (2020)

When this particular union's negotiator took this into the discussion without prejudicing the previous agreement, management immediately responded and said that if they would work and set up a bank of days the city would be prepared to give a full year of days in that bank that would be paid to the person in cash, either the year before the person quit or on the day the person quit. This meant that the average 14 or 15 days sick leave per man per year dropped to about half a day per man per year. This now meant that when a man went out on Saturday night and still had a headache on Monday morning he would go to work because he knew that by staying away the amount in the sick-day bank would be reduced quite rapidly for him on retirement. Obviously the city was a big gainer in that situation. The city gained some 14 or 15 days per person of free labour because of the many advantages in the proposal. I will give another example of a similar nature.

I know there are sick leave arrangements in the civil service here in Ottawa. I am simply pointing out the principle that there is a place in these universal schemes for the individual, for his own benefit and that of his family, not to abuse the schemes any more than he or she must. This meets the problem in respect of the doctors and others, with those who take the attitude that the services are free and they should be used whether or not they are needed.

In my remarks on February 17 I said that if the government is really serious about meeting social services fixed costs now, which make up 80 per cent of the total amount of money this parliament spends each year, and if it wanted seriously to do something about combining hospitalization, medical care, old age pensions, and some day, I hope, accident insurance also, into one package, it could do so. Each individual would pay at the actuarial rates established by the experts who prepare these things.

Out of this amount approximately one third would be paid in for those who are chronically ill, for those who are chronically unemployed and those who are unable to help themselves. This is a social responsibility of all of us. The balance would go into an individual account, which is electronically possible now although it was not possible 20 years ago. Every time an individual went to hospital he or she would know that their costs would be paid. If they went to the doctor they would know that their costs would be paid. Every time an individual was unemployed he would know that his costs would be paid. He would know that every time he had an accident he would be looked after.

The scheme would be on a universal basis. The individual would know that if he drew it all out and went beyond a certain amount he would receive only the minimum amount as his old age pension. He would know that if he used the plan just the average amount, if he visited a doctor just the average amount, or was unemployed the average amount, and had an average number of accidents, the amount that would accumulate at the present interest rates and the present contribution rates would represent an additional $400 or $500 in his pension at age 65.

In such a case I think the situation would be similar to that in respect of the union I mentioned in Saskatoon. A person would be willing as an individual to protect himself and his family, and he would make it very difficult for any doctor to get him into hospital for a cut finger or any other similar ailment. All of a sudden there would be a great pressure for the doctors to restore home visits and be paid for them, which is not always the case now. All the devices would be used in an effort to keep down the costs. That individual would be careful about every expenditure. It has been estimated that about 50 per cent or 60 per cent of these total costs would disappear if individuals enforced their own use of the plan. So instead of talking about spending $100 million or $300 million more a year, which worries the finance minister now, let us look at a positive approach by which we could save billions of dollars a year through the use of a package approach.

I put forward this proposal not because it is new but because it has been around and never tried. It has been checked actuarially in the Clark Report of 1959-62. I simply say that politicians have some responsibility to their electors and that they should look at information that is already available. With the higher rates of contribution to the plans, the higher use of these plans and the higher the cost of all these services, we should look for an idea of how we could reduce these items and provide an increased old age pension by the introduction of this sort of a package deal. Once again, as I say, I do not have the machinery to do the calculation myself. The calculation could be made in a few months with the machinery the government has at its disposal.

These universal schemes would be combined and the people would pay a fee, a portion of which would go for the social needs of all of us and the balance would be placed in an individual account. I know this is done in respect of the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board. The sales of each individual farmer can be accounted for there. If his account number is punched the computer can tell the number of bushels of wheat, the number of bushels of barley, and the number of bushels of oats, of every grade, and the price in respect of every Canadian Wheat Board transaction made by the farmer.

This is done in respect of social security in the United States. It is done in many cases. I think that if a man were told he could use the excess in his account to increase his old age pension there would be a tremendous individual incentive to use these schemes only as a person's health demanded.

Having said all that, I know there will be thousands of cases where through no fault of the individual all the benefits will be used and therefore there will not be any increased amount in the old age pension under this proposal. I also know there will be a certain number of people, no matter what inducement is placed before them, who will abuse every plan that is put before them because this is their nature. But I would think between 60 per cent and 80 per cent of the people in a community of 22 million or 23 million people like Canada would respond to an individual incentive.

This is very different from the type of situation we have now with a negative deterrent. I spoke rather sternly a month ago on the evils of a single individual negative deterrent. I pointed out that when you put on a deterrent fee for hospital or medical use you punish the sick, the person who is the last one who should be punished.

● (2030)

I pointed out that where the individual deterrent had been tried on an individual basis the political party that tried it ended up by being defeated. I warned the politicians on the government side that by the universal deterrent they are putting in here, without making any effort to get at the basic causes of the rising inflationary cost push, which will simply put up the ceiling which might rise to 13 per cent, and the effect of putting a brake on these things that have gone out of control, will result in the punishment of only one person, the sick person, and there will be widespread revulsion against this.

Also you have the pressure to face that the country simply cannot stand paying $16 billion, $18 billion or $20 billion a year in these open-ended accounts. We know it is a major cause of the inflation we are suffering today, and we know it is destroying people who are trying to earn enough and save enough to have old age security of their own. We know we have to stop this inflation. I am simply pointing out in a positive and constructive sort of way that there is an alternative.

I for one do not mind voting for the motion of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) in which he suggests that we give this bill a six months hoist and let the government have time to think about this idea.

I am sure that among the elected representatives on the opposite side there must be some who are willing to challenge the control that senior members of the civil service have over them. The civil service mandarins have consistently tried for over 30 years to build up a system of controls and regulations in Canada. They think that as long as they hand over the patronage to the politicians they should have the right to run this country on a controlled system. Here they have a chance now in the Liberal party, even if only a few of them stand up in caucus, to say they should take a look at this proposal and not just turn it down and accuse the opposition of obstructionism because they have talked on a matter as important as this for 13 days. The opposition would stop here as of now.

I am not entirely in agreement with those on my left. I have read their speeches and I have a feeling they want all the money we need to handle all these social services, including medicare. I read one statement to the effect that Ontario is trying to save $50 million by closing down some hospitals. That is all part of the program that will be spread across the country soon. There will have to be restrictions. The inference in that statement is: "What is $50 million? Canada is a rich country." I am simply saying that that attitude must also be controlled. But I do not see members of the NDP opposing my proposal. God knows, I have never questioned their sincerity on the need for medicare; let them not question ours when we talk about practical ways to provide positive individual incentives and not to abuse these schemes.

I have hammered in this point as hard as I can, not only to save billions of dollars for the people who go into these schemes but to save the schemes themselves. I know from the experience in Great Britain and some of the countries in Europe, and now in North America, that even though we have been rich countries we are coming to the state where people are getting fed up to the teeth with this ever climbing tax load and the knowledge that all their savings are being wiped out by inflation. One of the causes is this ever increasing cost of government, the interest rates, and so on.

I would hate to see the antagonism of the people rise to the point where they would support policies by any government to slash these schemes and throw them aside. But I do believe that personal incentive, if accepted by the provinces and the federal government with their joint program, has great leverage and that we should save these schemes and reduce the expenses eventually and then have an automatic control mechanism which would not allow them to get out of hand in the future.

I want to conclude by a simple plea to the government members. This is not a political game to some of us. It is something that is a lifelong objective of trying to provide certain minimum fundamental means to the people that the country can afford, such as food, shelter, and medicare, which I think rank as the first three. People in all parties have fought in their legislature and in their parliament for these objectives. I and all those who are listening to me certainly do not want to see antagonism rising against these heavy expenditures resulting in reactionary and negative policies of putting on a ceiling or brake, because I know from bitter experience that when you put on these deterrents it is always the sick person who suffers. The smart guys always know how to get around it.

Therefore I am pleading for all I am worth—I do not have much weight, I know—for somebody in the Liberal party to stand up in their caucus, and hopefully in their cabinet, and say, "Let us take a look at it. We are tired of being run by a group of civil servants who have been consistently wrong for 30 years on the monetary policy, the fiscal policy, and the trade policy, and about this business of putting on services on a universal basis without having a built in individual incentive to make them work."

I would like to see the red blood corpuscles of people who sit on the government benches rise up and make them speak out, because it has happened in other parties and it has had effect on the cabinet. They have been trying to prove in the uproar of the last two weeks that they can stand firm against the claim of the opposition that something improper is going on, but they will stand firm only so long as the caucus stands firm behind them.

The appalling thing we are witnessing here, not only in the episode of the judges, but in the Hamilton harbour case, the question of the SIU, the Austin case and all the rest of them, is that many people on the government benches do not ever think they are doing wrong. Here I am giving them a chance on something that has nothing to do with the patronage system which they seem to worship so much; here is a chance in the field of social welfare to help save it by getting at the basic costs and letting the individual provide the discipline. If you put your faith in the great majority of people, I do not think the individual Canadian will let us down. I hope the government will give this consideration instead of looking at it as a game, applying closure and shutting off the debate.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, speeches in this place are often commenced with the suggestion that the hon. member did not intend to speak. I want to make it clear that right from the start it was my intention to speak at least twice, once on the main motion and once on the amendment. I have been frustrated in that intention by a Liberal virus that has been around the place. Some of us have had to cope with it for the last few weeks. However, I am happy to have the chance to speak at least once in the debate. I can see the application of the closure rule will prevent my speaking when we get back to the main motion, but at least in the few minutes I should like to take now I hope I can make it clear that I think the six months hoist amendment should be supported by the House.

● (2040)

Sir, I have in my hand a book which I wish I could persuade modern-day Liberals to read. Its title on the outside is "National Liberal Convention, Ottawa, 1919". The title on the inside cover page reads as if it were the only convention there ever was. The title is "The Story of the Convention and the Report of its Proceedings"; on the opposite page is a photograph of a very young man identified as W. L. Mackenzie King.

An hon. Member: You were eight years old—

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member is wrong, again; I was eleven. In 1919 we did not have a national party.

An hon. Member: You still don't!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There were some labour and farmer and socialist groups in various parts of the country which were the forerunners of our movement, but I think that any objective student of history, including any of us, would have to agree that the progressive element in Canadian politics was represented by what the Liberal convention fought and stood for in 1919.

In particular I should like modern-day Liberals—the few older ones who are around may have seen this book before but I suspect some of the younger ones did not know of its existence—to read Mr. Mackenzie King's speech in introducing the labour and social policy resolution that was passed at that convention. Some of the things that are in it we surely should have had a long time before that. Some of the things in it were already common practice in democratic countries of western Europe and some other parts of the world, but they were not yet here in Canada so the Liberal party took its stand for a whole host of progressive measures in the social and labour fields.

It is true that if you read through this document you will find a lot of hoopla in it, though not quite as lively as the hoopla of modern conventions. You will find a lot of condemning of the government in power, and a lot of passing the buck and all of that. But I say quite categorically, Mr. Speaker, that the commitment the Liberals made in 1919 to try to move this country forward was quite noteworthy.

Included in the list of things that the Liberal party committed itself to in 1919, as set out in the resolution moved by Mackenzie King, was a commitment to old age pensions, unemployment insurance, and health insurance. One might have hoped, of course, that since that party got into power a couple of years later it would not have taken long until those objectives were realized. But even the progressive Liberals of the 1920's were pretty slow moving. It actually took more than 40 years to get the Liberals to come through with all the things they had promised in that great convention of 1919.

During those 40 years or more there had to be an awful lot of prodding from this side of the House. Our forerunners in the persons of Mr. Woodsworth, Miss Agnes MacPhail and Mr. Heaps had to get here. The C.C.F. had to come along, and then the NDP, to prod all these things. I think it is fair to suggest that over those 40 or 50 years the Liberal party did move in the direction of social legislation for the good of Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: They crept.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was 1926 before the first of the commitments was brought into effect, namely, old age pensions, and the history of that is pretty well known. It was a minority parliament in which there had been no mention in the throne speech that there would be old age pensions when Mr. Woodsworth and his friends wrote letters to all the parties and called for their stand on that issue. They got from Mr. King a promise that old age pensions would be introduced in that parliament. Mr. King had to be pressed considerably even after that, but the bill was introduced in that short minority parliament. Although the bill got passed by this House it was defeated in the other place.

There followed an election, and after that election Mr. King brought the bill back again so that by the end of 1926 or the beginning of 1927 we did have a start on an old age pension system. Old age pensions are not the subject tonight so I shall not take time to describe what that pension was like and the long battle to get it improved. The point is that it took from 1919 to 1926 or 1927 to get the first of these items implemented.

The second item was unemployment insurance. Again we had a promise, a commitment of the great Liberal Party of Canada in its great convention of 1919. So what year was unemployment insurance passed? In 1940, 21 years later, coming into effect in 1941.

For health insurance the struggle was long and almost endless. I remember about 1947 or 1948 when there were rumours around that Mr. King, who was getting near the end of his time as prime minister—was getting near the end of his time in fact—had decided that before he finished he wanted to put health insurance on the statute books. I remember the excitement here one day when word got around that Mr. King would make a statement on motions in the House that afternoon and it would concern health. Some of us were naive enough to think that at long last, in 1948, we were going to get the health insurance that had been promised in 1919. That is not what we got, Mr. Speaker. We got instead the announcement of the hospital grants that the federal government was prepared to make to the provinces. There was no provision in this at all for medical care, but there was the beginning of money to assist the provinces in the building of hospitals.

I remember very well hearing Mr. King say in 1948, all those years after 1919, that we could not do these things overnight, that there was no point in talking about hospital insurance or medical care insurance until the infrastructure—I do not think he used that word because we did not use it in 1948—until all the equipment and buildings were ready and enough doctors had been trained. So in 1948 the notion that we were going to get health insurance proved to be false. It was actually 1957 before the Liberals finally brought in the first act having to do with hospitalization.

Even that act had in it a provision that required a majority of the provinces to come in before it would be effective. It was left to the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) to modify that act when his party came into power so that the provinces could come into the hospitalization legislation one by one.

● (2050)

We had to go all the way to the middle 1960's, to the years when Lester Pearson was prime minister, before the Medical Care Act was finally passed. We waited a long time, from the initial Liberal promise of 1919 until the middle 1960's, to get the Liberal party to implement the glowing promises it had made to Canada. We waited some 45 or 46 years. At least they were moving—

Mr. Nystrom: Creeping.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend says they were creeping. At least they were creeping in the right direction.

In all these discussions about pensions, unemployment insurance, and later about hospitalization and medical care it was established that if the programs were to be of value to the people of Canada they had to be equally available across the country. The idea of co-operation with the provinces is spelled out in the resolution passed by the national Liberal convention of 1919. The Liberals of that day accepted the need for co-operation between Ottawa and the provinces and that schemes had to be introduced which would make social services like pensions, unemployment insurance, hospitalization, and medical care equally available to all right across the country.

Having been present in the House during the last six years of the prime ministership of Mackenzie King and having been a member during the prime ministerships of Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Pearson, I felt that there was a certain tendency on the part of the Liberal party, especially on Mr. Pearson's part, to implement the social commitment which had been made in 1919. As a result we saw improvements in old age pensions; the government introduced the Canada Pension Plan, and we saw improved unemployment insurance. We were given a type of improved hospitalization program, and then we saw the provision for medical care.

My complaint, which I have made previously and which I repeat this evening, is that the modern-day Liberal party under the leadership of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is reversing that long Liberal trend.

An hon. Member: That's the Trudeau party.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend calls it the Trudeau party. Although I know one is not supposed to use that person's name in the House I think that description of the party is better than "Liberal party."

Mr. Blais: Come off it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Kaplan), the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), and others are able to do a pretty good job with figures. They try to show that in terms of numbers of dollars which will be paid to the provinces under the Medical Care Act in the next two or three years, the money flowing from the federal treasury to the provincial treasuries, will increase. They stand up and say, "What are you shouting about?" They ask, why are we complaining about the government's opting out, when it will actually pay a few more dollars?

The point is that the formula in this bill which provides for a limited increase in the next couple of years and then for limits to be fixed after that, by order in council, will mean that reduced amounts will be paid to the provinces. The upshot, even when you consider the amendments which disregard certain things and to which the hon. member for Gloucester referred this afternoon, is this: a few years down the road Ottawa will pay less than 50 per cent of what it costs the provinces to maintain medical care.

Mr. Railton: What years?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I know that the 50 per cent formula is not for a straight 50 per cent and I know that I should not oversimplify it. The present proposition calls for the government to pay 25 per cent of the national average and 25 per cent of the provincial average. The result, in terms of dollars to be spent, is that wealthy provinces get less than 50 per cent, and poorer provinces more than 50 per cent.

Mr. Railton: The wealthy provinces get more than 50 per cent.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend opposite is good at making mistakes.

Mr. Railton: Not at all. I have the figures before me.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, but they are Liberal figures.

Mr. Railton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I will be glad to correct the hon. member. The hon. member on the other side made an incorrect statement. The federal government pays 54 per cent to the wealthy provinces and 75 per cent to the have-not provinces for medicare.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please, that is not a point of order. Hon. members are entitled to make corrections with respect to misinterpretations of their own speeches, but I do not think they can interrupt other hon. members to correct them. The hon. member is the next Liberal speaker on my list. He can make any corrections he wishes when he speaks.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Acting Speaker who was in the chair before Your Honour came in tonight had to rule similarly on a point of order raised by the same hon. member. I say, especially to those opposite, that the result of this legislation will be this: down the road, the percentage which the federal government will pay of total medical costs will be reduced.

Mr. Blais: That is not so.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend opposite can say that is not so, but I suggest that that, precisely, will be the effect of the legislation. In addition the government has given notice that at the end of five years it will renegotiate the hospital agreements. That simply means, that the federal government, which participates with the provinces in providing hospitalization and medical care, will shift more of the burden to the provinces.

Mr. Railton: How sensible is that remark.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I regret that the Liberals have turned away from 50 years of progressive social legislation, which they said should be implemented universely, nation-wide. Now they want to put more of the burden on the provinces.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I do not predict that the day will come when hospitalization and medical care will no longer be free, or that Canadians will have to pays hospital bills or doctors' fees, as used to be the case; but I do predict that, under this regressive aberration, a few years down the road the poorer provinces will not be able to provide the level of medical and hospital services available in the wealthier provinces.

Mr. Railton: And how many years are you going to give us?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If I had my way I would not give you any more years.

Mr. Railton: That's what I thought.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If I had my way, you would be out tonight.

Mr. Railton: I know, I know.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, pardon me for having directed my answer across the way. I was not saying that to Your Honour.

An hon. Member: N'yah, n'yah, n'yah, n'yah!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What an interruption! It shows that the members on the Liberal side do not know what they are doing. The advantage of our present hospital and medical care scheme is that the service is more or less the same in all parts of Canada. If the federal government's share of what provinces must pay to provide medical care and hospitalization goes down, the provinces will have either to cut back services, impose deterrent fees or introduce special charges. When that day comes you will see better service at less cost, in some provinces, and poorer service at a higher cost in others.

The great party across the way talks of national unity. Well, it is destroying national unity where it hurts. When you talk of national unity you do not talk just about language. National unity also counts in terms of health and in terms of the pocket book. As I say, what bothers me is that for 40 years the Liberals seemed to be moving in the right direction. But these characters on the other side who now call themselves Liberals are prepared to send it all down the drain. All the arguments they have been trying to give us in the last few days, and again tonight, about there being more dollars in the next few years do not get away from the fact that they are trying to provide for a lesser share to be paid by the federal government.

● (2100)

There are other schemes coming along like a guaranteed annual income or a new social security system, again on a shared basis. I cannot blame the provinces for being very suspicious about these new shared programs. In the first place, they are put to them in a way that attracts them. It invites the provinces to come in. When they have the experience that down the line somewhere the federal share is reduced, it can only make the provinces leery.

There are some programs such as the old age security that so far we have been able to maintain at the same level right across Canada. The guaranteed income supplement is also at the same level right across Canada. However, already, because the federal government has not raised old age security to the amount it ought to be raised and because it has let down the old age pensioners, governments like those in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and some others have had to come in with special supplements. These supplements vary from province to province. Therefore right today an amount that a pensioner is able to get if he has nothing else varies considerably from province to province. In my book that is not national unity.

These characters across the way, these hon. members who comprise the governing party, are destroying the very basis of national unity. They are selling out the very thing for which their party stood and worked for so many years, even if it took a lot of prodding to get them to do it.

An hon. Member: What is the NDP doing for them?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I get enough jibes around here, such as having come with the building and so on, that I should be careful with what is in my mind at the moment. However, it is really hard to take when new members come to this House and ask what the NDP or the CCF has done in these areas. It is a fact of history that it has been our prodding from the days of Mr. Woodsworth, through the days of the CCF, through the days of the NDP, that has prodded the Liberals to do the things that are worth while in the social field. If my hon. friend does not know that, he should go back to school and read Canadian history. There is no question that the Liberals in power put these pieces of legislation on the books, but not one was put there voluntarily. Everyone had to be pulled out of them by a determined opposition.

For an obvious reason, Mr. Speaker, I should not try to keep going the full 40 minutes. I say that because as I have mentioned there is a Liberal virus around this place that some of us on this side of the House seemed to have picked up. That "Liberal" by the way, is spelled with a capital "L".

There is one comment I want to make to the hon. member for Gloucester. He seemed to take a great deal of pleasure in trying to say to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) that all he was doing was defending higher salaries for doctors. The hon. member for Gloucester said the Medical Care Act only provides payment to the doctors and, unless we are prepared to put these clamps on, we are in effect voting for higher salaries for doctors.

Has the hon. member for Gloucester heard about the Anti-Inflation Act? Has he heard about the Anti-Inflation Board, or is he admitting that in terms of limiting or controlling doctors' salaries, the way the Anti-Inflation Board controls wages, that whole policy is a failure? I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the whole argument the hon. member for Gloucester used at that point is an admission that the Anti-Inflation Board policy is not succeeding, and that it is stupid on his part to argue that we need this bill for that purpose.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member be kind enough to accept a question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Breau: Recognizing that the hon. member might not have supported the anti-inflation program, and that is beside the point, does he agree that because of that program being in effect, this program would have very little effect on the provinces?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, that question implies that the anti-inflation policy has limited the salaries of doctors. If that is the case, in terms of the argument the hon. member was making this afternoon, this bill then is not necessary at all, and it is far better that we should give it the six months hoist.

The other point I want to make before resuming my seat is that it is my strong belief that it is still true that in a country like Canada, with a federal setup, we get along better by co-operation than confrontation. For the federal government, instead of meeting with the provinces to discuss ways and means of holding down medical costs and arriving at some arrangement for that, to try to get this bill through so that it can present the health ministers of the provinces with a fait accompli is the wrong way to go about it. That is another attack on the national unity of this country.

Bill C-68 is wrong on all counts. I hope that when the vote comes at the end of this closure period the House will vote to give this bill a six months hoist.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to follow the very eminent member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who had so much misinformation for this House, particularly from the standpoint of doctors, with respect to Bill C-73 and Bill C-68 which he did not seem able to separate.

Over this past week end I have been reading the speeches of different members. I have also read the remarks made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). I tried to get the ideas being presented here about health care and Bill C-68 into my head. I have gone over a lot of speeches. The minister has been making statements which are very consistent and easy to understand. He has emphasized several things.

First, medicare and hospital care costs, exclusive of extra benefits which some provinces have initiated, have risen by 22.5 per cent last year, will rise 20 per cent this year, and will again rise 18 per cent next year. I hope the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is listening.

Second, for several years negotiations with the provinces about modifications of our cost-sharing arrangements have been unsuccessful in spite of valiant efforts of the Liberal—federal government—I was going to say Liberal government, it is liberal—and constant demonstration of fair treatment both to have and have-not provinces. That is a new phrase, have and have-not. Just like the countries of the world, the provinces are listed much the same. The federal government pays the biggest share in all of these schemes and the amount varies from 54 per cent to 74 per cent, never in any case below 50 per cent.

● (2110)

Third, starting with the budget of June, 1975, and culminating in Bill C-68, the government has proposed to put ceilings on the increase of annual contributions from Ottawa to the provinces. All it is doing is putting ceilings on the contributions. It is not decreasing them. These increases are 13 per cent, 10 per cent, and possibly 8 per cent in the third year but I think the minister has relented and made the last figure 10 per cent and it is likely to continue to be 10 per cent for a year or two thereafter—there is a likelihood that this will continue for five years.

There is one more point. The federal government, as required by law, is serving notice on the provinces that it will terminate and replace existing agreements under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. This allows five years for new agreements to be drawn up, plenty of time in which to review not only cost-sharing but the whole question of possible changes in the health care delivery system.

Looking over the speeches made in the House it is almost incredible how plain statements, so logically presented, were so generally misunderstood or, should I say, so universally misrepresented by all members speaking from the opposition side.

This bill has consumed a vast number of hours during the present session. Too much time has been spent already on this one piece of legislation. I heartily congratulate the government House leader for putting forward the motion which sets limits on further debate. He could not pursue any other course without being unmindful of the government's duty to the people.

It is well known that there is an adequate number of general hospital beds in Canada per capita. In fact we have more beds per capita than they have in the United States or in the United Kingdom. Our greatest need in the matter of beds is for long-stay patients who may be convalescing from acute conditions or for chronically ill patients requiring continuing or permanent hospital care. The federal government for some years has been exploring with the provinces the possible extension of hospital insurance programs to include lower levels of institutional care. This would require the provinces shifting some of the emphasis from expensive acute services to less costly but equally acceptable alternatives. All this could be tidied up before the end of the next five years.

Most members who spoke for the NDP charged that the federal government was reducing its contribution. This is contrary to the facts. There will not be a reduction of services or any need for provinces to increase taxation above levels previously envisaged. Every province could still enjoy the present level of good medical care. Nowhere will there be any reduction in medical research because the rate of escalated contributions would always be held above the inflationary index.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can you keep a straight face and say that?

Mr. Railton: Mr. Speaker, those pious, rather hypocritical expressions of melancholy and cries that the provinces were being abandoned are completely unfounded. Most of those speakers—and I am referring now to members of the New Democratic Party—felt there was no need to economise or cut frills. Some advocated complete disregard for spiralling costs. In fact they counselled us to leave things exactly as they are, no matter what the cost. How impractical can you be?

The Progressive Conservatives, on the other hand—and there were plenty of good speeches made over there—said the government had acted unilaterally without giving warning to the provinces. The minister has shown how false this accusation really is. He was, as usual, called arrogant—a favourite opposition description of any courageous move on the part of the government.

Conservative spokesmen also asked, "Why bring in Bill C-68; surely the anti-inflation controls under C-73 will be enough to look after increasing costs?" The crux of the matter is that negotiations must be completed in the next five years and agreement achieved. Given any kind of co-operation, this question should have been settled already.

Our worthy opponents opposite even blame the federal government for the inept "bull-in-the-china-shop" type of hospital closures recently seen in Ontario. If this happened to be the object of Frank Miller's or Bill Davis' ploy, it certainly backfired. These inept confrontations between the Ontario department of health and the unfortunate hospitals which have been closed down only increased the difficulties of Ontario's hospitalization program.

It is very hard to see how the complete closure of hospitals such as the Doctors' Hospital, the Clinton Hospital, and the Paris Hospital can save money for anybody. First, the hospital staff becomes unemployed. Next, the hospital buildings must be maintained even if they are not used. Third, the patients must be moved to other hospitals where they will be cared for at greater expense. In my opinion it would have been much better had there been some reduction in the over-all bed establishment at all Ontario hospitals. At the same time the number of beds reserved for patients suffering from acute conditions could have been reduced and other wards could have been set aside and used by convalescent patients. As I mentioned before, these "lower level" beds could still serve the community well, though in some cases the status, medically, of the community hospital of necessity would have to be lowered.

We have been criticized incorrectly because of this interpretation. It has been said that the federal government has instituted cuts whose effects would be to reduce health care services. In fact, as explained earlier, the government has simply put ceilings on annual increases in its contributions. These are still well above the inflationary rate. The whole subject has received a great deal of study and it is well known that these ceilings will not jeopardize the present program. Nevertheless it is imperative that both sides reach an agreement.

Our mortality rate, our medicare and hospitalization systems, have been compared to those of foreign countries. We realize that a health delivery system enjoys continuance of the status quo, but it is not sacrosanct. People in Canada rather like our present system which allows doctors to carry on private practices. There is no doubt that the level of medical care in Canada in doctors' offices is much superior to that in the United Kingdom. It is the hospitals, though, which are at the centre of our medical care system.

Victims of drug overdoses, drunks, psychologically upset families, and people hurt in car accidents crowd into our hospital emergency wards at night and especially on week ends. The hospital has become over-used. This is due partly to pressure from people frequenting the emergency facilities and sometimes to over-servicing by thoughtless doctors. Only in hospitals can major operations be performed.

It has become clear that doctors cannot do house calls and still see all the people who crowd into their offices or even into outpatient departments. Even though there is one doctor for every 900 people in Canada some people feel there is an under-supply of medical care. It is quite possible that the present dilemma can only be solved by using a new approach to health care delivery systems.

● (2120)

When one considers that many day-to-day patient complaints are minor, it would seem that a highly educated professional man is not required to use his knowledge and skill very often. It has been contended that many patients coming into outpatient departments or even into doctors' offices could be seen primarily by a paramedical assistant in the OPD or in the home. Following that, only a small percentage would need to see a doctor. However, if this plan were to be adopted the excellence of treatment would inevitably deteriorate. The experienced, well trained physician can quickly tell how serious a case is, whereas a paramedic might understandably misjudge the situation.

In spite of this, if we are to give universally free care to all, we may be forced to reorganize our system and still wisely make use of our medical brains. With a different type of organization we could certainly make use of nurse practitioners, medics, supertrained orderlies and operating room assistants. The whole system would have to be overhauled and organized for efficiency and reduced expense. However, the rising salaries of other levels of medical care personnel make one wonder whether this would really lead to a reduction in costs.

At the present time there have been great changes in hospital administration. About 25 years ago most hospital funds were concentrated on providing care and treatment to the patient. Now, because of our accreditation program, mention of which was made earlier in the debate, and because of the need for uniformity of high level treatment, efficiency experts have become hospital administrators and a great deal of money has had to be spent on documentation. This is always the trouble in trying to devise efficient systems—sometimes the patient suffers, though the statistics look good.

There is no doubt that central district hospitals looking after a large number of specialties are the most efficient way to care for the sick. Satellite hospitals could be built or continue to be used in the surrounding areas. Their work of necessity would be at a lower level. Where a hospital has been built and possesses enough land some of these convalescent, chronic and extended care buildings could very advantageously be built very close to the original acute hospital. There is what we are trying to do in my own constituency of Welland where the board was farsighted enough to build the hospital on between 15 and 20 acres of land. In these district hospitals a very well-endowed intensive care unit is a necessity and all the diagnostic tools must be available.

I feel sometimes that the promotion of private laboratories was a mistake. There has recently been a great deal of suspicion about the financial probity of some of these private laboratories. Ideally, all x-ray examinations and laboratory examinations would be done in the hospital or under hospital supervision, and where this does not take place private institutions have sometimes lent themselves to unscrupulous ordering of total body x-rays and total laboratory examinations which are not required. This increases the private institution's income, and for this reason alone hospital supervision should be mandatory.

In my speech, except perhaps for the last few remarks, I have tried to stay fairly close to Bill C-68, which I hope will pass quickly. I think it has been misunderstood and I am sure it has been wilfully misinterpreted. However, I think that not only must we examine suggestions for improved financing but we must allow for change in our medical care and hospital care systems. This evolution has to proceed constantly as we learn new methods.

On February 11 last the Minister of National Health and Welfare wrote a letter to the editor of the Globe and Mail in Toronto and very explicitly drew his attention to disparaging references about the national medical care program made in his paper. The minister said that from the editorial it would seem that experience of medicare has been so severe that the federal government is "trying to dump it totally on the provinces". The minister continued:

> I find this somewhat ironical since I have just written a letter to the Editor of the Ottawa Journal who . . . had accused me of totally backing down to the provinces and abandoning our efforts to restrain the rate of cost increase. Both points of view are, of course, totally erroneous.

That is the point I have been trying to make in my speech. The minister went on to say that he felt that the editorial writer had presented his data in a most misleading fashion. Further on the minister went on to say this:

> What your editorial writer does not point out is that in 1967-68 the health-related expenditures, which in 1975-76 amounted to approximately 30 per cent of the provincial budget, took up 31 per cent of the provincial budget. He perhaps overlooked the fact that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission had its own budget, separate from the Ministry of Health, in those days. To the $359 million shown in the Ministry's 1967-68 budget one has to add $412 million from the OHSC budget to compare with 1975-76. Also, before medicare a number of provincial departments had medical expenditures which, following medicare, were put into one pot and shown subsequently in the health department's budget. In any event the budget of the Ministry of Health today does not appear to take up any larger proportion of the current provincial budget that the health-related expenditures took up during the several pre-medicare years.

I do not intend to read the whole letter, Mr. Speaker, but I think it would be of advantage to members of the House to read it. For some reason I feel there has been a very stubborn and obtuse attempt on the part of all opposition parties in the House to misrepresent the government's policy on health care, and I deplore this. I do not see, and have never seen, why anyone in politics would misrepresent a case just for their own political gain.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the speeches of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has a tremendous amount of experience in the House, and of my hon. friend, the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton). Others who have contributed to the debate have shown there are still things to be said.

● (2130)

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Chrétien) has just entered the Chamber. I remember in 1967 or 1968 he said we do not have enough money to institute the medical care act. It was postponed for a whole year. The present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), who was then the Minister of National Health and Welfare, brought in this act shortly after. It was discussed at some length in this House.

In respect of the compromises concerning the situation we are in, together with the galloping expenses of health care and so on, it is interesting to note that a system was already in operation in the province of Ontario under the premier of that day, Mr. Robarts. It is interesting to note that 80 per cent of the people of the province of Ontario were covered through one insurance scheme or another. Prior to that the plan was run by the Ontario Physicians Services. The administration costs, if I remember correctly, were around 2 per cent. A fine new building was built, and at the time it was closed there was a reserve fund.

Today, out of the $7 fee a physician receives for his service, the government takes 10 per cent. No one really knows what are the administrative costs. One thing we do know is that every doctor is humbugged by papers and papers and by bureaucracy and bureaucracy, until a third of his time is spent filling out papers when he should be devoting that time to his patients. This is bureaucracy.

When Mr. Robarts introduced a health care bill in the province of Ontario to cover the 25 per cent of the population in that province who had some problems in meeting their medical bills he introduced a sliding scale by which those who had a certain income would make no payments, those in another income scale would make a payment of a certain percentage, and those in another income scale would have to pay the whole premium. This was all underwritten by the insurance companies. This plan was carried much more cheaply than the national scheme is carried today.

When the federal government introduced the national medical care bill it still taxed the people of the province of Ontario. That province was forced into the medical care plan, after the federal government had received some $125 million from the province of Ontario which was paid into the national medical care plan.

There is no way the federal government can escape the responsibility for the national medical care bill. The federal government forced this on the provinces whether or not they liked it, because the provinces were taxed for it in any event.

I was interested in the speech made by my young friend from Gloucester when he spoke about the doctors so kindly. Let me tell him from my lengthy experience that there is no way the doctors can be separated from the hospital or health care scheme. They work together. The hon. member made a very good speech, but he was completely wrong when he said we could separate the fields. I should like to tell the hon. member that young doctors, after they have been working for three or four years, expect a raise. At that time they usually can expect to have more patients and therefore have a higher income, but under the anti-inflation bill they are limited to an increase of $2,400. There is no way the hon. member can equate that with an increase of 13 per cent.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Rynard: Certainly.

Mr. Breau: I cannot disagree with the hon. member that the two obviously are closely related, but will he agree with me that regardless of what close relationship there may be they are administered at the federal and provincial level by two separate statutes? My point was that this particular statute we are amending does not have a direct effect on the other hospital insurance program.

Mr. Rynard: I just want to tell my young friend there is no way these doctors can get more than $2,400 under the new regulations. The young person who is trying to build up a practice will be hurt. I want to be very clear on this point. I ran a clinic. We brought in young men. We trained them. As their ability increased they attracted more patients. I hope there will always be an incentive for them to learn, to do better work all the time and attract more patients.

In 1969 it was pointed out in this House by the then minister of national health and welfare that the rising costs were becoming a considerable factor. He pointed this out dramatically. Although he mentioned that it may be difficult to carry out the plan he said there were three ways in which it could be done. He mentioned a deterrent fee. Let me say to everybody in this House that if there was any reason for bringing in a national medical care bill it was so that the poor could obtain the necessary care. A deterrent fee works directly against that purpose.

We heard in 1969 that we would be in trouble. The various ministers of national health and welfare in this House and the ministers of health for the provinces have had seven years in which to find ways and means to face the problem of the rising costs. I want to ask what they have done. They have had closed meetings and other meetings. What have we heard? If one looks at Hansard one can see the replies to the questions that have been asked. We are told that the ministers are getting together and that the problem would be dealt with, but that has gone on for the last six years. Where do we stand today? What is the situation in respect of these problems?

We are facing a situation of deteriorating health care in a country that was known world-wide for its health care plan. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all the members in this House that I, as one of the older physicians, regret this very much. In certain areas they are taking measures today which result in the reduction of the incentive to work which we used to have under the old scheme. The good relationship between the patient and the doctor is pretty well gone nowadays.

● (2140)

I want to ask the minister why some means and ways have not been found whereby people could be treated more cheaply. In the last seven years they have had the opportunity to work out schemes to provide by alternative methods the high cost care which now is cut off. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that it does not seem fair or right that we should pay the money we are paying to have the administration, not only at the provincial level but at the federal level, cut down on services. It is not right that some system has not been worked out so that expensive health care which they are talking about now could be provided by cheaper means and the closing of hospitals would not be necessary. What we see now shows a completely immature knowledge in a field that they are not expert enough to handle.

I watch this, Mr. Speaker, and I look at my own province, the province in which this House of Commons is located. What about the house calls that the physician used to make? He used to go out into the country to visit his patients. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that now there is nothing with which to pay for his mileage? He has to run his own car at his own expense and he is paid exactly the same as if he were making a call at the hospital. Which would you do, Mr. Speaker? The government had the opportunity—

An hon. Member: Why don't you ask Bill Davis about that?

Mr. Rynard: We are not talking about Bill Davis; we are talking about the national medicare bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rynard: I say to you, Mr. Speaker, if they want a broadcast on this I will go across Canada and speak on this issue, even if they want to talk about Quebec, Nova Scotia or Manitoba. I will talk about these provinces because I happen to know what is going on there also. So if they want to broaden the field and speak about provinces other than the province of Ontario, I will tell them about the other provinces as well as about the province in which this House of Commons is located, a province which pays 38 per cent of all the taxes in Canada. I will tell them about that province having to cut down its health schemes, having to close its hospitals. I say that when that happens there is something radically wrong with this scheme which was brought in here in 1968. That is the point I am making.

I want to say that I have some records which indicate that people can be treated more cheaply in their own homes. I refer to one specific case of two people over 90 years of age who would have been placed in treatment homes but for the fact that a doctor interested in their case said, "We will treat these people at home, if possible." He went out a distance of ten miles to make his calls and he arranged for a lady to go to the house to look after these two patients in their own home at $100 a week. Do you know what it would have cost on an average in any hospital in Ontario? It would have cost around $100 a day. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what it would have cost to have those patients in one of the treatment homes of which they have many in Ontario which provide extended care? It would have cost $20 a day.

The government assured people they would get health care, and the minister said that there would be no lack of health care across Canada. I would like to take them to hospitals where patients are not getting good health care. I was in an institution the other day and the bells started ringing, the buzzers from patients' rooms. I asked what the heck had gone wrong because you could hardly hear yourself. I was told that four of the people on the nursing staff had been dismissed to save money. Who is suffering? It is the patient. Who is overworked? It is the nurse and the nurse's assistant. That is the type of health care people are getting.

I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the health ministers across this country, what in the name of heavens is wrong that they cannot jointly work out a system to provide less expensive health care which would allow people to be treated in homes where they could get home care? Surely they have a home care program starting and federal moneys are paid into this program, but what type of home care is it? Under certain conditions it is very good if there is someone else in the home apart from the patient. Under that program they will send a person to the home for eight hours, which is a help, but what if that patient is alone? Why can they not provide a 24 hour service? Would it not be cheaper to provide a 24 hour service than to pay $100 a day for an active treatment bed, as well as emergency expenses, because a patient has to go through the emergency ward to get to the active treatment bed?

They are closing down hospitals, cutting down services, and at the same time patients have to be moved from the hospitals that are being closed. Ambulances have to go out farther, yet they are cutting ambulance budgets. You know what happens when that budget is cut. Someone might lose his life because instead of the ambulance reaching him in half an hour he may have to wait two hours as a result of the call system which exists across Ontario.

Here is the situation in which we find ourselves. We have a deteriorating health care scheme, which is a problem of not only this parliament but a problem which this legislation imposes through an act of this parliament on all provinces across Canada, some of which had a better scheme.

I want to say this very definitely to my friend, the hon. member for Gloucester, that the provinces which will be hurt first of all are the poor provinces such as the Atlantic provinces. He knows it, and there is no way around it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Rynard: Yes, they will be hurt because the poor always get hurt. If you have lived long enough, you have seen that. I have lived long enough to know that and to understand that it is always the poor who get hurt, not the rich who have the ways and means to get out of it. It is the poor provinces that find themselves in that position. So I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I hope this bill will be given the six months hoist which it deserves. Let us do a little common sense thinking about it and let the minister meet provincial health ministers across Canada, talk to them, and jointly come up with ways and means which would not destroy one of the finest health schemes there is in the world.

● (2150)

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thought this afternoon that hon. members across the floor had lost their tongues completely. I was therefore very pleased to see that tonight we are back in a debating position and have heard some very good speeches. I certainly must commend the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard); it is good to hear someone speak on a subject he knows something about and on which he can give some information.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McRae: I am concerned about some of the points he mentioned, particularly the doctors' problems with house calls and that kind of thing, and the lack of incentive. There is no doubt that there are areas of great concern and we should be doing more about them. Certainly if the $7 fee is still in effect that is considerably less than the fee of almost anyone else who comes to make a home service call. That is a very serious problem.

I should also like to mention the speech of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton). He too reached into his experience in this area. A little later I shall come to the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

I speak as one who is a consumer of medical care and one who is concerned about the problems the government faces in meeting the high cost and the huge sums of money that are dispensed for health care. I think it is important after 12 days of debate on this issue that we go over again what the bill is supposed to do. There seems to be a great deal of confusion, some I am sure deliberate and perhaps some innocent, about the effect of the bill.

First of all I think it should be fully understood that this is a medical care bill only; it deals with doctors' fees and medicare, but does not deal with hospitalization. I think it is important that this be made clear. The bill says that in the year beginning April 1, 1976, the increase over the previous year will be limited to 13 per cent, for the subsequent year 11 per cent, and the third year to be negotiated, but will probably be 10 per cent. These figures are the increases in the cost of medical care that will be allowed by the federal government which pays, depending on the affluence of the province, roughly 50 per cent of the total cost. I think it would be a very cruel act to bring this particular bill in to limit these costs if we were not at the same time bringing in an anti-inflation program.

The anti-inflation program, with the setting up of the board and the control on wages, and the attempt to control prices, will work, and I think it is important. Putting this 13 per cent up against what we hope will be only 8½ per cent inflation in the first year that is covered, April 1, 1976 to April 1, 1977, and to say after that we would hope this would be down to 6 per cent or 7 per cent—say 13 per cent versus 8½ per cent or 8 per cent, or 11 per cent versus probably 6 per cent and 7 per cent and so on—I think this is an important aspect of the bill. It is being debated after we brought in the anti-inflation program, and I think that makes the bill a much more feasible proposition. I think we have to realize that the bill also allows for special considerations where there are significant population increases.

I should like to deal with this whole subject in terms of the two opposition parties. I should like to deal first with the New Democratic Party's position, which is the same as the Conservative party's position, but obviously for different reasons. I have a very warm feeling about the NDP, and before it the CCF, and their long term approach to the need for medical care and hospital care. I feel that the period between 1919-20 when these things were first mentioned and 1966 might have been reduced considerably had there not been a third party in this country, but rather had the progressive elements in that third party been a part of the Liberal party, the party mainly in power. The time element might very well have been shortened. That does not in any way detract from their efforts made over the years to bring about this result. There has been a genuine concern by the NDP for better health care, and I think it has been justified.

This government brought in the medicare program and has made great improvements in medical care. We have allowed the cost to rise in ratio well above the combination of the gross national product and the inflation rate over the years. This has been a good thing because it was necessary to improve medical services, and an over-run of this kind was absolutely necessary.

One of the consistent themes that the NDP has used in this House on many, many issues is its constant concern about the high level of health care, social care and so on, which inevitably means increased cost. I think the big difference between that party and our party in this respect is not in our concern but rather in the fact that we are in power. We form the government and we have to be responsible; we have to impose the limit on how much can be spent.

In terms of cost sharing arrangements with the provinces there are some very serious problems. One problem is that if we offer to pay 50 per cent, and the provinces do the spending, we do not have much control over what they spend. If they spend $100 million we will have to put up 50 per cent, and if they spend $200 million we will still have to put up 50 per cent. While it was necessary to set up these cost-sharing schemes, the plan is creating some great overrun for the federal government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to deal with the business of the House. The last time I was asked about this I said that following the conclusion of debate on Bill C-68 we would probably revert to discussion on second reading of Bill C-83, but I entered a qualification that it might be desirable instead to take under consideration on Bill C-89. I want to announce that, after disposing of Bill C-68, we will take up Bill C-89 which relates particularly to the appeal procedures in the Anti-Inflation Act.

● (2200)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIR TRANSPORT—REASON FOR NOTICE TO PILOTS TO EXERCISE CAUTION WHEN FLYING OVER QUEBEC

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in a release concerning bilingual air traffic services dated February 25, 1976, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) used the first page to state, in capital letters and underlined, that there has not been one validated incident of a near miss which could be attributed to the use of a second language. I contend that the minister and the government are playing with the lives of pilots and air passengers when they put the demands of Francophone air traffic controllers and pilots before safety. As a matter of fact I have reason to believe that even the minister's release is a concerted attempt to mislead the public and placate the vocal federal Quebec Liberal members.

I have been in consultation with the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association. They inform me that in the past 15 months they have reported 20 incidents of close calls in the air in Quebec. To Mr. W. M. McLeish, director general of civil aeronautics, these close calls involved confusion in language, and personality conflicts between French and English, yet not one of these reports has been acknowledged by either Mr. McLeish or the department. I should like to challenge the minister on his statement that not one incident has been validated; because if that is the case one wonders why the reports were not acknowledged. Furthermore, if investigations did take place, I ask the minister to make them public.

The government claims that those who object to bilingual air traffic services are too emotional. If being concerned about the safety of people is being too emotional, I plead guilty. Safety has been cast aside for political expediency. In the few short moments I have to speak I wish to touch upon the weaknesses in the government's arguments.

Though the official language of the air has been English, the government has bowed to political pressure and carried its bilingualism program into the air. This is a safety hazard unacceptable to the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association. If these two major organizations are opposed, why has the government persisted in carrying out bilingual air traffic services? It has chosen to ignore both traffic controllers and pilots in favour of vocal minority.

The minister leans heavily on the argument that certain European countries use two languages in air traffic control but ignores the fact that English is used as the international air language. He fails to explain why a second language is needed in Canada. Until a few short months ago we operated in the international language. Furthermore, the minister avoids altogether the fact that air traffic in Europe is not nearly as great as in Canada. The minister is being irresponsible in refusing to listen to reason.

As a concerned party I have been in consultation with pilots and their association and they have expressed serious reservations about the government's seeming lack of concern about safety. Pilots operating in a busy airspace such as the Montreal vicinity cannot afford language confusion which would create dangerous gaps and uncertainties. In such a case the lives of people would be in danger, and I really wonder what the government's excuse is going to be in the event of such a terrible tragedy as an air crash.

For the record I should like to point out some of the dangers involved in the introduction of a second language into aviation, as detailed by professionals. They include, first, the elimination of some safety redundancy built into the existing system; second, added complexity and increased workload for controllers; third, additional communications on already overloaded radio frequencies; and, fourth, unilingual Francophone pilots operating in English only controlled air space. In light of these and other dangers it has now become clear that the demands of Francophone pilots have taken priority over safety. Even the Bilcom task force, which found that an overwhelming majority of the aviation community saw no need for bilingual communications, has gone unheeded.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that all the reports and documents in the world are not going to sway the government's efforts to win political support at any cost, including safety. It is a sad day when one has to run the risk of being branded as a bigot to ensure that common sense and safety prevail.

In closing, I was informed just today that Air Canada crew members, such as stewardesses, are refusing to bid for trips into Montreal because of the dangerous bilingual traffic control situation. Also, as I pointed out two weeks ago, notices had been posted at Canadian airports by the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association warning pilots to exercise extreme caution when flying into Quebec. All in all, Mr. Speaker, it is a very sad state of affairs for Canadian air travellers and crews.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the statement in the hon. member's question of March 5 appears to be an extract from a news report of a situation which occurred in the Montreal area control centre in December, 1975. It is to be remembered that at that time two air traffic controllers had been suspended for the improper use of ground to ground communication procedures. Consequently the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) decided that the pecuniary penalty attached to these suspensions should be reduced with the view that this would improve the situation relative to a dispute between certain controllers in the Montreal area control centre.

Apparently the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association, for their own reasons, decided that there was a situation existing at that time in the Montreal area control centre which prompted them to issue a notice directing their members to exercise extreme caution when flying into and within the province of Quebec. There is no evidence of which I am aware that in the interest of safety it was necessary for the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association to take such action.

May I simply conclude, Mr. Speaker, by repeating the essential concern of the Ministry of Transport with the matter of air safety. It is not the thrust of any policy of the Government of Canada to cause a deterioration in Canada's enviable record of performance for safety in the air.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF INCLUDING OIL PRICES WITHIN GUIDELINES

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I was not surprised in answer to my question of March 9 on whether Canadian crude oil prices would come under the Anti-Inflation Board that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) gave a firm no, even though the Liberal premier of Nova Scotia had recently said that it was only political expediency that kept the federal government from doing so.

In answering the second part of my question as to whether substantial increases in equalization grants to the province of Nova Scotia, as well as maintenance of the present level of oil subsidies, would continue, the minister interpreted the question to imply that I was looking for a special Nova Scotia oil price as opposed to that payable by the rest of Canadians.

We are, of course, well aware that the federal government is already equalizing oil prices across the country at lower than the world price. The minister, however, should be aware that despite this there has been a 50 per cent rise in the cost of electricity in the province of Nova Scotia in 1975. If the federal government allows a further increase of, let us say, $2 for Canadian crude oil at the wellhead after July, which would make it about $10 a barrel, then we in Nova Scotia could well see another 50 per cent increase in the cost of electricity in the province of Nova Scotia by 1977—especially when that province's long-term and exceptionally favourable contract with Imperial Oil runs out at the end of this year. That company provides 30 per cent of all the oil used in Nova Scotia.

We know that the federal government desires to push up considerably the price of Canadian crude by July in order to fulfil its policy of allowing the price of Canadian crude to tend gradually to equal the world price. This price, of course, is not a market price but is a monopoly price. Because it is a monopoly price it should not, in my opinion, be used as a criterion for the allocation of our petroleum fuel resources. Amongst other things, it sets a dangerous policy precedent.

The Canadian cabinet as well as the American government in this connection should give the plan of Professor Morris A. Adelman of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology serious consideration. He has long been an advocate of a government oil buying program, and has proposed a government purchasing agency which would control all oil imports. I recently forwarded to the finance minister an article by Professor Adelman in which he is advocating a system of sealed bids by individual oil producing countries, which would not in itself destroy the OPEC monopoly but could be a quick and effective means of bringing international oil prices down.

● (2210)

I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and the premier of Nova Scotia, have brought it to the attention of the government that in every part of the province of Nova Scotia there are increasing signs of citizen anger in the form of protest meetings and more permanent protest organizations. I honestly fear that some of this pent up anger can lead to very ugly recriminations.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs at a recent provincial Liberal gathering held in Halifax was quoted as asking the provincial government officials to avoid "trying to foment anger toward Ottawa". But what can one do when people using electrical heating, pushed at them only four or five years ago as the cleanest and cheapest way to heat a home, are reported as receiving bills for two months as high as $350?

In my constituency I have widows and pensioners on low and relatively fixed incomes coming in to see me about their electrical power bills with despair on their faces, and sometimes with tears in their eyes.

We know that the per capita income figure for Nova Scotia is often quoted as 75 to 78 per cent of the Canadian average, and that is the best of any province in the Atlantic region. The latest official figures though for Glace Bay, the largest town in my constituency, reveal that it is only 54 per cent of the Canadian average. New Waterford, the next largest town, is only 48 per cent of that average, and Cape Breton County 55 per cent.

The minister is probably aware that about 55 per cent of Nova Scotia power is generated from oil, with another 30 per cent generated by coal the price of which, through Devco, is contractually tied to the present subsidized price of oil. Thus, during last year, for example, Devco's coal division showed a deficit larger by $10 to $15 million because of this arrangement. In view of this situation, and because of the heavy unemployment in Cape Breton, the Cape Breton Development Corporation should be given the money to start two new coal mines in the area, one at Lingan in the New Waterford district and the other at Donkin in the Glace Bay region, for the generation of power. One could be immediately started in 1977 and the other, with some extra effort, by 1978. We should be taking advantage of the fact that Cape Breton coal is now not only competitive with oil for thermal power production in Nova Scotia but has the added advantage of an assured supply in case of another oil embargo.

The federal government should as well, especially in the case of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, maintain in the interim a decent level of subsidies against imported oil and make additional funds available for Nova Scotia by way of equalization payments that could be earmarked for reducing the power bills of low income home owners and those special type of businesses whose power costs are a substantial part of their total costs. The provincial government on its part as a minimum concession should forgo building expensive sport complexes. and any other needless amenities in the Halifax-Dartmouth area so as to keep down electrical costs throughout the province.

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been unable to find any reference in the Globe and Mail as was mentioned by the member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) in his question. However, I do understand that Premier G. A. Regan, when speaking in support of the government's anti-inflation program during debate in the Nova Scotia House of Assembly in Halifax, did make reference to the fact that crude oil prices are outside the ambit of the Anti-Inflation Act. This is true, Mr. Speaker, simply because petroleum prices were already subject to control under the Petroleum Administration Act when the anti-inflation program was introduced.

The appropriate level of petroleum prices has been the subject of much debate in this House, at federal-provincial conferences, and by most Canadians over the past several years. They have been and continue to be subject to control under the Petroleum Administration Act. The desire for low prices must be balanced against the need to ensure adequate supplies. The provisions for oil compensation payments, which in the coming fiscal year (1976-77) are estimated to be $1.41 billion, are a unique effort to provide that balance. These controls are consistent with the anti-inflation program, and it appears inappropriate to subject petroleum to two controls where one is sufficient.

I might add that among the intended changes in the anti-inflation guidelines announced one week ago, the relationship between the guidelines and the Petroleum Administration Act is being tightened to ensure that prices for petroleum products will clearly be subject to one or the other act. Crude oil prices are already subject to control under the Petroleum Administration Act, and there is neither the need nor intention to bring them specifically under the anti-inflation guidelines.

FINANCE—EFFECT OF RAISING BANK INTEREST RATE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question was raised on March 8 when I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) about the recently announced increase in the bank rate. I also asked him whether he would indicate what impact he felt this increase would have on mortgage interest rates in Canada and the cost of borrowing for the average Canadian, and whether he would indicate what was the purpose of the increase in the bank rate.

In general the minister gave a most unsatisfactory answer, and I believe there is no alternative but to face the fact that we are heading for a credit crunch in this country. I believe it is necessary for the minister to bring in a new budget now, not in May. I notice that in commenting in committee, to the press, and also in the House, he has got into the habit of saying he cannot make any observation concerning various economic matters as it is a budgetary point and he feels the answer should be delayed until the budget. That is just a stall. The nation deserves answers to some of the critical questions now before us.

I refer to questions such as why should we be literally in first place among the western industrialized nations so far as our bank rate is concerned? In fact, Mr. Speaker, there is no other country in the world at the present time with a higher rate than our present bank rate, with the exception of Brazil. I point out that in Britain, which most people think is in serious shape, its bank rate has not risen above 9 per cent, where it is at the present time. Italy, whose central bank is generally regarded to be one of the weakest of the industrialized nations—in fact that nation was close to bankruptcy last year—got through its dilemma without raising its bank rate beyond 8 per cent.

In short, Canadians deserve some answers from the minister. For example, why should we have a Canadian prime rate of 10¼ per cent at the present time, when the American prime rate is 6¾ per cent? On December 31 the prime rate in the United States was 7¼ per cent but it has gone down at least half a point since the end of the year. The Canadian prime rate at that time was 9¾ per cent but has gone up half a point since then.

I could cite various examples of U.S. bond rates, treasury bills, and various other debt obligations carrying interest coupons at the present time of 3 per cent, even 4 per cent, lower than those in Canada. One of the contributing factors to high interest rates in Canada is the high rate of government spending. I believe that when the government talks of restraint it is simply misleading the Canadian public. There has been no restraint evidenced by the government to date. In fact, appearing before the finance, trade and economic affairs committee last Tuesday, the Minister of Finance finally broke down and admitted that the cash drain or deficit in Canada, so far as the federal government is concerned, will be $5.5 to $6 billion in the current year. I asked him what he anticipated to be the drain in the coming fiscal year, 1977, and he startled me, frankly, by saying it would be something like that, though it was a budgetary matter and he would not be specific. In short, Mr. Speaker, in two years we will have a drain in this nation of between $11 billion and $12 billion, and this is one of the factors causing the increase in our bank rate.

● (2220)

Second, I would point out the impact of the increase. How many people realize, for example, that in the fiscal year 1970 the total interest in annual amortization cost to the federal government of our national debt was $1.7 billion? In the estimates now before us for 1977 the cost has gone up to 4,641,000,000. That is an increase of 271 per cent in a period of seven years. This is the interest load the government is inflicting upon the Canadian people either through the higher rate structure or increase of debt.

Again this impact is felt by the average home owner in this country. I pointed out that in the United States the rate is about three percentage points below ours. People there are able to write off their interest on mortgages and chattels against their income before they calculate income tax. Here we do not have that privilege. The net result is that in the United States a person can now have a $40,000 mortgage with a 25-year amortization period with monthly payments of $331 per month, whereas in Canada the monthly payment is almost $100 higher, $412 a month for the same size mortgage on the same amortization over a 25-year period. An average Canadian must now pay $123,000 to clear off a $40,000 mortgage, whereas the average American with a $40,000 mortgage would pay $99,000.

I think the government should become a little more honest with the Canadian public concerning the dilemma it is in. By increasing the debt charges in this nation by a half point recently the government has increased the overall cost to Canadians in respect of borrowing money by $350 million approximately. I calculate that figure simply based on the $70 million outstanding debt insofar as our Canadian banks are concerned at the present time. Such an increase in interest rates is inflationary, not deflationary.

The Minister of Finance's contention that he is effectively restraining the growth of our money system by the increase in the interest rate is absolute nonsense. Sure; that perhaps has an indirect slowing down on the demand for money but it does not have the effect of increasing the reserves that are required by the chartered banks with regard to their loan activity. That is the effective way to bring monetary expansion in line.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, following the announcement of the increase in the bank rate from 9 to 9½ per cent, made on March 5 by the Bank of Canada, chartered banks announced similar increases in their prime rate which is now established at 10¼ per cent. At the same time, banks increased their rates on savings accounts by at least ½ or 1 per cent. It is still too early to know the full impact of this increase on other interest rates, particularly on mortgages and personal loans.

As far as the personal loans rate is concerned, I would like to underline that this rate does not necessarily always vary according to the same pattern as the banks' prime rate. So when we consider the movement of interest rates from early 1973 to the end of 1974, we see that the consumer loans rate increased by only 1 to 1½ per cent, while during the same period the prime rate went up 5½ per cent. There may be several reasons for the difference between these two markets, including—not least—administrative matters concerning banks.

It is enough, within the ambit of this discussion, to recall that the personal loan market may not be affected by rising prime rates in the same way as business loans are. The rate for consumer loans now authorized by the banks stands around 13½ per cent.

Mortgage rates, on the other hand, respond more readily to the variations of the basic bank rate and we can expect some increase in this field. This is because mortgage rates are generally determined by the rates which lenders must pay on term deposits which are their main source of funding. Now banks have not yet announced changes in the interest rates on term deposits. On the other hand, a few trust companies have already announced rate increases in their guaranteed investment certificates. Those increases vary from ¼ of 1 per cent to ¾ of 1 per cent. Those companies have raised their mortgage rates by ¼ of one per cent, which means they now reach the 12 per cent ceiling they had reached recently. Therefore it is too early to predict at what exact level those mortgage rates will level off.

I would like to point out two interesting facts concerning this recent increase in the bank interest rates. First, we must rejoice at the fact that some banks have reestablished a special rate for small concerns. This lower prime rate for small concerns allows them to better face the effects of higher interest rates. It is to be hoped that all the banks will reestablish this special rate.

Second, I would like to draw the attention of the House on the fact that some banks have already announced increases in interest rates paid on savings which exceed the increases in interest rates charged on loans, thus reducing profit margins. I hope that the anti-inflation program of the government has contributed to this reduction of bank profits to the benefit of those who make savings.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, although we may have to wait a little longer before we have a true and complete picture of the repercussions of the recent increase in interest rates, we can already notice some encouraging signs concerning the reestablishment of a special treatment for small concerns and a decrease in bank profits.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:29 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 16, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF COMMISSION'S ADMINISTRATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that since 1971 the Unemployment Insurance Commission has been applying certain administrative practices concerning delays in applications for benefits which have been ruled illegal by the Federal Court of Canada, to disentitle thousands of jobless workers; and considering that the Unemployment Insurance Commission bases its decisions on a set of internal regulations which have never been sanctioned by law, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House take all necessary steps, as quickly as possible, to set up a royal commission of inquiry on all administrative practices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, to prevent jobless workers being denied unemployment benefits.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent, therefore the motion cannot be put.

* * *

[English]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST THAT SOLICITOR GENERAL REPORT ON A NUMBER OF INVESTIGATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 involving various investigations and related matters of general concern to the House and the country. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the Solicitor General, assuming the Prime Minister has taken off the Solicitor General's muzzle which was applied last December 4, report to the House on motions as soon as possible on the status of the myriad of investigations which have been of continuing concern for many months, such as the SIU, Hamilton Harbour, the Society for the Study of the Heritage of Canada, Sky Shops, Mirabel, the Olympic Village, the Report of the Marin Commission of Inquiry, travel agency irregularities and such other investigations and matters with which the Solicitor General has had time to familiarize himself in between prison breaks, parole violations and the development of his peace and security program.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion pursuant to Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

* * *

● (1410)

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

SUGGESTION CORPORATION COMPLETE NEGOTIATIONS WITH MINERS WHO WERE FORCED TO RETIRE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that recommendations have been made to this House by both the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee and the Committee on Regional Economic Development that a financial settlement be made by the Cape Breton Development Corporation with the preretired miners who were forcibly removed from their employment in the coal mines of Cape Breton, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates):

That this House now direct DEVCO to complete its negotiations with the miners affected by this forced preretirement in the shortest period of time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 can only be presented for debate with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

ENERGY

SUGGESTED INVENTORY OF SOURCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to move a motion on an urgent and important matter under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the present world-wide situation concerning the possibility of a shortage of energy and considering that we in Canada are badly informed on our real energy potential, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources draw up an inventory of all our energy sources now being used and make an appropriate study on the new sources which could be discovered and tapped efficiently.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

[English]

Order, please. Before proceeding with the calling of oral questions I should inform the House that I have received a written notice pursuant to the Standing Orders of the intention of the hon. Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). to raise a question of privilege today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: It has been suggested in the terms of the notice that has been given to me that a more orderly proceeding, and perhaps because of a possible influence on today's question period, would be that the raising and dealing with the question of privilege by the hon. Minister take place prior to the question period as opposed to after it.

It is clear that this decision does not rest with the Chair; it is a decision that can only be taken by this House. In attempting to decide whether the House gives its consent to dealing with that, and perhaps in the consideration of having a more relevant question period, the House would want to know the intention of the Chair with respect to the protection of the question period that might follow the remarks of the minister.

With that in mind I would assume it would be in the best interests of the House that the Chair should agree on a 45 minute question period to follow whatever might take place after the question of privilege. May I ask if the minister has the consent of the House to raise his question of privilege at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet).

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

PRIVILEGE

MR. OUELLET—REASONS FOR RESIGNATION

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since my appointment as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I have concentrated all my energy to the defence and protection of consumers. It has been a major priority not only for me, but also for the government as a whole. A key element in this battle for consumer rights has been to expose and prosecute cartels and combines. And so it was, for instance, that the fight against sugar companies has taken up part of the efforts of my department in recent years. Hon. members will understand my surprise and disappointment when these companies were recently acquitted by Mr. Justice Mackay.

Following the comments I made on that occasion, Mr. Justice Mackay cited me for contempt of court and a few weeks later, I was found guilty of that charge by Associate Chief Justice Hugessen. Mr. Speaker, I immediately appealed that decision. Both during and after the trial, I refrained from any public statement on that case. Recently, as a result of a clearly calculated indiscretion, my case has given rise to a highly partisan political debate.

It has become quite clear to me in the past few days that my most basic rights, not so much before the courts, but especially before the public at large, as a defendant appealing a decision, could be seriously jeopardized by that political debate, while even my own resolution to keep silent—which goes back to the beginning of my trial—is questioned and used against me by some people. I repeat, I strongly intend to keep that resolution.

I think however that in the case now under appeal, it is not in my interest, as a defendant, nor in the interest of our judicial system that my appeal be heard in an atmosphere of political partisanship which some people, inside and outside the House, have deliberately created. I have no doubt that the Quebec Appeal Court can remain above those political considerations. Still, out of respect for the judicial system, I wish to do what I can to let justice take its course in the best possible climate. I will humbly submit to the decision of the court, whatever it may be, but in the meantime I intend to use every legal recourse that is available to a defendant before the courts.

● (1420)

Secondly, the debate over my case is very likely to jeopardize seriously my efficiency and the value of my work as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Since my appointment, I have applied myself to proving to consumers that I was completely dedicated to their interests. It appears essential to me that consumers should never at any time be left to feel that the Minister responsible for their interests would in any way reduce his efforts on their behalf just to avoid legal or political problems. On the other hand, it seems just as important to me that the minister should never leave himself open to charges of using the interests of consumers as a political screen. There once again, the debates of the last few days and the preposterous comments voiced by some opposition members while listening to me indicate clearly that they intend to make my task very difficult, if not impossible, at least until my appeal has been heard. I believe there are too many things to do, too many urgent tasks to accomplish on behalf of consumers.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that when my case was first brought to court I asked for the advice and counsel of several colleagues and friends, some who are lawyers and some who are not. In particular, I discussed my case with the Minister of Public Works. I emphasize that I appeared before the court pursuant to a summary proceeding. In fact, I was not really opposed by another party; in this case, the court itself was to decide whether I had offended it. I asked the Minister of Public Works whether he could help me, without prejudice to my rights, to determine from Mr. Justice Hugessen what type of apology would be appropriate under the circumstances. I solemnly declare that I have never tried, either directly or indirectly, to exert undue influence on a judge of the Quebec Superior Court, in any case whatsoever, including most definitely the one in which I am involved. Everyone is aware of the integrity and high moral qualities of the Minister of Public Works. I deeply regret that his actions, which he took, in fact only because he is a gracious man, caused him so much embarrassment and unpleasantness which he certainly does not deserve. I want to apologize publicly to him for that.

Both as a citizen now before a court of appeal, and as a minister of the Crown, I cannot properly fulfill the duties I accepted as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Consequently, this morning I tendered my resignation to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and he, at my express request, accepted it. I hope that, as an ordinary member of Parliament, my trial will proceed free from all political controversy and I trust that those, in the House as well as outside it, who for their own ends took advantage of these circumstances to carry this matter out of the judicial sphere to make a political football of it, will at least have the common decency to respect my most basic rights.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I assure all Canadians whom I served in the last few years that, as a back bencher, I shall carry on with the same determination the struggles I led as a minister.

With the permission of the House, Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the correspondence exchanged between the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) and myself.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we have to be clear about the procedures we are following. We have received, following notice, remarks on a question of privilege which although very important, do not in fact constitute a question of privilege within our rules. In any event, it has not been followed by a motion. The Chair would have to hold that no question of privilege exists. I am not concerned about that. What I am concerned about is that in the interests of balance and equity that comment be made in turn by others. However, there must be some limit. I would presume to suggest that in fairness a brief comment might now be received from the leaders of each of the parties and then we ought to get on with the question period.

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour not only to be brief but to make my comments in a much less partisan spirit than that which, unfortunately, characterized the statement by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet).

Mr. Sharp: The former minister.

Mr. Clark: The former minister. I appreciate that intervention. I trust that the comment made by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) can be taken as an indication that in this case the resignation has been accepted. I should also like to express the hope—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am reluctant to interrupt the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), but to clarify the position, may I say it was my understanding, if I heard the minister's remarks correctly, that he said the resignation had been not only tendered but accepted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: In general terms, because of the importance of the announcement, I might observe that the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) was listened to, in general, with good attention and I think the same ought to apply to the comments by leaders of the opposition parties.

Mr. Clark: I think I can say, without elaboration, that we on this side of the House expect and hope that this will not turn out to be a conditional resignation, but one which will prevail. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) declines to give that kind of assurance.

Mr. Trudeau: I am waiting for your question.

Mr. Clark: I am moved to comment that it was at least irregular for the hon. member for Papineau to use the occasion of his statement to try to divert attention from the highly important question of the propriety of the conduct of ministers of the Crown in this case—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —and to try to pretend that there was some motive here, either partisan or personal in his case, for raising, as I and others in my party have done, questions as to the propriety of his conduct and the conduct of other ministers of the Crown in their relations with the courts. I think it is significant that we should now have an admission that there were conversations between ministers which led to an intervention with a judge who was hearing a case in which the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs was involved. I simply make the point, in passing, that the opportunity to have that kind of conversation with ministers of the Crown, in expectation that an intervention might follow, is a privilege which is not available to the ordinary Canadian involved in processes before the courts of the land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1430)

Mr. Clark: The only further comment I wish to make on this point is that since the questioning in this House has led the former minister to the position which he has taken, and has led the Prime Minister, in this case at least, to accept that resignation, and since it has also resulted in an admission by the hon. member for Papineau, the former minister, that there were indeed conversations with other ministers that led to an intervention before the courts in a case in which the minister was involved, we on this side of the House are going to continue to press for a complete and full indication of the nature of the involvement and conversations of the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs with other former and present ministers who might have been involved in what the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) has admitted was an intervention in the processes of justice in the land.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in informing the House of his resignation under circumstances that might well have been appropriate for the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) not to castigate members of the opposition for indulging in partisan politics when they were precisely practising their profound obligation as opposition members in a parliamentary system—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: —what the minister's unfortunate need to submit his resignation illustrates today is that the Parliament of Canada can sometimes be effective; because if it had not been for the vigorous pursuit of this issue by members of all parties on this side of the House—not on the other side of the House—I submit to Your Honour we would not have had this resignation today.

The second point I should like to make is that if the hon. member for Papineau has acknowledged that he did a wrong thing in speaking to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) and urging him to intervene on his behalf—because that is what is involved; let us call a spade a spade—and now after all these days he has submitted his resignation, which has been accepted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I ask Your Honour, where does this put the Minister of Public Works? If it is wrong to recommend that someone rob a bank, it is even more clearly wrong, in the context of the law, to carry out that advice. The Minister said in the House yesterday that he accepted responsibility for what he did. I submit that following submission of his resignation and acceptance by the Prime Minister, the Prime Minister himself has some explaining to do in regard to why he can accept one minister's resignation who advised a course of action, but has not accepted another minister's resignation who carried out that advice. We will also continue in our insistence that if the Minister of Public Works does have integrity on this issue, he has an obligation to submit his resignation once again, and that the Prime Minister must accept it.

Let me go back to the need for a public inquiry. If anything, it seems to me that the need for an inquiry is even more apparent today. The Prime Minister has been saying for some days that all the facts are known. That is strange, Mr. Speaker, because we have just had a new fact presented today that we did not know about. We have had an admission, for the first time, which was not on the public record.

There is a serious issue here in terms of the tradition of parliamentary democracy in Canada. I can think of the Favreau situation in this House some years ago, and there have been others in Great Britain having to do with the importance of cabinet responsibility. How is it that the Prime Minister knows that the course of action taken by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs actually did take place? Did he know some days or weeks ago? If he did, why did he not demand the minister's resignation at that time? If he did not know, then what was the nature of the conversations which took place between the former minister and the Minister of Public Works?

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the opposition is not going to be bought off with the kind of sop we were given on Friday. The issue is still as serious as it was. There are almost as many unresolved issues in this matter as there were 24 hours ago, and we shall continue to pursue them.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) has resigned because of preceding incidents. Still I think this regretful situation has its good side in that it shows to cabinet members that the judiciary power is one thing and the executive power is another. This shows that a minister, whoever he is, must not interfere in family quarrels whatever the circumstances. Under that aspect, I think that every minister will remain aloof in the future and that this can be taken as a lesson.

As for the allegations that the opposition is playing politics with this issue, Mr. Speaker, I would say that when the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was summoned before the courts, he was then charged with contempt of court by Mr. Justice Mackay. But nevertheless we must be fair. After the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs took action against the sugar companies concerned and charged them under the combines legislation, when the decision of Mr. Justice Mackay was made public, I think that every body in this House, whether Tory, Liberal, NDP or Social Crediter, was quite surprised and disappointed indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): These multinational corporations had indeed been attacked on many occasions, especially by my friends from the NDP, who viewed them as a terrible combine. The Conservatives had the same impression and so did the Liberals and us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): For my part, Mr. Speaker, even though a judgment has been rendered, if the case is on appeal, as a federal member of parliament I still believe there is a sugar combine in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): That is why yesterday my colleague from Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) whether a Canadian citizen, a member of parliament or anyone else, in a democratic country as ours, where one may express his feelings, may voice his disappointment about a judgment rendered by any judge across the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I believe that in the future, in order to avoid all these misunderstandings, it would be wise for a government not to appoint a judge through political channels or for services rendered to a political party but rather to contact directly the bar in order to be sure to have judges safe from influences that can arise here and there.

Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) had a lesson; he is no longer minister but member for Papineau. Other ministers might have in the future temptations which they must not succumb to if this situation is not to be repeated in the House of Commons.

● (1440)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before beginning the oral question period I think I should suggest that the oral question period should conclude at 3.25. I would also remind hon. members that the order of business for today concerns the subject matter that has been so much before the House in the last few days. It would, of course, be technical in the extreme for the chair to attempt to intervene or to stop questions relating to that subject matter. However, I would ask hon. members to bear in mind that it is the order of the day and, while some questions might be allowed to better prepare for the debate this afternoon, at the same time it would be appropriate after these many days to recognize a number of members today who also seek the floor to put questions on other matters that are of concern to them. I think we would have to watch for them.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CONTENT OF CONVERSATION BETWEEN MR. DRURY AND JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Public Works who has so magnanimously over the last ten days accepted the blame for somebody else.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works.

The Associate Chief Justice of the Superior Court, Justice Hugessen, has told the Chief Justice that he had the impression that the minister had called him, as reported, in fact, on page 11779 of Hansard for March 12, 1976. Here is what Mr. Justice Deschênes said, and I quote:

> I rather had the impression that he was attempting, if possible, to head off a confrontation between the executive and judicial branches of government.

Can the minister now reveal to the House exactly what he told Justice Hugessen about this matter and who, within or outside the Cabinet, suggested to him that there might be a confrontation which would affect the integrity and independence of the judiciary?

[English]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the question has two parts. Regarding the first one in respect of the confrontation, I think the hon. gentleman would agree that a case before the courts in which the court itself appeared to be one of the parties and a member of the executive being the other, carried out as a full-scale battle based on a possible misunderstanding at the outset, would be an unnecessary confrontation, and any conflict based on this misunderstanding appears to me to be inappropriate and useless. It is the job of a public official to avoid this kind of thing if that can be done, and that is what I was seeking to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works relates to the statement given to Chief Justice Deschênes by Associate Chief Justice Hugessen to the effect that, and I quote from page 11779 of Hansard of March 12:

> The view which Mr. Drury felt was being expressed in some quarters in Ottawa that the proceedings against Mr. Ouellet were in some way a ganging up of the English speaking establishment against prominently placed French speaking persons.

My question to the minister is, was he personally of the opinion that the case against the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was, in fact, a ganging up of the English-speaking establishment against French-speaking ministers?

As to the particular nature of the words used, I think perhaps the paraphrasing which Mr. Justice Hugessen has provided to his superior, the Chief Justice of Quebec, more adequately says what I had to say to him than perhaps anything I could add here.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I would say quite unequivocally and with great certainty that the answer is no.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VIEW OF MR. DRURY OF INTERPRETATION OF CONSUMER MINISTER'S CONTEMPT CITATION AS GANGING-UP ON FRENCH MINISTERS

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, in light of these remarks by the Minister of Public Works, and in light of the remarks by Associate Chief Justice Hugessen, I would ask whether the Minister of Public Works knows of any instance, either in the press or elsewhere, when the possibility of a ganging-up of the English-speaking establishment was alluded to as a result of the contempt proceedings against the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and did he put any credance in respect of such an interpretation of the case against the former minister?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Again, Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

APPOINTMENT OF CROWN COUNSEL FOR APPEAL OF CONSUMER MINISTER'S CONTEMPT CONVICTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In the matter of the upcoming appeal from Mr. Juctice Hugessen's conviction of the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, is the minister satisfied from a monitoring point of view that adequate arrangements have been made for the upholding and defending of Mr. Justice Hugessen's decision, since following the departure of the original counsel appointed the mandate of his replacement appears to have been circumscribed so that his only role may be to provide information that the appeal court requires, rather than being empowered to act as a vigorous advocate on behalf of the Crown, in the same way as counsel for the former minister will undoubtedly and properly act in attempting to overrule Justice Hugessen's decision?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. member means by a "monitoring" position of the proceedings. The proceedings by way of contempt are clearly within the area of administration of justice under the jurisdiction of the Attorney General of Quebec, who has appointed in the case the Bâtonnier of the Quebec Bar, and I am sure the matter is in good hands.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, in view of the sensitivity of the issue of the involvement of the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with the courts, which the Prime Minister admitted yesterday caused him to consider the possibility of a confrontation between the executive and judicial branches of government, does the Minister of Justice not consider that the utmost care should be taken so that the appeal of the former minister may never be perceived to have been handled in any way other than with the fullest opportunity for both sides to proceed with the utmost vigour to an ultimate conclusion according to the precepts and procedures of justice? Would he not agree that any possible procedural anomalies or handicaps which would appear to favour the appellant would be most undesirable in principle?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, let me state unequivocally that I have confidence in the administration of justice by the attorney general of Quebec and, apparently unlike the hon. member, I have complete confidence in the Court of Appeal of the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGED REQUEST OF MR. JUSTICE JACKETT TO SPEED UP TRIAL OF ROOSEVELT DOUGLAS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice of which I have given him notice. In view of the Prime Minister's statement on Friday regarding ministerial conduct in the administration of justice, which I quote in part: "In future no member of the Cabinet may communicate with members of the judiciary concerning any matter which they may have before them in the judicial capacity except through the Minister of Justice", etc., will the minister advise the House at whose request and on whose instructions did Mr. D. S. Maxwell, who was then the Deputy Minister of Justice, request Mr. Justice Jackett to speed up the handling of the case of Mr. Roosevelt Douglas in July, 1972?

• (1450)

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member giving my office notice of his question about 20 minutes ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: That is better than you do with statements.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, in case my remark was misinterpreted let me say it was not meant to be a joke. I do appreciate being forewarned of what is obviously regarded by the leader of the NDP as a serious question. At the moment, I have determined only that the application by Mr. Maxwell in that case was made in open court with counsel present. I presume it was on instructions of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, while the minister is looking into this—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: For some curious reason the cabinet seems to be more concerned than usual today. While the minister is looking into it, would he also check the reason for Mr. Justice Jackett having said at the time "I am not going to tolerate that sort of message coming to me". Would the minister check into the general circumstances of this situation to find out why that statement was made and report back to the House?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am making inquiries but, as I understand it, at the present time the application made by the counsel for the Department of Justice was made in open court with counsel present. So at the moment I have no case to answer, so to speak, because surely it is quite proper for counsel to make an application to speed up either the trial or the appeal, I am not sure which, when that application is made in open court.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise just to have that point clarified. Is the minister saying that to his knowledge there was no such request made in private, that is to say not in open court?

Mr. Basford: That, Mr. Speaker, is my present knowledge. I am making further inquiries and if the hon. member has further information I wish he would give it to me because at the moment all I know is that an application was made in open court which, I think even hon. members opposite will agree, is a perfectly proper procedure.

[Translation]

FINANCE

MINISTER'S VIEW OF ECONOMIC CRISIS AND EFFECT OF INCREASED INTEREST RATES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance.

It has been reported in the newspapers that an economist for Crang & Ostiguy in Montreal implied a couple of days ago that Canadians so far have only felt the tip of the iceberg with regard to the economic crisis which has hit industrialized countries starting in 1974. Only during the coming two or three quarters will they really be hit right on by restrictions, unemployment and inflation which will continue to be severe. Does the minister believe that the economic crisis will grow during the next six or nine months? Also, does he think that increases in the interest rates, either by the Bank of Canada or the Canadian banking system, will help stamp out or effectively fight inflation, or will not the opposite happen?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the views reported by the hon. member and which come from an economist for a Montreal investment company. With regard to the interest rates, the decision was taken by the Governor of the Bank of Canada to control the increase in the Canadian money supply and, as such, it is an anti-inflation policy.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT CONSULTED BY BANK OF CANADA BEFORE RAISING INTEREST RATES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Does the Governor of the Bank of Canada consult the minister or the department before making such a decision? I ask this question because I would not want in any way the public to think that the government has absolutely nothing to do with that decision by the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the governor did consult me about that increase in the interest rate.

* * *

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBLE CONSULTATIONS BETWEEN MINISTER AND QUEBEC ON APPOINTMENT OF COUNSEL ON APPEAL AGAINST MR. OUELLET'S CONTEMPT CONVICTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Since Mr. Justice Mackay found it necessary to circumvent regular channels, and indeed ignore the prescribed list in the appointment of a prosecuting counsel in order to ensure that there would be no possible conflict of interest, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he has had any consultations with the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec or the Attorney General of the province of Quebec or anyone else in the province of Quebec with respect to the handling of the appeal in order that in this instance there will be no conflict of interest and in order to ensure that the interests of the Crown are vigourously upheld.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General of Quebec has appointed counsel in the case, and it is clearly a matter within the administration of justice within the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec.

* * *

THE MINISTRY

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is more in the way of a related question, since it concerns the resignation of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and I direct it to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In view of the great interest that the former minister placed on his former responsibilities as a consumer advocate, and one in which I wholeheartedly concur, may I ask the Prime Minister when the House can expect the appointment of a successor to the hon. member, and perhaps he could tell the House at the same time who will be answering in the interim for the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, for the Anti-Inflation Board and for other agencies which answer through the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is, soon, and the answer to the second question is that there is the excellent parliamentary secretary to the minister who will be able to take the questions today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Who is it, Pierre? You don't know, do you?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member for Vancouver East. There are, of course, under order in council two acting ministers, the first one is the Postmaster General and the second one is the Minister of National Health and Welfare. So, the House will be afforded an opportunity to have the two ministers or the parliamentary secretary answer the questions until a full time minister is appointed.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STATUS OF MINISTER IN COMMUNICATING WITH JUDGES WITHIN GUIDELINES SET BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and I gave him not 20 minutes but 24 hours' notice of it. I think it is important that this matter be cleared up. What status does the Minister of Justice contemplate he would have in communicating with the judge as suggested in the Prime Minister's statement of last Friday? Is it not true that the only way in which representations should be made by ministers or citizens should be through counsel in open court, and is not this the ethical position very clearly enunciated across this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would imagine, in the circumstances—and I will be saying more on this this afternoon—it would be me or my counsel with the judge in the presence of counsel for parties to the action. I think the hon. gentleman will agree that it might not necessarily be in open court if all counsel were present. Of course, judges quite frequently agree to consultations in their chambers in the presence of counsel for all parties.

Mr. Fairweather: I feel a great deal better.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister should have spelled it out himself.

Mr. Basford: Of course, I will give the hon. member the assurance that my activities or those of my counsel will be in accordance with the cannons of legal ethics which prevail from province to province. I can foresee circumstances in which a judge might wish to communicate with me in the course of a trial, due possibly to illness and his inability to carry on.

● (1500)

ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH JUDICIARY—REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF MR. DRURY IN VIEW OF RESIGNATION OF MR. OUELLET

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: My question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the statement made to the House this afternoon by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, will the minister now reconsider his position and re-submit his resignation to the Prime Minister?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is not very clear to me that my circumstances have in any way altered as a consequence of what has transpired this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: I ask this supplementary because I know of government tactics in this regard.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Say it.

Mr. Grafftey: During his conversation with Associate Chief Justice Hugessen the minister brought up the problem of ganging up on a French-speaking minister. Does the minister not feel that he should reconsider his position and make sure that there is not one rule for French-speaking ministers and another for English-speaking ministers?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Resign and sit down.

Mr. Drury: No, I won't. I did indicate a little while ago that I attached no belief to these assorted stories.

Mr. Grafftey: Why did you bring it up?

Mr. Drury: One wonders how they arise.

Mr. Paproski: Yes, one does. Check with the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Drury: I would suggest that one possible source is the kind of question which was just asked, pretending that there is one rule or one law for Francophones and another for Anglophones. We do not subscribe to that, and I hope the hon. member does not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: Then will the minister be consistent and resign?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yukon.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED PRESSURE ON DR. CONNOLLY TO WITHDRAW CHARGES AGAINST WHITEHORSE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: You will be laughing at the next election.

Mr. Nielsen: I thank hon. members opposite for the usual warm welcome back to the House. I was involved in bringing entirely different kinds of pressure to bear upon Northern Canada Power Commission to prevent a doubling of our electric light rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: My question is for the Minister of Justice, and it involves the matter raised by the right hon. member for Prince Albert last March 4 with respect to pressures being brough upon Dr. Connolly, he being threatened with the loss of his job unless he withdrew charges which were laid against the city of Whitehorse. Since his office and the official prosecutor in the Yukon were in charge of the case, I am wondering if the minister has consulted with his colleague the Solicitor General with respect to the conducting of an investigation by the RCMP into the matters raised by the right hon. gentleman with a view to laying charges, on what appears to be clear evidence, against those involved in bringing such pressures to bear on Dr. Connolly of obstruction or conspiracy to obstruct under the provisions of the Criminal Code of Canada.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I examined those reports, which were that the Department of Justice had brought pressure to bear upon the prosecutor to withdraw the charge, and I determined that there is absolutely no foundation for that allegation.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not read any reference in the remarks of the right hon. gentleman that any pressures were brought by the Department of Justice at all, but indeed, a clear reference to pressures being brought to bear by the department of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I believe an investigation would disclose that officials of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs were also involved.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a supplementary, would he put it?

Mr. Nielsen: The question is, because of the seriousness of the matter, will the Minister of Justice consult with his colleague the Solicitor General with a view to having such an investigation conducted, and if he needs a complaint upon which to proceed he has mine here and now.

Mr. Basford: I will review the question of the right hon. member for Prince Albert before I determine whether there should be an investigation.

ALLEGATION MR. LALONDE ASKED JUDGE MACKAY TO DELAY JURY DECISION—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. My question is supplementary to the exchange we had yesterday.

In view of the statement made in the letter of Mr. Justice Mackay to Chief Justice Deschênes, which was tabled in the House, to the effect "that, he, Lalonde, and others in the Prime Minister's office felt that the situation was so serious that it was decided to see me with a view to delaying the jury's decision," does the Prime Minister regard that as a slip in the judge's memory, or does he accept it as a statement of what happened at the judge's home on Sunday morning, March 8, 1970?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the hon. member is asking exactly the same question he asked yesterday, and I will answer, perhaps not in the exact terms, but he could refer to Hansard. The answer is that it is obvious the two men, Mr. Justice Mackay and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, have a different memory of the event. They have both stated what they remember to be the case. We heard the words of the minister on the one hand and the statement of the judge on the other.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Which is no better.

Mr. Trudeau: I was arguing then and I still make the argument that it is hard to see how a commission of inquiry, which is the proposition put forward by the hon. member's party, would get any different facts, since only those two men were present together, and each has a different memory of the events.

I did go on yesterday to say—and I repeat it since the hon. member asked me—that it is a matter of asking yourself whose memory is best, and I gave some examples to indicate that the judge obviously had a faulty memory in at least two respects.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I just say as a prelude to my supplementary question that these things could be got out by cross-examination.

In view of reports that the High Commissioner to Canada of Trinidad and Tobago has said that the date of the decision was publicly known, how could the then principal secretary in the Prime Minister's office go to the judge's home to ascertain something which was already public information?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Read it again.

● (1510)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the hon. member's question that relates to a cross examination, of course there are two ways of doing that. One would be for the hon. member to ask the minister himself. Then, if he found that this kind of cross examination did not reassure him he could always lay a charge and have the minister come before a committee of the House. The hon. member is free to choose the course which his courage dictates. As to the allegation of the—

Mr. Clark: You have a peculiar concept of responsible government.

Mr. Trudeau: And you of responsible opposition. As to the supposed statement or alleged statement made by the High Commissioner for Trinidad and Tobago, this is the first I heard of it. I should like to know where the hon. member gets his information. Of course, all I have in my information are facts which are completely in contradiction to the ones they have.

An hon. Member: Have an inquiry and bring it out.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. minister did bring it out. He referred to a request that the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs had made to him, the then first personal secretary or first secretary of the prime minister and he based himself on that information requested by the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.

SUGGESTION MINISTER MEET PROVINCES TO ACHIEVE UNIFORMITY IN GRANTING BAIL FOR DANGEROUS OFFENDERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Yesterday I moved a motion which I believe the Minister of Justice was somewhat sympathetic with, although the parliamentary secretary said no. May I now ask the minister if he is prepared to meet with the attorneys general of the provinces, in light of the fact that Mr. Nichols and Mr. Gamble were released on bail after having been charged with murder and attempted murder in Vancouver and then came to Calgary where a policeman was shot and several hostages held for 45 hours, in order to get some uniformity in the granting of bail for dangerous offenders?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member's suggestion is a good one, although possibly a little premature. As the hon. member knows, the Bail Act is being amended. Last December I proposed amendments to the Bail Act to deal specifically with the kind of tragic situation we saw in Calgary the other day. Bill 71 has to be reported, dealt with on third reading by the Senate very soon and come back to this House for some technical amendments. I hope that we will have the co-operation of hon. members in passing those technical amendments in this House very quickly so that the changes to the Bail Act making it more difficult for those charged with murder, attempted murder or conspiracy to murder to get out on bail, will become law. Then, I would be happy to take up the hon. member's suggestion that the attorneys general meet—when the law has been changed—and that guidelines be drawn up to assist magistrates in awarding bail in those cases.

* * *

TRADE

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO ASSIST EXPORTERS IN VIEW OF DECLINE IN VALUE OF CURRENCIES OF SEVERAL COUNTRIES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On Thursday, March 11, as reported at page 11701 of Hansard I directed a question to the Minister of Finance which concerned the decline in the purchasing power of the British pound and the possibility of assisting the United Kingdom with a view to maintaining Canada's flow of exports to that country. The minister promised to discuss this problem with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who has the prime responsibility. In light of the continued decline in the value of the pound, and other events which are occurring in Great Britain which will have a major effect on Canada's exports to that country as well as our exports to Italy and France whose currencies are also declining, what steps is the minister taking to assist Canadian exporters in these circumstances?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member will understand that having returned only yesterday there has not been an opportunity for the Minister of Finance to discuss the matter with me as yet. I shall be glad to look up the question and answer in Hansard and discuss it with the Minister of Finance. In general, I can say for certain types of goods and certain other markets to which the hon. member has referred there is, of course, export financing available. I should be glad to hear from him which particular exports he is interested in and put the officials in my department and perhaps the Export Development Corporation in touch with those exporters to see if there is some way they can be helped by that device. If there are others I would be pleased to look at them as well. I shall look forward to hearing from the member, specifically what products he has in mind.

[Mr. Basford.]

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REASON PRIME MINISTER REFUSED MR. DRURY'S RESIGNATION AND ACCEPTED MR. OUELLET'S

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he explain to the House why he accepted the resignation of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs after rightly refusing the resignation of the Minister of Public Works?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems the question did not cross the minds of many people. I am surprised that the opposition itself did not ask it. But since the hon. member for Charlevoix is asking it I must point out to him that the resignation tendered by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is based on two grounds. The first is his desire to pursue his case on appeal in all freedom and allow the courts to judge outside the political context that developed in recent months and past weeks. The second reason is that in his own view, in his own opinion, in his own feeling, he feels that while he is pursuing his appeal in the present context he cannot carry out his functions as a minister in the way he would like. Those two reasons led me to accept his resignation. Those reasons, as the hon. member knows, are completely different from those for which the Minister of Public Works tendered his resignation.

[English]

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF TERM "CALCULATED INDISCRETION" USED BY MR. OUELLET WHEN REFERRING LEAKS OF JUDGE MACKAY'S LETTERS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs cannot answer these questions, can the minister tell the House what was the calculated indiscretion to which the former minister referred which he said had brought about this controversy?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not know. I did not discuss that expression with the former minister. I would expect or surmise it was a reference to the leaks of correspondence which apparently, as I read the newspapers, were given to the newspapers by Mr. Holden.

Mr. Fraser: A supplementary question. Is the Minister of Justice telling the House that it is his position or the position of the government that this controversy was created by a calculated indiscretion on the part of Mr. Holden or was it one of the many other indiscretions which apparently have taken place?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I have refrained from commenting on Mr. Holden and will continue to do so for fear that the comments might be either unparliamentary or unprofessional.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT RATE AND LEVEL OF INFLATION FOR THE YEAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Finance. Considering that last month's brightening of the unemployment picture proved transitory and noting that the unemployment rate has remained near 7 per cent for nearly a full year, can the minister tell the House when improvement in the unemployment rate may be expected and what he anticipates the unemployment rate to be for the balance of this calendar year?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in May, as is the customary practice, I shall be making a statement in the context of the budget as to the government's perspective on the economy and its course in the succeeding months. It seems to me appropriate to wait until that occasion before making any kind of estimate.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's forecast of a 5 per cent rate of growth in the economy in the current year, could he explain the basis of his forecast of the rate of growth at 5 per cent with a specific indication of job creation for the year, the level of inflation he anticipates and the trade deficit for the current calendar year?

● (1520)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that in a budget debate.

* * *

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED REMOVAL OF SUBSIDY ON EXPORT FLOUR—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister had a change of heart, and possibly of mind, after studying the excellent submission which the Canadian National Millers Association presented to the minister a month ago pointing out the disastrous effect of certain government actions on the export flour industry and on all our ports, but mainly Montreal and Halifax, from which flour is sent abroad from eastern Canada; or, does the government intend to cut out vital subsidies and give the export flour industry holus-bolus to the Americans, who are subsidized.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not share the views expressed by the hon. member as to consequences. The removal of the particular subsidy to which the hon. member referred is before the House in the form of legislation. It is my view that such subsidies, along with many other subsidies and transfer payments made in this country, create distortions which do not necessarily preserve the method of transport they are designed to support. By progressively removing these anomalies, we could end up with a far better low-cost system which effectively takes into account the proper functioning of the different ports of this country.

Mr. McCleave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister not recognize that the export flour business is in slump, having been reduced from about 32 per cent of world trade to one third that amount, or 11 per cent, and that this move will cut the trade even more?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will appreciate that notwithstanding the subsidies, the change in the world flour picture has had a dramatic impact on the trade. Clearly, that had nothing to do with subsidies, as the subsidies were in place throughout the whole period of the slump.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED HARASSMENT OF CLAIMANTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can the minister inform the House if a concerted effort is being made by the Unemployment Insurance Commission to harass hundreds of claimants by requesting constant and repeated weekly interviews which could involve hundreds of miles of travel to district offices at the claimant's expense?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I categorically deny the allegation put forward by the hon. member. The Unemployment Insurance Commission quite properly monitors the payment of benefits and insists on proper evidence of an active job search by claimants who receive benefits. That, I think, is proper.

Mr. Scott: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say if UIC district offices have been instructed to implement such a plan in future?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I think that is the same question but in another form, and the answer I gave previously would apply.

* * *

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY WHETHER JUDGES OUTSIDE QUEBEC HAVE BEEN INFLUENCED BY MINISTERS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since the sensational disclosure of certain ministers' actions as regards the administration of justice, the public wonders if such things were confined exclusively to the province of Quebec. Would the Prime Minister first tell us if members of his cabinet have advised him that they themselves took similar actions towards judges outside the province of Quebec and, second, if judges in provinces other than Quebec have indicated to the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister any action by members of the cabinet such as those revealed by Mr. Justice Mackay?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): To the first part of the question, the answer is a firm no. To the second, Mr. Speaker, after consultations with justice ministers and with members of my own office, the answer is also no.

* * *

[English]

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH MINISTER ON FINANCIAL SETTLEMENT FOR MINERS FORCED TO RETIRE

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the minister prepared to set a firm date for meeting Mr. Tom Kent, the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys, and me, to discuss preretirement leave payments for Cape Breton miners who were preretired between 1969 and 1971.

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if we shall be able to resolve the problem to which the hon. member alluded. I intend to invite the hon. member and his colleague to join me and Mr. Kent tonight, after we adjourn the meeting of the standing committee.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED GUIDELINES FOR MINISTERS APPROACHING JUDICIAL BODIES

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should dearly love to direct a question to the Prime Minister, if he is still in the House and not dealing with other resignations. Considering the demands made in the last few days relating to the bad practises of the past and considering that many boards and tribunals are not courts of record, are not covered by the inadequate guidelines suggested by the Prime Minister, but make decisions which can affect thousands of people and which ought to be made at arm's length from the government—I cite decisions made under the Anti-Inflation Act as an example—will the government not consider revising and tightening the guidelines, to cover those cases which ought to be covered?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, many boards and tribunals are given two functions. One function is to act as adviser to the government. These bodies do this, in addition to carrying out their judicial functions. It depends on which of these the hon. member is thinking about. I can think of some with which the government ought to be in touch, in order to ask for their opinion.

[Mr. Matte.]

TIME AND DATE WHEN MINISTER RECEIVED REPORT OF CHIEF JUSTICE DESCHÊNES

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Could he clear up a couple of points. Can he tell the House the exact time and date at which he received the Deschênes report last week? Was it either Wednesday night or Thursday? Also, at what time did he tell the Prime Minister the highlights of the report, if not the whole report?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the report was received in my office some time after lunch.

Mr. Clark: On what day? Thursday?

Mr. Basford: On Thursday of last week. It was not seen by me. It was submitted to the department for translation. I saw it, and the Prime Minister saw it, late in the afternoon.

* * *

TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASED SEAWAY TOLLS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I gave him notice of it. In view of the grave concern of public marine carriers, manufacturers and processing industry people in Canada's heartland, Ontario, about the increased cost of doing business, will the minister assure the House that tolls and canal fees for shipping on the St. Lawrence seaway system will not be increased for the current year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer I gave previously still stands. The government has not considered the matter at this stage. We shall need to consider, in the near future, the financing of the seaway and the canal.

INCREASE IN FEES OF SEAWAY PILOTS—POSSIBLE REFERENCE TO ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question arises from the recent announcement concerning the generous increase granted to pilots, who are to increase pilotage fees on the St. Lawrence seaway. Does the minister agree with and approve of this increase? If so, did he confer with the Anti-Inflation Board as to the eligibility of the increase, in light of the provisions of the anti-inflation guidelines?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not pleased about the increase. The relationship of this particular group to the Anti-Inflation Board and the guidelines is now under consideration.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Ninth report of Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs—Mr. Robinson.

Twelfth report of Standing Committee on Transport and Communications—Mr. Campbell.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I am sorry that I was not in a position to give the Chair notice of my intention to raise this question. May I draw to Your Honour's attention that three separate standing committee meetings, scheduled originally for 3.30 this afternoon, have been rescheduled for eight o'clock this evening. Actually, a fourth committee meeting has been scheduled. Since I am a member of three of those committees, obviously I cannot attend all three committees simultaneously. I think other hon. members are in the same position. It is not fair. We have been placed in an embarrassing position as it is impossible to attend all committees at eight o'clock. I suggest that more thought should be given to the scheduling of standing committee meetings.

* * *

FISHERIES

PRESENTATION OF PETITION BY CONSTITUENTS OF COMOX-ALBERNI

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition to the House containing 2,797 names of constituents of Comox-Alberni. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that the petition concerns seining in the Port Alberni canal and the death of thousands of juvenile spring salmon as a result of seining. The petition is to restrain seining in the Port Alberni canal, during the summer months, for cohoe salmon. May I present the petition, Mr. Speaker?

* * *

● (1530)

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,968, 3,972, 4,080, 4,086, 4,099, 4,102, 4,117, 4,118 and 4,127.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

CMHC LOANS TO METROPOLITAN VICTORIA, B.C. 1973-74

Question No. 3,968—Mr. McKinnon:

How much money was loaned by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in Metropolitan Victoria, British Columbia in (a) 1973 (b) 1974?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: See table below.

Net Loans Approved by CMHC Under the NHA
Victoria Metropolitan Area, 1973-1974

	1973				1974
Program	Loans	Units	Hostel Beds	$000	Loans	Units	Hostel Beds	$000
Home-Owner and Rental (Sec. 58)	1	1	—	8	8	8	—	130
Assisted Home-Ownership (Sec. 34.15)	117	117	—	2,794	205	205	—	5,608
Co-operatives (Sec. 34.18)	1	74	—	1,334	1	8	—	50
Low Rental (Sec. 15)	1	1	—	6	3	90	—	2,138
Non-Profit (Sec. 15.1)	1	158	—	1,085	9	297	149	5,441
Land for Housing (Sec. 42)	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	2,804
Sewage Treatment (Sec. 51)	3	—	—	1,795	1	—	—	1,401
Total	124	351	—	7,022	228	608	149	17,572

PUBLIC HOUSING RENTAL SCALE

Question No. 3,972—Mr. Marshall:

Has the review of public housing rental scale been completed by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and, if so, what is the new Schedule A, graduated rental scale for fully serviced accommodations in public housing projects for families and elderly citizens?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: The public housing rent-to-income Scale is reviewed frequently by both CMHC and provincial housing agencies. The general consensus is that fundamental revisions are not warranted.

While current rents produced by the scale may be considered to be too high, substantial subsidies are nevertheless required. In these circumstances, CMHC considers that the rent-to-income scale should not be adjusted at this time.

Order Paper Questions

CMHC TRAINING PROGRAMS

Question No. 4,080—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Did CMHC in Winnipeg conduct an in-service training programme in Brandon, Manitoba in January or February 1976 and, if so (a) what are the details of the programme and its purpose (b) how many of the Winnipeg staff were transported to Brandon (c) what was the total cost of the programme, including expenses for meals, hotel accommodation, travel, etc.?

2. Were employees paid out of pocket expenses and, if so, in what amount?

3. Were any babysitting expenses paid for children of staff while they were in Brandon?

4. How many days tenure was the course?

5. Was the course authorized by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs?

6. How many courses are being conducted across Canada?

7. How many were conducted across Canada in 1975 and what was the total cost?

8. How many are planned for 1976 across Canada and what is the projected total cost?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1. (a) Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, from time to time over the past years, has conducted training courses and workshops for members of its staff. Because of increasing decentralization of the management of National Housing Act programs to its field offices, such courses have become increasingly important. Three in-service workshops were held in Brandon, during the weeks of January 12, January 19, and February 2, for the Manitoba Regional staff.

1. (b), (c), 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8. Staff training and related matters of personnel administration are the responsibility of the president and board of directors of CMHC, and it is not the policy to provide detailed information about them.

COMMONWEALTH SCHOLARSHIPS

Question No. 4,086—Mr. Marshall:

Have details of the 1975 United Kingdom Commonwealth Scholarships for Canadian students been sent to Memorial University in Newfoundland and, if so, what action has been taken?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, which is responsible for administrating the Commonwealth Scholarship Plan in Canada, sent announcements to the following offices at Memorial University in Newfoundland: (1) The Librarian; (2) The Registrar; (3) The Faculty of Graduate Studies; (4) The Dean of Men, Financial Aid Office.

Three applications were received from students at Memorial University, one of whom was nominated for an award. Word has not yet been received from the administrators of the plan in the United Kingdom as to whether the nomination has been accepted.

LAUNCHING OF NEW CANADIAN COMMUNICATIONS SATELLITE

Question No. 4,099—Mr. Balfour:

1. How many persons attended, at public expense, the launching of a new Canadian communications satellite from the Kennedy Space Centre in Florida on January 16, 1976?

2. What are the names of all persons whose expenses were paid in whole or in part by the government?

3. What was the (a) total cost (b) specific cost to the government for (i) travel (ii) accommodation (iii) food and beverages (iv) other items?

4. What was the cost to the government of the information package entitled "Introducing CTS, Catalyst in Space" produced by Don Hewson and Associates of Ottawa?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): 1. Eight persons.

2. The Honourable Jeanne Sauvé Minister; James Fleming, M.P.; Jacques Guibault, M.P.; M. F. Yalden, Deputy Minister; Dr. John Chapman, Assistant Deputy Minister (Space Program); P. McDonald, Special Assistant to Minister; P. Nadeau, Special Assistant to Minister; C. Pierrard, Secretary to Minister.

3. (a) $3,516.81. (b) (i) $1,580.00, (ii) $736.49, (iii) $348.35, (iv) $851.97.

4. $22,583.20.

CANADA MANPOWER TRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 4,102—Mr. Orlikow:

How much money was spent in 1974-75 under the Canada Manpower Training Programme on (a) men (b) women in the form of (i) training payments (ii) allowances for Canada and each province?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): See table below.

Canada Manpower Training Program Expenditures and Trainee Distribuion by sex by Province 1974—1975

Province and Region	Expenditures ($) Institutional Training: Training Cost (1)	Allowance Cost	Total Full-time	Part-time	Total	Industrial Training	Grand Total	Institutional Trainees Full-time: Male Per cent	Female Per cent	Total	Part-Time (2)	Industrial Trainees: Male Per cent	Female Per cent	Total
Newfoundland	9,201,320	6,907,614	16,108,934	9,319	16,118,253	1,488,642	17,606,895	79.8	20.2	8,336	50	83.4	16.6	1,916
Prince Edward Island	1,997,799	1,999,264	3,997,063	38,839	4,035,902	332,721	4,368,623	60.3	39.7	2,455	315	88.9	11.1	459
Nova Scotia	10,195,629	7,827,594	18,023,223	23,461	18,046,684	2,229,910	20,276,594	75.9	24.1	10,518	382	72.4	27.6	3,087
New Brunswick	7,705,289	6,733,127	14,438,416	14,911	14,453,327	1,719,092	16,172,419	72.8	27.2	8,775	286	80.9	19.1	2,331
Atlantic	29,100,037	23,467,599	52,567,636	86,530	52,654,166	5,770,365	58,424,531	74.8	25.2	30,084	1,033	78.4	21.6	7,793
Quebec	69,086,243	43,348,933	112,435,176	4,938,174	117,373,350	11,071,559	128,444,909	56.7	43.3	51,673	51,181	77.4	22.6	10,624
Ontario	55,414,702	45,174,475	100,589,177	1,638,853	102,228,030	11,662,393	113,890,423	58.9	41.1	45,732	1,990	80.7	19.3	20,214

Alleged Interference with Judiciary

Expenditures ($)

Province and Region	Institutional Training: Training Cost (1)	Allowance Cost	Total Full-time	Part-time	Total	Industrial Training	Grand Total	Institutional Trainees Full-time: Male Per cent	Female Per cent	Total	Part-Time (2)	Industrial Trainees: Male Per cent	Female Per cent	Total
Manitoba	9,102,092	6,240,763	15,342,855	6,301	15,349,156	1,077,956	16,427,112	72.1	27.9	6,994	75	79.6	20.4	1,097
Saskatchewan	6,733,828	5,136,567	11,870,395	—	11,870,395	1,317,095	13,187,490	69.5	30.5	6,035	—	83.3	16.7	1,874
Alberta	18,712,100	10,036,962	28,749,062	9,445	28,758,507	1,564,969	30,323,476	81.9	18.1	15,040	110	71.0	29.0	1,912
North West Territories	924,530	396,174	1,320,704	4,215	1,324,919	173,694	1,498,613	58.9	41.1	431	15	66.7	33.3	83
Prairie	35,472,550	21,810,466	57,283,016	19,961	57,302,977	4,133,714	61,436,691	76.4	23.6	28,500	200	79.6	20.4	4,966
British Columbia	18,196,047	14,520,725	32,716,772	501,832	33,218,604	4,463,437	37,682,041	70.3	29.7	22,547	8,231	80.2	19.8	6,126
Yukon	734,456	392,640	1,127,096	—	1,127,096	186,561	1,313,657	46.1	53.9	450	—	98.0	2.0	229
Pacific	18,930,503	14,913,365	33,843,868	501,832	34,345,700	4,649,998	38,995,698	69.8	30.2	22,997	8,231	81.3	18.7	6,355
Canada	208,004,035	148,714,838	356,718,873	7,185,350	363,904,223	37,288,029	401,192,252	65.0	35.0	178,986	62,635	79.4	20.6	49,952

Note: Expenditures: Training Costs and Part-Time Costs have been proportioned from actual figures.
(1) Includes Training Improvement Program Expenditures.
(2) Part-Time Trainee Data is not Available by Sex.

RECOGNITION OF LATVIA INDEPENDENCE DAY

Question No. 4,117—Mr. Robinson:

Does the government recognize November 18, 1976 as the National Independence Day of Latvia?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The government of Canada does not recognize the national days of any countries except to the extent that messages of congratulation are sent to the heads of state or government of countries with which Canada has diplomatic relations. These anniversaries are listed in the publication "Diplomatic Corps and Consular and Other Representatives in Canada." Canada does not have diplomatic relations with Latvia. This does not mean that the date mentioned is not the anniversary of a real historical event.

RECOGNITION OF LITHUANIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

Question No. 4,118—Mr. Robinson:

Does the government recognize February 16, 1976 as the National Independence Day of Lithuania?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Government of Canada does not recognize the national days of any countries except to the extent that messages of congratulation are sent to the heads of state or government of countries with which Canada has diplomatic relations. These anniversaries are listed in the publication "Diplomatic Corps and Consular and Other Representatives in Canada." Canada does not have diplomatic relations with Lithuania. This does not mean that the date mentioned is not the anniversary of a real historical event.

RECOGNITION OF ESTONIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

Question No. 4,127—Mr. Robinson:

Does the government recognize February 24, 1976 as the National Independence Day of Estonia?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The government of Canada does not recognize the national days of any countries except to the extent that messages of congratulations are sent to the heads of state or government of countries with which Canada has diplomatic relations. These anniversaries are listed in the publication "Diplomatic Corps and Consular and Other Representatives in Canada." Canada does not have diplomatic relations with Estonia. This does not mean that the date mentioned is not the anniversary of a real historical event.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—GOVERNMENT FAILURE TO INSTITUTE INQUIRY INTO ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH JUDICIAL PROCESS BY SOME MINISTERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved:

That in view of the grievous damage the Prime Minister has done to the Canadian democratic system by refusing to accept the resignation of the Minister of Public Works, by not insisting on a full statement to the House by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and by failing to set up an independent inquiry into alleged interference in the course of justice by cabinet ministers, this House declares that the present government does not possess the confidence of the House or the country.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the last two weeks in the House of Commons have not been a pleasant experience for people or for members on either side of the House with any degree of sensitivity. Speaking for myself, I went into politics primarily to devote whatever energy and talents I may have to the question of the redistribution of power and income in Canada, which I take to be the principal concern of my political party.

It has not been pleasant to get involved in what is essentially a moral issue. What is at stake in the motion being moved today is the moral character of the present government. That is something that I, my colleagues and the official opposition, have been calling into question for some days now. During the past two weeks the government has revealed itself to be both dishonourable and arrogant in its actions. Three ministers of the Crown have had their behaviour described as either improper or grave by judges on the bench of Canada.

The former minister of consumer and corporate affairs has been deeply involved in the whole question at issue. Until today, and in fact including today, he has had neither the forthrightness nor the sense of propriety to make a statement which clearly acknowledges his own wrongdoing. He hid, and hid falsely, in the past two weeks behind a legalism which no lawyer on either side of the House would support, instead of coming clean about his role in the procedures and steps that led to the submission of a resignation by a minister, even though it was quickly rejected by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Even today, when the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) got to his feet to submit his resignation, we did not get, as the sequence of events unfolded, an admission of his own culpability.

Later in the question period, the Prime Minister answered a question from a Liberal backbencher as to the reason for the resignation. There was no acknowledgement in the letter of resignation from the hon. member for Papineau, the letter to which the Prime Minister referred, that he was guilty of some wrongdoing. The reason the minister gave this afternoon for resigning is simply incredible. Essentially what he said was that he could not carry out his ministerial responsibilities while another case in which he is involved was proceeding through the courts. I say, again, that is an absurd reason. The only reason for resigning is the one he should have given, namely, of wrongdoing in the first place. I will come to that in a few minutes.

To complete the week, as if it were not bad enough, in which we had this description of wrongdoing by three and, indeed, four ministers, we had the Prime Minister make what I thought was the most disreputable decision of his political life last Friday. In a serious perversion of the principles of parliamentary democracy without parallel in our country or in any other parliamentary system, he refused to accept the resignation of a minister whose involvement in the judicial process was seen by everyone, including the minister, as being wrong, unacceptable and unworthy of a member of a Canadian cabinet. In so doing, the Prime Minister revealed in the most glaring fashion that he has no real understanding either of democracy or of the spirit of the rule of law.

