Hon. Mr. McDonald: There is no reason to delay the bill until September. I wish to repeat that the committee unanimously recommended that the bill should be reported to the house without amendment. Apparently the members of the committee, of which I am not a member, were satisfied to report the bill without amendment. I think it is our responsibility to proceed with third reading today. As a matter of fact, the bill was introduced on Friday, December 18. Surely that has given sufficient time for the 102 members of this chamber to make up their minds?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: There are not 102 members here now.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I would ask the house to proceed with third reading now, otherwise it will interfere with our summer recess. I do not think that even a minority of honourable senators would be in favour of that.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I cannot see how it would interfere with the summer recess. Would the Deputy Leader of the Government indicate how?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: The summer recess would be shorter.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: In what way?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: If we are able to clear up all the business now before us, our summer recess will be of a certain duration. If not, we will return at an earlier date.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I suggest that this is not true, because this bill, to become law, would have to go through the House of Commons. Our voting on it on September 7 or September 14 would make no difference because it would not go through the other place until mid or late September anyway. I suggest there is subtle blackmail in that last remark, and I for one do not accept it.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: If any honourable senator thinks that I am attempting to blackmail the Senate, he is badly mistaken. I have made the statement, and it is the truth, that if we are able to clear up all the work that is before us before we adjourn for the summer recess, then we will return on a certain date. If not, we will return on an earlier date. These are the instructions that I have been given, and I must follow them.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: If the Deputy Leader says that those are the instructions he received, then we would very well understand. We would probably be more convinced than with the insinuation that we might have to come back at an earlier date.

Hon. John J. Connolly: I am not the least bit concerned about the length of the summer adjournment, and, for the benefit of the Deputy Leader and the Leader of the Opposition, I am sure that none of us are. However, on the question of the amendment to the motion for third reading, I think there should be some clarification given.

I think that I attended all of the meetings of the committee which studied this bill. The last committee session was attended by the minister who, in the course of his remarks, suggested that it might be appropriate for the committee to summon someone from the Economic Council of Canada on the question of whether the proposed measure was in the public interest. I for one would have been happy indeed to hear the experts or representatives of the Economic Council and said so during the course of the committee hearings. However, I was conscious of the over-riding view which prevailed in the committee that we had heard all the evidence and knew what the case was on both sides, as Senator Lang has described it. The opinion was that it was for us to decide whether the bill was in the public interest. Because of that I think that honourable senators on the committee felt that the bill should be reported without amendment, and it was so reported.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: On division.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If we are to adjourn this debate until September, I suggest that a motion at that time might well be required to return the bill to the committee. Without being the least bit invidious, I think the majority of the committee members felt that the bill had received ample consideration and they were anxious to have it reported.

In view of these circumstances, I am rather of the opinion that we would serve ourselves well if we were to allow third reading to proceed at this time. I think that is the reasonable thing to do.

Hon. J. Harper Prowse: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. It seems to me that to move that the bill be read the third time on some future occasion, and particularly on a rather distant future occasion, is nothing more than putting it over for six months, which is a way of killing the bill. If further consideration is required a motion must be taken in committee. If there were before us a motion that the bill be not now read the third time, but that it be returned to the committee for further consideration then, with all respect, that motion should be agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: The proceedings as they have developed are perfectly in order. There was a motion for the third reading of the bill, following which, of course, there could be a debate. That debate began with the speech of the honourable Senator Lang, followed by the honourable Senator Macnaughton. After giving some explanations, Senator Macnaughton moved that this debate be adjourned until September 7 next. We are now faced with a motion to adjourn the debate.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of privilege, and not to debate the motion. It was agreed that there should be a motion for third reading, on which honourable senators may vote as they please. Now we have a motion to adjourn consideration of the bill which, if agreed to, will effectively kill it.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: No.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: I submit that we should have before us a motion to refer the bill back to committee. To adjourn consideration, when everyone has the necessary information, negates the work that has been done.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I find myself in the position of being in favour of third reading being given to this Government bill today. On the matter of the suggested delay, as Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) referred to it, although I find myself in agreement with his remarks otherwise I do not agree with his statement that the minister suggested that the question of the public interest in the bill might be considered, and that we hear witnesses from the Economic Council. With respect, that was not, as I heard it, the suggestion of the minister. A specific question arose as to the nature of the property right in copyright. The Economic Council of Canada had reported on that particular point. The minister suggested that the committee might wish to hear representatives of the Economic Council. A motion that those witnesses be called was defeated by a vote of seven to three. The committee also voted to report the bill without amendment.

Senator Lang is convinced that this is merely an intrusion by the Government into a dispute between two commercial interests. Again with respect, that is not a fair interpretation of this bill. The minister made it clear that there were broad principles involved. One was the principle of the whole revision of the Copyright Act. One of the very good reasons he gave was that the revision of the Copyyright Act should be in toto, not on a piecemeal basis.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: As is done by this bill.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: That was the point he made. I would not agree that this is in that category, but that is another argument.

It is not only the interest of the radio broadcasters and record manufacturers that are involved. It so happens that the major interests involved are those of the authors and composers of music in Canada. At the moment they have the exclusive right to the performing rights in practice. The purpose of this bill is to reserve that exclusive right, which is their main source of living, to the original owners of the copyright under the Copyright Act.

A third point made by the minister, which I mention to indicate there is a principle involved, was that the rights sought by the group of record companies are not granted to record companies in the United States. The minister made the point very strongly that we should not grant rights to record companies in Canada, the majority of whom are American, to collect certain fees in Canada and export the bulk of them, although there were assurances that this would not happen. Under United States law they cannot collect such fees in the United States.

Those are some indications of the principles involved, which take this bill far beyond the narrow scope suggested by Senator Lang. I have to admit that the antagonists and protagonists who appeared before the committee largely represented these two interests. However, the minister made it very clear that a much larger principle was involved.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Honourable senators, I am very happy that Senator Grosart has indicated how difficult the problem posed by this bill is by saying that not only the interests of record manufacturers are involved, but the interests of many others. However, I do not wish to go into this, because we do not have the report of the committee before us. If we had the report of the committee, all honourable senators would be able to assess the situation and would discover that other people are very much interested in it, namely, the performers, who presently have no rights, except that they are indirectly protected by the rights given to record manufacturers. I suggest to Senator Grosart that this is a much larger group than that of the composers or authors.

What was made quite clear in the committee is that the Copyright Act should be overhauled in its entirety and not refashioned in a piecemeal way, as is the case with this legislation. We are not able to make a definite judgment, and that is why I am uneasy about this bill, and why I feel, like Senator Lang, that we are not really in a position to deal with it at this time. We will be asking the Senate to adopt a bill without having read the evidence adduced before the committee.

The proposal is to adjourn the debate until September 7 or 14, whatever the date is. What is the difference between that proposal and my adjourning the debate in the normal course of events? If I were to adjourn it for two months, nothing could happen until we came back. If we could pursue the debate in the normal fashion, if we could have tomorrow to debate third reading and make a motion to refer the bill back to committee to hear witnesses from the Economic Council of Canada, as was moved in committee, this would be a normal thing for the committee to consider. It is suggested that for the Senate to consider such a motion today at the end of the session, when the membership of the Senate is not aware that such a debate is to take place, is unfair to the whole Senate. If the Senate wants to push the bill through, that is all very well.

I will not make the motion today, but under normal circumstances I would move that the bill be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to hear witnesses from the Economic Council of Canada. This motion was made in committee but was defeated, as was indicated by Senator Grosart, by seven votes to three. I was not there, or it would have been at least seven votes to four. I wanted to hear from the Economic Council, which indicated that it had doubts about the conclusions that had been arrived at to remove this right, if there is one, in favour of the record manufacturers.

I assure honourable senators that I am more worried about the rights of performers than about the record manufacturers' rights in this instance. That is why I suggest that no damage will result if we wait until September 7 or 14. It is no different from my adjourning the debate now. Normally the Senate would never refuse anyone permission to adjourn a debate if there was no prejudice, and there is no prejudice involved here. Nobody can prove to me that there is any prejudice in adjourning the debate today, when we know that the other place will not be able to deal with this bill before it comes back. We may take a decision on either September 7, if that is the penalty we have to pay for refusing to give third reading today, or September 14, if that is the date envisaged by the Deputy Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. MacDonald) as the date on which we are to return. No prejudice will result if we do that. We could possibly be given a different opinion by the Senate under those circumstances than we would be given today.

I therefore appeal to the Deputy Leader of the Government to consider what Senator Lang has suggested and what Senator Macnaughton has moved, which is merely to adjourn the debate, as we do in the normal course of events. Adjournment in those circumstances is always granted, and there is nothing resembling anything like a six-month hoist in these circumstances.

We merely want the Senate, on third reading of a very controversial matter, to be able to give its informed opinion. To deny this adjournment is to deny the Senate an opportunity to express itself normally as it would under ordinary circumstances.

Hon. Harry Hays: Honourable senators, I attended most meetings of the committee dealing with Bill S-9. It seems to me, with great respect to the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Flynn), that there is some urgency. The law as it stands has been in effect since 1919. As I understood the minister, until 1966 or 1968 the record companies had not seen fit to exercise the provisions of the act. As I understand it, part of the reason we have this bill is that these companies have now decided to exercise the right of receiving royalties on records sold to and used by broadcasters.

The minister suggested that he would have liked to overhaul the whole Copyright Act, but this was not possible. He thought it might be a year and a half or two years before this could be done. In the meantime, Bill S-9 was introduced by the Government. In 1919 there was no problem as there is today over records being played by broadcasting stations. If I understood the minister correctly, he had spoken to the record manufacturers and they were not going to exercise this right. There was some indication in his evidence that now they intended to, hence Bill S-9.

I am not a lawyer and speak only as a layman, but I think the real issue is that we are dealing here with a principle. All acts are changed from time to time. The big difference from what was taking place in 1919, when there was no problem with broadcasting stations, is that now the record companies want their royalty or a piece of the action on the stamping of records and selling them. It seems to me that there is some urgency, and possibly this bill could be passed tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: In the other place?

Hon. Mr. Hays: I do not know.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Of course you do not know. It is impossible.

Hon. Mr. Hays: If the bill passes the Senate I do not think the record companies would exercise this right. It would be a strong indication to them how at least this house felt. I believe there is some urgency. I hope the bill, which has been to the committee, where we heard all the evidence from anyone who wanted to come before us, will receive third reading today.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It has a retroactive effect to January 1, 1971, so the urgency the honourable senator speaks of does not exist.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I feel that a postponement of action by the Senate until a date in September is undesirable. This bill has been with us for a long time. We often plead with the Government to give us more legislation to be introduced in the Senate. Whether we come back on September 7 or 14 does not influence my view as to whether we should have third reading now. However, I recall that last year, after the summer adjournment, the House of Commons met for only two or three days and then concluded that session.

If we do not give third reading to this bill now, and if the House of Commons does not get it from us, they might not have time to deal with it if they meet for only a few days in September in this session. This would mean the bill would have to be reintroduced in a subsequent session.

This morning I attempted to find out the intention of the other place with respect to the duration of the session, but I have not been able to get any information. If the same procedure is adopted as was used last year, all our efforts on this bill in this session will be of no avail.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: As a senator who sat in the other place for many more years than I, Senator Benidickson must know that the legislative program will be left in abeyance during the summer recess. Even if this bill were passed here now, it would certainly be at the bottom of the government list of priorities.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Honourable senators, all the arguments have been put forward. I rise to make a plea to the Leader of the Opposition not to ask us, particularly laymen, to go back to that committee on a bill of this kind. We have listened for weeks to the eloquence on this bill, and we are sick and tired of it.

The committee formed their opinion, they voted on it and sent it back to the house. Please do not send it back to the committee again.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I did not say we would do that.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: This is an argument we have heard already.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Honourable senators, I would thank all those who have taken part in the discussion this afternoon. The Leader of the Opposition says that we cannot get a true opinion of the Senate today, but I cannot agree with that statement. This bill was introduced into this chamber on December 18 last. It has taken its normal course in the house. The committee completed its studies about a week ago. Third reading could have been proceeded with at a much earlier date, had people been prepared to go ahead with it. Why it was not proceeded with, I do not know. It was not my desire to ask for third reading immediately following the committee report, in case honourable senators wished to study the question.

As many senators have said, I believe we could dispose of this bill and send it to the other place. What they do with it is their business. As Senator Benidickson has said, there is a possibility that, if they follow the same pattern as last year, we would find ourselves dealing with first reading of a new bill here in a subsequent session. I do not think any of us wish that to happen. My plea is that we take this vote, that each senator stand in his place and vote according to his best judgment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the honourable Senator Macnaughton, P.C., seconded by Honourable Senator Hays, P.C.—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

[Hon. Mr. Benidickson.]

The Hon. the Speaker: I remind honourable senators that when an honourable senator makes a motion and does not mention a seconder, it is the custom to choose one from those near the mover. Of course, this does not prevent such a seconder from voting against the motion.

It is moved by Senator Macnaughton, P.C., seconded by Senator Hays, P.C., that the debate on the motion for the third reading of this bill be adjourned until September 7 next. Is it your pleasure honourable senators to adopt Senator Macnaughton's motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: As there is uncertainty of opinion, I have to call for "yeas" and "nays". Those in favour of honourable Senator Macnaughton's motion for the adjournment of the debate will please say "yea".

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those against honourable Senator Macnaughton's motion will please say "nay".

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And more than two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

Motion of Hon. Mr. Macnaughton that the debate be adjourned negatived on the following division:

HON. THÉRÈSE CASGRAIN

TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT FROM SENATE

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, since we are to adjourn today until September, we must assume that our colleague Senator Thérèse Casgrain, who will be reaching compulsory retirement age on July 10 next, is with us today for the last time.

That is a sad thought for all of us, and, for me personally, a melancholy one. We all had commended the Prime Minister's decision last year to appoint her to the Senate; we have now been made aware of the fact that the Senate would have been much better off had this decision been taken much earlier. We, however, have the consolation of telling our colleague that rarely if ever in the history of the Senate has such a substantial contribution been made in so little time.

Senator Casgrain immediately commanded the attention of her colleagues by her outstanding intellectual and moral qualities, by her strong personality, by her exceptional charm and by her tactful powers of persuasion.

One must admit that she brought with her a rather unique experience, that of having been born into a family that was conservative both in spirit and in politics, of having married a man who, for many years, was a Liberal member of Parliament and a minister, and then of having been a distinguished militant within the CCF or New Democratic party, and furthermore of having always taken an interest in the promotion of women's rights by fighting against the discrimination of which women have been and continue to be the object both legally and socially.

I could also mention the many organizations to which she has always given her support, charitable, educational, social and philanthropic. That would take too much time and would be superfluous, because any one who has had the opportunity of conversing with our colleague, who has, in some measure, been able to follow her career, knows that she is the prototype of the model citizen who is aware of his responsibilities to society.

The senator will have noted that I have used the masculine gender here, not only because it includes the feminine one, but also to let her know that I accept the idea that there should be no discrimination against women.

I know that Senator Casgrain is sorry to go because she liked to work with us, she had become used to our customs and she was now experienced in our methods, thus being able to make full use of her talents.

She can be assured that we will remember for a long time her too short stay among us, because it has been extremely valuable to the Senate. I do not recall who suggested that we should create the Order of Senators Emeritus, thus enabling our former colleagues to join us at times and to have the right if not to take part in our debates at least in some of our activities. Your departure, Senator Casgrain, is an argument in favour of that suggestion.

However, we hope that you will come back to visit us as often as the circumstances will permit. You will always be greeted with great enthusiasm and affection.

[English]

Honourable senators, Senator Quart is unavoidably absent today attending the marriage of another grandson. She wanted to speak about Senator Casgrain and has left me a message, which I will now read:

> It has always been a privilege and a pleasure to have worked with Senator Casgrain over the years, particularly for votes and rights for the women of the Province of Quebec.
> As you all know, Senator Casgrain is one of the most famous women of La Belle Province—and I could add, in Canada.
> Senator Casgrain was always ready to lend her prestige and her help to causes she believed in. To her, idleness and life were incompatible; there was work to be done, challenges to be met, battles to be waged, people to be helped. To all these causes she has devoted her life. Even her political opponents expressed appreciation of her character and achievements.
> Senator Casgrain is blessed with an almost incredible vitality. She has strong qualities of mind and a natural charm. But her friends agree it was her heart that essentially ruled her life and her actions—and through it she was able to transcend all borders of language and nationality to win a warm response from the citizens of her native province.
> Her life has had several very distinct phases, and she never failed to see the humorous side of the dilemmas into which at times she was thrust by circumstances.
> Her great popularity could have tempted her to indulge in the sin of pride—but she remained unchanged and unchangeable, with that gift of forth-rightness of calling a spade a spade and a shovel a shovel.

May I join with my honourable colleagues in expressions of regret that Senator Casgrain must say "Au revoir" to us. She will be remembered with affection—and I wish her health and happiness to continue her career and go on to future triumphs.

[Translation]

In conclusion, I will tell her on behalf of all the members on this side of the Senate: We extend to you our best wishes knowing that your retirement from the Senate does not mean a retirement from community activities.

If the Senate is losing your services, Canada we are sure will continue otherwise to profit by them.

[English]

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, may I begin my remarks by thanking Senator Flynn, Leader of the Opposition, for leading off our proceedings this morning. I wish to join with him and with Senator Quart in their tributes to Senator Casgrain.

I wish to say to Senator Casgrain that I know Senator Martin would like to have been present on this occasion, to express his thanks and his gratitude to her. I am sure that on his return from Korea he will do so in another way.

I would like to express the thanks of the Government of Canada for the contribution which Senator Casgrain has made to the public life of this nation over a very long period of time. Her example is a good one for young people, whether they be male or female.

Senator Casgrain has indicated that there is a whole series of problems in this nation which need the attention not only of Parliament or provincial legislatures but also of Canadians generally who are prepared to spend time working for a better Canada.

Senator Casgrain, we wish you well in your retirement. It is unfortunate that you did not have the opportunity to serve here for a longer period, but I am certain your work will continue after your retirement from the Senate. We wish you well and we hope that from time to time you will visit us here in Ottawa.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, I too should like to express my sincere regret that Senator Casgrain will not be with us when we resume our sittings in the fall. She has been an ornament to the Senate in every way. We certainly appreciate having had her here.

Senator Casgrain has carried on the fine traditions of her family in the contributions she has made to the public life of Canada. She is widely known for the devoted work she has done and what she has accomplished for the underprivileged and, perhaps even more important, for the women of Quebec and Canada.

That she is appreciated was brought home to me very strikingly when we were travelling together with the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution. In the province of Quebec she was greeted with wide applause whenever her name was mentioned.

[Hon. Mr. Flynn.]

Since her appointment, Senator Casgrain has been a helpful addition to the Senate and its committees. She has attended the sittings of the Senate regularly and has made excellent contributions.

Much has already been said about Senator Casgrain's accomplishments, and if I were to continue I would only be repeating, but I should like to emphasize my own sincere regret that we are losing her. Judging by the interest she takes in legislation being passed in Canada and in her own province, I am sure that we will be the recipients of even more of her good advice in the future than in the past. I am looking forward to having consultations with her, and seeing her often.

Hon. L. P. Beaubien: Honourable senators, Senator Molson is sorry not to be here today and he has asked me to speak for him also when I say to our very charming colleague Senator Casgrain how sorry we all are to see her leave our already depleted ranks.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Senator Casgrain, it would be a much happier occasion if we were bidding you welcome instead of bidding you fond farewell.

As a member of the Senate, Senator Casgrain has contributed much to the activities of this house. She has made a splendid contribution. She is an outstanding Canadian citizen who has done much for the women of her own province and, indeed, for women throughout Canada. Senator Casgrain's activities did not end there, however, but permeated throughout all community work. Anything that would be of benefit to her community, and to the community of Canada as a whole, she has undertaken and her contributions have been very much worthwhile.

Senator Casgrain is a worthy descendant of famous ancestors. As she leaves us today I am sure she will carry on the traditions of her family in the continuation of her own good works on behalf of Canada in general. We all wish her great success and God speed.

Hon. Alan Macnaughton: Honourable senators, as I am sure you all know, Senator Casgrain is a famous descendant of two very well known Quebec families—the Forget family and the Casgrain family.

Many years ago, McGill law students and Liberal party workers used to meet more or less regularly several times a month at a salon which Madame Casgrain conducted for well known public figures, junior lawyers, and students of politics. As a result we had the opportunity of meeting many important people who were visiting Montreal or passing through, and it made Liberal party workers feel they really belonged to the party. That salon was conducted in the old European tradition for many years in Montreal.

I do not need to speak of Madame Casgrain's forceful character, or her great contribution to this country. But with her wisdom, charm and experience, I suggest that she is just beginning a new career in her native city and province, where she still has a great contribution to make to the welfare of her native country.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I too wish to express my great regret that the calendar and the amendments to our laws are jointly responsible for the retirement in a few days of Senator Casgrain. I did not know her personally until she joined our ranks in the Senate, but in that short period of time I think we have formed a friendship which, so far as I am concerned at any rate, is very much appreciated.

Reference has been made to her political and family relations. At the time of her appointment her father was referred to by the Montreal Star as a "Conservative" but a "tycoon who was always on the side of the underdog." His daughter has followed along in that tradition.

Senator Flynn made reference to her other political association through marriage, but I do not think he mentioned that at one time Senator Casgrain herself ran as an Independent Liberal candidate.

Honourable senators, I do not wish to repeat what has already been said, but I think it should be mentioned that Senator Casgrain's first initiative in the business of this chamber took the form of referring to us an inquiry on the report of the Bird Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada. There resulted from this first motion of Senator Casgrain a very fruitful debate, and I think she will agree that in recent months there have been a number of legislative and administrative actions in several areas which are of importance to the women of this land for whom she has been a champion over the years. She was a leader, as has been said, in obtaining the franchise for women in Quebec. When she became a member of the Senate she was at that time President of the Quebec branch of the Canadian Consumers Association. She is a former President of la Ligue de la Jeunesse féminine, having held that office as long ago as 1926.

I want to tell her that I personally appreciate very much her strong support for my amendment this session to the Combines Investigation Act. My purpose was to try to eliminate the acceptance of collusion by banks with respect to bank charges for services; and, of course, on April 1 these charges involved increased costs to consumers—a matter in which Madame Casgrain has been very interested—in the area of perhaps $30 million.

This was done despite the fact that both of us have close relatives who are directors of banks. So keen was she a supporter of this amendment, which has been on our Order Paper, that she was going to take advantage of our special rule this session which permits one to make two speeches on a particular reading of a bill. However, the arbitrary legal retirement now makes that impossible for her to do, and she expressed her regret about it.

I am sure that she is as pleased as I am to read in the newspaper this morning that the Government as a whole have endorsed this principle and yesterday introduced into the House of Commons a bill which would accomplish the intent of my amendment now with Government support. I suspect it would not have received too much support in the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee after reading the speech of its chairman on my motion. However, yesterday's new government bill introduces new safeguards for the public against undue concentrations of market power.

Senator Casgrain, in a recently published interview, is quoted as having said:

> Well, I have always had a chip on my shoulder. I suppose that's what kept me going.

Well, I say long may she be able to continue her activities and stand upright with the same good health and energy as now, and that if and when necessary she will be able to carry resolutely another chip on her shoulders for good public causes.

Hon. Mary E. Kinnear: Honourable senators, I too wish to pay tribute to the Honourable Thérèse Casgrain. I have not known her intimately for a long time, but I have known her over a period of years. She once chaired a meeting that I attended, and I have remembered her since that day.

Honourable senators have spoken of her many fine qualities and her distinguished family. On one occasion I saw her daughter here, who was present with her family, and she had the same attractive smile that the honourable Senator Casgrain has. I recognized her immediately.

We have mutual friends, from whom I hear so many fine things about her. She is a willing and able parliamentarian. She has determination, energy and enthusiasm, and I believe that with enthusiasm one can do anything.

Women can accomplish their goals in life if they have the strength of character to keep their aim on the target. Too often they give up. However, success in life is not achieved by anyone unless there is self-discipline. Thérèse Casgrain has this strength of character. She will never give up and I congratulate her on her efforts on behalf of all Canadians. I urge her to continue to lead an active and crusading life during her retirement.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I associate myself with all the very appropriate remarks with respect to Senator Casgrain. However, we should tell her that the loss occasioned by her departure from this body is not hers but ours. I think she will appreciate from the way honourable senators have spoken today that the members of the Senate realize perhaps more truly than they ever have before, the wisdom in the English aphorism, which applies to us: "It is better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all.

[Translation]

Hon. L. P. Gelinas: Honourable senators, I would feel guilty if I did not take this opportunity to join those who paid tributes to Senator Casgrain. I would be angry at myself if I did not express publicly and loudly our affection and our admiration, and our regret at seeing her go. She contributed much to the proceedings of this house during her too short mandate.

Others have spoken more eloquently than I could about her merits, the good works she has achieved despite difficulties and about all that women in particular owe her and have owed her long before women's lib.

Madame Casgrain's father and later her husband were members of Parliament for Charlevoix, a riding I consider one of the most beautiful in the country. She has been privileged ever since her childhood. As many others, she could have had a very easy life, a life of leisure, but I think that was against her nature. Being at the same time a capable and a warm-hearted woman, she preferred to devote her time to social and political causes, to women and charitable organizations, to the unfortunate and disinherited.

I will remember her as she guided her children and grandchildren through the Parliament Buildings the other day and stopped on the House of Commons side in front of the picture of her husband, the Honourable Pierre Casgrain, who was Speaker of the House of Commons and Secretary of State. I imagine she must have been most eloquent on that day.

We wish her the very best, and with those words, I bid her farewell.

[English]

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I rise to participate because as far as my time here is concerned the tributes this morning have established something of a record in terms not only of their sincerity but most certainly of their number.

One thing has impressed me. In her career here Senator Casgrain has championed and continued to express points of view which I think are all too seldom heard in this place.

[Translation]

Hon. Thérèse Casgrain: Honourable senators, I should like to thank you from the bottom of my heart for the good words that all of you had for me. When I was asked to become a senator, I knew that the time spent in this Upper House would be very short. I accepted because I told myself that this was a new and a more official way to serve my country and my province.

Number 9 has been for me both lucky and unlucky since, indeed, I have been sitting in the Senate for nine months; however, I was defeated nine times when attempting to get elected to the House of Commons.

But this is a productive way to finish my public life, here in the Senate. I thank you wholeheartedly and I want to assure you that I shall keep on working, even though I will no longer have the good fortune of being here with all of you.

[English]

I thank you all for the very kind words you have expressed to me. I am really very "emotioned". I do not know if that is correct English, but I am "emotioned" in French or in English anyway. I would like to say thank you for your very courteous manner of receiving me and having accepted my remarks, which were perhaps sometimes a little strong. I wish to assure you that you can always count on me to stand up and be counted. We are living in times that are not easy, especially down our way. I think it would be awful if I had to go home and knit, because I would be sure to drop too many stitches. Thank you again, honourable senators.

I want to tell you that my stay here has been wonderful. Recently I had the opportunity to have one of my daughters-in-law and my grandchildren visit me. She took a photograph of me standing next to the painting of my husband, who was at one time Speaker of the House of Commons and also a Cabinet Minister. I am really moved by all these facts, because they show that my family is strongly linked with the history and welfare of the Canadian people.

I want to thank you. Merci beaucoup. I am going away with a heavy heart but a big chip on my shoulder.

POVERTY COMMITTEE

ARTICLE BY FORMER STAFF MEMBERS—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the Senate.

I have had an opportunity to compare in detail the texts of the draft report prepared for the exclusive use of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty as it stood at the time of the staff resignations, and the publication recently issued under the authorship of those who resigned.

I can now state categorically that much of the draft report as it stood at the time of the departures is reproduced verbatim in the publication. The draft report referred to is a document strictly confidential to the committee, but was freely used in the commercial production of the publication.

Those former staff members must have taken committee documents with them and used them for their own purposes without any leave or licence from the committee, in breach of faith, contract, and privileges essential to the proper functioning of Parliament.

In my view their actions are tantamount to thievery. The matter is being pursued.

CRIMINAL CODE (JURY SERVICE FOR WOMEN)

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. John J. Connolly, Acting Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-20, to amend the Criminal Code (Jury Service for Women), and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: I move third reading now.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Next sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker: To proceed with third reading now would require leave.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: No, it does not require leave.

The Hon. the Speaker: I am reminded that we do not need unanimous consent, that there was an agreement among honourable senators. I would like to hear the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Flynn) on this.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Is Your Honour suggesting that the suspension of rules would apply to the present bill?

The Hon. the Speaker: Yes.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Technically Your Honour may be right, but if the Senate considers this is the case, I would say it is an abuse of the rights of the Opposition. A reference to the debate which took place when the motion was made by Senator Langlois makes it quite clear that it concerned only government bills. The only reason we agreed to the motion was because at that time Senator Langlois indicated which bills would be coming to us, or which would be likely to come to us, before the adjournment. It was on that understanding that we agreed to the suspension of the rules at that time.

This is, of course, a public bill, but it is a privately initiated public bill, and it is obvious from the debate that took place that the agreement was only in respect of government bills. If the understanding is to be interpreted in the way Your Honour suggests, while it may be correct technically speaking, it would be an abuse of the spirit of that agreement.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Honourable senators, I shall certainly not insist on third reading today. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition must know that this bill has been held up for a long time because of the illness of the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. We were expecting him to return, and out of courtesy were waiting for him. When it was ascertained that he was not coming, it was decided to call the committee together. I had not the slightest expectation that there would be any objection to third reading. Although, as his Honour the Speaker has said, in view of the suspension of the rules, I do not need to ask for leave, I shall not insist on third reading today. This bill can be read the third time at the next sitting, whenever that is going to be.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I would like to thank Senator Fergusson for her approach. The interpretation the Leader of the Opposition has put on the arguments presented by Senator Langlois and others when Rules 44, 45 and 78 were suspended is the proper one. In view of what Senator Fergusson has said perhaps we should comply with the request of the Leader of the Opposition, and leave third reading until the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I thank the Deputy Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. McDonald). I assure the Senate that I do not do this because I oppose the principle of the bill or its passage. I would like to say something on third reading, but I do not think this occasion is an appropriate one, and I do not have the necessary material at hand.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure until the call of the bell at approximately 1.30 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Is there any possibility of our getting the bill to amend the Judges Act today? Has the deputy leader any information about that?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: The information I had a few moments before we came into the chamber was that we would not receive the bill today, and I understand there has been no change since then.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

TRIBUTES

THE LATE HON. JOHN J. KINLEY
THE LATE HON. JAMES GLADSTONE
THE LATE SENATOR EARL W. URQUHART

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, during the period of adjournment, death struck the Senate with vengeance. Three distinguished Canadians who were members of this house have passed away, two having retired shortly before the adjournment.

We learned with great regret of the death on August 23 of Senator John Kinley. It will be remembered that on June 21 tributes were paid to him on the occasion of his retirement. From the large number of warm tributes paid him on that occasion it is obvious that Senator Kinley was held in high regard by all honourable senators. Since I joined with others on that occasion in paying tribute to Senator Kinley, I do not propose to repeat many of the things that I now confirm and many other things which I am sure could still be added. We all knew that Senator Kinley was ill at the time of his retirement. The end came during the summer recess; we were all sorry that so distinguished a senator, so outstanding a parliamentarian, so outstanding a businessman and Canadian should have passed away. He had a long and full active life and I am sure that all honourable senators will join me in an expression of regrets to his wife and to his family.

On September 4 the Honourable James Gladstone died while paying a visit to Fernie, British Columbia. Senator Gladstone was a respected member of this house. That was evident from the tributes that were paid to him on March 31 this year when he retired from the chamber. We recalled then, and it is well for us to note now, that Senator Gladstone was the first Treaty Indian to be summoned to the Senate.

I am sure all of us were shocked when we learned of the death last month—for many in this house the unexpected death—of Senator Earl Urquhart who died on August 17. Earl Urquhart had been very ill even while he was attending the Senate prior to adjournment. Few knew that he was ill and those of us who did know could not help but admire his courage and his determination to stay on and to fight as long as he could prior to his entry into hospital. Earl Urquhart was a comparatively young man at the time of his death. We all know that he was a most active and industrious member of this house.

Senator Urquhart was born and raised in West Bay, Richmond County, in the province that he loved so much, the Province of Nova Scotia. He resided there all his life. He returned frequently to the place he loved and many were the occasions I tracked him down through the rural telephone circuit and spoke to him concerning the nation's business, half unaware whether the population of West Bay was party to our conversation. Earl Urquhart served in the Armed Forces, both in the R.C.A.F. and in the Canadian Army, during the Second World War. After the war he returned to practise law, for he was a solicitor and barrister, having trained for that profession at Dalhousie University. He was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1962. He was, as we all know, not only an active member of this house but he was an active member of the Liberal Party. He had served in the Legislative Assembly of Nova Scotia from 1949 to 1963. In the early sixties he served initially as the leader of his party in the Legislative Assembly and thereafter, following his defeat, he continued to lead the Liberal Party from outside the Legislative Assembly. He naturally found that leading the party from outside the Legislative Assembly a difficult task and in due course asked to be relieved of the party leadership.

I know that he was very happy to have been summoned to the Senate as he was in February of 1966. He looked forward to a rich contribution to our parliamentary life and in the service of Canada through the Senate. That, however, has now been denied him, but his contributions here were many and distinguished. He was busy in the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee and the Internal Economy Committee. I would particularly single out his acting chairmanship of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee during the past session. He was an alert and industrious chairman of that committee, and I am sure would have become a great success in that function. He was among those who thought that as long as Senator Arthur Roebuck, the chairman of that committee, was still alive the office of the chairman should be held open.

It is a considerable loss, I believe, to all of us in the Senate to lose such a man as Senator Urquhart. He assumed any assignment given him; he was also willing to assume responsibilities extended to him. His attendance in this house was model-like, and the people of his home community and the people of his province may feel that in Earl Urquhart they have lost, as Canada has lost, an enterprising, industrious and sincere public servant.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, Earl Urquhart was a truly lovable man—unaffected, witty, humble, affable, courteous and compassionate. Racked though he had been by illness in the last few years, he maintained the cheerful demeanour of a tenacious, patient and courageous man. Adversity tested him often but succeeded only in adding to its own frustration.

He was gifted. His incisive mind drove quickly to the crux of any piece of legislation; his vast experience supplied the wherewithal to improve it; and his articulate defence of his own position almost invariably won him support from all sides.

Earl Urquhart was a man of principle, a man of strong convictions, endowed with a spirit of fairness and a determination for serving his fellow man, which made him a person to be emulated, a political figure worthy of respect, and a soldier deserving of honour. He was an excellent lawyer, whose sound knowledge of the law was matched by a deep respect for it. He was a credit to his party, to this chamber, to Canada and to himself. I considered him as a friend, and I feel a personal loss in his passing. To his family go our most profound condolences.

As well, honourable senators, do we offer our heartfelt sympathy to the families of our former colleagues John J. Kinley and James Gladstone. Would that men of such sterling qualities and outstanding accomplishment might have been restored to health to enjoy a full and peaceful retirement—the reward for a job well done. But though we be grieved by their passing, we take solace in the faith that a more perfect reward is now theirs, for sweet are the eternal slumbers of virtuous men.

In resuming my seat, may I quote from Theodore O'Hara:

> In Fame's eternal camping ground
> Their silent tents are spread
> And Glory guards, with solemn round
> The bivouac of these dead.

Hon. Keith Laird: Honourable senators, I wish to express deep sympathy to the families of those honourable senators who passed away during the summer recess. You will understand that I have a very special feeling about Earl Urquhart. I may say at the outset he made it very plain to me that he took a dim view of long eulogies of the departed. Having this in mind, I shall add very few words to those that have been so eloquently spoken. His accomplishements have been delineated; they are well known.

Senator Urquhart was my deskmate. We ate together almost every day and often enjoyed a nightcap together at the Chateau Laurier. So one can well understand how much I miss him.

Earl Urquhart had humanistic qualities which were well known to all of us. He was a most likeable person, and I am sure he would not mind my revealing this rather homely fact about him. He persisted in maintaining himself on Atlantic Time. Therefore, when it came to 12 o'clock he was going to eat lunch, and I was always willing to oblige. When it came to dinner he insisted on eating at 6 o'clock, and again I was always willing to oblige unless circumstances prevented it.

Honourable senators, in keeping with what I know would be Earl's sentiments, I simply say to you, of a close friend so prematurely gone, that his passing is a very deep personal loss.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Senator James Gladstone was laid to rest among the departed members of the Blood Band of the Blackfoot federation on the Indian reserve at Cardston, Alberta on September 8. The funeral rites were performed at St. Paul's Anglican Church, the Bishop of Calgary officiating. Mr. Willie Scraping White recited Blackfoot prayers and delivered the funeral oration in the native tongue. A large attendance of Indians and whites at the church and cemetery mourned the passing of Jim Gladstone, Akay-na-muka in Blackfoot, the first Indian senator in Canada.

The Government was represented by the Honourable Jean Chretien, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and the Honourable Horace Olson, Minister of Agriculture. Several members of Parliament were also present, and Senator Earl Hastings and myself represented this chamber.

To his wife, Jennie, to his six surviving children and their immediate families, I conveyed the condolences of the Senate.

Senator Gladstone will be fondly remembered by all members of this chamber who knew him. He was a pleasant, friendly person, and a dedicated, hard-working parliamentarian who did much both to improve the economic, social and educational conditions of his people and to gain some recognition of their rights.

Senator Gladstone will be greatly missed in this chamber, the members of which, I feel sure, would warmly welcome a worthy successor of Indian origin. Above all, he will be sorely missed by his people, who greatly loved and respected him. May his deeds be an inspiration to the others of his race, and may his soul rest in peace.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: I join with those who have already spoken in paying tribute to our former Senators John Kinley and James Gladstone, both of whom I knew very well. I recall spending many a pleasant hour in the company of Senator Kinley in the lobby of the Chateau Laurier. He was a fine gentleman, a great Nova Scotian.

Jim Gladstone was also a very fine person. I had great respect for him, and admired his zeal and determination to better the conditions of those he referred to as "my people". They were his people and he was their great advocate in and out of Parliament.

I find it more difficult to refer to the untimely passing of Senator Earl Urquhart. We came from the same part of the country, and were personal friends for a great many years.

I well knew his fine qualities of heart and mind. He was highly regarded in Nova Scotia and earned the affection and respect of all who knew him. The tremendous number of people who came from far and wide to attend his funeral was a tribute to him and showed the esteem in which he was held. Senator Blois and I represented this chamber at the funeral.

As has been mentioned, Earl Urquhart was a young man, yet was prominent in the public life of Nova Scotia for 22 years. Before that he had served his country well during World War II. I need not mention his work as a senator. We know it well. He took a great interest in the work of this chamber and was especially interested in all matters pertaining to his beloved Nova Scotia. His death is a blow to the Senate, and I personally mourn the loss of a worthy colleague and a good friend.

THE SENATE

APPOINTMENT OF FEMALE PAGES

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, on June 2, 1971, the honourable Senator Fergusson asked a question of the Leader of the Government regarding the possibility of appointing female pages in the Senate. Honourable senators have already noticed that two charming young ladies have now joined the page staff of the Senate.

Although some legislatures throughout Canada have already employed young ladies as pages, I thought that I should point out this new practice beginning in our chamber tonight and also the unanimous approval of senators when this matter was discussed before the summer recess.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Honourable senators, I should like the credit to go where it is due. His Honour said that Senator Fergusson asked the Leader of the Government whether or not it was possible to have female pages. It is only right that Senator McDonald, who was Acting Leader when I was at that time in Korea, should be given the credit for his very chivalrous reply to Senator Fergusson.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Honourable senators, we should not forget that if ever there was a Speaker in favour of female pages, it is our present Speaker.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Honourable senators, I should just like to say that I was really astonished at the prompt response of the Speaker and of the leader, and I am delighted that we have two girl pages in the chamber.

Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation issued by the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: That was enough to spoil the Prime Minister's vacation.

TAX REFORM

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY LEGISLATION

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, tabled this day, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto; and

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purpose of the said examination.

He said: Honourable senators, I do not propose to make a lengthy statement at this time but I should just like to recall some of the background and events which led to the preparation of this summary of the 1971 tax reform legislation.

You will recall that the Government issued a White Paper proposing many tax changes or reforms, and in the House of Commons that White Paper was referred to the Commons Finance Committee, while in the Senate it was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Public hearings were held by both committees and in due course, on the determination of the hearings, a report was submitted by each committee. Subsequently the Government considered and reflected, and proceeded to draft what it felt would be the implementing legislation. I should say that in this summary of the 1971 tax reform legislation many of the recommendations made by your committee, and many of the recommendations made by the committee of the House of Commons, have been recognized and incorporated.

That, honourable senators, was the first step. But, after all, the summary is only a recital of the judgments and decisions as to the direction in which the tax law should go. What is needed now is legislation that will amend in whatever way is necessary the existing income tax law so as to have the combination reflect the tax reform which the Government proposes.

However, so far as Bill C-259, which has been introduced in the House of Commons, is concerned you may well say that it uses a great many words to reflect the opinions, judgments, and decisions of the Government concerning the form and the scope of the amending legislation. I have here a copy of the bill, and while it is true that it is printed on only one side of the page, nevertheless it runs to over 700 pages. Now when one is tackling such a massive job as this, I think it is almost inevitable that it should take a very long time, and that there should be thorough and widespread consultation rather than having it confined within very narrow limits. I say this because we could arrive at a situation in which many things are introduced into the resulting bill which are not intended, while others bring about situations that are not intended, and while yet others do exactly the opposite of what was intended originally. Furthermore, the language in the bill is quite a departure from the language of taxation legislation as we know it. As a result, the combination of all these things presents many difficulties.

Despite all this, honourable senators, I find that it is not intended that there shall be any public hearings by the House of Commons committee, but that the bill shall be dealt with by the Committee of the Whole. I also gather from public statements made by the Minister of Finance, particularly that made to the Law Society of Upper Canada, that technical amendments will be proposed when the bill is being considered in the House of Commons, and that these will reflect to some extent many of the representations made to the minister and his departmental committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Perhaps the honourable Senator Hayden would permit my making a remark. Apparently some difficulty is being experienced with the amplification system. Until it is corrected, may I be forgiven for placing a further burden on the shoulders of the honourable senator who has the floor by asking him to speak a little louder if at all possible.

I am now told that the defect has been corrected.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I am glad to take note of His Honour's statement. I hope that I did not cause the system to go out of order, but I think, honourable senators, that if the worst came to the worst I could make myself heard without the assistance of the system, although I normally enjoy its assistance.

To return to the point I was making, from all that has been said publicly and the representations that have been made in public as well as to the minister and his department, I think it is clear that we are presented with a situation in which there are many instances of where the bill, in its scope and direction, does not carry through the intentions and the decisions that appear in the summary. It may well be too that the language that is used is not properly descriptive of what was intended to be done.

Therefore, since the public are going to have to live with this measure, in whatever form it is passed into law, it becomes important that we spend as much time and make as careful a consideration of its provisions as is possible. The only place where there will be the opportunity for public hearings will be in a committee of the Senate. This is one of the reasons why I am urging the Senate to approve of referring this bill to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. After all—and I say it with some justifiable pride—in the membership of that committee we have represented the best available talent in this field of taxation. I believe we demonstrated that in our study of the White Paper. I can tell you too that we have been taking steps to organize the committee so that we will be able to proceed expeditiously.

Our sole object is to make sure that as many defects as we can catch in our study of the bill are caught and remedied, because this is what the people will have to live with. Thus it becomes important that the directions to those administering this act, when it becomes law, are clear enough so that there will not be the opportunity for differences in interpretation as between the summary of what the Government said it was intended the reform in taxation should do, and the direction in which it should go.

The thickness of this copy of Bill C-259 can be seen. It is important that we get to work as quickly as possible in order that we may make some study of the bill. I would like to be able to say that we can make a complete study, but that would be a vain hope, because for a number of years after this bill passes into law there will be annual presentations of amendments because of the interpretations of which the language is capable and which were not sufficiently thought out in those extended applications before the bill was passed. Yet, January 1 is the deadline. The economy and the revenues are geared to this bill, with its substantial provisions, becoming effective on January 1, 1972.

Therefore, I think it is our duty, as best we can, to accommodate ourselves to that intention and plan. At the same time I think we should work as hard as we can to make it as effective and as easy of administration and understanding as is possible in the limited time available. You will not get perfection, but I think the result of the committee's sittings and conclusions will be to remedy many of the situations arising in the transition from existing law, through the decisions made in the summary to the implementation of those decisions in Bill C-259. We may be able to correct and adjust much that is in this bill that is not really intended and does not serve the purpose it was designed to serve.

I believe I can say without betraying any confidence, in connection with some of the points brought to the attention of the officials of the department, that when they have been told that this or that particular section or series of sections of Bill C-259 accomplishes a certain result, they have replied that it cannot and that it was never intended to. Of course, that is not anyone's fault. It is the fault of a system in which you cannot have consultation broadly across the whole land when you are drafting tax bills because this must be done and kept within the confines of the minds of the members of the Government until they are ready to present it publicly, to Parliament in the first instance. So when one is forced to develop this field of legislation in this form, these things are an inevitable consequence in the document. However, that document is very important and so widely sweeping in its scope and effect, entering as it does into the business and daily lives of the people of Canada.

With these few thoughts I want to emphasize that it is most important that we get down to a study of this bill at once. It will be the duty of the members of the committee to do the best they can in their study of this bill and the resultant recommendations, supporting them with reason and fact, thus creating greater harmony between what the Government is proposing to do through the summary and what it appears to do through the bill itself.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I do not hesitate in saying at once that I am in full agreement with the sponsor of this motion and the objectives he has indicated he has in putting this motion before the House.

At first, the idea of considering a bill which has not been passed by the other place may appear a little irregular, but we are faced with a very special situation. This bill, after all, follows the White Paper which was tabled about two years ago. It follows reports of a special committee of the other place and the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Therefore, it is not a problem of dealing with the principle of the bill, but really of finding out whether the conclusions of the Government following the White Paper, its criticism by the public in general and in the reports of the House of Commons and Senate committees are actually enacted in the manner indicated to be the wish of the Government. We are faced with a technical problem which is, as Senator Hayden said, very important.

The comments we have heard from the annual meeting of the Canadian Bar Association and other meetings suggest that the drafting may be defective in many ways. Reading these comments and listening to Senator Hayden brought back a memory of Senator Pouliot's comment on the drafting of bills. It is very important for the Senate to consider the bill and discover whether it really achieves what is intended. If my understanding is correct, this committee will not deal with the principle of the bill. That can be done when the bill reaches us after consideration by the House of Commons. However, we will determine whether it is presented in the appropriate manner, which is a very important task. This task can certainly be handled in a better manner in our committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce than by any other committee, especially the Committee of the Whole of the other place. And I say that with all due respect.

I do not believe the fact that the Minister of Finance has said that the bill is clear and simple should be as convincing as the comments made at the meeting of the Canadian Bar Association. I would rather accept what I heard during discussion of this legislation at the Banff meetings. It may be that the thinking of the Government is clear, but judging by the thickness of the bill it is reflected in a rather thick way, and I am sure can be clarified.

Senator Hayden has indicated that the department—I suppose he refers to the Department of National Revenue—has realized after some consideration that amendments are necessary. I am personally quite convinced that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce can help the department and the Government. I am even more sure that both the department and the Government need help in this respect.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: May I answer a question which is inherent in what you said? There is precedent for this procedure in the Senate. It has occurred on at least three occasions since I have been here, one of which was almost parallel. This was done in 1945 when it appeared that the budget resolutions were never to become legislation and sent to this house. There was a resolution similar in wording to that which I put on the Order Paper tonight referring the bills arising out of the budget for examination and consideration by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am very pleased indeed to second the motion that is before the house at this time. I have nothing but praise and applause for the leadership and initiative shown by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in taking this step. We must remind ourselves that the Royal Commission on Taxation, known as the Carter Commission, spent an enormous amount of time working on the problem of tax reform in this country. Following the presentation of its report it took a long time indeed for the officials in the Department of Finance to produce the now notorious White Paper. When that document was produced, committees of the House of Commons and the Senate studied it. The committee of this house worked for more than a year before it was able to produce a report.

Let me say in the first place that it is heartening for parliamentarians who have given a great deal of work to a complicated problem such as that presented by the White Paper and earlier by the Report of the Royal Commission to know that their work was not in vain. Many parts of the White Paper and recommendations of the royal commission were strenuously contested during the committee hearings. The new Income Tax Act which has now been presented to Parliament in the other place generally has been applauded.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Generally been what? Applauded?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Applauded, yes; indeed, applauded.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I do not know where you heard that.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It was in the editorials. It was certainly in comments of the professional associations and of the business community. It was thought to be such an improvement over the White Paper that it was really...

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I think you hear what you wish to hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, indeed; I think this is so and I do give the minister credit for daring to listen to the committees as he did.

Nonetheless, one must remember that the importance of this legislation is very great indeed. When one considers the volume of material available in connection with the Income Tax Act, the many thousands of court decisions, the jurisprudence, the rulings issued by the departments, the interpretations, the precedents, the writings and speeches of experts, it is realized that the field of taxation is very complicated, difficult and, indeed, impinges upon not only the individual but on all corporate economic activity in the country.

The bill is not only voluminous, it is complicated. If Parliament is to make an intelligent assessment of it, parliamentarians first of all must understand it. To understand it they must study it. The bill is to come into effect at the end of this year and it would be impossible for the House of Commons to deal with the matter in the normal course and pass it on to us for approval. It would reach the Senate in the dying days of the session, before the Christmas adjournment and we could not possibly give it any kind of consideration. We could hold it over to another session; we have that authority or veto power. However, I do not consider that to be a desirable exercise to contemplate. Senator Hayden suggests in this regard that the rules of Parliament be used with ingenuity. He is making the parliamentary process adaptable. He is making it come alive. He is making it serve the country, and he is allowing us and Parliament to get around the dead letter of the law.

Senator Hayden has referred to precedents. Certainly there is a very clear precedent which is to be found in the Journals of the Senate of December 12, 1945, at page 361. I may interject here to say that at that time bills arising out of the budget were sent as a practice to the Finance Committee rather than to the Banking and Commerce Committee, but that practice has been changed. This precedent reads:

> On motion, it was
> Ordered, That the Standing Committee on Finance be authorized to examine and consider certain Bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said Bills reaching the Senate.

This wording has almost been literally employed in the motion we are now considering.

There is another precedent too. There have been chronic complaints over the years in the Senate with respect to the way in which we have been called upon to deal with appropriation bills which reach us late. These bills are based on the main Estimates and the supplementary Estimates, and year after year senators would complain that there was never an opportunity to give adequate consideration to these bills. The remedy was provided by this house itself a number of years ago. The practice we adopted was that upon tabling the main Estimates and the supplementary Estimates they were referred immediately to our Finance Committee for study and report. Therefore, through this device every senator had an opportunity to examine both the main and the supplementary Estimates and to question any item that he desired to question. Our study was made before the bill arrived here, with the result that no senator could be heard to complain about the fact that he was not given an opportunity to discuss items which were in the Estimates and upon which the bill touched. I can remember Senator McCutcheon often coming into the house with appropriation bills and referring to evidence that was given before the Finance Committee on matters about which he had complained, and about which in some cases he was still complaining. The point is that he had had an opportunity to examine the Estimates, or any particular item in the Estimates, and to make a responsible contribution to the appropriation bill.

Honourable senators, I think this is a desirable and an ingenious initiative. It is a good step and well supported by our precedents.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) has really made the point that I had in mind. If the chairman of our Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee had not taken the initiative the committee would never have had the opportunity of examining this voluminous bill. How often have we received legislation which has been delayed in the House of Commons and which arrives here too late for us to give it full consideration? It may be that the other place is anxious to adjourn. By doing this at the opening of the session the House of Commons will come to look forward day by day to the deliberations of our committee. They really do look to this committee for enlightenment on bills of this kind. Without being political at all, I would like to pay my tribute to the greatest chairman this committee has ever had, the honourable Senator Hayden.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Walker: When my leader jokingly suggests that perhaps we did not receive much credit for the gargantuan work done in the White Paper I know he is only spoofing, because wherever I have gone across Canada and wherever I have met people who have discussed this matter they said they were tremendously impressed by the work of the Senate on that White Paper.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I was talking about the bill; not the report.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Of course, the White Paper was a shocking thing and it was not hard to criticize it, but was it not a good thing to have this committee of our house take on that task? All I hope is that nothing will prevent the chairman of this committee from going on with his task. It is a tremendous task, and it is going to be appreciated not only by the House of Commons, but by the members of the Government themselves. A searching study was made by this committee. Due to illness I was absent during the past year a good deal of the time, but I watched what was being done, and I am more impressed every time I read the committee's proceedings. I hope to take an active part in the deliberations that are beginning tomorrow morning.

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, I think it is a fact that following the tabling of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the White Paper on Taxation there was no debate in the Senate. Therefore, it is appropriate that reference should be made to the work of that committee on the important White Paper which, as the Minister of Finance insisted from the beginning, did not represent final policy, but a statement of propositions made with the view of encouraging a wide national debate.

Hon. Mr. Flynn. That is a fine speech; not the first.

Hon. Mr. Martin: He succeeded in provoking that debate, as we are reminded by the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Flynn). It is not necessary at this time to go over the ground that has been so ably covered by Senator Hayden, Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), Senator Walker and the Leader of the Opposition. However, I think that the Leader of the Opposition did make an important point when he mentioned what we would be doing if this motion is adopted, and that is that we would not be deciding the principle of the bill. That is only done when the House of Commons has discharged its duty in that particular, and when the measures come to us for legislative consideration and action. No legislative action is being proposed at this time in the motion put forward by Senator Hayden. Senator Hayden has indicated that the economy of the country and the Government's taxation program is geared to January 1. I think that this statement of his is important, because the economy of the nation is so vitally involved in this matter and the observance of the effective date of January 1 is no academic matter. It is of the greatest importance. The Senate has its responsibilities and, as Senator Walker mentioned a moment ago, rather than be caught at the last moment faced with the date of January 1, this house would want to take advantage of the opportunity of a program of pre-examination and study. As Senator Flynn has mentioned, that pre-examination does not in any way involve an exercise at this stage by the Senate of any legislative function.

Senator Hayden mentioned that there were precedents. These were delineated by Senator Connolly (Ottawa West). He mentioned the opportunity the Senate takes of looking at the details before an appropriation bill is finally dealt with by this house. Senator Hayden mentioned the investment bill that was carefully examined by the Senate in the fall of 1968, when a complete revision of that bill was made. The bill had not gone to the other place.

[Hon. Mr. Walker.]

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It was introduced here though.

Hon. Mr. Martin: It was introduced here, save for the money provisions of the bill, which would have made it unconstitutional or improper for us to deal with it. I think that precedent is a good one, and Senator Hayden himself had a great deal to do with that.

Senator Hayden mentioned an earlier proposal, in the form of a motion, which was actually dealt with in 1945. It might be useful if I read the text of that motion. It will be seen that Senator Hayden has properly drawn on some of the terms of that resolution for the motion now before us. The motion to which I refer as having been passed in 1945 was put on December 12, and read as follows:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Finance be authorized to examine and consider certain Bills on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said Bills reaching the Senate.

In the way proposed, therefore, the effective date for implementation of the bill can be met, and at the same time the two Houses of Parliament, each exercising in the proper way their respective legislative functions in accordance with section 18 of the B.N.A. Act, will be able to discharge those functions. However, we are making it clear at this stage, as the Leader of the Opposition has done, and as Senator Hayden did, that we are not dealing with the principle of the bill; we are anticipating the bill, and we will deal with it properly in a legislative way after we have had an opportunity of giving it the study that will enable us to be fully informed as to the nature of the bill or what changes should be made to it.

Motion agreed to.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

ADDITION TO COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(h):

> That the name of the honourable Senator Laird be added to the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO SIT DURING ADJOURNMENTS

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(h), moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate of more than one week.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Why must the break be more than one week? If you can sit during adjournments, you can sit during adjournments.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: The committee now has power to meet during adjournments of less than one week.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It is to correct a mistake.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

FILM "UN PAYS SANS BON SENS"—QUESTION

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, I have a few questions for the Government Leader. The first is related to a report in the September 10 issue of the Globe and Mail to the effect that during a program produced at the University of Montreal a definitely separatist film was shown to new students, titled "Un pays sans bon sens"—a film about Canada. Furthermore, still according to the same report, the film is said to be a National Film Board production.

I would ask the government, following that report, how it is that the National Film Board can issue such films. I have given notice to the Government Leader of this question.

Hon. Mr. Martin: The honourable senator was kind enough to give me notice of the two questions at six o'clock but I have not yet had the opportunity to obtain replies.

I hope to be able to reply to those two questions next week, since inquiries will have to be made.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

SCULPTURE IN CONFEDERATION PARK—QUESTION

Hon. Mr. Forsey: As for the other question, honourable senators, I wonder who could give us this information.

In the small park opposite the Lord Elgin Hotel, there is a so-called sculpture which looks like bowels. I would like to know, what federal agency put this monstrosity in this nice little park. What agency is responsible for this mistake which in my view is a gross one? What is this so-called sculpture which is an insult to the Canadian people?

Hon. Mr. Martin: Well, I can assure Senator Forsey that I am just as curious as he is and I am eagerly awaiting the answer which I hope will be received within a few days.

THE SENATE

USE OF CHAMBER BY NATO

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I would ask the Leader of the Government if he could enlighten some of us, who have heard quite a few rumours that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization will be meeting in Ottawa in this chamber, and that we may not sit, and so on.

It seems to me that, if some plans have been made to lend our facilities to others, the first people to be informed should be the members of the chamber. So far as I know, no one has been informed. I would ask if any plans or commitments have been made and, if so, when we, the members of the Senate, will be informed?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Honourable senators, the point made by Senator Molson has been under active consideration for some time and I can assure him that any concrete information will be made available to the house just as rapidly as there is a final conclusion.

It is quite true that NATO will be meeting in Ottawa, for the first time in its history, and they have requested the use of this chamber for the plenary sessions to be held on three days, namely, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, September 27, 28 and 29, but not at night.

Personally, I would hope that it would not be necessary for the Senate to be in session while NATO is meeting here. Part of my reason for so hoping is that, as the host nation, we must supply certain facilities and staff to NATO and this will take, in my opinion, the full time of part of our staff.

However, the first responsibility of this chamber is to deal with the business of the nation. The one bill now proceeding through the House of Commons is C-262, and it must be dealt with by this chamber as quickly as possible after it is referred here from the other place. I have no idea when that bill will arrive. It is my hope that it will come here in time for us to dispose of it before the commencement of the NATO meeting, but we may not receive it until after.

As soon as a decision can be made, all honourable senators will be notified. I am sorry that it is not possible to give that information tonight.

I can only repeat my hope that we do not sit during the period when NATO is meeting in Ottawa in this building, and for part of the time in this chamber.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, may I say to the deputy Leader that my understanding was that NATO would use this chamber on Tuesday in the morning and afternoon, and that we could use it on Tuesday night; that NATO would use it on Wednesday morning and we could use it on Wednesday afternoon, and that those meetings would not interfere with the business of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Honourable senators, the observations of the Leader of the Opposition are absolutely correct. If necessary, the Senate can sit while NATO is here. But the problem I referred to is that of staff and it would be more convenient if we did not have to meet. It is my hope that we shall not have to meet, but if we have to meet in order to deal with Bill C-262, then we will.

Hon. Mr. Molson: Honourable senators, I am a strong supporter of NATO and I am glad that this country is going to make facilities available to it. That is a very desirable action, and something that should be encouraged.

I would like to remind the deputy leader that we had quite a debate a couple of years ago on the use of this chamber. The honourable Senator Roebuck precipitated that debate by suggesting that, in accordance with the recommendation of the Rules Committee, the Senate chamber be used by his committee. Some of our most distinguished senators objected, in fact quite strenuously, to this, and his motion was never acted upon. In the course of that debate—which commenced on March 19, 1969 and continued on March 20, 1969—as reported at page 1236 of Hansard of that year, His Honour the Speaker addressed the house. I shall not read his remarks in full but only those which I think pertain to this question.

> There were some questions asked as to the past practice with respect to the use of this chamber. I have had some research done, and can now inform the Senate that when Parliament is not in session—and that includes, of course, both houses of Parliament—it has been left to the best judgment of the Speaker to decide whether the chamber should be used for meetings of an international character. In this respect I refer to the meeting that will be held in September, when Canada will be the host to a meeting of the Speakers of the Commonwealth Parliaments.

In a subsequent paragraph His Honour said:

> When Parliament is sitting—and all honourable senators may not be aware of this—any honourable senator can use the desk which bears his name at any time of the day. So, when Parliament is sitting this chamber belongs to all honourable senators, and only the Senate itself can give permission for another use to be made of it.

Honourable senators, I do not wish to make this in any form an objection to the use of this chamber by NATO, but I do wish to call attention to the fact that His Honour the Speaker has already pointed out that the use of this chamber is at the disposition of the individual members. I believe that if at any time it is contemplated that the chamber be on loan to an international or any other worthwhile organization, the members of the Senate should be, if not consulted—perhaps that is too difficult—at least advised at the earliest date of the possibility, which I think would be good enough for all of us. To hear rumours that it may be used for such purposes is, I believe, not quite adequate for the dignity of this chamber.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Honourable senators, I must admit quite frankly that I knew of the reference which Senator Molson has brought to our attention, but it had certainly escaped my thinking processes until this very moment when he brought it our attention. I distinctly recall the occasion that he has referred to.

Honourable senators, a further word of explanation may be helpful. When Canada volunteered to be the host nation for the North Atlantic Assembly meetings this fall, it was done with the understanding that Parliament would not be in session. These meetings normally are held later in the year, generally in November, but because of certain things that will be happening in the month of November in the country south of us, there was a desire to move the North Atlantic Assembly meetings to an earlier date. Canada was in favour of this, as it would not have been possible for her to be the host nation in November because Parliament is usually in session during that month.

When the invitation was extended to NATO it was felt that Parliament would not be in session in September. However, the events that have taken place since the invitation was extended to NATO have meant that we are back in session at an earlier date than was anticipated.

It was originally anticipated that the plenary sessions of the North Atlantic Assembly would take place in the chamber of the House of Commons. The House of Commons is also currently in session, and in order to solve the dilemma in which we find ourselves, it is hoped that honourable senators will make the physical facilities available for the plenary sessions to be held in this chamber.

I am pleased that the honourable Senator Molson has brought this matter to our attention, because I had completely forgotten the discussions which were held, I believe, in March 1969. Perhaps I owe honourable senators an apology for not having brought to their attention the request for the use of this chamber. It is my hope that we may have the co-operation of all honourable senators in order that we may proceed with our work as the need arises, and also to accommodate the North Atlantic Assembly meetings and fulfill the commitment which our country made to NATO.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM 1971

PROJECTS SUBMITTED BY BOY SCOUTS OF CANADA—SUPPLEMENTARY ANSWER

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, on June 28 Senator Langlois tabled on my behalf answers to certain questions that had been asked at an earlier date by the honourable Senator Molson about the Opportunities for Youth Program 1971, with special reference to the Boy Scouts of Canada.

I have before me now a supplementary reply that was not ready on the earlier occasion. Perhaps I might put it on the record for the benefit of the honourable Senator Molson and other honourable senators.

The Secretary of State advises me that the Citizenship Branch provides annually up to $15,000, plus the moneys available to them through the Young Voyageur program.

In addition to the annual citizenship development grant which goes to the national Boy Scouts Association, the Travel and Exchange Division has given the following amounts in the past five years:

1971-72	$39,433

Hon. Mr. Molson: I thank the honourable Leader of the Government for giving me the supplementary information. I have a couple of supplementary questions for him on the same score, but I will save them for another day.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Hon. Paul Martin tabled:

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, before Orders of the Day are called I would like to make a short statement with respect to the anticipated activities of this chamber and its committees over the next week or so. The honourable Senator Molson yesterday referred to rumours. There are even more rumours today than there were yesterday, but we are not always influenced by rumours.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Have you any facts?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Facts are hard to come by. However, from the best information I have been able to obtain there is a possibility that Bill C-262—the $80 million bill, as I call it—will be passed by the House of Commons by Friday, or Monday of next week.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Is that Friday of this week?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Monday of next week or Friday of this week. That being the case this chamber would be anxious to deal with it immediately, and that would necessitate our returning next Tuesday. I hope to have more concrete information by this time tomorrow, but should that be the best guess, then, we will return to deal with that bill probably on the evening of September 21.

Hon. Mr. Walker: In the cafeteria?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: No, in this chamber. If we are able to deal with the bill next week, then, in all probability the Senate would adjourn to October 4, subject to recall. This would allow us to free the chamber and other facilities in this building for the NATO meeting. During the period of adjournment the Senate will be busying itself with its committee meetings despite the fact that the house will not be sitting. The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has set a meeting for September 22 at 4 p.m., when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Hon. Mr. Pepin, will be the witness. That committee has a second meeting set for September 29 at 3.30 p.m., when Mr. Philip Talbot, who is the head of the Asian Society of New York City, will be the witness. The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet on September 29 and September 30.

That is the best information I can give honourable senators at the moment. I hope there will be something more concrete tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I am in full sympathy with the deputy leader.

CRIMINAL CODE (JURY SERVICE FOR WOMEN)

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson moved the third reading of Bill S-20, to amend the Criminal Code (Jury Service for Women).

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, when the third reading of this bill was called on the day the Senate recessed I suggested that it be postponed until today, not because I did not want the bill to pass, for I then indicated that I would agree, and still will agree, to third reading being given, but because I wanted to check on what the legislatures of the two provinces where women were not allowed to act as jurors had done in the meantime.

I consider that the main objective of this bill was really to force these two provinces to do something about it. They have done so. On June 18, royal assent was given to a bill passed by the National Assembly of Quebec, amending the Jury Act, whereby women henceforth may act as jurors.

I know that the Legislature of the Province of Newfoundland has passed an act, further to amend the Judicature Act. I have not the date royal assent was given to the bill. The explanatory note to the bill shows that it was designed to provide that the obligation of service for juries would include, among others, women and civil servants.

Honourable senators, we have been given the opinion by the Department of Justice that the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction in this matter, in any event as far as criminal matters are concerned. I do not doubt that.

The only point I wish to put on the record is that since 1867 the problem of the selection of juries in civil as well as in criminal matters has been left entirely to the decision of the legislatures. I do not know why. Did they consider at that time that it was ancillary to the powers of the provinces to organize the courts? It certainly is ancillary to criminal matters, of course, which are within the province of the federal jurisdiction. In any event, we may be doing something which will have no further consequence. It may not pass the other place only by our giving third reading to this bill here today. However, at least the introduction of this bill here will have had, as a result, the correction of the situation which we wanted to correct. I think we should congratulate Senator Fergusson for having done that. By giving the bill third reading we will be telling the people of Canada that the Senate has taken a stand on this matter. Even if the bill never receives royal assent, the situation has been corrected anyway, and under the circumstances we have done a wise thing.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

URBAN AFFAIRS

PROBLEMS AND PROSPECTS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, May 25, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Thompson calling the attention of the Senate to the Report prepared for the Minister responsible for Housing entitled: "Urban Canada: Problems and Prospects", tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, 9th March, 1971.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, I think this is an appropriate moment to address my colleagues on a matter which is currently generating a great deal of interest among the whole population.

Last June, I expressed my intention to address my honourable colleagues after Senator Thompson who, quite appropriately, drew our attention to the Lithwick Report entitled "Urban Canada: Problems and Prospects" prepared for the minister responsible for housing and tabled in early March 1971.

Since every Canadian is directly involved in this every day of his life, this is obviously for us one of our most important political as well as social and economic problems. In view of the town planning projections for the next generation, one can see its vital consequences on our future and that of our children.

Senator Thompson made a contribution to the Senate with his excellent criticism of that report. The report followed numerous studies, important articles, a large number of publications and many recommendations of commissions which in recent years have gathered for us ample information on Canadian town planning.

May I mention, by the way, some of the other most famous and most recent Canadian works on the same subject: "Urban Development in Canada", by Leroy O. Stone; "The Urban Renewal Process in Canada", published by the University of British Columbia; and "Planning the Canadian Environment" by L. O. Gertler.

It is a fact that Canada ranks today among the five most urbanized countries in the world. Like the United States, and in spite of the vastness of the country, the Canadian population is 75 per cent urban, a too large proportion of which is now considered as poor.

It is also well known that the interest shown by Canadian authorities in town planning has also grown in this country, obviously because of the increasing number of urban problems.

[English]

Many will remember the report of the Task Force on Housing and Urban Development submitted in 1969 to the Right Honourable the Prime Minister by the Honourable Paul Hellyer, then minister responsible for housing and urban affairs. Between 350 and 400 briefs were submitted and studied at that time. Obviously, the former minister, Mr. Hellyer, thought the problem truly important, since he himself presided over the majority of the meetings across Canada. Moreover, some ten Canadian universities saw fit to take part in the study of this report, entitled "Program of Action for an Urban Canada", and the report was tabled in January 1969. No doubt many of you will recall Mr. Hellyer's anxiety in respect of this report and his impatience to have its recommendations adopted. You will also recall that the report contained a declaration of principles in ten parts. These principles were widely discussed and evaluated; some, involving political philosophies, were quite hotly debated because they were considered controversial. The last principle enumerated can be stated somewhat as follows:

> To realize a full efficiency the urban planning must be undertaken in a realistic constitutional and geographical context as free as possible from artificial, political, economical and social encumbrances.

A great many aspects of urban development and appropriate projections were seriously treated in the report. My point is that in spite of so much concern, so much interest, so many studies and so many important recommendations, this report was set aside. It was shelved.

It was Doxiadis, a Greek planner who had made quite a name for himself, who once commented that a planner who is unable to sell his plan to the people and their politicians has no plan at all—just a piece of paper. Attention is now again directed to a new urban report—the Lithwick Report—made to the present Minister of State for Urban Affairs, Mr. Robert Andras.

I believe it would be useful to state at this time what the former minister responsible for housing, Mr. Hellyer, wrote a few months ago in an article entitled "Today's Inaccessible Housing". I quote:

> In Canada we have a Constitution that was designed for the society and problems of 1867. In many ways it has shown itself remarkable. In other ways it is antiquated and all too often its potential flexibility is denied in order to justify inaction.
> The British North America Act places primary responsibility for housing at the provincial level. At the same time, the federal Government has power over monetary and fiscal policy, which is, in fact, decisive for housing and urban development.

Moreover, the patterns of urban growth are nation-wide and are simply beyond provincial power to control. The upshot of this has been a myriad of confusion and ad hoc arrangements which seldom take the long view.

We will surely not see for our great urban centres the vast realizations that were and are now being dreamed of by our urbanists and that were or are recommended unless we find effective ways of providing and assuring the right actions on these recommendations.

Presently we are far from using ideal Canadian guidelines in the field of urbanism, for fighting our urban poverty, for instance, and the placing of urbanist reports to be dealt with on the Greek calends, as the saying goes, alongside so many other forgotten worthwhile recommendations for the betterment of our equitable Canadian urban living. This makes us rather wonder about the possibility of our establishing comprehensive, large-scale Canadian strategic urban plans.

In town planning, one must be objective and admit that it is useless to try and achieve impossible dreams or absurdities which would but establish meaningless differences in style, very controversial concepts, doomed from the start to failure, to general criticism, such as was the case in 1967, with Habitat at Man and His World, where no account was taken of the extremes of our Canadian climate, or the comfort of the tenants, so as to enjoy more freedom in the outline of an external architectural innovation, purist and personal, but simplistic and devoid of any functional concept.

Let me take this opportunity to mention that it is also, nowadays, surprising to note in this country the obsolescence and confusion of our Canadian standards for building and town planning in all classes of society.

The majority of these appear debatable and, in too many cases, backward, obsolete, while forcing and imposing too often very ugly realizations, neither functional nor practical, and even condemnable.

Also, there is no good reason why building standards should vary, as they do now, from one province to the other, according to tastes and wishes sometimes quite peculiar and which, too often, are essentially different according to the region, city or town.

Such absurd and unnecessary differences between Canadian standards should not exist in a country where the best data and the best methods of technical assessment are available.

I, for one, am most anxious to see the recommendations and suggestions embodied in the Lithwick report implemented in the best interests of a great number of Canadians.

[English]

Bill C-207, enacted last June, established Canada's first Minister of State for Urban Affairs who assumed the responsibility of creating a new institution to cope with the mounting issues of a rapidly urbanizing Canada. The new Ministry of Urban Affairs is being committed by its minister, the Honourable Robert Andras, to some important and far-reaching objectives.

Mr. Andras, in a speech delivered at a conference on cities in Indianapolis in May of this year, said:

> For many of our societies abound with great designs for achieving political or administrative reforms and although the will and expertise to develop the broad policy frameworks which our complex economies and societies demand is a difficult enough process, the real test comes in seeking their implementation. The complex formal organizations, the public bureaucracies, and private institutions, as well as the fragmentation among political jurisdictions, all work to prevent changes in our traditional ways of coping with national problems, I believe the new approach to our urban planning offers our Canadians some hope that we shall now see the planned realization of useful political, social and economic recommendations on the state of our Canadian urbanization, on the possibilities of added modernized guidelines and on the help to be accorded to our Canadians toward the achievement and the realization of a Canadian urban dream, basically supported by practical, esthetical, functional and economical considerations.

We have seen its equivalent in the better periods of antiquity in Egypt. We have seen it at the time of the Romans and the Greeks, and we have seen it closer to our times in the urban horizontal architectural planning and achievements in Paris, Rome, Vienna, Buenos Aires and a few other great and beautiful cities of our world that are now, we must admit, unfortunately being gradually destroyed or damaged because of necessary ad hoc modern traffic arrangements.

In spite of this, Grecian, Italian, Egyptian and these other beautiful cities remain focal points of things to see because of their urban visionaries. Here the solution to new basic urban problems now calls for the installation of modern urban expressways, of more numerous and diversified urban airports in ever-increasing numbers, of urban business centres of a conception and on a scale never before imagined, of functional skyscrapers for all imaginable purposes, and of immense urban underground complexes of stores, garages, theatres, subways and crossway passages. Why should we view on our streets, for instance, quite continuously an accumulation of garbage bags and cans waiting, sometimes for days, to be carried away? Why should man be without shading trees on most streets? Why should traffic be what it is? Exhaustive and daring urban studies of these problems have been made with a view to more appropriate and corrective legislative guidelines. While it is now important to open the minds of all our Canadians to newer and bolder creative, aesthetical, functional Canadian approaches to all aspects of the urban problems, it must be fully realized that urban poverty is closely connected to the urbanization process.

Our generation will now be provided with better means through this new ministry so that it can furnish Canada with the possibilities of wonderful achievements that will mark well our time and our wisdom.

The Honourable Robert Andras stated at the Indianapolis Conference:

> The Ministry's role as a focus and source of policy development for urbanization in Canada will have three characteristic features:
> (a) It will be co-ordinative in its method of developing comprehensive urban policies, based on continuing research, and primarily oriented to the federal presence and initiative.
> (b) It will be supportive to the current and future urban programs maintained and developed by other federal agencies and having direct influence from coast to coast. In this process, the ministry will not attempt to duplicate existing delivery facilities, nor to take them over.
> (c) It will be a consultative position in relation to the federal, provincial and municipal matters. The ministry is committed to developing a broadly and highly visible and continuing consultative forum and process involving the federal Government, the provinces and the municipalities and urban communities in order to build the broadest possible understanding for the process of urbanization and, thereby, initiating a consensus in the building of national policies and federal initiatives.

In some 30 years—just one generation—we are anticipating a Toronto with a population of 6.5 million, a Montreal with a population of 6.3 million, a Vancouver with a population of some 2½ million, and from six to ten other Canadian cities of over one million in population, each with an immensity of complex urban problems.

It makes a frightening and alarming urban picture in our minds, especially if we add the accompanying urban poverty. Yet, with adequate achieved and corrective planning, it can be accepted as a pleasurable, seductive and thrillingly beautiful picture. It is sad that in the past the best urban planners, the best urban dreamers, in Canada, as everywhere else, have very seldom brought about the realization of their dreams for us. We know with computerized certainty what is anticipated in the year 2000. I am glad we will not discard these new Canadian plans on urbanism. Such plans have the additional advantage of providing much needed employment. It remains true that when, as, and if, they are achieved and realized, they will then appear to posterity as the best real values that we, as individuals, left behind as cities, and as a country. They are what remain of note behind us; what there is to admire through time by the worlds of tomorrow, by Canadians of future generations.

The young, famed and renowned Vancouver architect, Arthur Erickson, the designer of the award-winning Expo 70 pavilion, the co-designer of Fraser University, and recent winner and recipient of the 1971 $50,000 Royal Bank Canadian achievement award took the occasion of the acceptance of the award to attack the gridiron pattern of present urban designs which he said is geared to real estate and industry and not to the needs of the people. He also took this occasion to attack the fragmentized nature and isolationist philosophies of cities and their planning by saying:

> If we are going to ask our cities to be worthwhile habitats for man, man has to have the priority. This has not been the case in North America.

The city, in its ugly, chaotic sprawl only reflects back our indifference to it—electric wires on wooden poles do visual violence to our views, as do wastelands of parked cars in the hearts of the cities, and deserted streets because the streets are not for people but grim sunless spaces between lowering edifices. Our priorities have not been for cities designed for man.

Much can be gained for Canadians by making every one of our citizens conscious of the studies and other Canadian reports on urbanism, and by projecting the image of what should be the design of our cities in the next decades. This seems to me to call for a major priority approach, and I make a strong plea for the implementation of their suggestions and recommendations.

On motion of Hon. Mr. McDonald, debate adjourned.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

PACIFIC AREA STUDY—PROGRESS REPORT OF COMMITTEE —DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, May 5, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Aird calling the attention of the Senate to the recent activities of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs with regard to the Pacific area.

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, I was away from Canada for a few days at the end of June and at the beginning of July, the focal point of my mission being to represent the Government at the inauguration of the President of the Republic of Korea.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Leader of the Opposition, (Hon. Mr. Flynn), Senator McDonald and other honourable senators for the co-operative way which they allowed me to leave at that time, when there were some important measures before the Senate. I want them to know, the Leader of the Opposition in particular, how grateful I am for the co-operation extended to me in the last days of June.

I have again been fortunate in the coincidence of my responsibilities as a member of the cabinet with the responsibility with which the Senate has charged the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Last December I reported to the Senate on a government mission I had led to inquire into the state of our relations with Commonwealth Caribbean countries, a mission that took place after the publication of the study on the recommendation of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs on that question. This session the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, under the chairmanship of Senator Aird, has undertaken a study of the Pacific; that is to say, our relations with the Pacific area. My mission to the Far East followed on the hearings of that committee, though it has preceded in this instance the publication of the committee's report.

I was pleased that the Senate charged the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs with the task of looking into the state of Canada's relations with the Far East. It was not an area that had been exhaustively covered in the booklet on the "Pacific" in the Government policy paper entitled "Foreign Policy for Canadians", bearing the authorship of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Hon. Mr. Sharp), which on his behalf I tabled in this chamber on June 25 last year.

When the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs agreed to accept the Pacific area for its terms of reference in the current session, it enabled the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence in the other place to forbear from holding hearings on the Pacific in that committee's inquiry and assessment of the policy papers entitled "Foreign Policy for Canadians". The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has thus had an excellent, exceptional and, I may say, unchallenged opportunity to concentrate governmental and public attention on its own work in this area, which is opening up as one of the vital areas for Canada.

For my own part, the chance that I was asked to undertake this mission to the Far East has enabled me to keep abreast of the committee's work more easily than perhaps might otherwise have been the case.

I may say that I stopped off in Japan on my way to Korea, which was my primary point of assignment, and it happened that elections to the upper house, the House of Councillors, the upper chamber in the Japanese Diet, were taking place at the time I reached Tokyo. In the Japanese upper chamber members are elected for a term of six years, with elections held every three years for the retirement and replacement of half of the chamber. Although it was intended, I believe, as a non-partisan chamber, reflecting to some extent perhaps our own behaviour, in the event the House of Councillors has become much more of a party chamber than is the Senate here in Canada. Not only is less than a handful of the 252 councillors called Independent, but the party supporters themselves admittedly behave in a more partisan manner than is our custom and tradition.

The House of Councillors is also unlike the Canadian Senate in that, although there has been not more than one Canadian senator in the cabinet for many years, when I was in Japan in June there were three councillors in Prime Minister Sato's cabinet. They were the Minister of Justice, the Director-General of the Economic Planning Agency, and the Director-General of the Science and Technical Agency.

Hon. Mr. Haig: How many are in their cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I think it is 21.

When I was in Tokyo I took advantage of the opportunity, thanks to the arrangements of our ambassador, Mr. Moran, to discuss some matters with the then Japanese Foreign Minister, Mr. Aichi, whom I have known for some time. I was anxious to have some discussions with him in the wake of the elections for the upper house in Japan, and more particularly of the Okinawan Reversion Agreement that had been signed by Japan and the United States on June 17.

I would like to note in passing that the governing Liberal Democratic Party had lost a little ground in the election, particularly in the Foreign Minister's own area, because of the low price on surplus rice, which led to the defeat of the candidate in the constituency where the Foreign Minister himself resides, and which he represents in the Japanese Diet.

I had occasion to see him last fall when I was in Cairo at President Nasser's funeral. It was interesting for he and I to discuss certain matters that have evolved in the meantime. He was able to brief me on the negotiations for the remission of Okinawa to Japan, of which he was the chief negotiator. The results of these negotiations were naturally very satisfactory to him. I need not emphasize how significant and important that particular negotiation and its results were for the Japanese people at a time when they are so anxious to recover to the fullest possible extent, short of military power, the status they had formerly occupied as an important power in Asia.

I reminded Mr. Aichi that the last time I was in Tokyo as Secretary of State for External Affairs I had discussed with the then Japanese Foreign Minister the question of bilateral relations with the People's Republic of China, and the possible membership of that government in the United Nations. I had explained at that time that Canada was moving forward towards bringing Peking into greater contact with other powers in the world, an initiative which had not then been entirely welcomed by some of the countries friendly to us. I recall very well the reaction at that time of Prime Minister Ikeda, who looked upon a public comment by the Foreign Minister of another country in Japan at that time as giving encouragement to a discussion which at that moment was not thought to be propitious or in Japan's interests. Much water has flown over the dam since, including the initiative of Prime Minister Chou En-lai and Mr. Nixon, the President of the United States. The international climate last June was more favourable to the People's Republic of China than at the time I was the Canadian Foreign Minister.

Japan, as we all understand—and I emphasize this —is fairly close to Taiwan geographically, has many ties with that island, and has a considerable trading relationship. It was evident that although Japan was interested in an overall settlement in East Asia, and specifically in a solution of the problem of bilateral relations with the People's Republic of China, the issue was sufficiently controversial in Japan that initiatives would be unlikely to emanate from that quarter.

Since my return to Canada, Mr. Aichi has retired as Foreign Minister. He has been replaced by Mr. Takeo Fukuda, whom I used to know when he was Minister of Finance. Mr. Fukuda has been in Canada during the past three days. He and his colleagues in the Japanese Government are now in Vancouver, on their way back home. I am sure that the discussions which Canadian ministers had with the Japanese ministers were useful on a wide front, not only in the matter of foreign policy but more particularly at this time in respect of international economic matters. These are very much in our minds, as they are in the minds of most people in this country, when we take into account the course, the posture, we wish to take and must assume in the face of the important policy decisions taken by the Government of the United States in its international trade relationships.

It is significant that at the meeting in Toronto of Canadian and Japanese ministers on Monday and Tuesday, there was a wide discussion between the ministers of the two governments, indeed as there had been between Japanese ministers, the same Japanese ministers, and their counterparts in Washington at the end of last week.

This is not a time for ill-considered observation. Obviously it is a time of great importance to all nations dedicated to a multilateral approach in the trade of the nations. We will have occasion—when the compensatory bill, designed to maintain employment at the level of August 15, comes before us—to discuss this matter in that particular context. I am sure that all of us in this house, and others elsewhere in the world now, are taking account of the consequences of actions being taken by our friendly neighbour as a result of the international exchange position and the trade position in which it seems to find itself.

Mr. Fukuda is an important member of the present Government of Japan. He is not only its Foreign Minister, but an important leader in the Liberal Democratic Party of Japan. His views on the international problems of that area of the world may not be very different from his predecessor. He has had a pleasant and continuous working association—as I know from the talk I had this morning with Mr. Sharp—with Canadian Government representatives.

When I was in Japan I had a talk also with another old friend, former Foreign Minister Miki, whom I first met in 1964 in connection with the Canada-Japanese meetings. His assignment at that time was Minister of International Trade and Industry. Honourable senators will recall his visit to Ottawa in the spring of 1970, when we recognized his presence in the Senate gallery.

Honourable senators, when I was in Tokyo I was able to go, incidentally, through the International House of Japan, and talk to its director Dr. Matsumoto. His institute is analogous to the Royal Institute of International Affairs in London, England, which, as senators know, is known as Chatham House, though Chatham House does not possess living accommodation, whereas International House of Japan does.

I found it was a useful centre for parliamentarians, for academics, for businessmen and other members of the interested public, to be able to get together to listen to lectures and to work together in study groups on current international problems.

The work of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs in Canada—particularly its work here in Ottawa, and its relations with Parliament—is something that our Foreign Affairs Committee in the Senate is familiar with. It is doing some of the kind of work that is being done by its counterpart in Japan. Tokyo and London, of course, are the capitals of small but densely populated countries, and the co-location of the governmental and commercial centres makes that kind of arrangement more workable than in a country like Canada, with our vast spaces. The circumstances in Canada, for the application of the institute as I saw it in Japan, as I know it to exist in England, may not be comparable here in Canada. I am not so sure that that kind of establishment, at least on that scale, would be viable here in Ottawa at this juncture.

There was one centre which I saw that did impress me very much. I am referring to the Gaimucho Entertainment Building, as it is called, that is to say, the official reception centre of the Japanese Foreign Ministry. It is a large building, beautifully decorated, and with rooms for entertaining visiting dignitaries as few in number as two or three, or as many as two or three thousand. Anyone who has held the portfolio of Foreign Affairs will recognize this entertainment problem, but I recognize that it is one which is not fully appreciated by others. I am happy that we ourselves in Canada are now constructing, on Sussex Street, a very fine building which will be able to accommodate our foreign service. It is not, however, an entertainment centre.

Those of us who go to other countries realize that we certainly are not in a position to vaunt with much pride the facilities that we have, in relation to what they are able to provide. Sometimes the public find it hard to understand why public buildings cost what they do, why foreign service departments spend as they do—failing to recognize that it is an essential role for a country that wishes to occupy an influential place in its relations with other countries to have the necessary facilities.

Other government departments in Japan, such as the Trade Ministry, have similar buildings to the one I have just mentioned. There they receive and have discussions with visitors from all over the world. I have no doubt that this is a facility that we shall increasingly have to develop in Canada. We are not one of the poorer countries. We are one of the more important countries, and I think the time has come when our horizons should be directed along these lines more than in the past.

It was my impression while in Tokyo that such a centre would be quite beyond the present resources of the Canadian Government. However, a day or two later, while in Korea, I discovered that the Korean Government operated a government reception centre, which it called a guest house.

I do not believe that different ministries in the Republic of Korea can boast of having their own guest house, but the government as a whole owns and operates a reception centre for the handling of official gatherings.

I suppose that there is the risk that a government reception centre in Canada might appear to be too lavish an enterprise and wasteful of taxpayers' money, but in the Far East it is regarded as cheaper than renting reception rooms in large hotels. It certainly was my experience, when I was responsible for foreign affairs in this country a few years ago, that cumulatively renting becomes rather costly.

Canada is interested in Japan, which is now our third trading partner, and which might easily become our second best customer. It is important that we should know Japan and her people, and have close contact with the members of the government.

Construction of new buildings is something that one sees all over Tokyo, and appears to be going on all the time, from sunrise to dusk, on weekdays and on holidays. This tremendous industry, combined with the rising but still relatively low wage structure, plus working in extremely modern and up-to-date plants, have combined to provide Japan with its impressive productivity, which, I am sure, is something that we in Canada and the United States note with great envy.

In 1968 Japan surpassed West Germany in its gross national product, and in the view of some analysts, notably Herbert Kahn, the Soviet Union and the United States should expect to be overtaken by Japanese growth within a measurable number of years.

Japan does not rate as highly in per capita income. By its own calculation, Japan was about nineteenth in the world in per capita income in 1969. Perhaps that figure is misleadingly low, since Japanese employment practices provide for very high bonuses and other material rewards which are not incorporated in their official wage picture.

In mentioning Mr. Kahn's prediction of Japanese future growth, I am not endorsing it. Mr. Kahn's method is to take the growth of the 1950s and 1960s, and to project it at the same rate for the next 20 years. This is starting from a low base point, using a limited and not necessarily typical period of growth, and assuming that that rate will continue for years ahead. When one looks at Japan's growth over a whole century, rather than over two decades which involved recovery and development from the devastation of the Second World War, the Japanese growth rate is not quite as incredible as it has appeared in recent years.

I notice that in the fiscal year 1970-71, which ended March 31, 1971, the Japanese economy expanded by 9.9 per cent. The figure for 1969-70 was 12.6 per cent. If one uses an adjusted rate over several years in the late 1960s, one arrives at a figure of 14 per cent.

I find it difficult to regard an expansion of an economy at 9.9 per cent in a year as a recession, but that term was used in Japan when I was there in the month of June. We can, of course, sympathize with the problem of the Japanese Government in finding jobs for a massively increasing labour force, a problem which we face also in Canada and which exists to a large extent in the United States. In Canada we require a considerable increase in the national product and in labour-intensive projects to keep our rapidly expanding labour force occupied.

I should now like to speak briefly about my mission to Korea. As I said earlier, I had gone there to attend the third inauguration of President Park, who has been the dominant political figure in Korea since 1961.

[Hon. Mr. Martin.]

Canada enjoys happy and useful diplomatic relations with that country, and Korea has a resident ambassador in Ottawa. We do not have a resident ambassador in Seoul. Our ambassador in Japan is accredited to the Republic of Korea.

The Canadian Government felt, as have the governments of other countries, that it wanted to demonstrate to the people of Korea its regard for them by having a member of the Government attend the third inauguration of the president. The ceremony was attended by representatives of many other governments, including the vice president of the United States. The event was celebrated at ministerial level by other nations, and the Government of Canada recognized that our friendship with the Republic of Korea dictated that our representation should be at an equivalent level.

Canada was one of the eight nations on the United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea in 1948, which attempted without success to supervise elections throughout the whole of Korea.

Because of the co-operation the United Nations received in the southern part of Korea, Canada supported the General Assembly Resolution later in 1948 which constituted official recognition of the Republic of Korea.

During the Korean War over 22,000 Canadian troops served in that theatre. For the past 21 years the United Nations Commission on the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea has sought the establishment of a unified, independent and democratic government in all Korea, a goal which Canada has steadily supported.

Unfortunately Korea is a divided state. Had it not been for the difficult weather I would have gone to the demarcation line, to the demilitarized zone. It has for me very intimate memories, because I had something to do with the discussions in the earlier stages that led to the Korean Armistice.

In addition to being personally involved in many of the decisions as a member of at least two Canadian governments, I enjoy at the present time the privilege of being patron of the Canada-Korea Foundation, the principal organization that has been established in Canada to foster good Canadian-Korean relations. Its equivalent in Korea is the Korea-Canada Cultural Association, an organization to which I spoke in Seoul on July 2.

Yesterday, within the precincts of Parliament, I welcomed some 50 students from Montreal who had spent the summer in Korea as exchange students. They had gone there to see something of the country, as well as to assist the people of Korea in some of the country's building enterprises, and even in their agricultural pursuits.

I had hoped to pay my respects at the Canadian cemetery near Pusan, which is a permanent testimony to the 1,500 Canadian casualties in the Korean War. I had also hoped to visit the Commonwealth cemetery near Panmunjon at the demilitarized zone. Both of these trips of homage fell victim to the monsoons, which arrived a little early this year and restricted my movements. I was, however, able to visit the National Cemetery of Korea, which is located just outside the capital city of Korea. It is the burial ground of Korea's military heroes and distinguished citizens, such as the late Syngman Rhee, who was President of the Republic of Korea for three terms until 1960.

There is only one foreigner buried in that cemetery, and I am proud to say that he is a Canadian. He was the late Dr. Frank W. Schofield, a missionary from Guelph, Ontario, who devoted many years of his life to Korea. He was a specialist in preventive medicine, served on the staff of the Seoul National University, and died a year or two ago at a ripe old age. He is not perhaps quite as legendary in Korea as Dr. Norman Bethune is to the people of the People's Republic of China, but he is perhaps the Canadian best known to Koreans. It is a real tribute to Dr. Schofield that the Government of Korea sought to have him buried in the National Cemetery of Korea, and I was fortunate to be able to do honour to his memory by placing a wreath on his grave. He is recognized as a national hero of that country.

Even if my attempts to visit farther points in Korea were aborted by the rains, I was fortunate to have seen at least a little of the life outside of Seoul. Seoul, which after the Second World War was a city of perhaps a million people, has now grown to four or five million. With its industries, high rise buildings and luxury hotels, to see Seoul is perhaps no more to know Korea than to see Montreal is to know Canada. The gross national product of Korea has increased at an average rate of almost 10 per cent annually in real terms from 1962 to 1970, attaining a level in American dollars of some 8.4 billions in 1970. Over 60 per cent of its exports are now in manufactured goods. This represents a real development of the urban sector, but at the expense of a growth in disparities and wealth between the urban and rural areas.

The Korean Government is well aware that its successes to this point have been concentrated in the great cities like Seoul and, more recently, in Pusan and other centres. In his inaugural speech the President of Korea said that in the years ahead he wished to place, and I quote:

> ...Korea in the upper ranks of the intermediate advanced countries by modernizing the nation's agricultural and fishing communities.

Korea is approaching the point of economic self-sufficiency, but its future development will have to be carefully regulated, as President Park well knows. Unemployment, population pressures, low domestic savings and inflation remain as economic problems. The country continues to run a large trade deficit which in 1970 was of the magnitude of $1.1 billion.

Hard work, entrepreneurial skill and good training have contributed to the sense of pride and self-confidence one encounters in visiting Korea. The President forecast in his inaugural address that by the mid-1970s Korea would have become strong enough to achieve unification. Whether this may prove possible of fulfilment I do not know, but it is certainly not the product of defeatism. The Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs of Thailand, with whom I held some very useful discussions, was as impressed as I was by the Koreans' ability and reliability. He anticipated that countries like Korea and Thailand would increasingly stand on their own feet economically and politically.

No one who knows Asia well can help but be vitally impressed with the economic power of Japan, of Thailand, of Taiwan and of the great potential of a country like Korea. There are other Asian nations I could mention. For a country like Canada, a Pacific country, this has great meaning for the future.

I did not detect when I was in Korea any particular turning towards the People's Republic of China. I found, of course, a great deal of interest in Canadian policy in that respect. The Korean Government was, nevertheless, keenly aware of the direction of international trends. There are three sentences in the President's speech which I should like to read to the Senate. He said:

> With this foundation, the time has come for us actively to participate in the channeling of the new international currents of the will to peace. It is within these currents that we must seek ways to achieve our national goals. A great change is taking place around us, as indicated by the rise of a so-called mood of thaw between east and west, and the initiation of efforts for rapprochement between the United States and Communist China.

Whatever those words were intended to mean, they are there for interpretation. I look upon them as significant words, coming from the President of Korea. That speech was not only the first occasion on which the Government of Korea spoke positively about the People's Republic of China, but it is in itself an affirmative statement. The President not merely took note of the rapprochement between the United States and China, but indicated that it was in this direction that Korea would be seeking ways to achieve its own national goals. This speech, I may remind honourable senators, was delivered a fortnight before President Nixon's announcement that he intended to visit Peking.

Neither Canada nor Korea is in a position to control the development of international relations in the Far East, but both countries have been alert to discover what role China would play, and to assist that role to be as constructive and stable as possible.

Canada and Korea have also been concerned to maintain the steady expansion of their bilateral trade. Korea's international trade has been expanding at an even faster rate than its gross national product, and Canada's role in that trade has steadily mounted. As recently as 1965 Korea ranked 116th of our 138 trading partners. By 1968 Canada ranked as the 13th most important nation from which Korea was importing. By 1970 total trade between the two countries was 20 times the inauspicious level of 1965.

There is plentiful evidence of the importance the Canadian Government attaches to our Far Eastern relations. Our trading figures with that region afford convincing testimony of the growing relationship. In 1953, the year before Japan's accession to the GATT and the signing of the Canada-Japan trade agreement, bilateral trade between the two countries amounted to $132 million. By 1970 trade had expanded ten-fold to $1,377 million. In Canada, Japan now ranks after the United States and the United Kingdom as our third most important trading partner. In Japanese perspective, Canada ranks after the United States and Australia as Japan's third most important supplier.

Canadian-Korean trade is at a more modest level, with the most-favoured-nation agreement between the two countries dating only from 1966. Bilateral trade has, however, jumped from approximately $1.5 million in 1965 to over $33 million in 1970. Canada follows the United States, Japan, Vietnam, Hong Kong, and West Germany as the sixth most significant purchaser of Korean exports. The 1970 trade figures also indicate that we are tenth highest in terms of countries importing into Korea.

Fifteen months ago the foreign policy paper entitled Foreign Policy for Canadians, predicted that the Pacific area was likely to continue to experience more rapid economic growth than the world at large. So far that prediction appears to be still accurate. The White Paper also said:

> With a vast and varied potential, the Pacific area offers great challenges and opportunities for the growth of economic and commercial exchanges. The extent to which this potential can be developed will depend not only on deliberate and concerted efforts to understand and cater for the needs of the Pacific region markets, but on the establishment of a climate which minimizes conflict and instability.

That assessment remains equally valid, and the Government can claim to be contributing alike to the development of trade and to the reduction of conflict.

Some months ago when Canada recognized the People's Republic of China, a number of other countries clearly followed our lead. With the announcement last July of President Nixon's projected visit to Peking, the most crucial readjustment in Far Eastern political relationships appears to be in process of fulfillment.

During the past year the Canadian Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, and other ministers have journeyed to the Far East. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce led a mission to Hong Kong and China at the time that I visited Japan and Korea, and our colleague, Senator McNamara, was a member of that delegation. We travelled together as far as Tokyo where our paths diverged. They went to Peking while I went on to Seoul from Tokyo. I understand that we can look forward to a report from Senator McNamara tomorrow on that important mission, of which he was a distinguished member. We have also had the advantage of the observations and reactions of the national leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, who spent some time in China and Japan in the month of July. Many businessmen also have visited the Far East, and many more will do so during the coming months.

It has not taken very many years for Canada to discover that it has very deep roots in Asia. We have always been a Pacific power, but the full implication of that has dawned on us only within recent years. I remember as a schoolboy reading of a visit of a former Canadian Prime Minister to India when he was Deputy Minister of Labour. To me at that time India seemed just as far away as I am sure it did to my contemporaries. Even before the beginning of World War II Asia did not have for us the significance that it has today. Our relations, of course, with the Commonwealth portions of Asia gave us contacts that were important and vital for the evolution of our foreign policy experience. Our relationships with Australia, New Zealand, India, Ceylon, Pakistan, Malaysia, and Singapore have given us strong attachments in Asia. These attachments continue to play a very important and very significant part in our foreign policy and have influenced greatly our approach to world problems. Now as a result of greater interdependence brought about by scientific achievement and the efficiency of the airplane, Asia is much closer to us, and the countries I have spoken of today have taken on a relationship of special significance, not only in terms of our trade interests but in terms of our political obligations as a country that wishes to make a solid contribution to international collaboration.

A stable political relationship, both for the preservation of peace and for the development of trade, is our aim. I should like to think that my visit, and the other visits to which I have referred, together with the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs concerning the Pacific area, will contribute in some way to the furtherance of these aspirations which so many of us hold in common.

On motion of Hon. Mr. McNamara, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO SIT DURING ADJOURNMENTS

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e):

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate of more than one week.

He said: Honourable senators, when I presented such a motion on Tuesday last on the Foreign Affairs Committee, the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Flynn) asked me why it was necessary. To be quite honest, I did not know the reason, but I got away with it. I now refer Senator Flynn to Rule 76(2) and (3) of the Rules of the Senate, which gives permission for select committees to sit up to one week, but for anything which exceeds a week they must have permission of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I looked at the rule and found out that we were both wrong.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Are we going to have an adjournment of more than a week? Is that what you are telling us?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: A statement will be made a little later in the day.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC WORKS

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION IN WOLFVILLE, NOVA SCOTIA—QUESTION

Hon. Frank C. Welch: I have a question I would like to ask the Government Leader (Hon. Mr. Martin). I am sorry to burden him with the task of trying to obtain a reply for me, but I have had no success with the Department of Public Works. I directed my request for information to them in June; I repeated it in mid-July and again in mid-August; it is now mid-September, three months later, and I am still without a reply.

What I would like to know is:

1. Whose idea was it to have the Government build a new post office in the town of Wolfville, Nova Scotia?

2. What was the reason for having a new post office in Wolfville?

3. How much did it cost?

4. Was the cost of removing the old post office part of the contract to build the new one?

5. If not, how much did the removal of the old one cost?

6. Was the cost of landscaping included in the building contract? If not, what did the landscaping cost?

7. Who was granted the material from the old building?

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, I regret that the honourable senator has had difficulty in getting responses to these questions. I will endeavour to see if I can do better.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I do not think you can. The civil servants ignore us parliamentarians all the time. They are running the country. We know that. I hope you admit that.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Once the Leader of the Government intervenes, I hope the honourable senator realizes that the circumstances could change.

THE SENATE

USE OF CHAMBER BY INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, there are two brief matters I would like to bring to your attention. First of all, I have a statement to make with respect to the use of this chamber by organizations other than the Senate itself.

On Tuesday, September 14, the honourable Senator Molson brought to the attention of the Senate the question of making the facilities of our chamber available to international bodies, in particular to interparliamentary associations on the occasion of their annual conferences. Senator Molson made no objection to such a practice but suggested, and rightly, that the Senate should be consulted on such occasions.

We all agree, I think, that during a prolonged adjournment, consultation is rather difficult. In such a case, it has happened that His Honour the Speaker and the Leader of the Government in the Senate had to make a decision regarding the use of our chamber by outside organizations.

If the adjournment is from a Thursday to the following Tuesday, it is sometimes possible, to accommodate certain international associations; but we have to keep in mind that the Senate may be called at any time to sit from Monday to Saturday to give immediate consideration to important measures from the House of Commons. That is why, in such circumstances, whenever we receive a request to use this chamber for meetings of an international character, if an affirmative reply could be given it has always been done with certain reservations. International associations concerned have been asked to find alternative meeting places in case the Senate should be called to sit at the time scheduled for such meetings.

This having been said, I now wish to inform the Senate that the International Association of French-Speaking Parliamentarians asked permission a short time ago to use the Senate chamber for the inaugural ceremonies of its Third Annual Meeting tomorrow, Friday, September 17, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

There has been no firm commitment in that connection either by His Honour the Speaker or by the Government Leader because there was a possibility of the Senate meeting at that particular time to consider certain government measures from the Commons. It now appears that we will not be receiving that legislation immediately.

Although the association of French-speaking parliamentarians would have been able to meet at some place other than the Senate had our chamber not been available, I think we all understand that it is preferable that they should meet in this chamber. It is the practice for all countries to make their legislative chambers available for interparliamentary association meetings.

I am placing these facts before honourable senators for their consideration. If there are no objections to the use of the chamber by the aforementioned association, it will be informed accordingly.

May I suggest that the Internal Economy Committee look into the possibility of establishing a definite procedure concerning use of this chamber by international organizations or for other purposes and report to this chamber accordingly.

In closing may I quote from the speech delivered in the Senate by the honourable Senator Roebuck on March 19, 1969, regarding the use of the Senate Chamber by committees:

> Honourable senators, there are many precedents for the use of the chamber for purposes other than sittings of the Senate itself. For as long as I can remember we have had meetings in this chamber of such bodies as the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Federal-Provincial conferences, and very soon I understand there is to be a meeting of the Speakers of all the legislative bodies of the Commonwealth. They will be accommodated in this chamber and entertained here. I am sure they will go away with a much better impression than if they were received in any other place in Ottawa or, for that matter, in all of Canada.

If there is any comment with respect to the statement I have just made, I am sure we would all like to hear it now; otherwise I should like to deal with the program for the next few days.

Hon. John J. Connolly: If honourable Senator McDonald does not mind my saying so, I think we should consider seriously the business of allowing this chamber to be used for non-legislative purposes, regardless of the fact that on other occasions it has been done. It may be fine to allow such use for parliamentary purposes, but I draw to the attention of the Senate the type of experience that I am sure all of us have had in other countries. I can remember a meeting of the NATO parliamentarians in Washington some years ago. It is now called the North Atlantic Assembly. That is the body that is meeting here. But we did not meet in the Capitol. We did not meet in the Senate chamber or in the House chamber. We met in a splendidly-appointed room which had all the facilities necessary. There was a loud-speaker system and I think a translation system. Indeed, the facilities were completely adequate.

Now, I submit that we have such facilities here in Ottawa, other than the Senate chamber. We have the Railway Committee Room, for example, which was well refurbished when the present Governor General was Speaker of the House of Commons. Good translation and microphonic facilities can be installed in that room quite easily. We also have the large and rather ornate room in the West Block in which recent federal-provincial meetings have been held. Representatives of the Council of Europe were received there last winter. The facilities there are extremely good. In addition to that we also have in the old Union Station a facility that is used by federal-provincial meetings as well as by ministerial meetings. All of these are very good facilities.

I must say that I have been caught a bit by surprise by the suggestion from Senator McDonald that we should hear views now. But, regardless of not being any better advised than I am, after listening to what Senator McDonald has had to say I should think the use of this chamber by anybody but the S nate should be allowed only in very exceptional circumstances. If it is allowed, it should be only as a very exceptional case.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am not prepared to judge or to say what those cases of exception should be. In my opinion the Speaker and the leaders should be the ones to decide that, and it should be up to them to consult others as to what steps should be taken.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, since honourable Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) has made reference to intervention by the Speaker in a case of this kind, I should like to inform the Senate that I have looked at the precedents and I have failed to find any clear policy for dealing with situations of this kind. Personally I feel that this is a subject which could be usefully discussed by our Internal Economy Committee and perhaps we should take time to discuss it thoroughly in the Senate itself. I think it would be of tremendous help to the Chair and to both leaders if a clear policy could be adopted in this matter, and, of course, such policy should be adopted by all honourable senators who are the ones most directly concerned.

However, honourable senators, that is the situation as it exists at the present time, and personally I would very much like to see a clear policy established so that in future we may be able to deal with requests of this kind, particularly when they deal with the use of the Senate chamber during adjournments.

As I say, honourable senators, I think it would be worthwhile if our Internal Economy Committee examined this matter.

Hon. Paul Martin: I welcome the intervention of Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) in this discussion. I think he has expressed what most of us feel. We must keep in mind that this is one of the Houses of Parliament, and generally the use of a House of Parliament is a restricted one. This certainly is the case in the United Kingdom and it has been our tradition in both this chamber and the House of Commons.

Referring to the suggestion of Senator McDonald that the International Association of French-speaking Parliamentarians should meet here tomorrow, let me point out that since they are a parliamentary group they would be more than welcome to have the use of this chamber. I agree completely with the view expressed by Senator McDonald in asking the Senate for its concurrence. But it is also my view that Senator Connolly has raised a valid point. I feel it would be extremely useful to have this matter examined carefully by the Internal Economy Committee so that in the absence of any clear precedent a definite policy can be established.

I believe that the meeting under the auspices of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to which Senator Connolly referred a moment ago was not in fact a meeting of NATO parliamentarians, but a meeting of the North Atlantic Assembly. I remember very well that it was compos d of a body of individuals not all of whom were serving in any parliamentary or governmental capacity. For instance, the present Ambassador of the United States, Mr. Schmidt, was at that time the head of that body. It is also quite true that they did not meet within our precincts. But I should think that when an outside international parliamentary body is in Ottawa, the situation is somewhat different and we should perhaps adopt a more liberal view about the use by such a body of this chamber.

Another point which Senator Connolly regards as being important, and one which we should not overlook—although I am afraid I have overlooked it myself when requests have been put to me—is that for two years now we have had here in Ottawa, in the old Union Station, a handsome conference centre for federal-provincial conferences and many other conferences of a governmental character. Many bodies that normally apply for the use of this chamber, or that of the House of Commons, could well be accommodated there. That is something that the Internal Economy Committee might bear in mind when it comes to consider the question in substance.

Hon. Rhéal Belisle: Honourable senators, I want to make it quite clear that I have no objection to this chamber being used for any good purpose which the Leader of the Government and His Honour the Speaker feel is bona fide, in the sense that the gathering qualifies as an international conference. However, I object to having the Internal Economy Committee look into this matter. In my experience, more often than not, that committee has only created confusion in such instances, so I definitely object to its considering such a matter.

Hon. Mr. Smith: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Belisle: I suggest that we appoint an ad hoc committee of the Senate to look into this matter.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I want to make just one brief interjection, in order to point out that there has been a tradition in the Senate that we are among equals. I find it strange that both Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) and Senator Martin should think that the Leader of the Government and His Honour the Speaker should make the decisions. Whether it is recognized or not, there is still an Opposition in the Senate, and I feel that, as among equals, we should be entitled to a say in this regard.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Who started all this?

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might attempt to qualify a statement I made yesterday regarding what the Senate can anticipate in the way of business over the next few days.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Will it really lead to clarification?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I hope it will be a little clearer. Today the rumours are about as strong as they were yesterday, and stronger than they were the day before.

It is almost impossible to anticipate what is going to happen with respect to Bill C-262 that is now before the other place. I know that all honourable senators wish to deal with the legislation immediately it is made available to us, but from the best information I have been able to gather from both the supporters of the Government and the members of the Opposition in the other place, really I do not have a clear indication as to when that bill will come to us.

In those circumstances, perhaps it would be advisable for us to adjourn to a later date, subject to recall at 24 hours' notice, because when the bill comes out of committee in the other place and back into the house it will take a minimum of 24 hours for it to be transmitted to the Senate for consideration. Modern means of communication make it possible for us to advise all honourable senators in time for them to return here within 24 hours. Accordingly, later I propose to move that we adjourn today until Monday, October 4, subject to recall.

I think there is every possibility that we will be recalled. If that is the case, I hope all honourable senators will make a major effort to be here when that legislation is received. That could be, of course, next week, although none of us can predict that. The telegrams are available now in the event they are needed, and they will go out immediately. You will be given 24 hours' notice and, as I have said, I hope each and every one of you will return to give consideration to that measure. However, should it be that the legislation is not passed by the other place within the next two weeks we will remain adjourned until October 4. This will allow us to make not only this chamber but our staff available to NATO, which, I think, is in the interest of the Senate of Canada.

I assure all honourable senators that if it is necessary we will be here to deal with whatever Government legislation may come to us, but the only bill that I can think of at the moment is Bill C-262. In the interval, of course, the standing committees of the Senate, as I announced yesterday, will meet. There are facilities available for NATO and for our standing committees to meet if the Senate is in recess. The two committees that will meet during the recess are the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. I mentioned the dates yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Would the honourable senator repeat the dates?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Yes. The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet on September 29 and 30. The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs will meet on September 22 and 29. Senator Martin has just reminded me that the meetings of the North Atlantic Assembly are open to other than official delegates, and senators are welcome and, indeed, are invited to take part in the proceedings that are open to the public. I hope that many senators will attend.

The joint committee on the Constitution will meet on September 21. I can only say that it is desired that senators will be on hand—and I know they will—to take part in any or all special joint and standing committee meetings during this recess.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, October 4, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Of course, this is subject to recall, which is a probability.

[Hon. Mr. McDonald.]

Hon. Mr. Desruisseaux: Was October 4 or October 5 mentioned?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: October 4.

Hon. Mr. Desruisseaux: It is a Monday.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Perhaps I might be allowed to give an explanation. The reason Monday, October 4 was selected rather than Tuesday, October 5, at 8 o'clock in the evening, is that if the bill should come to us late in the week then we would be here on the Monday rather than the Tuesday to deal with it.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I was in full sympathy with the deputy leader yesterday when he attempted to forecast the business of the Senate, and today I am in full agreement with the decision he has taken in the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Honourable senators, I may be out of order and perhaps I should have risen a moment or two sooner, but may I venture to ask what conclusion we came to with respect to the use of this chamber by these other organizations?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: None whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I do not know whether the Internal Economy Committee is going to consider it or whether it is just being allowed to slide, or what decision is being taken in the matter. Is it going to be decided upon later, or does the statement by the deputy Leader of the Government cover the whole matter?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I would like to make perfectly clear that I have no jurisdiction or authority whatsoever in respect of matters of this kind. Whenever I had a request for the use of the chamber I used to send a copy to both leaders, the honourable Senator Martin and the honourable Senator Flynn, but I am complaining today, as I was during the adjournment, of the lack of a clear policy. I am as much interested as the honourable Senator Forsey in having a clear policy for the future so that the officers of the Senate as well as myself will know what to do in such circumstances.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I hope I interpreted the feeling of honourable senators correctly when I asked for comments after mentioning the request for the use of this chamber tomorrow by the International Association of French-Speaking Parliamentarians. I gathered that there is consent to do that. However, this is by way of an interim agreement.

I made the proposal that the matter should be referred to the Internal Economy Committee.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Honourable senators—

Hon. Mr. McDonald: If the honourable senator would allow me to finish I think I will answer his question.

The Internal Economy Committee is sensitive to the feelings of the senators generally, but regardless of that they will have to report back to the house their findings with respect to the use of the chamber and other facilities. When that happens there can be a general debate, and senators on both sides of the house will make the final decision on the use to be made of this chamber.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: All this I perfectly understand. I apologize to the deputy Leader of the Government for interrupting him. I understood him to make a suggestion about the Internal Economy Committee, but unless my ears have completely handed in their portfolio I did not hear a motion. I heard a suggestion from my distinguished colleague to my right, Senator Belisle, but again he merely said he was prepared to make a motion if necessary. I stand subject to correction, but I heard no motion. Are we going to have consideration by some committee which will then report back to this chamber, or are we to be left hanging in mid-air, between earth and heaven, like Mohammed's coffin?

Hon. Mr. Belisle: I would move that the Senate name a special ad hoc committee of senators to look into this request.

The Hon. the Speaker: There is a motion before the house to adjourn until October 4, and I do not think we have disposed of it.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion to adjourn until Monday, October 4, 1971, at 8 o'clock in the evening?

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

USE OF CHAMBER BY INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS—APPOINTMENT OF AD HOC COMMITTEE—NOTICE OF MOTION

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I understand we now have a motion by the honourable Senator Belisle.

Hon. Mr. Desruisseaux: I second the motion of the honourable Senator Belisle, but I believe that I should say that on Tuesday last there was a discussion about this when it was emphasized that the Senate should retain its prerogative in all cases of decisions for the use of this chamber because of the accepted tradition that the senators' desks are for their use at all times. I maintain that the matter should not go to any standing committee; that if any suggestions are to be made for the use of this chamber, when it is feasible, we should be seized of the matter and take the decision here, which I am sure will be favourable in nearly all cases.

Mention was made of international groups using this chamber. I have some reservations about international groups, of which there are all kinds. Some are not liked by certain minorities who form a part of Canada. It should be—

The Hon. the Speaker: Would the honourable Senator Desruisseaux allow me to put the motion made by the honourable Senator Belisle. It is a debatable motion, and debate should take place on it.

Hon. Mr. Belisle: May I read my motion?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: With all due respect to my friend Senator Belisle, I hope he will not mind if I raise a point of order. Putting the motion at this time requires unanimous consent. I think the problem is important enough to wait until we return, to find out what has been the experience in the use of this chamber by both the French-speaking parliamentarians and NATO. We can then decide what to do, whether to send this matter to a special committee, to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, or debate it in this house. I think we should wait until we come back before dealing with this problem. I believe this is the proper way to settle the question.

Hon. Mr. Belisle: Am I right that when we return I can move my motion?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: You can give notice now.

Hon. Mr. Belisle: Then I give notice that I will move that the Senate choose a committee of five members to look into external requests for the use of this chamber.

The Hon. the Speaker: The honourable Senator Belisle is now giving notice?

Hon. Mr. Belisle: Yes.

PACIFIC AREA STUDY—PROGRESS REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Aird calling the attention of the Senate to the recent activities of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs with regard to the Pacific area.

Hon. William C. McNamara: Honourable senators, I would like to take the opportunity to participate in this discussion, but to be able to do so I will have to request you, Mr. Speaker and honourable senators, to allow me to remain seated while making my presentation.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. McNamara: Thank you very much for this courtesy.

Honourable senators, although I had not intended to participate in the discussion covering this Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs interim report on our relations with the Pacific rim countries, I have decided to do so because of recent developments confronting international trade, which I believe have made the work of this committee even more important than it was before.

Serious developments insofar as international trade is concerned have emphasized the problem of Canada's trade and, in my opinion, created an even greater necessity for us to not only expand but also to diversify trade and to look to and endeavour to enlarge our markets. Notwithstanding market potentials in South America, Africa, regular commercial markets and markets in developing countries, I believe our best chance for substantial market development lies in the Pacific rim countries. However, before addressing myself to Pacific rim trading possibilities, please allow me to express a few personal thoughts on the serious problems confronting international trade today.

We are all aware of problems of inflation and unemployment that we are confronted with, problems that have not only affected our domestic economy but which have seriously affected our ability to compete in the markets of the world. Our Government has been grappling with these problems with some success, although many Canadians are still far from satisfied with our accomplishments to date.

Our own Standing Committee on Finance devoted a lot of time and energy to these problems last spring. They had the benefit of the views of many outstanding economists, not only Canadians but other people prominent in this field from other countries. Although all of these experts seemed to agree as to the seriousness of the situation, unfortunately to my mind—and I sat in on a number of these committee meetings—no real solutions as to how we should deal with these problems were advanced. There were many suggestions, but no clear-cut policies that would correct the situation emerged.

After sitting in on a number of these sessions, my personal reaction is that economists are people similar to the grain marketing experts. You select a group of grain specialists and ask them to study the market situation, and after they have studied world markets they will report to you that there will be a buoyant demand and that prices will rise. Another group of equally competent grain men studying the same situation will report that in their view the market will be sluggish and that prices will decline. It is then up to the marketing board, producers or traders to make their own decisions, trusting that the experts, whose advice they followed, were correct in their forecast.

However, out of these meetings of the Standing Senate Committee on Finance there was one view at least which all the experts appeared to subscribe to which greatly impressed me. This was that Canada's efforts to cope or deal with the problems of inflation and unemployment were the most successful of any country in the western world. Another opinion I formed as a result of their testimony was that inflation, unemployment and monetary problems in the United States were much more serious than the problems that we in Canada have to cope with.

I also developed a strong feeling that the economic policies in all countries were becoming outmoded and that new policies or solutions were going to have to be developed to deal with the many problems that have been plaguing the western world in the last few years. I think, however, that the main impression I gathered from the meetings of the Standing Senate Committee on Finance was that although we were in trouble other countries of the western world were faced with similar problems, and that the situation here in Canada was in no way as serious as the situation that confronts the United States of America. I have always held the view that, although Canada must retain its sovereignty, our economy has been and always will be affected by the economic situation in the United States. When they prosper, we usually are also prosperous; when they are encountering monetary inflation and unemployment difficulties, so are we. When they have international trading problems, we will experience the same difficulties.

These views which I hold will explain why I have not been as disturbed as many other Canadians about the policies and the subsequent barriers to trade that were announced by President Nixon on August 16 last. I am convinced that the Americans were forced to take drastic action to cope with their current economic problems. I am not an economist. I cannot judge whether the policies decided upon by them are the best that could be instituted or whether they will prove to be successful, but I earnestly hope they will have the desired results. If they are successful, I am satisfied that in the long run this new United States policy will be of benefit to Canada and our economy.

I hope I am not discounting the serious short-term effect that this American policy will have on our trade, particularly in so far as our export firms are concerned. There is no doubt that normal trade with the U.S.A. will be seriously disrupted, but I think that this is something we are going to have to live with for a period, which I sincerely trust will be of limited duration.