The right hon. gentleman sees our country as being ruled by a family or gentlemen's club of which he is the titular head. While it is appropriate for all other Canadians to obey the law, he and his ministers need not do so. The law of the constitution is to be obeyed or ignored, depending on the convenience of the Prime Minister and depending in part also on whether the violators are caught. If they are caught, as members of the club or family, the Prime Minister will accept their apologies, gently admonish them and carry on as if nothing of significance had happened. If members of the opposition have the audacity to raise questions about this process, the Prime Minister has the fatuous gall to suggest that we in the opposition are wrong for pursuing such a course.

The state is not a family. Those who make the law in a democratic state must themselves be subject to its laws and constitution. This is precisely what the Prime Minister fails to understand, as his casual and foolish retention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) makes clear. The Prime Minister, I say with some sadness, but seriously, is an elitist who had the misfortune of being born in a democratic age. But his undemocratic behaviour must stop, or be stopped by members of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The sender of a telegram which arrived in my office this morning expressed it as follows:

> Sanctioning impropriety is the first step toward condoning illegality.

● (1540)

Another telegram among a considerable batch which arrived in my office just before lunch reads as follows:

> I am a Liberal but for the sake of representative government in this country I believe the government must fall for its flagrant abuses of the parliamentary system and the trust the people once placed in them.

That is from a Liberal. I think it sums up the attitude of people from one coast to the other who have been revolted by the course of action taken by the government in recent days.

I want to say something about two of the individual cases involved and why we think there are important, unresolved questions with which only a public inquiry can deal. First, the situation involving the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). As we know—and this is beyond dispute—the minister went to see Mr. Justice Mackay concerning a trial in process in which the defendants were students who had taken part in a disturbance at Sir George Williams University. Here is what Mr. Justice Mackay said in the course of a letter submitted to the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec: he said the minister "felt the situation was so serious that it was decided to see me with a view to delaying the jury's decision." Judge Mackay continues:

> I was inwardly disturbed by this visit. Not only did I feel I was being asked to see that the jury's decision was delayed, but if for any reason the defence attorneys learned of the visit there was a possibility of a mistrial after an arduous and expensive eight-week trial.

Mr. Speaker, as clearly as the English language could make any point, if what Judge Mackay tells us actually took place, what happened on that occasion was an attempt to interfere with the judicial process by exercising influence. It is important to note that in Judge Deschênes' report to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) he does not pass judgment on this particular case in one way or another, as he did on other aspects of his report with reference to other ministers involved. He lets the facts speak for themselves. The minister involved has stated in the House on a number of occasions, more particularly last Friday, that what Judge Mackay says is not the case. He has told us that the purpose of seeing the judge was not to influence, alter or change judicial behaviour with regard to a case which was in process, but simply to ascertain information concerning a date in the proceedings.

What are the issues which are unresolved? I submit the incident cannot be dismissed as something which took place years ago and which ought, therefore, to be left in the dustbin of history. There are many present implications arising from this situation, questions which come to mind and which must be settled. First, either Judge Mackay or the Minister of National Health and Welfare is providing us, to resort to a euphemism, with some misinformation. To put it more bluntly, either the judge is lying or the minister is lying. Neither man's statement can be seen as resulting from some slight lapse of memory. Such a suggestion cannot be taken seriously.

How are we to get to the truth of this matter? The Prime Minister has been telling us we are in possession of all the facts. That is absurd, if only because some more facts came out today. One of the advantages of an inquiry would be precisely the advantage which comes from cross-examination to find out who was misinforming whom. If it is the Minister of National Health and Welfare who has been misinforming us, he should go from the cabinet forthwith. If, on the other hand, Judge Mackay is lying, he should be removed from the bench. I will put it as bluntly as that.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We cannot have a man on the bench who is systematically stating mistruths.

An hon. Member: We have to find out.

Mr. Broadbent: A Liberal is cheering the point. I turn to him and say that the only way of resolving the issue is to have a public inquiry.

An hon. Member: The member for Timmins (Mr. Roy) is cheering.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes. I hope the hon. member for Timmins is going to vote with us on this motion. If he doesn't, he will just get a continued cover-up as in the past two weeks.

Mr. Benjamin: This is the first time he has been in Hansard.

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to remind the Prime Minister that early in the 1960s, in Great Britain, in the Profumo case, when Mr. Profumo, then minister of war, resigned from the Macmillan cabinet he did so—I recall this because I happened to be there—not because of an indiscretion with a prostitute, but because he was caught lying to the House of Commons and to fellow members of the cabinet. As soon as that became known, Mr. Macmillan made it clear to him forthwith that his resignation was expected. The resignation came, and was promptly accepted. Mr. Profumo took the honourable course of action in offering it, and so did the prime minister in demanding and accepting it. So the Lalonde case, if I may call it that, is important because it has everything to do, not simply with past behaviour but with the present integrity of members of the cabinet. This integrity must be maintained whatever partisan differences exist in the House of Commons. There must be complete faith in the honesty of members of the cabinet.

The second case about which I want to say something is the case involving the Minister of Public Works. We know that Judge Hugessen was considering the appeal of the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs who was facing a charge of contempt. We know, and this is on the record, that the Minister of Public Works telephoned Judge Hugessen to discuss two points: first, to determine whether an apology would bring proceedings to an end and, second, to inform the judge that some in Ottawa were saying there was an English-speaking establishment gang-up taking place in opposition to French-Canadian ministers, more particularly Mr. Ouellet.

Alleged Interference with Judiciary

Concerning the point as to ganging-up, Judge Hugessen reports—I am choosing the words with care, and quoting them—that he thought the point "ridiculous" and that he "could not even consider" such matters. Judge Hugessen went on to say that in his opinion the Minister of Public Works was trying to "head off a confrontation between the executive and the judicial branches of government." It is also true to say that at the conclusion of his report, Judge Hugessen stated, "I did not think he was attempting to influence my judgment." With all due respect to Judge Hugessen—and of course I am not questioning his integrity on this point—I am going to say something about his judgment and use of language.

● (1550)

The Minister of Public Works got in touch with the judge and made certain claims to which the judge responded. One word he used was "ridiculous"; a second phrase was that "he could not even consider"; and further on he said that the purpose of the conversation was to "head off a confrontation between the executive and the judicial branches of government".

I submit that if the English language means anything, the only purpose that the Minister of Public Works would have in making that phone call was to influence the judge. That is precisely what we mean when we use the word "influence". I checked the meaning of that word in the Oxford dictionary, and the definition is "to have an effect upon". What other purpose would there be in making a phone call to convey that kind of information, if the caller did not intend to influence the judge? I repeat, that is my clear judgment of what was involved. Because this was the unequivocal purpose of what is the normal use of that language, I submit that the course of action taken by the Minister of Public Works was wrong, wrong, wrong, that he should resubmit his resignation and that it should be accepted by the Prime Minister.

I should now like to turn to the case of the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs. If there were ever gradations of wrongdoing among the five people involved in the past week, he must be near the top. He sat there silently over the past two weeks, systematically refusing to answer questions, when for a good part of the time another minister was in one sense taking the blame for a certain course of action. Today the minister rose in this House and announced his resignation. I have a tendency to be naive at times, Mr. Speaker, but we cannot go through another phony routine of the sort we had last Friday. Surely the minister is going to get up and say that he did something wrong, as a result of which he is submitting his resignation.

I listened to the minister with care, but he did not once say he had done something wrong. When the Prime Minister replied to the question of a Liberal backbencher later on, the Prime Minister did not say that the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs had done something wrong. Not at all. What the former minister said was that he needs to be relieved of his ministerial duties so he can fight his present court battle.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is that the acknowledgement of cabinet responsibility? Is that the demonstrable kind of moral leadership that we expect on questions of integrity?

I am not talking about economic policy. Even as late as today the minister does not see that he has done something wrong. He gets to his feet today and says, "Yes, I spoke to the Minister of Public Works and I did urge him to go to the judge and present him with some information. If I give an apology does that mean I will be let off?" In effect, that is what he said. Having stated that, he does not acknowledge it is wrong. This is what this whole debate is about, in a sense. The minister does not recognize today that what he did was wrong, just as the Prime Minister and his colleagues over the past two weeks have not recognized the impropriety of such behaviour.

I have no doubt of the scenario that is in the mind of the Prime Minister, and it is this. Once the court proceedings are finished in the hon. member for Papineau's case, the Prime Minister will trot out his letter of resignation and say, "You see, his resignation had nothing to do with interference with the judicial process; oh no, God forbid. The reason he resigned was to fight his case. Now his case is over, of course, we can take him back in the ministry". I predict that that course of events has likely already occurred to the Prime Minister, just as the sequence of last Friday, where one minister submits his resignation in the morning and it is withdrawn in the afternoon, had probably been worked out the previous Thursday night.

There are a number of very serious questions that remain unanswered, Mr. Speaker. Did the hon. member for Papineau tell the Prime Minister about his involvement with the Minister of Public Works? Did he, in the past two weeks, go to him and say, "Yes, I urged him to have the conversation with the judge", which he described here today? If he did, we never knew it from the Prime Minister. He kept telling us that he had all the facts, but he did not take the trouble to give them to us. All he said, with great care was, "I have listened to both sides and I have decided there was no wrongdoing".

If the Prime Minister heard from the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs, and he then went to the Minister of Public Works to urge him to intervene with the judge, then I seriously submit that the Prime Minister himself has been derelict in his responsibility as Prime Minister of this country. We want to know about those conversations, about what the Prime Minister knew about the case, and when he was told. We want to know what conversations took place between the Minister of Public Works and the hon. member for Papineau. Yet we have all this talk of cabinet solidarity, supported by backbenchers who don't have one ounce of the courage of the backbenchers of Great Britain in both Labour and Conservative parties who would have revolted weeks ago over an issue like this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Let me remind howling Liberal backbenchers that a man named Favreau resigned from this House not that long ago. The reason for his resignation is also important. The reason he submitted his resignation was that he had misinformed his Prime Minister. We want to know how many ministers on that side may well have misinformed their Prime Minister on this issue. If the Prime Minister has been misinformed by those ministers, they should be out of the cabinet. If, in turn, he has been told the truth, then he should resign as Prime Minister.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I said at the outset that the government's action during the past two weeks has been dishonourable, and I repeat that. The Prime Minister and his government have done a profound disservice to parliamentary democracy in our country. Ministers have abrogated their serious obligation to keep distinct the judicial and executive functions of government in our country. By not reacting swiftly to obtain or accept resignations in such a situation, the Prime Minister himself has abused the responsibility of his office. By treating such conduct by ministers as a mere breach of good conduct among gentlemen in a club, the Prime Minister has trivialized, in a cynical way, constitutional law and practice in our country, and I say in all seriousness that he has fed the forces already loose in our country that promote disregard of the law.

By not having insisted that the role played in this affair by the minister of consumer and corporate affairs and by others be fully aired, the Prime Minister has left himself and our institutions open to the serious charge of a cover-up. The integrity of the Prime Minister's office itself is open to challenge on this issue. This, Mr. Speaker, constitutes, I submit, a great disservice to the people of our land.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? L'honorable député de Roberval (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Clark: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Clark: My point of order, sir, is that I am operating under the expectation that, in the normal course of events on this opposition day, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) having heard the introducer of the motion, would now want to speak. Naturally, I look forward to the opportunity of hearing him.

● (1600)

An hon. Member: Then sit down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) knows that this is hardly a point of order. Hon. members are recognized by the Chair according to the usual practice which the Chair tries to follow. The hon. Leader of the Opposition did not rise, and I recognized the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Clark: Fine.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I must admit I feel very honoured today. I thought I was being mistaken for the leader of the official opposition. I am not too sure what happened but anyway I am pleased I have been given the floor. Mr. Speaker, I think the NDP members are trying to correct the mistake they made yesterday when they moved for adjourment simply to stop working and go and doze in their offices. We are here to work and we proved it yesterday, that is why we voted against their motion.

Today, the motion tabled before the House includes three issues within one problem concerning the independence of our judiciary system. I shall attempt to refer to all three briefly.

The mover states:

That in the view of the grievous damage the Prime Minister has done to the Canadian democratic system by refusing to accept the resignation of the Minister of Public Works . . .

—that the government can no longer have the confidence of the House following the questions of privilege raised on March 12, 1976 by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury), when the first expressed his regrets to Mr. Justice Aronovitch, the second also did so to Mr. Justice MacKay and the third one gave us a frank explanation, and even indicated he was glad that Mr. Justice Hugessen said that, in his view, the Minister of Public Works did not attempt to influence his judgment in the case of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

After professing his belief in the independence of the judiciary, the Minister of Public Works (M. Drury) said that he was in complete agreement with the Associate Chief Justice and stated impressively in the House, and I quote:

I very much regret taking the action which I did and which the Associate Chief Justice has characterized as improper, and for this I sincerely and deeply apologize to all those affected. I have, accordingly, tendered to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) my resignation from the ministry.

That, Mr. Speaker, was the action of a gentleman who recognized his mistakes and did the only thing he could do. Everyone in this House respected the gesture of the Minister of Public Works and was glad to end all these discussions which do not contribute to the effective running of the business of the House. I have always thought that by so acting for the greater interest of Canadian justice, the resigning minister, far from humiliating himself, drew the admiration of the Canadian people. Indeed, when I spoke after his resignation, I spoke with the greatest of sincerity, Mr. Speaker, and said this:

Mr. Speaker, I think the event which concerns us this morning must be a landmark in the judicial history of our country. And I hope that after all the events of the last few days, today's discussions and actions will result in a warranty of the integrity of our judicial system all over Canada.

This morning, we heard excuses from various ministers . . . This morning, we accept, not lightheartedly, the resignation of a minister. He is one of the ministers I admired most in the House for his honesty and integrity. This probably shows that we the people—I want to be the people's voice—see that the function of minister is not always a sinecure, that this function brings some responsibilities. Above all, the ministers being surrounded as they are by people who constantly clamour for more, I can understand that they, or hon. members, might be tempted to try and give more help to those around them who exert pressures ceaselessly. That is how I see the work the minister did with the judge, and I congratulate him for his action this morning; it is a guarantee for Canada that, among parliamentarians, there are still people who can recognize that they may have gone too far, who can go back and bow before the requirements of public interest.

I shall stop here, Mr. Speaker, and simply say that following this resignation that everyone accepted and after learning through the newspapers that the right hon. Prime Minister had a long talk with the Minister of Public Works before he made his statement, I was convinced there had been agreement on what the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) did. Had that meeting not given positive results, there was no point then in the Minister of Public Works tendering his resignation. If he knew in advance that it would not be accepted, why tender it? Did they want to give a show in this House and mock the people?

I confess quite sincerely, Mr. Speaker, that I was astounded when I heard the right hon. Prime Minister say he did not accept the resignation of the Minister of Public Works. I had so much confidence in the sincerity of the resigning minister that I thought he would rise immediately in the manner of the good military man he was and state to the Prime Minister that his decision was beyond appeal. But nothing of the kind happened, and there is this impression that everything was well orchestrated in advance to give more zest to the statements.

And what does the people think about all that? That it has to pay the piper again and that our justice will continue to be under the influence of all political currents. The various governments will continue to appoint judges of their choice who are highly regarded in the party or have served the party well.

After all that attempts will still be made to convince the people that our judicial system is safe from any political influence. What is urgently needed is a reform of our judicial system so those political appointments will stop once and for all.

As to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), I will be brief because his case dates back several years when he was not even a minister. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I never dig out the dead. My function is to bury them well.

If the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs did what he had to do this afternoon it is because he accepts to free justice and at the same time, hopefully, perhaps speed up the fight undertaken against the cartels that control our Canadian economy.

I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that as far as Mr. Justice Mackay is concerned, I cannot but share the views of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). Incidentally, all the people I have met are unanimous in saying that the three sugar companies constitute one of the most dangerous trust ever against consumers, who were obliged to pay appalling prices for sugar. When will this government stop protecting all these trusts which determine our living conditions and are primarily responsible for the inflation we have been facing for the past few years?

The working people are again punished because of inflation, whereas all these trusts of every description can operate freely and make substantial profits every month.

Mr. Speaker, the motion also refers to setting up an inquiry. As regards the setting up of an independent inquiry into interference by a cabinet minister, I suggest, when all players have left the arena, that it will be useless to spend millions of dollars on analyzing a debate that will be completed, but this is on the clear understanding that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) holds to his initial decision.

As long as this situation will prevail, I will have to support motions like the one before us, which clearly states the matters at issue.

● (1610)

[English]

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the very grave seriousness, not only of this matter but of the substance of the motion moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), I would have thought that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would have sought the first possible opportunity to rise in his place to indicate his position and that of the government on this question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: However, since it is clear that he would rather follow me than precede me, I am pleased to rise to speak now. I enter this debate, naturally, with a very deep sense of concern for the issue and for the country, and also in the knowledge that a great responsibility has been placed upon the shoulders of the opposition in this parliament. We are engaged in what may turn out to be a very long struggle to bring a powerful government to account on a series of events that are cutting away at the foundations of Canadian democracy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Our immediate task is to repair confidence in the independence of the courts in Canada and to make this government give parliament and the citizens of Canada information, much of which the Prime Minister now possesses, about the conduct of his ministers in relation to the courts. However, there is another question too, and that is the question of public confidence in this institution. During the last few years it has been fashionable to say that parliamentary democracies offer the most effective checks on arrogant and secretive governments. That proposition is now being put to the test. I should say, Mr. Speaker, that while none of us has felt any happiness at the personal anguish involved in the proceedings that have unfolded in the last ten days, I think we can all be proud of the role that parliament has played, because parliament, working with a free and active press and with the support of the courts, has forced this government to take action which the government clearly would not have taken if left alone.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: One minister has resigned; another minister seemed to have resigned, and certainly should have. The report of Mr. Justice Deschênes has been published, in part because the judge felt that the pressures raised on this question by parliament required that the report be published.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: So parliament has proven its strength and effectiveness in these last days, as we will continue to do, although there has been no thanks in that regard to the government.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

[Translation]

In this whole business, the Prime Minister deliberately used a diversion tactic, by refusing, basing himself on false premises, to direct a public inquiry. One thing is clear: the Chief Justice acknowledged the restricted nature of his action. He clearly stated: "I was not appointed to conduct a commission of inquiry and of course it is obviously not one of my functions to set myself up as a semi-official investigator on behalf of the House of Commons."

This statement, among others things, brings two facts to light: first, Mr. Justice Deschênes did not conclude that there was no attempt to influence the normal course of justice; in fact, the Chief Justice clearly said that he neither could nor would judge the conduct of the Minister of Public Works. All he did was exonerate his own court; second, the Associate Chief of Justice could only say that he had not been influenced and that he could not judge Mr. Justice Mackay's allegations because he had not been aware of the conversations between the two ministers.

[English]

In refusing a serious and full investigation yesterday into these matters, the Prime Minister said:

> In so far as investigation of the facts, we believe that the facts which have to be known, in so far as they might or might not have consisted of contempt of court or interference with justice have now been made known by the courts.

The Prime Minister might believe, or might pretend to believe, that these are the only facts that need to be known. But we in this parliament also need to know the facts and all the facts, not just those trickled out by ministers as they resign but all the facts about any conversations between ministers which led to an intervention, which has been admitted, with the courts of the land.

● (1620)

We need to know the full facts about any conversations between representatives of the Prime Minister and the judge hearing the case involving students from Trinidad, and we need to know any other facts which may be relevant. Just so the issue may be clear, we absolutely do not accept the position of the Prime Minister that he alone is competent in this case to judge the propriety of the conduct of his colleagues.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: That is particularly the case since the Prime Minister himself, on page 11660 of Hansard, said that he had had conversations with the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury), and that as a result of those conversations he had found that their answers, and presumably their conduct, was satisfactory. He admitted that he had been informed about the conversations which had occurred before the intervention. If he knew what the hon. member for Papineau—the Prime Minister shakes his head. Let me be clear as to what I am saying. My reading as to his remarks is that he had been told by his ministers all that had transpired between them before there was an intervention with the courts. It was not that his knowledge preceded the intervention, but that he knew what had occurred prior to the intervention and that he had found that conduct, in his words, satisfactory.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Clark: He now nods, again, that he had found—

An hon. Member: He doesn't know what he is nodding for. He doesn't know right from wrong, or left from right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Henceforth, I will refrain from trying to interpret the nods of the Prime Minister which appear to be as inconsistent and difficult to follow as his oral responses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: However, I say to him that if he knew all the facts, including those raised by the hon. member for Papineau today, relative to the conversations with the Minister of Public Works, and found those facts to be satisfactory, then there may very well be cause for this House to question not only his judgment but also the degree of his own involvement in this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: That is a question which a full inquiry would help us to determine.

There are two other serious questions which we have a duty to pursue. The first concerns the standards of this government, and the second concerns the right of parliament to information. I believe it is of fundamental importance that all members of this House and, indeed, all Canadians, fully understand this Prime Minister's approach to political morality—what I might call the Trudeau doctrine. In essence, what the Prime Minister has been telling us for the past several days is that as far as he is concerned, the only code of ethics which he applies to his ministers and his supporters is the Criminal Code.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: His position, and he has set it forth on numerous occasions, is that only in cases of clearly illegal action—as a matter of fact, outside the House he spoke of serious illegal action—would he feel it necessary to take any effective disciplinary action against a member of his party. Indeed, the Prime Minister goes even further than that. He has suggested on several occasions in the House—most recently, today—that if the opposition wants information about the activities of ministers, we must first lay a charge that is a perversion of the principles of responsible government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister knows it is a perversion; but let me say that if he will give us the facts instead of hiding them, and if the facts reveal that charges should be laid, they will be laid.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: But let us first have the facts so that this institution will not be poisoned by the suspicion that, just as the investigation by Judge Deschênes revealed actions the judge called grave, a wider investigation would reveal other damaging behaviour. Let me also make it clear that I do not accept for a moment the Prime Minister's pretence that the only standard which applies to a minister is the criminal law. Let me remind the Prime Minister of the much sterner standards set by his predecessor, the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, on November 30, 1964, in a code of conduct for his ministers. Mr. Pearson said:

> It is by no means sufficient for a person in the office of a minister—or in any other position of responsibility in the public service—to act within the law. That goes without saying. Much more is required. There is an obligation not simply to observe the law but to act in a manner so scrupulous that it will bear the closest public scrutiny. The conduct of public business must be beyond question in terms of moral standards, objectivity and equality of treatment.

Mr. Pearson went on to say that there can be no special treatment on the ground of personal acquaintance, sympathy or anything of that kind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I add that the responsibility for ensuring that standard does not rest solely with me and with my colleagues here on the opposition side. It is a primary responsibility of the Prime Minister of Canada as head of government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: And we profoundly regret his refusal to exercise that responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Just so that there is not the slightest misunderstanding, I want to emphasize that we in this party, and I as its leader, do not subscribe to the lack of standards of the present Prime Minister. The Progressive Conservative government which we will form after the next election—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —and we would welcome it whenever the Prime Minister chooses to call it, will have much higher standards and I, as leader, will enforce them. To demand nothing more than that ministers avoid doing that which is seriously illegal is to set no standard at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: It is, indeed, to demean the whole concept of political ethics at a time when, instead, they require to be lifted up, not battered down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: In refusing to accept the resignation of the Minister of Public Works, the Prime Minister has put himself, the minister and this House into an untenable position. How can it continue to be perceived that the minister took an honourable course in offering his resignation, when four scant hours later it was rejected? Now we have the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs, the hon. member for Papineau, resigning with the lame excuse that the reason for his resignation was so that he could better attend to his case in court, instead of dealing with what most of us in this House, until we are in receipt of a full version of the facts, must assume were pressures which flowed from his involvement in the intervention with the judge in that case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1630)

Mr. Clark: The action of this government and of the Prime Minister cast doubt upon all the actions of the government. I say, sir, that we in this House might as well be doing business with the operator of a shell game—"Now you see it, now you don't."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: There is no honour in this kind of operation; there is no integrity in it. There is sharpness, there is cleverness, there is talent of a sort, there is bravado—but there is no honour and integrity, and these are fundamental elements to the function of this assembly. They are not luxuries, they are fundamental, sir—and when they are lost to this House, then the country has lost something far more important to it than losing the usefulness of any minister, regardless of that minister's record of distinction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Those of us who place any value upon our responsibility as members of this institution—and this applies to members on all sides of the House—will not sit silently by and let the Prime Minister of Canada and his ministers continue to keep from parliament and the people facts which we should have.

[Translation]

It is not the first time that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) resorts to evasions and refuses to dialogue honestly and frankly with the people of Canada. The history of this government is made up of repeated efforts to conceal the truth, to refuse to answer questions and to set up inquiries on national matters of the highest importance to all Canadians. This was the case among others in the matter of the Hamilton harbour, the Seafarers' International Union—

[English]

And it is the case again today.

In this matter we have heard from the courts as to their inquiry, and while two ministers of the Crown are now prepared to question the testimony of judges of the courts, we in this party are not. We are prepared to accept, of course, the probity of the judges. But the question of the propriety of conduct of federal ministers is not a question for the court of any province. It is a question for the highest court in the land—this parliament. Because of that, we in this party believe, as my colleague the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) made clear on the first day this matter was raised in parliament, that the terms of reference of an inquiry should first be submitted to this House for consideration, and amendment if necessary, so there can be certainty that the inquiry will be complete. If there is not a public inquiry, or if it is not an adequate inquiry, that will be perceived as a cover-up which will tarnish the reputation of the whole of parliament.

This House must have the information it seeks. Canadians must have the kind of public investigation they deserve—and, clearly, the Minister of Public Works must leave his post in the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: These are the conditions which must be met if the standards of parliamentary democracy are to be redeemed. In preserving the worthiness of this institution and preserving respect for our Canadian way of conducting our affairs, there are no short-cuts and no easy ways out. Perversion of democracy in the name of efficiency, in the name of friendship, even in the name of loyalty, is perversion nonetheless and it simply cannot be suffered lightly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We do not take this matter lightly. The word "grave" is appropriate as we have seen it applied in the Deschênes report. In response to the gravity of the matter, we will later today vote no confidence in the government. That, sir, will not be a mere move in a parliamentary game, as we have seen on the other side during the last few days: it will be a simple, serious demonstration of our duty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the motion of no confidence criticizes me, the Prime Minister, on three grounds. I shall deal with the three in turn. The first is that I refused the resignation of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury). Mr. Speaker, very briefly I should like to remind the House of the origin of this matter. It originated in contempt proceedings which are of a special kind. There are two mechanisms for proceeding in contempt proceedings. One is by way of indictment or accusation where there are two parties, the Crown on one side and the accused on the other, each with their lawyer, and the judge in a criminal case who tries to judge between the Crown and the accused—the accused always, under our system, having the benefit of the doubt—and trying to reach the fairest and most equitable judgment.

The other procedure, which is less and less used in democratic countries, is where the judge or the courts judge, themselves, whether they have been offended or not. There are no two parties, the Crown and the accused, but the courts are sitting in judgment to determine whether they have been interfered with or otherwise outraged or influenced. In this case, the second course was taken.

It is important to remember that the time-honoured avenue of answering this kind of accusation is to make a proper apology, the kind of apology which would be acceptable to the courts.

Mr. Woolliams: He would not apologize.

Mr. Trudeau: In the particular procedure which was chosen, it was necessary, therefore, to ask the courts themselves. I am not saying the procedure was right. I did criticize the minister for having used the procedure. But I am going back to the origins of this so that the House and the country understand that in this particular contempt proceeding, the courts were sitting in judgment on whether they had been offended, and it was in some way important to get to know from the courts how, and what, kind of apology they would accept.

This having been established, I said in my statement on Friday that there were different interpretations, in different jurisdictions and in different circumstances, on the question of how do you approach the courts in such circumstances. I laid out those rules in brief form, in summary form, on Friday so that in the future these rules be known and that they be part of the code of conduct of this and, I hope, future governments. I will not deal with that at any length because the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), whose proper duty it is, will explain those rules at greater length, and I think the statement of them in an unambiguous way is important so that in future such cases, and any others, people in the government know how to address themselves to the courts.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the essential judgment which remains is that there was improper conduct by the Minister of Public Works in this case. It should be noted that it was not illegal conduct; that it was not complained of by the judge at the time. It was not regarded by that judge as an attempt to influence his judgment. It was not found by the judge or, for that matter, by the Chief Justice, to constitute an interference with the judicial process. Actually, the law officers of the Crown stated that in their opinion there was no such offence. The Minister of Justice will talk about this later. This improper action, this impropriety, was not undertaken for reasons of personal advantage. On the contrary, Mr. Justice Hugessen felt that it was done for the best of motives. He went on to say what he believed those motives were.

● (1640)

The House will remember that I did not condone this action. I even said that I regard it as a serious lapse of judgment. So the question before the House and the question before me is, what should the minister's punishment be for that lapse of judgment, for that improper act? That is the judgment I must make. It is a judgment for which I am accountable to this House. I am speaking to this motion in proper fashion. Incidentally, I am told that I am speaking in my normal turn, as is customary for government members who answer on opposition days. As I say, it is a judgment for which I am accountable. It is one which—I say this without pretension—keeps in mind the best interests of justice and of the country.

On the one hand we have to consider the importance of preserving parliamentary institutions and judicial institutions intact and making sure, to use the words of some commentators, that they are not brought into opprobrium through misconduct. On the other hand we have to consider the reputation and future career of a devoted and honourable public servant.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Before I give some of the reasons for my judgment and assessment, it is not unimportant to remind the House that at this time we are to debate two major bills which will amend the Criminal Code. It is not unimportant to consider what part humanity and charity should play in the administration of justice.

I repeat, there has been no illegality, only impropriety. What should the punishment be in this particular case? I suppose that punishment is intended, in the first place, as a discipline. It is intended, partly, to discipline ministers, partly to act as an example for the future, and partly to establish that the sense of propriety has been respected and will be maintained.

Let me deal with the first part, the question of disciplining the minister. Well, let us begin with the fact that the minister apologized. We know, as the opposition previously said, that the minister has a recognized reputation in all parts of the country and all sides of the House for honour and devotion to duty. We know that he has served this country for over 30 years in war and in peace, in the armed services and in the public service. He has an unblemished record.

Mr. Broadbent: That is totally irrelevant.

Mr. Trudeau: We know, Mr. Speaker, that for over 15 of those more than 30 years he has served as a distinguished, modest parliamentarian. Against all this we must place the fact that I condemned him publicly in the House by not condoning his error of judgment, the embarrassment he has faced in the past few weeks in this House and in the country and, sad to say, the enduring humiliation caused by the words of the Chief Justice and in this very debate. As well, he apologized for his conduct. I judged him—but he was also judged by hon. members and by the country itself. I submit that this was discipline enough for an act which was undertaken with the best of intentions, as the judge himself recognized. It was in no way illegal and was connected with a complex and difficult contempt of court procedure which calls for unusual treatment, as I explained earlier in this debate.

What about the question of setting an example for the future? I suggest that the precedent of these very events is a warning to all of us. Certainly, the clear rule which I enunciated on Friday and which will be elaborated on, is the code for the future. I ask the opposition, do they want a body as well? Why do they want blood as well? Is this their sense of propriety?

I turn now to the question of propriety. Once again, there is some element of subjectivity here. I believe that people will take into account a lifetime of honour and unblemished conduct in considering whether this particular impropriety was punished severely or not.

Let me now comment on the argument concerning a double standard. The argument was mainly raised by the NDP, although I heard Conservatives raise it also. They talk of a double standard, as if a poor man would not have been treated thus. I am not sure what they mean, Mr. Speaker. Do they mean that a poor man would have ended up in jail? Surely not. There has been no illegality here. I do not know that anybody, poor or rich, ends up in jail or, for that matter, pays fines unless found guilty of some offence. Therefore, there are not two standards in the sense that the minister got off lightly for a crime: there was no crime.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) keeps reminding us that what we have done is against the law, and so on. I think the Minister of Justice will deal with that. I notice that he sometimes speaks of the law of the constitution. Mr. Speaker, if he could elaborate on this, perhaps we would know what law the Minister of Public Works broke.

Mr. Broadbent: I will send you a copy of Jennings.

Mr. Trudeau: If he has not broken the law, I suggest that members of parliament and the press or media people who reported it were themselves in a libel situation when they accused the minister of breaking the law. Mr. Speaker, I know of no ordinary or poor person who, having committed an impropriety, would not be forgiven after making an apology. Therefore, when we talk of double standards the only thing we can mean is that a minister should be treated more severely because of his high station and high duty.

Mr. Clark: Precisely.

Mr. Trudeau: But this is completely different from the argument of double standard that has been used thus far. I submit that indeed this double standard, this greater severity, has been applied to, and against, the minister in this particular case. It is important to consider the injury to his reputation and the damage to 30 years of unblemished record caused by this incident, an incident in which he acted with his great generosity and great heart but in an ill-advised way. I think that is the blame, and it is blame enough in this particular case.

● (1650)

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we have acted with a sense of propriety. We have also acted with a sense of justice—justice for the man, justice with humility, and justice with charity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the second ground of the motion bears on the fact that I did not insist on the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) giving the House a full statement. Considering the shortness of time and since the minister apologized this afternoon and stated that he regretted to be the cause of embarrassment to another minister and he resigned, for all these reasons, I will shorten this part of my speech. I would simply like to remind the House of the extremely difficult, even impossible, situation in which the minister found himself then. On one hand, either he could seek to appeal and obtain a final judgment of the court in the contempt proceedings, that is to say, he could exercise his right, as any citizen, to appeal without any prejudice; but he had to do it at the cost of looking suspicious and causing this suspicion to fall on the government, a situation astutely exploited by some people who would take advantage of his being unable to mention a case which was before the courts, in other words, who knew that he could not be completely open on this case without injuring his own right of appeal and would interpret his silence as an indication that he was hiding something. Or, on the other hand, he renounced his right of appeal, the right of every citizen to defend his honour and the government's honour by making any comments he deemed fit to make on this issue between himself and Mr. Justice MacKay. Mr. Speaker, the minister made a choice. He chose not to be a minister any more in order to pursue his appeal outside the political arena, outside the polarization that took place in this House, and I respect his choice.

Mr. Speaker, clearly there are definite limits in such circumstances to what one may say when one's case is before the courts. I respect his choice and as long as he maintains his appeal, it automatically follows in my view that no one can expect him to speak on every aspect of the case on which the opposition would seek answers.

As for his resignation, I had an opportunity this afternoon to answer a question by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe). In my view, that was a serious question. Since I already gave an answer, I will not repeat myself. I would simply remind the House that his resignation had nothing to do, as the minister's remarks indicated, with his communication with the minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury). That communication resulted neither in an illegal act, nor in an attempt to influence the court nor again in an effort to interfere in any way with the administration of justice. The minister made his statement. Since his resignation was tendered before this House and accepted, I believe, Mr. Speaker, I have no further comments on this aspect of the question.

I now come to the third point, that mentioned in the motion now before this House,

[English]

I quote the motion:

—by failing to set up an independent inquiry into alleged interference in the course of justice by cabinet ministers—

Here, again, because of the shortness of time—I see the other leaders respected their time: am I exceeding it, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Trudeau: I think I have about another ten minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member is seeking some indication as to the expiry of his time. According to my notes, he began at about 23 minutes to five o'clock. Normally his time would expire after 30 minutes, pursuant to Standing Order 58(13). There are about seven minutes remaining.

Mr. Trudeau: I think I can finish in the next ten minutes. I will not comment, therefore, at any length on the alleged interference which is mentioned in the motion; the Minister of Justice will do that. However, I hope that I will have occasion, perhaps in the question period, to come back to some of the allegations, particularly those that have been made by the leader of the New Democratic Party. He is, presumably, basing his motion on Mr. Justice MacKay's letter and making a very long and involved case that either Mr. Justice Mackay or the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is lying, and concludes—rather generously—that it is probably the minister.

Mr. Broadbent: Not at all.

Mr. Trudeau: If he is not alleging that the minister is involved in lying, and he says there must be a lie somewhere, he is probably alleging that Mr. Justice Mackay is lying.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: The trained seals.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member from the New Democratic Party talks about trained seals. I want him to realize that what his leader and his party have been asking for is precisely related to that. They are asking for a fishing expedition; they want a licence to fish.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I think I used more judicial language the other day in rejecting the idea of an inquiry. I said that an inquiry, by definition, the very meaning of the word, pertains to inquisitorial forms of justice where you do not presume people are innocent but where you presume there is some guilt somewhere and you start asking questions of the people whom you suspect might be guilty of wrongdoing. As I said the other day, this type of fishing expedition is either to satisfy the ambition or aspirations of some or perhaps to satisfy the pique or curiosity of others. However, I say that they are contrary to the fundamental concepts of the rule of law. They are anathema to anyone who truly believes in individual rights and principles.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1700)

Mr. Trudeau: Such fishing expeditions, such inquiries—I have explained this many times in the House when refusing this request which has been made repeatedly by the opposition—are to my mind only justifiable when the normal judicial procedure cannot be followed, when there are reasonable and probable grounds to believe that the full facts are not known and cannot be known through the normal judicial process or, I would add, in the case of parliament, through normal parliamentary processes. That is why, under our system, if a member of the public wishes to lay an information and press a charge, that is his right. If a member of the opposition wishes to do that, well, that is fine, too, and the procedures are provided. But suspicion, innuendo, calumny—these are not the bases for proceeding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The opposition keeps repeating that an inquiry is needed to find out whether there are any further facts, facts which need to be known. Let us look at the three areas of fact which are of interest in this case. Concerning what took place between ministers and judges, we have what the ministers stated in this House last Friday, what they have stated in answer to repeated questions. I have always said that until we had Justice Deschênes' report—I have heard the ministers and I take their word, but in fairness we must learn whether the courts feel aggrieved. That was the object of the letter which the Minister of Justice sent to Mr. Justice Deschênes. In that report, which was made public, we have the version of the three judges. So these facts are known—what the ministers said to the judges and what the judges felt they said when they were spoken to. It is hard to see how any inquiry could ascertain anything more than that. Perhaps there are some slight variations which I am prepared to ascribe to lapses of memory, but if members opposite do not believe this to be the case, if they do not want to take the word of members of parliament, they know what recourse they have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Only one word more on this aspect—I hate to go even this far, but I have been under questioning in the House—indicating there are some reasons to cast doubt, for instance, on the memory of Mr. Justice Mackay. I have given examples, and it seems to me that if there are fair-minded persons looking at this issue they would at least have an equal cause to suspect his memory as they have that of the minister. When that set of facts is known, there remains—before I gallop to an end—two other sets of facts which might interest the opposition. The first concerns what a minister might have said to another minister. I have said before, and I repeat it now, that the privacy of conversations between any two individuals in society, even if they are ministers, should be respected except when the greater good of society demands otherwise.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A lot of claptrap!

Mr. Trudeau: I hope I have the agreement of the other side on that principle. They might argue about the circumstances; they might say that in this particular case the good of society demands that we infringe the privacy of conservations. If there was an illegality involved, if there was a conspiracy involved, I would have no doubt that the importance of dealing with that situation was greater than the need to respect the confidentiality of the conservations. We know, now, that there are no such allegations of illegality or of interference with the conduct of justice. We know there has been an impropriety.

Opposition leaders have made a good deal of such questions as this: Did you know about these things beforehand, or not? If you did, why didn't you act? If you didn't, why did you not find out?

Let me say, with regard to this and some of the other innuendoes which have been made, so that ministers may know it, so that members on this side of the House may know it and so members of the opposition may know it, that what two members of my cabinet say to each other is none of my business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Even if it leads to impropriety?

Mr. Trudeau: If hon. members will hear me out—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Standing Order is clear. In order for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to continue for any length of time at all, the unanimous consent of the House is required. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Trudeau: I appreciate the permission given me by the House. I have two more arguments to advance. I think the House is showing courtesy and respect for this issue by hearing me out. Who knows, I may say something which will lead to further debate, and they might want to question my principles. I am putting them before the House so that they may be judged. I have stated that I take the position that I have no right and no desire to know what ministers convey to each other even about leadership questions—if there are any such—except when there is any wrongdoing.

Mr. Clark: Or impropriety.

Mr. Trudeau: "Wrongdoing" is the word I chose, because it is imprecise. If the wrongdoing amounts to illegality, then, of course, I have a right to know.

Mr. Clark: And if it is an impropriety?

Mr. Trudeau: I hear various interjections. If hon. members are so anxious to have me answer these questions, I am surprised they did not ask them during the question period. As the whip says, it seems I have to provide hon. members opposite, including the leader of the New Democratic Party, with the questions in order to give them answers.

An hon. Member: Stop the histrionics.

Mr. Trudeau: I have the answers hon. members are waiting for, if they will allow me. If there is an impropriety, I also believe I have a right to know what has gone on between them.

Mr. Clark: And does parliament have that right?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1710)

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I say parliament also has that right. That is why until Chief Justice Deschênes had looked into this matter and established that the facts were grave and that they had resulted in an impropriety, I refrained from asking in any great detail or with perseverance what the ministers had said to each other. I wanted to know whether they had committed an illegal act, and to that extent I did question them. Until the judgment had been made that there was an impropriety, and until I had this objective version of the judges, I did not press the ministers on every detail that might have gone on in their conversations.

Mr. Clark: You still find it satisfactory?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not find it satisfactory, to answer the leader of the opposition. That is why I got an apology, and the House got an apology, from the minister. That is why the minister saw fit to offer his resignation. As I said in an earlier part of my speech, that indicates to me that there was an element of wrongdoing—not an illegality, but a wrongdoing—which the judge qualified as improper.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Clark: What facts did the minister withhold from you?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: As far as the minister of consumer and corporate affairs is concerned, he did tell me yesterday the exact nature of his conversations with the Minister of Public Works. Whether that kind of impropriety—advising an impropriety, or asking an impropriety, or whatever the minister said this afternoon he said to the minister—calls for resignation or not, I think is an academic question, since in any event he resigned for other reasons and is no longer a minister of my cabinet. But what is not irrelevant is his right privately to plan his defence, and I will continue to respect his right not to answer questions that he feels are in some way pertinent to the case now before the appeal court. I hope the opposition will also have the decency to do the same.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In an effort—probably fruitless, but nonetheless an effort—to dispel the suspicions of hon. members opposite, and in an effort to bring parliament back to a more efficient management of the business of the nation, I believe the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs went to the outer limits of what is permissible in regard to what he could say without infringing the sub judice rule. But this is for his judgment, Mr. Speaker; I just feel that he did it at considerable cost to himself, that he did it in a way that will permit him to exercise his right of appeal in this case. In the interim, I believe hon. members should at least respect the price he has paid in order to exercise that right. In the case of the hon. member for Papineau, I submit it is a question either of taking his word that that is what he said and did, or not taking his word and laying a charge in the customary fashion, with the customary consequences, Mr. Speaker.

I have dealt with conversations between ministers and the courts and between one minister and another minister, but it seems to me that there is a third area of uncertainty and that is what one judge might have said to another judge or what judges might have said to their counsel. Of these facts we know little. I am certain that an inquiry could attempt to find out more about that, but I am not sure whether it would be appropriate or desirable for the institution of parliament or the courts to get into that side of the inquiry.

Moreover, I would ask parliament by what mechanism it would conduct that aspect of the inquiry. How would parliament question judges, Mr. Speaker? If they want to question a minister, to cross-examine his version, presumably they would also have to question the judges. How would they do that, Mr. Speaker? There is one known procedure for parliament to question judges, and that is the procedure of impeachment; but I do not think the opposition are suggesting that.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Is that one of your strawmen, Pierre?

Mr. Trudeau: No, I do not put it up as a strawman; I am just trying to exhaust the various avenues and mechanisms that exist.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Use a legitimate avenue.

Mr. Trudeau: There is another way, and this would be by parliamentary committee; but certainly not a normal parliamentary committee because I doubt that any judge would agree to sit in front of a parliamentary committee, whatever the form of subpoena issued to him.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Who has suggested a parliamentary committee? No one but yourself.

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps the hon. member should suggest it.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): You suggested it.

Mr. Trudeau: It is an avenue that the opposition might want to examine. You know, Mr. Speaker, I find it strange that on Friday the opposition were constantly imploring me to discuss the terms of an inquiry that might be held. Now they do not want me to talk about the kind of inquiry that might be held.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: You are just trying to impress Charlie Lynch.

Mr. Clark: You can take another hour.

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. members talk of strawmen. They should think about their own members. It is they who want an inquiry, Mr. Speaker, and I am examining the ways in which we could have an inquiry that could ask questions of judges.

Mr. Broadbent: A public inquiry would do that.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): He does not want a public inquiry, not a serious one.

Mr. Trudeau: I am not going to elaborate, but it would be possible to have a committee of the House set up under special legislation to examine the judges. Another avenue for examining what happened between the judges themselves and the judges and lawyers would be the Canadian Judicial Council—but that is not what hon. members opposite want. Another avenue is to have the Bar look into the conduct of its members and ask questions of its members. That is an inquiry that might satisfy some aspects, at least, of the curiosity that seems to reign over on that side. I take it that when hon. members call for a public inquiry, they mean a royal commission of inquiry. I suppose it would be the least inappropriate way of asking judges questions about this matter.

● (1720)

An hon. Member: And ministers.

Mr. Trudeau: There is no question but that ministers can be interrogated. They can also be interrogated by a committee of the House, Mr. Speaker. If the opposition would reflect, and perhaps even draw up terms of reference—since they are so anxious to have that kind of an inquiry—they might discover that in drawing up those terms of reference they would find themselves in a position of having a royal commission of inquiry, of necessity, asking questions of judges. We would then have a judge judging his colleagues in this particular case. If we set up such a commission of inquiry, I wonder what then would happen to the much proclaimed and much vaunted theory of separation of powers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I get back to what members opposite called the strawman. The time-honoured way of asking questions of judges by parliament is impeachment; it is not by a royal commission of inquiry. I said it would be the least inappropriate way, and I am not sure it could not be done. I have not had time enough to have all the experts on parliamentary rules and judicial procedure give me their opinions on this.

Mr. Clark: We could start with ministers.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition says, in a very smart and judicial looking way, "We could start with ministers". Sure; but does he want it to end with ministers? Is that what he wants?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I have not doubt that he wants to end the ministers, but when he says we can start by asking them questions, is he so superficial as not to ask himself: What then? After we have heard from them, shall we hear from the judges?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: If we only start with the ministers, then I would ask the opposition what good that would do. If we go on from the ministers to the judges, then, as I have suggested. We could be doing serious damage to this great theory the Leader of the Opposition says he believes in about the division of powers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You are the theorists.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, at least in my judgment I have indicated that the reasons for such an inquiry, and they do exist—there are reasons, and members of the opposition have stated them—are so very poor and small, in face of the harm that would be done by having an inquiry by parliament into the conduct of judges, that they should think this over before pressing for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) permit a question before he sits down?

An hon. Member: Oh, no, Stanley.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Alleged Interference with Judiciary

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House extended its courtesy in order to permit the Prime Minister to go on, and technically I suppose there is no limit to the time he has the floor. I should think that if a question is put at this time, in this way, it ought not to be done simply with the consent of the Prime Minister but with the consent of the House. If the House gives its consent, I would not object.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a question of the Prime Minister?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since, by innuendo, the Prime Minister has questioned the veracity of Mr. Justice Mackay, which I do not question, is he going to lay a charge against the judge or ask parliament to impeach him?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon, member really surprises me. The question was whether his memory was right, or the memory of the minister. Surely, whether one man remembers a thing one way, and the other another way, has nothing to do with veracity; it has to do with whether you have a good memory.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: There go the ministers.

Mr. Fairweather: There go the ministers, and there goes everybody else, I suppose. Perhaps I might make this observation, with the greatest amount of charity. It takes a motion like this to get an intervention by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the debates of this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: It has always seemed to me he has not participated often enough, and once in a while something quite interesting does go on here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fairweather: The throat-clearing performance usually takes place at the intermission, but if the doctor wants to go to his dispensary, he might go and paint his throat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: The Prime Minister spoke of a different interpretation as to how to approach the court. Let me suggest there is no room for a difference of interpretation as to how to approach the court, and I am very grateful to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) who made that very clear in his answers to me today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: I am very grateful that this fact has been laid to rest once and for all. It seems to me that the Prime Minister's so-called statement of ethics on Friday is today, on Tuesday, in tatters because of the answers of the Minister of Justice. I look forward to hearing from him later when he will enunciate on this.

The Canadian Bar Association's code of ethics is very clear. I have here the duties of a lawyer in public life. Mr. Justice Deschênes quoted the Quebec Code very clearly. I presume that the Bar Society of the province of Quebec is even now looking into the impropriety of members of the profession in that province as a result of the actions they have taken. The codes of every other province are also very clear in this regard. So really what we have now is no code of ethics.

The Prime Minister has suggested that the sum of our debate here is calumny. He has used the words "calumny" and "innuendo". I say that what we have been doing here, as my leader and the leader of the NDP have suggested, is carrying out the fundamental duty of the opposition in the parliamentary system.

● (1730)

I suggest that for a moment we should turn the whole matter around and ask ourselves what would have happened to the escutcheon of public life in this country if the occurrences of the last couple of weeks had never occurred. There would have been a continuation, presumably, of interventions on the part of ministers with the courts, which is quite contrary to the code of ethics, and there would have been a continuation of what a respected judge has called "grave" and "improper" conduct and for which, on Friday, we had Wynken, Blynken and Nod apologizing to us. But surely it must have been one of the most curious examples of ministerial repentance in my time here. They popped up one after another like popcorn on Saturday night, all apologizing to us and saying that in future they would follow a code which they should have followed long ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: What is the opposition's role? It is quite an interesting coincidence that the two quotations today, one on ethics and one on the role of the opposition which my leader and I have quoted unwittingly—and I have not talked to him, there is nothing improper here—should have come from the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. I want to quote that right hon. gentleman when he said:

> In national politics during the years when I was in the government, I watched the Opposition perform their duty vigorously and industriously, with courage and determination. They rightly insisted on their right to oppose, attack and criticize, to engage in that cut and thrust of debate, so often and so strongly recommended by those concerned with the vigour and health of parliament and the health of democracy.

I suggest that, inconvenient as all this is—

An hon. Member: What is the date of that speech?

Mr. Fairweather: Have you a question?

Mr. MacEachen: When was that written?

Mr. Fairweather: I will give the hon. member the citation, indeed I will—the Hon. Lester B. Pearson, P.C., M.P.,

"The Role of the Opposition", address delivered to the Canadian Club of Ottawa, 27 January, 1959.

Mr. MacEachen: He was leader of the opposition himself then.

Mr. Fairweather: Exactly. There is no difference in the code. This is exactly why I quoted the right hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Double standard.

Mr. Fairweather: Hearing that enunciation of the responsibilities of the opposition coming from the mouth of the Right Hon. Lester Pearson seems to upset one of his former colleagues. I have a couple of other quotations from two distinguished members of this House of Commons.

Mr. Sharp: You probably wrote it.

Mr. Fairweather: If you want to choke to death on your own laughter, you are welcome.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: I find it passing strange that people should giggle at the remarks of Lester B. Pearson on how the opposition should fulfil its role. The right hon. gentleman did that, and he fulfilled the role of the Prime Minister with distinction. I may say that he has set a standard of conduct for his ministers that has not been met since.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: It is perfectly obvious it has not been met since we had judges say that the acts were grave and improper. Why do you not cackle at that?

The other two references which I will not give to the House now about the role we are fulfilling because it is our obligation, duty, and responsibility were by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Fundamentally the topic which concerned us during the past several days raises the question of what kind of a society we are. That is why many of us discussed with the Prime Minister, in questions and in other ways, his obligation to all of us to set the tone for this government. It is nothing less than that, and that is what the public of Canada has the right to expect. The rather inadequate statement of ethics last Friday is ludicrous and in no way meets the problem with which we are faced.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: After all, the profession of politics has its own history. I regret that I may be laughed at again if I raise the matter of the independence of the judiciary. It was raised in a very interesting article, which I commend to the Prime Minister, in the University of Toronto "Law Journal", and it is entitled, appropriately enough, "Scandalizing Justice". The reference is by a judge in Great Britain some 210 years ago, and it has to do with the preciousness of the separation between the judiciary and the executive. That is what we will be fighting to preserve, no matter whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) laughs at us, or whether other people howl in their seats. It is something that this parliament would be failing in its duty if it did not fulfil.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: The Prime Minister worried over Christmas about the country and about our institutions. I share his concern and I say that the events of the last couple of weeks have not helped to raise the public's consciousness about this institution. All of us have been smeared by this grubby business.

The Prime Minister spoke about the poor. No poor man would be allowed into a Westmount home to speak to a judge on Sunday afternoon, and no poor man could get a telephone connection with an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Quebec or of any other province. That is the double standard with which we are dealing. It is one thing for members of the executive to pick up the telephone or make Sunday afternoon clandestine visits. Can you think of anybody going from downtown Montreal, Ottawa or Toronto and trying to intervene with a high court justice of this country? He would not get past the footman.

Mr. Trudeau: Because the judge thinks he is poor?

Mr. Fairweather: The judge's views were set out in the letter of the Associate Chief Justice. It is an indictment of the ministers of this government and of anybody who believes in the honour of public life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Are you saying a judge would not answer a telephone call from a poor man?

Some hon. Members: Shut up.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Fairweather: The Secretary of State for External Affairs knows perfectly well the difference between a telephone call made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) and, God forbid, from himself to a judge, or from the principal secretary of the Prime Minister of Canada saying he would like to drop in for a chat, and a telephone call from somebody from Whycocomagh, Cape Breton. He knows the answer to that.

● (1740)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, surely what the hon. member is saying—

Some hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Fairweather: The Secretary of State for External Affairs goes bipartisan when it suits him, and then suddenly becomes partisan when he finds others striking debating points.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: This institution is caught in a crisis of cynicism.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Alleged Interference with Judiciary

Mr. Fairweather: Hon. members may not think there is a crisis of cynicism, but no less a figure than the Prime Minister of Canada spoke about it over the new year and the problem our institutions face in their public acclaim.

What I have in front of me is not written by the Right Hon. Lester Person, but a magazine edited by Norman Cousins, The Saturday Review of November 1, and it devotes the whole edition to the rather terrifying and unpleasant subject of what is happening to ethical standards in government, law, business, accounting, journalism, medicine, and education.

Because I was smug I did not think such a thing would ever have to be written or that a Canadian magazine would ever have to take up an issue dealing with ethics in our country, but I see; I was as usual, somewhat naïve.

In Montreal in the spring of last year many of us were on another mission having to do with this institution, and the mission involved whether democracy itself was governable in the 1970's and 1980's. Government will never be easy, and democracies will never have an easy time of it if there are standards for the executive and standards for the rest of the citizens, and if the rest of the citizens see that the executive is in a different position to the mass of the public. That is what this motion is about, why I welcome it, why I support it, and why I think it behooves every man and woman who represent constituencies in this country to do what they individually can to try to restore faith in our system and to restore an ethical standard to this institution of which we can all be proud. And that has not happened.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: I very much regret this, but it has not happened yet. I was in this institution one particular day, and I think that was the only time I ever did, or ever will, receive a compliment from the Toronto Globe and Mail in an editorial page. It was a grubby business that day. I see several hon. members who were here on that Friday afternoon, and some were then indulging in some activities of which I do not think many of us were proud. Without very much forethought it happened that I made the comment, "In God's name, what are we doing to this place?" Mr. Speaker, in God's name what were the members of the cabinet thinking of when they thought they could go to judges on Sunday afternoons or make telephone calls?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: It happens that some of us care quite a good deal about this institution and about how it is perceived by the country. I see many courageous people in my party here who had more courage than I did in seeking the leadership of the party and who went through pretty difficult times, and I suspect that if I asked every single one of them they would tell me that the cynicism of which I speak was extremely prevalent from one end of the country to the other.

That is why I think it is worth while interrupting the legislative performance of the government, which in itself leaves something to be desired, to consider a matter which is so fundamental as this.

An hon. Member: Now say something.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Who said that?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fairweather: The hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott)—

Mr. Paproski: Jean Roy, shame!

Mr. Fairweather: No, it was not Jean Roy. Jean Roy would not do that. It was the hon. member for Mississauga, I suspect, who doesn't put himself down on the list.

An hon. Member: Timmins.

Mr. Fairweather: Perhaps the hon. member who said it will have the courage to say so.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I was accused of an intervention which I did not make.

Mr. Fairweather: I say without any reservation—and I have always done this—I accept the hon. member's correction. I can take as much as the Prime Minister of Canada can take.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: And more so.

Mr. Fairweather: Although he may not believe this, I do very deeply—the balance I think we are trying to restore to this country and its institutions has something to do with the following:

> . . . surely, that is not law at all; on something that resides neither in institutions nor past achievements, but in the hearts of individual people, in the common, cognate, virtues of courage, kindliness and honesty, in the lustre of the spirit, in the faith and vision that nourishes and upholds all else.

Mr. Trudeau: You are describing Drury.

Mr. Fairweather: Exactly, but I regret it does not describe you, Sir.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: If ever I saw a knock-out, that was it.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like my first words to be in congratulation of the fine, sensitive, and honourable speech—

Mr. Trudeau: Thank you.

Mr. Brewin: —we have just listened to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: I think there are some people in this country, some even in this House, who by their grinning and laughing in the House—I am not talking about the others—show that they totally fail to appreciate the gravity of the matter we are discussing. They do not seem to understand that the independence of the judiciary is a basic pillar of our whole society and our whole system. Failure to understand that and failure to defend it are the basic charge we make against the government on this occasion, and it is a matter which affects the whole fabric and nature of our society.

I should like to read what the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec said in this connection. He said:

> It is of the utmost importance that this independence of the judiciary, achieved through great effort during the course of the last three centuries, be jealously guarded against all attacks.

The accusation I have to make is that it is not being jealously guarded. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in particular, through a series of minimizing and downgrading the whole business, has managed to make it look as if it were a trifling matter which does not have to be taken seriously. I have something I want to say later about the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury). I am afraid his conduct also falls in that category. I wanted to speak about him a little later but perhaps I will say what I have to say now.

● (1750)

I have the greatest respect for the Minister of Public Works. It has been one of the greatest disappointments I have ever had that, when he did the honourable thing in this House last Friday, he then permitted the Prime Minister to persuade him to do something less honourable. His first choice was the right choice and I wish he had stuck to it.

How has the Prime Minister downgraded and minimized this thing? One thing he said repeatedly during his speech, not only today but on other occasions, is that there is no illegality here, just an impropriety. He managed to say impropriety as if it did not matter very much. I remind the House that the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec in his report, which appears at page 11779 of Hansard, quotes Associate Chief Justice Hugessen as follows:

> While I felt at the time that the call was improper (and I believe I said so to Mr. Drury), I did not think that he was attempting to influence my judgment.

But Mr. Justice Deschênes does clearly refer to the impropriety later when he says:

> I have little doubt that the facts related by Mr. Justice Hugessen are grave, considering the stature of the person making the call and the circumstances in which the call was made to him.

I say that we have the judge saying it was a "grave" impropriety, and the Prime Minister tries to brush this aside as though somehow or other the Chief Justice had not taken the matter very seriously. How ridiculous it is to keep on talking about illegality. We all know that if we park in the wrong place that is illegal, and obviously it is not a matter to be taken too seriously by this House. But when you have an interference in the administration of justice such as we have seen clearly and transparently outlined in the facts before the House in the last few days, when you see this sort of thing then the matter is of very grave concern indeed. All the minimizing, brushing aside, use of the word "illegal" as against the word "grave" impropriety—all this is a calculated effort to minimize this and treat it as though it were unimportant, something of no supreme importance.

Another method of attempting to minimize the matter is to talk as though attempting to influence the judiciary was not a critical thing as long as you did not succeed. This is the most ridiculous doctrine that has ever been propounded in parliament at any time, I should think. I am glad that there is not the slightest suggestion that the attempt was in any way successful. But the attempt was there; the attempt was highly improper, and deserved to be regarded with full seriousness.

It is absolutely inconceivable—I think the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) has underlined it but it was perfectly clear before—that the Minister of Public Works was sent as his emissary or spokesman or advocate to speak to the judge who was deciding the case of the hon. member for Papineau. If that was not a flagrant example of intervention in the administration of justice I do not know where you would find a clearer case if you had words, and words, and words of evasion. The facts speak clearly for themselves.

I want to read from the report of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec where he cites a regulation of the bar of Quebec. I am not a member of the bar of Quebec but I presume their regulations are authorized by statute and therefore have the force of law. Regulation 43.3 was cited by the learned judge so he must have thought it relevant. It reads:

> In the absence or without the knowledge of the other party or of his advocate, he shall not make, before judgment or decision, on behalf of a party in a contested matter, any verbal or written representations to a judge, a court or the members of a judicial or quasi-judicial body.

I say we do not need any spurious code of ethics thought up by the Prime Minister. This rule sets up a law; it is the law of Quebec and I suggest it is probably the law of other provinces in the country. It is not only the law as written down, it is the law of ordinary morals and ethics. It is the law of the institutions of democracy and ensures their independence. We have seen here an effort to minimize the whole thing.

I did speak of the Minister of Public Works, Mr. Speaker. I repeat that I hold him in respect and I found that one of the most unhappy things that has happened since I have been in this House was that he abandoned his own good judgment and permitted himself to continue to occupy a position which by his actions, however well intentioned, clearly disqualified him from being in the government of this country.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Unless the hon. member is rising on the same point of order maybe we could call it six o'clock. Or I could recognize the hon. member. Is it agreed we call it six o'clock after I have heard the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a very important debate. I do not know how arrangements could be made but I think it would be most appropriate if committees of the House which were to sit this evening could be cancelled so that they will not keep members away. It is very important that this be done.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to not going ahead with the committees so long as the schedules set for them will be continued. I understand the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts had arranged to dispose of Bill C-20 this evening.

An hon. Member: No, it had not.

An hon. Member: There was no arrangement like that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not think we should get into a discussion on any kind of arrangement. I think the leaders of the parties or their representatives could get together and solve the problem quite easily. I think it is up to the committees themselves to arrange their program. I think this is a good suggestion and I hope hon. members will get together and solve it without taking the time of the House.

Mr. Blais: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is the first I have heard of any intention not to proceed with committees this evening so I am caught a bit short. I would have appreciated receiving some prior notice of the matter and some opportunity to negotiate it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There seems to be a disposition toward good will so I hope hon. members can get together and reach an agreement.

It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just before six o'clock the Conservative House leader said that perhaps we might make arrangements relating to the sitting of committees this evening. May I advise the House that no arrangement has been reached, and the committees are scheduled to sit at eight o'clock.

Mr. Paproski: Shame!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I regret that a greater effort was not made. I do not suggest that the parliamentary secretary made no effort. I say this because the present debate is extremely important, but despite its importance the government has not seen fit to re-schedule the committee meetings for this evening. It could have made other arrangements with the consent of members of all other parties in the House who are interested in maintaining the committee system but who are also interested in participating in this important debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It's the same old arrogance.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I lay the blame at the feet of the hon. gentleman from Grenville-Carleton who just spoke. If he had advised us before six o'clock that he wanted the committees not to sit, we could have communicated with members of my party who sit on the committees. But he did not do that—

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. That is not a point of order. It is a point of debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is a point of arrogance.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have already mentioned some of the government's evasions and pretexts. I must now mention another important matter. I think the House has seldom heard anything as bizarre and preposterous as the reasons the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs gave for his resignation. They were absolutely ludicrous. He said he resigned in order to devote his attention to the contempt of court proceeding which affects him. That is beyond belief. What an extraordinary thing to say. Contempt proceedings last one day, possibly two. The appeal is prepared; the record is prepared. Presumably he hired a qualified lawyer, although he has not done well so far.

Mr. Gillies: Are you available?

Mr. Brewin: No. I would not want to be mixed up in that affair. Mr. Speaker, how can the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs pretend that he had to forgo his duties as minister of the Crown and protector of consumers because he needed to attend to a court case in which he was involved? The appeal can be discussed without his presence although, quite naturally, it would be a courtesy if he were to attend. Presumably he hired a lawyer who knows how to present a case. I do not see why he should use impending court proceedings as an excuse for giving up his job as the protector of the consumers in this country.

An hon. Member: He said he did it for that reason.

Mr. Brewin: Yes, for that reason, and others. There may be other excellent reasons. One is so obvious that it led to the present debate.

That the minister should so pretend to the House is inexcusable. He clearly admitted that he requested the Minister of Public Works to interfere with the administration of justice relating to a case in which he was involved. Having admitted that, and then not uttering a single word of apology to parliament, although he was good enough to apologize for embarrassing the Minister of Public Works, is inexcusable.

By seeking to interfere with the judiciary the minister breached a basic, fundamental provision of the constitution of this country relating to the separation of powers between the judiciary and the executive. But not one single word did he say about that to parliament. Instead, we witnessed this preposterous pretense that he could not do his job because he had to deal with the matter before the courts. How contemptuous! Does he think we are so foolish or so childish as to accept his excuse?

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) made an excellent speech. I join with him in welcoming the role played by the opposition parties in this matter. I am thinking particularly of the Conservative party and my own party. We fulfilled the historic job of the opposition, and I think the opposition did it well. We have seen one resignation—withdrawn, it is true—and another resignation tendered. I do not know how long that will last.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is conditional.

Mr. Broadbent: So far it has lasted longer than the other one.

Mr. Brewin: In any event the public has been alerted to a most serious attack on fundamental, constitutional provisions of this country. That has been our task. We have done it properly, and to pour contempt on us for doing it is ridiculous.

What has the government done? It has procrastinated, pretended, evaded, and adopted every type of stonewalling and evasion tactic you can imagine. The past-master at stonewalling and evasion is the Prime Minister.

The facts of the case are not difficult.

Mr. Drury: They are clear.

Mr. Brewin: I recognize that. Certain facts could be established by a public inquiry. Otherwise the facts are clear indeed. It is now evident that the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs asked the Minister of Public Works to intervene in a judicial matter. I say that any man who does this is not fit or qualified to be a minister of the Crown. I say, further, that anybody who is so dumb as to behave like that is not fit to be a minister of the Crown. Although it pains me more to say this, because I know the minister personally, the same applies to the Minister of Public Works.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: He ought to have known better. I think he knows better. He knows a lot better now, but he should have known better before. Now he regrets it. He tendered his resignation and then allowed his resignation not to be accepted. I cannot believe he was so dumb that he would act as he did.

An hon. Member: Why? Are you worried?

Mr. Brewin: I do worry. We must worry about it, as we are talking of responsible ministers and colleagues. If they show a poor, low standard, then it affects me and every member of this House.

● (2010)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: The Prime Minister spoke about charity, good intentions, and good reputation. All of these things are absolutely irrelevant to the matter we are discussing. What does that have to do with this? What does charity have to do with the business of interfering with the administration of justice? I would get a long way in a court if I produced the argument that for some charitable reason I had intervened in the administration of justice and therefore my client or myself should be treated with charity!

I do not doubt that some of the minister's intentions were good. It may be that the Minister of Public Works, as his colleague said, was too generous, too naive or something. I do not know. However, it is not good intentions that count, but what was done. What was done was a clear cut open case of interference with the administration of justice.

I lastly come to the Prime Minister who has a major responsibility for this matter. He has pushed this away. He has sought all sorts of means of evasion. He has allowed the thing to go on. He acted either weakly, or for some other reason that I cannot comprehend, in permitting the minister to stay on in circumstances in which every other jurisdiction that has grown up with a civilized understanding of the difference between the judiciary and the executive would have stepped on quickly, firmly, and at once.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: In that he has failed this country. As far as I am concerned I regret it very much. I would like to respect the Prime Minister. I know he is a man of great ability. However, I have never seen a more disappointing performance than we have had this past week or so from somebody who aspires to the high office of Prime Minister of Canada. It has been a shameful performance.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Brewin: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Drury: The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) made some point of the desirability, indeed the responsibility, of lawyers to be precise. On two occasions he has charged the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) with interference. As he well knows, it is a term of art. Perhaps the hon. member was not in the House this afternoon when the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs read his statement. However, he specifically said that he had not interfered with the administration of justice. The hon. member just said he had.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to answer that. The minister did not interfere directly. He interfered through the agency of the minister who just asked the question. If not, what did the Minister of Public Works go for except to carry a message from the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs? There is an old Latin maxim which I will not quote in Latin as it is not often spoken in this House. It goes like this: "He who does it through another does it himself." I say the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs has a greater responsibility in this matter than the Minister of Public Works.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this is a serious debate in which there have been serious speeches. I would like to commence, as did the Chief Justice of the Superior Court, in reciting my obligations. I think it is appropriate in this debate to recite precisely what my obligations are, as I see them, to the government and the country. As the Chief Justice in his letter to me recited the Department of Justice Act, so do I. Section 4 states that it is the responsibility of the Minister of Justice, and I quote:

1. to see that the administration of public affairs is in accordance with law, and

2. to have the superintendence of all matters connected with the administration of justice in Canada, not within the jurisdiction of the governments of the provinces.

I have stated in the House and outside the House that in relation to the subject matter the House is debating today and has been for some two weeks, I perceive my duties and responsibilities as being, first, to ensure there is no violation of the laws of Canada, including breaches by the ministers of the Crown and, second, to assist in ensuring the independence and the stature of the judiciary to assure its independence from interference or undue influence.

I agree, as I indicated in the House the other day, with the comments made by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec on page two of his letter, and I quote:

It is of the utmost importance that this independence of the judiciary, achieved through great effort during the course of the last three centuries, be jealously guarded against all attacks.

More particularly, it must remain protected from interventions from Members of the Cabinet, whatever may be the quality of the intentions that inspire them.

It remains to add, in the light of recent events that it must also be protected from interventions from Parliament.

As I indicated in the House, I subscribe to and support, as any Minister of Justice should and must, that statement by the Chief Justice. He goes on in his letter to me to expand upon his responsibilities toward the defence of his court, the management of his court, and my responsibilities. He states:

There exists then a definite point of contact between your obligations—

He is speaking of my obligations as Minister of Justice.

—and mine, though they may come from different sources.

It was for that reason that he had his responsibilities and I mine and that he considered it his duty to respond to my invitation to comment on the present case.

In outlining the obligations of Minister of Justice I would like to paraphrase Lord Shawcross speaking as Lord Chancellor and quoted in Edwards "The Law Officers of the Crown", which I had to quote to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) the other day when he suggested I was subject to political influence. Lord Shawcross said, and I am paraphrasing, that although the Attorney General is a member of the government he has certain duties which he cannot abdicate in connection with the administration of the law. The Attorney General has to discharge them with complete independence of the government. In these matters the Attorney General's duty, and it is his duty, is to concern himself only with the representation and protection of the public interest.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) spoke this afternoon of cynicism. I quote that expression because it is an expression of the obligations and responsibilities of the Attorney General. They are obligations that I recognize. They are obligations which the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and former minister of justice of this country recognize. I raise the matter because I think it is important. If the hon. member for Fundy-Royal is talking of cynicism, let there be no cynicism in this House or in this country as to what are the obligations of the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General. These obligations, as I perceive them, and as Lord Shawcross perceives them, are the same perceptions as the Prime Minister has of the office of the Attorney General.

[Mr. Basford.]

● (2020)

In this case the public interest as spoken of by the learned Lord Chancellor is to ensure the observance of the law and the independence of the judiciary. This is the course I have pursued since Mr. Justice Mackay first intimated to me allegations of interference with the judiciary by cabinet ministers.

I wish to emphasize, because people have said they do not have the facts, and have made allegations and inuendos, that prior to the receipt from Mr. Justice Mackay of specific information which he supplied to me at my request, neither I nor the Deputy Attorney General of Canada had received information from any source concerning these specific allegations or any allegations with respect to interference by ministers with any judges in Canada in connection with matters before them.

I hope members will observe and note that statement carefully and that the gentlemen sitting above you, Mr. Speaker, will note that carefully also.

An hon. Member: All this is irrelevant.

Mr. Basford: If the hon. member who comes from Saskatchewan would listen, he might learn something.

An hon. Member: Solid from ear to ear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The Minister of Justice has the floor.

Mr. Basford: Three accusations have been made by the opposition in relation to this matter. The first is that the government is determined to cover up approaches by certain ministers to the judges. The second concerns a so-called double standard in the application of the law about which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) spoke on Friday and again today. The third concerns the alleged interference with the course of justice.

Dealing with the first point, I want to repeat that Mr. Justice Mackay wrote to me on February 9 and that I received his letter on February 11. In that letter the learned judge devoted three lines of a three page letter to a passing reference to interference with the courts by ministers. At that time he provided me with no particulars and no request for any action. My first knowledge of any possible impropriety by ministers vis-à-vis the judiciary was in that letter. My response was sent on February 18. It was a prompt response and it requested further particulars in relation to his very general, passing comment. In his reply on February 20 there was specific reference to three incidents which have given rise to the debate today. He described ministerial conduct as "unwarranted attempts to interfere with the judicial process". I emphasize, however, that even in this letter there was no specific request for action but rather, if one looks at the letter carefully, there is a reference to the end of the exchange of correspondence.

The next thing that happened was this: without being asked by Mr. Justice Mackay to take any action, without any action being suggested to me, I called upon my colleagues for an explanation of the incidents referred to in Mr. Justice Mackay's letter and, as is well known, I wrote to the Chief Justice of the Superior Court on March 4. I thought it proper to write to him because one of the issues which is involved, and one to which members of the opposition paid great attention, is the independence of the judiciary.

I thought it proper to write to the Chief Justice and say to him:

—if there is information indicating that anyone is or has been seeking improperly to interfere with the due administration of justice in a court, by approaches to a judge or otherwise, this is a matter of which the Chief Justice of the Court, as the judge principally responsible for the management of the Court and for protecting its independence and integrity, would be made fully aware.

I am therefore writing to you to invite you to draw to my attention, if you deem such action appropriate, information that may be in your possession respecting any unwarranted attempts to interfere with the proper administration of justice in your Court in respect of matters that should be of concern to me.

There was some question in the House the other day about the use of those words; they were the words used by Mr. Justice Mackay.

I want to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that my request to the Chief Justice was not limited to the three incidents then in the public domain. I wrote to the Chief Justice, with the concurrence of the Prime Minister, because he is the person principally responsible for the administration and independence of that court. As the Chief Justice says in his letter, the statutory provisions of the Quebec Courts of Justice Act, Section 21(a) and the traditional common law practices which have developed around the office of Chief Justice make it clear that he is the man responsible chiefly for the administration, independence, and integrity of the court.

Next, I wish to emphasize that the Prime Minister, when that letter was sent, agreed immediately, subject to the views of the Chief Justice, to publish the reply upon its receipt. I draw attention to this history because the hon. member for Fundy-Royal spoke at such length this afternoon about the role and the importance of the opposition. The opposition obviously has a role to play, and this is important in a free society. But all these actions were taken by me as Attorney General, with the concurrence of the Prime Minister. The request was made to the Chief Justice, the request was made to Judge Mackay for further particulars, without benefit of questions from the opposition and without pressure from the media of this country.

These things were done on the initiative of myself and of the government to try to determine the facts from the one man in Canada who, under the law, is best able to provide these facts, namely, the Chief Justice of Quebec. I emphasize that they were done without the benefit of pressure from the opposition.

● (2030)

Mr. Andre: That is not true.

Mr. Basford: I am sorry hon. member, but it is true. I put that on the record because I want to take very definite exception, as does the Chief Justice, to the comment made by a member of the New Democratic Party that such a referral of this matter to the Chief Justice of Quebec was a "cosy, 'All in the family' arrangement".

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Basford: Members of the New Democratic Party have been getting up in this House and talking about damage to institutions, damage to the courts, yet they have the effrontery to suggest that the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec is somehow part of a "cosy, 'All in the family' arrangement". I take my responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, to protect the independence and stature of the judiciary I think rather carefully. I ask the members of the New Democratic Party to consider their words rather carefully before they start making stupid comments like that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: Upon receipt of Chief Justice Deschênes' letter, I immediately and forthwith referred it, as I have informed the House, to the law officers of the Crown, as was my duty, obligation, and responsibility as Attorney General. I have also informed the House, as reported at page 11749 of Hansard, that it was referred to the senior law officers of the Crown and that the contents of the Chief Justice's letter disclosed to the chief law officers no violation of any law by any minister, and I so advised the Prime Minister of that fact. If there is any doubt on that question, Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to table my letter to the Prime Minister. I would ask leave to table the letter, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Woolliams: What is the date of that letter?

Mr. Basford: March 12. The course of action followed throughout in this matter has, in my view, been both consistent and open.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): You can be even funnier than that.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised the opposition does not seem to want to hear what the facts are.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): We are still waiting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Basford: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, when reference is made to an opposition day it means that members of the government are not even entitled to speak. As I was saying, the course of action followed throughout in this matter has been both consistent and open. My goal was to determine from the Chief Justice of the Superior Court, the person principally responsible for the protection of the independence of the court, what interference, if any, his judges may have been subject to in respect of matters that should be of concern to me. This seemed to me the only proper course of action, one accepted by the Chief Justice and which is consistent, if one reads his letter, with his own view of the different but closely related powers and responsibilities of his office and of mine.

Consequently, in light of the facts set out by the judges themselves, as this House knows they—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to inform the minister that his time has expired. He may continue by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, several of us said no. I would point out to Your Honour that this afternoon the Prime Minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get into the argument, but surely if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has a point of order he should be heard first before recognizing me.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the Prime Minister asked for a few extra minutes or perhaps 10. We gave him an extension of time and it became 20 or 30 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): There is no unanimous consent. The hon. member for Calgary North.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Paproski: Quiet over there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hon. member for Calgary North has the floor.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our party would have been quite willing to give the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) extra time to finish his speech. I was most interested in what he was saying.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) has a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member's comments are most interesting, unfortunately we cannot hear a word on this side of the House because there is too much noise.

[Mr. Basford.]

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am glad we have now settled all these points of order. I should just like to mention that I think all members of parliament would agree that this debate has been on a very high plane. I should particularly like to mention the speech of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather)—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: —who made what I would say was a most enlightened and outstandingly good speech this afternoon and set the tone for this debate. I should like to commence my remarks by making reference to one of the points made by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

The opposition has been under some criticism because we have dared to ask questions, to which answers have been refused. We have been stonewalled. Even when we got answers a big snow job was done. The Globe and Mail broke the story on March 3, and it was at that time that we met, on what I call that famous Wednesday in parliament, and moved motions and asked questions. I should just like to bring the House up to date on what has happened since that time before I make some further remarks.

We asked for an inquiry but the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said there was no need for an inquiry, that nothing was wrong, that there was no influence or intervention. He was the cardinal, he was the pope, he was the queen, and he was the judge of the facts. We have not got those facts even yet. I might direct your attention to the fact that we have yet to receive these facts since the time we asked for an inquiry and the story broke in the Globe and Mail. We have had the letter to which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) referred, written by Mr. Justice Mackay on February 20, and received on February 21. It was not until March 3 that he replied to the letter.

● (2040)

Some other interesting things have happened. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) resigned and then withdrew his resignation because the Prime Minister said he could not do without him. Today we had the resignation of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), now simply the hon. member for Papineau. Without questions, without interrogation, and without a search for that information from the government things of this nature would not have happened.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: The Minister of Justice talks about a cosy arrangement. The cosy arrangement to which I refer is that arrangement within the executive itself that allows it to create the problems, create the facts, make the decisions, and write the judgments. That is the cosy arrangement.

I do not think we can hide today the facts of the last ten days. Parliament has been shocked, as the country has been shocked. We have been shocked by the action of government ministers in reference to this very serious question of an inquiry into matters concerning the executive power of the judiciary. One resignation today does not solve the issue, and this issue will live in this parliament and with this government for a long time to come.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: It was very interesting to hear the Prime Minister say just a few days ago that there was nothing wrong. He said he had talked to this one and to that one and had sized up the facts and, in his judgment on the facts, nothing was wrong. Today he has set himself adrift, like Robinson Crusoe. He has said now that he has found his ministers were wrong. They did not commit any offence. He has made that decision, it is not one that has been made by anybody else under the criminal code.

The Prime Minister has sized up the facts and says now that his ministers have done wrong things, and that is why he has accepted the resignation of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and that is why he asked for and accepted an apology from the Minister of Public Works. One thing we have learned from the facts today is that the Prime Minister has set himself adrift from the rest of his executive because he felt in his heart, will all his knowledge and his training, that they were in the wrong.

I never thought I would see the day in parliament when the Minister of Public Works, and I agree with some who have said he is a man of high calibre, intelligence, and integrity, would tender his resignation because he had been wrong. The Prime Minister has arrogantly refused to accept that resignation in spite of the serious situation and issue now before the Canadian people.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Woolliams: The issue is not whether judges were influenced. The issue is whether there was an indiscreet attempt by certain ministers to call judges while matters were pending before the courts, and in particular when a member of the executive had been charged and found guilty of contempt of court. This is a very serious matter indeed for any lawyer or any Privy Councillor or member of the executive. It is a very serious matter when such an attempt would be made directly or indirectly by a member of the executive, either thoughtfully or without thought, deliberately or unintentionally.

There apparently was a discussion of a particular matter with the judge. What was that discussion? We have had to pry the facts from the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: In the earlier days confessions came much easier than now, because the ministers now know they are in serious trouble. On March 3, 1976, I rose in my place and asked the following question:

> I will turn, now, to another member of the cabinet, and address a question to the Minister of Public Works. In a letter to the Minister of Justice on February 20, Mr. Justice Mackay stated:
>
> "After Mr. Ouellet asked Mr. John Turner to intervene on his behalf with the judge presiding over the contempt of court proceedings and was promptly rebuffed, he approached Mr. Drury with more success, but, as it turned out, without the desired effect."
>
> Would the Minister of Public Works tell the House whether he was approached and what kind of assistance he rendered?

Here is what the minister said:

> I may say for the benefit of those who are prepared to listen that in my opinion the integrity, the independence, of the judiciary is critical to the successful running of a country such as ours and I both respect and admire this principle. If it were not for the fact that I consider the Associate Chief Justice of Quebec, whom I have known for a number of years, to be uninfluencible, in a pejorative sense, I would have refrained from intervening—

What has that to do with it, whether he could influence the judge or not? The point I want to emphasize is that an attempt was made, and that is the important issue, not whether the judge is or was influenced. The question is whether there was an attempt directly or indirectly to influence him.

An hon. Member: Oh, go back to Robinson Crusoe.

Mr. Woolliams: The Minister says that he would have refrained from intervening or from having any conversation with him. He said:

> Indeed, the only intervention that would be contemplated by me would be one to see that he was in full knowledge of the facts—

Let us stop there. Where does a judge get his facts in conducting any kind of an inquiry or case? He gets those facts from the witnesses called before him, from the records of the court or from documents that have been put in as evidence, and not from the executive or any citizen of Canada. If this is not an attempt to influence a judge, there never has been any attempt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Then we have the crowning statement that the minister wanted to see that he was in full knowledge of the facts and that he did his duty. I appreciate the prerogative of the Prime Minister in appointing judges, but I do not think the prerogative extends throughout the executive, allowing them to call judges to inform them of their duties or how to perform them. Again I suggest that this is not a question of whether judges were influenced, and I will have something more to say about that, but rather a question involving an attempt by the executive to intervene and to influence a judge. That is the important point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I agree with the Minister of Justice and others that we have one of the finest judiciaries in the world. The appointment of judges by all governments has always taken place after a great deal of consideration of a man's education, training, and character, which the bar associations of this country demand of members of the bar. When a person is elevated to the Bench he must accept the challenge. Let me put this by quoting a former judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who was dealing with a commission in respect of a former judge who had resigned, Mr. Landreville. He said:

> A study is made of instances in the past where in Great Britain and in the United States the conduct of Judges has been under review by Parliament and by the Courts. The importance of the independence of Judges is emphasized: "It should be the guarantee of security to the weak against the strong and to the individual against the community; it should present a shield against the tyranny of power and arrogance and against the irresponsibility and irrationality of popular action—" "...

the underlying basic assumption is the intellectual and moral integrity of the judicial officer in his pronouncements."

We have heard day in and day out that Chief Justice Deschênes has said there was nothing wrong. I am going to refer to his letter, but he never talked to any of these ministers. He did not talk to the former minister of Consumer and corporate affairs or to the Minister of Public Works, and he did not talk to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). He has talked to his judges, and all he has said is that his judges have exonerated themselves and have done nothing wrong. But he has not had the chance to talk to the minister. I am glad the Minister of Justice has returned.

The Chief Justice has not talked to the ministers. How could he find, in view of the fact that he had no evidence before him, that the ministers had done no wrong? The only person marking that decision is the Prime Minister. He said they had done no wrong. That is why we are continually asking and that is why we have this motion before us, for which I congratulate the NDP, asking for an inquiry. The people of Canada and members of parliament are entitled to the facts, and those facts have not been obtained. They have been given to a judge secretly and quietly, The Prime Minister says he is the judge. He is the cardinal, he is the pope, he is the queen, he is everything. He has made the decision, he is judge and jury.

● (2050)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: On the admission of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) there should have been a public inquiry, the kind of inquiry established by law so that information could be bared and so that we could have it before parliament and before the Canadian people. That is what we are requesting.

I know, Mr. Speaker, they have watched this for ten days and they cannot back out of it. They have even used questions of privilege which are fraudulent. They have used every method to avoid answering questions. Yet the Prime Minister, who must take the responsibility for it, says there is nothing wrong. I think there is something wrong "in the state of Denmark", there is something wrong with the executive and something wrong with this government.

What are the facts? This is what the Minister of Justice said, and these are the only facts we know, the ones we pried out of the government. The former minister of consumer and corporate affairs was charged and found guilty of contempt of court because he ridiculed Justice Mackay's decision on the sugar case. He used such words—here I paraphrase—as that a judge that would make that decision would have to be insane.

An hon. Member: Silly decision.

Mr. Woolliams: That shows just how arrogant the Liberals still are.

The former minister of consumer and corporate affairs sought advice from the former minister of finance, Mr. Turner, who refused to intervene or interfere, who in fact rebuffed the minister. Then he turned to the Minister of Public Works, a lawyer, a Queen's counsel, a distinguished soldier, a minister of the Crown, who placed a call to Mr. Justice Hugessen. He called the judge to give him some facts and to tell him what his duties were.

What did Chief Justice Deschênes say in his report? His examination and his research were in reference to judges. He found their conduct above reproach, but he set out very clearly that he had no mandate in law or in ethics to examine what parliament was doing or what the ministers of the Crown were doing, or what members of parliament were doing. There is the issue, there is the essence of the indictments against the Prime Minister and his government and his failure to tell parliament and the people of Canada what his ministers are up to and why they feel they have the God given right, because the Prime Minister appointed them to the executive, to breach all the rules of the bar association, and indeed breach the ethics and standards of the very essence of democracy, the foundations of which rest upon a complete separation of the powers of the executive and the judiciary.

Let us take a look at what Chief Justice Deschênes said. He reminded the Liberal government of one of its great leaders, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. He said:

It is a strange doctrine to preach that the judges are responsible to parliament. Where is that responsibility? I have always understood that the judges were responsible only to their own conscience, and parliament has no power over them. True, they can be removed, but only on an address of both Houses of parliament. That law has been adopted to make them absolutely independent of parliament, and they are only responsible to parliament in extreme cases of malfeasance.

He also said:

It seems to me that we must discard any suggestion that the Canadian Judicial Council has a role to play in this matter. Its jurisdiction relates to an examination of complaints relating to the conduct of judges and not to complaints that might concern the conduct of third parties in relation to them —namely, ministers who intervene, who call judges and try to tell them what their duties are. That is what Mr. Justice Deschênes told them.

He also said this:

I consider myself however under no obligation in relation to Parliament—save that of good behaviour—nor towards the government, and the invitations to undertake an inquiry which have been addressed to me in the House of Commons appear to me to be out of place.

In other words, he said it would probably be out of place for him to make any comment on what the ministers did or what the members of parliament did in their intervention or in their attempt to influence judges. That letter of the Chief Justice has no bearing on the issue in finding out what went on within the executive and how they attempted to influence judges.

The Chief Justice also said:

I was not appointed to conduct a commission of inquiry and of course it is obviously not one of my functions to set myself up as a semi-official investigator on behalf of the House of Commons.

Then he went on to talk about what happened with reference to the telephone conversation with the Minister of Public Works and he gave an account of what Justice Hugessen wrote to him on the subject as follows:

Mr. Drury telephoned me during the hearing of the contempt proceedings against André Ouellet. The call came to my home, in the evening, after dinner, when I was in the basement helping my youngest son . . .

Then he went on the say what the minister said to him. When the Prime Minister said there had been no offences under the code, perhaps someone should take a look at the code. This is what Mr. Justice Hugessen wrote:

The conversation dealt with two aspects of the Ouellet case:

1. Whether it would be possible for Mr. Ouellet to make a formal apology—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to inform the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does he have the consent of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Anthony Abbott (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that we on this side of the House have heard that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) had chosen to tender his resignation as minister.

As a result of the controversy and the extent of politization brought in this issue, it had become impossible for him to discharge his responsibilities as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and to continue to protect the interests of the Canadian consumers.

During the brief period in which I had the pleasure to sit with him in the House, I was often impressed by his ability, the respect he was showing for his responsibilities and his warm relations with backbenchers.

His departure from the cabinet will be a serious loss for the government. However, we hope that one day in the near future he will be re-appointed as a minister.

[English]

No one can have sat in this Chamber or read the debates concerning this matter without being conscious of the strong feelings held on both sides of the House. No need exists for me to recite the facts. Certainly the motion as proposed by the NDP is extreme in its critical implications, in my judgment unduly so.

For whatever reason, we are now engrossed in what is at worst an unseemly squabble, at best an assurance that direct ministerial communications to judges on cases being considered by them will be a thing of the past.

In respect of the controversy I would wish to deal with the independence of the judiciary, the call for a public inquiry, and the related situation of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury).

The independence of the judiciary of this country as guaranteed by law and tradition is inviolate. This is underlined by the quotation of a speech by Sir Wilfrid Laurier to this House on September 15, 1903, as quoted by Chief Justice Deschênes in his report. The only power parliament itself has over judges is to remove them on grounds of malfeasance, but only on an address of both Houses of Parliament.

● (2100)

Clearly, then, if Parliament itself lacks any power over the judiciary, no member of parliament or single minister could be in such a position. Cries by opposition members that the judiciary is a fragile blossom which might be trampled on by a minister, no matter how powerful, are sheer nonsense. The judiciary is independent and will remain so, not because of the forbearance of the government but because it has guaranteed rights which cannot be thwarted by parliament itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: The question of a public inquiry opens problems for parliament and the judiciary which seem to me to be difficult in the extreme. Since parliament should zealously guard its privileges, any such inquiry involving its own members or members of the judiciary should necessarily be by a committee of parliament. If the misdemeanour lies with a judge, that is a parliamentary responsibility. If the misdemeanour is that of a member of parliament or minister responsible to parliament, that matter also must be heard by parliament.

Clearly, parliament would not wish to delegate this fundamental task to an outside body. We might thus have a committee of parliament conducting an inquisitorial investigation of what ministers might have said to ministers, what ministers might have said to judges, what judges might have said to judges, what judges might have said to lawyers, what lawyers acting for judges might have said to newspaper reporters, and so on, and on, and on. Even if parliament were to delegate the function to an outside appointed tribunal of inquiry, the same features would exist. Surely those wishing to maintain public respect for the independence of the judiciary would not welcome such a form of inquisition.

An hon. Member: They would not phone a judge either.

Mr. Abbott: The report of the Chief Justice of Quebec recited the facts and concluded that no impropriety could be asserted to have been committed by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) or the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). Nonetheless, they both apologized for any possible embarrassment caused by their contacts with the justices in question. Chief Justice Deschênes characterized the phone call of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) as grave, presumably meaning serious, or even very serious. Justice Hugessen had himself thought the call improper and so advised the minister at the time of the call.

There is now no doubt in anyone's mind that the phone conversation should not have taken place. The minister has recognized the impropriety of the act by an apology and by the tendering of his resignation. The question is, then, of the consequences or the penalty. The minister, with his unquestioned sense of public responsibility, saw his duty and carried it out. He was entirely prepared to accept the extreme penalty of climaxing a brilliant and honourable career by an exit in disgrace. Surely even the most uncharitable would look at all the facts and question the severity of the sentence which would be imposed if the minister's tendered resignation were accepted.

First, with regard to the telephone conversation itself, forgetting for a moment the indiscretion in placing the call, Mr. Justice Hugessen reported two items. One was to ask if an apology could bring the proceedings to an end.

The other was to advise of a situation the minister perceived respecting English-speaking, French-speaking relations.

Again, setting aside the question of the act of telephoning the judge, the minister believed he was conversing on a personal level with the best intentions in mind. I have heard no one assert anything to the contrary, and certainly not Mr. Justice Hugessen.

The facts of the indiscretion, coupled with the comments of the Chief Justice, presented the minister with the only honourable course to which he felt he had recourse, that is, to offer a full apology and his resignation.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) quite properly, in my judgment, brought other tests to bear. He acknowledged the lapse of judgment; he did not excuse it. He recognized that in future, with the present example in mind, that a harsher penalty might be applied. He also recognized that the career of one of the most dedicated, honourable public servants produced by this country should not be destroyed by this single lapse of judgment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: In the relatively unchartered waters presented by such a case it is difficult to know what sort of penalty should fall on a minister. It is an unsolved problem of democracy as to what penalty should follow from errors, follies, ignorance or even innocent miscalculations. In sterner times heads were the forfeit.

Despite willingness to acknowledge the splendid record of the Minister of Public Works, his integrity, and the basically innocent motivation behind his impropriety, some hon. members now seek his head, figuratively, as well.

An hon. Member: We want your head.

Mr. Abbott: Well, you won't get it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: Surely the motivation behind an indiscretion or impropriety of this sort must be considered. If it was greed, venality, or even a desire to enhance his personal power, it could be understood and condemned. In this case, knowing the man, knowing what he said, and knowing his high standards of personal integrity, his motive was an honest desire to help a friend and a colleague.

In any event, the error was made. Perhaps one should recall the disarming remark of that great President of the United States, Franklin Roosevelt.

An hon. Member: Richard Nixon?

Mr. Abbott: I am not thinking of your hero; I am thinking of Franklin Roosevelt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: Franklin Roosevelt said, "I don't often make a mistake, but when I do it's a lulu."

In recent days we have heard the comparison made with the incident involving Hugh Dalton, British Chancellor of the Exchequer, who was obliged to resign when a newspaper printed a budget item which was leaked. In that case, though the indiscretion did not result in any action detrimental to the state, there was the long principle of the inviolability of the budget and the discretion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. In the letter Prime Minister Atlee wrote accepting Dalton's resignation he pointed out this specific feature of the circumstance, and the historic character.

In this case before our parliament there was neither an attempt to influence the judge, as confirmed by the judge, not a feasible ability to do so. Nor again was there the long, hallowed tradition of a budget indiscretion. The analogy breaks down on every count.

I do not take issue with the oppostion criticism of the government's embarrassment in this issue. Not only is the government vulnerable, but I think the principle of judicial independence has been reinforced.

I do not support the idea of a public inquiry, for the reasons I have cited.

The core of my plea is a simple one. It is that all of us recognize that too few men of the character of the Minister of Public Works have given their lives to the public service of this country. His career has been a noble one in the highest possible tradition. Whatever else might come of this sorry chapter, I plead with the House to recognize that sometimes, in the words of the poet, "mercy should allay our stern resentment".

In a few days or weeks the House presumably will have turned its attention to other matters. I hope, and indeed pray that the honourable career of the Minister of Public Works will not be a tragic and unnecessary casualty of battle.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2110)

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, in the few moments allotted to me tonight I should like to speak to the House on what I consider to be the inexcusable pattern of delays running through this whole "dial-a-judge" affair.

First of all, I should like to make a few comments respecting the words of wisdom and long lecture given to us tonight by the relatively new Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). With as much kindness as I can muster tonight, and with the feelings that I have on this matter, I should like to say to the Minister of Justice that some of us, on this side of the House in any event, need no lecture from him in respect of the high duties and high principles expected from attorneys general in this country and indeed throughout the whole British legal system.

Some of us have held that high office—in some ways in a more onerous administration of justice responsibility than he has, for a longer time than he has held that job.

An hon. Member: Now you are in the big league.

Mr. Lawrence: I would agree with him that there certainly are special duties in respect of the attorneys general and Minister of Justice of this country and throughout the provinces. I bring up the question of the time table and the delays by the Minister of Justice only because he seems to be making a big thing of it.

Let us go back for a moment, if we may, in respect of what was said.

An hon. Member: Lost your notes?

Mr. Lawrence: Yes, I have lost my notes, solely and simply because I was not prepared to get into this until the Minister of Justice spoke. He made a great thing of saying that he received a letter on February 11 of this year from Mr. Justice Mackay which contained several broad allegations of improper activity on the part of his fellow ministers.

He did not act immediately on those allegations by letter. Instead he waited seven full days until February 18, one full week, until February 18 before he then fired off a letter to Mr. Justice Mackay which in effect said to Mr. Justice Mackay: what do you mean?

Mr. Woolliams: It was pretty obvious what he meant.

Mr. Lawrence: I think one week is far too long for a minister of justice to delay on a matter as important as that. In any event, on February 18 he dated a letter to Mr. Justice Mackay and said "I want details, I want specifics, I want the actual facts; no more of these allegations because I do not know."

Mr. Justice Mackay got that letter on February 19 and on February 20 dated a letter to the Minister of Justice in which he indicated in some detail fairly specific allegations of improper activity on the part of three of the colleagues of the Minister of Justice in the ministry respecting interference, or respecting intervention in any event, with members of the judiciary in the province of Quebec. On February 20 that letter was dispatched by Mr. Justice Mackay. The minister has not indicated when it reached his office but I suspect that was at least on February 21.

The minister comes along in a great blaze of glory here tonight to say that, under no pressure from anyone, on March 4 he sent off an epistle to Chief Justice Deschênes asking him to investigate the whole matter.

May I merely point out to you. Sir, that on the evening of March 2, fully two days before that letter of March 4 to Chief Justice Mackay, this story broke in the press of this country. The Globe and Mail on the evening of March 2 broke the story.

An hon. Member: How did they get it?

Mr. Lawrence: I am not worried how they got it yet, although I think we all should be. In any event, I merely want to say that, to me, the Minister of Justice was derelict in his duty by sitting or having others in his office sit on that letter between February 21 and March 4 before he did anything about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: If he is so all fired blown up with the importance of the position he now holds I merely suggest to him, through you, that he should and could have acted much faster. One of the real conundrums in this matter is that no information gets out, either in this House of Commons or in the media, unless it is dragged out of these people kicking and screaming all the way.

I say that the Minister of Justice was derelict in his duty; if he was not around then his deputy was equally derelict for not acting on that letter long before they did. My suspicions are that the only reason the minister got on it at all was because the whole thing was already before the press of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) on a point of order.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I think that raises a question of privilege because the hon. member is referring to dereliction of duty. I simply want to deny what the hon. member has alleged.

Mr. Lawrence: I think as well that the Minister of Justice, after giving us a lecture on the duties of attorneys general in this country, also did the wrong thing when he had that information. He referred it to a chief justice—a well renowned chief justice of this country, in such an odd way. I do not know if such a reference has ever been made before by a minister of justice in this country relating to a matter of such importance to a member of the judiciary, for that member of the judiciary to act in any manner, shape or form.

I merely want to read to you, sir, two short paragraphs from Chief Justice Deschênes' report which are self-explanatory. To me they are a very sharp rap over the knuckles to the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). On page 4 of the report Chief Justice Deschênes said:

> I consider myself however under no obligation in relation to parliament—save that of good behaviour—nor towards the government, and the invitations to undertake an inquiry which have been addressed to me in the House of Commons appear to me to be out of place.

All I can say to the Minister of Justice in relation to that is "hear, hear" for Chief Justice Deschênes because it was a wrong proposal in the first place not to give the man the investigative machinery or equipment he needed. This was a report that had to be based on an investigation when the Chief Justice really had one hand tied behind his back. He also said:

> I can also only dismiss the proposition that I proceed to interview privately one or other members of the cabinet whose names were mentioned in the House. I was not appointed to conduct a commission of inquiry and of course it is obviously not one of my functions to set myself up as a semi-official investigator on behalf of the House of Commons.

Sir, no complete, thorough, impartial investigation could be made by Chief Justice Deschênes under those half-hearted terms of reference given to him by the Minister of Justice who boasts tonight about his separate and impartial duties.

I say that the Minister of Justice was derelict in his duty by doing what he did: he is still, sitting there tonight, derelict in his duty because he will not call, whether his Prime Minister likes or not—because he as Attorney General of Canada will not call a public judicial inquiry into this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: There is one further matter that the Minister of Justice in his boastfulness tonight did not deal with, and that is the question of the public release of the Deschênes report. I ask you, Sir, to refer to Hansard, to when this matter first came to the attention of the House. The Minister of Justice responded to representations made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) by saying that, if he had his way, he would not release the Deschênes report to this House, or make it public. He said that even before he saw the report.

● (2120)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Page 11613 of Hansard.

Mr. Lawrence: That was strange behaviour on the part of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada. His attitude amounts to a travesty of justice.

I turn now to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister was minister of justice in a previous Liberal government. By training and occupation he ought to be especially aware of the duties and responsibilities of those involved with the judiciary. It is a crying shame that the Prime Minister cannot distinguish between an improper action and an illegal action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: Obviously ministers of the Crown are in a somewhat different position. The onus on them is greater, and the standard of care they ought to exercise in making sure they act with propriety is that much higher. Obviously the Prime Minister considers that such standards are met as long as what ministers do is not illegal.

Mr. Benjamin: You mean, so long as they do not get caught.

Mr. Lawrence: Why, I have known of ministers of finance being bounced out of office simply because they revealed some contents of a budget minutes before the budget speech was made in the House. That was not illegal, but it was improper. Traditionally, under our British parliamentary system of government, such improper actions are enough to force a minister's resignation.

This afternoon we heard the Prime Minister lecture us on what could be done in a contempt of court action. I could not believe my ears when I listened to him. Let me repeat at least one sentence of his speech, and if I misquote I hope the right hon. gentleman will say so. Talking about the intervention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) with associate Chief Justice Hugessen, the Prime Minister said this afternoon, and I quote, "It was important to know in some way what sort of an apology would be expected." He was referring to the apology to be made to Mr. Justice Mackay. Mr. Speaker, bargaining like that, on the part of a party to an action or others, should take place in court, preferably in open court, in the presence of counsel for both parties.

That a minister of the Crown, who himself is a member of the bar should do something expressly forbidden by the code of ethics of the province in which he was called to the bar makes the offence more heinous. He did something which ought not to be done in any circumstances. I do not care what his motives were. The very fact he intervened with a justice seized of the matter is enough.

Again this matter came to our knowledge not because any minister was impelled, on the grounds of political morality, to disclose anything. We know about it because a member of the Quebec bar blew the whistle on the government. A disgruntled lawyer had not received his fees, and that led to disclosure. That is why the judge himself felt impelled to write the letter. Unless there is a public inquiry the public of this country will wonder on how many other occasions such an intervention took place.

Only after these matters were made public did something else happen. Forced by the media, by what took place on the floor of the House of Commons and by public opinion, the Minister of Public Works tendered his resignation. His delay in tendering it should be remembered.

The final act occurred today when the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs tendered his resignation. His excuse for tendering it was that somehow the contempt of court appeal hanging over his head made him unable to perform his duties as a responsible minister of the Crown. Sir, tonight we are in the third week of March, 1976. The former minister's notice of appeal was filed in the last week of January, 1976. If the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs was truly upset by this sword hanging over his head, why did he wait until this late hour before resigning?

I think the Prime Minister was derelict in his duty in not asking for, and receiving, specific information on this matter. He ought to have received it long ago. I think the Minister of Public Works was derelict in not submitting his resignation long ago. The Minister of Justice was also derelict in his delays. I condemn the former principal aide to the Prime Minister for delaying disclosure of the part he played in this matter. There is one reason and one reason only for these delays. The information has to be dragged out of these ministers on the floor of the House of Commons. If it were not for the work of the media we might know nothing of this. Faced with the criticism in the House and in the media, they grudgingly did something which ought to have been done weeks ago. In the case of two ministers it ought to have been done years ago.

Only one course of action will satisfy the members of this House. Hon. members, including those of the Prime Minister's party, know that only a full, complete, public and impartial judicial inquiry into this whole sorry mess of wire pulling and influence pushing will satisfy the people of this country.

● (2130)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since the very beginning of this incident, members of the opposition have had a full opportunity to bring the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government to account in the House of Commons. All the parliamentary devices have been utilized. There have been endless and repetitive question periods. In fact you could use all possible adjectives to describe the question periods with the exception of the adjective "searching".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: They have used obstruction tactics. Last Friday, while the House was proposing to resume a debate on the law of the sea and depletion of the fishing stocks on the Atlantic coast, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) moved to adjourn the debate and the House adjourned.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Does the minister not know that that is not true, that I moved the adjournment during the hour between four and five o'clock after the fisheries debate had ended?

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I are good friends. Indeed at one time we could have been described as close partners, in the period of minority government when we both pursued common goals and objectives. However, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has now, with a customary display of fickleness, selected new partners.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Indeed on Friday afternoon when the House was in an uproar I was surprised to learn that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) had decided to seek the assistance of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), having concluded that there was little opportunity to find that assistance within the ranks of his own followers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: What a chill must have gone through the spines of the delegates who recently attended his national convention when they learned that the Leader of the Opposition had called upon the NDP. In the minds of his followers, the call upon the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby must have been a greater impropriety than a call by any minister to any judge.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I can tell the Leader of the Opposition in the way of friendly advice, don't count on the NDP; they let you down when you need them most.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Today, despite the claim of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) that the House of Commons is beset with a crisis of cynicism, the opposition have exercised their ultimate weapon. They moved a motion of non-confidence and they want to bring the government down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member for Fundy-Royal thinks we would have it otherwise. We would not have it otherwise. We want your questions. We do not mind your obstruction, and we are ready tonight to accept the judgment of the House on the conduct of the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The main complaint of members of the opposition is that the Prime Minister has failed to accept the resignation of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury). The Prime Minister has given his reasons for not accepting the resignation that was offered. I believe that the reasons given by the Prime Minister do credit to his sense of justice and to his depth of understanding of human nature.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The opposition disagreed with that judgment and thereby display their desire for an over-kill solution to this problem. The peoples' representatives will deal with that subject tonight. They will back up the Prime Minister in the House of Commons and later, when this issue goes to the people, they will back up the decision of the Prime Minister of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The Prime Minister told the House and the Canadian people today that in this situation an apology, repentence, and amendment are enough. The opposition wants capital punishment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member for Fundy-Royal, who in other circumstances is an enemy of capital punishment, today lined up with all others who are demanding not only an apology and a resignation from the Minister of Public Works, but for a beheading to end his career abruptly and to banish from public life in Canada one of the most distinguished members of the House of Commons.

• (2140)

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal dwelt upon another subject, the equality of the citizen before the law. He made a most unusual argument in asking the House of Commons whether a poor man would be permitted to enter the living room of a Justice in Westmount or whether a poor man would be allowed to telephone the Associate Chief Justice of Quebec. Surely the hon. member came dangerously close to accusing the judiciary of Canada of bias.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Stanfield: Pathetic!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Time!

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I always heard that when the government is in difficulties it brings up its heavy artillery. The hon.

gentleman who has just resumed his seat is the only speaker who has taken part in this debate who has managed to talk for nearly 15 minutes without touching the subject. Neither he nor the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have been able to understand the difference between a minister acting illegally and a minister violating parliamentary tradition, particularly the two men who have a responsibility for seeing to it that ministers do not improperly abuse the power of their offices.

Hugh Dalton, because he told a newspaperman on his way into the House that the price of tobacco and liquor would go up, sent his resignation the next morning to Prime Minister Atlee who accepted it. He did so not because Hugh Dalton acted illegally but because he had used his position in violation of parliamentary tradition, which the House has the right to expect the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to protect and preserve.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt the debate and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the proceedings before the House, in accordance with section 9(a) of Standing Order 58.

The question is on the motion in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Broadbent) which was negatived on the following division:

● (2150)

(Division No. 118)

YEAS

Messieurs

Alexander
Alkenbrack
Andre (Calgary Centre)
Baker (Grenville-Carleton)
Baldwin
Balfour
Bawden
Beaudoin
Benjamin
Brewin
Brisco
Broadbent
Cadieu
Caouette (Villeneuve)
Clark (Rocky Mountain)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Coates
Crouse
Darling
Dick
Dinsdale
Dionne (Kamouraska)
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fairweather
Forrestall
Fortin
Fraser
Friesen
Gauthier (Roberval)
Gilbert
Gillies
Grafftey
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hogan
Holmes
Horner
Howie
Huntington
Hurlburt
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Jones
Kempling
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
La Salle
Lavoie
Lawrence
Leggatt
MacDonald (Egmont)
MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)
MacKay
MacLean
Malone
Masniuk
Matte
Mazankowski
McCain
McCleave
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
Mitges
Muir
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil
Nielsen
Nystrom
Oberle
Orlikow
O'Sullivan
Paproski
Patterson
Peters
Reynolds
Ritchie
Roche
Rynard
Schellenberger
Scott
Skoreyko
Smith (Churchill)
Stanfield
Stevens
Stewart (Marquette)
Symes
Towers
Wagner
Wenman
Whiteway
Wise
Woolliams—102.

NAYS

Messieurs

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andras (Port Arthur)
Andres (Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Boulanger
Breau
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss) (South Western Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul)
Caron
Chrétien
Clermont
Collenette
Comtois
Condon
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
De Bané
Demers
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas (Bruce-Grey)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Ethier
Faulkner
Fleming
Flynn
Francis
Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Goyer
Gray
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harquail
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Jamieson
Joyal
Kaplan
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Langlois
Laniel
Lapointe
Leblanc (Laurier)
Lee
Lefebvre
Lessard
Loiselle (Chambly)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald (Cardigan)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Mackasey
Maine
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Martin
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
O'Connell
Olivier
Parent
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Railton
Raines
Reid
Richardson
Roberts
Robinson
Rompkey
Rooney
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stanbury
Stollery
Tessier
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Whelan
Yanakis
Young—128.

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion lost.

Motion (Mr. Broadbent) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: It being after ten o'clock this House stands adjourned until two p.m. tomorrow.

At 10.18 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 17, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

GREETINGS AND BEST WISHES TO ALL CITIZENS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Flynn (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I move under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House bring greetings to all members in the name of that great saint of piety and humour and that the blessings of St. Patrick shine over all of this wonderful Canada of ours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have great difficulty in understanding how such blessings could be prevented from shining over this great Canada of ours whether or not we put the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

HEALTH

SUGGESTED MEETING WITH PROVINCES BEFORE PROCEEDING WITH BILL C-68—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion of pressing and urgent importance. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House urges the government not to proceed at this time with Bill C-68 but to delay any further proceedings thereon until after there has been a meeting of the Minister of National Health and Welfare with the health ministers of the provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED DEBATE ON MEASURES TO ENSURE ADEQUATE INCOME FOR INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Since the federal government should establish a long term policy to protect and stabilize the production of industrial milk, since this important industry should at least enjoy the same increase in income as other fields of activity to compensate for the cost of living instead of having their income reduced by some 20 per cent this year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That, before the implementation of the government dairy policies for 1976-77, this House discuss immediately the necessity of respecting established quotas and having adequate measures to guarantee decent incomes which would at least take production costs into account and put a stop to the ever growing discouragement felt by those producers.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DATE ON WHICH PRIME MINISTER KNEW OF MR. OUELLET'S REQUEST OF MR. DRURY TO CALL JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister acknowledged that he had the right to know the conversations between ministers that may involve any impropriety. On Monday, as indicated at page 11788 of Hansard the Prime Minister said:

I have not only the word of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs but also the public statement of the Minister of Public Works that he—

Being the Minister of Public Works.

—did this—

Being the intervention.

—was not pushed to do it by anyone and that he—

The Minister of Public Works.

—took full responsibility.

● (1410)

My question is this. In light of the admission yesterday by the former minister, that he asked the Minister of Public Works to intervene, did the Prime Minister know about that request for intervention before Monday of this week? If not, when did he learn of that request for intervention?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Ouellet told me about that precise request he made to the minister on Monday of this week.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? The Prime Minister indicated that he conversed with the ministers involved. He now suggests that his conversations with the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs did not reveal that information, that is, that the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs had made the request of the Minister of Public Works. Just so that I can be clear, is the Prime Minister telling the House that for almost two weeks after Mr. Justice Mackay made his allegation, an allegation now clearly vindicated, that he, the Prime Minister, did not ask the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs if he had requested that intervention by the Minister of Public Works?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is right. I got the answer from the minister on Monday, the day before yesterday, and I explained to the House yesterday why that was my line of conduct. As soon as Justice Mackay's letters were published or made public in the press, I wanted to, and did, ascertain from both ministers whether they had done anything which might be interpreted as illegally interfering with the court or impeding the course of justice. I got that assurance from them. Because I wanted to make sure that that was not a one-sided assurance, we followed the course which the Minister of Justice took, of asking the point of view of the courts on this matter: did they feel there had been any illegal interference. Until I had that judgment or assessment from Chief Justice Deschênes on Thursday night, I did not attempt to know exactly, in all details, what went on between the two ministers.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister, as the only person responsible for the propriety of conduct of ministers, telling the House that the only question he put to the two ministers involved—and any others whom we do not know about but who might have been involved—was whether they thought they had been involved in an illegality? Did he ask whether they thought they had been involved in an illegality? Is that the only question he put to them?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker. I just answered that. I asked if there had been an illegality, or an improper attempt to interfere with the course of justice, or to influence a decision, and so on. That was my concern. I wanted to make sure that there had been no attempt to interfere with the course of justice in any way which would be improper, illegal or considered unacceptable.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Or which could be considered as wrongdoing.