In this regard I have been pleased to note that our Government has already introduced legislation which, I believe, will be helpful in alleviating the problem that this new policy has created for us. I am hopeful that this new legislation will be approved by both houses in the near future.

I must, however, admit that I am not as optimistic today as I was when I was drafting this presentation about the effect of our new legislation and the help it will provide to our trade. Recent press reports emanating from Washington suggest that the United States may react unfavourably to the legislation we are considering and they may consider it necessary to impose further duties to nullify its effect. I cannot understand such reasoning. Surely any nation is free to institute legislation regarding its own taxation policies. But we will just have to wait and see their reaction.

If they do react as suggested in these press reports, if Congress approves new legislation in a proposal the press refers to as "Disc"—a proposal I do not fully understand —then it may be that my optimistic views about the short duration of their trade barriers will not materialize and the situation will become even more serious than I envisioned when the announcement was made.

Naturally, all Canadians do not subscribe to my views in this regard. There are some who have criticized our Government for rushing down to Washington—I think they referred to it as "cap in hand"—asking for removal of these trade barriers and asking Washington to give our position special consideration. We have a very good case for exemption and special consideration. We were not major contributors to their monetary problems nor to their problems of inflation or unemployment. I think our Government had no alternative but to make an immediate approach to the American Government, setting out our situation. I did not feel we could expect an immediate reaction, but I had the feeling that the Americans understand our situation and as soon as they feel that some of their current trade barriers can be removed or relaxed, Canada will be one of the first nations to be given relief.

The United States are not only our friends and our neighbours, but are also our largest trading partner. We must live and work with them, and if they are to be prosperous their economy must be in good shape and we will benefit accordingly.

Some other Canadians have also criticized our Government for not taking the offensive and countering these new U.S. trade barriers with trade restrictions of our own. They suggest we should be soliciting international support to oppose these new U.S. policies. I just cannot understand the thinking of the advocates of such action. I believe action of this nature could easily promote a trade war, and there is no country in the world that would be as vulnerable in a trade war as our country.

Honourable senators, as I previously mentioned, I was not as disturbed as some other Canadians when the United States announced their new policy. I felt they had to take drastic action. If their action is successful, we will benefit, although, as I previously stated, it will create great difficulties for us in the short run.

What I am greatly concerned about is that this new policy will be continued for a much longer period than originally forecast. If these barriers to free trade are left in effect for any length of time there is no doubt in my mind that their effect on our trade will prove to be disastrous.

We will be entering a new ball game. It may develop that the progress that has been made in recent years to liberalize world trade has been arrested and that protectionism has again raised its ugly head. We, and other countries that have been endeavouring to liberalize trade, may be forced to adopt protectionist measures, which policies we have been trying so hard to avoid.

Although hopeful that these new U.S. barriers will only be retained for a short period, we Canadians cannot just sit and wait for the restrictions to be removed. Our trade with the United States of America is very, very important. It must be continued, and, I hope expanded, but we must face facts. If they continue their trade restriction policy for a longer period than previously forecast, I am afraid other nations will be forced to take steps to protect their interests. If we in Canada are to continue to be the fifth or sixth trading nation of the world, we also may be forced to institute new trading policies. We just cannot afford to sit back and hope that these trade barriers will soon be removed. Although we do not like the current situation, we must plan for the future. If, as it now appears possible, our trade with the U.S.A. is to be curtailed for some time, we must try to expand trade in other areas. I am not suggesting our American trade can be replaced, but it may be that we have been concentrating too much on the American market, that we have had too many of our eggs in one or two baskets.

Honourable senators, it is for these reasons I believe our study of Pacific rim countries, and our relations with them, including trading possibilities, is now even more important than it was when the committee's study was first instituted. This committee has already had the benefit of the views of many prominent witnesses, Canadian Government officials and representatives of Canadian industry. We have also had the benefit of witnesses from other countries.

Although, as you will appreciate, no definite trade policies have yet been enunciated, all of the witnesses have been very optimistic about Canadian relations with Pacific rim countries and our trade opportunities with them.

Many of the witnesses concentrated their representation as did the Government Leader yesterday, on markets and relationship with countries such as Japan, Australia and Malaysia, countries with which Canada already enjoys good trade. Others were optimistic and even quite excited about trade possibilities with Pacific rim countries such as Indonesia, New Zealand, the Philippines and other countries with which we have not yet developed significant trade. There is no doubt in my mind that Canada's relationship with all these countries is good, and we must be sure that we retain this relationship while at the same time further concentrating our trading efforts in these areas.

Honourable senators, let me repeat that I am not suggesting we should build up our trade with these Pacific rim countries to equal or replace our trade with the U.S.A., but there is no doubt in my mind that we can increase our trade not only in this area but also in other markets such as South America, Africa and the developing areas of the world. We are in on the ground floor, and in view of the present uncertain situation it behooves us, our Government and its agencies, and particularly our industry, to expand our interests so that, as I mentioned before, we will not be caught short with too many trading eggs in one or two baskets.

I will not take the time on this occasion to review with you, country by country, our trading possibilities, but with your permission I should like to discuss briefly my views on our relationship and trading possibilities with one of the most important Pacific rim countries, China.

I am sure most honourable senators are aware that just prior to our adjournment on June 30 I had the opportunity of again visiting China. I was a member of the trade mission led by the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, which went over to China at that time. The mission included Mr. Ray Perrault, M.P., from the other place, myself, from this chamber, and senior officials not only from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce but also from other Government departments interested in promoting relations and trade with the People's Republic of China. Most importantly, the mission also included eleven prominent Canadian businessmen representing various segments of our industry, both exporting and importing organizations, all of whom are keenly interested in developing our trade with China. Representatives of the public and private news media were also included.

The timing of the mission was excellent. It was well planned and organized. We encountered no problems and were courteously received by the Chinese. The staff work of the local officials here in Ottawa, who planned the mission, was very good.

I particularly wish to compliment our new Ambassador to China, Ralph Collins, and his staff for the excellent arrangements they made not only to receive us but also for our visit. The arrangements that they completed with their Chinese counterparts were exceptional. Most of the Canadian staff in Peking, including the Ambassador himself, had been in Peking only a few weeks before we arrived, and it was a pleasure to see how they had organized our work in such a short period of time.

I was most impressed with the wonderful working arrangements they had developed with the Chinese representative who had the responsibility of looking after us. I will discuss this aspect in more detail later, but let me tell this chamber that anyone who thinks that China is a backward country and does not know how to look after its visitors has much to learn.

Prior to leaving Canada, the mission decided, at a briefing session in Vancouver, to adopt what I would call a "soft sale" approach. It was agreed that no one was representing his own particular organization or a particular company trading in a particular commodity. We were all representing the Canadian people and Canadian trade generally. The real purpose of our mission was to get to know our new Chinese trading partners and to develop contacts which would be beneficial to the trade between our two countries.

As exemplified by our leader, Mr. Pepin, this theme was carefully observed, and I am satisfied that this posture, particularly the manner in which Mr. Pepin handled himself with the Chinese officials that we met, went a long way to account for the wonderful reception we received.

I am sure that most honourable senators are aware that Chinese trade is handled exclusively by government trading agencies. As we were scheduled to be in China for only six days, it was apparent that the whole mission could not meet with each individual trading agency. In view of this, it had been planned that our mission would be broken down into groups, with the personnel of each group selected for their knowledge of and interest in a particular class of exports or imports.

I, together with Mr. Syd Williams, our Deputy Minister of Agriculture, and Mr. Charles Munroe, President of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, was selected for discussions with the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import-Export Corporation, who were responsible for the export and import of all of these commodities.

I will not take the time of honourable senators to list the other Canadian representatives who met with the individual Chinese trading corporations, but we met them all. I want to make special reference to the performance of the Canadian officials and particularly of our business representatives in each group. Morning meetings were held at which each group reported receiving a cordial and friendly reception. The Chinese were friendly and anxious to provide all the information we were seeking, and they were all very interested in trading possibilities with Canada. I am sure we all returned to Canada enthusiastic about trading opportunities.

In many cases the Chinese trading officials were invited by our groups to send missions of their own to Canada, and I am satisfied that these invitations will be responded to in the near future. I am sure that most honourable senators are aware that a mission from the National Cereals, Oils and Food-stuffs Import-Export Corporation has been visiting Canada during the last month or so. This visit was arranged prior to our arrival by the Canadian Wheat Board under its policy of bringing customers and others to Canada to see for themselves what we are producing and have for sale. I am a great believer in this type of customer development and feel sure that other Chinese trading organizations will take advantage of these invitations to visit us.

As a result of the visit of this mission to Canada, the Honourable Otto Lang, minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, announced Tuesday that a further new sale of wheat had been arranged by the Canadian Wheat Board and the China National Cereals, Oils and Food-stuffs Import-Export Corporation. This new contract for an additional 500,000 tons of wheat, approximately 18,500,000 bushels of which, representing approximately $30 million, is scheduled for shipment this fall, will be very helpful to us. I am sure all honourable senators are as pleased as I am at the completion of this contract.

As I indicated previously, I am satisfied our mission to China was a distinct success. It was well organized, well led, its personnel was well chosen and, most important, its timing was excellent. There is much to be said for a government that includes businessmen and others on such missions, and, if I may be permitted to say so, in all modesty I believe that there are many members of this chamber who were previously involved in provincial affairs—business officials in their own right with personal contacts in many of the countries that trade missions are visiting—who, I think, are in a position to make a real contribution to the success of these trade missions. I hope the Government will continue—or perhaps I should say start—the practice of having representatives from this chamber included in these trade missions.

Honourable senators, several times I have mentioned that I thought the timing of the mission was excellent. This was not only because we had just recognized each other, but also because of subsequent developments between China and the United States of America. While we were in China, we were not, of course, aware that arrangements were under discussion with officials for President Nixon to visit China. This may to some degree have accounted for the warmth of the welcome we received. I believe the Chinese, and particularly their Prime Minister, Mr. Chou-En-lai, who impressed us very much and with whom we had a wonderful meeting, took the opportunity to talk to the rest of the world through us. I am sure their Prime Minister wanted to assure Canadians that China intended to maintain its friendly relationship with us, that it appreciated the help and support we had given them over the years, and that the Chinese people did not intend to forget the relationship that had developed between our two countries. Their agreement to include in the joint communiqué that when they required further supplies of wheat they would first turn to Canada was, to me, a very significant announcement. This was followed by an announcement by their Minister of Agriculture that they would be buying more Canadian wheat this year. As the Honourable Otto Lang announced earlier this year, the purchase agreement has already been signed.

Naturally, these announcements do not mean that they will purchase all their wheat requirements from us, but they will turn first to us, and that is significant of the mutually satisfactory dealings we have had over the past decade.

Honourable senators, I am happy and optimistic about our relations with China. So far as trade development is concerned we are in on the ground floor.

Notwithstanding this attitude, do not let me leave with you the view that trade with China is the solution to our trade problems. Our relations are excellent, but we must remember that China, if not the most self-sufficient, is one of the most self-sufficient countries in the world. The latest trade figures that I have seen indicate that in 1968 China's total exports were at a level of only about $2 billion U.S., while her imports amounted to only about $1¾ billion. That is a small international trade compared to the trade of many other important and large countries.

Trade potentials exist, but we in Canada must remember that trade is a two-way street. I do not believe, nor do I think the Chinese believe, that trade between our two countries will ever be balanced. I am sure, however, that they will expect to increase their exports to us; certainly, as long as they can provide goods that we require that are competitive in so far as quality and price are concerned, they will expect their exports to Canada to increase. For our part, if we expect to continue to sell grain and other products to them, we must encourage their trade into Canada.

Honourable senators, I have concluded the remarks I wanted to make about the Pacific rim countries and my visit to China, but if time permits I should like to take a minute or two to outline to you, and to get on record, my views about the current grain marketing situation.

I am sure honourable senators are aware that during the last crop year, although prices were disappointingly low, the volume of our total exports of all grains was at a new record level. So far this year we are still enjoying a large movement out of the country. Mainly as a result of the completion of old contracts, coupled with some new sales to regular commercial markets, this movement is continuing, and it is a very heavy movement. It looks as though this heavy movement will continue at least to the end of the calendar year or to the close of lake navigation, but it is very difficult to forecast or even to be optimistic about the movement in the second half of the crop year.

World production of wheat, in fact of all cereals, is very large. Europe had an excellent crop and the United States had a very large crop. In fact, so far as the American corn production is concerned, notwithstanding some damage from the corn bug, it should exceed five billion bushels. Australia's crop is coming along well and will be larger than last year's. Again they will have a good quality of wheat to compete with us in the second half of the crop year. In so far as our own country is concerned, we have had and are enjoying a wonderful harvest. This year's prairie wheat production, other than Durum, is estimated at about 428,500,000 bushels. That is about 100 million bushels below the ten-year average, but it is about 197 million bushels above the 1970 production.

Durum wheat, fortunately, in view of the world Durum situation, is reduced from about 81 million bushels last year to about 60 million bushels this year. The production of oats is down slightly, being estimated at 271 million compared to 280 million last year.

There has, however, been a very substantial increase in our barley production. No doubt my colleague, Senator Molson, is very interested in that increase in barley production. The new crop is estimated at 613 million bushels compared to the ten-year average of about 219 million and to last year's crop, which was our largest up until that time, of 391 million bushels.

Rye production is about the same as last year. It is 22 million compared to 20 million last year.

Flaxseed production is down sharply, being estimated at 26,800,000 bushels as compared to 48,700,000 last year.

There has, however, notwithstanding the effects of the Bertha worm, been a very large increase in our rapeseed production. The estimate of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for this year's rapeseed crop is 104,600,000 bushels as compared to last year's production of 72,200,000 bushels and the ten-year average of only 17.6 million bushels.

It will be evident to honourable senators that Canada has no shortage of overall supplies, and it is very hard to calculate where markets will develop to take care of our carryover and this new production.

The key may be the U.S.S.R. It is too early yet to estimate their production or their export and import possibilities. We know their growing weather has been quite favourable, but their problems usually are related to harvesting conditions and how they get the crop off. But it seems clear that if our exports of cereals are to be maintained at last year's levels, our markets must be expanded and I am afraid this is going to be most difficult in view of the world production and world supplies.

One thing should be noted. Last year our prairie wheat production, mainly or at least to some extent because of the Government's LIFT program, was reduced by about 350 million bushels. Some of us feared that the increase in summer fallow brought about by the LIFT program, with some land summer-fallowed for the second year in succession, would create havoc with the land. However, it is now apparent that the land withstood this danger, and with the carryover we had on hand and the excellent yield per acre this year, we have no shortage of supplies. I am sure that many of our producers who took advantage of the LIFT program now realize that they are better off with the $60 million odd they received under this program than they would be today with another three or four hundred million bushels of wheat in store to be financed.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Honourable senators, I rise to tell Senator McNamara how much I have enjoyed his most informative address, and to ask him to verify some figures he gave. Am I correct that he mentioned 428 million bushels of wheat as the Canadian production this year as against 615 million bushels of barley?

Hon. Mr. McNamara: That is not the Canadian production; it is the western Canadian production. I regard wheat production as being almost exclusively western Canadian. In western Canada it is estimated that 428.5 million bushels of wheat were produced as against a production of 615 million bushels of barley.

On motion of Hon. Mr. McDonald, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, October 4, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

SOUND AMPLIFICATION SYSTEM

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I must at the outset tell you I am informed that the loudspeakers behind your seats unfortunately are not functioning tonight. Bell Canada will work on this technical difficulty, and we hope that by tomorrow noon it will have been remedied. For this evening I would suggest that honourable senators use their earphones in order to follow the discussions more closely.

CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that messages had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the names of Messrs. Matte and Rowland have been substituted for those of Messrs. Laprise and Saltsman, and that the name of Mr. Laprise has been substituted for that of Mr. Matte on the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada.

EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-262, to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

An Hon. Senator: Monday next.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: At the next sitting.

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, I have had a talk with the Leader of the Opposition about this matter. We have a rule of the Senate which requires that two days' notice be given for the second reading of a bill.

As a result of our discussion, I believe that the best way to proceed would be to ask leave to proceed with this bill tomorrow afternoon, and that we will do.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: We will decide this tomorrow afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I had understood that the Leader of the Opposition—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Yes, I will agree, on the conditions that I have indicated to the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Martin: That is satisfactory.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, it is moved by honourable Senator Martin, seconded by honourable Senator Langlois, that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Stand.

The Hon. the Speaker: I would like to get this very clear.

Hon. Mr. Martin: We will ask for leave to proceed with second reading tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Leave will be asked tomorrow.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I would like this to be clearly understood. Bill C-262 has been given first reading. When I asked for the second reading of this bill—

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Stand.

The Hon. the Speaker: I do not know if there is a motion.

Hon. Mr. Martin: The motion will be made tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It stands now.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Tomorrow we will ask for leave to proceed; in the meantime, it stands.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: A motion for second reading does not have to be made right away.

The Hon. the Speaker: Then, this matter will be dealt with at the next sitting?

Hon. Mr. Martin: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Yes.

JUDGES ACT AND FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-243, to amend the Judges Act and the Financial Administration Act.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Eric Cook: Honourable senators, I move, notwithstanding Rule 44(1)(f), that this bill be read a second time now.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Leave is granted.

Hon. Mr. Molson: Honourable senators, might I ask the honourable Senator Cook what the reason is for the haste?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Cook: That question is now in the hands of the Senate. I move the second reading.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I may say that the reason we on this side have no objection to giving leave is that before we adjourned last June we had already agreed to dispose of this bill and that an order of the house had been adopted providing that we would waive the rule so far as this particular part of the bill was concerned. Therefore, I do not think it would be logical at this time to oppose second reading by requiring the usual notice, since we had agreed then that we would proceed on June 30 or before. We just have to be logical and accept the fact that we must proceed now. That is the position we take. That position does not impose any obligation on anyone else, of course.

Hon. Mr. Molson: Honourable senators, I have no objection whatsoever, but it was also agreed in this chamber that when someone asked for leave to waive a rule he would state the reason.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Cook: I must apologize, then.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable Senator Cook has moved second reading. Would he like to speak on second reading now?

Hon. Mr. Cook: Honourable senators, Bill C-243 is an important piece of legislation which has four main objectives.

First, subject where required to the passage of the necessary provincial legislation, it provides for additional judges and also for increased salaries for federally appointed and paid judges, as I shall outline in more detail in a few moments.

Second, the bill provides for the creation of a new category of judges to be known henceforth as supernumerary judges, and it outlines the privileges and duties of supernumerary judges.

Third, the bill alters the age of compulsory retirement in the case of county court judges and the age of voluntary retirement in the case of superior court judges.

Fourth, the bill will create the Canadian Judicial Council. I should point out that this is a wholly new concept. I shall, of course, deal with this part of the bill in more detail.

It might not be out of place to take a moment to offer a word of congratulation to the Minister of Justice, who, it seems to me, has made a number of reforms to our legal system. It is, I believe, second nature for lawyers to rely on precedent and to look mainly to the past for inspiration. The present Minister of Justice, however, has a fresh and forward-looking approach, and I believe our legal system will benefit as a result.

Now we have before us Bill C-243 which does much more than provide for new judges and for increased salaries for judges. This bill also introduces very important reforms in our judicial system.

In due course, assuming the bill is given second reading by the Senate, it will be considered in detail by the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, so I will not endeavour to explain each section except in general terms.

Section 1 amends and expands the definition of "Judge" to include a "supernumerary Judge".

Sections 2 to 6 inclusive amend the present law to make financial provisions for the following additional judges.

- 5 additional judges for the High Court of Justice of Ontario,
- 3 additional judges for the Court of Queen's Bench for the Province of Quebec,
- 3 additional judges for the Supreme Court of British Columbia,
- 1 additional judge for the County Court of Nova Scotia,
- 2 additional judges for the Supreme Court of Alberta,
- 4 judges for the County Court of Ontario,
- 5 puisne judges for the Superior Court of Quebec,
- 1 judge for the Queen's Bench Division of New Brunswick, and
- 1 chief judge for the County Court of New Brunswick.

The financial provisions to which I will now refer follow, but the salaries set out are not quite so high as those recommended by a committee of the Canadian Bar Association in a report made to the Annual Meeting of the Canadian Bar Association held in Halifax in 1970.

The proposed revision is also, it might be noted, the first such revision since March 1, 1967, over four and a half years ago.

Under the bill the basic salaries of federally appointed and paid judges would be increased in two steps, as follows:

	Present Salaries	As of January 1, 1971	As of January 1, 1972
	Supreme Court of Canada
Chief Justice	$40,000	$43,500	$47,000
Puisne Judges	35,000	38,500	42,000
	Provincial Superior Courts and Federal Court of Canada
Chief Justices	30,000	34,500	39,000
Other Judges	26,000	30,500	35,000
	County and District Courts
Chief Judge	19,000	23,000	27,000
Other Judges	19,000	22,000	25,000

In addition to the basic salaries set forth above, the additional salary presently provided for in section 20 of the Judges Act will be increased from $2,000 to $3,000 per annum, effective June 1, 1971, and the judges of the Territorial Court of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, as well as the judges of the Federal Court, will be paid a further taxable allowance of $2,000 per annum as compensation for special incidental expenditures.

In section 10 a new financial provision is also included to increase the annuities payable to judges' widows in respect of unmarried children in full-time attendance at a school or university, along the lines of the formula introduced in the Public Service Superannuation Act on April 1, 1969. It is anticipated that the inclusion of this provision will make judicial service more attractive to younger members of the profession.

In view of the recent declared intention of the Government to increase the number of women appointed to the Bench, an amendment has been included that will permit the Government to treat the dependants of a woman judge on the same basis as the dependants of her masculine counterparts.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Cook: See section 10(2). This modification of the Judges Act is considered to be consistent with the spirit of the Report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts contained in its fifth report dated March 10, 1971, the bill also contains an amendment in section 13 of the bill to the Financial Administration Act which equates the salary of the Auditor General to that of the President of the Exchequer Court of Canada, effective January 1, 1971.

I believe I have outlined all the financial aspects of the bill. However, section 6 of the bill also enacts a new section to the Judges Act, namely section 20A, which defines the duties and rights of a supernumerary judge, and it also provides for the salary of a supernumerary judge. As this provision also has a financial aspect, I shall endeavour to deal with it now.

This new section 20A will permit superior court judges of the provincial courts on reaching 70 years of age, and after having served for 10 years, to elect to become supernumerary judges of the court of which they are a member. These new provisions will permit the creation of an available and continuing pool of judicial talent that will make it possible for these courts to deal with their workloads with improved efficiency. However, these provisions of the bill require the enactment of appropriate provincial legislation of a complementary nature before they can be made effective. When this has been done in a province, its Superior Court or courts will be able to achieve essentially the same degree of flexibility in terms of available judicial talent as now prevails in many jurisdictions in the United States.

The salary of each supernumerary judge is $35,000 per annum, which of course will be the full salary of a sitting judge.

By section 9 the retirement age of county and district court judges will be lowered from 75 to 70, following the pattern set in the Federal Court Act. This provision will apply only to judges appointed after the amendment.

By section 7 the bill provides for voluntary retirement of judges at the age of 65 after 15 years of service on the bench.

Those new provisions which require in one case, and permit in the other, earlier ages for retirement are in line with current thought. However, I am bound to say many people question the wisdom of this trend. I noticed a few days ago a reference to the death of Justice Hugo Black of the Supreme Court of America at age 85. His death occurred only a few weeks after he had retired.

President Nixon said of Justice Hugo Black that he had "a mind that was brilliant and a character that was earnest and strong." Chief Justice Burger said Black's death "removes from the scene one of the authentic legal philosophers of our time." In case there are any who might think Justice Black did not take his full share of the work of the Supreme Court of America, it should be pointed out that he wrote the majority opinion in the celebrated Pentagon Papers case during his last year on the bench, giving the New York Times and the Washington Post the right to continue publication of the classified documents on the Vietnam war.

Justice Black was nominated to the Supreme Court by President Roosevelt in 1937 at the age of 51. If he had retired at age 65 he would have left the bench in 1951, 20 years ago.

In our country, when we think of our own distinguished judges such as Kellock, Rand, former Chief Justice Cartwright, and former President of the Exchequer Court Thorson, we begin to doubt the wisdom of pushing too hard for early retirement.

I mention this not because I am against setting a date for retirement. Indeed, I agree with this principle, and also agree that in this day and age there should be no new lifetime appointments to any position. Indeed in the case of the Senate, I would fully support giving senators, under proper conditions, the optional right to retire at, say, age 70. My personal feeling, however, is that in the case of judges, as the younger people would say, I do not "dig" retirement at age 65.

I have now dealt with all the provisions of the bill which are designed to make a "judge's lot a happy one."

There is, however, another side to the coin. Clause 11 of the bill creates the Canadian Judicial Council. In my opinion, this is an excellent reform. Judges already have security of tenure of office. By this bill provision is made for reasonable compensation, but the bill goes a step further and makes provisions to deal with a judge who for any reason ceases duly and properly to perform the duties of a judge.

As we all know, the only way a judge may be removed from office now is by a joint address of both Houses of Parliament pursuant to section 91(1) of the British North America Act. Section 91(1) is not affected by this bill and remains in full force and effect. It is also well known that section 91(1) by itself is today hardly a satisfactory way to deal with an unsatisfactory judge. It is too slow and too cumbersome.

The new section 33 of the Judges Act, which clause 11 of the bill will enact, therefore empowers the Governor in Council to stop paying the salary of a judge upon the recommendation of the Canadian Judicial Council, and in due course the judge may be then removed from office.

The provisions of the bill setting up the Canadian Judicial Council are so important I think they are worthy of explanation in more detail.

The new section 31(1) establishes the council and states that the members are the Chief Justice of Canada, who is chairman and the Chief Justice and Associate Chief Justice of each superior court.

Subsection (2), which I will now read to you, outlines the objects of the council:

> (2) The objects of the council are to promote efficiency and uniformity, and to improve the quality of judicial service, in the superior, district and county courts, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing
> (a) the establishing from time to time of a conference of chief justices;
> (b) establishing from time to time of seminars for the continuing education of judges; and
> (c) subject to section 32, the making of the inquiries and the investigating of any complaint or allegation described in that section.

The bill contains all the necessary provisions to enable the council to make by-laws and to function, and gives it all necessary powers to carry out the inquiries mentioned in the new section 31(2)(c).

New section 33(1) reads:

> After an inquiry or investigation under section 32 has been completed, the council shall report its conclusions and submit the record of the inquiry or investigation to the Minister of Justice of Canada.
> (2) Where, in the opinion of the council, the judge in respect of whom an inquiry or investigation has been made, has become incapacitated or disabled from the due execution of his office by reason of
> (a) age or infirmity,
> (b) having been guilty of misconduct,
> (c) having failed in the due execution of his office, or
> (d) having been placed, by his conduct or otherwise, in a position incompatible with the due execution of his office,
> the council, in its report to the Minister of Justice of Canada under subsection (1), may recommend that the judge be removed from office and that he cease to be paid any further salary.
> (3) A judge who is found by the Governor in Council, upon report made to the Minister of Justice of Canada by the council to have become incapacitated or disabled from the due execution of his office shall, notwithstanding anything in this act, cease to be paid or to receive or to be entitled to receive any further salary if the council so recommends.

In certain cases leave of absence with salary may be granted to judges who are incapacitated, and an annuity may be granted to a judge who is incapacitated and resigns. The Governor in Council may also remove a judge of a county court from office, in which case any such order must be tabled in Parliament within 15 days.

The council may make an investigation on its own and must make an inquiry at the request of the Minister of Justice of Canada or the attorney general of a province. It is difficult to think it possible that a man honoured by an appointment as a judge, and receiving a salary of around $38,000 to $40,000, would neglect the performance of his sworn duties as a judge. If and when any such instance arises in the future it will be the responsibility of the Canadian Judicial Council to act firmly, and without delay, to protect the interests of all Canadians, and the good name of the judiciary.

I am sure that honourable senators will be interested to hear that my own Province of Newfoundland passed an amendment to our Judicature Act last June which seems to touch on this point. It provides, among other things, that if a judge, on hearing a case, reserves judgment and has not given judgment within twelve months from the time of reserving it, any two other judges may order that the cause, issue, motion or matter be retried by either one of them or by another judge.

This to me is an extraordinary provision. Honourable senators, justice delayed is justice denied. If—and I repeat if—there is any undue delay in the courts of justice in Newfoundland or anywhere else in Canada, then the responsibility is now entrusted to the Canadian Judicial Council to bring it to an end at once. If any undue delay persists, then the Judicial Council should act firmly and impartially so that any judge guilty of such misconduct may be forthwith removed from the Bench. The Judicial Council must conduct an investigation at the request of the Minister of Justice of Canada or at the request of an attorney general of a province.

A difficult point which may well arise is how the Minister of Justice of Canada or attorney general of a province will know that undue delay is taking place until the matter has become more or less of general complaint, and in the nature of a public scandal. It seems to me that one way to safeguard against this situation is for our courts to file something in the nature of an annual report. Every type of operation, from the biggest down to the smallest bull's-eye shop, has to file reports and facts and figures with government departments. I see no good reason against requiring our courts to do the same. I therefore suggest to the Minister of Justice that during the next session of Parliament the act be further amended to provide that the registrar of every court be required to file each year with the Department of Justice of Canada and the Department of Justice of its own province, information giving the number of cases tried, when heard and when judgment was given. It would then be easy to spot any undue delay and the judge or judges causing it. Such other important information showing how many days the court sat, and so on, could also be included.

Whether or not the minister takes my suggestion, I nevertheless repeat that he deserves the compliments of honourable senators for the very worthwhile reforms carried out during his term of office. This bill is one of those reforms, and I commend it to the Senate.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, before I speak on this bill I should like to ask a question of the sponsor (Hon. Mr. Cook). How does this bill improve the pension of a judge's widow, if it does? Perhaps the sponsor will have the answer by the time I have concluded my remarks. I suspect that it is very much like the case of senators, who had an increase in salary up to $22,000, yet whose widows are entitled to a pension of one-third of $8,000. This means there has been no change whatever in the pension of retired senators. Instead of having at least one-half of the pension of a senator, which would be $4,000, in the event of the death tomorrow of a senator who had intimated in writing that he would retire if and when he reached the age of 75, his widow would get one-third of $8,000, which would be $2,666.66, which is not extravagant, to say the least.

Honourable senators, I rise to support the second reading of this bill. In other words, I favour the principle—or rather the several principles—embodied therein.

I certainly have no objection to the proposed salary increases or to the increases in pensions for judges and their dependants, or to the provision of pensions for women judges. I understand that they do not exceed the amounts recommended by the Committee on Judges' Salaries of the Canadian Bar Association. A serious question remains as to whether, in view of the recent salary increases, the pensions of members of the Senate and the other place are now adequate, and as to whether adequate provision has been made for their dependants, which is the point I raised in my opening remarks. This is surely a matter which must shortly engage the close attention of the Government. If it forgets, hopefully some elephant or other will remind it.

The cornerstone of our system of justice is the rule of law—the product of a thousand years of constitutional experience in the United Kingdom, finding its embryo in the Magna Carta. Those who judge must be independent, financially and otherwise, in forming their judgments. The judicial process is indeed the outward and visible manifestation of the rule of law. And so, like Caesar's wife, judges must be beyond suspicion or reproach.

It is necessary, however, not only that justice be done, but that it appear to be done. I therefore applaud in principle the inclusion in the bill of clause 33, which creates a Canadian Judicial Council, chaired by the Chief Justice of Canada. The same clause gives the council the right to question the capacity of a judge on any of the following bases:

(a) age or infirmity,

(b) having been guilty of misconduct,

(c) having failed in the due execution of his office, or

(d) having been placed, by his conduct or otherwise, in a position incompatible with the due execution of his office.

On any of the foregoing bases, the council may make a recommendation to the Minister of Justice that the judge be removed from office. If it does, the minister would seek an order removing the impugned judge from office.

In the case of county court judges, they may be removed from office by order of the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice, after receipt of a report from the council.

Honourable senators, I would like to relate an experience I had some few years ago, in the case of a judge who was a friend of mine and whose conduct was not what should be the conduct of a judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario. I remember that he was asked to resign and he asked what would happen if he did not do so.

The Government was most embarrassed. They went through their statutes to find out what procedure they would have to follow to prevent him from sitting and hearing cases. They came up with this solution. They decided they would have to pass a bill through both houses, impeaching the judge, to prevent him from sitting and hearing cases. It was a very complicated matter.

This judge was able to make some settlement with regard to the pension he would receive, although he had been appointed only three or four years to that position.

Honourable senators, this bill is a great improvement. The council will have certain functions and powers. It can not only impeach a judge but can prevent him from sitting and hearing cases.

There is a financial bite provided for in clause 33(3), to the effect that the salary of a judge declared by the Governor in Council to have become incapacitated or disabled from the due execution of his office may be terminated. This is alleviated somewhat by clause 33(4).

By clause 33(6), an annuity or pension may be granted to a judge found by the Governor in Council to have become incapacitated or disabled, if such judge resigns, equal to what he might have been granted had he resigned at the time of such finding.

Apparently, there would be no annuity provided for a judge who is removed from office on any ground of malfeasance, misfeasance or non-feasance under this clause. Please correct me if I am wrong about this: it is a matter of importance, certainly to the judge affected.

I am generally in favour of this clause, although it leaves much to the imagination. In any event, it seems to me to provide a better system of procedure than that followed in the case of Mr. Justice Landreville. In my opinion, that case was in many respects mishandled by the Government. Perhaps this legislation will prevent a repetition of that type of mishandling. Honourable senators will recall that case. This man was subjected to several, I would not say trials but hearings before commissions, for a period of four and a half years. Eventually, he was told that he would have to appear before the Senate. We were then commencing proceedings and we were to have a joint resolution of both houses.

On the day on which we were to commence to debate his case in this house, he was asked to resign and he did so. The letter of resignation was read here in this chamber. This man is a great friend of mine. He was a young boy, brought up in Ottawa with me, and I recall very well the wording of his letter of resignation. It was such that he would have been entitled to a pension. He said that over a period of four and a half years his health had been affected greatly, that his financial situation had been affected, and that he was resigning on grounds of health.

I can report today that this man has never received a pension, nor will he ever receive one. In my opinion, that case, as I said, was in many respects mishandled by the Government, and perhaps this legislation will prevent a repetition of that type of mishandling.

I applaud as long overdue the tying in of the salary of the Auditor General to that of the President of the Exchequer Court. I merely question whether the members of his staff are being taken care of equally well. No executive is much better than the staff provided for him.

In conclusion, I commend the Government for these various steps in the right direction. If the sponsor of this bill could give me satisfactory answers to the few questions I have raised, I would not insist, personally, that the bill go to committee.

Hon. L. P. Beaubien: Honourable senators, I have listened, with interest, to learned counsel on either side, to honourable Senator Cook and honourable Senator Choquette. I wish to say right away that I agree with everything the bill does. I would also point out that I disagree tremendously with what the bill does not do.

Honourable senators, this bill amends the Judges Act. Clause 25(1)(a) says that the widow of a judge will receive two-ninths of the salary that the judge was getting when he died. That means that if Judge A.B.C. Brown died in 1950, his widow gets two-ninths of $12,000. If Judge A.B.C. White should die after this bill is passed, his widow will get two-ninths of $34,500. What is the reason for the increase in the salary from $12,000 to $34,500? It is simply because the cost of living has gone up. Judges are not being overpaid. Why should the widow of a judge who died in 1950 have to struggle along on a measly $2,600 instead of receiving the $7,700 she would be entitled to if he died this year? We are not dealing with a large number of people. I think there are only three judges' widows who are really in dire need, but they have only three votes so nobody pays them much attention.

Some senators here have spoken to the Minister of Justice about this and he has replied, "Oh, my goodness, you cannot open a can of worms like that. There are any number of people in the same boat, because they became eligible to receive a pension 20 or 30 years ago."

Honourable senators, I have never heard such a ridiculous argument. We are dealing with nothing but the widows of judges. What difference does it make to us, when considering this bill, if somebody who was a street cleaner and who died 20 years ago, left a widow who is not getting enough? Perhaps that is something we ought to go into, but not when dealing with this bill. We are now dealing with the pensions of judges' widows whose husbands died 20 years ago and who are not getting enough money to live on.

If, in passing this bill, we do not insist on amending this nonsensical clause, then, of course, we are concurring, because we are the ones who are writing the law.

I know that there are ways and means. I know that we cannot initiate a bill which is going to be a charge against Her Majesty's exchequer. However, we can send back to the Commons sloppy legislation which completely ignores things which are a disgrace. Instead of smugly sitting back and saying what we are doing for judges today, we should be looking to see if we are dealing in justice.

When the Senate and the House of Commons saw fit to increase the salaries of members, did we consider whether there were a few gardeners who died 20 years ago, whose widows were on pension and who were not getting enough?

All honourable senators should look carefully at what the legislation provides. Let us remember that the form in which the bill passes will depend much on what we say.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, I originally intended to direct a question to my colleague, Senator Cook, but instead of doing that, I wish to express the concern that I feel about this bill.

I know very well what Senator Choquette was speaking about, as I was a member of the committee involved in the case to which he referred. The establishment of the Canadian Judicial Council is obviously a reaction by the Government to the problems we experienced during that time.

Far more important than any question of remuneration of judges or their widows is the question of the independence of the judiciary, and the problems that are apparent to us, including the situation to which Senator Choquette referred.

We must examine this bill, although I myself have not done so, to be absolutely positive that under no circumstances can a political officer such as the Minister of Justice dictate the dismissal of a judge. That in my opinion, is the crux of the problem involved in this concept of the judicial council, and it far transcends any question of salaries.

As I mentioned a few moments ago, I am afraid that I have not made a study of this bill, but when it goes to committee we must assure ourselves that under no circumstances can a political officer such as the Minister of Justice bring about the dismissal of a judge by means of influence directly or indirectly upon the judiciary, or upon any of the machinery set up by this act.

That is really the only concern that we have as a body. We must maintain our great legal tradition of independence for the judiciary, and at the same time devise some means more equitable than those which have existed in the past, by virtue of our Constitution, whereby a judge considered unsuitable to continue holding his position may be removed. I do not know whether this bill does, in fact, accomplish that purpose, but if I had to take a risk on one side or the other, I would take the risk of a judge being incompetent before the risk of subjecting our judges to political pressure for their removal.

I hope that by saying these few words tonight I have brought to the attention of the members of the committee who will be considering the bill what is, in my opinion, by far the most important issue involved. I hope that in committee we can assure ourselves that this purpose is achieved.

Hon. David Walker: Senator Lang has raised a point which is fully covered in section 31, which establishes the Canadian Judicial Council. This was ably and fully explained by Senator Cook, and commented upon with equal ability by Senator Choquette.

Section 32 sets out the duties of the council after it has been set up. The section is complete and thorough, and I cannot see how it could be improved.

Section 33 answers the question of the honourable senator. It provides that after an inquiry by the Canadian Judicial Council has been completed, the council shall report to the Minister of Justice. Without going into all the lengthy detail, section 33(3) provides:

> A judge who is found by the Governor in Council, upon report made to the Minister of Justice of Canada by the Council to have become incapacitated or disabled from the due execution of his office shall, notwithstanding anything in this act, cease to be paid or to receive or to be entitled to receive any further salary if the Council so recommends.

To answer my friend's question—although I am not the Minister of Justice, and perhaps I should not be pleading the case for the Government—this section makes it quite clear that the Canadian Judicial Council reports its conclusions, the Minister of Justice considers them, and the Government then considers the recommendation of the Minister of Justice which is based on the report of the Canadian Judicial Council. Therefore, politics cannot possibly enter into this matter.

Hon. Mr. Lang: May I ask my honourable friend a question? Section 32(1) provides that the instigation of the inquiry rests with the Minister of Justice, and not with the Council. I am wondering whether the reverse would hold as well.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It has to be on the basis of a report.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Section 32(1) says that the council shall commence an inquiry at the request of the Minister of Justice. I think that is perfectly logical and perfectly natural. According to section 32(2), the council may investigate any complaint. The council, comprised of these distinguished judges, including the Chief Justice of Canada, could not be expected personally to search for these matters throughout the judiciary of Canada. It has to be someone like the Minister of Justice who hears of them, and makes the request to the Canadian Judicial Council. In my opinion, in view of the fact that the Canadian Judicial Council is going to decide on these matters, it makes no difference how prejudiced a Minister of Justice might be. He would not dare make a recommendation that did not have some foundation in fact. That would be a very bad precedent for him to set, and his motive would at once become obvious if the Canadian Judicial Council made a finding that there was no merit in his suggestion.

It seems to me that this matter is thoroughly covered. First, the Minister of Justice receives a complaint, which he then considers—

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Or the Attorney General of a province may receive a complaint.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Yes, it is more likely that such complaints will be to the provincial attorneys general.

Let me say to honourable senators that this is a splendid bill, and it is a year overdue. The salary increases are overdue. The ideas of the supernumerary judge and the Canadian Judicial Council are excellent. The bill speaks for itself, and I would respectfully suggest that it be passed without reference to a committee.

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, I am going to ask only one question about this bill. If the sound apparatus here had been functioning adequately a little earlier, and I had been able to hear all of Senator Cook's remarks, I might have heard my question answered for me. Perhaps every other senator is aware of the answer.

I should like to know why it is that the age of retirement for county court judges is being reduced to 70. This does not seem to me to be an obvious reform. I confess that I am inclined to think that if we start reducing the age of retirement to 70 for judges, the next thing will be that some people will get ideas about the Senate. I am also inclined to think that we have lost some very good judges in the past because of retirement at the age of 75. The names that come to my mind immediately are those of Mr. Justice Rand and the former Chief Justice John R. Cartwright.

I doubt whether this provision for compulsory retirement of county court judges at 70 is necessarily a good thing. I should like to know what the arguments are for it. I am perfectly well aware that many people by the time they reach the age of 70 are doddering and senile. On the other hand, there are many people aged 70 who are not doddering and senile. Indeed, some people are doddering and senile long before they reach the age of 70.

In any event, I should like some enlightenment on this. I apologize if I have missed through some malfunctioning of the apparatus, or through my own imperfect hearing, any explanation Senator Cook may have given.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: That holds out some hope to those of us who are only 54.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Both Senator Choquette and Senator Walker have expressed the view that Bill C-243 need not go to committee. However, the comments of Senator Lang and Senator Forsey would suggest that it should go to committee. As there is doubt, I think it should be referred to committee, where I should be interested in having some answers from the Minister of Justice, not so much with the intention of amending the bill as with the intention of clarifying a few questions that the bill raises.

The first point that I wish to make is in connection with the remarks of Senator Forsey who spoke of the retirement of judges at the age of 70. Of course, it is true, if we adopt the principle so far as county judges are concerned, that very soon people will be saying the same thing about the Senate. Senator Forsey was not here when the British North America Act was amended to provide for the forced retirement of judges of the superior courts at 75, but I can tell him that the answer given by senators was that a judge sits alone and if he makes a mistake it is a final mistake, whereas senators are a group and if only one senator makes a mistake it is not a mistake of the Senate. I hope Senator Forsey will understand what I mean by telling him that story.

If retirement means anything, I think we have to follow the trend generally and retire at an age when we can do something other than merely sit in a rocking chair.

My second point concerns the Canadian Judicial Council, and bears some relation to the point raised by Senator Forsey. If we were to deal with the problem of retirement of superior court judges, and remove from office incapacitated or disabled judges otherwise than as provided by the British North America Act, we would have to amend that act.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Of course.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It is obvious that the Government is not interested in seeking an amendment to the British North America Act at this time. It is discussing the formula by which that act can be amended, and, in fact, is attempting to revise it in its entirety. The next best thing is to proceed as in this bill. In the first place, you provide an incentive for members of the superior courts of Canada to retire at age 70 by saying that they can do so if they have served ten years. In the second place, you provide that where a judge of a superior court has been found by the Canadian Judicial Council to be disabled or incapacitated for the reasons mentioned in clause 33(2), the Council, as explained by Senator Walker, may, after receiving a report, decide to recommend that the judge be removed from office and that he cease to be paid any further salary.

I suggest that there are very stubborn persons in this world and some of them may be found among the judges. If such a decision were made, it would be possible to meet the challenge of a judge who said, "All right, I am going to stay in office and not receive any salary, but at least I will be preventing the Government from appointing a successor." This would put the Chief Justice in a very difficult position. I suggest to honourable senators that eventually the ultimate solution to these problems will be in an amendment to the Constitution.

Finally, honourable senators, I should like to mention pensions. I am in sympathy with the comments made by Senator Beaubien. I know of the case of a widow of a former judge of the Supreme Court who is receiving no pension at all. I realize that this situation has posed a long-standing problem for the department. The same problem exists for members of the public service who retired several years ago, and received a pension based on the salary in effect at the time of their retirement.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: They have been revised.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: But only on the basis of the increase in the cost of living. This has amounted in some cases to $50 or $100 a year, which is a rather insignificant sum. This principle was introduced only last year, and so it does not mean very much in practice. While this is a rule which has been accepted generally, whether it is acceptable today when the cost of living is constantly increasing is quite a different matter. For this reason, I think the remarks of Senator Beaubien should be considered carefully by the Department of Justice.

Honourable senators, I feel that all these matters should be discussed when the bill is sent to committee, and I suggest that the Minister of Justice should tell us what he thinks about these questions at that time.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I realize that it takes some courage for a layman to stand up and take part in a discussion on this bill. Let me say at the outset that I support the bill. I have listened with great interest to the debate that has taken place. My main object in rising is to make a general observation which I have been wanting to make for some time. It is that the publication in the press of what appear to be very large salary increases creates in the mind of the public, or certainly in the minds of certain segments of the population, a totally wrong impression. It has been brought to my attention in several instances, as no doubt it has been brought to the attention of other honourable senators, that people are amazed at what are considered to be the enormous salaries paid to the judiciary as compared with people in other walks of life. However, anybody who listened to the explanation of the new Income Tax Act as outlined to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce today and who heard the ramifications and implications of the new bill, which is shortly to be presented to us, will agree that after that bill becomes law, the effect on these salaries will be such that only a very moderate amount will be left. I think many people are inclined to forget when they read about these large salaries that by the time the income tax has taken a bite at them, what is left is quite small indeed.

I fully sympathize with the remarks made by honourable Senator Beaubien, but I have to agree with the Minister of Justice that to attempt to deal with that situation would open quite a can of worms. Not a week passes that I do not receive a letter from some official or veteran of World War I or World War II complaining bitterly about the inadequacy of his pension in view of present day living costs.

What I say in connection with the public service and veterans also applies to business and industry. I know of many people who have retired from business life with pensions which at the time of their retirement seemed to be quite adequate but which today are totally inadequate. While I sympathize with what Senator Beaubien has said, I think that any one trying to deal adequately with such situations would find himself in very real trouble indeed.

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, I share some of the views expressed by the honourable senator who has just spoken, and while I commend the Minister of Justice for preparing and presenting this bill, I am concerned that it does not contain any provision for more frequent review of salaries paid to judges. I was somewhat troubled when the suggestions for changes in judges' salaries were made at the same time as the suggested adjustments in the indemnities for members of the House of Commons and members of the Senate. We accept the philosophy that the judiciary should be separate from and independent of the executive, and therefore I feel that the sins of politicians should not flow to the bench. I remember reading an editorial in a Vancouver newspaper which pointed out that we in Ottawa were conscious of inflation because, whereas we had voted a 50 per cent increase for ourselves, we voted an increase of only 42 per cent for the judges. I do not think we should allow ourselves to fall into a situation where any newspaper can make such a comment. Each situation should be judged properly on its own merits. Perhaps I might remind the newspaper that made that criticism that they in turn gave their own employees a 62 per cent adjustment, and newspapers do not have the tradition of contributing to the inflationary spiral through overpaying their employees.

Honourable senators, in Canada we have a fine judicial system which we unfortunately have a tendency to take for granted. It was my privilege not many weeks ago to take part in a conference of judges in Vancouver where the judges made it quite clear that their main concern was how best to serve the interests of the people of Canada. They did not speak about the problems of pensions or salaries. So it seems to me that if there is no vehicle by which they can make these problems known to us, then there is a responsibility on the members of this house and on the members of the other house to ensure that these things are kept under regular review to ensure that what should be done is done. If there is a shortage of courts we have a responsibility to see that they are corrected. If there is a shortage of judges, we have the responsibility to see that appropriate steps are taken to fill these vacancies. There should also be a regular review of judges' salaries to ensure that they are adjusted properly at the appropriate times. I might mention that I said to the judges that I did not object when a plumber made a higher income than judges because after all a plumber had to make house calls! However, when other trades receive higher increases and higher salaries than judges, an adjustment in their salaries is long overdue.

In conclusion, let me emphasize that we should seek some sort of annual or biennial review and preserve the excellent judicial system which we now have.

Hon. Mr. Cook: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must remind honourable senators that if the honourable Senator Cook speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: If he wants to close it.

Hon. Mr. Cook: I am delighted with Senator Flynn's suggestion that this bill should be sent to committee, for I must confess that my own answers to many of the questions asked would be quite inadequate. Let me also add that I am very glad to welcome Senator Walker to my side. I say this because if he were not on my side, then the questions that he would ask would be even more difficult to answer.

In reply to Senator Beaubien I must admit that the only reference to pensions in the bill is to be found in clause 10 on page 11 which grants an annuity to the widow and which states that:

> the Governor in Council may grant to each child of such judge an annuity equal to one-fifth of the annuity granted to the widow of that judge pursuant to paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (1),

I do not know in fact, but I assume that the pension will be increased with the increase in salaries.

In answer to Senator Forsey, with whose remarks I entirely agree, the bill says that the retirement age of county court judges will be lowered from 75 to 70 following the pattern set in the Federal Court. That is the only reason for the reduction in the retirement age of which I am aware.

Regarding Senator Lang's questions, as a matter of fact Senator Walker has already replied to them.

I might reiterate that the members of the Canadian Judicial Council will be the Chief Justice of Canada, who will be the chairman, and the Chief Justice and Associate Chief Justice of each superior court or branch or division thereof. In such circumstances, it seems extremely unlikely that they would be subject to any judicial pressure.

The council may commence an inquiry on its own initiative, and must conduct an inquiry when requested by the Minister of Justice or the attorney general of a province.

In conclusion, I thank Senators Burchill and Lawson for their common-sense comments on the provisions of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

PUBLIC WORKS

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION IN WOLFVILLE, NOVA SCOTIA—QUESTION ANSWERED

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, on September 16 the honourable Senator Welch asked me a number of oral questions concerning the building of a new post office in Wolfville, Nova Scotia, and stated that he had originally directed his request to the Department of Public Works from whom he had not received a reply.

I am now in a position to reply. The information given to me by my colleague the Minister of Public Works is as follows:

A new building was required because the old one was not structurally sound nor was it large enough to provide the extensive improvements required by the Post Office Department without an addition to it. The floors sagged to such an extent that lock boxes could be opened without keys. A new mail lobby was required; also a screen line extension, a storage room, improved washroom facilities and an office for the postmaster.

To renovate the existing building completely and construct an additional ell would have cost more than the new modern building and would have meant displacing the old Post Office operations for a period of a year.

The approximate cost for removal of the old building, including restoration of the site, was $17,000. This amount is included in the overall contract price for the new Post Office of $148,800.

The cost of landscaping the site on completion of the new building was $6,600, and this was also included in the contract price of $148,800. Except for any relics which might be discovered, material from the old building becomes the property of the general contractor for disposal as he sees fit.

Not only is it a complete reply, but it shows that the Department of Public Works has not lost its sense of humour.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I am quite sure it knew for whom it was preparing the reply.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

SCULPTURE IN CONFEDERATION PARK—QUESTION ANSWERED

Hon. Paul Martin: There were two questions put by Senator Forsey on September 14 last. I regret not having a reply to the first, which concerned a film.

As to his second question, regarding the sculpture in the park, I have a reply prepared by Miss Jean Sutherland Boggs, Director of the National Gallery, for whom I am sure we all have great admiration and respect and in whom we have confidence. She says the agency responsible for the piece of sculpture placed in a small park, called Confederation Park across from the Lord Elgin Hotel, is the National Gallery of Canada.

Hon Mr. Forsey: Shame!

Hon. Mr. Martin: Well, I am sure Senator Forsey knows Miss Jean Boggs, and I am sure he would wish to revise that interjection.

The National Gallery of Canada—the reply goes on—does not have sufficient space or a sculpture garden of its own to exhibit monumental pieces of sculpture.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Is it a sculpture?

Hon. Mr. Martin: It, therefore, approached the National Capital Commission for permission to install this large work called Traffic by the Canadian sculptor, Ed Zelenak, in Confederation Park which is so close to the Gallery itself.

The sculptor is 30 years old and lives in West Lorne, Ontario, near London, certainly a good section of Ontario. The Gallery commissioned this work, which is made of very thick plexiglass, from the sculptor on the basis of a full size maquette in lighter, thinner plastic. The Gallery's director, Miss Jean Sutherland Boggs, states that its acquisition is part of a traditional National Gallery policy of encouraging the work of young Canadian artists and of particular interest since sculptors have never had the same opportunities as painters in Canada. She points out that in the past the Gallery's support of such "lively young contemporary artists" as Tom Thomson, A. Y. Jackson, and David Milne aroused the same kind of skepticism as did Senator Forsey.

The director feels that although the work has considerable presence because of its design and size, it is also very much at home in a landscape setting, since its purple colour is close to the purple of some of the trees, and its somewhat translucent material changes with light and atmosphere. Its acquisition is considered by the Gallery to be a tribute to the Canadian artist.

I am sure this reply will be completely satisfactory to my artistic and dear friend, Senator Forsey.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: It is not, honourable senators, and I think there is a portion of the question which remains unanswered: how much did this thing cost? The taxpayers of Canada are paying for this trash. How much are they paying?

Hon Mr. Martin: That is a very good question, but I am only replying to the question asked by Senator Forsey. He did not ask what the cost was.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: That was a serious oversight; I intended to do so.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Then I will take that as a supplementary and I am sure there will be a good reply.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

USE OF CHAMBER BY INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that on the morning of Thanksgiving Day, October 11, 1971, an intergovernmental body known as the International Organization on Cultural and Technical Cooperation, will hold the inaugural meeting of its annual session in this Senate Chamber. Committee meetings will be held at the Château Laurier and in Montreal and Quebec.

An impressive delegation, composed of ministers, ambassadors and high ranking officials, and of at least two prime ministers, from 22 countries, will attend this conference.

A request from this intergovernmental body for the use of the Senate chamber was received during the summer recess. They needed a decision at that time to enable them to send invitations and to print programs at an early date. I would like to mention that a copy of their application, when it was received—in August last, I believe—through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Mr. Sharp, was sent to the Government Leader in the Senate and to the Leader of the Opposition.

In view of the fact that this group is highly representative, and considering that October 11 is a holiday and that the Senate chamber will be used in the morning only for the official opening of the session, there seemed to be no objection to the use of these premises for that purpose. I may say that it is intended to televise this inaugural ceremony.

May I mention that there are no outstanding requests for the use of the Senate chamber for meetings of that nature. This was the last request that I received.

I repeat that I would like a clear policy to be established in this connection. As honourable senators know, there is already on the Order Paper a motion standing in the name of the honourable Senator Belisle for the appointment of a special committee to look into the whole matter and to report to the house. I hope that the committee will take into consideration the fact that it is desirable that a decision be reached as soon as possible, especially with respect to adjournments of the Senate.

I have no doubt that a definite procedure regarding the use of our chamber by international and intergovernmental organizations is desirable in order that we may know how to deal with applications that are received from time to time.

In these circumstances I have used my best judgment, and I hope that honourable senators will approve the decision which had to be taken during the summer recess. I should like to hear the opinions of those who wish to express any views on this matter.

Do honourable senators agree to the latest request?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

JUDGES ACT AND FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. J. Harper Prowse, Acting Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-243, to amend the Judges Act and the Financial Administration Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I shall not detain you long. I could not be present at the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs this morning because I had to be present at another committee. Ever since coming to the Senate I have been trying to perfect the ability to be at two committees at the same time, but, unfortunately, without success.

The reason I have risen to speak at this time is that I have been given to understand that certain answers were given at the committee this morning to questions that I should have asked had I been there, especially in connection with the supernumerary judges.

Bill C-243 provides that a member of the judiciary, upon attaining 70 years of age, may resign his functions and become a supernumerary judge.

Hon. Mr. Langlois: He does not resign.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I think this is what is provided. He can remain until he is 75.

Hon. Mr. Langlois: He has a choice.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: He has the option of resigning or remaining as a supernumerary judge. When he does this he receives the same salary and performs the same duties as if he had not resigned. I think it would be up to the Chief Justice to decide whether or not to use his services. If the Chief Justice decides not to use his services, the supernumerary judge will still be receiving the same salary while doing nothing.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: He can go to Barbados.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Of course there will be one advantage in that it will permit the appointment of a successor which will add to the number of judges at the disposal of the court. This in turn could create a situation which in some instances might be favourable to the administration of justice, but in other cases it might create an undesirable situation. It is only by observing how it will function that we can assess whether this provision will satisfy the intention, but I thought I should put on the record this caution that we may be faced with some problems by the application of this provision.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Honourable senators, without wishing to prolong the debate I think it should also be placed on the record that this question was thoroughly discussed in committee this morning. There are a number of safeguards provided. First of all there will be no supernumerary judges unless the provincial legislature concerned passes the legislation providing for them.

The second point is that if we have a situation in which a man were to retire before his time for retirement, with something less than retirement pay, there would be something wrong with him, or he would not do it.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: He has to be 70 years of age.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: He has to be 70 to begin with. This now puts into the hands of the Chief Justice a cadre of men who are capable and remain capable, otherwise they are not going to stay. There are other provisions for dealing with them if they become incapable. It will enable them to deal with situations of backlogs of cases, which is a problem in all provinces at this time. It also, I would think, would permit the moving of people from the appellate division down to take trials on an ad hoc basis or to move them up from the other court to act as ad hoc appellate division judges to handle certain situations. In other words, it gives a flexibility which will enable the Chief Justice to deal with his workload much more effectively than is possible at the present time.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, that is quite true. Senator Prowse has put it well. Also, it is not costing a whole salary, because they are entitled to one-third of their salary on retirement in any event and it is only two-thirds of the salary. In many instances, such as the Supreme Court of the United States or the Court of Appeal in Ontario, they may not wish really to increase the size of the court of appeal, yet they at times need a supernumerary judge to be called on. He may have to work overtime. I think it is an excellent amendment to the act and I know that in the Ontario Court of Appeal it is very much needed.

Hon. Eric Cook: Honourable senators, I have nothing further to add to the excellent explanation given by my friends, Senator Prowse and Senator Walker, except to say, in response to the interjection of Senator Choquette, that they could not go to Barbados; a supernumerary judge has to be available at all times, as if he were a sitting judge and accept all the assignments given him by the Chief Justice of his court.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: If he does not, the Judicial Council will have to intervene.

Hon. Mr. Cook: Yes, then it will be subject to review by the Canadian Judicial Council. He has to remain available for duty at all times and cannot go south, as suggested by Senator Choquette.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I have two questions, one relating to the point raised by the Leader of the Opposition, which I think was one of considerable importance. We have had some explanation of it by Senator Prowse, but I did not understand whether the authorization of the appointment of a supernumerary judge would be made by the legislature in each individual case, or might they decide to permanently allow a set number, say, a maximum two or perhaps five supernumerary judges? What does Senator Prowse contemplate would be the procedure of the legislatures? That is my first question.

As I also was at another committee meeting I was not able to attend the meeting of this committee, and I was curious as to why, if my understanding is correct, the age of retirement for county and district court judges would be fixed at 70, whereas would it not continue to be 75 in the case of superior court judges?

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Dealing with the first question, the number of supernumerary vacancies that will be available will depend entirely on the provincial legislation. It could be a complete duplication of the court in one province and none in another. In other words, it is entirely up to the province concerned to decide how many supernumerary judges they require, how many of these extra judges they feel they need available. That is the answer to the first question.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: You are not suggesting that the legislature will be asked to authorize in each individual case?

Hon. Mr. Prowse: No, it will not be asked to deal with each case individually. They will provide a certain number of vacancies.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Or a maximum.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Or a maximum number of vacancies. In other words, you could have ten judges on the court and five of them could be supernumerary. If only one wanted to go supernumerary there is no way to fill that. It is not a fillable vacancy except by the voluntary action of the judge.

The second question is with respect to retirement at the age of 70. In one section they do provide for a retirement at the age of 65 provided the judge has had 15 years' service by that time. My honourable friend may remember that a great number of years ago there was the difference that district and county court judges were retired at age 75 while provincial supreme court judges or superior court judges and members of the Supreme Court of Canada were not. I believe Exchequer Court judges were also subject to the retirement age of 75. I know in my own province we had judges who were 86 years of age. With all due respect to people who accumulate that number of years, I think it is generally understood that a man's ability to carry a heavy workload decreases as he grows older. Now they have adopted a procedure which makes it possible for a superior court judge who no longer can do the same amount of work as before to act as a supernumerary judge and hear cases in which he has particular expertise. However, it is felt that the experience of district and county court judges who retire at 75 would be offset by certain limitations and that it would be better to appoint younger judges to replace them; in other words, the work of a district or county court judge requires energy but not the experience expected of a superior court judge.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: My friend has given a good explanation, but I think he left out the most important point, that the Constitution provides for retirement at age 75.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: For a superior court judge.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Not for a superior court judge.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: The Constitution does not so provide for district and county court judges, but the Government is able to amend the Judges Act. By this act the Government could not amend the retirement age of superior court judges. With all due respect, my friend is not correct. He has the cart before the horse. The Constitution provides for appointment for life in the case of superior court judges.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: No.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: We amended the Constitution making it 75.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: There is no limit on it at all.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It came to the Senate before the honourable Senator Prowse was here. I trust he would rather accept our contention than his because we were here when it was amended and he was not.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: I was not here when it was changed. None of us were here.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I was.

Hon. Mr. Martin: We must act judicially in our debate.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Leopold Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, October 4, 1971, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

MEETING OF COMMITTEE—QUESTION

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, may I inquire of the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration if it is his intention to call a meeting of that committee to consider the problem raised by His Honour the Speaker earlier today, and other matters that have to be dealt with by the committee very soon?

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, I am very glad to tell the Leader of the Opposition that the chairman of the committee is trying to arrange a meeting for next Tuesday. I had some reservations about whether at that time we should add to the agenda, because it is already a very full one. The committee intends to make recommendations with regard to annual increases for Senate employees in all capacities, together with reclassifications; this will bring Senate staff classifications more in line for comparative purposes with those of employees of the House of Commons, which will mean we are better able to deal with increases in the future. It has been generally understood that the increases we recommend will follow those made in the other place, and are of course retroactive to the date on which theirs were effective.

The Leader of the Opposition further suggested that the matter referred to by His Honour the Speaker earlier should be considered by the committee. I draw his attention to the motion on the Order Paper in the name of Senator Belisle. To my mind that would be a very convenient motion on which we could debate this matter and decide what course to follow. I merely make that suggestion. I have talked of this to His Honour the Speaker since I returned yesterday, and it is my understanding that he also thinks this motion is a useful vehicle by which to explore the subject. I hope that meets with my honourable friend's approval.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, may I address another question to the Chairman of the Internal Economy Committee? I believe the committee last met shortly before we adjourned in June, at which time there was a discussion of the possibility of making available to senators privileges similar to those given to members of the other place, to civil servants generally, and particularly to senior civil servants, to develop bilingualism. I wonder if that item is on the committee's agenda for the meeting next week to which the honourable senator referred.

Hon. Mr. Smith: Yes. I am happy to say that this will be one of the items on the agenda. It is a carryover, in view of the motion made by Senator Molson at the last meeting that a certain examination would be made of the subject. I do not know whether my friend expressed an opinion about this matter, but he and I have spoken about this. I know he holds as strong opinions as I do about an extension to members of this house of the opportunities for bilingualism in the public service and in Parliament. I hope that we may be in a position at this next meeting to arrive at some definite conclusion on this very important matter.

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey moved the second reading of Bill C-262, to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise with considerable diffidence to move this motion. It is my début in this capacity, and I crave the indulgence of honourable senators. I hope that they will be to my faults a little blind, to my virtues very kind.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Honourable senators, may I suggest to the honourable Senator Forsey that, because the amplification system is not working, he might endeavour to speak in a loud voice.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Honourable senators, I can bellow like the bull of Bashan, but you are likely to find that I am talking much too loud.

Hon. Mr. Martin: No, no.

[Hon. Mr. Smith.]

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I remember that my old friend, Arthur Meighen, had a habit of beginning with two or three almost inaudible sentences and then continuing with others that were extremely audible. I hope in this respect, as well as in some others, I may be able to follow his example.

I want to ask honourable senators who wish to intervene with questions of any kind, or even interjections, in view of my infirmity, in spite of the fact that I am now wired for sound, to be kind enough to speak out well so that I can hear what they say.

[Translation]

In the past, when the Leader of the Opposition interrupted me, I often missed his genial comments and I found this very distressing. I do not want it to happen this time.

[English]

I want to be sure that I hear all the interjections of honourable senators and all the questions they have to ask. While I shall do my best to answer any that may be put, I venture to say that if, as I suppose may be the case, this bill goes on to a committee, questions of detail might be better postponed until then. At that time one or more of the officials of the department would be available, and perhaps the minister or his parliamentary secretary also. They would be able to answer those questions of detail.

I do not profess to have an encyclopedic knowledge of this bill. I have gone through it very carefully, and I have gone through the briefing book supplied by the department, as I have the reports of the committee in the other place. I think I am tolerably well aware of its provisions. However, there may well be questions of detail which I cannot answer without the assistance of the officials.

Honourable senators, I have not before me a copy of the bill as amended in the other place. I do not think this is a serious matter, because the only amendments made, to the best of my recollection, were to strike out the words "and production" or "or production" in two or three clauses. In my judgment, those amendments do not affect the substance or the principle of the bill in any way.

The first substantial point I wish to make about this bill is that it is a bill to support employment. It is immensely important to understand this, and to realize that the measure in no way does anything but support employment. It is important that there should be no misunderstanding about that, either in the country or beyond our borders. That is perfectly plain from the title of the bill itself, and from section 3. As honourable senators doubtless will have observed, section 3 says:

> The purpose of this Act is to provide a means to support levels of employment in Canadian industry when other countries impose temporary import surtaxes or take other actions having a like effect that adversely affect employment in Canadian industry.

I believe that that point must be made with absolute clarity and with strong emphasis.

Honourable senators, the second main point I wish to make is that this is a bill to mitigate the adverse effect of such measures—to mitigate the adverse employment effects. It is not a bill to compensate people, firms or individuals, who have suffered adverse employment effects, to the full amount of such adverse effects. It is an attempt to mitigate, in a way which I shall describe in more detail shortly, certain of the effects.

In the third place, it is important to note that the bill is intended to deal with the disruptive effects on employment of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect. At the present moment there is only one country which has taken measures which call for the application of this legislation, but there may well be others in the present disturbed state of international trade and international exchanges. There may well be occasions in the future—we hope not—when similar measures of like effect may call for action by the Government of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: You will have to amend the act.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: No, with great respect to the Leader of the Opposition, I think not. That is, perhaps, the next point I should emphasize. This is a permanent act, though its particular application at this moment is temporary. It makes provision for dealing with emergencies of a like kind. I may be able to make this clear as I go on, if I may venture to say so.

The particular temporary application is to the disruptive effect of the American temporary import surtax. I need hardly emphasize that it is a temporary measure of the United States, and we hope that it will be of short duration. As to that, no one knows. That is the reason why the particular application of the act at present provided for is a temporary one.

The amount provided is a maximum for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1972, as is evident from section 4 of the bill.

My next point is that the bill covers only manufacturing industry. There has been a good deal of complaint about this. It has been the subject of prolonged debate in the other place, and prolonged discussion in the standing committee there.

In my opinion, the discussion has been somewhat misdirected. The point is that the disruptive effect upon raw products of agriculture is being provided for almost entirely under existing legislation administered by the Department of Agriculture. I think the same is substantially true of raw fishery products. Other legislation is available to deal with this, and will be used in accordance with assurances given by the ministers concerned in the other place.

The only qualification that I would make is that there is provision in the bill that it shall not operate so as to depress the prices of raw agricultural products entering into the manufacturing industry. I will go into that in detail, if necessary.

There is a saving subsection providing that one of the factors to be taken into consideration by the board to be set up to administer the act will be the prices of raw products coming into the manufacturing industry. The board, in effect, is directed to take account of this and not to allow the legislation to be used to depress prices of raw agricultural products. But, of course, this does not cover anything like the whole range of agriculture. It covers only a particular part of it, a relatively small part. The rest of the agricultural raw products which are affected are covered by other legislation.

I might add that the great bulk of our agricultural raw products entering into the United States are not subject to this surcharge. Only a small proportion will be subject to the surcharge and therefore involved in any disruptive effect on employment, to be dealt with either in a minor degree by this legislation or in much larger degree by existing legislation administered by other departments.

Manufacturing is very carefully defined in the bill. I draw the attention of honourable senators to section 2, the interpretation section, which states:

> "Manufacturer" means a person, firm or corporation operating an activity in Canada whereby any goods, products, commodities or wares
> (a) are made, fabricated or refined out of raw material or other substance or combination thereof,
> (b) are converted or rebuilt, or
> (c) are made by causing any raw material or other substance to undergo a significant chemical, biochemical or physical change including change that preserves or improves the keeping qualities of that raw material or other substance but excluding change by growth or decay;

That, I think, is fairly precise and fairly comprehensive.

The next thing that I wish to mention is that the bill is not intended to be a complete economic policy. A good deal of discussion in the other place was directed to suggesting that the bill was inadequate, because there were all sorts of economic ills which afflicted the country. Of course, the Opposition blamed them all, or very nearly all, on the Government. They said that there were all sorts of ills which affected the country which this bill did nothing to overcome. The simple and sufficient answer to that is that the bill does not profess to do that. It does not profess to provide a panacea, or to deal with all the economic problems of the country. It is a specific bill to deal with a specific kind of disruptive effect upon employment caused by specific measures which have been taken by one country, and which may be taken by others in the future.

Therefore, as far as I am concerned, the complaint that it is not a complete economic policy passed by me like the idle wind which I respect not. I do not think it is necessary for me to go into that at greater length.

Much of the discussion in the other place, and many of the objections, came from parties which are not represented here, unless one counts Senator Manning as affiliated directly or indirectly with one of the smaller parties in the other place. I think it unlikely that we shall hear a repetition here of some of the objections that were raised by those parties in the other place.

I should like to add parenthetically that eventually the opposition in the other place voted for the bill. I assume, therefore, that the criticism of the Official Opposition here is likely to be muted, not very prolonged or strenuous, unless, of course, they are convinced that their colleagues in the other place have fallen down on the job and some desperate repair work needs to be done. I doubt that the debate here will be prolonged or embittered, as it sometimes was in the other place.

The administration of the legislation is to be entrusted to a board of seven members.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: The section contains the words "not more than".

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I am glad to have that interjection because it leads me directly to something else that I was going to say. The administration is to be entrusted to a board of not more than seven members, not more than four of whom shall be members of the Public Service.

I notice that in the discussions elsewhere the statement was often made that four members of the board would be members of the Public Service.

That is not strictly correct because the provision is that not more than four shall be members of the Public Service, which gives the Government a certain leeway there.

The reason for the composition of the board—namely, part public servants and part people who will be drawn from outside the Public Service—is, I think, to produce a blend of the particular kind of expert knowledge that exists in the relevant departments of the Public Service, and special concern for the public interest, which one would assume would exist in the departments of the Public Service—a blend of that and of the other element of direct first-hand expert knowledge of people in the business world.

There is no direct provision in the bill for labour representation on the board. It is safe to say that a good many representations have been made to the Government that it would be desirable to have some trade union representation on the board, someone who would bring to the work of the board the particular interest, knowledge and expertise of experienced trade union leaders. It is perfectly open to the Government to do that. I know there are a number of members of the other place who have urged this publicly as well as privately, and I strongly support the suggestion. However, this is left to the discretion of the Government.

The reason for the size of the board is that it is intended, and indeed provided, that it may sit in two panels. Three members will constitute a quorum. It is desirable to have this legislation operating as soon as possible because some individuals or firms may already have been severely affected by the measures taken in the United States. There may be many different applications coming in, some of them requiring a great deal of very careful and detailed consideration, and it is desirable that they should be dealt with as quickly as possible. If there are two panels sitting simultaneously, it will be possible to do this much more quickly than would otherwise be so.

Much of the immediate effect of the legislation will, of course, depend on the regulations passed for the purpose. There is provision for regulations, because this is a permanent act and because it is necessary to apply it to a particular situation which exists now, and it may be necessary to apply it to other particular situations later. The implementation for a given situation will depend upon the regulations. The draft regulations were submitted to the committee in the other place. The regulations, of course, cannot be passed until the act has been passed and the authority thereby given. But much will depend upon the content of the regulations, and I think from the draft regulations which were presented to the committee in the other place it is fairly evident what the application will be. I will be going into this in a moment or two.

I should like to add one remark in connection with section 8. Subsection (2) states that the Board shall use staff and services drawn from the Public Service. It is not intended, therefore, to set up a new bureaucracy to administer this legislation. Rather, it is intended that the available experts and experienced staff in the Public Service will be pressed into service to look after the work required by the Board.

Sections 9 and 10 are more or less routine. Section 9 says that the Board, subject to the regulations, may make such rules as may be necessary for the conduct of its meetings and so on and so forth, and section 10 says that the Board shall keep such records and books and so forth as is usual in such matters.

It is in Section 11 that we come really to the meat of the legislation. It is the essence, the pith, and substance of the legislation. Section 11 reads as follows:

> Upon application therefor to the Board by a manufacturer who establishes that the work force at his plant is or is likely to be significantly reduced through lay-offs during a specified period by reason of the application of measures taken by other countries in respect of imports therein from Canada, the Board may, subject to this Act and the regulations, authorize the payment to the manufacturer of an employment support grant pursuant to this Act in respect of any prescribed assistance period determined by the Board in respect of that manufacturer.

The first thing to notice here are the words "employment is or is likely to be significantly reduced". Various explanations have been given in the other place to indicate that this means in effect precisely what it says. If there is a plant employing 3,000 or 4,000 people and one or two people are laid off, obviously the machinery of this act will not be brought into effect for them. On the other hand, that does not mean that only large plants will come under the operation of the act. It has been made clear by responsible people in their explanations in the other place that, if a plant having ten employees were so affected such that two or three of the employees were laid off—I believe it was two or three—then that would be regarded as a significant reduction. I would not swear that it was exactly two or three, but the idea is that this act will apply alike to small and large plants, but in either case there has to be involved what the Board would consider a significant reduction in the work force. The word "significant" is presumably to be interpreted by the Board in a common sense fashion.

I might add that it was also made plain in the course of discussions in the other place that if it were a matter of some contractors' plants the production of which is not directly exported—and thus not directly affected by the import surtax of another country or any similar measure —but which is fed into the plants of manufacturers who are exporting on a significant scale, and whose employment is affected or threatened by this form of taxation, then the Board would be in a position to give consideration to looking after those people as well.

There was some anxiety on that score, particularly in the mind of a member from Hamilton, who said there are a great many small plants in Hamilton producing parts and ingredients which did not get exported directly but which went into products which were exported by other and larger firms in that city. That is going to be looked after.

The second thing to notice is that the assistance will be given for a prescribed assistance period of not over 90 days, beginning not earlier than August 16 last and ending not later than the end of the surtax. The duration of these grants is limited in various ways. They are limited in that way, and also in a way that I have already mentioned—that is, by the fact that the actual provision of funds at present is to last only until March 31 next.

If I may, I shall turn now to section 12 of the bill, which mentions something decidedly important. Clause 12 reads as follows:

> The amount of any grant that may be authorized by the Board to a manufacturer shall neither exceed such amount as may be prescribed nor be greater than any lesser amount that, in the opinion of the Board, would be adequate to maintain employment by the manufacturer throughout the prescribed assistance period at such levels as those prescribed or specified by the Board, as the case may be.

In other words, it is not intended that this money will be thrown around. The amount shall not be greater than the amount prescribed, or an amount that in the opinion of the Board would be adequate to maintain employment. Again, the sole object of this legislation is to maintain employment so far as possible in the face of the disruptive effects of the measure with which it is intended to cope.

There are various other safeguards here. For example, section 13 reads:

> No grant shall be paid to a manufacturer in respect of a plant or otherwise for an assistance period unless at the termination of the assistance period, the Board is satisfied that, to the extent that in the opinion of the Board was possible under the circumstances, the manufacturer has maintained the level of employment throughout the assistance period in accordance with the specifications of the Board or at prescribed levels if the Board did not specify any levels of employment for that manufacturer.

There is an attempt there, to deal with two situations which would appear to be looked after more specifically in the proposed regulations. In fact, in regulation 7 as it was originally proposed there was a statement to the effect that for the purposes of section 13 the prescribed level of employment—and the word "production" is out now—would be the same as the level of employment at that plant in the base period. I shall come to the base period in a moment. There was also a provision that the Board might specify a level other than the level in the base period. There must be a certain amount of leeway, it is felt, for the Board to deal with specific situations where it might not be possible to fulfil the general requirement of keeping the employment up to the level of the base period, and the philosophy of it is, I think, that half a loaf is better than no bread.

Section 14 requires the Board, in considering an application, to take into account all relevant factors including:

> (a) the levels of employment and production at other plants in Canada of the manufacturer or of any persons associated or affiliated with the manufacturer, and—

Then comes the subsection which I referred to earlier.

> (b) the prices paid by the manufacturer to suppliers for goods that enter into the cost of production of the manufacturer.

That is the one that would look after certain things involving agricultural products.

The purpose of section 14(a) is to make sure that the manufacturer applying for this assistance does not play jiggery-pokey among the various plants which he or affiliated companies or affiliated persons may have elsewhere in the country. We do not want to find ourselves in the position where the taxpayers are helping out a manufacturer who has merely, in effect, transferred certain business from one particular plant to another. This is to be on the basis of "a plant", not the whole ensemble or the totality of the manufacturer's business in various parts of the country.

There is also provision for exceptional cases in section 15, subsection (1) of which says:

> Where a manufacturer who makes an application under this Act for a grant is unable to comply with any regulations applicable in his case and the Board is of the opinion that a grant to the manufacturer would not be outside the purposes of this Act, as described in section 3, the Board may, having regard to the purposes of this Act, recommend to the Governor in Council that a grant be authorized under this Act for that manufacturer.

This is to take care of marginal cases. A firm that had only recently come into production could not go back over the whole of last year and say, "This is what we were exporting to the United States last year, and now look what has happened to us." A firm might have come into existence very recently, and they might say, "Well, this is going to knock a terrible hole in our business, but we do not have records for last year because we were not doing anything." They were either not in existence, or were just not producing for export. They could say, "We were producing, but not exporting. We suddenly found an avenue of export opportunity opening up for us but now that has been destroyed." The ordinary standard is that the exports of the firm for the year 1970 have to be looked at, but it was felt there had to be provision for this kind of exceptional case.

Of course, there are safeguards there because, first of all, the Board having examined the situation must make a recommendation to the Governor in Council, and then the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Board can make a special grant as provided for in subsection (2) which says:

(2) If, following a recommendation under subsection (1), the Governor in Council so directs, the Board may authorize payment of a grant to the manufacturer for an assistance period in such amount as it considers appropriate for the purpose of maintaining employment and production at a plant of the manufacturer, subject to such terms and conditions, if any, as may be set out in the directions of the Governor in Council.

Section 16 provides that subject to subsection (2), payment of a grant for an assistance period shall not be made until the termination of such assistance period. I think that that is a fairly obvious safeguard against misuse. Then subsection (2)—and here you have an exception to cover exceptional circumstances—says:

Notwithstanding section 13, the Board may, if in its opinion circumstances so warrant, authorize payments to a manufacturer during the assistance period of the manufacturer of amounts on account of the grant payable in respect of that assistance period.

I should be inclined to think that this will apply particularly to firms with rather modest financial resources which could be seriously inconvenienced by having to wait until the end of the assistance period for payment of the grant. They can get something on account in special cases if the Board is convinced it is necessary to carry out the purposes of the act.

Of course, there are certain other provisions of a more or less routine kind. Section 18 provides for regulations by the Governor in Council, as follows:

[Hon. Mr. Forsey.]

The Governor in Council may make regulations

(a) respecting the assistance period or periods in respect of which grants may be paid or applied under this Act;

(b) respecting the level or levels of employment and production that are to be maintained during any prescribed assistance period as a qualification for a grant under this Act;

(c) respecting the information to be submitted with applications for grants or to be required for the purposes of such applications;

(d) respecting the manner or means in or by which the amounts of any grants shall be computed, which, so far as practicable, shall be related to the extent of the adverse effects incurred by a manufacturer by reason of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or the taking of other foreign actions having a like effect;

(e) prescribing the matters that shall be taken into account in considering whether a manufacturer qualifies for a grant under this Act; and

(f) generally, respecting any matter or thing necessary to effect the purposes of this Act.

There is a provision that any payment made to a manufacturer to which he is not entitled may be recovered, and that the grant shall be treated as income for the purposes of income tax.

Then section 21 provides for an annual report by the minister. In connection with this latter point, I understand that while there is no provision in the bill there was an undertaking given by the minister that he would report more frequently than annually; that, in fact, he would make information available once a quarter. To the best of my recollection there was no amendment of that sort introduced, let alone passed, but I understand that is the undertaking that was given.

Honourable senators, there are certain things that come out more clearly only in the draft regulations. The first is that the board, if these regulations are adopted, as I think they will be to a great extent if the legislation is passed, shall not authorize a grant to a manufacturer with respect to a plant unless in the calendar year 1970 there were exported, directly or indirectly to the foreign country that imposed the surtax, goods having a total value of not less than 20 per cent of the total value of all goods produced at the plant in 1970. That is the first condition. If you are just exporting from your plant less than 20 per cent—

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I have such respect for Senator Forsey that I am rather loath to raise this point of order, but on the other hand Senator Molson has very properly been leading a committee whose desire it is to see that we should be a little more strict in observing our rules. It seems to be most unusual—although I fully realize Senator Forsey's difficulty—to be obliged to refer to regulations prior to the passing of an act when the regulations will only come into effect after royal assent has been given. I can see the difficulty, but it seems to me that the proper procedure would be to have at this second reading stage the general explanation of the bill. I have no doubt that because of the generalities in the bill and the curiosity that this house will have, as apparently the other house had, as to the proposed regulations, that we would like to hear about the regulations, but perhaps not now but in committee. Anyone who wishes to discuss the proposed regulations should do so on third reading.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: In the first place I thought I had been careful to say draft regulations as indicating the intent of the Government in respect of this measure. I certainly stand corrected by Senator Benidickson if I transgressed the rules. I find it difficult, and Senator Benidickson really allowed for this in what he said, to indicate the effects this legislation is likely to have in relation to the particular matter we are concerned with at the moment without making some reference at least to the content of these proposed regulations which indicate the broad intent.

I said specifically, if I recall it, that they merely indicated the general line which I thought the Government proposes to take if the legislation goes through. I think it is important that we should realize the kind of conditions on which it seems likely that this assistance should be made available.

Perhaps if I merely paraphrase what is here, without saying where I obtained it and merely say that from the circumambient air I have derived the impression that the intention is that certain criteria will in fact be laid down and are likely, therefore, to be followed, that might meet the point of order which Senator Benidickson has made.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: I think that that would meet with the approval of the chamber. We have found by experience that it is very unusual to be able to persuade a minister, even in committee, to tell us when a bill proposes that he will have the right to make regulations, what will be in those regulations. As often as not there was reluctance to pass his bill when he was not too specific in it as to what the law would be.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Precisely.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Therefore, perhaps we should not refer to possible regulations in the future. I think that Senator Forsey, who has studied the examination that took place in the other place, which many of us have not done, could very well give us the benefit of his surmise as to the probable cabinet regulations that will follow under the various sections giving prescribing powers as we have before us in this bill. However, it is most unusual, first of all, for a minister to even tell us what he intends to put in the regulations. We have been complaining for years that they want blank cheques, "You give this authority to cabinet and then trust us and we will make good regulations." I am very pleased to hear that in committee in the other place the minister in this instance outlined what he had in mind, but very probably he made no firm commitment because presumably his proposed regulations have not gone to cabinet. He just says he proposes to have certain regulations. However, if it is Senator Forsey's understanding, from reading the debates of the other place and seeing the minister's remarks, that the passing of a certain section purports a certain procedure and result, I am satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Smith: That is what he has been doing.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: No; he has been referring to "draft" regulations as if they had already something meaningful legally.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, a point of order has been raised. Rule 56 reads:

> The principle of a bill is debated at its second reading.

It has been the custom so far and, of course, we are bound by the rule at this time to discuss the principle of the bill. This point of order is well taken, but I must also mention that, as the honourable Senator Benidickson has indicated, there have been up to this time complaints, even on second reading, that honourable senators were not supplied with enough information. However, as far as the rules exist, there is no doubt that at this time the discussion must be restricted to the principle of the bill involved, unless, of course, honourable senators agree that in order to have more explanation they would be willing to allow the honourable Senator Forsey to mention or discuss some of the—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: He is almost through, anyway.

The Hon. the Speaker: I think that the point is well taken; the honourable Senator Forsey understands, so I invite him to continue.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I am much indebted to Senator Benidickson for his correction. I can only say this, that I am quite well aware of the complaint that has often been made here and in the other place. It was made in the other place when the bill was first brought forward, that this gave in effect a blank cheque and they wished to know something about how the cheque would be filled in so that they would have some idea, at least, of what was involved. Therefore, the minister took what I consider to be a very exceptional action by introducing a set of draft regulations before the committee in the other place.

I think the explanation for his doing so is that this is a very peculiar and special type of legislation and without some indication given to the committee and here—perhaps it would be better given in the committee and I may dispense with the rest of what I was about to say—it is very difficult to understand what in fact this bill will really do. This is the reason for going into the detail of what apparently are the intentions of the Government in using the power conferred by section 18.

I might add that even the draft was changed in the other place, but I will not bother with that beyond saying that at one point something was changed. I think it is perfectly proper to refer to these matters in an orderly manner as Senator Benidickson said. It should be taken for granted that when I say something I am not pulling it completely out of the air or out of my own imagination. I have some substantial reason to believe that what I am saying is the broad intention of the Government in applying this very general and long-term legislation to a very special, particular and, indeed, acute, emergency set of circumstances.

So that first of all if we are going to clarify, it appears to be the Government's intention, shall I say, that it will in ordinary circumstances, saving some of the special cases that I mentioned a moment ago, be a condition that the firm has exported at least 20 per cent of its production to the country concerned in 1970. There will not be this kind of assistance available for people who export hardly at all.

In the second place, it will have to show that at least 20 per cent of the value of all goods produced at the plant in 1970 would have been subject to the surtax, had that surtax been in force throughout 1970. There is a second condition. You cannot say "Well, I export 20 per cent of my production to the United States and therefore I am entitled to assistance", when perhaps what was exported does not come under the surtax at all. It must be shown that there was 20 per cent of the total production exported to the United States and that 20 per cent of the total value of all goods produced at the plant in 1970 would have been subject to the surtax. This is an additional safeguard. He must also show, the act states, that employment would be adversely affected by the imposition of the surtax.

The assistance period will be defined more precisely than in the act; it will not be of more than 90 days' duration, and it will be based on a base period, which ordinarily will be the period ending on the day before the surtax came into effect.

I do not think there is really a great deal more to say at this stage about the bill. I have indicated the type of situation it is intended to meet. I have not dwelt upon the number of plants or the amount of employment likely to be affected. My recollection is that the minister intimated that there might be as many as 1,500 applications under this legislation if it goes through. It is also my recollection that there were three very carefully qualified estimates of the unemployment given. If the difficulty lasted for three months there would be a certain number of people affected; if it lasted for six months a certain number of more people would be affected; and if it lasted for a year a certain number more over and above the previous number would be affected. The estimates were carefully qualified ones. Ninety thousand is a very rough estimate of the number of people who would be affected over the course of a year. My memory might be at fault there, but the number is something of that order of magnitude. There were three separate estimates for three separate periods. I have not gone into that in any detail because I think it is really unnecessary. Everyone knows that this is a very serious situation, and it is likely to affect a large number of both large and small plants in this country.

Some of the people who have criticized the bill have been inclined to think that there should be, either in the bill itself or in a statement by the Government, some undertaking that plants owned by American subsidiaries in this country should not qualify. The Government has rejected that plea, and has insisted that what it is looking at here is the employment of Canadians, and it does not matter who employs them, whether it is an American subsidiary or a 100 per cent Canadian-owned corporation, or anything else.

What the Government wants to do is to give some assistance, and some assistance only, up to two-thirds of the amount of the surtax. This is the principle laid down. Two-thirds of the surtax is the maximum amount of compensation, and the maximum will not be given unless the manufacturer establishes to the satisfaction of the board that the maximum is necessary. That principle has been clearly laid down.

When this assistance is given to a manufacturer he does with it whatever he wishes. The only requirement on his part is that he maintains employment at the level prior to the imposition of the surtax. He is not told that he must use this assistance to put his goods into the United States market, or the European Common Market, or the domestic market. He is given the assistance if he maintains employment at the level prior to the imposition of the surtax. What he does with the assistance is up to him. He may decide to maintain employment by having some of the staff repaint the premises, or something of that nature. He may decide to build up inventories, or he may decide to explore new markets. It is important, I think, to emphasize this because some people seem to be under the impression that this is designed to help a manufacturer get into the United States market, or something like that. Its purpose is merely to preserve employment, and what the manufacturer does with the money is up to him. This is all this legislation is concerned with.

Honourable senators, I should like to say, if it is in order, that I would be happy to answer to the best of my ability any question that you may wish to ask, but my assumption is that this bill will go to committee, where all of the details can be much more satisfactorily explored in the presence of the minister, the parliamentary secretary, or officials of the department, or a felicitous and omniscient combination of all three.

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, we are dealing today with a bill under which the Government of Canada proposes to spend up to $80 million of the taxpayers' money. This fact alone imposes on the members of both houses of Parliament a responsibility to be certain that the proposed bill has a valid purpose; that the procedures for attaining it are practical and realistic; and that its enactment will be in the interests of the Canadian people as a whole.

Section 3 of the act reads:

> The purpose of this Act is to provide a means to support levels of employment in Canadian industry when other countries impose temporary import surtaxes or take other actions having a like effect that adversely affect employment in Canadian industry.

This section ties the purpose of this bill directly to the maintenance of an acceptable level of employment in Canadian industry. It limits the use of the $80 million provided to making support grants to industries adversely affected by temporary surtaxes or other actions having a like effect imposed or taken by other nations.

I am certain everyone is aware that this act is the direct result of the 10 per cent surcharge recently imposed by Washington on foreign goods imported into the United States. The surcharge undoubtedly will have an adverse effect on the Canadian economy in relation to the level of employment in this country, but I do suggest that its impact must be kept in its proper perspective. The surcharge will aggravate the problem of unemployment, but certainly it is only one of many factors responsible for the high level of unemployment in this country. We cannot overlook the fact that we had over 600,000 unemployed men and women in Canada before there was any suggestion of the imposition of this 10 per cent surtax by the United States. A partial counteracting of the effect of the surtax will not solve the unemployment problem in this country, and the Government of Canada should not be permitted to make this recent United States action a scapegoat for its own failure to preserve sufficient buoyancy in the Canadian economy to maintain a level of employment satisfactory to the Canadian people.

It was said by the mover of this motion (Hon. Mr. Forsey) a few minutes ago that criticism of this bill from the standpoint that it touches only one facet of the problem of unemployment in Canada is perhaps not valid criticism because, after all, this bill purports to deal with only one specific situation. But surely the Canadian people cannot be criticized for wondering why it is that the Government of this country is unwilling or unable to deal with the consequences of its own fiscal and economic policies in their impact on employment but can move quite quickly to try to mitigate the impact of the action of the government of another nation. This situation is bound to evoke questioning, and valid criticism, on the part of the Canadian people.

The reaction to the United States' surtax underscores a fact that the Canadian Government, and many outside of government, seem to have failed or refused to recognize in recent years; that is the inescapable inter-relationship between the economies of Canada and the United States. I have urged in this house in a previous debate the need and importance for a realistic reassessment of Canada-United States relations. This is a matter that is perhaps not too important to the United States, but I am convinced it is an absolute necessity, and long overdue, from the standpoint of Canada's own best national interests.

During the past several years various federal Government spokesmen, large sections of the mass media and self-appointed guardians of Canadian nationalism among pseudo-intellectuals and socialist politicians have been actively fostering in this country a negative Canadian nationalism based largely on anti-American sentiments. The theme of their proposition has been that Canada should assert her complete independence of the United States and free herself from the dependence on American capital, and from what is referred to as the American presence and influence. Now just one simple domestic decision on the part of the United States Government has demonstrated how utterly unrealistic this nationalist talk of Canadian financial and economic independence really is.

When a nation of only 21 million people shares a continent with the world's greatest industrial and economic and military power, with a population of some 210 million, there is no earthly way the economy of the smaller nation can operate independent of the economy of the larger. The United States decision to impose this 10 per cent surtax has proven this fact in no uncertain way. Now we find the officials of the Canadian Government, who a few months ago were telling the United States and the world that we resented the presence and influence of the United States in our economy, and were determined to assert our independence and do our own thing, hurrying off to Washington to ask for special exemptions for Canada on the grounds that, after all, our relationship with the United States is closer and different from her relationship with other countries affected by this particular impost.

Honourable senators, can we honestly blame Washington for taking the position that Canada cannot have this both ways? Can we logically expect them to regard Canadian nationalist attitudes and actions affirming our intention to protect our domestic interests as perfectly valid, and at the same time expect them to accept our protest that actions by the United States Government to protect their domestic interests are isolationist and entirely wrong? It is my conviction that had the Canadian Government spent as much effort cultivating mutually beneficial relationships with the United States as they have spent in fostering anti-American sentiment in this country, we would today at least be dealing with Washington from a position of strength and understanding instead of a position of weakness and resentment. Had the Prime Minister of Canada been as interested in cultivating understanding of Canada's position in Washington as he seemed to be in cultivating the friendship of Moscow, we might at least have had a reservoir of good will to draw on in the present circumstances.

I come back to the principle and stated purpose of this bill. It applies "when other countries impose", the language says, "temporary import surtaxes". Does this mean that the United States can render this bill inoperative simply by declaring the present surtax a permanent levy against goods coming into the United States? This language is vague in that respect.

Turning to the procedures provided in the bill, I direct the attention of honourable senators to a couple of sections.

The first is section 11, which says:

> Upon application therefor to the board by a manufacturer—and these are the words I ask you to notice particularly—> who establishes that the work force at this plant is or is likely to be significantly reduced through layoffs during a specified period by reason of the application of measures taken by other countries in respect of imports therein from Canada, the board may, subject to this act and the regulations, authorize the payment to the manufacturer of an employment support grant—and so on.

Honourable senators, precisely how is a Canadian manufacturer to establish that situation beyond reasonable doubt? Surely, in many cases, the impact of the American surtax is only one of a number of factors that determine whether they acquire a market in the United States at a particular time for their product. For example, if a Canadian firm bids to supply parts for some project in the United States, it may not get the contract. The surtax may be only one of a significant number of factors that resulted in the Canadian firm not being competitive. Precisely how is this manufacturer to establish whether it was or was not the surtax which was responsible for its not getting the market and consequently having to lay off men and therefore come under the provisions of this bill?

Turning now to section 12, it reads:

> The amount of any grant that may be authorized by the board to a manufacturer shall neither exceed such amount as may be prescribed nor be greater than any lesser amount that, in the opinion of the board, would be adequate to maintain employment by the manufacturer throughout the prescribed assistance period at such levels as those prescribed or specified by the board, as the case may be.

It seems to me this section places on the board an almost impossible task. Precisely how can it make this determination? In each of the hundreds of cases with which it will be called upon to deal, no two cases will be alike. I do not know how much consideration has been given to the administrative problems but it seems to me it will create administrative nightmares.

Then, in section 16, there is this provision:

> —payment of a grant authorized by the board to a manufacturer in respect of a plant of the manufacturer or otherwise for an assistance period shall not be made until the termination of such assistance period.

In other words, there is a period of time required; the payment is not made until the end of that period, except under some exceptional circumstance for which provision is made. The board must be satisfied, at the end of that period, that what the manufacturer has represented has indeed proven to be the case.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: And they can change the period from time to time.

Hon. Mr. Manning: They can change the period. That is another point. I am wondering what the position will be of a small industry which feels it qualifies under this act and then discovers, at the end of the period, that due to certain factors, perhaps ambiguous factors which arose during the period, the board now decides that the firm does not qualify and so it does not get the assistance. What effect is this going to have, especially on a small industry whose management would have been financially unable to have retained its full staff and produced these products, except on the assumption that it was going to get assistance at the end of the period specified?

This could well put some smaller industries in danger of bankruptcy, in which case we would not have solved the problem of unemployment or even mitigated it, in the case of this particular industry, but perhaps created a last condition that would be worse than the first.

Finally, I think we should ask ourselves whether the enactment of this bill serves the interests of the Canadian people generally. Personally, I have grave doubts. For one thing, I am afraid that it will create some adverse regional reactions. The bulk of manufacturing industry which is affected and which will stand to gain assistance from this bill, is located in central Canada, in Ontario and Quebec—and perhaps we should also include British Columbia, because the lumbering industry there may be one that will be directly affected. The number of industries in the Maritimes and in the Prairie provinces exporting manufactured products to the United States are few. I am afraid we will end up with another case of the Canadian taxpayers, throughout all Canada, contributing to underwrite the industrial economies of those particular regions of this country where industry happens to be concentrated. It will be interesting to see which provinces get the lion's share of this further $80 million of the taxpayers' money. I am quite certain it will not be the Prairie provinces or the Maritimes.

Meanwhile, these areas have their own serious economic problems. They have problems of unemployment, created not by the imposition of the United States surtax but by other policies and conditions much closer to home which are not being dealt with. It is only realistic to assume that there will be feeling on the part of these regions that the causes of their unemployment and their economic difficulties are not being attended to, but that $80 million of the taxpayers' money is available to mitigate the effect of the action of a foreign country on industries located primarily in only three provinces of this entire country.

I for one am not critical of the action of the United States in the imposition of this surtax. The American economy was getting into a very serious condition, a condition where drastic action was necessary if they were to avoid a far more serious crisis economically than anything we have seen to date.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: And affecting us all.

Hon. Mr. Manning: Honourable senators, again coming back to the inescapable inter-relationship between our economy and theirs, if the American economy ever goes under, we go under with it. Let us not shut our eyes to that fact. If a strong United States economy can be preserved, it is our best guarantee in Canada of economic health and a high level of employment in this country.

I am not opposed to this bill, but I did feel an obligation to point out that it will in no sense solve, to any significant degree, the problem of high unemployment in Canada. Its benefits will be regional rather than national, and it is a poor substitute for constructive effort to establish a close working partnership between Canada and the United States that, had it been done in the past, could well have prevented this particular problem arising at all as far as Canada is concerned.

Hon. Fred M. Blois: Honourable senators, I had not intended to speak on this bill and I did not come prepared with any data. I should commence by saying that I am a little biased because I am a vice-president of a small business in one of the Maritime provinces. We do not have a large number of employees, about 100. Last year we exported over 50 per cent of our goods to the United States, and we may well be seriously affected by the American surtax.

I am likely to say a few things that perhaps I should not say, but when this situation first arose we decided to face up to it. Last week I contacted our board of directors and we discussed the matter very thoroughly. Personally I am against too much of the taxpayers' money being set aside for assisting any industry unless the step is one of great value.

In our particular case we decided to make every effort to obtain business elsewhere or to make alternative arrangements. We decided to contact many of our larger customers in the United States and explain to them why we were unable to absorb the 10 per cent surcharge whether it is on a temporary or permanent basis.

At present we have orders from American firms for delivery in October, November and early December, and some of those orders are now being processed. We contacted 81 customers and explained the situation and asked them if they could see their way clear to take delivery of the orders now on hand and absorb the 10 per cent surcharge. I am delighted to say that only three said they could not do so. It is now our intention to contact these people further.

One firm said to me personally, "We are buying your goods, not because they are made in Canada but because they are of a quality, style and colour which we cannot procure in the United States." I feel that with an effort on our part we may yet be able to pursue that business.

I have great faith in the honesty of other people in similar types of business. I do not believe that our Canadian manufacturers, either large or small, wish to take advantage of these grants or to take money from our taxpayers. The Lord knows that we are overtaxed now. I fully believe that industry will make an effort to hold a portion of this business or do something else to maintain employment.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, for Hon Mr. Grosart, debate adjourned.

PAROLE SYSTEM

PROPOSED STUDY BY LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Leave having been given to revert to Motions:

Hon. Keith Laird moved, pursuant to notice:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the parole system in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that the hour is late and several senators have indicated that they will be dealing with this matter at a later date, my remarks in introducing the motion will be brief.

Honourable senators will agree with me that this is the type of examination which a Senate committee is particularly suited to undertake. I do not need to remind the house that our standing and special committees perform a useful function and have had considerable influence on legislation affecting the performance of institutions both in and out of Government.

I myself have no expert knowledge of this topic, and I would defer, for example, to my honourable friends, Senator Hastings and Senator Prowse, both of whom are momentarily absent from the chamber. In any event, it is a pertinent topic for such a committee to examine.

Many Canadians say that our parole system in Canada is too lenient, and that many crimes would never have been committed had the criminals concerned not been released on parole.

I am sure that some honourable senators, like myself, have been importuned to press for the release of a prisoner on the ground that no object is served in keeping him incarcerated. We cannot go along with a system just because it exists. We can no longer be complacent about such things. We have to find out whether the criticism is justified, and whether the present system does or does not work. I suggest that the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs is particularly suited for this purpose.

I should like to explain briefly the existing system so that honourable senators will understand how it operates.

The concept of parole is not to exact retribution but to re-instate the prisoner in society so that he may perform in a normal manner. At one time the Remissions Branch of the Department of Justice could, under the Ticket of Leave Act, grant parole in certain circumstances. Some honourable members may well recall those days. I certainly recall as a practising lawyer intervening with the Remissions Branch on behalf of certain incarcerated individuals. However, in the mid-1950s a committee was appointed under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Gérald Fauteux to examine into this question of parole. A couple of paragraphs in the report of that committee are very pertinent:

> We are firmly of the opinion that the parole authority for Canada should be a quasi judicial body rather than, as is presently the case, a Minister of the Crown acting in an exclusively administrative capacity. The parole authority, we believe, should not be one that is liable to be subjected to the external and internal pressures which are, inevitably, brought to bear on Ministers of the Crown—
> We recommend, therefore, the establishment of a national parole board, with headquarters in Ottawa ... It has been suggested to us that regional parole boards would be a satisfactory alternative. We reject this suggestion, because we consider that only a national board, having over-all jurisdiction, will be able to develop and maintain a national parole policy and practice, and provide the uniformity of administration that we consider to be so essential in this aspect of the Canadian correctional field.

As a result of that the Parole Act was passed and came into effect on February 15, 1959, establishing a Parole Board of five members assisted by a staff collectively described as the National Parole Service. The jurisdiction of the board covered four points: one, granting of parole to inmates; two, revoking or suspending parole; three, revoking or suspending any sentence of corporal punishment and, four, revoking or suspending any order made under the Criminal Code prohibiting any person from operating a motor vehicle.

The responsibilities of the Parole Service, that is the staff, are to provide for the investigation of cases and the preparation of material pertinent to them for consideration by the National Parole Board, and to provide for the supervision of parolees.

In June 1969, the Criminal Law Amendment Act enlarged the National Parole Board to a maximum of nine members and enabled the chairman to appoint divisions of two or more members with the authority to exercise all the powers of the board. As a result, it is now quite possible for the board, with as few as two members, to visit prisons and hold hearings in order to obtain a better understanding of the cases under review. They are thus able to function somewhat more satisfactorily by being able to talk to the prisoners and obtain points of view concerning whether or not the prisoners should be let out on parole.

For the purposes of assessing an inmate's suitability for parole, the board takes into account the reports of the police, the trial judge or magistrate and the prison officials. In addition, psychiatric testimony and a report on the inmate's family and community background may be required. Responsibility for the collection of this material rests, of course, with the National Parole Service, that is, the staff, through its regional offices. These regional offices number somewhere between 25 and 30.

After the inmate is paroled, his direct supervision may be provided either by the National Parole Service itself or by community social service agencies. While the major concerns of the National Parole Board and the National Parole Service are the rehabilitation of the inmate and his adjustment to society, the system of parole itself involves a substantial saving of public revenue. I am not suggesting that this is the most important aspect of the matter, but it certainly is significant, because it has been estimated that during the fiscal year 1967-68 it cost approximately $750 to keep an inmate on parole whereas each prisoner maintained in a penitentiary cost the state $5,300.

Honourable senators, that is the background. Owing to the lateness of the hour I have only briefly advanced arguments which I hope will be further dealt with by other speakers and which I think should justify the adoption of this motion.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, October 4, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

FINANCE

REPORT OF THE AUDITOR GENERAL FOR 1970—NOTICE OF INQUIRY WITHDRAWN

On the Notice of Inquiry of Hon. Mr. Desruisseaux:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to observations made in the Report of the Auditor General for the year ended March 31, 1970.

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, although I had a purpose in desiring to move this inquiry, I find that I am not yet in full possession of the facts. It is inconvenient for me to proceed at this time, and with permission of the Senate, I ask to withdraw the inquiry.

The Hon. the Speaker: Has the honourable senator leave to withdraw his inquiry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Inquiry withdrawn.

TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO MAKE PAYMENTS—OMISSION OF ACT FROM REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1970—INQUIRY STANDS

On the Notice of Inquiry of Hon. Mr. Forsey:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Government's failure to make certain payments as required by the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and to the omission of that Act from the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970.

Hon. Eugene Forsey: Honourable senators, may I ask permission to have this item stand because I have just spent three days in bed with the flu. I am afraid if I attempted to make a speech tonight it would be a catastrophe at least for me, although perhaps not for the Senate, inasmuch as it would necessarily be exceedingly brief.

PENITENTIARIES

CENSORSHIP OF MAIL—QUESTION

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, by way of a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, I would like to draw to the attention of the house a matter of grave importance affecting the privilege of every person institutionalized in our federal penitentiaries and, indeed, the privilege of every senator. By way of background, may I state that up until June of this year all correspondence directed to or made by inmates in our penitentiaries was subject to scrutiny and censorship by officials of the penitentiary service.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I would suggest to honourable Senator Hastings that he pose his question and omit the preliminary statement. If he wishes to ask the honourable Leader of the Government what rules and regulations are regarding such censorship, then he should do so. We do not need any background or preliminary discussion on it. Just ask the question.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: If it is a question.

Hon. Mr. Hastings: I should point out that I was asking a question, and by way of background I was simply stating that up until June of this year all correspondence directed to or made by inmates in our penitentiaries was subject to censorship. However, in June of this year the Solicitor General made a welcome improvement in that he made possible free access by inmates to their members of Parliament. I was under the impression that senators were members of Parliament along with the Monarch and members of the House of Commons. However, on a recent visit to one of our higher institutions of learning operated by the Solicitor General, a memorandum was drawn to my attention with respect to this privilege granted inmates: It reads in part:

—the correspondence addressed to members of Parliament (federal), the Solicitor General and the Commissioner will be written on the regular paper authorized for inmates' correspondence.

There is more direction as to how to write their letters. It states:

Authority to send or receive sealed letters applies only to the persons above mentioned and not to senators, members of the National Assembly, or members of the National Parole Service.

I checked with the Commissioner of Penitentiaries today, thinking this was an error by a member of the service. I am informed it is not. The statement is exactly correct as provided in the regulations promulgated by the Government.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Shame!

Hon. Mr. Hastings: I believe it to be a serious breach of privilege and I would appreciate advice from the Government Leader as to what recourse is necessary to end this unwarranted infringement and censorship of my mail to inmates and that of inmates to me.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I do not think it is the responsibility of the Government; it is that of the Senate as a whole to look into this. You do not have to receive such a directive; it should be issued from the Senate.

Hon. Paul Martin: Senator Hastings was good enough to bring this matter to my attention just before the dinner hour. As he said, the Solicitor General had made free access available to inmates seeking contact with members of Parliament. It should have been apparent to whoever was responsible for this memorandum that "members of Parliament" under the British North America Act includes members of both houses.

I do not know what is meant in the particular prohibitive section by "members of the National Assembly," unless that means the Assembly in one of the provinces. In any event, I have spoken to the Solicitor General and he agrees that there has been misdirection and, of course, "members of Parliament" includes members of the House of Commons and members of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, a point of order was raised by Senator Haig. While it might be a little late to dispose of it, may I say for future reference in similar cases that when I call the Question Period I expect honourable senators, under the rules, to ask their questions, and if they wish to preface those questions with a few facts it is hoped that their statements will not be too long. In the present instance, if I remember aright, the honourable Senator Hastings mentioned a breach of privilege, and this might have been a situation in which he could have risen on a question of privilege, which would have involved all honourable senators. I only say this so that when I call the Question Period it will in future prevent honourable senators taking advantage of the situation to make what may be considered too long a statement, or even a speech.

Hon. Mr. Hastings: If I might ask a supplementary question, am I assured that the observations just made by the Leader of the Government will be conveyed to inmates of our penitentiaries to rectify the order as it stands?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I have told Senator Hastings what the Solicitor General has told me. I would only assume that his interpretation of the direction in question will be conveyed to those concerned.

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, September 30, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Forsey for the second reading of Bill C-262, to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect.

[Hon. Mr. Benidickson.]

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, Bill C-262, which has the short title of Employment Support Bill, deals with an emergency in international relations that has been widely described as the most critical situation that has developed in world trade since World War II. The bill is the response by the Government, and perhaps in time by the Parliament of Canada, to that emergency.

We have had from honourable Senator Forsey an understandably glowing account of the bill. I compliment him, not only on his optimism—which I do not share—but also on a very clear and comprehensive description of the purpose, the purport, and the structure of the bill.

Senator Manning, replying immediately to Senator Forsey, expressed some serious reservations about this and other official Canadian responses to the emergency that arose on that famous Sunday in mid-August. I believe that Senator Manning's concern and criticisms are widely shared. That is the conclusion I reach from reading discussions in the other place, in committee, in the public media, and elsewhere.

Personally, I approach the discussion of this bill tonight with rather mixed feelings. On the one hand, I am inclined to admire the speed with which the Government reacted to the emergency and the very definite action it has taken to protect the levels of employment in Canadian industries that may be affected by the 10 per cent surcharge. I also admire the care and caution the Government has taken, in introducing this bill, not to give offence to our major trading partner and, as far as possible, not to create a situation in which retaliation, under the United States laws, would be, as it could be, an obligation on the Secretary of the Treasury.

My admiration is tempered by the fact that neither in speed of action in acting on national emergencies, nor in caution in dealing with our trading partners, has the Government, in the past, given us any reason to hope that in this particular case it might have done as well as it has. It is proper, of course, to give credit where credit is due—which I do now, even though the occasion for the credit may be long overdue, as it obviously is.

On the one hand, I have to say that we as Canadians, and our Government as the Government of Canada, have probably brought this trouble on ourselves. It is possible, though I earnestly hope not inevitable, that the result of this action and other responses by the Government will be regarded by the United States as retaliation. It is only the authorities in the United States who can make that decision. We cannot. I sincerely hope that this will not happen.

On the other hand, the Government has taken a great gamble, in the light of past experience of what constitutes retaliation in international trade relations, in introducing such a bill. If that happens Canada will have the unenvious distinction of having fired if not the first gun perhaps the second in an international round of trade retaliation, which may prove calamitous for us, for the United States, and for other nations.

In reading the bill I see an obvious shifting of responsibility from the Government of Canada to a bureaucratic board which is to be given extraordinary powers and responsibilities. These are powers and responsibilities which the Government should have reserved for itself, because in the months ahead action may have to be taken by the Government and not by this proposed bureaucratic board consisting of not more than four public servants and three other Canadians.

I approach the bill with mixed feelings. The Government has acted with alacrity. Perhaps we should be pleased about this as we have not had much evidence of that over the last few years.

I need not detail all the facts of President Nixon's announcement. It is enough to say that we have been told by responsible ministers what the effect will be. It will affect one-quarter of our total export trade to the United States. If the surcharge is maintained for three months, 40,000 Canadians will be thrown out of work. If it is maintained for six months, the number of unemployed will increase to 70,000, and if it is maintained for a year, that number will increase to 90,000. As the responsible minister indicated, those are perhaps extreme estimates. On the other hand, they indicate the dimensions of the emergency to which this bill is a response.

In taking as sympathetic a view of the bill as I can, I would invite honourable senators to think of it in terms of four or five main questions.

First, was the American action necessary and justifiable?

Second, assuming it was going to happen, could or should Canada have expected exemptions or at least concessions?

Third, will the response to this bill and other actions of the Government help or hinder in the long run a solution of the problems with which we are faced?

Fourth, were there better alternatives open to the Government than the introduction of this bill?

Finally, granting, as I do, that it was necessary to move quickly to maintain employment, having in mind the very high level of unemployment already existing, is this the kind of bill that we should pass without further amendment?

Regarding the first question, from statistics that are available, the drastic action by the United States was absolutely necessary. The United States was faced with a chronic mounting balance of payments deficit which had reached the gigantic sum of $13 billion. Action was necessary not only for the United States, but for all of us, because whether we like it or not as the economy of the United States goes, so goes the economies of us all.

I will not detail at this time the problems facing the United States. All honourable senators are aware of them. Those problems were threatening the world with depression, and it was necessary for the United States to take action. The United States acted firmly and violently and perhaps precipitously, but it acted. And the evidence indicates that the action of the United States has received very wide support among the American people.

In the first half of this year imports into the United States from Japan rose by 31 per cent. American exports to Japan rose by 1.4 per cent. Canadian exports to the United States have risen steadily over the years. From 1960 to 1970 there was an increase of from 56 per cent to 75 per cent or more of our total exports.

In the automotive trade, the surplus of the United States a few years ago amounted to approximately $700 million. This year it has been reduced to a deficit.

Canada's overall trade with the United States has moved from a deficit which existed some years ago to a surplus of $370 million in 1969—honourable senators will note the rate of acceleration—to $1 billion in 1970, and to a projected $1.2 billion this year.

Around the world there has been increasing restrictive legislation, namely, trade legislation, invisible tariffs, administrative procedures, and so on, which restricted the entry of the United States into other markets. There have been unilateral national decisions which have affected United States interests, and these were mounting. Not the least offender in this, if it is an offence, was Canada.

In examining the situation, the United States knew that it held trumps, because no other country in the world perhaps is less susceptible to variations in international trade. They knew that they could take on the world in a trade war, if that terrible eventuality became necessary, and come out of it suffering less than any other country, particularly Canada.

The second question that I suggest might be pertinent in this context is: Assuming that this blow to all trading partners of the United States was inevitable, could or should Canada have obtained, expected or hoped for exemptions or concessions? My answer here, honourable senators, is yes and no. Yes, of course, because of our very special relationship with the United States. Canada and the United States buy from and sell more to each other in any year than they do with respect to any other third country. Our exports account for one-fifth of our total GNP, and at least 70 per cent of those exports rely on the United States market. As I said earlier, that reliance has increased in the last ten years from 56 per cent to 70 per cent. Manufacturing accounts for 22 per cent of all jobs in Canada; 83 per cent or more of our manufactured products sold abroad are sold in the United States market.

Presumably as a result of Government policy and market forces, we have developed over the years a definite pattern of reliance on the United States market. Comparing, for example, the year 1960 to 1969 in respect of the percentage of our total exports going to the United States, in 1960 it was 56 per cent whereas in 1969 it was 65 per cent, and now it is 70 per cent and probably more. Our exports to the United Kingdom in 1960 amounted to 17 per cent of the total. In 1969 that amount decreased to 9 per cent and this year it is lower still.

In that connection I am sure honourable senators will remember the statements made by ministers, public officials and others, almost in a gloating way, when we were faced with the possible effect on Canada of Britain's entry into the Common Market. We said, "This is great. If this had happened ten years ago, 17 per cent of our exports would have been affected. What a wonderful thing it is that now we have somehow contrived to reduce our exports to the U.K. market to 9 per cent of the total. We are not going to be hurt very much by Britain's entry."

Were we to believe some of the Prime Minister's suggestions, I am sure that there would be those who would very much wish that we had not had this decrease in our exports to the United Kingdom, and the increase in exports to the United States.

We have increased our exports to the Japanese market from 3.4 per cent to 4.7 per cent over the same period. We have dropped our exports from 3 per cent to 2 per cent on the West German market. We have gone from 3 per cent to 2 per cent in Australia, and from 1.3 per cent to 1.2 per cent in the Benelux countries and so on.

There are a few places to which we have increased our exports. For example, in China we have increased our exports from 0.2 per cent to a total of 0.8 per cent; to the U.S.S.R. we have increased our exports from 0.2 per cent to 0.6 per cent. However, I do not think any honourable senator would feel that those increases, fractional as they are, would help us very much in our present situation. You can hardly say that our exports to other markets will do us much good if we are denied access to the American market, or, more importantly, if we deny ourselves access by our own actions. Moreover, the fact is that those other markets for example, the Japanese market, the EEC, EFTA and so on are almost entirely markets for raw materials or very slightly processed materials.

We already have 600,000 people or more out of work. If our response to this latest threat is not good, acceptable and effective, obviously we are going to be faced this winter with a problem of almost unbelievable dimensions for our economy.

That is why the Government has introduced this bill as an employment support bill and has insisted over and over again that that is its sole objective, as Senator Forsey quite properly emphasized. However, there is a distinct possibility that others will interpret our actions differently, and when I express my concern that this will happen it does not detract from the point I made earlier that the Government has made a very complete, and I hope effective, effort to make the title of this bill stick and to convince our friends that it is an employment support bill. Unfortunately, there have been some statements made by ministers and others that would give some justification to our American friends should they wish to interpret it differently. I will come to that later.

As one very astute observer said recently, "Let us face it. We are either tied to the United States for better or worse, or we are adrift." That is the situation I believe we find ourselves in as we look at this emergency.

These indications of our reliances on the American market might have given us reason to hope that our American friends would say, "Well, Canada is a very special case; we will exempt you from some of the provisions and we will give you certain concessions." This has not happened. I think it is fair to suggest that we should look to ourselves, and stop blaming other people. It is time we asked ourselves if we are to some extent responsible. Have we put ourselves in a position where we cannot really and honestly expect concessions? I think we have.

So that I will not be regarded as entirely partisan at this time, perhaps the first point I should make is that Canada invented the surtax. Our American friends did not invent it. We invented it in 1962. We have engaged in a long series of unilateral actions which have been protested by our friends around the world, particularly by the United States. Our response in every case has been negative and, at times, in international terms, insulting.

We withdrew from NATO unilaterally, and in all the documentation that I have read I have not seen one single word suggesting that Canada paused for a minute to worry about those allies of hers who are on our front line. It is not their front line, because the NATO front line stretches 8,000 miles. Four thousand of those miles are in Europe, but the other 4,000 go across the Atlantic and into Canada. We withdrew over the protests of our friends. We said, "We have to do it. We must look after our interests. We cannot afford to have a defence force this large. We cannot afford to have all of these troops in Europe. Therefore, as a matter of self-interest, we have to let you fend for yourselves."

We extended our territorial waters unilaterally; I protested that in this Senate. Again, of course, we pleaded self-interest and, I think, rightly so. We had a self-interest to protect and it was a good plea, but in my view, honourable senators, it was not a justification for the action we took.

Let us not forget the protests that our American friends raised at that time. They said, "You have lost your case in two United Nations conferences; you were voted down. This is a violation of the international law of the sea." We replied, "Sorry, we have self interest to look after here and we are just not going to listen to your protest." We made no concessions—none whatsoever.

I suggest we are not entitled, for that and other reasons, to expect concessions from our American friends. The same applies to Arctic sovereignty. Again, I agree that self-interest required that we do something about it. I merely say that here again we ignored the protest. We made no concessions following the protests of our American friends.