Mr. Trudeau: I got their answers and I wanted to hear from the chief justice what the point of view of the courts was on this.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY JUDGE MACKAY—REASON PRIME MINISTER DID NOT QUESTION MINISTERS TO ASCERTAIN FACTS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this I find incredible. Will the Prime Minister, as the person responsible for the propriety of conduct of ministers, tell the House how he felt he had the right to sit back and wait for the courts to report on the matter, without asking detailed questions as to whether the allegations raised by Mr. Justice Mackay were in fact the case? What right did he have to sit back and avoid facing his ministers with the question as to what, precisely, they had done?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I felt that I had not only the right; I had the duty not to delve into this question, as it might have been—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —completely irrelevant to the allegations of Justice Mackay. The allegations of Justice Mackay were to the effect that there had been serious interference with the course of justice. I wanted to assure myself, from the ministers, that this was not the case. I did assume myself from the ministers that that was not the case. I even had the assurance it was not illegal and not improper. Mr. Drury, obviously, would not have done something he believed to be improper. I had his version of it and Mr. Ouellet's version. According to both their versions, there had not only been no illegality; there had been no impropriety. Obviously, Justice Deschênes and Justice Hugessen do not share that point of view. However, I prefer to get it from them rather than to just hear from Justice Mackay. It seems to be perfectly in order.

INQUIRY WHETHER TYPE OF APPROACH TO JUDICIARY BY MR. DRURY WILL BE PROHIBITED

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Public Works stated:

—I think the hon. gentleman would agree that a case before the courts in which the court itself appeared to be of the parties and a member of the executive being the other, carried out a full-scale battle based on a possible misunderstanding at the outset, would be an unnecessary confrontation, and any conflict based on this misunderstanding appears to me to be inappropriate and useless. It is the job of a public official to avoid this kind of thing if that can be done, and that is what I was seeking to do.

Will the Prime Minister assure us that he recognizes that that statement itself constitutes evidence of an attempt to influence the outcome of a court proceeding and, because of the new so-called code of ethics, will be proscribed in the future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as far as the code of ethics is concerned, I enunciated quite clearly on Friday rules which would indicate that in the future I do not expect that course to be followed. I have done that because it has been judged improper, because there has been an apology and so on. However, I must state, and I believe this is also Justice Hugessen's view, that the démarche of the Minister of Public Works was not viewed as something dishonourable. It was explained by Justice Hugessen on the contrary as something honourable, an effort by the executive and the judicial arm—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. members can just refer to what Justice Hugessen said in his report to Chief Justice Deschênes. He said he was convinced that the Minister of Public Works' initative was based on a desire to avoid a confrontation. To me, there is nothing dishonourable in that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REASON PRIME MINISTER DID NOT QUESTION MINISTERS ABOUT INTERVENTION WITH JUDGES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In none of the letters released to the press two weeks ago today was there any reference to illegal behaviour by any minister. Will the Prime Minister explain why he did not put the direct non-legal question to the ministers about whom allegations had been made, to the Minister of Public Works on the one hand "Did you or did you not intervene with the judge on behalf of the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs" and to that minister, "Did you or did you not ask the Minister of Public Works to intervene on your behalf".

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I saw in those letters, as did members opposite, that in fact the Minister of Public Works had spoken to Justice Hugessen. This was alleged by Justice Mackay. Naturally, I asked the Minister of Public Works was this so, what was he trying to do and was he trying to do something improper, as Justice Mackay alleged he was interfering in the course of justice. I think that is the expression used by Justice Mackay. I wanted to assure myself that in the view of the Minister of Public Works, he was not trying to obtain a different or better decision, but trying to make sure that any conflict between an individual and the courts, a confrontation as was just described in the previous question, would be avoided, if possible.

At that stage, I addressed myself to the Minister of Public Works, since he was mentioned in Justice Mackay's letter. I also addressed myself to the Minister of National Health and Welfare because he too was mentioned in the letter, even though his interventions in 1970 were not made as a minister, but as an official.

An hon. Member: It took some time.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, it took some time. I think that is very relevant. As the hon. member looks at the dossier, he might ask himself why Justice Mackay took that length of time to be indignant about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1420)

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. member looks at the dossier he might ask himself why Justice Mackay took that length of time to become indignant about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I addressed myself to the third minister who was brought into question by Mr. Justice Mackay, the then minister of consumer and corporate affairs. I must confess I do not remember asking questions immediately of the minister of consumer and corporate affairs. I am sorry the President of the Treasury Board was the third one. Mr. Justice Mackay does not mention the hon. member for Papineau except in passing, as he mentioned my name in a way in which hon. members have been, I guess, gracious enough or wise enough not even to refer to. I remember that the hon. member for Papineau had indeed talked to me and presumably asked advice of many other colleagues and friends at the time of his trial. But his name was not brought into play by Mr. Justice Mackay in any improper way. I do not remember whether in those days I asked anything further of the hon. member for Papineau.

Mr. Broadbent: I must say, and I make this comment most seriously, that I find the Prime Minister's answer extraordinary. If, as I understand it, the Prime Minister had posed a direct question two weeks ago to the three ministers most directly involved and got honest and direct answers, even the information which has since been published, does the right hon. gentleman not realize that no reference for a report need have been made to the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec? Such a reference would not have been necessary had he obtained that information directly and conveyed it honestly to the House.

Mr. Trudeau: I reported to the House at the time that I had asked the question directly and I had the opinion of the ministers that they had not done anything illegal, that they had not done anything which, in their minds, appeared to be even improper. Hon. members heard the President of the Treasury Board explain the circumstances under which he made a phone call. He did not tell me he had done something improper. He felt at the time he was doing his duty to his electorate. The courts have a different opinion and that is why I issued the rules. The same applies to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and to the Minister of Public Works. It would be unthinkable that they would do something deliberately which they knew would be improper and which would get them into trouble with the judge.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Members opposite do not have to take my word for it. They just have to take what Justice Hugessen himself sees as the reason for the intervention by the Minister of Public Works; he says he thinks it was done with the best of intentions. I believe the judge uses the same expression in reference to the Minister of National Health and Welfare; he says he did it for reasons of state and not for personal advantage. So when I got this kind of answer from the ministers I took it at face value—and this is the value which the judges themselves are putting on it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: With specific reference to the hon. member for Papineau, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not he put the following direct question to that minister: Did you urge the Minister of Public Works to intervene with the judge on your behalf? If the right hon. gentleman did not ask that question, I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman this: did he not leave the House for two weeks with the impression that that question had been posed, and, consequently, does he not leave his office open to the very serious charge that there has been two weeks of attempted cover-up concerning this matter?

Mr. Trudeau: I have no doubt in my mind that that is the charge the hon. member is attempting to establish. But he has my answers during those two weeks in which I made it quite clear that I asked the ministers whether they had acted illegally or improperly. Having ascertained from them that they had not—

Mr. Clark: In their judgment.

Mr. Trudeau: In their judgment, I said.

Mr. Clark: Not in your judgment.

Mr. Trudeau: Not in my judgment, Mr. Speaker. But it is because our judgment might conceivably be put in doubt by the other side that I found it fit and proper to ask the courts, through the Minister of Justice, what was their version of the facts. Until that was obtained I was satisfied with the response of my ministers, and as I indicated to the House yesterday I did not feel that I had, to use the words that have been used, the right and duty to get into all aspects of this question. So far as conversations between ministers having anything to do with illegality or even, in their view, impropriety, I do not feel I have a right to know every detail.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY TO DETERMINE IF JUDGES INTERFERED WITH GOVERNMENT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Since the official opposition as well as the NDP are requesting an inquiry into the behaviour of two cabinet ministers in order to clear this whole matter, and we share their opinion, does the Prime Minister believe that such an inquiry would help unclog the business of the House and does he not also think that it would be advisable in conducting this inquiry to have certain judges appear before the same committee to determine precisely whether there has been any interference from them into the affairs of ministers or government?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada is referring to one of the difficulties I pointed out yesterday in the House. He is indeed asking the question, as I did myself in the House, whether an inquiry might be made and must be made by Parliament, that is the legislative branch of the government, on the conduct of the judges. Do we have the right to summon them here to answer on their conduct? The hon. member seems to think so. Anyway, I heard someone say yes. I do not think this is so sure, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think that it is sure either that judges would feel compelled to answer the call of Parliament to appear before us and testify, unless it is under the impeachment procedure. What seems rather strange to me in all this, since now the facts are known and those arguments explained, is that hon. members in the opposition keep complaining about interference by the executive with the judiciary, while they are quite in a hurry to urge interference by the legislative with the judiciary. This does not seem very consistent.

[English]

SUGGESTED ATTEMPT TO LEARN CONVERSATION WITH MR. TURNER CONCERNING INTERVENTION WITH JUDGE—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Judges have certainly appeared before public inquiries before, Mr. Speaker, but on a different subject completely may I address my question to the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Not so.

An hon. Member: Give an example.

Mr. Lawrence: I can give an example if hon. members want: a former justice, Mr. Justice Landreville for one. In any event Mr. Turner, the former minister of justice told a television reporter on Monday that he learned a lot because he "keeps his mouth shut". Now that the Prime Minister concedes that the conversations related to at least an act of impropriety, has the Prime Minister attempted to pry his version of these events out of Mr. Turner?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the question must have been asked in jest. Mr. Turner was no longer a member of the cabinet when the contempt of court proceedings were initiated. When I say that conversations between private individuals as far as I am concerned are privileged, and that I have no right to pry into them, surely that applies also to the former Minister of Justice and former finance minister.

● (1430)

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, because there is an act of admitted impropriety here, and because there is no allegation that Mr. Turner acted improperly but was a party to conversations leading up to that impropriety, surely his credibility as a witness to the question of intent is valuable and would be valuable in the public interest. Will the Prime Minister now allow an independent investigation which could gather such evidence from such witnesses?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REQUEST FOR CONTENT OF CONVERSATION BETWEEN MR. OUELLET AND MR. DRURY CONCERNING INTERVENTION WITH JUDGE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, we are getting information in little bits and pieces and having to pry them out. I should like to put this question to the Prime Minister which might shorten this whole problem. Yesterday the Prime Minister told the House that "parliament also has that right" which he possesses to examine conversations between ministers "when there is any wrongdoing". He went on to state that on the part of the Minister of Public Works there was in fact "an element of wrongdoing". This being the case, is the Prime Minister now prepared to inform the House of the exact nature of the conversations between the Minister of Public Works and the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs? If we get these facts then surely we will know where we stand.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs stated what he had asked the Minister of Public Works. Therefore, the facts are now before the House. They were not before the House until then because, and I repeat, we were waiting for Mr. Justice Deschênes' view of those facts. It was our intention to get the view and the appreciation of the courts on what had happened. Obviously, the actors involved on this side had not done anything which they then considered to be improper. If the courts judged differently then we were bound to take into consideration their assessment of it, and it is because of that that I enunciated new rules on Friday. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the facts the opposition has been trying to get have been made known in so far as they were relevant to this case. If the hon. member is interested in gossip or irrelevant things which might have been said between those two ministers or any others he will not get them from me and I hope he will not get them from the others. Similarly with a court of inquiry, it would only ask questions which are relevant to some form of misconduct.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REASON PRIME MINISTER DID NOT SECURE FULL DETAILS OF CONVERSATIONS BETWEEN MINISTERS CONCERNING INTERVENTION WITH JUDGE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): This is most interesting, Mr. Speaker, but I am not interested in gossip.

An hon. Member: Oh, no!

Mr. Woolliams: I am interested in knowing what the Prime Minister had to say and what the ministers had to say to him in reference to the matters which are relevant to this issue. Perhaps I could put this question to the Prime Minister then. The Prime Minister went on to state that he did not find "the exact details" of conversations between ministers in this regard "satisfactory", and that is to be found at page 11846 of Hansard. Can the Prime Minister tell this House why he did not seek a full clarification of detail from his ministers when he first learned of the affair since he, and not the Chief Justice, bears the responsibility for the conduct of his ministers? The Chief Justice has said that.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have the impression that the hon. member is asking the same question in a different form. I have given the facts as they were relevant at the time, and as it became more important for me to know further facts about the private conversations, and as that became apparent to me after Justice Deschênes' report on what the Court viewed as improper conduct, I obtained those facts as far as I could and made them known to the House. They were made known to the House yesterday.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister tell us the exact date he found out those facts, because it seems to me he waited an awful long time?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member reviews the blues he will see that I gave the exact date.

POSSIBILITY PRIME MINISTER MISLED BY MINISTERS CONCERNING CONVERSATIONS ABOUT INTERVENTION WITH JUDGE

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to follow up on the questions of the hon. member for Calgary North. Can the Prime Minister tell this House how it is possible for him to find these versions presented by the ministers "satisfactory" on March 10, as indicated at page 11660 of Hansard, and "not satisfactory" on March 16, that is yesterday, as indicated at page 11846? Is the Prime Minister implying that his ministers misled him with regard to the details or intent of their conversations, or is it his opinion that they were merely suffering from one of those lapses of memory which the Prime Minister persists in in smearing the reputation of a judge of the Superior Court of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, they were not lapses of memory. They gave me answers to what I asked of them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: In between the two dates mentioned by the hon. member there was the publishing, the sending to the Minister of Justice and the tabling in the House of Chief Justice Deschênes' report.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, did the Prime Minister then studiously avoid seeking the exact details of the conversations between the Minister of Public Works and the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs following the letter of Mr. Justice Mackay which states that "After Mr. Ouellet asked Mr. John Turner to intervene on his behalf with the judge presiding over the contempt of court proceedings and was promptly rebuffed, he approached Mr. Drury with more success—"? Did he get the facts dealing with these particular questions of the minister?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, but things that were not relevant, like what the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said to Mr. Turner, were none of my business and I did not attempt to know them. What he might have asked of other ministers I did not attempt to find out either. I happen to know what he asked of me and there was nothing illegal or improper about it. In so far as what he might have asked of ministers who were brought into the issue by Justice Mackay's letter, I did ask him those questions and I have given the answers as I obtained them.

* * *

[Translation]

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSSIBILITY EMPLOYEES DESIGNATED BILINGUAL WILL RECEIVE BONUS

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the President of the Treasury Board.

Since the Anti-Inflation Board recognized last Thursday that the additional compensation paid to civil servants appointed to positions that are classified or designated as bilingual was acceptable, and since the board admitted that the government's agreement to pay that bonus went back well before October 15, 1975, can the President of the Treasury Board inform the House whether he intends to table in the House the correspondence received by the Anti-Inflation Board, when the civil servants appointed to positions designated as bilingual will receive that additional compensation and whether that compensation will be retroactive to January 1, 1976?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked me three questions. First of all, as regards the correspondence, I do not have it in my possession. I do not know if it would be appropriate to table it, because it also involves the union which represents those employees. We intend to continue our negotiations with the union to find an adequate solution and only after those negotiations are over will I be in a position to say when the program can be implemented and whether it will be retroactive.

* * *

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONTRADICTION BETWEEN REPORT OF JUDGE MACKAY AND STATEMENT OF MR. LALONDE—MEANS OF CLARIFYING

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister indicated prior to the receipt of the report of the Chief Justice of Quebec that he would not rule out a public inquiry into the matter, yet after receipt he has elected not to go to a public inquiry. There seems to be one matter where there is significant difference in terms of the three instances of alleged attempted interference, and that is the matter of the Sir George Williams University case. Will the Prime Minister advise the House how the public will be able to resolve in its own mind the clear contradiction between the report of Mr. Justice Mackay that there was an attempt to interfere with the date that the decision would be taken in the case, and the indication from the minister, and he was not a minister at that time, that in fact it was merely an inquiry about the date of the case? How can the public be satisfied without some kind of further statement on that clear contradiction?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if they seek satisfaction they might read Justice Deschênes' report which, on the issue itself, says that he considers it closed, that it is something that was not obviously serious enough six years ago to have given rise to any kind of complaint to the chief justice. The second thing is, I suppose, that people will realize members opposite and others are particularly insistent about interferences by ministers with judges, and then they will suddenly remember, as the member does, that the man was not a minister then, but an official, and the whole issue would really—

● (1440)

An hon. Member: Of your office.

Mr. Trudeau: Of my office, who was asking on behalf of the Undersecretary of State for External Affairs, a pretty high official in the government. Mr. Speaker, given those facts—

An hon. Member: What was in your mind at that time?

Mr. Trudeau: The loudmouth over there might like to stand up and ask a question.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister had responsibility at that time, as I understand it, would he advise the House whether he believes the conduct of his then official was proper if the version given by Mr. Justice Mackay is correct.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think I have a very simple answer to that hypothetical question. It was given by Justice Deschêne himself who does not tell us if he finds his version correct or not. But assuming that he does, he says that the case was unusual—insolite. He goes no further and he closes the case.

REASON PRIME MINISTER CAN IGNORE REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, having been given some cause in recent days to recall the generally acknowledged principle enunciated with such effectiveness by Lord Acton to the effect that while power corrupts absolute power corrupts absolutely, I should like to ask the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I should like to ask the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Louder.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): —whether he considers that because of the absolute power he exercises over his party he can ignore in an equally absolute fashion the wishes of Parliament and the country for a public inquiry into the matter of how his ministers have been conducting themselves vis-à-vis the judiciary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Simcoe North.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF GUIDELINES FOR PROFESSIONAL FEES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. I want to thank him for sending the brief over to me. In view of the confusion in respect of the incentives and disincentives to professional practitioners and others that limit their increase to $2400, I should like to ask the minister if he can clear up the anomaly. Specifically, if a doctor should double his income is he then limited to $2400 or to $4800.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the response to this would have to be found in section 28 of the compensation regulations under the Anti-Inflation Act and in particular subsection (e). Perhaps I could refer the hon. gentleman to this. In the case of a practitioner being able to establish that in the current year he either worked longer hours or by a change in professional practice upgraded the kind of service he was rendering he would, under those circumstances, be able to increase his income beyond the $2400 limit. Obviously if he were doing the same amount the same kind of work as he had in previous years, he would be restrained within the $2400 limit.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask whether it would be possible to have this regulation printed in simple language that the ordinary citizen could understand.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to do so and perhaps even in language that a medical doctor could understand.

* * *

[Translation]

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSSIBILITY EMPLOYEES DESIGNATED BILINGUAL WILL RECEIVE BONUS AND IN WHAT FORM

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put to the President of the Treasury Board a question that follows from the questions of the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont which I find most relevant.

Could he tell the House whether he is prepared to recommend a bilingualism bonus for bilingual civil servants?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have never spoken of such a thing as a bonus for bilingualism. We merely said we would consider each bilingual job and, when the work of the employee concerned who has to work in both official languages, becomes more complicated because it involves using both languages, we would then add points to his job classification. That is what we intend to do after negotiations with the unions are completed.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

In view of the minister's reply about additional points, could he tell the House whether he means amounts of money or so many more percentage points in salary?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, those points will be assessed like any other point. When a civil servant is required to type, he is given so many points; if required to write, he is given so many more. If he has to use both languages, he will be given still more. If the total number of points warrants an increase in salary, so much the better for him; if not, too bad.

* * *

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

FAILURE OF JUDGE HUGESSEN TO REPORT MR. DRURY'S CALL NOT EXONERATION—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I see I have his attention now. The Prime Minister has claimed that the conduct of the Minister of Public Works "was not complained of by the judge at the time". However, I should like to point out that Mr. Justice Hugessen stated that rightly or wrongly he did not take any action with regard to the call which he described as "improper". Is the Prime Minister now prepared to concede that the failure of Mr. Justice Hugessen to report the action taken by the Minister of Public Works cannot and should not be construed as an exoneration of that action.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, if that action is the failure to report I do not want to sit in judgment over Mr. Justice Hugessen's failure to report, except that it did reveal a state of mind on the part of the judge that he did not consider this serious enough to be viewed as interference with the course of justice.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Prime Minister that the Associate Chief Justice indicated that the conduct was improper and subsequently the Chief Justice went further and said that matter was grave. I ask the Prime Minister how he can justify his conduct in not wanting a full inquiry when in fact the implication is by one judge that the conduct was improper and another judge thought it was extremely serious by way of being grave. How can he justify that there is no implication that there should be a full inquiry in respect of this matter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the question flips over halfway through. At the outset I was asked how I could justify it. The answer is that I do not justify it. There was an apology; there was an offer of resignation; there was a condemnation by me in a statement that I did not accept this as good judgment on the part of the minister. If I do not justify it, I blame it, Mr. Speaker. That is the answer to the first part of the question. The second part of the question has been dealt with ad nauseum. If the hon. member wants to know the answer I will give it again, but he might prefer to read Hansard of yesterday afternoon.

REFUSAL OF PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH JUDICIARY BY MINISTERS—OTHER MEANS OF OBTAINING FACTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said in the House last Friday that all the facts were now known. In view of the fact that we do not have the facts as to whether or not the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs asked the Minister of Public Works to intervene, in view of the fact that we do not have the facts as to whether or not any other ministers were involved or, to use the words of the Minister of Public Works, whether public-spirited citizens were also involved, and since we do not have the facts with reference to the discrepancy between the statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare regarding why he interviewed Mr. Justice MacKay and Mr. Justice MacKay's statement to the chief justice when he said, "I feel I was being asked to see that the jury's decision was delayed", and since these are facts which we do not have, I ask the Prime Minister will he launch a judicial inquiry? If not, will he tell the House how the people of Canada and members of parliament can secure the facts which we do not have and which are necessary if the ministers themselves are to be above public suspicion.

● (1450)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect, the question is substantially the same as that put by the hon. member for New Westminster and other hon. members.

ROLE OF PUBLIC-SPIRITED CITIZENS AND CONTENT OF CONVERSATION BETWEEN MR. DRURY AND MR. OUELLET CONCERNING INTERVENTION WITH JUDGE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, if you want me to put the question directly, I will put the question directly. I will put the question to the Minister of Public Works. I will ask the minister if the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs requested him to intervene with Mr. Justice Hugessen regarding the appeal case. I will also ask him, who are the public-spirited citizens to whom he referred, and what role did they play in this matter?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in relation to the second part of the question—who were the public-spirited citizens, and what did they do—that has relevance to an inquiry as to the conduct of the judges, not of the ministry and not of parliament. I think the Prime Minister has made it quite clear that the government does not believe it is appropriate for us to institute an inquiry into the conduct of judges or the judiciary. The Minister of Justice has invited the Chief Justice to express his concerns to him, which he has done, and the role of public-spirited citizens in this event, as far as the Chief Justice was concerned, does not seem to have been a concern. I do not think it is appropriate for parliament to move in and say, "It should have been your concern and we are taking it up for you". I do not want to be a party to that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Minister has not answered the question. I asked him a direct question. Your Honour ruled that my question was a repetition. I asked a different question. I asked the minister if he had been requested by the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs to intervene. He gave a long lecture as to what the Prime Minister meant by something he said the other day, but he did not answer my direct question. Did he or did he not receive a request from his former colleague to intervene with Mr. Justice Hugessen? That is a simple question.

Mr. Drury: I am sorry, but apparently the hon. member cannot have been in the House yesterday. The appropriate person to whom to direct that question is the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is pure sophistry. That is a Trudeauism.

Mr. Forrestall: What are you hiding?

Mr. Drury: Some hon. members regard that answer as a cover up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Drury: And for the applauders I may say that my concept of that is an invitation to me to be a tattletale.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Drury: It is an invitation to me to gossip, and it is an invitation which I do not really feel inclined to accept.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

PROTECTION GIVEN CANADIAN ENTERTAINERS BY REGULATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Roberts (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the recent demonstrations before the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation of Canadian actors and actresses protesting the importation of an American actress to play the part of Nellie McClung on CBC television, I wonder if the minister would tell the House whether he will undertake to examine with his department the present immigration regulations to ensure that the position of Canadian entertainers, actors, actresses and musicians is suffficiently protected by the present immigration regulations.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly pay close attention to the representations of the hon. member. We have taken the view that, with regard to the areas of entertainment and this artistic performance, that we have to be extremely careful about imposing our judgment on the competence or the ability of Canadians or foreigners to perform those roles and also the question of making available to Canadians such outstanding talent as might be available from abroad or from within Canada. However, I will consider the representations of the hon. member.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTION PRIME MINISTER CALL ELECTION ON ISSUE OF ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH JUDICIARY

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, in order to save the Prime Minister further grief, I should like to put a question to him which could bring this whole mess to an abrupt end.

Some hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. Jelinek: In view of the fact that in recent months we have seen two senior cabinet ministers resign and, according to the press, at least two others attempted to do likewise, and because of the fact that the Prime Minister said yesterday, and I quote, "I will be judged on my actions by not only the members opposite but by the country," I wonder if the Prime Minister, after having been judged yesterday by all three opposition parties, would now be in a position at this critical time of serious moral and economic crisis, while attempting to hold the remnants of his government together, to go to the people of Canada in order to give them an opportunity, as the Prime Minister himself said, to judge for themselves?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can take the hon. member into my confidence and tell him that I am going to see the Governor General tonight—as I do every Wednesday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED PRESSURE ON DR. CONNOLLY TO WITHDRAW CHARGES AGAINST WHITEHORSE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Since there appears to be substantial evidence involving officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Department of National Health and Welfare regarding threatening a civil servant of the Minister of National Health and Welfare with his job unless he withdrew charges he had laid, is the minister going to cause an investigation into those circumstances, which were raised in this place on March 4 and in committee on March 10, with a view to laying charges under section 127 of the Criminal Code against the officials of both departments involved?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, at least as far as I am advised, my officials have no information about such a threat. Of course, if the hon. member has, I would welcome that information. He may want to ask my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, with regard to the officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Nielsen: The information was placed on the record on March 4 by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, which, according to my information, is accurate. I would be very happy to be the first person interviewed by the RCMP and to supply them with the information I have. However, I am asking the minister whether he will consult with his colleague and have that investigation commenced because there certainly appears to be sufficient evidence for charges to be laid under section 127 of the Criminal Code.

Mr. Basford: That is not my information, but I will examine this matter and see whether there is any material which should be referred to the Solicitor General for his consideration.

ALLEGATION COMMISSIONER SMITH WAS PARTY TO PRESSURE ON DR. CONNOLLY TO WITHDRAW CHARGES AGAINST WHITEHORSE

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, now that we have moved from dial a judge to dial a doc, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he has had an opportunity to refer to the minutes of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development of March 10 in which officials of that department alluded to the fact that there is a distinct possibility that Commissioner Smith was in fact a party to the pressures applied to Dr. Connolly.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not. I, of course, naturally will.

• (1500)

PERSON WHO REQUESTED MR. LALONDE TO INTERVIEW JUDGE MACKAY DURING TRIAL OF STUDENTS FROM TRINIDAD

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister inform the House on whose instructions did his then chief executive assistant, now the Minister of National Health and Welfare, approach Mr. Justice Mackay during the trial on the Trinidad students? My question, Mr. Speaker, is specifically was it on the Prime Minister's instructions and if not, who gave the instructions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not mind repeating an answer which is now some weeks old. The principal secretary was asked by the Department of External Affairs, namely the Under Secretary of State for External Affairs, then I believe Mr. Ritchie, who phoned my office to find out if we could be of some assistance to a friendly government in this matter. As the minister indicated, I was then travelling in the Canadian Arctic on an official trip on the way to the Yellowknife games in 1971—1970 and the principal secretary took it upon himself, after having been requested in this way, to seek out an answer that was requested of us through the Department of External Affairs from a friendly government.

An hon. Member: Where was Mitchell?

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY ON THE INFLUENCES OF JUDICIARY IN THE POLITICAL FIELD

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Considering that the House is becoming more and more paralyzed by the interference of the executive in the judiciary and that hon. members from all sides of this House seem to act as offended virgins, would the Prime Minister agree to order a complete inquiry on the mutual influences of the judicial and political powers; this would enable us to know some of the 300,000 good reasons which can prompt a judge to leave his position to get a seat in this honourable House.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

AGRICULTURE

Fourteenth report of Standing Committee on Agriculture—Mr. Daudlin.

* * *

FISHERIES

PETITION BY CONSTITUENTS OF COMOX-ALBERNI

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table the twenty-fifth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) and finds it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

[Translation]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill S-31, to amend the Quarantine Act, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROY (TIMMINS)—ALLEGED INTERFERENCE BY MINISTERS WITH JUDICIARY—ARTICLE IN "GLOBE AND MAIL"

Mr. Jean-R. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege which is prompted by the events of the last few days and an article in the Globe and Mail of today, March 17, written by William Johnson in which he states:

> Significantly, all the Quebec members of parliament rallied around Mr. Ouellet at a special caucus meeting of the Liberal members on Monday night when he was assailed for his role in the judges affair by Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West), Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough), Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville), Jean-R. Roy (Timmins) and Iona Campagnolo (Skeena).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I deny categorically ever assailing at any time the former minister, and state Mr. Johnson's report in my regard to be an absolute lie. Indeed, the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury), who was also mentioned, was not even present at the meeting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, this irresponsible reporting by the Globe and Mail seems to me consistent with the bankrupt journalism of this newspaper—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roy (Timmins): —and so my question of privilege is this: any reporter who is so irresponsible should be denied access to the press gallery—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roy (Timmins): —and any such newspaper supporting such a reporter should also be denied the privileges of the press gallery.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) on the same question of privilege.

Mr. Francis: On the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the reference in the article concerning myself is false.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) rising on the same question of privilege?

Mr. Abbott: On the same question of privilege, recognizing the error of the correspondents for the Globe and Mail—

An hon. Member: As usual.

Mr. Abbott: —and tempering justice with mercy, I would ask that they be permitted to frequent the parliamentary press gallery provided they do not commit the sins that they have in the recent past.

Mr. Clark: Three more.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rising on the same question of privilege? The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on the same question of privilege.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would be only fair, in the course of things, if we kept these proceedings open until tomorrow so that those named today who are not present could also come to confession.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With regard to the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy) and others who have contributed and have raised what seems to have the stature of a question of privilege, I am sure, having reference to the clear scope of the explicit, classical definition of privilege of members of parliament that has been repeated many times in the past, the House will understand if I do not find there is a prima facie question of privilege.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO ADJOURN

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the continuing refusal of the government to appoint an independent inquiry into the sorry mess that is still before us, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House do now adjourn.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is on the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), that the House do now adjourn. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Motion to Adjourn

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)) which was negatived on the following division:

● (1510)

(Division No. 119)

YEAS

Messrs.

Alexander
Alkenbrack
Andre
(Calgary Centre)
Baker
(Grenville-Carleton)
Baldwin
Balfour
Bawden
Benjamin
Brisco
Broadbent
Cadieu
Clark
(Rocky Mountain)
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Coates
Crouse
Darling
Dick Dinsdale
Douglas
(Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fairweather
Firth
Forrestall
Fortin
Fraser
Friesen
Gilbert
Gillies
Grafftey
Halliday
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Holmes
Horner
Howie
Huntington
Hurlburt
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Kempling
Knowles
(Winnipeg North Centre)
Knowles
(Norfolk-Haldimand)
Lambert
(Edmonton West)
La Salle
Lawrence
Leggatt
MacDonald
(Egmont)
MacDonald (Miss)
(Kingston and the Islands)
MacLean
Malone
Marshall
Masniuk
Mazankowski
McCleave
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
Mitges
Muir
Munro
(Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil
Nielsen
Nowlan
Nystrom
Oberle
Orlikow
O'Sullivan
Paproski
Patterson
Peters
Reynolds
Ritchie
Roche
Rynard
Saltsman
Schellenberger
Scott
Skoreyko
Smith
(Churchill)
Stevens
Stewart
(Marquette)
Symes
Towers
Whiteway
Wise
Woolliams—92.

NAYS

Messrs.

Abbott
Allard
Anderson
Andras
(Port Arthur)
Andres
(Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Beaudoin
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Boulanger
Breau
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss)
(South Western Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul)
Caouette
(Témiscamingue)
Caron
Chrétien
Clermont
Collenette
Comtois
Condon
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
Demers
Dionne
(Kamouraska)
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas
(Bruce-Grey)
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Ethier
Fleming
Flynn
Francis
Gauthier
(Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Goyer
Guay
(St. Boniface)
Guay
(Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harquail
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Jamieson
Jones
Joyal
Kaplan
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Langlois
Laniel

Messrs.

Lapointe
Laprise
Leblanc (Laurier)
Lee
Lessard
Loiselle (Chambly)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald (Cardigan)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Mackasey
Maine
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Martin
Matte
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
O'Connell
Olivier
Parent
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Railton
Raines
Reid
Richardson
Roberts
Robinson
Rondeau
Rooney
Roy (Timmins)
Roy (Laval)
Sharp
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stollery
Tessier
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Whelan
Yanakis
Young—127.

● (1540)

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,832, 3,935, 3,987, 4,064, 4,114 and 4,152.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

BANK OF CANADA—NEW MONEY MUSEUM

Question No. 3,832—Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton):

1. How much was spent to send Major Carroll and his staff and designers from Information Canada/Expositions to visit more than 75 museums across North America and Europe in the course of researching the design for the Bank of Canada's new money museum?

2. What has been the total cost of the three years of research and planning that has gone into the design of the new money museum?

3. How much has been allotted for the purchase of display material including coins and paper money for the museum?

4. What is the total expected cost of the new money museum, including research, planning and construction phases of the project?

5. What private contracts have and will be let with regard to the design and eventual construction of the new money museum?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): I am informed by the Bank of Canada as follows: 1. $10,900.

2. Total budget for research and designcosts is $201,000.

3. Over the last 15 years approximately $1,300,000 has been spent by the Bank of Canada on acquisitions of notes and coin for the National Currency Collection.

4. The National Currency Museum will be housed in the existing building of the Bank of Canada. The budget for the construction and equipping of the museum as such is $588,000.

5. Contract for construction work let to Ellis-Don Limited. The Expositions Directorate, formerly of Information Canada, is expected to be responsible for the fabrication of display facilities but no contracts have yet been let.

[Mr. Speaker.]

FISHERIES GUARDIANS—ATLANTIC REGION

Question No. 3,935—Mr. Marshall:

1. How many fisheries guardians were employed in the Province of Newfoundland in (a) 1975 (b) 1974 (c) 1973 (d) 1972 (e) 1971 (f) 1970?

2. What was their term of employment?

3. Are they eligible for unemployment insurance benefits after termination of their employment and, if so, has any consideration been given to setting up familiarization courses into anti-pollution measures or anti-poaching measures, rather than laying them off?

4. Has any consideration been given to providing instruction to fisheries guardians in the use of firearms and to allow them to carry firearms while on duty?

5. Is compensation provided for meals when fisheries guardians are away from their home base on duty and, if so (a) in what amount (b) for how long has such meal allowance been in existence?

6. What is the meal allowance for (a) fisheries wardens (b) all fisheries officials when away from their home base?

7. Has there been an increase in poaching activity in the Atlantic Region and, if so, what measures have been taken by the Department of the Environment to prevent poaching?

8. How much money under the 1976-77 estimates has been allocated to increase the number of fisheries wardens and guardians?

9. Has any consideration been given, on the basis of the cost of living increase, to increasing the meal allowance for fisheries guardians and, if not, for what reason?

10. Have any studies been carried out to assess the number of fisheries wardens and/or guardians required to provide adequate surveillance measures in the Province of Newfoundland and (a) if so, what were the findings (b) if not, for what reason?

11. By province, how many poachers have been apprehended in the Atlantic Region in (a) 1970 (b) 1971 (c) 1972 (d) 1973 (e) 1974 (f) 1975?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): 1. The number of fisheries guardians employed in Newfoundland for the years 1975 to 1970 inclusive are as follows: (a) 1975: 169; (b) 1974: 185; (c) 1973: 185; (d) 1972: 186; (e) 1971: 151; (f) 1970: 105.

2. The term of employment normally varies between a minimum of three months to a maximum of five months depending on the area and the requirements of the particular position.

3. Guardians are eligible for Unemployment Insurance Benefits if they have met the required number of contributory weeks. Familiarization courses have not been considered for fisheries guardians on termination of their employment as funds are not available for this purpose and in addition the turnover in these employees is such that it would be impractical.

4. Consideration has not been given to providing instruction to fisheries guardians in the use of firearms as it is not deemed to be necessary nor would it be practical in view of the length of the employment period and the annual turnover in staff.

5. (a) Meal allowances are provided for fisheries guardians away from their home base on duty in accordance with the rates laid down by the Treasury Board Travel Regulations. (b) This allowance has been applied since its inception.

6. Meal allowance for all fisheries staff when away from their home base on duty are at the rates provided under the Treasury Board Travel Regulations.

7. An assessment of overall poaching activity can at best only provide an estimate of the level of this activity. In Newfoundland for the years 1970-1974 there was very little change in the pattern or level of illegal fishing but during 1975 there was a marked increase. For the most part this was due to low water conditions and the fact that most of the rivers in that province were closed during the salmon angling season. Throughout the Atlantic area poaching usually develops into a major problem in particular locations and this requires the deployment of additional staff during these critical periods. Such temporary transfers of staff are the principal measures used to control particular problems and are found to be quite effective.

8. No additional funds have been allocated in the 1976-77 estimates to increase the number of fisheries wardens and guardians and it is most unlikely that there will be any change in this regard in view of the budgetary constraints that are being applied generally.

9. Treasury Board reviews meal allowance rates on a regular basis and adjusts them accordingly to compensate for changes in the cost of living.

10. The requirements in terms of staff to provide an adequate enforcement and surveillance capability throughout Newfoundland are constantly under review. During 1975 a total of 65 fishery wardens and 169 fishery guardians were employed. Although conditions experienced in 1975 were probably extreme, a modest increase in staff for both classes of employee may be necessary and will be considered in planning for future staff requirements.

11. Information on the numbers of poachers apprehended in Newfoundland for the period 1970 to 1975 inclusive is as follows: (a) 1970, 238; (b) 1971, 202; (c) 1972, 210; (d) 1973, 201; (e) 1974, 239; (f) 1975, 420. The same information by province is only available from the Maritimes Region for the years 1974 and 1975 and is as follows:

	Nova Scotia	New Brunswick	Prince Edward Island
(e) 1974	149	295	36
(f) 1975	174	263	54

Total apprehensions for the Maritimes Region for the period 1970 to 1975, excluding Newfoundland, is as follows: (a) 1970, 526; (b) 1971, 470; (c) 1972, 485; (d) 1973, 492; (e) 1974, 480; (f) 1975, 491.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 3,987—Mr. Firth:

1. What is the range of services offered by the Post Office Department to each community in the Northwest Territories?

2. Are certain services available at some post offices and not at others and, if so, what is the criteria used for this decision?

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General):

Name of Community	Type of Post Office	General Delivery	Lock Box Service	Wicket Service
Aklavik	Accounting	x	x	x
Arctic Bay	Non-Accounting	x		x
Arctic Red River	Accounting	x		x
Baker Lake	Accounting	x		x
Broughton Island	Non-Accounting	x		x
Cambridge Bay	Accounting	x	x	x
Cap. Dorset	Non-Accounting	x		x
Chesterfield Inlet	Accounting	x		x
Clyde	Non-Accounting	x		x
Coppermine	Accounting	x		x
Coral Harbour	Accounting	x		x
Eskimo Point	Accounting	x		x
Eureka	Non-Accounting	x		x
Fort Franklin	Accounting	x		x
Fort Good Hope	Accounting	x		x
Fort Liard	Non-Accounting	x		x
Fort McPherson	Accounting	x	x	x
Fort Norman	Accounting	x		x
Fort Providence	Accounting	x		x
Fort Resolution	Accounting	x		x
Fort Simpson	Accounting	x	x	x
Fort Smith	Accounting	x	x	x
Frobisher Bay	Accounting	x	x	x
Gjoa Haven	Accounting	x		x
Grise Fiord	Non-Accounting	x		x
Hall Beach	Non-Accounting	x		x
Hay River	Accounting	x	x	x
Holman	Accounting	x		x
Igloolik	Non-Accounting	x		x
Inuvik	Accounting	x	x	x
Isachsen	Non-Accounting	x		x
Lake Harbour	Non-Accounting	x		x
Mould Bay	Non-Accounting	x		x
MP0 310 Belleville	Accounting	x		x
Norman Wells	Accounting	x	x	x
Pangnirtung	Non-Accounting	x		x
Pelly Bay	Accounting	x		x
Pine Point	Accounting	x	x	x
Port Burwell	Non-Accounting	x		x
Port Radium	Accounting	x		x
Rae	Accounting	x		x
Rankin Inlet	Accounting	x		x
Repulse Bay	Accounting	x		x
Resolute	Non-Accounting	x		x
Sachs Harbour	Accounting	x		x
Snowdrift	Accounting	x		x
Spence Bay	Accounting	x		x
Tuktoyaktuk	Accounting	x	x	x
Tungsten	Accounting	x		x
Whale Cove	Accounting	x		x
Wrigley	Non-Accounting	x		x
Yellowknife	Accounting	x	x	x
Pond Inlet	Non-Accounting	x		x

2. All post offices other than sub post offices provide basically the same range of services. There are some differences, however, in the extent of services, e.g. not all post offices provide lock-box rentals and the criteria in this case would be demand, available space, and equipment. Non-accounting post offices cannot accept C.O.D. mailings, but can deliver C.O.D.'s and collect the charges. Also, postmasters at non-accounting post offices do not sell money orders, but can arrange for their purchase through an accounting post office.

DREE—GRANTS IN CONSTITUENCY OF ROBERVAL

Question No. 4,064—Mr. Gauthier (Roberval):

1. Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion ever granted money for public works in the Constituency of Roberval and, if so, in what amount?

2. For each such grant what was the (a) nature of the project (b) amount granted (c) municipality concerned?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has committed $2,544,453 under the ARDA III program for public works in the Constituency of Roberval.

2. (a) Nature of project	(b) Total commitments/ DREE's share	(c) Municipality concerned
Zoological Garden development (Phase III)	$ 624,000 312,000 —DREE's share	St-Félicien
Provincial park development	2,582,000 1,291,000 —DREE's share	Val Jalbert
Industrial park	660,000 330,000 —DREE's share	Dolbeau
Municipal camping	450,000 225,000 —DREE's share	Mistassini
Camping facilities development	772,306 386,153 —DREE's share	Roberval

CONSTRUCTION OF HEAVY WATER PLANT NEAR GENTILLY, QUEBEC

Question No. 4,114—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. On December 15, 1975, how much money had been spent constructing the Gentilly Heavy Water Plant?

2. Is construction still going on and, if not (a) for what reason (b) on what date will it be completed (c) what will be the total cost?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows: 1. $84 million.

2. It should be noted that the answers being provided refer to the La Prade Heavy Water Plant being built by AECL near Gentilly, Quebec. Construction of the plant is continuing at a reduced rate as a result of the government's reduced spending restrictions on the project. The effects of the resulting delay to the completion of the plant are still being evaluated, and total cost data are not yet available. The project has been tentatively rescheduled to be completed by 1982.

PROVISION OF FUNDS—MASKAWACHEES CULTURAL COLLEGE, HOBBEMA, ALBERTA

Question No. 4,152—Mr. Schellenberger:

Will the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development consider the advisability of providing funds for 1976 and subsequent years to the Maskawachees Cultural College in Hobbema, Alberta to afford native people an opportunity to continue their education?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): A submission has been made to Treasury Board to extend funding to Cultural Centres such as Maskawachees for the period April 1, 1976 to March 31, 1977. A revised mandate for the Cultural Centres program will be presented to Treasury Board by September 1976 concerning funding beyond March 31, 1977.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

[English]

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I was elected to come here to represent 84,000 people in my riding of Vancouver-Kingsway, and I am unable to do so. I cannot do my job on behalf of the people who asked me to come here to serve them because of the political games being played here. A policeman who died in Calgary might not have died had we been able to proceed with bail reform.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: I am not being allowed to do my job because of gerrymandering and because of contempt of the House. Violence on the streets, murderers free on bail, hostage-taking becoming commonplace events, and we cannot work on legislation to get these situations corrected.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: Many motorists cannot even afford to buy licences in British Columbia. Young people cannot afford licences to get to their jobs. We could be working to find solutions to these matters, but the hon. members are not allowing me to serve my people. The 264 members of the House are not able to serve 22 million people because of the games he is playing. That member twice delayed the business of this House with motions to adjourn. A contempt of this House, contempt for the people of Canada and waste of $720,000 a day. That is wrong. It is contempt of this House. It is the second time that the NDP have done it, and gerrymandering is dangerous to Canada and an affront to the Canadian people who expect us to serve them—not play these silly games.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you kindly call notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 70, 72, 73 and 74.

[Text]

COPIES OF CORRESPONDENCE PERTAINING TO FRANCE-CANADA BOUNDARY AROUND THE ISLANDS OF ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Motion No. 70—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all minutes of meetings, letters and telegrams pertaining to the negotiations which have taken place between the government and the United States on the continental shelf boundary disputes with regard to the France-Canada Boundary around the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the documents requested deal with negotiations or discussions between Canada and a foreign power—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the House would pay sufficient attention to permit the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) to hear the reply to a motion in his name namely, that an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all minutes of meetings, letters and telegrams pertaining to the negotiations which have taken place between the government and the United States on the continental shelf boundary disputes with regard to the France-Canada boundary around the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Thank you Mr. Speaker, it is just like the first grade where I used to teach.

The documents requested in this motion deal with negotiations or discussions between Canada and a foreign power concerning the continental shelf boundary between their territories. The publication of those documents would be harmful to the position taken by Canada during those negotiations and discussions. Consequently, it is with deep regret that I ask my hon. colleague to withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. Marshall: Transfer for debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

[Text]

COPIES OF CORRESPONDENCE PERTAINING TO USA-CANADA BOUNDARY OF STRAITS OF JUAN DE FUCA

Motion No. 72—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all minutes of meetings, letters and telegrams pertaining to the negotiations which have taken place between the government and the United States on the continental shelf boundary disputes with regard to the USA-Canada Boundary of the Straits of Juan de Fuca.

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the request is absolutely identical, except that it applies to another foreign power and to Canada, and I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion for the same reason.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

[Text]

COPIES OF CORRESPONDENCE PERTAINING TO ALASKA-BRITISH COLUMBIA BOUNDARY IN THE DIXON ENTRANCE

Motion No. 73—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all minutes of meetings, letters and telegrams pertaining to the negotiations which have taken place between the government and the United States on the continental shelf boundary disputes with regard to the Alaska-British Columbia Boundary in the Dixon entrance.

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as far as the tabling of documents for motions No. 73 and No. 74 is concerned, the same conditions and the same answer apply, if my hon. colleague agrees.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

[Text]

COPIES OF CORRESPONDENCE PERTAINING TO ALASKA-CANADA BOUNDARY IN THE BEAUFORT SEA

Motion No. 74—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all minutes of meetings, letters and telegrams pertaining to the negotiations which have taken place between the government and the United States on the continental shelf boundary disputes with regard to the Alaska-Canada Boundary in the Beaufort Sea.

[Translation]

[Editor's Note: See answer on motion No. 73.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I ask the parliamentary secretary whether there is any good reason why my notice of motion for production of papers No. 96 could not be responded to immediately? I realize it has just hit the order paper, but all it asks for is a copy of the resignation last week of the Minister of Public Works and the reply thereto by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I will look into the matter and report to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions for the production of documents be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed, from Monday, March 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Medical Care Act

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) may I inform the House that according to our records, within the terms of the order of the House made previously pursuant to Standing Order 75C, some 2 hours and 31 minutes remain to complete the five hours ordered by the House. Therefore, the remaining 2 hours and 10 minutes this afternoon will not be sufficient time to permit the vote to take place today. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): I rise on point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe I was speaking on this bill. I commenced my remarks at about 10 minutes to 10, and I was speaking when the House adjourned. I believe I should be able to continue for the full length of my time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair was not, of course, aware that the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) had the floor at the adjourment of the debate. The hon. member for Fort William.

Mr. McRae: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to be able to resume the normal business of the House and discuss this very important bill. In the first few minutes that I had in addressing myself to this matter, I made a point that I think has constantly to be made since members of the opposition tend to have great difficulty dealing with what the bill proposes to do. I mentioned that the bill deals only with medical care. It does not deal with hospital care. It deals with a number of other things associated with medical care as distinct from hospital care.

● (1550)

The bill proposes for the first year it would begin, on April 1, 1976, that the increase in the federal allotment to the provinces for this particular item would not exceed 13 per cent, in the second year would not exceed 11 per cent, and in the third year would be negotiated but probably would be, I understand, in the area of 10 percent. This is what the bill does, and it does this under the circumstances of the anti-inflation program that now exists. We believe, with a good deal of reason, that the circumstances are favourable and we can expect an 8.5 per cent increase in the coming year in terms of cost of living as opposed to the 13 per cent increase in terms of medical costs allowed. In the second year we hope it will be down to 6 per cent as opposed to the 11 per cent, and so on. We think there is a good deal of generosity and extra money involved in this program and that we are justified in making these limitations.

I dealt very briefly with the contribution of the NDP in the area of medical care. I congratulated them for their many years of concern and effort toward achieving medical care in this country. They were not the only ones who were concerned, but I have spoken to them about this and I did congratulate them. I must also indicate that had the progressives in this country been in the Liberal party rather than off in the corner, the 40 years of effort might have enjoyed success considerably earlier. I would also grant that under any given circumstances an idea does not happen until its time has arrived.

Let me continue my thoughts on a few points which I do not recall having been mentioned in this debate in terms of the position of the NDP and the Conservatives. What I have in mind is the basic difference existing in the House of Commons between this government and the opposition in respect of our relationship with the provinces. It is my personal belief that we, as the government, possibly because we have been in power longer in this century—

[Mr. Speaker.]

An hon. Member: Too long.

Mr. McRae: —have a far stronger federal, national position. I think this was the position of the Tory party when it was in power in the last century. The NDP and the Tory parties have become very closely related to the governments of the various provinces and I would suspect they are very strongly representing ultimate provincial interests when they oppose this bill. There is an interesting conflict. I do not mean there is a confrontation between the provinces and the federal government or that we want it to be this way. Our position, as the government in power, has to be one of responsibility and one that primarily concerns Canadians. It must be a position which recognizes that Canada is not just the sum of its provinces.

Let me deal with the Conservative viewpoint on this particular bill. My first area of comment relates to the question: Do we need medicare? I find it very difficult to understand why eight or ten years after the fact this question has arisen. I find it difficult to accept the suggestion that medicare was shoved down our throats. I am convinced, as I was convinced 20 years ago, that this kind of medicare program is absolutely essential. I was convinced of this more than anything else perhaps, by an event that happened in our family in the late 1950s.

A very close member of the family, a remarkable woman, spent her life raising a large family. She worked very hard for years and years. One thing, she wanted in her life above all else was that when she died there would be no bills to pay. She wanted to be self-sustaining. She bought into a private medical scheme and paid the premiums for nine years. It was a scheme offered by one of the largest companies, not a fly-by-night operation. She participated in this scheme which she felt would look after her, medically, so long as she kept up the premiums. What happened? I ask this question because I think the answer is important in terms of the need for medicare. She became ill with cancer and went into the hospital. After her having one operation, this company—one of the largest in the world in this field—sent a notice that it would no longer accept premiums from her to cover any illness in respect of cancer. She was never told about this. We did not have the heart to tell her that, after paying the premiums for all those years, she was not covered. We looked after the whole thing from then on, and she lived for only six months.

This was a very dramatic event in our family, following which the family and all our friends realized how badly we needed a medical care scheme. There were some good schemes in existence. PSI was one, but it did not cover everyone, at least in the province of Ontario. It covered a number of groups, but a large proportion of the people in the province did not belong to those groups. These are some of the reasons that lead me to believe we need medicare, and that is why this bill should be supported.

I could go on at some length in this regard, but I should now like to deal with the financial side of the matter. I find it very difficult to understand why the Conservative party is acting in what I consider to be a very irresponsible way in respect of this particular bill. This leads me to wonder if the beliefs of that party are sound or deep. We have now reached the fourteenth or fifteenth day of debate on this bill and we are still at second reading stage. The sole purpose of the bill is to limit medical expenses.

In the last few days members of the Conservative party have had their minds on other things, but during this session those members have been criticizing the government for its huge deficits and expenditures. They have continued to insist that we must cut back. I find their position on this bill very difficult to understand. Let us consider some government expenditures in order to determine why this is one area in which we must cut back or at least limit increases in spending. Let me take the fiscal years 1974-75 and 1975-76. In 1974-75, out of a total of $30 billion this government spent $8.6 billion on the whole operation of government, including the armed forces, all the departments and the public service. The balance of $22 billion was in the form of transfer payments to persons, provinces and corporations for subsidies, and so on.

● (1600)

This money went to persons in the form of old age pensions and unemployment insurance. It went to paying off the debt. These were transfers to people, organizations, provinces and other levels of government. Over two-thirds of the total amount was spent in the form of transfer payments; a very large portion was in transfer payments to the provinces. This amounted to $6.5 billion in 1974-75.

Let us look at 1975-76. In that year we went from $8.6 billion to $9.5 billion in respect of the total cost of the operation of the federal government, including the public service, defence and the whole bit. However, in the same period, while there was an increase of about $.9 billion, the cost of the transfer payments increased in excess of $4 billion: it went up to $26 billion. As a matter of fact, between those two periods the total expenditures of the federal government increased by 16.8 per cent. But of that 16.8 per cent increase between 1974-75 and 1975-76, only 2.8 percentage points were for the operation of the government, and 14 percentage points were in the transfer area. We can see from that, with a little calculation, that the transfer area was increasing between those two years at three times the rate of the increase in the operation of the government.

Mr. Grafftey: Do you know why?

Mr. McRae: I think I have some ideas. If the hon. member would like to tell us, he can. The point is that it is extremely significant that the transfer costs are increasing at three times the increase in the operational costs of the government. So I think we must look at these transfer costs because they represent a large proportion of the cost.

Although I have some experience in this regard I have difficulty understanding the opposition to this bill in terms of the cost-sharing programs. The Conservative party, but not the New Democratic Party to the same extent, constantly talk about cutting back. Anyone who has any experience—and I, as principal of a high school for many years, have experience in this regard—with cost-sharing formulas realizes that if you are the person spending the money, you trigger the amount spent.

I have been involved in cost-sharing arrangements where we put up 10 per cent and the other government put up 90 per cent. For putting up 10 per cent we got back a lot of money. That is the kind of thing that happens in cost-sharing. In order to make cost-sharing work with any degree of equity, I think it is necessary to have a ceiling. This is what is being done by this bill. A ceiling of 13 percentage points is being placed on the amount the federal government will give to the provinces for this particular program. This does not mean that the provinces cannot spend more. I think this is a necessary factor in cost-sharing. I think this can be a very dangerous arrangement when there is no recourse on the part of the one government, in this case the federal government, in terms of the amount it would have to put up. So if the Tory party is genuinely concerned about cutting back government expenditures, I think it must look at some of these cost-sharing arrangements.

I suggest to the Conservative party that we have made some attempt to cut back. We have not done all we could—there is no question about that—but we have done a significant amount in the area dealing with the operations: we have cut well over $1 billion from that. I am not particularly the type of person who argues that government expenditures essentially are a bad thing. As a matter of fact, even a government deficit would create jobs and promote growth in the country. However, if one wants to cut, I believe one must look at the area of the transfer of funds because this is where the money is. No one denies there is fat in the other areas, but this is the main area.

I have heard the suggestion in the House that one area we could cut is family allowances. We have done something in this regard in the form of indexing family allowances. The cutting of family allowances, in the sense of applying a means test, is a dangerous business. Family allowances, even for those who are fairly affluent in our society, represent an important thing for the family. I know there are very many people in our society, housewives, and so on, who consider this cheque to be very important, not just because they need the money but because it is not in the name of their husband or anyone else and it is theirs to spend as they see fit. That is a very important element. When one refers to the cutting of family allowances, that should be taken into account. If family allowances were to be cut or placed strictly on the basis of a means test, there might be a saving of half a million dollars, but this would affect many families because the family allowance cheque is an essential ingredient for any family, and not simply because the money is needed. So it seems to me we must look at many other areas.

I have not heard suggestions about how the cuts should be made; I have only heard suggestions that there should be cuts. We have not had any suggestions along this line from the opposition, because if the opposition were to say that there should be cuts here or there, then they would be taking the responsibility for those cuts and the public would hold them responsible. So when one is in the opposition, one does not say where the cuts should be, so the opposition does not have to take the responsibility. I challenge members of the opposition to say where they would cut significantly. I am not talking about a bit of fat here and there. I know that has to be done, but where can these cuts be made significantly? I suggest this is one of the areas we must move into.

● (1610)

We have made sure that the increases in medical care grants from the federal government over the years since the scheme has been in effect have been far greater than some inflationary increases and gross national product increases because it was important to improve medical care. So we let this happen. We have allowed no limits, because we felt it was worth while. Now the government says it must do some cutting and that there must be a limit. Things have been left up to this point. Health costs have been mounting at a tremendous rate. We know we have to impose a ceiling, and it has been set at 13 per cent for the next fiscal year. This seems like a reasonable situation. As I said earlier, 13 per cent is reasonable if during the fiscal year there is only an 8 per cent or an 8.5 per cent increase in the cost of living.

The increase is still greater than the total of the inflation in the dollar and the total of the increase in the gross national product. I think at this particular point there is some real justification for this kind of limitation. It is not a cut. We are not going to spend less; we are going to spend more than we did last year. However, we have a limit to a cost-sharing program whereby no one can spend so much money and trigger a very large increase on the part of the federal government. The cost-sharing areas have given us much trouble over the years, and I think this is a useful way of approaching this particular problem.

I should like to conclude by repeating something I said earlier. At first I was talking about the NDP, but now I shall refer to the Tory party. I believe the Tory party believes this country is the sum of its provinces and, rightly so, they have very close relations with the provinces. They have not been in power nationally for any significant period in this century, so therefore their ties are with their provincial governments, and rightly so, because there are four Tory provincial governments in this country and I am sure hon. members opposite have good relations with those governments.

Therefore, I believe some of the opposition to this bill stems partly from the support these federal members want to extend to their provinces, and rightly so. But I plead with hon. members to recognize that this country is something much more than the sum of the ten provinces. We in this House must deal with the good of the whole country, and this kind of limitation of cost-sharing arrangements is the one way in which we can significantly reduce federal government spending.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the previous speaker did so intentionally, but certainly indirectly one of the reasons—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

[Mr. McRae.]

Mr. Grafftey: I know how very boring it is when you are not given many responsibilities, so you just sit there all day, cackling.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Would the hon. member please address the Chair?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I will address the Chair and call on you to exercise your authority and call for silence from those cackling members. I am here to discuss seriously a gut issue in this country, and it will not be very helpful if the drones sitting opposite just sit there and yell all day. I have never heard the hon. member make a speech in this House in 20 years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Would the hon. member direct his remarks to Bill C-68?

Mr. Grafftey: I detected from the remarks of the hon. member who spoke previously, indirectly and directly, one of the reasons this country is in a great deal of trouble today. He articulated the kind of principles of federalism which are so often articulated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the kind of view about Canada today which sort of wishes that we were not really a federal union at all, that we could just sweep the provinces under the carpet and pretend they do not exist or that we can confront them.

I believe one of the reasons this country is so divided today is that Ottawa has attempted, by confronting the provinces in the last eight years, to sweep regional and provincial differences under the carpet in an attempt to impose a monolithic uniformity on Canadian federalism. That is just not the kind of country we have. What the hon. member has just articulated is the kind of wishful thinking articulated by doctrinaire Liberals in the last eight years which has divided this country as it has never been divided. You cannot articulate an "either/or" debate. Any Canadian prime minister, be he Progressive Conservative or Liberal, has to defend and define a strong federal cause. But at the same time, whether the hon. member likes it or not, there are provinces in this country which must be co-operated with and worked with—not confronted.

I am very interested in the question of escalating costs vis-à-vis joint programs. I know why there are escalating costs vis-à-vis joint programs. It is because since World War II successive Liberal governments, without truly consulting with the provinces, unilaterally have imposed programs. Some of them have been very good programs in principle—medicare is one of them—but the government imposes programs without truly—I underline the word "truly"—consulting the provinces, working with them and listening to them. This is a government which does not listen. The minister is not even in the House today to participate in this important debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare I should like to inform the House that the minister is attending a federal-provincial relations cabinet committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: The minister is hoping to participate in the debate this afternoon and he has asked me to inform him if an opportunity to do so arises.

Mr. Grafftey: The reason for escalating costs in joint programs, underlined by the hon. member who preceded me, stems from the fact that very often they have been unilaterally imposed on the provinces without their being consulted about their various priorities and their needs, and very rarely ab initio from the very beginning have cost parameters been put on these cost-sharing programs. Then the hon. member has the nerve to come to this House and try to tell us costs are escalating out of control. Why are these joint programs which result in transfer payments escalating out of control? It is because the government has never listened to the provinces. Especially under this Prime Minister the government has pretended that there is no federal union at all in this country. This government treats the provinces as if they did not exist. Then the hon. member comes to the House wondering why transfer payments escalate out of control.

● (1620)

They ask me about cuts. I will tell them about cuts, Mr. Speaker. I sometimes wonder if ministers of the Crown have read the Auditor General's report. I suggest, before they start cutting a program that touches upon humane, decent and civilized—

An hon. Member: How about the foot soldier?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has the floor.

Mr. Grafftey: We are talking about the centrifugal social program, a pioneer social program, in this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I am going to appeal to you to call for discipline in this House. There is continual shouting, and no other forum in the western world would permit that sort of thing. I would ask Your Honour to exercise a little discipline.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member has the floor. I suggest we all listen; we might learn a few things.

Mr. Grafftey: Is this what hon. members opposite are paid for, to come and sit in the House and howl like jackasses all the time?

An hon. Member: How can you say anything: you were three months away from this House.

An hon. Member: Did you get your salary?

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, they talk about cuts. Before this government starts cutting a centrifugal social program in direct relation to the humane, decent, civilized delivery of health care services, I ask them to read the Auditor General's report. It has a plethora of suggestions about where the government could cut real waste, duplication and more waste out of their expenditures. They ask where we would call for specific cuts. If they would just get a little bit of co-ordination between the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the placement offices, it would help. To change one substantive bit of law regarding the UIC could cut $2 million out of the budget. Also, what about the proper type of management for existing programs that the Auditor General has been recommending for years? Then there is about $1 billion in consultant fees to friendly Liberals. If they would just read the Auditor General's report and give the Auditor General managment control as well as—

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Grafftey: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member would not want to create a false impression in the House. If he had been following the debate under the chairmanship of one of his colleages at the public accounts committee, he would know that we have brought about some reforms in accordance with the wishes of the Auditor General. I know the hon. member would not want to create the impression that he is not aware of what is going on in the House of Commons and at a committee chaired by one of the members of his own party.

An hon. Member: He is never here.

An hon. Member: He has never read the report.

Mr. Grafftey: What about the future and the cost sharing programs with the provinces? This has nothing to do with putting cost parameters on the program. I hope hon. members opposite will not have to stand up ten years from now and talk about escalating control costs vis-à-vis transfer payments. After eight years of Trudeau socialism, after eight years of Trudeau Liberalism where total government expenditures have gone up from $10 billion to $36 billion, the record is going to show that not only has this government not put on the floor of this House of Commons one innovative, new social program, but that they are cutting back on existing ones passed by prior administrations. After over-tripling the budget, they are cutting back on prior social programs and have not innovated any new ones. What kind of record is that, Mr. Speaker? It has always been thus under Liberal administrations. The Auditor General has told them 50 ways of cutting expenditures.

Mr. Chrétien: Not at all.

Mr. Grafftey: We go to one committee after another, but what do they—

Mr. Béchard: I rise on point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt, but the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair cannot listen to two points of order at the same time.

Mr. Paproski: I have point of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. We will start with one. I recognize the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la Madeleine.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, that is not a question of privilege; it is a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, once the opposition whip will have heard my point of order, he will not rise on a question of privilege.

I would like to say that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey), who has been sitting in this House for a very long time, certainly knows the rules. No doubt he knows that he should address the House through your Honour, that he should not continually say: You have done this, you have done that. He must address the Chair. This seems elementary to me and the hon. member must know the rules of this House.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), on a point of order.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I find there is a continuous filibuster on the other side of the House and our speaker is not allowed to be heard. There has been noise ever since the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) rose in his place. Hon. members on the other side of the House have not let him speak. If we want to carry on with this debate and be responsible in this House, they should keep their mouths closed and listen to the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: What about responsibility?

Mr. Oberle: It is their closure, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must admit there has been some kind of interference, purposely or not. I think the point just made by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre is well taken, and because of it the Chair will allow an extension of time to the hon. member who has the floor. In the meantime, I think the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi should be allowed to make his remarks. He has the floor. Other hon. members will be able to respond to him afterwards, if they wish to do so.

An hon. Member: They might learn something.

An hon. Member: They will never learn.

Mr. Grafftey: It has always been thus. The poor are very often the least capable of being good lobbyists, so what happens? When there are obvious cuts to be made in the billions of dollars worth of government expenditure, they get it in the neck every time. The low income people who were meant to be served by decent medical and health care services are the ones who suffer.

[Mr. Paproski.]

It is passing strange to me, Mr. Speaker, that a government that has seen expenditures go from $10 billion to $36 billion a year, with the economy on its knees, does not even generate enough growth in the private sector to get new programs going, let alone sustain one passed by the Pearson administration. They look around for things to cut and they cut medicare, the delivery of medical and health care service to people at the grass roots level. That is a wonder to me. Instead of listening to the voice of the people on the floor of the House, where is the minister? He is with the bureaucrats in an ivory tower. A cut here and a cut there: they do not listen to the silent poor and the grass roots people because they are poorer lobbyists. They say, "We are going to cut medicare." That is wonderful!

At a time in Canadian history when we should be talking about leading the world in the delivery of medical and health care services, what are these fellows doing? They are cutting back on services. Just ask anybody in the medical and health care world. After eight years of Trudeau administration, medical and health care services have slipped slowly but surely from excellence to mediocrity and if we go any longer with this administration they are going to be very poor. Ask anyone. Are hon. members opposite so blindly partisan that they do not listen? The paramedical workers and the medical health care service people can tell you things have slipped from excellence to mediocrity. Now we are faced with a cut in services.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the economy has been so mismanaged by this government that there has not been enough room in the private sector not only to inaugurate new and imaginative programs but to sustain existing ones. It is worth repeating that government expenditures rose from $10 billion to $36 billion annually. How did the government devise the formula for controlling costs? It has never explained this to the House or to the provinces. Apparently it pulled the formula out of thin air. It is an arbitrary formula, so complicated that no backbencher or minister understands it. How can the provinces understand this mishmash of nonsense, this so-called formula for controlling medical care expenses? The government is obligated to explain to the provinces, before confronting them with a fait accompli, how it evolved its cost-sharing formulas. After all, it was done without consultation.

• (1630)

Consider the history of medicare. Nobody likes saying, "I told you so." I do not. Most of us want to see good programs working. Hon. members who were here during the 1960s when medicare was brought in do not like saying, "I told you so." In those days the government's position was that you were either for medicare or against it. It would not accept amendments hon. members on my side suggested. When we suggested amendments which would have made medicare work better, we were accused of being against the program.

Those on my side of the House who were in touch with the grass roots knew that the people of the country were in accord with the principle of medicare. The Liberals adopt a "holier than thou" attitude as if they only are favoured in the sight of God. They think that only they supported the principle of medicare. They are wrong. We, too, sincerely believed in the principle of medicare. Because we suggested amendments to the original bill which would take into account the history, priorities and politics of different provinces, we were accused of being against medicare. Now the chickens have come home to roost.

Although we supported the principle of universal medicare, we recognized the different needs of the provinces. We took into account the needs of Saskatchewan which had begun a medicare program of its own. Manitoba had begun a group program. The needs of Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces were different. We knew this. But did the federal authority consult the provinces? No. It said to the provinces, "If you don't like it, lump it." Ten years later it says to the provinces, "Now we shall control costs our way, and that is that." That is not my idea of federalism. Does the hon. member who preceded me support that kind of federalism?

How is medicare in Canada working? Let me draw an analogy. Let us suppose that the people of a town are starving and have not enough money with which to buy bread. The town council, in its wisdom, votes money with which the people can buy bread. Unfortunately, the town council has not telephoned the bakery to discover if the bakery can supply the bread. The upshot is that although it voted the starving town dwellers money with which to buy bread, they starve simply because the council did not make sure that the bakery had bread to sell.

That illustrates what has happened to medicare. Like so many joint federal-provincial programs, it is neither fish, fowl nor fair weather. Medicare is merely a means for paying for non-existent services. Medical service is not available in many rural communities, towns and villages. Sometimes it is not accessible to people living in the inner part of cities. The program was designed to help these very people, and it failed. The government provided money for a service which is just not there. I know my analogy is not complete, but it will do. Until the government takes account of the priorities of the provinces and their ability to provide humane, decent medical service, until it consults with the provinces to make sure that medical personnel and facilities are available, medicare for many will be a cruel hoax.

The government did not consult the provinces to discover if there were facilities and personnel for implementing medicare. Medicare has become a means for transferring money and paying for non-existent services. In the 1950s people in public life thought that if your heart was in the right place and you threw enough money at a problem, it would correct itself overnight. That attitude will not work in the 1970s and 1980s. The government must listen to the provinces and work with them.

In many ways, our medicare program combines the worst features of private enterprise and socialism. Because you throw taxpayers' dollars at a problem does not mean it will go away. The government set up a joint program it called medicare. It is a program involving transfer payments and in many ways is typical of some of the worst joint programs forced on the provinces since the Second World War. Why, Mr. Speaker? The government did not consult the provinces. It set no limits, did no real planning. If it planned with the provinces, why are we in the present mess? The government wants to make the provinces responsible for the program. Why should the provinces be responsible when initially the government would not listen to the provinces, paid no heed to their priorities and imposed, unilaterally, this inflexible program?

Now, ten years later, it comes to the House and says, "We broke the bank." What nonsense! Anyone who suggests that we can discuss medicare without discussing at the same time hospital insurance is talking nonsense. That is pure bunkum. If that is their attitude, small wonder our medical care programs are in disarray. You cannot approach medicare as if it were in a vacuum. You must consider the total package of medical care services.

What is happening in Canada? I hope I am being nonpartisan. At the very time we ought to consider how to maintain and improve one of the best health care services in the world, we are cutting medical research. Talk to health researchers in this country. They do not know what to do. Many of the world's leading research programs have been scrapped. Needed services are being scrapped. Why? The government turns a deaf ear to requests for consultation with provinces in this area as well.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) can meet with his officials to the end of time trying to devise formulas to control costs. However, until the plant and personnel are made ready, we will really be whistling in the dark. I remember speaking to the then minister of national health and welfare when we were initially passing medicare. As the debate went on I asked to what extent, in the provinces and municipalities, the plant and personnel were ready. She said, "Not really at all, but if we wait for it to be ready, we will wait forever." I, and most other people, agreed that we could not hold back this universal program called medicare until the plant and personnel were ready. However, that is not an excuse to have done relatively nothing with the provinces in the past ten years in terms of planning and building up plant and personnel.

● (1640)

What do we in Canada have compared to other countries in the western world? In the province of Quebec we have the Castonguay report. It is probably one of the best reports in the world vis-à-vis the delivery of medical and health care services. I often wonder if the minister has read it. What about the 1970 Ontario royal commission report on the healing arts? Like the Castonguay report, it is one of the greatest documents of all time on the delivery of medical and health care services. What about our governmental experience in Saskatchewan years and years ago in terms of initiating a public health measure? We could learn from that. But does this government ever learn from anything? In the area of research and Dr. Wilder Penfield, 12 years ago we were recognized all over the world as being excellent. We have slipped worldwide from excellent to mediocre because of this government's insistence that it knows it all and that the people at the local level do not know anything.

If you read these reports, they are far flung. Has there been any real discussion with the provinces about ambulatory care networks, the proper training of paramedical workers? I am looking at the Ontario example of emergency services, community clinics and emphasis on preventive medicine, home care, general clinics and regional responsibilities that hospitals should take in terms of the health care needs of a total community in the area of curative and preventive medicine.

A cursory reading of these reports shows, like any other business, how to save money, not spend money. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), when he was minister of national health and welfare, reiterated the need for national standards vis-à-vis hospital regionalization where the community hospital would be the hub in the community in respect of total health care services and meeting the needs of the community. Has the minister read these things? Is he aware of them? Is the federal government going to continue to confront the provinces and pretend that their various needs and priorities are absolutely non-existent? Quite frankly, I have not made up my mind. I think that hospitals will no longer be able to be just expensive workshops for doctors. I do not think that right now we should put doctors on salary. But there is certainly one thing of which I am convinced: the fee for service principle is not working. Maybe that is the other extreme from salaries. Has there been any intelligent discussion in this House about the extreme of putting doctors on salary? No. Has it happened in committee? No. When we ask officials if they have discussed it, we are told no. Have they consulted the provinces about it? No. Every expert in the field realizes that somewhere between the extreme of fee for service and putting doctors on salary we must work out a viable formula or we will break the bank. Has there been a discussion on that? No. The federal government blocks its ears and is unilaterally confronting the provinces with a cost formula, and goodness knows where they got it.

All I say to the minister is, "Do your homework. Sit down with the provinces. Consult them vis-à-vis hospital regionalization, ambulatory care, the training of paramedical workers, emergency services, community clinics, emphasis on preventive medicine, home care and other clinics." Only when these matters are discussed intelligently—not separating medicare from the hospital services act as members opposite would have us do—then, and only then, will we be taking one of the few initial steps of bringing costs under control.

In the doctorless villages of our rural areas and inner cities we still have money being voted into people's pockets for services that are plainly not there. Low income people in our inner cities, as doctors gravitate to the hospitals, are left with no doctors and no paramedical people to take up the slack, because we have not trained them. They have no ability. It is all very well for those in the ivory towers, who are healed, to say they should have the ability; but the fact is they do not. They often cannot get to hospitals. There are no doctors, there is no ability, no community clinics, no paramedical people. These things are in reports that have been before the government for 20 years. How long do we have to wait?

The best this government can do, after seeing expenditures go from $10 billion to $36 billion, is to confront the provinces with a cost cut. Surely the backbenchers on the government side can make the minister listen. Just because I do not happen to be a member of that party, do not think that I take any delight over this. Let us wake up and get going. I think it creates a lot of cynicism in the body politic, after seeing expenditures go up from $10 billion to $36 billion in eight years, that the first thing you cut is a centrifugal, pioneer social program before you get at the real cuts.

In conclusion, medical and health care services constitute one of the many challenges which are not being met by federalism as now practised in Canada. Like the challenge of the environment, transportation, living space in our cities, education and the rest, medical and health care services are the very viability of Canadian federalism, something that was alluded to by the hon. member who preceded me. Medicare schemes, as I said before, continue to be merely a finance mechanism. The complete breakdown of service will come about sooner than we care to think. If doctors and medical men will not go into underserviced areas, surely a decent and humane state has an obligation to ensure that medical personnel are equitably distributed.

Public costs mean that public resources should be used to influence the operation of systems that are essential for the health needs of all the people. Costs will continue to skyrocket if government, working with the public and medical profession, does not assume its responsibilities in determining, as I said before, that the plant, personnel and services are made ready. If they are not, I ask this House what the money was voted for in the first place.

Ottawa must give strong central direction and co-ordination to these programs. However, the delivery of modern medical and health care services means a high degree of decentralization, which in turn means responsiveness to local and community needs. Ottawa does not have all the answers. More often, the people in communities know what is best for them and how best to govern their affairs. At the same time, the central authority must assure that local action is carried out in co-operation with other regions, especially when we contemplate hospital regionalization.

● (1650)

To date, Ottawa has not taken into account, especially with the provinces, the principle of local self-agency, forcing the provinces to participate in medicare schemes which in principle are good. Federal authorities are doing next to nothing to permit the provinces, and in turn local government, to have realistic taxing powers to enable them to play their part in any progressive medicare program. The same could be said of the joint hospitalization program. By refusing to help the provinces make the plans, resources and personnel for these programs, Ottawa must share much of the blame for the current nightmare both in the distribution of services and of skyrocketing costs.

If we are serious about providing a better and more equitable distribution of services, especially in the doctorless villages of rural and inner-core urban areas I have already mentioned, immediate action is necessary. More regional clinics will have to be built, together with smaller clinics in local communities. Family health workers will have to be trained to work with doctors and local people. For all paramedical workers a uniform standard of subsidization for training should be implemented, together with a proper quality control supervisory system. This means the successful application of incentives in career planning. Medical schools and hospitals with community and regional responsibilities should have the task of creating a systematic scheme for recruiting, training and deploying paramedical workers.

Sound management and business techniques must be applied to hospitals. These include staff organization and effective communications, meaningful financial reporting, regional planning, effective utilization of manpower and computer technology. If the federal government would only consult with the provinces, it could play a leading part, a pioneer role in effecting a reduction of these problems. Objective criteria must be set up to govern admissions, investigative treatment, length of stay, and discharge. Doctors must realize the financial repercussions of their activities. No longer can we allow hospitals to become doctors' workshops.

Incentives to improve care, reduce costs and increase efficiency must be introduced into the hospital sector in co-operation with the provinces. Administrators, not doctors, must run our hospitals. Trustees and governors should be responsible for over-all policy, and doctors must concentrate upon the practice of medicine. In order to have good hospital administrators, we must provide incentives. In future, regional hospital planning must receive more emphasis as hospitals assume more responsibility toward the particular communities in which they are to be found. A greater number of hospitals must share high-cost facilities.

Hospital admissions will be reduced only when we give due priority to expenditures on preventive medicine, health care clinics, general ambulatory care centres, home care programs, regional community clinics, nursing and convalescent homes and other facilities which could treat and care for patients who now find themselves admitted to general community hospitals. To this extent we cannot discuss medicare in a vacuum apart from hospital insurance, although separate programs, are involved. In the area of discipline and control in relation to hospitals, Ottawa must assume responsibility for adequate staffing, financing and accreditation programs. Peer review and medical auditing must be made meaningful, while medical record procedures are updated through the help of computer technology. Doctors can no longer control their own disciplining and medical associations must become public bodies governed in the interests of the public.

In closing, I should like to ask, in relation to the roles of Ottawa and the provinces vis-à-vis medical and health care services: Where do we go from here? I hope the present debate is the last of its kind, when all we hear from the government is its intention to cut costs in accordance with some incomprehensible formula. I hope the next time we take part in such a discussion we can engage in a substantive debate about the humane and decent delivery of health care services to people at the grass roots level in terms of the planification of plant and personnel.

Lack of public concern and interest is largely responsible for the present mess. An integral part in any advance depends on enlightened public interest and action. As the shroud of mystery is lifted from medical services and activities, questions must be asked and performance demanded by the federal government which transfers so many of the dollars which those services cost. In many ways this is already happening as a result of the information explosion which is taking place in our post-industrial society. Electric communications in general, and television in particular, have brought out and exposed so many problems to public scrutiny. The danger lies in the fact that everything we see, hear or read about seems to constitute a crisis, until we become virtually crisis-immune and can no longer distinguish between bona fide and imaginary problems.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order. I understand from the ruling made earlier this afternoon—I did not happen to be in the House—that the hon. member was to be accorded a few extra minutes. His time has now been extended, however, and he can only finish his speech if there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Grafftey: I am on my last paragraph.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Is it agreed that the hon. member may continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Grafftey: It seems as if all at once every problem ever known to man has simultaneously been dumped in our laps for immediate solution. We have confused our priorities. We have devoted a great deal of effort to the production of material things, and little to the care of people who produce them. As a critic of medical and health care services in Canada, I say our health care services are, compared with what they might be, in appalling disarray. We have been faced with a multitude of real problems. We have thrown up our hands in despair or, at least, the government has done so. Our society suffers from deep social wounds, yet our approach has been only to apply band-aids. On the evidence of the debate up to now, we are only tinkering with the parts of a non-system when it comes to the delivery of health care services—and that is worse than doing nothing. We need major surgery.

Mr. McRae: Would the hon. member permit a question if the House will indulge him for a minute or so longer?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): That could be done only by consent of the House. Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McRae: The hon. member made a statement that the government was putting money in people's pockets for services that are not there. Since those engaged in the medical profession are by far the largest recipients of those sums of money, is the hon. member suggesting that members of the medical profession are ripping-off the public by putting money into their pockets when they are not providing the services?

Mr. Grafftey: Technically, the hon. member is right, but the analogy I was using—

An hon. Member: Yes or no.

Mr. Grafftey: It is not a matter of yes or no. The government likes simplistic answers, but it is not as simple as that. In effect, medicare is a financing machine which pays the bills whether the money goes to the individual citizen or to the doctor directly. I am not saying the doctors are ripping-off the system, but I am saying that medicare in Canada today is largely a financing mechanism, a means by which, indirectly at least, the government pays large sums of money into taxpayers' pockets to pay for services. It does not actually pay the money into the taxpayers' pockets, but it pays the bills to the doctor.

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the privilege of speaking a second time on Bill C-68 after helping to open the debate in late January. I promise one thing; I shall not try to copy the act of the last speaker. In my speech in January I covered many aspects of medicare, but there is one in particular I should like to continue to discuss today. I believe that cost efficiency in the program is necessary, that it is possible and that it can be achieved through voluntary means without lowering the level of national health care.

● (1700)

The Ottawa Citizen of March 16—yesterday—had this to say:

> Because medicare is a relatively new program, while hospital insurance dates back to the 1950s it is medicare that has been fingered for most of the blame in the dramatic escalation of health costs.
>
> But it is hospital insurance that is responsible for three-quarters of the $8 billion of health costs. Moreover, the hospital insurance bill went up by 25 per cent last year, compared to only 12 per cent for medicare.

This is undebatable and is a point that has been made many times in this debate. More importantly, the Ontario health minister, the Hon. Frank Miller, recently was told in the Ontario legislature that the greatest weakness in the OHIP system is the open-ended arrangement with the Ontario Medical Association. The MLA concerned further stated that there are no incentives in the system for doctors to cut down on unnecessary work. Well, Mr. Speaker, that may be true to some extent, but then Mr. Miller went on to say that methods to close the system are not as foolproof as they appear to be at first glance. He said that the province will try to evolve a closed system of payments for health insurance. I think that is good news for all of us. However, he said that we need to know more about what motivates people and what gives good service than we know now. Those are wise words and deserve to be heeded.

I should just like to digress for a moment in order to comment on one particular aspect of increased hospital costs, and that is nurses' pay. Recently, some hospital spokesmen in Ontario were quoted as saying that high wage settlements awarded to nurses were responsible—they did not say "partly responsible"; they said "responsible"—for the province's spiralling health bill. They said that grade 12 students with two years' community college training can command almost $13,000 a year as nurses, and that they are completely useless. They urged the Ontario government to stand up to the nurses on future wage talks even if it results in a strike. Brave men!

Was it not that very Ontario government that set up the new nursing courses in community colleges and that held nurses' pay down shamefully until recent years? I believe that no reasonable person would regret the increases in nurses' incomes which have been permitted recently, regardless of increasing hospital costs. Our nurses are among the best in the world and deserve every cent of what they are receiving.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

I should like to return to my main and previous theme of reducing health care costs through voluntary means by eliminating overservicing, partly through good health maintenance and, therefore, reduced patient demand for medical and hospital care. We may close hospitals and change the rules and facilities of the health care system, but to a large measure what we will always need is the full co-operation and understanding of both doctors and patients.

In regard to patient overdemand, I should like to quote from a small pamphlet, the Medical Review Committee Bulletin, published by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario which is a watchdog organization on Ontario doctors. In a recent issue it carried articles dealing with the physician's responsibility for claims, conflict of interest, billing during the physician's absence, and so on. This is a very responsible group that oversees medical care. The last article in this particular issue carries the heading "Patient demand for unnecessary medical services". This article reads as follows:

> The Medical Review Committee has become aware that some physicians are apparently having difficulty in coping with patient demand for excessive and unnecessary medical services. This concern does not address itself to the occasional visit which may be in retrospect unnecessary but rather to the repeated and troublesome demand on the part of some patients for the performance of unnecessary services by the physician.
>
> It is recognized that some physicians may cope with this problem by dismissing the patient from their care; however, some members have expressed a desire to have an opportunity to report the demands of these patients to the proper authority so that the adverse effect upon health care budgeting may be minimized. The Medical Review Committee would advise members of the profession that consultation at the most senior levels of the health insurance plan indicates that the office of the general manager would be most receptive to communication from physicians with respect to the excessive demands made by patients in such unusual cases and would be fully prepared to investigate and attempt to remedy such abuses by patients.

Certainly, a responsible response by doctors to what is often not a responsible approach by patients. I am not attacking the patient population, but they have their faults as much as anyone else and this should be recognized. As far as the doctors are concerned, we have already stated that very heavy demands are made on them and we have documented this. If our doctors are properly distributed and located, they do not need unnecessary work either for their own satisfaction or their personal income. But by the same token they do need to be well looked after.

Let me talk for a moment about the welfare of the doctors themselves. Recently the magazine Canadian Doctor published some interesting facts on the health and welfare of doctors themselves. Dr. M. O. Vincent, executive director of the Homewood sanitorium in Guelph, Ontario, has suggested that doctors should learn to say no to excessive demands on their time and energy. He said more and more Canadian doctors are being treated for mental breakdowns and the incidence is highest among "those who can't say no". He says that emotional ills in physicians often lead to alcoholism and even drug addiction and that these problems are more often observed among doctors than among most other college graduate occupational groups. It was noted that the suicide rate among physicians, especially psychiatrists, is unusually high. Charging that too many other doctors have unrealistic expectations of themselves, he urged them to realize that their time and stamina are limited and to plan their lives accordingly.

The College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario has set up a new committee to determine whether physicians are fit enough mentally or physically to practice medicine. This new body could require any physician to submit to a physical or mental examination. Refusal to do so could result in suspension or loss of licence. It will be interesting to see the eventual results of this study. My own experience suggests that the doctor who remains healthiest and happiest may be the family physician in the rural area.

Just a few words, Mr. Speaker, about doctors' incomes. This seems to be one of the main concerns in discussing this medicare bill, along with some smaller administrative costs. What exactly has been the record of doctors' fees and net disposable incomes in recent years? The profession adhered voluntarily to the federal government's wage and guidelines in 1971 under the commission set up by Dr. John Young, and thereby demonstrated considerable economic responsibility right through 1975. During a five-year period in which inflation rose over 30 per cent, Ontario doctors received increases of 4.5 per cent in 1971, 7.75 per cent in 1974 and 4 per cent in 1975, a total of 16.25 per cent.

● (1710)

In real income gains before tax over the past 20 years, a recent survey shows that doctors gained only 38 per cent, the lowest of all 20 groups compared, and only half the Canadian average of 75 per cent. Their position in the group of 20 has even deteriorated in that time from fifteenth place to twentieth, or last. Over the past ten years they have actually lost purchasing power. Their incomes and, therefore, their percentage increases may be among the highest in the country, but that is our system, a hierarchy of incentives and rewards and not a socialistic levelling. That is what has made our system energetic and effective, whereas graduated income tax and social programs also make it humane.

In spite of losing ground economically, the doctors are prepared to co-operate with the anti-inflation program as long as it is applied consistently and fairly; and that, of course, includes the medicare amendments. They would also like to feel their efforts are appreciated, which is probably just as important. In a letter to members of the Canadian Medical Association, dated January 14, 1976, the president, Dr. Lloyd D. Grisdale, stated:

> Lastly, as your president, I ask that you honour the commitment made by the C.M.A. to parliament, the government and the people of Canada on behalf of the medical profession. I ask that, for the trial period we promised, you honour the letter and the spirit of the anti-inflation legislation of which it forms a major part. The control of inflation is essential. We have a responsibility, as a responsible profession and citizens, to support the decisions and efforts of our duly elected representatives to that end.

The Ottawa Citizen of yesterday wrote:

> Before the income controls were introduced, doctors in Ontario and Alberta were calling for 35 per cent hikes in their medicare fee schedules. Faced with the $2,400 annual limit on income gains, they settled for eight and nine per cent respectively.

The problems of the health care system, like all our current problems, need to be worked out, not by confrontation but by consultation between the federal and provincial governments and the health professionals involved. Hopefully, the climate for that constructive approach is developing. Before I close, I should just like to return to one aspect of this subject of health care costs that I touched upon the last time. I want to make a few more comments on the area of the relationship between the increasing cost and the migration of medical doctors to Canada.

Already one-third of Canada's 32,000 doctors are foreign-trained. Perhaps at one time they were needed more than they are now. The professional migration process also contributes to a medical brain-drain undesirable in other countries and they have let us know about this. Redistribution of our own doctors would help the situation, preferably on a voluntary basis. Many people think that the best incentives for doctors to return to the boondocks, as it were, would be higher income and better facilities, whereas it may be that most people these days prefer an urban lifestyle, not only the doctors but their wives and their children as well.

The Ottawa Citizen lead editorial of January 21, 1975, questioned restrictions on the migration of foreign doctors. It expressed doubts as to whether they can be kept in rural areas, but this may in fact not be impossible. It also poked fun at Frank Miller's claim that each additional doctor costs a province $250,000 annually in terms of the health services he generates. However, this can actually happen even in an area where an extra doctor is not strictly needed, and I represent such an area. The potential for expansion of medical services is virtually limitless. Mr. Miller states that these restrictions could save Canada $500 million a year. I think that is very possible and believable. The key questions are: How many doctors do we need? How many can we afford? How can we maximize the opportunities for Canadians to participate? How can we make sure we have the right distribution of such professionals? How can we best look after the welfare of these valuable professional people?

In conclusion, in this sense the federal minister is proposing a series of amendments to Bill C-68, the medicare bill, which should begin to respond to some of the more serious concerns expressed, particularly those expressed by medical people themselves. These proposed amendments are as follows. The exact ceilings are to be set for two years only. Inflation and other factors are too difficult to predict beyond that time. Those ceilings exceed the present anti-inflation guidelines because other expenses may be involved besides payments to doctors. The federal government maintains the option of setting ceilings beyond this two-year period if such are necessary in light of the situation at that time. If the figures have not been stated, it is because they cannot realistically be stated. The method of arriving at these ceilings is subject to full consultation with the provinces.

Second, there will be provision for increases for new important classes of services. Obviously, whatever the cost, a new lifesaving method, for example, is a must and the provinces introducing it deserve to be rewarded accordingly. Third and last, there will be a three-year exemption from the ceiling for new insured services. This will allow a period for build-up and stabilization of initial costs. As I said before, these amendments are designed to help make the bill more flexible and acceptable and I believe they deserve the support of all of us.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be allowed to speak on a point of order. I realize that you, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), are in the chair and I believe there is no better way of bringing that to the attention of the House than by expressing that acknowledgement at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, let me say that I know it is not lost on members of the House that the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) served with great distinction during the twenty-ninth parliament as the Deputy Speaker of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I know that all members appreciate the services the hon. member rendered us in that very important office.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Those were some of the things I wanted to say, and probably I would have said a lot more. I know we all appreciate your being in the chair, sir.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will realize that the House wants you to rule that this is a valid point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): I hope that Hansard will record me as saying "Hear, hear" instead of "Oh, oh".

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, that was an acceptable point of order to be interrupted by, but I hope it is not my rising that causes you to leave the chair. In any event, I want to say a few words about the bill before us. This is the first time I have intervened while the medicare bill has been before the House. I do so now because of a number of comments made by hon. members on the other side I think they have been trying to leave the impression with the Canadian people that the cost-sharing formula is not going to be changed and that the provinces, in reality, will be receiving perhaps more money from the federal government than in the past. I suggest there is a bit of deception in that argument being perpetrated by some, though not all, Liberal members across the floor.

In the past there was a cost-sharing agreement under which the federal government paid 50 per cent of the cost of health care in this country. That type of formula will not be adhered to in the future. The type of legislation that is being pushed through the House by this closure or time allocation will limit the increased share of federal participation to 50 per cent plus 13 per cent of the additional costs in the next year. If the costs next year should increase by 14 per cent, 15 per cent or 16 per cent, it will not be a 50-50 cost-sharing arrangement between the provinces and the federal government.

[Mr. Philbrook.]

• (1720)

There is a strong likelihood that medical care costs and hospital costs in this country will go up by more than 13 per cent next year. If that is the case, the federal government's share of the total cost of health and medical care in this country will be under 50 per cent. I think that is a retrograde step; it is a step backward from the policy the government has been pursuing in this country for a number of years. I think that point should be made known to the Canadian people, because the government is misleading the House in attempting to say that it will uphold its obligation in the field of medical care. It is not.

It is for this reason that I think the debate before the House is very important. I want to say a few words about that, not just because I come from the province of Saskatchewan where, as you know, Mr. Speaker, CCF and NDP governments pioneered hospitalization and medical care under the premiership of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), and later under Woodrow Lloyd who succeeded him as premier. This program has since become the norm for medical care and hospitalization in Canada.

In those days there were many tough fights in respect of the principle of universality of medical care. Who was the opposition in those days? I remember well, during the medicare crisis, when the Liberal party, led by the late Ross Thatcher who later became premier, led a group of citizens in opposition to medical care in the province of Saskatchewan. They opposed it in the province with great vigour and determination. Today, after many years of convincing and persuading the federal government about the need for universal medical care where everyone, regardless of financial background, can have the same availability of medical care, we see the federal government taking a retrograde step in gradually backing out of medical care.

I think this party and this House should make sure that every Canadian citizen knows what is happening. This has broad ramifications, not only in respect of medical care but in respect of the way the party on the other side of the House looks at federalism, co-operation and the type of country it wants to create and which I suggest will be created by this type of legislation. The country will be much worse off than it is today.

If we have an increase this year and next year which exceeds the limitations imposed by the government, then the provinces will be faced with a couple of options. The wealthy provinces like Ontario can continue to provide services for their people because they have the financial base with which to do so. Many people in Alberta, Ontario, British Columbia, and perhaps a few other provinces, may not suffer much because of the legislation before the House today. I do not know whether they will or not. They may not, because those provinces have resources they can spend on health care and medicine. But as my colleague from Saskatchewan says, we will do our own thing in Saskatchewan despite the fact that we do not have the wealth and resources of the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia. We did it before.

I alluded to the fight we had with the doctors' committee in Saskatchewan. This was a fight against the first universal medical care plan in North America. The reactionary Liberal party at that time led that fight and said time and time again that they would not rest until medical care was destroyed in the province of Saskatchewan and never came about in Canada. Now we see a retrograde step in this direction.

What will happen in respect of provinces which do not have the same resources as wealthy provinces such as Ontario? What will happen in Newfoundland, in poor little Prince Edward Island, in New Brunswick and in some of the other provinces which cannot afford to put much provincial money into the provision of health services on a par with provinces such as Ontario? These provinces will have to scale down the quality of medicine they provide to their citizens. They do not have any option. The quality of medicine will be scaled down. Its availability will be scaled down. The hospitals and facilities they have will not be expanded because they will not have the necessary funds.

Let us look at a third option which was looked at and adopted by a Liberal government of Saskatchewan. I refer to the imposition of a deterrent fee. That was imposed by the Liberal party in the province of Saskatchewan. That is one way to get more money to pay for medical care and hospitalization. I remember the deterrent fee very well. That was back in the days of the late premier Ross Thatcher in the province of Saskatchewan.

I remember those days well because that was the time I really became active in politics, in the mid-1960s, when I saw fees of $2 and $2.50 being imposed on people who visited a doctor. Who are the people involved? They are the people least able to afford to pay doctors' bills—the older people and those with large families. They are the people who cannot afford it. The Liberal party in the province of Saskatchewan brought in the deterrent fee, or the usury fee. I think that is a very regressive way in which to finance any plan, particularly a plan such as this which should be universally acceptable to everyone.

I believe medical care should be free to everyone. I do not mean simply the type of care we have today. I include pharmacare through which people who need drugs could get them at cost. I include denticare. Dental care should be provided to everyone regardless of income. I also refer to the provision of hearing aids and everything else people need for their physical well-being or care. That will not happen if this bill should pass.

If the federal government starts to scale down the amount of money it provides in respect of medical care and hospitalization, the provinces will not be able to extend or expand the services they want to provide to the citizens of this country. That is the reason we oppose this bill and will fight it as strongly as we can. It seems to me that whenever we oppose something on principle, the government says that we are being obstructionist, that we are carrying on a filibuster, or we are trying to obstruct the legislation. Then, as in this case, they bring in closure. If the government wants co-operation from the opposition, the last thing it should do is introduce closure or time allocation. The government should be open to amendments, because I think in this case, like in the case in which we have been involved in the last few days, it is the opposition parties that are sensitive to the feelings of the people.

I think the government opposite will not be there for many more months. I think the government is marking time. I think this is another example of a government that has had too much power for too long. It is too arrogant. Can you tell me, Mr. Speaker, of any province which agrees with the type of proposal being brought down by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde)? We have NDP provinces, one Social Credit province, and Liberal and Conservative provinces. What about Premier Reagan of Nova Scotia; what does he think about the bill which is before us today?

● (1730)

What about Robert Bourassa in Quebec? Why is the federal government interested in curtailing health costs, and why is the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) asking where we should cut? If the government is interested in cutting, why does it not talk to the provinces and work something out on a bilateral basis? Why is the federal government, instead, bringing in a bill in a unilateral and authoritarian way? That is not the way to govern this country. That is going back.

This Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has talked like a university professor conducting a philosophical class about how we should govern, what kind of country we should have and what kind of federal union we should have. I do not mind making the charge that I think this Prime Minister has done more to provoke disunity in this country than any other prime minister in the history of Canada. I suggest there is more disunity now than there ever has been in this country.

Recently I spent a few days in the province of Quebec. I was surprised that almost all the people I spoke to criticized the federal Prime Minister for the attitude he took toward the Prime Minister of Quebec. I found this criticism also in the journals I read, and I heard it in the commentaries. It is this type of heavy-handed attitude which this government has taken for far too long on almost every issue before us to which I object.

An hon. Member: Read Le Jour.

Mr. Nystrom: I have read more than just Le Jour. I have read La Presse, Le Devoir and other newspapers in the province of Quebec. I have heard commentators en français and in English in the province of Quebec, and I sense in that province a deep frustration over the heavy-handed way this government is implementing its programs across this country. The same is true in western Canada. We resent the heavy-handed way this government is conducting its affairs. I think the medical care bill is one of them. This is supposed to be a federal state. It is not supposed to be a unitary state. It is not supposed to be a state where there is one central government deciding what legislation there will be, introducing it in the House and ignoring the various parts of the country. We have a sharing of powers in this country. We have a federal state where the federal government should sit down, talk to the provinces and negotiate with them. If that is not done, there will be more and more problems and unrest in Canada. This government is provoking disunity and many troubles which are yet to come.

Mr. Benjamin: You should see premiers on Sundays instead of judges.

Mr. Nystrom: In a few brief words, those are the concerns I have about the bill before us today. I believe it is a retrograde step. It is a bill which will prevent expanding our health and medical services in this country. It is a bill about which there was no consultation with the provinces. It is a bill which will be bad and which will be remembered as such when this government is defeated in 1978 or whenever an election is called.

Mr. Mike Landers (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I do not know very much about medicine, but a number of letters have been written to me out of which I have picked three. The only reason I am going to make the contents of these letters public is so the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) will have an opportunity at the committee stage to respond in public to the concerns of these constituents. These letters are not necessarily complimentary of the government, although I have received many which are. The first letter begins "Dear Mike," which has a nice touch to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Landers: The letter reads as follows:

I am writing as a member of the board of the Atlantic Research Centre for Mental Retardation to express my concern about the current financial squeeze on medical research in this country, particularly as it relates to the Atlantic Research Centre for mental retardation, Halifax, N.S. The centre serves the Atlantic provinces and is the only research body in mental retardation in this region.

The potential that research has for decreasing the incidents of mental retardation speaks clearly for itself. The investment in human terms and in dollars and cents vis-à-vis custodial, residential, development and vocational services reinforces the good, common sense approach to research in this field.

May I strongly urge your positive consideration respecting government grants for research activities. I feel research programs, such as those carried on by the ARCMR, are imperative and must continue because of the potential for benefit to us all.

I appreciate your consideration of the above.

Sincerely,

Gordon Foster.

The address stated is Hampton, New Brunswick. I might point out that Gordon Foster was a defeated Liberal candidate in the last provincial election in the province of New Brunswick. I know this letter does not relate directly to the bill before the House; however, I would like the minister to have an opportunity to respond to it at the committee stage. The next letter says "Dear Mr. Landers"—a little more respectful than the first, but less friendly. The letter reads:

I am writing to protest in the strongest possible terms the government's recent so called "freeze" of the budget of the Medical Research Council. As all members of the government must know, the purported freeze is, in fact, a reduction in federal expenditure for medical research, since there is not so much as an additional allotment to allow for inflation.

Canada's expenditure per capita for medical research, when compared with that of other western nations, is disgracefully low.

I am just quoting from the letter. I do not know whether the facts are correct. The letter goes on:

One is forced to the conclusion that, because medical research has never been an issue of political significance to voters, it has been considered expendable.

I am sure that every Canadian medical scientist is prepared to do his or her utmost to co-operate in fighting inflation—but only if scientists receive treatment comparable to labour unions. I therefore urge that the government reconsider its regrettable action in this matter.

The letter is signed by Dr. E. Paras, MD, FRCP(C), Saint John, New Brunswick. The third letter is similar in content to the second letter I read, and I will not go into the details of it. I should just like to point out these two letters to the minister. I will send him copies of each. I ask him to respond in public, at the committee stage, to the concerns raised by these people, one a constituent and one not a constituent. I should also like to point out that it is difficult to please everyone when the government is cutting back. I was only concerned about these two letters. I intend to vote for the bill, but I wish to bring these letters to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I was not going to participate in this debate but I changed my mind because of some of the things said by those who have spoken. I am sure hon. members will recognize what I have to say for its usual impartiality and not partisanship. What has struck me about this debate has been the absence of any reference to the 40 per cent of Canada which lies north of the sixtieth parallel. All I heard from the last speaker from the New Democratic party, behind whom sits the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth), was all sorts of problems which are provincial in nature, forgetting completely about the two northern territories. That is all I have heard from the other side as well.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Nielsen: Yet foisted upon us in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, without notification, to say nothing of the complete absence of any consultation, is the legislation we are discussing today. The hon. member for Northwest Territories, since he has been here, and I since I have been here—which is somewhat longer—have been trying to convince the government to include the two northern territories in these discussions. I am very sorry that the minister, who has sat patiently throughout this debate, is not here at the moment to hear this. We have been trying, without success, to convince the government that it is essential to include the two northern territories in these federal-provincial discussions when it concerns money out of the pockets of Canadians who live above the sixtieth parallel. We tried to convince the government that it is fitting and proper to have representatives from the two legislative assemblies in the two territories attend federal-provincial discussions on matters such as this. This is not an isolated case.

● (1740)

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the minister is now back in his seat to hear this. Since he has assumed his portfolio I have asked if he is going to include representation from the northern territories in these discussions, but unfortunately I have had no success. The minister frowns. I know he is going to say that they had representatives at these meetings. That is true. They have attended the meetings, but with the status of what the government is pleased to call "observer". They invite elected representatives of the two legislative bodies in the north to come down and listen, but not to have anything to say about what goes into the cost-sharing arrangements between the federal government and the two territorial governments.

Mr. Lalonde: That is part of the federal delegation.

Mr. Nielsen: The federal delegation that is there does not have input in the sense that the first ministers of the provinces have a real, substantive voice in what goes into the legislation and the arrangements that are made. It seems to me, and I am quite sure the hon. member for the Northwest Territories will agree with me, that it would not hurt the federal government's position if they were to invite the elected representatives of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories to have some meaningful input into the design of the cost-sharing arrangement.

After all, we are being asked to pay on the same basis as the residents of the provinces in respect of cost participation in schemes such as this. Whereas the provincial people have a voice through their elected legislatures, we in the north have none. I urge upon the minister an alteration of the policy of merely having observer status at this conference. We have come some small way along the road of progress toward portfolio responsibility in the Yukon territory. At the last federal-provincial conference which dealt with this subject, a member of the legislative assembly in the Yukon, Mrs. Whyard, attended but she could not say anything. She came back to the Yukon and told us it was useless to go to conferences in Ottawa if we were not allowed to say anything. I leave that recommendation with the minister. As he is a sincere gentleman, I know he will give favourable consideration to these representations and see to it that next time our people will at least be allowed to open their mouths.

Mr. Speaker, I now want to speak about something more germane to the proceedings that went on here yesterday and this morning and, indeed, have been proceeding for some weeks. By coincidence, what I have to say with respect to pressure being brought to bear improperly by ministers and government in the affairs of the administration of justice has direct relevance to what we are debating here. Not only were we not permitted to participate in discussions when medicare was first imposed upon us in the Yukon territory, but the whole weight of government was brought to bear in order to ensure that the people of the Yukon territory would abide by the law imposed upon us.

What pressures were brought to bear? Doctors in the Yukon are complaining that because they are not registered under the medicare scheme, they are not being paid. To what lengths did the government go in order to enforce their legislation? The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) will clearly recall the case of Dr. Wigby who was the only doctor in a small community in the Yukon called Watson Lake. Because he did not personally register under the medicare scheme, he was charged, convicted and thrown in jail. He was the only doctor in the community—the nurse had gone on some kind of sitdown strike—so the community was completely without medical attention. They were not satisfied with throwing the doctor in jail once; they have done it twice. All because he did not register personally with medicare. He complied with the legislation with respect to his responsibilities in all ways except that he did not personally register under this scheme.

The government adapts the attitude that as long as they have a hold-out like Dr. Wigby, they are going to put him in jail. He spent two terms of two weeks each in jail because he is not registered. I dare say that if he continues to be stubborn the government will throw him in jail again.

This is one example of the kind of pressure that is exerted, Mr. Speaker. But it gets even more serious. They were not content, so they looked around for the prominent people in the community, wondering who they could charge next to make sure the laws were complied with. They found that the mayor of Whitehorse was not registered, so they charged him for failing to register under the medicare scheme. They would have thrown him in jail but—

Mr. Paproski: Was he a Liberal?

Mr. Nielsen: No, indeed he was not. The mayor of Whitehorse received some very sound legal advice, however, and he registered under the scheme.

An hon. Member: What did you charge him?

Mr. Nielsen: Who could be more prominent in our community than the mayor of Whitehorse? They looked around again and they chose a member of the Yukon legislative assembly. They were not satisfied with Dr. Wigby and the mayor, so the next victim on the list of the vindictive government was a member of the legislative assembly, Mr. McKinnon. They charged him, but fortunately he had some very sound legal advice and he registered and thus escaped the consequences of the charge. The government was not satisfied to leave it there. They looked around for even more prominent victims—and who did they find? None less than the present Speaker of the Yukon legislative assembly. They charged him with failing to register under the medicare scheme.

The whole story of these pressures is the effort to cow the people of the Yukon into complying with this heavy-handed federal government imposing this scheme—

An hon. Member: How many did you represent?

Mr. Nielsen: I did not represent this one; he was a Liberal. Hon. members laugh, Mr. Speaker, but he is no longer a Liberal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Wherever he got his advice, he got it a little late because he was fined $500 for failing to register. Maybe it had something to do with that.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, it is always—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde).

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to receive a visit from the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) in this House. I certainly hate to interrupt him and appear to cut short his speech in any way, shape or form, but we have had complaints that this debate was being cut short and I can understand that other hon. members want to participate. This issue is one of great importance.

I would submit to you, however, Mr. Speaker, that we have a very broad interpretation of the rule of debate on second reading, but I fail to see, unless the hon. member comes to the point pretty soon, what this has to do with the bill which deals with capping medicare, and only that. I wonder if the hon. member for Yukon is in order. I ask this with great hesitation, as I should hate to see his intervention in the debate cut short.

● (1750)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member confine his remarks to the subject matter of Bill C-68.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, if I may speak to the minister's point of order, I suggest that my colleague for Northwest Territories and I enjoy the distinction, if you look at it that way, of being unique in this House. Whereas other members of the House represent constituencies in provinces, and a provincial body may interpose itself between the federal government and the people of the province, the hon. member for Northwest Territories and I must deal directly with the federal government. Therefore, I am saying now those things which would be said if we were given a voice at federal-provincial conferences. But we are not given that voice and are not allowed to say these things. This House is the only forum in which we can present certain views.

Mr. Lalonde: Come to my estimates.

Mr. Nielsen: I enjoy attending when the minister's estimates are discussed, but that does not help elected representatives of the people of the Yukon in their deliberations in the legislative assembly. That process does not allow them to provide input to the minister's decisions. I submit that what I say is pertinent to the bill, to moneys being spent on medicare and the manner in which they are spent. Allow me to cite one more example. The government was not satisfied with leaving matters there. It looked for the most prominent person it could find in the Yukon in order to make an example of him in the enforcement of the medicare law. Who did it find?

Mr. Lalonde: The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: That is right, the hon. member for Yukon, as the minister knows. So they charged him. Where could he go for good, sound advice? He was tried and convicted of failing to register for medicare. What did the hon. member for Yukon do? He obtained the best legal advice he could—from the then minister of justice who now is Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). The then minister of justice said, "That is silly. Saskatchewan has a medicare scheme but I belong to the Ontario scheme. Why can you not belong to the scheme to which I belong?" The minister belonged to one scheme for 19 years. At that I appealed and the appeal court reversed the decision. That is an example of the government's heavy-handed methods, to use the phrase used by the NDP member who last spoke, in enforcing medicare in the Yukon.

An hon. Member: It's a good thing you didn't see a judge.

Mr. Nielsen: Now I shall pass to something more serious. I am enjoying the debate and do not wish to change the tone. Nevertheless, what I shall now raise has a direct bearing on matters being discussed in the House. One of the minister's employees in northern health services, Dr. Connolly, felt it was wrong of the city of Whitehorse to continue dumping raw sewage into the Yukon River from a sewage system designed, installed and paid for by the federal government and then handed to the city of Whitehorse. He laid a charge against the city of Whitehorse under a medical health ordinance in the Yukon. Dr. Connolly then was acting as medical health officer for the Yukon but was an employee of the minister's department.

He was telephoned by someone in the commissioner's office, the commissioner's office being under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan), and was told, "Withdraw that charge." Dr. Connolly, more credit to him, said, "No, sir, I will not withdraw the charge. An offence has been committed and it will be proceeded with." There was a series of telephone calls from the commissioner's office, culminating with this message, "Either you withdraw the charge or I will communicate with my minister, who will communicate with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who will require you to withdraw the charge. If you do not comply, you will be fired."

According to my information, all communications were beneath ministerial level: the ministers personally were not involved; the officials were. As it happened, there was a telephone communication from the commissioner's office to the office of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, hence to the office of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It went back down to regional office in Edmonton and back up to Dr. Connolly in Whitehorse. He was told, "You will either withdraw the charge and say publicly that the matter is proceeding satisfactorily and that is why you are withdrawing the charge, or you will be fired." The minister shakes his head, but he does not know this because he was not there personally.

An hon. Member: Were you there?

Mr. Nielsen: Hon. members will agree, surely, that that is unacceptable pressure. I was told this by Dr. Connolly. There is no better source. Section 127 (2) of the Criminal Code provides:

> Every one who wilfully attempts in any manner other than a manner described in subsection (1) to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for ten years.

An hon. Member: Was he fired?

Mr. Nielsen: I agree that if pressure had been brought to bear on Dr. Connolly before the charge was laid, there would be no difficulty. But after the charge was laid and placed in the hands of the Crown attorney, pressure was brought to bear on Dr. Connolly. He was threatened with loss of his job if he did not withdraw. At that stage he threw up his hands and said, "I will not press charges." By that time the matter was in the hands of the Crown attorney. I am not suggesting for a moment that the Department of Justice brought pressure to bear on the Crown attorney. Even if it did, I have such high regard for him that I know he would not succumb. Nonetheless, there was communication to determine if there was sufficient evidence. There was evidence and the charge proceeded. A fine of $100 was the result.

I maintain that the circumstances I have disclosed are serious enough to warrant investigation. It is not my job or the job of any other member to judge guilt or innocence. But it is the government's responsibility to investigate the matter to see if there is a prima facie case for a charge to be laid under section 127 of the Criminal Code. If it is deemed that there is sufficient evidence to support a prima facie case under section 127, the government should see to it that every official of government involved in bringing pressure to bear is charged under the section. Let the courts decide guilt or innocence.

Message from the Senate

I see that my time has almost expired. May I call it six o'clock?

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-71, an act to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Crown Liability Act, the Immigration Act and the Parole Act, with amendments, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

At 6.01 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 18, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY INTO ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE WITH THE JUDICIARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask leave to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity which is fully expressed in the motion and affects the foundations of public life in this country.

I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That the committee of the privy council, by order, instruct the Chief Justice of Canada to appoint three justices from among the justices of the provincial superior courts, the Federal Court of Canada, and the Supreme Court of Canada, who shall be constituted by the committee of the privy council to be commissioners under Part I of the Inquiries Act to inquire fully into any allegations, made or to be made, about any improper inducements having been offered to or improper pressures having been brought to bear in respect of a civil or criminal judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding, instituted or likely to be instituted, to the disturbance of the peace, order and good government of Canada, and in particular but without limiting the generality of the foregoing into the incidents resulting in the letter dated March 10, 1976, of the honourable the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec, tabled in this House and printed as Appendix "B" to the official report of the House of Commons Debates of March 12, 1976, and any matter bearing upon or related to those incidents, and if the said commissioners consider that there is prima facie evidence of an offence in relation to any matter inquired into, to consider such other matters as may appear to the commissioners to be relevant and to report fully thereon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 such motion would require unanimous consent of the House prior to presentation. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO ALLEGED ANGLO-SAXON JUDICIAL ESTABLISHMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Considering that Mr. Justice Mackay made an unjustifiable indiscretion by giving his personal friend Special Attorney Richard Holden a copy of his correspondence with the Minister of Justice; considering that Richard Holden submitted this letter to the press with the agreement of Mr. Justice Mackay, with the intention—and I apologize for the expression but it is accurate—of "giving shit to the government", to quote the words of Mr. Holden as reported in Maclean's; considering the fact that Mr. Justice Hugessen, Mr. Justice Mackay and Special Attorney Holden are all part of the "Anglo-Saxon judicial establishment of Montreal", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That this House appoint a royal commission to determine whether the "Anglo-Saxon judicial establishment of Montreal" did not conspire indeed to harass a French-Canadian minister who did not hesitate to attack the well-to-do and the trusts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

SUGGESTED CONSULTATION WITH INUIT AND INDIANS BEFORE AUTHORIZING DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order No. 43. My motion is prompted by the reports today that the question of allowing Canmar Ltd. to commence an offshore drilling program in the Beaufort Sea is being considered by the cabinet today. If true, this suggests that the government is prepared to go ahead with a maximum of haste and a minimum of consultation. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this House urges the cabinet to consult those Indian and Inuit Canadians who live in the vicinity of the Beaufort Sea before authorizing the proposed offshore drilling program in the Beaufort Sea planned for this summer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED DELAY OF DECISION ON DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA PENDING PROPER ENVIRONMENTAL SAFEGUARDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of extreme importance. It is somewhat similar to the motion just put. In view of the report today that cabinet is about to make its decision on drilling permits in the Beaufort Sea, and in view of the fact that United States authorities and officials in the Department of the Environment continue to express opposition, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That this decision be delayed until proper environmental safeguards are established and adequate consultation with citizens of the north is accomplished.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 would require the unanimous consent of the House before presentation. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JUDGE HUGESSEN'S ALLEGATION MR. DRURY REFERRED TO GANGING-UP ON PROMINENT FRENCH SPEAKING PERSONS—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Public Works. On Tuesday, at page 11825 of Hansard, the Minister of Public Works denied that he felt the contempt of court proceeding might involve a ganging up of the English-speaking establishment against French speaking ministers and he appeared to say that he knew of no instance, either in the press or elsewhere, when that possibility was raised. Does the minister deny the allegation, and I would like a specific answer to this, of Mr. Justice Hugessen that, and I quote:

The view which Mr. Drury felt was being expressed in some quarters in Ottawa that the proceedings against Mr. Ouellet were in some way a ganging-up of the English-speaking Establishment against prominently placed French speaking persons.