It is sometimes forgotten also, honourable senators, that in Canada we entertain the second highest structure of MFN—that is, Most Favoured Nation—rates in the world. We talk about our interest in free trade and say we believe in free trade. The fact of the matter is that our MFN rates are second in the world only to those of Japan. This is not a matter of very great satisfaction to our American and other friends.

Recently we passed an act setting up a Textile Review Board. Honourable senators will remember the powers given to that board. Canadian self-interest was involved. Impose super taxes, surtaxes, on anything you wish, but keep out these products of other nations. Again I say there was a good case to be made for our textile industry in various parts of the country. I merely make the point of saying we did not at that time earn concessions from other nations.

The same applies to the recent overhaul of our anti-dumping legislation. I would invite members of this house to read the powers, the very absolute powers, given to the minister to put Canadian self-interest completely ahead of any obligation we have, even under GATT.

I regret saying this, because I have been one who in many ways has admired some of the things that the Prime Minister has done. However, I was shocked to read his statement in response to the emergency situation:

> If they (the Americans) do realize what they're doing and if it becomes apparent that they just want us to be sellers of natural resources to them and buyers of their manufactured products... we will have to reassess fundamentally our relations with them, trading, political and otherwise.

Surely that was provocative—not merely provocative but, I was going to say, silly. However, I do not like to use that word in connection with a statement by the Prime Minister of Canada. Let us say it was ineffective. How are we going to reconsider our relationships? How can we blame the United States in these terms that they just want us to be sellers of natural resources? They have provided a market for 70 per cent of our total exports, and the higher the manufactured content of our exports, the higher the percentage which will go to the United States. It may be 85 per cent or 86 per cent of the highly processed manufactured exports of Canada. What sense does it make to say, "If they do realize what they are doing"? The Americans realize what they are doing; anyone who has read their analyses of the factors leading up to this situation, and their recent analysis of Canada's position in their international trade, can surely not wonder if the Americans know what they are doing.

I would say, by and large, that their knowledge of the inter-relationships between Canadian and American trade is probably greater than our own, great as it is.

The next question, I suggest, is: How will this response, including this bill, help or hinder the resolution of the problem? Of course the bill will help. It will help because of the care and caution that has been taken to avoid, if possible any suggestion that it is retaliatory. Again, it is called the Employment Support Act and great care has been taken in the drafting of the act to make it clear that that is its purpose and effect. It is the title of the bill; it is the spirit of the bill.

The minister said that these very substantial grants that may be given to industries affected under the qualifications laid down in the act will not carry any obligation to maintain the level of their exports, which, of course, is somewhat of an anomaly. Here we have a bill responding to the problem of possible diminution of our exports, and we say that we are going to make grants, but not necessarily to maintain the level of our exports. I am not overcritical of that; it is an anomaly but, on the other hand, it was probably necessary under the circumstances I have mentioned.

Our American friends have not yet responded negatively and, I need hardly say, I hope they will not. One rather interesting reason, perhaps, for their reluctance to respond negatively is the fact that most of this money will go to American companies. Again I am not critical. Obviously, if 60 per cent of our manufacturing is controlled largely in the United States, then any money that is provided in this bill to support manufacturing industries—or manufacturing plants, to be more specific—will go to American firms. However, there are areas in which it can be argued that this response in the bill itself may hinder the final resolution of this problem.

Honourable senators may think I am overstressing this concern with American retaliation. Perhaps I should read what Mr. Connally, who, as we all know, is the key man in the American policy, said as recently as September 30:

> I must say plainly that we find a certain inconsistency between the expressed concerns and the proposed remedies.

He was referring, of course, to this and other remedies suggested by the countries affected by the surtax. He said also:

> Nor can measures by others to resist exchange rate realignment or other adjustment measures by controls, restraints or subsidies—

And that is what we are dealing with in this bill, a subsidy, > —help the process of resolving the situation promptly and effectively.

I cite that to indicate that this concern about retaliation is not an illusory one. The Assistant Secretary to the Treasury, Mr. Vogel, went so far as to say that this very bill we are considering could invoke countervailing duties. Mr. Howard, the parliamentary secretary to the minister, who piloted the bill through the other place, admitted that the grants made under this measure could be used to maintain our exports abroad, although I must say in fairness that he was very careful to say that it was not obligatory and not an essential motivation in granting. Mr. Pepin himself said he would agree that maintenance of exports would be one of the effects of the bill. As far as I am concerned, it is unfortunate that they parted from the very strict line they had held up to that time, but perhaps one may hope those statements will not be misinterpreted in the United States.

This raises the question, taking the overall view: Is this bill and the various responses taken by our ministers the best possible under the circumstances? There is a very wide consensus that the most effective action the Government of Canada could have taken in this situation was an overall non-discriminatory reduction in taxes. This has been suggested over and over again by some of our best economists, not only recently but over a long period of time. I personally cannot understand the reluctance and the failure of the Government to take this step.

That is exactly what they are doing in the United States. They have reduced the tax on automobiles. Fortunately, we will be beneficiaries of that, because if it enlarges the United States market the Canadian share of that market will benefit. They have offered substantial tax credits, and even tax cuts, to improve the efficiency of their export industries.

There is now before Congress a bill concerning DISC—Domestic International Sales Corporation—which refers to domestic manufacturing for export markets. It has already been watered down, I am glad to say, in the House of Representatives, and it may be further watered down in the Senate. If it passes, the effect on Canada is something one would not wish to contemplate.

I am quite sure that our ministers and officials are making representations there. I hope they will make a good case, and that some of the omissions of concessions made to others in the past will be at least temporarily forgotten until this DISC bill is disposed of.

Another suggestion that has been made, which may shock some honourable senators, is that the inevitable answer for Canada is to seek closer economic integration with the United States. There are two sides to that question. Personally, I believe that integration, on a planned and programmed basis, of our economy with that of the United States is absolutely necessary. We have integration now. It happens to be unplanned and unstructured, and it is that lack of planning and lack of structuring that has caused the particular problems of this emergency.

I can perhaps sum up the view of those who feel this is a practical way out of some of our difficulties by quoting an editorial in the Montreal Gazette under date of September 10:

> No doubt there are political and emotional difficulties in the way of closer ties of any sort with the United States. As far as the livelihood of the greater part of the Canadian people is concerned, however, there is an option that must be considered seriously and not foreclosed by any nationalistic nonsense. That is the option of a closer economic integration with the United States, an integration so tight that Washington could not take any unilateral action that would jeopardize the flow of trade across the border.
> There are worse things in the world than customs unions. Massive unemployment, for example.
> The ultimate goal of Canada's foreign economic policy should be free trade. There is no reason why this aspiration should be disavowed. Short of achieving it, however, Canada must look out for herself, and if there is going to be a tariff wall around the American market, the sensible place to be is inside it.

The general suggestion of closer integration has been carried even further by some who have resurrected the concept that has been around for a long time, namely, the possible viability of a free trade or customs union with the United States. Indeed, our American friends have made a very close examination of the possibilities in a White House report from the Committee on International Trade Policy. In chapter 10, under the heading "Our trading partners", it assesses the possible general results of such a free trade or customs union. It says, in the first place, that Canada would be obviously the chief gainer; secondly, that it would require a very long transitional adjustment period, obviously because we have been living behind a protective wall for a hundred years; and finally, that perhaps the main objection to it would be not on economic grounds in Canada but on political grounds, which might very well be so.

I come now, honourable senators, to the bill itself. Senator Forsey gave us an excellent, almost clause by clause, explanation. He commented on some of the objections that have been made elsewhere, and gave what I thought were very reasonable answers, having in mind his position as sponsor of the bill. I was not present in this chamber at that time, but I have read the proceedings and was very interested in two interjections. One was by Senator Benidickson, who appeared to object to Senator Forsey's discussing the draft regulations to be made under the act when passed. There was an intervention by His Honour, who pointed out, of course, that our rules say that the principle of a bill shall be debated on second reading. His Honour did not go beyond that, because our rules do not say that nothing but the principle of the bill shall be debated on second reading; they merely say that we shall debate the principle on second reading.

Nevertheless, are these draft regulations part of the principle of the bill? The best answer I can give to that is that of the three basic qualifications required—what the minister himself called the three basic criteria of this bill—only one appears in the bill itself. The two-thirds requirement—which I shall not go into; Senator Forsey explained it—and the 20 per cent requirement are in the regulations. I, for one, congratulate the Government on, for the first time that I know of or that I can recall, bringing before Parliament regulations under a bill. I think it was quite proper for Senator Forsey to discuss them, because they are formally before Parliament, as an appendix to the proceedings of the committee in the other house. Under our rules, I believe it is quite proper to refer to them.

However, this raises an important point. It was raised in an intervention by Senator Flynn, who seemed surprised to find that this bill, which was thought to be temporary, is a permanent measure. Throughout we are told it is aimed as a response only to the Nixon announcement. Then we find, not in the bill, but in statements made in the other place and in committee, that this is a permanent bill. In spite of the fact that the provisions are obviously tailored to the Nixon situation, the Government can now, at any time, invoke this bill by issuing a new set of regulations.

As I say, two of the three main criteria of the bill are to be found in the regulations. The Government has a carte blanche—the kind of carte blanche that no parliament should give to any government in a matter as serious as this. Surely the Government should be expected to come back to Parliament, if another emergency arises, as it may, and put before Parliament what it intends to do to meet that emergency? Sweeping powers are given here, by order in council, to the Employment Support Board. I shall not argue the nice points of the wording, but that board will consist, we have been told, of four civil servants and three others. So this board has in hand not only this particular support bill but, if the Government wishes in any other emergency, other measures to meet action by some foreign power having a like effect. If any action by any foreign power has a like effect, in the opinion of the board, then the matter is in their hands.

It makes a complete retreat possible on the part of the Government from its responsibility. It is not the purpose of Government boards or agencies to allow any government—if I may use this term—to fluff off its responsibility to a group of undoubtedly dedicated civil servants.

Of course, in an emergency like this, I agree that there must be a degree of flexibility. This is always a point put forward in such cases. There must be flexibility, but should the flexibility extend to the setting up of a board of this kind, with no appeal whatsoever from its rules? It is made very clear, in what has been said about this measure, that there is no appeal from the board. It has absolute power. It has $80 million now, and it could have millions more in the not too distant future, under certain circumstances, and there is no appeal from its decisions.

There is a definition of "manufacture". It is not even an original definition. As a matter of fact, it is a very bad one. It is imported from another place, the GAAP provisions, without much consideration for its relevance in this particular situation. It excludes a fairly wide range of agricultural products. Of course, it has been said that these will be dealt with under another department and another bill, the Prairie Grain Stabilization bill. However, I regret that the Government has seen fit, in an important matter such as this, to make sheep of the manufacturing industry and goats of our primary producers.

Surely the purpose of this bill is to support employment wherever there is a threat to employment as a result of the American surtax or other action. Surely it should apply across the board to any Canadian employer of labour who is affected. It is possible, of course, that some might be affected other than in their export business. That is the place where other existing support measures would be used.

In the flexibility given to the board, it can waive any or all of the three basic criteria, or it can hold a manufacturer, or a plant which applies for relief, to its own line, and there is no appeal.

The minister has said that anybody can go to him. The bill says that the board shall operate under the direction of the minister. He says that he will not direct the board, that he has never directed any board, but that people still can come to him. That is not good enough. Surely the right of appeal from any board should be written into any act passed by this Parliament?

There are some hopeful signs. One would hope that the American action will be successful in respect to their own problems. If it is, we, above all countries in the world, will be the gainers. If the Americans are successful in bringing about more realistic exchange rates, again we will be the gainers, because realistic exchange rates will give us greater access to other markets.

Honourable senators, I had intended to read a summary of the situation made by Mr. Meyer of the Montreal Gazette, for whom I have great respect, but on second thoughts I shall not do so. It was written early on, and it is rather more caustic in its criticism of government action than I want to be at this time.

May I conclude by hoping that the Canadian attitude to this emergency will be that it may have done us good and may make us recall the fact that in many ways we deserve it. I hope we will respond in the spirit of those lines of Kipling which he wrote to the British people after the Boer War:

> We might as well admit it,
> As a sporting people should,
> We have had no end of a lesson
> And the lesson will do us good.

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, in view of the one or two speeches which have been made, I feel it incumbent on me to say something at this time on behalf of the Government.

I wish to congratulate Senator Forsey on his initial effort in the presentation of a bill in this house. He covered the matter comprehensively and, as I am sure we all agree, in an impressive manner.

Senator Grosart, in commenting on our relations with the United States arising from the introduction of this bill, said that we had really brought the trouble on ourselves, that the bill represents the first gun to be fired by any nation since August 15, following the imposition of the 10 per cent surcharge on American imports.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I know the Leader of the Government does not wish to misrepresent me. I merely wish to say that I said nothing of the sort.

Hon. Mr. Martin: If Senator Grosart tells me that he said nothing of the sort, then I willingly accept the correction. But he conveyed to me the impression that the bill represented the only action taken by any nation since August 15 with regard to the American surcharge.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I said nothing of the sort.

Hon. Mr. Martin: As I said, I accepted that.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: But you continued on the same line.

Hon. Mr. Martin: My impression was that Senator Grosart regarded this as the first measure of its kind to serve as a retaliatory measure. The Government has made it clear—and indeed Senator Grosart himself made it clear tonight—that this measure is designed to try to deal with unemployment in Canada at the level due to the 10 per cent surcharge imposed on August 15—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I hope not.

Hon. Mr. Martin: —through grants to industry in respect of two-thirds of the cost involved.

Senator Grosart went on to say that there were five questions that needed answering. First, was the United States action justifiable? The answer is that in the view of many countries the surtax was not necessary.

We recognize that the United States had a serious balance of payments problem. The situation in relation to the Canadian exports to the United States and American exports to Canada is clearly indicative of the problem that faced that country. But it should not be forgotten that Canada, in her relations with her best customer, the United States, has had an unfavourable trade balance for a considerable length of time. Our favourable balance at this time is exceptional.

Senator Grosart's second question was: Could Canada have expected exemption? The Canadian Government felt that as the country most affected in terms of the percentage of exports, Canada had a good case.

Some people have criticized ministers of the Government for going to Washington so early in an effort to get an exemption. One is constrained to observe that had they not gone, there would have been considerable criticism because we had not made the effort.

Senator Grosart's third question was—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: You have not completed your answer to the question. You said, could Canada expect special terms? I would like you to elaborate on that.

Hon. Mr. Martin: The question was: Will the action taken by the Government hinder the solution proposed for this problem? The solution is designed, as Senator Grosart emphasized, to try to maintain employment and mitigate unemployment caused by the surcharge.

Senator Grosart's fourth question was: Were there any other alternatives? What other solution could have been put forward?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: That is a little better.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Senator Grosart's final question was: Will this help the unemployment problem? That question is a corollary or part of the fourth question.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: The answer is, very little.

Hon. Mr. Martin: No one denies the fact that the United States had to act. I have already accepted that. The question is, was the surcharge necessary? Does the effect of the surcharge create a situation that could well lead to a trade war, which is something that I think most nations at this stage are very anxious to avoid.

Senator Grosart was on rather dangerous ground when he suggested that perhaps action had been taken with regard to Canada as a result of our stand on NATO, as a result of our Arctic policy, a policy designed to prevent pollution of the environment in what is perhaps the last remaining frontier of the world.

I am sure Senator Grosart intended this merely as a debating point and not as one of substance. The United States surcharge does not apply to Canada only. It applies to all countries. The United States did not take action only against its best customer. It took action against all countries.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Including Canada, its best customer.

Hon. Mr. Martin: As Mr. Connally, the Secretary of the United States Treasury, indicated, he was not anxious to have any country consider that it had special privileges, because the policy of the United States, designed to meet its own economic difficulties arising from its balance of payments, was due to factors applicable to all countries.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Are you suggesting that you would have done the same thing as President Nixon?

Hon. Mr. Martin: No, I do not think that follows. Senator Grosart came very close to the argument presented the other day by Senator Manning in his vigorous speech. I hope that Senator Manning will not object to my saying that there were some imputations in his speech which I, as a representative of the Government, felt should not go unanswered. He said, and I quote:

> I suggest that the Government of Canada should not be permitted to make this recent United States action a scapegoat for its own failure to preserve sufficient buoyancy in the Canadian economy to maintain a level of employment that is satisfactory to the Canadian people.

Admittedly there is high unemployment in Canada. But I have detected no sign whatsoever on the part of the Government to blame the United States surtax for the unemployment that existed in Canada prior to August 15. Nor am I suggesting that any unemployment since that date is due entirely to the action taken by the United States.

Unemployment in Canada is a matter of concern to all of us including federal and provincial governments. The Government of Canada is not indifferent to the unemployment which existed prior to the imposition of the American surtax. Indeed, it was concerned about the extent of unemployment, without the prospect of additional unemployment occasioned by the American surtax measures. If we were suffering from overemployment, we might be indifferent to the United States surcharge. It is precisely because of the degree of unemployment which we have been experiencing that makes us so concerned about the additional problem caused by the United States action.

I hope I will not be accused of downplaying the extent of unemployment if I mention a few improvements that have been made in recent months. In the first half of 1971, for example, the real increase in goods and services in Canada was 6.2 per cent at an annual rate. This was virtually double the growth for 1970. The increase in the gross national product in the second quarter of this year was the largest quarterly increase in two years. It was at an annual rate of 8.9 per cent. The economy has produced an additional 245,000 jobs in the past twelve months. That is a quarter of a million jobs. There was a slight increase in seasonally adjusted unemployment in the month of August. This was some 6.3 per cent in July to 6.5 per cent in August. What is significant about this figure is that the increase was largely due to teenagers from 14 to 19 years of age. For the entire labour force, apart from these teenagers, there was actually a decline in adjusted unemployment. The extraordinary increase in the inflow of teenagers into the job market has created the problem. There were 505,000 teenagers who joined the labour market in the spring and summer of 1971.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: On a permanent basis?

Hon. Mr. Martin: The actual increase in employment of teenagers this spring and summer was unprecedented. There was an increase of as much as 439,000. The unusual situation thus occurred this summer of the highest level ever of employment among teenagers combined simultaneously with an increase in the numbers of unemployed teenagers.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: How do those figures compare with the figures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I mentioned the index of teenage unemployment—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: There was an interruption by Senator Denis who reminded us of the speeches made by the Government Leader when he was in the House of Commons under the previous administration.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I do not mind if the Leader of the Opposition wishes to make use of my discarded opinions.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Will the Leader of the Government not try to explain them?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I mentioned it because it is one of the few figures that did not show a very distinct improvement this summer. In other respects, we were making remarkably good progress in the fight against unemployment until we received the shock of the announcement of the American surcharge on August 15. While there is no intention of making a scapegoat of the American Government, there is no question that the imposition of the American surcharge has considerably complicated our prospect this winter of dealing satisfactorily with the question of unemployment.

I would like to move on to another accusation of Senator Manning. He said, and here again I quote:

> ...had the Canadian Government spent as much effort cultivating mutually beneficial relationships with the United States as they had spent in fostering anti-American sentiment in this country, we would today at least be dealing with Washington from a position of strength and understanding instead of a position of weakness and obviously some resentment.

Senator Manning went on to suggest that the Prime Minister of Canada was more interested in cultivating the friendship of Moscow than that of the Government in Washington. Senator Manning is an experienced and fair-minded man and I am sure that on reflection he would regard this criticism as being far-fetched.

The American surcharge was imposed on particular products imported into the United States and was not directed at any particular nation. It may be that some nations have suffered more from this surtax than others, but the application was universal.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Are you defending the bill or the United States?

Hon. Mr. Martin: No exceptions were made, nor have any as yet been made. The surcharge would have been imposed on Canada's trade as it has been on other countries' trade, whether or not our Prime Minister had visited Moscow. There is no more connection between the surcharge and Canadian relations with the U.S.S.R. than there is, for example, between the SALT talks between the Soviet Union and the United States and the fact that Canada happened to have built up a trading surplus with the United States. The Americans have made quite clear to us that the surcharge is not specifically directed against us.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: What difference does it make?

Hon. Mr. Martin: Whether our reservoir of goodwill in Washington is deep or shallow does not really help us much in these circumstances. The countries whose currencies the United States was anxious to see strengthened, and whose favourable trading bank balances the American administration was hopeful of seeing reduced, were Japan and Germany. It happens that the Mexican and Canadian economies are likely to be more severely hit than the Japanese or the German, but this was quite inadvertent, and an unintended by-product of the surcharge. Although the Americans did not only have Canada in mind when they introduced it, I suspect that they could not quickly grant an exemption from the surcharge without weakening their whole negotiating position with other countries. Although the Canadian Government naturally had to make every effort to try to obtain exemption from the surcharge, I see no reason to disbelieve the Americans when they insist that their refusal to grant us an exemption has nothing to do with the quality of our Canadian-American relationship.

Senator Manning touched briefly on section 11 which he considers to present a problem. This is the section which Senator Forsey, in moving second reading, described as the essence, the pith, and substance of the legislation. Senator Manning suggests that the impact of the American surtax is only one of a number of factors which determine whether particular Canadian manufactures acquire a specific market in the United States. Section 11 reads in part:

> ... a manufacturer who establishes that the work force at his plant is or is likely to be significantly reduced through lay-offs during a specified period by reason of the application of measures taken by other countries in respect of imports therein from Canada,—

This means that if the manufacturer thinks that his work force is or is likely to be significantly reduced, then he can apply to the board created by Bill C-262. Senator Manning asked precisely how is this manufacturer to establish whether it was or was not the surtax which was responsible for its not getting the market and consequently having to lay off men and therefore come under the provisions of this bill with respect to the reduction of unemployment in Canada. The number of factors bearing on the situation may indeed be complex, but a manufacturer may well consider that the surtax is or is likely to be the cause. If the manufacturer believes he has a plausible claim, he appeals to the board. The determination of whether or not the manufacturer's case is a valid one may be difficult for the board but it does not prevent the manufacturer from making the claim. It will be a question of fact. Certainly the board will have some difficult decisions to make, but then the whole impetus behind the passage of this bill is the difficulties created by the surcharge measure.

Senator Manning also wonders what the position will be of a small industry which feels that it qualifies under this act for assistance and then discovers, at a later period, that the firm does not qualify and so does not get the assistance. Senator Manning anticipates a situation in which a company overcommits itself, and then either goes bankrupt or has to reduce its employment considerably. I do not wish to anticipate how the board may be able to act. Perhaps there may be some delays which cause uncertainty for small industry. If, however, a small industry were to go ahead and spend money which it hoped it would receive as compensatory payments from the Government, even though the board has not yet allocated the funds, then that small industry would be taking a considerable chance. It is not good business procedure, whether for small businesses or large ones, to make payments of various kinds when the resources for such payments have not yet been committed. If, however, the board had once authorized payments under Bill C-262, then the industry in question should receive the funds whether or not the question subsequently arose as to whether the payments were completely in keeping with the act. Should circumstances alter, I would hope that the board would abide by its original commitment, for the intention of the board is to assist industry, not to induce industry into a position of reversing itself on policy.

I should like to deal with one other criticism of Senator Manning. He is apparently afraid there will be some adverse regional reaction. He anticipates that the lion's share of the $80 million of the taxpayers' money will go to the central provinces, and perhaps British Columbia, but not to the Prairies or to the Maritimes. I think Senator Manning will have to recognize that the purpose of the bill is to assist industries that have been adversely affected by the surcharge. If the industries that have been adversely affected are in particular regions, then the compensation will go to those particular regions. If other regions have not suffered from the surcharge, then it is reasonable that those regions that have not suffered much would not be given the same compensatory payments as those regions which have suffered from the surcharge. I call Senator Manning's attention to the statement of the Minister of Agriculture about the position of both processed and non-processed agricultural goods. The legislation is intended to cope with unemployment created by the surtax, not with unemployment created by other circumstances; nor is it intended to cope with the general question of regional disparity. It is a limited measure with limited application, and it is not intended to prove a panacea for all our ills.

Senator Manning said at the conclusion of his speech:

> Honourable senators, again coming back to this inescapable inter-relationship between our economy and theirs, if the American economy ever goes under, we go under with it. Let us not shut our eyes to that fact. If a strong United States economy can be preserved, it is our best guarantee in Canada of economic health and a high level of employment in this country.

I agree with the inescapable inter-relationship and the compulsions which flow from it. I agree we must have a strong United States economy. I would suggest, however, that it is equally important that we have a strong Canadian economy. We do not expect to have a strong Canadian economy through weakening that of our neighbour or of any other country, but equally we do not expect to have a strong American economy by virtue of weakening the Canadian economy.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Martin: That is the problem that faces the Government in this situation. These artificial barriers to trade, such as the recent surcharge, are not, in our judgment, conducive to developing world trade. Neither are they conducive to the economic welfare of Canada, nor are they, we submit, conducive to the best interests of the United States.

There are various methods other than the imposition of the surtax by which the United States might help to overcome its economic problems without having the same disruptive effect on world trade and on bilateral Canadian-American trade. We do not think that the surtax is the best measure either for the United States or for others; but this bill is directed not with the object of engaging in a retaliatory trade effort. It is not part of a trade war. It is simply the Government's way of dealing with a particular situation in which many people may find themselves out of work as a result of the surcharge. This bill is designed to maintain employment and nothing more.

That is the purpose of this bill. How well it will succeed remains to be seen. It is not intended to bring into being in the United States any countervail. It is not in any form a retaliatory measure. This we have made clear to the United States.

As Senator Forsey pointed out in answer to a question by Senator Flynn, this bill, in the generality of its terms, is capable of being applied to other commodities or to another country if a similar situation arises that affects employment. Surely no one country, when faced with the high level of unemployment we are faced with, could be criticized because it resorted to a measure designed to mitigate a level of unemployment that developed as a result of actions taken outside the country. I think this bill represents a careful effort. I am sure that when the bill is carefully examined in committee there will be an opportunity of going into other matters. I say this not with the idea of precluding debate but just to indicate the importance that the Government attaches to this measure. It in no way involves any consideration of foreign policy. It was not brought about because there have been disagreements between Canada and the United States in foreign policy.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Where does foreign policy begin?

Hon. Mr. Martin: It was not brought about because of foreign policy moves. To argue otherwise does not do justice to the United States. That does not do justice to the friendship and the understanding and the collaboration that prevails now, as heretofore, between our two countries. I can only think that that point was made not for the purpose of belittling this bill but for the purpose of making a debating point. I cannot feel that, on reflection, it is a point that anyone would wish to affirm.

On motion of Hon. Mr. O'Leary, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARY GUIDE

BIOGRAPHIES OF SENATORS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, a few months ago there were some requests by honourable senators who were contemplating making some changes, major or otherwise, to their biographies in the Canadian Parliamentary Guide.

It is appropriate at this time for me to remind honourable senators that such changes must reach the office of the editor of the Canadian Parliamentary Guide before January 1, 1972. In order that honourable senators might have complete information, I should like to put on Hansard that any changes they wish to have made to their biographies should be sent in writing to the following address:

INTERNAL ECONOMY

SUPPLEMENTARY BUDGET OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, I desire to table the report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration approving the supplementary budget of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance with regard to its examination of the question of fiscal and monetary policy in Canada.

BUDGET OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON 1971 TAX REFORM LEGISLATION TABLED

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to table a report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration approving the budget of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce with regard to its examination of the 1971 Tax Reform Legislation.

SENATE ACCOUNTS

SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTE ON INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration makes its second report as follows:

Your Committee to which were referred on 27th May, 1971, the Clerk's Accounts, being a detailed statement of his receipts and disbursements for the fiscal year 1970-71, reports as follows:

Your Committee has examined these Accounts together with supporting statements and finds them to be in accordance with the Estimates submitted by the Senate for the fiscal year 1970-71.

Your Committee has been provided with any additional information requested by it. The Clerk has certified that his Accounts were audited by the Auditor General and that authority exists for all payments made. The sums expended appear to be in keeping with the duties of and the tasks undertaken by the Senate and its Committees.

Your Committee draws attention to the extraordinarily high cost of printing which is borne by the Senate. The total cost of printing $952,675.46, is broken down as follows:

Debates	$156,346.98
Committees	617,892.79
Minutes	56,219.28
Other Printing	122,216.41

All charges for printing were paid to the Canadian Government Printing Bureau.

It is recommended that officials of the Canadian Government Printing Bureau be invited to appear before the Committee to explain the composition of the printing charges.

It would appear that Senate expenses in this respect could be considerably reduced if committee chairmen were made aware of the very high cost of printing and, consequently, exercised care toward eliminating any unnecessary printing.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Smith moved that the report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL REPORT

CORRECTION OF STATEMENT

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, before Orders of the Day are called I wish to comment on the published report of yesterday's Debates. On page 1306 I am reported as having interrupted the speech of the Leader of the Government. My interruption has lost all meaning because of corrections having been made to the text of the speech of the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Langlois: It made no sense last night either.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I will never try to make any sense to Senator Langlois. That is the least of my preoccupations.

Hon. Mr. Langlois: You are so superior.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I do not need to be superior to say that to the honourable senator. He should not interrupt. If he wants to get into the same league as Senator Martin and myself he will have to work harder at self-improvement.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I thought you were good friends.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: We may still be tomorrow. But in the meantime, he has attacked me. I hope Senator Langlois will allow me to complete my remarks, since they were not addressed to him. I do not think that he should fear that Senator Martin needs any help. Senator Martin has been in Parliament for a good many years and should be able to defend himself, even if he does not like to indulge in the cut and thrust of real debating, as he showed last night in continually refusing to answer all the questions I put to him.

I am sorry that I allowed the remarks of Senator Langlois to distract me from my main theme. At the top of page 1306, the report reads:

> —this measure is designed to try to deal with unemployment in Canada at the level due to the 10 per cent surcharge imposed on August 15—

I am reported as having interrupted with the words "I hope not."

What the Leader of the Government said was that this measure was intended to maintain unemployment at the level prevailing on August 15. My remark then makes very good sense.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I could make a comment at this time, but I will not. I will make it in private.

THE SENATE

SOUND AMPLIFICATION AND SIMULTANEOUS INTERPRETATION SYSTEM—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Honourable senators, now that this by-play is over I rise on a point of privilege. This is a matter affecting both honourable senators as well as the public.

I am informed that it is very difficult—in fact, sometimes impossible—to hear the gems of wisdom which issue from the members of this house. My informant tells me that last night he had difficulty in hearing the brilliant remarks of the Leader of the Government in defence of the Employment Support bill. He was angry at having to struggle so hard to hear what the leader was saying.

I believe, honourable senators, this results from a defect in the amplification and simultaneous interpretation system we have in this chamber and in the galleries. I would ask His Honour the Speaker to investigate the possibility of improving the system to permit all the remarks of honourable senators, whether proper or improper, to be heard by the visitors in the gallery.

I raise this point because I understand it was possible a few weeks ago to install a second public address system and special interpretation equipment for the NATO Assembly when they used this chamber, and, therefore, it seems to me it should be possible to arrange for an improvement in our present system.

I am not sure which committee should consider this matter. I do not know whether it should be referred to the office of His Honour or the Governement Leader, or to the Internal Economy Committee. However, in my view, it is unfair that members of this chamber could not hear very much last night, and the public could not hear at all. I suggest that if we want any brilliant remarks we make to be heard by members of the public and the press we should have the facilities that make it possible.

The Hon. the Speaker: This is a matter that is always under serious consideration. In fact, there was a meeting this morning of the Internal Economy Committee and this matter was discussed. Perhaps the Chairman of the Internal Economy Committee would like to say a few words about this now.

Hon. Donald Smith: I do not particularly want to say a few words about it.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Could you please speak louder? We cannot hear you.

Hon. Mr. Smith: I shall just advise my honourable friends that if they wish to hear what is being said in the chamber there is a device on all the desks which works perfectly well. If a senator wishes to hear he can do so if he goes to the trouble of putting on his earpiece.

I would also advise honourable senators that because the North Atlantic Assembly meeting required four language channels special equipment had to be installed on a temporary basis. It involved the cutting out of the speakers which are on the fronts of the desks, for example, and it also involved the square black box which is on the side of each aisle.

In order to put our amplification system back to strength, the Bell Telephone Company must have an opportunity to get into the chamber and remove the other system which was installed on a temporary basis. Once that has been done our own system will work better. The system used by the North Atlantic Assembly, being a four-channel system, is not an appropriate one for our galleries.

Arrangements were made some time ago that required a decision on the technical problems involved. I believe these have now been solved, and authority has been given, by resolution of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, to solve the problem in the galleries, so that not only those who visit our galleries may hear what we have to say, but that they may also understand in either of the two official languages. I am hopeful that this can be completed without undue delay.

I trust that this will provide an understanding of the problems involved.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I do not care whether it is a four-channel or a two-channel system. All I want is something which will enable the members of this house, those in the galleries, and the press behind His Honour, to hear what is going on. I am not concerned with black boxes or yellow boxes. All I want to know is that at some time, somehow, there will be a solution to the difficulty of hearing the speeches in this chamber, so that they may be heard by all.

EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Forsey for the second reading of Bill C-262, to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, my first comment must be that it is all right with me if the acoustics of this chamber prevent anybody from hearing me.

So far as the arrangements for the North Atlantic Assembly are concerned, I sat in the gallery for a few of their meetings, and I am bound to say that I do not think it mattered a tinker's curse whether anybody—here or abroad—heard them or not. What the North Atlantic Assembly says in this chamber or any other matters not at all to the world.

Incidentally, I have always protested that the chamber of the Senate of Canada should not be turned over to all these wandering minstrels who come here from Europe, whether from NATO or other organizations of that kind. I notice that at Westminster they do not meet in the House of Commons or in the House of Lords. We should respect this chamber a little more than we do, and it should not be turned over to all these adventurers who come from Europe and elsewhere to settle all the problems of the world, but who settle exactly nothing.

Before coming directly to my main assignment, I cannot refrain from dealing with the remarks made yesterday by the distinguished Leader of the Government following the speech made by Senator Grosart. I do not agree with everything said by Senator Grosart, although I recognize him as one of the preeminent members of this chamber, a great and distinguished senator. I am thinking of what the Leader of the Government said apropos some remarks made by Senator Grosart about unemployment. The Leader of the Government said that we—meaning the Government—were making extraordinarily good progress in solving the problems of unemployment and inflation until this blow fell upon us from Washington.

I always like to hear the honourable Leader of the Government on unemployment. I heard him speak on unemployment many, many years ago. I have remarked before that I remember sitting in the press gallery of the other place, when day after day without fail we all watched the present Leader of the Government in this house rise and, with tears in his voice, say, "Surely the government is doing something about unemployment, which is bearing down with such hardship and misery upon our poor unemployed people." It was wonderful to hear him. He was a great performer in opposition. He and Mr. Lionel Chevrier shared the task every day of asking what was to be done about unemployment. His voice is muted now, or it is used to tell us, as he did last evening, that until these blows fell upon us from Washington his Government was making wonderful progress in dealing with the unemployed.

When it was pointed out to him that the July figures really showed an increase, he said this was true and he gave the exact figures, but he said the increase was due to the number of students who had joined the labour force.

Honourable senators, did Senator Martin and the incredible Mr. Benson not know that this was coming? Were they not aware of the student labour force? They assured us, day after day, that come July and August the whole picture of unemployment would change. It did not change. Their prophesies were like some of the other things—worth nothing at all. In May and June, they told us they had licked inflation and that, come a few more weeks or months, unemployment would be licked, too. We know now that inflation was not licked; it was greater in July than ever before. So was unemployment. One may twist figures as one will, and talk about seasonal adjustments, and so on, but the actual facts, demonstrable from Government reports, are that, seasonally adjusted, unemployment has not been below 6 per cent for over a year, that one-quarter of the unemployed have been without work for more than six months, and that unemployment has reached a disastrous level among our youth.

These are incontestable facts. I do not like to see the Leader of the Government in this house—a public man for whom I have a great deal of respect and, indeed, affection—rising in this chamber and acting as a sort of gramophone for the incredible Mr. Benson.

There was another part of the leader's speech to which I object also. He was then replying to Senator Manning. In my judgment, Senator Manning uttered words of wisdom the other day, words that needed to be said, words that should have been said again and again by public men in this country during the past two years. We have permitted what I call the word intoxicated pseudo intellectuals to rail and rant against the United States. Read their speeches, read their publications, and you will find this constantly growing strain of hostility and anti-Americanism. Can anyone really believe that the American people did not observe this sort of thing? I will come to that in a moment.

I myself went to Washington a week ago, and spent a week there. I talked to some of the leading men in Congress, and to some of the leading men in their bureaucracy. They know what is being said in Canada. They know what our Prime Minister said when he went to Moscow. Senator Manning was perfectly proper when he drew attention to that.

We have people in Canada who are obsessed with anti-Americanism. My memory goes back 60 years to 1911...

Hon. Mr. Martin: Would my honourable senator permit a question?

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: Yes, indeed.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I do not disagree with Senator O'Leary in what he said about those who indulge in anti-Americanism, but could he specifically indicate what he objects to with regard to remarks that the Prime Minister made, or is supposed to have made, in Moscow?

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: I object to the words "supposed to have made". He made those remarks on a television program, and the whole world heard him. Why does the leader say he was supposed to have made them? He cannot crawl out of what he said by saying he was supposed to have said it. You cannot blame the media. We heard him. It was broadcast even in Canada from Moscow. He spoke of this influence of the United States being not only economic but military. He used the word "military", and he said that this was disturbing the Canadian people. There is no doubt about that. It is all right to blame the newspapers and say he did not say it, but in this case we heard him. We heard him say it, and the question is why did he say it? Why go to Moscow to cast this reflection upon your closest neighbour, your closest ally?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I do not like to interrupt my friend, but this is an important matter. Senator O'Leary speaks of words that the Prime Minister is supposed to have used in Moscow that reflected on the United States. I should like to have those words, because I have seen what the Prime Minister said, and that is not my interpretation.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: I do not know what interpretation my honourable friend made, although I suspect that the kind of interpretation he would make would be favourable, but I do not think it is the interpretation of the majority of the Canadian people who heard the remarks. I know it is not the interpretation of the people of Washington to whom I spoke.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Quote the words.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: I do not have them before me, but you heard them, too, and you know perfectly well that what I am saying is true.

The way our newspapers, our academics, and so on, treat the public men of the United States is appalling. I have seen again and again—and I hope Senator Forsey does not contradict me here, or you either, Mr. Leader—cartoonists in Canada caricaturing the President of the United States and calling him "Tricky Dick".

Hon. Mr. Martin: I agree with that.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: You agree with that. Well, that is not all. Do you think the American people have not noticed that? Do you think they are stupid?

But there is more than that. Do you know the sort of people in Canada who have been referring to the President of the United States as "Tricky Dick"? I will tell you who they are. They are the people who have never forgiven Mr. Nixon for exposing Alger Hiss. That is a fact. As a young congressman, Richard Nixon brought Alger Hiss and Whitaker Chambers to a hotel room in New York and confronted the two, and that confrontation showed that Alger Hiss was a liar and a perjurer. I read the transcript of that evidence. He was a liar and a perjurer, but the communists and their fellow travellers have never forgiven President Nixon for exposing him. That is a fact, and this has gone on, and on.

We tell ourselves that the American people do not know us, but how well do we know the American people? Do you get to know the American people by going to play golf in Miami? Do you get to know the American people by taking a room at the Waldorf Astoria? No, but you do get to know the American people by reading American publications, which, incidentally, are the best published in the English-speaking world. There is no publication today, even in England, that can compare with the publications in the United States, but are they read by Canadians? They are not.

When I was chairman of the Royal Commission on Canadian Publications, one of the things I found was that we do not read American writers of any stature at all. And yet Vincent Massey began much of the trouble we find ourselves in now by publishing the report of the royal commission of which he was chairman. He began much of the anti-Americanism we find today, this man who had become more English than the English.

I am sure if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would read what Mr. Mackenzie King said in his diaries about Vincent Massey, the leader would realize that Vincent Massey had become more English than the English. In his opinion the Americans were the barbarians about to overrun us with their monolithic, evil culture. In his opinion they were about to submerge us. It was with Massey that the present wave of anti-Americanism began.

A few moments ago, when I was interrupted, I was about to say that my memory goes back to 1911. I followed Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the campaign that took place in that year. There was anti-Americanism then. In fact, I saw one candidate walk out on the platform wearing a waistcoat with a Union Jack. That is the sort of thing we had in 1911, and we have not recovered from it yet. That is the sort of thing that we are having now, and I was bound to tell some of my American friends about this the other day, because I wanted to enlighten them on what they are doing to us with this surcharge. But there is more anti-Americanism in Canada today than there was in 1911.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: That is something.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: Yes, it is something, and my honourable friend knows all about it. I do not know if he remembers the year 1911 but I do, and some of the nonsense that was talked then by my party was deplorable.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: That is right.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: Yes, that is right, but yours is talking the nonsense now. We got cured of ours, but you have not.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: That is the comparison I wanted.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: Yours uses every opportunity it gets, as is evident from the visit of the Prime Minister to Moscow. I repeat again that he said things there that were unwise, mischievous, and unjust.

I am not saying that this surcharge comes as a result of that—I know why they put the surcharge on—but I do think that I can show that we could have been exempted from that surcharge. We could, because if you look at the President's speech announcing that surcharge you will see that Canada had nothing to do with the causes, circumstances, and reasons Mr. Nixon gave as compelling him to do what he was doing. We had nothing whatever to do with those causes or circumstances. Certainly, therefore, he could have exempted us because we had nothing to do with what he was trying to cure. We were not part of the cause of the disease.

The night that I arrived in Washington the President of the United States had given a small press conference —what they call a mini conference. At that conference he told the American reporters—they call themselves newsmen now, but they are reporters, which is a far better term, although I will let that go—"Look, we have to be cautious in dealing with Japan, because Japan happens to be our best customer."

Well, the next morning I was able to show Senator George Aiken American figures which showed that in 1970 Japan, the alleged best customer of the United States, purchased from the United States goods to a total value of $4 billion plus, whereas in that same year Canada's purchases from the United States totalled nearly $9 billion. To me it is an extraordinary thing that the President of the United States should make an error like that, but whose fault is that? The fault is ours. Instead of going to Moscow and complaining about the United States, we should have been telling the United States the facts about our trade relations.

But that was not all. I do not say this immodestly, but I have some powerful friends in the United States ranging from Senator Mike Mansfield to the ranking Republicans in the Congress. These men are our friends. They are the friends of Canada. When I discussed this matter with them they agreed one hundred per cent with what I told them, but they had not been informed.

I do not know what our people said to them, although I have a speech here which was made by Mr. Benson and which I intend to read to you in a few minutes. These facts should have been made known to them. They should have been made known not only to the President of the United States, but to Congress as well.

That is a complaint I have had right along. Our young men in the Department of External Affairs think that the beginning and end of everything is the State Department. Honourable senators, let me tell you that the State Department has nothing whatsoever to do with this matter. They are ignored completely by Mr. Connally.

Mr. Connally is a politician, and we should talk to him as a politician. There are all sorts of things that they have not been told. For example, in the same interview the President said, "We have to get the Japanese to unpeg their yen." We unpegged the Canadian dollar a year ago! We unpegged it at 92 cents, and it jumped by eight cents and to all intents and purposes achieved parity with the American dollar. So the complaint the President makes against Japan and against West Germany does not apply to us at all.

We did not do anything to cause this crisis in the United States. They are right in doing what they are doing generally, but they are not right in applying their remedies to us. They are not right in hurting us.

Mr. Nixon said that Japan is their best customer. Do you know, honourable senators, that last year, 1970, we bought one-fourth of all American exports. I ask you to consider that—one-fourth of all their exports. We bought more from the United States in 1970 than did Britain, France, or West Germany, or all the Common Market countries combined. That is a fact not known to the American people, that we bought from them more than did all the Common Market countries combined. We bought more from them than England, France, Germany, or Japan. I found that even very well-informed men in Congress did not know this. Are we telling them about these things now?

I have in front of me a speech delivered the other day in Washington by Mr. Benson, and Mr. Benson used exactly 500 words—500 cliché-ridden words; a cascade of clichés, bromides and repetitions—before he even got to the surcharges. And then when he got to the surcharges he did not know his facts. That is our trouble.

Then, too, we hear talk about retaliation. Retaliation against the United States? You might as well talk about the Leader of the Government retaliating against Muhammed Ali. It is all nonsense. We hear people say, "Why don't we tell them that we won't give them water, we won't give them gas, and we won't give them oil?" But, do these young people ever ask themselves where we would sell these resources if they were not purchased by the United States?

Honourable senators, I have said that we are the best customer of the United States, but we must not forget that they are also our best customer. The United States is our market. We have no other markets. Look at the sales last year, and the year before, and the year before that again, of our manufactured goods. These are the goods that produce jobs. Where did we sell them? Did we sell them to the Common Market countries? Did we sell them to England, France, West Germany, or Japan? We did not. Our processed manufactured goods, our refined goods, were bought by the Americans. They bought more from us than all other countries put together.

Let us be quite clear about this: that is the only place we can sell them. Let us not become complacent and arrogant, and think that the world must beat a path to our doorstep. The world does not have to do so, and the world will not do so. The world can get along quite well without us, but we cannot get along without the United States.

Honourable senators, let us keep in mind that we are North Americans. Geography dictates our future, and there is no armour against it. What do other countries do? What is England doing at the present time? England is going into the European Common Market, come hell or high water. Why? Because she is European, and because it is necessary for her survival. And she is right in doing so. England has been doing that for 300 years—looking after the interests of England. But here in Canada apparently our leaders seem to think it is their job to look after the rest of the world. Oh, yes, we must look after Rhodesia, we must look after Cyprus, and so on and so forth. If Mr. Wilson tells us we have to have sanctions against Rhodesia, then we have sanctions against Rhodesia. When Mr. Wilson tells us, aided by that strange person, Mr. Arnold Smith, that we are going to bring Rhodesia to her knees in three weeks, we believe him and say, "Yes, Mr. Wilson, we will go along with you." Well, two years have passed since he was going to bring Rhodesia to her knees, and yet Rhodesia last year had an increase in her gross national product that was greater than ours.

I have a friend in Rhodesia, one of whose ancestors sat in the chair of His Honour the Speaker. She has been writing to me and saying, "For God's sake, Grattan, don't listen to what you are reading in the London Times or the New York Times or in your own Ottawa Journal. We are not going to give up in Rhodesia, and we are going to win." And they are winning. Even Mr. Heath is now talking about making a special bargain.

But, honourable senators, we accept all this stuff. No matter what is done by Downing Street, we think it is all right. If it rains on the Strand, we turn up our trouser-legs on Sparks Street. This is the way we have been going for years. Is it not about time that we tried to give some attention to Canada? I did not agree last night with my friend, Senator Grosart, to whom I paid a tribute. I did not agree when he talked about NATO. Do you know what I would do about NATO? I would get out of NATO lock, stock and barrel.

How much are we spending per year on NATO? Do you realize that since World War II—this second war that was going to end war—this country has spent $45 billion on defence. What were we defending ourselves against, and whom were we defending ourselves against? What did we get for that $45 billion? This is what makes me wonder sometimes about our people, and about our newspapers because they seem to swallow everything too. Let Mr. Wilson say "This is black" and it is black; let him say "This is white" and it is white.

In recent years we have had these Europeans coming over here and telling us Canadians what we should do about the United States. There were some here three or four months ago, representatives of France, West Germany and so on, and I happened to see some of their working papers. In these working papers they told us, "You Canadians have much more in common with us than you have with the United States." This is the burden and the tenor of all their stuff—snide remarks and criticisms of the United States.

Well, honourable senators, I went to that meeting. I knew this was coming up, so I put down my name and asked if I would be allowed to say something. The two co-chairmen, of course—and this should never happen—were members of the one political party, namely the Liberal Party. Was I called on? No; I did not belong to the chosen people. I was ignored, and I did not go back. But had I gone back, I would have said, "Gentlemen, I have noted what you have said about the United States. You don't seem to like the United States. However, I think we ought to remind you that had it not been for the United States and what they did for you people after the last war, you might not be here at all."

This is what the world forgets. The world forgets what Winston Churchill once said, that not in human history had there been a single case where any nation acted with such generosity and with such disinterest as the United States did with the Marshall Plan. I remember once going to Rome, where I arrived at a magnificent station. I asked, in the name of Heaven, when did the Italians get the money to build a station such as this? The bland reply was "Oh, Marshall Plan; Marshall Plan." Mind you, this money was coming from the American taxpayer. Now, after all those years, they have all turned against the United States and want us to join them. As I mentioned a moment ago, they know so little about us.

When I was in Washington I met men such as Senator Aiken, a true blue friend of Canada—he is so much a friend of Canada that he says he feels that some day he will be haled before the un-American activities committee. These are the people we are kicking in the teeth.

I do not care what the Leader says about the Prime Minister's remarks in Moscow. I have stated the tenor of them, but I will obtain a copy and send it privately to him, and to Senator Forsey.

The Americans are our best customers. They are going to be our best customers. Our destiny is with them, and with this North American continent. For heaven's sake, let us tell these Europeans where they get off when they come over here trying to drag us away.

What did they buy from us last year? Consider the figures I have of those purchases: 85 per cent of all our finished exports last year went to the United States. Actually, the latest complete export statistics show that in 1969 Canada sold abroad highly finished industrial products worth $5,630 million. Of that total, 86.8 per cent went to the United States. The next largest buyer was the European Common Market which we talk about, with 1.7 per cent. That was followed by the U.K., with 1.4 per cent. Then came Japan, which bought 0.3 per cent. Exclusive of the United States market, we have been selling to the rest of the world only 13 per cent of our products manufactured for export—products which produce the jobs. The simple fact is it has been the United Kingdom, the Common Market countries, and Japan which have been obtaining raw materials from Canada without providing any outlet for our finished industrial goods. It is they, not the United States, which have been trying to make us hewers of wood and drawers of water.

If I may paraphrase the statement made by the Prime Minister the other day—and what a thing to say to our friends in the United States—they have evidently made up their minds that they are going to make us into hewers of wood and drawers of water. That is said when they are buying 85 per cent of our finished products which provide Canadian jobs.

I say they should have exempted us from this surcharge. I do not think that there is any doubt that, had the American people, the members of the Congress and the advisers to the President, including Mr. Connally, in whom I have no faith at all, known what the situation is in Canada, and how we are their best customers, they might have exempted us.

There were other factors, which I shall not mention today. I do not know if they intend to consider this situation a second time and exempt us; I am afraid not. However, it is certain they will not exempt us because of statements made by the Government of Canada at the present time. They have done nothing and said nothing that might help in the least to persuade our American friends to withdraw these surcharges. That was their job, obligation, and duty to the Canadian people.

Oh, yes, they sent down some very intelligent bureaucrats to Washington, and Mr. Benson again to the International Monetary Fund meeting. His speech there was utterly useless; it was a crime against his obligations. He went down there and read a speech, which was written for him, dealing with the coming dangers of a world trade war. Good God, we all knew that, but he included it as some tremendous fact he had discovered. The broadcast of that speech showed that there was not a soul in the room paying the slightest bit of attention to him. They should not have, because he was not saying a word relevant to this situation.

Honourable senators, I have many other things to say, all even more relevant than what I have said, but I shall desist. Thank you for listening to me.

Hon. L. P. Beaubien: Honourable senators, we have heard what I consider to be four very good speeches with respect to this bill. Senator Forsey introduced the bill and explained it well. He was followed by Senators Manning and Grosart, and now Senator O'Leary.

Hon. Mr. Smith: And Senator Martin.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: And Senator Martin; that makes it five.

Hon. Mr. Langlois: That was the best one.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Honourable senators, I shall be very brief in discussing this bill from a slightly different angle. I feel that giving money away in any form to business is a bad thing. Such assistance should be provided by reduction in taxes. However, I will not embark on a long dissertation regarding our tax system; instead I will endeavour to give you an example of what I mean.

Let us say that a manufacturer produces an article of furniture, such as a desk, at a cost of approximately $83 and feels that he should receive an after-tax profit of 10 per cent. To achieve this he must add 20 per cent to his cost, because the corporation tax takes 50 per cent of the profits. So he adds $16.68 and his price for the article, if he wants to obtain his profit, is $100. He has been selling this article in the United States, and finds that due to the surtax the buyer must pay $110, which prevents the sale. His sales force goes to work, and Morgan's, which is the Hudson's Bay Company in Montreal, buys it. Because it is sold in Canada, the federal sales tax of 12 per cent applies. So the desk then costs $112.

Let us say that Morgan's, figuring their overhead, interest, school tax, water tax, special city tax, their cost of shoplifting, insurance, light, and so on, finds that to get their real cost they have to add $7 to that price. I must admit that I am taking the figure of $7 out of the air. If they had to carry the desk for six months, their interest alone would be between $4 and $5. Therefore, I think $7 is not an exaggerated amount.

We now have the desk in the hands of Morgan's costing $119. Let us assume that it is reasonable for them to make a profit of 10 per cent after taxes. To obtain that profit they have to add 20 per cent, so they add $24 to the cost of the desk. We now have a desk costing $143.

Let us say that somebody then comes along and buys the desk in Montreal. Then, of course, the Quebec sales tax of 8 per cent applies. We therefore start off with a desk costing $83, but the person who buys it in Montreal has to pay $154.44.

That is something that we should begin to think about. People talk about our export markets and say that we should have all kinds of industries here producing all sorts of things that we need. How can we compete if we are paying our workers $3 or $4 an hour to turn out an article costing $83, which will have to fetch a price of $154 in Montreal if the manufacturer is to make a profit? How can we possibly compete with countries paying 50 cents or 60 cents an hour for labour, and who do not have to pay these taxes?

Honourable senators, I should like to touch upon the corporation tax, but I do not think that this is the appropriate time to do so. We have already had enough discussion on this bill. I would certainly not vote against it. If we have unemployment, then we have to do something to help those who do not have jobs. I go along with that.

Our big problem is in the adding of tax on top of tax on top of tax, and in many cases we are taxing some of our people to the extent that they cannot earn a livelihood.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: Honourable senators, may I say a final word? In the course of my remarks a few moments ago I was asked if I could give the house the exact words used by the Prime Minister in Moscow. I now have them, and they are as follows:

> Canada has increasingly found it important to diversify its channels of communication because of the overpowering presence of the United States of America and this is reflected in a growing consciousness amongst Canadians of the danger to our national identity from a cultural, economic and perhaps even military point of view.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I am sure that statement stands by itself, and does not warrant that interpretation.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it has been moved by the honourable Senator Forsey, seconded by the honourable Senator Lafond, that this bill be read a second time. Do I understand that it is the intention of the honourable Senator Forsey to close the debate on second reading?

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: If no other honourable senator wishes to speak on the bill, I should like to speak briefly in closing the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: I must remind honourable senators that if the honourable Senator Forsey speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Honourable senators, I need hardly say that I have listened with great interest and some profit, I hope, to the speeches which have been made—I shall not say against the bill—around the bill in a critical tone, because I do not think that we have heard from anyone on the Opposition a statement of intention to vote against the bill. This is something that may have escaped me, but I cannot recall hearing anything of the sort. They have "damned with faint praise, assented with civil leer", rather than expressed outright opposition to the bill.

I should like to mention one or two rather odd features of the criticisms which I confess startled me, particularly coming from the quarter from which they came.

First, I was rather astounded to hear from Senator Manning the suggestion that the Government of Canada had been engaged consistently, and for some time, if I understood him correctly—and I think I can quote the phrases if necessary—in a policy of being very nasty to the United States, and had failed to develop that close and intimate partnership with the United States in trading matters, which might have spared us all our woes in this particular instance.

This surprised me very much, because I have heard so much from other quarters about what a miserable, lily-livered set of poltroons the Government of Canada were, bowing and scraping incessantly to the Americans, and acting as mere lackeys of Washington.

Then, of course, a little later we had a slightly different note struck by Senator O'Leary, implying that for all these years the Government of Canada—and I gather that he included governments of his own party—had merely been toadying to Downing Street. This also startled me.

We have heard much from many people—and Senator O'Leary quoted from some of those expressions of opinion and referred to them in picturesque terms—about the tendency of the Government of Canada to have no backbone at all and to just say yes, yes, yes to every little American policy, whatever it is.

I do not think that either of those criticisms is by any means justified.

I am inclined to recall two instances in my own experience. In one case I was engaged in a controversy with the late J. W. Dafoe of the Winnipeg Free Press in which he began by calling me a Tory conspirator, and wound up by calling me a left-wing mudslinger and character assassin. On another occasion I made a speech at Couchiching on the subject of national unity, and immediately afterwards I got two very abusive anonymous letters, one of which said "You have sold out to the French Canadians.", and the other, "You are inspired by hatred of Quebec."

As I listened to these criticisms—on the one hand from Senator Manning saying that the Government has been persistent in being nasty to the United States, and asking what else could they expect but the kind of thing they got, and, on the other hand, from the Waffle Group saying what a miserable collection the Government is because it does not speak up for Canada—I was inclined to think that the Government is in the same position as I was myself in the two instances I have mentioned: perhaps not too far from the right and sensible course. However, that is a matter of opinion and naturally Senator Manning is entitled to his opinion.

I was bothered and startled by the curious contradictions in the statement by Senator O'Leary. Senator O'Leary seems to feel that the leaders of the United States and the Government of the United States keep extraordinarily close tabs on what all the left wing professors in this country say and what the cartoonists put in their cartoons. He said, "They know all about it; do not think for a moment they do not." But when he came to discuss the question of our economic importance to the United States he cited the very highest possible authority in the United States as a glaring example of —and I think I am using his exact word—ignorance, and suggested that the fault was ours.

I really cannot understand how in the world the Americans can be so extraordinarily well informed about all the cartoons that appear in our newspapers and all the things the Waffle Group says, and all the rest of this stuff—and a lot of it, I agree, is nonsense—and yet be so extraordinarily unaware of some of the economic facts of life with regard to our economic relationship with the United States. I simply cannot understand this.

Senator O'Leary seems to think that these ebullitions of temper and prejudice on the part of the Waffle Group and such people carry some kind of imprimatur from the Government of Canada. If I remember correctly, what he said was, "We have permitted pseudo-intellectuals to say these things and we have permitted the cartoonists to draw these cartoons, and the Americans are therefore justly incensed." Really, honourable senators, I was under the impression that this was a free country. I do not know by what stretch of the imagination the Government of Canada can be held responsible for what its political opponents say, or for what the cartoonists may happen to draw in their cartoons. We do not have press censorship in this country, thank goodness, and no one is proposing it. I do not see how the Americans can possibly say to the Government of Canada, "You are to stop those chaps from drawing those cartoons," or, "You should have prevented Professor Watkins and his friends, Professor Laxer and the rest of them, from making or printing that statement. You should have seen that such and such books and such and such papers were not printed." Surely the expressions and opinions of private people, whether in speech, writing, or drawing, are something that the Government of Canada does not have, and cannot have, any control over whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: You have knocked down your straw man already.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Well, I can say who put up the straw man without any difficulty at all.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: He was from the Prime Minister's office, and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: What was from the Prime Minister's office? The cartoons?

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: Not the cartoonists. The gentleman I was talking about was from the Prime Minister's office. There are 52 of them. You know that.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I do not know anything of the sort.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: You do.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I would like to have the name of one member of the staff in the Prime Minister's office who has drawn a cartoon to this effect, or made statements to this effect.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: You were not talking about that. That was the only specific among your generalities. You said that my talk about the intellectuals was all nonsense. I am not suggesting that they be suppressed. As far as the press is concerned, yes, I would suppress a lot of them.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: I never expected to hear that.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Would you permit me to ask a question, Senator Forsey?

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Certainly.

Hon. Paul Martin: Just as it seems invalid to tell us that the Canadian Government can control these situations, would Senator Forsey not agree that a comparison or analogy would be the kind of thing, for instance, that Governor Wallace has said about the Prime Minister of Canada. No one is suggesting that the Government of the United States can prevent Governor Wallace from saying ridiculous things about the Prime Minister.

[Hon. Mr. Forsey.]

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I think it would be useless and certainly unprofitable to labour the point further. I just could not help being struck by this series of eloquent contradictions, as they seemed to me, in the speech of Senator Manning and also in the speech of Senator O'Leary.