If the minister does deny the judge's statement, will he tell this House specifically what he did say to the judge?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am not denying the allegation of the judge. I did say in the House the other day, and I am prepared to repeat it, that I am not aware of any press reports or other similar published reports of any such ganging up. I, myself, do not believe that there is or indeed, in any circumstances I can envisage, that there would be such a ganging up by the courts of Quebec against any particular section of the community. The reference which Mr. Justice Hugessen made in his letter to the Chief Justice was, I think, merely an expression, and what I was seeking was his confirmation of my belief, in a sense, in his belief; I was persuaded that Judge Hugessen would pay no account to such a rumour, nor did he believe in it, nor did I; I was merely seeking his personal assurance that my belief in his belief was correct.

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (1410)

Mr. Clark: We shall want to take a careful look at the record of that.

I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works, bearing in mind that Mr. Justice Hugessen used the phrase, when he referred to the suggestion about the ganging up, that that impression seemed to be held in "some quarters in Ottawa", whether he accepts the paraphrasing of his conversation with the judge to the effect that there was a reference to "some quarters in Ottawa", and if he does accept that, will he tell us exactly what he did say and to what quarters in Ottawa and to what people he referred in his conversation with the judge?

Mr. Drury: The phrase used by Mr. Justice Hugessen, "some quarters" was about as precise as I was. As I indicated to him, I was not aware of any newspaper stories to this effect; these were merely, as far as I was concerned, baseless rumours and when one is talking about baseless rumours it is difficult to be precise.

Mr. Clark: The full reference in Mr. Justice Hugessen's words was not just "some quarters", but "some quarters in Ottawa" and presumably the minister would be more in touch with those quarters in Ottawa than the judge would. Could the minister tell us from which quarters in Ottawa the rumour to which he referred in his conversation came to his attention? Who were the people who were the source of the rumour in Ottawa he discussed with the judge?

Mr. Drury: I did, I think, employ the term "baseless" in respect to my own concept of them and it is difficult to ascribe a precise source to baseless rumours.

Mr. Clark: Was the minister referring to information or rumours or facts he had heard circulated by any minister of the Crown or by any senior official of the government? Will the minister tell the House, now, who those people were?

Mr. Drury: I have said I thought they were baseless rumours. I cannot ascribe their source to any particular individual, or, indeed, to any class of individual. Secondly, I cannot answer in the precise way the hon. gentleman is seeking or give him the kind of answer that I think he wants; and I think it would be slanderous of me to try to ascribe the source to any particular group of people.

• (1420)

POSSIBILITY OF CONFRONTATION BETWEEN EXECUTIVE AND JUDICIARY—REQUEST OF MR. DRURY FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Public Works. As reported at page 11825 of Hansard for Tuesday last, the minister accepted Mr. Justice Hugessen's impression that the Minister was attempting to head off a possible confrontation with the executive. I assume that there must have been some concrete reasons for those fears. Who within or outside the cabinet suggested that this case could lead to a confrontation between the executive and judicial branches of government?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should tell the hon. gentleman that there was a current contempt of court proceeding that was initiated on behalf of the judiciary against a member of the administration, and this appeared to me to have the appearance at least of a confrontation between these two branches of government.

Mr. Fraser: A final supplementary question for the minister, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister telling the House that the suggestion made by him to Mr. Justice Hugessen that there might be a confrontation was completely his suggestion without any discussion with or suggestions from anybody else, either in the cabinet or outside the cabinet?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not suggesting that at all and it would be false to do so. I consulted a number of other people. As I said in the House, I accept full responsibility for this and I am not going to try to put the blame on the shoulders of somebody else.

ALLEGATION MR. OUELLET INTERFERED IN TRIAL OF SUGAR COMPANIES—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and it pertains to an allegation that seems to have been missed so far, if you can believe that, in the questions raised in connection with this matter. I refer to an allegation made by Judge Mackay that the hon. member for Papineau was interfering with the course of justice in the first trial involving the sugar companies. I should like to read a section of the letter sent to the Minister of Justice in order to clarify the point, and I would then ask him for his response. In the original letter to the Minister of Justice dated February 9, Justice Mackay has this to say:

> I might add that had your agent, Mr. Pateras, not been a friend and former partner of Mr. Ouellet, I would have appointed him and expected him to act in this matter and I have no doubt that his account would have been paid just as were his charges for writing Mr. Ouellet on my behalf during the course of the trial and warning him to refrain from interfering with the course of justice—

I should like to ask the minister whether he would take steps to table that letter from Justice Mackay to the hon. member for Papineau so we can see what allegation of interference is in the letter. Secondly, would the minister tell us what was his reply specifically to that point and what action he took?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I have the letter. I have not seen it. I will determine whether Crown counsel in the case has the letter. Just to make it perfectly clear, I do not have a transcript of the trial in front of me so therefore I am paraphrasing the expressions used, but in the course of the trial the judge took exception to some words used in a speech by the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He asked Crown counsel in the case to write to the minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and bring this to his attention. That I understand was done, and that action satisfied the judge in the case at that time.

It was raised in the letter to me as an argument that because Crown counsel had acted in the instance the hon. leader raises, that this Crown counsel should also have acted in the contempt proceedings which followed the trial. Of course, my position was very clear, that once the trial was over the proper procedure for the judge in a contempt proceeding was, as outlined in the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' case, to ask the Attorney General of the province to appoint counsel as a friend of the court in the contempt proceedings.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my understanding from the minister is clearly that he said he had not seen the letter that Judge Mackay refers to written by Mr. Pateras, which contains allegations of interference by Mr. Ouellet, so the minister is simply assuming that the allegations refer to a speech made outside the court. The minister is nodding to that. So that we may be perfectly clear as to the allegations in mind here, will the minister take steps to speak to the hon. member for Papineau to obtain a copy of that letter and table it so we can see clearly what Mr. Pateras had in mind in terms of what he regarded as interference?

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Basford: I do not want to accept the hypothesis upon which the question is based. The letter was written, as I understand it, and I was going on information and belief and not on conjecture, by Crown counsel in the case who was, of course, acting for me. I will ask him if he has a copy of that letter and see whether it is proper to table it.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE WITH JUDICIARY—SUGGESTION MR. DRURY RESUBMIT RESIGNATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): For my final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I should like to go back to the Minister of Public Works. I would ask him, since the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs submitted his resignation to the Prime Minister on totally specious grounds, yet it was accepted, will the minister reconsider his position, resubmit his resignation and urge the Prime Minister to accept it?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With due respect, that is a question that has been dealt with previously.

[Translation]

ALLEGED INTERVENTION OF JUDGE MACKAY INTO GOVERNMENT—POSSIBLE HARASSMENT OF FRENCH CANADIAN MINISTER

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Since it becomes increasingly obvious in the deadlock brought on by the "judges affair" that Mr. Justice Mackay interfered with administrative authorities, does the Prime Minister intend to establish a royal commission of inquiry to determine whether the Anglo-Saxon judicial establishment of Montreal has not really conspired to harass a French-Canadian minister who did not hesitate to denounce trusts?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the premise of the question were founded, I assume the way to institute such an inquiry would be to refer the matter to the council of judges which is competent to look into the conduct of judges. I said "if the premise were founded," but the fact that this premise appears in a question asked here in this House seems to answer in part the question asked by the leader of the Progressive Conservatives in connection with the existence of rumours.

POSSIBILITY OF INQUIRY INTO JUDGE MACKAY'S ALLEGATIONS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether in his own view there would be grounds for an inquiry into the allegations of Judge Mackay?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I wanted to indicate, the answer to that question cannot be given by the government. If there is an allegation of illegal or improper conduct against a judge, it does not rest with the government to make an investigation in the matter, but rather with the council of the magistrate, primarily with the chief justice of the court involved. The only proper way to answer that question would be to initiate impeachment procedures, that is accuse a judge at the bar of the House, and the government does not intend to proceed in such a way.

* * *

● (1430)

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF "TIMMY" FOR 1976

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before carrying on with the question period I know hon. members would want to join with me in calling attention to the presence in our galleries at this moment of a very important visitor, a Canadian but an important visitor to the House of Commons just the same, in the person of Kevin Collins from Orillia. He is not probably known under that identity but he is the "Timmy" for the Easter Seal Campaign for 1976.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PRIME MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF CONTENT OF CONVERSATION BETWEEN MR. DRURY AND MR. OUELLET CONCERNING INTERVENTION WITH JUDGE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Allard.]

In refusing the resignation of the Minister of Public Works, the Prime Minister said he sympathized with his good intentions. In reaching that conclusion I assume the Prime Minister went into some detail about the question of intent, and that involved the conversation with the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Before his decision on Friday afternoon regarding the Minister of Public Works, did the Prime Minister not closely question both ministers on that conversation and if so would he give the details with particular reference to the intent of the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker; I did satisfy myself on that aspect of it. I think it is fair to say from Justice Hugessen's report to the Chief Justice that he also was satisfied that the intentions were good and honourable. On that basis I felt I was justified in accepting the intentions of the minister, as understood by me and by the Associate Chief Justice himself.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, we have heard the Minister of Public Works on several occasions state that he accepts full responsibility. Of course, that begs the question because we do not know who had been told to approach the judge in the first instance. The Prime Minister indicated he had a conversation with both his ministers. Would he now advise the House whether he concluded it was the idea of the Minister of Public Works to approach the judge, the idea of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to approach the judge, or was it a joint exercise in which the Minister of Public Works was to carry out the execution of the intent regarding approaching the judge?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, apart from referring the hon. member to the record, the only thing I can add is that one minister said that he made a suggestion to the other. The other said he took the responsibility for phoning the judge—took it on his own. I do not know what the hon. member would want me to say beyond that, except perhaps I do not think the Minister of Public Works would have taken an order from any minister, particularly a junior minister, to do something he did not think was proper for hi n to do at that time.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I assume that this was a joint venture on the part of the Minister of Public Works and the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in which the Minister of Public Works was to carry out the intent which was to approach the judge.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member can describe it as a joint venture if he wishes.

* * *

[Translation]

FISHERIES

ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH SEAL HUNT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State (Fisheries), but in his absence I shall ask the Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries or his parliamentary secretary.

Has the minister or his officials now any control over the members of the Greenpeace Foundation or other characters of the same kind who are at present engaged in illegal interference, this time on the ice of the Atlantic and the Gulf of St. Lawrence where the seal hunt is taking place?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak on behalf of the Minister of Fisheries since he is the one who has dealt with this matter, and in a most particular way. I think he will be here within a few days. When he arrives in the House early next week, I shall ask him to answer the hon. member.

* * *

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DATE PRIME MINISTER KNEW THE CONTENT AND PURPOSE OF MR. DRURY'S CALL TO JUDGE HUGESSEN—POSSIBILITY CALL WAS INTIMIDATING

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I was rather interested in the answer given by the Prime Minister to the hon. member for Hamilton West. Yesterday, as recorded at page 11866 of Hansard the Prime Minister, referring to the time before Justice Deschênes' letter, said that he had the version of both the Minister of Public Works and the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and, according to both versions, there had not only been no illegality; there had been no impropriety. Maybe the Prime Minister would clarify this without equivocation. Had he been told by either minister that the call was on the request of the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and that it was intended to explore how the matter could be settled and to report the possibility of a confrontation, and if so, when was he told that? Was it before the Monday he refers to when he had them in or was it after the Monday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The first answer, Mr. Speaker, is no. The second answer is: not applicable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, we continue to be stonewalled in respect of information. Maybe I could put this question to the Prime Minister. Mr. Speaker, I would have thought some of those members would want the Prime Minister to hear so that he could answer. It is up to them. Since the Associate Chief Justice got the impression that the minister was trying to head off a confrontation with the court, does the Prime Minister recognize that not only was the call itself inappropriate but the substance of the conversation with regard to the executive and its perception of the proceedings could have been influential and intimidating?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the question seems hypothetical. Could it have been such? The answer is, I suppose it could but in the opinion of the judge it was not.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, let me put it this way, Mr. Speaker. From the version of both ministers does the Prime Minister now take it that it was influential and intimidating?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I really must repeat a little of what I said on Tuesday on the nature of the proceedings. This is not an instance where the Crown, in a criminal proceeding, is indicting or committing another person to answer for an offence. This is a case where the court itself finds it is aggrieved and as the aggrieved party charges another person with a criminal offence. In such cases the time honoured way of purging that offence, alleged or real, is to get an apology through the courts. What was attempted by the Minister of Public Works was to see if that apology could be forthcoming in a way which would purge the offence. There is nothing illegal in this. It was found improper and for that reason I do not condone the actions, but I wish the hon. member would get back to the origin of this. It is one individual against another, one party which feels aggrieved and the other party which either directly or indirectly wished to say: "I want to apologize; what kind of apology do you want"? Do not forget the origin of this before trying to—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

● (1440)

[Translation]

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT SUBSIDIES BE INCREASED

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, to whom I have given notice of my question.

Following a telephone call on Tuesday with the vice-president of the Executive of the City of Montreal, I have learned that 50 per cent of the subsidies granted to non-profit-making corporations are contributed by the federal government, and 25 per cent by municipalities. It seems that the 25 per cent share contributed by Quebec would not presently be granted to those groups, since the agreements between the province and the federal government are not yet settled. Could the Minister tell the House when he intends to sign this agreement in order that those groups may get 100 per cent of those subsidies rather than 75 per cent?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his notice because I can now clarify an answer to a question, I believe, posed last week or recently, which I misunderstood. In so far as the arrangement with Quebec and Montreal is concerned, this does not apply to non-profit housing. Non-profit housing rehabilitation subsidies are available regardless of locality as long as it is a non-profit operation, so that they need not be in those areas designated under the special arrangement that has been worked out for the city of Montreal.

While I am on my feet, I might mention also that the rehabilitation loan limits have been increased from $5,000 to $10,000 per unit, and the forgiveness of grant portion has been increased from $2,500 to $3,750.

* * *

AUDITOR GENERAL

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION GOVERNING FUNCTIONS

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Bearing in mind that roughly a year has passed since the issue of the report of the Independent Review Committee, will the minister indicate the extent of progress on a new act governing the functioning and responsibilities of the Auditor General, and when we may expect to see this new act brought before the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we are through considering the report in Cabinet. We have made the decisions pursuant to this report, and the legislation is now being prepared by the Department of Justice; as soon as the legislation will be ready, we will be able to proceed, but I am afraid that it will take a few more months.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SEARCH AND RESCUE OPERATIONS ON PACIFIC COAST—EQUIPMENT NEEDED FOR NIGHT OPERATIONS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence and it arises out of the serious loss of some five ships and two men in the present herring fishing season on the Pacific coast, some 14 men last year, and the Soper report shows that the Atlantic losses are equally disturbing. In view of the fact that most of the rescue operation, particularly at night, has been carried on through the generosity and co-operation of our neighbour to the south, how soon will it be possible to have equipment so that rescue operations can be carried on at night so that we will not have these sad losses of men and ships?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, of course we do have the equipment; we have three helicopters and three Buffalo aircraft stationed at Comox. We also have a Ministry of Transport helicopter further north and we have the support of our operational aircraft in the area. We have a reciprocal arrangement with the United States on both coasts. We tend to assist the U.S. more on the east coast; they assist us more on the west coast. I should point out also that Maritime rescue is the responsibility of the Department of Transport. The Department of National Defence does not have a Maritime rescue capability but we have a very effective air-search capability.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): While the minister says that we have some equipment, I am sure he is also aware of the fact that our equipment is not operational at night, and unfortunately storms do not confine themselves to daylight hours. Does the Department of National Defence intend to equip helicopters with night lights and with equipment so that sea-rescue operations can be carried out during the night hours, because if the minister will not do that, the equipment is simply for daylight operations and at present there is a good deal of resentment about the fact that we have to depend on the generosity of the Americans to look after men wrecked at sea?

Mr. Richardson: It is not correct that we only have a day time capability. Our equipment is capable of night search, but I admit it is not as effective as the equipment that is being used at present on the west coast by the Americans.

REQUEST FOR TWENTY-FOUR HOUR OPERATION OF SEARCH AND RESCUE CO-ORDINATING CENTRE, HALIFAX

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that his department has the co-ordinating responsibility for search and rescue and landings at sea and hence has a supervisory role over the Canadian coastguard, and in view of the seemingly ineffective capability of the co-ordinating centre in Halifax to respond promptly, may I ask the minister whether he is now considering, in light of the recent tragedies we have had in Newfoundland, deployment of search and rescue aircraft in Newfoundland and placing the search and rescue co-ordination centre in Halifax on a full 24 hour operational capability.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): I think that the answer to that was demonstrated in the last few days when the Cape Freels was lost due to a fire at one o'clock in the morning and all 27 personnel were saved by search and rescue carried out by the Canadian armed forces and Department of Transport personnel.

REQUEST FOR LIST OF BASES TO BE CLOSED—EFFECT OF BASE CLOSURES ON SEARCH AND RESCUE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and is premised on the understanding that we now have a final report with respect to base consolidation and base closure. Could he indicate to the House how many bases are on that list, either with respect to closure or consolidation?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, I will be taking the report to cabinet shortly.

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder if the minister could indicate, relative to the questions asked by two previous speakers this afternoon, whether or not the consolidation of closure of bases will affect in any way, in the sense of deteriorating or running down further, our capability for good search and rescue on both coasts?

Mr. Richardson: No, Mr. Speaker, we will be maintaining and in fact improving our search and rescue capability.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBILITY OF INTRODUCTION OF EMERGENCY MEASURES AND PROVISIONS COVERING OPERATION IN CANADA OF FOREIGN POLICE FORCES

Mr. Jack Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: —I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In light of what may well be a difficult year for peace and security in some parts of Canada, would it be correct to assume that after the peace and security legislation passes this House the Minister of Justice will be putting before the House legislation dealing with the Emergency Powers Act or something along that line?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): I think this is probably one of those rare occasions when I can speak on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition and welcome the hon. member back.

An hon. Member: Cheap shot!

An hon. Member: Where have you been?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with the premise of the hon. member's question that the peace and security measures will be passed by the House and, I hope, get into committee as quickly as possible so that they could be dealt with in detail there.

With regard to the latter part of the hon. member's question, I think that the answers we have given in the past stand and that is that the matter is being considered.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the answer of the minister that the answers in the past stand is not a very clarifying answer. Would it be logical to assume that, in anticipation of events to take place later this year, there will be an act with regard to foreign police services being allowed to operate in this country? Would that be logical or could the minister answer that?

● (1450)

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to speculate on that. As we have said in the past we are working on measures and have been for some time. I would not want to speculate on when they would be introduced nor would I want the hon. member to speculate.

* * *

POST OFFICE

DELAY IN FINAL PAYMENT FOR THOSE WHOSE EMPLOYMENT TERMINATED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Postmaster General concerns the termination procedures in effect for post office employees. It stems from a termination in Vancouver which took place on December 19, 1975. I should like to quote from a letter I received from the personnel manager of the B.C. and Yukon Postal District in Vancouver which says—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In all fairness I think the hon. member ought to try to make, as usual, the preamble as short as possible and put the question directly.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, the sentence I think I must quote in order make the question relevant is this:

> Regretfully, service from our central pay office in Ottawa has deteriorated to such an extent that we can only guess his final pay will reach us about mid-March.

Does the Postmaster General think it just that his department should be allowed to force terminated employees to exist for three months without their final pay?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the answer is, of course not. I should like, however, to analyse the whole letter, if the hon. member would be kind enough to send me a copy. The whole question of pay does not come under the Post Office but under the Department of Supply and Services.

EFFECT OF STRIKES ON PAY OF RURAL COURIERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the Postmaster General. Does the minister think it fair or just that the people in charge of rural delivery receive only 50 per cent of their pay when they have been dislocated by a strike over which they have no control?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, this has been the normal practice. In all strikes, legal or otherwise, there is a certain amount of unfairness but people know when they sign the contracts, specifically, the remuneration they will receive when strikes occur in the Post Office, so the method of determining remuneration in this case was precisely the same as in the last dozen or so strikes over the last four or five years.

* * *

NUCLEAR LIABILITY ACT

DATE OF PROCLAMATION—REASON FOR DELAY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and is based on the fact that documents tabled in this House on February 19 indicate that there are 109 known or suspected radioactive sites in Canada which could result in radiation damage to people or property. Given the clear federal responsibility to protect Canadians from the consequences of nuclear accidents and to provide compensation for any damage related to nuclear facility operations, could the minister tell the House when the government intends to proclaim the Nuclear Liability Act which was passed by this parliament some six years ago?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is as soon as possible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: About six years or so.

Mr. Gillespie: I should like to add that I very much share the concern of the hon. member opposite. I am not at all satisfied with the pace of events with respect to negotiating the details with the private insurers. I am told it is a very technical question. I would invite the hon. member to attend the meeting of the standing committee this evening where there will be officials who can go into this matter in considerable detail.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Regarding the minister's comments with respect to insurance companies, am I to take it that it is now the policy of this government to wait until certain interest groups concerned with specific legislation have come to an arrangement with the government before any specific piece of legislation relating to that has been proclaimed by the government?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, there are certain things that have to be done before the act can be proclaimed. One of them is to ensure that insurance policies will cover the insurable risk and that is being negotiated.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REASON MR. DRURY WOULD MENTION BASELESS RUMOURS TO JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. It arises out of the quite reasonable expression of his respect for the integrity and depth in the Associate Chief Justice Hugessen of the Superior Court of Quebec. Would the minister please tell the House why he would bother a judge of the integrity which he has described, and which we accept, with what the minister has termed as baseless rumours? Why would he bother bringing that to a judge of this man's character?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think it is probably useful, and perhaps lends some colour, to denial of a rumour and a statement of lack of belief in a rumour for a person to have it directly from him if that is the case.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the answer which the minister has just given and certain answers given just a few moments ago in the course of the question period, do I take it from the minister that he is denying categorically that there was any discussion of this question of the ganging up on certain ministers in the cabinet and among the cabinet in a formal or informal way? Is he denying that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My recollection is that that precise question was put earlier this day. I would hear the argument at three o'clock, but the question was put in specific terms by an hon. member earlier in this question period as to whether or not that matter was discussed. My recollection is that the minister answered, in fact. In any case, I could take an argument in a minute or two about that point.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DATE OF PASSAGE OF PEACE AND SECURITY LEGISLATION

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council. In view of the fact that dangerous offenders are loose in Vancouver and also in the riding of Calgary North, and the murder and the hostage taking that has become endemic in the cities of Canada, the violence that is everywhere in this nation, the movement of criminals and guns across this country as speedily and freely as airline pilots, when can we expect to get down to completing legislation to control dangerous offenders and guns in order to achieve peace and security for the people of Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this has been one of the concerns of the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: We have tried to bring important legislation before the House from time to time recently with moderate success only. I hope we do better in the future.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S RESERVATIONS ABOUT ENVIRONMENTAL EFFECT OF DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—POSSIBLE PROTESTS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. It arises from the report today that the cabinet is about to make a decision on drilling permits for offshore drilling in the Beaufort Sea. On February 23, the minister indicated to the House that he was concerned that the technology was not sufficiently advanced for a permit. He indicated:

> ... if there should be a blow-out of some kind whether we have the facilities to really make a decent clean-up so that all the ecology is not destroyed.

Would the minister inform the House today whether he still has reservations on those very important matters that he raised in the House on February 23 or is he now satisfied that we can go ahead?

An hon. Member: Clean up the cabinet first.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I think I have expressed my concern about this situation. I still am concerned and as far as what is decided, it is up to cabinet to make the decision, not me. If the hon. member wants to know if the permit has been granted, this comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. The same report indicated that the United States authorities on the Alaskan slope were very concerned about the potential for pollution of their own shores in the Prudhoe Bay area. Would the minister advise if he has had representation or the government has had representation from the United States authorities expressing concern about the granting of these permits?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think that is the kind of question that should be put to the Secretary of State for External Affairs because that is the channel for such discussion.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DATE OF DECISION ON PERMITS FOR DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION OF BERGER REPORT BEFORE DECISION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can the minister confirm whether he and his cabinet colleagues have come to a decision on the proposed offshore drilling by Canmar Ltd. for this summer in the Beaufort Sea?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the matter is still before cabinet for decision, so the decision has not yet been taken.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. In view of the fact that Mr. Justice Berger recently has taken some evidence pertaining to offshore drilling in the Beaufort Sea, would the minister recommend to cabinet a request for an interim report on the subject from Mr. Justice Berger before cabinet makes its decision?

● (1500)

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to examine Mr. Justice Berger's records and take his information into account.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CAMBODIA—GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO OBTAIN INFORMATION ON SITUATION

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Perhaps the acting minister will answer. In the light of extremely disturbing reports coming out of Thailand regarding conditions in Cambodia and involving, apparently, a considerable slaughter of the populace, has the Canadian government made any attempt to acquaint itself with the situation there?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, personally, I have not kept in close touch, but I am sure my department has. I shall try to ascertain the facts and get in touch with the hon. member.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A few moments ago, at the end of the question period, I directed a question to the Minister of Public Works but Your Honour decided that the question has been asked before, and answered. The hon. member for Vancouver South asked a question about discussions. As I recall, his question concerned an apprehended confrontation between the judiciary and the executive branch of government. My question related specifically to the ganging-up previously referred to.

Paraphrasing my question, I asked the minister if he could deny categorically that the ganging up had been discussed formally or informally by members of the cabinet. The question related to the subsequent visit which the minister made to the court. I suggest, first, that that is not repetitious. Second, even if the question is repetitive, the Chair has ruled in the last ten days that the point to be considered is not so much on whether the question is repetitive but, rather, on the quality of the answer. It is important either to dispose of the question now or to obtain an answer, as the government insists upon not providing a proper vehicle for the kind of examination we deem necessary and which was the subject matter of my earlier motion today under Standing Order 43.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I think the hon. gentleman is trying to discover who has been inspiring me. It may be unfair to suggest this, but I witnessed the fact that that was not his question. He was put up to it by somebody else. Perhaps that should not affect the quality of the question, and I do not think it does.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: The same old arrogance.

Mr. Drury: Although the idea is somebody else's, he still gets credit for it.

Mr. Stanfield: Utter nonsense. Rubbish.

Mr. Drury: I am utterly appalled—

Mr. Stanfield: You should be.

Mr. Drury: —that the distinguished House leader of the Conservative party should expect to get information from a member of cabinet on the details of proceedings in cabinet.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Once more, it is difficult to determine, not so much whether questions are repetitious of previous questions but whether they have been answered previously. The rule is difficult to enforce. For several days, we have heard questioning on the same subject. Perhaps the Chair might be forgiven on this occasion for thinking that the question has been answered.

In any event, in replying to the point of order the minister made a response. If the hon. member feels aggrieved, and if an examination of the record shows that his question was not dealt with by the minister on previous occasions, perhaps the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton will put the question again.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, although we have listened for a couple of weeks to repetitive questions, I was not able to catch the attention of the Chair. For the last two days I attempted to ask a question of great concern to my constituency and I repeatedly failed to gain Your Honour's attention. Since I was not able to ask my question, I shall put it on the record now—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fairweather: You have caucus every other day.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member wants commiseration he might discuss the matter with three or four of his colleagues who are senior to him and tried to get the floor today, and with the entire caucus of the Créditiste party the members of which have been seeking to ask questions on other matters. The Chair has been through a difficult time these last few days in trying to focus on what is obviously an important subject, sometimes at the expense of hon. members who want to ask questions about other subjects.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I heard with considerable interest what you have just told the Liberal member. It is bad enough that we should have been allowed only one question today without your using us to make the Liberals sit down.

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Today is Thursday.

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, an hon. member asks how I know it is Thursday. Perhaps that is because it is the one question the government is prepared to answer. I want to raise the usual question concerning the business of the House. It is directed to the government House leader.

[Mr. Drury.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am glad for the confirmation that it is Thursday. I am a little confused, with all the argument that has been taking place in the House: it seems to me that today has been much the same as Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. If I may announce the business, this afternoon I hope we will complete consideration on second reading of Bill C-68. We will then continue, as I indicated, to begin debate on the anti-inflation bill. When that is disposed of, we will revert to Bill C-83. Tomorrow is an allotted day, and Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week are allotted days. The business announced should cover today and Monday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the government House leader? Since it is now three full weeks since the welcome announcement of the Minister of Veterans Affairs concerning legislation respecting Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —is it not now possible for the minister to indicate on what day that bill will be on the order paper?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I cannot be precise. I am happy to note the restored interest of the hon. member in the business of the House. I expect that the bill probably will be before the cabinet committee on legislation and House planning at the beginning of the week.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are as slow as ever.

* * *

[Translation]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Ninth report of Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs—Mr. Boulanger.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Second report of Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on the National Capital Region—Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) (for co-Chairman).

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Sixth report of Standing Committee on Regional Development—Mr. Lumley.

[Editor's Note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

QUARANTINE ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND APPLICATION TO DANGEROUS DISEASES

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved for leave to introduce Bill S-31, to amend the Quarantine Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

● (1510)

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTION TO COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING ONTARIO

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the hon. members for Lincoln (Mr. Andres), York South (Mrs. Appolloni), London East (Mr. Turner), Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon), Kent-Essex (Mr. Daudlin), Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas), Wellington (Mr. Maine), London West (Mr. Buchanan), Hamilton East (Mr. Munro), and Niagara Falls (Mr. Young), has been filed with me pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, chapter E-2, RSC 1970, to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario.

If the House agrees, I would suggest we follow past practice and print the text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,674, 3,845, 3,848 and 4,942.

[Text]

PLACE DU PORTAGE COMPLEX—COSTS

Question No. 3,674—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What is the total cost of construction of the new Place du Portage complex in Hull over the original estimates?

2. What is the estimated cost of (a) site acquisition (b) architectural design (c) mechanical and electrical engineering services (d) foundation structure (e) landscaping and interior design and, in each case, what is the name of the firm who has been awarded the contract?

3. (a) What was the purchase price of the site (b) from whom was it purchased (c) how was the decision reached as to the cost of the property?

4. What is the estimated (a) annual operating cost of the building (b) total amount of useable floor space?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Public Works and National Capital Commission as follows: 1. Place du Portage—Phase I, $7,223,774; Place du Portage—Phase II, $4,668,615; Parking Garage—Former City Hall Site, $166,412.

2. (a) Approximately $412,000, exclusive of purchase price reported under Part 3(a), covered legal, appraisal and other incidental expenses. (b) Phase I—$361,981, Daniel E. Lazosky; Phase II—$705,267, Daniel E. Lazosky; Parking Garage—Former City Hall Site, $95,500, Labrecque, Vezina and Associates. (c) Costs associated with this service are included in estimated cost shown for architectural design. The Standard Consultant Agreement provides for mechanical and electrical services which is part of the basic fee for prime consultants, therefore no detailed cost is available. (d) Phase I—$1,299,640—Thomas Fuller Construction (1958) Limited; Phase II—$1,871,006—Pitts Quebec Limited ($618,540) and V.K. Mason Construction Limited ($1,252,466). Parking Garage—Former City Hall Site—$3,266,838, V.K. Mason Construction Limited ($689,935), J.R.B. Construction ($65,779) and Thomas Fuller Construction Co. (1958) Limited ($2,511,124). (e) Landscaping: Insofar as landscaping costs are concerned, design and construction costs identified to date amount to about $2,575,000. Hough, Stansbury Associates, Toronto, has been awarded contracts for landscape design. Cramer Nursery, Ltd., Montreal, and Thomas Fuller Construction Co. (1958), Ltd., Ottawa, have been awarded contracts for landscape construction. Interior Design: Phase I—$219,559—Daniel E. Lazosky; Phase II—$142,946—Forrest Bodrug; Parking Garage—Former City Hall Site—Nil.

3. (a) $2,748,878.65. (b) The land assembly involved 20 individual owners, the City of Hull and a larger holding from Portage Inc. (c) Each individual property was appraised by independent appraisers establishing the current market value at the time, in accordance with the normal standards and procedures of the appraisal profession.

4. (a) Phase I—$375,333.; Phase II—$325,613.; Parking Garage—Former City Hall Site—$42,158. (b) Phase I—328,438 square feet; Phase II—351,681 square feet; Parking Garage—Former City Hall Site—120,000 square feet.

PEI—FISHING SECTOR

Question No. 3,845—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, did members of DREE or the Joint Advisory Board hold discussions of any sort as part of the drafting process for the Phase 2 Agreement, with persons engaged in fishing, fish processing or their representatives and, if so (a) on what date (b) with whom (c) on what topic (d) for what purpose?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: In the process of developing the Phase II Agreement, members of DREE met with a cross section of people engaged in fishing and fish processing and as well received the views of fishermen's organizations from the province. Records of dates, participants' names, or topics of discussion were not kept.

Order Paper Questions

PEI—FISHING SECTOR

Question No. 3,848—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, have changes been made in the (a) sectoral strategy (b) objectives (c) programmes for Phase 2 as a result of the Phase 1 evaluation report by Professor Copes and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: (a), (b) and (c): The study by Professor Copes was one factor that was considered when changed objectives, strategies and programs were being developed for Phase II. No changes have been made purely as a result of this study.

"OH! CANADA" ALBUM

Question No. 4,942—Mr. Reynolds:

In relation to the Commissioner of Official Languages' Oh! Canada album, how many (a) were made and at what cost (b) have been distributed and to whom (c) are planned for distribution in the future?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The Commissioner of Official Languages reports directly to Parliament and not through a minister. Questions can be made directly to him privately.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 3,977 and 4,061 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—FUNDS FOR WELFARE SERVICES

Question No. 3,977—Mr. Matte:

1. Has the Department of National Health and Welfare ever granted funds for the development and the efficiency of welfare services in Canada and, if so, what was the total amount?

2. For each such grant, what was (a) the name of the recipient (b) its purpose (c) the amount (d) the year it was made?

Return tabled.

MONEY APPROVED BY NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 4,061—Mr. Marshall:

1. Of the total amount of money approved by the Newfoundland and Labrador Development Corporation, for each year (a) 1971-72 (b) 1972-73 (c) 1973-74 (d) 1974-75 (e) 1975-76, what was the (i) breakdown by industry classification (ii) percentage breakdown by industry (iii) number of individual projects (iv) distribution by electoral districts?

2. For the same years, by electoral district, how many (a) inquiries were received (b) applications were (i) approved (ii) rejected?

[Mr. McIsaac.]

3. What is the breakdown of operating costs of the Corporation for each year since its inception?

Return tabled.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, March 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before permitting the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) to resume speaking, may I indicate that in accordance with our records there remain exactly 20 minutes pursuant to the order previously made under Standing Order 75C. Therefore, at 3.35 this afternoon I will interrupt proceedings and put the questions necessary to dispose of the motion now before the House.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the traditional courtesies of the House, it will be my intention to share some of the time remaining with the minister so that he might be permitted to answer some of the points that have been made on this side. However, I want to impose upon the minister three conditions to that sharing of time. First, and I am sure he will agree with this, that he direct himself to the question of the Yukon and Northwest Territories participating in federal-provincial conferences, not on an observer basis but on the basis of being heard; second, that he deal with the status of the transference of the administration over health services in the Yukon territory to the territorial government; third, and I am sure he will agree with this, that he will not be heavy-handedly partisan in his use of the time which I intend to leave him.

Before proceeding, I want to say with respect to yesterday's Hansard, page 11894, at the foot of the page in the left-hand column, there appears a statement attributed to me. It reads:

The minister belonged to one scheme for 19 years.

The reference is to the then minister of justice. However, that was not the reference I made. I said that I had belonged to the Ontario scheme for 19 years. The point I was making was that that was my choice, as indeed it was the minister's.

I exposed last night, primarily for the consideration of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) rather than the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), circumstances which prevailed in the Yukon concerning certain charges made by an employee of the minister. The circumstances appeared to indicate some pressure being brought to bear upon the minister's employee to withdraw those charges. I hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will consult his colleague with regard to my suggestion that an investigation be held. I want to say that it was being made only for the purpose of conveying, at least to the public, the assurance that indeed there are no double standards in the administration of justice. Should the investigation disclose—and I certainly hope it does not—that there has been a transgression of the provisions of this section of the Criminal Code, the government will lose no time in dealing with the evidence on that basis.

There are two important matters that I want to raise before resuming my seat. One has to do with questions that would have been raised by the member of the Yukon legislative council and the executive committee member—concerning herself with health matters in the Yukon had she been given the opportunity to speak. That is the question of urging the minister to give priority to expediting the transference of responsibility for the administration of health services in the Yukon—here I do not speak for the Northwest Territories—from the federal government to the territorial government. This matter is high on the priority of the Yukon legislative assembly. Had she been able to urge upon the minister that view, as part of the discussions taking place with respect to federal-provincial arrangements, she would have done so. I am sure she has done so in private, but that is not sufficient.

I understand that the minister has appointed a consultant, Jack Flemming, an employee of the department, to set up a timetable for the transfer. May I get this through to the minister: there is nothing complicated about this transfer, no more so than there were any complications attendant upon the transference of the Alaska highway system to the territorial government from the federal government. With respect to the employees, they are given a choice. They go with the transference, as they did in Public Works, or they are in other positions. I do not think there is any real complexity about effecting that transfer without delay. That is one point I would like the minister to deal with in exchange for the courtesy I am going to afford him to wind up this debate.

I do not think there will be any financial problems as far as employees at the federal level are concerned. Once they transfer to the territorial level, they will be at least as well off, and in some cases a little better off. Some positions eventually, of course, will go by attrition. However, the most important factor in effecting the transference without delay is to enable the territorial legislature to apply its own priorities rather than federal government factors taking priority. I might add, for the minister's information, that the full support of the Yukon Medical Association is behind the acceleration of this transference.

With respect to the cost-sharing arrangements, this is one matter that disturbs me. I well recall the debate in this House which set up the medicare scheme. I well recall opposing it simply because we were not accorded the opportunity of participating. The present government is known for adopting stances one minute which are the direct opposite of those taken the minute before. I well recall the formulas which were developed for the purpose of constructing cost-sharing arrangements. The formulas put forward at that time were those upon which we acted; they were the basis for measures which were taken in the two northern territories. Now we find the federal government backing away from those proposals, unilaterally as far as the northern territories are concerned, and we have no recourse, no say one way or the other as to how it will affect us.

● (1520)

The fact is that in the first year we shall probably be all right in the Yukon because of the assurances given last October by the minister to the health ministers who attended the conference at that time. The Yukon and Northwest Territories have no input whatsoever, so there is complete inability to plan as far as both territorial governments are concerned. In my view, this is a compelling argument for the minister to set up a structure which would allow a meaningful input by territorial representatives at federal-provincial conferences on health matters. I do not mean at the deputy minister or official level, but at the political level. If we are to be expected to pay our share of the cost, if we are to be burdened with added cost in the Yukon, we should have a part to play in the decision-making process.

One example of the manner in which federal decisions made unilaterally can affect us is to be found in the closing of one wing of the Charles Camsell Hospital in Edmonton. This has thrown a burden on the Yukon and Northwest Territories of looking after patients who are no longer acceptable at Camsell; they must be cared for in territorial hospitals unless, of course, they are seriously ill, in which case they are taken outside in any event. I understand this matter is now being discussed with the Yukon Medical Association and that they are not at all happy about this added burden which is being placed upon hospital facilities in the north.

There are other representations I could make with respect to the application of this legislation as it affects the north, but the chief complaint we have is the fact that we are not heard when conferences are held; we have no part in the decision-making process. It would not detract at all—indeed, I think it would be helpful to the functioning of these conferences—if the minister were to back down and permit territorial representatives from the elected councils to be heard as part and parcel of the design and operation of health schemes which the federal government expects to operate in the two territories, with costs being shared by the central administration. I shall now allow the minister to close the debate.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like, first of all, to thank the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Neilsen) for his kindness in giving me some time to conclude this particular stage of the study of Bill C-68.

I would call the attention of hon. members to the fact that we have been debating this bill for a very long time. No fewer than 90 speeches have been made on it, most of them by members opposite, and I note particularly an attempted filibuster by members of the New Democratic Party. I submit there is a time for discussion and a time for decision, and that we have reached the time for decision on this matter. I thank the government House leader for having brought in an order requiring the House to make up its mind at last on the principle of this bill on second reading.

I shall be happy to discuss at length the content and objectives of the bill in committee as soon as the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs can be called. I hope the opposition will realize from these detailed studies that the bill is one which is required in current circumstances.

Mr. Orlikow: Tell that to the provinces.

Mr. Lalonde: The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has been heard plenty of times, and I suggest he should also listen a little. The hon. member for Yukon talked about the representation of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories at federal-provincial conferences. He raised this matter in relation to conferences of ministers of health, but I submit to him that the question is obviously much broader than that: it relates to all federal-provincial conferences and to the status which should be given to the two territories in relation to the provinces and the federal government.

I have already indicated that the elected representatives or the appointed officials of the territories are welcome at these conferences. They are regularly invited. They can participate as observers or as part of the federal delegation. My door has always been open to them and I have frequent contacts with them. One might say that in fact they are in a privileged situation which enables them to talk, if they wish to do so, with federal ministers and officials at a very early stage in the development of policy. It is up to them to use the opportunities available to them as part of the federal delegation. I can, of course, understand their interest in participating at these conferences as full-fledged members, but that is a question which goes well beyond the field of health and welfare.

As for the transfer of health services to the Yukon, I submit the hon. member is a little late in raising this issue. I agreed to the transfer of health services in the course of the last 12 months. The hon. member drew an analogy with the transfer of the Alaska highway. I do not think it is a well chosen analogy, because a health care system is not very much like a highway; it is a more complex operation and it has to be treated with extreme care. The timetable I have proposed has been agreed upon by the northern representatives and there is no problem, as far as the elected representatives are concerned with respect to the timetable I have in mind. I understand the transfer is progressing normally, and I certainly look forward to the day when the Yukon will have full responsibility for the administration of health services for its own citizens. Obviously, this will have to be done co-operatively and will take some time.

● (1530)

With regard to the particular point about Dr. Connolly, I have investigated the matter with my officials and I have been unable to find any evidence of the threat of dismissal which the hon. member indicated. Nevertheless, the hon. member has raised a legal question which I am sure the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) will want to examine with his officials.

May I take the three minutes remaining to thank, first of all, all hon. members on this side of the House for their contributions to the debate. Eighteen members on this side of the House have participated, and having listened to their speeches, and read their speeches when I was unable to be in the House, I have no hesitation in saying those 18 speeches were overwhelmingly better than the 62 others made by members of the opposition. The most preposterous statements have been made during the course of this debate by the opposition, the worst coming from the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to hurt the feelings of opposition members, but I think they are beginning to realize what a mistake they made in opposing this bill. Hon. members opposite have said that this bill will be the end of hospital insurance. The bill has nothing to do with hospital insurance. I can understand members of the official opposition, particularly those from Ontario, raising this issue, but I submit they were completely out of order in doing so. They should be members of the Ontario legislature, not members of this House.

Another amazing complaint which has been made regularly is that there has been a lack of federal-provincial consultation. If ever there has been an area where there has been consultation over the last three or four years, it is this area. We have had regular meetings between ministers and officials and the discussions have been extremely productive. The speeches of some opposition members in this debate have really been like voices from the past. They are living in another age and are quite unacquainted with what has been going on in this field during the last few years. I shall have more to say about this subject at a later stage, Mr. Speaker. In the short time at my disposal, I shall merely say that extensive consultations have taken place, not only on this bill but on the whole question of health services. Yesterday and the day before there was a federal-provincial meeting of deputy ministers that went very well indeed. I will be meeting with the provincial ministers at the end of April, and I am sure this, too, will go well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being 3.35 o'clock p.m., pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 75C it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill now before the House. The question is on the amendment. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members. The bells will ring for 15 minutes.

● (1550)

Following the ringing of the bells:

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members will realize that there is a possibility that two questions will have to be put. May I assume that in the event two questions have to be put we may proceed with both without the necessity of ringing the bells again.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Gilbert) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 120)

YEAS

Messrs.

Alexander
Alkenbrack
Allard
Andre
(Calgary Centre)
Baker
(Grenville-Carleton)
Balfour
Benjamin
Brewin
Brisco
Broadbent
Cadieu
Caouette
(Villeneuve)
Clark
(Rocky Mountain)
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Darling
Dick Dinsdale
Dionne
(Kamouraska)
Douglas
(Nanaimo-Cowichan-
The Islands)
Elzinga
Epp
Fairweather
Firth
Forrestall
Fortin
Fraser
Friesen
Gilbert
Gillies
Grafftey
Halliday
Hamilton
(Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Holmes
Horner
Huntington
Hurlburt
Jarvis
Jelinek
Johnston
Kempling
Knowles
(Winnipeg
North Centre)
Knowles
(Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
La Salle
Lavoie
Lawrence
Leggatt
MacDonald
(Egmont)
MacDonald (Miss)
(Kingston and the Islands)
MacKay
MacLean
Malone
Masniuk
Matte
Mazankowski
McCain
McCleave
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinnon
Muir
Munro
(Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil
Nielsen
Nystrom
Oberle
Orlikow
O'Sullivan
Paproski
Patterson
Peters
Reynolds
Ritchie
Roche
Rondeau
Saltsman
Schellenberger
Scott
Skoreyko
Stanfield
Stevens
Stewart
(Marquette)
Symes
Towers
Wagner
Wenman
Whiteway
Wise
Woolliams—93.

NAYS

Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andras
(Port Arthur)
Andres
(Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Boulanger
Breau
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss)
(South Western Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle-Émard-Côte
Saint-Paul)
Caron
Chrétien
Clermont
Collenette
Comtois
Condon
Corbin
Corriveau
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
De Bané
Demers
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas
(Bruce-Grey)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Ethier
Fleming
Flynn
Foster
Francis
Gauthier
(Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Guay
(St. Boniface)
Guay
(Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harquail
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Jamieson
Joyal
Kaplan
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapointe
Leblanc
(Laurier)
Lee
Lessard
Loiselle
(Chambly)
Loiselle
(Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald
(Cardigan)
Macdonald
(Rosedale)
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Mackasey
Maine
Marceau
Marchand
(Langelier)
Marchand
(Kamloops-Cariboo)
Martin
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
O'Connell
Olivier
Parent
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Railton
Raines
Richardson
Roberts
Robinson
Rompkey
Rooney
Roy
(Timmins)
Roy
(Laval)
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Smith
(Saint-Jean)
Stanbury
Stollery
Tessier
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Whelan
Yanakis
Young—121.

● (1600)

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 121)

YEAS

Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andras
(Port Arthur)
Andres
(Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Boulanger
Breau
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss)
(South Western Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle-Émard-Côte
Saint-Paul)
Caron
Chrétien
Clermont
Collenette
Comtois
Condon
Corbin
Corriveau
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
De Bané
Demers
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas
(Bruce-Grey)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Ethier
Fleming
Flynn
Foster
Francis
Gauthier
(Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Guay
(St. Boniface)
Guay
(Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harquail
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Jamieson
Joyal
Kaplan
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Laniel
Lapointe
Leblanc
(Laurier)
Lee
Lessard
Loiselle
(Chambly)
Loiselle
(Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald
(Cardigan)
Macdonald
(Rosedale)
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Mackasey
Maine
Marceau
Marchand
(Langelier)
Marchand
(Kamloops-Cariboo)
Martin
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
O'Connell
Olivier
Parent
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Railton
Raines
Richardson
Roberts
Robinson
Rompkey
Rooney
Roy
(Timmins)
Roy
(Laval)
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Smith
(Saint-Jean)
Stanbury
Stollery
Tessier
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Whelan
Yanakis
Young—121.

NAYS
Messrs.

Alexander	Halliday	McCleave
Alkenbrack	Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)	McGrath
Allard	Hargrave	McKenzie
Andre (Calgary Centre)	Hees	McKinnon
Baker (Grenville-Carleton)	Hnatyshyn	Muir
Balfour	Holmes	Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Benjamin	Horner	Murta
Brewin	Huntington	Neil
Brisco	Hurlburt	Nielsen
Broadbent	Jarvis	Nystrom
Cadieu	Jelinek	Oberle
Caouette (Villeneuve)	Johnston	Orlikow
Clark (Rocky Mountain)	Kempling	O'Sullivan
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)	Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)	Paproski
Darling	Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)	Patterson
Dick	Korchinski	Peters
Dinsdale	La Salle	Reynolds
Dionne (Kamouraska)	Lavoie	Ritchie
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)	Lawrence	Roche
Elzinga	Leggatt	Rondeau
Epp	MacDonald (Egmont)	Saltsman
Fairweather	MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)	Schellenberger
Firth	MacKay	Scott
Forrestall	MacLean	Skoreyko
Fortin	Malone	Stanfield
Fraser	Masniuk	Stevens
Friesen	Matte	Stewart (Marquette)
Gilbert	Mazankowski	Symes
Gillies	McCain	Towers
Grafftey		Wagner
		Wenman
		Whiteway
		Wise
		Woolliams—93 .

● (1610)

Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO ADD NEW DEFINITIONS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-89 to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as the House will recall, last week I announced that on the recommendation of the Anti-Inflation Board all firms and employees in five industries which engage extensively in association bargaining, construction, trucking, grain handling, longshoring and shipping are being brought under the control program because of their strategic importance in containing and reducing inflation. I advised the House, in addition, that the government has decided to ask the Anti-Inflation Board to consider whether the property and casualty insurance industry should also be brought into the program, for the same reason. I should now like to take the opportunity to outline the amendments to the anti-inflation legislation proposed in Bill C-89, to indicate the nature of some of the further changes the government intends to make in the guidelines and to review the operation of the anti-inflation program to date.

Members will recall that at the time the program was first announced last October, I readily acknowledged the fact that we were entering a difficult and complex area, one in which few people in Canada had much experience. I emphasized that we fully appreciated the importance of maintaining close consultation with all groups in the economy affected by the guidelines and the importance of being prepared to make changes in the system as the need for them became apparent. The amendments to the legislation put forward in this bill, together with the alterations that are being made in the regulations, further testify to the government's readiness to bring forward changes in response to constructive representations from every quarter in an effort to increase both the fairness and effectiveness of the anti-inflation program.

First, let me indicate two significant changes that are being made in the regulations. At present, an exemption from the general guidelines is provided for compensation of workers up to $3.50 an hour or to permit a minimum rise in compensation of $600 a year. As the regulations now stand, these limits include not only wages and salaries but also any additional fringe benefits. The government believes the exemption from restraint for those in the lower income brackets should be made more generous and less complicated by applying the limit only to wages and salaries rather than to total compensation: or, to state it another way, the $3.50 will be calculated on the take-home pay and the fringe benefits will be in addition to that.

A relieving change of a parallel nature will also be made in the case of the guidelines relating to compensation received in the form of indirect incentive benefits such as bonuses and profit-sharing arrangements, ones which in many firms are very much related to the productivity of employees. At present, the permissible increase in such benefits is computed on the basis of the average indirect incentive payments received over the previous five years. In a number of cases, this rule has the effect of reducing the compensation available to an employee below that received in the previous 12-month period, which is contrary to the general intent of the guidelines. To remedy this shortcoming, we intend to allow an employer to use either the average of the previous five years or the incentive provided in the immediately preceding 12-month period as a basis for determining permissible increases in indirect incentive benefits under the guidelines. The $2,400 limit on the average increase in total compensation would, of course, continue to apply. Some additional changes of a more detailed nature will also be made in the guidelines, the nature of which will be indicated shortly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to outline the more important amendments being proposed in the legislation now before the House. Undoubtedly, the most significant change involves a series of amendments related to the difficult and contentious issue of the appeal system which has been the subject of what the government believes to be a considerable degree of misunderstanding. Let me explain how the proposed new system would work. As is the case at present, the Anti-Inflation Board would have the initial responsibility for considering whether any actual or proposed increase in prices, profits, compensation or dividends coming under the mandatory control program was permissible under the guidelines.

In the event the board provides notification of its opinion that an increase exceeded the guidelines, any person or group directly affected by that decision which chose to dispute it would have the right to so notify the board, which in turn would be required to refer the issue in question to the administrator. Subsequently any order issued by the administrator could be appealed to the Anti-Inflation Appeal Tribunal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Under this amended procedure it would be possible for a disputed opinion of the Anti-Inflation Board to be referred to the administrator for his consideration without the necessity of actually increasing prices or incomes contrary to a board opinion. In that way, the party or parties involved could avoid the risk of being found by the administrator to have contravened the guidelines and subject to the possible consequences of such a decision.

A second important change in the system involves a significant broadening of the right of appeal. At present, only the party or parties specifically named in an order of the administrator have the right to launch an appeal. A similiar right does not extend to those who may be directly affected by the order but not named in it. Under the revised system, those directly affected would be granted similar rights of appeal. This change has application, of course, in cases involving compensation where there are two parties to the issue. The legislation provides that an employee organization, for example a trade union or, in the case of unorganized workers, what is referred to as a "designated employee" chosen to represent workers who are not organized, may dispute opinions of the Anti-Inflation Board on compensation directly affecting their interests, requiring such issues to be referred to the administrator for his consideration. An employee organization or designated employee would also have the right to appeal an order of the administrator to the Anti-Inflation Appeal Tribunal and beyond, as now provided in the law. A similar right would be extended to employer organizations directly affected by guideline decisions.

Members will be familiar with many of the questions relating to the appeal process which I have been discussing which arose out of the case referred to the administrator involving an increase in compensation to employees of the Irving Pulp and Paper Co. Under this legislation, the way would be opened for an appeal to be launched against an order of the administrator by an employee group or a designated employee chosen to represent fellow workers who were formally associated in a group, and specifically to the collective bargaining unit in that particular company affected by the decision.

● (1620)

A third issue that arises relates to the question of increases in compensation in excess of the guidelines. Under present regulations, special factors may be taken into consideration; first, in the case of a group that operated under a compensation plan agreed to before January 1, 1974, which expired before October 14, 1975; second, in the case of a group which had not jointed in a new compensation plan before that time in October; and third, where one group had a historical relationship with another group. The regulations provide that in such circumstances an increase in compensation in excess of the guidelines may be granted for——such further amount that in the opinion of the Anti-Inflation Board is consistent with the objectives of the act.

It was always our intention that in the first instance the parties, and ultimately the administrator and the appeal tribunal, should be entitled to formulate their own judgment as to whether any increase in compensation beyond the guidelines was justifiable in such cases, and we propose to modify the regulations shortly to provide more certainty in that respect. An amending clause in this bill makes clear the power of the tribunal to consider whether increases in compensation in excess of the guidelines are consistent with the purposes of the act in the case of an appeal against any outstanding orders of the administrator.

In keeping with the intention which I indicated to the House previously, the legislation would also permit members of the Tax Review Board who, according to the terms of the act governing the board are allowed to discharge no other duties, to serve as members of the Anti-Inflation Appeal Tribunal, notwithstanding the restrictions contained in the act governing that board.

A further amendment exempts compensation in the Quebec construction industry from the federal guidelines, to give effect to the agreement under the anti-inflation program with the provincial government which was signed a week or so ago. That agreement provides for the Quebec government to exercise responsibility for the application of the compensation guidelines in that industry because of the unique system in force in that province, but no other, under which wage standards in construction are established by provincial decree following government discussions with employers and employees.

The bill proposes, in addition, to broaden the scope of the authority available to the administrator in issuing orders involving compensation and dividend cases. This would make it possible, for example, for the administrator to issue an order affecting both employers and employees in compensation cases, in contrast to the current situation in which he is limited to issuing an order involving only one or the other party.

As I indicated at the outset of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I believe these amendments, together with the changes being made in the regulations, will significantly increase both the fairness and effectiveness of the anti-inflation program. If, as and when other modifications become necessary to deal with emerging difficulties or changing circumstances, we will be quite prepared to make these changes. As it is, considerable progress had been made in the implementation of this national effort to bring inflation under control. The administrative machinery at the national level is now in full operation. We have entered into agreements with seven provincial governments covering the application of the guidelines to the public sector in those provinces, and I would hope that agreements with the remaining provinces can be reached in the not too distant future. All of the provinces have established, or are in the process of establishing, restraints on rent increases.

Perhaps the most important development is the emergence of early signs that some significant progress is being made in slowing the cost-price spiral and, consequently, the rate of inflation. Over the past few months the rate of increase in wholesale and industrial selling prices has been moderating. In February, the rise in the consumer price index was only .3 per cent. During the latest three-month period to February the average annual rate of increase in consumer prices was 4.5 per cent, an encouraging decline from the three-month average in January of 7.2 per cent and the three-month rate last August of nearly 14 per cent. The broad yardstick of inflation as measured by the national accounts showed the rate of price increase for 1975 as a whole down to 9.7 per cent from 13.8 per cent the previous year.

The base rate increase in wages and salaries under major, new collective bargaining settlements has also continued to moderate, declining from an average annual increase over life of contracts in the second quarter of last year of 18.6 per cent to 14.3 per cent in the fourth quarter—a figure that could conceivably be further revised downward as a result of the impact of the anti-inflation guidelines.

Undoubtedly, the most marked change has taken place in the case of major agreements covering those in the non-commercial sector, where the average annual increase over life of contract has declined from 23.2 per cent for settlements in the second quarter of 1975 to 13.6 per cent in the fourth quarter of last year. In the commercial sector, the rate of increase declined from 15.1 per cent in the second quarter to 14.9 per cent in the fourth quarter.

As hon. members are well aware, a number of observers have contended that sizeable public sector settlements have been a major factor contributing to an increase of Canadian wages and salaries generally at twice the rate prevailing in the United States. That view should be tempered by the fact that a substantially greater proportion of major settlements reached in the commercial sector have contained cost of living adjustment provisions than those in the public sector, which does much to narrow the apparent disparity between the two sectors. To be specific, a total of 60 per cent of workers covered by major, new collective bargaining agreements in the commercial sector last year enjoyed the protection of cost of living clauses, as opposed to only 12 per cent in the non-commercial sector. Nevertheless, there can be little doubt that large settlements in the public sector have played a part in influencing the sharp increase in wages and salaries generally in Canada. For that reason, the scaling-down of public sector settlements over the course of the year is particularly important.

In that connection, I would like to point out that federal public service bargaining agents generally have been responsive and responsible in collective bargaining with the government. New agreements negotiated during the course of 1975 provided for an average annual increase in wages and salaries over the life of the contracts of 14.4 per cent. This compares with an average annual increase of 14.7 per cent in the commercial sector, including Crown corporations but excluding construction, 17.7 per cent in the municipal sector, and 20.7 per cent in the provincial sector, including other public bodies such as schools and hospitals. During 1976, agreements and tentative settlements reached with a number of groups in the federal public service have provided for an average annual increase over life of contract of 11.8 per cent, down significantly from the average 14.4 per cent increase in settlements arrived at during 1975.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

I would be the first to acknowledge that the contribution of the anti-inflation program to this moderation of costs and prices up to now has probably been quite modest. We have emphasized repeatedly that the impact of that program could only be gradual. Nevertheless, such developments are mutually reinforcing, with a trend of declining inflation helping to bolster the confidence of Canadians in the outlook for the future, which in turn can only help to contribute to a continued slowing of the inflation rate itself.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with the persistent allegation that the anti-inflation guidelines are solely effective in restraining wages and salaries and have virtually no effect whatever in restraining prices and profits. This allegation is based on a serious misconception, not to say misrepresentation, of the entire program. It seems to stem in large part from the fact that most of the initial decisions of the board have been concerned with compensation cases and, more particularly, with cases involving wage and salary increases in excess of the guidelines. There is a simple explanation for that, Mr. Speaker. It is the very fact that we wrote into the guidelines provisions to allow for wage and salary increases over and above the limits provided in the guidelines so as to be able to provide an element of fair and equitable treatment for those who had fallen behind in the inflation scramble, and to reduce the sharp distortions created in the process.

We could have followed the approach adopted in many other countries of establishing a flat limit on permissible increases and provided few, if any, exceptions. In the United States they provided only for a limited percentage increase in wages and salaries. In the United Kingdom, unions voluntarily agreed to accept a maximum pay increase of $12 a week for those in the moderate income category. For a 40-hour week, that is an increase of 30 cents an hour. For those in higher pay brackets, no increase was provided at all, despite the fact that inflation until recently has been running at an annual rate of nearly 30 per cent.

● (1630)

In Canada, on the other hand, we provided a number of exceptions to the general rule. We established a complete exemption from the guidelines for those in the lower pay scales. We made an exemption for women to provide room for an increase in their compensation to that paid to men in equivalent positions. Also, as I indicated earlier, we provided for an increase in compensation in excess of the guidelines to permit some catching up for those whose pay had fallen seriously behind the pace of inflation and for those whose relative pay position, compared to other groups with which they had an historical relationship, had deteriorated significantly.

Had we not provided this degree of flexibility, of equity and of fairness, and instead followed the course adopted by a number of other countries, there would be far fewer cases involving compensation coming before the anti-inflation administrative bodies for their consideration, and there would be far less room for public dispute. But is any member of this House—indeed, is any spokesmen for organized labour prepared to argue that we should not have followed this approach, that we should not have sought to build in these elements of fairness and equity? Unless they are prepared to advocate that course, they have no grounds on which to argue that the cases going before the anti-inflation agencies for consideration of compensation increases in excess of the guideline can be said to provide one shred of evidence that the program is biased against Canadian workers. If anything, the very opposite is true.

What about the position of prices and profits? Let me give the House some plain facts. The first and most important fact is that the program is working now to restrain prices and profits and, if anything, is working to restrain them more severely and more effectively and it is working at present to restrain wages and salaries.

It is perfectly true that there has not been a series of rulings pouring out of the Anti-Inflation Board up to now ordering firms to hold price levels, to roll back price increases or shave profit margins. There should be no expectation that a price and profit control system in this or any other country would work in that way. It did not work that way in the United States. It does not work that way in Britain where, incidentally, there is no similar chorus about the ineffectiveness of price and profit controls, even from organized labour, despite the fact that the systems are very similar—and it cannot work that way here in Canada.

Unlike the case of wages and salaries, the guidelines do not provide broad latitude for exemptions or exceptions from the general rules restraining prices, profits and dividends. As members know, the general rule is that prices must not increase by more than permissible cost increases, and profit margins must be limited to 95 per cent of the average of the past five years.

Mr. Orlikow: Except for exports.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) says "Except for exports." I draw to his attention the fact that when we took off the export levy, the Canadian Labour Congress approved of our position in that regard. Contrast that stringent regime with the provisions for real increases provided in the case of wage and salary earnings generally, and even greater increases provided for those who have fallen particularly far behind in the pay race.

The Anti-Inflation Board, of course, has some flexibility in how it administers the general rules applying to prices and profits and some power to deal with exceptional cases. No doubt there is also room for some dispute between companies and the board over the interpretation of particular provisions of the guidelines relating to prices and profits which could give rise to appeals from board judgments. Generally speaking, however, it is a fact that the price and profit guidelines are understood and are being applied by companies to the best of their ability in the daily operation of their business. While there may well be a few firms busily intent on circumventing or evading the guidelines, I think the overwhelming evidence is that the vast majority of companies are anxious to do everything possible to remain strictly within the guidelines, mostly because they know it is essential to make the program work—and they desperately want it to work—and some because they are fearful of the heavy public censure that would result if they were seen to be stepping out of line.

To ensure continuing compliance by companies subject to mandatory controls, some 150 key firms have been required to give the Anti-Inflation Board 30 days advance notice of any proposed price increases involving a wide range of strategically important consumer and industrial goods and services. A clear indication that the program is working effectively now is provided by the fact that such notification of proposed price increases has up to now been received only for a limited range of goods and services, although of course more can be expected as rising costs work their way through the system. Some 6,500 firms are already in the process of filing extensive information as a basis for actively monitoring their prices and profits in future.

In some cases, the argument about price and profit controls follows a rather different tack. The line goes something like this: Yes, no doubt the government and the Anti-Inflation Board are sincere and well-intentioned in their determination to restrain prices and profits effectively, but everyone knows they are doomed to failure because the companies can easily circumvent controls simply by cooking their books.

Mr. Orlikow: That's right.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member says "That's right." That is a point that has been made before by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and his followers. The most effective way I can deal with this argument of members of the NDP is to point out to them, and others who make a similar argument, that they were also in the forefront of those who long called for imposition of controls on the prices and profits of a number of companies. May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that these hon. members cannot have it both ways.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If they believed, at the time of advocating such controls in the corporate sector, that the program could be made effective, then it still must be true, and they are caught in their own contradictions. Before concluding, I would like to comment briefly on one further aspect of the anti-inflation program, the restraint of government expenditures. My colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), recently tabled the estimates for the coming fiscal year and advised the House that the increase in total federal outlays in 1976-77 would be around 16 per cent. Notwithstanding the substantial cuts that were made in prospective government spending to hold the increase to that limit, a number of members of the official opposition in this House and a number of observers outside the House have condemned an increase of that magnitude as excessive.

It is not unfair to recall in this connection that we have just taken a vote on the second reading of a bill which had as its specific purpose the limiting of federal government expenditure in the area of medical care. If one is effectively to control the cost of expenditures by government in that sector and others in Canada, this kind of approach is necessary and we have to accept that there will be this tighter discipline. Speaking as an Ontario member, it seems that the last people in this House who should be opposing that bill are Conservatives from Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As the Minister of Finance, I would of course have been very pleased if it had turned our to be reasonably possible to provide for a considerably lower increase in our expenditures in the coming year. As Minister of Finance, however, I must also have a balanced concern for the welfare of our economy as a whole and for the welfare of the Canadian people, particularly those of lower income who have been most adversely affected by inflation. Imposition of sudden and severe restraints on the rise of government spending would have a shock effect on our economy, jeopardizing the fragile recovery now under way and seriously hurting many Canadians. To illustrate, let me point out that the estimates for next year include expenditures of $1.5 billion, to provide subsidies of direct benefit to Canadian consumers, for oil, flour and skimmed milk powder. If those subsidies were eliminated, the growth of government expenditures would not be 16 per cent but only 11 per cent. While the government would save a substantial sum of money, the cost of living of Canadians would also be substantially increased. The cost of gasoline and fuel oil to the consumer would go up by around 15 per cent to 18 per cent.

● (1640)

If we eliminated the subsidy on wheat consumed in CAnada, the price of bread could be expected to increase by anywhere from seven to nine cents a loaf. To shift that burden to Canadian consumers would undoubtedly be cosmetically attractive in terms of government spending, but I question whether it would contribute to the well-being of the Canadian people or the Canadian economy at the present time.

If we have learned anything from our experience of the past several years, it is surely that we should attempt to do everything possible to avoid sudden and drastic changes in policy which tend to have the effect of intensifying economic instability rather than reducing it. During the recent period of severe international turbulence we have succeeded fairly well in keeping the Canadian economy on an even keel. Today we are challenged by difficult problems, foremost among which is inflation. It was, and is, our conviction that we should deal with this and other related problems in a gradual way, over time, avoiding wrenching changes that would intensify stresses and strains in our country and jeopardize our prospects for the renewal of healthy economic growth.

The program we launched last October to restrain increases in prices and incomes is one of the important elements in the approach we have adopted to achieve that objective. I believe the changes proposed in the bill before the House today will contribute to strengthening that program by increasing both its fairness and its effectiveness, and I commend them to hon. members.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, as the first speaker from the opposition to reply to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), I must take him up on his comments concerning inflation. As I understood him, he was trying to hint or infer that there had been a decline in inflation and that somehow this showed that the government's wage and price control program is working effectively. I would point out to him and to hon. members that the Conference Board of Canada recently reviewed the situation and had this to say:

> The moderation in the rate of advance of the consumer price index in December and January was due almost entirely to the decline in the food component of the index reflecting a softening in the prices of agricultural commodities. Since the latter are exempt from controls of the federal government's anti-inflationary program, it would be erroneous to attribute the better over-all performance of consumer prices to the control measures.

A similar view is expressed in the March issue of the Wood Gundy economic report which spends several pages reviewing the wage and price program. The report says that in spite of any figures which might look as though there is a moderation in the rate of inflation at the present time, unfortunately—it uses the word "unfortunately"—the link between the improvement and the controls is almost non-existent.

The Canadians are living through an economic experiment. We are the guinea pigs while the present administration follows a "touch and feel" system in running the economy. It was just three months ago that Bill C-73, the Anti-Inflation Act, was passed after extensive amendments by the Minister of Finance. Now the same minister is further amending his legislation in the bill before us today, Bill C-89. Granted, our present Minister of Finance inherited a dreadful mess from his predecessor. The year before Mr. Turner became minister of finance, in 1971, real growth in the economy was 6.9 per cent, inflation was 2.9 per cent, unemployment was 6.4 per cent, and the budget roughly balanced, as did our exports with imports.

In the year Mr. Turner left office—last year—real growth had declined to .2 per cent, inflation was running at 10.8 per cent, unemployment stood at 7.1 per cent, the budget was more than $5 billion in deficit, and so was our trade balance. Under Mr. Turner, the federal budget grew from $14.8 billion to $30.8 billion, an increase of 108 per cent in four years, or 27 per cent a year. In spite of these staggering increases, here we find Mr. Turner's successor, the present Minister of Finance, trying to justify before the House unreasonable increases in budgets and expenditures.

Now Mr. Turner is gone. How strange it is to hear his statement in Toronto only six months after his resignation from cabinet that a tighter fiscal policy is needed to overcome inflation. "An effort has been made to tighten fiscal policy", he stated, "but federal expenditures are still growing too fast." Though Mr. Turner has gone, I fear the real culprit responsible for our current problem is still with us, namely, the leader of the Liberal party, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The Minister of Finance appears to be merely his water boy.

The main estimates for 1977 are up by 20 per cent compared with those for 1976. And this is called restraint! I would emphasize that the 16 per cent figure to which the minister has referred is not the figure derived from final estimates, but a figure comparing main estimates for 1977 with the last budgetary estimates for 1976. A much fairer comparison would be to compare main estimates with main estimates. But let us look at the history of this matter since Mr. Turner resigned last September. First, we got a new Minister of Finance. On October 14 last, the present minister rose in the House and tabled a policy statement entitled "Attack on inflation: A program of national action". One might wonder why that program was so long in coming and why it took the form it did. Was Mr. Turner the obstacle? In any event, it is here, it is reality and we are being asked today to amend its pivot piece of legislation, Bill C-73.

Just what is this program so lately discovered by the leader of the Liberal party? The document begins by stating: "Canada is in the grip of serious inflation." There is no argument there. What is the substance of the dramatic proposal presented to us? It consists, we are told, of four major elements. It might be helpful to remind the House what those four major elements are, as set out here: first, fiscal and monetary policies aimed at increasing total demand and production at a rate consistent with declining inflation; second, government expenditure policies aimed at limiting the growth of public expenditure and the rate of increase in public service employment; third, structural policies to deal with the special problems of energy, food and housing, to ensure a more efficient and competitive economy and to improve labour-management relations; fourth, a price and incomes policy which establishes guidelines for responsible social behaviour in determining prices and incomes of groups, together with machinery for administering these guidelines and ensuring compliance where necessary.

What has happened? In December, the cold turkey, as it has been described, arrived in the form of regulations dealing with the fourth element in the so-called attack. Later, the leader of the Liberal party told us of his "new society" concept for Canadians. But what of the first three elements in the program? Let us look at the money supply. It increased between December, 1973, and December, 1974, by 16.7 per cent. This morning we were told in the finance committee that the money supply increased 23 per cent between December, 1974, and December, 1975. Some restraint! As any economist knows, expansion of the money supply at a rate faster than real economic growth is one of the prime causes of inflation. In short, the more money you print, the less it buys. On average last year our money system grew by 13.8 per cent, with real growth at .2 per cent. So is it any wonder we had 10.8 per cent average inflation for the year?

● (1650)

What I am saying is that not only is the money supply continuing to expand faster than real economic growth, but the rate of increase is escalating in relation to that real growth. Let us look at the government's own figures. Last February 23 the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Trudel) replied to a written question at page 11152 of Hansard. In that answer he stated that the annual percentage increases between 1968 and 1975 in currency and demand deposits was as follows: 1968, 4.4 per cent; 1969, 7.4 per cent; 1970, 2.3 per cent; 1971, 12.8 per cent; 1972, 14 per cent; 1973, 14.4 per cent; 1974, 9.7 per cent; 1975, 13.8 per cent. Real growth in the economy for the same years was as follows: 1968, 4.9 per cent; 1969, 5 per cent; 1970, 3.4 per cent; 1971, 6.9 per cent; 1972, 5.8 per cent; 1973, 6.7 per cent; 1974, 2.8 per cent; 1975, 0.2 per cent. As the increases in our money system have grown, our real growth has fallen. Inflation has been the result.

In the past four years the average increase in our money supply has been 13 per cent per year, while our real growth has been 3.8 per cent. How forgetful Mr. Turner has become. He was the minister during this 13 per cent per year growth in money period, yet only last Monday, after asking what we must do to overcome inflation, he stated: "First, control the money supply. I believe the current stance of the Bank of Canada is sensible". But what is that stance? The governor of the Bank of Canada, backed up by the Minister of Finance, has said it intends to restrain the increase in our money system this year to a range of 10 per cent to 15 per cent; but in the last four years we have had an average increase of 13 per cent. So the bank is really saying we are to get more of the same, which is exactly the principal reason we have been having such high inflation.

In the United States in recent months they have been able to keep their monetary increase to between 5 per cent and 7.5 per cent, exactly half the projected program announced by Mr. Bouey. The United States appears to be beating inflation, while we are treading water. This morning the Minister of Finance said, to use his exact words, that it will be very difficult this year to get our money supply increase below 12 per cent.

In an article appearing in the January-February, 1976, Canadian Tax Journal, Mr. Lawrence B. Smith, professor of economics, department of political economy, University of Toronto, reviewed Canada's incomes policy. At page 73 he said: "If the rate of growth of the money supply remains high, say in excess of 12 per cent per annum, there is little likelihood that the program can succeed". In other words, according to Professor Smith the anti-inflation program will not succeed if the government allows a monetary increase in excess of 12 per cent this year. Yet the Minister of Finance says it will be difficult even to get down to a 12 per cent increase.

The real question before this House is: Will the present administration's program succeed without proper monetary and fiscal restraint? Speaking of fiscal restraint, Mr. Speaker, I should like to turn to the second element in the government's attack on inflation. The minister has made reference to the estimates that were recently tabled in this House and to the fact that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) has talked about cutbacks in spending. Are these real cutbacks, Mr. Speaker? I think most members in their hearts realize that the cutbacks are nothing but a sham. It is like a man with two Cadillacs in the garage, and a $10,000 overdraft, who is being pressed by his banker to cut back. He says to the branch manager, "Okay, I won't buy the third Cadillac; I'll lease it and run it on regular gas".

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, the main estimates for 1977 are up another 20 per cent over the previous year. This increase can hardly be called restraint. As for the view of the leader of the Liberal party, he stated in that famous interview on December 28 that in the case of the government you will never bankrupt it, because it has only to print more money or borrow more money. What a frightening philosophy concerning the economy of this country! The way this government is going, there is no doubt they will have us bankrupt, but they may not know where to file.

The third element in the attack does not appear to be generating much support. To take but one example, Mr. Speaker, how much do you think labour-management relations have been improved by the Anti-Inflation Board's "Yes, no; maybe so" approach? I could go on at length concerning the failings of the so-called attack on inflation, but I want to discuss in some detail the climate that the government has created which surrounds this program.

Mrs. Holt: The public like it.

Mr. Stevens: I suggest that rather than the public liking it, the public are confused. It is generally agreed that something has to be done about inflation. It is also agreed, however, that at few other times in history have the people been so aware of the presence of government in their lives. "Surely a government that is everywhere at once must be able to do something", is the sentiment one hears so much. Certainly the people wonder why the government is not doing something about inflation.

Government—and I mean all government—will be responsible for the expenditure of over 40 per cent of the gross national product in 1976. This is a staggering figure. Who cannot be aware of the omnipresence of the government, and who might not be led to believe that that omnipresence should be "omnicompetent"?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to interrupt the hon. member to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt)—Supply and Services—Contract with Lockheed—Reason for failure to provide for short-term financing—Possibility of buying Canadian aircraft; the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro)—Administration of Justice—Reason Prime Minister can ignore request for public inquiry; the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—National Defence—Request for list of bases to be closed—Effect of base closures on search and rescue.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (documents) and public bills.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I recognize that our interest in the bill that is slated for this hour is a negative one. But even so, in order that the House might continue to consider Bill C-89 I would make the suggestion that private members' hour for today be surrendered and that we stay on the item we have been discussing.

• (1700)

Mr. Blais: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance and urgency of this particular legislation and in view of the optimism the minister feels relating to its passage this day, we would consent to giving up private members' hour in order to continue this debate.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that there has been no previous arrangement in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, we certainly will not consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There does not seem to be consent, so we will proceed with private members' hour as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

CONTINENTAL BANK OF CANADA

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 11, consideration of Bill S-30, to incorporate Continental Bank of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday I had just begun making some comments on the bill we have before us, namely, Bill S-30, which attempts to convert IAC—Industrial Acceptance Corporation—into a bank called Continental Bank of Canada. We in the New Democratic Party are opposed to IAC making this transition because of the kind of bill we have before us in which the company is seeking a number of exemptions from the Bank Act. We consider this to be highly irregular in the circumstances, especially from the point of view of why the Bank Act was set up and the fact that it is due to be amended in a year or so. We find it quite extraordinary that this finance company should try this route to incorporate into a bank.

The bill was first introduced in the Senate and had, I thought, rather rapid consideration there. It is now before us, and we want to give it very thorough airing before it moves from this chamber. We have proposed a number of amendments, and I should like now to give some of the background. I will deal with the specific one before us at this time. It should be remembered that IAC is the largest finance and consumer loan company in Canada. Its 1974 assets were some $2.04 billion. It owns Niagara Finance and a number of realty and insurance companies. It is a profitable company. Its 1974 profit was over $23 million, and in 1975 that profit increased to over $30 million, or a 30 per cent increase in one year.

IAC is seeking to move from what we might classify as the minor league to the big league in its attempt to become a bank. The reason is that IAC has pretty well expanded as much as it can under the present limitations that apply to companies of this sort. It is now restricted in the number of times it can turn over its money in the form of loans and mortgages, so it wants now to become a bank in order to get into the big league, a very profitable league indeed, I may say.

When we look at banks in Canada over the past few years, we see that because of higher interest and mortgage rates they have been doing very well. I do not blame IAC for wanting to join this league. What I do take issue with is the way they want to do it and the fact that they are attempting to gain exemptions from the Bank Act with which all other banks must conform.

When we look at the profitability of banks—and I am now looking at the first quarter increase in 1976 over 1975—we see that the Royal Bank had an increase of 31.6 per cent, the Commerce 54.1 per cent, the Bank of Montreal 50.7 per cent, the Bank of Nova Scotia 26.4 per cent, and the Toronto Dominion 26.7 per cent. That is just in the first quarter of 1976 over 1975. If we wanted to go back to the year previous to that we would find similar, but not as great, profit increases. We are concerned that if IAC is to get into that very profitable league we should make sure it abides by the rules. The point that also bothers me is that if Bill S-30 passes we are, in effect, going to create a tax shelter for IAC that may amount to anywhere from $40 million to $60 million over the ten-year transition period.

We have proposed a series of amendments, the first of which we are dealing with at this time. It is an attempt to make IAC conform to the Bank Act as it relates to directorships. Bill S-30 seeks to subvert that intent of the Bank Act. I should like to read the appropriate clause to illustrate that point. I will read clause 2(2) of Bill S-30. This concerns directors, and it reads:

> A director of IAC Limited is not eligible to be a provisional director of the bank unless he holds, as the absolute and sole owner thereof in his individual right and not as trustee or in the right of another, not less than 500 common shares of the capital stock of IAC Limited, and the requirement in subsection 10(2) of the Bank Act that a provisional director of a bank be a subscriber for stock of that bank does not apply to a provisional director of the bank.

We have moved to delete clause 2(2) in order to make IAC conform to the Bank Act. What the clause says in the bill is that in order to be a Continental Bank director one must have IAC stock rather than bank stock. The IAC directors automatically are provisional Continental Bank directors, but they do not have to conform to the Bank Act which says they be subscribers for stock of the bank. If this bill is passed as it stands, and our amendment is defeated, we will then find that IAC gets around the very important provision in the Bank Act concerning interlocking directorships. We see a number of dangers in this. It was set out in the Bank Act that there could not be these interlocking directors, for a very good and proper reason. If you had interlocking directors they could quite possibly have access to privileged information about the company's policies or financial status that could be manipulated in the marketplace to the advantage of the bank. This relates to one bank or another, and it is this that we are very much concerned about.

● (1710)

When we look at the list of directors of IAC we find some very interesting names in the "Who's who" of the economic world. We have the following directors: Mr. F. M. Covert, director, Royal Bank of Canada; Mr. J. S. Dewar, director, Toronto Dominion Bank; Mr. C. F. Harrington, chairman and director, Royal Trust; Mr. D. Kinnear, director, Bank of Montreal; Mr. L. A. Lapointe, director, Toronto Dominion Bank; Mr. Charles Rathgeb, director, Royal Bank of Canada; Mr. Renault St. Laurent, director, Banque Canadienne Nationale; Mr. Thackray, director, Bank of Montreal; Mr. Yorath, director, Montreal Trust Company; and Mr. Courtois, director and vice-president, Bank of Nova Scotia. Those are some of the directors. There are many other directors of IAC who are involved with other companies. I would draw the attention of the House to two famous directors and raise an interesting point in relation thereto. One is Peter F. Bronfman, of Bronfman fame. We have heard of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) taking trips on his plane in the past. We have Mr. Bronfman among the list.

Mr. Abbott: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the hon. member would not wish to be inaccurate in his statement. The Mr. Peter Bronfman to whom he is referring is in no way connected with the ownership of the corporate jet to which he referred in his remarks. I think it is wise to correct this. Just because someone has the same name and is related does not mean that he should share the association—

Mr. Roberts: Guilt.

Mr. Symes: Thank you. I welcome the correction. We find that Mr. Peter F. Bronfman is the president of Edpar Investments. He is also chairman of Canadian Arena Company and director of Trizec. Also, we have among the list a Mr. E. J. Courtois who is a director of a number of companies, most notably Trizec. He is also president of Canadian Arena Company. I find it very interesting, as have a number of other people, including senators on the banking and finance committee in that House, as well as many members in our own House, that Canadian Arena Company is now known as Carena-Bancorp. Carena-Bancorp is a holding company for certain Bronfman family trusts.

It is very interesting that Carena-Bancorp, prior to its becoming public knowledge that IAC wanted to become a bank bought a significant number of shares in IAC. The Senate Committee looked at that in some detail. One of the senators thought it was rather coincidental and asked if there was any prior knowledge on the part of Carena-Bancorp, because there were interlocking directorships here, of IAC's intention to convert to a bank. This was denied. I raise the example to illustrate that the reason we have a Bank Act is to ensure that we do not have these interlocking directorships and to allay public suspicion that directors can take advantage of inside knowledge of the affairs of financial institutions. The bill before us will permit those kind of interlocking directorships for a period of up to ten years. We think this is a very dangerous precedent and one which could raise many suspicions in the minds of the public, let alone the financial world, that these kind of dealings go on, the kind of dealings that are prohibited by the Bank Act in respect of other banks.

There is the suggestion that this might be going on in respect of this company which is receiving special exemptions under this bill in respect of the Bank Act. It is our contention that if IAC wants to convert to the continental bank, it must follow the same rules that must be followed by any other finance company that wants to become a bank, or at least wait for the revision of the Bank Act so that we can conduct a full public hearing in this chamber to make sure that the public interest is upheld.

So I strongly urge the members of this chamber to support our amendment so that this kind of special, cozy relationship will not be allowed to continue in respect of a company that is seeking to become a very powerful bank in this country. I think it is in the public interest that we have a very close scrutiny of this bill. This is why my colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), proposed the amendment we have before us, so that the provisions of the Bank Act may be upheld and the public interest maintained. For these reasons, I cannot support the bill and urge my colleagues to accept our amendment concerning directorships.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have spoken on this matter. I believe somebody in this House should register a very strong protest against the NDP for delaying the incorporation of this bank. Surely, in this country, which has only ten banks, and of that number five are extremely large, there is room for another bank. I think the House of Commons should be the last place in which to start delaying the incorporation of a bank. When I say we have ten banks, we should bear in mind that the United States has 14,000 banks, and here we have the NDP—which likes to tout itself as the great defender of the small people, the working people and whatever they get some mileage in—standing up here defending the ten incorporated banks in this country. I think they should declare their interest. What bank are they protecting? Which banking operation today is the NDP trying to ensure will not be in competition with this new bank?

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the former minister of finance proposed to introduce a bill to provide for the incorporation of banks by letters patent. Personally, I am sorry the government did not have the courage to go ahead with that legislation and end this farce which periodically occurs in this House, namely, the incorporation of banks by special acts then the NDP rump group such as we have here today would not delay the incorporation of a bank which I suggest is needed in this country. Certainly, the idea that we cannot have another new bank in this nation is ridiculous.

● (1720)

Let us face it. If you analyse the arguments that are being raised by the NDP members, you find it is all fluff, it does not mean anything. Surely it is preferable, if a finance company in this country, be it IAC, Traders or a trust company, wish to incorporate in the form of a bank, that they should be encouraged, not discouraged.

Mr. A. C. Abbott (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, I want to say very briefly that I think this is one of the first times since I have been here that I have had reason to agree with the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). I believe that we should stop to consider that IAC is seeking certain transitional provisions which at the committee stage were not regarded as unacceptable. Those that were, were amended. Having arrived at this stage, with the prospect of the transition from a finance company to a bank frustrated arbitrarily by the NDP, it does lend a great deal of credence to the comments of the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

We are not talking about a fly-by-night outfit. This is a company which was established 50 years ago. It has become the largest independent sales financing company in Canada. It has 200 branches; it has consolidated assets of almost $2.3 million; it has a respected management and a respectable board of directors. As the hon. member said, this company comes to the House to become incorporated through a rather antique procedure. Normally, other corporations do not receive any scrutiny because they go through in a businesslike fashion. If they fail to meet the regulatory standards set out by law, they suffer the consequences.

I do not wish to take up the time of the House. I am not really prepared, because I am standing in today for the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). I only want to say that I think it is deplorable to see a bill of this sort, which has gone through second reading and the committee stage, being treated in this fashion. If the NDP had honestly felt strongly about these motions, surely we would have heard some of them at the committee stage. The hon. member who introduced them appeared on the last day of the committee hearings and registered one or two points at that time. Now he is using this stage to obstruct the bill in this frivolous and vexatious fashion, simply to frustrate this respectable company's attempts to become a strong member of the Canadian financial community. I think it is disgraceful and it does a disservice to parliament and to the financial community of this country.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Peters: Tell us about the little people.

Mr. Nystrom: I have decided on the contents of my speech, having listened to the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). He referred to the little people in the IAC company. I want to speak for 20 minutes this afternoon about the little people, because I think it is very pertinent to put on the record the directors of IAC and of other companies in which they are involved and because we are discussing an amendment which deals with directors. Therefore, it is very important that we talk about interlocking directorships. What are the interests of people who direct and control IAC? I want to take a few minutes to put on the record the companies of which they are directors, so that when people read the annals of this debate they will see who owns the company. When the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) spoke, he mentioned some of this, but I submit he just touched the tip of the gigantic iceberg.

I will start with a fellow named Lyndon E. Nichol. He is chairman of IAC, director of Merit Insurance Co., director of Niagara Finance Co. Ltd., and director of Sovereign Life Assurance Co. of Canada. He lives at 5 Bachelor Place, Willowdale, Ontario.

Second, we have the vice-chairman of IAC, Mr. Keith H. MacDonald. He is director of the following companies. He is the little man to whom the hon. member for York-Simcoe referred—a poor, poverty-stricken Canadian. I will give you the directorships which this little man, Keith MacDonald, holds. He is vice-chairman of the board. He is director of the American Sterilizer Co., the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Co. of Canada, Canada Permanent Mortgage Corp., Canada Permanent Trust Co., Merit Insurance Co., Niagara Finance Co. Ltd., the Sovereign Life Assurance Co. of Canada, Uniroyal Ltd., Zeller's Ltd., Roads and Transportation Association of Canada, Toronto Symphony, and International Road Federation, Washington and Geneva. This is one of the little men referred to by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. I would not have spoken if he had not angered me, so I must continue. The vice-chairman, Keith MacDonald, is also a member of the advisory board of the Better Business Bureau of Canada. His home address is 32 Suncrest Avenue, Don Mills, Ontario. There is much interlocking of directorships there.

I should now like to go to the next fellow, who is Joseph Stephen Land. He is director of Niagara Finance Co. Ltd.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker) wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Blaker: I have a great deal of respect for the comments that were made by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I appreciate his comments with respect to the expansion of the banking industry, although my opinions differ from his and those of his party in that regard. But I wonder whether the hon. member is making a point with respect to the banking bill when he reads out the names of the board of directors of the proposed bank, and whether that is relevant to the bill before us.

An hon. Member: We are glad you asked that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Although I must say that some of the comments by participants in the debate did not relate to the motion before us, the hon. member speaking about the directorships is right on the subject matter of the amendment before the House at this time, which concerns the directorship of IAC.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking directly to the amendment. I will not waver from my amendment for the rest of the 20 minutes allotted me.

An hon. Member: Where is Sinc Stevens?

Mr. Nystrom: I guess we scared him off. The next man I want to talk about is Joseph Stephen Land, president of IAC. As I said, he is director of Niagara Finance Co. Ltd., the Sovereign Life Assurance Co. of Canada, Merit Insurance Co., Sovereign Mortgage Insurance Co., the Canborough Corp., International Capital Corp., Merit Plan Finance and Discount Corp. Ltd., Capital Funds (IAC) Ltd., IAC Business Development Fund Ltd., Premier Property Ltd., and Royal Trust Co. I thought we were incorporating a new bank. Here is a very interesting interlocking. These are the people who want special privileges. I wonder why? I shall have to look into their background to see why they want special privileges. I am only just beginning, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Land lives at 9 Darlingbrook Crescent, Islington, Ontario.

• (1730)

Next is a poor man referred to by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, Douglas W. Maloney. He is the executive vice president of IAC.

An hon. Member: A small shareholder.

Mr. Nystrom: He is a small shareholder. He is also a director of four other corporations: Merit Insurance Co., Niagara Finance Co. Ltd., Sovereign General Insurance Co., and Sovereign Life Assurance Co. of Canada, and he lives in Toronto. Mr. Speaker, John Turner already has more directorships than this poor fellow. I feel sorry for this poor capitalist if he is one of the last we have.

Next is Ronald Laird Cliff, director of IAC.

An. hon. Member: Which riding?

Mr. Nystrom: I do not know. He lives on Avenue Road, Toronto. He is chairman of Inland Natural Gas Co., Ltd., chairman of Tenco Distributors Ltd., and chairman of Canadian Aircraft Products Ltd. Mr. Speaker, this man is a little bit bigger than the last. He is president of Western Finance Co., Ltd., and president of British Columbia Transformer Co., Ltd. He is a director of Balco Industries Ltd.; director, Bramalea Wescorp Developments Ltd., director, Burrard Dry Dock Co. Ltd.; director, Canada Wire and Cable Co. Ltd.; director, Cornat Industries, Ltd.; director, Coronation Credit Corp.; director, Wescorp Industries; director, Riftow Staits Ltd.; director, Morrison Steel and Wire Co. Ltd.; director, Noranda Metal Industries, Ltd.; director, Sun Publishing Co. Ltd.

An hon. Member: Why is he not president?

Mr. Nystrom: Because he is president of two other companies. He is also a director, Pacific Press Ltd.; director, Johnston Terminals Ltd., and director, Okanagan Helicopters Ltd. He is also a member of the Advisory Board National Trust Co. He lives in Vancouver, British Columbia. I do not know how many directorships he holds. I do not know if anyone can count that high.

Now I am coming to some really poorer people referred by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. Frank Manning Covert, Q.C., director. He is a partner in Stewart MacKeen & Covert. He is chairman and president of Ben's Holdings Ltd., and president of three other companies, the Great Eastern Corp., Ltd., Maritime Paper Products, Ltd., and Ben's Ltd. He is assistant secretary and director of Maritime Steel and Foundries Ltd., director, Petrofina Ltd.—that sounds suspicious—director, Phoenix Assurance Co. of Canada; director, Royal Bank of Canada; director, National Sea Products; director, Minos Basin Pulp and Power Co. Ltd., director, Canadian Keyes Fibre Co., Ltd., director, Sydney Engineering Dry Docks Co., Ltd., director, Home Care Properties Ltd., director, Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Co.; director, Acadian Lines Ltd.; director, The Molson Companies Ltd.; director, Standard Brands Ltd.; director, Trizec Corp. Ltd.; director, Canning Investment

Corp. Ltd.; director, Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada, and governor of Dalhousie University. He lives in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The next director of IAC and one of the people asking us to do something special for his company, to make it into the Continental Bank, is John S. Dewar. This man is quite powerful. He is president of Union Carbide Canada Ltd.; president, Union Carbide Canada Mining Ltd., and president of Dominion Viscoe Products Ltd. He is a director of Manufacturer's Life Assurance Co.; director, Toronto Dominion Bank, another interesting directorship; and director of Ralston Purina of Canada Ltd. He is governor of the Ontario Research Foundation. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish him any personal ill will; I wish him well, but not more financial wealth and no special privileges.

The eighth director is Conrad Harrington. He is chairman of the Royal Trust Co.; chairman, the Royal Trust Co. Mortgage Corp.; chairman, Redpath Industries Ltd., and chairman of Glaxco Canada Ltd. He is a director of R. L. Crain Ltd.; director, Gerling Global Life Insurance Co.; director, M. P. G. Investment Corp. Ltd.; director, Consumers Glass Co. Ltd., and director, Stone and Webster Canada Ltd.

This is a beautiful corporate society, a free enterprise society of Liberal and Conservative bodies. There are so many of them and they are so interlocked in that big corporate family.

To return to Mr. Harrington, he is a trustee of BM-RT Realty Investment Ltd., chairman of the Salvation Army, governor of McGill University, and life governor of Trinity College School. He lives in Montreal.

Peter Kilburn is chairman of Greenshield Inc. He is a director of Imasco Ltd.; director, Ritz Carleton Hotel; director, Sicard Inc.; director, Merit Insurance Co.; director, the Mortgage Insurance co. of Canada; director, Niagara Finance Co. Ltd.; director, Stanton Pipes Ltd.; director, Weyerhauser Canada Ltd., and director of Zeller's Ltd. He lifes in Montreal's west end—not the east end where the ordinary working people live.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is a neighbour of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Nystrom: I think from the address he lives in the riding of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury). That may be of interest to Liberal backbenchers.

Next is David Kinnear, vice chairman of the Bank of Montreal, that poor little people's corporation. He is a director of Canadian Pacific Ltd.; director, The T. Eaton Co., Ltd.—I wonder what he did about the closing of the sales catalogue company. He is a director of the T. Eaton Acceptance Co., Ltd.; director, Eaton Financial Services Ltd.—I cannot believe this, Mr. Speaker—he is also a director of Eaton's of Canada, Ltd., and a director of Eaton Viking Fund. I had better tell the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones) about this man. He is also director of T.R.I. Holdings S.A.—whatever that means.

An hon. Member: South Africa.

Mr. Nystrom: He is a trustee of Heitman Canadian Realty Investors.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Mr. Nystrom: I have scared one out of the woods.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) on a point of order.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to interrupt the infantile and ignorant remarks of the hon. member. Presumably the reason for the recitation of the directors is that he is going to come out with some message concerning interlocking directorates. Because he did not show any interest in this bill, nor did his colleagues, at the committee stage, he is unaware that the committee amended the bill to provide that the interlocks that might exist in contravention of the act will be removed prior to the Inspector of Banks giving the licence for the commencement of business.

Mr. Nystrom: We are talking about the interim period. If I have time after reading this list I will get into my precise recommendations.

Mr. Trudel: You have not read the bill. That is what you should have started with.

Mr. Nystrom: I think I said the last man came from Toronto.

Mr. Peters: Naturally. Why the intervention?

● (1740)

Mr. Nystrom: The eleventh director is to be Louis A. Lapointe.

An hon. Member: From Gravelbourg, Saskatchewan?

Mr. Nystrom: He is not from Gravelbourg, Saskatchewan. He is from Montreal. As I said, the eleventh director is to be Louis A. Lapointe, Q.C. He is chairman of Miron Co. Ltd.; a member of the Canadian advisory board, Commercial Union Assurance Group, and director of Alliance Compagnie Mutuelle d'Assurance Vie; Brascan Ltd.; Cinévidéo Inc., which sounds Spanish; Genstar Ltd.; Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. of Canada Ltd.; Hilton of Canada Ltd.; Inter City Papers Ltd.; International Paints (Canada) Ltd.; Rio Algom Mines Ltd.; Ronald Federated, the Toronto Dominion Bank and Trizec Corp., Ltd. It is important to note that he is a director of the C.D. Howe Research Institute, and lives on St. Catherine Street, Montreal.

Mr. Benjamin: Another welfare case.

Mr. Nystrom: Number twelve is Paul Paré, chairman of Imperial Tobacco Products Ltd., president of Imasco Ltd., and director of Canadian Pacific Investments Ltd.; Canadian Pacific Ltd.; Canron Ltd., and Royal Bank of Canada. He is a governor of the Montreal General Hospital, and of the Olympic Trust Fund. Perhaps we ought to look into the last appointment mentioned on another occasion. He is also a director of St. Mary's Hospital. He too lives in Montreal.

The thirteenth director is to be Mr. Charles J. Rathgeb, chairman of Comstock International Ltd., and director of Algoma Steel Corp. Ltd.; T. G. Bright & Co. Ltd.; Canadair Ltd.; Liquid Carbonic Canada Ltd.; Newconex Holdings

Ltd.; Royal Bank of Canada; Olympic Trust of Canada; the Canada Committee, and Rathgeb Foundation. He lives in Toronto.

How is it that most directors live either in Toronto or Montreal? And they do not live in the poorer parts of Montreal or Toronto.

The fourteenth director is Renaut St. Laurent.

An hon. Member: What's the point of this?

Mr. Nystrom: Apparently some Liberals and Tories are upset because we are talking about people who want special privileges.

Mrs. Holt: That's typical of a socialist.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, I am a socialist, and proud of it. Mr. St. Laurent, among other things, is a director of Merit Insurance Co. Ltd.; Anglo Canadian Pulp & Papers Mills Ltd.—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret interrupting the hon. member, but his time has expired. He may continue if he has unanimous consent of the House. Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Apparently there is not unanimous consent. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is recognized.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I find this list of directors extremely interesting. The fourteenth director is to be Renault St. Laurent, who comes from the family of Louis St. Laurent, the former Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I may not have heard Your Honour, and I wonder whether the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) was recognized by the Chair before he started speaking.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, he was recognized.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He was recognized. I do not know if he heard the Chair recognizing him, but he has the floor now.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a second point of order. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) handed his list to the hon. member for Timiskaming. Are serial speeches allowed in this House?

Mr. Nystrom: Hon. members refused to extend my time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows the Standing Orders. An hon. member may not be repetitious and should not read his speech, but may say what he wishes so long as it relates to the subject matter before the House.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wishes to speak, I shall cede him the floor. As that is not likely I shall continue referring to my list. Mr. Renault St. Laurent is director of Merit Insurance Co. Ltd., Anglo Canadian Pulp & Paper Mills Ltd., Banque Canadienne Nationale, and Sicard Inc. It seems to me that many of the corporations in which we are interested are good friends of certain members of this House. I will stop reading the list if I find that these corporations are among my friends. As they are not friends of mine, I shall continue. Mr. St. Laurent is also director of Imperial Life Assurance Co. of Canada; Scott Paper Ltd.; Home Oil Co. Ltd.; Gaz du Québec Inc.; Villa Medica Inc.; Rothmans of Pall Mall Canada Ltd., and Carling O'Keefe Ltd.

Mr. Benjamin: How about putting a bank in a brewery?

An hon. Member: Now you're talking.

Mr. Peters: He lives in Quebec.

The fifteenth director is James C. Thackray, executive vice-president of Bell Canada. Why is he mixed up with a bank? He should devote all his time to Bell Canada. He is a director of the Bank of Montreal; Bell Northern Research Ltd.; Maritime Telegraph & Telephone Co. Ltd.; Northern Telecom Co. Ltd., which used to be Northern Electric, I think; Tele Direct Ltd., and Union Carbide of Canada Ltd.

An hon. Member: Is he Canadian?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for not being able to answer the hon. member. I do not have his pedigree in front of me. He lives in Westmount, Quebec.

The sixteenth director is Denis K. Yorath, vice chairman of IU International Corp., chairman of MisMat Corp. Ltd., and director of Alberta Power Ltd.; International Utilities Petroleum Corp.; Montreal Trust Co.; The Commercial Life Assurance Co. of Canada; Canadian Utilities Ltd.; Canadian Western Natural Gas Co. Ltd.; Northwestern Utilities Ltd.; The Halifax Insurance Co. Ltd., and Echo Bay Mines Ltd. He lives on 131 Street in Edmonton, Alberta.

● (1750)

The seventeenth director is Stanley F. Melloy, executive vice-president, finance; president, Capital Funds (IAC) Limited and of Capital Funds (IAC) Ontario Limited; director, International Capital Corporation Limited; Niagara Finance Company Limited; Niagara Realty of Canada Limited; Premier Property Limited; The Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada. This poor little man lives in Islington, Ontario. I see he has covered them all. He gets them in insurance, finance, when they buy a house, and when they die. If he is a small person, I will be surprised.

No. 18 is R. E. Campbell, senior vice-president, who is president of Premier Properties Limited; vice-president and director, Capital Funds (IAC) Limited; Capital Funds (IAC) Ontario Limited; IAC Business Development Funds (Canada) Limited; IAC Business Development Fund Limited; Merit Plan Finance and Discount Corporation Limited; Western Acceptance Corporation Limited; director, Commercial Contracts Limited; Merit Insurance Company; Niagara Finance Company Limited; SDI Associates Limited. He lives at 61 Ballial Street, Toronto.

Continental Bank of Canada

When I hear all this, I wonder how these people ever write off their income tax. They must travel extensively. I feel sorry for them. They become small, not in the sense that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) mentioned, but in another sense, the little people.

No. 19 is, François P. Paradis, senior vice-president, who is vice-president and director Premier Properties Limited; vice-president, Niagara Realty of Canada Limited; director, Capital Funds (IAC) Limited; IAC. Business Development Funds (Canada) Limited; IAC. Business Development Funds Limited; Merit Insurance Company; The Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada; Trustee, BM-RT Realty Investment. His home is at 85 Thorncliffe Park Drive, Toronto.

No. 20 is, Allan P. Bolin, senior Vice-President. His home is at 96 Ravebsbourne Crescent, Islington, Ontario.

No. 21 is, L. Guy Gravel, vice-president, Ontario Division. His home is at 26 Skyview Crescent, Willowdale, Ontario.

No. 22 is, W. E. Hoddinott. I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I do not know how to pronounce it. I have never seen the word before. It is rather difficult speaking only one language. He is a vice-president and lives at 126 Edenbridge Drive, Islington, Ontario.

No. 23 is, N. Vincent Keyes, a vice-president. He lives at 1494 West, 40th Avenue, Vancouver. I wonder if he is related to the Keyes who used to be a member of parliament.

Mr. Muir: No; he and I loaded coal together in Cape Breton.

Mr. Peters: No. 24 is, W. McCraken (Elwood), vice-president, administration. He lives at 7 Tullamore Drive, Willowdale, Ontario. You will note, Mr. Speaker, that all these poor people live on either drives or crescents. I do not even live on a street. In fact I am on a rural route.

No. 25 is, Raymond K. Jackson, vice-president; vice-president and general manager, IAC Capital Fund Division; Capital Funds (IAC) Limited; Capital Funds (IAC) Ontario Limited. He lives at 1250 Cloverdale Crescent, Mississauga, Ontario.

No. 26 is, J. Y. Buchanan, vice-president. He lives at 105 Davisville Avenue, Toronto.

No. 27 is, W. P. Davidson, vice-president; vice-president and director, Capital Funds (IAC) Limited; IAC Business Development Funds, Limited; IAC Business Development Funds Canada Limited; vice-president, Capital Funds (IAC) Ontario Limited; IAC Business Development Funds (Ontario) Limited. He lives at 40 Proudbank Millway, Willowdale, Ontario.

No. 28 is, Brian Fraser London, vice-president; president, Niagara Finance Company Limited; Niagara Realty Limited; Niagara Realty Canada Limited; director, Maritime Publishing Limited; Premier Property; governor, Ontario Research Foundation.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member will permit a question. It is in the nature of a request. Would he be good enough to table his remarks and those of his predecessors because these important facts may be lost to us.

Mr. Peters: Yes, Mr. Speaker, because the translation of my pronunciation of some of the names would make it difficult if done otherwise. I would be prepared to table the remainder without reading them, if this is the wish of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Peters: No. 29 is, W. J. Van Wyck, vice-president, credit. He lives at 505, 355 St. Clair Avenue West, Toronto.

Then there is Claude R. Stewart, secretary; secretary; Niagara Finance Company Limited; Niagara Realty Limited; Niagara Realty Canada Limited. His home is at 1622, 400 Walmer, Toronto. I thought we were talking about IAC. This is Niagara Realty.

Next we have S. S. Ilaqua, treasurer; director, Bruck Mills Limited. His home is at 10 Blaine Drive, Don Mills, Ontario. Janos J. Tors, comptroller. He is "unknowed". R. Hemond, vice-president. He is also "unknowed". The source for all this is the "Directory of Directors, 1975, Financial Post." You Honour can see why the interest of all members is so high in the directors of this corporation. It is because of their widespread interests. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO ADD NEW DEFINITIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-89, to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, before the dinner recess I was saying that in considering the bill before us we must take a look at the over-all program which the government announced under the description of an anti-inflation program; I was pointing out that at the time of the announcement on October 14 last the government stated there were four parts to this program. I was commenting on certain of these parts and indicating that in many ways the government had not been acting with proper restraint.

I have already referred to an article by Lawrence B. Smith, professor of economics at the University of Toronto. In the article entitled "Canada's Incomes Policy: An Economic Assessment" appearing in the "Canadian Tax Journal" for January-February 1976 he reviews the program in some detail. On page 72, he asks:

Will the incomes policy succeed?

He goes on to say:

As mentioned above, the success of the incomes policy ultimately hinges on the implementation of the correct demand restraining monetary and fiscal policies. If the government is serious about combatting inflation then it must reduce its rate of monetary expansion and it should significantly restrain its expenditures. Consequently we should expect the incomes policies to be accompanied by considerable monetary and fiscal stringency.

Professor Smith goes on to state:

However, it is not clear that this will occur. First, in its policy statement "Attack on Inflation", the government quotes from its June 23, 1975 budget that "in its present cost-push form, inflation threatens" to create serious problems. But our inflation is not a cost-push inflation; rather it is a demand-pull inflation in its second stage created by excessive monetary and fiscal ease. If the government persists in incorrectly diagnosing the problem there is little likelihood it will introduce the necessary demand-restraining policies. Second, the government claims in its policy paper that it is setting in motion "monetary policies aimed at increasing total demand and production at a rate consistent with declining inflation", yet for the three months ending November 30, 1975 the money supply broadly defined rose 21.9 per cent, up from 8.8 per cent in the second quarter and approximately double the rate consistent with its own target rate of inflation for 1976.

I mentioned earlier that in our standing committee, this morning, Mr. Hood, the Deputy Minister of Finance, stated that from December, 1974, to December last the increase in the money supply in this country was 23 per cent.

Professor Smith goes on to say:

If this is the result when the government perceives itself to be acting, the outlook is bleak. Third, the government states in its policy paper that government expenditure policies will be "aimed at limiting the growth of public expenditures and the rate of increase in public service employment". The policy paper then adds that a "very large proportion of the federal government's expenditures are made under statutory programs, and other arrangements where there is little flexibility". Thus, it appears the government is only paying lip service to the issue and is more concerned with justifying inaction than in taking action on the expenditure side. Fourth, the government in its policy paper refers to structural policies to combat inflation. But structural problems, while important because of their effect on relative prices, do not significantly affect the rate of inflation and hence concern with them deflects from the main problem. Fifth, there is a very great danger that the government will deceive itself into believing it has taken action to curb inflation by introducing an incomes policy and thus feel it less urgent to implement the appropriate monetary and fiscal restraint. For all these reasons there is a very great danger that the incomes policy will fail and worsen our economic problems.

● (2010)

I refer to what Professor Smith said, Mr. Speaker, because sometimes we politicians, when we enunciate what economists have been saying, are thought to be suspect. In my case I am a member of the opposition. But believe me, one issue that most economists are agreed upon is that, if we cannot have more monetary and fiscal restraint in this country, there is absolutely no way that a wage and price control program is going to work. We must be candid with ourselves and the Canadian public, and quit pretending otherwise.

Faced with Bill C-89, I ask myself whether the government is persisting in some kind of window dressing. Is it consistently trying to create the impression that it is doing something about inflation, while indirectly, through its own spending and excessive increases in the money supply it is seeding further inflation in the country beyond all expectations at this time?

Before private members' hour I was referring to the size of government and its great power to tax and spend. In view of the great number of government employees it is obvious that the government is the biggest of the big businesses. It writes the rules, it prints the money. What I am leading up to, as if hon. members could not imagine, is that in accepting guidelines we must ask ourselves where the government truly stands on the matter of inflation. We all know what John Turner had to say last June. He said we did not need controls. He felt the nation did not need controls. He said this week that controls should not be retained one day longer than is absolutely necessary to achieve their limited purpose. Obviously Mr. Turner is out of step with the philosopher king, who had another plan in mind.

What is the position of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), who reluctantly accepted that portfolio at a time when he was considering leaving politics? Before the controls were announced he described them as "frightening", and believe me, Mr. Speaker, he was right. In January the minister said that perhaps the controls will have to end between their second and third anniversaries. Is this still his view? Perhaps when this matter is being debated in committee we will find out more definitively from the minister when he sees these controls ending.

More important though than when the Minister of Finance sees the controls ending is the question: when does the philosopher king believe the controls will end? We all know what the philosopher king said on December 28 and on January 19. If we really knew what he meant we would all know where this country is headed. However, the whole success and credibility of controls depend upon what the people of Canada think. How does the average Canadian, who will never read the AIB regulations, view the program? Does the government's approach to fighting inflation have credibility with the people of Canada?

My quick response, Mr. Speaker, is that it does not, but it could. I base this on my discussions with Canadians from coast to coast. When you were growing up, Mr. Speaker, your father might have told you not to smoke, that it was not good for you, while at the same time he sat there puffing on his pipe. Or your boss may have said that you had to work hard to get ahead in this world, while he took off early for a round of golf. As a result we quickly learned the hypocrisy of "Do as I say, not as I do". I am sure each of us has encountrered this contradiction which makes growing up very difficult. It raises simple questions about moral values. Behaviour is something that is learned by emulation, not paternal edict.

That is my indictment of the present administration's approach to fighting inflation. While big business and small business, big unions and lowly office workers, trained professionals and struggling entrepreneurs are instructed to expect less and to settle for less, government exempts itself from the same controls. Indeed, we live in a new society where there is one set of rules for us and another set of rules for the present administration. I think this is morally wrong. I think this more than anything undermines the credibility of the anti-inflation program.

"Do as I say, not as I do" appears to be the creed of the present administration. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this type of thinking is shown up so clearly in the judge's affair that is now before us. What administration at a senior level of government in Canada other than this administration would be allowing cabinet ministers who have acted illegally to carry on in their posts?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Paproski: Now take it easy, Marc.

Mr. Lalonde: The hon. member made reference to cabinet ministers who have acted illegally. I think that raises a very fundamental question of privilege. I invite the hon. member to specify which ministers he has in mind, or completely withdraw the charge. I am not raising this question of privilege on a facetious basis, Mr. Speaker; I certainly want a ruling on this.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Withdraw.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I do not believe the hon. member made any specific charge. He did not name a specific minister.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It was a broad statement.

Mr. Lalonde: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, by referring to ministers generally the privileges of all ministers of the government are affected. I think the hon. member has made a very serious charge and he should be challenged either to withdraw it or be specific. Certainly I intend to pursue it if the hon. member does not withdraw it.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the hon. minister has raised this point. This is why we want a public inquiry into this affair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Let us find out who is right. It is often contended that government spending cannot be cut.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais).

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I heard the representation made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). Evidently the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is not ready to withdraw. If your Honour is not ready to make a ruling—

Mr. Paproski: He already has.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Blais: —I hope you will reserve further comment so as to protect the obligation that the minister has to raise his question of privilege at the first opportunity. If the minister wishes to raise the matter further, then at the time he raises it I hope the Chair will take into consideration that the question of privilege has been raised now seriously, that Your Honour has heard him, and would wish to hear further representations.

● (2020)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would suggest that the hon. member should not impute motives in that way, and that we get back to Bill C-89.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I was saying it is often contended that government spending cannot be cut. What will be cut—pension payments, welfare assistance, family allowances, or funding of bilingualism? No, these are sacred cows. Surely if you are forced to make hard decisions in your life or in your business to live within the tightness of the guidelines, then why cannot the government face up to the same hard decisions?

You will recall that when Bill C-73 was being passed in this House we moved an amendment that would have required the government to stay within the 8 per cent ceiling as far as its expenditures were concerned in the fiscal year 1977. We were voted down on that measure. I suggest that when we were voted down on that 8 per cent ceiling, the same ceiling the government expects every wage earner in this country to accept, the government showed its true style as far as its intention in respect of restraint is concerned.

The federal government alone now spends more than $30 billion a year. It is budgeting a 15 per cent increase, or another $4.5 billion during the next fiscal year. I find it incredible that somewhere in that $30 billion, somewhere in that $4.5 billion increase, there is not ample opportunity to make some hard pruning of government spending.

In this connection the insincerity of the federal government's commitment to restraint was made apparent on Tuesday when the administration authorized $198,000 in spending over what was originally needed or requested for the office of the administrator of the anti-inflation program. During consideration of the Supplementary Estimates (B), Mr. Tansley, the administrator of the program, told opposition questioners that his office required $100,000 in funds for the remainder of the current 1976 fiscal year. However, the Supplementary Estimates (B) finally requested $298,000 for his office, making apparent that very little preparation or consultation was given to an excess of $198,000 over what was originally requested and needed. Mr. Tansley, a $50,000 a year executive, is indisputably qualified by his training and experience to make such an estimate. In addition, with only 15 days remaining in the fiscal year the possibility of error becomes negligible.

Members of the official opposition attempted to reduce the $298,000 estimate to the level of what was required. Government members voted the motion down, eight to seven. In doing so the government mocks its own restraint program and is contemptuous of the Canadian people who are trying to make the anti-inflation program work.

This is a perfect example of the kind of fat in federal government spending that we are trying to cut. By actually encouraging this kind of spending, which was neither needed nor requested, the so-called spending restraint program has permanently damaged its credibility.

Rough justice, as the Prime Minister put it, should fall equitably on all segments of society, including the present administration. What has to be addressed frontally is the problem of growth in the economy. Severe restraints should not be imposed for any great length of time on a faltering economy. We should not be arguing about sharing a shrinking pie; we should be suggesting that the pie could be enlarged.

Immediate action must be taken to increase the export of our goods. We may not be able to blast our way into the world markets, but surely imaginative leadership can improve our position. Naturally, improvements must be seen in our productivity at the same time. This can best be accomplished by incentives. Most people will improve their output when the certainty of greater reward is there. This is the exact antithesis of being told that your reward will be limited to an increase of 2 per cent for productivity.

So there will be no confusion let me restate what I have been saying. Yes, restraint and regulations are fact; they are necessary. We said that in 1974. But there are two very important differences between what we proposed and what the present administration belatedly enacted.

First, we would have imposed a 60 to 90-day total freeze. By this we would have gained two very important advantages: we would have avoided all the confusion that is rampant today where one group is allowed more, and another less, and we would have had the time to examine the economy in its frozen state with much more clarity than is possible today.

Secondly, and more important, our program would have been limited to 18 months at the most. It was not the open-ended strait-jacket envisioned or at least threatened by the leader of the Liberal party. Our goal would have been to resolve basic inequities within 18 months in order to stabilize the economy. We would have gone on from there to offer incentives and positive government support to make the economy grow.

In Bill C-89 there are certain important clauses we should consider and question at the committee sessions, if this bill reaches committee. As the Minister of Finance indicated when he was dealing with the bill, clause 2 covers indirectly the extension of the control program to cover such industries as construction, trucking, and shipping. In clause 2 there is a specific exemption in respect of construction companies in the province of Quebec.

Dealing with this, I would suggest we should first ask ourselves: is the control program getting out of hand? You will recall initially on October 14, when the minister first outlined his program, he stated there would be about 1,500 firms that would actually be involved or controlled under the program. It was also stated at that time that the total complement for Anti-Inflation Board would be about 200 civil servants. We now find that the control program is to be extended to cover some 20,000 firms. When checking today with an Anti-Inflation Board employee we were unable to identify the total complement they have on staff, but the chap I spoke with said it is at least 400, and possibly 500 employees.

When we are dealing with clause 2 I think it is important that we question why it was felt desirable to extend these controls to cover all construction firms in the nation with the exception of those in Quebec, and why it was considered desirable to make that extension, covering even those construction firms including two-man companies. Think of all the red tape to which this will subject those companies.

When I read the letter addressed by Mrs. Beryl Plumptre to the Minister of Finance setting out the reasoning for this extension I found it most unsatisfactory, because the general impression I was left with is that the cabinet turned to the board, which it had the right to do under Bill C-73, and asked the board to consider whether these five industries shoud be included under its control program or its administration. For no apparent reason, and certainly no strong one, the board came back, and I guess it is not surprising, saying yes, all five should be in its net. What a typical example of growth of bureaucracy. The tentacles go out to cover thousands more never intended to be covered the last time this measure was debated in the House.

Not only do I point that out, by coincidence, we received a press release in our offices not too long ago from the Anti-Inflation Board which makes reference to the source of the complaints the board is receiving. I would recommend that members take a look at it because they will find that the number of complaints that can be related to the construction industry are comparatively low. The number of complaints related to the transportation industry in total is 1.8 per cent, which includes rail and ships. Yet for no apparent reason the government says that virtually the whole industry should be in the net at the present time. This is the type of question I believe we must raise before we pass this bill.

● (2030)

I think the Minister of Finance must give us much more concrete reason for feeling some of the approaches that have been taken to date are justified. The Minister of Finance referred to the appeal provisions which have been included and the fact that the administrator will be given changed powers and in some manner more orderly powers than he had under Bill C-73. But again I think a great deal more explanation should be coming forward before we are expected to pass the final reading and the legislation.

In clause 8 there is a provision not to allow members of the Tax Review Board to sit on the appeal tribunal hearing the anti-inflation cases. I think there should be some explanation why this has been found necessary. Is there a possible conflict here? Is it right to have this anti-inflationary aspect of this program so interrelated with the actual taxation side of our administration? As you probably know, Mr. Speaker, the estimates in respect of the administrator himself, for no apparent reason—certainly an explanation could not be given at the hearings of the Finance committee—have been placed under the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). Why? What is the link between the administrator in respect of the anti-inflationary program and our Income Tax Act? Perhaps at the committee hearings we will hear some answers to this type of question.

Again when we take a look at clause 11 we see it is proposed to amend the provisions that now exist which allow Bill C-73 to be terminated by resolution of this House. This was one of the most contentious questions when Bill C-73 was being debated. We felt that the 39-month period the government asked for in that bill was too long. We wanted the legislation to terminate in 18 months. The reply was that they would give the opportunity for 50 members in this House to request a debate and that within 15 days the matter would have to be disposed of and if the House so saw fit the legislation could expire whenever the resolution required. That is being amended, and we are now being asked to consider not that this House have the sole prerogative but that the Senate now concur in the termination of the programs in the legislation.

It may be acceptable to have the Senate at least pass on the matter, but surely if it is to be dealt with within 15 days of being raised in this House there should be some time limitation on the Senate rather than having the provision, as it now appears to be, that the Senate be asked to concur in the motion to terminate the legislation, with absolutely no time limitation concerning when that honourable House would decide on the suggestion. I know there may be other members in this House who have something to say concerning the right of the Senate to concur or otherwise in any termination motion we might see fit to pass in this House.

So far as I am concerned the end result of a restraint program should be growth and not a regimented and controlled economy. That is what we fear. We believe the 39-month period is too long. We are apprehensive that it will not be terminated at that time and could continue considerably longer.

In conclusion let me re-state our position. I believe some program of restraint is necessary at this time. However, I also believe that the present program will not easily be fulfilled. It will not be easily fulfilled for the simple reason that there is too much confusion. The people do not perceive that the government is leading the way or giving an example by paying serious attention to its profligate ways. The present administration should not count on speedy passage of this bill. There are too many questions to be answered. The present administration should not count on our support at all stages of this bill, which is an amending bill. It should not count on our support at all stages without further explanation and amendments. This country is too young, too vibrant, to need prolonged restrictions. Canada has immense promise, and I would like nothing better than to see it realize that promise.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Democratic Party will support this bill for the simple reason that we insisted from the beginning that this law, like many other laws of Canada, should have in it provisions so that those who feel they are being mistreated by the application of the law would have the right to appeal to an impartial body against decisions of the Anti-Inflation Board.

[Mr. Stevens.]

It was both amusing and interesting to hear the minister espouse that view when he introduced this bill because I can remember, if the minister has forgotten—and I would not fault him if he tried to forget—the cavalier sneering way in which he and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) refused the suggestion of members of the opposition parties. The former leader of the official opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) stated that this kind of appeal section was required in the law. Let me remind the minister of a couple of illustrations of what I mean.

On February 16 the then leader of the official opposition asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) a question, as recorded at page 10955 of Hansard, which in part was as follows:

> ... is the government by amendment, administrative order or some other way prepared to assure the right of a direct appeal of board rulings without the necessity of a party defying the board before such an appeal can be launched?

Later on, after some further questions are asked, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) replied:

> ... if a party does not agree with a decision of the board, then the board will refer the matter for the decision of the administrator. This does not necessarily indicate non-compliance on the part of the parties. Just to put it in the context of the normal judicial procedure, parties who are satisfied with the outcome of litigation normally do not appeal.

Of course the minister should have known then—and I think he did know but was trying to avoid admitting—that they would have to change the act because one party in the case of the paperworkers, the union members, could not appeal.

On February 18 the Leader of the New Democratic Party put some questions to the Prime Minister, as recorded at page 11048 of Hansard. He asked the Prime Minister:

> ... will the government consider changing the legislation so that the right of appeal is open to both the employers and the employees?

The Prime Minister replied in part as follows:

> ... if the employer is paying wages that are higher than permitted by the guidelines, it seems proper for the other to issue against the employer, not the employee. Therefore, it is the employer who should have the right of appeal if he does not agree with it.

● (2040)

In other words, even less than a month ago the Prime Minister did not accept the idea that any party adversely affected should have the right to appeal. Today of course the minister comes in with his bill, amending the procedure as was suggested by members of the opposition, as if there never was a problem, the government never had any doubts about this, the government was always willing to be fair. Of course nothing could be further from the truth. But as usual today the Liberal government was right when it opposed this kind of appeal procedure, and it is right today when it brings in this appeal procedure.

We will support the bill. I will talk a little later about the effects that this appeal procedure will have on the administration of the whole program, but I want to deal for a little while with the confident way in which the minister was arguing this afternoon when he introduced the bill. Although the government knew it would take considerable time before the effects of the program would be felt and before inflation would moderate substantially, lo and behold, already it is working, and the minister had figures to demonstrate that that was true. I think the minister should have been much more cautious than he was.

We opposed the government's anti-inflation program from the day the Prime Minister announced it, on Thanksgiving Day, 1975. We opposed it because we said it would not work, we said it would not be applied equitably, and we said it would create further unemployment. Let us look at these claims which he made beginning on the day the Prime Minister announced his proposals. Is the program working? Are we in fact over the worst effects of inflation?

The minister boasted that the rate of inflation for the past three months is down considerably, and he gave some figures to prove his point. I want to suggest to the minister in all seriousness that what we have had is a very temporary lull in the high rate of inflation. Let me indicate some of the reasons why I say that. I am putting them on the record because I think the minister will be eating large portions of crow within a very few months. It will not be tasty and he will probably gag quite a bit on it, but I make that prediction confidently.

We know that the government is committed to permitting a sharp increase in the cost of fuel, particularly oil. It is being reported reliably, I believe, that the increase in June will probably be in the range of $2 a barrel for oil. It has been calculated by economists, including government economists, that a $2 increase in the price of oil will mean an increase in the cost of living of somewhere between 1 per cent and 1.5 per cent for the year.

I noticed that while the minister was speaking the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell) applauded him vigorously. I saw the CBC national news a couple of nights ago and they were reporting that, as a result of the already sharp increase in the cost of oil which is used to produce electricity in the province of Nova Scotia, the cost of electric power there has virtually doubled. They reported that many people living in homes which are heated by electricity are getting bills for power for two months in the neighbourhood of $200 to $500. Those are tremendous increases in cost, and I hope that the hon. member for South Western Nova will be able to report to her constituents and the people of Nova Scotia why the cost of living has gone up when the Minister of Finance says that things are going so well.

The cost of money has just risen because the Bank of Canada has instructed the commercial banks to increase their interest rates on loans. The Bank of Canada will now charge 9.5 per cent, and of course the chartered banks will charge substantially more. My colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), says that it is almost 4 per cent more than the rate which is charged in the U.S. This means that the interest on personal loans, which is also at an all time record high, will go up automatically. It means that the cost of purchases on credit will go up when more and more Canadians are buying merchandise on time. It means that the cost of doing business will go up because most businesses exist by borrowing money from the banks, and if they pay more to the banks for the money which they have to borrow they will have to pass that increase on to their customers in increased costs.

A very good economist estimated for me today that the most recent increase in the cost of money announced by the Bank of Canada will mean an increase in the cost of living in the coming year of .5 per cent to 1 per cent.

The major reason why the cost of living increases have moderated recently has been the stopping of the increase in the cost of food. Surely even the Minister of Finance knows that that is a very temporary affair. Surely he has talked to his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who must have told him that livestock producers in western Canada are finding that they are losing money, that the cost of feed is so high that the price they get when they send their livestock to market means that they lose money on every head that they ship. So they are reducing their herds, the result of which is that although the price of beef has not gone up now, a year from now there will be shortage of beef and the price will be up by 10 per cent or more.

Surely the Minister of Finance must have seen the news from the U.S. that the midwestern U.S. is suffering from a drought the likes of which they have not seen since the dust bowl of the 1930's. This means that the price of feed will be up and the price of beef will be up in the U.S. These are facts which the minister has pushed aside in his desire to show some results from his anti-inflation program. I predict that three months or six months from now the minister will be trying to explain what happened to the anti-inflation program. My colleague says it will be the fault of the international situation, and he is right. That is what the Prime Minister was saying before and during the 1974 election. The Conservatives were saying that we needed a wage-price freeze or controls, and the Prime Minister was saying, no, we did not need them, and not only did we not need them, they would be bad. He was saying that inflation was not caused by internal Canadian problems but rather by international problems. That is true to a large extent.

I want to say to the minister, however, that if he had taken the time to look at today's Toronto Globe and Mail he would have seen that, rather than inflation declining in the western industrialized world in the last three months, in fact the rate is increasing.

● (2050)

Let me put on the record just a few illustrations. For the 12 months to January, 1976, prices increased in France by 9.6 per cent; that is about ¾ of 1 per cent per month. In the last three months in France the increase per month was 0.6 per cent for November, 0.6 per cent for December, and 1.1 per cent for January. In West Germany the increase in 1975 was 6 per cent. For the last three months for which I have figures it was 0.3 per cent for November, 0.3 per cent for December, and 0.8 or almost 1 per cent for January, 1976. In Italy the rate was 17 per cent in 1975. It was 1.1 per cent in November, 0.8 per cent in December, and 1.0 per cent in January. In other words, Mr. Speaker, inflation has not abated in western Europe and it is not likely to abate in Canada. We are going to have about 9 per cent in 1976 despite all the claims of the minister.

We said that the guidelines not only would not stop inflation but that they were inequitable. We know what is happening. The Anti-Inflation Board is following the directive of the government and wages and salaries are being controlled at rates somewhere near the guidelines—somewhere near the 10 per cent or 12 per cent which was indicated by the government. But what about income which does not come from wages and salaries? What about professional people? I do not want to repeat in detail what I have said on other occasions but the minister knows—he would not want to admit it—that both he and the Anti-Inflation Board threw in the towel even before the fight began with the doctors.

The highest income earners in Canada have been told that the maximum increase of $2,400 in one year, which was supposed to apply to all incomes, does not apply to them as individuals. It will apply to the doctors as a group on the average. I suppose that includes interns, people on staff, and all sorts of people who have relatively low incomes, and it will permit doctors who get fees for services to get more than $2,400. That is the kind of equity the minister has provided and in which he believes. We say it is not equity.

The minister today asks us to look at what has been done to business and tells us that prices are not going up and profits have been restricted to 95 per cent of the average of the last five years. Let us look at the question of profits. I want to remind the minister that profits rose tremendously from 1972 to 1974. Corporation profits accounted for about 10½ per cent of the gross national product in 1972. By 1974 corporation profits as a share of the gross national product had risen to 14 per cent. If profits are to be restricted to 95 per cent of the average of the last five years that is just saying that they are going to be limited to something near the all-time high.

Corporations did not have a particularly good year in 1975, not because wages were too high but because of a world recession which cut sharply into the exports of a large number of the products that Canada sells in foreign markets. Minerals like copper, zinc, nickel, iron ore and coal, as well as pulp and paper, did not sell as well as they had from 1972 to 1974. The price for minerals fell very substantially. If rather than a continued world recession in 1976 there is an improvement in the economic conditions of the western world, Canadian exports like those I have mentioned will increase very substantially and prices may go up. What will happen then? The minister and the government already changed the rules of the game which they announced when they proclaimed this program with such great fanfare. They are proud of the fact that they have excluded profits on exports from the guidelines. Now we have what I consider to be a completely unfair situation.

The workers at INCO, STELCO, Hudson Bay Mining or Abitibi Paper, and I could go down the list, are having their wages controlled. The paper workers were on strike for almost seven months and had to return to work for substantially less than they were offered without a strike before the anti-inflation program was announced. But, Mr. Speaker, if the business for those corporations for which they work expands, then there is no limit, no restriction on the profits they can make.

I say to the minister that it is completely unfair and completely unjustified. But it is the kind of equity in which the Liberal government believes. The minister maintains that the government is monitoring corporations to see that they do not fleece the Canadian public. We have said repeatedly that the government does not have the will and ability to do that. The minister contends that this is an anti-business stance, that it is just socialist rhetoric and does not mean anything, and that they will do what they say.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Let me put on the record the comments of a senior official of Revenue Canada. This was not reported in some wild-eyed radical journal of the left but in the Globe and Mail of October 31, 1975. I am reading it from page 9444 of Hansard for November 25, 1975, as follows:

> . . . James Gourley, Director General of Audit for Revenue Canada said:
>
> . . . some of the multinationals use their intricate corporate structures to minimize the taxes they pay.
>
> The Globe and Mail reported that:
>
> He said he had no idea how much Revenue Canada is losing through tax avoidance by multinational corporations. He guessed that missing revenue from all sources—including multinationals—might be 10 per cent of total revenue.
>
> I note the former minister of national revenue sitting in the House. I continue quoting:
>
> . . . it is difficult for Canadian tax officials to decide whether the costs being charged by subsidiary companies in Canada are fair or are being inflated to boost costs and lower taxes.
>
> A subsidiary in Canada may be supplied with products or services by its parent in another country. The subsidiary would write off those costs against its profit.
>
> But Mr. Basford said, when tax officials try to find out whether the parent is charging a fair price they may be told that the subsidiary has no access to pricing information concerning sales of their foreign sister corporation.

So there you have a senior official saying precisely what we claimed from the beginning, that the government does not have the facilities to monitor the corporations. Mr. Speaker, we have it from sources which we consider to be reliable that the situation is even worse than when Mr. Gourley spoke in October. I am told that today fewer people work for Revenue Canada than worked for the department in 1975. More and more the department will depend on corporations and individual taxpayers filing honest returns.

● (2100)

Lastly, we said that this program would cause unemployment to rise. We were right. Statistics Canada now uses a new method for computing unemployment. Supposedly the new method will indicate lower rates of unemployment. Yet Statistics Canada shows a seven percent unemployment rate, seasonally adjusted, even with its new method of statistical computation.

Let me say a word about profits. The minister patted himself on the back and promised that we should not witness a rise in profits. Well, today I read the annual report of my friendly bank, the Bank of Montreal. What did it show? For 1974 the balance of revenue, after income tax, was some $56,492,000. For 1975 the figure is $102,134,000. The same pattern applies to all banks.

In March, 1976, all banks reported that revenue after taxes had increased by 37.3 per cent over revenue in the same quarter last year. Royal Bank profits this year were up 31.6 per cent; Imperial Bank of Commerce profits were up 54.1 per cent; Toronto Dominion profits were up 26.7 per cent, and the profits for all banks rose by 37.3 per cent, as I mentioned previously.

Apparently this 37 per cent increase is well within the guidelines issued by the Anti-Inflation Board. That frightens me, and is an interesting commentary on the guidelines. They allow between 10 per cent and 12 per cent more to wage and salary earners, and 37 per cent more to banks.

I think I have shown that this program will not stop inflation. It is not equitable, as it bears most heavily on wage and salary earners and least heavily on the self-employed or those whose income comes from company profits.

Despite its shortcomings we shall support the bill, as it will allow employers or employees who consider themselves adversely affected by a decision of the Anti-Inflation Board to appeal that decision. We say that every person in Canada should be allowed to appeal a decision if he, or she, feels that the decision went against them or was unfair.

A shortcoming of the program is that it will encourage the growth of bureaucracy. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) said in so many words that the staff of the Anti-Inflation Board originally was supposed to be small, but has now grown to over 400 employees. Indeed the chairman of the board, Mr. Pepin, is reported by newspapers to have said that the board must deal with a backlog of wage and salary claims and can no longer guarantee a decision in 30 days. A decision may take up to three months. After a union and company have bargained and come to an agreement, they hope within the guidelines, they will need to wait up to three months before learning from the Anti-Inflation Board if the settlement will be permitted as coming within the guidelines. In the meantime I presume that the company will put the extra money it wants to pay employees in escrow or some kind of trust fund.

This bill will allow employees or employers to appeal to the administrator. So far, according to television reports, the administrator has worked with two assistants and some office staff, on a budget of close to $200,000 which he has not been able to spend. Obviously if employers or employees appeal to the administrator on grounds that they have not been dealt with fairly, the work load of the administrator will increase.

Why would employees or employers not appeal decisions of the board? The board is unlike any administrative tribunal I have ever known in this country. For instance, it is not like the Unemployment Insurance Commission which has established a host of precedents covering every conceivable circumstance which might confront it. For example, a person might be disentitled to benefits if his premiums were not paid long enough, if he did not try hard enough to look for work, and so on. If an employee feels he has been unfairly dealt with, he can examine the precedents to see if his claim is valid. Whether he has been fairly treated is another question. At least he knows how the commission works. The Anti-Inflation Board does not do that. It hands down a ukase from on high. It says, "You must reduce wages by 2 per cent or 3 per cent," or whatever the figure is. It takes little account of historical precedent average income in the area, and so on.

I predict that employees and employers in increasing numbers will appeal to the administrator. Not only are we allowing appeals to the administrator, as we should but the entire program will encourage appeals to the appeals tribunal. Its staff will need to be increased. Unless it supports in a routine way the findings of the Anti-Inflation Board it will need to examine all the evidence and arguments again. Therefore one new bureaucracy is being built up in the Anti-Inflation Board, another in the administrator's office and a third bureaucracy will be established to work with the appeals tribunal.

That will not be the only effect of the board. I have already said that the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board will not guarantee decisions in one month. Decisions may take up to three months. As more and more appeals are entered we can expect delays of up to three months at the administrator stage of the proceedings. Similarly there will be a delay at the stage where appeals can be made to the appeals tribunal. I predict delays from three to six months after agreements are reached by the union and the employer in the negotiations now taking place or likely to take place in the next few months. Justice delayed is not justice. It is unfair to the employees. It is unfair that employees who negotiate in good faith will have to wait for months before they know what is happening. It is also unfair to employers. It will create tremendous problems for them.

● (2110)

Think of the problems of a construction company which sees an advertisement stating that the Government of Canada, a provincial government, municipality, school division or private corporation wants to construct a building. It is asked to submit bids on that. What contractor can, with any confidence, submit that he is prepared to take on the job without knowing the wages he will be paying to his carpenters, electricians, plasterers and labourers hired to work on the construction of that building? How can he put in a proper bid without that kind of information? How is he to know whether there will be the kind of delays I indicated are likely to take place as a result of this legislation?

I am sorry that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) found it necessary to leave the Chamber. I am sure he would agree with what I am going to say. If you want industrial peace and a strike-free relationship between employers and employees, you try to settle differences as quickly as possible. If someone is penalized for breaking the rules, suspended for a week or month, or dismissed, and the employee and his union believe that the punishment was unfair or too severe, they file a grievance. Anyone who has looked at labour-management relations knows that it is necessary to settle problems as quickly as possible. If a grievance cannot be settled on the shop floor it has to go to the head office of the company, an impartial arbitrator, or to the courts, as many cases do. The post office is a good example of how stubbornness on either or both sides can delay the settling of complaints or problems. Hostility builds up on both sides. Instead of being deflated they become inflated, and further problems are created. That is what this program is doing.

This program is not leading to better co-operation and less difficulties. As we said from the beginning, it is leading to hard feelings between employers and employees, and to estrangement between unions and employers.

The program may work temporarily to dampen the demands, requests, and desires of employees. However, when the controls are taken off, as inevitably they will be, the demands will be greater than ever. There will be a legitimate desire by those who have been adversely affected to catch up. They will want to make the gains which they justifiably feel they should have been able to make but were prevented from making by this anti-inflation program.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He can only continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is it agreed that the hon. member be permitted to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to take more than my share of time. I will conclude very quickly by saying to the minister that while we support the principle that every person should have the right to appeal, as the bill provides, what they consider to be an unfair decision by an administrative board, we are interfering more than ever with the free collective bargaining process. This program is not working. It will not work. I predict that in the not too distant future the government, which is announcing its conversion to this idea and this program so belatedly, will be coming to parliament to announce that it is ready to implement a program of decontrols, going back to the system where collective bargaining is as free as every other force in this society in the give and take of bargaining between employees and employers.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comments on this bill. When you really look at Bill C-89 you cannot help but wonder why it is being introduced and why the government has placed a priority on its passage, as we heard this afternoon. It was about four months ago that the House passed Bill C-73. We now have before us Bill C-89 to amend Bill C-73. Perhaps we can take a few minutes to review how Bill C-73 was handled. It may make it easier to understand why we now have Bill C-89.

In discussing the anti-inflation program the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated that he wanted massive public input. He further stated we can make it work together. However, that did not happen. He did not have the massive public input.

When the Steering committee of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs met and set about their task of getting that massive public input, they listed about 25 interested groups that would initially come before the committee and discuss the anti-inflation program. We asked the government members if any time limit had been suggested for the committee hearings. We were told that, as far as they knew, there was no time limit, we could just carry on. Of course we perceived the government would want the legislation passed, probably before the House rose for the Christmas recess. However, initially at the standing committee there was no emergency apparent as far as the government members were concerned.

We set about our meetings, and the standing committee first met on October 30. The steering committee had agreed to meet a broad cross-section of representative groups representing consumers, school teachers, labour groups, business organizations, professional people, agricultural representatives, and so forth. When its report was presented, the Liberal member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) moved that the report of the steering committee be set aside and that the bill be considered in committee and reported to the House by November 14. After a great deal of debate and haranguing, this date was amended to November 21. Nevertheless, as hon. members can see, there was only the space of a few hours between wanting massive public input and a position of virtual closure at the committee stage. This situation, I am sorry to say, was forced us by Liberal members of the committee.

● (2120)

From that point on, hearings were a charade. The manoeuvre I have described was a calculated move. The hon. member for Windsor West came to the standing committee, I am sure, with instructions to choke off discussion. The instructions he brought were to ram the legislation through at all costs—to hell with input from the public, to hell with parliament—ram it through.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) encouraged this attitude. Look at the record. In spite of the fact that we all had copies of the bill and of the white paper, the minister started off by reading the bill word for word. In other words, instead of making a short opening statement he decided he would take up the full time of the committee by reading Bill C-73, word for word and clause by clause, until we stopped him. He was a little annoyed when we stopped him saying we did not want to hear the bill read in such detail but that we wanted to ask him some questions about it. When we did put questions to him we did not get many answers. He said, for example, that the answers would depend on the judgment of the Anti-Inflation Board or upon the position taken by the Administrator. So members can understand why he wanted to read the bill. He wanted to get his performance over and move on to something else.

Even the tabling of amendments was frustrated. We agreed to table our amendments at a specified time, as did the government, in order to allow all members of the committee to consider the amendments and their relationship to the bill. However, when the time came to discuss these amendments the Liberal members submitted their own private amendments over and above those which had been submitted by the government and the opposition. Then they took up the time of the committee discussing their private amendments rather than those submitted by agreement. In any event, the Liberal members voted against the private amendments submitted by their own party colleagues. One does not have to be a party politician to know that this was a manoeuvre designed to waste the time of the committee, to prevent discussion if possible. The purpose was purely and simply to stonewall and head off serious comment.

If the anti-inflation legislation is not working—and this is the view widely held across the country—the blame can be placed squarely on the shoulders of the Liberal members on the standing committee, not all of them, but a large number of them, for contributing to the charade. The blame for the lack of public input lies squarely on the shoulders of the hon. member for Windsor West and of the Minister of Finance. They are the ones who stonewalled and wasted time and they must bear the blame for the mess the program is in. I believe it is in a mess.

Here we are, four months after the legislation has been put in place, considering amendments to the act. Only seven of the ten provinces have signed the anti-inflation program. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) has asked the Supreme Court to give an opinion on the constitutional aspects of Bill C-73. I see by today's newspaper, in a Canadian Press report, that Nova Scotia has delayed signing the pact because the province wants to exclude teachers' wage settlements from the provisions of the legislation.

Why did the Minister of Justice decide to send the original bill, Bill C-73, to the Supreme Court for an opinion? The action was not prompted by his department or by the Minister of Finance. The constitutional aspect was raised during the committee hearings by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe and by my hon. friend from Edmonton West. Their efforts came to nothing at that time. What really prompted the Minister of Justice to take action was pressure from the provinces, and particularly from the province of Ontario in connection with the attitude of the teachers in Prescott. As the bill now stands we are dealing with more double standard legislation, and I think this is regrettable.

Teachers in Halton and other areas were denied historical wage adjustments or saw previous settlements rolled back, while Nova Scotia delayed signing the agreement because, in its view, the teachers should be exempt; they might have a good point, they might have some catch-up wage settlement, and apparently nothing could be done about that under the legislation. Had we been able to hear the views of all these people during the committee stage I am sure we would not find ourselves in this mess today. I hope this serves as a lesson to members on the government side not to take, in future, such action as they took to ram a piece of legislation down the throat of a standing committee.

Bill C-89 is really a sop. It cleans up a number of definitions and it allows appeals from decisions taken by the Anti-Inflation Board, a point members of this party made when the legislation was before the standing committee, only to be voted down by the Liberal majority. Most of the changes proposed in the measure before us could have been dealt with when Bill C-73 was before the committee if proper and adequate hearings had been held.

We note that the Anti-Inflation Board has a backlog of a thousand cases yet to be heard. Now we are told that the board, by order in council, will add 41,000 new companies to the list of those subject to the guidelines. We note that the trucking industry is to be brought under the guidelines, together with construction, shipping, longshoring, and grain handling. I question this move, particularly as it affects the trucking industry.

I do not think there is another industry in the country which is subject to as many controls as the trucking industry. When one thinks of the multiplicity of the federal, provincial, and municipal regulations in this field one wonders why anyone would wish to be in the business. Yet it is a vital part of our economy. At a time when rail lines in Western Canada are being abandoned and the trucking of grain to and from storage elevators is just beginning to evolve as an alternative system, it might well be unwise to place trucking within the ambit of the anti-inflation legislation. Perhaps when we get to the committee stage, unless ramrod tactics are again used by the minister and his people, we can be given some explanation.

It is particularly difficult for small and medium sized trucking firms to cope with further extensions of bureaucracy; they will have to add yet another layer of record-keeping to those with which they are already burdened. I am sure this will cause many of the small and medium sized companies to sell out to larger competitors. The question we have to ask ourselves is whether this is in the national interest. The same argument applies to construction companies. As I read the regulations the guidelines will now extend to the one-man operation. To impose added record keeping on these people will, I am sure, cause them to question whether they can continue in business.

● (2130)

It is obvious to all concerned that the Ontario teachers' contracts should have been viewed in a different light. The provisions of this legislation caused disruption in the school year, put the teaching profession in conflict with students and the population in general, and cast the whole profession in a light unbecoming to the dedicated people who comprise that profession. By their actions the government and the board disregarded existing contracts and agreements, denied the historical background of those agreements, and chose the role of confrontation. By their actions they built up regional disparities, and indeed disparities within a region.

Just where is this legislation going, Mr. Speaker? We see important decisions, such as the one to drop the export levy and the recent order in council to bring under the anti-inflation regulations another 41 companies, being made by the governor in council. Parliament is left to debate housekeeping items and to clean up sloppy drafting, interpretation, or translation. I say this is really perverting the role of parliament and the committee system that we have attached to this institution.

There is a provision in the bill to terminate the legislation prior to December 31, 1978. This causes me to wonder whether the government, having launched a program which for years it said would not work, is preparing to abandon it in another pronouncement from the Prime Minister that inflation has been beaten or is under control. Certainly pressure is building to have the profit provisions of the legislation removed or modified. Businessmen are finding it hard sledding to expand their operations and thus reduce unemployment by employing more people. They find it extremely difficult to plan and project growth with an anti-inflation program that has so many strings attached.

The chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board keeps telling the business community that the board is going through a learning process. While this learning process is under way, decisions by the business community are being put off, stalled, pushed into the future, or in fact abandoned altogether. I have personal knowledge of several companies that have been planning extensions to their plants but which have said that, in view of the way things are going, the state of the economy, and the regulations they have to operate under, and in view of the fact that they cannot get any clear decisions from the Anti-Inflation Board, that they cannot understand the regulations, or that they have to hire an expert to interpret the regulations and even then they are not sure that the interpretation is correct, they are going to shelve their expansion programs or cancel them altogether.

Our serious balance of payments problem and our disastrous trade deficit are not going to be solved by the Anti-Inflation Board. These will only be solved by decisions made at the corporate level. You cannot expand any business over the long term with prime rates at the level they are in Canada today. We see our neighbours to the south pulling out of their recession and expanding their business sector. This recovery is being partially fuelled by prime rates that are one half of ours. In New York city today with a triple A rating you can get a rate of 5 per cent. Rates of 5¼ and 5½ per cent are average. Our rates are 10, 10½ or 11 per cent. You cannot expect a businessman to embark upon long-term expansion with rates at that level; therefore pressure is building either to drop or to modify extensively the profit regulations.

I think it is neither proper nor productive for a manufacturer or producer or any businessman to have to plead his case before the administrator. Many will not do it. They will simply hold back projects and expansion until either the anti-inflation program is altered or ended, one or the other. I think the Minister of Finance and those charged with the responsibility of administering this legislation will have to consider this factor very carefully.

Our unemployment level is rising and is now slightly above 7 per cent. One would have thought that once this program had got under way there would have been a real drop in the unemployment rate. The fact of the matter is that the rate is staying at 7 per cent, and the projections of many economists, as well as opinions expressed in letters from various financial institutions, predict that unemployment will stay at the 7 per cent level, that real growth is not going to be that significant.

The dilemma facing the government is that, having removed the surcharge on profits derived from exports as a result of charging a higher export price than in the domestic market, recognizing that the profit squeeze will hold back recovery, and realizing that funds for expansion cannot be borrowed at current bank rates, there is little that the government can do but drastically modify the profit regulations or be prepared to accept slow growth and the continued loss of markets in the future. This is a factor about which I think the minister is concerned. I understand from a recent report that the minister said he would look seriously at the profit side this October. I urge him to look at it long before October, because I think that by that time some very important decisions under consideration right now may have been cancelled.

The political reality is that only then, of course, will the legislation control wages and salaries. This is the accusation of labour and salaried people today. It would be very difficult for the government to keep the legislation in force if it controlled only wages and salaries. Labour leaders have charged that this was the real intent of this legislation in the first place. If this was in fact the case, the political consequences would be very difficult for any political party to handle. In order to remain at all credible, the government will have either to move to price controls much more rigidly than is the case now, or drop the program entirely. The elements of both these moves can be found in the actions of the Anti-Inflation Board and in Bill C-89, which provides for an earlier expiry date of Bill C-73 than December 31, 1978.

I should like to close my remarks by commenting on a matter referred to by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). We saw a ridiculous act at the standing committee on Tuesday when Liberal members of the committee voted against reducing the estimates of the administrator of the Anti-Inflation Board in spite of the fact the administrator agreed he had $198,000 more than he really needed. Regardless of the technicalities or the perception that the government would not reduce spending, even when the administrator clearly stated he would not need it, this was a thoughtless and ridiculous act.

● (2140)

When this bill goes to the committee, if we have a repetition of the shenanigans that went on when we had Bill C-73 there, I can assure you we will do all in our power to oppose the passage of this bill. On the other hand, if we go to the committee meetings and the minister and his officials give us the information we ask for, in a proper form, I would suggest we will probably take a different attitude. The actions of the members on the government side at the committee examining Bill C-73 were absolutely deplorable. This was a mockery of the whole committee system.

If that sort of action continues in committee, then what we are going to see when bills are before the committees is that they will not be debated to any extent and everyone will withhold amendments and propose them at the report stage proceedings, so that the proceedings in the House will drag on and the whole process will slow down. I hope, when we consider this bill, we can reverse that process. Give us the hard information we ask for, in a realistic form, and we will do what we can to push these bills through.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke on the anti-inflation legislation, Bill C-73, last fall I expressed serious reservations about the hastily prepared piece of legislation. It was obvious that it was prepared in haste because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did an about face and imposed controls when he realized that, once again, the government was failing to deal effectively with inflation. The Prime Minister, on the eve of two federal by-elections, suddenly decided that a new gimmick was needed to save face, and out of this was born the Anti-Inflation Board.

The Progressive Conservative party has been consistently showing leadership in drawing attention to the need to control inflation, even with controls. But in the government's case it was not so much a desire to bring about effective controls as it was to save face.

Those of us on this side of the House pointed out the flaws last fall, and Bill C-89 could have been avoided if the government had been willing to listen. Now the government, caught in a bureaucratic nightmare, must pull the cookies out of the fire. Bill C-89 is a clear admission of the flaws in the government's anti-inflation program.

The Canadian people are rather apprehensive about the Anti-Inflation Board because it was established by a government that has continually put misleading positions on inflation to them. Government is supposed to show leadership in asking for restraint, and to practise what it preaches. I contend that it has failed miserably. We have continually called for a reduction in government spending and for the government to show restraint in its demands on the economy. Public opinion polls and commentary have made it clear that most Canadians were looking for guidance to help beat inflation. They wanted, of course, to be assured that their government was in the battle 100 per cent. All they got was a lot of whining about how much agony it causes to keep spending from rising more than 16 per cent. I ask the government to listen to the people who have been told their incomes cannot rise by more than 10 per cent. I ask the government to justify its lack of restraint.

It was amazing to hear the former minister of finance John Turner, offer his economic solutions the other day in a speech to the Ontario Economic Council, when his record proves without a doubt that he was the culprit in letting government spending run rampant. Mr. Turner can offer all the solutions he wishes, because he will be proven to be the most irresponsible Minister of Finance in Canadian history. Under the direction of this self-seeking political operator all government departments were handed a blank cheque to spend freely. It is little wonder then inflation remains uncontrolled. Any government that allows its spending to increase 198 per cent in a couple of years, obviously is not out to beat inflation.

For the record, I should like to point out some examples of the government's so-called restraint and fiscal responsibility. Rather than make a concerted effort to heed the criticisms of the Auditor-General to root out inefficiency, empire building, waste and feather bedding to save taxpayers' dollars, the Prime Minister puts on governmental showbiz. The Prime Minister wanted to put on a show for the public to win approval. His so-called restraints might have fooled some people, but in these times of economic peril the young, the poor, the unemployed, the elderly and so on, are not really affected, nor does it help them. They still face high inflation.

If one takes a careful look, only $466 million of the $1.5 billion cut back comes from present program budgets, and the rest from what departments had hoped to spend. One has to ask what kind of restraint that is. Who is the government trying to fool by flashing figures around?

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), better known as "Mr. No", has said he is the only one in the cabinet with the incentive to cut spending. On another occasion he said the federal government really has little scope for reducing expenditures in any significant way. It makes one curious as to what the minister's real intentions are.

If government is to play a key role in dealing effectively with inflation then the taxpayer should not have to read about such gross over-spending as the 42.9 per cent jump in foreign aid. This year the Department of External Affairs will have a $300 million increase in foreign aid, from $700 million to $1 billion. Where is the 16 per cent guideline in this case? While the Canadian public are being asked to tighten their belts, a lot of their money is going to countries like Cuba, which has some 12,000 troops in Angola. Obviously the word credibility has been removed from the government's vocabulary.

The President of the Treasury Board will no doubt share honours with his colleague, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury), in that he will be known as the most irresponsible President of the Teasury Board. People are no longer going to accept double standards such as those being practised in the Department of Public Works. In calling for restraint the Minister of Public Works has not done one thing to halt construction of the Guy Favreau complex in Montreal, which will cost millions of tax dollars. Are there not enough government offices without creating more, or is the government living true to its record of increased civil service growth?

The Department of Public Works has allowed the federal customs department to rent space in the Manufacturers' Life Centre in Toronto at $8 per square foot, despite the fact that over 39,400 square feet of space are available in its old headquarters.

In Winnipeg, federal government officials decided to renovate and old CAE Aircraft Ltd. building for use as a regional taxation data processing centre. When you take into consideration the interest to be paid on $1.7 million for renovations, the moving costs and so on, an entirely new building could be erected. The Minister of Public Works has proven he shows no discretion in other matters and no discretion in government spending. I would suggest that his department should be investigated to see how much money is really being wasted.

I could go on for days about the Liberal government's lack of direction in using government spending to control inflation. The Anti-Inflation Board does not appear to have any guidance over the government.

If we were to take seriously the message of the Auditor General, whose 1975 report indicated that the government is inefficient, wasteful, negligent of accountability, and out of control—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the reading of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) to bring to your attention that the tax data processing centre in Winnipeg, even though at a cost of $3 million, has brought to Winnipeg 900 jobs, of which I am very proud. I want to congratulate the government for the effectiveness of this move.

• (2150)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should make his own speech.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): He can continue reading.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, as usual the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) is away off base. He should read the minutes of the Standing Committee on Public Works where I questioned the Minister regarding this multi-million dollar blunder. A new building could have been built for at least $4 million or $5 million less than this extravagance they have been involved in in renovating an old building which they will move out of in three or four years. I should like to ask the member for St. Boniface why they are paying $4.50 a square foot.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Sit down and I will tell you.

Mr. McKenzie: You sit down for a change. The going rate for this type of a building is $2.25 per square foot. Ask him to sit down, Mr. Speaker. He does not know what he is talking about. In business circles in Winnipeg I have been approached and asked by people if they could get in on any other such sweetheart deals.

This is one of the biggest blunders ever pulled off by the Department of Public Works, and other businessmen in Winnipeg would like to get in on this type of deal. The president of CAE, when he is out with his friends for a coffee, is laughing at how he took in the Department of Public Works on this deal. I suggest to the hon. member that he read my previous speeches with regard to this deal.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I do not have to read speeches as you do.

Mr. McKenzie: If you would do a little more reading and a little less of what you are doing you would be better off.

If we take a serious look at the message of the Auditor General it is startling to note that in 1975 it cost 18 per cent more just to pay civil servants than in 1974. There are now more than 300 federal regulatory agencies, and yet there is no cost benefit yardstick to apply to them. The time has come to stop this nonsense the Trudeau government has forced on the Canadian people.

Now that the Prime Minister has decided that the Anti-inflation Board is here to stay, perhaps the government's record of restraint ought to be put under close scrutiny. Since the creation of the Anti-inflation Board its administrator, Donald Tansley, told the Finance Committee of this House that he had $198,000 more than he needs to run his office for its first three months. On February 27 the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, Mr. Pepin, said the board's staff had reached 410 and is still growing. When the program was annonced last fall the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) gave an estimate of fewer than 200 staff members.

The Anti-Inflation Board is well on its way to stepping in line with the government's attitude toward restraint. A Canadian Press report headlined "Fighting inflation at $240,000 a week" went on to report the Anti-Inflation Board will spend $12.5 million in the fiscal year commencing April 1. In another report it is pointed out that the office of the anti-inflation administrator will cost taxpayers about $100,000 a month. It has indeed become clear that something is amiss. How can we fight inflation by contributing to it? It is sheer hypocrisy. Last fall I spoke of the issue of parliamentary accountability, and now more than ever I believe the Anti-Inflation Board should be completely accountable to parliament.

Three months ago we recognized that if Ottawa is to gain broad public support for its anti-inflation program it will have to find a way to make public its actions and decisions on both prices and wages. Only through a build-up of case histories can a pattern be established that will enable Canadians to co-operate with the fight against inflation, and in the process build the credibility of the Anti-Inflation Board. The way things stand now, the public's faith in its effectiveness is not very high. As board chairman Jean-Luc Pepin said, "Mum's the word on most increases the board approves of". The taxpayers have a right to information about the board's activities. Naturally we recognize and respect the need for a certain amount of confidential items, but more information is needed.

The Anti-Inflation Board must make an effort to explain such things as why a group of teachers is deemed to merit a salary increase of 26 per cent, whereas some pulpworkers are limited to 14 per cent, both above the 10 per cent normal increase provided in the controls. To dispel this confusion the board must untangle the bureaucratic cobwebs and work to prove its competence. More important, by creating such confusion the board makes it difficult to know precisely what are the board's policies. There is neither rhyme nor reason to date, all in keeping with the government's attitude on inflation.

The Trudeau administration has made the whole scheme too complex to be understood by the ordinary citizen. The people in my riding, Mr. Speaker, do not have the time to read official documents on whether the prices they pay for food, clothing, fuel, and so on are within the distribution rules or the general net margin rules or the unit cost rules. All they want is real proof that the cost of living is in actual fact going down.

Even when interested individuals do wish to learn more about the program there seems to be a reluctance to help them. Take the case of the course at Niagara College of Applied Arts in Welland, Ontario, as reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail of March 17. It was, according to the report, the only non-union agency in the country to have a course on the anti-inflation guidelines and it attracted a good number of people. Mr. E. W. Robinson, chairman of the institute, reported he could not get a government man to come down. The board's media relations man, Mr. Roger Levett, was quoted as saying the problem is manpower.

Some months ago I stated that there should be consultation with the public at all levels. I believe the government has shirked its responsibility. There should be consultation with the provinces, municipalities, industry, labour, and indeed the public in general. In the case of municipalities the government has, by lack of consultation given them a free hand in spending, and this is not good.

I have received communications from small businessmen who are looking for relief from the rules. The board's guidelines make it possible for large companies in a field to reduce prices to stay within the guidelines. It will also force small companies to cut prices or lose business. Mr. J. L. Biddell, a member of the Anti-Inflation Board, in a speech to the Kitchener-Waterloo Chamber of Commerce on February 23 said:

> If relief from the rules is not granted in some cases, some companies will not be allowed to earn sufficient profits to remain in existence.

In the same speech Mr. Biddell said the present guidelines could result in large companies getting larger and smaller companies being taken over or going out of business. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CONTRACT WITH LOCKHEED—REASON FOR FAILURE TO PROVIDE FOR SHORT-TERM FINANCING—POSSIBILITY OF BUYING CANADIAN AIRCRAFT

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, this matter arises from a series of questions that have been asked in the House concerning the strange contract for the purchase of the Lockheed Orion. I refer to the questions that have been asked from time to time by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), and in more recent days by myself.

I hope the parliamentary secretary will address himself specifically to some questions which remain unanswered. I hope he will not think that this is simply an unwarranted attack on the government's position, because I appreciate that the matter is presently under negotiation and that the problem of financing is paramount. But I do think that this House deserves an answer as to why a company with the reputation of the Lockheed company in November of last year, after some six months of information from all over the world which has certainly scandalized the U.S. Senate, was not questioned very carefully as to the capacity of that company to develop its own cash flow or to generate sufficient funds within the company to meet its obligations on the final signing of a contract with the government for the purchase of the Orion.

● (2200)

It seems to me that the parliamentary secretary should try to answer the question as to why it was that further and more detailed inquiries were not carried out in this case by the Department of National Defence. I appreciate the fact that the parliamentary secretary does not speak for defence, but surely it is part of his general responsibility to answer why such a proper inquiry was not made into the financial capacity of the Lockheed company to satisfy its obligations under the contract in November when we announced in principle the purchase for $1 billion of LRPA aircraft. That was in November.

In January we found that suddenly there was not enough start-up money, and therefore formal contracts were not going to be entered into. We had the very strange interview with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) in which he alleged, first of all, that Lockheed had misled us. He then suggested that they were given an assurance by Lockheed that the financial situation was all right. In the same interview he went on to say that because the Boeing contract was basically the same financially as the contract with Lockheed, they were relying on the assurances that since Lockheed was meeting the Boeing contract it would not be a financial problem. All three of these statements are in conflict, and I hope that the parliamentary secretary will cast some light on that.

We have invested about $11 million and eight years of study in the purchase of these aircraft. In Canada we have excellent aircraft. We have the Argus, and we have another new aircraft which we have developed called the Dash 7. The Dash 7 is manufactured by De Havilland, and the Argus by Canadair. We did not need to enter into this agreement with the Lockheed corporation because we had a perfectly satisfactory aircraft. The Dash 7 would have provided very adequate service in the north and in terms of the environment, and the Argus, with refitting, would have provided a satisfactory LRPA aircraft and substantiated our anti-submarine role about which some of us have some reservations. Nevertheless, we can appreciate, with the 200 mile zone becoming a reality in the near future, that satisfactory aircraft will be needed.

We could have had Canadian workers and all Canadian companies, and every dime of that tax investment could have been made in Canada. The government made a bad decision and now it has a golden opportunity to change that decision because if it was misled by the Lockheed company, as the Minister of National Defence stated, then legally—

An hon. Member: He never said that.

Mr. Leggatt: The hon. member suggests that the Minister of National Defence did not say that. I hope he will read the interview in the Hamilton Spectator by Mr. Clive Thomas, and reject the statements in that interview as being incorrect. Either the reporter is wrong or the minister is wrong. I welcome the opportunity for that discrepancy to be clarified. I am taking this as a direct quote from the Hamilton Spectator, and I am prepared to provide the hon. member with the date.

An hon. Member: I have seen it.

Mr. Leggatt: I would be happy to be corrected if the minister is misquoted. I do not want to put words in his mouth that are not correct.

The last point I want to make on the Lockheed contract, is that the United States government guarantees the company to the extent of $250 million of its contracts. Two thirds of the company's contracts are for the United States domestic market. We have had some indication by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) in the House that that fact could give us sufficient assurance that we will receive delivery. I would submit that the present financial position of Lockheed gives us no assurance whatsoever.

In his response to these remarks I hope the hon. parliamentary secretary will tell us whether we have any United States government guarantee of delivery, or if we are going to take $200 million of Canadian taxpayers' money to buy a pig in a poke without any guarantee of a single aircraft. I should like that to be dealt with as well.

Mr. Walter Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure if I can reply to all questions that were asked this evening, but I wish to respond to the hon. member and to recent questions asked in this House concerning the financing of the LRPA, long range patrol aircraft program.

If my memory serves me right, the hon. minister has previously stated that the Department of National Defence has experienced difficulty in financing the initial development and production phases from its approved capital budget, and it has been necessary to examine a variety of alternatives in an effort to find an optimum solution. This has involved specialists in other departments, in financial institutions, and, of course, Lockheed itself. Lockheed's financial situation has made matters much more difficult. I can assure, you, Mr. Speaker, that this has turned out to be a most complex matter indeed.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Embarrassing too.

Mr. Smith (Saint-Jean): There is no question of impropriety, no question of negligence, or of being misled by Lockheed.

Mr. Forrestall: Says who? On whose part?

Mr. Smith (Saint-Jean): The cash flow requirements are quite normal for this type of program.

Recent revelations in Washington have added to the difficulty of the Canadian government in reaching an over-all position on the long range patrol aircraft program; however, the department and the government are hoping to reach a final resolution on this matter by the end of this month.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—REASON PRIME MINISTER CAN IGNORE REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, for 12 days now this House has been frustrated in its functionings; it had been unable to carry out its business properly and in the normal manner. There has been almost complete expropriation of the question period by a single item. There have been motions for adjournment that have interrupted the normal business. The credibility of parliament is being questioned. On top of that we have had a ministerial resignation followed by a prime ministerial rejection. A few days later we had a second resignation accompanied by a prime ministerial acceptance.

Those involved in these cabinet manoeuvres were involved in the same matter occupying the question period—the problem of the relations between the executive and the judiciary on matters before the courts. This is a matter that should never have arisen. It is most improper that it should have become an issue because it is a fundamental doctrine underlying democratic government, as we know it, that the judiciary shall enjoy complete immunity from executive influence in matters before the courts. The fact that this doctrine has been set aside and improprieties committed—those are Chief Justice Deschênes words—is reason enough for an inquiry.

● (2210)

Confusion has been heaped on confusion, with the reasons given for the two ministerial resignations. One resignation, not accepted, was tendered by the minister who admitted the impropriety and assumed full responsibility for it. The resignation which was accepted was tendered by the person on whose behalf the other minister acted. But the grounds for the second resignation were, according to the words of the minister concerned, in no way connected with the impropriety committed by the first minister at his behest or, at least, with his knowledge.

Then we learned of new rules and ethics, of the need to channel through the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) any representations which must be made on matters before the courts. One way or another, the credibility of parliament has been put in question. It is being eroded. I contend that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is at fault.

Is it any wonder that the Canadian people are upset and confused about events I have just mentioned? I must indeed ask myself if the Canadian people are not being deliberately confused. I am supported in this approach to the question of why parliament is more or less immobilized at present by considering another couple of red herrings which have been dragged, for no apparent reason, across the picture. Patriation of the constitution is one; criticism of Bill 22 another; the third is the "ganging up" notion, which any in their senses reject out of hand. There is enough confusion in this picture, enough unexplained anomalies, enough inconsistencies between answers given by ministers and the Prime Minister himself, to provide evidence that the confusion is deliberate and could be made clear if the Prime Minister wanted to clarify.

I charge that, with his tactics, the Prime Minister is deliberately holding up the normal procedures of this House. He is doing this by refusing to establish a commission of inquiry. As proof of my charge I suggest that if the Prime Minister were to accede to the perfectly normal request of the opposition and country and establish an independent inquiry into relations between certain cabinet ministers and the judiciary, the House could return without further delay to its normal business.

Why does the Prime Minister hold out so stubbornly? That is the question I asked myself yesterday when I formulated my query. There are two possible explanations. I do not know which one is true, or if they are not interrelated. I suspect, first, that the Prime Minister interprets an election as a mandate to govern without further reference to the electorate.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Consecration by election.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The government has an absolute majority of seven members; at the moment it may be only six. I believe there is one vacancy on the other side of the House. Being possessed of that majority, the Prime Minister apparently feels he need not respond to popular demand. This is the presidential attitude I deplore and fear. It is an attitude many of my countrymen deplore and fear.

Alternatively, if I am not right, if it is not that, the Prime Minister's attitude stems from the arrogance of power. It is the arrogance of power which allows the Prime Minister to hold up the work of this House. We know about the arrogance of power. That power corrupts we know; we have seen instances of it. And absolute power corrupts absolutely. We have seen instances of that, too. Has that happened to us, in Canada? Has power so gone to their heads that the members of the government no longer feel they need to be responsive to popular demand, popular request, and the popular will? Do they resist popular demand, even when it is made known to the government by its own members? We have heard of many on the government side who were kicking over the traces. When the vote came, they were obedient. There is nothing more docile than a maverick properly treated. Can this process be checked? Is there any way of stopping this "slippage"?

There are certain means at our disposal. We seek the truth during the question period. We want to seek the truth by means of an inquiry which could ascertain the facts more easily and objectively than we could, without disrupting the work of this House and country. After all, parliament cannot constitute itself a court of inquiry into matters of this sort. Parliamentarians are involved. Until the proper forum for the inquiry is established, we shall continue doing what we are doing. Why, therefore, can we not have a proper independent inquiry, in the form outlined by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) this afternoon, to determine the facts and to restore the credibility of this House?

I came to this House because it was a credible institution and I hoped to see it work. I now see it being eroded before me. Until such an inquiry is established we all suffer, our representative institutions and the individuals who try to make them work. The fault lies squarely with the Prime Minister.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) has indicated, this matter has been before the House during the question period for the past 12 days. All the matters raised by the hon. member are by no means new. They were raised during the question period. I refer the hon. member to the replies made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and other members of the cabinet.

Parliament is working very well. I challenge quite explicitly any reference or suggestion that the credibility of parliament is at all impaired. I suggest that the credibility of the opposition has been substantially impaired by their attitude and rambling questions on this matter.

I might indicate that parliament has voted on the question of confidence in this government. Contrary to the seven-member majority the hon. member opposite speaks of, if I recall correctly the vote supporting the government in this issue was 128 to 102. Therefore the majority was 26 votes.

I suggest to the hon. member that the attempt by the opposition to try to excite public opinion has fallen flat on its face. I further suggest that he pay more attention to replies that are given, and open his mind as well as his ears, so as to be able to receive the responses made by the Prime Minister and his ministers in good faith in an attempt to reply to questions, although incompetently asked by members of the opposition.

Adjournment Debate

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REQUEST FOR LIST OF BASES TO BE CLOSED—EFFECT OF BASE CLOSURES ON SEARCH AND RESCUE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, talking about credibility, when the parliamentary secretary can explain how it is that the Japanese military can buy 100 Lockheed Orions for $1.6 billion and we are paying $1.06 billion for 18, I will understand his lecture to us about credibility. This is the most incredible administration this parliament has seen in the ten or 12 years I have been here.

Just dealing with credibility, I am sorry that the minister has left. It is regrettable that the minister can sit here until ten o'clock and then not bother listening to questions with respect to his department. However, we have the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Blais: The very able parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Forrestall: He is very able. There is no question about that. I just hope he has permission to give us the right information. The information we are seeking is very simple. It has to do with base closures and consolidations.

I want the parliamentary secretary to respond to several questions. I premise my remarks on the clear understanding from the minister today that he does not in fact have the final report from his departmental people. It has not gone to Cabinet yet, so it is not the final report. If there are any bases to be closed, I will be damned if I want that to be the final report.

How many bases are involved? Where are they located? What are their military functions? How many civilians are involved? What is the extend of the civilian payroll? How many military payrolls will be shuffled around as a consequence of any base consolidation or base closure? What is the present impact of these same civilian and military payrolls on the immediate economic region? What will be the impact after this phase of base closure and consolidation is completed? And this is not the first phase.

● (2220)

It is an ongoing scenario we have witnessed for ten years under the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government across the way. I do not know why he does not stand up and say plainly, "We do not need a Canadian military force." That would end the sham he has perpetrated on the Canadian military and on the public to date. Because of the impact of these moves on Canadian workers and their families will the department, before cabinet has completed its consideration of this report, bring into a meaningful role in the decision-making process, UNDE, the union involved? Will it bring municipal officials and municipal authorities involved in this decision into a meaningful role, not merely a consultative role but a role which will reflect concern for the desperate situation which will result if the report results in further base closures?

I want to know, finally, because if the rumours are correct the economic impact on some of these regions will be desperate, what alternatives the government intends to make available to those who are affected. Will they involve the union, will they involve provincial and municipal officials, will they seek out provincial and departmental expertise to see that the impact is not so great that the people in the area cannot possibly afford it?

Finally, when will the government stop trying to save pennies by wasting dollars with respect to military spending, and increase the military budget to a point at which it is adequate to avoid the disastrous economic impact which could conceivably occur if we go ahead with any full-scale base consolidation program at this time?

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member who posed this question must be part owl. He seems to function best in the middle of the night. If he is a night owl, then I am a night hawk.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You are a hoot owl.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The hoot owl is sitting over there. And he comes from Grenville-Carleton.

I thank the hon. gentleman for the kind words he directed toward me at the beginning of his remarks. I appreciate those remarks but I am not going to let them affect my mental capacity.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It would take dynamite to do that.

Mr. Forrestall: Do get on with it.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I will try to deal with the questions he has raised. However, he is asking for answers to questions with regard to which no decisions have been made. I thought I explained that in detail last week.

How many bases are being looked at? Well, I suppose the answer is that practically every base in Canada is being looked at with respect to this review. Where are they situated? They are located from coast to coast and their functions range all the way from supply and reconnaissance to training. The salaries of the employees involved cannot be assessed until it is determined which, if any, of the bases will be closed. The same applies to the impact of closures upon the community. Until this is decided it is not possible to answer—

Mr. Forrestall: You will find yourself here once a week until you get some answers, so get used to it. And let us have no slurs with regard to my night owl activities, young man.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I beg your pardon?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You should withdraw that remark.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): If it has caused any offence I would be happy to withdraw it. I did not intend it to be offensive in any way.

Mr. Forrestall: We will be here once a week until we get some answers.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I do not mind that. Obviously it is not—

Mr. Forrestall: It is not important to you, but it is to an awful lot of Canadians.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants an answer I will try to give it to him, but he will have to keep quiet for a minute or two. I did not interrupt him when he had seven tenths of the time to ask his question, and I have only three tenths to answer. He is making it impossible for anyone to give him an answer. If he does not want an answer, I will sit down.

Mr. Forrestall: You would love to do that. You don't have any answers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members are aware that the procedure is very strict and that the time allotted for this question and answer has expired.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 19, 1976

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR PROHIBITION OF IMPORTS OF BUTTER AND CHEESE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on an important matter of pressing necessity.

Considering the tense and shaky situation the producers of manufacturing milk have to face as they never know what to expect from year to year and considering that our imports of butter and cheese are mostly responsible for such a situation, I move—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must know that it is the subject matter of the motion of the Social Credit Party of Canada which will be discussed today. I understand that the hon. member is asking leave to alter the motion to be discussed today with the unanimous consent of the House. If I am right, it is precisely the subject matter of the Social Credit motion to be discussed today.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, we are only asking the unanimous consent to move:

That the House ask the government to put a stop as soon as possible to our imports of butter and cheese, which could easily be produced in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

• (1110)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATION OF GANGING-UP ON FRENCH SPEAKING MINISTER—DISCUSSION OF SUBJECT BETWEEN MINISTERS OR IN CABINET

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Public Works. I want to go back to some of the responses given yesterday in the House. The minister was referring yesterday, in answer to questions I had asked, to what he thought, to use his words, were "baseless rumours" relative to an alleged ganging-up against Francophone ministers or French speaking Canadians. He said in the House he thought they were baseless rumours, yet he is quoted in La Presse of March 17 of this year as indicating that the suggestion had come from the then minister of consumer and corporate affairs. My question to the minister is: prior to the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs asking the Minister of Public Works to approach the judge, did the former minister indicate in any way that he believed his contempt of court proceedings constituted a ganging-up by the English speaking establishment?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): I think the hon. gentleman is asking me to disclose the substance of conversations between colleagues and I have indicated that I regard it as improper for this to be revealed in public.

Mr. Clark: We know both what the minister considers to be improper and, regrettably, what he considers to be proper. What I should like him to do, so that the House might have at least this piece of information, is to deny categorically, if he can, that any minister of the Crown including specifically the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs raised this aspect with the minister prior to the telephone call by the minister to the judge concerned? Will he, without revealing what went on—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Clark: —at least tell us that that kind of thing did not go on? Will he at least give us a categorical denial there was that kind of suggestion by the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs or by anyone?

Mr. Drury: I think this is established cross-examination technique. If you select, as has been tried before, a number of unlikely issues and get enough denials you can eventually glean some idea of what the substance of a conversation was.

Mr. Clark: It would be a great deal easier if the government would simply come clean and give all the information.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Let me direct a supplementary to the Prime Minister. When asked yesterday if he would deny categorically that the ganging up had been discussed formally or informally by members of cabinet, the Minister of Public Works said: "I am utterly appalled that the distinguished House leader of the Conservative Party should expect to get information from a member of cabinet on details of proceedings in cabinet." The Minister of Public Works referred specifically to details of proceedings in cabinet. Will the Prime Minister tell the House, now, whether the question or the idea of any kind of ganging-up was, in fact, discussed in cabinet, and, if so, when?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I always hesitate about indicating what went on in cabinet. I will attempt to answer this question but I do not want it to be seen as a precedent. In the overwhelming majority of cases I prefer not to discuss what went on in cabinet. I do from time to time comment to the press on what items were on the agenda and what were not. I would think it remiss of me to go beyond that. I can give an answer here, and even if it were an answer to the contrary I would not mind giving that either. The answer is that the issue was not discussed in cabinet, but had it been I would not see anything so scandalous about that.

The hon. member heard yesterday a motion in this House from the Créditiste party. They know something about the problems of Quebec. They know that this kind of issue is sometimes raised. If it is raised, either by way of rumour, as the minister has said, or by way of reality, it is the duty of the government, which is the government of all Canadians, to know about these rumours and discuss them if appropriate. In this particular case it just so happens it was not discussed, but I would not be ashamed if it had.

CONTENT OF CONVERSATION BETWEEN MR. DRURY AND JUDGE HUGESSEN

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works. Mr. Justice Hugessen's letter indicates that they discussed a great deal more than the sociology of baseless rumours. My question is to seek information. Now that the Deschênes report is out, would the minister tell the House, as alleged earlier last week, whether in fact he told the judge that the accused was a very important person, presumably to the government, and that the proceeding was politically very sensitive and potentially explosive?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think that statement, if I recognize it, is attributed to me, allegedly by a certain Mr. Holden. It is quite without foundation.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, I did not get many facts out of that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Drury.]

PRIME MINISTER'S CONVERSATIONS WITH MR. DRURY AND MR. OUELLET—REASON FOR ACCEPTING MR. OUELLET'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would now like to put this question to the Prime Minister. On March 9, 1976, which was before the Deschênes report came out, the Prime Minister said: "I listened to their version"—meaning the version of the two ministers—"and feel that their explanations indicated clearly that they were not attempting to influence in any way the judgment of the courts". Then on March 17 the Prime Minister said: "That is right, I got the answer from the minister on Monday". There were two periods when the Prime Minister examined the ministers or cross-examined them or discussed with them. Did the Prime Minister get a different version from one or both ministers—that is, the Minister of Public Works and the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs—during the two periods of discussions and, if not, why did he accept the resignation of the former minister of consumer affairs following that Monday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I got different versions because I asked different questions. If the hon. member refers to the text that he has just read, in the first instance I was concerned with illegalities and that was the burden of my questions. Once we had asked Justice Deschênes to look into the matter, then I felt that in all propriety I should wait for him to give his version of the facts. Having heard his version of the facts and that there was no illegality in everyone's judgment but an impropriety, I then went back to the ministers and asked them further questions relative to this impropriety.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now, we are getting somewhere. We find that there were two versions. I take it from the Prime Minister's answer that what was said in the second version led to the resignation of the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs?

Mr. Trudeau: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

ALLEGATION OF INTERFERENCE WITH JUDICIARY—METHOD BY WHICH ALLEGATION INVESTIGATED

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister suggested to the House that he would have the Minister of Justice write to the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec to ascertain whether or not any of the judges in question felt that they had been aggrieved, the reply of the Chief Justice makes it perfectly clear that he was dealing only with the matter of the judges, as the Prime Minister has suggested. Chief Justice Deschênes said in his letter:

—it is obviously not one of my functions to set myself up as a semi-official investigator on behalf of the House of Commons.

● (1120)

Further on in his report he said:

I therefore do not want to set myself up here as a judge of your colleague nor of mine.

Since it is apparent that Mr. Justice Deschênes has passed this ball back to the House of Commons and to the Prime Minister, who is its chief member, I would ask him what steps he proposes to take by which the House of Commons can properly discuss two cases of impropriety, one of which the Chief Justice says was a very grave matter? Since it is our responsibility, and I contend primarily his, how does he propose we discharge that responsibility?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the answer is very simple. The hon. member wants to know what means the House of Commons has to discuss this matter. It seems to me it took all day Tuesday to discuss this very matter.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows perfectly well that in the traditions of the House of Commons a matter can be discussed in one of two ways, either by having the matter referred to a standing committee of the House or by having an official inquiry. I am asking the Prime Minister which of those courses he proposes to follow, or whether he proposes to leave this matter in the air, which is the worst possible thing that could be done for parliament and for the members concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is fair to say it has been left in the air. The minister has issued an apology and so has the former minister issued an apology. Of course, it is to be expected that the House might not think this is enough. I have given reasons why I do not think it would be proper for the House of Commons to inquire into an issue which would mean subpoenaing judges before it. The hon. member mentioned another course, being the one of a committee of the House. I have invited hon. members opposite on several occasions to use this course if they so desire. If they know their duty they should lay a charge and we will examine it, then the prosper consequences will follow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest it is not necessary to lay a charge because the Chief Justice has accused two ministers of impropriety, and one of being a party to a very grave matter, so the charges are already here. The Prime Minister said the other day he did not agree with Mr. Justice Deschênes on certain points. Surely, those points ought to be cleared up. I ask the Prime Minister whether or not he is prepared to accept his responsibility and do either one of two things; refer this matter to a committee of the House or institute proper public inquiry?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is the same question over and over and over again. I suggest that perhaps the hon. member made—

An hon. Member: But it is true.

An hon. Member: And the same answers.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would gladly refuse to give them, if that is what the opposition prefers. The hon. member said I had said I disagreed with Justice Deschênes. I believe, and my recollection is to this effect, that I said I disagreed in some aspect with Mr. Justice Mackay, if the hon. member would want to look it up.

An hon. Member: Are you laying a charge?

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED PROHIBITION OF IMPORTS OF MILK PRODUCTS IN 1976-77

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

As we expect the minister to announce his new dairy policy for 1976-77 within a few days, has he made sure with his colleague on his right whether he can, for that year, forbid the entry into Canada of cheeses or dairy products that can be produced in Canada?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if I understand correctly, the debate later this day is to be on the dairy situation and I will be speaking during that debate. I am sure the hon. member concerned and others will be participating in the debate also, and the information should be forthcoming.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF AGREEMENT TO RESUME NUCLEAR AID—SUGGESTED TABLING OF AGREEMENT PRIOR TO RATIFICATION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since it is now two weeks since negotiations took place in New Delhi about the resumption of nuclear aid to India, and since the minister said at that time, on March 5, that the government has every reason to want full disclosure of all the facts, given this two-week interval in which I presume this matter has been analysed in detail by cabinet, is the minister now in a position to inform the House as to the content of those negotiations and understandings?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. lady is misinformed. The matter has not yet come before cabinet.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, in light of the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on March 11 that the negotiating team was acting under instructions—"Its terms of reference were established by me"—I should like to ask the acting minister, since the terms of reference at least were well known and clearly defined, whether he could inform us as to what the terms of reference were under which the negotiating team was operating?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I will pass this suggestion to my colleague who may or may not want to reveal the terms of reference. At any rate, he will be quite happy to make a statement when the negotiations are completed.

Miss MacDonald: I have one final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Given the commitment of the Secretary of State for External Affairs of March 11 that he would co-operate with any effort that might be made on a bilateral basis to have the subject ventilated in the House, would the minister undertake to table the tentative accord with India before it is ratified and put down a motion to debate it. I am sure the House leader understands that this is appropriate parliamentary procedure, even if the Prime Minister would dispute it.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there has been no agreement yet reached between India and Canada so that most of the discussion is quite premature. There has been, I understand, an initialling of a tentative understanding. That has not yet been approved by the government, so there really is nothing yet to talk about.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATION OF GANGING-UP ON FRENCH SPEAKING MINISTER—SOURCE OF RUMOUR

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. It arises out of answers to questions of the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister's answer with regard to his categorical denial that those rumours were not discussed in cabinet. In view of what the minister and what the Prime Minister have said, is the minister prepared to say to this House that not one minister of the government expressed the view that this matter was a ganging-up of the English-speaking establishment, and that he did not refer to the cabinet or any minister in the cabinet when he told the judge that this view was held in some quarters in Ottawa.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure but I think probably what the hon. gentleman is trying to do is ascertain what I have said to my colleagues or what they have said to me. It does not seem to me to be very profitable to try to pursue a line which I repeat I decline to be led down.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to say, through you to the Minister of Public Works, that that is exactly what I am not doing. I hoped the answer to the question would be no. Yesterday the minister said he would not tell us what passed between his colleagues and himself privately. The Prime Minister has said that the matter was not discussed in cabinet. Is the minister now saying to us there were some other sources in Ottawa who brought to his attention what might be called baseless rumours, other than a cabinet minister, and if that is the case who are they?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to pin down the source of information as to a particular rumour. I think the hon. gentleman is aware of the fact that such a story is on the record of the House of Commons, in view of the attempted motion yesterday. I quite frankly would be unwilling to try to attribute to a particular source my first hearing of this story.

● (1130)

ALLEGATION OF GANGING-UP ON FRENCH SPEAKING MINISTER—POSSIBLE SUPPORT FOR ALLEGATION IN ACCEPTANCE OF MR. OUELLET'S RESIGNATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it is on the same issue. In view of what I suggest is a double standard in accepting the resignations from the two gentlemen involved in the same impropriety, would the Prime Minister not agree with me that that double standard would add support to the very rumour which the Minister of Public Works says is baseless?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I can now answer the question of the Leader of the Opposition where this kind of rumour originates. It originates in the kind of question that was just put to me.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE WITH JUDICIARY—KNOWLEDGE OF PRIME MINISTER IF MR. OUELLET'S DISCUSSIONS LIMITED TO MR. DRURY

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Again I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Not taking the full two week moratorium on asking questions from ministers but whenever the Prime Minister finally did ask detailed questions of the ministers involved about what happened, did the Minister of Public Works say to the Prime Minister that only he, the Minister of Public Works, was involved in a conversation with the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs, or were other ministers involved in this discussion, separate and apart from any cabinet discussion?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I did not ask him this. I did say to the House that I know the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs probably discussed it with several of his friends and ministers. I know he discussed it with me and he probably discussed it with the Minister of Public Works alone and in the presence of others.

INQUIRY WHETHER MR. DRURY ADMITTED IMPROPER CONDUCT PRIOR TO RESIGNATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. On the Friday at issue the Minister of Public Works thought it necessary to tender his resignation. Subsequently he had a conversation with the Prime Minister, following which his resignation was not accepted. Did the Prime Minister ask the Minister of Public Works whether his conduct was one of wrongdoing and improper and, if so, what was the answer?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the question is whether the Prime Minister asked me if I had been guilty of any wrongdoing or whether the conduct had been proper. I responded that in my view it had not been in any way illegal. It had, however, been improper, and as a consequence I was tendering my resignation.

INQUIRY WHETHER MR. OUELLET ADMITTED IMPROPER CONDUCT PRIOR TO RESIGNATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Apparently the Prime Minister must have had a conversation with the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs regarding this entire matter, particularly with respect to the resignation of the Minister of Public Works. Did the Prime Minister in fact ask the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs whether he thought his conduct was one of wrongdoing and improper and, if so, what was the answer?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have answered this question before.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

SAINT JOHN—ALLEGED REFERENCE BY MINISTER TO APPROVAL OF POLICE OF LOCATION OF NEW INSTITUTION—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Mike Landers (Saint John-Lancaster): My question is for the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister care to clarify an alleged statement attributed to him in the Saint John Telegraph Journal of March 13, 1976 in which he is quoted as saying:

The police department and other groups who had studied the idea—

The reference is to a prison within the Saint John city limits.

—have also come out in favour of the location.

The Solicitor General is alleged to have made that statement in Fredericton, New Brunswick.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): That report is incorrect. I said that the chief of police was in favour of the location of the prison in the city in question. But it is also known that the police association has come out against the site. So one part of the police community is for it and the other is against it.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO SPEED UP PROCESSING OF APPLICATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Since up until yesterday the Anti-Inflation Board had made only 93 decisions and now has a backlog of some 1,000 cases, and since the chairman of the board, when the program was first started, promised decisions within 30 days, can the Prime Minister tell the House and the working people about the procedures the government is taking to speed up the processing of applications before the board so that decisions may be reached more quickly?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the question on behalf of the minister responsible.

Mr. Nystrom: Would the Prime Minister ask the minister responsible, who is not here today, to make a statement on this issue before Monday when the CLC will present a brief to the cabinet?

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure that if he were to do that it would be made outside the House, and the hon. member would not like that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

GRAIN

BARLEY—LOSSES RESULTING FROM WIDE SPREAD BETWEEN PRICES FOR TWO GRADES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COMPENSATE

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board or his parliamentary secretary. However, since they are not present here today, I will direct it to the Acting Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Many farmers are annoyed at the fact that in the 1974-75 crop year when they shipped cars of barley for malting, one car would be graded 2CW and the next, No.1 feed, yet both cars ended up for malting. Then, this year the final payments of 99 cents per bushel for 2CW and 18 cents for No.1 feed were announced. Can the acting minister tell the House what the government plans to do to compensate the farmers for this unrealistic spread in the final payments between 2CW barley and No.1 feed which amounted to losses of $2,000 per car for many farmers?

Hon. Ron Basford (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Acting Minister of Transport I will be happy to take notice of the question.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

DATE OF RATIFICATION OF UNITED NATIONS DECLARATION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Have the necessary arrangements now been put in place between the government of Canada and the provinces so that Canada can ratify the UN Declaration on Human Rights? We were promised a month or six weeks ago that that ratification was imminent.

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, at the federal-provincial conference held on December 11 last, we reached an agreement on principle. I wish I could tell him that the agreement has been signed, but that I do not know. However, I shall take note of the question of the hon. member and look into the matter.

* * *

[English]

AGRICULTURE

BROILERS—POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING NATIONAL MARKETING AGENCY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture and ask him whether a decision has been reached with respect to the establishment of a broiler marketing agency under the Farm Products Marketing Act.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, I met people from the different provincial marketing boards and told them I would consider their request but that I wanted to make it plain to any marketing agency with which I was involved that I would have to have more federal authority than we had in anything they were proposing at that time.

BROILERS—POSSIBILITY OF ACTION ON FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD REPORT CONCERNING MARKETING PRACTICES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Is the minister able to tell the House what action, if any, the government has taken on the recommendation of the Food Prices Review Board or at least in respect of their report of October 1975 with regard to the broiler industry in Canada and what appear to be certain questionable marketing practices in contravention of the BNA Act?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The marketing practices referred to by the Food Prices Review Board are under provincial jurisdiction and I have very little if anything to do with that. The broiler producers in Canada at present are practically being put out of business by cheap imports from the Southern United States.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATUS OF COMMUNICATIONS PROJECT SAMSON—POSSIBLE DELAY IN COMPLETION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Could he inform the House of the status of project Samson, the new system which is to update communications in the Department of National Defence?

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Samson project is continuing and will be completed in the near future.

Mr. McKenzie: Has Computing Devices of Ottawa fulfilled its $6 million contract with the Department of Supply and Services to supply terminal equipment for the $24 million Samson project?

Mr. Richardson: No, Mr. Speaker, I understand that Computing Devices have not been able to complete their part of the contract.

Mr. McKenzie: Will the program be in operation as scheduled for mid 1976?

● (1140)

Mr. Richardson: I do not know if the difficulties which Computing Devices have encountered will in fact have the effect of delaying the program. That is possible.

* * *

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED PARTICIPATION OF MR. HOLDEN IN LETTER FROM JUDGE MACKAY—PURPOSE OF LETTER

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice.

Can he ask the Chief Justice of the Quebec Superior Court to find out whether there is any truth or not behind the rumours now circulating that Mr. Holden helped, directly or indirectly, to write the letter Judge Mackay sent, and whether the judge's letter was motivated only by the fact that his former associate's fees have not been paid, and whether his former associates' firm still owe him some money?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my view of any such rumours would be that, even if true, they would clearly be within the management of the court which, as I have stated many times in the House and as the Chief Justice of the Superior Court documents in his letter to me, under the Quebec Judiciary Act is clearly within the hands of the Chief Justice.

POSSIBLE REFERENCE OF ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH JUDICIARY TO CANADIAN JUDICIAL COUNCIL—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he regularly or even occasionally receives the determination of matters which come before the Canadian Judicial Council.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker. Under the law I would receive those matters which I have directed the council to take under consideration under section 32(1), I think it is, but apart from that, no.

Mr. Lawrence: Because the whole question of the dial-a-judge scandal has been referred to the Canadian Judicial Council by one of the judges involved, and because it is a matter of importance and has received much publicity, I wonder if the Minister of Justice would be good enough to make sure that he receives a report from the Canadian Judicial Council on the matter, which it is now obviously discussing because it has been referred to it, and if the minister would undertake to release that report to the House and to the public?

Mr. Basford: I am not aware that matters have been referred to the Judicial Council, and I point out to the hon. member, who has for two weeks in this House been talking about the independence of the judiciary, that I am in no position to demand reports from the Judicial Council except those provided by law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

POST OFFICE

VANCOUVER—FAILURE TO DELIVER BROCHURES FOR KINSMEN REHABILITATION FOUNDATION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Has the Postmaster General received a complaint from the Kinsmen Rehabilitation Foundation of British Columbia with respect to the failure of the Vancouver Post Office to deliver to apartment blocks in Vancouver, under bulk permit 3229, several thousand brochures appealing for funds? Because of the importance of this appeal to the fund raising activities of the foundation on behalf of the handicapped of British Columbia, I wonder if the minister could inform the House what action he has taken on the matter.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I understand that immediately upon complaint the matter was referred to the investigation department of the Post Office. It has virtually completed its investigation, but a very important part of that investigation is a meeting with the executive director of the Kinsmen Club, and for one reason or another they have been unable to arrive at a suitable date for such a meeting. When that meeting is held with the executive director of the Kinsmen Club, I would then consider the investigation completed and would then be in a position to see what corrective measures might be taken, if any.

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the fact that the Kinsmen Foundation complaint has provided specific details as to where delivery failure took place, I wonder if we could have the assurance of the Postmaster General that delivery will take place without further costs to the foundation.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. gentleman can have my assurance that, once the investigation is completed, if upon reading the results of that investigation I find that in any way the Post Office has been remiss in its duty, then certainly we would want to make that type of adequate compensation, but I am still not convinced that the Post Office is necessarily at fault. The meeting with the executive director of the Kinsmen Club is very germane to the decision.

* * *

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT COMMISSION CEASE SETTING DEADLINE FOR ELIGIBILITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since the Unemployment Insurance Commission continues to apply internal regulations, which do not even have force of law, concerning the deadline for benefit claims, in spite of the fact that an umpire of the federal court has qualified this policy illegal and that a number of unemployed are thus deprived of benefits, could the minister tell this House whether he intends to take steps to put an end to these administrative practices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge with few exceptions the regulations made by the Unemployment Insurance Commission under the authority of the Governor in Council have to pertain to, and have their power from, the act itself. If in the odd case there is a regulation which does not meet favour in the appeal system through the courts, then that is corrected. That is normal procedure.

* * *

TRANSPORT

EFFECT OF SUBSIDIZING NEW STEAMSHIP SERVICE FROM GREAT LAKES TO ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. However, in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Minister of Transport. I was wondering if the minister is aware of a new steamship service commencing in the first part of April, 1976 from the Great Lakes direct to St. John's, Newfoundland. May I ask the minister if a subsidy is being provided from the national treasury for this new service? Has a study been made by the department to ascertain what effect this will have on Canadian National shipping through the port of North Sydney into Newfoundland, with particular reference to employment at those docks and at Port aux Basques and also the general employment with the CN system in the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Ron Basford (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will have the Minister of Transport determine what, if any, subsidies have been paid and what, if any, analyses have been made of that service.

Mr. Muir: I realize the minister is at a disadvantage today, being in several portfolios at once, but would he ask the Minister of Transport to advise the House if it is the intention of this government to take people's money and give it to private corporations as a subsidy, thereby competing against Canadian National ships and creating more unemployment in Port aux Basques, Newfoundland and North Sydney, Nova Scotia? I refer particularly to Clarke Steamship.

Mr. Basford: I will determine the precise answer to that question, but it is the objective of the Minister of Transport and this government to spend public moneys in providing to Canada and Canadians the most effective and efficient transportation system possible.

* * *

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

TAKEOVER OF WESTINGHOUSE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the minister advise the House of the situation regarding Westinghouse Canada, White Consolidated and General Steelwares? Has a decision been reached on this matter?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. As he, I think, knows, I returned only Tuesday of this week. There was not time for me to review the new evidence which came in during my absence, but I have scheduled a full meeting with regard to this for next week, and barring some unforeseen circumstances which I do not anticipate at the moment, it should be possible to announce a decision late next week.

* * *

[Translation]

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES CONCERNING BROADCASTING

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Communications.

Wednesday in Montreal, referring to the federal provincial dispute over communications, the minister said, and I quote:

> Nobody has ever even tried to negotiate concrete agreements to know how far the federal government was prepared to go in its proposals.

Could the minister tell the House whether the government soon intends to take the initiative of indicating to the provinces how far it is prepared to go in its proposals, and when will the minister be ready to outline in the House the major principles of those proposals?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in that part of my speech, I referred to the attitude of some provinces which took a take-it-or-leave-it position, that is to say we had either to deny that the federal government had a predominant responsibility in the field of communications, or to have no negotiations whatsoever. Now, my whole speech was to say that apart from that take-it-or-leave-it logics, there are parameters on which there can be some discussion. For the hon. member's information, I intend to visit the provinces to meet my provincial counterparts to determine what the needs of the provinces in the communications field are exactly and to see, in the light of offers which were already known by the provinces, what arrangements the federal government can make to meet these needs.

* * *

● (1150)

[English]

AGRICULTURE

RESPONSIBILITY FOR DETECTING OUTBREAK OF BLUE TONGUE—REACTION OF UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture? It relates to a new development to do with the livestock disease, blue tongue. I thank the minister for passing along the background paper relating to the new embargo in Great Britain preventing the entry to that country of Canadian livestock. The reason for the embargo is the disease, blue tongue. May I ask the minister how this particular outbreak was detected? I am thinking particularly of the outbreak on the border between British Columbia and the United States. Was it detected as a result of our own, Canadian health of animals tests, or as a result of the recently announced United States policy under which U.S. authorities monitor shipments of live Canadian cattle to that country? Did they do the testing, and were we advised of the result?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the disease was detected by our own inspection service, which checks on all imported animals. We believe the disease may have been transmitted by an imported bull brought into the herd from the United States. The herd is right on the border between British Columbia and the state of Washington. Or, it could have been transferred to the herd over the fence. We are concerned.

An hon. Member: That's enough bull, now.

Mr. Whelan: We still feel that our herds in Canada are free of blue tongue and we have done everything possible to eradicate the disease.

Mr. Hargrave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if there has been a response from the United States health of animals authorities with regard to this specific incident?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if there has been a response on this specific instance.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REASON FOR DELAY OF DECISION ON DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—TYPE OF INFORMATION NEEDED PRIOR TO DECISION

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. A news report in one of today's newspapers alleges that the cabinet has delayed for one month issuing a permit to Dome Petroleum for the drilling of oil in the Beaufort Sea. Why was the decision delayed for only one month?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the government felt that additional information was required before it would be in a position to take a final decision. Pending receipt of necessary information, we delayed for one month.

Mr. Firth: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. For what information are we waiting? Would the minister consider delaying this decision for more than one year? Also, can he estimate how an intervention by the United States would affect the decision?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, there are indications from the United States that they would like to study the information. The authorities there are concerned about the effects of a blowout on the north coast. They are worried about the ramifications. These and other factors we shall need to examine further, prior to taking a decision at the end of one month.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT ON EXPORT TRADE OF REMOVAL OF TRANSPORTATION SUBSIDY ON FLOUR—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Agriculture arises from the government's intention to remove, effective April 1, the subsidy paid for the transportation of flour and grain which is to be exported from eastern Canadian ports. Has the minister examined the impact of this proposal on the flour and grain industry, and on other related industries in Canada? If so, can he say what impact this action will have on our flour and grain export trade? I ask this as Canadian flour exports in the past 20 years have declined dramatically, and the government's action will reduce further our penetration of the important market for these commodities.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, may I answer the last part of the question first? I think the hon. member knows that more countries now mill their own flour. It is easier to transport grain to many parts of the world than to transport flour. We are concerned about what milling in other countries may do to the flour milling industry in eastern Canada especially. At present we have studies under way. I have been in touch with the President of the Treasury Board, to discuss this in detail.

Mr. Mazankowski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What action is the minister's department, or associated departments, prepared to take, in order to increase Canada's penetration of the export flour market, our share in which declined by 50 per cent in the past 20 years while world demand increased by 50 per cent.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said earlier. As the hon. member knows, many countries have received help for establishing milling facilities within their own borders. Our wheat is being moved to those countries. They are using our commodity. This is how they want to do it and we are selling all the wheat we can, as I am sure the hon. member knows.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF SAFEGUARDS AGAINST POSSIBILITIES ENVISAGED BY MR. TURNER

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister relates to the revealing statement recently made by the former minister of finance who described the government's incomes control program as being extremely restrictive of personal freedom and suggested that because of its open-endedness, it will lead to totalitarian rule. Has the Prime Minister discussed these revelations of the former minister with the cabinet? If so, is the government prepared to review the program and provide safeguards, to guard against eventualities to which the former minister alluded?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, I do not think it is proper for me to reveal everything which goes on in cabinet. When the matter is of such high importance as the alleged quotation of the hon. member I, of course, could not answer the question.

* * *

MANPOWER

MEASURES TO ASSURE CANADIAN HELICOPTER PILOTS ARE GIVEN JOB PREFERENCE

Mr. Roger Young (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. As large numbers of Canadian helicopter pilots, who, incidentally, received expensive training in this country are unemployed—

Mr. Nielsen: At Niagara Falls?

Mr. Young: —and as foreign pilots still seem to get the best if not the largest number of available jobs, especially in the far north, would the minister consult on this matter with his manpower officials, to make certain that unemployed Canadian pilots are given job preference and thus ease our unemployment difficulties?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly take note of the hon. member's question and look into the matter immediately.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT OF DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the decision to delay issuing oil drilling permits in the Beaufort Sea, and as the Minister of the Environment said that drilling operations in the Beaufort Sea would cause substantial environmental impact, whether or not polluting incidents occur, would the minister consider referring the question of environmental impact of drilling in the Beaufort Sea to the appropriate standing committee of this House for special study?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, a committee of technicians has studied the matter. We have the report and I think the hon. member, too, has a copy of the report. I think it was discussed this morning in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. Now, the matter is before cabinet and I am waiting for an answer.

* * *

INDUSTRY

TRIDENT AIRCRAFT CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR GRANT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce concerns Trident Aircraft Corporation of Richmond, British Columbia. As the British Columbia Development Corporation and the shareholders of the company agreed to put up a considerable sum of money if the federal government will either guarantee a PAIT loan or grant, can the minister say if there is to be a favourable decision shortly, or any decision at all on the matter?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the most recent development concerning the British Columbia government, but I am glad to see that it supports the company. Prior to this question this morning, about three or four weeks ago, I instructed our officials to be in touch with Trident with regard to any additional help that we might give. The hon. member already knows that we have put a significant amount into that project. I will certainly follow up this new information to see if it helps matters.

* * *

● (1200)

AGRICULTURE

BROILERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CURTAIL IMPORTS

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Earlier in the question period the minister stated that the broiler industry is being put out of business because of cheap imports into Canada. Does his government condone this type of action? If not, what are they going to do about it?

[Mr. Andras.]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are concerned about it, but it is up to the broiler producers themselves. We have legislation to give them protection if they follow proper procedures and prove that they have supply-management within their industry at the present time. I stated there were cheap imports being brought in from the United States. I did not say they were being dumped.

TOBACCO—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO INCREASE RETURNS TO PRODUCERS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the low prices prevailing this year at the tobacco auctions and the difficulty tobacco farmers are having in meeting their costs, does the minister feel these concerns are justified? Is this something within the purview of his ministry? If this is a problem, what will he do about it?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think that some of the concerns are justified. I will not go so far as to say they are all justified. I met with tobacco growers from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec and Ontario this week. They are concerned about the buying authority in the tobacco industry and how much real competition there may be in the buying authority. They are concerned about the fact that they have an 18 months supply and there are imports coming into Canada from the United States and other parts of the world which take away the markets from these producers. They also talked about a national marketing board for tobacco.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. SHARP—REMARKS OF HON. MEMBER FOR YORK-SIMCOE IN YESTERDAY'S DEBATE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, of which I have given you notice. Last night the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) violated the practice of this House by making unsubstantiated allegations about unspecified ministers. At page 11926 of the debates for yesterday, the hon. member is recorded as saying:

> "Do as I say, not as I do" appears to be the creed of the present administration. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this type of thinking is shown up so clearly in the judge's affair that is now before us. What administration at a senior level of government in Canada other than this administration would be allowing cabinet ministers who have acted illegally to carry on in their posts?

I would draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, specifically to the reference to "the judge's affair" and then to the way in which, in relation to that affair, it is alleged that certain ministers have acted illegally. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), in accordance with proper parliamentary practice, immediately rose on a question of privilege, inviting the hon. member for York-Simcoe to specify which ministers he had in mind, or completely to withdraw the charge of illegality. He indicated that if the matter was not disposed of at that time, it would be pursued. My parliamentary secretary also indicated that in the absence of an immediate ruling from the Chair, the matter would be pursued. The Acting Speaker merely admonished the hon. member for York-Simcoe for imputing motives.

The proprieties of this House in matters such as these are quite clear. Not only must a member wishing to charge another with misconduct be specific, but he must be willing to stake his seat on being able to prove his charge.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: This practice was developed in order to prevent the destruction of order in this House by reducing its deliberations to innuendo and smear. I therefore demand, Mr. Speaker, that the member for York-Simcoe either make a specific charge of illegality against specific ministers, and stake his seat on being able to prove it, or that he withdraw his statement.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, I am rather surprised—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are always surprised.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am glad the members are enjoying themselves. I repeat that I am rather surprised to see the government House leader rise, in these circumstances, with regard to matters that have been described as acts of wrong-doing by the government, by columnists and, indeed, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In fact, I am extremely surprised. Perhaps, before I deal with the merits of the question of privilege, the fact that the government House leader has seen fit to rise on this matter, which indirectly affects the judiciary and the ministry in Canada, is the best argument we have heard yet for the judicial inquiry we are demanding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I would now like to get to the merits of the question of privilege. With respect, what you have to decide, Mr. Speaker, is whether this is indeed a question of privilege, carrying with it certain responsibilities, or whether it is simply a further development of a basic disagreement that has become apparent in this House over the last 12 days of intensive discussions on this important public matter. My respectful submission to you, sir, is that it is nothing more, in the final analysis, than the latter rather than the former to which I am referring. I want to give some examples. On July 30, 1975, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) rose in this House on a question of privilege arising out of remarks made to him by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) with regard to certain very contentious and questionable matters about the conduct of the minister. He said, and I quote from page 8075 of Hansard for July 30, 1975:

—Mr. Speaker, as recorded at page 8026 of Hansard, the minister accused me of "indecency in casting innuendoes"—

Your Honour ruled at that time. You said:

The only question which remains is that raised by the hon. member for Central Nova concerning the language used yesterday by the Minister of Labour, indicating that what I understood to be remarks made by the hon. member, always in the House and always recorded in Hansard, were indecent in their innuendo and disgraceful in the conduct of the hon. member. That is an opinion that has been expressed in this House openly by the minister. The hon. member for Central Nova has taken offence at this. This is the chamber for disagreements. That is a classic case of one of them. It would have to be otherwise, in my opinion, in order to found a prima facie case of privilege, namely, that the language of the Minister of Labour was unparliamentary.

● (1210)

In examining the precedents I am unable to find the expressions he has used and the way he has used them are in any way unparliamentary. They simply contain and inflame the disagreement between the two hon. members. If we are to adjourn for a prolonged period later this day, or some day soon, perhaps it will be a pity, because the disagreement is becoming entertaining. Nevertheless, it is still a disagreement and not a question of privilege.

This was your ruling with respect to those extremely strong words at that time. My respectful submission is that there was nothing wrong with that ruling then, and that it applies now. The second matter which I should like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, is this: I have looked at Beauchesne's fourth edition to determine whether or not the word "illegal", in the context in which it was quoted by the House leader, appears there. I can find no substantial authority to support the submission he made, and I note that the government House leader failed to bring forward any substantial authority from May's, Beauchesne's or any other learned work. At best, it is a matter of debate, in my respectful submission.

I now turn to another matter. How should we view questions of privilege or alleged questions of privilege when they are raised in the House of Commons? I am returning to an incident which occurred in this chamber and which led to a ruling by Your Honour on June 4, 1975. The Prime Minister had accused a former prime minister, my right hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), using these words:

—he made the largest land grab when he was in office that was ever made by any private citizen of Canada.

That was the accusation directed at that time by one prime minister against a former prime minister. The Prime Minister went on to say of my right hon. friend that he was "adding thousands of acres of land for his private enjoyment." That, Mr. Speaker, was a fairly strong accusation, even in a chamber which you said is a House of debate. Dealing with questions of privilege and how they should be regarded, Your Honour had this to say:

The definition of privilege is one which has been strictly adhered to and narrowly interpreted constantly . . . In my view—

Here the view of Mr. Speaker Michener was being expressed.

—parliamentary privilege does not go much beyond the right of free speech in the House of Commons and the right of a member to discharge his duties in the House as a member of the House of Commons.

That was Your Honour's first point in defining what constituted a question of privilege. In the second place, you said, and I am quoting from page 6431 of Hansard for June 4, 1975:

The second thing which seems to be agreed upon is the way in which privilege should be interpreted and that we ought not to extend it lightly.

Further, Mr. Speaker, you said:

The third point on which there is agreement is that a dispute as to facts, a dispute as to opinions and a dispute as to conclusions to be drawn from an allegation of fact is a matter of debate and not a question of privilege.

If there is anything which is a matter of debate or a question of conclusions to be drawn, it is the item which has just been raised by the government House leader. Your Honour then went on to say this, as reported at page 6432 of Hansard:

Accordingly there is some wisdom in the process that if one wishes to complain about what another member has done or said it should be done in the form of a complete charge rather than by way of an alleged question of privilege.

That is the onus which lies upon the government House leader or upon whoever might wish to lay a charge. I have to say there have been occasions in the House where the words "illegal" and "illegality" have been used, and nothing has come from those words other than their strength in a hotly-felt issue involving disagreement and debate. A debate, I know, has to be carried on within certain bounds of taste, but those bounds of taste should not be construed so as to prohibit the widest ranging discussion of matters of public interest.

What indication is there that the word "illegal" was used and went unchallenged? I would remind Your Honour of what took place on September 21, 1971. The issue at that time was whether or not the government was acting illegally in the withholding of certain payments to farmers in western Canada. The peace-loving member for the constituency of Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said this, referring to what he later called an illegal act:

I would add in this regard that if the action of the Minister of Finance who, under the act is charged with responsibility is, as I assume it to be, the collective action of the government and the cabinet, then they are all tainted with the same misdemeanour and this would be in effect a collective agreement to break the law, a form of conspiracy.

Those were words even stronger than were used on this occasion. The government was not so thin-skinned on that occasion and did not object to those words at the time. In conclusion, I want to say it is an arguable point whether the word "wrongdoing", as used to describe the conduct of one minister by the Prime Minister himself, cannot by definition include the word "illegal".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The Prime Minister himself said he purposely left the expression fuzzy. It is important that the debate be allowed to carry on within reasonable bounds. Many things might be said about the hon. member's statement, but certainly not that there has been a breach of the privileges of any of the members of this House so that they, to use Your Honour's own words, could not carry on their duties as members of parliament. That is the issue.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is true that last night the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais) reserved his minister's right to raise this matter today. I suggest he had such a right anyway, but no one is challenging it and I think there is a point in the fact that this reservation was made last night. But I do object most strongly to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) alleging he is quoting the record but not quoting all of it.

Mr. Paproski: Shame!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He said, for example, that all the Acting Speaker did last night was to admonish the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and to tell him to get back to the bill. It is true that, as reported at the second column of Hansard for March 18 at page 11926, the Acting Speaker said words to that effect. But I would point out that immediately after the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) raised his question of privilege against the hon. member for York-Simcoe, in the first column of Hansard, at page 11926, the Acting Speaker said:

Order, please. I do not believe the hon. member made any specific charge. He did not name a specific minister.

I suggest that is part of the argument. I also suggest that when the government House leader attempts to raise a matter and quote the record, he should quote all the record and not just part of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1220)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I commend the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on the case that he has just made, and I commend him in particular on the quotations he found and used, notably from yourself, concerning the fact that this is a place of debate. We have had far more serious incidents than this one in which Your Honour has told us that this is a place of debate. I suggest that that is the way to view the incident that occurred last night.

On the question of the word used by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, the word "illegality"—

Mr. MacFarlane: No, "illegally".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The word "illegally". As I suggested to the President of the Privy Council, I want to quote the record correctly:

—allowing cabinet ministers who have acted illegally to carry on in their posts.

The Acting Speaker said, by the way, that that was not a specific charge. On this very question we have for two weeks or more had the Prime Minister of this country trying, under the guise of semantics, to find some difference between "acting illegally", "acting improperly", and "indulging in wrongdoing".

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has used semantics to evade the issue. It is not what you call it, whether an illegal act, a wrongdoing or an impropriety that identifies what happened. I can think of many improprieties that are far more serious than certain illegalities. I suggest that what Your Honour has to look at is the quality of the act. In our view, the quality of the acts of certain cabinet ministers, and the quality of the act of the Prime Minister in covering up this whole thing for the last two weeks, is bad—and, in my view, calling that a wrongdoing or an impropriety makes it just as bad, if not worse, than if I were to call it an illegal act. So I suggest to Your Honour that in considering this case you will have to review your own pronouncements about this being a place of debate, and you will also have to do some very careful analysis of semantics as to the meaning of these various words.

My hon. friend from Grenville-Carleton has done the job very well, but there is just one further thing I should like to say. It is a bit annoying, speaking of the double standards there are around here—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —that almost every time some criticism or accusation comes from this side of the House we have these fellows on the other side jumping up and saying, "Lay a charge. Put your seat on the line".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And the backbenchers applaud, as they are doing now. But when accusations come from the other side, we do not hear the cry, "Lay a charge". The Prime Minister, by innuendo, has been downgrading Mr. Justice Mackay through the whole of this affair, but he has laid no charge.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The problem itself is complicated enough without seeking other fields to complicate it further. I think it would be better if we stuck to the question of whether or not a question of privilege exists regarding the language of the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I agree with you, Mr. Speaker, but I remind you that the closing words of the President of the Privy Council were a demand that the hon. member for York-Simcoe lay a charge and put his seat on the line. I suggest that if the opposition is being told that it must lay a charge, the standard should apply both ways. Today the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) made accusations against Mr. Justice Mackay. But did he lay a charge? The President of the Privy Council likes to attack me all over the place, but he never lays a charge.

I suggest that the basic procedural issue is whether or not the hon. member for York-Simcoe went beyond the bounds of propriety in his words last night, and that is for you to decide. I suggest the issue is not one for the President of the Privy Council to becloud and fudge by this old cry that members of the opposition, every time they make an accusation, must lay a charge. It is a form of evasion; we have had enough of it.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my own privileges are being affected by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). He referred to ministers, without naming my name. I was not in the House and this is the first occasion I have had to ask him to make a charge or withdraw and apologize. The hon. member has said that some ministers acted illegally. When this incident was first printed in the newspaper, I sent a letter to the judge who made the accusation, and within 48 hours he withdrew his charge and apologized. The week after that, the paper that printed the story withdrew its charges and apologized to the hon. member for Saint-Maurice officially on the front page of the paper. I think the hon. member is making a very serious accusation and he should at least apply the standard used by the two people I mentioned earlier who withdrew their charges in my case.

In addition to that, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) the other day, as the legal adviser to the Crown, stated there was absolutely no illegality in the actions of the three ministers mentioned. Since my personal privileges are affected, I ask the hon. member to withdraw his charge or to face the consequences of his actions and put his seat on the line.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been brought into the debate by both members opposite. Perhaps in one case it was by way of a red herring, but in the other case it may have been more important. In the first case, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) referred to the land grab during the regime of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I know Your Honour would be impatient if we returned to that one, but it was brought in as a precedent. I just want to remind the House of your judgment, sir, in that matter. It was that I did not allege anything wrong or any illegal wrongdoing or impropriety. Your judgment was to the effect that I said this had been done to the benefit of the institutions of this country and that I had personally said the facts were known to the House: they are that around 1958 these acres which were in the NCC were suddenly used for the purpose of the prime minister. Those were the facts on that. I say this is probably a red herring.

● (1230)

On the other point, the semantics about wrongdoing, I want to make it quite clear that I did use the word advisedly. If hon. members remember my statement and the questions asked by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), they will note I used it as a general and—and I specify—a vague term because I meant to cover, and I say this quite clearly, illegalities and improprieties. I indicated that I used this term, but I asked the House what should follow from each of these courses. I said the wrongdoing, which is the illegality, is not alleged by anybody. As a matter of fact, we now have opinions that there was no illegality, but there was some wrongdoing which was an impropriety, for which there was an apology.

Members talk about a cover-up. They say we are not coming clean, and so on. On the contrary, there was no illegality, but there was an impropriety, and in the case of the impropriety there was an apology. The House disagrees, or some of its members do, as to whether the punishment was proportionate to the offence, but that is an arguable point.

The point I am making is that for that impropriety there was an apology. If we are charged with an impropriety, we do not hurl back a privilege, we answer it. We say either it was improper and we apologize, or it was not improper and we argue it. There is no attempt to hurl back any charge of being out of order or, indeed, of anyone trying to make innuendoes which are not substantiated. We argue a point that is not very different from what Mr. Justice Mackay himself said. He obviously accused the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) of doing something presumably illegal—interfering with the courts. He then had to withdraw, and he apologized. The minister accepted his apology. Should Justice Mackay resign because he has committed the impropriety of a false allegation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The House may think so, but everyone accepted his apology, beginning with the minister, and that ended the matter. This is what I have to say about the use of the word "improper", that I used it to cover both aspects. What I do find extraordinary is the argument made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton that the point argued by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) just shows that an inquiry is needed. This brought great applause from the ranks of the Tories.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I would urge Your Honour to think of this in bringing down your ruling on the point argued by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles): all I would have to do is accuse them both of illegality. There is nothing wrong with accusing them of being thieves and committing crimes. There would be no question of privilege and no point of order here. But if they then objected, I could say, "Okay; we will start an investigation into the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and that will prove my point." They are objecting to my saying that they are crooks, and because they are objecting we have a mandate to investigate that. Mr. Speaker, this does not make sense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the question of privilege raised by the House leader involves the use of the word "illegal" by the hon. member, and I would just like to make a short intervention. Clearly, "illegal" means contrary to the law. The Table has run out of dictionaries, but I should like to quote from Fowler's second edition, which states:

Illegal is most precise, with its meaning of contrary to the law of the land.

In considering the question of privilege before you, Mr. Speaker, I would urge you to consider my statement on page 11855 of Hansard as follows:

Upon receipt of Chief Justice Deschênes' letter, I immediately and forthwith referred it, as I have informed the House, to the law officers of the Crown, as was my duty, obligation, and responsibility as Attorney General. I have also informed the House, as reported at page 11749 of Hansard, that it was referred to the senior law officers of the Crown and that the contents of the Chief Justice's letter disclosed to the chief law officers no violation of any law by any minister, and I so advised the Prime Minister of that fact. If there is any doubt on that question, Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to table my letter to the Prime Minister.

That is what I then did, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) used a very precise word in the allegation which previously has been very clearly stated in this House, and very clearly stated this as untrue. He has affected not only the privileges of the three ministers involved but my privilege as Minister of Justice. If he wants to get up and say I have misinformed the House, he had better damned well do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Oh, is that Basford tough!

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I intervene because I think there are one or two serious, overriding questions Your Honour has to decide. I am not so certain, as appears to be the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that there is a right to raise this question of privilege in the manner in which it has been raised, in light of the proceedings which transpired last night. Let me quote from the current edition of our provisional standing rules. Standing Order 17(1) sets forth the following:

Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately or at a time appointed by Mr. Speaker.

The matter arose last night and there was no time appointed by Mr. Speaker last night at which the matter would be discussed. Notwithstanding the caveat filed by the parliamentary secretary, the Speaker last night appeared to have dealt with the matter. He said, as reported at page 11926 of Hansard when the question of privilege was raised by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), after calling the House to order:

I do not believe the hon. member made any specific charge. He did not name a specific minister.

There followed a caveat filed by the parliamentary secretary, and the Speaker again said, as recorded in the right-hand column of the same page:

Order, please. I would suggest that the hon. member should not impute motives in that way, and that we get back to Bill C-89.

My submission to you, Mr. Speaker, is that the matter was disposed of last night and that rule 17(2) was never put in the Standing Orders to be used in the fashion attempted to be used now. Even if that argument is not acceptable to you, Mr. Speaker, there is the suggestion in the concluding part of the notice of the question of privilege that in the event the Chair finds that the use of the term "illegal" was not parliamentary and was improperly imputing motives to a minister or ministers, the consequence of that action would be that the member would either have to make a specific charge against a specific minister or ministers and follow that by substantiating the charge or charges, and failing that, his seat would be forfeit. I think a very careful examination of the precedents will disclose that there is no Standing Order, rule or precedent that would require that consequence.

● (1240)

I have had occasion to be fairly close to this particular question in the past, on more than one instance in this House of Commons. I can assure you, sir, that the best opinion I obtained after advice from the officers of the House was that there simply is no rule or precedent of the House which would require a member to stake his seat on the outcome of an unsubstantiated charge.

With regard to the question of illegality, the use of the term "illegal" and other parliamentary expressions, there is a list of them in May's eighteenth edition at page 434. There is a further list of those expressions in Beauchesne's fourth edition which starts at page 130 and continues. I could call the member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) a jackass. I will not do it, but the fact is that in the past this has been held to be rather unparliamentary. May I draw the attention of the Chair to the fact that during the sitting of 1975 I charged the government with being illegal. Today I so charge it with continuance of an illegal act in not tabling the financial statements that the government is required to table on the Northern Canada Power Commission—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: —which it is clearly required by the law to do and which it has refused to table since 1971. So I do not think any great exception should be taken to an assertion by a member on this side of the House that an act of the collective ministry is an illegal act. That is the situation in respect of the hon. member for Simcoe-North (Mr. Stevens) last night.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Nielsen: Hon. members on the other side of the House are experts in arrogance. The hon. member was speaking of the collective ministry when he was describing conduct. I have been sitting here throughout the questions on the so-called "judges' affair". I heard the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) say that the law officers of the Crown had been asked for an opinion as to the nature of the actions complained of, and their view is that the acts were not illegal. I ask, sir, how in the world could they come to such a conclusion without being in possession of all the facts which this side has been trying to elicit from the government?

I ask, in respect of the term "illegal", how can the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or any other minister prejudge the issue of conduct and whether it is legal or illegal, proper or improper? Surely, that is not their province. I can lay a charge and I can express the same kind of opinion, with equal validity, as the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and, obviously, the government House leader came to the conclusion that the conduct of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) was not illegal but was improper. It is just as proper for me to reach the contrary view. A reading of section 127 of the Criminal Code leads me to the conclusion that there is sufficient evidence to constitute a prima facie case of obstruction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I do not think it is my province to reach a judgment as to whether that conduct is legal or illegal, proper or improper: that is the province of the courts, or of a special inquiry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Surely, we on this side have the same right and the hon. member for York-Simcoe has the same right to express an opinion in respect of the conduct of the Minister of Public Works as does the Prime Minister. It happens to be a contrary opinion. The member did not say that any minister broke the law.

Mr. Sharp: Of course he did.

Mr. Nielsen: The words of the hon. member for York-Simcoe were:

> What administration at a senior level of government in Canada other than this administration would be allowing cabinet ministers who have acted illegally to carry on in their posts?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am trying very hard to consider the relevancy of the argument being put forward. So far the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is making an argument that is relevant, and I should like to hear its conclusion. There is one difficulty: everybody involved in this argument up to this point has been trying to give us an interpretation of what was meant by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. Perhaps we should leave that to him.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I will make one final point which is extremely basic and which has been expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I listened with alarm to the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) when he moved his motion under Standing Order 43. I listened with the same alarm today when the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) raised his question with regard to Mr. Justice Mackay. It is my submission that it is highly improper to reflect in this House upon the conduct of any member of the judiciary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Shame!

Mr. Nielsen: There is ample precedent—

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Nielsen: There is ample precedent—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

An hon. Member: Watch your blood pressure.

Mr. Nielsen: There is ample precedent for that. I should like to quote from May's eighteenth edition, commencing at page 361. Once again I shall try to be brief. In the same publication, at page 417 we find this these words:

Unless the discussion is based upon a substantive motion—

This is what was being referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

—drawn in proper terms, reflections must not be case in debate upon the conduct of the sovereign, the heir to the throne, or other members of the royal family, the Lord Chancellor, the Governor-General of an independent territory, the Speaker, the Chairman of Ways and Means, Members of either House of Parliament, or judges of the superior courts—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Resign.

Mr. Nielsen: I am not attempting to smuggle this in as another question of privilege.

An hon. Member: But you did.

Mr. Nielsen: An extremely serious matter has been raised in the debate on this question. While I do not insist, I suggest that the hon. member for Champlain and the member for Matane have a responsibility, amounting at least to a courtesy, to make apologies for their transgressions. I hope sir, that in future, whatever happens in the discussion of this matter, no further reflection will be made upon the members of the judiciary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Simcoe.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would remind hon. members that we are in the process of discussing a question of privilege raised by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). The hon. member for York-Simcoe.

● (1250)

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the arguments that have been advanced by members on this side of the House, I should like to add the following comments. First, I wish to point out that the statement which I made last night was in collective terms as opposed to being specific. Also, the last sentence was a rhetorical statement; it was a question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: When we are considering the implications of the word "illegal", I believe that essentially we must weigh what is legal and what is illegal. It is a question of opinion, surely, and it is a question of debate. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has repeatedly stated that no illegal acts were involved in the affair commonly referred to as the "judges' affair". A few moments ago he stated that there had been no wrongdoing and that he had used that term deliberately. That is his opinion. Others may have a contrary opinion as to when there are illegal acts.