The thing that has startled me the most, however, and I cannot forbear, even at the risk of being called partisan, was the very unequivocal set of statements—not just one sentence but paragraphs—from the official financial critic, as I understand it, of the Opposition in this house suggesting that the time had come for the economic integration of Canada with the United States. As I listened to this my mind went back to Sir John A. Macdonald and Edward Blake, to what I have read of the election of 1891, to the election of 1911, the first one that I remember. As I listened to the official representative of the Progressive Conservative party talking about economic integration of Canada with the United States, I thought of John A. Macdonald, Edward Blake, Robert Borden, and Arthur Meighen, and I said to myself: O tempora! O mores! What are we coming to? Here we have the great champions of the building of this country, the people who fought to build it and did build it, the followers of Sir John A. Macdonald, getting up and making statements which must make Sir John A. Macdonald not turn, but whiz in his grave, around and around. I should think that they would be haunted by the ghost of Sir John A. Macdonald.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: What about the Diefenbaker mania vis-à-vis the United States?

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Mr. Diefenbaker is here to haunt them without having to do it in a ghostly fashion, and I think perhaps occasionally he does haunt them. However, I draw a veil at that point.

Honourable senators, there were more serious matters brought up in the criticisms of this bill; things that came closer to the mark, I think, than some of these. We had, for example, the suggestion by Senator Grosart that the board was being given powers which the Government alone should exercise. I have had no administrative experience whatsoever, but I think I have a certain degree of common sense, and it passes my understanding how the kinds of things that will have to be dealt with under this legislation could possibly be handled by the Governor in Council. There will be certainly hundreds of applications. If my honourable friends on the Opposition propose to vote against this bill, well, that is another matter, but if they are willing to see the bill go through, as apparently they are, then surely they can scarcely expect that the power to deal with these hundreds of applications should be lodged with the Governor in Council. It is completely impracticable, unless the members of the cabinet are possessed of absolutely superhuman qualities, and their days contain 48 hours and their weeks fourteen days. The thing simply could not be done.

Some type of administrative machinery has to be set up, and I have not heard that this administrative machinery is particularly bad administrative machinery. There may be something in the point that you may have a little difficulty in that you have two panels, and seven people. There are minor points like that which, perhaps, are justifiable criticisms, and perhaps something can be done in this connection when we consider the bill in committee, but I really do not see how you can entrust the administration of a complex matter like this, involving an enormous mass of detail to be dealt with in as short a time as possible, to the Government itself. I think it has to be handed to some administrative board working on it pretty well full time.

Then there was a suggestion that we were extraordinarily dependent on the United States. Of course we are. Everybody knows that. It was suggested that we ought really, short of integration with the United States, to arrange to be more dependent upon them. Some honourable senators took the Prime Minister very seriously to task for suggesting that we might have to consider a re-assessment of our economic policies and our political relationship with the United States. They seemed to suggest that the Prime Minister was saying, "This is what we must do now."

I cannot now remember whether I listened to that speech or read it, but I paid very careful attention to it, and it seemed to me quite plain that the Prime Minister was saying, "If the Americans are really going in for this as a permanent policy, then we may have to reassess our position." That seems to me a very different thing.

If the Prime Minister had merely said out of the blue, as it were, "We must reassess our position; we must change the whole basis of our affairs, economic, political and everything else", then he would have been open to the kind of criticism that has been made. Even if he had said, "If they maintain this temporary measure for a short period we must reassess our position", he might be open to that criticism.

However, what he said was, "If they really know what they are doing . . ."—and Senator O'Leary suggested that some of them did not know really what they were doing as far as we are concerned, but the Prime Minister clearly meant in this context, to my mind, what they are doing to us, because they know what they are doing in their general policy—"If they really know what they are doing to us, and if this is their long-term intention, if this is what they are going to do as a permanent policy, then we may have to reassess our whole position." This seems to me to be good common sense.

The Americans, we are told, take an enormous proportion of our manufactured goods. Everybody knows that, or ought to know it, and as far as I know nobody on the Government side has ever denied it or denied the importance of it. The point is, however, that if the Americans persist in a policy of this sort as a long-term policy, we may find that they are not prepared to take our manufactured goods in the proportions they have been taking them, and then surely it would be incumbent upon any government of this country to look around to see whether it can get some alternative markets. It seems to me that a reassessment then becomes inevitable. How far it can go is a matter of practical consideration. We may find we cannot do a great deal about it, but I cannot see anything wrong in saying that we had better try to see what we can do about it, that we had better try not to leave all our eggs in one basket.

We were told by, I think, Senator Grosart that we had brought this on ourselves by a series of measures, one of which he said was our unilateral withdrawal from NATO. I was under the impression that we were still a member of NATO.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: He meant partial withdrawal.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: It seemed to me that we had the NATO parliamentarians here the other day, and I did not see any angel with a flaming sword at the entrance to this chamber saying to Canadian delegates, "Out, out! This is the entrance to paradise, and to you the NATO paradise is forever barred." I think it was a rhetorical exaggeration on Senator Grosart's part when he said we had unilaterally withdrawn from NATO.

We have listened to a long series of things, most of which seemed to me, and as the Leader of the Government said, had very little to do with the actions of the Americans.

Senator Grosart further asked whether we had any reason to expect that we might be exempted from the imposition of this surtax. He said the Americans had good reason for what they did, that a rearrangement and restructuring of international trade and exchange had become essential, or words to that effect, so, therefore, how could we expect to be exempted. Here Senator O'Leary came to my rescue because, if I remember correctly, he said that none of the reasons President Nixon invoked for applying this particular measure applied to us. It is not merely that we have a special relationship with the United States, or that our trade is particularly important to the United States. It seems to me that none of the reasons the President gave for this measure apply to Canada. What administrative procedures have we been using to choke off American trade? Perhaps one might find some details here or there, but we have done nothing substantial in this direction. As for letting our dollar float, we did that before they even mentioned it.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Eleven months ago.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Yes, some considerable time ago. If you want to see the forces of the market working in the foreign exchange market, we were right out in front of the procession. We have not been doing anything to our dollar which is to the disadvantage of the United States. The contrary is the fact. To the best of my recollection, there was a time when the Government was being criticized because it was doing things which were helping to keep up the value of the American dollar, and the suggestion was that we were being altogether too cooperative. In these matters the Government is damned if it does and damned if it doesn't. If it does one thing it is said to be in the pockets of the Americans; if it does another thing, it is told it is being frightfully rude to the Americans and can expect any kind of retaliation they like to hand out.

I do not know that there is very much more I want to say, although there are a number of matters that might be mentioned. However, I know the Senate is anxious to give this bill second reading and get it before the committee, where the details can be studied and dealt with effectively. I do not think I need survey mankind from China to Peru, as our most eloquent senator has done.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: You could do it very well too.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I do not think I need, even if I had it, let:

> The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling ... glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven.

I think the arguments for the bill have been adequately stated in the other place, in the media, and by the honourable Leader of the Government, who replied to all the most substantial criticisms. I believe I have now dealt with a number of other criticisms which to my mind are rather peripheral and not central to the bill.

I was a little surprised one or two times that somebody did not raise a point of order. The other day I was criticized because I was not adhering to the rules and discussing the principle of the bill. However, it seemed to me that occasionally in some of the other speeches there were remarks which were no closer, shall I say, to the principle of the bill than some of mine were. However, I know it is the custom in both houses not to enforce the rule of relevance very strictly, and perhaps I shall have cause on future occasions, as I have been in the past, to be grateful for this usage.

Honourable senators, I believe that is all I need say in closing the debate on second reading of this bill. I must confess that the temptation to try to score a few points off some critics of the bill is a strong one, which I have perhaps already yielded to too much. If I have said anything that has wounded the feelings of any of my colleagues, I hasten to say that nothing could be further from my intention. I address this particularly, of course, to my old and venerated friend, Senator O'Leary, whose comments I have perhaps criticized more strongly than some others.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Before the motion is put, may I put a question to the sponsor of the bill or, if he prefers, it can be dealt with in committee. If my memory serves me correctly, he said when introducing the bill that this legislation could be used in other circumstances; that it was in a way permanent and not ad hoc legislation. When I read clauses 4 and 5 it seems to me that once the $80 million provided therein is spent and the fiscal year 1971-72 has expired, one could not proceed under this legislation without an amendment. I am very curious to know if the sponsor of the bill could indicate what procedure the Government would adopt to continue with this legislation after April 30 next, or after the $80 million has been spent.

As I say this may be a technical question which would be better dealt with in committee, but the sponsor appeared so sure of himself when he made this statement that I am quite confident he has the answer.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: With leave of the Senate, I should be glad to attempt to answer, although I do so with some trepidation, because the Leader of the Opposition is a lawyer, and I am not; he has held high office and I have never held any office. I am therefore conscious of my inferiority and my ignorance in the matter. My impression was that clause 3 makes this permanent legislation. There is nothing to say that the act shall lapse after a certain period of time. It is not called a temporary act, such as another which is on our statute books. It purports to be a permanent act. When the moneys have been spent, under sections 4 and 5, if it should prove necessary to invoke the provisions of this legislation again in the presence of measures having a like effect, as the bill itself says, I should think the Government would be able to handle the matter of finance by putting an item in the Estimates.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: A $1 item?

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I do not know, but I should think there would be no difficulty in providing the money if the legislation has been passed. It merely deals with what happens for a certain period of time, and provides money for a certain purpose. If there should be another need to use this legislation, I would think that fresh money would be available for its application.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Is it not clear, if the money runs out, that the permanency of the bill does not mean that there could be further payments made pursuant to it?

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Quite.

Hon. Mr. Martin: And the Government would have to consider whether it should resort to the conventional form, or submit an Estimate, in order to get more money? It is not likely that the Estimate method would be acceptable, in view of the ruling of the Speaker in the other place the last session. Certainly, if the $80 million has been spent, the Government would have to ask Parliament for a further appropriation.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I am satisfied with the explanation of the Leader of the Government.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Hon. Mr. Forsey, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, I wish to announce that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet at 8 o'clock this evening to consider this bill.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Will the minister be present?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: There is no doubt that it is very expedient.

Hon. Mr. Martin: In fairness to the Leader of the Opposition—who has been very co-operative in this matter—may I say the matter was discussed with Senator Hayden. Mr. Pepin cannot be here tomorrow. I discussed the time of meeting with Senator Hayden, and it was suggested that the committee should meet tonight so that the minister may attend. I hope the Leader of the Opposition does not think there is any insistence.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I am satisfied that we are not being pushed.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: May I ask the Leader of the Government if this means that we shall not sit as a chamber tonight, that the sitting will be cancelled and there will be third reading tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Martin: We have to consider that. My view is that if the committee is to meet tonight, the Senate would not sit until tomorrow.

TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO MAKE PAYMENTS—OMISSION OF ACT FROM REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1970—INQUIRY STANDS

On the Notice of Inquiry of Hon. Mr. Forsey:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Government's failure to make certain payments as required by the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and to the omission of that Act from the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, do I understand that the honourable Senator Forsey intends to proceed now with his inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Honourable senators, I am grateful for the indulgence I have received on this matter. However, I would think that one speech from me in a day is about as much as the Senate should be asked to endure. I have an important committee meeting to attend, so I would ask once again that the matter stand. If anyone wishes me to go on, I am willing to do so.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: We are very anxious to hear what Senator Forsey has on his mind in this connection. I would like him to assure us that he will proceed tomorrow, when we will only have one bill for third reading.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I shall be delighted to proceed tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I am sure the Leader of the Government is anxious to hear your remarks.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I shall be delighted to speak tomorrow, but I do not think I should speak now unless it is the strong wish of honourable senators that I do so.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN THE SENATE GALLERY

UNITED KINGDOM DELEGATION TO COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

The Hon. the Speaker: I should like to call the attention of honourable senators to the presence in the gallery of a delegation of distinguished parliamentarians from the United Kingdom, headed by the Right Honourable Lord Diamond.

May I point out that the distinguished gentlemen are the guests of the Canadian branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. I am sure that I am expressing the sentiments of all honourable senators in extending to them a hearty welcome. We hope that their stay in Canada will be a most enjoyable one.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, September 30, the adjourned debate on the motion by Hon. Mr. Laird that the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the parole system in Canada.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, in adjourning this debate on the last occasion, I did not tell the house that I was doing so on behalf of Senator Macdonald. He wishes to speak on this matter, but I understand he will not be here this week. I am told that Senator Thompson is ready to speak now, so I yield to him.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the honourable Senator Thompson speak now instead of the honourable Senator Choquette?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Andrew Thompson: Honourable senators, on rising to speak, I congratulate Senator Laird for moving that a committee of this house be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the parole system in Canada. As he pointed out, there are responsible officials who state that the parole system is too lenient, and there are others who urge an expansion of this method of supervising the criminal in society.

What are the facts in connection with parole as it is used in our federal institution? During the past six years, the National Parole Board has trebled the number of parolees. In 1965, 16 per cent of those persons applying were granted parole. This increased to 23 per cent in 1967, to 27 per cent in 1968, and last year parole was granted to approximately 65 per cent of those who applied.

What has been the success of parole? Since 1961 the board has granted approximately 42,000 paroles. It has an impressive record. Approximately 87 per cent of the parolees were successfully rehabilitated, and have not come back before the courts.

The advocates of the parole system point out that there is a financial benefit to society in using the parole system. In 1968 it was calculated that the 3,143 successful parolees represented a saving of $9 million because they did not have to be maintained in the penitentiaries. Further Parole Board studies in 1969 indicated that of approximately 2,500 men on parole in Canada at any given time, close to 2,000 were employed and earning about $50 a week. This means that these men were not only earning collectively $5.2 million a year, but also were relieving the country of the support of an estimated 2,500 dependants.

Mr. Street, Chairman of the National Parole Board, is one of its strongest advocates. He says that the key to success in the treatment of criminals rests in a firm and authoritative post-release control. Today, if an offender receives a two-year term, he can on the average expect to spend between nine and twelve months behind bars before parole. Those sentenced to five-year terms serve on the average less than half of their sentences before parole. Sixty-five per cent of convicts who apply do get parole, but those who are refused parole are automatically released after having served 75 per cent of their term. This is in accordance with a provision of the Penitentiaries Act, and is known as statutory remission. Under this provision, all penitentiary terms imposed by the sentencing judge are reduced by one-quarter. This remission can only be lost to the convict if he misbehaves.

On the other side of this argument are men who are also knowledgeable about and dedicated to the protection of society from the criminal element, and who point to the rising crime rate in our cities, and relate it to the leniency shown in granting parole.

I was reading last night that the Chief of Police of Winnipeg feels very strongly that the rising rate of crime in our cities—and it is rising—can be blamed in part on the leniency shown in granting parole. Certainly, always haunting the Parole Board and the advocates of the parole system must be the terrible tragedies which can occur, and have occurred, by a mistake in assessing a parole applicant. A convicted rapist who was sentenced in 1940 was paroled in 1956. He was convicted of gross indecency in the next year. Five years later he was paroled. In 1963 he was convicted of murdering a 13-year old boy.

Mr. Street, in defending the parole system and being faced with this case of the convicted rapist, argued that the man had served 22 years. The psychiatrist's reports had been excellent, but obviously the psychiatrist was wrong.

Another speaker for the protection of the public, Constable Sid Brown, the President of the Ontario and Canadian Police Associations, stated recently that people who should not be out are being released, while those who are more deserving of another opportunity do not get out.

Mr. Frank Howard, a member of the other place, stated recently that the parole system is easier for the convict from a middle-class background. Indeed the Regional Director for the National Parole Board recently admitted that the better off financially a convict is in his former background the better off in every area he is with respect to our legal judgment.

The parole system has obviously been expanded across this country, and it is most appropriate that in the Senate we should look at it. We should ask such questions as, "How is the assessment made?" I should like to know, for example, what kind of personal background report is made prior to a sentence to the penitentiary. I noticed in reading a report of the Canadian Corrections Association that it suggested that across Canada the resources for making such reports on individuals before the courts for sentence to our penitentiaries consist in a patchwork of services. Their recommendation was that there should be mandatory pre-sentence reports, which would follow the man into the institution for the assistance of the officials there. By understanding the environment and upbringing of each inmate, a better judgment could be made with respect to the opportunities for parole later.

I should like to know the qualifications of the men on the board, and how they are chosen. I should like to know exactly what kind of supervision is given to the parolee. Are there uniform means across Canada of giving close supervision and assistance to a man in his rehabilitation? Personally, I think there are not. If that is so, I should like to know what is being done in order to develop the required standard.

There are many questions with respect to this matter of parole, and I am grateful to Senator Laird for bringing the subject to the attention of the Senate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Flynn, for Hon. Mr. Macdonald, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-262, to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendments:

1. Page 3: Strike out subclause (2) of clause 6 and substitute therefor the following:

"(2) Not more than two-thirds of the members of the Board at any time may be members of the Public Service within the meaning of the Public Service Employment Act but a vacancy occurring in the membership of the Board that has the effect of temporarily reducing the number of members of the Board who are not members of the Public Service below one-third of the members of the Board does not invalidate the constitution of the Board or impair the right of the members to act if the number of members is not less than a quorum."

2. Page 3: Immediately after subclause (2) of clause 7, add the following as new subclause (3):

"(3) The Chairman shall preside at any sittings of the Board at which he is present and shall designate one of the other members to preside at any sittings of the Board at which he is not present."

3. Page 8, clause 21: In lines 9 and 11 strike out the words "fiscal year" and substitute therefor the words "annual quarter".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden, with leave of the Senate, moved that the report be taken into consideration now.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill as it came to us from the House of Commons provided for an Employment Support Board consisting of not more than seven members, not more than four of whom should be members of the Public Service of Canada. It also provided for the appointment of a chairman from among those members of the board who are not members of the Public Service.

We were concerned about the mix in grouping between the Public Service members of the board and the outside members, because when the bill provides that the board shall consist of not more than seven members, how do you maintain the ratio when there are fewer than seven appointments? Therefore, with the concurrence of the minister the first amendment was designed to maintain this mix; the relationship would always be that two-thirds of the members of the board shall be members of the Public Service. That balance is maintained. If there are seven members, two-thirds would be four, who would be members of the Public Service, with three from outside. If there are six members, there would still be four members of the Public Service; if there are five members there would be three members of the Public Service. In this way we expect to be able to maintain the mix between outside members and the Public Service members of the board.

The other provision with which we were concerned was that the chairman shall be a member from outside the Public Service, and he shall preside at the meetings of the board. If the board decides to sit in several sections the question was what to put in the bill to provide for a chairman of each section. We therefore provided by amendment, again with the agreement of the minister, that the chairman shall preside at the meetings of the board at which he is present, and otherwise he shall designate a member who shall be the chairman. This is not a new provision in our statutes. It is to be found, for instance, in the Tariff Board Act, and the language we have used in this bill is very close to the language in that act.

The amendment to clause 21 was one that the minister was pleased to have us make. He had indicated in the other place that he was prepared to report to Parliament more often than once a year, and he had also indicated, I think in the other place, that he would be prepared to make quarterly reports. With that background we simply met his wishes in the matter, and we have provided that he shall report each quarter instead of each fiscal year.

That, honourable senators, is the sum total of the amendments.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Honourable senators, speaking to the amendment of section 21, which was suggested by the minister himself, it may be interesting to put on the record that the minister agreed it was a good thing to have a Senate in order to give him the opportunity to correct legislation which was passed too quickly in the other place. I do not mean that the general debate went too quickly, but this section did not get the attention it should have. We were quite happy to comply with his wishes. It is an argument in favour of a second chamber.

As far as the other amendments are concerned, the explanation given by Senator Hayden is very clear and needs no further discussion.

I wish to put on the record that it is quite obvious that this bill was hastily drafted, because of the situation which occurred suddenly. In fact, the surtax was imposed by the United States late in August and the bill was introduced in the first days after Parliament reconvened. It is not a perfectly drafted bill. We have improved it, by the amendments described by Senator Hayden, but there are many more defects which could not be corrected—points which could not be clarified, in any event—in the committee under the present circumstances, unless we were to redraft the bill completely.

A question arose yesterday as to whether or not this bill was permanent legislation.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: No.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Senator Forsey says yes.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: He says no, now.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: He may say no now.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Because he knows now.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Senator Martin says yes, and no, which is very typical of him, of course. I was not able to extract from him whether, after we have spent the $80 million and after the present fiscal year has expired, we would need new legislation amending this bill, or continue with it. Senator Martin said that Parliament would have to provide additional appropriation. That is obvious and it was also Senator Forsey's suggestion—but through a mere item in the Estimates, which is a method I do not like and which is not liked by many people here and elsewhere.

In any event, it is quite obvious that the purpose of the bill is to meet, immediately, the problem of the United States surcharge, and not really to meet other circumstances which may be similar but which may require remedies other than those provided in this bill.

[Hon. Mr. Hayden.]

I am quite convinced that when the fiscal year ends and when the $80 million has been spent, the Government will have to come back to Parliament. At that time, with the experience gathered from the activities of the board, they may bring in other amendments or, if this is really to be permanent legislation, we may have an entirely new bill.

Honourable senators, the object now is to meet an immediate situation. Whether the bill is perfect or not, it has been improved by the Senate, and we should let it pass with the amendments which have been made by the committee. Certainly, the committee has improved the bill. If there is room for further improvement it will come in due course.

Hon. Mr. Martin: For the purposes of the record and to refresh the memory of the Leader of the Opposition—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: You should not try to do that.

Hon. Mr. Martin: —I wish to refer to page 1320 of Senate Hansard. Following a comment I made which was prompted by a question he put to Senator Forsey, the Leader of the Opposition is reported as saying, "I am satisfied with the explanation of the Leader of the Government."

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Yes, I am satisfied, but the way I heard it yesterday was that the Leader of the Government had indicated that it would come through legislation as amended. When I read it today it did not sound the same. I am not saying that the record has again been corrected, but I just want to put that on the record for the time being.

Hon. Mr. Martin: If my honourable friend will read what I said, it is precisely that to which he was agreeing yesterday. I said it could come back. First of all, I said I thought when the $80 million had been expended fully, then obviously the Government would have to come back to Parliament either in the form of an amending bill, a new bill or an item in the Estimates. I said that I did not think the latter procedure would be acceptable in the other place because of the Speaker's ruling last session.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: By accident you were more precise yesterday than you are today.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill, as amended, be read the third time?

Hon. Salter A. Hayden moved, with leave of the Senate, that the bill, as amended, be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTINGS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Paul Martin, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO MAKE PAYMENTS—OMISSION OF ACT FROM REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1970—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey rose pursuant to notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Government's failure to make certain payments as required by the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and to the omission of that Act from the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise this afternoon with very considerable reluctance to raise this question, because the last thing I wish to do is embarrass the Government in any way, although I am inclined to add, in all candour, that I doubt whether anything I can say on this subject will embarrass the Government very much more than its own actions or lack of actions have already done.

I have to confess also at the outset that I am afraid I have been derelict in my duties in this matter. When this bill was first introduced in the other place I should have noticed the provisions of section 33, the retroactive provisions, but I admit that I did not. As you know, all of us receive a wide variety of bills and other documents and it is almost a physical impossibility to keep track of all of them. I simply took one look at this bill and said, "Oh, agriculture. That is not my pigeon. I don't know much about agriculture and there is no particular reason why I should read this bill with any attention or care." However, that is what I should have done. Henceforth I shall do what I should have done on this occasion; I shall examine every bill that comes to my desk with great care to see whether or not there are any retroactive provisions in it. As I say, in this instance I did not; I was asleep at the switch, and it was not until the matter was raised elsewhere that I took a look at this and discovered what the bill contained on that particular point.

Then I waited. Perhaps I should have spoken at once or raised the matter at once, but I waited for the crushing legal rejoinder which I thought I might reasonably expect from a cabinet half of whose members are members of the legal profession. No rejoinder came, at least none that seemed to me to carry any conviction. I waited for some sign of repentance. I hoped and kept on hoping, even to the last moment, almost literally the last moment, that I might be able to get up and say in the words of the old Scots couplet:

Betwixt the stirrup and the ground,
Mercy I ask'd; mercy I found.

But I waited in vain for that crushing legal rejoinder. Perhaps we shall get it this afternoon from the Leader of the Government or some other representative of the Government here; if so, I shall be most happy, and most happy to appear in a white sheet.

I waited for the death-bed repentance, as I thought it might be, for the confession, for the request for absolution, even at a late stage, and it did not come.

Having put the thing off so long and having allowed practically everything said that could be said on the subject, eloquently and perhaps even ad nauseam, some might ask in the other place, in the country and in the press, why I rise now. Why do I rise as some might say, to thresh old straw? The answer is first of all, honourable senators, that it seems to me that this is a subject which ought to be ventilated in this chamber; secondly, that some word of regret or protest should be uttered from the Liberal benches in this chamber.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: That will be the day!

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I am sorry I did not quite hear that interjection. Perhaps whoever made it will get his answer in a moment or two. I have to apologize. As I said to the Leader of the Government in conversation this afternoon, my poor old ears have gone back on me and perhaps I am now becoming so infirm in that respect that I ought not to be here at all.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Let me repeat it in case others did not get it. I said, "That will be the day!"

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Well, wait and see. Now I think it is proper that there should be some expression here of regret from a member of the Liberal party, even a fairly recent convert, of the uneasiness which I am persuaded is felt not just by myself alone within the ranks of the Liberal party. I think there should be a protest which could not be regarded as partisan, coming from an opponent of the Government in order to embarrass the Government. I think it is proper also that someone who has been as vigorous as I have been at times in the past, when there seemed to me that there were conventions of constitutional usage or features of constitutional law which were being violated, should speak up and say his piece now.

This is personal and perhaps of no public importance. However, it is important to me and I think there may be some public utility in it also. It seems to me that what is involved here is an extremely important matter, the question of obedience to the law of the land by the government of the land. I venture to say that if ever there was a period in history when it was imperative that governments should obey the law, this is that period.

If ever there was a country in the world where this is imperative, this is that country. This is about the last place in the world and the last time in the world that governments can afford, it seems to me, to give any shadow of colour to the attitudes and actions of those who are prepared to set the law at defiance.

What are the principles involved here? They are the basic principles of adherence to law. I am not concerned with the merits and demerits of this particular piece of legislation. It may be every bit as good as the Government believes it to be. It may be that the Grain Stabilization Act has come down from heaven like the Platonic image, or the Platonic idea, of desirable legislation. I am not concerned with this specific piece of legislation at all, but simply with this basic principle of adherence to law which, it seems to me, is incumbent upon all of us and should be binding upon all of us and, above all, on the Government itself.

It is a principle which apparently this Government has been slow in grasping and which, it seems to me, needs to be set forth firmly, clearly and in a non-partisan spirit.

What are the facts? Fortunately, or unfortunately—fortunately for the length of time that I have to detain you, honourable senators—I think they are beyond dispute. The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, chapter 2 of the statutes of 1956, in sections 4 and 5, provides that the Minister of Finance "shall make"—not "may make"—certain payments. Those payments have not been made over a period now of some 14 months. That is the first set of facts, which to my mind establishes clearly that the Government has been in breach of the law. I do not think the responsibility need fall completely on the unfortunate Minister of Finance and be treated as an error on his part as an individual. The Government as a whole must take responsibility for this.

The second set of facts is that this act, passed in 1956, has not been repealed, yet it does not appear in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970. It does not appear in the body of the Revised Statutes; it does not appear in the supplement. I have checked very carefully and I cannot find any trace of it whatsoever. It appears to have vanished into limbo; it is neither in the Revised Statutes, nor in the supplement. It has just disappeared into limbo. It seems to me there again, unless I greatly misread the law on the subject, an act which was passed 15 years ago and which has not been repealed ought to appear in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970. I know of no law, no usage, which would permit the Government or a commissioner revising the statutes, or whoever is concerned with the matter, to omit from the Revised Statutes a law which was still in force and had been in force some considerable time when that particular revision was made.

Hon. Mr. Everett: May I ask the honourable senator a question? He states that the Government is overdue 14 months, I believe, in its payment. Could he tell me when the first due date for payment was? Was it not after the twelfth month?

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Well, not that I am aware of. I have read the report of the discussion of this question in the other place. Over and over again the statement has been made that it was 14 months, and never to my knowledge has that been contradicted. However, if it should be one month, two or three months, it makes little difference to my point. I am dealing with the retroactive feature of this legislation. I have something considerable to say about that. I do not stick to the 14 months if some say it is only 13 months, three months or one month; I am not particularly concerned with that.

Senator Everett appears to wish to ask something else.

Hon. Mr. Everett: Since we do not have the facts, one might say that it could possibly be a matter of two months.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: This is something new. I am glad that the Government has a defender on this point here, which it apparently could not find in its own ranks or among its supporters in the other place. If that is the case, and I am surprised to hear it, I am pleased to stand corrected. I still maintain, however, that the principle is at stake. As far as I knew, this was a fact which had not been contested, so I leave it there.

Hon. Mr. Everett: I wish the senator to understand that I am not correcting him. I am merely stating that it may not be 14 months overdue; it may be two months, and I think he agrees.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I am not in a position to agree or disagree. I assumed from the fact that the enormous battery of legal talent in the ranks of the ministry itself and the other house, with all the armament of the Department of Justice at its command had not questioned this, that the statement was correct. However, perhaps it was a case where it was felt to be beneath the dignity of ministers to make whatever correction was necessary. At any rate this is of no great consequence to my argument.

There are, in effect, four answers which have been given to the protest which has been made. In the first place, the Government said, "Well, this is much better legislation than that which is being superseded, so what are you worrying about?" I should perhaps mention what I presume most honourable senators are aware of, that the Act provides that this particular part of it, section 33, dealing with the repeal of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, shall be retroactive to July 31, 1970. The answer to that is: "It is a bagatelle, it is much better legislation, and the farmers will be much better off." This to my mind is completely irrelevant to the point I am making.

The second reply is, "Oh, well, there are obligations and obligations, there are debts and there are debts, there are things that have to be done and things that do not quite so much have to be done. You have a debtor and a creditor and the debtor says he is in certain difficulties but is expecting some good fortune shortly, his ship will be coming in. If you will just wait a little while he will make a different and better payment, but if you press him now on the letter of the law you will lose out." I am not much impressed by that. I do not think that the Crown in right of the Dominion of Canada should appear as an embarrassed, impecunious debtor waiting for its ship to come in. I do not think this is consonant with the dignity of the Government of Canada and I do not think it is in accordance with the facts. At any rate, I am just a plain, blunt man; I am not a lawyer, I am not in a position to appreciate the fine distinction between one kind of obligation and another. It seems to me that if an act says the Government shall make certain payments, the Government ought to make those payments. I will refer to that in a little more detail in a moment.

The third argument, if we can call it that, is, "Well, there have been retroactive clauses in legislation before. Parliament has the power to pass retroactive legislation, so why get hot and bothered about this?" I will deal with that in a moment.

The fourth reply that is offered is, "Well, we brought this in, and the Opposition has obstructed or at least delayed it. We had every reason to suppose that it would be passed very promptly. However, we discovered that thanks to various things, and because of the misbehaviour of the Opposition, it was not passed very promptly. So it is not our fault that retroactivity goes back quite as far as it does." I must say that I simply do not find such replies convincing.

On Family Allowances, the Government is bringing in new and better legislation than that on the statute books. Nobody will say, "Well, let us make the new act repeal retroactively the present act, and ask those who are getting the Family Allowances to wait until the new act comes into effect and then get better Family Allowances."

We do not do this kind of thing with the income tax. We have the new income tax legislation coming, and it is conceivable that it may mean that I shall be paying rather less tax than I do under the present act. But nobody would think of making this retroactive; nor should I think of saying, "I will not pay my income tax this time because next year when this new legislation comes in I shall not have to pay as much, and therefore I will avail myself of the new legislation, because it will be much better legislation and I may have to pay a much smaller amount of taxes. Therefore, I will let things slide. I do not think this is a very pressing obligation for me in the circumstances."

As to retroactivity, there is no question that Parliament has the power to pass retroactive laws. We are not as restricted in that respect as the American Congress and state legislatures are. There is proper ground for retaining at least part of that retroactive power, although I think it has to be exercised with extreme caution.

There are two conspicuous examples of the use of this retroactive power, one in the Parliament of Canada and one in the Legislature of the Province of Quebec. They are very glaring examples, and it is worth taking a look at them to see what they are.

The one contained in the Dominion legislation was an act passed in 1919, in the aftermath of the Winnipeg strike, providing for the deportation without trial of British subjects not born or naturalized in Canada. It was made retroactive from June 6, 1919, the day on which it received Royal Assent, to May 4, 1910, slightly over 10 years.

The other conspicuous example was an act passed in the Quebec Legislature in the days of the Honourable Maurice Duplessis, to amend the Labour Relations Act of the province, passed on January 28, 1954, and made retroactive to February 3, 1944, slightly less than 10 years.

Therefore we have some precedents there. But I venture to say that they are not very illustrious precedents.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Do you remember the Dillon law passed under the Taschereau Government, and the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act passed by this Parliament last fall?

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I merely mentioned certain conspicuous examples, which I venture to say were not very illustrious examples or ones which most of us would be prepared to see followed.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Your list is not exhaustive.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: No. I have not the knowledge of statutes which the Leader of the Opposition possesses. I am merely offering my two-penny worth of those that I can recall from my own recollection, imperfect and inadequate though it is.

There are times when retroactivity is, I think, justified, partly in certain instances because of the ancient legal maxim: Salus populi suprema lex. I use the English pronunciation of the Latin because I think that is what is usually done in our courts.

There are circumstances where, for the very existence of the state, and where national security is in danger, there may be reasonable and proper ground for the use of retroactive legislation.

One example that occurs to me—I have no doubt that honourable senators who are members of the bar will readily call to mind others—is what happened in Great Britain when war broke out in 1914. It was felt necessary for the government of Great Britain to take a variety of immediate actions with regard to financial matters, whose legal ground in the prerogative or the statutes was somewhat dubious, to say the least. The government promptly moved to have Parliament pass retroactive legislation to remove all doubts and validate any of those actions by the executive.

Honourable senators may also know of other cases where, for some grave crisis, immediate action was necessary for the very existence of the state, with retroactive sanctions for this.

Another case is an illustration of that maxim: The law takes no account of little things. When Mr. Ramsay MacDonald formed his second Labour government in 1929, there was a provision in the statutes which said, if I remember correctly, that no more than five Under-Secretaries of State should be sitting in the House of Commons at one time. The government and its legal advisers overlooked this, and a certain Dr. Drummond Shields was appointed Parliamentary Under-Secretary for India in contravention of the act.

Nobody noticed this for some time. Then some mildewed old clergyman in the backwoods of the United Kingdom suddenly noticed the provision in the act, that Dr. Drummond Shields was subject to some terrific penalty for every day that he sat illegally in the House of Commons, and that half the penalty went to the informer.

He hurried forward to give the information. As a result, the Prime Minister, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, came to the House of Commons in equal haste and said, "I appear before the house in a white sheet." He went on to say that this was an inadvertent breach of the law; that Dr. Drummond Shields would be ruined if he had to pay this penalty, and he therefore asked the house to consent to an act of indemnity which provided that Dr. Drummond Shields would be deemed not to have contravened the provisions of the law. Everybody agreed that this was quite reasonable, that it was an inadvertent breach of the law which should be dealt with in this particular way.

With all due respect, I do not think that this particular piece of legislation falls within either of those categories. It is not a small thing, and it is not something that affects the very existence of the state.

As for the delays, surely any government with any experience of parliamentary procedure ought to know that you have to budget for delays. You cannot assume a complaisant Opposition. You cannot assume that things will be allowed to go through with a minimum of debate. It astonishes me that anybody with any experience in public life, even experience as vicarious as mine was until a few months ago, should be under this impression.

What on earth is the explanation of this very curious and, to say the least, imprudent as well as improper piece of legislation? My guess is that it originated in the fertile brain of some expert agricultural economist with about as much knowledge of the law or of the place of law in our civilization as a tadpole.

Doubtless he is highly competent, and doubtless full of the best intentions. But I suspect this is what happened, because I happen to know from a friend of mine in the Public Service of an instance where he was presented with a memorandum suggesting action in contravention of the very act which set up the branch of the particular department he was in. He looked at this and said to his superiors, "But this is a breach of section so-and-so of the act, the act which constitutes us." The reply of this highly skilled and highly educated technician was, "Oh, but that is a very silly section." My friend's reply was, "It is a very silly section. When the bill was drafted I wrote a special memorandum to the minister on the subject, pointing out how silly it was and the trouble it would cause. But it has been passed by Parliament and it is not our right to contravene the very act to which we owe our existence. This simply cannot be done." These other gentry appear to have thought this attitude a somewhat quaint one. This I cannot understand.

So I suspect that this may well have come from some very smart agricultural economist or fine technician who just did not realize what was involved. I have the greatest respect for the public servants of this country; I think they are without equal anywhere in the world. But I am sometimes afraid that they are not fully aware of what law means, or what adherence to law means.

I am reminded of a story told by, I think, the late Lord Haldane, of how one night he was returning home from the House of Commons arm in arm with a distinguished British civil servant who had got very impatient with delays in the House of Commons. This civil servant said, "You know, Haldane, we could run the country far better than you fellows, far more efficiently. You are really quite superfluous." Haldane replied, "Yes, my dear fellow, I have no doubt you could run it much better, and in a fortnight there would not be enough lampposts in Whitehall to go round."

What are ministers there for under our Constitution? Why do we have ministers who are not experts in the department, as we habitually do? It is to bring to the technicians, professionals and experts in the Civil Service a sense of what can be done and what cannot be done, what is proper legally and what is not. You cannot expect an agricultural economist to be an expert in law; that is not his business.

Here we have a cabinet with 15 of the 30 members having made their studies in law. I think one of the 15 may not be a member of the bar, but roughly half of the cabinet is made up of members of the legal profession. What were they doing? Why did they not notice this peculiar provision? Or did they just notice it and say, "Well, it doesn't particularly matter"? I do not know, but it simply astounds me that they let the thing go as they did, and presented their political opponents, it seems to me, with a gift. If I had been an opponent of the Government when this feature of this legislation appeared, I would have said, "The Lord hath delivered them into my hands." I do not know why in the world anybody with ordinary prudence would do this thing. Is it over-confidence in their own wisdom and invincibility?

Lord Melbourne once said sadly, "We learn nothing by experience, not even our own." I hope that is a little too pessimistic, but I think it may be time to remind this Government that there was once another government, not so very long ago, very confident of its own wisdom and invincibility, a government which I think was, in our history up to that time, quite without equal in intellectual ability and education. It did various things in sublime confidence that it was possessed of all wisdom and could not possibly be defeated. Then the rains descended and the floods came and beat upon that government that it fell, and great was the fall thereof. I think it well for even this Government, which I consider an exceedingly able and good government, perhaps the best we have ever had, to remember that governments are fallible. Even if it thinks it is the best government that we have ever had, it should remember that it is, after all, made up of fallible human beings, and if it makes enough mistakes retribution can overtake it. I do not want to see this Government fall.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: It is too late. You have demolished it already.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Wait a minute. I am afraid, terribly afraid, of what its opponents in either of the Opposition parties might do to the unity of this country and the very existence of this country. I earnestly hope that henceforth these ministers will join, to their immense abilities and their vast knowledge and clear-sightedness and courage—I could go on listing their qualities—an invincible, scrupulous regard for law and for the basic place of law in our society and our civilization.

Hon. Mr. Everett: Honourable senators, I rise because during Senator Forsey's speech I questioned whether the Government was overdue 14 months or two months in making payments. I find that Senator Forsey's statement was correct. Senator McNamara has given me a copy of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, which reads as follows:

> ...in respect of any...crop year the total amount payable for the crop year shall be paid in equal monthly payments within such crop year.

Senator Forsey is, therefore, correct.

Hon. Mr. Lang: I wonder if I might ask Senator Forsey a question—I am rather embarrassed at having to ask this—in connection with the omission of the act from the Revised Statutes of Canada? Have the Revised Statutes been proclaimed in force yet?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Yes, and printed and distributed.

Hon. Mr. Lang: Have they been proclaimed?

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I do not know. I always assumed that they had.

Hon. Mr. Martin: No.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: In fact, I have the whole collection of volumes on my shelf. I did not know that I was getting an advance copy; perhaps I was. In any case, whether they have been proclaimed in force or not, it seems to me that if you have the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1970 you have no business leaving out of them an act passed in 1956 which has not been repealed. I cannot see any way round that.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: They have been distributed and printed. I know there was an incident in Montreal, when a judge of the Sessions of the Peace Court had to reconcile an accusation made under the new numbering of the provisions of the Criminal Code, and he had not yet received the new statutes printed. Yet they had been proclaimed in force, and he had to adjust, which was very difficult because he had not yet received the new statutes. I suggest to the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Martin) that they have been proclaimed. There is quite a mix-up, but they have been proclaimed.

Hon. Harry Hays: Honourable senators, I am not upholding the Government for not making the payments, but I think there is one explanation that should be made in light of Senator Forsey's speech. This is information which I think this house would be glad to have. The Government is certainly delinquent in the payments; there is no doubt about that. I suppose Senator Forsey has never been delinquent in payments to that extent. I have. Farmers were advised by the Government of what was taking place. Every farmer entitled to a payment was advised. As a farmer I was advised and I know, when the legislation goes through, exactly how much I shall receive.

I have discussed this with many farmers. The legislation is excellent. I think it should be on record that all farmers have been advised exactly how much they will receive, if and when the bill is passed. Most of the farmers I have spoken to hope that it will be passed.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Were you advised you would receive interest on the amount?

Hon. Mr. Hays: The exact amount.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: But what about interest because of the delay in payment?

Hon. Mr. Hays: I think we received these notices some time in July, stating the amount of money that would be received. It was hoped the legislation would be passed and the present act repealed, and that the payments owed to the farmers would be made forthwith.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: May I ask Senator Hays if, in this communication that he has mentioned, the farmers were also advised that the Government, in order to take this action, proposed to break the law?

Hon. Mr. Hays: No. Certainly it was indicated to the farmers—or the farmers would have understood at any rate—that the Government was delinquent in the payments. However, if the Government makes the payments tomorrow, then the Government is no longer delinquent.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: Delinquency is not the issue. Delinquency does not matter. What does matter here is that we have a lawless Government. There is no use telling me anything about delay or delinquency. That is not the issue at all. The issue is that the Government of Canada is breaking the law of Canada. That is all that is at issue.

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, there is no doubt that the Government is in default. There has been no denial of that fact, but I feel it is not possible to discuss this matter fully at this time. As Senator Forsey has taken advantage of the opportunity, it is open for us to discuss the default of the Government in respect to payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, but I am inclined to wonder whether much of what Senator Forsey said was really in order, because he was discussing a bill that is now being debated in the other place and which provides for payments amounting to $100 million. I do not think it is within our competence at this time to discuss that bill. I feel that only when we are in a position to discuss that bill fully, will it be possible to deal with the general question of default under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act charged against the Government. For that reason I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Surely the leader is not serious in that little exposé he has just given us. Either the Government is in default or it is not. Senator Forsey says it is, and incidentally mentions the new bill. Surely he is entitled to point out the default of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I am very pleased to hear that the Government Leader for the first time moving the adjournment of a debate. Will he be speaking at the next sitting?

The Hon. the Speaker: May I say at this point that I have followed this discussion very closely and I have been waiting to see if a point of order would be raised. A point of order has not been raised. There is the possibility that we might be dealing here with two different measures. One is a statute, and it is perfectly in order for honourable Senator Forsey to make his point with respect to a Government failure to act upon it, if it is his opinion that the Government has so failed to act. The other is a bill, the Prairie Grain Stabilization bill which is now before the House of Commons. As that bill has not yet reached this house I have the fear that other speakers in this debate, because this inquiry has now become a debate, might continue dealing with it and that would not be in accordance with the practice. I hope honourable senators who follow in this debate will bear that in mind.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Martin, debate adjourned.

SENATE ACCOUNTS

SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the second report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration which was presented yesterday.

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, I should like the privilege of saying just a few words about the consideration that went into the preparation of the report which was presented yesterday and which appeared in yesterday's Hansard and the Minutes of the Proceedings for yesterday. At the committee meeting on Tuesday morning special mention was made of the unusual attention which was paid to the job undertaken by the subcommittee comprised of Senator Molson as Chairman, Senator Beaubien and Senator McElman. They took their job very seriously indeed, and I am inclined to believe that they were stimulated by the fact that expenses of operating the chamber are growing at a rather fast rate. When they analysed the figures presented to them, which were tabled by the Clerk last spring before we adjourned for the summer recess, they discovered that the printing costs, apart from the normal increase in staff salaries, were increasing at a constant rate. In fact, they have become so high as to stagger those who served in the Senate not too many years ago. The subcommittee under Senator Molson's direction gave special attention to this phase and have recommended in the report that officials of the Canadian Government Printing Bureau be invited to appear before the committee to explain their printing charges. I take it that if this report is adopted by the Senate, it will be the authority for the committee to go ahead with that exercise in the near future.

I would point out that the report recommends that the committee chairmen themselves should exercise care toward eliminating any unnecessary printing. Several committee chairmen have already done so. I believe that the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media was one of the first. When it commenced its many and lengthy hearings a year or so ago it adopted a policy of not printing all the briefs with the graphs, pictures, and so on, that sometimes go with submissions made to committees. I understand that Senator Hayden's committee, in its study of tax reform legislation, is following this policy. I am informed by Senator Langlois that it was also followed by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. This is becoming general and it is a policy that I hope all chairmen would be encouraged to follow.

Apart from these suggestions made by Senator Molson's subcommittee to the main committee, Senator Molson has had a study made of the form of accounts. He is making suggestions to the administration of the Senate with regard to improvements which will bring the form of the accounts more into line with today's business practice.

Another reason I rise to say just a few words in moving the adoption of the report is to follow the instructions given to me by the members of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. These instructions were not only to write a letter to Senator Molson informing him of our pleasure at receiving his subcommittee's report, but to state so for our record. I do that today with the greatest appreciation.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I hope I am not asking a question that will embarrass Senator Smith but, being a member of the committee, I think it should be mentioned that one of the important items on the agenda of the committee was a scrutiny of the salaries of all employees of the Senate. I think some 200 personnel were involved, and perhaps Senator Smith might give his colleagues the percentage increases that became applicable retroactively to certain dates. If he considers that not to be appropriate, the facts could be ascertained by the individuals concerned by inquiry of the administration.

Hon. Mr. Smith: Honourable senators, I take that as a question. In the first place, the reason why the information to which my honourable friend referred is not published in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate is that that has not, in my time, been the practice. Neither, indeed, has it been the practice in the House of Commons to publish that type of information; it is rather lengthy and involved.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: I did not mean the detail, but the percentage figure.

Hon. Mr. Smith: As Senator Benidickson and I found out, such figures tend to be easily misunderstood. However, to answer his question, and to put something on the record in regard to it, I will say that the salary increases are in almost exactly the same terms as those given to the employees of the House of Commons. Those who are employed on the staff of the Senate and who receive an annual salary under $5,000 had their salaries increased by 10 per cent. Those on the Senate staff whose annual salary exceeds $5,000, had their salaries increased by 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: That is all I thought was appropriate.

Hon. Mr. Smith: I should also point out in general terms that there was a general reclassification of the staff of the Senate. This is to bring them in line with classifications in the Public Service of Canada and, having regard to the duties performed, in the House of Commons. The reclassification applies suitable titles to positions, which is very useful indeed when those of us concerned with this subject have to make comparisons in order to determine whether we are in or out of line. In the case of the relatively few members of our staff who received an increase due to reclassification, the total of those increases is only a few hundreds of dollars—not a very large item. However, it is more a matter of convenience than anything else that some of the job classifications of the Senate have been changed.

Report adopted.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce is sitting now and will sit tomorrow morning. The Joint Committee on the Constitution is sitting this afternoon and will sit tomorrow morning. That committee will also sit four days next week. The Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will sit two and possibly three days next week. The Senate will meet again tomorrow.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

PRIVATE BILL

UNITED BANK OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Leopold Langlois, for Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-22, to incorporate United Bank of Canada, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Chesley W. Carter: Honourable senators, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Robichaud, and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Why the hurry?

Hon. Mr. Carter: I am afraid I cannot give a full explanation of the urgency. Senator Robichaud was to have been here to move third reading himself but later it transpired that he could not be here and he asked me to move third reading on his behalf. I understand one reason is that this bill has now been before this house for some considerable time, and the principals concerned are anxious to make application for the charter as soon as possible.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I should just like to say that unless some other honourable senator has views on the matter, I can see no useful purpose in delaying third reading of this bill and I personally have no objection. However, I do not wish to see this being established as a precedent when it comes to the matter of waiving our rules.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Honourable senators, I have no objection to putting the bill through. In my opinion, we have considered it fairly reasonably and there is no reason why we should turn it down. However, I do not see any point in pushing it through now unless there is a very good reason, which does not seem apparent to me. I am willing to let it go through, but a very good reason should be given.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I would point out that when this motion was made by Senator Carter he was asking for unanimous consent. Do I understand that there is unanimous consent?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: There is.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Leopold Langlois moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 12, 1971, at 8 p.m.

He said: Honourable senators, a heavy workload is envisaged for the Senate next week. The Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada will meet practically every day. The Standing Senate Committee on Banking Trade and Commerce will meet on Wednesday and Thursday, and it is very likely that the Standing Committee on National Finance will meet next week.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: What about this chamber?

Hon. Mr. Langlois: We will be sitting from Tuesday evening on.

Motion agreed to.

TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO MAKE PAYMENTS—OMISSION OF ACT FROM REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1970—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Forsey calling the attention of the Senate to the Government's failure to make certain payments as required by the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and to the omission of that Act from the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970—(Honourable Senator Martin, P.C.)

Hon. Paul Martin: Stand.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I had hoped that the honourable the Leader of the Government would have been ready to reply to the speech made yesterday by the honourable Senator Forsey.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I had hoped to make the reply today.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I was looking forward to it. I am very disappointed.

[Translation]

Hon. Mr. Choquette: We must not exaggerate.

Hon. Mr. Langlois: That is always wise.

[English]

Order stands.

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, October 5, the adjourned debate on the motion by Hon. Mr. Laird that the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the parole system in Canada.

Hon. J. Harper Prowse: Honourable senators, I am not sure that a great deal needs to be said with respect to this motion. It seems to me that most of the things have already been said, and any matters that I bring up are probably matters that should be before the committee.

The motion calls for the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to examine and report upon all aspects of the parole system in Canada. Perhaps the importance of this is best illustrated and explained by the use of statistics in the last Public Accounts. These show that our total of $80 million set aside for the operation of correctional institutions in Canada, $75 million goes for the operation of penitentiaries and less than $5 million for the operation of the Parole Board. Both of these institutions are to carry out the intentions of Parliament under the Criminal Code.

In dealing with sentence the first general principle a judge should take into consideration is making the punishment fit the crime. The punishment itself serves two purposes, the first being as a deterrent to the offender; in other words, to help condition his reflexes by making him realize that his type of behaviour is not going to be tolerated. The second purpose is as a deterrent to other persons who might be tempted to commit the same crime.

The second principle is to provide for the segregation from society, for the protection of society, of people whose behaviour has indicated that they are a danger to society.

The third principle is to provide an opportunity for the rehabilitation of the particular person the court is dealing with. That means simply trying to make it possible for that individual, rather than be a danger or a threat or an expense to society, to become a useful, productive full-fledged member of society.

Parole has nothing to do either with punishment—except to a limited extent, which I shall come to in a moment—or with segregation. It is concerned chiefly with the rehabilitation aspect. Are we really concerned about the rehabilitation of prisoners? As Senator Laird pointed out, it costs about $5,300 per year to keep a person in a penal institution. On the other hand, parole supervision, to use his figures, costs an average of $750 a year. Therefore, if we can put a man successfully on parole, we save approximately $4,500 a year right at the start. Secondly, if he is able to maintain himself while on parole he makes a contribution to society. Depending on what his income is, he will become either self-supporting or partly self-supporting; he may become self-supporting and a taxpayer who helps to carry the general load.

Honourable senators, at this stage there arises for our consideration the following thoughts. There are certain people who say that no one should be in prison, that imprisonment is a proof of the failure of our social system. On the other hand, others say that anyone who is against the social system, to the point where he can commit a crime and endanger the welfare of others, deserves no sympathy and should be eradicated. Those are two extremes. The probability is that, in this argument as in all arguments, the best possible course lies somewhere in between.

In the suggestion that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs carry out this investigation, there lies the hope that we may find that point in between at which we can enable our correctional institutions to serve the best interests of society and give us the best return, not only on our dollar, but for our effort and concern. It is not my intention to tell you where that line should be drawn. If I knew, I could make such a speech and say so, and there would be no need for an investigation.

I have outlined to you the fact that, if we can successfully operate a parole system, not only can we save the Government of Canada money but we can make it possible for people, who now must be maintained by the taxpayers, to make a contribution to the elevation of the standard of living available to all Canadians. That is the possibility. But one of the problems we are going to have to deal with is that on the one hand there are those who say that that is not the possibility but is the fact, and on the other hand there are those who say that this is nothing more than the result of the operations of a bunch of irresponsible bleeding hearts. They argue that the only thing that seems to be accomplished is the premature return to society of people who have shown a capability for damaging society and who, when they are put back into society, repeat their depredations.

I suggest that somewhere in between the truth will lie. For example, the figures for investigated cases show that 86 per cent of those checked upon were found to be gainfully employed, whether supporting relatives or not. The remaining 14 per cent were living on welfare. So at least we have said that much.

On the other hand, we should like to know how much damage to society has been done by those comprising that 14 per cent unemployed, and who may have gone back to their former way of life.

The figures on those persons who have received parole and have then gone back to their former way of life as compared to those who have been in our penitentiaries, completed their sentences and have been convicted again—called the rate of recidivism—runs to about 55 per cent. Over a period taken from 1956 to 1967, the percentage of parolees who got into trouble again, lost parole and went back to penitentiary was about 30 per cent. So in that figure there is an absolute gain again.

To establish the value of that gain it will be necessary to find out how much damage has been done by the 30 per cent. Was the damage done by those who got out ahead of time sufficient to make us feel that the advantages we received from those who did not go back were worth the risk? In other words, there is a whole matter of collecting evidence on a great many aspects of a very complicated problem and then of trying to draw balances.

Interest in this resolution comes on the one hand from people who have been appalled by the fact that in certain cases men who have been in penitentiaries because of very serious crimes have been able to obtain parole and have then committed crimes again, even including murder. I think there was one in that category. But what we need to do, honourable senators, is to find out how many there were who went out and successfully stayed out as compared to those who returned.

A further point I should like to make is that there is no question but that incarceration in a penitentiary is basically a brutalizing experience. It may be that the roughness of the incarceration will be sufficient in certain cases to cause the individual to say to himself, "I don't intend ever to let myself be exposed to this kind of thing again; therefore from this point onward I must be careful to walk within the confines of the law." On the other hand, there must be cases where a person confined in that manner for a long period of time will, because of a deeply developed sense of individualism, build up such a sense of resentment that he becomes an even more serious threat to society at the end of his sentence than he would have had he been released at an earlier date.

Honourable senators, the committee will have to consider many individual cases and accept a lot of advice, some of which, as frequently happens with advice, will not be worth very much. Nevertheless, some of it will be valuable, and I am sure that the committee will be able to distinguish the one from the other, and thus be able to make a useful recommendation or statement.

At the present time, the whole system of parole is subject to criticisms which arise from ignorance and prejudice on both sides. If this committee does nothing more than put the facts before the public, then I think it will have earned its keep and the thanks of everyone concerned with this serious problem.

Canadian society, as a result of the growth of great cities and concentrations of population—and perhaps as a result of affluence—is facing a steadily growing crime rate. While a steadily growing crime rate concerns us as a moral issue, it must also concern us from a much more practical and down-to-earth standpoint. We must consider the fact that it creates a situation in which we are not able to enjoy the sense of security and satisfaction that we should.

Let me illustrate what I mean. Two years ago almost to the day it was my privilege to go to New York as an observer at the United Nations on behalf of the Senate. On checking into the Barclay Hotel, which is four blocks from the United Nations building and next door to the Waldorf Astoria, and right in the centre of what one would normally consider to be the finest development of our civilization, the Island of Manhattan—an area with the greatest wealth per capita in the world, I should think. With my key I received a letter from the hotel manager, in which I was told that under no circumstances was I to take my key out of the hotel, or tell anybody what hotel I was staying at. I was not supposed to tell even relatives who were staying at the same hotel my room number. I was also warned not to forget to put on the night chain when I retired for the night, and not to let anybody, even telephone or television repairmen, in. When I could identify the chambermaid apparently it was all right to let her in, but if any one else knocked on the door I was to telephone the desk to inquire who it was.

Then there was a little bit of gratuitous advice. It was simply this: If your wife is with you and she wants to walk on the street, don't let her carry a handbag on her arm. Wives were also advised not to go anywhere without their husbands and not to walk on the streets but rather to take taxis. Honourable senators, this is what crime and the inability to deal with crime in our big cities has brought us to.

I have had occasion before to talk about the instinctive behaviour of man. I have found it rather interesting to read that rats kept in a compound with enough room to live each in his own little territory are gentle animals. But when they are crowded into a small area, they become vicious. They soon become irritable and snap at one another, and end up not only killing but eating one another. Perhaps mankind has more in common with the rat than we care to acknowledge. The overcrowding in our cities may be an indication of the type of problem we have to deal with. Some of the suggested solutions to the problem are so costly that we can hardly afford the advantages.

Honourable senators, I do not know whether the committee will care to go into this aspect. I do not even know if there is anyone who could help the committee if it decided to consider it. But I did want to indicate to you we are spending $5 million for a parole service designed to let people out of jail before the expiration of their sentences, while we are spending $75 million a year to keep people in jail. Where do we get the best return for our dollar? This is something we must ascertain if we are to fulfil our basic responsibility to the people of Canada. Can we satisfy the need of the people for protection, and give them value for their dollars, by some changes in the parole system, or are we to say that parole is a lot of nonsense?

Should those who administer the Parole Act be given clear instructions as to what Parliament expects them to do? Or should we give them more general terms and in effect a carte blanche to do what needs to be done? Should we give them less money because it is being wasted, or should we give them additional facilities in order to provide the psychiatrists, psychologists and the other people necessary to do a better job?

I do not know the answers. If any of us knew the answers, this resolution would not be necessary. I hope, honourable senators, that I have given you some indication that there are problems here that we, with our special facilities, can study and, hopefully, produce something that will be of value to the people of Canada. I would suggest that the sooner we can proceed with the study the sooner we will be able to produce the report and the answers.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, for Hon. Mr. Macdonald, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, there are some senators who I know have work which might usefully be done outside the chamber at this time. I therefore propose the adjournment of the Senate. I would recall the remarks of Senator Langlois in support of his motion for the next sitting. He indicated that next week will be a very heavy week for the Senate, particularly the committees.

The Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada will be sitting practically every day and I feel that it is very important that the attendance of senators on that committee be up to strength. I may say that we in the Senate have every reason to be proud of the attendance of senators on that joint committee. I will make no comparisons with the other place, but the attendance of senators on that committee has indeed been an inspiring fact.

Then the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will be meeting, as Senator Langlois reminded us, on Wednesday and Thursday. It is likely that there will also be meetings of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 12, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 12, 1971

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE HÉDARD ROBICHAUD, P.C.

TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT FROM SENATE AND APPOINTMENT AS LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF NEW BRUNSWICK

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators will have learned that last Friday the Honourable Hédard Robichaud accepted an appointment as Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick. I need not say that we all greatly regret that he will no longer continue to serve as a senator. He indeed was a distinguished senator, climaxing his political career by membership in this House.

Senator Robichaud was a distinguished parliamentarian, a member of Parliament for a number of years, Minister of Fisheries in the Pearson administration. During the time he was a member of this house we recognized him as one of our outstanding senators. No one will miss his services more than I. He was a regular attendant in this chamber and was always listened to when he spoke. Whenever there was a difficult bill to be introduced he was ready to assume this task, which he performed with great ability.

Even if we are inclined to consider the departure of Senator Robichaud as a loss for the Senate, we must also take into account his personal feelings. It is indeed a great honour to be appointed Lieutenant-Governor of one's native province.

Senator Robichaud is Acadian on his father's and mother's sides and I think that he is the first Acadian to be appointed to that office.

He attended Sacred Heart University in Bathurst and St. Joseph's University in St. Joseph. He holds a honorary degree from the University of New Brunswick.