The Oxford dictionary—the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) referred to dictionary definitions—states that "illegal" is defined as being contrary to law. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has referred to section 127(2) of the Criminal Code which deals with the obstruction or the perversion of justice. As hon. members probably know, that section states that any one who wilfully attempts in any manner to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of action is guilty of an indictable offence. The fact is that if the government wishes this record to be clear in order to protect itself from any inference of illegality in connection with what has transpired with the "judges' affair," they should facilitate that with a proper adjudication.

The Chief Justice of Quebec has made no judgment except to say that the matter is grave. Certain officers of the Crown have indicated that they feel there is no illegality. That is a legal opinion; there could be other legal opinions. The Prime Minister has said that certain actions have been improper and he has referred to the actions as being wrong or at least as being in the context of wrongdoing. Let us check the Oxford dictionary on this. The Oxford dictionary defines "improper" as meaning "wrong." "Wrong," in turn, is defined by the same dictionary as meaning "contrary to law" which, of course, is the Oxford dictionary's definition of "illegal." In short, the Prime Minister's view that there have been no improper acts means that there have been no wrongful acts, which in turn means that there have been no illegal acts if you follow the Oxford dictionary's definition of these words.

An hon. Member: Wow!

Mr. Stevens: In using the word yesterday evening, I did it in the context to which I referred in my remarks today. The House leader has referred to the Acting Speaker, to use his term, as "rebuking me" by saying:

Order, please. I would suggest that the hon. member should not impute motives in that way—

I believe the House leader has possibly taken the statement of the Acting Speaker out of context because, as I heard that statement last night, I thought the Acting Speaker was rebuking not me but the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: If you read the full text you will find that it was the parliamentary secretary who had last spoken. He ended by saying:

If the minister wishes to raise the matter further, then at the time he raises it I hope the Chair will take into consideration that the question of privilege has been raised now seriously, that Your Honour has heard him, and would wish to hear further representations.

I understood that to be an observation that he hoped that the previous decision, that there was no question of privilege, could be left open. The Acting Speaker then said:

Order, please. I would suggest that the hon. member should not impute motives in that way—

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I attempted earlier, and I apologize for it, to ask the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) a question. We have done this for the last 10 or 12 years in these types of debates, and it was meant to be objective. I agree with most of the arguments put forward by the hon. gentleman, particularly when he pointed out that the word "illegal" has different connotations in different circumstances. He pointed out that he himself had once used the word "illegal" in referring to the late tabling of a document as being an illegal act. Last night, in his usual persuasive manner, he put forward his point and stated, from Hansard:

> What administration at a senior level of government in Canada other than this administration would be allowing cabinet ministers who have acted illegally to carry on in their posts?

He then went on to persuade the House that the word "illegal" is really a word with different connotations, as I have already said, depending on certain circumstances. But what the hon. gentleman failed to point out is that the word "illegal" in this case is clearly tied to something specific. He neglected to read the first part of the paragraph where he said:

> "Do as I say, not as I do" appears to be the creed of the present administration. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this type of thinking is shown up so clearly in the judges' affair that is now before us.

In other words, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) was using the word "illegal" in respect of the judges' affair and not in any other connotation which, as the hon. gentleman quite properly pointed out, could give a different definition to the word "illegal". So the hon. gentleman has prejudged or predetermined, without the benefit of this inquiry which the opposition has been seeking so desperately, that the acts of the ministers were illegal in the sense that they were in contravention of the law. He compounded this when he blatantly rose in the House today and spoke of all ministers, collectively, which puts a different connotation on it so far as I am concerned because then the hon. member should be prepared to tell the House how the Postmaster General has acted illegally as part of that collectivity in relation to the judges' affair.

The hon. gentleman should have withdrawn his statement entirely, which anybody with any sense of decency would have done. The hon. member has ignored this entirely, and he had full opportunity to act as an honourable gentleman in this House by taking advantage of the opportunity that all hon. members have, which all of us at one time or another have done, including myself, to apologize when sometimes we get carried away. The hon. member has had all evening to reflect on whether or not he had been carried away, as many of us are in debate. He should have asked himself whether perhaps he had not prejudged the event without the benefit of some form of inquiry.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mackasey: Having had that opportunity he still refuses to apologize.

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are other hon. members who have indicated their desire to participate in this discussion. I would like some guidance from the House as to whether we should allow these arguments to expire shortly after one o'clock, or whether we should return at two o'clock and continue this discussion.

Some hon. Members: Return at two o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I wish to keep my remarks very brief, because before the break I had not realized the significance of the opposition day and the fact that there are many visitors in town who are interested in the future of the dairy industry who, quite properly, want to have the Social Credit party proceed with its day.

I just want to summarize very briefly the point I was attempting to make, that the word "illegal" certainly is very broad in its definition. It can mean a number of things. To a sports buff it can be as simple as an offside in a hockey game, which is an illegal act. As the hon. member for Yukon said, the late tabling of a paper or a document is illegal. However, in this particular case the question of an illegal act has taken on the precise connotation, as it relates to the judges' case, of a criminal act or not a criminal act. It is certainly well beyond propriety, wrong, or even stupid, and I hope the hon. gentleman, who has shown that he is basically a House of Commons man, will understand that some of these rules to which we seem to overreact are really to make the House of Commons work as it should, which is the concern of most of us. As the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) put it the other day, democracy depends on this House of Commons and the House of Commmons depends on certain basic rules which may look rather silly but in the general context of things make the difference between this House operating and not operating.

This is not Sunday school, it is a debating society, and if we are going to debate, periodically we are bound to go beyond the normal realm of things. We are bound to go beyond what we really intended to say. I had hoped, and still hope, that the hon. gentleman will reflect on my point. By virtue of his own words, "illegal" is related to the judges' case, as we call it, which in the opinion of the House obviously—and I have sat through the question periods—has been unresolved.

If the opposition were firmly of the belief that everything had been resolved, it would not be asking for an inquiry. Rightly or wrongly, the hon. gentleman has left the impression that at least in his mind there is no doubt as to guilt, wrongdoing or illegality which, in the legal sense—as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) pointed out today—has a very narrow context. In the opinion of the hon. member, he does not need an inquiry to establish it; his mind is already made up—and that is very serious.

That is why we have this opportunity of retraction. It is a wonderful opportunity for honourable members—and I stress that phase—to take advantage of the rule which simply says that an hon. member can get up and apologize if he has perhaps gone too far. The hon. member could get up and say that he used the world "illegal" as he uses it in everyday jargon to cover a broad spectrum of acts, some which are simply improper, some stupid and, as I mentioned, some where rules are clearcut and defined in sports as illegal acts.

This is why we have this opportunity, and this is why, despite the fact that we say we should refer this to a special committee or "put your seat at stake", in the 15 years I have been around here that has happened very infrequently. As a matter of fact, it happened in one case when Liberal members were brought to a committee on the pretext that they were trying to seduce certain members of parliament to join our party.

I say, in conclusion, that if I rose to participate in the debate, it was because I am a House of Commons man. I think the House of Commons is the greatest guarantee we have that democracy, as we understand it, will function, because we debate here in front of the press. Some people may not like the press. I happen to respect it and consider it an extension of the House of Commons. We have a chance to debate here. This is a debating chamber, and when we go beyond the law we have an opportunity to take back what we say. I have taken advantage of that. I have stood in my place, apologized and said I had been caught unawares or spoke in the heat of the moment and went beyond what I had meant to do. I have risen in my place because I had to apologize for a leak of documents in my department.

It is one of our fundamental rules that the word of an hon. gentleman is accepted without question. However, I have become a little uneasy in the 15 years I have been here. I think the rules of the game are important to this whole matter, not just to the hon. member. I often sit here uneasy because I sat here through the sixties. We have a tremendous privilege. We have immunity from the normal laws of slander, libel, smear and innuendo which the man on the street does not have. This is the kind of thing which is precious and which should not be abused. I remember in the sixties—and I am not talking about ministers—innocent, junior people in certain ministerial offices, like Guy Lord, whose career as a lawyer was completely destroyed. Never once was he accused of anything; there were simply questions as to whether Guy Lord knew this or that. As a young rookie, I rose and said, "Supposing the events two months from now prove that he was completely innocent of the inferences in those questions: how do we make up for or redress that grave injustice?" That man's career was ruined and was never recovered. Events proved that he was completely, utterly innocent of any wrongdoing.

When the hon. gentleman who likes to lecture now and then, and who seems to be getting crabbier as old age sets in—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: —says he is just a little tired of our suggesting that people put their seats at stake, we are getting a little tired of the lectures of the hon. gentleman as though he had replaced Beauchesne around here. Well, he has not done so yet. I hope that may come in his retirement years, in the late 1980s, but the hon. gentleman should address himself to the point I am making.

How many times in the question period do questions become facts in the minds of newspaper people who may not have been present, but who get their news third or fourth hand, or in the mind of the man on the street who unintentionally transfers the questions into statements of fact? When an honest question is asked about the conduct of a minister or a backbencher, or about the integrity of a member of parliament or his actions, we all know this quite often becomes translated into fact through the gossip mill of this country. People's careers can be ruined in the question period if questions are not framed with a degree of responsibility.

● (1410)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Simply because the sense of responsibility permeates and dominates the House of Commons we, the recipients of the questions, are given the opportunity to say, when we think hon. members have gone too far, "Look, that is an accusation, a reflection on my integrity, on my character, on my name, on my family and on my future. If you have any facts, put up or shut up."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Because this is a civilized chamber in which there are civilized people, members usually stand up, swallow their pride and apologize. No one has ever been thought in this House less of for making a mistake and admitting it. The hon. gentleman opposite, who had all last evening to reflect, should remember that my seatmate, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) has been exonerated. The media of this country apologized to him. Mr. Justice Mackay exonerated him.

Mr. Nielsen: Not quite.

Mr. Mackasey: Perhaps the hon. gentleman opposite is used to abusing the House of Commons because of his great knowledge of the rules. Perhaps the hon. member for Yukon has lost his respect for this chamber.

Mr. Nielsen: Certainly not.

Mr. Mackasey: I have not.

Mr. Andre: You are wasting the Créditistes' time. Come to the point.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. gentleman talks about wasting time. Why did he not go back to Alberta? He is there, anyway, 40 days out of 50.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, my point is this: Mr. Justice Mackay did not find it difficult to apologize to my seatmate, the hon. member from Shawinigan. The Chief Justice did not in any way minimize or limit the complete exoneration of that minister . The responsible newspaper which broke the story apologized, which was a courtesy because this matter was not raised in an editorial; it was a news story and they wrote it in good faith. Everybody has apologized except the hon. gentleman who last night raised certain questions. By implication, they point to ministers, and the suggestion is that they committed an illegal act, even though Chief Justice Deschênes said otherwise.

Mr. Nielsen: No, he did not.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): He did not judge them at all.

Mr. Mackasey: If hon. gentlemen opposite want to play around with the law, I ask them this: What was Mr. Justice Mackay's motivation in writing the letter of apology?

Mr. Andre: That is privileged. You cannot reflect on the judiciary.

Mr. Mackasey: I am not reflecting on him; I am praising him.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have had a lengthy discussion but today, after all, has been set aside specifically for the Social Credit party. It is now 2.15 p.m. Other hon. members want to participate. I wonder if the minister has nearly completed his remarks.

Mr. Mackasey: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am glad Your Honour has brought us back to the point to be considered. I think I meticulously stayed on it until the hon. gentleman opposite, who is noted for his asinine interventions, interrupted me. In conclusion, it is not too late for the hon. gentleman opposite to stand up and explain in what way he used or meant to use the word "illegal". Hopefully, he will have the courage to get up and apologize to ministers collectively, particularly to my hon. friend who sits next to me.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I wish to make a couple of points only. I suggest that the question of privilege is res judicate. Yesterday, as reported on page 11926 of Hansard, the Acting Speaker, the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) said:

> Order please. I do not believe the hon. member made any specific charge—

Finally he called on the hon. member who had the floor to continue his speech. It seems to me that the matter is res judicate. I suggest that the government made a mountain out of a molehill. Let me deal for a moment with the meaning of the words "illegality," "wrongfully" and "improper."

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a number of times has used the words "wrongdoing" and "wrongfully." My authority for the definitions I shall give are the dictionary and the Supreme Court of Canada. I shall mention a case in which I was involved as counsel and in which the court defined these words. According to the court, "improper" means "wrong", "wrongfully" means "illegally," and "illegal" means "wrong" or "improper." So those words mean more or less the same thing. I think the government has made a mountain out of a molehill; it is supersensitive.

I agreed with at least one thing the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) said in his long speech. You can do something illegal without committing an offence under the Criminal Code. The action may involve a quasi-criminal matter. For instance, you could have parked your car in the wrong place. I repeat, I think the government is making a mountain out of a molehill.

A case was determined on this very point, that is, on the definition of "wrongful" and "illegal." Allow me to refer to 1952 Supreme Court Reports, page 335. In the case of Marsh v. Kulchar I acted for the appellant. A very simple point of law arose which I know would appeal to Your Honour. According to the Saskatchewan statutes, an owner is responsible for what happens to his automobile unless the automobile was stolen or wrongfully taken from him or out of his possession. The defence held that the car was stolen or wrongfully taken out of the owner's possession. The court held that "wrongfully" and "illegally" are identical in meaning. In some circumstances, anyone who takes a car wrongfully could be accused of joyriding, which is an offence under the Criminal Code.

The Prime Minister today, I think, used the word "wrongfully." Also, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) apologized. In any event, as I said before, the government has made a mountain out of a molehill. My distinguished colleague used the word "illegally." It really means "wrongfully", a word which the Prime Minister himself used today. I think hon. members opposite are supersensitive. None of this would have flared up if the government had agreed to establish a public inquiry at which we could learn all the facts.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would not have intervened on this question of privilege had not the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) lectured the opposition. After complaining that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) lectured the House, he spent about 25 minutes lecturing the opposition. I will not take as long as he did to make one point. He told the opposition all the harm they had done in the past, and could do in the present, by asking questions. He ought to know that one of the functions of the opposition is that of asking questions. That is the only way we can discover what is going on in this secretive government. Let the minister refer back to some of the things which arose in the past. I will not embarrass him and the government by enumerating some of the scandals which have been brought to light in the last 10 or 12 years because the opposition asked questions. He did not mention that in the Rivard case, to which he alluded, one of the persons about whom we asked questions ended up being sent to jail.

Mr. Mackasey: Do you think that was justified?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members are seeking to put interesting points on the record. However, we are constantly depriving one caucus which wishes to raise important matters today to raise those matters. They cannot do this while the question of privilege is being debated.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I deal with one point which the hon. member raised? He is suggesting how the House should condemn the use of the word "illegally." I point out that this involves a matter of opinion. The Prime Minister is of the opinion that, on the basis of what his ministers said to him, nothing illegal or improper was done. We have not had the advantage of knowing what the Prime Minister said to his ministers or what they said to him. It seems to me that we are entitled to say that in our opinion actions have been taken which, until further information is divulged, could be both improper and illegal.

● (1420)

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, today I propose a motion on the dairy policy in general in order to launch a debate on this subject. It is necessary as much for its economic and social implications as for the security of income for dairy producers who are justifiably worried about the future of their production. Mr. Speaker, clearly this is a complex issue because of numerous implications such as domestic marketing of the exports of similar products which compete with our own production—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is already a question of privilege before the House concerning the comments made last night by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (M. Stevens). Does the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) have a contribution to make on this issue or does he wish to put a question of privilege other than that which is being debated now?

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has long been a day to day life in the dairy industry. Each year we have to start from scratch and, at the last minute, like—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Once again, I ask the hon. member for Lotbinière if he has anything to add to the discussion on the question of privilege raised by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp)?

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All right, let us talk about the question of privilege. It has now been exactly one hour and a half since the House of Commons, under the influence of the President of the Privy Council, began debating a question of privilege which, in my opinion, is rather unimportant at least for the time being because the government refuses to conduct an inquiry. And, Mr. Speaker, this day was most important. It was to be devoted to the dairy producers from eastern Canada, and we have to do just that.

An hon. Member: He does not want to talk about it!

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, this is why I ask before the discussion on this question of privilege is over and before you make a decision let the President of the Privy Council rise with the same willingness he showed when he rose on his question of privilege and let him extend the debate by at least one hour after five o'clock, otherwise, Mr. Speaker, this situation is ridiculous.

I therefore ask the President of the Privy Council, before this question of privilege is disposed of, to show as much equity for the producers as for the ministers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Of course, the hon. member for Lotbinière has raised a question of privilege which is completely different from the one raised by the President of the Privy Council. It may be a very worthwhile and important question of privilege, but it is distinct from the other.

[English]

The several questions that have been raised in respect of the question of privilege raised by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) are very important and complex. There are two aspects that I should deal with now: I prefer to reserve on the remaining aspects. The first is with respect to the argument that the matter ought not to have been raised procedurally today. If it is a valid interpretation of the rules and practices of the House, I think that would be strict to the extreme. Indication was given, as a result of the remarks, that argument would be made today: notice was given to me this morning. I have indeed never taken the position that that kind of intervention, between last night and this morning, is not really at the first reasonable opportunity and I do not think I should. Second, insofar as the question of privilege is concerned, we have been listening to argument which mixes up three questions of procedure in the House.

The first has to do with a question of privilege, the second with unparliamentary language, and the third a rather vague practice relating to charges made if they are specific, withdrawn or in some way connected with an offer to put a member's seat at risk. That practice is very vague. In any case, it is the third aspect of procedure. I have no difficulty with the first not being a question of privilege. I should lay that to rest now. No motion has been attached and no request has been made for action by the Chair in respect of a question of privilege. I can, therefore, hold at this moment that no question of privilege exists in those terms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: There remain, however, two questions. Did the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) use unparliamentary language, which relates to the second question, that is, it constitutes a charge which ought to be very specifically made, or withdrawn. The interpretation that the Chair has to go through in order to come to some decision is a difficult one. In order to finalize those two specific questions, I prefer to reserve on this matter until Monday.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It will be brief. In the course of my question during the question period, I suggested that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Chief Justice Deschênes had differed. In answering, the Prime Minister said that he thought I was in error, that he had referred to Mr. Justice Mackay. He asked me to look up Hansard. I have no wish to misrepresent the Prime Minister's position. My question, however, was based on a statement which appears in Hansard. I leave it to the House and the Prime Minister to see whether my interpretation was correct or incorrect. At page 11866, the Prime Minister said:

> I wanted to assure myself from the ministers, that this was not the case. I did assume myself from the ministers that that was not the case. I even had the assurance it was not illegal and not improper. Mr. Drury, obviously, would not have done something he believed to be improper. I had his version of it and Mr. Ouellet's version. According to both their versions, there had not only been no illegality; there had been no impropriety. Obviously, Justice Deschênes and Justice Hugessen do not share that point of view.

That seems to be a perfectly sound conclusion to draw since the Prime Minister agreed, after talking to his ministers, that there was no impropriety or illegality. The Prime Minister said that both Mr. Justice Deschênes and Mr. Justice Hugessen do not share that point of view. It therefore appears that the Prime Minister was differing with Mr. Justice Deschênes.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Because of the surreptitious question of privilege that has been raised, and the difficulty it has caused to the Créditiste party with regard to presenting their case, I would ask Your Honour to ascertain from the House whether they would agree to extend the sitting hours today so that the Créditistes might have an opportunity of presenting what in my opinion is a very important issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it would probably be rather inconvenient to many members to extend the sitting today for an hour. I can undertake, on behalf of the government, that when we have some time of our own, which will not be next week, we will give an hour of government time. I suggest that a week from Wednesday there might be another hour's debate on this subject.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) asked for the unanimous consent of the House to extend the time today for one hour because many people are interested in this matter. They have come a great distance to hear it and the debate is of interest to all. That unanimous consent has now been refused.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no machinery, procedurally, whereby the House can be asked at this point to give unanimous consent to extending the hours. There is time in the last hour or half-hour, as the case may be—which will approach very quickly—to determine whether it is the disposition of the House to extend the hours. That question can be taken up at that time. It is not, procedurally, in order at this point.

* * *

[Translation]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

NATIONAL RESOURCES AND PUBLIC WORKS

Eighth report of Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works—Mr. Martin.

[English]

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

Sixteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs—Mr. MacGuigan.

* * *

● (1430)

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

TABLING OF MARIN COMMISSION REPORT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I wish to table, in both official languages, copies of the commission of inquiry relating to public complaints, internal discipline and grievance procedure within the RCMP, known as the Marin commission report.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS RELATING TO CRIMINAL ACTIVITIES

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to an undertaking given to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) I wish to table, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), three documents, in both official languages, relating to criminal activities as follows: Questions and answers relating to the capital punishment issue: statistics relating to the gun question; statistical handbook—selected aspects of criminal justice.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 4,106, 4,142 and 4,596.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

DYKE WORK AT ROBERTS BANK, B.C.

Question No. 4,106—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Were environmental reports responsible for the halting of the dyke work at Roberts Bank in Delta, British Columbia and, if so, which ones?

2. Did the Department of the Environment find technically inaccurate conclusions in such reports and, if so, what effect did this have on the halting of work on the dyke?

3. (a) Who was the contractor on the dyke (b) what was the value of the contract (c) how much work was completed?

4. Was the contract paid in full and, if not, what compensation was given the contractor for the delay?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): 1. Yes, investigations of the utilization of the Fraser estuary by commercially and recreationally important fishes and wildlife were undertaken in 1973 primarily in response to proposals to expand the Vancouver International Airport and the Sturgeon Bank Port facility. The resulting technical reports are entitled The Vancouver International Airport Expansion Proposals and Possible Impact on Wildlife of the Fraser River Estuary (Canadian Wildlife Services, Environment Canada, 1974) and Fisheries Resources and Food Web Components of the Fraser River Estuary and an Assessment of the Impacts of Proposed Expansion of Vancouver International Airport and Other Developments on these Resources (Fisheries and Marine Service, Environment Canada, 1975). Coincident with the initial decision to halt dyke construction, a field investigation of the Tsawwassen marsh was conducted. The results are presented in a Fisheries and Marine File Report, August, 1975, entitled Saltmarsh Vegetation, Fish and Invertebrate Survey, Roberts Bank. The dependence of fishery and wildlife resources on intertidal estuarine environments is further documented in the following reports: An Environmental Assessment of Nanaimo Port Alternatives, Environment Canada, 1973. A Biological Assessment of Fish Utilization of the Skeena River Estuary with Special Reference to Port Development in Prince Rupert, Fisheries and Marine Service, Environment Canada, 1973. Effects of Existing and Proposed Development on the Aquatic Ecosystem of the Squamish Estuary, Fisheries and Marine Services, Environment Canada, 1972. In addition to the foregoing, an analysis of the historic alienation of Fraser delta wetlands for flood control and developmental purposes is contained in a technical report entitled The Fraser River Estuary: Status of Environmental Knowledge to 1974, Special Estuary Series No. 1, September, 1974.

2. The Fisheries and Marine Services has not been advised of technically inaccurate conclusions in any of the referenced reports.

3. (a) The contractor was Miller, Cartage and Contracting Ltd. (b) The value of the contract was $2,353,889. (c) Construction $270,000 Materials in store $127,000 Only a portion of the whole contract was affected by the stoppage. The remainder of the work north of the Indian Reserve was completed. Of the $1 million cost of the planned work on the reserve about $397,000 worth of work was carried out, comprising $270,000 of construction and $127,000 of materials and equipment which is now in storage.

4. No, the contract was not paid in full. Compensation is still under negotiation.

USER CHARGES TO FLYING CLUBS

Question No. 4,142—Mr. Jones:

1. Under the proposed user charge for flying clubs, what will be the increase in (a) dollars (b) percentages for lease rates and landing fees for each flying club in Canada?

2. Does this comply with the guidelines under the Anti-Inflation Act?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) A proposal was made to the Royal Canadian Flying Clubs and the Canadian owners and Pilots Association on January 27, and a follow-up meeting was held on March 9, 1976 to increase national fees as they relate to flying clubs by $1.60. These fees include a $1.30 landing fee for the last landing of a flying training flight and a 60 cents service charge. This proposed increase is subject to ongoing consultation. (b) Based on the 30 cents landing fee in effect since 1947, the increase to flying clubs is 533 per cent. However, when passed on to the trainee by the clubs, it represents an increase of about 5 per cent to the instruction fee charged by the flying clubs. As far as lease rates are concerned, they are administered locally and are subject to change at various times during a year on expiry dates with various lessee's across the country. During the fiscal year 1975-76, there were approximately five leases renewed out of 22 leases for flying clubs. The average increase was 90 per cent during the same period. However, as rental rates are for a duration of 5 years or more, the aforementioned increase represents a compounded annual rate of approximately 14 per cent.

2. The Government's anti-inflation program does not restrict the government from reexamining its programs and priorities in order to obtain a larger amount of revenue from the user rather than the general taxpayer.

GRANTS FOR TOURISM DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 4,596—Mr. Matte:

1. Since its creation, did the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce make grants to promote the development of tourism in the Constituency of Champlain and, if so, how many?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

2. In each case, what is (a) the name of the projects (b) the municipality concerned (c) the amount granted (d) the year it was granted?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Insofar as the Canadian Government Office of Tourism is concerned: 1. Nil.

2. Not applicable.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO FORMULATE LONG-TERM DAIRY POLICY

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière) moved:

That this House deplores the fact that the government (a) has not provided the long term dairy policy to which it formally committed itself in April 1975 (b) has not provided income security for the milk producers (c) continues to encourage the importation of dairy products, thereby allowing undue competition against Canadian production (d) did not take into account, in calculating the amount of the subsidy, ever increasing costs, and in particular, that the government has not given any consideration to the establishment of a broad marketing and distribution program for dairy products and by-products through proper legislation, in order for production to meet truly the interests and needs of consumers.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at last, I now propose, through this motion backed by my colleagues and a number of other members in this House, to open a debate on a dairy policy for milk producers for the year 1976-77.

Mr. Speaker, the motion is couched in negative terms as provided for in the Standing Orders, but we endeavour to make it very positive by giving elements to solve the problems now confronting producers.

Clearly this is a complex issue because of numerous implications such as domestic marketing, exports, the import of equivalent products, so more so because production is subsidized by the federal government, not to mention problems caused by an alleged overproduction and the Canadian Dairy Commission's operations that leave much to be desired.

Mr. Speaker, it has long been a day to day life in the milk industry. Every year we start from scratch. At the last moment, as happened the years before, government policy is dumped upon producers with little or nothing in the way of consultation.

This year the government is taking the joke one step further: it is circulating the result of so-called studies from last November. The allegation is that subsidies would be cut back, that the overall milk production would be reduced by 500 million pounds, and that imports would be increased. These rumours have been circulating since November 1975 without any formal denial by the government. After considerable efforts on the part of producers in special meetings, particularly meetings with Quebec members and their Ontario counterparts, the only answer received by the producers is that Quebec Liberal members have created a special committee to study the matter and make suggestions. But this committee reports to the caucus, it is not a committee of the House: therefore it is not a parliamentary committee but a political committee, which explains why today's national debate is so important.

It is essential that the elected representatives of the people firmly state their position, their concerns and their convictions, without hiding anything and without beating around the bush. Further, it is only normal that the milk policy be discussed in this House on occasions, just as we discuss wheat production with pleasure and enthusiasm.

Mr. Speaker, in April 1975, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced a new long term dairy policy, and I underline "long term". He stated among other things that a basic price of $11.02 would be set and would be regularly adjusted in the five following years to changing production costs. An adjustment formula was therefore proposed by the minister to the House. An amount of $266 million was earmarked for subsidies of $2.66 per hundredweight on 10 billion lbs. of milk, that is the estimated needs of the Canadian market, which meant a 5 per cent increase in the production to be subsidized.

Finally this policy established the principle of Canadian self-sufficiency, which means that Canadians managed to meet their requirements of dairy products, in other words Canadian consumers would absorb Canadian production, except in unusual circumstances. That, Mr. Speaker, was a year ago, almost to the day. The minister then concluded his policy statement by saying, and I quote:

> I believe that this new policy will put the dairy industry back on the right track and that the next years will bring to the producers and processors a period of stability and expansion.

But then, Mr. Speaker, as early as November, something happened namely the deterioration of the net anticipated income. The producers did not get, in spite the government's formal commitment, their $11.02 as promised, the processors increased their share by 8c., which reduced the price received by the producers to $10.94, from which must also be deducted the export levy which amounted, to 15c. at that time.

● (1440)

The overall quota for cheese imports has increased to 50 million pounds for the year, without any restriction on the kind of cheese, whereas in the last five years the annula average was 39 million pounds. The result of the surplus 11 million pounds of cheese which are imported is an increased production of 5.77 million pounds of butter and 11 million pounds of milk powder, while these markets are already overloaded. Finally, in spite of the express commitment the federal government made a year ago, the cost of milk powder exports increased from 15 cents before April 1 to 45 cents in April and 90 cents in July. The producers' pressures resulted in a drop to 65 cents and in the establishment of a compensation fund for the export costs.

Dairy Policy

Mr. Speaker, on November 4, 1975, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) revealed the basis of the new dairy policy for the year 1976-77. This announcement was sort of a great blow to the producers. They called it "the great blow of November 4". You will agree with me on the value of these arguments. Storage and marketing costs become payable from this budget following the announcement of November 4. If, as shown in the estimates these costs amount to $40 million in 1976-77, the budget for subsidies themselves will drop from $266 million in 1975-76 to $222 million in 1976-77.

Since it is estimated that the market will require 9.5 billion pounds of milk, this will mean a $2.34 subsidy per hundred pounds to the producers compared with a $2.66 subsidy in effect last year. Therefore, this represents—and I am drawing the attention of all my colleagues in the House on this point—a 32 cents cut. The price paid to the producers would come down to $9.97 per hundred pounds from the previous $12.06 and $11.02.

Mr. Speaker, this is a radical change in policy brought about by the government. The Minister of Agriculture, in his long term policy statement of April 1975, has made a formal promise to the producers associations not anywhere, but here in the House of Commons. He has told them that he would do his share as a member of the cabinet to achieve long term production, domestic self-sufficiency guaranteed producers income and maximum control over imports.

Mr. Speaker, I am quoting the Minister of Agriculture; it is important that this should be recalled, more especially as the minister is honouring us with his presence here this afternoon:

> The government has been committed for a long time to develop a long term dairy policy. Now it rests entirely with the industry to accept its responsibility and contribute to the success of the policy.

So the Minister at that time was committing himself and saying to the producers: Go out in the fields, and start producing, do not be concerned; we will stick with you; we garantee minimum prices.

That was his commitment, and the Minister was saying:

> Now it rests entirely with the industry to accept its responsibility and contribute to the success of the policy.

Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what the producers have done. They went back home, worked methodically, respected their production quotas, paid export rates and followed the guidelines of their respective associations. They have provided food for the Canadian people and nobody can deny it. Mr. Speaker, today, less than a year later, the minister is reversing his position, instead of negotiating face to face—like with equal partners with the authorities, the representatives duly elected of the federations; he lets rumours run wild why hypocritically delivers a big blow, and appreciates the response in order to achieve an equilibrium, and I would swear, Mr. Speaker, that next April 1, the minister will stand in this House announcing his policy, and saying that after—

An hon. Member: Another April Fool!

Mr. Fortin: Another April Fool!

—saying that after lengthy negotiations with the producers' federations, after one year of experience, thank to its generosity, this government has honoured its pledge. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, this is not the case. Many meetings were held all across Québec. Many demonstrations were held, showing the discontent among producers, because they had given their word and respected it, whereas the government had not.

Mr. Speaker, last March 2, I was asking the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) what he intended to do concerning the dairy policy for 1976-77.

His answer is recorded on page 11403 of Hansard for March 2, 1976. I wish to attract his attention on his very words which I shall quote:

> We do not have that much money for them to waste products and that is what they are doing.

Mr. Speaker, producers have produced only according to the request of the government. And now, just because they have, they are being accused of squaundering, of unreliability, of a breach of promise and agreement.

Mr. Speaker, the minister should clarify that point this afternoon. The minister also said—like several other hon. members, I received a telegram from dairymen in my riding requesting a debate in this House, to ventilate the issue—there is nothing wrong with discussing dairy policy. Some hon. members will probably accuse the Social Credit Party of playing politics with the issue this afternoon. But, Mr. Speaker, who are we, if not politicians? Members of Parliament must raise those questions. We had meetings. I do not think that the Social Credit members can be held responsible for this debate this afternoon. Meetings were held with other opposition parties. The Liberals refused. They said: "We meet in caucus." We, of the opposition, said: "We were elected by the people and are expected to meet not in an obscure caucus room, but in the House." So, I asked—

Mr. Loiselle (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Loiselle) on a point of order.

Mr. Loiselle (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague from the Social Credit Party is raising very good points, and has put forward very good arguments, but he just said that he does not want to be partisan on this issue, and that he does not want to play politics at the expense of the milk producers. I would then appreciate it if he would stop playing politics right now since the Liberals have definitely agreed to meet with the producers, and on many occasions.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, his case is hopeless; he still does not understand! I did not say that they had not meet with the producers, I said that we were asking for a debate.

And on March 2, 1976, as recorded on page 11403 of the Hansard, I asked the minister whether he agreed. That was an official request for a debate. It was not to be a debate for one party or for three, but for the four parties. I put the question to the House on March 2. The minister gave the following answer:

> Mr. Speaker, I understand that the dairy farmers of Canada are coming to meet members of the Parliament of Canada. Before we have a debate in the House I think Members of Parliament should talk directly to dairy farmers and discuss their problems with them.

What the producers further wanted was that their problems be discussed here in the House. They have nothing to hide. And the minister added:

> Then, if they feel it necessary to come to the House, I do not think there would be much wrong with that.

That is what the minister said and that is how the debate got organized. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I insist that this debate be kept within terms of reference where it will be possible to make progress and that something beneficial for the producers come out of it. Mr. Speaker, that was to explain the circumstances of this debate. We are living in a dilemma regarding milk production. Should production be cut back? That is the first question. Should we consume more? That is a second question. With regards to self-sufficiency, what is the situation in Canada? Mr. Speaker, there are the three fundamental questions on which I would like to draw the attention of my hon. colleagues from both sides of the House, in order that together we may try and find solutions.

● (1450)

The quota system is a policy aimed precisely at controlling production. What is the basis for the CDC conclusions? Consumer demand. There is a third factor which fits into the picture and that is the importation of milk products and by-products.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest therefore, that producers are caught in some kind of a vise: they have to increase their production to cope with consumer demand while enjoying guaranteed income and self-sufficiency in this country. The government—and I think that many people have noticed it—covers up under the threath of a retail price increase. Whenever the producer asks for increased subsidies, he is told he will be held responsible for any increase in the retail price of milk.

Actually, within fourteen months, there were six increases in the price of milk. In December 1970, milk sold for 28 cents a quart. In March 1975, it sold for 51 cents. There were six increases within a period of fourteen months. This goes to show that, in the final analysis, the producer is against the consumer and the consumer is under the impression that he is fleeced by the producer. While they argue, the general dairy policy continues to be the major victim and the problem stands unresolved. Mr. Speaker, under the existing system, the consumer pays too high a price for what he consumes and the producer loses part of his production and part of his income.

Mr. Speaker, that is why, while this war is being waged, on the one hand by those who want income security for legitimate work, and on the other by those who must feed themselves, the federal government washes its hands of the whole thing, passing the buck to the producers by saying: You are too efficient.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian dairy producers are just about the only category of people who are told that they are too efficient and are penalized for it. At the same time, and for the same reason, the government forces the producers to pay for their surpluses. Fines are levied when production is exceeding the quotas. That is how work is rewarded. That is why export costs keep going up. Mr.

Speaker, the year the government has allowed doubts to hover over that dilemma and finally it hopes that the producers will accept, as usual, whether they like it or not, higher export costs, because that is surely what will happen.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the production capability of our milk producers and the fact every day the World Food Organization and other groups find that two thirds of world population suffer from hunger, it is nonsensical to hear that in Quebec particularly and in Canada in general, our producers are penalized for being "too efficient".

Nutrition experts are already telling us that the world food reserves are rapidly being depleted and that high-protein foodstuff are becoming more and more scarce. How can we agree then that because of the stupid milk policies of the government which profit, and I emphasize this, financial and commercial interests, how can we agree to restrain our organization and the expansion of our own production in Canada? That is why I say—and I would like to conclude with this so that other members can take the floor—I say that we must not increase the price of milk for consumers. We must rather lower that price in order to increase consumption. It is time for the government to stop trying to be on both sides and burying its head in the sand.

This government should take position once and for all and encourage production but not at the consumers' expense and encourage consumption but not at the producers' expense. Mr. Speaker I think that this afternoon we should ask the government for a proper legislation allowing for a reduction in consumers price through consultation with provincial marketing boards. To encourage milk consumption we should not reduce production when consumption declines. It is nonsensical.

We are asking producers: Reduce your production when consumption declines, increase your production when consumption increases. It is crazy. Ever since I came here every year it is the same kind of argument. We are told about some kind of over production. But where is this over production if at the same time we have an under-consumption, if consumption is declining?

Mr. Speaker, there is no overproduction at this time. The only weakness is with our distribution and marketing system. There is nothing wrong with our production. The minister accuses producers of waste and overproduction. Therefore, the problem does not lie there. Moreover, this government lets the consumer milk price go which reduces the quantity of milk sold affecting once more the producers. For those reasons I think that in 1976, considering the formal commitments he made in 1975, the minister should protect consumers concerning milk price increases. We should reduce consumer milk prices to ensure a larger supply in Canada and allow Canadians to drink the milk we produce in our country and which is of a very high quality while at the same time the government would ensure a "guaranteed" income to producers. Then, we would have peace in agricultural and those excellent products with a high protein content would get to the consumer.

Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, this government will foster a battle between consumers and producers and we shall never get out of it. I think this is a basic point. Once again I call the attention of the minister to this point. It is important that our production should meet our needs. This is what implies the principle of self-sufficiency mentioned by the minister himself last year.

Mr. Speaker, what about milk distribution in our schools? What has been done in this regard? What is CIDA doing to distribute milk in the world? It is still to come. That method is only used in case of major disasters. However, we are told that we have a surplus.

Within the near future, it will be immoral and dangerous to get rich and try to exploit hungry people. That is more or less what is going on today. All my colleagues, and particularly all members from Quebec, Mr. Speaker, join with me to ask the minister this afternoon, first, to control and to reduce our imports of dairy products and by-products when it is possible to produce them in our country. However, it is not enough to simply advocate that principle.

I know some colleagues opposite who have already said that. I heard them myself. But is is still to come. What we are trying to do by this debate this afternoon is to show the Minister that all eastern producers agree about the necessity of controlling and restricting our imports in order to promote production in Canada.

The second point we want to ask the minister this afternoon is this: to maintain at the 1975 level at least the income of the dairy farmer. If the impending threats are carried out, such as the bombshell of November 4, 1975, the producers' income would drop. In that case, the producers would be the only ones to suffer a loss of income, while the principle of the anti-inflation act is that all workers are entitled to a 10 per cent increase. I think that the minister must first guarantee the producer a 10 per cent increase in income, plus the catching up formula for the loss incurred last year. That is a minimum. It is important.

● (1500)

This government introduced with great fanfare the anti-inflation legislation in this House saying that inflation had to be crushed, that people should exercise restraint. I submit that milk producers most likely are the group of Canadians showing the highest degree of patience and restraint.

Unless it be a provocation on the part of the minister, I do not see why there should be an increase in export costs. This would deprive milk producers of the 10 per cent increase in revenues allowed to every other Canadian worker.

Mr. Speaker, we have no right to fight inflation at the expense of the self-employed milk producers. Let them be recognized as having the same rights as any other group of workers.

Moreover, we ask the minister to foster and increase milk product and by-product distribution in the underprivileged countries of the world through CIDA, the Canadian International Development Agency. In a country such as we have here in Canada, a rich country where there is plenty of wheat, milk and milk powder, where we have quality products and an automated industry, where we are able to produce, where we have transportation, where we are capable of shipping our products, there is no reason whatsoever to invest $1 billion in CIDA, a government agency over which Parliament has practically no control at all, an agency that is distributing money around the world without interest, while our producers here are penalized under the pretence of overproduction, while two thirds of the people of the world die of hunger.

Mr. Speaker, that is an utter paradox. I believe the government, not only as Canadians but as Christians, should start now setting up a distribution system for milk products and by-products. Our products are of very high quality and we should not be ashamed of them. Let us distribute them in those countries, so that the people there may also have a healthy, protein-rich diet and get back on the road to good health.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a basic point. The scandal in fact is the scandal of production. An individual who produces is penalized because he over produces, because he is too efficient, while two thirds of the world is literally starving to death. One only has to attend the conferences, one only has to visit those countries, one only has to read on the subject to realize it.

The government is making every possible effort to sell wheat. Every now and then, in the evening, on television, you can see the minister boast that he sold a few bushels of wheat to some countries. I do not remember seeing a minister boasting on television or radio about selling some of our surplus milk to other countries. I do not recall any instances. The government rather hides behind the European Economic Community and handle its little business there in the interests of those countries and at the expense of our producers.

Mr. Speaker, I think those things must be said and this afternoon the Minister of Agriculture, both as a Canadian and as a christian, cannot turn down this request to ensure the sharing of wealth throughout the world, particularly surplus food.

The fourth point we want to make is the following: That the milk subsidy as a general principle—and we are not talking about figures, we could produce lots of them but we want to stick to general principles—that the milk subsidy be increased in proportion to the reduced quota, if the government wants to reduce the quota.

If the government rejects this principle then the producers will take a drop in income, they will have to slaughter several of their cattle because we already have overproduction. Therefore, I urge again the minister that the milk subsidy be increased in the same proportion as the quota is reduced. The same proportion means a minimum and that amounts in my opinion to taking into account the minimum increase of 10 per cent, as provided in the anti-inflation act.

We are asking in addition—and I think that once again many members of all political parties agree with us—we are asking that a distribution program of milk products and by-products be setup in our Canadian schools, considering the food value of those natural products.

Mr. Speaker, several studies have shown that our children eat badly in our schools in Canada. They have shown as well that the health of our school children was poor. Considering the value of a product such as milk, there is no reason why it should stay in storage and why it should not be distributed to the pupils of our schools, and to our children. After all, we are the ones paying for their education, building those schools, making our children and producing the milk. I do not see why all this could not be combined in our schools in order to meet once again, and this is our principle, the needs of our people.

I want to conclude with this remark in order to give other members the opportunity to speak, but this is the spirit that we would like to see in today's debate, in order for our production to meet the needs of consumers, but not at the expense of producers. Whenever the government has asked the producers, either in difficult times or in wartime, to ensure the necessary food supplies to meet the needs of the people, they have never refused. All they have asked, after having invested on their farmers to increase the production, at the government's request, is to be able to pay off their debts and live on their farms with their families.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Canadian people and of my colleagues, I respectfully urge the minister not only to formally promise to help the interest of consumers with its dairy policy but to take all the necessary concrete measures to do so.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take part in the debate this afternoon and I would like to congratulate my friends of the Social Credit Party of Canada for having responded to the needs of the Dairy Producers Federation, and in particular of Quebec producers, and for having brought up such an important question in the House just before the new dairy campaign is announced at the beginning of April.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) made some very appropriate comments. I believe he did so with all due objectivity concerning the problem which dairy producers have been facing for much too long. I know that the minister will have the opportunity later on to reply perhaps not to the arguments, but at least to the recommendations and representations that we are making. I expect that we will hear that Canada has the greatest and the most productive cows in the world, but dairy producers still have rather serious problems.

Also, when the government or the minister responsible say that they have made great efforts to improve the dairy industry, we recognize that they have indeed made some effort, that they have placed credits and certain services at the disposal of dairy producers, but we must also recognize the commitment and investment risks of producers who agreed, first of all, to meet a real need for efficiency, and to make the industry profitable while providing some stability for the Canadian dairy industry.

Mr. Speaker, this industry is quite interesting when we consider how dairy producers have reacted to the services given to them by the government. However, it would be too easy to accept today that the government leave the producers with the same problems that they have been facing so long. The government is always saying: Yes, we are making some efforts and we have helped the producers enormously by urging them to organize. They have done so, I am sure that they are still ready to cooperate with government policies to the extent that its proposals are reasonable. However, a situation which has lasted too long at the competition level—it was mentioned a while ago—give rise to serious difficulties for milk producers, that is the minimum income. I think it is fair to demand for them the same as for any other individual, and we admit it. All workers, through experienced labour unions, have succeeded in making gains on certain points.

● (1510)

Now if we consider our facilities, I would like to say a few words on that matter. First, at the level of my constituency where that industry is important. I know that some other hon. members will give their views on national conditions.

For us in the province of Quebec, it is a quite important industry at the agricultural level, the most important moreover, and we are increasingly trying to promote more than ever before the dairy industry in that province. Therefore any policy which does not meet those minimum recommendations can be and will be quite prejudicial, especially to Quebec producers and to the Quebec economy, since that industry in a very important part of the economy.

Last year, as I recall, Mr. Speaker, and I regret to have to remind the minister of this, because for a whole year we have made these comments in this House where numerous subjects have been discussed. It cannot be said that everything is going well. There are problems in many areas. More and more, we feel that the government cannot find or does not want to introduce solutions to these problems. Again this afternoon, we are discussing the same matter as we did a year ago and even eight years ago, as I recall very well, when I first came to Ottawa.

And every year, it is always the same thing. At the last minute, we have to put pressure on the government. I do not recall that the government has ever adequately answered our representations and give any assurance to the producers who commit themselves, invest funds, who want to live like everyone else while offering to Canadians products of high quality. The government has never yet given this assurance to help each producer to survive, in Quebec as well as across the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, last year, the government made some proposals. They led the dairy producers expect an indexing formula roughly equivalent to the production costs established by the producers association, and later recognized as accurate by the Plumptre Commission, which was created by the government. In spite of that, the government did not pay that minimum price that was based on production costs and would have given the producers a decent income. A few months later, far from answering the essential needs of that industry, the government announced a levy, because of a temporary problem perhaps, but a problem that still exists. One should say a few words about it, I believe. That levy on powdered milk exports, because of the competition of the European Economic Community, obviously causes hardships to our industry. How can one explain, Mr. Speaker, that the government should fight competition from the EEC on the backs of our producers, while their European counterparts are well subsidized and protected, and thus able to interfere to some extent with our markets? How can one explain that the government should have penalized our producers with this levy after having refused them the minimum requested? I know, Mr. Speaker. That argument has not often been discussed in the House. I know the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a highly interesting trip to Europe, that he expected and is still expecting, I believe, some interesting answers with regard to the possibility of trading with the EEC, but I do not feel that is it is acceptable that the government, which intends to open up markets for various products with the EEC, should have decided to discriminate against the dairy industry and to let the producers face the problem alone. It was fair, and it will always be fair that the government should accept right away to help our producers and to compete with other countries equal to equal. Besides, it is the only way the producers could get out of this very difficult situation, which is probably a cyclic thing.

Up till now, the government would not do it, and the producers have been penalized. So, as a result of this levy the producer's net income was reduced.

This year, still more recommendations have been made, and I have read those from the UPA in the Province of Quebec. It was also given to me to read a proposal submitted by the Quebec caucus to the Cabinet. There are leaks, Mr. Speaker, and you will forgive me if I point it out in this manner. Anyway, this had to come eventually. We are therefore aware of the fact that the government members seem ready to correct some anomalies.

Of course the brief submitted by the members of the Dairy Producers, Federation deals with cheese imports. I think that in five years we had not known imports of more than 30 million pounds.

Last year, the Federation of Milk Producers and the Agricultural Producers' Union asked and recommended to the minister to reduce or at least restrain a possible increase in imports. But no imports were allowed to go up to 50 million pounds.

The federation also asked that import licences be transferred to the Canadian Dairy Commission which could better understand and control these imports according to our consumption and production. No answer has been given to that and, to my knowledge, the Department of Trade, Industry and Commerce controls import licences. That often enables the minister to answer us: You will understand that since licences are delivered by my hon. colleague, it is not my fault. He can thus get away with it easily enough when he meets milk producers.

It is also very clear that as regards the 65 cent levy on powder milk, the commission considers increasing that levy to $1.50.

In their brief, our friends opposite recommend that this amount does not exceed $1. We believe that for the moment, the producer cannot afford to give one cent more than the amount of 65 cents they had to accept. They did not negotiate nor accept it willingly. They were forced to accept this amount of 65 cents and it seems that our friends across are prepared to penalize them again to the tune of another 35 cents.

We do not believe that this is the best way to help them and to meet this minimum.

In the circumstances, I certainly ask the minister for his attention so that he respect this wish and at the same time the capabilities of these producers by freezing the levy at 65 cents. He is free to accept the whole amount because I have always believed that the government was dishonest when it imposed this levy after having made milk producers dream of a reasonable price.

We also speak of the necessity of having several million dollars for storage costs. The brief states very clearly that producers cannot absorb these costs which are very high. Once again, if we have surpluses and storage costs, it obviously comes from different factors. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) spoke earlier of the establishment of an agency which would be responsible for the distribution of our milk products. I think that makes great sense. I think we should set up these agencies as soon as possible. I also think that if the government had taken its responsibilities with regard to the European Economic Community, our producers would not be facing these problems today. Of course, I do not hesitate to ask the government to pay the storage costs in full and with an extra effort, to ensure a better distribution of our products, a better control of our imports. At the same time, we could reduce this surplus or those products in storage today, and as a result, reduce storage costs.

● (1520)

Mr. Speaker, I know our time is always limited, and I will end my remarks, leaving it to my colleagues to put the best possible arguments to the minister and to ask him whether it would be possible today, in view of the presence in our galleries of several people interested in dairy production, not to let them go back to their respective ridings, to their respective parishes without a spark of hope, or with their wish unfulfilled.

I think that on the eve of the announcement of the dairy policy, the Minister can answer rather positively in order to satisfy those who came here, and this is not the first time. This always means additionnal expenses because measures are not taken on time. We have to be sure that the coming year will be much more interesting. The Minister could allow them to look forward not only for a way to survive but for an opportunity to live decnetly like any other worker or professional in our society. To achieve that, he will have to answer, to a great extent, to the brief submitted by the Agricultural Producers' Union. I did not have time to read it now. The Minister got it like all other hon. members. I think this brief is presently acceptable, not only if we are going to guarantee the milk producers a minimum income, but also for the future of our dairy industry, if the government really wants this industry to advance in the interests of all Canadians. I dare hope, Mr. Speaker, that by asking the Minister to consider the brief submitted by the APU, I am the spokeman of all hon. members in this House as well as all milk producers of our country who ask for this minimum, for those guarantees, for the betterment of an industry which should and must survive. I hope the Minister will answer the questions which are found in this document.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this would have been a good time for one of my colleagues to have written out a few words for me in French, but I hasten to add that I read as badly in French as I do in English, and I would not want to subject anyone to that.

[Mr. La Salle.]

I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) for the speech he made this afternoon. He spoke not only of the problem which affects the farmer, but also talked about the larger problems of the role of the dairy industry in relation to world food supplies and our inability to handle that in any way, shape or form.

In the Standing Committee on Agriculture during the last few days we have been listening to a report by the National Dairy Commission on this subject, and after listening for several meetings I am of the opinion that it has done as good a job as possible, considering the direction it has been given by the minister, the relationship we have with the provinces, and the jealousy with which they exercise control over each provincial industry.

That still leaves the farmer knowing he is not getting a reasonable return for the work he is doing, and he is not receiving the benefits of the increases in production per unit which he has been able to implement over the last few years. For that reason we have an obligation to see that this industry, which is so highly controlled, highly dependent on commercial markets within our country and highly dependent on our international trade structure, is given every type of assistance possible so that it can remain in business.

Three or four years ago Canada was facing a desperate shortage of dairy commodities. We were importing butter and cheese in sizeable amounts. There were a number of small industries coming to us in Ottawa saying that there was not enough milk for them to operate their businesses and that they would have to go out of business. In asking the farmers to increase their production at that time, the federal government and provincial governments were offering them subsidies and all kinds of inducements to go into that type of operation. Only this past year have we seen the milk marketing quota committees being asked to reduce the amount of milk they were putting on the market during the year period because of the surplus.

The argument has been used this afternoon, and I am sure it will continue to be used—it is a bona fide argument—that in asking for a contractual link with the European Economic Community we put the dairy industry on the block for trading negotiations. We said, and the minister is reported to have said in November of last year, that in effect the government dairy policy as now stated calls for an administered shrinkage of the industry through, first, allowing imports to capture a share of the Canadian market equal to not less than the equivalent of 10 per cent of manufactured products; and second encumbering the consumer of dairy products with the full cost of dairy products by removing the subsidy over a number of years.

What we were saying was that if we were going to get into that European market, we were going to do it by allowing industrial production to come into this country at the expense of the dairy industry, we were going to relate our two industries without our knowing how the European common market subsidizes that market, and we were going to allow the elimination of our subsidies in this country for the benefit of our international trade in that European market.

The difficulty we have maintaining full production in this country which can be purchased at the full price, without the farmer having to subsidize to a very large extent any surpluses which may develop and to subsidize any sales we should make in other countries around the world, has been pointed out.

I agree with the minister when he says it is not his responsibility to sell milk in the schools and to sell or give milk away in other countries of the world. That is the responsibility of all the Canadian people, and we must assume that responsibility. I think it is high time the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde)—and I doubt if he will—was doing his job. He should be talking to his counterparts in the provinces and indicating to them that the federal government will put up a subsidy so that milk could be sold in all the schools and to the public.

I am told that in hotel rooms in Australia a person will find free milk. There is free milk in the lobbies of all the hotels and in all the schools, and that milk is produced by Australians. It is produced for the people because they have decided that that is a very economic way of helping their health program. They supply milk free. That is not the responsibility of dairy producers in this country. It is not the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). It is the responsibility of all of us collectively, and it should be administered through the Department of National Health and Welfare so that milk can be provided to Canadians who are not able to afford milk. It should be provided to children whose parents have not decided it is essential that their children have milk for the sake of their health. Benefit would accrue to all of us by way of reduced medical costs, hospitalization costs, and all the other costs of retaining a healthy and fit nation.

We have to make some decisions as to the requirement of the nation rather than in terms of sales. We will have to look at the monopolies which have developed in the distribution of milk. Farmers are paying a very high price due to the fact that Canadian dairies of last year raised the price of fluid milk. This happened in Ontario, I understand, and decreased the consumption of milk considerably. The farmers did not receive any more money, and this certainly did not help the consumer.

● (1530)

Certainly the consumer was not helped when dairies raised prices. Production was affected. Also, farmers were asked to pay more for the distribution of a product we could not sell. It should be noted that when we talk about giving away milk powder to Europe or to underdeveloped countries, the government is not giving it away. The dairy farmers who produced the milk are being asked to give it away. They pay the shot. Why should our farmers by themselves subsidize other countries, when the government offers to provide food aid? Farmers have become totally disillusioned with the government's marketing policy. They were asked to increase production by 10 per cent.

Mr. Whelan: We did not ask for 10 per cent more.

Mr. Peters: The government asked for increased production—I do not know exactly how much. They were urged to increase production as, in 1974, Canada had to buy 37.1 million pounds of butterfat. In the fall of 1974 it was estimated that in 1975 we should be short of 24 million pounds of butterfat. By April, 1975, this estimate was revised. It was felt that we needed only six million pounds. An alternate estimate, using the CDA dairy industry model, indicated a potential surplus of nine million pounds.

I cannot understand why milk should ever be in short supply or surplus. Its consumption is relatively stable. For example, it is used in the form of fluid milk, butter and cheese. The consumption of these commodities remains stable. Therefore it is not hard to meet requirements. The minister tells the dairy commission to reduce production, not because there is lack of demand but because that is the price we must pay for becoming involved with the European Economic Community. The government decided that it would reduce milk production by 10 per cent in order to gain access to that larger market abroad for our industrial products. So, the policy has nothing to do with the market or the consumption of milk. That decision is the government's responsibility.

The dairy farmers of Canada have for long acted responsibly. They have been willing to abide by quotas and even willing to pay for the transport of their commodity. My brother is a dairy producer. Sometimes he pays transport costs from northern Ontario to Toronto. He regularly pays for the transport of milk from northern Ontario, on the Quebec border, to Thunder Bay. Farmers are willing to pay milk transport costs, are willing to distribute milk, and even are willing to listen to the Ontario Marketing Board. I suggest that the government should pay some attention to the needs of our dairy producers and allow them to establish equitable quotas which will allow them to plan up to five years ahead.

In addition the government ought to make sure that dairy producers obtain a fair and reasonable return for their product, which should include reasonable profit plus costs of production. This would allow dairy farmers to build up better herds and increase the yield per cow. We ought to help our dairy industry as, in my opinion, the Canadian dairy industry has been the best operated, efficient dairy industry in the world. For proof, consider the number of farmers in other countries who want to buy our livestock. We produce the world's best dairy livestock. Unfortunately it is difficult to transport livestock to foreign markets because the government will not contribute to the cost of transport. Our farmers do their bit. The rest is up to the government.

I endorse the views put forward by the hon. member for Lotbinière, the mover of the motion. His presentation was excellent, and he alluded to the difficulties arising from jurisdiction being divided between the provinces and the federal government. I suggest dairy farmers would be better off if the federal government were to set national quotas and allow our farmers to fill them. No one wants to see the kind of bickering which takes place between provinces. The provinces, too, must enter into agreement with farmers, and provincial agreements must be similar to the sort of agreement into which the federal government should enter. In the absence of national quotas we shall see a repetition of the kinds of difficulties we saw last year.

I wish the minister well in any suggestions he may make for the year 1976-77. I hope that April fool's day will provide the sort of pleasant surprise it can provide, and that the farmers of this country will not be made April fools.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Social Credit party for raising the present topic for discussion this day. They have shown leadership in raising it. The other parties have not seen fit to talk about agriculture on their opposition days. They would rather talk about something else, about other subjects which, to me, are less important.

I am amazed at what Conservative and Social Credit spokesmen have said. This does not apply to the NDP spokesman, who attended the last three committee meetings when dairy policy was discussed. I do not recall seeing the other spokesmen in attendance at committee meetings when dairy policy was discussed. I wish the hon. member who spoke on behalf of the Social Credit party had attended the committee when the dairy commission attended, as he could have asked his questions then.

Mr. Mazankowski: But he would not have received answers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Super bull has spoken.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, that is not in order. I know the minister is not used to sitting in the House, therefore he may not know the following rule. We are not supposed to judge the actions of hon. members in this House and we are even less entitled to make comments on them in Parliament. The minister should have the honesty to acknowledge that members sitting in a parliamentary committee do not make up the whole House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is no more permissible to question a minister's integrity than that of an hon. member.

● (1540)

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of reflecting on the integrity of anyone. I was just saying how informative it would have been had they been there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: In the announcement that I made last year, what I said about the dairy policy was very plain. I said this means that it is absolutely essential that the market share quota system be effective in balancing domestic supply with the requirements of domestic and export markets and that unmanageable and costly services cannot be tolerated.

When we suggested we wanted an increase in production, we got one. We wanted a 5 per cent increase in production across the whole nation. If I am guilty of anything it is of underestimating the ability of the dairy farmers of Canada to be as productive as they are. They are in essence what some of my colleagues in cabinet would love to have. We asked for a 5 per cent increase in production. It appears that before the end of the year we will have about a 15 per cent increase in production. How envious the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) would be of that position. The minister in charge of housing would also be envious of that position.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): How about the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde)?

Mr. Whelan: His main responsibility is for those who cannot be productive. His main programs are for the unfortunate people in our society who do not have the resources to be productive. That is something I want to touch on later, the social policies for which he is responsible and the tremendous job he has done for our society.

Some people in our society suggest that we should give away our surplus products. They say we should distribute them in a free and happy fashion, just as though we were Santa Claus. The other day someone asked me if I thought the dairy farmers should have an increase this year with the surpluses we have in this nation. I asked him if he knew of any person who, this year, is not going to be entitled, according to the Anti-Inflation Board, to some increase in pay. There are 800,000 unemployed people in Canada. There is a surplus of people for the available jobs. Do you know of any companies that will take less profits this year?

There are people who say we should give this product away. They are suggesting we take away the security, livelihood, and interest of these people in their investment. They suggest we take away an income for their managerial ability and their labour. There are even those in my party who suggest that, and others from other parties who make the same suggestion. They say that because the farmers have a surplus product we should distribute it holus bolus all over the place, just throwing it onto the market regardless of what it does to any other segment of our economy. They are not concerned about what effect that may have on some other commodity in that market. We must be very, very careful about this.

The hon. member who spoke on behalf of the New Democratic Party stated that the Dairy Commission only does what I direct it to do. I suggest that he read the act. The act does not give the minister or the governor in council permission to direct the commission except with respect to the importation or exportation of dairy products.

If the dairy commission followed the act, it would only have to report to me once a year and I would report to parliament. It is a Crown corporation. It is an independent corporation. That is the way I want it to be. I said in this House last year that we want the farmers to run this organization as much as possible. However, because of world conditions last year and unforeseeable conditions, such as perfect grazing and perfect forage that we had right across this nation last year except in one or two small areas in Prince Edward Island and central Canada, and we have never had better weather conditions, there was an over-production.

I was told by the dairy advisers that we could ask for a 5 per cent increase but we would be lucky to get a 2½ per cent increase. As I said earlier, we got much more than that. We got an increase that in many ways has become an insurmountable problem. It is difficult to solve.

We must be very careful that we do not create the impression, and I may have been guilty of this at times, that whatever is produced will be distributed on world markets or given to everyone in the world. Skim milk powder for human consumption has a limited life. In some cases it will not be accepted after 60 days of age and, in many cases, not after 90 days because it deteriorates. Because of the distribution system and storage facilities, as well as weather conditions, some countries do not want to keep it too long because it deteriorates.

To give the impression that skim milk powder is the same as cereal grains is wrong. It cannot be kept as long or distributed as easy, although it can more easily be distributed as a world food aid product than, for example, eggs. It is nearly impossible to use eggs in the world food aid program.

Let us talk about the world food aid program. The hon. member from the NDP, as well as the two others who spoke, talked about food aid. Last year, as we do every year, we sent about 23 million pounds of milk to world food aid. However, we must not use these countries as places for our scraps, just to dump our surpluses there. We do not want to create the impression that that is what we can do with all our surplus products. Many countries will not accept skim milk powder because it is not part of the diet of their citizens. They may react to it violently and, in some cases, it may even cause death. Therefore we must be very careful.

We spent $230 million on food aid items in the last year; milk, fish, beans, beef and so on. Food aid is paid for by taxes. The hon. member agrees with me it should be paid for by the total society, not only the agricultural segment that makes up about 6 per cent of our population. We are the largest contributor per capita to the world food aid program of any nation in the world, including the nation to the south of us.

At the present time there is a world surplus of skim milk powder of over 1,600,000 tons. It should be clear that many of these countries with surplus skim milk products do not have any kind of supply management program. The treasuries of those countries finance this to a great degree. Some finance it totally. It is called a food aid program, when some countries sell at under world prices. Maybe if you stretched the point a bit, you could say that.

Australia and New Zealand together have 225,000 tons of surplus skim milk powder. The United States also has around 225,000 tons. The European community is next. Canada has about 150,000 tons of skim milk powder.

I want to make some comment on what has been said about who caused the problem and about what the government has done to assist dairy farmers. There has never been a government that has reacted more to the requests of dairy farmers than this government since this Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has been here. We have adopted a dairy policy which is a good dairy policy. No other nation has a dairy policy which can compare with it.

● (1550)

I have a document before me which I would like to have the permission of the House to have appended to Hansard—it would take too long to read. It underlines how each province administers the dairy program. That is one of the difficulties. There are not two provinces in Canada which administer their dairy programs in the same fashion. Yet the Canadian government, through the Dairy Commission, is responsible for trying to make sure the industry enjoys decent security and that the economic welfare of the industrial milk producers of the whole country is good.

I want to make it clear that we will be announcing no new policy until April 1. We will be announcing a program under the policy which was accepted last year, a policy largely in accordance with what the dairy farmers have requested. By law we have to announce that program by April 1, and we shall do so. It will not be a new policy, because we have hammered out, together with the provinces, a policy which is workable.

Every dairy organization which has anything to do with industrial milk, every provincial government which has any milk production of significance within its jurisdiction, knows that on April 1 a strict quota program will be introduced for them to operate under, something which was not the case last year. Some of the provinces, some of their marketing organizations, had asked for an extension of time to establish the production which they felt was desirable. This year the quota will be strict. They have agreed among themselves what the program will be this year as far as they are concerned, controlling production in the fashion they see fit. To say that we have not cared, that we have not shown concern for the dairy industry of Canada is, I repeat, just not right.

Hon. members talk about governments of Canada not paying any attention to the needs of producers. Consider the situation with regard to the import of specialty cheeses. Up until last year there was no control over the entry of specialty cheeses into Canada at all. We established control by means of a permit system, and the dairy farmers and producers agreed that this was a good thing.

The hon. member who spoke for the New Democratic Party mentioned the fact that I made an announcement on November 4 that we intended to increase the supply of imported cheeses up to 10 per cent of our needs. Mr. Speaker, I made that announcement on purpose because the Dairy Commission had asked me, as Minister of Agriculture, to make announcements and speeches designed to bring some order into dairy production because we were producing more milk than could be used in the industrial sector for both the export and the home markets.

We have announced there will be no increase of imports of specialty cheeses into Canada this year. We have also announced that we will be negotiating with those countries which presently export specialty cheeses to us. There are 16 such countries, so we are not being very fair if we point a finger only at the EEC. Exports from some of those 16 countries are subsidized very heavily. We are reviewing the position, and if there is some way in which we can reach a fair agreement on a better program covering these exports, we shall do so. The United States has been successful in stopping virtually every cheese product exported which benefits from an unfair subsidy—it would be wrong to say these have been completely eliminated.

Let hon. members not forget that ever since the Dairy Commission was established in 1967 it has not been possible to import a pound of butter. To try to say there has been no control over imports is wrong. Butter could not be imported into this country without a permit from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce which, in turn, had to be recommended by the Canadian Dairy Commission, the body which imported the butter and distributed it on the market to those who wanted it. And the Commission distributed it at the going price for domestic butter. Any profits which were made could be put toward the cost of administration of the Dairy Commission.

This was a fair arrangement, an arrangement which would not disrupt the economics of that part of the industry. But our production went down, and in two years we had to import 110 million pounds of butter. In the last dairy consumption year we had to import 50 million pounds of butter. Was it wrong to do that? No, because we had to make sure that consumers who wanted to buy that product would still be in the market when we ourselves were producing enough to meet the demand.

Part of the problem in this country arises because in some areas the consumption of fluid milk has gone down. Some people say it has gone down because milk is too expensive for consumers to buy. Mr. Speaker, there has never been a time in our history when the productive people in our society have been in a better position to buy more milk or other dairy products for an hour's pay, and any politician who says anything different is doing an injustice to the dairy industry of this country.

The long term dairy policy we have adopted indexes producer costs returns for changes in input costs and labour costs. If they go up over 4 per cent in one quarter you are entitled to an increase. The dairy farmers of Canada have agreed to that. This is a tougher program—the program they agreed to last year is a tougher program than anything the Anti-Inflation Board is doing to labour or industry at the present time. All the dairy farmers want is a decent return for their efforts. They do not want to rip off the public, and under this program there is no rip-off, regardless of what the former chairman of the Food Prices Review Board or anyone else has said. If critics argue otherwise, let them prove it. The National Farm Products Council has not yet brought down a verdict, but as far as I am concerned, from reading the evidence put forward by the Canadian Consumers Association, there is no evidence whatever that the formula used to set egg prices in Canada was wrong. If they want to demonstrate that this view is not the correct one, let them produce real evidence. They have not done so yet.

The motion before us today says also that the government has given no consideration to the establishment of a broad marketing and distribution program for dairy products and by-products through proper legislation so as to enable production to truly meet the interests and needs of consumers. I have already touched on that aspect and pointed out that we have one of the finest distribution systems in the world. We enjoy some of the cheapest food in the world, and we have too much of it. Recently in the U.S.S.R. they fired their Minister of Agriculture. Why? Because they did not have enough food. Here in Canada one finds some of the editorial writers in this country suggesting I should be fired because we have too much food. Mr. Speaker, if I were in Russia they would give me a medal for producing commodities in the very efficient manner in which they are produced here.

● (1600)

I suppose the hon. member over there who is making a little noise at the present time—and most of his contributions never amount to any more than a little bit of noise—will be telling us how the dairy farmers of Canada and the Canadian Dairy Commission and other bodies should be giving away this product, something he has never suggested anybody else in society should do except the food producers. I notice he is always careful not to say that of the fishermen of Newfoundland.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately there was a fair amount of time lost in the early part of the day on the motion advanced by the President of the Privy Council, and I think this subject matter is certainly worth giving this time to the opposition. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise):

That the sittings of this House be continued this day to six o'clock for the purpose of the consideration of the opposition motion which deplores the action, or lack of action, on the part of the government with respect to the dairy industry and which is now before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those who object to the motion please rise. No member having risen to object, the motion has been adopted.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, members who have already spoken in the debate have never mentioned very much about the actual income of the dairy farmers. I thought they would have accused me of paying dairy farmers too much, or have been more charitable and say that if there was anything this minister did wrong it was that he made the dairy farmers and industrial milk producers the best paid industrial milk producers in the world. I am a little taken aback that they have not done this, but I see some other members are going to speak so possibly they will say that. People have been saying what the Food Prices Review Board has said, that my problem is that I have treated the dairy farmers of Canada too well. I do not think I have. But I have tried to be fair with them.

The policy we have, as I said, indexes the producers' returns for changes in their input costs. It also indexes and takes into consideration global conditions. A lot of people do not understand that this is one of the things to which the dairy farmers agreed. The dairy farmers of Canada subsidize and take care of their own exports in the world. To suggest that what CIDA buys is cheaper is not true. CIDA paid the going world price for skim milk powder and they sent it to those countries in dire need today.

The dairy farmers of Canada through their over-all organization, asked that we buy this year 100 million pounds of skim milk powder for food aid. However, it is a very difficult thing to try and force commodities on anyone. We have offered assistance through church groups, through all our trading offices, embassies, etc., to every world food aid program we know of. But countries in need have their sovereign rights and they tell you what product they are going to use. We cannot tell them what product they are going to use. This is their right and it will always be their right as far as I am concerned in any world food aid program. We can offer a product that we have, but this is not necessarily a product that they are going to accept.

I mentioned provincial boards. I do not know if I have the right to table this or ask to have it printed as an appendix to Hansard, but I have a document showing in an abbreviated form how our provincial boards operate in Canada. I feel this is so important. We are calling a meeting next Tuesday to discuss the dairy policy for Canada. People have to understand what we are trying to do. When they read about the different programs the provinces have for marketing milk and then put them all altogether to make an over-all national program for milk, they can see the weaknesses, how the program can be unfair and discriminatory against certain producers, which I do not think anybody in this House wants at all. I do not think a producer of dairy products in one province wants to see a producer in some other province discriminated against in any way, regardless what province he comes from.

Mention has been made of the excessive amount of cattle in the country. We do have cattle in this country that should have been culled from the herds. There is no doubt about this. The problem was compounded by low prices for beef, especially in the cutter and canner market for cows. This situation has improved. There are more cows going to market at the present time. It is estimated that our dairy herds should be depleted by about 200,000 cows. The average dairy production per cow in Canada is about 8,200 pounds a year. With an average yield of 8,000 pounds per cow, this means a tremendous amount of milk is on the market that should not be on the market at the present time.

I do not think we are going to get out of the predicament the dairy industry is in this year very easily. As I said earlier, the problem was not entirely caused by the dairy producers of Canada; it was caused by world conditions, something a lot of people have forgotten. It was caused by some over-production in our country. We are going to solve the problem only by working together; by making sure that the provinces work very closely together in setting their proper quotas, and by the federal government working with the Canadian Dairy Commission to make sure that the dairy farmers in the industrial milk sector are treated in an equitable and fair fashion.

If I could have the concurrence of the House to ask to have the different provincial dairy programs printed as an appendix to Hansard, Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For document referred to above see Appendix "A".]

● (1610)

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I am that much happier to take part in the debate on this motion that it is so definitely realistic that it deals with so actual a subject that it contrasts with the issue previously discussed, namely the question of privilege which delayed our proceedings by almost two hours.

Mr. Speaker, after having heard the remarks made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), we must, above all, refrain from closing our eyes and see the situation as it is. I feel it is appropriate at this point that we should consider the factors which brought about the situation in which our industrial milk producers now find themselves. If the minister feels, as he has just shown, that there are no solutions, that the problems cannot be overcome, for the very same reasons we have been hearing for years, and year after year, we must come to one of two conclusions: either the government is not progressing at all, or it has no idea whatsoever of what progress is; and I would even go further and prove right then and there that the minister is not aware of the situation.

The government is criticized for allowing into this country products that can easily be manufactured in Canada in adequate quantities. The minister referred to that a moment ago; he said the Canadian Dairy Commission, in co-operation with his department is preventing the importation of butter; yes, he said that, barely five or ten minutes ago. But, on the other hand, import permits are being issued. Where is the logic in that? Imports are forbidden but permits are issued. I have proof if it here. This is a country where producers are penalized for producing over and above their quotas, while importation is allowed! I have here a question asked by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) which is on the Order Paper. I quote:

1. Did Canada import butter in the first eight months of 1974 and, if so, a) how many pounds of butter were imported, b) during what months? 2. a) From what countries was it imported, b) what quantities were imported from each country, c) at what cost per pound?

I hope the minister will not tell me again that butter is not imported.

Mr. Tessier: The hon. member should refer to 1975?

Mr. Matte: The same thing occurred in 1975. You could ask about 1975 but the same would be true.

Mr. Speaker, let us look at the figures for New Zealand in January: 3,330,400 pounds of butter; the United States, 392,000. In February, for Ireland, Australia and New Zealand, 8,287,800 pounds of butter altogether. This makes a total of 24,949,700 pounds of butter at a cost of $13,505,000. Mr. Speaker, people should stop giving explanations like those coming from the minister. It is true we are applying a madhouse policy. In fact, the problem the industrial milk producers are facing today stems from the orientation of the government milk policy for so many years.

Mr. Speaker, I will go even back to the famous speech our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made in New Zealand in 1968 when he clearly stated that because of the policy that his Department of Agriculture would henceforth apply in Canada, it could be foreseen that milk and cheese imports would increase in New Zealand. He said that in 1968, eight years ago. So this situation is the result of the very thrust of the government policies.

The same thing prevails in respect of cheese. Even if the minister were to stand in his place and say: There is no solution, we cannot even market our products—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) rises on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I am sure the hon. member would not want to misinform the House. The only time butter was imported into this country was when we did not have enough to supply our own market. We are not importing butter now.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: The minister is giving weight to what I am saying.

Mr. Speaker, I said that the causes of the present situation ought to be analyzed. And in all fairness, we should also mention what should have been done by the government. What I have said, what I have proven, cannot be denied. Here is another example of what he has told us. That is all very good, but he says that powdered milk may be dangerous for people who are not used to it. However, if the government does not try to open stable markets in Guatemala, in South America, in Africa or in Asia, people over there will never get used to it. But the minister knows quite well that those people lack proteins, vitamins and that they are literally starving. Consumers must be given tthe option to buy or not to buy our products. I claim, as my hon. colleague from Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) said, that we have a responsibility not only as Canadians but also as Christians. Mr. Speaker, we have no right to ignore people who are starving to death. And if they do not know how to feed themselves, it is our duty to teach them how. We all know that milk and dairy products such as cheese are wholesome, completely nutritious foods; therefore, it is our duty to arrange to train them to eat those nutriments which could make up for all the food shortages prevailing in those countries.

The hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) does understand that and this is why he is planning to go there as a doctor and I can see his point.

Mr. Speaker, if we look at things the way they are, we realize why we are in such a predicament; it is simply because we have not applied elementary principles. We do not seem to know yet that we are producing for the purposed consuming. We do not understand that yet.

If we were to apply this principle and if instead of avoiding the problem and justifying the lack of action in this area, the Minister of Agriculture had said today that from now on, in order to settle the problem of production surplus and of milk producers' revenues, he would set up a policy which would open the Canadian market "exclusively" to Canadian producers, that if we say to the industrial milk producers that they will have the exclusivety of a market of 24 million people, in may opinion, this would settle the problem and prevent any surplus of milk powder.

I already said a word about that; it would be easy to solve the problem through appropriate studies and research and by urging those concerned to conform to this consumption.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that we should not continue to dodge the question and say: No, we do not import cheese, no, we do not import butter. Yet millions of pounds of these products are imported into Canada and the problem will never be resolved that way.

It has always been noticed that there is a lack of consistency between the attitude of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and that of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson), since we are, as in other industrial areas, invaded—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Champlain, but there is a rule which states that we are not allowed to drink anything but water in the House. I think that the Minister of Agriculture is giving good example by drinking milk, but this is not consistent with the Standing Orders.

The hon. member for Champlain.

An hon. Member: Good show!

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, if the minister drew out the slice of bread and butter he has in his desk, we might find out it comes from New Zealand.

Mr. Speaker, it is therefore essential to urge the Minister of Agriculture, in particular and the government in general to finally introduce a sound policy in such a vital area. It is not even a matter to be discussed, it is fundamental. Consenquently, never should measures have been implemented which might discourage if only some of those who remain, so that they can continue to earn their living.

I would even say that it is a kind of sacrilege or scandal to deprive a class of producers as essential as farm producers and, as far as today's debate is concerned, the industrial milk producers. My colleague for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) emphasized this and I shall repeat it, since statistics published in the newspapers last week actually mentioned that there was underconsumption in Canada.

The minister puts forth all kinds of reasons, such as powder milk does not keep. Mr. Speaker, it is also difficult to keep natural milk. But solutions can be found if enough research is made, and everybody knows the milk now being distributed under the brand name Evangéline. That milk is good as long as the container remains closed, and it can keep for months, even years.

● (1620)

As to powder milk, the minister feels that we face a major problem because it does not keep for more than 60 or 90 days. But heaven knows how much research is necessary to develop containers like those produced by the Quebec dairies. They designed a container which makes it possible to keep milk almost indefinitely and which is on the market right now. It is on the market right now. We should do the same in other fields. Particularly, as I said, we should never give such reasons when we know that consumption falls far short in Canada. In the morning when you see a single quart of milk at the door and you know that five children under 10 are living in the house, you realize that something is wrong. There should be five quarts of milk. So you see that because of inflated prices, of inadequate policies, people do not eat enough cheese or butter—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The Minister of Agriculture on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, again I am sure the hon. member does not want to misinform the House and the people. Under our constitution when a product is sold or produced within the boundaries of a province it is totally under the jurisdiction of that province. Let us keep this on the right plane. We have no authority over the fluid milk about which the hon. member is talking. We have authority over industrial milk. Under our subsidization program for industrial milk we get four quarts of skim milk from one pound of powdered milk subsidized to the tune of 34 cents a pound, which amounts to a cost of 17.5 cents a quart.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. This is not a point of order but a matter for debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I think that the government is there to govern. If there is a problem of constitutional authority distribution in Canada, as we always say we should deal with this problem. If every province should be given more power, the governement should say what kind of policy should be implemented to deal with that problem. We try to make a distinction for instance between the fact that natural milk is under provincial jurisdiction, particularly the province of Quebec in the case I am talking about, and that industrial milk is under the jurisdiction of Ottawa. The cow in the pasture does not see any difference. It does not know if it gives its milk to Ottawa or Quebec.

Mr. Speaker these realities might appear simplistic but we have an administration that gives a simplistic—not to say stupid—direction to milk production. This is why, to conclude, I wish to make people understand that we would like to deal with this problem once and for all. I have been here for eight years and every year the same problem arises. Why does it? As I said before it is because of the basic direction of this government. Then, this direction should be changed.

To change that direction, it is quite simple, it is quite clear, one of the most important points I think is first to guarantee to Canadian milk producers that they will have exclusive access to the Canadian market. Second, then build policies on common sense. That is to say we should go at it on the basis of the needs, that production must be made as to meet all needs. Since people do not consume enough it is normal that we should demand increased production, not that it be reduced. Let us take the necessary steps.

If it is simply a matter of money, it is normal, Mr. Speaker, that producers should be paid on the basis of the work they have to do. I would say that particularly in their case it is perhaps more of a profession than a trade since nobody suspects the basic part of the work being done. It would even be normal that they should have an income and profit even a little above that of the average worker. They do not even ask that. So if on the other hand prices must be adequate and appropriate to promote consumption of that product, Mr. Speaker, we have solutions to all that.

How many times did we say: If you no longer want to give grants to producers, give discounts to consumers. So if you want to promote a rational consumption for a basic product like milk or its by-products arrange those prices in that way by giving discounts to consumers according to their needs no consumption of milk and milk products can be promoted and the problem of milk producers of this country can be solved once and for all.

● (1630)

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat of a problem to speak after the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte). Although I may show less eloquence, I can however assure the gentlemen in the gallery who are interested in agriculture that I will be more sincere.

I would first commend the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) for having chosen for this opposition day such an important matter, that is no doubt of concern to every member in this House. The fact is we are now at the end of the 1975-76 milk production year, the fact is we are awaiting with anxiety the news of the 1976-1977 milk policy. I am convinced that my hon. colleagues are sincere in their concerns for farm producers, and especially milk producers. I would like that we limited ourselves with constructive, positive suggestions, rather than taking this opportunity to draw the attention of farmers and milk producers, and indeed to play politics.

The hon. member for Lotbinière, in his motion, seems to have limited himself to hypothetical comments, because I am convinced he does not know the details of the 1976-77 milk policy any more than I do. He can no doubt think of certain assumptions, he can even criticize because such is the opposition's role. The opposition can even detect some malaise in the industry. I repeat this is the opposition's role to stress them. But above all, their role is to cooperate and share their vast farm knowledge, in order that we may together help an industry that has no other goal than survival. The industry want no more than their fair share, like the businessman or the tradesman. They simply want to be understood by the people. It is the opposition's role indeed to raise such problems, but I feel they are somewhat late in their offer for cooperation. This is why I say they are playing politics.

We, in the Liberal party, since we were made aware of the surpluses and know that the dairy industry would have problems, we got down to work and arranged many meetings with various groups representing the dairy industry in order to obtain suggestions for the formulation of the 1976-77 dairy policy—and I can say that those meetings were always most interesting and friendly.

Various groups explained their problems and made also suggestions, even gave some advice which I am sure has been conveyed to the minister and hopefully will be taken into account in our dairy policy for 1976-77. But, Mr. Speaker, the advice, suggestions and even positive criticisms of those great experts opposite have never been voiced.

An hon. Member: They are not here.

Mr. Ethier: On the contrary, every year they speak out just before the dairy policy is announced and once again they play politics. In part (b) of the motion, Mr. Speaker, the Social Credit Party of Canada seems to forget how much assistance farmers and not only milk producers have received under federal programs since the appointment of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in 1972.

It is true that we are now facing an overproduction problem for 1975-76. However, as I said earlier, following many consultations with milk producers and the pressures brought to bear by all the rural members of our caucus, the cabinet will hear us and I hope that the Treasury Board whose minister is here today, will follow up on our recommendations.

I would be remiss if I did not mention in particular the work of the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier) and the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Caron) who have devoted many hours of work to the preparation of a working paper which was submitted to the cabinet. In part (b) of his motion, the hon. member for Lotbinière blames the government for its failure to introduce adequate legislation which would protect producers and enable them to get a fair return for their work and investments, so that the production may be available to the consumers at a reasonable price.

This raises grave doubts about the validity of the motion since it is precisely the dairy policy for 1975-76. But like for every good thing or every good program, we shall go from difficulty to difficulty from 1975 to 1976 because of overproduction. The hon. member for Lotbinière started his speech by making fun of the issue and saying that there was no overproduction. Well, let him make fun and say that there is no overproduction. I see several of my friends in the gallery. When we discussed the problem, they understood that there was overproduction, just like we understood it ourselves. We want to solve this problem.

The hon. member also talks about a secret committee. He says that they had a secret committee, that they were not able to say what was their concern about agriculture so as to help rural and dairy producers in their constituencies. I am not a member of the committee on agriculture. I work for the whip with my friends. However, I have seen the attendance records and I did not see the name of my hon. friend, Mr. La Salle. Not a single one of my friends of the Social Credit Party of Canada came to discuss the dairy policy at the last four meetings. Some people claim to be sincere today and ask us to spend an additional hour in the House. Sir, I would simply—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I should like to remind the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) before recognizing the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) that members should not refer to other members by name.

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry and withdraw what I said if I have offended—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) on a point of order.

[Mr. Ethier.]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to say a few things to the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) who persists in remarking about the absenteeism of some members of a new committee. Mr. Speaker, I think this in an important matter and that it should be raised. I have not accused anyone of not attending a committee because I know that government members have many responsibilities. We all have our responsibilities but the House should know that we have met them in the last four months.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Joliette knows very well the rules of the House; this is not a point of order but a point of debate.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Lotbinière, on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order and I should even say that I rise on a question of privilege, since the hon. member—and I refer here to our Standing Orders—mentions the fact that a member is being present or absent. I want to tell the House, on behalf of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), whom the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) and our other friends sitting opposite know very well, is now ill and that the hon. member for Bellechasse is one of those who attended committee meetings most regularly. If the hon. member want to play such petty politics as to give such a low blow and direct his attacks to members who are ill, perhaps we should mention his own illness which, so far, has never referred to in this House—

● (1640)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, order. The hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier).

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, if I offended one of my colleagues by naming him, it is because I got carried away. Perhaps I have too much at heart the matter before the House today. I want to single out the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and I can say that he is really sincere. I often saw him at the sittings of the committee on agriculture and if he is ill today, I wish him a speedy recovery. I can say he is really devoted to agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether we should go witch-hunting and find out who is the villain, or whether we should not work together to find a solution to this problem.

[English]

I think we could gain much from working together, approaching this problem in a co-operative manner, and everyone concerned accepting part of the blame, the Canadian Dairy Commission, the marketing boards, the Producers' Association, the producers themselves, the excellent weather we had last year, and perhaps we should also blame the cows for giving too much milk. I sense the feeling in our discussions with the producers that they all agree there was a surplus in production and they all agree to reduce production this year.

When we asked the producers to reduce their production, they agreed to the tune of some 10 per cent, 15 per cent, and for some of them, perhaps 20 per cent. That will mean a gross revenue minus of some 10 per cent or 15 per cent, but when it comes to a net revenue, that will mean something in the vicinity of 25 per cent or 30 per cent less for them. This we cannot accept, and that is why we have made strong recommendations to our cabinet and strong recommendations to the Treasury Board.

Since I suggest we are responsible for the surplus on hand, and the producers agreed to reduced incomes, I also suggest that the cabinet consider our working paper which was presented so that the government will take its share of the blame. The dairy commission should also accept its part of the blame and during this coming year monitor the production on a much more precise and regular basis, and report to the government and to the marketing agencies so that the over production of this year will not be repeated.

[Translation]

Of course, this would be done with the co-operation of the management committees who are also parlty responsible because they are in charge of marketing.

In his motion, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) refers to a long term policy. I would appreciate it if he would follow more closely the discussions on agriculture and the changes effected in the dairy industry. In my humble opinion, as long as we have two markets for a single production, there will be some confusion and it will be practically impossible to implement a long term policy. It will be possible as soon as all our producers are integrated. It is quite difficult to understand an integration system for those of us who are not farmers. A cow has four teats, two connectd to the industrial milk tube and two on the whole milk tube, and it is rather difficult to explain the price margin to consumers. During the few months I have attended their meetings in the three years I have spent here, those matters have been explained to me. Now I understand that whole milk producers have incurred more expenditures. If eventually total integration in carried out, the producers will be refunded the extra expenditures they incurred on their farm.

It is our fondest wish to see along term policy established for the dairy industry, but as I said earlier, I suggest that there should be a single market for a dairy product. Then a long term policy would be feasible.

I am convinced, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said earlier, that if workers in other sectors were as productive as those in the agricultural sector, and I would even point out to the President of the Treasury Board that if his public servants were as effective as our farmers, we would have a lot more services, and perhaps our production and service costs would be reduced here in Canada.

I will conclude by saying that I have read a press report about a provincial minister criticizing the federal government. I would instead invite him to join with the federal minister in trying together to develop a policy that will help farmers rather than hurt them.

[English]

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me to address the House this afternoon on the subject raised by the Social Credit Party of Canada.

Before I do so I feel obligated to utilize this opportunity to draw to the attention of the House the comments made by the minister when he began his speech. The minister indicated that the official spokesman for the opposition party had not attended the meetings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I want to make it clear that I have the pleasure of being the official opposition dairy spokesman, and I believe the record will indicate that the Standing Committee on Agriculture has held four meetings and that I attended them all and participated in them all.

The record will also indicate that my colleagues and I put forward many constructive suggestions and criticisms, and if anyone wishes to examine the record of the standing committee he will see that in fact the minister agreed with some of the suggestions made. I mention this in case it might prove embarrassing—

Mr. Malone: Lay a charge, Gene.

An hon. Member: Put your seat on the line.

Mr. Whelan: I just want to say that I meant the official spokesmen who were speaking for the party on the lead off speeches today. The hon. member is a diligent member of the committee and the House, and is fairly knowledgeable, most of the time, on dairy issues.

Mr. Wise: It should be stated at the outset that the responsibility for the dairy industry, as far as governments are concerned, must be shared both provincially and federally. Fluid producers are more closely associated with their respective provincial governments and milk marketing boards or agencies, while on the other hand the producers of industrial milk are associated with the federal government, the fate of the latter being almost entirely in the hands of the federal government and its over-all policy enunciated by the Department of Agriculture and the Canadian Dairy Commission.

The Canadian Dairy Commission is also responsible for the purchase of that which is surplus to the fluid milk trade. The support payments to the dairy industry are not recent developments or policies. Rather, they began in 1935 and have continued in some form or another over the past 40 years.

Dairy subsidies were first initiated and continued for three main reasons: first, to maintain and hopefully to build a strong dairy industry in Canada; second, to ensure an adequate supply of milk and other essential dairy products to the Canadian population at reasonable prices; and third, to improve the incomes of dairy farmers and dairy producers. The federal government agencies entrusted with this program were the Agricultural Prices Support Board formed in 1946, the Agricultural Stabilization Board established in 1958, and later the Canadian Dairy Commission established in 1966.

Dairy farming is one of the most important and oldest agricultural industries in Canada. It is interesting to note that history records the first arrival of dairy cattle with the United Empire Loyalist movement to Upper Canada in 1785, and that the first cheese factory was established in 1864 in the constituency of my colleague, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday).

It is estimated that cash receipts from dairy products, excluding government supports and sales of livestock, exceed $1.1 billion, and that receipts including these two exceed $1.7 billion.

Dairying finds its home in every province and constitutes the most important single source of farm income in Quebec, British Columbia and Nova Scotia, and the second most important source in Ontario and New Brunswick. Quebec and Ontario are the leading production provinces, both receiving approximately $400 million, and in turn returning those dollars into their business communities. British Columbia, Alberta, and Manitoba as well possess sizeable dairy industries.

It is important to note that when the dairy industry is in trouble a large percentage of the entire agricultural sector is in trouble as well. I make that statement because 71 per cent of all commercial farms in Quebec, for instance, are dairy farms. The same comparison for Nova Scotia reveals 46 per cent, New Brunswick 32 per cent, Ontario 30 per cent, and in Newfoundland 29.8 per cent of commercial farms produce dairy products. The national average is 22.6 per cent.

In view of the foregoing it should be recognized that if governments ignore or fail to deal adequately and fairly with the dairy industry, then they are failing to deal with a major group within the Canadian economic structure.

A healthy thriving agricultural industry benefits all Canadians, both consumers and producers. It is estimated that 40 per cent of Canadians derive their income, or at least a large percentage of it, either directly or indirectly from the agricultural industry. The rather drastic changes within the industry and the painful adjustments made during the past decade have left a large proportion of the national dairy herd in the hands of competent producers. These producers have developed a superior command of modern dairy production technology. Their record clearly illustrates unmatched efficiency. What is now required is an economic climate in which these operators can employ these skills, and at the same time have the confidence that their capital management and labour will be rewarded with, at least, normal financial returns.

● (1650)

Extremely large investments are required. We are aware of the fact that the creation of a modern but modest sized dairy operation involves a capital outlay of between $100,000 and $300,000. In addition large capital outlays are also required to expand the scale of operation in order to build viable units and to meet health and production standard demands and requirements.

In numerous cases, Mr. Speaker, these expenditures have been made and large amounts of money have been borrowed at high interest rates. The reduction in allocation to the Farm Credit Corporation and the reluctance, or in some cases absolute refusal, of chartered banks to lend under the Farm Improvement Loans Act have compounded the producers' financial difficulties with respect to the cost of capital. Many of these expenditures have been made quite recently, and many of these were made on the basis of assurance of a long-term dairy policy commitment by the government.

Many will recall the hundreds of representations made to the government by members, agricultural organizations, producer groups, and dairy industry people prior to 1974 and early in 1975. We recall the minister unveiling what he termed a long-term dairy policy almost a year ago. Events of the past year reveal the only resemblance to a long-term commitment to Canada's "12-month-old" long-term dairy policy is the long list of changes and revisions, all of which proved disappointing and detrimental to dairy producers.

Private outlays by producers were made on the basis of reasonable government assurances of a year ago, and they were made to enable the producers to improve their position and at the same time to succeed in obtaining the most additional milk per dollar of outlay of public moneys.

In the rather brief time allotted, Mr. Speaker, and with the thought of allowing as many members as possible to participate in this debate today, I do not intend to recite a description of the events surrounding the government's actions in past months. For similar reasons I do not intend to repeat arguments on many aspects of the dairy industry, arguments I have raised previously in the House; but I must indicate my doubt about the government's real concern and real desire to maintain a strong and healthy Canadian dairy industry. Producers often relay to me similar feelings; and in view of the minister's statement of November 4 one wonders if the real desire of the government is to have Canadian markets largely if not totally supplied by imported dairy products.

In a recent speech on March 5, to dairymen in Uxbridge, Ontario, the minister commented:

> I'm also looking at the possibility of stopping importation of subsidized milk products. The United States does not allow imports of dairy products that are subsidized by the exporting government. Why should Canada be different? Why should Canadian dairy farmers be expected to compete against foreign treasuries? I don't think they should and I'm looking into the possibilities of cutting off subsidized imports.

I questioned the minister in the House about these comments of March 5. His answer was somewhat fuzzy, his words lacking the confidence and determination that were evident in his address to the Uxbridge dairymen. Although the minister has spoken I hope that he will in future expand on this possibility with vigour, and relate news of some progress in this regard as well. The continued importation of dairy and milk products is extremely damaging to the industry, particularly at this time when stocks are high. It goes without saying that it is contrary to the government's commitment to a supply management program.

A brief example to illustrate such damage, Mr. Speaker, would be the case of cheese imports. If cheese imports could be reduced by nine or ten million pounds, a saving would result to dairy producers of approximately $3.6 million; or, more simply stated; every million pounds of imported cheese cost the dairy producers $360,000. I recognize and appreciate the recent decision of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) not to increase these imports at present. This was a step in the right direction. However, I remain convinced, and I am certain that industry people are equally convinced, that in view of present circumstances a move by the government to reduce import quotas is nothing short of a necessity; if such a move is not taken shortly, a breach of good faith will have been clearly demonstrated.

In dealing with the Uxbridge speech I could not let this opportunity pass without questioning the wisdom of the minister's advice to these dairymen regarding the easing up of feed rations. The minister said, "This will save you money in feed cost and has the effect of lowering output per animal." Such advice is unsound and, I am certain, unacceptable to producers. Successful operators will be familiar with the terms breeding, feeding, and weeding. Emphasis on these practices is necessary for success, and I am certain that much sounder advice could have been given on that occasion if the emphasis had been placed on weeding rather than feeding.

Skim milk powder, we agree, is in abundance on the world market. However, this does not excuse the government's dismal record regarding its commitment to CIDA for the world food aid program. The record indicates quantities that are well below previous years, only 14 million pounds for this fiscal year as compared with 25.5 million pounds for 1972-73, 23.6 million pounds in 1973-74, and 23.9 million pounds in 1974-75. The dairy farmers of Canada have indicated their willingness to participate in a program that would involve 100 million pounds of skim milk powder for this purpose on a long term basis. I am certain that most Canadians would agree that the need for world food aid has drastically increased over the past years and that the government should earnestly explore this commendable offer.

May I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by making a few recommendations and by issuing a word or two of caution. First, the Minister of Agriculture should explore every possible avenue in order to create an effective supply management program for industrial producers similar to that now functioning for fluid milk producers.

Second, the Canadian Dairy Commission should institute an effective incentive program to even out year round production. Both of these suggestions, if properly adopted, would reduce surpluses, match supplies more closely with demand, and eliminate present discrimination against those producers who on their own have developed a regular and even year round flow of milk.

Third, the minister and the Canadian Dairy Commission, in conjunction with the producer organizations, must decide which party can do the most successful job of selling and marketing dairy products, both domestically and for export, and then get on with the task.

Fourth, there must be more discussions between federal and provincial governmental officials and those in the industry regarding not only changes in dairy policy, but also other changes in the field of financial incentive schemes and capital grant programs.

My main concern, Mr. Speaker, is that when the minister announces his revisions to the dairy policy for 1976-77, that, in the interest of both producers and consumers, he does not over react to our surplus position. I am confident that he is well aware of the fact that from 8 per cent to 10 per cent of overproduction was due to the favourable weather conditions that existed last spring and summer. This is a situation that will probably not repeat itself in the next 12 months.

● (1700)

The minister should be aware of the large numbers of dairy heifers now added to the milking herds because of declines in exports 24 to 36 months ago. It is estimated that there could possibly be some 30,000. We remind the minister that there is a good indication of a strong recovery in export sales. He must share some responsibility for the large number of older dairy cows remaining in herds simply because of low beef prices.

The minister must recognize as well that the dairy cow, like the chicken, does not turn on and off with the flick of a toggle swich. Indeed, as many producers in Elgin and throughout southwestern Ontario who experienced the devastating ice storm earlier this month are aware, the dairy cow not only continues to produce in the dark, but she must be milked at times in the dark as well.

One can only speculate as to what the changes in federal dairy policy might be. I trust that some of the foregoing factors that have been placed before the minister on this and other occasions will be taken seriously at cabinet level.

I am confident that producers will accept the challenge that is before them. It is hoped that the announcements and actions of the government will demonstrate a willingness to maintain this important industry which is so vital, not only in financial terms, but important and vital to the health and well-being of Canadians and to countless thousands in under-privileged countries around the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Tessier (Compton): Mr. Speaker, the social crediters opposite are probably among those who shout that the government ought to cut down on expenses. They also want the government to reduce borrowing to lower taxation and stop paying interests. Could they clearly tell us how the government could work its way out of this dilemma, and on what conditions?

Mr. Speaker, are hon. members opposite prepared to admit that their suggestions to-day would result in increasing prices to the consumer to a fantastic degree or in increasing taxation and decreasing our exchanges to the extent of endangering our exports, and finally putting our dairy policy in complete jeopardy. To seek to maintain the income of the dairy producer is one thing but to understand its implications is quite another. We think it can be done but it will require imagination and courage and that is why I take pleasure in accepting to participate in this debate. I ask the sponsor of the motion today to go that far and if such is the case, we shall have worked for milk producers without attempting to desperately save a few members who lose their credibility day by day with unrealistic and irresponsible solutions.

What is at issue now is an industry of $400 millions at least. If we refer to the budget of 1975-76, which was of $279 millions, we see that this represents an increase of some 30 per cent. This is not surprising, since each dairy year we see a declaration of war between the good and the bad guys. What is strange is that the good guys always seem to be on the same side, that is on the side of producers and their partners, however short-lived that partnership may be, and the bad guys are always on the government's side, that is on the side of those who foot the bill and who are blackmailed with old political and demagogical lines. In addition, Mr. Speaker, in 1976-77 new problems arise, namely the budget cuts that all Canadians consider as necessary, even if they must be considerable and be added to the surplus of 1975-76, whose effects must be distributed over the next years and particularly the dairy year 1976-77.

The problem is as follows: Who must pay in 1976-77 for the errors of 1975-76? What will be the payment conditions? And more particularly, will industrial milk producers and consumers be the only ones who pay? What will be the influence of such a decision on consumer prices, on the producer's income, on agriculture in general, and on the economy in rural areas bearing in mind that the Canadian dairy policy was at first designed to help both producer and consumer? Who will in fact bear and share the financial burden and what will the consequences be?

On this side of the House, we are confident we are talking after having proved our agricultural skill and efficiency. In discussing milk policy, in particular as far as eastern Canada is concerned, we are proud to be in an advantageous position and milk policy is a liberal policy, a policy which is clearly to the advantage of eastern Canada, and of Quebec in particular. And the year 1975 is a brilliant proof because if you read as we did about the income of different cooperatives like producers associations, it can be regarded as very satisfying. Even if we are proud, Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the adjustments which must be made; they will be included in the 1976-77 policy.

● (1710)

I too ask myself why our friends of the Social Credit Party opposite are suddenly concerned with milk producers. I have been a member of the Committee on Agriculture for two years and I wonder whether they represent rural constituencies and if so, where they are in the committee? I would like to give a precise example which has already been mentioned. We had three meetings with the Canadian Dairy Commission and we discussed precisely the dairy policy for 1976-77 while the representatives of the Social Credit Party were conspicuous by their absence. I would even say that I am surprised we have such a consistent policy because it has been established mostly by hon. members from urban constituencies. Today the members of the Social Credit Party do not know what to be concerned with, it seems so they suddenly turn to agriculture. One thing remains however: they discuss a subject they are not familiar with. They think they can get away with simply setting up commissions while they do not even take the trouble to check whether or not their demands are in keeping with the administrative capabilities of the country. In fact this administration is so complex that the only way a competent M. P. can make a meaningful contribution is by dealing only with local and regional grievances. Today's motion only vindicates what I have just said. Who said that the dairy policy proclaimed early in 1975 had been abandoned? It was not the government, it was the management committee. Who said that the dairy policy would not ensure the dairy farmer's income security? That was the management committee and not the government. Who said we should shut the door to all dairy imports since it is a well known fact that we have about $250 million stocks and we keep hoping to sell those goods? So, I think that if we believe in trade we must also believe in buying. It is a matter of balance which we have just discussed.

Who said the subsidies would include the increased cost of inputs since this increase has been covered by an automatic adjustment formula which is part of the 1975 policy? Who said the federal government should take over marketing? Must more be added to costs we already have a hard time to meet? Those are as many statements that prove our Social Credit opposites do not know the basic elements of our dairy policy, its objectives, nor to they know the partners in that dairy policy.

To discuss the matter requires competence, professional conscience and an understanding of administration, and not just a feel for political hay and "blah-blah", as the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) said, which more often than otherwise just mixes up the problems. Our position is known and clear, and our recommendation is this: That the support price for 1976-77 be set at $11.40. We recommended that the subsidy be kept at $2.66 a hundredweight of milk, that the quota be set at 95 million hundredweights of milk and that the levy, in fact, be set at a maximum of $1, conditional upon an agreement between the parties, so that once and for all it is recognized that export costs must be covered by that levy. There are implications here for the government and we have just asked the Treasury Board, merely for holding the subsidy at $2.66, for an amount of $40 million.

We also ask the Cabinet to respect and maintain the producer's income and the income indexing principle, as stated in the 1975 policy. Accordingly, we ask the Treasury Board to pay the amount of $40 million since we claim that storage and interest costs must be paid by the government.

We also want the government to pay a larger share, but we reaffirm at the same time that exportation costs must be borne by the producers. This request is based on the fact that we want and require from the Cabinet the opportunity to have a profitable agricultural industry. We also want to have the assurance that our agriculture will be supported because we want to protect the economy of our rural areas. As the year 1976-77 moves in, if we want to talk seriously about this country a dairy policy, we have to raise the specific problem of surpluses. Various reasons can be put forward, but basically, I think that the Canadian Dairy Commission must be blamed for its lack of control. If it cannot provide a necessary and efficient control, it should be replaced.

Second, we say that the principle of maintaining income is acceptable, and we fully support it. Third, we blame the Canadian Dairy Commission for having changed the $2.66 subsidy the government had committed itself to, and I think the Canadian Dairy Commission ought to honour this government's commitment.

Fourth, I suggest the Canadian dairy commission be modified as follows, in order to achieve full representation of the different partners to the dairy policy. On the government side, the Treasury Board, the Department of Industry and Commerce, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should be represented. On the side of the producers, let us have a representation of the Canadian federation of Agriculture, the federation of milk producers, and the UPA.

As far as surplus is concerned, I would like to mention a few specific reasons for it: first, I think that the 1975 surplus was due in part to the lack of effective and appropriate control by the Canadian dairy commission, and the lack of authority on the part of the Canadian supply management committee. Second, we recognize that weather played its part. Third, the normal increase in fluid milk we expected turned to be a decrease of 1.1 million, which causes a surplus of 3.3 million hundredweight of milk.

The government is also responsible, on the one hand, because it did encourage to produce more. And looking at our production in past years, we were right in asking for an increase in production. Fifth, manufacturers produced less cheese, perhaps to cut back their inventories by shipping their surplus milk and butter to the Canadian Dairy Commission, thereby increasing their profits by not having to pay storage costs. But, by the same token, they were forcing the Canadian Dairy Commission to support inventories. Sixth, that was the first opportunity the milk producers had to increase their quotas without charge, without having to hand out a large sum of money. Seventh, the difficulties encountered with respect to the price of butter caused the producers to keep their cast cows which, although not champions, still were giving milk and substantially contributing to the surplus. These examples: There are 90,000 cows too many in Quebec in 1975-76. Eight—

● (1720)

Mr. Rondeau: Come on. After all!

Mr. Tessier: I was not referring to the member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau). Eight, the possibility for the producers of fluid milk of adding a second quota of up to 900,000 pounds of industrial milk.

Nine, the lure of "income", stirred up by the inclusion of a $1.00 increase in the long term policy for 1975-76 was also conducive to increased production. Ten, we have seen cattle breeders come back to the dairy industry. The result was that we had to deal with a surplus and with tremendous maintenance costs. Mr. Speaker, the question is this: who must pay the consequences of the solution to this problem for which the producer is not the only one to blame? At this moment, the responsibility lies with the government and more particularly with the Canadian Dairy Commission. On the other hand, the Treasury Board seems to be willing to free the Government from this problem by referring it to the Canadian Dairy Commission, which, because of budgetary constraints and the obligations assumed with respect to the surplus has no alternative but to switch it back into the hands of the producers.

True enough, we on the government side say that we do not agree with such a cut. If we were to listen to the supply management committee, and I repeat, the supply management committee, would not the real culprits be required to pay for their mistake? The answer is no, if we only go after the producer.

Are we not by the same token distorting the dairy policy of which it was said only in 1975 that it was a long-term one? We must then absolutely reject the management committee proposals. Are we not having the minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) facing the fact that there are various solutions to similar problems in the area of agriculture? How shall we explain them, and we insist on being consistent with ourselves in order to provide our producers with a similar solution, wherever they are in this country? The government must require a certain amount of control and, indeed, producers are ready to accept it, because they consider it as absolutely necessary. Nevertheless, let us not confuse—and this applies to members of the Social Credit Party of Canada as well—control and production reduction.

We should implement, and we do insist on it, a genuine system of control. We should be provided with the necessary tools to apply such a control; otherwise, what would be the base of such a legislation? Producers will be justified to ask whom they shall trust. It will also make clear that if we are to approve the supply management committee's proposal it is the farm producer's income that will be directly affected and moreover it will go against the dairy policy announced previously and strongly defended in the past. Not only will the farm producer's income be affected but so will the rural economy which has no other way out than compensate for the present economic fluctuations.

Let the management committee control and let us assume our own responsibilities. That is the kind of message the minister should make and if he should ever meet dear Mrs. Plumptre, he could pass her the word.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Clermont): Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier) has expired. He cannot carry on without the unanimous consent of the House.

Does the hon. member for Compton have the unanimous consent of the House to proceed?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Clermont): Order. I regret, but I have heard some nays. Therefore, I will recognize the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau).

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to sincerely thank the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) for having given us today the opportunity to hold a debate on such an important and vital matter as that of the dairy industry in Canada.

I also wish to thank all farmers who, in spite of their heavy task, have covered long distances in such bad weather in order to come here once more and state their problems and listen to those hon. gentlemen who stay in the same rut unless we provoke them in this House. Even if we are accused of indulging in petty politics, Mr. Speaker, it is the only means at our disposal to get a reaction from the hon. members opposite who are as mute as a fish on agricultural issues when farmers are absent from this institution.

I shall not waste my time and answer the nonsense of the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier). I shall try to consider the weak answer we were expecting from the minister responsible for agriculture in Canada. I shall not waste my time with such nonnense because the few minutes at our disposal are too valuable.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that if some hon. members thought that Social Creditors do not know anything about dairy matters, I for one, and particularly the hon. member for Lotbinière who introduced the motion today—his riding alone produces 10 per cent of the milk production in the province of Quebec—know something about the subject.

As concerns the riding of Shefford, it has the largest milk processing industry in the world, the Société coopérative de Granby and I happen to live in that town about 1,500 feet from that industry which is the pride of the province of Quebec.

It seems to me that we have the right to speak and that even if we are in the opposition, we can speak as sensibly as the hon. members opposite, and that if we transpose the problem and say in the House what the farmers think, what they have written to us, what they tell us when we meet them, we shall speak even more to the point.

I am afraid that I do not have much time, but I would like to quote from a letter written by a farmer to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) who unfortunately could not be here today, and I am sorry about this since he is our official spokesman on agriculture. But even if he is not in the House or in Ottawa, we have taken our responsibilities because we represent urban as well as rural constituencies.

A while ago the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier) said: Who said that the government has not honoured its commitments?

I would not like to say that it is the Social Crediters or the Conservatives or the New Democrats, but I would like to quote a letter from a worthy farmer who runs a fine operation. He quotes figures which are truly representative of the situation of the dairy industry in Quebec.

Mr. Lambert, Member of Parliament for Bellechasse, Ottawa.

March 18, 1976—

And I am not ashamed to mention his name. This letter could have been written by an economist, and no economist could have stated the problem better than this farmer who lives with farming problems every day in his field, in his barn, on his farm and not in the offices of the Liberal government which hires economists to try and lull the farmers with false problems and say that farming problems are caused by weather conditions, by exports, by everyone except the government, and especially by the farmers, as the Minister of Agriculture suggested earlier.

Dear Member of Parliament:

Further to your request for information about the loss incurred by industrial milk producers I bring my case to your attention. During the first months of year 1975 the Canadian Federation of Industrial Milk Producers made a survey—

—that was done I suppose by the Canadian Federation of Industrial Milk Producers. They cannot be stupid, they represent farmers—

During the first months of the year 1975 the Canadian Federation—

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I do not have time to lose to help the hon. member if he is all mixed up—

—the Canadian Federation of Industrial Milk Producers made a survey to determine the cost of production per hundredweight of industrial milk for the period from April 1, 1975 to March 31, 1976.

It was not ten years ago that they made that survey, but April 1, 1975 to April 1, 1976.

That price was set at $11.60 per hundredweight of milk plus escalation every three months. That was the target of all producers.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

If the government does not know where it is going in the area of agriculture, farmers do. What they wanted to get was $11.60 per hundredweight of milk.

At the beginning of the month of April 1975 the Minister of Agriculture of Canada, Mr. Eugene Whelan, announced the new long term national policy; the basic price set at that time was $11.02 per hundredweight of milk. The difference of 58 cents results from the refusal to cover management costs, or 5 per cent. The Minister has stated that the basic price—$11.02—would be escalated on a regular basis during the next five years. So here is a table summing up the situation.

Speaking of a long term policy the minister is right in saying that he already announced it because farmers tell us the minister had promised to escalate that price every five years but he did not keep his promise. I continue reading from the letter:

Breakdown: April 1975—C.F.I.M.P. target price—$11.60 . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Clermont): Order. The Minister of Agriculture rises on a point of order.

● (1730)

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Again I hope the hon. member is not trying to mislead the House because this program was indexed every quarter and input costs, etc., were all calculated. We said we had support of $275 million for one million hundredweight of milk. We have not welshed one bit in respect of that program, and have been paying 100 per cent of what we said we would. That index was used and it is being used today.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe this is a point of order, and anyway I will not reply to it. I would let the farmer speak, he may find his way faster through the indexation than the minister himself. I go on quoting:

C.F.I.M.P. target price—$11.60; export costs: 15c.; anticipated net price: $11.45.

Decreed by C.D.C.: $11.02.—received $10.94; export costs 45c.; anticipated net price: $10.57.

Conversion cost increase at the plant: 8c.—$11.02; export cost: 45c.; anticipated net price: $10.49.

July 1975—Export cost increase:—Base price: $11.02; export costs: 90c., anticipated net price: $10.04.

Export costs are in the order of 90c. per hundredweight of milk. The immediate levy is 65c.; the 35c. differential is covered by a $40 million margin credit by the C.D.C. Producers will have to repay principal and interest before 1980.

It is a loan.

I will now show you the results of the cuts in the estimates, based on certain percentages since September 1st, 1975. The subsidy rate is $2.66 per cwt containing 3.5 per cent of fat or 76 cents a pound of fat. Since the last figures issued by the Dairy Commission, the $2.66 per cwt of milk should become, after figuring out the expeditions at the end of March at $2.26 per cwt, which amounts to a production of 516,342 pounds of milk and a loss of subsidies of $2,065.37, which I did not anticipate in my operation. In addition to that loss, the proceeds from milk do not compensate for the cost of producing that milk.

Here are the figures which were calculated in a survey and not by Social Credit members, not by government economists who are paid to defend the stupidity of the government. Those are the figures of the Federation on April 1, 1975:

April 1, 1975 Cost for one cwt of milk—$11.60

April 1, 1975 Price given (purchasing power)—$10.04

In 1975-76, there will be a loss for that dairy producer because of that gap, because the minister had promised something else which has not happened. That honest farmer produces more than ½ million pounds of milk a year. He is in fact a real farm producer who has invested high-risk money and who finds himself one day with an income loss of $8,054.93 only for that item.