Everyone in this chamber knows how well he carried out his duties on the other side. He was, for many years, the expert with regard to fisheries and he was always equal to the task, whatever the problem.

He was Inspector, then Director of Fisheries for the Province of New Brunswick.

He was first elected to the House of Commons in 1953. It was only normal that he should become Minister of Fisheries when the Liberals came to power following the 1963 general election.

Because the economy of his province was important to him, Senator Robichaud always worked in close co-operation with the provincial government, even during the years when he was Minister of Fisheries and carrying out many functions.

He is now going back to his province to devote his full time to it.

The Prime Minister, by his choice of a senator for this post, has show the high esteem in which he holds the Senate.

Senator Robichaud's absence will be regretted by all of us. I want to extend to him our heartfelt congratulations and our best wishes in his new role.

[English]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, Canadians in general had reason for being thankful yesterday, Thanksgiving Day, for the degree of personal freedom that we enjoy in this land and for the peace and security that we take for granted which, for hundreds of millions of people on this earth, are luxuries not to be dreamed of, let alone sought after.

But New Brunswick had a special reason to be thankful yesterday in that Senator Hédard Robichaud chose to resign his seat in this chamber and to assume the role of Lieutenant-Governor of their province. Our loss, and it is a great one, is their gain, and it is a great one too.

Hédard Robichaud is a man of significant ability, remarkable dedication to duty, and unconquerable energy. He had, as noted by the Leader of the Government, a noteworthy career which started with his acting as Fisheries Inspector for the Province of New Brunswick from 1947 to 1952. He has been in Parliament since 1953 and was appointed to the Pearson cabinet as Minister of Fisheries in 1963. Later, in 1968, he joined the Senate.

Honourable senators, I am particularly happy to underline the fact that Hédard Robichaud is the first Acadian to become Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick.

I congratulate without any restriction the Prime Minister of Canada for having recognized by this appointment the particularly bilingual character of New Brunswick.

To His Excellency the new Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, his wife and family, I extend our most sincere congratulations and our best wishes.

Hon. Hervé J. Michaud: Honourable senators, I would like to join the previous speakers in paying a personal tribute to the man who has been appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of New Brunswick.

I shall always be proud to have been, for ten years, the colleague of the new Lieutenant-Governor, Mr. Robichaud, when we first arrived in the other place, as it was pointed out, in 1953. The moment he became a member of the Canadian Parliament, he distinguished himself as a hard-working man, fully dedicated to those he represented. His devotion, sincerity, and tenaciousness are undoubtedly the qualities that drew the attention of those who wanted to honour him with the title he has just received.

It is the whole population of the province that has welcomed this appointment. During the swearing-in ceremony, on Friday last, the Premier, Mr. Hatfield, said that this was a historical event, and added: We are honoured by your appointment, because it reflects the spirit that prevails in New Brunswick today.

In an editorial, the Moncton Times said:

[English]

> The appointment is so thoroughly deserved. It is a recognition of Mr. Robichaud's lengthy service to the province. It is a welcome appointment, an appointment eminently suitable, and it is a recognition of the prominent role the Acadians have played in all walks of life in New Brunswick.

[Translation]

Still about this last event, the Saint John Telegraph had this to say:

[English]

> Choice of the first Acadian ever to serve as New Brunswick's lieutenant-governor will be warmly acclaimed as ushering in a new era in the history of this province. And Senator Hédard Robichaud, long an active and articulate champion of provincial causes, was an obvious and ideal person to fill the role as the Queen's representative.

This is what Le Progrès L'Évangéline had to say this morning on that subject:

> The choice is an excellent one: Mr. Hédard Robichaud who has resigned from his seat in the Senate has always wanted to serve the public. He has been successively a high official of the provincial government, a member of the House of Commons, a federal cabinet minister and for a little over three years, a senator.
> It is not surprising that Mr. Robichaud should have been willing to meet the challenge of being New Brunswick's first Acadian Lieutenant-Governor.

A little further on:

> To the new Lieutenant-Governor and to Mrs. Hédard Robichaud, who becomes the First Lady of New Brunswick, we extend our most sincere congratulations and our best wishes. The Acadians have just entered into a new historical phase.

Honourable senators, I am happy to endorse those words, as they appeared this morning in our newspaper, Le Progrès L'Évangéline, in tribute to our new Lieutenant-Governor, the Honourable Hédard Robichaud.

[English]

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I do not feel that I can add much to what has been said by Senator Martin, Senator Flynn and Senator Michaud, in praise of Senator Hédard Robichaud on his appointment as Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick. Nevertheless, as a senator from New Brunswick it is fitting that I associate myself very warmly with those words of congratulation which have been said. As a friend and colleague in the Senate, I wish the new Lieutenant-Governor every possible happiness and success.

Honourable senators, the late Lieutenant-Governor Bird carried out successfully a tremendous task in New Brunswick, and his sudden death was a shock to the people of the province. He had been active in his work up to within two or three days of his sudden collapse. Everyone agrees that he did a wonderful job during his term of office.

The new Lieutenant-Governor, our colleague Senator Robichaud, will certainly follow in the footsteps of his predecessor. Senator Robichaud has always been ready to accept a challenge. Some honourable senators may not recall that when he was an official of the Department of Fisheries—as Senator Michaud has told us—there was a by-election in the County of Gloucester in New Brunswick. It was considered a safe stronghold of the Liberals. Mr. Robichaud resigned his official position in the department—he was a comparatively young man then—and received the nomination as the Liberal candidate for Gloucester. To the great surprise of everyone, Gloucester turned Conservative in that election.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: By the way, it was another Robichaud who won the seat on that occasion.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: That is right. Today he is a member of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. In any event, there was a general election a year and a half later and Senator Robichaud offered himself again and was elected. I am pointing out that, as a characteristic of the man, he has always been prepared to accept a challenge, and in accepting the position of Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick he has certainly accepted a challenge.

I am sure all of us join in wishing him and his charming wife all possible success in his new position.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, as a senator from New Brunswick and a personal friend of the new Lieutenant-Governor and his charming wife, I simply wish to express my delight at his appointment.

Lieutenant-Governor Robichaud has given valuable service to New Brunswick. He is well liked there, and what he has done for the province has been greatly appreciated by its people. Not only has he served well the Province of New Brunswick, he has also given great service to Canada as a whole. He well deserves the honour of being the first Acadian Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick.

Like Senator Michaud, I was very happy to be present on the occasion of the swearing in of the new Lieutenant-Governor, when the Premier of New Brunswick spoke so highly of him.

Once again may I extend to Lieutenant-Governor Robichaud and his wife our best wishes for every success, and for health and happiness while carrying out the new and important duties he will be undertaking in the immediate future.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Paul Martin tabled:

Report of the Northern Canada Power Commission, including its accounts and financial statements and the Auditor General's report thereon, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1971, pursuant to section 24 of the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, chapter N-21, and section 75(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

NATIONAL HEALTH

THERAPEUTIC ABORTIONS IN CANADA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan rose pursuant to notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the number of therapeutic abortions performed in Canada in the first six months of 1971.

He said: Honourable senators, I am confronted with three problems in speaking on this topic tonight. The first problem is that, like Senator Forsey, I have an upper respiratory infection. That is simple language. The second problem is that I know this may be an exercise in complete futility. The third problem is that considering the statistics that were made public the other day, and bearing in mind that this is a subject in which I am vitally interested and one on which I have spoken previously, I do not intend to put a check on my remarks with regard to this prevalent free-wheeling, permissive society of today. I am going to speak very plainly and bluntly.

Therapeutic abortions performed in Canada in the first six months of 1971 totalled 14,188, according to reports to Statistics Canada by hospital authorities in the ten provinces and the Yukon Territory. This is 3,036 more than the 11,152 therapeutic abortions reported for the full calendar year 1970.

Patients with Canadian residence accounted for all but 20 of the 14,188 abortions reported. In terms of rates per 100 live births, abortions reported for Canadian residents in 1971 amounted to 7.6 per cent of live births as compared to 3 per cent in 1970. Rates for the six-month period in 1971 for the provinces varied from about 19 per cent for British Columbia down through about 11 per cent for Ontario, 10 per cent for Alberta, 4 per cent for Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Nova Scotia, and less than 2 per cent for Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

Further details, including totals of therapeutic abortions and rates by provinces, by months in 1971 and quarters in 1970 are available from the Health and Welfare Division, Statistics Canada, Ottawa.

Honourable senators, recently on the TV show Weekend, carried on the CBC national network, I witnessed with disgust a film showing the actual technical procedures of an abortion being performed on a patient. Whatever the moral reasons are for liberalization of the abortion laws there can be no moral justification for such a gross lapse in taste. I strenuously object to this gross misuse of national television for this purpose.

From a technical aspect, I might also point out that this procedure was anything but sterile in that the man doing the abortion did not "scrub", did not wear a mask, and did not use sterile equipment as evidenced by a dirty sponge thrown on his tray after his assistant had wiped the patient's hand with it. Surely it is unhealthy for the unborn person to be sucked out, cut up —curettage—pickled, salted-out, or delivered prematurely and left unattended to die, as the present abortion policy allows, merely at the request of a pregnant woman.

It is commonly accepted that the concept of clinical death be applied in deciding when a fetus may be aborted.

Honourable senators, it is possible to do an electroencephalogram at 10 weeks, hear the heart tone with new ultrasonic techniques at 10 weeks, measure the brain waves at 43 days, and diagnose a long list of diseases and treat life-threatening situations before birth. Brain waves, heart beat, blood pressure and metabolism, along with other unmistakable signs of life, have all been detected in early human embryos and fetuses before the age at which most abortions are performed.

Remember too that clinical death is an irreversible condition, quite unlike that of a developing fetus at any stage. So even if most of these clinical signs of life cannot be detected, that does certainly not prove that the fetus was dead. Even before heart beat and brain function are established, a growing embryo or fetus is demonstrably alive.

From the Linacre Quarterly, February 19, 1971, A Journal of the Philosophy and Ethics of Medical Practice, on page 33, I quote:

> The Japanese press carried a statement recently that we should reflect on responsibilities towards the 50,000,000 fetuses which have been aborted in the last two decades.

Honourable senators, I am indebted to my medical colleagues in the National Federation of Catholic Physicians' Guilds in this country, the United States, and the Old Country for a considerable number of statistics which I am about to reveal. This is particularly true of the editorial board of the Linacre Quarterly and their writers, such as Dr. Henry Armitage of Massachusetts and my own colleagues in biological medicine. I have as well used freely a recent publication, namely, The Morality of Abortion: Legal and Historical Perspectives, edited by John T. Noonan, Jr., Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1970.

There are two kinds of doctors who believe in therapeutic abortions. One kind believes that any woman who really wants to be rid of it should have a pregnancy terminated. The other kind believes that the decision should be governed by the law of the land, and that therapeutic abortion should be carried out only when the doctor genuinely believes continuation of the pregnancy will seriously endanger the life and health, physical and mental, of the woman. The decision is now made by a majority of at least three doctors, the hospital therapeutic abortion committee. The implications are obvious. If two or more of the committee belong to the first group, "rubber stamp" authorizations will be the rule; but not otherwise.

The doctor of humanitarian bent will seek a reason for justifying a therapeutic abortion in the eyes of the law for all his patients, since many are healthy young women, sound in body and mind except for a natural disturbance of the emotions due to the unwanted pregnancy. It is only in this realm of psychiatric disease that an excuse can be found for terminating the pregnancy. As I have heard it stated by a patient: "Do I have to attempt suicide before you can do anything for me?" Consequently, the psychiatrist is asked to apply the rubber stamp, but it is the committee that decides.

A woman wanting an abortion must first find a doctor who is willing to make out a case and present it to the therapeutic abortion committee. She must then see a complaisant psychiatrist, and her doctor must be sure that the committee which considers her case contains a majority of his colleagues who are humane rather than law-abiding.

The "liberalization" of Canada's abortion laws has expanded rather than eliminated the deceit by which therapeutic abortions are arranged.

At the present time, in the State of New York, a woman may go to a doctor and ask for an abortion and, barring lateness of arrival, not being pregnant, or choosing a contrary physician or hospital, she shall have it. This is so because she lives in a country where what she is demanding is being established as a right as, in successive states, the abortion laws are being declared unconstitutional. The trend began in the Supreme Court of California and came east when the American Civil Liberties Union brought suit in the Federal Court in New York City. A not unimaginable suit in the Supreme Court, aimed at voiding the abortion law in all states where abortion is prohibited now, would remove the question from the legislative arena and the reach of public opinion, thus federalizing the whole abortion issue.

Where abortion has been legalized, if a woman is eligible for benefits, Medicare will pay the bill. At the present time there is nothing to indicate that what was first argued as a private right may not soon become a public duty and end, perhaps, as a compulsory obligation. Writers already have pointed out how a welfare worker might pressure a recipient toward an abortion with the implication of curtailment of benefits.

It seems that, weary as we may be with the fatigue of supporting freedom, we have now to contend with the notion that corporate humanity is about to turn over the custody of its life energy to the state. I submit that while we go on worshiping the national idols we are being bewildered by the national bureaucracy. Conditioned by a full ten years of concern about population, we are experiencing a shift in emphasis away from programs for the care of the unwell towards others for the limitation of the well. Dr. Lee DuBridge, until recently Science Adviser to the President of the United States, has advocated fixing the United States population at 250 million, world population at 6 billion, and achievement of zero population growth by the year 2,000.

Senator Robert Packwood has advocated limitation of tax exemption to two children in a family, and has stated that, if voluntary controls do not work, we may have to resort to mandatory controls. He has been supported by Dr. Alan Gutt-macher, President of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, one of the plaintiffs in the New York suit, who has said:

> Each country will have to decide its own form of coercion. At the present the means available are compulsory sterilization and compulsory abortion. Perhaps some day a way of enforcing compulsory birth control will be feasible.

He acknowledges that "in a democracy, introducing compulsory measures or incentive awards to control fertility would admittedly present awesome difficulties." Presumably in a non-democracy it does not.

While his "truth is marching on", abortion is becoming the law of that great country, and fast becoming so here. Sixteen states have adopted abortion-on-demand laws, and five are awaiting United States Supreme Court interpretation of the constitutionality of their therapeutic abortion statutes. While millions of citizens are going to, coming from, saving for, paying off at their shopping centres, in a never-ending litany of getting, his "terrible, swift sword" is being bent into a curette, and the 91st Congress of the United States has before it more than forty legal proposals dealing with the limitation of life, before and after conception.

Not without comment shall it come to pass that a state, so fretful for the preservation of the praying mantis but holding an unborn baby to be of no account, can send a spark of immortality swinging out into limbo and conspire with citizen and physician to turn a fragile living object of simple innocence and complex wonder into a pathetic pulp, and to consign it by rude and peremptory passages to the furnace or sewer—unknown, unwanted, undefended, without benefit of clergy.

Not without comment shall it be made falsely to seem that the fertile adornment of our race can be deluded into the notion that she is a mere portress of unwanted luggage or be, by blandishment, seduced into believing that she has dominion over life not her own. Nor shall it be accounted a virtue to exploit the natural fallibilities and weaknesses of troubled women and girls.

Not without comment shall it be made falsely to appear that any political procurer who takes it into his head can, with impunity and every probability of success, dangle a coin before a profession whose members were pledging, "I will not give a woman a pessary to produce an abortion" before the birth of Christ.

Not without comment shall it be that the poor, the weak and the helpless of this land, whose only vice is that they are so many, shall for a mess of pottage and a ballot, yield over to the state their privacy, their dignity, and their liberty to increase. Is it to be here, among these, where the grapes of wrath are stored, that society is to wield its own terrible swift sword?

It has been estimated that 50,000 abortions will occur in New York City in the first year of the program, and guesses for the entire state range from 110,000 to 500,000. When viewed on a mass scale like this, abortion becomes a great deal more than a quarrel over the moral issues of isolated cases—more even, perhaps than another lonesome stand by the Judeo-Christian ethic, truncheoning with the yeomen of a pluralistic society. At this level of intensity, it is a social phenomenon of profound significance for every citizen, an ultimate imperative which, whether we like it or not, is forcing us to a moral plebiscite that will determine for the indefinite future the spiritual cast of our people as a nation and as a world force.

What I am discussing is not a state of disease nor some surgical stunt, but the deliberate interruption and destruction of a natural process, an act of rape against the internal environment of man. Supporters of the idea argue that it is necessary in order to avoid the diseases of over-population. The question seems to be whether we shall succumb to over-population with our morals more or less intact, or to spiritual suicide with our population balanced.

Neither the simplistic canticles of English common law, nor the nonsensical cadenzas of American uncommon law are adequate to answer this question. If there was little need in the past to defend what once must have seemed self-evident—namely, that an agent of the principle of life is entitled to life—this is no longer the case. Gradually, the state is removing a line once drawn at the outlet of the womb and is, in effect, at one and the same time, bringing what has been ruled to be outside the compass of the law under the effect of the decisions of the law, while failing to make provision for a right of defence.

Either an unborn infant is a human being or it is not, or there is a reasonable doubt that it may be. Either an unborn infant is beyond the scope of the law and immune from any decision which would affect its natural state of existence or it is under the law and entitled to a defence of that existence. We do that much even for wild animal life.

The United States Supreme Court has ruled that a young man may be exempted from military service by virtue of moral convictions developed as a result of "readings in the fields of history and sociology" and that he need no longer claim status as a conscientious objector solely on the basis of religious training and belief. Particularly in the light of so relaxed a view of military exemption, I question most seriously whether it is just, good or wise, to oblige a citizen to contribute health and welfare taxes which he can think of only as blood money, to pay for birth control practices which he believes to be immoral and for abortions which he believes to be murder, based on his moral convictions or his religious training and beliefs.

Every citizen must ask whether onto the piled-up rubbish of the national merchandise culture are to be strewn the shells of the littered hopes and the broken promises of a false and fallen country.

It has been said often enough to amount to an aphorism that morality cannot be legislated; but there is something out of plumb about a society carrying a motto "In God we trust" in its pocket and portraying that what is legislated is neither moral nor immoral, and that what is not legislated, to that extent, simply does not exist at all. Inherited from an age of right and wrong, the motto is out of place in an era of right and non-right, and it is likely to remain so, barring some upsurge of the spirit which, at this time, is nowhere to be seen.

In the pressures of an expanding population within a shrinking environment are to be found the origins of all the dissonances which are vibrating our membranous society. Man out of tune with his environment is disoriented. Man out of tune with himself is demented. Man out of tune with both has been destroyed. Only an uncorrupted spirit, operating through an inflexible will, fastens us to a little apex between animal and robot. In the entire human epoch, no crisis has made a greater demand upon our will and spirit, and perhaps never have they seemed less able to respond. That is our great sin—that we see, that we suffer, and that we do not act.

What is to be said about the population problem? There is one observable fact. The population is increasing. The rest is hypothesis and speculation. Since we are observing a first-of-its-kind phenomenon, something which has never happened before, who is a population expert? You, I, or our neighbour? In the entire existence of the human race to date, we are still only somewhere on the first curve of one cycle of which no man on earth knows the shape. Nor does any man know that it is not merely the first cycle of many yet to come. It would be outside the range of probability, in a universe otherwise so rigorously governed by laws, that there should be none governing the ebb and flow of human existence. That we have not discovered one testifies to the fact that we are early travellers on the curve. That we should set about changing the shape of the curve is as presumptuous as saying that we should undertake to change the orbit of the earth.

In the present circumstances, the first duty of the scientific community is to observe and record, with absolute detachment, total objectivity and scrupulous accuracy, what happens next. I submit that it is not its first duty to proclaim a disease of which no one has ever heard, and, without verifying that it exists, rashly to undertake an arbitrary, empirical, radical, artificial and unnatural form of treatment, without, I might add, the consent of the patient or a licence from the granting authority, who happen to be one and the same, to wit, corporate humanity.

I fear that in this matter part of the scientific community and an angonizing proportion of my own profession are forgetting the cardinal principle of treatment, namely, "First do not harm."

In Reason Awake, from the Columbia University Press, New York, 1970, that most rational of scientists, Dr. Rene Dubos, writes at length of the need for an informed body of scholars capable of critical evaluation of science and of translating that evaluation into language that society can understand. He writes that "Freedom can be maintained only if citizens understand the intellectual basis of scientific expertise sufficiently well to differentiate between persuasion and manipulation by experts," and that "a society that blindly accepts the decisions of experts is a sick society on its way to death."

In a chapter entitled, "Willed Future", Dr. Dubos writes of the risks and shortcomings of forecasting, which, "for reasons that are not clear, and in any case are not justified by actual performance, now enjoys the dignity of an academic profession." He comments at length on the comparatively undeveloped nature of the behavioural and social sciences, and of the difficulties and dangers inherent in trying to adapt the constitutive principles or the concepts and methods of the natural sciences to the social sciences. He points out the need for the behavioural and social sciences "to go through a phase of slowly accruing a core of concrete facts relevant to the mind and society before they can arrive at meaningful abstract formulations of their problems".

He concludes, "When this stage has been reached they may re-examine their relation to natural sciences and perhaps become partly anchored on physiology, ecology and other biological sciences." How well he says that. It is something that I have believed for many years. He refers to the contrast between the problems of physical sciences, involving usually one or two variables at a time, with those of rudimentary social sciences dealing with the enormously intricate complex of variables of human society.

I would like to cite as a single example that the failure of social scientists to take into account a relatively simple perturbation—that some citizens believe that many of these babies ought to be baptized—could result in serious and lasting social divisions, a consequence which no alert and loyal citizen, consciously or subconsciously, would ever desire. A social force, or any system of bureaucracy, which can, with reckless insensitivity ride roughshod over this consideration, merits the searching attention of every sober-minded citizen.

Members of a played-out demi-culture endlessly repeating our last lines, we are missing an opportunity to realize an undreamed-of renaissance. We are dying "inch by inch in play at little games." We are missing the ultimate question on earth of our era—how to expand our environment.

Given the spirit and the will, we are capable of unimagined prodigies. Given the imagination and creative thinking, one could doubt that we have enough workers to accomplish what we are capable of achieving. We can bring about a massive re-ordering of our priorities. With co-ordinated high-level planning and a systems approach we can recreate and recycle our industries, our commerce and our transportation. We can make earth, we can make forests and streams, we can even make one environment above another, if we have to. Through austerities, economies and sacrifices we can develop a natural population in harmony with a natural environment and feel joy again, in an act of gratitude to our past and of generosity to our future. Sooner that we should die trying than that we should try dying.

Like population control in general, abortion is a slovenly short-order, a retreat from thesis to antithesis, an assertion that it is for the good of mankind to stop up the wellspring of mankind. But an abortion is never commonplace. The world holds no heartbreak like the death of innocence. Whenever and wherever it occurs, we all suffer another loss from the little that sustains and holds us together. Not alone because I believe it is murder do I oppose abortion. Not alone because it is a frustration of nature, because it is a degradation of humanity, because it violates that innate respect for life of my profession do I oppose abortion. I oppose abortion also because I believe that in the sophisticated barbarism of a nation destroying its offspring can be sensed the stirrings of despair in a people who are lost and disoriented in a disputative, speculative, innovative wilderness. I oppose abortion because it is fullness emptied, innocence defiled, song unfinished, beauty discarded, dream cloven, hope unsprung. It is the deer, hanged by the neck beside the house of man. It is the razor against the throat of the dove at the window.

I pay homage to those thousands of innocent souls, so rudely deflected from an earth which they shall never inherit. Not for nothing, once before, did a great Church number first among its saints other slaughtered innocents, unreasoning and unblessed, who died for a God whose name they had never heard. Flowers of martyrs, it called them. It may yet be that we are going to have a second spring of new flowers of martyrs, terribly to awaken us before there can be only madness and blackness.

Norman St. John-Stevas, Member of Parliament in the United Kingdom, writing in The Dublin Review 1967-68 states as follows:

> Whatever view one takes of changes in the law the Catholic Church in (Canada), England and the United States by upholding the rights of the unborn child to life is undoutedly a civilizing influence, although too often she is credited merely with being obscurantist. Yet by insisting that the problem be considered seriously as a moral problem and not > superficially as one of techniques she is arousing a conscientious response in others, as the writings of Professor Paul Ramsey and other Protestant theologians bear witness. In an age which is placing through technology unprecedented powers in the hands of man her proclamations of truths about man's nature is not less necessary and relevant but more so. Man may know more but has never been in greater danger of being dehumanized. In the long run only the Christian doctrine of man can effectively moderate the tyranny of scientific techniques. If the concept that man is not absolute master of his fate, but holds his life and body on trust for other purposes, places limits on man's independence by stressing that he is the user not the proprietor of life, it also preserves his humanity by erecting barriers beyond which technology cannot pass. The debt of the United States, which above all other countries is confronted by the technological temptation and by culture, history and temperament, is the most likely to fall, the debt to the Catholic Church today is greater than she knows.

Malcolm Muggeridge has just written a new book titled Something Beautiful for God. I would also like to quote a passage from that latest publication of his, and it is as follows:

> What, I wonder, will posterity—assuming they are at all interested in us and our doings—make of a generation of men, who, having developed technological skills capable of producing virtually unlimited quantities of whatever they might need or desire, as well as enabling them to explore and perhaps colonize the universe, were possessed by a panic fear that soon there would not be enough food for them to eat or room for them to live? It will seem, surely, one of the most derisory, ignominious and despicable attitudes ever to be entertained in the whole of human history; though containing its own corrective. In seeking to avert an imagined calamity, the promoters and practitioners of birth-control automatically abolish themselves, leaving the future to the procreative. An interesting case of self-genocide.

And I might add to hear in the cry of every abandoned child, even in the tiny squeak of the discarded fetus, the cry of the Bethlehem child.

Honourable senators, before concluding, I should like to put on the record a letter published in the Toronto Telegram and the Globe and Mail on October 7, 1971, by my colleagues at St. Michael's College in the University of Toronto. I consider it very important. It reads:

> Stephen Lewis has made abortion legislation an issue in the Ontario Provincial election by pledging that the NDP, if elected, will ask the Federal Government to "take abortion out of the Criminal Code."
> He has promised to back up this request, if it not granted, by challenging Federal Jurisdiction over abortion through court action.
>
> The only reason he gives for this stand is the proposition that "a woman has the right to control her own body."
> The NDP position is surprisingly extreme, and the reason offered in its defence surprisingly weak. Lewis has gone out of his way to make the matter a provincial issue.
> He promises to work aggressively to terminate all regulation of abortion by the Criminal Code.
>
> In offering his reason he overlooks the fact that no one has an unqualified right to control his or her own body. Most important, he ignores the fact that what is involved here is not just the body of the mother, but also that of her child.
> We the undersigned members of the academic staff of St. Michael's College in the University of Toronto, are strongly opposed to the stand taken by the NDP on this important issue.

It is signed by 50 members of the staff.

This editorial appeared on the front page of the Canadian Catholic Register of October 9, 1971:

> Several times in recent weeks, students from Catholic high schools in Ontario have staged demonstrations at political rallies where Premier William Davis had been the main guest.
> They shouldn't have. The suggestion of religious confrontation has no place in the touchy issue of separate school completion. Such demonstrations turn off Catholics and non-Catholics alike.
> Premier Davis opposes completion, but he has done so as a gentleman, which he is. He should be so treated.
> Cool it, kids.

I would like to add the comment that my young Catholic friends in the schools of Ontario would be doing a much greater service for humanity, for their country, for their religion, by carrying their placards in front of every NDP candidate.

Finally, it is late and the din rises. In the gathering darkness of a bemused evening, one barely hears the faint echo "freedom" come back from the surrounding hills—dark hills, where a stealthy bear watches and silently waits. For he sees what we do not yet know—that, in our absence, housebreakers are robbing us of everything that we own, of virtue, honour, integrity, trust, innocence, truth, beauty, justice and liberty.

Thank you, honourable senators, for your patience in listening to me.

On motion of Hon. Mr. McDonald, debate adjourned.

COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

CONFERENCE AT KUALA LUMPUR, MALAYSIA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Allister Grosart rose pursuant to notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Seventeenth General Conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, held at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 3rd to 18th September, 1971, and in particular to the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I do not intend to make a report today. It is my intention to present to the Senate, in due course, with the indulgence of honourable senators, a written report which I trust will have the concurrence of all members of the Canadian delegation.

At that time I shall again ask the indulgence of honourable senators to make a few comments of my own on that report. I am suggesting this in the hope that it might become a pattern for the future. In making these reports there are necessary details which it probably is important to have recorded but which, on the other hand, may not be of immediate interest to honourable senators. I am referring, of course, to what is sometimes called the travelogue type of report, which in many circumstances is necessary but which might, if honourable senators are agreed, not be read but simply attached to our proceedings for the day.

In the meantime, I know that Senator Cameron, who made a very distinguished contribution on behalf of Canada and the Senate in the meetings at Kuala Lumpur, is ready to make some comments, and, with the agreement of the Senate, I am happy to yield to him on this occasion.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, I find myself in the position of not being as well prepared today as I should like to be owing to the fact that it had been my understanding that Senator Grosart was going to make his report first. However, although he has turned the tables on me, I will do my best in the hope that it will not be too arduous for you to put up with me.

First of all, I should like to express my appreciation to the Federal Branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association and to the Leader of the Government in the Senate and to the Prime Minister for having given me the opportunity to make this intensely interesting and valuable trip as one of Canada's representatives.

I should like to say that Senator Grosart, as present Chairman of the Federal Branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, was a very busy man, because as a member of the General Council he had to attend many more meetings than the rest of us. With his typical Irish intransigence he found himself from time to time at odds with certain members of the delegation from the United Kingdom. I hasten to add that I, too, found myself lining up with him in like manner. It made for a lively discussion, and I think that out of this refusal to rubber stamp some of the decisions that have been made in the past by a relatively small group of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Canada has probably played an important role. Senator Grosart deserves much of that credit for the part he played in it.

The Canadian delegation was a strong one. There were seven members from the federal Parliament, and eight of the ten provinces were represented. The only provinces not represented were Alberta, which unfortunately was involved in an election campaign at the time, and Newfoundland, which is unpredictable at the best of times. The Canadian delegation was ably led by the Honourable George McIlraith who has had a great deal of experience of meetings of this kind and who was a long-time member of the cabinet.

On the delegation from the House of Commons were the Honourable T. C. Douglas, Jimmy Walker, Joe Guay from St. Boniface, Romuald Rodrigue from Quebec, and Robert Coates from Nova Scotia. Senator Grosart and I represented the Senate.

The conference was held in Malaysia, thank goodness. It had originally been scheduled to be held in Pakistan and I personally was glad it was not held there.

This is the second time such a conference was held in Malaysia which is not only a beautiful but a gracious country and is well equipped to handle conferences of this kind. Their hotel and transportation facilities are good and there is a graciousness and hospitality about the Malays that leaves little to be desired. The first conference was held there in 1963 and I had the privilege to be the leader of the Canadian delegation at that time. It was a great pleasure to be able to go back to Malaysia and see the tremendous progress that has been made in the intervening years. Malaysia is a developing country which has made tremendous progress in building and developing its economy and getting it all on a sound basis. It is a country with which Canada has had important relations in the past, and these are growing closer day by day.

As I have said, the Malays were gracious hosts and they did everything in their power to look after the comfort, pleasure and convenience of the delegates, and particularly of those delegates whose wives were accompanying them. Having attended many international conferences I can say that at no conference in my experience have the wives been as well or as graciously looked after as they were in Malaysia. There were 225 official delegates to the conference, or 244 when the wives were counted. These delegates represented 69 legislatures and parliaments from 29 countries; 75 per cent of the delegations were black, brown, yellow or a mixture of all three. They came from large countries such as Canada and India and from small countries, such as Tonga and Samoa. But regardless of colour, race or creed, they had certain basic things in common. The first was the English language; secondly, the English tradition of law; thirdly, the British tradition of freedom. While I am sometimes critical of the performance of United Kingdom delegations at conferences of this kind, I must say that I do not think they sell their story as well as they might. I say that, honourable senators, because if you look around a conference of that kind you realize that the delegates represent something over 700 million people, one of the greatest associations of people in the world, cutting across race, creed, religion and colour, united by a common language, a common system of law and a common respect for freedom. This is a very great tradition indeed and one of which the British do not make as much of as they could. Possibly this is the result of traditional British understatement, but I think in these days when they are so frequently criticized they could have made more of it.

This is a great voluntary association of peoples, and in my judgment is one of the great positive factors for peace and understanding today, at a time when we have altogether too much friction, misunderstanding and discord.

We had a heavy agenda. It was necessary to divide the program of topics into sections. It was not possible for any delegate to attend all the meetings, because he could not be at two meetings at one time. The delegates had to attend those they were assigned to. The topics that made up the conference agenda were extremely varied and important. They were divided into four sections, as follows:

1. The Commonwealth and Problems of World Security
   (a) South East Asia and the Indian Ocean; Security and Neutrality
   (b) Impact on the Commonwealth of recent events in Southern Africa and the rest of Africa
   (c) West Asia (the Middle East) and the Mediterranean
2. Challenges to Parliamentary Democracy
   (a) Military coups and revolutionary movements
   (b) The freedom of the individual human rights and the authority of government in a parliamentary democracy
   (c) Relationship between Parliament, Ministers and Civil Servants
   (d) Strengthening the parliamentary system in developing countries
3. Economic Development
   (a) Britain and the EEC
   (b) Problems of countries of the Commonwealth affected by Britain's entry into the EEC
   (c) Terms of trade between developed and developing countries
   (d) Commonwealth self-help; Aid and capital flow
   (e) Promotion of tourism in the Commonwealth
4. Problems of the Environment
   (a) Pollution and control
   (b) Preservation of endangered wildlife
   (c) Population growth
   (d) Urbanization.

I think the Canadian delegation gave a fairly good account of itself. It was my good fortune, or perhaps misfortune, to be the second speaker in the program. The program was opened by the Honourable Tun Dr Ismail,

Deputy Prime Minister of Malaysia. I was asked if I would speak second on the topic of Southeast Asia and the Indian Ocean. If there is any topic I have a greater ignorance of than that one I have yet to find it. I can only think that the reason I was selected to speak second on this subject was because I had made some critical remarks in this house last winter about the decision of the British Government to go ahead and carry out the terms of the Simonstown Agreement, which is the arrangement under which Britain undertook to supply a small number of naval craft, aircraft and equipment of that kind to South Africa. This decision greatly irritated African countries at the time, and it is still irritating them, because they say they do not accept the explanation given by the United Kingdom delegation of why it was necessary to implement the Simonstown Agreement.

I must confess that I am still not convinced that the explanation they gave was the right one, that it was necessary to protect the trade lines of communication round the Cape. Protect them against whom? Certainly not against the African countries, because they could not do much about it. Obviously the action was against the gradual expansion of Russian influence in the Indian Ocean. It is interesting to note that last year 130 Russian ships called at Capetown, which is not a great many in a year. At Singapore, 430 ships called, and Singapore on the Malacca Straits is probably the throat of one of the greatest bottlenecks or arteries of transportation in the world today. It is one of the most strategic areas in the world. All the oil flow to Japan goes through that strait; Japanese goods coming to America go through there. In short, Singapore and the Straits of Malacca are one of the busiest waterways in the world today and one of the most strategic.

To say that the small handful of aircraft and ships that were committed under the Simonstown Agreement could deter the Russians does not make sense, in either logic or reason. Therefore, it is something more than that. Some say it is a psychological commitment, that it will have an effect. Others say it is a sort of declaration of the continuing presence of the British in that area. I made a speech along these lines, which was very popular among the Africans in particular, but not popular among some of the United Kingdom people who spent some of their time attacking me. Fortunately, some of my Canadian colleagues spoke in similar vein, particularly the Honourable Gerald Regan, Premier of Nova Scotia, who was one of our delegates, and a number of others. Thus, I was not alone. It was a very interesting session.

I want to emphasize that we are at a stage in the history of the world's development when tremendous changes are taking place and we can sense the beginnings of a shift of power. I shall say more about that later. With the withdrawal of the British from east of Suez there has developed a sort of power vacuum, and other countries are moving into that vacuum. Of course, other countries have been moving in for a long time, for as long as a hundred years. It started with the British going into China at the time of the opium war between 1842 and 1848. Then there was the American declaration of the Monroe Doctrine when they took over the islands of the Philippines, Hawaii and Samoa, and they have been extending their influence ever since. The emergence of Japan since the last war as one of the great powers and trading nations of the world is a third factor. A fourth factor which is giving so much concern is the gradual insertion of Russian power and Russian trade into the Indian Ocean.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Is that not a very real threat?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Yes, it is real, but the reasons may vary and you have to take your choice. The reasons are giving concern to a number of countries. India is concerned. China is concerned, because at the moment there are 900,000 troops facing each other along the southern border between China and Russia. China is concerned because she thinks the Russians are going around to get at the soft under-belly of China. There are tensions developing there which may give some considerable concern in time to come.

I want to emphasize one of the great advantages of a conference of this kind. Regardless of how important may be the topics that are on the program, at best one can only deal with them in a superficial manner. For example, in a delegation such as the Canadian delegation—a delegation of seventeen or eighteen people—one person may be assigned eight or ten minutes as his share of the time. We all know how much one can cover in eight or ten minutes. In other words, one is left with a feeling of having made an inadequate contribution. Even when a delegation organizes its presentation, as ours did, so that there was an avoidance of duplication, one still had the feeling that the subject was not being covered adequately.

I think this applied to most topics. It was certainly the feeling of most of the delegations. For this reason, it is all the more important that the delegates have an opportunity to exchange ideas, to get to know each other, in a personal and informal way, on the trips, in their hotels, and over luncheons and dinners.

I do not intend to get into a travelogue, such as Senator Grosart has mentioned. Anyone can do that. I wish to deal with the implications of what went on, the face to face discussions and the confrontations between peoples. Those discussions were greatly facilitated by the fact that we had an opportunity to stay in one hotel, to travel together in buses and cars, and to meet in the beautiful parliament buildings of Malaysia. I want to emphasize that these informal exchanges are just as valuable as the formal sessions, and sometimes more so.

Of the topics that received most attention, those of the security of the Indian Ocean, Southeast Asia and the Indian Ocean, would be the first; secondly, the impact on the Commonwealth of recent events in southern Africa and the rest of Africa. Undoubtedly, the emergent nations in Africa are very critical of the British decision to implement the Simonstown Agreement, because they are afraid, if and when it can be implemented, the British and others will go much further in supplying arms to Africa, and the African peoples are afraid that these arms will some day be used against them.

In defence of the British, I would say that when, in 1963 or 1964, they did stop the sale of arms to Africa, our French friends moved in. All that happened, as far as Britain was concerned, was that they lost the sale and the French took it on, and still retain it.

Military coups and revolutionary movements in Africa are the concern of everyone. We mislead ourselves if we think we can impose a democratic system on some of these developing countries. Honourable senators know the degree of efficiency that we have reached in Canada and the United Kingdom, in the application of the democratic principle. Consider, then, how much more difficult it is to make democracy work in a country where there is a high degree of illiteracy, where people are not familiar with the system, and where it is necessary to get action on the immediate problems of developing nationhood, developing trade, developing industry, and so on. Therefore, it is not at all surprising that dictators move in, and that many countries in Africa are governed by military dictators of one kind or another today. This cannot make us happy, but we have to face realities.

I would be less than frank if I did not say it gives me some concern that the next parliamentary conference will be held in Malawi. To say that country is a democracy is, to say the least, stretching it a long way. Some of those most critical of the conference being held in Malawi were the Tanzanians—and I do not think our friends in Tanzania can throw any stones, either. Therefore, we find a situation in which there is a mixture of dictatorships and semi-dictatorships among these emerging nations. We must pay some attention to this point.

The next topic was the role of Britain and the European Economic Community. Developing countries in particular were greatly concerned about the impact of Britain's entry into the EEC. Of course, Canada is concerned about this also. Undoubtedly it will hurt Canada to some extent, but it will hurt the developing countries much more. One of the countries which will be hurt in particular by Britain's entry is New Zealand. It is not a developing country in the same sense as the others, but New Zealand will be hurt. I must say the New Zealand delegation took a statesmanlike stand. Senator Grosart will agree, I think, that they took a very constructive position; they realized their country would be hurt, but they felt that in the long run it was inevitable that Britain would become part of the European Economic Community.

Honourable senators, it is to the smaller countries that this is a real problem. They are trying to get on their feet and to establish industry, and are doing this under great difficulties. They are afraid that Britain's entry into the EEC will mean they will lose British preference—and they will, in some cases—and they are asking whether this will condemn developing countries to become mere suppliers of raw materials to the developed countries, and purchasers of manufactured goods from the developed countries. They say, time and time again, that in spite of the huge amount of aid they receive, the gap between the developing and the developed countries is becoming wider as time goes on.

Therefore, there is a great deal of uneasiness in these small countries about the impact of Britain's entry into the EEC.

Honourable senators, another concern is the terms of trade between the developed and the developing countries. One can scarcely call India a developing country; it is one of the emerging great powers today, and I hope to say more about it later on. The Indians today say they have grave reservations about the benefit to them of foreign aid. Other peoples are saying the same thing. They say that 75 or 80 per cent of the aid money is spent in the country which is giving the aid. It is spent there for manufactured goods, made in that country, whether it be the United States, the United Kingdom or somewhere else. They say that the technical help of experts comes from the United States, the United Kingdom, and other wealthy countries, and that the payments for this go back to those countries. In this way, they claim, the amount which the developing countries get out of foreign aid is relatively small. The Indians, in particular, are wondering whether it is worth it. They feel that they are not getting as much out of aid as the dollar value would seem to suggest, and they are complaining about the terms of the tied aid. I will say something about that also later.

The promotion of tourism is looked upon as one of the great areas of possibility in all these countries. If we can get our airlines to cut their fares in half—and I feel they will be forced to do this—they will fill the jumbo-jets that are flying half-empty, not to mention the DC-8s. Malaysia can be one of the most attractive tourist countries of the world. Not only does it have a fascinating historical background, but its hotels and convention facilities are first-class. It is a beautiful country, and its rates are about half those of this country so far as hotel accommodation and meals are concerned. One of the main factors in building up their economy would be a reduction in the cost of transportation.

I shall now say a few words with respect to problems of the environment, pollution and control, preservation of endangered wildlife, population growth, and urbanization. Senator Grosart made an eloquent plea at the conference for the preservation of endangered wildlife. It was an excellent presentation. Mr. Joe Guay from St. Boniface also made a good presentation on the problems of urban development today. He was in an excellent position to do so, because he was mayor of St. Boniface for a long time, and thus spoke from first-hand knowledge.

I also was assigned to a particular topic. It became my lot to deal in part with water control. But how much can you contribute in ten minutes? I did some homework on the subject. It is a topic we will be discussing in this chamber frequently since it presents one of the most important problems that will face us in the years to come.

In the course of my studies I attempted to arrive at the costs we must face if we are to do anything realistic and practical in coping with the problem of pollution. The best estimate I was able to come up with, by a rough rule of thumb, is that somewhere between 2 per cent and 4 per cent of the gross national product will be required annually, not to control pollution but to hold the line. Let me take the lower figure. That means that the cost to the ten most developed nations would be in the range of sixty billion dollars a year. This is the cost we will have to face if we are to make any reasonable attempt to preserve the environment today, and it gives some idea of how important this matter is, and how carefully we must look at it in the future.

That is by way of general discussion. For the next few minutes I should like to discuss generally what, in my judgment, is one of the most important values that can come out of a conference of this kind. I am referring to the opportunity the conference provides for a delegate not only to meet the people in the host country and to get to know their government officials and the people themselves, but also to see the other countries either going to or coming from the conference.

On this occasion, when I discovered it cost only $25 more to buy a ticket to go round the world than to go from Ottawa to Malaysia and back—well, you know what a Scotsman would do!

We went from Vancouver to Japan. Japan is a fascinating country to visit at any time. I have been there on half a dozen occasions. It is more exciting each time, and it was particularly exciting on this occasion owing to the impact of what the Japanese call the "Nixon bombshell", the implications of which had just begun to percolate.

I was in the fortunate position of having former students of mine strategically placed in many of the main industries in Japan, Hong Kong, Singapore, and London. That is one of the collateral advantages which come from spending 40 years in the field of university education. Each time I visit these places I speak to these businessmen and thus I am not only able to get the official line, which sometimes has to be couched in vague generalities for diplomatic purposes, but to get the direct reaction of the businessmen.

One day I sat round the table with seven men who were graduates of our business school. These men ranged from the managerial level to the vice-presidential level in such companies as Mitsubishi, and so on. I have not met an abler group of men anywhere. Knowing them on a friendly and personal basis, I was able to get their reaction, and that of others as well.

I must say that the announcement on August 15 of the new economic policy of the United States hung like a pall over the whole area of Asia. It hung over the conference as well. I shall try to give you the Japanese reaction. The United States was demanding that Japan revalue the yen by 15 per cent, and permit the United States to establish plants in Japan in order to take advantage of the low-cost productivity and cheaper labour there. The Japanese reaction to that is that they will do neither. They may be forced to, but they do not think so. The reason is that Japan is a tremendous trading nation and represents one of the economic miracles of our time.

It is interesting to compare the impact on Japan to the impact on Canada of that economic policy. You can see the difference in part when I tell you that 60 per cent of our exports go to the United States, 25 per cent of which is affected by the surcharge and the other things that go with it, whereas Japan's exports to the U.S.A. comprise 10 per cent of her gross national product, with only 2 per cent of that being affected by the surcharge and the related tariff barriers. So, by no means is the surcharge as important to Japan as it is to Canada. Nevertheless, it is important because that 2 per cent represents a huge dollar volume, but the Japanese are saying at the present time that they will not accept what they call the dictates of the United States.

This has far-ranging implications which I will not go into at the present time, other than to say that the Japanese are being diplomatically correct in dealing with the United States, but are very much annoyed.

As an alternative, the Japanese say that they are shifting their trading patterns; this, too, has implications for Canada. But the immediate impact is along certain lines. First of all, it was inevitable that Japan would go into China. The mainland Chinese market of 800 million people is a natural market for a great trading nation like Japan, and they were bound to go into it eventually. But the Nixon policy has speeded up that development by at least ten years, if not more. Thus, the Japanese are going into Hong Kong. They are buying factories, plants, and land there. They are going into Singapore, and doing the same thing. They are paying almost twice what the Chinese would pay for the same things. They are using these plants as stepping stones or launching pads for getting into China, because there is a tremendous trade today between Hong Kong and Singapore and mainland China. There is this immediate shift that the Japanese are making. They had 2,000 men at the Canton Trade Fair in China last month—almost more than all the other countries put together. So, the resourceful, aggressive, dynamic Japanese are saying, "We will not accept the dictates of the United States unless we are forced to, and we do not think we will be." But Japan is following a determined and logical long-range plan to shift its trading patterns, which includes a determination to play a bigger role in Canada.

I think honourable senators are familiar with the fact that by 1976 Japan will have contracts for something like three billion dollars worth of goods, services, and investments in plants in Alberta, British Columbia, and Ontario. That is a tremendous investment. Most of that is in coal—15 million tons of coal—but they are negotiating now on the possibility of a nuclear plant for enriched uranium, and other things of that nature.

What is true of the Japanese I found also in Hong Kong when I talked to the delegates from there. Again, I was able to get some of this information from my former students who are now senior businessmen in Hong Kong. The same thing applies in Singapore.

I referred earlier to the concern of the developing countries about the various aid programs, and said they were worried about the new economic policy of the United States, and the threat, as they see it, of being condemned to supplying raw materials and consuming manufactured goods for the rest of time. They do not want that. They see themselves as being kept in a minor position vis-à-vis the developed nations and they see no way of getting out of that position. In spite of the various aid plans, such as the Colombo Plan and others, the developing countries emphasize that the gap between the have and the have-not nations is growing wider year by year. They also point out that much of the United States and other aid is so restricted by the "buy American" policy or similar policies that most of it goes to United States exporters or to United States technical experts on loan to developing countries.

You may have read that since the Nixon announcement on August 15, the Mills Committee on Ways and Means in the United States Congress has been meeting, and has confirmed that only United States goods are eligible for the recently announced 7 per cent tax credit on capital goods. As Time, in its issue of October 4 last, says:

> That is one part of Nixon's program that foreigners especially resent, since it raises a barrier against their products above and beyond those already imposed by currency revaluations and the import surtax. Unless Congress changes this petty "buy American" rule, it could further help ignite retaliatory fires abroad.

There is no question about this. All countries are concerned about it, and are worried about how to cope with it. I do not think any country wishes to engage in retaliatory action at the present time, but unless some solution can be found in the immediate future they may have no other recourse. We may then find ourselves on the slippery slope sliding into a repetition of the situation in the 1930s, and heaven forbid that that should happen again.

Such is a cursory and superficial review of the attitudes of the Commonwealth countries to the policy of the United States. In short, there is a deep resentment against the policy on the part of many countries, and many of them cannot understand why Canada, the good neighbour of the United States, should be the country hurt most of all.

From the positive point of view, let me say that as distasteful as the American program might be, it will have served a useful and constructive purpose if it forces the world community of nations to evolve a new stable and equitable system of foreign exchange not based on gold. Again, this could be something far removed from the Commonwealth Conference, but it concerned every delegate there because it hit them with tremendous impact. It was inevitable that the trading nations should get into trouble as long as they depended on a fixed rate of exchange based on gold. There seems to be a general concensus that a new international medium of exchange must be found, and very quickly. At the moment the thinking seems to be in favour of using SDRs, or Special Drawing Rights, and to work out a program of exchange ratios in relation to the SDR unit which will provide for greater flexibility, and help to avoid some of the panic actions that result under the present system.

[Hon. Mr. Cameron.]

In the meantime the longer the United States surcharge remains in effect, the greater the danger that affected nations will be forced to take retaliatory action. If such a program of retaliation and self-defence starts, we could find ourselves, as I have said, sliding involuntarily into a repetition of the 1930s, and this would be a major calamity for all mankind.

The problem is so serious that this is a time when all nations must take a larger view in the interests of the common good, and no nation will benefit more from such action than the United States.

In the closing section of this address I should like to dwell on some of the long-range changes in the world power structure which are taking place, particularly in Asia. These are changes in the power structure which has obtained for the last 100 years, and they may take 10, 25 or 50 years to come to fulfilment, but they are changes that will have a fundamental impact on the western world. The sooner we understand this the better.

It has been said by historians that the 21st century will belong to Asia, and I do not think there is a shadow of doubt that this will be so. But few people in the western world realize it yet. The sooner they do the better it will be for them, and for all of us. There is a book which has been drawn to my attention by our embassy staff in Delhi, and which is required reading for all staffs of the Department of External Affairs and trade commissioners today. It is by an Indian author and editor, Patwant Singh, and is entitled The Struggle for Power in Asia. It is a book which I recommend to you. It is not lengthy. It represents not only the new thinking in India today, which is important to all of us, but also the beginning of a revolution and a feeling of Asian-ness which has not existed before. In a section of the book which is headed "The United States from George Washington and The Munroe Doctrine to Vietnam and Nixon", Patwant Singh says:

> No nation, no matter how lofty its ideals and how genuine its desire to abide by them, can base its foreign policy on considerations other than the national interest. It has become modish to interpret measures aimed at securing the national interest as crusades waged in defense of freedom and democracy. The reality is somewhat different.

From George Washington's farewell address in 1796 through the Munroe Doctrine to Dulles' alleged justification for intervention in Vietnam, to Nixon's new economic policy, we see the convenience of using the "national interest" as an excuse for doing many things.

The intervention in Vietnam was to save that country's "democratic government", and to save Asia and the world from communism. Time will not permit my going into detail on the justifications or rationalizations that have been used in the last 100 years to justify American policies in pursuit of the national interest, but suffice it to say that two current actions in the pursuit of the national interest will have far-reaching and long-range effects at this particular point in time, and they are (1) the invasion of Vietnam and the resulting defeat in Indo-China, and (2) the Nixon economic policy.

The fact that a small, poor country like North Vietnam could stall the most modern war machine the world has ever seen has given a new confidence to the small nations in the developing countries, not only in Indo-China but in Africa and South America as well. That is where the impact is coming. These people say, "If these poor peasants of Indo-China can do what they have done, we can do the same." I get this reaction from Africans, and from people in South America. Since 1961, the United States has spent $344 billion in Indo-China, and in the course of that struggle thousands of acres have been destroyed. They do not know for how long. This has left a legacy of hatred that will remain all over Asia for many years to come.

This is the American policy in pursuit of the alleged national interest, and it has been to support the military dictators in Indo-China and other places. The native peoples not only in Asia but in Africa as well are pointing out—and I emphasize this—that these actions are in direct contradiction of the supposed original objectives of going into Indo-China. As a result, American policy and American prestige have suffered, but this has repercussions for all of us in the western world.

A basic fact that must be kept in mind when assessing the changing orientation in Asia today is that the Nixon bombshell is interpreted by the Japanese, the Chinese and many Indians as another attempt to force American self-interest on the rest of the world. They said this about the British before that. To understand what is happening in Asia today we must go back into history and sketch in the roles the great powers have played there in the twentieth century—by this I mean a cursory assessment of the roles of Great Britain, the United States, Japan, the USSR, China and India.

Patwant Singh, in The Struggle for Power in Asia, says:

> The fury and ferment in Asia today are part of a struggle for identity, dignity and true political and economic independence on the one hand, and for markets and ideological strongholds on the other. In the struggle to achieve their objectives the more powerful nations have assembled fearful instruments of power and destruction in Asia, and scarred the continent with violence and subversion.

Close to one million Chinese and Russian troops are massed along the Sino-Soviet borders, while half a million Americans have been fighting an undeclared war in Indo-China. He goes on:

> Near Sinkiang's Takla Makan Desert, China is testing increasingly sophisticated nuclear devices—clear proof that an Asian super power is in the making. Japan, whose GNP ranks next only to the United States and Russia, is emerging as a strong, solvent and unpredictable Asian Power.

Singh also says:

> From the Himalaya ranges to the swamps of Southeast Asia, from the oceans which rim Asia to the islands on which millions of Asians live, from the backwoods to the great and restless cities of this region, an explosion of expectations, ideas, and aspirations is taking place. This explosion is producing results, which, while admittedly uneven, are indicative of the momentum Asia's economic and political programmes are beginning to gather.

Over the last 50 years western influence, which was largely confined to commercial exploitation by a number of rival interests, national and otherwise, continued, with the passage of time, to wrench even further apart the disjointed and artifical units it had established for its own purposes. More recently, the clashing post-war economic and security interests of the super powers have brought much of the present violence and turmoil to Asia.

China closed her doors to the world to give herself a chance to achieve political, social, and economic development in an environment free of the disruptive influence of outside powers. But it is the other Asian countries, either because they were disinclined or unable to pull their shutters down, which have become the setting for the conflicting interests of the super powers. Esoteric explanations by political and social scientists aside, it is the "cold war"—a misnomer in so far as Asia is concerned—which has brought bloody conflict to Asia in the years since the Second World War. An awareness of all this, and the resentments which flow from it, are generating an Asian mood, a sense of "Asia-ness" which, though not a very tangible force at present, will become, in direct proportion to the extent which western powers ignore it, an implacable new element in Asia.

It is important that the western world take note of this mood of Asian nationalism, with all its implications, before assessing the probable course of events in Asia during the seventies and later. It is important for the western world to realize that the present East-West relationship is very shaky at the start of the seventies. Not only is there a growing resentment in Asia at the bombing, burning, and destruction which is carried on in the name of freedom and peace, but there is a reaction setting in to the conditions on which aid is given, trade conducted, and political influence exerted. No assessment of the future course of events in Asia can ignore the implications of this mood.

I will not go into this any further. It may sound as if it is a peripheral subject. It is a peripheral subject only in the sense that this represents the emergence of a new spirit in Asia that has tremendous implications and significance for us. The sooner we realize what is happening as a result of this new confidence and this new emergence, the better it will be for all of us.

The Indians, for example, are extremely impressed with what the Russians, the Chinese, and the Japanese have done. They see that 50 years ago Russia was devastated by civil war, her factories destroyed and the country in ruins; yet now they see she has become one of the super powers, without any outside help. The Indians observe that in 1949 China was in similar situation—devastated by civil war, the country destroyed and bankrupt. Today, 20 years later, China is on the verge of becoming another super power. They point out that in 1945 Japan was devastated, and she has risen, Phoenix-like out of the ashes of the destruction, to be one of the great industrial powers of today. India is therefore saying to herself, "We have a huge land mass. We have 550 million people. What the Russians, the Chinese and Japanese have done, we can do too." This is the message that is beginning to come through from Asia today, a message which we Canadians particularly, who have such strategic and commercial interests and potential in the Far East, must keep in mind.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Grosart, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, October 7, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Laird that the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the parole system in Canada.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, the motion by Senator Laird is that the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the parole system in Canada. When speaking to his motion, the honourable senator mentioned that many Canadians say our parole system in Canada is too lenient, and that many crimes would never have been committed had the criminals concerned not been released on parole. Senator Laird gave no specific examples, and did not show by statistics that such a belief has any basis in fact. However, he is of the opinion it is time to learn whether the criticism he mentioned is justified, and to find out if the present parole system does or does not work.

From the other speeches which have been given, it has been shown that while the parole system has an impressive record of success, there is a tendency by the public to blame the system for the rising crime rate. As has been pointed out, the proposed examination would serve a very useful purpose, by giving the public much information about the system and about how it works, including the type of supervision and assistance given to a person on parole, and by whom.

Honourable senators,, the word "parole" is defined in the Parole Act to mean the authority granted under the act to an inmate to be at large during his term of imprisonment. The definition used in the Report of the Canadian Committee on Correction is much more descriptive. It says "parole" is a procedure whereby an inmate of a prison who is considered suitable may be released at a time considered appropriate by a parole board, before the expiration of his sentence, so he may serve the balance of his sentence at large in society, but subject to stated conditions, under supervision, and subject to return to prison if he fails to comply with the conditions governing his release.

[Hon. Mr. Cameron.]

In a pamphlet entitled "Parole in Canada", issued a few years ago under the authority of the then Solicitor General, we find this statement:

> The dual purpose of parole is the reformation and rehabilitation of the inmate and the protection of society. Offenders who have made good use of their time in custody and who have shown a desire to lead a law-abiding life in the future are given the opportunity of living in the community under supervision.

The National Parole Board has wide authority. For example, section 10(1)(a) of the Parole Act says the board may grant parole to an inmate subject to any terms or conditions it considers desirable, if the board considers that:

> (i) in the case of a grant of parole other than day parole, the inmate has derived the maximum benefit from imprisonment,
> (ii) the reform and rehabilitation of the inmate will be added by the grant of parole, and
> (iii) the release of the inmate on parole would not constitute an undue risk to society;

It can be seen the parole board has a wide discretion when it comes to the granting of parole. It is obvious, too, it has a very grave responsibility. It has a difficult function to perform and one does not envy the board members their work. After all, if the board should make an erroneous assessment of an inmate's application for parole, it can have very serious consequences. If it grants an application which should not have been granted, there can be drastic and, indeed, tragic results. And, if such results do happen, the widespread publicity which follows makes the public suspect the whole parole system, not to mention the harm which may be done to some innocent victim.

Personally, I think the members of the parole board are to be commended for the manner in which they carry out their difficult work. Actually one hears very little criticism of their work, even when the system itself is criticized. Everyone agrees that the members of the board are dedicated people who are successfully using the parole system to assist prisoners and, at the same time, to protect society.

However, since the parole board must work under the conditions and terms of the Parole Act, it may very well be that an examination, as proposed, would show a need for amendment or new legislation. In any event, I am sure the views of the members of the board would be both interesting and helpful.

Honourable senators, in discussing the parole system we must consider why the inmates of the prisons were sentenced to prison terms in the first place. Often nowadays one would get the impression that the inmates of the prisons are all unfortunate people who through no fault of their own did some criminal act. Great sympathy is expressed for the criminal, and one would think they were the victims rather than the perpetrators of the crime.

One has to maintain a balanced point of view in these matters. Certainly, I have no objection to aiding the prisoner, but it is more important to aid the victim of the crime—especially when the crime involves violence to the person. I do take objection to the point of view that society is taking revenge on persons convicted of crimes when they are sent to prison. I take objection to the point of view that society is responsible for the commission of crimes because it allows poor environment, lack of education and lack of tender, loving care, which compel some poor unfortunate to commit crime. I object to the point of view that a person is not responsible for his own actions, as it denies a man has free will.