So, this year I sustain a loss and if I anticipate for next year, after the Dairy Commission's budget and the article of the federal government... I am told that they are not sure yet of the policy; they are not sure of the policy but we know where they are going! It is for that very reason that the hon. member for Lotbinière launched a debate today in order to make the minister more aware, because I do not believe that in the Liberal caucus... That has been proved, he was not too sensitive. The sensitivity was not too evident. I should decrease my production and have a lesser income. That means that my production of 516,342 pounds of milk should decrease by 15 per cent. That is it would decrease to 438,891 pounds of milk, which is a loss of 77,451 pounds. This is a farmer who can calculate, Mr. Speaker. He does not need the mathematicians of the federal government to put his accounts in order, to calculate his losses and income, to know what will happen in 1976 and 1977 which such a production cost. We have nothing to teach that farmer. This farmer could teach lessons to the federal government administration and to the government facing us, he could teach them how to administer a country as intelligently as he administers his own farm and with data as clear and as precise. The implications of the new dairy policy—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Clermont): Order, please. The Minister of Agriculture on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Yes, it is, Mr. Speaker, because this Minister of Agriculture is a farmer and he does understand the dairy industry. He has not welshed on one thing he has said he would do.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Clermont): Order, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I realize that the minister by speaking has lost his right to speak again, but I think it is most improper for him to try to pitch-fork a second speech in by way of a point of order.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Clermont): Order, please. The hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau).

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that the frequent interventions from the Minister of Agriculture are evidence that his statement was weak. Now, he wants to interrupt me for the purpose of using up my time and preventing me from coming to the conclusion that this farmer has something to say about this dairy policy.

● (1740)

I would ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to let me finish reading this very important document so that we may see what has become of our dairy farmers, who were prosperous, intelligent and good managers, as a result of his dairy policy. Mr. Speaker, I have now reached this paragraph.

I shall now deal with the consequences of the new dairy policy for 1976-77. I ask the minister to be patient and hear me out.

The consequences of the new dairy policy for 1976-77. Production costs on April 1, 1976, per hundredweight of milk, $12.02; basic price April 1, 1976, per hundredweight of milk, $10.94; promised indexation, he has not forgotten anything, 40 cents, total, $11.34; export charges, $1.00 per hundredweight—this is what the Liberals recommend in the brief that we were lucky enough to get hold of—$1.00 net, $10.34; increase in processing costs, 8 cents, net price after deductions, $10.26; increase in farm production costs—the farmers are affected as well by the cost of inflation and their production costs are rising—35 cents., which leaves us with another net price of $9.91; reduction of the subsidy from $2.66 to $2.34, 32 cents, which leaves us with another price of $9.59. Loss of net income for return on labour for processing 77,451 lbs of milk, at the cost of $6.00 per hundredweight, total, $4,647. The difference between the production costs of $12.02 and the net farm price of $9.59, or a loss of profit of $2.43 per hundredweight, or for the full year, a loss of $2.43 for 438,891 lbs. of milk, the remaining quota for 1976, that is a loss of $10,665.

The total loss so far, if the minister cares to listen and to wait until I have finished, is $15,312. In addition to those $15,312, we have to take into account a reduced purchasing power. This farmer does not need to be acquainted with serious economic theories to know that his purchasing power is getting weaker and weaker. His purchasing power is also weaker as regards the total levies at the plant; transportation, 38 cents for 438,829 lbs. of milk, total: $1,667. Advertising for the joint program: 5 cents for 438,-829 lbs., $219,41. As for his export charges, there is probably a 35 cents difference on 438,829 lbs., that is a loss of $1,535. According to the projections for April 5, 1976 to April 1, 1977, the total loss of his purchasing power is $3,421.

I hope this information will help you to succeed in the task with which we entrusted you and I remain yours truly, Emilien Lacasse, overwhelmed, Honfleur, County of Bellechasse.

If the Minister wants to write to him, he may.

Mr. Fortin: That guy is calling for help.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, when we are told: Who said that the government did not keep its commitment? It is simple enough, there is no need to argue very long. In proof of this, the farmers have come here. If the promise made last year to the farmers had been kept they would not have to come here again this year through snow and ice to try to refresh the Minister's mind, who says he did not keep his promise or respect the undertakings he made last year. The best proof that the government did not respect its commitments, is that the farmers are here today. They march this way every year, and I am tired of that, Mr. Speaker. This is the social group which still works the hardest at the present time, which has always worked the hardest and which has to beg most to get its small share. Yet, no one seems to pay attention to them, because we are told that farmers are not that important anymore in our society nowadays since there are few of them, and their number is decreasing.

I am amazed, Mr. Speaker. I was recently making this comment to farmers: the more we vote Liberal, the more we are in the red; the more we vote Liberal, the deeper we are in debts, the more we vote Liberal, the greater is our deficit. What do the farmers want?

Mr. Fortin: The more we are Liberal, the poorer we get!

Mr. Rondeau: The more we are Liberal, the poorer we get indeed. What do farmers want, in short? They are at present suggesting that in order to stabilize the whole dairy industry in 1976-77, all that is needed in the matter of investments by the federal government for the coming year, is an amount of $40 to $50 million. Concerning those $40 or $50 million, Mr. Speaker, there is no need to make such a big fuss nor to make a very long speech. The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier) could not understand that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Clermont): Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) has now expired. He may only proceed with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Clermont): Order. The hon. member started to speak at five twenty-four, and I have already given him more than one minute extra.

Mr. Rondeau: I thank you for that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Clermont): Order. I asked unanimous consent of the House; it was not granted. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to say first of all that I shall be brief because my colleague from Battle River (Mr. Malone) wishes to say a few words. I will endeavour to divide the remaining time between the two of us. I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) for introducing this motion. I believe it is very important. I cannot help but comment at this time that I am sure all of us have noticed in our gallery today we have many dairy farmers who have remained here late on Friday afternoon to listen to this debate. I think this is unprecedented. It shows the importance of this debate in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: It also shows that they are very concerned about this issue.

[Translation]

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I come from Saskatchewan and I have been speaking French for only a very short time—

[English]

I beg the tolerance of those people in the gallery from Quebec in respect of my speaking in English in this debate. I want to make clear on behalf of our party that we support vigorously the principle of orderly marketing. We believe farmers must have orderly marketing if they are to plan their production and have a guaranteed income. They must have this if they are to plan for their livelihood and the livelihood of their families.

Our party believes in a system of supply management. We also know that when we have supply management, such as we are moving into in respect of some products in this country, there are bound to be problems which all of us will have to face, not just the federal government but the producers and the various provinces. When we look at a system of supply management that is giving the farmers hopefully a higher income we must also look at the cost of that product to some of the lower income Canadians.

Earlier in the debate today my colleague from Timiskaming mentioned the possibility of a school milk program and the supplementation of the cost of milk or of the price of milk to the consumers at the lower retail end. I think that is something we as a nation should examine. It makes me quite ill to go into schools and see coke and pop machiners, but very little milk being consumed by the students. I think that is something the government should look at seriously in terms of the new endeavour. I know it cannot all be done by the federal government. I thought I made that point clear on many occasions in this House.

We have an over-production of milk in this country this year, a real over-production of skim milk powder. Some of that now is being sold by the Canadian Dairy Commission at a price as low as 14 cents a pound in Europe. I want to suggest I do not think the subsidy for that should be coming strictly from the dairy farmers of this country. The CDC pays 54 cents a pound for that milk. Some of it will be sold for 14 cents a pound. I think when there is a problem of over-supply which is not the fault of the farmers, and the produce has to be sold for a lower price, the farmers should not have to bear the entire cost of that bill. The larger part of it should come from the people of Canada collectively. The government should buy the surplus milk and sell it itself for 14 cents a pound rather than have it done by the Canadian Dairy Commission. I think that would be a much more equitable way to approach a problem like this.

I also want to say that as a country we should look at the entire world situation. It irks me, and I am sure it irks most Canadians to see an overproduction of food in this country and to see simultaneously millions of people going hungry every night in this world, and many more people starving today than five or ten years ago. We have overproduction of food in a certain area and cannot get rid of that food. I know there are reasons why food cannot find its own way to hungry bodies and hungry bellies, but I am sure we can work out a delivery system not just in this area but indeed in many other areas.

I think the government should have as a principle and policy the maximization of food. The food in this country we cannot use must be channeled into a world food program for those people who need it. If we do not start doing some of those things, we will have in a few years, certainly within my lifetime, a very real food crisis in this world when thousands and thousands of people will be dying like flies because of the shortage of food. Much of that could be prevented because we have the land and all we need is a proper land use policy. We also have the technology and the wealth. It is a matter of nations sitting down and devising the proper type of world food policy.

● (1750)

We only have to look at some of the statistics in our country to know that we have a food crisis of sorts in Canada. I have the report of the Food Prices Review Board of February, 1975. I find in it, for example, that many Canadians are suffering from lack of proper nutrition. I will use the example of a calcium deficiency in the population. On page 8 of the report it is stated that approximately 70 per cent, perhaps 72 per cent, of people over the age of 65 in Canada suffer from a calcium deficiency. Of males between the ages of 10 and 19, young people in public schools and high schools, 55 per cent are suffering from calcium deficiency, and of females between the ages of 10 and 19 some 57 per cent are suffering from a calcium deficiency.

These statistics are available, and are only the tip of the iceberg. I think it is incumbent upon the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Agriculture to look at this problem, to exhibit some leadership with the provinces toward establishing a proper food program in this country, not just for school children but indeed for all Canadians. One way of starting that would be to reinstate the 5 cent per quart consumer subsidy for milk because there is a correlation between the price of milk and consumer demand. That subsidy should be reinstated and the price of milk lowered in the country, and then I am sure that most of the milk would be sold and Canadians would be healthy. Mr. Speaker, I notice the clock. I would like to go on but I will stop now out of courtesy to my friend, the hon. member for Battle River.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, one of the things that will be obvious is that far more problems will be left at the end of the time allotted to us than we have had time to deal with today.

I should like to thank the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) for bringing forward the motion, and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) for relinquishing some of his time to me.

It has often been said that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is a great guy, and you could recognize that most often in the speeches delivered by him. As might be pointed out by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), there is nothing illegal about that. But I would like to say to the minister that I hope this day he will pay enough attention to a problem on which I want to comment relating to the dairy industry, which affects my area in the province of Alberta quite significantly. Perhaps some of his department officials could pay special attention to it. It relates to how the dairy industry associates with the beef industry.

In the western provinces at present beef prices are severely depressed. One farmer told me recently he had the good fortune to have had his herd suffer from a disease as a result of which his animals died, and therefore he failed to incur the $20 a head loss which he would have had normally for raising them. The problem has to do with animal feed replacer products which have become so expensive that in many parts in the western provinces today young calves are simply being killed so that farmers do not incur the expense of feeding them high cost feeds. On the one hand the situation is that the milk replacers for animal food supplements have become so expensive that lifestock is being killed, while on the other hand the Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Malone: Just a second, I hope the minister is not trying to intervene.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Clermont): Order. The Minister of Agriculture on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important point because again we are being misinformed. Anybody feeding calves today on calf replacers is making money feeding calves.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Clermont): Sorry, Mr. Minister. The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Malone: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe that will warm us up a little. We know the minister is putting food into foreign markets at 14 cents a pound. The fact is that bringing it in from eastern Canada to western Canada is simply not viable at present. If the minister checked the record he would know he is doing a disservice to the western provinces by failing to take milk products from the east to the west where there is definitely a market for them.

The second thing that I would like to put on the record for the Minister of Agriculture is that he has failed to recognize the law in terms of the import of milk products into this country because, as we have pointed out to him, it has been illegal for some time to bring the dry milk product from the U.S. into Canada when it has milk content of over 40 per cent. That has been ignored for over a year, and it is causing serious concern among those who are producing animal food supplements.

I think the minister might well pay more attention to the fact that there is a large market in this country for surplus whey, and for surplus dried milk products, a fact which is not being considered or investigated by the Minister of Agriculture. I think it is high time he recognized that what he is doing is in effect forcing the price of animal food supplements up so high that they are no longer competitive in Canada. The minister has shown in his intervention not his lack of knowledge of agriculture but his disregard for much of the western community. I think he should recognize that there is a market in this country for eastern surplus products to go into the production of animal food surpluses in the western provinces. The minister should recognize that and show some concern.

I should like to read a couple of paragraphs from a letter which I received recently from a manufacturer of animal food supplements. He writes:

> We have recently had difficulty in obtaining the kind of whey powder we require. In desperation, we approached the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to try to obtain an import permit for a specified tonnage.
>
> Needless to say, we were turned down.
>
> If we had been able to import this product, it would have meant a considerable saving to us. There are mountains of surplus of dried whey in the U.S.A.

The fact is the government either has to take a position and allow it to come in from one area, or allow it to come in from eastern Canada. It should not stifle the industry which is looking after the market for animal food stuffs. According to the Toronto Globe and Mail, the Canadian Dairy Commission is buying milk powder from Canadian producers for 64 cents a pound and then offering it to the communist countries in eastern Europe for less than 14 cents a pound. Those areas of the country where producers are trying to get the older surplus products off the shelf to use for the making of animal food supplements are being denied that by the Department of Agriculture.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Clermont): Order. It being past five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 48(11), proceedings on the motion have now expired. The House stands adjourned until Monday at two p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

DAIRY PROGRAM PROVINCIAL ADMINISTRATION

BRITISH COLUMBIA—GRADUATED ENTRY PROGRAM

An industrial milk producer qualifies for graduated entry into the fluid milk market if he has:

1) been in production for one year,

2) been producing Grade "A" milk,

3) a bulk tank,

4) made application in January (of every year),

then fluid quota allocated will be:

5) equal to 100% of average daily production during the quota building period.

the fluid milk price in February 1976 was $13.57 per hundredweight and;

the industrial milk price ranged from $8.10 to $8.90 per hundredweight.

ALBERTA—GRADUATED ENTRY PROGRAM

An industrial milk producer qualifies for graduated entry into the fluid milk market if he has:

1) been in production 12 months preceeding September 1 of year of application during which dairy production averaged 500 pounds per day,

2) been producing Grade "A" milk,

3) a bulk tank,

4) made application by September 1 (of every year),

then fluid quota allocated will be:

5) equal daily production during quota building period up to 800 pounds.

6) Presently fluid quotas are set at 115% of preceeding years fluid sales. If required to accommodate graduated entrants, fluid quotas will be raised to:

—120% of 1974 sales on January 1/75;

—125% of 1975 sales on January 1/76;

—130% of 1976 sales on January 1/77.

In addition, fluid quotas created from production cuts and sales increase over and above the amount earned by existing quota holders will be made available to graduated entrants.

the fluid milk price in February 1976 was $12.21 per hundredweight and;

the industrial milk price was $8.00 per hundredweight.

SASKATCHEWAN—GRADUATED ENTRY PROGRAM

An industrial milk producer qualifies for graduated entry into the fluid milk market if he has:

1) been in production one year prior to application,

2) been producing Grade "A" milk,

3) a bulk tank,

4) made application on or before July 1 of every year,

then fluid quota allocated will be:

5) equal to 100% of daily production during 5 lowest months of production during qualifying period, up to a maximum of 1,000 pounds per day.

6) Limit on entry into the fluid market to the extent that total fluid quota for province shall not exceed 120% of fluid sales in year 1; 125% of fluid sales in year 2; 130% of fluid sales in year 3. Also, fluid quota shall not exceed 140% of fluid sales in any milk shed.

the fluid milk price in February 1976 was $11.07 per hundredweight and;

the industrial milk price was $8.56 per hundredweight.

MANITOBA—GRADUATED ENTRY PROGRAM

An industrial milk producer qualifies for graduated entry into the fluid milk market if he has:

1) been producing Grade "A" milk,

2) a bulk tank,

3) made application.

Since the quota system in Manitoba has been suspended, the percentage of total sales at fluid milk prices each month determines the percentage of producers' shipments to be paid at fluid milk prices.

the fluid milk price in February 1976 was $12.20 per hundredweight and;

the industrial milk prices ranged from $8.21 to $9.06 per hundredweight.

ONTARIO—GRADUATED ENTRY PROGRAM

An industrial milk producer qualifies for graduated entry into the fluid milk market if he has:

PROGRAM A

1) been producing milk or cream since July 1, 1968,

2) farm premises and milk meeting provincial standards,

3) a bulk tank,

4) made application prior to May 15 of every year,

then fluid quota allocated will be:

the greater of:

a) 89% of 9 months of 1965/66 excluding peak period;

b) 1973/74 production maximum of 400 pounds per day;

c) 1973/74 production if below 400 pounds per day;

d) the free quota allotment is allocated over five years.

PROGRAM B

1) marketed milk or cream in Ontario for at least the two consecutive and complete dairy years prior to date of entry; marketed at least 400 pounds per day in the 12 months ending March 31,

2) farm premises and milk meeting provincial standards,

3) a bulk tank,

4) application made prior to May 15 of every year,

then fluid quota allocated will be:

5) 400 pounds per day over five years.

the fluid milk prices in February 1976 was $12.01 per hundredweight and,

the industrial milk prices ranged from $8.21 to $8.85 per hundredweight.

QUEBEC—GRADUATED ENTRY PROGRAM

An industrial milk producer qualifies for graduated entry into the fluid milk market if he has:

1) been in production two years prior to application

2) farm premises and milk meeting provincial standards,

3) a bulk tank,

then fluid quota allotted will be:

4) a fluid quota equal to 60% of the Market Share Quota held prior to the date of application but, not more than the average fluid milk quota held by all producers in the province on April 1 of the year of application

5) the annual limit of quota that can be allocated to the graduated entry program is equal to 5% of the fluid sales in the proceeding year; there are other provisions which limit the program.

the fluid milk price in February 1976 was $12.30 per hundredweight and;

the industrial milk prices ranged from $8.13 to $8.20 per hundredweight.

NEW BRUNSWICK—GRADUATED ENTRY PROGRAM

An industrial milk producer qualifies for graduated entry into the fluid milk market if he has:

1) been in production for two complete and consecutive dairy years prior to application,

2) farm and milk meeting provincial standards,

3) a bulk tank,

then fluid quota allocated will be:

4) equal to average daily production in the dairy year prior to entry.

the fluid milk prices in February 1976 was $12.86 per hundredweight and;

the industrial milk prices ranged from $6.71 to $8.61 per hundredweight.

NOVA SCOTIA—GRADUATED ENTRY PROGRAM

An industrial milk producer qualifies for graduated entry into the fluid milk market if he has:

1) farm premises meeting provincial standards,

2) a bulk tank,

3) been production for two complete and consecutive years prior to date of entry,

then fluid milk quota allocated will be:

4) equal to 300 pounds per day,

5) OR, 50% of the producers average production during the two qualifying years, whichever is the greater.

the fluid milk price in February 1976 was $13.08 per hundredweight and;

the industrial milk price was $8.61 per hundredweight.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—GRADUATED ENTRY PROGRAM

An industrial milk producer qualifies for graduated entry into the fluid milk market if he has:

1) produced milk or cream at least two years prior to application,

2) been producing and been licensed to produce Class I or fluid milk,

3) a bulk tank,

4) made application,

then fluid milk quota allocated will be:

5) based on 80% of the average daily production during the 24 months preceding the date of entry to a maximum of 1,000 pounds per day.

the fluid milk price in February 1976 was $11.57 per hundredweight and;

the industrial milk price was $7.80 per hundredweight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 22, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAM TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT IN QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Since the anti-inflation measures advocated by the government have contributed to increase the number of unemployed in Quebec and since conditions are worsening, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House urge the government to review immediately its anti-inflation policy and launch an extensive public works program in co-operation with provinces and municipalities to control the rise of unemployment in Canada and in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

* * *

ENERGY

SUGGESTED STUDY OF THE POSSIBLE USE OF WIND AS SOURCE OF ENERGY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on an important matter of pressing necessity.

Since the search for traditional oil resources has declined more rapidly than the National Energy Board had anticipated; since in 1976, wind power appears again as a replacement solution, especially for a country such as ours where the winter season limits solar energy potentialities; considering also that the wind power potential of wind, this phenomenon caused by changes in density, pressure and temperature of the atmosphere, is colossal; I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House request the government to effect as soon as possible a complete inventory of the wind resources in Canada and establish the true potential of wind power since the age of cheap petroleum is ended and that of petroleum is nearing its end.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

● (1410)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBILITY CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS REQUESTED BILATERAL DISCUSSIONS ON MEASURES TO CONTROL INFLATION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour. During this morning's meeting with the cabinet, Mr. Morris made an extremely strong protest that the so-called consensus talks which took place over many months were bilateral only and that labour never had a chance to enter into discussions with other sectors of the economy and government together. In view of Mr. Morris' statement this morning that you will never get agreement until all the players are in the ball park, can the minister advise whether throughout the series of meetings between government and labour up to the announcement of controls the Canadian Labour Congress requested, directly or indirectly, multilateral discussions on steps to control inflation? If so, why were such multilateral meetings not arranged by the government?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall the CLC, at any time during the consensus discussions, requesting multilateral discussions. I might say that aside from the discussions to do with inflation, the Canadian Labour Relations Council, by its very nature, has all the players in the ball park; the employers, the unions and government have been meeting on an ongoing basis to devise ways of improving the present collective bargaining system.

Mr. Fraser: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the Canadian Labour Relations Council was not used with respect to the anti-inflation program. In view of the Prime Minister's remarks this morning to the effect that he desires the co-operation of labour in preparing for the situation at the completion of the control program, and in view of the Minister of Labour's hope that labour will co-operate by continuing membership in certain boards, such as the manpower consultative committee, the UIC advisory council, the Economic Council of Canada and the Canada Labour Relations Council, can the minister tell this House whether the government, in order to secure what we all realize to be the necessary co-operation of labour, is now prepared to discuss with the CLC some process for multilateral discussions outside of the Canadian Labour Relations Council to ensure better understanding and co-operation among all sectors of the economy, especially with regard to the culmination or completion of the anti-inflation control program?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Prime Minister indicated this morning at the meeting with the CLC that that suggestion on Mr. Morris' part would be well worth exploring.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ROLE OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING IN PROPOSED NEW SOCIETY

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. The Prime Minister said this morning that the government would want to discuss with the CLC what kind of economy and society we will need for the future. Does this indicate that the government plans significant changes in the process of free collective bargaining after the control period is ended and, if so, in order to have meaningful discussions when will the government put precise proposals to labour and to parliament for discussion? I am not referring to the same discussions that have taken place in the Canada Labour Relations Committee but to any new ideas with respect to the role of free collective bargaining in this new society that the right hon. Prime Minister spoke of this morning.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the discussions that go on in the Canada Labour Relations Council, that is precisely where changes and improvements in the whole collective bargaining system might very well be agreed upon which would help us in terms of the type of society that we have after the control period is over. That is where these discussions are in fact taking place.

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF LABOUR REPRESENTATION FROM GOVERNMENT BODIES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. Since the Canadian Labour Congress is considering withdrawing from the Canadian Labour Relations Council and other bodies, and in light of the statement by Mr. Morris this morning that the CLC is prepared to discuss with the government policies for the decontrol period, has the minister received any significant indication that the CLC will leave these bodies, and in any event is the minister going to speak directly to the executive of the CLC about this situation?

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it has been made public and is well known that the CLC has been considering withdrawing from some of these bodies. They have not been too explicit on precisely which bodies they will consider withdrawing from and have taken no action yet. I believe they will be meeting tomorrow and the next day on this particular question. It is my hope, and I believe the hope of the government, that the CLC will not withdraw, on the basis that it would not be in the interests of the labour movement, its membership or the Canadian people generally.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

POSSIBILITY OF SHORTENING CONTROL PERIOD

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the input of the Minister of Labour as to the time when the decontrol will start still firmly and absolutely aimed at the 3-year period provided in the legislation or could the time be shorter, in view of the situation in which the CLC and the Canadian Economic Policy Committee of the C.D. Howe Institute have suggested that wage and price controls should be terminated in as short a time as possible, possibly within 18 months?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): There has been no indication, Mr. Speaker, on the part of the government, certainly in any way to the labour movement that this period will be any shorter than that stipulated in the legislation.

SUGGESTION LABOUR SHARE IN PRODUCTIVITY GAINS—REQUEST FOR INCREASES IN MINIMUM WAGE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Although the minister knows that companies can have virtually unlimited profits under the government's program if they show that excess profits are due to unusual productivity gains, the restriction on Canadian workers for increases beyond the guidelines have been set at 2 per cent, at least according to our understanding up to this morning anyway, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the Minister of Labour was stating new government policy when he suggested that workers in Canada would be able to share precisely in the same way as corporations in unusual productivity gains?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the Minister of Labour was making that comment in the context of doing away with restrictive labour and other practices.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, that answer makes even less sense than the ones we usually get from the Minister of Finance. Let me ask the Minister of Finance whether Canadian workers, in terms of productivity gains, are restricted to the 2 per cent ceiling, unlike management which has no restriction, or are they not?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, since I was the one who made the point perhaps I would be permitted to answer the hon. member. I will get the precise wording of the regulation for him. If we find there are savings as a result of the unions or the employers doing away with or negotiating away restrictive working practices which result in significant productivity gains, then the workers can share, in those exceptional circumstances, with the employers in those savings, and those savings are not then brought within the guidelines. Also in respect of a piece-work basis, if this results in increased productivity the same would apply under an incentives scheme. I would be pleased to get the precise wording for the hon. member.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Finance, if either can give us a single example of the workers being given the advantage of this regulation in the five months the program has been in existence? Secondly, given the government's reiterated commitment to the poorly paid workers in Canada, I should like to ask why the government does not immediately increase the minimum wage in Canada to at least $3.50 an hour?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): To answer the latter part of the hon. member's question first, he may be aware that it was just a short time ago that we raised the minimum wage from $2.65 to $2.90, to be effective April 1. This was a significant percentage increase and only 10 cents an hour lower than the latest position taken by the CLC, being $3. I think the hon. member should be aware of that.

As to whether the Anti-Inflation Board has permitted the exceptional circumstances, in which there might be that type of high productivity as a result of technological change, or the circumstances I have identified, in which workers might share in the savings, I am not aware but I can check.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAM TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT IN QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since the unemployment situation is getting worse, particularly in eastern Quebec, and given the announcement last week that some 400 small slaughterhouses will be closed in Quebec, which will cause further unemployment, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether he will recommend that his government increase the budget of the Department of Public Works, so that funds be allocated especially to the eastern Quebec region, in cooperation with the province and the municipalities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that the President of the Treasury Board announced two or three months ago that the federal government would seriously try to cut its expenditures, and so we have reduced the rate of growth of the Department of Public Works and of several other departments. We have also put an end to some voluntary assistance programs, like LIP. We have reduced expenditures. However, I take note of the hon. member's words and I will see if, within authorized expenses, there is a way to help the region he refers to.

● (1420)

UNEMPLOYMENT—EFFECT OF COMBINE IN SASH AND WINDOW MANUFACTURING IN EASTERN QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

In view of the comforting reply of the Prime Minister, I should like to draw his attention to the fact that currently, in the same area I have just spoken about, steps are also being taken to centralize the manufacture of windows and doors, and a very specialized organization is buying up all the small businesses that are now offering considerable employment in eastern Quebec. Would the Prime Minister also be willing to take that situation into consideration and see to it that we are able to offer the largest possible number of jobs to our local manpower?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall gladly point out the problem to the ministers concerned. In addition to the Minister of Public Works, there is also the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who will certainly make it his duty to look into those problems. I cannot help but remind the Social Credit Party of Canada that it was very severe in condemning the government claiming that it was spending too much. Had they been more understanding in this regard, I might be less astonished to hear them now encourage us to spend more.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put one last supplementary.

I do not recall having chided the government for spending logically, for the good of the whole population. In any event, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would be willing to make reforms in the financing of the public sector of the federal administration, enabling the government to accept the performance of public works without affecting the budget further.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to look into all reforms, specially those that would allow us to spend more without increasing our budgets. If the hon. member has the key to that one, I would be very eager to hear about it.

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

EFFECT OF PROGRAM ON COLLECTIVE BARGAINING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. During the 1974 election he indicated to the people of Canada that controls were not needed and would not work. Be that as it may, in respect of the flip-flop the minister is reported as stating that the guidelines have introduced an element of uncertainty as to the final outcome of bargaining but they are not proving to be the death warrant, a kind of midnight executioner, for collective bargaining. There can be no doubt about the uncertainty. I should like to ask the minister what steps the government will propose or what steps he has recommended to remove this uncertainty from the collective bargaining process, save and except the removal of the controls, which of course is the answer in the long run.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I really do not recall the words the hon. member is attributing to me. I would be quite prepared to have him give me the source so I could check on it, but it is unfamiliar to me.

Mr. Alexander: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I am so accustomed to speaking to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration that I made an error. I meant my remarks to be directed to the Minister of Labour. I am sure he heard it, but perhaps he would like me to repeat the question.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Repeat it, please.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact that the minister was so concerned about wage and price controls during the 1974 election when he indicated they would not work and were not needed, then all of a sudden he flip-flopped and now says they will work and are needed, may I refer him to his own statement when he said:

> The guidelines have introduced an element of uncertainty as to the final outcome of bargaining but they are not proving to be the death warrant, a kind of midnight executioner, for collective bargaining.

There is no question about the fact that controls have brought about uncertainty. I wish to ask the minister what steps will be taken by the government or what has the minister recommended to ensure that this uncertainty is removed, keeping in mind that the removal of controls would of course be the ideal answer but that will have to wait for the future?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I believe the hon. member is referring to a speech I gave to the United Steel Workers at Whitehorse on Friday. What I was referring to, if he wants to read the full speech and not just take a paragraph or two which might be out of context, is the fact that when the Anti-Inflation Board injects itself into the process as the law requires, it creates uncertainty so far as the employees are concerned as to what the final award will be, and that is one of the inevitabilities of the legislation in any control system.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Alexander: In other words, the minister is stating that it will be a tough year.

* * *

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSIONS WITH LABOUR ON BUDGET PROPOSALS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. As I understand it, the Minister of Finance stated today that he looked forward to advice in preparing his budget which is expected within the next two months. In order to keep this multilateral discussion going, would the minister advice the House whether any arrangements have been made to hold extensive talks with labour and other groups on fiscal proposals in that budget and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I said this morning in response to CLC's comments on economic and fiscal policy was that I disagreed with the trend of their recommendations which would seem to call for a tighter and more restrictive fiscal policy because of the risk of additional unemployment in Canada. I called on them to rethink their approach to the fiscal and monetary policy and reminded them of the fact that I would be presenting a budget within the next two months and that if they along with others had comments they wished to make, they would be most willingly received. I am glad to repeat that here. Of course, I am receiving from various interest groups across the country recommendations with regard to individual tax changes, but I would be glad to hear from the opposition, the CLC and others their views on the fiscal and monetary policy which they think is appropriate.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—ALLEGATION IMPORTERS MAKING EXCESSIVE PROFITS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact the Minister of Agriculture stated in the House on Friday that if he were in Russia he would be given a medal for producing commodities in the very efficient manner in which they are produced here,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Towers: —would the minister immediately stop patting himself on the back and presenting medals to himself and investigate the charges that importers of eggs into Canada are making excess profits at the expense of producers as well as consumers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been under investigation for some time and recommendations have been submitted to me by the National Farm Products Marketing Council to overcome this.

An hon. Member: Send the minister to the salt mines.

Mr. Towers: In view of the high regard which the Minister of Agriculture has for his ability to produce and his reference to Russia, will he be applying to Mr. Brezhnev for the position vacated by Dmitry Polyansky as Soviet minister of agriculture?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED CONFUSION AT CANADA HOUSE IN LONDON—CORRECTIVE MEASURES BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As a press report from London stated in considerable detail that the addition of an extra layer of bureaucracy to the operations of Canada House in London has produced confusion and inefficiency which is baffling to those who are seeking information from Canada House, and they are the ones whom Canada House was originally established to serve, has the minister investigated this matter since I drew it to his attention last week and has he been able to take steps to correct this rather disturbing situation?

● (1430)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows as well as I do that Canada House has performed extremely well and with a very high standard of service. Accordingly, all of us were surprised at this news report. However, I have communicated with the High Commissioner, and I expect that corrective action will be taken very quickly.

Mr. Hees: As this report was very detailed regarding the considerable number of instances in which confusion and inefficiency have grown up in Canada House, is the minister looking into the operation of our embassies around the world to see if what has happened in our most important embassy, London, is happening in other places as well?

Mr. MacEachen: The service performed by our missions abroad, whether they be embassies or high commissions, is constantly under consideration and under constant upgrading and improvement, and I am sure that the complaints which have developed in London will be corrected because of staff reassignments and staff procurements.

Mr. Hees: Let us hope so.

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED USE OF CANADIAN CHEESE ON ALL DOMESTIC FLIGHTS

Mr. Joe Flynn (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which is further to my question of November 26 last on the subject of the use of imported wines on domestic flights. I should like to ask him if he would also consider the use of Canadian cheese, replacing imported cheeses on all domestic flights. We have many fine products in Canada such as Canadian brick, Gouda, Swiss, Colby, Boursault, Provolone, Canadian Oka, Camembert and the fine Cheddars, to name just a few.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Hees: A nice bit of advertising, Joe.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

PROPOSAL TO AMEND GUIDELINES TO PERMIT WORKERS TO SHARE IN INCREASED PROFITS FROM SALE OF EXPORTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the removal of the guideline limits on profits made by corporations from exports as a result of higher prices—such as the one announced today for copper—or greater productivity, and in view of the limits put on wage increases for workers in those industries, will the government consider amending the wage guidelines so that workers in those industries could share fairly the greater profitability of the corporations?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that would seem to me to be unfair to other workers in Canada who are subject to the guidelines.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): What about the other corporations?

MEASURES TO ENSURE CORPORATIONS WILL NOT SELL ALL HIGH QUALITY GOODS IN EXPORT MARKET TO REAP HIGHER PROFITS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): In view of the fact that companies which export part of their production, such as lumber, will be permitted to make larger profits on their export sales than they could make on sales in Canada, what steps, if any, is the government taking to ensure that companies, in order to make these larger profits, will not export their highest quality products which they produce and sell in Canada the second grade, inferior products?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, through the anti-inflation program the returns of exporting corporations will be monitored in relation to their business, both Canadian and export, and through the operations of other departments of government the quality of physical volumes moving will also be watched.

* * *

TRANSPORT

ALLEGEDLY INADEQUATE SEARCH AND RESCUE OPERATION AT HALIFAX—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of the very tragic drowning of two men in the northwest arm of the Halifax Harbour yesterday afternoon, although they hung on to their boat, apparently, long enough to be rescued had there been any adequate, integrated rescue plan in operation in the harbour, and although there were, apparently, appropriate boats ready to do the job had they been notified and called upon to do so. Since this harbour comes under the jurisdiction of a board within the minister's department, I should like to ask why there does not appear to have been an adequate, integrated search and rescue operation available for situations like that.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for having given us notice of his question. I certainly share his feelings about the very regrettable nature of the incident. We will be investigating the very question which the hon. member has put to see if indeed there was a deficiency in co-ordination, and whether we can ensure against it in the future.

Mr. Stanfield: Might I ask the minister what sort of investigation he will launch? Will he launch quite an extensive inquiry into what happened rather than simply making informal inquiries himself? Will he launch at least a quasi-formal inquiry as to what actually transpired and with authority to recommend what needs to be done to avoid the danger of a recurrence of this kind in the future?

Mr. Lang: I will take steps to determine the facts, which is necessary, and I will not prejudge what further action is required until I have all the facts. There are a number of agencies involved, and it is a problem of co-ordination. I will be glad to report from time to time about the nature of my inquiries, the conclusions I have arrived at and any action I recommend.

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO INVOLVEMENT OF HALIFAX SEARCH AND RESCUE CENTRE IN LOSS OF "SAN JUAN"—DATE OF DECISION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the same minister. A short time ago he advised the House that he was considering the facts surrounding the loss of the fishing boat San Juan and the response of the Canadian coastguard at the Halifax Search and Rescue Centre in that particular tragedy in which two fishermen were lost. He gave an undertaking that he would take under advisement the possibility of holding a public or judicial inquiry into this tragedy. Has he reached a decision on that yet?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

DATE OF REPORT OF TASK FORCE REVIEW OF SEARCH AND RESCUE OPERATIONS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same minister. In view of the fact that there are lifeboat bases strategically located in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland which supposedly look after such rescues, and in view of the fact that it has been indicated that the lifeboats which are provided in these bases cannot even cut through two inches of ice, I wonder if the minister has received the task force report on the review of rescue policy and when we will get the results of that investigation. What action is the minister taking to investigate the lack of capability of these lifeboat bases?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, work on the question of co-ordination of our whole rescue effort is still under way, and I do not have at this point a final report.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—DATE MINISTER AWARE OF MISUNDERSTANDING ABOUT FINANCING

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. The minister recently denied saying that Lockheed had misled his negotiators, but rather that there had been a misunderstanding with regard to financing. Could the minister advise the House just when he became aware of that misunderstanding?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would say it was when we reached the final stage of the contract, which was being negotiated by my colleague in the Department of Supply and Services. It became clear at that time that Lockheed was not going to be able to provide the financing, as we had understood it would be able to do.

Mr. McKinnon: When I asked the minister to be specific about the time, I should have liked to have had it in days, months or years, not in a nebulous framework that this House has never been advised of, for example, the way the negotiations were going. Would the minister please tell us the date he became aware of the misunderstanding?

Mr. Richardson: From memory, the cabinet decision to purchase the Lockheed long range patrol aircraft was in late November, and I made an announcement to that effect in the House. It would have been during the month of December, 1975 and early January that the final negotiations of the contract were taking place.

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—POSSIBILITY OF OBTAINING INFORMATION FROM UNITED STATES ON PAY-OFFS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): The minister answered the question quite satisfactorily. Further on this subject, the Wall Street Journal of March 8 in a front page story said that:

● (1440)

Data on overseas payoffs by U.S. companies will be shared with foreign governments through the Justice Department, the State Department said.

Has the Canadian government availed itself of this opportunity to obtain information from that relatively open government concerning Lockheed payoffs?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is no. I think that we have satisfied ourselves directly in conversations that the Lockheed Company, as I have explained before, made no payments or commissions to any Canadian. We have not concerned ourselves directly with their practices in other countries.

* * *

ENERGY

INCREASED COST OF ELECTRICITY AND HEATING OIL IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Because some people are losing their homes in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island as a result of the rocketing of electric and oil generated heating costs and hundreds of thousands of others in those two provinces are in very difficult circumstances for the same reason, will the minister be presenting new initiatives to the next federal-provincial conference which deals with energy matters and if so, what sort of initiatives?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, at the last energy ministers' conference it was agreed that this particular item would be put on the agenda of a committee called IPACE, the Interprovincial Advisory Committee on Energy. The purpose of this committee is to consider a number of proposals including a proposal that the representative of the province of Nova Scotia put forward at the energy ministers' conference.

* * *

POST OFFICE

DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION OF LETTER CARRIER SERVICE FOR DALHOUSIE, NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of the plight of the 8,000 people in the town of Dalhousie regarding modern postal delivery service, I wonder if the minister could inform the House when this recommended letter carrier delivery service can be implemented?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Well, Mr. Speaker, the criteria for the introduction of new door to door letter service was improved upon, and made more difficult to be precise, last October when the government felt it should practice more restraint, particularly in the employment of postal workers. In view of the hon. gentleman's representation, however, I shall ask for a review of the number of people affected by the lack of service to see if it meets the new criteria.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROTEST OF MR. BIBERSHTEIN AGAINST REFUSAL OF RUSSIA TO ALLOW HIS WIFE AND DAUGHTER TO JOIN HIM—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On March 2, I asked the minister whether he would be willing to intercede if he received a request from Mr. Boris Bibershtein of Toronto who was undergoing a hunger strike to protest the refusal of the Russian government to allow his wife and eight year old daughter to join him in Canada. In light of the fact that the minister replied he would be prepared to assist if he received such a request and the fact that Mr. Bibershtein wrote him the next day to, in his words, "beg for his help" may I ask the minister whether his department has contacted the Russian authorities to indicate this government's interest in the case and if not, why not?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we did receive a request and my officials have been in touch with the gentleman himself on this case. We are now considering what steps we can take to assist constructively. There is no question but that we will lend our services in the hope that we may be able to secure the admission to Canada of his wife and child.

Mr. Beatty: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that it is some 19 days since Mr. Bibershtein wrote to the Secretary of State for External Affairs to request his assistance in this very urgent case, why has the government taken so long to make a decision to even contact the Soviet authorities to indicate this government's interest in reuniting this family?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we have not held off making any such decision.

* * *

ENERGY

PROPOSED ENRICHED URANIUM PLANT IN JAMES BAY AREA—AVAILABILITY OF QUEBEC PREFEASIBILITY STUDY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is based on the fact that following the 1975 CANADIF study into an enriched uranium plant in the James Bay area, both the province of Quebec and the federal government expressed interest in carrying out further studies on this project. In view of the report that the prefeasibility study by the province of Quebec has now been completed, will the minister indicate whether this study has been made available to the federal government because of the mutual interest in this case? If not, what plans does the minister have to obtain a copy of the report?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge it has not been made available to us yet. I would expect it might be made available to us very shortly, perhaps when we have completed our own parallel study.

Miss MacDonald: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister undertake to table both of those documents in the House of Commons when they are available for the study and the information of members of the House?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I would want to consider the position of the province of Quebec before agreeing to that.

Mr. Clark: Why?

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SITUATION IN CAMBODIA

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the light of reports from Thailand to the effect that one of history's worst and cruelest tragedies has occurred in Cambodia over the last 11 months, have the minister and his department taken steps to acquaint themselves with the situation and can the minister make a brief report to the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council, who took this question on Friday I believe, has already communicated the information requested to the hon. member. I shall look at it myself and if I can add anything further I shall be glad to do so.

INCARCERATION OF RICHARD ALLIN IN UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SECURE RELEASE

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and he has notice of the question. In view of the fact that one of my constituents, Mr. Richard Allin of New Denver, British Columbia, a Canadian citizen, is presently in jail in Houston, Texas on a charge of draft evasion as a result of attending university in the United States and refusing to enlist in the United States army, and in view of the fact that information pertaining to his arrest has been more readily available from the United States Embassy than from the minister's department, will the minister assure the House that his department will now take active and positive steps to assist this man to be released and returned to Canada?

[Miss MacDonald.]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I heard about this particular case just before coming into the House. I understand that the gentleman in question has been released from prison and has consulted a lawyer. I shall follow it up, however.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

DELAY IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS FOR WAGE INCREASES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that less than 10 per cent of wage agreements so far submitted to the Anti-Inflation Board have been ruled on, most of them beyond the promised 30 day waiting period, and in view of the fact that even in cases where decisions have been made, such as the Sudbury Board of Education and its 600 teachers who have been waiting for months for a decision, also in view of the fact that the staff of the board's compensation branch has expressed complete frustration with the board's lack of direction, can the minister inform the House and the thousands of workers who have been waiting for months for their wage increases what steps will be taken to speed up the work of the board? Also, how soon can we expect this backlog of applications to be cleared?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the largest number of applications, as I understand it, are in the non-organized sector of the work force rather than on behalf of organized labour groups. This is a condition which has come about principally because of the filing requirement as of the end of February that employers must make under profit guidelines in particular, inquiries by employers who wish to confirm the appropriateness of the compensation settlements they have made with their own unorganized employees as part of the over-all profit control program. In that sense the board, as the chairman indicated last week, cannot give any specific timing in which all these cases will be cleared. The board is working hard to do so and hopes it may overcome this particular bulge in applications which has occurred for the reasons I have stated.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

SUGGESTED CONTROL OF HOUSING AND ENERGY COSTS, MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that daily it is becoming more apparent that for the anti-inflation program to work as the government has outlined would necessitate a massive bureaucracy, is the government now prepared in the light of the slowness of the program and its outright rejection by the working people of Canada, to abandon this program and instead adopt a program of special measures controlling housing costs, mortgage rates, energy costs and other areas not touched by the present program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is no. The long answer is that energy costs in the area of petroleum are already controlled, in the area of electricity they are controlled by provincial hydro and so on. There is a very long answer to which I may enjoin the hon. member to listen, and perhaps at some time debate.

* * *

FINANCE

EFFECT OF INTERNATIONAL CURRENCY EXCHANGE DIFFICULTIES ON CANADIAN DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Finance. What are the implications for the Canadian dollar in the international market of the withdrawal by France from the Snake agreement?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, judging by the experience of the international markets in the last five to seven days there have been no implications for the Canadian dollar as yet. It remains, of course, one of the strong currencies on world money markets but we would have to say in general terms that we have to be concerned about any destabilizing effect of world money markets. In particular, we regret it has not been possible to continue a closer integration within the European community of something as important as exchange policy.

● (1450)

Mr. Gillies: Given the fact that there is bound to be pressure developing on the Canadian dollar, is the government going to continue its policy of allowing it to float, regardless of where it may go or will it move to a support operation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the pressure we are concerned with at the moment is upward rather than downward pressure. We do not propose at this time to intervene in order to move away from the floating dollar.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CAMBODIA—POSSIBLE REFERENCE OF SITUATION TO UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It was not clear from the answer he was aware of what was going on in Cambodia. Can he tell us whether his department or the government is taking any steps whatever to draw these tragic events to the attention of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights for action?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on that specific point, I will be happy to inquire whether such representations have been made recently, and advise the hon. member.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM—ALLEGED RESTRICTION OF PAYMENTS TO LAND OWNER RATHER THAN HERD OWNER

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Does the federal Department of Agriculture have a policy that restricts payments under the beef stabilization program to the land owner rather than the herd owner, and is there a regulation that would make a beef stabilization payment void for more than one herd that is kept on the described land?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, it does not restrict it just to land owners.

Mr. Malone: Why then does the department refuse payment to women who owned their own herds and maintained them on separate land prior to marriage, but sold them after marriage?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member realizes that information ought to be obtained in another way.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SAFETY OF CANADIANS AND AID PROGRAMS

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the hope that the situation has now stabilized somewhat, can the minister advise whether all Canadians known to be in Guatemala are reported to be safe? Also, can he give us a brief update as to whether his department had consultation with the missionaries there to determine the best form of aid beyond the initial aid given by the government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the latest count I have is that all Canadians in Guatemala have been reported safe. The hon. member may know that in addition to the initial food aid in the form of milk powder, we have embarked upon a program of providing shelter that we hope will house a large number of people in two towns in Guatemala. We have on an individual basis been co-operating with missionary groups in Guatemala, particularly a group that was organized in the city of Hamilton. To my knowledge, we have responded to all the non-governmental efforts that have been initiated in Canada, as well as having undertaken a very extensive program of direct assistance from the government.

Oral Questions

FEDERAL MORTGAGE EXCHANGE CORPORATION

DATE OF COMMENCEMENT OF OPERATIONS—NAMING OF PRESIDENT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance with regard to the long promised Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation. Will the minister advise whether this corporation will commence business on April 1, 1976, as promised by the government? If not, why not?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we anticipate it probably will not do so. The principal reason for the delay is that we have had meetings with people familiar with the current secondary market for mortgages in the private sector to discuss ways in which the instrument might be used. These are not yet completed. Given the nature of the market and the demand for setoff mortgages as investments, particularly by pension and trust funds, we hope to be able to work out an effective regime through which the corporation will be an instrument for achieving this.

Mr. Reynolds: Will the minister advise the House whether his department has advertised in any of the newspapers in Canada for a president of that corporation and whether he has interviewed anybody through other means?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we have not advertised by newspaper, although representatives of my department have talked to a number of individuals in this context.

* * *

POST OFFICE

CHANGE IN CRITERIA FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF LETTER CARRIER SERVICE

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Postmaster General. It is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Restigouche. Until now, the number of postal drops necessary for a community to qualify for letter carrier service has had to be 2,000. I understand the restraint program has put a postponement on the introduction of new applications over 2,000. However, the minister's reply indicated a new criteria. Has the number of postal drops been increased before consideration will be given to door-to-door delivery, or is it just that this is being postponed temporarily?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): It is a combination, Mr. Speaker. We have postponed temporarily the introduction of new postal walks. We have also weighted a little more heavily the question of density which has, as the hon. member can well understand, an appreciable effect on how many letter carriers and backup staff we would have to hire if we remained with the old criteria.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

INDUSTRY

CLOTHING—GOVERNMENT ACTION ON REPORT OF TEXTILE AND CLOTHING BOARD ON COLD WEATHER CLOTHING

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since the recommendations made by the Textile and Clothing Board concerning the impact on Canadian manufacturing of low cost imports of cold weather clothing were submitted to the minister on February 16, and since it will soon be time to place orders for the next cold season, what action will be taken on the report. Will the government be deciding that it is still interested in keeping labour intensive secondary industry in Canada?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I had a very lengthy and productive meeting on Friday with the representatives of the textile industry. We discussed the whole question of low cost imports. A number of steps have been set in motion. There will be discussions between my officials and spokesmen for the industry. I have also asked the Textile and Clothing Board to give me some specific recommendations as to how present arrangements may be changed. A number of other steps have been launched as well. The hon. member will find that the textile representatives present felt that the meeting was productive. I hope that before the snow flies again, if it ever stops flying this time, we will have some answers to these very important questions.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSING

EFFECT OF IMPLEMENTATION OF MONTREAL REPORT ON LOW RENTAL UNITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Could the minister tell the House whether he read a report by the Montreal economic research and development board on a program to favour building rental houses through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation loans? If so, could he comment on the conclusions of this study that this loan program will degenerate into an outbreak of bankruptcies in about a decade when the owners will have to retire the loans and increase their rents to reimburse the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should be more explicit on the report. I have no precise information to give on a report concerning a person whose name is not mentioned.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR PREVENTING RETURN OF SPENT FUEL FROM NUCLEAR REACTORS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the minister's statement that spent fuel from a potential Korean CANDU reactor would not be returned to Canada due to environmental implications, whether the sale was completed or not, will he advise what are the environmental implications that preclude the return of spent fuel to Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question does not arise because the agreement does not provide for any such return.

Mr. Wenman: What was the source of information upon which the minister made the decision that spent fuel could not be returned? Regardless of whether the agreement was completed or not, the decision was made that spent fuel would not be returned. What was the basis for this decision and is the minister prepared to either table or circulate that information?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the main point in reaching a decision of that kind was that the provisions requiring the return of spent fuel would not add, except marginally, to the safeguard system that we had enunciated.

* * *

● (1500)

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DATE OF TABLING OF HALL REPORT ON RAILWAY PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Is the minister now in a position to announce a new date for the tabling of the report of Dr. Noel Hall on railway pensions? If he is not able to give it today, could he find out this week and let us have a date?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I will endeavour to do so, Mr. Speaker. I know Dr. Hall is working as fast as he can and has undertaken to try to make his report soon, but I shall try to get a more specific answer than that.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. SHARP—REMARKS OF HON. MEMBER FOR YORK-SIMCOE IN DEBATE OF MARCH 18—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In reply to a question of privilege raised by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), I indicated I would want some time to deliberate on the matter. The question arises from certain remarks made in the course of debate on Thursday evening of last week. I shall try to deal with it as briefly as possible but it is an extremely important matter and may require consideration at some length.

The basic rule of the House with respect to the procedure and practice in this regard can be found in citation 140 of Beauchesne's. It is probably familiar to all hon. members, and it reads as follows:

> The rule relating to personal reflections occurring in debate may be stated thus, namely: that it is doubly disorderly for any member, in speaking, to digress from the question before the House and to attack any other member by means of approbrious language applied to his person and character or to his conduct, either in general, or on some particular occasion, intending to bring him into ridicule, contempt, or hatred with his fellow-members, or to create ill blood in the House.

In addition, there is another precaution which the House has always observed. I would direct attention to Standing Order 35, again one which is no doubt familiar to all members and which, paraphrased, says basically that no member shall speak disrespectfully against any other member of the House. The rationale behind this, the practice which has grown up in this respect, has been set out in another citation of Beauchesne's, citation 136, which refers to the Bruce case in 1944. I also refer to the Lacombe case in 1943. The ruling is to be found at page 565 of the Journals of that year. The practice with respect to both these cases illustrates clearly what has grown to be the custom of the House with respect to allegations of any sort against a member or group of members in circumstances where those allegations are challenged.

The rationale behind all these cases is easy to understand. A member who speaks disrespectfully of another in the House, whether the other person is a member of the House or not, is not subject to prosecution; he is immune from prosecution under the ordinary laws of libel and slander. This does not mean, however, that within the House of Commons the rights or protection available in ordinary civil courts are abandoned. The House itself has developed a regime or practice which has grown up to protect members who feel themselves aggrieved by an allegation; it is a protection in the form of a challenge that the allegation either be substantiated, explained, qualified sufficiently or withdrawn.

The question, therefore, becomes whether the language used by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) last Thursday night was a transgression of the terms of Standing Order 35; in other words, whether it can be described as being unparliamentary language or whether, in light of the precedents, it constitutes an allegation which, having been challenged by the raising of a question of privilege last Friday, ought to be withdrawn, qualified or pursued by way of a substantive motion.

The intervention of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) relied rather heavily on the fact that in the past, on the two most prominent occasions on which I have had to make a ruling in this area, I have tended to lean in favour of allowing vigorous and strong language in the chamber. I must say, having looked at some of the precedents over the weekend, I find that most of the language which has been disallowed in the past and which might offend members with relatively weak stomachs, involves language which I find to be not only appropriate but rather stimulating.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: In addition, may I say that the word "illegal", which is the subject matter of this particular controversy, is one which was referred to by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton in the course of an argument to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) gave support in delivering his contribution, that is to say, the case which arose a few years ago where the government was accused by the opposition of going beyond its statutory authority by using drawing rights, if I remember correctly, in order to pay its obligations under a statute to certain grain farmers. Not only was the word "illegal" constantly used in that debate, but it seems to me it would not be an unparliamentary term in that particular context. It was used frequently, and the whole subject matter of the debate concerned the allegation that the bill was retroactive justification, or legalization of acts which had been committed by the government and which were illegal. That was the whole substance of the argument, and in my view use of the term, in that context, was not only parliamentary but essential to the debate.

The question I have to ask now, however, is this: Does the same term offend the Standing Order in the different context in which it was uttered last Thursday night? It cannot be denied that the expression was used by the hon. member for York-Simcoe in a much different context, a very narrow context referring to the action of ministers with respect to the judges' affair which was referred to specifically. Since those actions have been the subject matter of constant attention and attack in this House for eight consecutive sitting days, there can be no doubt as to the context or about the actions which were involved. There would not, I think, be much value in speculating on how many meanings or contexts that word might have in other circumstances. In the circumstances in which the hon. member for York-Simcoe used it last Thursday might, there could, after those eight days of concentrated discussion here, really be no doubt. Therefore, I find it had a very narrow context with respect to the ministers involved. It also had a very narrow context with respect to the actions which were referred to.

The term "illegal" or "illegality" has been an integral part of those discussions over the eight days. The government expressed the view that the actions of ministers have not been illegal and made much of the fact that the courts did not find those actions illegal. The position of the opposition has been, if I may summarize briefly, first, that it lacks the information to make such a judgment but would perhaps make it, if it had the information or, in the alternative, that the distinction between "illegal" and "improper" is really not as important as the government has made it out to be. In either case, the definition of "illegal" has been an extremely urgent and important matter in the entire debate.

There are differences of opinion, of course. No one even suggests that there should be any restriction of the right of members or, in this case, of the right of the hon. member for York-Simcoe to hold a contrary opinion. No one need question that. What we are talking about is solely the right to express that opinion and whether Standing Order 35 and the practice which has grown up over the past in any way circumscribes the right of expression or use of that opinion in this particular context.

To attempt to bring the matter to a conclusion, may I say it is illuminating to examine the language used by those who, very ably in my opinion, came to the defence of the hon. member for York-Simcoe. To begin with, at page 11952 of Hansard for Friday last, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, referring to the debate I mentioned at the outset in connection with the use of warants, said that the term "illegal" employed in that debate was in order. I agree with that. But it is noteworthy that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), whose intervention in that debate was used in quotation by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, stated as follows:

> I would add in this regard that if the action of the Minister of Finance who, under the act, is charged with responsibility is, as I assume it to be, the collective action of the government and the cabinet, then they are all tainted with the same misdemeanour and this would be in effect a collective agreement to break the law, a form of conspiracy.

Another intervention which I think is noteworthy was made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who said:

> In respect of the term "illegal", how can the Prime Minister or any other minister prejudge the issue of conduct and whether it is legal or illegal, proper or improper? Surely, that is not their province. I can lay a charge and I can express the same kind of opinion, with equal validity, as the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and, obviously, the government House leader came to the conclusion that the conduct of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) was not illegal but was improper. It is just as proper for me to reach the contrary view. A reading of section 127 of the Criminal Code leads me to the conclusion that there is sufficient evidence to constitute a prima facie case of obstruction . . .

● (1510)

> I do not think it is my province to reach a judgment as to whether that conduct is legal or illegal, proper or improper: that is the province of the courts, or of a special inquiry.

Finally, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), as reported at page 11959 of Hansard, said as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, may I deal with one point which the hon. member raised. He is suggesting how the House should condemn the use of the word "illegally." I point out that this involves a matter of opinion. The Prime Minister is of the opinion that, on the basis of what his ministers said to him, nothing illegal or improper was done. We have not had the advantage of knowing what the Prime Minister said to his ministers or what they said to him. It seems to me that we are entitled to say that in our opinion actions have been taken which, until further information is divulged, could be both improper and illegal.

I think hon. members will perhaps realize that I am getting to the point of saying that those who very ably came to the defence of the hon. member for York-Simcoe were evidently at some pains to tell the Chair and the House what the hon. member had the right to say and in fact what he said. I agree with them completely in their interventions and in the conclusion that they reached in respect of what the hon. member for York-Simcoe had the right to say. Unfortunately, however, I disagree with their interpretation of what in fact the hon. member for York-Simcoe said. The hon. member did not say that if other information were available—as others had put it—there might be a conclusion drawn that there was illegality: he did not say that it might be possible to come to that conclusion. I suppose, to be accurate, I should return to his exact remarks that are pivotal to this whole matter. They occur at page 11926 of Hansard for that day and later, of course, at several other places. They are as follows:

"Do as I say, not as I do" appears to be the creed of the present administration. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this type of thinking is shown up so clearly in the judges' affair that is now before us. What administration at a senior level of government in Canada other than this administration would be allowing cabinet ministers who have acted illegally to carry on in their posts?

That, to my knowledge of the debate—which, as I say, has gone on for the better part of two weeks—was the first time that that direct allegation had been made. There had been others couched in other language, but that direct allegation was distinct from others that had been made up to that time. In other words, after several days of such intensive focus upon the acts of ministers and whether those acts can properly be described as illegal, I feel compelled to find that in that narrow context the words of the hon. member for York-Simcoe last Thursday evening constitute the very kind of judgment that the colleagues who came to his defence said it was not within the province of a member to make. Furthermore, they do not, in the expression by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, constitute further argument, but really constitute a statement which, in my opinion, offends against the words of Standing Order 35 and are therefore unparliamentary and must be withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: It may be that upon reflection on this ruling and on the precedents to which I have made reference, the hon. member for York-Simcoe would want some time to reassess his position before making any further statement to the House. It may be that the statement may be withdrawn or qualified, as it has been by other hon. members; or, in turn, it may be the wish of the hon. member to proceed with the matter, to stand by the allegation he has made and to suggest that it forms part of a substantive motion, as has been the case in the past. In any case, I would think that the hon. member for York-Simcoe would want to examine and reflect upon the ruling and I think he ought to have at least 24 hours in which to do so. I would, therefore, look to the hon. member for York-Simcoe for his intervention at three o'clock tomorrow afternoon, unless it is convenient for him to do so now. The hon. member for York-Simcoe is indicating that he seeks the floor at this moment.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It has certainly never been my intention to act in a manner contrary to the precedents of this House. Accordingly, in view of Your Honour's ruling, I should like to substitute for the word "illegally", appearing in my statement at page 11926 of Hansard, the words "improperly or wrongfully", so that the last sentence of my statement would have read:

What administration at a senior level of government in Canada other than this administration would be allowing cabinet ministers who have acted improperly or wrongfully to carry on in their posts?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like to thank the hon. member for York-Simcoe for his very important intervention and simply conclude the matter by indicating that, in the opinion of the Chair, in any event, whatever offensive language was used in the hon. member's intervention has now been rectified.

* * *

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTION TO COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING ONTARIO

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the hon. members for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras), Nipissing (Mr. Blais), Timmins (Mr. Roy), Algoma (Mr. Foster), Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner), Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), Fort William (Mr. McRae), Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), and Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), has been filed with me, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario. In accordance with the practice already adopted in these matters of recent days, I take it it is ordered that we would print the text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed, and so ordered.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,534, 3,724, 3,837, 3,876, 4,133, 4,134, 4,135, 4,136, 4,137, 4,443 and 4,597.

[Text]

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,534—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to Schedule "C" of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan, signed in 1969 (a) what progress has been made toward attaining (b) what are the reasons for any shortfall from the goals stated therein of (i) removing 93,000 acres of poor agricultural land to other use and adding 270,000 acres to the pool of land available for farming (ii) making basic improvements in marketing facilities for agriculture (iii) zoning control and licencing to concentrate tourist and recreation developments where they will not detract from the best use of farm land (iv) attracting substantial private development capital into the resource sectors of the Island economy (v) increasing the rate of growth of net provincial product to 7% per annum throughout the life of the Plan (vi) assisting fishermen, especially those in the lobster fishery, to move to other occupations (vii) cutting and replanting 4,780 acres of forest lands a year (viii) building of 10 to 11 thousand new housing units by the end of the Plan (ix) an industrial growth rate of 10% a year (x) the employment of 6,500 persons in industry by 1976 (xi) the provision of increased short-term credit for fishing and agriculture at a lower cost than previously?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: (i) (a) In the five-year period ending March 31, 1975: 40,363.62 acres were transferred to other uses. During the same period, 43,070.90 additional acres were pooled, or sold to individual farmers. (b) The goals to which reference is made were for a ten-year period. The Land Development Corporation, the provincial agency which administers the program, commenced operations in mid-1970. The primary strategy has been to acquire lands voluntarily offered to the Corporation. Therefore, the corporation's operations tend to vary inversely with the strength of private land markets. (ii) (a) Basic improvements have been made by enabling the creation of producer-controlled marketing boards. (b) No shortfall has occurred. (iii) (a) Progress has been made in this area as evidenced by the creation of the Land Use Commission and the pilot zoning work carried out in Kings county. (b) No shortfall has occurred. (iv) (a) Total capital investment in the Family Farm Program was in excess of $22 million. No other statistics are available. (b) No shortfall has occurred. (v) (a See answer to question No. 3,532. (b) Levels of output will be assessed in the 10th year (1978) and the 15th year (1983) with reference to predicted growth rate. (vi) (a) During the early years of Phase I the fishing community showed little interest in measures to rationalize the fishery. However, this view has recently changed and a program to assist fishermen to move to other occupations is now being discussed by the Department of the Environment, theDepartment of Regional Economic Expansion, the provincial government and the Fishermen's Association. (b) Not available. (vii) (a) The objective of cutting and replanting approximately 4,780 acres of forest land a year was based on the assumption that some 400,000 acres of such land would become available during the life of the Plan. To date, only about 1/10 of that amount has become available. Accordingly, planting activities have been as follows:

	Crown Lands	Private Lands	Total
Year	Planted No. of Trees	Planted No. of Trees	No. of Trees	Approximate Acreage
1969	238,500	181,000	419,500	420
1970	215,000	110,000	425,000	425
1971	160,000	330,000	380,000	380
1972	81,600	122,000	203,600	200
1973	53,500	272,000	125,500	125
1974	96,500	80,000	176,500	175
1975	272,500	60,000	332,500	330

(b) Ice damage to crops in 1971 and 1972 is evident in reduced production in years 1971, 1972, 1973 and 1974. It takes 2, 3, and 4 years to produce plants suitable for planting, hence damage during one season is felt for as many as four years. Nursery production has increased dramatically in the last two years and more extensive acreage will be reforested commencing in 1976. Private land planting has been decreasing due in part to lack of labour and equipment in the spring and poor weather. (viii) (a) Housing Starts (CMHC. Figures) 1969, 767; 1970, 784; 1971, 1363; 1972, 1,079; 1973, 2,122; 1974, 1,334; Total for 6 years; 7,449. (b) No shortfall has occurred. (ix) (a) According to the latest figures available from Statistics Canada, value added in manufacturing reached $26.3 million by 1973. This compares with the 1969 figure of $19.7 million. (b) Sufficient data are not available. (x) (a) Since 1969, Statistics Canada has revised its estimates of employment in manufacturing industry by province. According to the revised figures, employment in manufacturing in Prince Edward Island has risen from 2,500 in 1969 to 3,500 in 1974, the latest year for which these date are available. (b) Sufficient data are not available. (xi) (a) Lower cost for short-term credit has been achieved by the creation of the provincial lending authority. (b) No shortfall has occurred.

[Mr. McIsaac.]

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

Question No. 3,724—Mr. Matte:

1. What was the total revenue of Canada Savings Bonds in the years 1974-75 and 1975-76?

2. How many citizens bought such bonds in 1974-75 and 1975-76?

3. What was the current interest rate of the bonds in 1974 and 1975 to date?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. Gross sales of Canada Savings Bonds during the fiscal years 1974/75 and 1975/76 were $6,175 million and $3,719 million respectively. Net sales of Canada Savings Bonds, after allowance for bond redemptions, during fiscal 1974/75 were $2,514 million compared to $2,721 million during the fiscal year 1975/76, to February 29.

2. It is not known how many citizens bought Canada Savings Bonds in the fiscal years 1974/75 and 1975/76. Individuals in many instances submitted more than one application and bought bonds as gifts. Individual applications received for purchase of the bonds in the fiscal years 1974/75 and 1975/76 were 2,375,000 and 2,020,000 respectively.

3. The current coupon rates on outstanding Canada Savings Bond issues for 1974, 1975 and 1976 are shown in the table below. For all outstanding issues prior to the 1974/75 Series the average yield to maturity has been raised to 10½ per cent from September 1, 1974, by means of cash bonus payments. Investors will only be eligible to receive this higher yield provided they retain their bonds until the specified cash bonus payment dates. Complete details of the features of the cash bonus scheme are provided in the Department of Finance press release No. 74-68 of September 9, 1974.

Issue	Maturity Date	1974 Coupon Rate	1975 Coupon Rate	1976 Coupon Rate
1962 Series	Nov. 1, 1976	5.50%	5.50%	5.50%
1963 Series	Nov. 1, 1975	5.50%	5.50%	—
1964 Series	Nov. 1, 1974	5.50%	—	—
1965 Series	Nov. 1, 1977	5.50%	5.50%	5.50%
Centennial Series	Nov. 1, 1979	5.75%	6.00%	6.00%
1967/68 Series	Nov. 1, 1980	5.50%	5.50%	5.50%
S.R. Series	Oct. 1, 1978	7.00%	7.00%	7.00%
1968/69 Series	Nov. 1, 1982	7.00%	7.00%	7.00%
1969/70 Series	Nov. 1, 1978	8.25%	8.25%	8.25%
1970/71 Series	Nov. 1, 1981	7.75%	8.00%	8.00%

Issue	Maturity Date	1974 Coupon Rate	1975 Coupon Rate	1976 Coupon Rate
1971/72 Series	Nov. 1, 1980	7.50%	7.50%	7.50%
1972/73 Series	Nov. 1, 1984	7.00%	7.50%	7.50%
1973/74 Series	Nov. 1, 1985	7.00%	7.50%	7.50%
1974/75 Series	Nov. 1, 1983	—	9.75%	9.75%
1975/76 Series	Nov. 1, 1984	—	—	8.75%

FISHING SECTOR OF P.E.I.

Question No. 3,837—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, is the Fisherman Family Resettlement Programme still in effect and (a) if so, how many families have been resettled (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: For the reasons outlined in paragraph (vi) (a) of the reply to question 3,534, no Fisherman Family Resettlement Program was initiated in Phase I of the Comprehensive Development Plan. (a) Not applicable. (b) Not applicable.

UNUSED GOVERNMENT SPACE

Question No. 3,876—Mr. Bawden:

1. Regarding the report of the Auditor General that the government may spend $4.5 million in the National Capital Region this year on office space not being used, what accommodation paid for by the government is not in use at the present time?

2. How much is being paid for each location and what are the lease arrangements?

3. What are the reasons for each location not being used at the present time?

4. How long has each premise been vacant while under government contract and for what period of time will the unused accommodation space be left vacant?

5. How much does the government anticipate will be spent this fiscal year on unused office space?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1 to 4. See statement following.

5. $4,648,035.

Location	*Amount Paid for Vacant Space FY 75/76	Lease Arrangements Term and Rate per Square Feet	Option	Reason not in use	Period of Vacancy
L'Esplanade Laurier (East) 140 O'Connor Tower 1, Ottawa Part of Floor No. 16	$ 60,273	May 1/75—20 years $6.95 plus estimated operation and Maintenance costs for 1975/76 of $1.33 per square feet. Effective April 1/76 Operation and maintenance costs in 1975/76 dollars are estimated at $2.30 per square feet.	Lease Purchase	Awaiting construction sequence layouts and fitting up for conference facility and health unit.	May 1/75 to March 31/76
Part of Floor Nos. 15 and 16	256,558	"	"	Awaiting client to accept space—layouts and fitting up for Department of Insurance	May 1/75 to March 31/76
Floor No. 14	161,482	"	"	Preparing layouts and fitting up for National Defence	May 1/75 to March 19/76
Floor No. 12	158,015	"	"	"	May 1/75 to March 12/76
Floor No. 11	157,859	"	"	"	May 1/75 to March 5/76
Floor No. 10	152,334	"	"	"	May 1/75 to February 27/76
Floor No. 9	147,354	"	"	"	May 1/75 to February 20/76
Floor No. 8	140,441	"	"	"	May 1/75 to February 6/76
Floor No. 7	137,035	"	"	"	May 1/75 to January 30/76
Floor No. 6	133,880	May 1/75—20 years $6.95 plus estimated operation and maintenance costs for 1975/76 of $1.33 per square foot. Effective April 1/76 operation and maintenance costs in 1975/76 dollars are estimated at $2.30 per square foot	"	"	May 1/75 to January 23/76

Order Paper Questions

Location	*Amount Paid for Vacant Space FY 75/76	Lease Arrangements Term and Rate per Square Feet	Option	Reason not in use	Period of Vacancy
Floor Nos. 3, 4 and 5	502,808	"	"	Preparing layouts and fitting up for Public Service Staff Relations Board	May 1/75 to March 31/76
L'Esplanade Laurier (West) 300 Laurier Tower 2, Ottawa Floor Nos. 21, 22 and 23	287,805	July 1/75—20 years $6.95 plus estimated operation and maintenance costs for 1975/76 of $1.33 per square foot. Effective April 1/76 operation and maintenance costs in 1975/76 dollars are estimated at $2.30 per square foot.	"	Requirements, layouts and fitting up for National Museums of Canada	July 1/75 to March 31/76
Floor No. 18	106,611	"	"	Layouts and Fitting up for Public Service Commission	July 1/75 to January 30/76
Floor No. 17	99,870	"	"	"	July 1/75 to January 16/76
Floor No. 16	96,374	July 1/75—20 years $6.95 plus estimated operation and maintenance costs for 1975/76 of $1.33 per square foot Effective April 1/76 operation and maintenance costs in 1975/76 dollars are estimated at $2.30 per square foot.	"	"	July 1/75 to January 9/76
Floor No. 14	113,852	"	"	"	July 1/75 to Febuary 13/76
Part of Floor No. 5	75,139	"	"	"	July 1/75 to Febuary 20/76
Part of Floor No. 5	49,500	"	"	Preparing layouts and fitting up for Manpower and Immigration/Unemployment Insurance Commission	July 1/75 to March 31/76
Floor No. 4	137,356	"	"	"	July 1/75 to March 31/76
Floor No. 3	137,449	"	"	"	July 1/75 to March 31/76
Place Vanier, Tower "C" 25 McArthur Rd., Vanier Floor No. 9	42,170	April 1/75—March 31/80 $7.20	3(1 year each)	Fitting up for Manpower and Immigration	April 1/75 to Febuary 15/76

*Estimated

TREASURY BOARD POLICY

Question No. 4,133—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

Is it Treasury Board policy to allow employees access to all written assessments made of their work?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): This matter is covered by Section 13.(2) of the Public Service Employment Regulations, made pursuant to Section 33 of the Public Service Employment Act, as follows: "The assessment of an employee's performance shall be based on selection standards, completed by the supervisor, shown to the employee and signed by both the supervisor and the employee".

[Mr. Drury.]

PERCENTAGE RISE IN REMUNERATION TO DEFENCE SCIENCE GROUP

Question No. 4,134—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

Since January 1973, has the percentage rise in remuneration to the Defence Science group been lower than the percentage rise in (a) the cost of living index (b) the average remuneration for comparable groups within the Public Service and, if so, in either case, will this modify the application of the anti-inflation guidelines to the Defence Science group in their present contract negotiations?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): The percentage rise in salary for employees in the Defence Scientific Service Group from January, 1973 to December 31, 1975 is 15.35 per cent while the Consumer Price Index has risen 23.12 per cent for the same period. The average cumulative salary increase for comparable Groups within the Public Service since January, 1973 has been in the order of 26 per cent, but it should be borne in mind that the renewal negotiations now underway for the Defence Scientific Service Group will determine a salary increase to have effect in 1975. It is not expected that the circumstances of the Defence Scientific Service Group will require the modification of the application of the Anti-Inflation Act Regulations in respect to them.

DEFENCE SCIENCE GROUP UNDER JURISDICTION OF TREASURY BOARD

Question No. 4,135—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

On what date did the Defence Science group come under the jurisdiction of Treasury Board and, at that time, was their previous contract with Defence Research Board considered void?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): The Defence Scientific Service Group came under that portion of the Public Service for whom the Treasury Board is the Employer on April 1, 1974. The collective agreement that was in force between the bargaining agent and the Defence Research Board on April 1, 1974 was not considered void by the Treasury Board in that the terms of that collective agreement continued to be applied by the Treasury Board.

DEFENCE SCIENCE GROUP UNDER CONTRACT WITH TREASURY BOARD

Question No. 4,136—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

Is the Defence Science group presently under contract with Treasury Board and, if not, for how many months have they been without contract?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): The Defence Scientific Service Group is not currently under a collective agreement with the Treasury Board. The terms of the previous collective agreement expired on September 21, 1975 and the parties have been in renewal negotiations since September 11, 1975.

PERCENTAGE OF PERSONNEL IN DEFENCE SCIENCE GROUP

Question No. 4,137—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. What percentage of personnel in the Defence Science group does Treasury Board consider to be exclusions exercising certain management functions?

2. Does this percentage of exclusions compare to other groups within the Public Service and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): 1. Treasury Board considers that 99 out fo 507 employees or 19 per cent of the Defence Scientific Service Group are excluded from collective bargaining.

2. The average percentage of excluded employees in the Scientific and Professional Category is 14 per cent The status of 51 of the 99 employees whom Treasury Board considers to be excluded is currently the subject of discussion between the bargaining agent and the Treasury Board.

Order Paper Questions

COST OF PUBLICATION "THE CUSTOMS DRAWBACK ROAD . . . TO SUCCESS AND PROFIT"

Question No. 4,443—Mr. Broadbent:

1. What was the total cost of the Department of National Revenue publication The Customs Drawback Road . . . to Success and Profit?

2. Who was responsible for the (a) research (b) storywriting (c) layout design?

3. How many tenders were called for the contract and, of these, how many were from printers and publishers located in Ontario.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Revenue Canada and Supply and Services Canada as follows: 1. $29,599.73

2. (a) York Advertising Limited, Ottawa; (b) York Advertising Limited, Ottawa; (c) York Advertising Limited, Ottawa.

3. Thirty-one invitations to tender were issued, of which twenty-two were to printers and publishers located in Ontario.

SUPPORT PRICES—CATTLE

Question No. 4,597—Mr. Hargrave:

What was the five year average market price, as currently used or to be used in determining farm stabilized support prices, for the period ending December 31, 1975 for (a) fed cattle (A1 and A2 finished feed lot cattle) (b) cows (c) calves as traditionally marketed after weaning during the last quarter of the year?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): (a) The five-year average market price for cattle, for slaughter, basis A1 and A2 finished cattle, for the period ending December 31, 1975 was $40.60/cwt. This five-year average price will be used in determining the prescribed price for cattle in accordance with Section 8.2 of the Act. (b) and (c). Cows or calves are not named commodities under the Act nor have they been designated by the Governor in Council for the period ending December 31, 1975. As such, farm stabilized support prices have not been determined.

* * *

[English]

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question 4,145?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

*BENEFITS PAID TO PERSONNEL OF EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS SINCE INCEPTION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Question No. 4,145—Mr. Stanbury:

What is the total amount of benefits paid to personnel of educational institutions employed on a school-term rather than an annual basis from the inception of the present Unemployment Insurance Act to date?

[Translation]

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the information required to provide an answer to this question is not readily available. As the Commission does not keep records pertaining to the employment contracts of individuals, the technical difficulties and administrative cost involved preclude the gathering of such material.

● (1520)

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might be permitted to draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to question No. 3,588 which I placed on the order paper on November 20. This question was put on the order paper to elicit information in respect of the practices of employees of foreign governments in Ottawa and whether they have been living within Canadian laws. As it has now been over four months, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary would endeavour to speed up the answer to this question.

Mr. Blais: As always.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO ADD NEW DEFINITIONS

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-89, to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude the speech on Bill C-89 which I started last Thursday, March 18. There are contractors who might suddenly have a flurry of business. The question being asked is, at what point do they stop working? Last fall, Mr. Speaker, I said that controls can have a distorting effect on the economy and that the time period is crucial. I still believe that. When he last spoke on the anti-inflation bill, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) questioned the constitutionality of this legislation. At that time the right hon. member stated, and I quote from page 9587 of Hansard for December 1, 1975:

—I suggest the question is whether this legislation is constitutional. It could easily be made constitutional by a simple provision in the preamble that an emergency exists, but the government did not dare admit that because it had contended for several years that there was no emergency.

I would suggest that if the government had taken the right hon. member's remarks into consideration and had consulted the various constitutional experts prior to putting this legislation through parliament, they would not be in the sorry state of having it challenged before the Supreme Court. It has now become clear that the government were not the slightest bit concerned over the constitutionality of their anti-inflation legislation. The very fact that this matter has been referred to the Supreme Court only adds more confusion to the over-all anti-inflation legislation.

The Progressive Conservative party has proven, by its consistent performance and leadership, that it does believe some program of restraint is in the best interests of Canadians. We have no intention of making a political football of the anti-inflation program; our intention is to point out the shortcomings of the program so the government will rectify the situation and continue battling inflation. Double-digit inflation must be stopped. While the Progressive Conservative party has offered a positive program and one that would work, we want to make it clear that the time has come for the government to quit stalling and to show some initiative.

On February 16, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) called upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) to amend the legislation by changing the appeal system, and even last fall there were appeals from this side of the House to clean up the flaws. Most of these changes should have been made in the original bill. Of course, this government only recognizes mistakes when it is too late. The Anti-Inflation Board, according to reports, has a serious backlog of cases to be cleared up. But what does this government do? Rather than devising a system, it quickly adds 41,000 new companies to the list of those subject to the guidelines. I question what is to be accomplished by such a move.

In light of the government's continuing lack of consultation and its persistent reluctance to make the guidelines applicable to all segments of society, I seriously wonder how they expect organized labour to co-operate. For example, in the area of municipalities there is no jurisdictional control from the Anti-Inflation Board, so we have cases such as rising water rates in Manitoba and soaring power rates in Nova Scotia. How can we really ask the people to tighten their belts if prices are not completely controlled in all segments of the economy? The Anti-Inflation Board, as it presently exists, is a complete and utter farce. I challenge the government to clean up its act.

I should like to conclude my remarks by pointing out that in a public relations document acquired by the Canadian Press from the Anti-Inflation Board it was stated that the Anti-Inflation Board had doubt about the Prime Minister's commitment. The document went on to demonstrate a fairly uneasy relationship between the Anti-Inflation Board and the government. If this sort of attitude continues, then inflation will in future go uncontrolled and, I for one, am confident that the Canadian people will not tolerate this nonsense.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I should like today to speak in support of Bill C-89. In recent months, in speeches on various public platforms in North Bay and in Winnipeg, for example, I have pointed out the urgent need for improvements in the appeal procedure set out in Bill C-73, the legislation which created the prices and incomes control program. I argued that this was necessary if the program was to have the wide public support and understanding required to enable it to work effectively. This bill does propose such improvements. I also pointed out that for these purposes the program must be enforced and, more importantly, must be seen to be enforced as vigorously on the price side as on the wage side. These speeches were brought to the attention of members of the House and the Senate. With regard to the appeal procedure, I said that the law did not give all parties affected by decisions of the Anti-Inflation Board with regard to wages either an automatic or an equal right to make use of the limited appeal procedure already existing.

Under the law as it presently is, to have reviewed a ruling of the board the party must, in effect, openly defy the law, risking a penalty for this, and when it comes to a ruling on wages that party has to be the employer. As I have said previously, I believe such an approach has been hampering the creation of a climate for voluntary acceptance on the part of labour of the guidelines on wages and the board's rulings about them. I have argued that if there are automatic rights of appeal in our legal system for matters as trivial as fines for parking tickets, then there should be rights under something as important as the anti-inflation program for labour as fully as for management.

It has been found that the Anti-Inflation Act, in its original form, froze employees out of the appeal process entirely if the company simply accepted an Anti-Inflation Board ruling and refused to pay any wage settlement not in conformity with it. In such a case, there is no way, under the present law for employees, even though their interests are vitally affected by that ruling, to have the matter reviewed by getting it before the administrator and having the right to further reviews by the appeal tribunal or the cabinet.

I have argued that if such rights could not be set up through changes in the policy of administration of the act, the government should ask parliament to make the necessary amendments to it as soon as possible. This is what it is doing, and this step is necessary to remove the sense of injustice many workers may feel when they look at the present procedure for having board decisions on wages reviewed. However, in order that there may be an automatic right of appeal for labour no less than for management, I think it should be a condition that both sides must abide by the ruling in question during the time it takes to dispose of the appeal. This is needed in order to ensure that the system does not break down if there should turn out to be a large number of appeals. However, I think that sound administration of the program at the board level, together with a more fair appeal procedure, will in fact mean the number of appeals will not be unduly high.

The amendments proposed in Bill C-89 remove the difficulties in the appeal process which I have outlined. They are welcome, and I believe the government should be commended for presenting them so that any injustice connected with the present appeal system would not undermine the high degree of public support for the program which is so necessary for its success.

There is, however, one aspect of the appeal process with which Bill C-89 does not deal. I should like to ask, what if a company increases some, or all, of its prices? What if the board rules that these price increases do not exceed the guidelines? What if the board does not give a formal ruling, but simply advises the company informally that it does not object to the increases in question? Neither the Anti-Inflation Act, Bill C-73 nor Bill C-89 provide any recourse to the consumer who does not agree with this kind of advice or ruling on the part of the Anti-Inflation Board and who wishes to have the matter reviewed at a higher level.

● (1530)

I think, therefore, there should be some procedure for bodies like the Consumers' Association, the National Anti-Poverty Association, the Canadian Labour Congress, or even individual consumers, to appeal a decision or opinion of the board accepting a price increase. At present, if a company does not agree with the ruling of the board that a price is to be rolled back or not increased, it has the right to have the matter appealed, first to the administrator, then the appeal tribunal, and even to the cabinet. There is no equivalent right for a consumer who does not agree with a price increase allowed or agreed to by the board. I think consideration should be given to creating this kind of right. This is something we should pursue when the bill is before the finance committee for detailed study.

As I said previously in the speeches I have mentioned that the program will work most effectively if it has wide public support and understanding. This means the program must be enforced and, more important, must be seen to be enforced as vigorously on the price side as on the wage side. To do this, the board must publicize its findings and conclusions on prices as fully as it presently does on wages. I said that if the act has to be amended for this purpose, the government should ask parliament to take this step without further delay.

However, it has been my belief that the board can do more to make the public aware of the results of its work on the price side even with the act continuing in its present form. You will recall that recently I raised with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), here in the House of Commons, the need for more formal decisions by the board on prices and the need to make them available to the public. He replied that he would be discussing these points with the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board.

Last Saturday, the Canadian Press reported that "stung by criticism of its failure to control prices, the Anti-Inflation Board plans to make public a list of companies that have agreed to reduce planned price increases after talks with the board." This announcement is welcome. It is a wise departure by the board from its original policy, which appeared to be that if a company would make price reductions voluntarily, accepting the board's informal advice, the board would likely not think it necessary to make a formal ruling which the law allows it to publish. However, the Canadian Press report in question also went on to say that "late this week the board was still contacting the companies to get their permission for the public statement expected about Thursday."

In my view, the firms in question should be identified, whether or not they give their permission. The act permits the board to publish its formal rulings, and if the board simply states, as a formal ruling, the advice it gives to a company on price rollbacks, then that ruling, including the company's name, can in fact be published. This is so even if the company complies voluntarily with the board's advice and even if it does not agree that its name be publicized.

In the Toronto Star for last Saturday, the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board was quoted as saying that the board was looking for business volunteers "whom we can hang up in public and chastise" when it releases examples of reductions in planned price increases next week. Assuming he is quoted accurately, then I think the chairman has not taken the best approach. Of course, his words were likely to have been said with tongue in cheek. However, when rulings are published, I believe there should be no more stigma attached to a firm which voluntarily complies with a board ruling on prices than there is attached to a union which voluntarily accepts a ruling on wages.

The purpose of publishing information on price rollbacks is not necessarily chastisement of business but, instead, is confirmation of the effectiveness of the program when it comes to prices. The chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board did not express concern about the sensibilities of groups of workers who have been mentioned in the rulings the board has already published on wages, nor did he express concern about the possibility that they would be looked upon as having been publicly chastised for seeking a wage increase which the board ruled to be above the guidelines.

Protecting the sensibilities of companies is not, in my view, as important as having the board's effectiveness and credibility established to the satisfaction of the general public. In order to maintain its support for the program, the public must be shown that the program is in fact being administered in an even-handed way.

Bill C-89 is limited to dealing with some measures urgently required to make the controls program work more fairly and effectively. However, we have to go much further than this as the months go on. I believe the prices and incomes policy deserves wide support since its objectives are to protect and, in fact, to improve the real income of all Canadians and maintain our competitiveness in international markets. The program has been showing encouraging signs of effectiveness on the price side, judging by the most recent cost of living figures. However, ultimately it is not controls but, rather, greater productivity that will get us out of our current economic difficulties and enable us to achieve these objectives on a long-term basis.

It is through improvements in productivity that Canadians will get improvements in real purchasing power and real living standards. The government and the public alike have come to recognize that the prices and incomes program at best provides a breathing space in which to develop and apply policies to bring about a more efficient and productive economy. We must begin now to consider how we are going to accomplish this. In fact, we must soon move beyond such consideration and begin taking action to improve the productivity and efficiency of our economy.

Improvements in Canada's productivity require the cooperative effort of government, business and labour. But this effort must be spearheaded by federal government leadership in terms of both co-ordination and action. Productivity in Canada, in the sense of output per employee, has been falling in recent years, especially in manufacturing. What are some of the reasons for this decline in productivity? We have had a rapidly growing labour force, but proportionately less of it has been going into manufacturing which is high in productivity compared to the service industries.

[Mr. Gray.]

Investment in plant and equipment has not kept pace proportionately with the growth in the labour force. There is the matter of the state of management skills and the declining amount of research and development done in Canada, as well as the attitude of workers toward their work. Only one of the factors I have outlined pertains directly, and even then not completely, to workers themselves. Dealing with all the other aspects means a direct challenge to and responsibility on the part of government and business.

Productivity has, like the weather, become one of the things that everybody, especially the government, is talking about. Unlike the weather, the government and the private sector can, in fact, do something to improve it. There has been increasing talk by government regarding the need for improving productivity, but so far little tangible action. I believe we should have a national productivity centre to bring together management, labour and government to do research, to identify blockages in efforts to improve productivity and to work out consensus plans for improving it. We have nothing like this as yet. The work of federal government departments and agencies in the field also appears to be minimal compared to the need.

There are a number of areas that require government attention. These include measures to improve techniques to voluntarily resolve labour-management disputes without strikes, measures to improve the physical conditions of the workplace, and techniques for greater involvement by workers in decisions about their jobs and how they are carried out. These, I think, will have a favourable effect on the positive motivation of workers and their attitude to their jobs, and therefore on the quality of their output. There is a great need for government action to reduce the downward trend of research and development in Canadian industry, something which I believe is linked with the continuing high degree of foreign control of our economy; and the latter also requires further government attention.

● (1540)

There is also the need to review the anti-inflation program to ensure that it gives proper attention to the need to encourage greater productivity on the part of both management and labour. The changes in the anti-inflation regulations announced by the Minister of Finance at the opening of this debate with regard to bonuses and profit-sharing by workers are a step in the right direction. In short, federal government leadership through tangible action is essential to improve Canadian productivity. Let us hope that over the next few months we will see programs of action as well as expressions of concern by governments at both the federal and provincial levels.

In a speech in Vancouver on Feburary 12, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), speaking of the breathing space provided by the control period, suggested that it be used——to define the kind of society we want, the kind of choices we want to make as a nation and to find the best methods for achieving our goals.

If this period is to be used for this purpose, what is the best way to go about it? I have said on other occasions that there are several alternatives. However, I believe that defining these choices and goals certainly should not be done only by some planning group working confidentially within government, with the results sprung on parliament and the public to be accepted or rejected without individual Canadians or their elected representatives having taken full part in developing them. There must be wide involvement of Canadians generally. There also should be a way of ensuring that any consensus developed will in fact be a basis for action by government where such is the most appropriate way of helping achieve the goals sought.

One approach is the establishment of a royal commission. However, there is a risk that such a body will seem remote and apart from the ongoing process of Canadian life, and the commissioners may not turn out to be sufficiently representative of Canadian regions or sufficiently attuned to the concerns of individual Canadians. There is also the matter of additional expense.

I would propose, instead, the setting up of a special parliamentary committee on national goals. Its make-up would reflect the regions of Canada. Its members would have that sensitivity which comes from being part of the political system. The committee would be able to hold hearings in all parts of the country, hearings which would be made easily accessible to individuals and groups. The cost would be much less than that of a royal commission. There would be no extra expense for salaries and offices, and with only limited additional expense for staff and administration.

Finally, the report of such a committee would be produced by people who are part of the process which is part of the making and implementing of federal government policy. Where the report called for action by the federal government, that government would be accountable to the Canadian people for such action or the lack of it through the caucus of its supporters and through the House of Commons and its committees generally. The Special Joint Committee on the Constitution did excellent work and is, I think, one precedent for the kind of committee I am proposing. I would, therefore, urge that the government ask parliament to create a special committee on national goals at an early date.

The success of the anti-inflation program requires the involvement and effort of all Canadians. The working out of measures to deal with the underlying problems of the Canadian economy as we move through and go beyond the period of the controls programs requires this co-operative involvement and effort as well. I hope there will be an early statement by the government as to how it envisages this work being carried out.

To conclude, let me say that I believe that meanwhile the changes in the program proposed in Bill C-89 are urgently required, and therefore the bill deserves speedy approval by this House.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, about five months ago the government introduced to this House Bill C-73 with a great deal of bravado—certainly much more bravado than planning. I was interested to hear the comments this afternoon of the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) asking for support for this legislation in its amended form. I was encouraged by some of the things he said. He said that there has to be increased productivity in our country. I could not agree more. However, I do not know whether the rewarding of workers for increased productivity by a maximum 2 per cent bonus will really encourage productivity, as the hon. member hopes.

Second, he suggested that what the government should do is exercise some leadership and he proposed the inauguration of a national productivity centre. I beg to differ with the hon. member on that point. It seems to me that any kind of government program, even a national productivity centre, would be totally unproductive. We would have bureaucracy finding more job-creation programs and this would not increase one iota the productivity of the country. It would simply be shuffling around some of the bureaucrats.

The hon. member went on to enumerate some of the reasons for there being no greater productivity in our country. I agree with the reasons he cited. But what he failed to do was question those elements in our society which are the reason for our not being as productive as we should be. He did not say why, for example, there is no more money going into better management or into secondary industry. Perhaps we should ask whether the government should not offer some leadership in productivity by creating incentives for these industries, so that there will be more desire for management to reproduce the industries that we so desperately need in our country.

Some weeks ago I was shocked to hear, in a news report from Vancouver, the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, Mr. Pepin, who was being questioned by some businessmen in Vancouver—I know that news clips can be misleading—saying, "I really do not know anything about this business." I wondered whether I was hearing something out of context—or is this really where it is at? Does the chairman know how to handle the heavy responsibilities which he has?

There are serious questions facing us in this legislation, even in its amended form, which make me question the viability of the entire program and whether or not we should support it. Basically, we oppose the bill for two main reasons. First, even a casual glance shows that it will produce endless cases of unfairness and inequity for the people of Canada. Second, there is no end in sight to the rapidly accumulating regulations as a result of this program.

The fears that we voiced when this bill was first introduced to parliament have proven to be very true. Just the other day there was a headline in one of the local papers saying that the board now has a backlog of 1,000 cases on which it must rule. The other day I saw an article which stated that the Anti-Inflation Board is now too busy to handle the orientation program for some of the union officials who want to be trained in the program so they can meet it on its own ground.

There is a growing suspicion in our country that the AIB will be harder on wage earners and consumers than it is on industry and prices. What frightened us even more was the fact that the original program contained no process of appeal, no final court or appeal. I recall the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) time and time again being questioned on this topic. He always answered by saying, "What is the matter with that? Why should we need any court of appeal?" The Minister now presents himself to this House as a picture of injured innocence because we had to keep suggesting that. In spite of that, he now congratulates himself for having listened to the opposition and is now patching up the legistation.

● (1550)

The problem with this amendment is that it is patchwork. The question we must answer is, how long we are expected to add patches to repair a basically poor product? How many times is the minister going to come back to us with additional amendments in order to repair what is damaging and poor legislation? I am reminded of the famous parable that no man sews a new piece of cloth on to an old garment lest the rent be made worse. Another analogy comes to mind. I remember the days during the war when there was gas rationing in our country. Everyone was a victim of that rationing, and everyone tried to find ways to accommodate himself. Hon. members will recall that there were three or four different kinds of stickers for vehicles. If a motor vehicle was used purely for pleasure, it bore an "A" sticker. If there was a little bit of work involved, it bore a "B" sticker. For commercial use, vehicles bore a "C" sticker, and trucks bore a "T" sticker. If a person had a truck sticker, he could obtain an almost unlimited quantity of gasoline. During the war, people naturally wanted trucks. What did they do? All a fellow who owned a coupe had to do was take the trunk lid off his car, manufacture a box, stick it into the trunk, and he would have a truck. He could register it as a truck, get a "T" sticker and obtain almost all the gas he wanted. He could have taken this sedan, chopped it down right behind the front seat, put a wall there, put a box on the back end, and have that vehicle qualified as a truck.

Mr. MacFarlane: He couldn't have been from Ontario or Quebec: that must have happened out west.

Mr. Friesen: Yes, there were many of them out west, but I am sure there were some in Ontario as well.

The trouble was that no matter what was done with those vehicles, they were still not trucks; they were cars and their basic structure and undercarriage did not qualify them as trucks. They could not carry better loads. All they did was look like trucks. A truck sticker could be obtained for them, but they were no better except for their appearance. They were not designed to work like trucks; they only appeared to be trucks. That is really what this program is like. For months, even years, the government had been under pressure to do something about inflation and its typical response has been: What inflation? Finally, when the government succumbed to the repeated barrage from the people of the country to do something about inflation, it acted impetuously, without due care and in a very piecemeal and patchwork way to bring together a program which was supposed to look like an anti-inflationary program but really was not.

If this program really is to be an anti-inflationary program, it should be designed to attack inflation and the major causes of inflation. Whether hon. members agree or not, the major cause of inflation in this country is the government itself. But far be it from the government to attack itself on this matter. Even in the amended version of this program there is nothing which puts an effective control on government spending.

I have before me an article from last week's Vancouver Sun. In it are statements made by Maxwell Henderson, the former auditor general of Canada. I should like to read one short section because I think it is relevant to this debate. Maxwell Henderson wrote about the committee system in this House and the control the committee system is supposed to have on government spending. Part of the article reads as follows:

> This was in November, 1968, when as auditor general I was the adviser to the public accounts committee of the day. The Honourable C. M. Drury, then president of the treasury board, presented the government's proposals. One of these was a still further reduction in the number of votes or debating opportunities available to MPs.
>
> In 1964, when Canada's yearly spending was around $6 billion, the government had persuaded the members to reduce the number of votes from 495 to 236.
>
> At the 1968 meeting when yearly spending was $9.8 billion, Mr. Drury proposed a still further reduction of 100 votes—from 236 to 136—to "facilitate the work of MPs and to better serve the needs of more effective government administration."
>
> The members of the committee seriously questioned this further reduction but the Liberal majority of the committee ensured passage of the proposal.
>
> The reduction may have served the needs of the treasury board administration, but it has not facilitated the work of the MPs. The 136 votes left are so large and the information available in the blue book so minimal that for many MPs it has become an exercise in frustration and futility.

There we see the nub of the problem in the committee system and one of the reasons high government spending goes on unabated while to the public eye members of parliament have some control over government spending. However, over the years the treasury benches have manoeuvred the committee system into such a position that it really has no effective control on spending at all. The government goes merrily along giving to members of parliament its estimates and its votes, and we are expected to vote on large blocks of money without really finding out how the government intends to spend it.

First, if the government really wants to deal with inflation it will put its programs under the influence of the Anti-Inflation Board and let that board exercise some jurisdiction over them. Second, if the government wants to attack inflation where it really exists, it will do something about the increase in the money supply. The other day the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) pointed out that in one year the money supply increased by 23 per cent. We cannot expect the public to get serious about attacking inflation if the government works in this way. How can we expect private enterprise to take a serious look at the anti-inflation program if the government itself is violating every possible principle of the economy in its anti-inflation program?

Third, the government must put itself under the restrictions it has imposed on the rest of the economy, namely, the 10 per cent maximum. I again point out what the government has done in this regard. The increase for the Unemployment Insurance Commission for 1976-77 over 1975-76's is 91 per cent; for Statistics Canada, 50.5 per cent; for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, 40 per cent; for the Public Service Staff Relations Board, 40 per cent; for the Auditor General, 27.5 per cent; for the Post Office, 25 per cent; for the Public Service Commission, 25 per cent; for the National Research Council, 22 per cent; for the National Film Board, 19 per cent; and for the Department of Finance, the department which gave birth to this whole program and is asking the general public to live with 10 per cent, 16.5 per cent. What kind of contradiction is that?

● (1600)

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Friesen: What kind of hyprocrisy is that? The second great reason we opposed Bill C-73, and most certainly oppose this amendment to it, is that the criteria to judge this and other legislation is where it will take us in the end. it is now obvious, as we predicted earlier, that there is a growing government bureaucracy involved in this program and that government bureaucracy is itself one of the great contributors to inflation. It is now obvious that there is a growing influence of the Anti-Inflation Board.

The hon. member for Windsor West quoted the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as saying that this bill would provide a stable climate—I believe those were his words, or he used words to that effect—in which we could appraise our position. I really cannot see how, in the vacillating jurisdiction of the Anti-Inflation Board, we can ever hope to have a stable climate. I cannot see any more stability in the economy today than five months ago when the program was introduced by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance. How much stability is there in our economy?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we must weigh this legislation and ask where it will take us and what its portent is for the future. What are the powers of the administrator? At the outset we were very concerned about the unlimited powers of the administrator. Certainly, the legislation before us corrects one of the great injustices in the program, in that there will now be a means of appeal. That provision should have been in the original legislation. But what about after appeal? How pervasive will be the powers of the administrator?

The minister said today he expected there will be a three-year limit on the program. Can we be assured of that? How far is this program going to reach into the future? I believe many of us hold to the old Jeffersonian principle that the best government is the least government. This government is taking us in the opposite direction. Seemingly, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance believe that the most government is the best government. I would again caution the House on the validity of this program, Mr. Speaker, and say that we must oppose it. It ought to be scrapped, and we should start again from the beginning and bring in a genuine anti-inflation program.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the speeches, one cannot avoid contrasting the quiet of the House with the turmoil that prevails outside over this question of anti-inflation legislation. Perhaps that is the way it should be. This question should be discussed with reason and with logic and, of course, it will be decided here because an incomes policy of any kind is not an economic decision, it is a political judgment. The difficulty with the acceptance of this program is that we are afraid of the kinds of political judgments that are going to be made about incomes in this country, not the economic decisions.

I think almost anyone will agree with the need for restraint, and almost anyone will agree that the kind of world we live in calls for some kind of incomes policy. But the question is, what kind of incomes policy is it going to be, and for whose benefit is it to be instituted? Unfortunately, the way the program now stands, and with the things we now have in place, it turns out to be largely a profit-maintenance program rather than a true incomes policy. Wages are relatively easy to control. The government has taken the easy way out and dealt with wages. Other forms of income, even if the government wanted to control them—and, in fairness, I think I have to say that whatever the feeling over there, they would like to control other forms of income—are almost impossible to control. When talking about prices, profits, interests or dividends we are talking about very difficult subjects.

The angry display on Parliament Hill today by the wage earners of Canada can be understood in that kind of context. The "Why me?" buttons, while they look very simple and straightforward, express a deep-felt emotion. It is, "Why me?" It is because, in fact, they are the ones being asked to bear the brunt of what the government calls its anti-inflation program. In the long-run, I think the success of this program is going to hinge on its fairness. If the government cannot control other forms of income directly through the measures in the Anti-Inflation Act, it will have to find other ways. It will have to do it through the Income Tax Act, through redistribution policies of one kind or another, or through the introduction of tax credits.

If we look at the legislation before us and examine the appeal procedure, there is not a great deal to argue about. Certainly, the New Democratic Party supports in principle the idea that there should be an appeal even if the legislation is a bad piece of legislation—and we think it is. Nevertheless there has to be some opportunity for appeal against it. The problem comes when you get down to defining what you are going to appeal. It is not like a court of law with a long established history, with precedents, with a system of determining what is justice under the criminal law: what you are appealing is an arbitrary decision made by the government on what the maximum income of a wage or salary earner should be. In fact, you are appealing what is a political decision—or you should be appealing what is a political decision, rather than what looks like an economic judgment.

Ultimately, the appeal of the workingman will not be through the appeal procedures outlined in Bill C-89, but it will be a political appeal at the next election. The judgment is really a political judgment on how much one person is worth as against another, or how much one person should get compared to another. That is a political decision, and it will be decided politically.

When you look at this procedure, you have to ask how someone will be judged. You appeal against the administrator and go to the appeal board. What will you argue? For instance, will the appeal board accept the kind of argument that the government has accepted on behalf of the exporters of Canada: the kind of argument that says you should not restrict the price of exports because that makes it very difficult to make sales abroad—the kind of argument that asks: What should you care what we charge international markets? The government took controls off the exporters; it listened to them and took the controls off. That means the exporters are free to get whatever price the world market will permit and are free to make, whatever profit arises from them. But what about the people employed in the export industry? Is the appeal board going to listen to them and say that they can make a great deal of profit because the government has said that industry is free from all restrictions? Is it going to say that in view of that, they are entitled to take some of the profits that arise from the higher prices exporters are charging?

● (1610)

There is no evidence that the government intends the anti-inflation legislation to deal with questions of that kind. There is no evidence to indicate that an appeal board would have the power to recognize that kind of argument. Therefore, while it to some extent gives an opportunity for another kick at the cat, so to speak, does it offer any meaningful appeal; and on what basis can the appeal be instituted? It talks about this, that and the other, and that is all on which you can appeal. I wish to give an example. If the United Automobile Workers go to the appeal board because they dislike the kind of restriction placed on what they can bargain for, they may say they have an historic relationship with the American Automobile Workers as well as the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement which is supposed to establish the same kind of conditions continentally. Is the appeal board going to listen to that kind of argument? Will it accept the historical relationship of the Canadian autoworkers to the American autoworkers and grant them something in excess of the guidelines, if that is the case? There is no evidence to suggest they would, or that they would even have authority to consider that kind of argument.

While the appeal board provides some kind of emotional outlet against a bookkeeping error or judgment in the arithmetic of a previous decision, I do not see how the appeal procedure will in any way be meaningful, especially if you are trying to appeal what in fact is a political judgment rather something you can argue on economic terms.

I said earlier that the restraint is essentially on wages and not on other forms of income. It might be useful to look at some of those other forms of income to see to what extent, if any, the restraint program applies to them. We know the government has exempted food at the farm gate from controls. They probably had to do that. I do not think there is any way you could restrict the price of food at the farm gate without having a devastating consequence on the future food supply. The government indicated it has no intention of controlling interest rates. Obviously, it cannot do that and might as well admit it. However, interest rates are an important factor in the cost of living and they have a psychological element in a society whose co-operation the government is seeking when instituting a restraint program.

The government would have been far better advised, and this program would have been more widely accepted, had the government been honest with the people of Canada. It should have admitted, when it brought in the program, that no incomes policy, no matter how well designed or how well intentioned, can be anything other than the rough justice that the former leader of the Conservative party called it. It is going to be rough justice, and it will be so for a considerable period of time.

Had the government said that, and had it coupled it with an understanding or statement that it was going to move to correct it, perhaps the program would have been accepted on that basis. Instead, the government is trying to persuade us that it does in fact have an incomes policy. In their more frank moments they admit there are problems with the program. Actually, it comes more often from Mr. Pepin than the government that there are problems with the program and that adjustments have to be made. However, nowhere does the government face up to the reality that it is the workingman being called upon to make the sacrifices and that hardly any other group is being asked to do the same.

Recently, the government made a great play with regard to controlling or freezing dividends, as if that makes any difference. If you freeze dividends and say that you cannot pay out more this year than you paid out the previous year, and the profits of a corporation rise or continue at a level that would justify a higher dividend rate, what have you really accomplished? All you have done is capitalized the income the dividend-holder might have received in that year. Instead of giving the dividend-holder cash in the year, you claim to have frozen his dividends. What you have done is allow the stock to rise because of the surplus cash and profit position of the company, and increased the value of that stock. The stockholder may not get it in cash as a form of dividend pay-out, but he gets it in stock appreciation. In fact, there is no control to the effect that the cash flow is going to be somewhat different. Certainly, there is no serious restriction on the amount of money the stockholder has been able to earn or to calculate for the future.

I pointed out in the case of dividends that if you do not get paid this year, that will result in an increased value of the stock and the dividend-holder will receive it at some time. However, the wages that a wage earner does not get in any particular year under this program are lost forever. That wage earner has no way of capitalizing his or her wages; they are gone. That is hardly a fair division of sacrifice between the wage and salary earner, on the one hand, and the person who gets theirs through dividend appreciation or pay-out.

If there is resentment about this program, it should not come as any surprise to anyone, particularly the government which says it cannot understand the opposition of the trade union movement. They point to other countries where in fact the trade union is co-operating. What the government conveniently forgets in the case of other countries—and I think it is almost universal—is that the trade union movement is co-operating with governments to restraint programs because there is an understanding between the trade union movement and the government. What it cannot get for the workingman at the bargaining table because of the limits on bargaining, it can get through the political process. This is true in Sweden, where there is an enormous amount of co-operation. It is true in Great Britain, where there is a tremendous amount of co-operation despite the history of the trade union movement in that country.

What was the answer of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to that sort of response? He said, "You have to join the Liberal party". He stated that if you do not join or support the Liberals, you do not look for any benefits. In fact, he said that if you are not a member of the Liberal party you will be punished. The fact that the history of the Liberal party does not instil confidence in the trade union movement, and the fact that the New Democratic Party exists because of the failure of the traditional parties in their country to satisfy the aspirations of the workingman, does not seem to occur to the Liberals. They still do not want to recognize that fact. If one considers how difficult, if not impossible, it is in a country like Canada, with two established political parties, for a third party to rise, survive and grow, one has to say there is a genuine grievance for that party to continue to be in existence.

● (1620)

If the Liberals and Conservatives had been friends of labour while in office, the NDP would not be in existence today. The NDP exists today because the working people had no choice except to work toward forming a party of their own. For the Prime Minister to suggest that the right answer is to join the Liberals in order to get something done is hardly proper. As a student of history, he should have more respect for the history of his own country, the formation of the New Democratic Party and labour's affiliation to that party.

I should like to talk about profit control. The government has, with some wisdom, decided not to try to control prices directly. It recognizes, as I believe most people recognize, that in order to enforce price controls effectively more people would probably be needed to check prices than to produce the goods. In a complex society like our own, it is almost impossible to control prices effectively at the retail level when one considers the thousands of products on the market and the thousands of new products which come on to the market each year. It is almost impossible to maintain price relationships in these circumstances. People say it was done in wartime. That is true, of course, but even in wartime, with the great patriotic spirit which existed then, the system did not work particularly well. Moreover, during wartime not many new products came on to the market. Most products were intended for the war effort and consumer products did not vary very much from year to year.

The government has decided to approach its objectives by controlling profits. This course is likely to be just as unsuccessful, Mr. Speaker, unless of course the government wishes to change the present system entirely. Perhaps that will be the one great thing to emerge from this effort on the part of the government—the destruction of the very system they believe they are protecting. The rationale of a capitalist economy is profits. If you restrain profits, you wreck the selfish motive which animates this whole capitalist hegemony. Perhaps the government wants to do this, but I do not think so. Let me give hon. members an example of the kind of thing that happens. In the Globe and Mail of March 17 there is an article headed "Crispo contends defeat of inflation causes is key challenge". Like most headings, that one has nothing to do with the contents of the article, so do not be misled by it. In the body of the article Mr. Crispo recounts something which came to his attention. He said:

> One banker finally got permission from head office this year to redecorate his branch because, he was told, the banks' costs must go up to keep within AIB guidelines.

There is going to be more and more of this. There is one thing the government can count on as far as business is concerned. To the extent government restrictions on profits are effective—and I do not think they are likely to be very effective—and I do not think they are likely to be very effective—and industry sees itself in a position where its profits are going to exceed the guidelines, what is likely to happen? In the past, to stay within the guidelines companies could have paid higher wages. Today they are restricted in their ability to do this. They could have paid out more by way of dividends. They will now be restricted in their ability to do that, too. They could, of course, pay more taxes to the government, but that is the last thing they would be willing to do; they would burn the money before doing that. So what they will do is pad the costs of their operations; this is really what the article is suggesting. I am not adducing this one article as being evidence or proof; I am simply appealing to the common sense of those who have some knowledge of the way business works.

The capitalist system operates on the premise that you run as lean as you can; you cut costs because you are trying to make a bigger profit. If it is said that profits will be restricted, then the whole motivation of the system is removed. A businessman or business executive will ask, "Why should I drive a small car when I can just as well drive a big car, since in the end it will have no effect on our profit situation; to the extent that our profits are high, the Anti-Inflation Board will cut them down?" Or executives will tend to say, "We will simply take things much easier because we do not want large profits; we do not want to draw attention to ourselves." So even if the system works, the present rationale of private industry will be destroyed and we are likely to see the decay of private industry as well.

I am not saying this because I do not think profits should be controlled in some way, or because I do not believe we should be siphoning off some of the surplus generated by the system; I am saying it cannot be done directly without wrecking the mechanism itself. The result should be obtained in some other way. The real test of the government's willingness to operate an effective program will not be strict adherence to the guidelines, or the provision of appeal procedures which are really not going to change the picture very much. The test will lie in its readiness to capture this surplus in some other way and redistribute it through the income tax system or through some other program under which those who are making the money will find some of it siphoned off to compensate those who are not.

But there has to be a differential established to ensure that the people at the bottom will get more than those who are already well provided for. The people at the bottom have no money because they have never been able to get any. They have no more bargaining power since the Anti-Inflation Board was established than they had before the control program was brought in. It is sophistry to say that the AIB program will result in redistribution of income. To redistribute income effectively one must tax money derived, not from wages and salaries but from professional fees, dividends and other sources and distribute these funds through a tax credit system to those at the bottom.

To some extent, my party can take satisfaction in the bill before us. We have throughout this period stressed the need for some changes at least in what we believe to be a grossly unfair program, and changes are now being made in certain areas. On two occasions my leader has suggested to the government an appeal procedure that would be the very minimum required to make the program more acceptable. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) has also spoken on this subject.

● (1630)

I should also make it clear that the New Democratic Party is not opposed in principle to the restraint program. This is something that has to be repeated, since there has been a tendency to misquote the party or to misinterpret the purpose of our objection to this particular program. We think that the restraint program can in fact be very useful, if it is fair. This is really the point we have been trying to make in the suggestions we have put forward and in calling for improved appeal procedures.

One of the sad things about this entire debate is the way the government is placing the trade union movement in a position from which it cannot co-operate in any honourable way. There is a tendency on the part of the government to forget that in the past the trade union movement has indicated its willingness to go along with restraint programs if those programs applied equally to all elements in society. I recall the Christmas before last a brilliant speech made by the president of the Canadian Labour Congress. I should like to read it into the record—I think I have sufficient time to do so—because it is worth recalling that the trade union movement has spoken up repeatedly on the need for social cohesion and co-operation. Only because the government has refused to recognize the gross unfairness of its present program has labour been put in a strong adversary position against the program itself and against the government of this country in the sense of being willing to co-operate with the government. This is the New Year's message from Joe Morris, president of the Canadian Labour Congress:

> Looking back at the year that is about to end, I doubt that many of us will remember it with particular fondness. It was a year that began with an artificially created worldwide shortage of energy that threatened to bring about widespread hardship and increased unemployment.
>
> It was a year during which the real earnings of Canadian working people steadily declined while the profits of many corporations reached record heights. A year where the cost of food climbed to levels where many people in the lower and fixed income brackets found it difficult to feed themselves and their families. A year where unemployment continued to be rampant. And a year where the cost of housing rose sky-high and made it impossible for the majority of young Canadian families to afford a home.
>
> Looking ahead, there is little to be optimistic about for 1975. Not enough is being done to combat the many problems that beset us.
>
> The challenge to the labour movement in the year ahead is to drive hard to protect men and women workers against the blight of inflation, to stop the merciless attack on the purchasing power of their hard-earned wages and salaries.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

> Apart from the hardship inflation poses to wage and salary earners, pensioners and, in general, all middle and lower income groups, there is a definite danger that the problem may, if it is not curbed soon, destroy the very social fabric of our country and other countries almost as radically and surely as violent revolution.
>
> On the international level, the danger is that countries will take steps to protect themselves without any consideration for the damage such isolationist steps may cause other countries and the world as a whole.
>
> In Canada, individual groups may tend to look out for their own interests alone in order to protect themselves from the dangers of inflation, often unconcerned or simply unaware that by doing so they are hurting other groups, thereby ultimately hurting themselves.
>
> Such a return to the law of the jungle may become so divisive and destructive to the social conscience of individuals and groups alike that the things Canadians now share in common may deteriorate and, with them, the orderly and generally peaceful manner in which we live and conduct our affairs.
>
> With them may also go the moral obligation, the understanding and the compassion which our society, if it values itself, must have for all its disadvantaged people.
>
> The working people through their organizations must guard against becoming just another selfish interest. While continuing the struggle for a fair return for their labour, they must also continue to be concerned with social and economic justice for all those who are defenceless and have no organization to speak for them. Some we can help to become organized and gain the strength that comes from joining support by pressing for improved social legislation, by drawing the public's attention to their problems, or simply by extending to them the warmth of human friendship and understanding.
>
> As the most powerful social movement in this country, the trade union movement has always been concerned with the total human condition. Ours is a movement of compassion. In the truest sense of the word we are our brothers' keepers.
>
> During this season of good will, let us rededicate ourselves to these ideals. Let us pledge all our resources to help make Canada and the world a better place to live in, a place where justice, freedom and material necessities of life are not reserved to the fortunate few, but to all.

That is hardly the speech of a man who wanted to fight his government and did not wish to co-operate in making progress. The problem is that the government never gave the trade union movement a real chance; it never really understood what they were trying to do. The government has been unable to persuade the trade unions that its program is anything more than restraint of their wages but nobody else's. Until some assurances are given, not only in words, but until some evidence comes from the government side that in fact the government has effective ways of asking all Canadians to share equally in restraint, it is just too much for the government to expect the co-operation of this most important segment of our economy.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I can think of no more significant day than this to speak on this legislation, the amendments thereto and on all aspects of the program as it affects the citizens of this nation. We from Altantic Canada have indicated our very real concerns over what this legislation might do to us. One of the first major decisions made by the Anti-Inflation Board was an indication to us that the concerns we had were justified, in that the board brought down its ruling in the Irving wage settlement case. In addition, it imposed a fine of $125,000, something that could not have been anticipated by anybody when the legislation was brought in, and which should not have been anticipated by anyone from the Atlantic provinces in view of the fact that it is a well known, cardinal rule of economics in this nation that we in Atlantic Canada fall far behind the rest of the nation so far as income is concerned.

This was a company that was willing to try to assist raising the level of income in our part of Canada, yet it received a fine of shocking magnitude without there being at that time any kind of procedure for appealing the decision of the board. This is the kind of legislation we have before us, and it is the reason 25,000 people were marching outside this building today indicating their very real and sincere concern over what this legislation could do to them and their future livelihood.

● (1640)

I might say that one of the other indicators from the Atlantic provinces was touched upon in the question posed today by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). He was concerned about the kind of increases people in Nova Scotia are facing in their electric power bills. When we talk about 8 per cent, 10 per cent and 12 per cent increases, that is just fairyland talk as far as the electricity consumer in Nova Scotia is concerned. People in that province are facing increases of 300 per cent to 400 per cent in their electricity bills, and there is nothing in this legislation that protects them against the horrendous increases they are being forced to pay.

Indeed, a great many Nova Scotians today, because of increases in the electric power rates, are paying more in electricity bills than on mortgages on their homes. Unfortunately, I would have to say that the Nova Scotia Power Authority sucked in very many Nova Scotians when they convinced them to put electric heating in their homes. They told them it was a great bargain. These people are now facing bills of $300 to $400 for every two-month period, just for heating their homes; and they have no alternative: it is either electric heat or freezing. For many, it is going to be freezing sooner than later because they just are not able to pay this kind of power bill.

That is just one of the facts of life in Nova Scotia today. When the employee has the opportunity to catch up a little with his counterpart in the rest of the country, he is slapped down and the company he works for is also slapped down and fined for trying to assist him. On the other hand, when it comes to paying electricity rates in Nova Scotia, the employee has to pay 200 per cent or 300 per cent more than he was previously paying, and this legislation gives him no protection whatsoever.

Mr. Paproski: Shame! How can they do that?

Mr. Coates: The game here is credibility. How can this government expect credibility when it comes in with estimates indicating a 16 per cent increase in the amount of spending it intends to do in the next fiscal year, while trying to convince Canadians that it is trying to do what it can to restrain spending in this nation? This government says it has many joint sharing programs, it has this and the other thing, but it is really doing its best to cut back. Even if it is doing its best, government spending will cost taxpayers 16 per cent more this year than it did last year. All I can say to the government is, it had better look at some of its provincial counterparts. Every provincial government that has brought down a budget lately has indicated a much smaller increase in its estimate of expenditures than this federal government. Even the rich province of Alberta has indicated its credibility by paring its expenditures in an attempt to keep in line with a concept of restraint it feels is prudent for our nation at this time. We do not see that in the proposition the government is putting forward for its spending. We do not see that on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or his cabinet colleagues in their spending programs.

Let me refer to another aspect in an attempt to project to the people of Canada that we are really serious in the concern we have about what is happening in this nation. What is this government doing in its attempt to stop inflation by restraining itself in what it is doing? There is no better indication of what is happening in the federal government regarding the concept of restraint on the part of cabinet ministers and those who work for them in the public service than the type of opulence produced in their offices and in the way they look after themselves. This has nothing to do with members' of parliament or cabinet ministers' indemnities; it has to do with the way these people set up palatial surroundings so that when they leave this bear-pit they can go back to their offices and relax. This is a degree of opulence that is not available in even the boardrooms of the biggest corporations in this nation.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Coates: This is one of the things about which the people of Canada are really cheesed-off. While the Prime Minister and his cabinet colleagues run around this country telling us we should restrain ourselves and take it easy on spending for this and that, at the same time they phone and order this and that and something else for themselves in order that they may feel better when they leave the House of Commons and go to their offices. Even worse, this is like a cancer in that it spreads and ping-pongs right down through the ranks, with everybody else in the department saying, "If they can do it, why can't I?" They suggest that if it is good for the ministers, it should be good for them.

I am glad to see the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) here, because he certainly looked after himself regarding his House of Commons office. In the last two or three years he has renovated his office at a cost to the taxpayers of this country of $16,868.22. That is not bad for a fellow who is restraining himself. He is not unique in this regard. The man who really should be setting the pace, as far as I am concerned, is the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury). When he is not on the telephone he should be speaking to some of the people who work for him, telling them to set examples for other government departments in order that they might produce a degree of austerity that would be an indication not only to his colleagues but others in the public service. The Minister of Public Works, in the last two years, has purchased new furnishings for his departmental office at a cost of $1,527. By itself, that is not too bad; but he decided to renovate his office at a cost of $3,920. He was not satisfied with just his departmental office and thought that while he was at it he might as well renovate his House of Commons office at a cost of $7,750. His deputy minister then said to himself, I presume, "If he can do it, I can do it too," and he proceeded to renovate his office. I think he said, in effect, "double or nothing," because he spent $15,981 to renovate his office. I guess the policy is, what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

An hon. Member: Don't speak of Newfoundland that way.

Mr. Coates: I do not know much about Newfoundland, but the poor Newfoundlanders would be shocked if they ever learned what some of these ministers are doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: Then we have the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The minister spent $8,540. He restrained himself, but he didn't talk to all the fellows down the line. His deputy minister decided he might as well go gung-ho and renovated his office at a cost $4,150. Then he looked at his office and said to himself, "The office does not look quite right. It has been all renovated, but we had better have some new furniture"—and he spent twice as much on that as he did on renovation.

The same sort of thing took place in respect of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). He was very restrained but he, too, forgot to talk to the fellows down the line. His deputy minister thought his office was not quite right, so he spent $1,200 to renovate it. He did not like its looks after he renovated it, so he spent $14,117 producing new furniture. I am sure he is now very pleased with all the classy furniture in his office.

● (1650)

The situation is different in respect of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). He has been sort of frugal, but he is not around the office very much; he is away compaigning in respect of capital punishment. I suppose all he wants is one of those United States electric chairs, which are no longer in operation, so he can put it on display as some sort of a museum piece for the abolitionists in the country to look at. Maybe we can find a chair for him somewhere else outside this House. However, his deputy minister did about four times as good as the Solicitor General: he spent $5,254.88 for new furnishings for his office. I suppose he figured he needed a better office than the Solicitor General who is never around anyway.

Then there is the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) who is trying to have all the builders injected with some kind of Canadianism so they will construct buildings from which they cannot secure sufficient rent to pay for their cost. He thought he would do something to renovate his departmental office. There is a reference to lights. Certainly there is a need for light in this regard. The lights cost $2,349. The furniture to go with the lights cost $3,763.87. Then his deputy minister said, "If the minister can furnish his office in this way, I had better see what I can do." He spend $15,094 on furniture for his office.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) is a very frugal man. He tried to maintain a certain degree of restraint in what he was doing. He spent $772 on his departmental office and $3,767 on his House of Commons office. But let me tell you about his deputy minister. He spent $15,000-odd in renovation and new furniture. These people have to live the right way.

[Mr. Coates.]

When we come to the Minister of Communications, that is a different story. He did not like his departmental offices at all, so he had them all redone. He spent $9,477. Let me tell you something. His deputy minister thought that if the minister could spend some $9,000 on furnishings for his office, maybe he could spend $1,484 on new furniture and perhaps people would not be too upset about it. But his assistant deputy minister did not like what he did, so he spent $20,915. That is restraint!

That is exactly what this government tells the people of Canada: Restrain yourselves and do not spend too much money. As a matter of fact, there will not be too much money for them to spend because when the government finishes its spending there will not be too much money left for anybody else.

Mr. Lalonde: Wait until I get to the offices of the Tory MPs.

Mr. Coates: I suggest to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) that any time he wants to, I will change offices with him and be very happy to do so.

Mr. Lalonde: You will be disappointed.

Mr. Coates: I will not be the least disappointed. As a matter of fact, it will not be long before we change offices and he will get used to the kind of offices we have now. Mr. Speaker, this is very enjoyable, but I really do not think it would be proper for me to name more than the Minister of Communications at this time. I will come back at eight o'clock and give the second chapter of the same thing.

An hon. Member: Speak to your whip about your office.

Mr. Coates: So far as the provision of offices by the whip is concerned, I am satisfied with the office I have. What I am interested in is our whip taking the office of the whip of the government party now, tomorrow, next week or whenever we have an election. It will not be too long before we will have those offices provided to us.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You are dreaming.

Mr. Coates: For the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who seems to be so interested in this topic, may I say I should like him to explain to the people of Canada how much restraint there was in the $62,000 he spent on "Why not" buttons? I suggest to him there are many people in this country who would say "Why not" and give the answer in respect of the $62,000 expenditure on buttons.

Since it is getting close to five o'clock, I only have time to provide the information about the Minister of Communications. He did not like his office in the department, so he spent $9,477.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Should not the hon. member make it clear that he is talking about the former minister of communications. The present minister is not a he.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Apologize.

Mr. Alexander: We submit an apology. Let us have a little order over there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): I am not sure that it is a point of order and I am not sure it is not a point of debate. In any event, it may be recognized as being five o'clock, and that being so, pursuant to the order made on Friday, February 27, 1976, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private member's business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Before I put the notice of motion agreed to for today, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Reduction in farm broadcasting—Position of minister; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Health—Request for expansion of pilot project for school milk program; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Transport—Proposed removal of subsidy on export flour—Request for reconsideration.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE OF ROLE OF SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): It is the understanding of the Chair that notice of motion No. 2, in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton-West (Mr. Alexander), notice of motion No. 15, in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan), notice of motion No. 19, in the name of the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson), and notice of motion No. 20, in the name of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), shall stand at the request of the government.

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the appointment of a special committee of this House which shall have the power to hold hearings in various parts of Canada, take testimony and hire experts, with the following terms of reference: That it shall examine the role of the Senate within Parliament and its general constitutional functions and report with recommendations on whether the Senate should continue as it has been and is, or whether it should be abolished (and, if so, by what means) or whether some form of reformed Senate is worthwhile (and, if so, what reforms).

● (1700)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am certain that members of this House will be surprised if I begin my short speech by making it very clear that personally I would prefer to see the Senate abolished.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: However, I am extremely doubtful that such a proposal would meet with the favour of members of this House, either government members, some of whom hope to be appointed to the Senate in the very near future, or members of the official opposition who might hope to be appointed to the Senate in a few years from now. So because I do not believe that kind of motion could carry, I put forward a much milder resolution which is simply to suggest that a House of Commons committee look at the whole question of the Senate as it is now constituted, the role which it plays and the role which a reformed Senate, if such a thing is possible, might play.

If one were to make a study of second chambers which exist in the various countries in the world, one would find a number of things. First of all, we would find that second chambers have disappeared in many countries, and have disappeared in all provinces. I think there were five provinces in Canada which originally had second chambers. They have disappeared because the original idea of a second chamber, which developed when the parliamentary democratic system was being established, was that somehow the voters could not be trusted to choose a group of representatives who could really manage the affairs of the country, and that you had to have some second chamber constituted of wise, older people who could at least give second thought to the proposals being made by the elected representatives.

Those second chambers are disappearing in many countries and in many jurisdictions, and in all of them I know, with the exception of our Senate, the powers of the second chamber have been sharply limited. The best example I can give of that is the British experience beginning many years ago but certainly while Lloyd George was chancellor of the exchequer back in the early part of the twentieth century, around 1910, when he had, for that time, pretty drastic tax proposals to make which the House of Lords were opposing and which they had blocked for several years. The British government of the day got its legislation through by warning the members of the House of Lords that, if necessary, they would appoint a sufficient number of new members to the House of Lords who supported their proposals so that the legislation could be passed. From that day until today, gradually the power of the House of Lords in Great Britain has been whittled away. Most recently, the power of even delaying money bills was taken away from the House of Lords in Great Britain.

What was the original reason for having a Senate in Canada? MacGregor Dawson, in his definitive book on the government of Canada, in the chapter on the Senate, quotes Sir John A. Macdonald in the confederation debates as saying the following:

There would be no use of an Upper House if it did not exercise, when it thought proper, the right of opposing or amending or postponing the legislation of the Lower House. It would be of no value whatever were it a mere chamber for registering the decrees of the Lower House. It must be an independent House, having a free action of its own, for it is only valuable as being a regulating body, calmly considering the legislation initiated by the popular branch, and preventing any hasty or ill-considered legislation which may come from that body, but it will never set itself in opposition against the deliberate and understood wishes of the people.

If we applied that definition of the role of the Senate to the history of the Canadian parliament in the last 25 years at least, we would have to come to the conclusion, whatever our party affiliation, that the Senate has no real function. In the same chapter dealing with the Senate, MacGregor Dawson lists some proposals for changing the character and the function of the Senate, as we know it, as follows:

(a) the senators should be elected, directly by the people, or indirectly by some other body; (b) they should be partly elected, partly appointed; (c) there should be a fixed and limited term of office; (d) senators should be retired at a definite age; (e) the powers of the Senate should be limited like those of the House of Lords—

It seems to me that the only change that we have made in the power of the Senate is the one dealing with the age of retirement. In 1971, Senator Ernest Manning, who was premier of Alberta for over 25 years, was interviewed on CTV on the program "Question Period." They were discussing the role of the Senate, and Senator Manning said:

If the government's position is, and the House of Commons' position is, that the Senate really has no meaningful role then the proper thing for them to do is move for its abolition and not play games at the public's expense. It either has a meaningful constitutional role or it hasn't.

Should the Senate defy the House of Commons? My answer ... would have to be "no". The basis of our democratic system is that the people whom the citizens elect are the ones who have the right to determine what will become of the laws of the country. No appointed body has the right to override the decision of the elected representatives.

The Senate has not done that. Do they have a role? I suggest that they have the power to block, to amend or to refuse to pass any and all legislation enacted by the House of Commons. The fact that they have not used that power, I submit, is to a large extent immaterial because there is no reason to believe that, given a House of Commons elected by people to change things very substantially, the Senate could not, if it wanted to, change or amend important legislation. The Senate is undemocratic. Its members are appointed until they reach the age of retirement. It is filled with members who have been active in politics for one or the other major parties. It is filled with members who have been elected, have run for election or have been financial collectors for the parties. The Senate is filled with people who are directors of important corporations. Senators who are directors are on committees which deal with legislation which affects the companies of which they are directors. Not so long ago, the chairman of the Senate Banking Committee which met to consider the application of a group which wanted to establish a bank was himself a director of a bank.

● (1710)

One of the best and most forceful critiques I have ever heard made of the Senate was by a man who is now a senator. At that time, Professor Eugene Forsey said, and I quote from a couple of paragraphs of an assessment of the Senate which he made about 20 years ago in the mid-1950s but everything he said then is still true:

The Canadian Senate is one of the most thoroughly undemocratic bodies in the world, and has far larger powers than many Canadians suppose.

Senators are appointed, not elected. They hold office for life. They cannot be removed, except by the Senate itself.

The Senate can amend any bill whatsoever, including a money bill, and go on throwing it out, as often as it likes; ten, twenty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand times. There is nothing in Canada corresponding to the Parliament Act in Great Britain.

He went on to compare the Senate with the British House of Lords and said:

The House of Lords' veto on legislation is only "suspensive", temporary; the Canadian Senate's veto is absolute.

Even apart from the Parliament Act, the Lords' veto can be overridden by the creation of extra peers, as many as may be necessary. The Lords can be "swamped" ... The Canadian Senate cannot be swamped.

It used to be said that we should not get very excited about the Senate, because prime ministers use vacancies in the Senate to appoint party faithful and cabinet ministers who have outlived their usefulness, and to make things easy for them. But in recent years that is not what has been happening. In recent years a substantial number of people have been appointed to the Senate who are, to say the least, relatively young. Let me mention just a few: Senator Davey, Senator Austin, Senator Everett, Senator Buckwold.

I am not suggesting for a moment that all senators are incompetent, nor am I suggesting that all senators are disinterested. As a matter of fact, at least three of the four I have mentioned are young, active, aggressive and competent. Some senators have done some very useful work. Without going over all the senators, let me mention a few of them. Senator Croll has chaired two Senate committees which have done very useful work. The committee on aging and the committee which dealt with poverty both produced excellent reports.

Senator Lamontagne chaired a committee which held hearings and gave very careful study to the question of a science policy in Canada, or I should put it in a more precise way and say the lack of a science policy in Canada. I cannot say that I agree with every recommendation which they have made, but they were certainly worthy of careful consideration. Senator Everett chaired a committee on finance and economic policy which heard some very impressive and useful witnesses. Senator Buckwold is now chairing a committee—not a Senate committee—which is involved in planning for the Habitat conference in Vancouver. All these committees have done useful work. The tragedy is that the government has paid virtually no attention to any of these committees.

Mr. Lachance: That is false.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member says it is false. I invite him to get up and talk about this in detail.

Mr. Lachance: I will do that.

Mr. Orlikow: Let us examine this. Senator Croll's committee documented the extent of poverty in this country. We can differ on the definition of poverty, but whether we use the definition of Senator Croll or the definition of the Economic Council of Canada, it is clear that between 25 per cent and 30 per cent of the people in Canada, by any definition hon. members want to use, are living in poverty. However, if we look at the statistics issued by Statistics Canada every year on the income distribution in this country, we see that the bottom 20 per cent of our income earners got a smaller percentage of the gross national product in 1974, which is the last year for which we have figures, than they got 25 years earlier. They got about 4.3 per cent of the gross national product 25 years before 1974, and they got just about two-tenths of 1 per cent less in 1974. So I say that we have done nothing about poverty, despite an excellent report by Senator Croll.

If the hon. member wants to question my statement that we have no science policy, I advise him to ask for, as I have done, the correspondence which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and the minister in charge of science policy have received in the last couple of months about the lack of funding for scientific research and medical research. Close to 500 letters have been received by those ministers from scientists all across this country.

With regard to housing, there is no question that we have not provided affordable housing for the people in the bottom 40 per cent of the income bracket in this country. So I say that these senators who have done a commendable job have had their advice virtually completely ignored. That is why I say that the Senate as we know it today performs no useful function.

I go along with the sentiments expressed by Professor Forsey before he became a senator. He both questioned and rejected the idea that a reformed Senate could play a useful role in the democratic system of government which we have in Canada. But as I said at the beginning of my speech, I know very well that any proposal made by any member of parliament or any person outside parliament that the Senate be abolished would be rejected by the members of this House of Commons. I will not now speculate as to why they would reject. I simply make the assumption, and I am sure I am correct, that members of this House would not vote for a resolution to abolish the Senate.

So I have made a practical proposal, which is that if we are to have a Senate, as we have had since Canada became a country, if we are to appoint people to the Senate, and if we are to pay the expenses of maintaining the Senate, we ought to have a very careful look at the role of second chambers. There is a second chamber in Great Britain, in France, in Italy and in Germany. It may be that their second chambers are much more effective and useful than ours. It might help if we appointed people to our Senate for a fixed period of time. It might be useful if we let the provinces recommend a certain percentage of the people for the Senate. I do not think it is my job, and I certainly would not have the time, to list all the possible changes which could be made. I simply say, as have many people inside and outside this chamber over the years, that the Senate as it is constituted at the present time simply cannot, and does not, do the job which a useful second chamber should and could do.

● (1720)

That being the case, it is my suggestion that a parliamentary committee should look at the question, should hire people expert in government to research the subject and should travel across the country, and possibly to other countries, to look at what other second chambers do and how they operate. If such a committee were appointed and took its job seriously, as I think it should, it could come back with proposals which would have merit and which I hope would be adopted by the House of Commons. Necessary constitutional changes could be made and we could, if we need a second chamber, have one which would perform a useful role.

Mr. Speaker, I close by saying that the work of governments of the world and our country become more complex as government becomes more difficult and time-consuming. We could use some help, and if we had a second chamber with a real role to perform in this country, we would get it.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, this is a subject which has been canvassed a good many times in this House over the years. In fact, I think one might say at a guess it has probably been debated more often here than in the other place, though it is also true there have been some very interesting debates on reform of the Senate sponsored by the other place itself. For example, I read an excellent address by Senator Croll two or three years ago in which he and other senators presented plans for reform of the Senate. Senator Croll's plan in particular was a very detailed one.

To this House the subject is a bit "old hat." I do not think we should overlook the originality of today's proceedings, however. I think we see a real step forward in our debate today, because the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has broken with the tradition of his party. He is now not only taking the absolute position that the Senate should be abolished, but he is coming to terms with reality, as he might have put it himself, and is suggesting that there is perhaps indeed a role for the Senate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But he has got abolition in the motion.

Mr. MacGuigan: I know the hon. member for Winnipeg North is a man of great courage, but I do not think even he, because of his close association with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), has the kind of courage which would enable him to bring forward a motion such as this unless it also had the support of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I do not think he would want to face the charge of revisionism which he would encounter. I can only believe this indicates a fundamental change, a new look on the part of our socialist friends opposite, a coming to terms with reality. Perhaps it will be expanded shortly to other areas as well.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carry on, senator!

Mr. MacGuigan: We are holding the post of Speaker of the Senate at some future date for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is an unfriendly remark.

Senate Reform

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North was mistaken in one respect. Much in his address was worth while, but I think there was a certain misconception of the original and fundamental purpose of the Senate. He spoke of the fact that second chambers around the world are disappearing. That is true, of course, but it is not true that they are disappearing in federal systems. In federal systems the role of second chambers is as strong as ever. That, of course, is the principal justification for having a Senate in Canada. It is not merely for the sober second thought, the review by an upper house, with presumably more time and, some might claim, more ability to review the decisions of this House; the more important point is the fact that in the Senate we have representation by region—representation which can give acknowledgement to interests of various parts of the country that would not occur on a strictly representation-by-population basis.

The hon. member quoted Sir John A. Macdonald and his views on the origin of the Senate. I think it is worth-while putting on record the views of the famous Grit of that day, the Hon. George Brown. Speaking in the debates in the House of Assembly in 1865 after the resolutions that had their genesis in Charlottetown and which subsequently were approved in Quebec, he said:

> The very essence of our compact is that the union shall be federal and not legislative. Our Lower Canada friends have agreed to give us representation by population in the Lower House, on the express condition that they shall have equality in the Upper House. On no other condition could we have advanced a step—

I think it is clear in the viewpoint of George Brown—and it is the viewpoint of most historians today that this was one of the crucial steps toward confederation—that in the Upper House representation would be on the basis of region and that would give protection to the maritimes and to Quebec which would not otherwise be there.

Parenthetically, it is rather unusual for a federal union to have representation on the basis of a whole region. I believe in all the other federal systems where there are upper houses, which I think is about all of them, representation is on the basis of the constituent governmental unit; that is, on the basis of the province or state rather than on the basis of region. In Canada it is only in the case of Ontario and Quebec, and I believe Newfoundland, that we have representation on that basis; for other provinces it is a regional concept.

I think it is important to understand that our purpose in having a Senate is primarily that of protecting regional interests and not of reviewing legislation already adopted by this House. Occasionally it is true the Senate makes a real contribution to the legislation passed by this House by way of correcting it in matters of detail. For example, there may be revisions made by the Senate to one of our pieces of legislation which will be coming back to this House for reconsideration. I do not think anyone would deny that in matters of this kind the Senate can make a real contribution.

In wider investigations in recent years the Senate has also proved itself to be extremely valuable to our political system. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North mentioned, Senator Croll has been particularly prominent in leading several Senate committees to reports which have been of great value in the subject areas with which they dealt. Further, with respect to certain bills which have been introduced in this House and have not been introduced in the Senate, the Senate has held hearings at the same time as ours which have enabled them to proceed with the bill more quickly later, and, in the case of income tax legislation, they have been able to provide helpful suggestions. There are also cases where legislation which has not yet been introduced in this House has been introduced in the Senate, and as a result of Senate consideration it has been decided by the government that there are great areas of the act which should be changed. I think of matters like the new bankruptcy legislation where the Senate investigation last year proved so valuable to the government and to this House.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The Senate does, then, make a real contribution to the legislative process, but I think we would all regard it as intolerable if the Senate were to set itself up in an undemocratic fashion to try to determine by a second look what members of this House should be passing as legislation. After all, we are the people elected by the citizens of Canada—by those who have the right to vote in Canada—to determine what the policies and laws of this country should be. We could not accept any challenge from an appointed Senate on this point.

This accounts for the fact that in 1973 or 1974, when a change was made by the Senate to the wiretapping legislation passed by this House, legislation which was the result of a deliberate enactment of this House and not an oversight, when the Senate presumed to challenge that, even those of us who had been on the losing side of the vote in the House of Commons united to defeat the attempt of the Senate to change the will of this House as expressed by its elected representatives. I think all parties would agree this is not the kind of Senate we would like. We must approach any Senate reform with this in mind. I think it is not always understood by witnesses who appear before parliamentary committees and by those who would change the Senate system.

● (1730)

As a matter of fact, when the joint House and Senate Committee on the Constitution of Canada held hearings across this country we heard a good many witnesses in general, and in particular, on the Senate. I do not recall the exact number of witnesses who spoke on the Senate, but there were some 13,000 people at those meetings across Canada, and 1,486 witnesses on various questions dealing with the constitution. My recollection is that the Senate was one of the subjects most frequently treated by the witnesses who appeared before that committee.

Sometimes the proposals they made were proposals which would have strengthened the Senate as an opposing legislative body to this House and, therefore, would not have been acceptable to us as a means of reform. I would include in those suggestions the proposition that the upper House should become an elected House and, therefore, have a real elective power which would enable it to challenge the decisions of this House. It is true that in one federation, Australia, that is the way the system functions. Their upper House is elected as well as the lower House, but it is questionable if their system gains very much from that.

As we have seen with the constitutional struggle in Australia in the last two years, there are many problems which result from this kind of arrangement, and I do not think we would want to make such a fundamental change in our system. With responsible government and the government being responsible to the lower House, it is appropriate that only that House should be elected, and that that House should make the basic determination of policy.

There are a number of areas in which I think we might reach some agreement across the Chamber as to what changes might be made to the Senate. The hon. member for Winnipeg North mentioned the power of the Senate. The constitution committee recommended that the Senate should have no more than a suspensive veto, that it be able to give a kind of six-month hoist to bills, but that if the House of Commons chose to pass a bill again after six months, it would then become law with or without the consent of the Senate.

There would probably be general agreement in this House on that kind of proposal. In fact many members would probably feel that a period of six months is too long and that the longest hoist the Senate should be able to give a bill is three months. Therefore the suspensive veto would be three months rather than six. That may be a matter of detail, but I think there would be very general agreement here that a change of that kind should be made.

There have been proposals for changes in the selection of Senators. The present selection, as we know, is by appointment of the government in Ottawa. There have been proposals that half of the Senators should be appointed by the provincial governments.

The constitution committee adopted a medium solution. While the provinces would not appoint Senators, and Senators would continue to be appointed by the federal government, half would be appointed from a panel drawn up by the provincial governments. They would be drawn from the group of nominations made by the provincial governments, but the actual power of appointment would remain with the federal government. Undoubtedly there are a number of members who would like to move in that direction.

There might be general agreement as well that 70 be the final retirement age rather than 75. Some feel that would be a good point at which to express our gratitude to the Senators for their active service and to allow them to serve in a different way. The constitution committee suggested that different way might be one which would allow Senators to continue to serve without pay and without official voting status. They would, in a general way, still be considered advisers to parliament, have the right to appear on Senate committees, and take part in the hearings so as to make contributions. Therefore a method might be found to enable Senators to make a contribution after their mandatory retirement age had been reached.

One of the crucial questions as to the actual provisions concerning retirement would have to do with whether or not there should be a term appointment. At the present time Senators are appointed until age 75. I have suggested that could be until age 70. However, even that would probably not go as far as many members of this House would wish to go.

It has been proposed that Senators should be appointed for a five-year, seven-year or ten-year term. My own feeling is that Senate appointments should be on a term basis, but that the term should be slightly longer rather than slightly shorter. I would favour a ten year, rather than a five year or seven year term.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Certainly not a 40 year term.

Mr. MacGuigan: No, not a 40 year term. I prefer a longer term because it would be difficult to get people to accept a position in the Senate if the Senate had even less legislative power than it now has, and appointments were only for a five year period. People would not want to disrupt their other career at its height—and we would want people to come in at the height of their powers—for only a five year period. That might not be worthwhile for those being appointed.

I suggest we would be more likely to have a wide choice of appointees if we had a seven or even ten year term as an inducement. That might also be beneficial because, every five or ten years in this House, there is a fairly extensive change of personnel. In fact we know from our statistics that after every election there is a substantial, usually involuntary change as far as membership of this House is concerned. If you adopt the longer period, a Senator's term would not come up for renewal before the same people who initially appointed him or her. With a ten-year term there might be an entirely different cast of appointers. Therefore a different kind of judgment would be brought to bear, one which might be more objective and perhaps more strict than reconsideration by those who made the initial appointment. There would be other advantages as well.

These are details that could be canvassed one way or another with respect to changes in the Senate. However, in all of these changes we have to guard against a Senate that will become so active that it will want to challenge the powers of this House. On the other hand, if we are not to have a Senate that is any more active than it is now, it really is not going to be able to safeguard regional interests very well.

One consequence of a suspensive veto, especially if it is for only three months, and that would not be a very large inhibiting factor with regard to government legislation, would be that the Senate would likely use its suspensive veto much more often than it now chooses to delay a bill. This change would probably remove the Senate's inhibitions, and it might act much more callously toward government legislation than it now does. While this may not be very palatable to governments or members of this House, unless we are prepared to have a more active Senate, one which will exercise its powers on more occasions than it now does, there is no point in changing its present powers, because any change in the direction we have been talking about would certainly mean a Senate which wants to exercise its powers more frequently. We would have to accept that as a consequence of the changes we would make.

I would personally like to see changes with regard to regional representation in the Senate, which I talk of as being the great justification for the Senate's remaining as part of our system. However, the amount of representation which we now have is not satisfactory to the western provinces. They have a real grievance. The western provinces, with a total of only 24 Senators, do not have a sufficient counterweight to balance the 24 from Ontario, 24 from Quebec, and 30 from the Atlantic provinces.

I very strongly support the recommendation of the constitution committee that the number of Senators from the western provinces should be doubled from 24 to 48; 12 appointed from each of the prairie provinces and 12 from British Columbia. This would provide a much better balance in our system than we now have. It would allow western Canada which, if we speak of alienated regions of the country is the region about which we hear that term used most frequently, to feel it has more input into the legislative process than is now the case.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Could you find 12 Liberals in Alberta?

Mr. MacGuigan: Just wait until the next election and we will find lots of Liberals in Alberta.

I see my time is almost up, but there is one other point I should like to make. I do not think we want to conduct the hearings of the constitution committee all over again. We have heard more than 1,000 witnesses already. We surely do not want another committee which would travel across the country and go through all that again.

What is needed now is a decision. Whether that decision should be reached through a committee or whether it should be made by the government is for hon. members to say, but I do think we ought to avoid the expense and the time of going through the whole process again before arriving at a conclusion when the groundwork has already been laid and all that remains is the need for a decision.

● (1740)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks on the motion before us relating to the appointment of a special committee of this House to examine the role of the Senate within Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I think this motion deserves a lot of consideration, and as far as I am concerned, I shall be brief so that it may be passed by Parliament and a committee appointed to make an in-depth study of the role of the other House within our Parliament.

The motion raises a question: Should the Senate continue as it is now? In my view, the answer is no. Major changes should be made. It is not that I have anything against any senator, absolutely not. I have very good friends in the Senate. I have come to know some senators quite well from meeting and talking with them and they deserve great praise for the way they do their work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the government does not always accept the recommendations made by the other place, particularly in the case of Senate committees which work in a normal fashion, travel across the country and report to the House.

I have in mind the committee on poverty, whose members went throughout all Canada to study the circumstances of Canadians, see whether there was poverty across Canada, determine what are the causes for this poverty and on what level this poverty is found. The president of this special committee of the Senate, Senator Croll, has presented his report, a tremendous report, but to my knowledge, the government has never taken their inspiration from this committee's report. Thus, the Canadian taxpayers' money has been spent for absolutely nothing, although this committee's report contained tremendous recommendations which should be implemented and be enacted by Parliament. They were not implemented. What is the use then of spending money to send our honourable friends of the other House all over Canada to study some particular matter, if we do not use that study afterwards? Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that even after that study was made across Canada, poverty is still with us. All kinds of charitable organizations try to help the victims of poverty and it seems that the government, with the provinces, is considering the implementation of a guaranteed minimum income plan. But all that is going at a snail's pace, it is not going very fast. Poverty is leaving us behind, poverty is going faster than our legislation.

That is why, I suggest, we see in Canada a very serious situation and discontent. While I was on my way to work in Ottawa today, I heard on the radio a program on the causes of delinquency. People were asked their opinion on the legislation now before the House, that is if we should maintain or abolish capital punishment. What leads some people to murder? The main reasons given were economic and social conditions which are not equal to economic possibilities. That then is what explains why some people are guilty of housebreaking and murders. Those are some of the remarks I heard over the radio this morning on my way to Ottawa.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I feel we should study those questions more seriously, taking into account the recommendations, the reports made by the members of the other House when we entrust them with a job. If we have no intention of changing our attitude, if the government refuses to change its mind, then I feel the Senate has no useful role to play.

At times we get bills from the other place. That procedure always astonishes me, that bills should be introduced in the other House and then come to us for study or approval. More often than otherwise, those bills concern economic, financial or big business matters. We therefore find ourselves in the situation where we wonder why such and such a matter was accepted by the Senate. Should we accept it or reject it? We thus have to work even harder trying to find out why the other place passed such and such a bill we are sent later on and asked to accept.

We, of the Social Credit Party of Canada, have an item on our program concerning the other House.

● (1750)

We should try to improve the other place to make it more efficient, more apt to give better services and to prevent it from being a mere refuge for political appointees.

In this regard, I must congratulate the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who changed a little the usual practice two or three years ago. I think this was due because in the other House there should be a balance between the political parties in Canada so that the Senate really represent the opinions of the Canadian people as a whole.

I congratulate the Prime Minister for having sought appointees from outside the ranks of the Liberal Party, but this does not settle the problem. We of the Social Credit Party have a very concrete suggestion in our program: one third of the appointments to the Senate should be made by the federal government, one third by the provinces and one third by the intermediate bodies so that the provinces are consulted when it comes to appoint people to the Senate. That way, the provinces would be in consultation with the federal government about the possibilities of having some protection in this Parliament on the Senate side to safeguard the rights of the provinces.

Automatically, we would have fewer useless discussions concerning that famous constitution we want to repatriate. Some time ago I asked the Prime Minister when it was expatriated? Repatriation supposes expatriation. Since it was not expatriated how do you want to repatriate it? I would be in favour of leaving it there and making a constitution of our own, a Canadian constitution.

Indeed I think that with the reform of the Senate if it were possible for senators to be appointed one third by the federal government, one third by the provinces and the other third by intermediate bodies we would really have a House representative of the interests of all the people and when our bills would be introduced in the other House we would have people qualified to analyze them, to take into consideration the interests of each and everyone, of intermediate bodies, the provinces and the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, those are the few remarks I wanted to bring quite sincerely to the attention of this House in support of the motion now before us. I hope it will be passed, that the committee will be appointed, and that it will function normally as soon as possible so we will stop talking about reforming the Senate and proceed with that reform, that it will be given new means of fulfilling its role properly, being efficient, for the benefit of all Canada.

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, it is with some reluctance that I decided to take part in this debate because I for one think that the matter of the Senate has been settled once and for all, both by the report prepared by the joint committees on the constitution and by the many reports of constitutional conferences that took place at the end of the sixties.

That being said, I would not like either to go into historical considerations which prevailed in 1867 when that body called the Senate was created, at a time when Lower Canada was expressing very strong reservations about the fact that there was only one elected House and that the rights of Lower Canada and those of the Maritime provinces could suffer from that. It was then asked for the creation of a body whose members would be designated by the government, one that would represent the regions and ensure the protection of the rights of the minority.

I will not enter into the arguments put forward by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) regarding the internal operations of the Senate and the many amendments pertaining to its operations or even its reform which have been presented by the constitutional affairs committee and which were also suggested in the course of certain debates in the Senate by the senators themselves, as they are very concerned with the welfare of their House. For example, on March 13, 1973, there was a debate there during which Senator Croll to whom reference was made previously, made very valuable comments on the future of the Senate such as he viewed it.

Therefore I will not enter into those arguments, since the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville gave us many details and many patterns according to which the Senate might evolve. Instead I shall lay the emphasis on the present operations of the Senate such as they affect us as members of this House.

The fact is that for many years, I can even say over the last fifty years, the Senate has been the target of many criticisms and rightly so. The then prime ministers had the unfortunate habit of systematically appointing to the Senate members of the party in power, which resulted in reducing the degree of competency to a lower level, when those members of Parliament or organizers were appointed only for the political favours they provided. But we must pay tribute to the last three or four prime ministers, particularly to the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who brought some changes in the way of viewing the Senate and the appointments to the Senate.

Indeed, they chose a new procedure, namely appointing resource persons, people from the community. The best example I have in mind is the appointment of the current Speaker of the Senate, the hon. Renaude Lapointe. Those are people who left their marks and who were working in the world of business. Some of them were working for the protection of the consumers, others for the press, as in the case of Mrs. Lapointe, others were involved in mining or in the legal sector, and many other fields of endeavour.

And that way, I believe, we now have a Senate with a degree of competence that all Canadians should be proud of. The Senate is now a resource organization that can be relied upon because it is composed of people with a very high degree of competence, and I can say that when I have problems dealing, for instance, with the Canadian constitution, I readily request the advice of the Senator Goldenberg or Senator Forsey who are people with a really penetrating knowledge of the constitution, or of labour relations in the case of Senator Goldenberg.

As a matter of fact, I think that over the past few years, especially with studies by numerous joint commissions and also by Senate commissions, and reports such as the one on poverty by Senator Croll, the one on the broadcasting policy, and others, the Senate has, as people say in Quebec, "gagné ses épaulettes". And this is the aspect, I think, we ought to dwell on. The Senate is in the process of proving itself as an institution and I do not think that it should be abolished at this time. We can say there is room for improvement. I must admit that this is true but no so much to increase its power. I think the Senate has enough power at the present time to fulfill its mandate. We should rather facilitate its relations with the House of Commons.

In fact, we quoted earlier the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow); we also quoted Senator Forsey who in 1955 or so eagerly criticized this very institution. I want to tell him only one thing: only fools do not change their mind. Mr. Forsey, who is now a senator, stated this in 1973:

[English]

The Senate as now constituted does much good and is politically too weak to do any serious harm.

What good?

First, detailed revision of legislation, with an opportunity for all interested parties to have a full hearing. The Senate has an immense reservoir of legal and administrative talent and experience, and its committees do this revisory work efficiently, thoroughly and cheaply.

Second, investigation of public problems. Senate committees do a great deal of this, and, again, efficiently, thoroughly and cheaply.

Thirdly, if ever an emergency arose the Senate would be a great help in resolving it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, for the remaining time allotted to me, I would like to answer the hon. member for Winnipeg North who asked a while ago what the Senate did which had a direct impact on the legislation here in the House of Commons. I would like to read him a letter from a law student in answer to some criticisms. He said that eligibility for old age pension benefits had been reduced from 70 to 65 because of a report of the Senate on poverty.

Mr. Speaker, I notice it is six o'clock.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. It now being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock, when the House will resume consideration of Bill C-89.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to have the unanimous consent of the House to revert to routine proceedings for the purpose of presenting a committee report.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

Sixth report of Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.—Mr. Béchard.

[Mr. Lachance.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO ADD NEW DEFINITIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-89, to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock I was discussing some of the reasons why people in this nation just cannot take the government seriously when it talks about restraint. I was placing before the House some examples that I feel show the people of Canada just why they should not take the government seriously when it tells them they should restrict their spending. These are the kinds of examples being set by the ministers, their deputies and their assistant deputies, all of which lead one to believe there is no credibility at all to be associated with what the govenment proposes and does at this moment in time.

When the proceedings were interrupted at five o'clock I was talking about the Department of Communications, and I pointed out some of the expenditures which were taking place in that department, and which would lead one to conclude that unless government ministers are willing to set some kind of positive example there is no way we can hope to bring government spending down to realistic levels.

The government tells us that even in this year of restraint we can expect to face at least a 16 per cent increase in government spending. That 16 per cent, I suggest, will be followed by supplementary estimates, and there is no way of knowing at this stage of the game just what that 16 per cent increase will end up actually being at the end of the next fiscal year.

Let us consider again the Department of Communications. We see that the minister spent on her departmental office, for new furnishings I would presume, $9,477.92. I guess the deputy minister felt he should spend a little bit himself. He was very gentle and only got a little new furniture at a cost of $1,484.80. That did not stop the assistant deputy minister from going to work. He looked at the offices of his minister and his deputy minister and ordered himself $20,915.92 of new furniture. He now has the right kind of environment to sit down in and consider the Anti-Inflation Board proposals before him. He will be able to communicate like nobody in this world with that kind of furniture.

Even the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) has not been left out. He was pretty careful and did not spend anything on either his departmental office or his House of Commons office, but I guess his deputy felt that since he was new to the game he really should have some new furniture to brighten up his office in order to get the cigar smoke out which was left by the former deputy minister. He spent $5,911 on new furniture.

Next we come to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson). He is a mover and supposed to be a doer, although there is no example of it when you look at the figures these days. He decided he needed his departmental office fixed up a little bit, and he spent $5,200. His deputy looked at things and decided he needed new furniture himself, and he spent $6,000.

● (2010)

Lo and behold, the assistant deputy minister, looking at what the minister and the deputy minister had done, went whole hog. He spent $13,973 on new furniture, and an additional $14,501 on renovations. So he is pretty well set up. We have quite a mixture here.

Let me go to Justice. Of course in that department they are preparing a new package and so on. They must look smart because they are anticipating interviews and so on with people. Justice is broken down between the previous minister, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), and the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). It is shown here that the previous minister spent $10,738 on his ministerial department and that his deputy minister—I do not know whether it is still the same one—followed along and spent $7,287. The present minister did not spend anything, but let me tell you that his assistant deputy minister made up for it. He spent $32,327 on new furniture alone. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that is certain. The furniture manufacturers in this country—if it is Canadian furniture that is being purchased, and I would not be sure of that—are doing well these days with this government in office. Few manufacturing firms will vote against this outfit regardless of price restraint or any other kind of restraint.

Now, let us go to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). He has been through some difficult times. He spent a good deal of time in his office not too long ago. He was anticipating what would be happening in the days ahead. I am sure he is still anticipating what will happen in respect of the SIU. He did not like either the office the way it was or the furniture, so he spent $5,389 on his House of Commons office insofar as renovations are concerned. Then, when he had done that, he did not like the way the office looked and spent an additional $12,814 in order to be sure that he had the proper furniture for his new office.

Now we come to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras). Manpower and Labour really should be together. He did not want to be outdone by his colleague the Minister of Labour. He said to himself, "Well, if the Minister of Labour can spend $4389 on renovations I see no reason I should not spent $6,150," which he did. Then he decided that if the Minister of Labour could spend $12,814 on furniture there was no reason why he should not have better furniture because he would be taking over the other minister's job anyway. So he spent $19,020 on furniture.

Then the assistant deputy minister of manpower, looking at his minister, said that there was no reason if the minister could have it that he should not have the same thing. He was very good in respect of renovations. He spent only $305. However, he did not like the way the office looked. The furniture did not fit his point of view. He did not want to be quite as gregarious as the minister so he just spent $11,470 on new furniture.

We have a new Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). He went into that office and thought that it should be dressed up a little. The departmental office was not to his liking. He decided to spend $5,500 to have that office straightened out to his way of thinking. His deputy minister said that the minister was new to the game, decided he rated twice as much as the minister, and spent $11,600. The assistant deputy minister decided he was not quite as good as the deputy minister but was just as good as the minister, and therefore spent $6,735 on renovations for his office. They are not doing too bad. These people who are restraining themselves and trying to set an example for the Canadian public are spending about $23,000 and are saying that this is the way you are supposed to restrain your expenditures.

This document I have shows the name "Marchand". I am not sure where he fits in in all this except for the fact that he really likes to have things done up for himself. He is the biggest spender of all by far. The amount shown for renovations is $24,357. If one is to have such renovations one must also have a palatial office and palatial furnishings, so $20,000 was spent on furnishings.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I think the hon. member who has the floor should address himself to the Chair.

Mr. Coates: I am quite willing to address myself to the Chair even if it might not be very palatable. I just want to say that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand) did not like his departmental office and so he spent $44,000. He felt that if he were to do that for his departmental office he should also do it for his House of Commons office because he would be there once in a while. He just spent a minimal amount of $10,275 on his House of Commons office. He only spent $54,000 or $55,000 to make sure that he had the proper comforts when he went to his offices. The same fellow told us transport was in a mess. The whole government is in a mess, and the country is in a mess. The reason for this is this almost obscene spending on the part of members of the government who tell the Canadian people that they had better tighten up their belts and restrain. These are just some of the examples.

One of these ministers, Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) who did a lot of talking here, became upset, and forgot about that $62,000 he spent on the "Why Not" pins which he produced. I say to him that he should put his money where his mouth is and tell us what he, his deputy minister and his assistant deputy minister have spent, because this information is not produced. I suggest that if he wants to find out the reaction of Canadians about the "Why Not" pins they will give him 62,000 reasons why they should not have been produced for $62,000. You can bet your bottom dollar on that.

Let us now look at some of the individual expenditures. I was very interested in seeing just on what these ministers were spending their money. I looked at the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to see how the minister spent money on office renovations and new furnishings. This is rather interesting. For instance, in 1974-75 he bought three new steno chairs at a cost of $189.75 I say that is pretty reasonable. I looked further down on the sheet and I see that he bought one posture chair. I assume that is for him, a man of posture. He has been posturing for a long time with the Indians. But he spent $277 for the posture chair, which is three times as expensive as a steno chair. On top of that—and this was very interesting—he spent $500 for a water cooler. No doubt he takes a lot of aspirins every time the Indians come to see him to ask him what his policy will be with regard to them.

● (2020)

An hon. Member: Have you a water cooler?

Mr. Coates: Yes, I have one, although there are very few things that the government has been willing to give me. I think mine is a lot cheaper than that one.

Mr. MacFarlane: And you do not even have to worry about it, you do not have to report it.

Mr. Coates: Look, Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that I do not have to worry about the kind of hollering that is coming from the deputy whip, who very seldom makes a speech except from his seat and very seldom says anything that is worth listening to.

Mr. MacFarlane: That is another untruth.

Mr. Coates: If the deputy whip speaks for parliament, he certainly has no monopoly on truth, or can you tell the difference between truth and Trudeau in this country? I do not think so.

Mr. Paproski: Just one great big water hole.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Coates: I was impressed by the kind of expenditures that were outlined by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan), but I have to say that he is rather frugal in comparison with some other ministers and how they are spending their money. For instance, we have a chap in the other place who is supposedly a minister in the cabinet. He was a nobody when he was in the House, but all of a sudden when he got to the other place he became a member of the cabinet. If you think that the $277 chair of the Minister of Indican Affairs and Northern Development is expensive, just look at the way in which the minister in the other place is spending and you will get some idea of how grandiose your ideas can become when you get to the other place. One of his walnut and natural leather chair happens to have cost the Canadian taxpayer $635.71.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Coates: That is the kind of chair to have. I can see him relaxing in it, forgetting all the troubles he has, thinking about all the responsibilities he has and how the country will be run. He sits back in that beautiful walnut and natural leather upholstered chair which has cost the Canadian taxpayer $635.71. But if you receive an invitation to his office and go there, you will also find there nine other walnut chairs which cost the Canadian taxpayer $1,890.50.

Apparently, when you fix up your office you have to do it properly, even in times of restraint, even in times when you have to tighten up your belt, and so on. After all, if there is any money going around the cabinet ministers happen to have it, so they can look after themselves while everyone else tightens his belt.

The minister in the other place felt it was not appropriate to have only those nine walnut chairs at $1,890.50, and the walnut and natural leather chair. He also had to have a nice sofa. So he got himself one walnut and natural leather sofa on which he can lie back, recline, and think about those heavy problems he will have to face when he puts the government's position forward. So for a minimal expense of $1,084 he got himself a sofa.

But then the minister in the other place looked around his office and noticed that something was still missing there. "There is not enough here and I must do something about it", he said to himself. "I know what it is, I need some drapes", he said. So he thought about the kind of drapes that would fit in that office, he went out and found the drapes, which were very inexpensive when you consider the $635 chair, because they only cost the taxpayer $1,997.75. Now he has nice drapes which he can pull together, he can lie down on the sofa and look at the chairs, and, man, he is where one wants to be, he is where this government should be.

An hon. Member: Sharp.

Mr. Coates: They think they are, but one of these days they will have to face the unfortunate fact that they have to see the electorate, and when they see that electorate they will have to tell them how they put restraints into effect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Let him carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I do not see the hon. member rising and asking for more time.

Some hon. Members: Yes, he is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): If the hon. member will do so, then he must have unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the bill now under consideration is not the first anti-inflation measure presented by the government. Today the same government is asking us to approve some amendments aimed at making the anti-inflation legislation more logical and acceptable.

Mr. Speaker, during the next few months, we could see in the House a whole series of bills amending the anti-inflation legislation. Being as it is today, that is an inefficient, illogical and unfair measure full of loopholes, the government will have to amend it regularly to make its application possible.

Mr. Speaker, I will not hesitate to vote against the bill now under consideration, because I know that Bill C-89, as the anti-inflation legislation, is a poultice on a wooden leg, or an aspirin to relieve a minister of his headache, that is a measure with no useful effect.

An hon. Member: You don't know anything about it!

● (2030)

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, some hon. members are good to shout: "You don't know anything about it", but they are not good to rise in their place and speak out, as is the case with the hon. member opposite.

That does not mean, Mr. Speaker, that we do not know the government's good intentions. The question does not lie there. What Canadians are concerned about is not whether the government has good or bad intentions in introducing the Anti-Inflation Act, but rather whether the act will be efficient and put an end to the ravages of inflation.

The worker who gets only a small salary just wants to know if his salary will enable him to buy the goods necessary to feed his family and give them a decent living. He very well knows that due to the inflation rate we have experienced in the last few years, he could no longer give his family a decent living and is going bankrupt. With an inflation rate of 10 per cent a year, the value of each dollar earned by the sweat of his brow is reduced by ten cents every year. It is something that no one could tolerate for any length of time. After five years, his dollar would be worth only fifty cents, which is about what it is worth now.

An hon. Member: Hang on, you are doing well!

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): I hope you will have the guts to take the floor once I finish my speech.

After ten years, Mr. Speaker, the poor beggar's dollar is worth nothing. Even the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) can understand that, and that is why a few months ago the government finally decided to propose steps to fight inflation. Unfortunately the government have once again put their foot in it with their anti-inflation legislation.

Once again we have seen proof of that today. Public order is threatened everywhere in the country. Some revolting decisions, like the one taken in the infamous Irving case, have completely discredited the Anti-Inflation Board and its chairman. Canadian workers and even corporations will long remember this decision taken by the board. For the first time in the history of our country, we have witnessed the condemnation of a corporation which wanted to share its profits with its employees by granting them a wage increase. In other words, the Anti-Inflation Board has told those corporations: Keep your profits to yourselves. Get rich and prosper as much as you will, but don't give a thing to your employees. Don't share your profits with your employees, unless you want to pay a fine. And to make sure those same companies understand the message well, the AIB imposed a $125,000 fine to the Irving Company as a warning to other companies that are too generous towards their employees.

Who, Mr. Speaker, can blame other employers and companies for basing themselves on that ruling to refuse legitimate increases in salary? The companies can say: We would love to give you higher increases in salary. Last year was a good year. Profits were never as high. In fact, profits are the best ever but, unfortunately, we cannot give you a salary increase because we stand the chance of having to pay a high penalty. We would like to share our profits with you, our employees, but the AIB will punish us if we don't keep all our profits for ourselves.

That is what corporate employers say and will continue to say to Canadian workers. That is all the fault of the AIB, and the government comes and laughs right in our faces. Today, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) comes to see us and tells us: I have a good idea. Here are a few changes that will make the AIB more efficient. The English have the expression "to whip a dead horse".

This is just about what the minister does and what he want us to do. Even if we whipped a dead horse for centuries, we could not resuscitate it. We could at best keep flies away from it. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in whipping a dead horse. I do not want at all to be associated with this bill which tries to make the Canadian people believe that a patched up Anti-Inflation Board will be an efficient tool against inflation. We must admit, Mr. Speaker, that the Anti-Inflation Board is nothing more than unemployment insurance of $50,000 to $60,000 to pay people like Jean-Luc Pepin, who was defeated in his constituency of Drummond by a member of the Social Credit Party in 1972.

An hon. Member: By how many votes?

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): He did not come back, even if he did not get many votes. The population did not want him. So his good friend Pierre Elliott Trudeau, the present Prime Minister, found a cushy job for him, just as he did for his other good friend, Paul Gérin-Lajoie, the pope of CIDA. We read in the press that the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board—

An hon. Member: You are always reading! Read your paper correctly. Try not to make mistakes!

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): I might well be reading, but the hon. member should have the guts to rise and talk on that issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I think it would be appropriate if the Chair could hear the statement of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). The hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We learned through the newspapers that the Anti-Inflation Board Chairman is not a very "economical" person. We are aware that he travels at the Crown expenses and first class. Even cabinet ministers do not travel first class. At least, this is what is officially known.

We must admit that we are caught with a very expensive Chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, earning $50,000 a year, not taking into account his expenses. We know that the board's budget will be over $13 million in 1976. Mr. Speaker, that is where the money of the taxpayers and the workers goes. People who live richly and who take the right to deny small and middle wage earners raises that are in fact justifiable. Mr. Speaker, Canadians will never accept that. They will not tolerate such injustice. The government must find serious ways to fight inflation. It must find and apply real solutions to that problem, not a board composed of civil servants generously paid who tell people to tighten their belts, but serious solutions, no patching up, but a deep reform which would root out the disease from which our economy is suffering. That is what Social Crediters are proposing.

If members opposite are serious, they will have to read the bill introduced by the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada. An hon. member said a moment ago that he would like to be a senator, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), talking about the fight against inflation. Bill C-328 offers a new approach, specific means to control and eradicate inflation from our economic system. Now and again some hon. members criticize Social Crediters for being negative and for doing nothing more than opposing measures. I invite them to read the bill sponsored by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). They will see that Social Crediters propose a well defined strategy to fight inflation. They will see that they can give a lesson of logics and common sense to the civil servants and the ministers who laid that square egg which is the Anti-Inflation Board.

● (2040)

I do not intend to talk further about Bill C-328, as we are debating Bill C-89 today. But I believe it is important to point out to my colleagues opposite that the government's approach is neither the only one nor the best one to fight inflation. As I said earlier, the bill under study today is aimed at correcting the most obvious deficiencies of the Anti-Inflation Act. For this reason, the object of Bill C-89 is to extend the right to appeal from a decision of the Anti-Inflation Board and its administrator to all those who are affected by a decision.

This obviously would make less unfair a situation like that which prevails at Irving's and to which I referred earlier. We all known that in this particular case the workers could not, under the Anti-Inflation Act, appeal against the board's decision to turn down the salary increase granted by the Irving company. Indeed, the anti-inflation legislation gave the right of appeal only to the person or group to whom the administrator's order applied, in this case, the Irving Company. The bill before us now would also give this right of appeal to all those affected by an order, so as to include the workers who are the real victims of an order issued against their employer.

Mr. Speaker, do this provision and the other amendments proposed by Bill C-89 justify the expense of time, energy and money that this government is now making the House go through? For example the fact of making it possible for workers to appeal a decision issued against their emloyer seems to be, in our opinion, an improvement on the present situation.

To be logical, however, one must point out the fact that it is not normal or fair that the board and its administrator take the liberty of ignoring bona fide agreements between employers and employees.

[Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve).]

Mr. Speaker, when a company considers that its profits have been substantial enough to justify considerable wage increases for its employees, I find it senseless and unacceptable that the Anti-Inflation Board says to the employer and his employees: There is no way for the company to share its profits with its workers. It must keep its profits for itself, and workers must tighten their belts with a poor 12 per cent wage increase, whatever may be the company's profits.

Mr. Speaker, instead of granting a right of appeal to the workers involved in an order against their employer, it would be wiser for the government to withdraw from the Anti-Inflation Board the right and authority to get into the collective bargaining between employers and employees. Then, a prosperous corporation having made high profits could have its employees allowed a share of the profits, without having to be afraid of a $100,000 or $200,000 fine.

We should ask ourselves the following question: Is Bill C-89, an Act to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, worth being discussed now in the House? If one thinks in terms of the importance of the problem, the answer is yes, as we are all aware of the frightful havoc inflation is playing with the economy. On the other hand, if one thinks in terms of the value of government measures and the minor alterations the government is planning to bring to them, the answer is no. The government's anti-inflation program is a monumental failure. It has only resulted in public loss of confidence in the government and in governmental ability to solve problems.

Who can trust a government which tells the people: Tighten your belts and be content with a 12 per cent salary increase while government's expenditures keep soaring. What a fine example this is for the people who see government expenses jump by 16 per cent.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I am glad I had the opportunity to demonstrate that the bill is definitely not going to put an end to damages due to inflation and that the House will have to consider much more radical measures and more drastic reforms of our economic system if we are to obtain results in our struggle against inflation.

That is exactly the kind of reform and radical change to our economic and financial system the Social Credit is suggesting to the House and to the people of Canada. More and more, Mr. Speaker, we will have to admit that solutions put forward by Social Crediters represent our sole chance to beat inflation. A few years ago people used to say that the Social Credit theories would generate inflation. They used to say that with the Social Credit money would lose its value.

An hon. Member: Exactly!

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): It is true. There is one who is frank.

Today our money has almost no value. And the Social Credit party is not responsible for it but the present system is. Therefore our opponents have no other choice than to recognize that the inflation is due to our present economic system. And I anticipate, Mr. Speaker, that if Canada does not soon apply the economic theories of the Social Credit party, our economy may well be too close to total bankruptcy to be saved. This is why, Mr. Speaker, it is urgent to undertake a review and implement the proposals put forward by members of our party.

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that, by measure of restraint, I did not intend to take part in this debate. As a matter of fact, I preferred to leave the opposition criticize the waste of time that takes place here, because let us not forget that at a yearly income of $24,000, the working people expect us to do justice through the bill before the House.

I have heard the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) explain how he would protect workers through Bill C-89. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Villeneuve has failed to understand the essence of Bill C-89. He said earlier that the Irving Company wanted to redistribute profits among its employees and had been prevented from doing so. I ask the hon. member for Villeneuve whether he has any evidence that the company really wished to redistribute its profits. Was it not rather the other way round, namely that the company, knowing that controls were applied so efficiently, knew it could make such a proposal and be assured that the Anti-Inflation Board would reject it. That is more like what really happened. I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, whether these companies, the way they act, really want to put things where they belong, whether they really wish to give their workers the excessive profits they are making. I have very serious doubts about that. The amendments in Bill C-89 are aimed at providing workers with a still higher degree of justice. Those who feel they are affected in their collective agreement derived from fair and reasonable demands, those who think the Board may have erred in their decision, want the right of appeal they were not initially provided with.

With this legislation, we are going to give those people that right of appeal. This in my view is something quite extraordinary in this time and age. I believe it is only fair and reasonable that every worker in Canada have a right of appeal against the board's decisions, and such is the aim of Bill C-89 now before us. I would like to understand the rationale behind the contention of the hon. member for Villeneuve that Bill C-89 goes directly against workers. This legislation gives them rights, it confirms the rights they have as workers.

I am at a loss to understand. I wonder whether in the first place the hon. member read the bill that established the control board. The board's role is to review monetary offers at the employer-employee level. I am at a loss to understand how the Social Credit Party of Canada, the self-appointed free enterprise champion, wishes to defend huge monopolies as the Irving companies and others. I find it hard to understand how they, the self-appointed defenders of widows and orphans, are now taking sides with multinationals and big corporations. I am at a loss to understand. It is one of two things: either they lie outside Parliament, or they did not seriously consider what is in Bill C-89. This is the question the Canadian people ask themselves.

● (2050)

Mr. Speaker, all I want to try to explain to the Social Credit Party of Canada is that there are people, even unorganized workers, who have a right to fair increases. Some companies chose not to give any increase. Do we control them? No. But other companies decided simply to play a game and to offer much more knowing that our control measures would be very efficient, that they would prevent the proposed increase. They simply made extravagant offers, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) understood their game, so that the Anti-Inflation Board would reject them and the blame falls squarely on the government and on the hon. member for Villeneuve because he is a member of Parliament. The hon. member for Villeneuve ought to communicate with this kind of companies to try to teach them how to be good citizens as well as lots of things he and other members of his party would perhaps need to understand.

Mr. Speaker, I think the very essence of the proposed amendments with respect to the control board is to protect workers and give them a right of appeal. Earlier I heard another member of the official opposition read a list of expenses by ministers or deputy ministers. He did not read the expenses of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), he read those of the Prime Minister but not those that every member makes and is entitled to make under the law. He did not tell us that, he did not say how much a year he was spending under the regulations that allow us to spend. He forgot to say that, Mr. Speaker. I want to say here that out-of-context figures are being used, and there is an attempt to try and bias the very philosophy of our amendments.

Well, I would like to set the record straight. If people spent money it is certain that it was done under certain regulations or laws, and if those things were not done under certain regulations or laws, or if those things were illegal, I hope hon. members will denounce them. I hope hon. members will submit evidence and denounce those kind of things if it is not done under laws and regulations. I would like them to do so; the money of the public must absolutely be protected. And if there are people here who spend money uselessly and illegally it is the duty of every member of this House to stand up and say so and prove what they suggest, and not leave doubts that only members on one side of the House make excessive expenses and those on the other side are mere angels who do not spend but, on the contrary, take some out of their pockets and give it to Her Majesty every day.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that there are people here who will have to be more realistic. Let those who are here to vindicate workers, unions that deserve our respect, discuss Bill C-89 despite the fact that those who are against unions are on the other side of this House. I see the NDP members who did not yet take part in the debate on Bill C-89; are they going to show us the inherent justice in introducing a bill like C-89? Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, they will have failed in their duty, they who always said that they were here to protect not union members but unions—there is a nuance here. I am prepared to protect workers, union members, but I am not ready to prepare structures that represent nothing at all.

And the hon. member for Villeneuve wanted to protect multinationals and companies earlier. I am more prepared to protect workers and those who are underprivileged, who are not unionized, than big companies and big unions.

[English]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this bill before us is an amendment to Bill C-73 which was introduced last fall to attempt to control the increase in prices and wages across the country. At that time I voted against second reading of Bill C-73, not only because it was bad legislation but because it was inflationary. This particular bill before us, Bill C-89, is simply amending bad legislation. Members of the government did not think in the fall that there had to be appeal procedures when you give such arbitrary power to a board, and that is what is now in these amendments.

What I want to drive home to the government, particularly to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), who will carry the can for this particular legislation before the public in the next two or three years, is that this has turned out to be, as most people who talked about it for a while recognized last fall, a bill that was not only anti-labour in this country but was also against business. This is evidenced by the fact that in the small print at the end of the guidelines of last fall, there was a question about the export tax. When I asked the government when this was forthcoming, I was told it would be forthcoming before Christmas, and it was. But it did not last too long.

When business realized they were caught in the same sort of trap as labour was caught, and that it would not work and would not be fair, and labour recognized that they were in the same mess as business, labour and business got together. They went to see the provinces and forced the federal government out of the anti-inflation bill in so far as the export tax was concerned. That is what is going to happen to the whole bill. The bill, by the very nature of the human being, has to be unfair and unjust. Therefore you are going to find increasingly that the number of institutions and groups of people who are adversely affected are going to coalesce, like labour and business did with the provinces on the export tax, and throw this bill out. If they have to, they will throw the government out with it. That is to be the fate of this bill.

This is not a bill to fight inflation. This bill that we are debating and amending legislates inflation. That is why it is an evil that we all must fight. I was surprised indeed to hear the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) speak in favour of this principle this afternoon. He noted that the labour movement and the NDP were not opposed to this type of legislation "as long as you made it fair and as long as you applied it to prices as well as to labour."

That is nothing else but the acceptance on the part of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge of Galbraithean economics, which were an intellectual exercise 15 years ago but are passé today. The hon. member is not with it. He is apparently not aware that we have moved on from those intellectual half-truths of Galbraith and that Galbraith is known today as a humorist, not an economist.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I am surprised indeed to see that intellectual of the NDP, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge, endorse this pseudo-intellectualism passing under the name of Galbraith. I wondered about it until I read the Globe and Mail. There I found quoted a story taken from the NDP paper, advising the left not to get tied up with support of controls across the board, but just selective controls.

The minister should listen carefully because he cannot stop this type of controls with just 1,500 companies. It has now been expanded to thousands of companies. Soon they will recognize they will have to go further and further and extend it to all companies and to all individuals. We will have a complete system of controls all across this country for every form of activity. Once you start on the slippery slope of restrictive legislation to try to control wages, profits, dividends, prices and all the rest, in order to make it work you have to keep on expanding your power. It is like playing Canute with the tides.

I simply point out that this is bad legislation because of the danger of trying to put a system of controls into a free market economy which has proved to be, even with all its faults, the most productive system yet devised. Therefore I say to the minister that he will have to bear the can when the roof falls in on this attempt by ordinary mortals who try to lay down a plan that will work.

On December 2 last, instead of just being critical of the government for its great conversion to a concept of price and wage controls, I tried to put forward the doctrine on third reading of Bill C-73 that there was an argument for controls for a very short period of time to check the psychology of expansion of prices and wages. However, I stated that the only hope to make that concept of a freeze by selective controls work was that since the psychological effects could only be applied for a short time, in that short time the government should use all its strength and efforts to get at the basic causes of inflation. These basic causes of inflation have been well defined over the past ten years.

There is no argument about it. The number one cause of inflation today in all our western countries is the cost of government. We heard a few examples of that type of cost from the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates). It is going to be pretty hard for the members of the government to go into their constituencies, where people are living on fixed and low incomes, and tell them it is necessary every time there is a change of ministers or high officials in the government to redecorate the joint, and put in new furniture to suit their personalities.

● (2100)

After incurring costs as high as $10,000, $20,000 even $50,000 apiece to live the life they assume they ought to live as members of the present administration, they go around saying to the rest of us, "Tighten your belt, I may have a swimming pool in my yard but you can manage without". How are they going to explain these things to the people of New Brunswick, to those living in the rural areas of Quebec, on the eastern side of the Island of Montreal where some are living, or trying to live, on $2,000 or $3,000 a year? How can they explain why it is necessary to have the prestige of sitting on a $2,000 sofa or a $700 chair so that a minister can deal with his opposite number in dignity? It is going to be hard. The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North knows that ministers and senior civil servants must set an example.

At the present time 80 per cent of the cost of government at the federal level goes into programs over which the government has no control. Parliament has passed laws turning power away from parliament and the executive and placing it in the hands of independent boards and commissions which operate unchecked by effective control mechanisms.

Fixed expenditures of this type account for 80 per cent of the $35 billion or $45 billion which the government collects in taxes and general revenues. Until the government re-examines its expenditures, both the fixed type to which I have just referred and the kind which the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North is talking about, there is no chance of getting people to pull in their belts and live up to the level of restraint which is desired.

In the last two speeches I have made in this House I tried to put forward some constructive ideas about the best approach to these statutory programs, and to indicate directions in which the government could save millions of dollars. Mr. Speaker, I have not yet heard anyone on the government side make one response to those positive and constructive suggestions, though I felt them deserving of a great deal of attention since they would not only help the government save money but do the same for each of the provinces taking part in these statutory programs.

The number one problem responsible for inflation in the western countries is the fact that governments are taking for their own purposes such a large proportion of the wealth their nations produce. In Canada the figure is around 40 per cent. Out of every dollar produced approximately 40 cents is utilized by the government. Spokesmen for the administration say a great deal of this money is transferred back to people who need it. But no matter how you twist and turn, if you take a figure of that magnitude and translate in into transfer payments of any sort, the point is reached at which you push up the cost to the person who is working, and who has to provide for these transfer payments, to such an extent that an inflationary situation is created.

I would very much welcome an opportunity on a future occasion to speak about the possibilities which exist for governments of the future to utilize the tremendous savings propensity of the Canadian people in getting at inflation instead of seeing so much of our money going into transfer payments.

What do transfer payments mean, in simple terms? At the present time approximately four people are working and carrying one on their backs. Well, the minister could take this principle and arrange matters so that there is more money for everybody, provided the government is willing to adopt a more constructive approach. The way we are going now it will not be long before there are three people working and carrying one on their backs. There comes a time when the load is so heavy on those who are working that rebellion breaks out.

All of us want to do what we can to continue to provide necessary services such as hospitalisation, medicare, unemployment insurance, old age pension, accident insurance, and so on, because they are necessary part of an industrial economy. But if the load of transfer payments from the man who is working to the man who is not working becomes too heavy, the system collapses. That is why I plead with the government—please consider where you are taking us, because we want to save these programs. There is a way to save them. It is to have faith in the individual; if he is given a positive incentive to save he will do more to save money than any form of bureaucratic device.

I have put proposals forward twice in the last few months in the hope that the government will take notice of them before inflation grabs hold and makes this silly little bill to amend the Anti-Inflation Act meaningless.

I repeat, the first cause of inflation in all the western countries is the amount of money governments are taking out of national revenue for use as transfer payments which place too heavy a burden on those who are working. At present, as I say, the ratio is four to one. Soon it will be three to one. Ultimately those who remain at work will decide to carry the load no longer and then we shall lose the thing that everybody wants, these universal plans and so on.

A second major cause of world inflation is high interest rates. Everyone touches on this question of interest rates and then shies away from it. the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge touched on it—he is smart enough to know that high interest rates are a cause of inflation—but he said, finally, that governments could do nothing about it. On that point I disagree with him.

I have tried to put the matter in simple terms. If a person buys a home in one of our major cities at a cost of $50,000, a sum which nowadays would pay for a modest worker's home, taking out a mortgage for 30 years, the eventual cost of that $50,000 home will be $200,000. Interest payments account for $150,000. That is inflation, Mr. Speaker. That breaks the backs of a young couple who must work their way through that debt until they become old people.

The answer, Mr. Speaker, is not to pour out hundreds of millions of dollars in subsidies to help pay this interest, but to attack the root of the problem. The nation could stand it when the interest rate was 4½ per cent, but an interest rate of 12 per cent is not only killing the young couple trying to build a home, it is killing the whole nation because so much money is being taken to pay for something which is not productive in itself. The same applies to big business. I use the example of the oil sands.

If you get into an oil sands development calling for a $2 billion plant, the cost of oil per barrel, taking interest rates on capital into account, works out at $11. That is cost. Yet if you allow that oil company, in co-operation with the owners of the oil, the people, to pay off that debt quickly, you bring the cost down to $3 a barrel in four years. Then the oil company will be able not only to compete with any other country in the world in the production of that oil, but the owners of the oil, the people, would have a tremendous amount of money to divide, the bulk of which could go to the owners of the resource, the people, and for a very small amount the companies could be satisfied that they have a fair return for their money.

● (2110)

As I have mentioned in previous speeches, this could be done on a contractual basis, and there are precedents for it. I have referred to the British system. The British government is a so-called socialist government. They would not have got their North Sea oil developed in any other way. In the case of the Chevron company, which is a subsidiary of Exxon, that company was not going to go into risk development. But the British government got it to do so by telling it that they would not charge it anything except the traditional royalties if it would agree to pay off its debts first. As a result of this, the Chevron company paid off its debts in four years and two months.

The government then brought in its great big petroleum revenue tax, but the people of the United Kingdom still get as much money out of their oil as the Arabs, who went at this through a process of nationalization. Although there is a so-called socialist government in the United Kingdom, using a taxation technique called a rapid write-off the United Kingdom will have cheap oil when the rest of us are tied to $11 a barrel oil from Alberta.

I use this as an example to show that business is to blame as much as the government. When I put this proposal to the previous minister of finance in 1974 he had his officials study it and he came back with the answer that it was a fine suggestion, but unfortunately the companies do not finance in that way. That is the very point I am making. Somebody ought to take the lead and put this proposal on the table and, as I say, there are precedents for it in Canada.

We are talking about an inflationary force, Mr. Speaker. Just as a person who buys a $50,000 home wants some relief from the $150,000 in interest that he is going to pay, so does business want some relief from the billions of dollars of interest that it will pay on a $2 billion investment. This applies to every capital intensive enterprise in the country. The province of Quebec is going into this fantastic adventure in James Bay which will cost in the region of $20 billion. When I think of all the capital intensive enterprises that we will have to undertake within the next 30 years, interest will be the biggest part of the cost, the way we finance at the moment, accounting for roughly 75 per cent. This is the inflationary force that is killing our young people in the cities, our young farmers, and businesses.

To those who say there is no answer, I say that common sense is the answer. I have said in this House many times that if these two kinds of proposals do not give the government ideas, I have lots more to offer of the same nature already proven by other people.

It is a matter of record that in the new brave deal over in the North Sea, BRAE off the Orkney Islands, Canadian companies, that could not possibly make a living in Canada finding oil and gas under the present tax laws of the provinces and the federal government following the 1974 budget of Mr. Turner, have made one of the newest finds in the North Sea. They know that all the money that they have risked and invested in that oil field will be paid back in about four years, because the government over there will not tax them until the debt is paid off. The companies will not get any money either during that time, but in four years they will own and run a huge oil field, with the people of the United Kingdom getting around 60 per cent of the proceeds, so much being allowed for the expense of operating, and about 25 per cent going to these Canadian companies.

Most Canadians have not even heard the names of these Canadian companies which have had to go to the North Sea and develop the resources of the North Sea, under a government over there that has some common sense and recognizes that the enemy of these companies and of the people is interest rates. There you have a socialist government taking this course in order to reduce inflation by getting at the real enemy of interest rates, not across the board in some God given solution that cures all the problems in one act, but case by case, either by contract or by special concession, as this was. I think this is the sort of thing that the Canadian government should be doing, instead of tying down the Minister of Finance in order to try to make an act work that will not work. Let him take a look at these various proposals that get to the basic cause that is forcing up prices today, cost-push. Government is cost-push, interest rates are cost-push.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

My third example, which I have raised before and will do so again, is this: I wish that the government would go to labour at this point in our history, when they are so troubled about the implications of having a government take away their traditional freedoms they have fought for 200 years to win, the right of collective bargaining, and say to labour, "Will you sit down and talk to your opposite number in business; there has been fault on both sides; see if you can't get together and solve your problems". It is very clear to students of modern labour-management negotiations in the last 25 years that these negotiations have fallen into stultified, formal procedures that are costing the working man many dollars more than they should, hurting both the consumer and business.

In other words, too many of these negotiations end up in useless, wasteful strikes which hurt everybody. Now that labour is worried about losing its traditional right of collective bargaining, and now that business is worried about losing its freedoms to these controls, is it not time to sit down and take a look at each industry and see what can be done?

Let me give more tangible evidence of the truth of what I am saying, Mr. Speaker. If you took a look at nearly every industry in Canada and measured productivity over the last 25 or 30 years—and we have done so—measuring the amount of productivity coming both from capital investment and from labour, you would find there is a percentage formula all through the history of industry. If this traditional productivity formula were used instead of the strike technique, there would never need to be a strike because people would know ahead of time what their share was going to be. All you would need to do is negotiate occasionally in order to see that that percentage formula was commensurate with the amount that was put into the operation.

There are many examples of this. If the Minister of Finance wants to give the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) a chance to be in the light of the sun, to get off his seat and use the knowledge gained at the present time by management and labour in certain industries, let him see if he can bring in the type of legislation that provides that all future contracts be based on a no-strike understanding. We should never take away the right to strike, but rather base negotiations on productivity and on job security. This would mean portability of pensions and insurance, with labour controlling new jobs. There are also many other things done in isolated cases that are not done in labour-management negotiations across the country. In that event, Mr. Speaker, you would find that the most enthusiastic supporters of this kind of new labour contract would be not only business but also labour itself.

Labour is fed up to the teeth with being marched up to the Parliament Buildings and marched up to the offices of management in confrontation. Workers are fed up to the teeth with professional people on both sides who bargain on their behalf, and who make money by keeping the fight going for as long as possible. The people of this country, whether working men, businessmen or general consumers, plead with the government to recognize the fact that the sterile techniques of negotiation today need to be changed radically. This change will be made not by legislation but through leadership which shows how to do it. I think I know something of what I am talking about, and I hope the whole country will know a good deal more of what I am talking about when certain things develop in the next two or three weeks.

● (2120)

The fourth cause of inflation has been the money supply. I do not want to quote percentages because I think they are well known, but the money supply in this country has been controlled as though there was no awareness whatsoever of the relationship between the money supply and goods produced. This year we are suffering under tight money. Just what does tight money mean today? It means the government is only going to increse the money supply this year by 15 per cent. That is called tight money!

What has to be brought to the government's attention is that history in the last 25 years indicates that the use of the money supply mechanism is not the final answer to the monetary and fiscal problems of governments. This is a factor, but a very minute one. The government or Bank of Canada should be given a formula and told to keep with it. That formula should be based on the real gross national product interest plus the velocity of the increase in goods and services. With that two-point formula they should be able to maintain the money supply in relation to the gross national product and in that way take the cost push part out of the equation.

Let me go to the fifth point which is land costs. More correctly this should be called the urban policy. One of the great factors pushing up costs today has been the rush of people from the rural areas, along with immigrants, to our big cities. There are many reasons for this. When your growth rate in the cities is greater than a certain percentage you get this sudden increase in costs which shows up most dramatically in the cost of land, in the cost of your transportation systems and so on.

We have been talking about this for 20 years and the country is still lacking an urban policy that is concerned with the geography and people, and is concerned with the relationship between housing, transportation, and recreation. These are the things about which we have been talking.

The Association of Mayors and Municipalities has been passing resolutions for years and years, but always the government has taken the stand that it cannot do anything about this. The government has always taken the stand in respect of such resolutions from the Association of Mayors and Municipalities that it can do nothing about them because the city is the creature of the province. Boy, what a creature the city of Toronto is; what a creature Vancouver is! And the populations of Calgary and Edmonton are greater than the rural population. These are some creatures, including Halifax in Nova Scotia, and Winnipeg in Manitoba. We should get away from this crazy notion that these huge cities are just babes in arms, creatures of the provinces, with all these rising costs affecting the economic level of the cost of living of all the people of Canada, otherwise we in the federal parliament are not doing our duty.

Our duty is related to the economic health of this nation, keeping people employed and getting maximum production and wealth, and seeing that there is an equal distribution of that wealth. We must come up with an urban policy and, believe me, there are lots of opportunities available to keep the minister in charge busy for some time finding out what it is all about, taking his mind off the refurnishing of his office and doing what he is supposed to be doing.

With all the legislation in place, including the Housing Act and CMHC, and with all the experience we have gained from many countries, land costs could be brought under control. In that way we could be of assistance to the municipalities instead of there being the hurdles that every provincial government, the federal government, and every individual have to face today in the attempt to develop in the big cities.

There is no evidence whatsoever in any of the literature I have read in the last few years to indicate that the Government of Canada has a clue as to how to use the fact that Canada now has a floating exchange rate. The government does not seem to realize that once you let your dollar float in relation to every other currency, instead of inflation being a world problem it becomes a domestic problem. You could not find a single economist on the whole face of this earth who would deny the truth of that statement.

Once you let your currency float in open relationship to other currencies then the power to control inflation comes right within the national power. How do you use this power? I have not heard one speech of all those speeches the minister has delivered, from one end of the country to the other and around the world, that even attempted to deal with this opportunity.

If you take a look at the inflation rate in Great Britain and the inflation rate in the United States and in Canada for a period of 30 years, you will find that it corresponds exactly to the rate they have deflated their currencies, and this is a very well documented point of view. I have not seen one single sign on the part of the advisers to the government, the Bank of Canada or any of the ministers to indicate that they are even aware that this tool to fight inflation is right in their hands.

I hope a budget debate comes along soon so that some of us can put forward some of the information that is available to any person who has the time to read it. The way the government operates it is too busy running around showing itself to everybody and being visible. It is too busy wondering what the press is thinking about it to have any time to read, and certainly to think. I would hope in the interest of the nation that the government would consider dedicating the time of at least one of its ministers to getting around to looking at the basic documents, and I am thinking of the 1964 report on finance by the Porter Royal Commission and the modern theories of the last two or three years known as the Mundell-Laffer policies.

I would suggest that these six types of cost push inflation are the things on which the government should spend some time. These are the real causes of inflation, and the government should direct its attention to these, forgetting its public relations and its posturing with Bill C-73 and the amendments in Bill C-89. If the government forgot this nonsense in its fight against inflation this country would be better off. Bill C-73 and this amending bill are inflationary, and the more you repress inflation the worse it is when you take off these controls.

I am going to suggest that the minister is on a slippery slope with this type of legislation. He should spend his time getting at the basic causes of inflation. He is getting into this deeper, and now he is getting into the very doubtful constitutional aspects of dealing with the provinces. He knows that the courts must eventually rule on the legislation. He knows that the axe is going to fall for that reason at any moment, and by "at any moment" when dealing with the courts I mean several months. Therefore he knows in his heart he should get out of this silly control mechanism and get into the fight against inflation by using his time usefully.

I hope that in the budget, that should be coming up sometime this year or next year, and with these sessions of two or three years you never know when the minister will take into account this principle, taking to heart that in the budget he should take advantage of the fact that Canadians are the most saving people in the world, and the fact that savings are the key to the fight to stop inflation. I hope he will take to heart the fact that savings will provide the capital we need; the capital that is the cause of so much consumer expenditure. Everything in that budget should be to encourage the little people, the middle sized and the rich to save. The budget should be designed to encourage companies to save so that this money can be put into these tremendous development projects we need.

Secondly, I hope in this budget the minister's taxes are related directly to rewarding people who save and give us greater productivity. If you reward productivity and savings, automatically you get at most of the causes of inflation. Then you can turn this country away from a restrictive type of posture into one which expands in a positive constructive way. In this way we can get this country away from the attitude of restriction.

● (2130)

I know the chief advisers to the government for many years have fully believed that the way to run this country is to have everything possible controlled by them. They believe in restriction like a socialist used to at one time. They will work every minute of the day to give you restrictive policies. What we have learned by now is that when you have a government taking 40 per cent out of the wealth of the nation you reduce the efforts of the nation by that amount. Suppose that government money that was taken out of the nation's wealth was taken through a budget program of taxation aimed at rewarding savings and productivity, then instead of the government part being a load on the economy we would be co-operating and harmonizing with the economy and would get this country back to 100 per cent operation.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

I have noticed in this last year or so that hardly anyone speaks any more about the fact that we have a 7 per cent unemployment rate. One of the ways to get extra wealth and to get at inflation is to get our people back to work. Give us the productivity so that we will have the savings in order to have the capital. This is a strong country. Let us get the country off the backs of the people and get it working with business and with the working man. This is the type of approach we should take.

Above all, Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance brings down his budget, let him get rid of those silly resource taxation proposals of the two Turner budgets of 1974. Get off the backs of our provinces. They have a right to live. Get off the backs of our resource companies. We will need them to develop our country. We do not want to drive them to the North Sea or to Indonesia. We have a great future in Canada if we could get the restrictive people in the Department of Finance off our backs. Make the budget a private enterprise budget. Make it one which rewards the person who saves and the person who produces. This country is strong and will be strong if we can get this government off our backs.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me an opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-89. For those in this House who do not understand, or indeed who do not want to understand why 15,000 to 20,000 working men and women in this nation would converge on Parliament Hill as they did today, let me tell them, as one who grew up in the labour movement in this nation, that these men and women have fears, and indeed justifiable fears, that this legislation spells the end of the collective bargaining system in this nation.

As one who can recall the time he had to work in a coal mine for one dollar a shift, in the great, halycon and glorious days of a Liberal administration under the late lamented—I do not say demented—Mackenzie King, I can say this was a disgrace. This was the situation until a fool by the name of Hitler came along and gave us all a job. In 1940 we had reached the great sum of $3 a shift. I have done some research and have found an envelope which shows I worked 4¾ shifts at $1 a shift for a total of $4.75. That was under a Liberal administration.

As one who worked in the mines in those days I knew that the only salvation for me and many like me was the unionization of the coal mines so that the miners could look forward to bargaining for fair play, fair pay, and fair working conditions. The collective bargaining system has been the cornerstone of security for the wage earner in this nation. This legislation, and the amendments we are debating at this time, do so much damage to the collective bargaining system as we have come to know it and rely upon it that, to all intents and purposes, it is destroyed.

The minute limits are introduced upon what a person or a union can bargain for is the very minute collective bargaining is replaced with compulsory arbitration. Of course it is easy for the government and others of like thinking to say this had to be done because otherwise these characters would go on strike. We have had many strikes. However, had there been leadership from the government we probably would not have had as many strikes as we have had. Do not get me wrong, Mr. Speaker. I am not saying that the leaders in the labour movement are angels or that all the unions do the right thing all the time. But they never make one tenth or one hundredth the number of mistakes the government has made since 1968 in the so-called just society which we have never seen, or in the judges' society, as someone said.

As a member from the maritimes I say this can only result in the destruction of any hopes workers might have had in my area that there would be a chance to catch up with workers in the more prosperous parts of our country. Not only is there the fear that this will be the case, but we have the hard evidence. It is indeed the fact, as has been shown by the Anti-Inflation Board in its reaction to the Irving settlement. Those employees will not get what their employer felt they had a right to receive, and which their union felt they had a right to receive. The board has served notice on other employers in the maritimes and in Canada that they better not try to provide increases over the proposed guidelines or they will face the additional financial losses that the Irving Company must now pay to the tune of $125,000.

Some time ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) said his proposed legislation would be frightening. Man, was he ever right! As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) said, to the extent that it is necessary to bring in more and more rules and government controls, where does it stop? During the remarks made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, the empty barrel, the Liberal whip, kept saying that Muir agrees with him. I do not know what he speaks about half the time but I wish, Mr. Speaker, you would suggest that he might use what little brains he has.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It will be a point of privilege. I would like to say to the hon. gentlemen who has been speaking that if my constituency received one third of what he has received in his over the last eight years I would not get up in the House and say anything.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. I realize that this is intended to be a wide-ranging debate because of the very nature of inflation, but some of the exchanges which seem to have developed around the hon. member who has the floor do not seem to be quite within the spirit of even a wide-ranging debate. The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys.

● (2140)

Mr. Muir: As usual, the point of order or question of privilege was as phony as the hon. member himself. There was no question of privilege there and no point of order.

If things are as bright as the hon. member says they are in my constituency in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, and in the Atlantic provinces, why do we have at present unemployment in Cape Breton Island of 25 per cent to 30 per cent? Let him answer that.

Mr. Landers: Answer it yourself.

Mr. Muir: The juvenile member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers) will not be around here too long, so he can interject. He can make his maiden speech from his bottom also, but he better get to his own seat before he does it.

As I said, this legislation only serves to increase the degree of regional economic disparity we now face, but that is not something new, for in Cape Breton Island we are facing unemployment that is even more extreme, I suggest, and more chronic than was the fate of our people during the dirty thirties.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Keep on reading.

Mr. Muir: At least I have notes and make some sense, which is more than the member does.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: All this under the just society of the musing Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Remember that just society we heard so much about? We do not hear much about it any more. The new member in the back row opposite is trying to take part in this debate. We have not seen him around very much. The just society is not in existence any more and it has not been since 1968, but the number of those who join the army of the unemployed increases rather than decreases.

Whether you work or are unemployed, these days in Nova Scotia it has almost reached the point where you cannot afford the luxury of living in our area. The power bills with which people are faced today provide them with the prospect of seeing the often quoted phrase of last year "let them freeze in the dark" become a reality for the people of my constituency in Cape Breton and all of Nova Scotia. We have received neither support nor protection from this legislation which tells workers they can only expect wage increases of 8 per cent, 10 per cent or 12 per cent, yet they see their power bills increase 50 per cent, 100 per cent or 150 per cent.

We do not even receive as much as a consoling word from the Grit appointees on the Anti-Inflation Board who must try to run protection for our globe trotting premier who is so seldom in Nova Scotia that he has little real appreciation of the plight of the people whom he is supposed to be protecting. The grim realities of life in Nova Scotia are that premier Gerald Regan and his government's policies, coupled with the decisions of the Anti-Inflation Board, are quickly putting into effect the philosophy and policies recommended by Walter Gordon in his infamous royal commission report that we buy one-way tickets for our people to other parts of Canada. This policy is being put into action more effectively than anything that has happened in the close to 19 years during which I have been here as a member of the House.

Instead of policies which give us hope, we get kicked in the teeth over and over again. For every step we manage to take forward we find that federal government legislation takes us two steps backward. Is it any wonder one sometimes reaches the almost inescapable conclusion that there is no one in Ottawa who gives a damn for our area and our people?

We have discovered that the cabinet minister from my province has reached the point in his career at which he is more interested in riding camels in Egypt than in the unemployed of Cape Breton. If there are any doubts about that fact, they were eliminated when he told a recent gathering of Grits in Halifax that they should pay little or no heed to my efforts and those of the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) as we fight for a better deal for Cape Breton. Apparently they should rely upon him in his new globe trotting role as he tries to emulate the premier of Nova Scotia, who appeared to have about the same amount of concern, as he wandered through the Far East or the Middle East distributing largesse, grants, and long-term 50 year loans at a low rate of interest.

Perhaps if we separated from Confederation we could apply for foreign aid, and perhaps then our request would be heeded. If you look at the record of foreign aid in the form of grants and long-term 50 year loans at a very low rate of interest you find it is very easy for foreign countries to receive that type of assistance from our government.

The cynicism of Cape Bretoners is about the same as the cynicism of the 15,000 to 20,000 marchers on the Hill today who forfeited their pay cheque so that they could back the immediate, real, and continuing concern of the CLC over this legislation, a concern which has been consistent, responsible and constructive.

There is no protection in this legislation for the wage earners of this nation, either in Bill C-73 or in Bill C-89. In the short period that the act has been in effect it is already obvious that the only benefactor is the new army of public officials who will interfere to a far greater degree than at any other time in the past in the lives of the people of this nation. Yes, the just society is just for them, but the task they will perform is to place a far greater number of those who are now gainfully employed on the unemployment rolls of the nation. This is the last thing we need or can afford at this time, but that is what we have and will continue to have as this cancerous operation weaves its tentacles into every aspect of the life of this nation, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain said.

I see this new society about which the Prime Minister spoke during his year end philosophizing, or musing as some termed it, and I do not want any part of it. My constituents want no part of it and, from what I can glean, the people of this nation want no part of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: This government has frozen the wages but not the prices, as has been noted by everyone in this country who has an ounce of brains.

The Prime Minister tells the Canadian people in so many words, "Why, you have been on a spending spree! You have been spending like a drunken sailor. You have to cut back, you have to show restraint". He blames it all on the Canadian people. The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) outlined a few of the expenditures of the cabinet ministers and of the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister or his government shown any restraint since 1968? I say, no. I say to the Prime Minister and his government: heal thyself. I say to this government—I think members in the House will recall that—that the blame also lies with their former cohort, John Turner, who went along with them for years, who went along with those crazy policies which got us in such a mess today. For God's sake, I say to this government, get cracking and get us out of this mess in a hurry, despite the feeble moans of the Liberal whip.

[Mr. Muir.]

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I have only a few minutes left, and as a good brother, I agreed with my counterpart of the Progressive Conservative party to let another Conservative member speak immediately before me, but nevertheless, I will do my utmost to say what I have to say within the time at my disposal.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take the floor at this stage of the debate on Bill C-89 which is now before us. This legislation contains some provisions which enable those who are affected by the application of the anti-inflation legislation, Bill C-73, to appeal to a non-partisan body. Bill C-73, which was put forward last fall and is now in the statute books had the effect of controlling wages for a period of three years or more. However, in spite of all our claims the present government has recognized the growth of companies, multinationals, interest rates, food prices, and increases in the communications, speculations and energy fields.

A question comes to my mind: What caused the inflation? If one looks at the statistics, one sees that from 1970 to 1974, labour income in Canada has risen from $46.7 to $75.9 billion, an increase of 62.6 per cent. As for the increase in aggregate profits, they have gone from $7.5 to $18.3 billion, that is an increase of 138 per cent. As far as interest rates are concerned, they have jumped from $3.4 to $7 million, an increase of 104.6 per cent.

In 1972, the average weekly wages of the Canadian worker were $108.13. Two years later, in 1974, they were down to $105.50, due to inflation. And in 1975, all workers who want to catch up with the cost of living increase are restrained by an unfair legislation, Bill C-73. Mr. Speaker, this legislation has not gained wide public support; it is at the expense of the working people and does not protect the working class. Should this government some day respect and protect the human being instead of capital and profits, there will no longer be any inflation. And at that moment, life will be better. There will be fewer drugs and murders, more frankness and co-operation.

Mr. Speaker, if this government changes its goals and applies its legislation in a fairer way for all the Canadian people, I am convinced that the situation will improve. And how will this be possible? By stimulating production. And to improve production, it is essential to produce more. And to produce more, it is essential to work harder.

● (2150)

There are several solutions to this problem, several capitalist solutions which are more or less valid, but for a Social Crediter like myself, there is only one solution.

An hon. Member: Be specific!

Mr. Allard: Mr.Speaker, I would like a chance to speak. I think that I have a very civil attitude, and when my hon. friends are speaking, I let them do so without interruptions. I therefore ask them to be quiet and tactful and to let me speak.

I was saying that for the Social Credit Party, there is only one solution, and that is compensated discount. What does compensated discount mean? It means additional purchasing power. With this additional purchasing power, the consumer can meet a greater number of his needs, which means a greater demand for the producer and more work to meet this demand. This is quite logical!

In these days, production is not a problem. Here is the proof. In spite of an average unemployment rate of 10 per cent or more in the labour force, we produce so much that there are surpluses. The true problem is consumption, but unfortunately taxes, levies and commitments of all sorts reduce the purchasing power of consumers. And when less is consumed, surpluses accumulate, and this results in unemployment.

In 1974, 1975 and 1976, there have been complaints that unemployment will cost the state $4 or $5 billion. Why not have a more human and more realistic program while providing work for the unemployed and making them do profitable work, like building senior citizen or low income housing, helping farmers, building roads, since we know that we all need roads, protecting wildlife and cleaning our beaches. I come from the Gaspe Peninsula, where there are beautiful beaches. Unfortunately, the tides often leave behind them seaweeds and uprooted plants that naturally mar their beauty. Our unemployed, who are paid to do nothing, could easily be sent there where, doing useful and pleasant work, they would regain their dignity.

If the government really wants to fight inflation, it must take whatever steps are necessary to make sure that Canadian workers do not lose their taste for work, and keep their pride and dignity. You do not increase production and develop a country by paying men and women to twiddle their thumbs. The surest way of killing a human being, morally or physically, is to pay him to remain idle. Those then, Mr. Speaker, are ways of reducing unemployment and allowing the unemployed to build instead of destroy. If such an idea can be applied by good governments, I am convinced the result will be marvellous and for the betterment of all Canadians.

The government would be killing two birds with one stone: it would stave off inflation and gild Canadian patriotis manew. That, Mr. Speaker, is the objective of the party I represent.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—REDUCTION IN FARM BROADCASTING—POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak tonight because there is something seriously wrong with CBC farm programming, and especially with its radio farm news coverage. First the quantity of broadcasting hours has been diminishing gradually but steadily over the years. In Toronto at station CBL the reduction of air time has been 50 per cent in the last ten years. Second, the quality of broadcasting has suffered a similar fate. Coverage of major agricultural events has diminished or disappeared, replaced by quasi agricultural matters under the guise of farm broadcasting. Third, I believe there is a personnel problem. At one time not very long ago the CBC farm staff was absolutely outstanding. Because of a series of policy changes, according to my information, the CBC has lost some excellent people and the morale, among those remaining, is at an all time low.

● (2200)

Finally the CBC, in my opinion, because possibly of its emphasis on decentralization has ignored its national responsibility. I do not quarrel particularly with the need to develop regional broadcasting. What the corporation has overlooked is the value of a national farm perspective.

Many aspects of agriculture in the prairies, for example, have a direct effect on the farm producers of my area of Perth-Wilmot. May I quote the recent bulletin of the Canadian Broadcasting League which outlined the Canadian Federation of Agriculture's position in this regard:

> The loss of a national thrust to agricultural programming is very unfortunate when there is such an urgent need for national understanding and federal-provincial co-operation to make national policies and programs effective.

On February 27, because of a steadily increasing number of complaints across Canada, I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) what he was doing with respect to restoring CBC radio farm news broadcasting to a reasonable level, in terms of both quality and quantity. The minister in reply said in part:

> I think it is deplorable that they—the CBC—are curtailing farm broadcasting especially in the Toronto area.

While I do not always agree with the Minister of Agriculture, I certainly am in complete accord with him on this issue. In my opinion the CBC has abrogated its responsibilities in terms of its obligation not only to farm listeners but to many thousands of city dwellers as well who are keenly interested in agricultural issues because of their importance in today's economy.

Therefore, also on February 27, I asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), to whom the CBC is responsible, if he favoured that corporation's policy, that is, the downgrading and gradual elimination of radio farm news, because the CBC regards such programs as "ghetto" broadcasting, according to some press reports. The Secretary of State in reply suggested I raise the matter with CBC officials when they bring their estimates before the appropriate standing committee and I certainly intend to do just that; however, as the Secretary of State knows full well, when we are studying such estimates in committee we do not have the time to examine, in sufficient detail, CBC broadcasting policies. We are lucky if we have any more than two or three hours to study CBC proposed expenditures of almost $416 million.

I suggest tonight to the Secretary of State a course of action which I hope will be acceptable to him, his cabinet colleagues and to all hon. members. I suggest a course of action that has good precedent. The Secretary of State will remember that some two or three years ago the CBC reduced or eliminated broadcasting its Gaelic programs in certain parts of the maritimes. That matter, at the instigation of a member of the opposition, was referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts where, in an atmosphere of concern, diligence and non-partisanship, it was resolved. That was a good precedent and one that, in my opinion, is applicable to the situation with regard to farm news broadcasting.

The situation is obviously of concern to the Minister of Agriculture who calls it deplorable. The situation is obviously of concern to the Secretary of State who, on February 27, told me that the government's concern has been communicated to the CBC. Such being the case, I urge that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. I am prepared to instigate this if I can detect some willingness on the government's part to agree that the whole matter of CBC farm broadcasting be aired thoroughly in committee.

I believe that this, first, would be responsive to the concern and complaints expressed by many radio listeners in various parts of Canada. Second, I believe committee hearings would be a responsible course of action. I can put it no better than the editorial in a recent edition of "Farm and Country" which said in part:

> The issue really goes deeper than actual farm programming. Basically, it is one of who really determines policies that are in the best interests of the general public. Certainly, Secretary of State Hugh Faulkner, who has the CBC under his wing, must intervene, as must Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan. Also we urge all our M.P.s in Ottawa to take up the cudgel in defence of good CBC farm and consumer coverage.

I, for one, and I am sure there are many other hon. members, am willing to accept this challenge because I believe it is important and I believe that it is urgent.

The Minister of Agriculture seems to believe that privately owned radio stations should replace the CBC in farm broadcasting. He said on February 27:

> So, if the private sector can do this, and maybe better than the CBC, more power to them.

That possibly is true, and the broadcasting committee should hear evidence and witnesses in this regard from both the CBC and private stations. Mr. Speaker, thank you for permitting me these few minutes to draw to the attention of my colleagues in the House this problem which is a national and a serious one, but, more important, one with which we are capable of coming to grips. I look forward with optimism to the Secretary of State's reaction to my proposal.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the CBC that no such cutback in CBC material directed to rural listeners has occurred. In some instances the actual time of presentation of the agricultural material within the noon hour period has been adjusted to reflect the listening habits within that region, but in all cases CBC maintains the same service to rural listeners in the early morning, throughout the noon hour period, and in many instances with late market reports in the late afternoon.

In addition, within the past 18 months CBC radio news has appointed its first agricultural specialist, Mr. Glenn Powell, and this appointment has resulted in increased agricultural coverage in mainstream programming during those periods of the day when CBC Radio enjoys its highest audiences, for example, "The Worlds at Eight and Six", "Sunday Magazine," and so on.

The CBC through its management has been engaged recently in meetings with such organizations as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, with a view to assessing and improving its service to rural listeners.

There is in every region a report and analyses on agricultural matters following the 6:30 news in the morning. I can speak personally of one radio station in my area. On Monday morning when I am on the road back here I listen to one of the agricultural representatives who does a very good job. There is definite market and other specific information for farmers between 12 noon and one o'clock, and frequently between one and two p.m. more extended coverage of agricultural concerns either through reports or phone-in programs, or both.

An attempt is also made to link agricultural and consumer information in order to give urban listeners a better understanding of the food cycle.

In addition, as has already been mentioned, CBC radio provides late afternoon market reports before "The World at Six". Because of the changes in radio broadcasting patterns generally over the past ten years, agricultural material tends to occur in many parts of the schedule where it did not appear a decade ago, for example "As It Happens" and other national programs.

However, as this extension into other program areas has occurred, CBC has always retained the essential agricultural information which we know that our rural listeners require in the noon hour period. One example of this extension has been the development of two syndication services. One of these contains general daily agricultural items for broadcast on all stations and the other is produced from Ottawa by the national agricultural representative, Mr. George Price, and is tailored specifically to the needs and interests of rural listeners in all points of the country.

I remind the House that the main estimates will soon be before the committee until the end of May. As the hon. member mentioned, perhaps during that time he can discuss further his questions with representatives of the CBC.

HEALTH—REQUEST FOR EXPANSION OF PILOT PROJECT FOR SCHOOL MILK PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it grieves me that we in parliament seem to have lost all perspective of our responsibility to Canadians. One most grievous area of concern prompts my appearance here tonight to debate my question addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) on March 2 with regard to the plight of hundreds of thousands of Canadian children who are undernourished. More important, the government could take great strides to correct this deplorable situation with a little common sense, human compassion, and understanding for the youth of our country who are victims of poverty through no fault of their own.

My question that day was prompted by an announcement by the Canadian Dairy Commission that there were 400 million pounds of surplus milk products and that they were in a dilemma with regard to finding methods of disposing of it, either offering it to communist countries for less than 14 cents a pound after paying producers 64 cents a pound or, alternatively, selling the surplus as animal food.

● (2210)

I have to wonder, and indeed it is impossible for me to realize, that the government is worried how to dispose of the surplus when to use just one example, the answer is right in front of its eyes. I refer to the National Council of Welfare report on children in poverty, which gives figures indicating that 1.6 million Canadian children are living in poverty. The simple answer is, as I have said on several occasions, to introduce a national school food program, already the subject of study by various provinces.

I feel very strongly about the alarming and frightening facts brought out in the report entitled "Poor Kids." This report should be read by every member of parliament. More, it should be read by all those in our bureaucracy who spend so many millions on such programs as Sports Canada or Recreation Canada. They seem to think the road to success is to produce champions who win gold medals, by directing all efforts to the few who, thank God, happen to have the basic attributes to be developed to that stage where they can compete.

I ask the question: what do we do with those one and a half million of our children who don't have the basic start in life to be able to participate in sports because they happen to be poor? I should like to refer to only one paragraph of that report to emphasize that they either don't know, or don't care to realize that the answer to ensuring a physically fit Canada is not to produce a few champions but to ensure the physical development of all Canadians. The championships and the gold medals will then take care of themselves.

I wish to quote from a paragraph in the report as follows:

> School is where the child of the poor ... who is restless ... cannot concentrate ... is cranky and sleepy ... is seen as a case for the psychologist ... when what he needs is a real breakfast or lunch ... and not an analyst's designation as a problem child.

The reason he falls within this category is because he is not getting the fundamental, basic nutrition, either because his parents are too poor to provide the proper food or are unaware of what a child needs to eat to build up his or her young body and mind properly.

Commenting on representation with respect to a school food program, the minister advised me that pilot projects were taking place in two of the eastern provinces. I found that one project in Prince Edward Island is operating on a research study grant financed by the federal government and is being undertaken by the University of Prince Edward Island, with three schools involved, as are many of the other provinces in Canada. Many individual schools are exploring the best methods of initiating school lunch programs. But I say to the minister that it is the responsibility of the federal government to take the lead in implementing a national school food program for one fundamental reason—to ensure the proper physical development of children who are the victims of poverty or lack of parental guidance and concern.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I became very disturbed when I received in my office a fancy folder entitled "The Fit Kit", which is designed to show adult Canadians how to keep fit, and I say to the minister that we need a Kit on Youth Canada or Nutrition Canada. I also say that in order to have a strong Canada we must concentrate more effort on our youth, even to the point of establishing a ministry of youth.

The frightening and embarrassing situation which exposed the 400 million pounds of milk product surplus had its day in court on March 2 and, unfortunately, was not the sexiest of topics with which we in parliament are concerned. But I have to say that it is a blemish on government and even on this parliament that such a topic is passed over so lightly by each and every one of us here. I conclude by making this plea: In view of the government's responsibility to all Canadians, whether they be rich or poor, and in view of the disturbing number of under-nourished children in Canada and the consequence this will have on the quality of future Canadians, the government should provide emergency assistance, making use of the known surplus of milk products, and create immediately a food distribution program in all Canadian schools to raise the nutritional level of Canada's poor children and ensure thereby the discharge of our responsibility to Canada's future.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as far as the government is concerned let me assure the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) that this is not a subject that the government regards lightly. There is no moral defence to the wasting of enormous quantities of surplus skim milk powder or its apparent spoilage, not only because the world is full of malnourished people but because in our own country, as the hon. member has noted, there are far too many of our own children suffering from inadequate and improper nutrition.

I want to explain to the hon. member that the surplus milk we are talking about is not a permanent stock. It is not a surplus that will endure and upon which a sensible long-term or even short-term program can be built. It is a temporary surplus. It is a surplus that should never really have come into existence and which will not exist in the future.

The Government of Canada is very concerned about the nutrition of our children. At present various initiatives are under way. For example, guidelines for school lunch programs, developed in collaboration with provincial health officials, are nearing completion and will be available for distribution this coming summer. In addition, in collaboration with the government of Alberta, an evaluation is being conducted of a school lunch program for native children, and this evaluation is in its third year. Also a national health grant of $90,000 has been awarded to the University of Prince Edward Island to evaluate the effectiveness of a school lunch and nutrition education program. We are looking into ways of supplementing the nutrition of Canadian children.

I want to point out to the hon. member that the skim milk powder to which he is referring is not free. It is not even the property of the Government of Canada, but the property of the producers. If we were to decide to take that property from them and allocate it to some national program, this has to be done on the basis of its value. It has to be bought. When one considers buying it, one has to ask: is skim milk powder the right thing to buy in order to meet the nutritional needs of the young children of Canada?

Skim milk powder is not an attractive food. Its nutritional value is undoubted, but as we can see from the market it is not something that is in great demand. When one is considering having a reserve and allocating it to this program, one has to think of other alternatives. What else can we use? In what other ways might we best proceed to deal with this problem?

I simply note in closing that on this important question we must rely very heavily under our constitution on the jurisdiction of the provinces. We are in the process of developing a new social services act, but this act will not change the fundamental constitutional responsibility of the provinces to determine the type of programs and the type of social services that are to be purchased within the provinces for people. We are bound by their decisions.

TRANSPORT—PROPOSED REMOVAL OF SUBSIDY ON EXPORT FLOUR—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to see you, the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger), gracing the chair this evening. If I were not caught within the seven minute limit I would recall at some length my satisfaction and pleasure at this event and our association as "old boy speakers" of the twenty-ninth parliament of Canada.

● (2220)

Now, sir, in a few weeks time we are likely to be told that Russia is seriously reconsidering a deal under which, in normal circumstances, that country would purchase 375,000 tons of Canadian flour this year. How should such a situation that I forecast come about? The answer is that recently the government announced that its subsidy on the movement of flour and grain for export through eastern ports, that is, Montreal, Saint John, and Halifax, would be abolished. Presumably this also would mean that the hold-down on floor rates which has existed since September 30, 1966, would also be abolished.

This policy change has come without warning to the flour milling industry of Canada, and I owe most of my speech to the research of the Canadian National Millers Association and its brief, as presented by Mr. J. F. Blakney, its chairman, to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and other ministers of the government.

This is a serious situation, Sir, and the significance of the decision is that it means that perhaps we will see a rail rate increase of from $17.64 to $22.05 per metric ton on flour exports. When Canadian millers went to argue with those hard nosed and hard headed Russian importers they were told very flatly that if they came along with an increase in the cost of Canadian flour, because of Canadian freight rate changes, they were going to be in for great difficulties indeed.

[Mr. Kaplan.]

How serious is this matter? In 1954, 21 years ago, Canadian millers were exporting over 20 million one hundred weight of flour annually, about 31 per cent of the world trade. Twenty years or so later that figure dropped to about 8.5 million hundred weight, or 11 per cent of the world flour trade. That is a substantial decline indeed.

I should like to recall briefly the circumstances under which this help to the export flour trade originally came about. It was established first in 1961 by the Diefenbaker government, but it was continued by the Pearson government, for four principal reasons; to encourage the continued use of eastern ports, to help keep Canadian flour companies competitive in world markets, to promote and assist in the development and expansion of Canada's grain industry, and to benefit the Canadian economy by providing mill, transportation and port employment as well as helping Canada's balance of trade position.

Let me quote from the brief given to the minister as follows:

> The implications of the cessation of the subsidy are clear. Perhaps we can demonstrate with one example. The present compensatory rate for flour exports from a bay port mill to Halifax is $1.109 per 100 lbs. Of this amount the milling industry pays $.3975 and the federal government through the payment of assistance to the railways $.7115. The projected rail rate for 1976 (the railways estimate) is $1.242 per 100 lbs.
>
> This will mean a net cost increase of $.8445 per 100 lbs. For Canadian millers; in other words, a 212 per cent increase in rail rate costs which will be added to the cost of export flour.

What will be the practical results? I have noted some of these, and I am sure there will be more, totalling over $100 million. First, Canada will lose out in competition with the United States and the European economic community because they do have subsidies, which no longer will be our case. We are likely, as a practical example, to see that contract with Russia go down the drain.

Secondly, the elimination of the subsidy could mean the loss of $28 million in what economists call "added value processing activities," most of this occurring in depressed areas of our country, which perforce would become even more depressed. Thirdly, there is the effect on the railways, pilotage and dock labour, and the like. The figures there are in the tens of millions of dollars.

Fourth, there would be more plant closures in the milling industry which worked at 76.8 per cent capacity in 1975, as well as more layoffs of the 3,000 personnel directly engaged in that industry.

Fifth, because a number of mills would be operated at less than capacity turning out our domestic flour one can only assume that flour would have to go up in price.

Finally, Sir, in my own area the devastating effect on morale at the Atlantic ports is something about which I occasionally have nightmares. I find it very difficult to put it into language, but I know that for many longshoremen and other labour people on the dockside in Halifax, and I am sure also in Saint John and probably in Montreal, the devastating effect is just beginning to make itself felt.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the removal of the subsidy on export flour is of course related to the repeal of Section 272 of the Railway Act, Atlantic and East rates. The minister, in referring to the depressed nature of the world trade in flour, has noted that this has occurred in spite of the subsidies and is in fact totally unrelated to them. Since the trend is toward national self-sufficiency in milling capacity throughout the world, the prospects for expansion of existing export levels or their retention in the medium term do not appear favourable. The minister had none the less carefully considered representations made to him by the Canadian National Millers' Association but does not feel that a case has been made for the continuation of the subsidy.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

END OF VOLUME XI