In any event, while keeping a balanced point of view on these matters, I think there should be some agreement as to the reasons for imprisoning people in the first place. We hear a great deal in these days about the rehabilitation of the prison inmates. Indeed, one would get the impression that persons are only sent to prison to provide living quarters for them while they undergo a course of rehabilitation. I agree that rehabilitation is a worthy and important objective, but it is not the reason why people are sent to prison. If a person were sentenced to a term of years for rehabilitation only, I am sure it could be accomplished in more comfortable quarters and a more pleasant environment. A person is sent to prison, after being convicted of a crime, for three reasons—as a punishment for committing the crime, as a deterrent to others, and for rehabilitation. Indeed, it is only when we recognize this to be a fact that parole makes any logic or sense. As you know, the idea of punishment is contained in the regulations because, generally speaking, a person will not be paroled until he has served at least one-third of his sentence.

Honourable senators, I think that in discussing this motion we must remember the parole system is but one part or one aspect of the whole administration of the criminal law in Canada. It might very well be that Senator Laird's motion should be broadened and enlarged to permit an examination of the whole administration of the criminal law, even though we would be dealing with matters not wholly under federal jurisdiction. Perhaps such an examination would suggest some means whereby there could be, for example, uniformity of sentencing for the same offence. At the present time there is no such uniformity, even within provinces, and, as a result, the work of the parole board is much more difficult.

I think the parole board must be in fact, although not in theory, a kind of board of review. If the board does not so act, then the regulations requiring the applicant for parole to serve one-third of his sentence would be wholly unjust.

It is my firm conviction that the whole field of administration of justice in Canada, and especially of the criminal law, needs to be given a very close and detailed examination with a view to making it much more efficient and effective. Perhaps such an examination would reveal why, quite often, persons charged with criminal offences are not brought to trial until several months have elapsed from the time the crime was committed. Such an examination might determine whether our jury system, once the safeguard of the individual, is now either necessary or even desirable.

I know that under the Constitution the administration of justice is a provincial matter, but I sometimes wonder whether something could be worked out between the federal Department of Justice and even one of the provinces by which, on an experimental basis, it could be determined whether the administration of justice, especially of the criminal law, could be improved. I might say in passing that I do not believe an annual addition to the already long list of judges is going to solve anything.

Before concluding my remarks perhaps I should return to the motion before us, and discuss the other side of the picture, as it were. I refer to the loss or forfeiture of parole. Section 5 of the Parole Act gives the board exclusive jurisdiction and absolute authority to grant, refuse to grant, or to revoke any parole. Section 19 gives any member of the board authority to suspend a parole under practically any circumstance. Under section 13 of the act, if a person under parole is convicted of an indictable offence, his parole is automatically forfeited. Thus, in any examination of the parole system, attention should also be paid to the reasons for suspending parole. It may very well be that in some cases the supervision of the person on parole is too strict, and that the parole is suspended or cancelled for relatively minor reasons.

In my opinion, the worst feature of the cancellation or forfeiture of parole is that the parolee not only has to serve the full term of his sentence, but also loses his statutory and earned remission. Under section 17 of the Parole Act, for example, if parole is forfeited by a conviction for an indictable offence, the parolee has to undergo a term of imprisonment equal to the portion of the term to which he was sentenced that remains unexpired at the time of his parole, and this also includes any period of remission then standing to his credit, even including his earned remission.

In my view, this is wholly wrong. There may be some justification for making a paroled person serve out his whole sentence, if his parole is forfeited, although I do not know what that justification is, but I cannot understand why he should lose his periods of remission. The revocation of his period of earned remission is, in my opinion, a very grave injustice.

I might also say in passing that I do not think any weight should be given to the argument that it is cheaper to keep a person on parole than it is to keep him in prison. The question of whether to have more or fewer people on parole is of such importance that I do not believe the financial aspect should have any bearing in the discussion at all.

Honourable senators, from my remarks you may have gathered that I do not hold a strong opinion on whether or not this motion should be agreed to. Actually, I am mildly in favour of it, because I can see that it would serve a very useful purpose in bringing to light any weaknesses in the system. Suggested improvements could be examined, and the general public would get an insight into how the system works.

I notice that the motion is:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the parole system in Canada.

I take it from that wording that the committee would have to decide first whether it should make such an examination. I believe it is only right that such work should not be placed upon the committee without the consent of its members. Personally, I would favour a special committee to look into this matter, because then those who are more interested in the subject could act upon it. However, if the committee is prepared to make the examination, then I will vote in favour of the motion.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I should like to commend the distinguished senator from Cape Breton for his most lucid and informative address, and his careful observations with respect to parole in Canada. I know he would not expect or want one hundred per cent agreement with some of the views he has expressed. Having said that, I move that the debate be adjourned until the next sitting.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hastings, debate adjourned.

FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO MAKE PAYMENTS—OMISSION OF ACT FROM REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1970—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Forsey calling the attention of the Senate to the Government's failure to make certain payments as required by the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and to the omission of that Act from the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970—(Honourable Senator Martin, P.C.).

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, I ask permission of the house to proceed in this matter.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that the honourable Senator McDonald proceed now in place of the honourable Senator Martin?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I am sure all honourable senators are aware that many things have happened with respect to the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and the so-called stabilization bill since we met yesterday. It is my understanding that it was impossible to obtain agreement to postpone or adjourn a court action which was to commence this morning. That court action is brought by four farmers of Saskatchewan against the Minister of Finance, Mr. Benson, with respect to payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

I understand also that if that action had been adjourned there was every possibility that under Standing Order 75B in the other place this matter could have been brought to a conclusion very quickly.

I want to say that personally I am extremely disappointed that the Government was not able to proceed under Standing Order 75B, because I am told that three parties in the other house had agreed to that procedure.

The Government refused to engage in a court action on this issue—and I think this is a decision all of us can understand—and as a consequence they have decided to pay $62.1 million to the Canadian Wheat Board under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. In fact, that payment has now been received by the Canadian Wheat Board.

As far as I am concerned, the NDP must bear the responsibility for the fact that the Prairie farmers will now receive $62.1 million on last year's crop instead of $100 million. It is unfortunate for the farmers of western Canada that this has happened in the Parliament of this country.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Since the announcement made last night in the House of Commons of the intention of the Government to withdraw the Prairie Grain Stabilization bill under the circumstances explained by the Acting Leader of the Government, it is quite obvious that the debate suggested by the motion of Senator Forsey has lost its practical purpose. Therefore, we can only agree to forget about it.

However, I commend the Acting Leader of the Government for explaining the circumstances under which the decision of the Government was made, since in the other place all parties except one agreed to proceed with the provisions of the bill which increased or added to the payments to be made to the grain growers, if the other provisions of the bill were withdrawn, and the Government was prepared to accept this proposal if the case initiated by some people in the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan was withdrawn. I think I can quote from the Hansard of the other place—since it is a decision of the Government, I am not quoting from a debate—the announcement by the Honourable Allan MacEachen:

> Mr. Speaker, I understand that discussions have taken place. Because of the desire not to begin the committee stage of the tax bill tonight, because I have not really given the House any advance notice about any other items and, further, because the item upon which I had intended to make a time allocation is about to depart from our midst, I would like merely to advise hon. members that it has not been possible to secure an adjournment of the court action which is to commence tomorrow in Regina.

This is the action taken to force the Government to make payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. Mr. MacEachen went on to say:

> In view of the reluctance of the government—indeed, the refusal of the government—to involve the court in this issue, the government has decided not to proceed further with the grain stabilization bill, and it will make payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

I think it would have been an honourable compromise for everyone if there had been agreement on the proposal of the opposition parties, excluding the NDP.

At the same time, we should put on record the fact that by this announcement the Government confessed that, technically speaking, it was wrong in refusing to make payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, as was charged by Senator Forsey. Therefore, it should be recognized that Senator Forsey was right in raising this issue, and that he indeed served the interests of law and order in doing so. I cannot see any circumstances in which a government can be said to be right in being wrong, in not enforcing the laws of the land. There may have been technical reasons—and I will not enter into this now—but I think the position taken by the official Opposition at least, and by many others including especially Senator Forsey, proved that the Government proceeded in a rather dubious way in the particular circumstances. I think also it proves that Parliament did what it had to do in the circumstances.

The Government may very well, after having taken the decision to proceed under the present legislation and pay the $62.1 million, bring in new legislation when the circumstances appear favourable for the purpose indicated by the acting leader. But by not proceeding under the present legislation, and, as has been mentioned in the motion of Senator Forsey, by not having that particular act included in the Revised Statutes of Canada, the Government showed a contempt of Parliament. To take for granted that Parliament would pass this bill was, without any doubt, presumptuous, and I think it will serve as a lesson not only to this Government but to any government that might try to by-pass Parliament.

In any event, honourable senators, the fault which is admitted is half forgiven. In the circumstances, and having regard to the frankness shown by the Government in this house through the acting leader, we only have to agree to raise the matter.

The Hon. the Speaker: This inquiry is now considered as having been debated.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Honourable senators, may I propose that Orders 5, 6 and 7 stand?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Honourable senators, may I ask a question on a point of order? I did not quite hear His Honour's remark in respect of Order No. 3. Is the debate now concluded, or does the adjournment in Senator Martin's name stand?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I had hoped it could be concluded.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: But the adjournment is in Senator Martin's name.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: We agreed to yield.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: But in yielding we merely allow another senator to speak.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Perhaps I did not make myself clear, but when I asked the permission of the house to speak in Senator Martin's place, it was with the intention of taking the item off the Order Paper.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: May I take it that Senator McDonald was speaking as the Government Leader under our rules?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I do not think I said anything that would get me too deeply involved.

The Hon. the Speaker: When the honourable Senator McDonald rose in his place and asked to speak instead of the honourable Senator Martin, this followed the usual procedure, and it was agreed. The honourable Senator Grosart has now raised a point, which I shall have to think over before coming to a conclusion. When an honourable senator speaks on an inquiry and no other honourable senator indicates he is ready to speak, and if the debate is not adjourned, there is no problem. Under our rules, the subject shall be considered as having been debated. A different case is now before us, and I am wondering whether I should not think it over before deciding the issue. This situation has not developed since I have been in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I thank Senator Grosart for his intervention, because I had forgotten to say how disappointed I was that in the circumstances we could not hear Senator Martin's defence of the Government. He was in such a position that he would have had to be at his best to make an effectual defence. I think the Senate will have missed something exceptional.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Your Honour has raised a point. I must say that I did not hear Your Honour give the customary warning when Senator McDonald rose to speak and conclude the debate, so I was in some doubt.

The Hon. the Speaker: May I ask a question of the honourable Senator Grosart? Does he wish to discuss this point in an academic way under the rules, or does he wish to speak on the inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: In reply to Your Honour's question, I have no desire to speak on it, but I have a great desire to hear Senator Martin speak on it.

The Hon. the Speaker: As I have indicated, I am not at the moment ready to give a decision on the point raised, and I would prefer to examine the problem before we sit tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: It would be very simple to make a long speech on this issue, but I have no desire to kick a dead horse. This is a dead issue. The money has been paid to the Canadian Wheat Board, to be paid out under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and surely that is the end of it.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: With due respect, I take it Senator McDonald is speaking to the point of order. I do not think the question of whether the issue is dead or not has anything to do with the point of order. The point of order is whether the debate still stands adjourned in Senator Martin's name. To clarify the position, I beg leave to adjourn the debate in the name of Senator Martin.

Hon. Mr. Smith: I rise on a point of order, since my friend, Senator Grosart, wants to be technical. I do not think we can stand a motion which would intervene between the motion to which earlier reference has been made and the one now moved by Senator Grosart. I think this is officially a dead horse too, to use the picturesque language of Senator McDonald.

The Hon. the Speaker: I know there was a motion made, so may I ask if there is any honourable senator who wishes to speak on this inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Senator Grosart has moved the adjournment of the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: There is a motion to adjourn the debate, and I understand that the honourable Senator Smith has raised a point of order on this. I suggest that I put the motion to adjourn the debate by Senator Grosart, that I consider the point of order raised by the honourable Senator Smith, and that we review the whole matter tomorrow, when a decision might be reached.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: With Your Honour's permission and that of the house, may I amend my motion to read that I move the adjournment of the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: With the reservation I have already indicated, I will put the motion. It was moved by the honourable Senator Grosart, seconded by the honourable Senator Macdonald, that this debate be now adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate. It is your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Laird that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the parole system in Canada.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I rise to make what I hope will be a worthwhile contribution to the debate on Senator Laird's motion. I wish first of all to commend Senator Laird for initiating a debate that is particularly timely on a matter of real importance, especially in view of current happenings. I also wish to commend other honourable senators who have taken part in the debate for the objective questions and suggestions they have made. I commend Senator Macdonald for his speech yesterday, in which he made many pertinent and important observations about parole. He certainly indicated a knowledge of this subject. I join with him in reminding honourable senators that parole as we know it in Canada today is an integral and important part of the whole complex correction system. It has attained a status in the correction system equal to that of law enforcement, the administration of justice and the administration of our institutions.

All segments of the whole correction process are today coming under close scrutiny and questioning by society. There is certainly great dissatisfaction about the operations of these related segments, particularly among the younger generation.

Like Senator Macdonald, I am wondering why parole has been chosen as the subject to be investigated. I hope that the mover, in his closing remarks, will explain his purpose. In any event, I will support this motion if for no other reason than to provide a vehicle or a platform for all those interested in the corrections process to make representations and suggestions with respect to reforms. It can also be an educational vehicle whereby those responsible for parole in Canada will have an opportunity to explain their operations.

I believe the inquiry can serve a useful role in examining the administration of parole in that the present act has been in effect for some years. In view of the experience we have had, there will undoubtedly be, as always, room for reform and improvement.

Since there is a very real and close inter-relationship between the prison system and parole, any discussion on parole must encompass a look at the prison system as it exists in Canada today. This relationship becomes even closer as we proceed to seek new solutions, ideas and policies for rehabilitation.

In my own province, Alberta, the parole officer now is entering the picture at the time a man is sentenced. On the basis of the man's performance, his age and other related characteristics, the officer can make a recommendation as to the institution to which the man should be sent. By this process we have eliminated, for a large number, the traumatic and sober experience of going to one of our "higher institutions of learning", like Prince Albert, and we divert them to institutions with minimum security where rehabilitation will be more effective.

Why do we send people to penitentiary? All honourable senators who have participated in the debate have indicated various reasons, but Senator Macdonald stated them correctly—punishment, deterrent and rehabilitation. That is the objective. That is what we set out to do, but by our performance we can end the sentence after punishment. Everything that can be said about our system of prison has been said when you say "punishment".

The Fauteux Committee stated it succinctly when it said that the chief purpose of punishment is for the protection of the public and that this purpose is achieved by deterring further acts by the offenders and others who would commit breaches of the law. The time during which an offender is in custody should be employed to promote reform that, upon his release, he may be rehabilitated as a useful member of society. In other words, we send an individual to our institutions as punishment and not for punishment. There is a vast difference. The time in custody is supposed to be and, it is hoped, will be the punishment. Simultaneously with the time in custody the reform or rehabilitation process comes into play so that in the end a reformed man is returned to society, which affords society its very best protection.

This then is the objective, and I ask you for a moment to consider what in reality has been our performance. I believe sincerely that, notwithstanding all the clichés to the contrary, we have slipped into a process where we have permitted a system to operate that accepts men for punishment in an all-corrupting atmosphere and that any suggestion of deterrents or rehabilitation is simply a myth. And this is the vengence of punishment which is referred to.

No man enters the prison blaming society—or very few do. They are nearly always prepared to accept the punishment that society gives them in the form of time within that institution. If a man enters one of our institutions blaming society for his fault, it may well be the first indication that he is in the wrong institution. Most men go there and accept their punishment as men.

But the question is asked: What happens to them after they have been there? The punishment which was to have been time in custody is wreaked with a vengeance and it stays with the man for the rest of his life. If he enters one of our institutions questioning society, he leaves the institution hating and despising society for what it has done to him during his confinement.

President Nixon has called penitentiaries universities of crime. I cannot help but agree, when considering the number of young auto thieves who go to prison for three or four years and graduate as accomplished armed robbers. The conditions and prevailing attitudes in our institutions are for the most part a positive deterrent to improvement or rehabilitation. We do not reform, re-socialize or rehabilitate; we destroy their spirit and we degrade and poison them, and in the end, when a man is released or goes on parole, we have produced a human being who is worse, and far more dangerous to society, than he was when he entered the penitentiary. The whole process is defeated. I do not know how you would reach any other conclusion when you look at the milieu and the environment where he is confined. Hate prevails, yet we ask him to learn how to love. We strip him of all responsibility, and ask him to learn how to be responsible. We degrade and dehumanize him while he is being confined, and ask him to attain some measure of self-respect. It is against this background that rehabilitation and deterrence continues to be a myth. The order of the day is brute raw punishment. It marks and stigmatizes these young men, not only during their time in custody, but practically the rest of their lives.

What is the record? How are we doing in rehabilitation and deterrence? Honourable senators, in 1961 there were 6,700 men in custody and 1,300 under control, for a total of 8,000. On March 31, 1971, 10 years later, there were 7,500 men in custody with 5,000 under control on parole for a total of 12,500, which is an increase of over 50 per cent for that period. Based on population, in 1961 there was one man in custody and under control for every 2,275 people. Today we have one man in custody and under control for every 1,736 people. We can charge that increase off to the change to a permissive society, if you like. But the fact remains that in our penitentiaries today 85 per cent of the population are recidivists, notwithstanding the fact that we spent $19 million on the process in 1961 as compared to $75 million 10 years later. This is not to point an accusing finger at those responsible for our penitentiary service and say that they have not done their job. Personally, I have a profound admiration for those people, and for their devotion in performing a very difficult task. For the most part, they are underpaid and understaffed, and they perform admirably under tremendous difficulties. I have nothing but understanding for them as they try to serve both the public and the inmates. But, as I have said, they are understaffed and underpaid.

We have 1,000 men in our Montreal complex with but one psychiatrist. At Drumheller, Alberta, where 400 men are confined, there is one psychiatrist one day a month. The workload our classification officers are carrying is 150 cases per man; the recommended caseload per man is 50. They are understaffed, and as a result they cannot do the job they are called upon to do.

The fact is that this whole correctional process has failed; and we are reaching that point at which we cannot continue as a society to delegate that authority or responsibility to others and expect them to right our errors. We have abdicated that responsibility too long and perhaps this proposed inquiry that we are to carry out is in some small way an indication that we are prepared again to assume it.

I can only quote to you the remarks of the Deputy Solicitor General when he lectured at the Cornwall Campus of the University of Ottawa recently. He said:

> The days are drawing to a close where the community—

That is, you and I.

> —can send one of its bad boys off to an institution, shut him off from contact with families and friends, expect him to suffer his punishment and then return as a more responsible citizen than as he does—an insecure, inadequate individual or an aggressive, hostile ex-inmate.

There must be alternatives to the outmoded useless prison system as we know it. We must find the alternative because custody has never worked. Surely we must and can learn from history that we will never change a man by punishment. A man can be changed only by example and leadership. Yet we continue to hold to the idea that if a man is wrong, the harder the punishment the greater he will change. It does not work; it will not work.

As a young inmate friend of mine told me the other day, if we find it impossible to admit that we do not know what to do about the problem, we should at least be honest enough to admit that what we have been doing has been pitifully, patently wrong.

Changes and reforms are being made in our present system and I would like to commend the courage of the present Solicitor General in leading a crusade to institute these long overdue reforms. He has managed an impressive record in a very short period of time. The whole problem, however, as he has pointed out, is a matter of human attitudes which have to be changed before any improvement can be achieved.

It is in the light of changed human attitudes that we approach our proposed study of parole. This is one of the alternatives to the outmoded system we cling to of locking men up in crowded conditions and inflicting this sort of inhuman treatment, and expecting change.

There are others; they are all under consideration. I am gratified to learn that we are giving consideration to furloughs for deserving inmates. This follows the policy of Sweden, where furloughs are granted for good behaviour. The fact is, however, that if we wish to change an individual, which is the name of the game, we must do it by keeping him close to society. He cannot be segregated from society, placed in this foreign environment and then directed to change. It must be done within the community, and the closer to society we can keep him, the better.

I should make it clear that I do not speak about all the inmates in our institutions. Certainly the prison will always be necessary, because there is that percentage from whom you and I are entitled to have protection—that is, about 10 per cent or 750 out of the 7,500 men who are locked up today.

Parole is not new. From the earliest days of crime and punishment, through the worst years of punishment by transportation and banishment to the colonies, some form of leniency or clemency for good behaviour has always been given. It took the form of remission, pardon or ticket of leave. They were designed primarily for good conduct and for controlling the inmate within custody.

Parole as we know it today is the natural outgrowth of these methods, as we have moved to more humane methods of treatment. It is a logical consequence of society's change of attitude toward crime and punishment.

We have repudiated capital punishment, the Devil's Island form of punishment, dismemberment, and mutilation. But in assuming new attitudes, we naturally assume certain risks. Parole results from a desire to counteract and minimize those risks.

There are three basic concepts of parole: a conditional remission of part of the sentence, a contract between the recipient and the grantor, and an acceptance of supervision under ordinary social conditions. Society has a right to protect itself. But it should be obvious to society that the very best protection is obtained by returning the criminal to society as a useful, law-abiding citizen. Parole is a means to this end.

We have two options. Either we require the inmate to serve the maximum time without parole and with no incentives for good conduct, as a result of which he will be extremely hard to manage while he is confined and practically impossible to rehabilitate, and we turn out a dehumanized individual who is almost certain to return to crime; or we grant parole to the majority, with all the incentives it offers, and where the possibility of rehabilitation within society is considerably enhanced. By releasing men under supervision and guidance, instead of turning them loose at random, both the parolee and society benefit.

I support the motion calling for this inquiry. The time is opportune for the community to understand and appreciate the work of the parole board, a nine-member committee under the chairmanship of Mr. T. G. Street, on whom we have conferred the administration of parole in Canada.

The board is called upon to administer "without error" work which has been described by former United States Chief Justice, Earl Warren, as a "terminal procedure which must absorb most of the criticism for the failure of the intermediate agencies leading up to it—the family, school, community, police, court, prison." We place the problem in the hands of the parole board and ask them for a decision, and God help them if they make an error. In a society which prizes freedom over all other considerations, it is a grave responsibility to have to decide whether to grant or withhold freedom from another.

The parole board has fulfilled its responsibility with distinction, as was indicated by Senator Thompson, and as we shall learn as we proceed with our inquiry. I have nothing but the highest praise for the members of the board who are performing a difficult task on our behalf. That they will err is only natural. We hear a great deal about their errors, and we forget the many valid decisions they have made.

Senator Thompson mentioned that when a parolee commits a crime, the press, in its search for sensationalism, headlines the story. If there were ten robberies committed in the city last night, one of which was committed by a parolee, we know which story would receive headlines in the morning's press. Senator Laird, the sponsor of the motion, said it appeared that when this happened a general hue and cry arose that had it not been for the parole board the crime would not have been committed.

That is nonsense. We do not and we cannot lock people up for life. Ninety-nine per cent of those in prison will be freed some day. The parole board makes its decision on the very best information it can obtain from the man's psychiatrist, his counsellor while in prison, and the police. Its decision is based on the premise that this is the time when he should be released, because this is the time when the chances are greatest that he will reform and become a useful member of society.

The parole board may make an error. It does make errors. But if an individual continues to serve his complete sentence, will he be reformed and will his chances be any better at the end of it? We may precipitate his return to prison.

To say that had the parole board kept him in prison the crime would not have occurred, or that the parole board precipitated the crime because it would not have happened had the man completed his sentence, is wrong. The man might have been discharged as a disillusioned and hateful individual.

Senator Thompson referred to violent offences and particularly to one case. Every time we discuss the parole system in Canada or the parole board, everyone will now remember the case to which Senator Thompson referred. We seem to forget the many persons whom the board have released, and who have never been heard of again.

I wish to place on the record some figures in this regard, and I am indebted to Dr. Colin Sheppard of the University of Ottawa Centre of Criminology who researched the matter of violent offenders, and produced a report which will certainly become part of the committee's study. I am referring to those individuals who have been convicted of violent crimes, and in his report Dr. Sheppard said:

> Attitudes still prevail towards certain individuals and groups which ignore knowledge that has been accumulated about them. Such is the case for the so-called violent offenders who as a group are misunderstood, sometimes feared and often considered a continuing menace to law-abiding society.

Yet what is the record? The available evidence indicates that the violent offender is the most successful of any group of parolees. Of 357 murderers paroled in New York City between 1950 and 1959, none committed another homicide. One hundred and seventy-five murderers were paroled in Michigan between 1937 and 1961; 43 returned for committing offences other than homicide. A study of 342 first degree murderers paroled in California between 1945 and 1954 revealed that as of June 30, 1956, 36 had violated their parole. Of these, only nine had committed new offences; there was one case of manslaughter and one case of assault to murder. The California study showed that the parole record of convicted murderers is better than the record of almost every other category of offenders.

In Canada, statistics made available by the National Parole Board indicate an impressive record for the violent offender. From 1920 to 1967, 119 murderers, who were sentenced to death and whose sentences were commuted to life imprisonment, were released on parole. As of April 1968, 89 were still on parole, 19 had died or left the country, and 11 had been returned to prison, for either committing other offences or breaking their conditions of parole. Of the original 119 only one offender killed the second time; he was executed in 1944. Between 1959 and 1967, 32 violent offenders, who had had their death sentences commuted, were released by the National Parole Board, and by the end of 1967 only one had been convicted of another offence, and this did not involve further loss of life.

The evidence indicates that the violent offender, if given the opportunity of conditional freedom, generally does not violate such trust by inflicting further injury or loss of life. I place those statistics on the record in the light of happenings during these last few days, and in light of the question raised by Senator Thompson.

I hope, honourable senators, that in our proposed inquiry there will be an opportunity for those who are most closely affected to participate—that is, the present inmates, the parolees, and those who have formerly served time in our institutions. From my experience with these men—and I think we must always remember they are men—they have ideas, suggestions, and criticisms which are worthy of consideration. They are the ones most closely affected; they are the ones who do have something to contribute. We can listen to the parole board officers and the experts, but I think we can learn a great deal by talking to these men.

If I may, I shall address myself for a moment to these men. This is a two-way street. As we slowly move to legislate reforms and to change the attitudes of society we have every right to ask of you that you respond also with change. I believe society is ready to help you in any way it can. We are ready to help you to help yourself, but the change must come from you to be successful; it must come from within you to be effective. I hope we will display through this inquiry and the reforms that are being instituted by the Solicitor General your willingness and readiness to participate. Having made that statement, I ask you now to respond with change yourselves. You have access to the Commissioner of Penitentiaries; you have confidential access to the Solicitor General, and, I hope, you have confidential access to senators. You will be given an opportunity to participate in this inquiry. I urge every one to assume his obligations, and take advantage of this confidential access and utilize it to his benefit. Together we may break down the barriers of prejudice and misunderstanding which have existed.

There is no instant victory or instant solution, but I do suggest that we press forward with as much haste as possible in a search for new knowledge, new techniques, and a new understanding to this seemingly difficult human problem.

Honourable senators, I thank you for your kind attention. I, of course, will support the motion.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Carter, debate adjourned.

THE ECONOMY

ASPECTS OF ECONOMIC CLIMATE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux rose pursuant to notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to some aspects of the economic climate.

He said: Honourable senators, since tabling my motion of inquiry last Tuesday, the economy has received what I can only call good "Bensonization". This is not yet the time for me to discuss the proposed relief fiscal measures involved. Let me say that I believe they will help and will provide employment for a few months for a number of our unemployed. The new measures are none too early, but they are a step in the right direction. I am afraid they are not tailored to have the impact that some were hoping for.

Our neighbour's new economic policies are a little over two months old. They made a deep impact on Canada and on our economic experts. To many, our neighbours seemed to have panicked suddenly and become overly emotional, giving credence to some upsetting rumours about the true state of affairs. Were they really on the brink of economic bankruptcy, with their huge annual fiscal deficits—$30.1 billion this year —their immense national debt, their international trade deficit of $1.4 billion and more deficits expected to come in their balance of payments for the year?

According to the United States Department of Commerce, "On the balance of trade, the surplus of U.S. imports ran each year favourably from 1963 to 1970 inclusive." For those years there was a total surplus of U.S. international trade of $30.5 billion. In 1971, January to August, there was a deficit of $1.4 billion.

In the past, for many years on and off, we lived here in Canada with unfavourable trade balances. We know their full meaning. Internally, the United States has been facing national problems of astronomical proportions for a great many years, because of their ever-growing fiscal deficits, because of their help to other countries, because of their involvement in two foreign wars, the costs of which are said to have been over $160 billion. As the strongest and richest economic nation the United States accepted in the past the burden of her weaker and poorer allies. Over the years she honoured without fail her commitments to the nations of the world. The United States undertook for the allies the task of leading the policing of the western world in order to assure for all countries peace, tranquillity and economic stability. She sacrificed billions of dollars for this. She managed, at the cost of two ruinous long wars and a number of sacrificed lives, to curtail the spread of communism over our globe.

The United States borrowed and made her debts heavier in order to give generously to nations in want through foreign aid, through financing recovery programs and through directly helping the conquered countries of the last world war recover their status as economic nations of importance.

Many in our western world owe the United States their years of prosperity and progress following World War II; this was also the case after World War I. Following the lead of the United States, the more important trading nations were able to work their way out of the nationalist protectionism that had led to World War II and follow the road to free trade, a fact which has come to be developed and enjoyed in our present trading world.

Between the end of World War II and 1971, the United States loaned to other countries approximately $46 billion, and $27.6 billion remains outstanding. This does not include foreign aid grants, business loans or investments. It is often forgotten that $19.1 billion of World War I debts, including interest, have not been repaid to the Americans. Through it all, and at no cost to us, we have been their favourite friend and favoured nation for over a century. We have lived in complete peace with them as neighbours. We have never needed guarded frontiers between our two countries. We have enjoyed their full commitments to protect Canada against any aggression from anywhere at the time when it was most needed. We have benefited from their important investments. Multinational companies of the United States that chose to produce in Canada and to export widely abroad have paid our government half of their profits and have given much needed employment to our citizens. I am certain that a progressive Canada will have to continue to be tied to the fate of the United States.

I have read some reports on the prevailing economic problems of the world and at times I will refer to some of the views expressed in them. In my opinion there was really no other choice open to President Nixon in making his decision. There were world-wide rumours of an impending major and deep depression starting in the United States. Action had to be taken and it was taken. It is most unfortunate that this surcharge will seriously hurt certain Canadian and multinational industries. It is also unfortunate that our American friends did not choose to exempt Canada or give it the preferential treatment which I thought it deserved. However, it should be noted that the surcharge on United States imports from Canada applies to only between 20 per cent and, at the most, 26 per cent of the United States imports from Canada based on the 1970 figures.

Martin Gainburg, a leading United States economist, has said:

> Your (Canadian) situation here is more than good, it is terrific when you compare it with ours. While your country is producing jobs at an annual rate of more than 3 per cent a year increase, we are stuck with the rate of about .8 of one per cent. These do more than simply emphasize the weakness of the U.S. economy, it points to the strength of yours.

Since the surcharge came into effect the upward float of the Canadian dollar has been about 1½ per cent. Because other major currencies have floated upward by considerably greater percentages, the Canadian dollar in reality has been devalued in terms of those currencies. The Canadian dollar has now devalued 6½ per cent to 7 per cent since it was floated in May 1970. Other trading countries have since then revalued their currencies, but not enough in the judgment of the United States to enable the cancellation of the surcharge.

It is now realized that the continued floating of world exchange rates is not the complete answer to the current monetary crisis; it would not be enough. According to the economists' calculations, the Japanese yen would have to be revalued by about 13 per cent, the German mark by 12 per cent, the French franc by 10 per cent and the others by lesser amounts, to meet the requirements of the United States as stated. The Japanese would like to revalue no more than 5 per cent, and refuse absolutely to go beyond 10 per cent.

Canada acted wisely by floating the dollar in May 1970, and has done quite well with the resulting devaluation of some 7 per cent. It was commendable, a good move, well timed and effective.

Further friendly dialogue with our neighbour might enable us to find ways of diminishing considerably the immediate impact on us. The long-run consequences of this surcharge have considerably more importance in my view. The new economic policies will favour, it is generally predicted there, the entry of the United States into a period of rapid growth which in turn, hopefully, may call for a substantial increase in demand for Canadian exports if we do not upset our good relations and keep our auto pact.

Any increase in demand for our products because of greater United States prosperity should, if we can remain competitive, offset some of the short-term export losses due to the surcharge. If, in fact, inflation is brought under control through these new policies, or at least if it is slowed down in the United States, there will naturally follow a slowing in Canada. This could open avenues to the Canadian Government for stimulative monetary and fiscal policies that would truly provide new employment and expansion capital, the requisite for what is called progress.

Here it seems that the educational system has somehow failed to give youth the right foundation for earning, and here its solution requires more capital, the concrete apparatus of production. Here too the principal barriers to adequate capital formation have been ideological rejections of the role of profit, and political reluctance to recognize its creative force.

The forecasted decline of inflationary expectations, according to a consensus of experts, could also lead to lower interest rates. This in turn would stimulate both the American and the Canadian economies and invite expansion. It could very likely allow a resurgence of Canadian and American housing booms, one of the best providers of labour employment and one which is now so badly needed.

Many believe that America's new economic policies will prove beneficial to our own economy during the next few years. In the United States confidence has been restored, consumer spending has increased notably, U.S. auto sales have increased more than 22 per cent in the last month and a half, higher corporate profits are now reasonably anticipated, and some growth in capital spending is being planned. This restored confidence should reflect on the Canadian economy. It may even make up for some of the anticipated short-term losses if the status quo is maintained in the auto agreement.

The strong GNP showing in the last quarter and first half of the year, together with the knowledge that there would be little immediate overcharge effect on the economy this year and early next year, should result in a continued strong general recovery. Even the United States' outlook on corporate profits is now better.

Our friends to the south, who are the best clients of Canada, as we are of them, are well aware of their very direct personal interest in ensuring our economic strength. However, if the surcharge lives on, the trading countries may find it essential to their survival, the survival of their trading position, to establish counter measures which would result in a trade war. We would be creating a similar situation to that of the thirties when we erected tariff barriers and kept increasing them while we gradually moved toward the Second World War when we had to fight again for liberty and freedom in the world, for ourselves and for our products.

The modern world is built on trade—$30 billion last year—and there is no nation, big or small, that could go back to self-sufficiency without lowering the standard of living, and without closing down many of its industries. It is regrettable that the approach taken has seriously disrupted international monetary arrangements and damaged the trade liberalization measures which have been developed during the postwar period—I am referring to such agreements as the Bretton Woods Agreement—without offering any guidance for their reconstruction or replacement.

We know the United States had for many months been calling for a new international monetary arrangement. However, with countries acting unilaterally in their own immediate interests a return to the general instability and confusion of the thirties is threatened, and the United States can now be accused of starting it.

It is important for the future of world trade that countries that have been gaining international reserves should agree to appreciate their national currencies vis-à-vis the United States dollar—which is still the best possible curency for world-wide transactions, although now a little more unstable—by allowing them to float or, as United States experts have suggested, by selecting a new and higher value for them. The Eurodollar could not begin to do a good job.

Quite recently, at the assembly of Finance ministers, Treasury members and experts of the Western world's major countries engaged in international trade, Mr. Pierre Paul Schweitzer tabled an impressive agenda, of which you are no doubt aware, with priority questions, first calling for consideration of readjustment of parities of major currencies in relation to the dollar and of the dollar in relation to gold.

The second agenda item is consideration of a new monetary system based on special drawing rights as the main instrument for reserves and also on contributions of other countries to the reestablishment of the United States balance of payments.

The third item is the abolition of the 10 per cent surtax imposed by the United States.

Let us hope that an agreement can be reached and that excellent economic prospects can be expected but we must first admit that each item on the agenda must be dealt with in a positive and equitable manner.

It is reassuring to note that in Detroit on September 24, 1971, the President confirmed that the surtax on imports would be abolished when partners in the dollar zone have revalued their currencies so as to end the disadvantage under which American products have to compete on foreign markets. The President hastened to add that his country had no intention of sheltering indefinitely behind a wall of protectionism. That fact should be noted, considering the conditions asked of Canadians for the abolition of the surcharge.

Recently, the Prime Minister stated forcefully that Canada would not remain passive if the United States tried to re-shape the North American economy in such a way as to reduce Canada to the mere role of a supplier of raw materials. Canada would probably restrict exports of raw materials, which would be of no help whatever.

Finally, the damages are already extensive at a very critical time for our economy. It is out of the question to allow the dwindling of the Canadian economy since it is an essential matter for us. The future stability of world economy is also quite important. Any decision leading to protectionist policies borders on defeatism and the downfall of the world economy which promote open hostilities which nobody wants.

A great number of American companies with interests abroad have developed them partly because of the cost of labour, but especially because they were looking for what they expected to be a greatly expanded international market, a share of the international trade worth $300 billion per year. Economic nationalism, which had served the world so badly for hundreds of years, gave way gradually and often painfully to beneficial internationalism. But this disastrous protectionism is now reappearing in all its ugliness.

In spite of the push that the U.S. economy should receive from President Nixon's economic policy, it is obvious that the U.S. have not settled all their economic problems.

If I had a simple explanation for what seems to be happening, I would say it in a very descriptive English phrase.

[English]

The United States have now priced themselves out of world markets because of their lower productivity and higher costs of labour. No artificial means will now assure a correction. This is well illustrated by Japanese steel productivity, as every executive in the United States and Canada now recognizes. The average productivity gain per year among the free nations between 1965 and 1970, according to figures compiled by U.S. News and World Report, ranged from 14.2 per cent for Japan to 1.9 per cent for the United States.

Productivity is the measure of efficiency, and with the United States, with an increase in productivity per year of 1.9 per cent, last, and Canada, with an increase of 3.5 per cent, next to last on the list of the ten principal trading nations, I believe we are forced to re-study the consequence of such projections for the next ten years if we want to remain world traders. How effectively our resources such as materials, labour, and machinery, are converted into the production of goods and services depends on the quality of management, on investments in the best machinery, on the introduction of the most recent techniques, and on the training and diligence of the workers.

While United States and Canadian productivity has been less than it should have been, when we compare these two countries with the trading nations we find that wages have risen more than they have in those other trading nations in the last few years, and this at a time when the productivity of Japan and the other countries is rising spectacularly, and when their unit labour costs are such that the ability of the United States to compete in international trade has been greatly affected.

Canada has the same economy as the United States, and the same approach to its production. We have economic goals and the same theories as to our standard of living. It is but a question of time before we will have to face the same economic problems, the same productivity gaps. And then what?

In Canada close to 50 per cent of the labour unions are internationalized, and their policies are dictated by United States union headquarters. Management and government fail in their efforts to comprehend each other's viewpoint, while the basic necessity is to have a common front that properly analyzes the whys of the better productivity of some trading nations, and to adjust our objectives accordingly to maintain our competitive trading position and save our future economic position. This at a time when the international monetary system is in ruins and must be re-built from its foundation up, and at a time when it is known that the existing strong currency can replace the United States dollar as the international trading medium.

The French minister Valery Gescard d'Estain warned:

> The world economy is entering a stage of lessened growth in which within a few months problems of activity and of employment will raise universal concern.

How could it be expressed any better?

We are facing a possible universal depression in which Canada, so dependent on export sales, could be one of the most deeply affected. We have reasons to be extremely careful in Canada with our economic policies, and this we have not done. We know we must be prepared to withstand possible shocks in the next few months. The Atlantic Provinces Economic Council summed it up at its last conference as follows:

> No country is as heavily dependent as Canada on exports as a source of economic growth. Yet in a world of growing trade blocks we have substantial access to only one—the United States.

I do not think Canada should now engage in escalation or retaliation. In the past Canada's governments have been able to follow successfully a highly constructive pattern for our nation. For this they are to be commended, and I hope all will now unite in their effort to to ensure the country's progress and continued prosperity.

I believe the time has now come to reinforce our government's economic planners and advisers by constituting a super economic brains trust to help deal with our present economic problems—a kind of "Canada Incorporated". Japan has had something similar called Japan Incorporated, formed of the greatest authorities in banking, trade and industry, and including their labour leaders. It has been highly successful, as we have all seen. Its operations are fascinating, and one can readily understand the great help it has given Japan in achieving its international developments. I would hope that this was what the Right Honourable the Prime Minister had in mind when he said:

> We will have to have a fundamental re-assessment of the whole economy.

Our government and our political parties are now being criticized by many because of their hodge-podge unstable economic policy, or lack of it. Some say we have become interested only in being an ultra-socialized country. We are said to look, for instance, only at the glamourized Scandinavian ways of governing and not at their mistakes, their accumulation of problems, and their fundamental drawbacks. Many people say we should analyze more seriously the consequences of the destruction of capital accumulations. These capital accumulations once permitted pioneers to undertake great productive and lasting developments. Their total elimination is now somehow being planned for some ten years hence, as the ultimate sacrifice to a policy of total socialism in Canada.

We evidently know too little, and we should know more, about the comparative effects of lowering taxes in periods of recession. It is now being proposed that income tax be reduced by 3 per cent for individuals and 7 per cent for corporations. It would be interesting to know the reason for refusing written fiscal rulings by the fiscal authorities, which are the necessary guidelines in business, for individuals, and for commerce and industry, both national and multi-national. We should know the reason we are doing this, contrary to the accepted custom elsewhere.

Our Government is losing the confidence of Canadians —and I believe I have listed some good reasons for that. Our Government, and the political parties, should immediately pull back from their continuous attempts to force the private sector to meet the political and social objectives of governments. The function of the private sector is to generate growth with its accompanying employment. Attempts to make it a vehicle for political ambitions will, in the end, destroy it.

M. Gérard Filion, the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, said recently—and I concur fully:

> We should be brutally honest with ourselves. We have brought a great many of our present difficulties on ourselves. We have for some years demanded far more from our economy than it can give. Successive governments have saddled industry with cost burdens unreasonable for a country as vulnerable to foreign competition. We have an excessively high cost economy. Tax levels have escalated...in a period of labour demands more insistent, more extravagant and more powerfully enforced than at any time.

Unless Canadians—and we represent them in passing legislation—undertake the fight for necessary corrections, many of which I have enumerated here, we will shortly have to concede our excellent position among the trading nations.

We in Canada will have the future that we deserve through our sacrifices, our intelligent plannings, and our philosophy for producing and selling. No stubborn or wrong approach to our problems will do it for us. All good things are obtained in life—and they will be, I am sure, for us—through work, through discipline and, yes, through sacrifice. It is the law of the land. It is up to us.

Last week, we took only a short step to regain the confidence of the business world and of those who understand the prerequisite for success. I believe the Competition bill—which is troublesome to most people in business—needs to be redrafted more knowledgeably. The amendments to the labour code, particularly those covering technological change, should be withdrawn, as should the extension of certain benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act which would impose exorbitant costs and operational rigidity that Canadian industry cannot afford, and that would place it on an uncompetitive basis with foreign industries in our trading world. We are informed, and I believe it, that only then can business and alarmed Canadians start to regain confidence in the future as it is being planned by the Government.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Lang, debate adjourned.

PAROLE SYSTEM

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

The Senate resumed from Thursday, October 14, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Laird that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the parole system in Canada.

Hon. Chesley W. Carter: Honourable senators, the motion before us is couched in very simple terms. It merely calls for the Senate to authorize the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to inquire into and report upon the parole system in Canada.

Since this is obviously the kind of thing that the Senate should be doing, and probably can do better and cheaper than any other body, I am heartily in accord with the principle of the motion—which, as far as I am concerned, leaves no room at all for disagreement.

With respect to the motion itself, however, although I have no particular objection to it, there are in my mind three question marks which I feel have not been dealt with sufficiently in this debate to enable me to come to an enlightened opinion on the matter.

The first of these questions has to do with the timeliness of such an inquiry. The increasing tendency to lawlessness, the discouraging trend of crime statistics showing increases in both crime and recidivism, the increase in the number and magnitude of prison riots, both in Canada and in the United States, the mounting criticism of our penal system and the rising concern that has resulted in the public mind, all would seem to indicate that the inquiry envisaged in this motion would be very timely indeed. On the other hand, a similar inquiry which covered the parole system was carried out not too long ago by the Canadian Committee on Corrections under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Roger Ouimet. After studying the problem for over two years that committee submitted a report on March 31, 1969, which contained over 100 recommendations. The whole of Chapter 18 of the report is devoted exclusively to this subject, with two chapters on related subjects.

The Committee on Corrections made 16 recommendations with respect to parole, 12 of which dealt with the parole system itself. Most of these recommendations were translated into law, but as they have been in effect for only about a year there is a question in my mind whether sufficient time has elapsed since the inquiry by the Committee on Corrections and the implementation of their recommendations to enable the Senate inquiry envisaged in this motion to be effective or to serve a very real purpose.

Recently, I talked with Mr. T. George Street, Chairman of the National Parole Board, who assured me that all the recommendations of the Ouimet Report with respect to parole had been implemented with the exception of the recommendation in connection with the overlapping of provincial and federal jurisdictions, which by its very nature will require a long period of negotiation and gradual implementation.

The membership of the National Parole Board has been increased from five to nine and the board is now operating in panels of two and three members who visit institutions in various parts of Canada. Also, those who wish to do so appear before the panels in person and make verbal representations in support of their applications for parole. These changes correspond to two of the very important recommendations included in the Ouimet Report. I gathered from my conversation with Mr. Street that the board's greatest problem now is the lack of sufficient staff to enable it to operate as efficiently and effectively as it would wish.

The second question in my mind has to do with the scope of the motion, which restricts the inquiry to the parole system alone. Personally, I doubt whether this is either possible or desirable. The parole system is only one part of our corrective program which, in turn, is only one part of our penal system which, again, is part of our whole system of criminal justice. Our judicial and penal systems are based on certain philosophical concepts and principles which permeate the whole system including the various branches. Present-day practices and procedures in the parole system flow from the concepts and principles on which the main system is based. Therefore, apart from minor changes in procedure, any significant change in direction must necessarily flow from a change in basic concepts and principles. It seems to me, therefore, that if the inquiry were focused on the parole system in isolation from the main system of which it is an integral part, its usefulness would be somewhat impaired.

The whole world is in a process of revolutionary change. To pinpoint where we are at the present time, both with respect to our own past achievements and those of other countries, to analyse and appraise our failures and successes, to determine our goals and to enunciate policy guidelines for the future seems to me to require an examination of the problem in depth. To do as thorough a job as I am sure the Senate would want done would therefore necessitate a total inquiry, a comprehensive and exhaustive inquiry, into the whole system rather than just a concentration upon one particular part of it.

My third question is whether the inquiry should be carried out by a standing committee or by a special committee. Senator Macdonald touched upon these two points in his excellent address last Wednesday. Like Senator Macdonald I have no particular bias in favour of one or the other. The type of committee will depend to a large extent upon the scope of the inquiry to be made. We have trouble manning Senate committees now and we should not, therefore, proliferate special committees unnecessarily. A special committee would require extra staff and physical accommodation and equipment, all of which seem to be in short supply at the moment.

On the other hand, the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has been fairly busy and, now that we are well past the mid-point in this 28th Parliament, having regard to the committee's present agenda and the legislation still to come before it, there may not be sufficient time left in the balance of this Parliament for the standing committee to do a thorough job. I hope the sponsor of this motion will deal with these points when he winds up the debate because they would appear to require more consideration than has been indicated in the debate thus far.

I come now to the subject matter of the motion. The subject, the parole system, has been so well covered in the excellent presentations by Senators Laird, Thompson, Prowse, Macdonald and Hastings, who preceded me in this debate, that very little remains to be said. I should like, therefore, to return to the point I made earlier about the fundamental concepts and principles on which our system of criminal justice is based, particularly as they apply to our penal system and our correctional programs including parole. There are at least four distinct concepts of parole each similar to, but in some way different from, the others. For example, parole can be looked upon (1) as an act of clemency or leniency; (2) as a penological measure; (3) as a social defence measure; and (4) as a logical transitional measure applicable to all offenders.

Barbara A. Kay, Ph.D., and Clyde B. Vedder, Ph.D., both professors of Sociology and Anthropology, in their book entitled Probation and Parole, published in 1963, enlarge on these four concepts as follows, and I quote starting at page 94:

> The status of parole today is still disputed. It is, on the one hand, considered as an act of clemency, the granting of which depends entirely on the prisoner's conduct in the penal institution and on his repentance. If parole were thus used as a favour, it would be used only in exceptional cases.

In contrast to this point of view, parole is often conceived as a penological measure in harmony with the original sentence and even, in fact, an extension of it. The individual is required to demonstrate in society his capacity to conform to the behaviour standards set by the community or be returned to the institution for further training. Such a conception of parole is closely associated both with a graduated or "progressive" penal system and with the indeterminate sentence, under which the individual demonstrates his capacity to adjust through a series of stages of greater freedom, and is then released whenever the authorities believe he is capable of adjusting satisfactorily outside the institution.

Parole is also regarded as a social defence measure. From this point of view, its importance lies especially in the fact that it offers the possibility of intervening at once in cases where further criminal behaviour is imminent. In contrast to the two previous conceptions of parole, in which the more favourable cases are given primary attention, the focus here is on those individuals who are least likely to adjust successfully in freedom. This conception also rests on a system of indeterminate sentencing, although it is applied from a point of view opposite to the one referred to above. Particularly in the absence of institutions for habitual offenders and criminal psychopaths, parole as a social defence measure is seen as providing protection to the public from a number of socially dangerous persons.

Finally, parole is conceived as the logical transitional measure applicable in principle to all offenders. Parole, in this instance, is granted in relation to the plans made by and for the individual with respect to his release and takes into consideration not only institutional adjustment but also his personality and the potential danger he constitutes to society. Eligibility is determined on the basis of a social study embracing the individual's history, activities in prison, personality and possibilities upon release. From these data are derived the conditions to be imposed as well as the nature and extent of supervision.

It is this last conception which has gained widest support today in penological circles. General public opinion, however, tends to conceive of parole as an act of clemency, and among prisoners parole is often regarded unfavourably as a social defence measure.

That the concept of clemency and leniency is most prevalent in the public mind is evidenced by the popular criticism of the parole system here in Canada by some as being too lenient and by others as not being lenient enough. Senator Macdonald and Senator Prowse in their interventions in this debate both seem to subscribe to this concept of clemency, but a handbook on parole prepared by Mr. T. George Street, Q.C., Chairman of the National Parole Board, emphasizes that parole is not leniency or clemency. On page 1 of this handbook which was obviously prepared for the guidance and instruction of prisoners, he states as follows:

> Parole is a method by which an inmate can be released from prison before the completion of his sentence, so that he can serve the balance of his sentence at large in society. However, he must obey certain rules so that society will be sure that he is living a law-abiding life. It is a means of protecting society while at the same time helping the offender take his place again in the community.

And then two paragraphs further on, he states:

> Parole is not leniency, or clemency, or mercy. We cannot grant parole simply because some member of your family is sick, or because you are needed at home, or for some other compassionate reason. We cannot allow time spent in gaol awaiting trial or an appeal. This is the function of the court only. We do not change sentences. We cannot give you back good time which you have lost.

It would appear, then, that there is some confusion as to what the real nature of parole is meant to be or ought to be. This is a matter that should be cleared up because it is impossible to chart a new course unless we have a fixed and clearly defined point of departure.

The concept of parole must to a large extent be determined by the goals to be achieved and by their order of priority and the emphasis we decide to place on them. What are those goals? Well, one is the defence and protection of society. Another is punishment for crime as a deterrent to others as well as to the offender himself. Still another is the salvage and rehabilitation of the offender and his restoration as a useful and productive member of society.

The order of priority in which we arrange these goals is all important because that will determine the philosophy and ideas which will animate the relationship of parole to the court it serves on the one hand and to the parolees on the other. If we place equal or near equal emphasis on each of these different goals, related though they are, we cannot expect to achieve maximum results. On the other hand, if we select the rehabilitation of the individual as the paramount goal, then everything else must be subordinated to this primary objective.

If social rehabilitation of the offender is our primary goal, the way our present system of parole now functions is somewhat self-defeating because it deals only with those who have been judged to have the best chance of successful re-entry into society while on completion of their sentence those who are considered the poorest risks are released unconditionally without any supervision or guidance whatsoever.

This raises the interesting question as to whether or not all prisoners should be released conditionally. On this point Professors Kay and Vedder make the following observation. I am quoting again from their book Probation and Parole, page 185:

> If prisoners are to be released at all, they should be released conditionally. It is unimportant what we call this period of adjustment. As parole systems now function, we tend to defeat our purpose. The best risks for successful re-entry into the free community are selected for parole; while the poorest risks for successful adjustment are released without supervision upon the termination of their maximum sentences. Most prisoners could benefit from guidance during the community re-entry process.

Most inmates tend to idealize the "outside world" while incarcerated; consequently are in need of a "reality thrust" when they leave the restricted environment of the correctional institution.

The sentencing court performs the rite of "status deprivation" through which the offender loses his civil rights. If the offender is to be returned to the free community, and if he is expected to successfully re-adjust after his incarceration, then what may be needed is a "status restoration" ceremony. When the offender has met the conditions of release after serving the required part of his sentence, and after a period of non-recidivism (perhaps, three-five years), we should provide for a "status restoration" ceremony. This rite should include the automatic expunging of the public record. The stigma of incarceration, the loss of human dignity, deprivation of the right to self-determination, plus the discriminatory practices levelled against those with a 'record' are not conducive to successful societal participation.

Release procedures must be functionally related to the goal of rehabilitation, if this is the goal of the correctional system. Thus, all prisoners should be kept under close surveillance immediately following their release, because guidance is critical to the adjustment of the offender as an aid to reorientation, and because supervision should protect society from further redress.

Perhaps, a court approved sponsor who can meet the real needs of the conditionally released prisoner would be a partial solution to the re-entry process of our correctional systems. Now existent parole services could be upgraded if each agent would have fewer parolees to supervise. If the system of court approved sponsors could be extended, parole agents would be used for guidance and supervision only when the authorities deemed the use of skilled professional services advisable.

In this connection I should like to make a suggestion based on evidence that came to my attention as a member of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty. We are all familiar with the work of Alcoholics Anonymous where people who have conquered their problem with alcohol assist and guide others who are struggling with a similar problem. As we travelled across Canada, we came upon two or three groups in different provinces where people who had been on welfare and had managed to extricate themselves were operating as a sort of welfare council rendering assistance to those still enmeshed in the welfare system. They were not giving financial assistance but sometimes they recommended the amount. They did give them counselling, guidance, advice, and constructive criticism of their personality faults and attitudes which were preventing them from making the grade.

This kind of assistance appeared to be enormously successful. The fact that they had been through the mill and had come out on top gave them an authority and empathy with those they were trying to help which a council made up of those who had never had such an experience could never hope to achieve. I have been wondering, therefore, whether similar use could be made of those offenders who have been successfully rehabilitated.

As Senator Hastings pointed out, social rehabilitation means a change of heart and a change of attitude on the part of the offender. A change of attitude toward others and towards society as a whole requires a change in the offender's concept of himself. We tend to identify with our peers and like the rest of us the offender sees himself through the eyes of his associates. His self-concept will be based on the reaction of other people to him. If these reactions lead him to regard himself as a social misfit who has little intrinsic worth and who is expected to violate the law, then the chances are he will break the law.

Imprisonment will only reinforce this type of self-definition and this is a reason why probation, parole, and other remedial measures should be employed to the fullest possible extent, and imprisonment used as sparingly as possible and only when these other measures to protect society have failed.

Apart altogether from the social rehabilitation of the offender, there is now another factor which necessitates maximum use of parole and minimum periods of incarceration. In the U.S.A. subversive groups such as the Black Panthers are planting their agents in penal institutions to organize the prison population, to indoctrinate them and to develop in them attitudes that are hostile and inimical to our social order and democratic institutions. Their aim is to use the prisoners as hard core cadres around which recruits can be mobilized for urban guerilla warfare and other acts of violence aimed at the breakdown of law and order and the subsequent overthrow of the government.

The following are extracts from an interview with the late Black Panther leader, George Jackson, as published in The Black Panther of 28 August, 1971:

> Interviewer: In the past six months, a profound change has occurred in the prison population, in terms of the consciousness of the inmates, whereas before they had been easily divided by racism, which was instigated by the prison authorities. At that time they were beginning to see the prison authorities as their enemies and inmates of all races as their natural allies. Can you tell us how that consciousness developed, how extensive it is; and what forms it took?
> George: Well to begin with, of course, the recent influx of the political teachers, the political animals, from the Black Panther Party—I think they were first instrumental in the changes from conservatism that prisoners in the prison population and people, in general, here in fascist America live in. At one time the prison population, the prisoner class could have been considered one of the most conservative classes in the country... We'll give credit first to the Party, and to the system for placing political teachers at our disposal here. Secondly, the support that our movement has gotten from partisans from the street, from the outside. The average convict considers himself the doomed man right from the beginning. And that ray of hope, or sense of community created by the recent expressions of solidarity from the street, that (ray) found effect on the revolutionary consciousness inside the joint. It's always been my contention that if we could raise the hard-left military and political cadre in fascist America, that cadre would come from either the prisons or the dissident elements within the armed forces.

Question: What forms did this new consciousness take?

George: To clear that up first, I'll have to go into a little background. Some years ago, the rise of the Black revolutionary...created situations here in the joint that caused polarization between all Blacks and all Whites regardless of status. And by status I mean convict-cop, convict-pig. In other words, I'm saying that the prisoner code broke down as a result of the White convicts being threatened by the political thrust and the open antipathy demonstrated by Blacks against Whites in general. At the time I guess I was part of it, too. At the time we made no efforts to distinguish between the White convict and the White guard. Because the White convicts identified openly and clearly and without reservations with right-wing ideas and racism. So when we'd strike, we'd strike with both barrels: one at the convict, and one at the pig. And some of it is our fault. Of course, revolution is a process. We're going through a process. And well, that's the background.

The new consciousness stems from the fact that like I said, the political teacher, the Black Panther "concentration camped", as a result of the political thrust on the street, brought new ideas. You know revolutionary, scientific socialism, and anti-racism. And we attempted to make them understand that we're all equally uniformly repressed by the administration.

Question: How widespread was this throughout the California penal system, when you had some success?

George: The Black vanguard within the Black political machine, within the joint is state-wide; is state-wide.

Question: What do you see as the future in the prisons? What's the relationship between the prison movement and the outside movement?

George: I'll reiterate that I feel that the building of revolutionary consciousness of the prisoner class is paramount in the overall development of a hard left revolutionary cadre. Of course the revolution has to be carried by the masses. But we need a cadre; we need a bodyguard; a political worker needs a bodyguard. We see ourselves as performing that function. The terms of existence here in the joint conditions the brothers for that type of work. Although I have become more political recently, from listening to Comrade Newton, and from reading the Party paper, I've gained political and military activities. I still see my function as military.

Honourable senators, if that sort of thing is happening in the U.S.A. at the present time, let no one think it could not happen here.

I think it was Ralph Waldo Emerson who said "the means pre-exist in the end." This is doubly true when the end objective is the social rehabilitation of an offender. Although incarceration takes away his civil rights, it does not deprive him of his human rights. He still has the right to be treated as a human being. It means, first of all, that he must be provided with decent accommodation and the ordinary amenities that one associates with a civilized life. Press reports indicate that many of our prisons or prison cells fall very short of that standard.

It requires also a very high degree of professional training, and, perhaps more important still, a proper motivation on the part of prison staff and officials whose relationships and inter-reactions with the offender can contribute so largely to his success or failure.

It is practically impossible for an offender to develop mutual trust and respect—the only basis on which a meaningful relationship can be built—or to change his self-concept as a worthless, social misfit and build up his self-esteem, self-reliance, self-discipline, along with a new concept of dignity and human worth, if he is treated as an animal or as something less than human. Without such a change in self-concept, the main purpose of correctional measures, which is improvement in his attitudes, cannot take place.

Social rehabilitation requires also that the conditions and rules under which the offender is released should be realistic and not excessively restrictive beyond what is absolutely necessary.

Honourable senators, I do not know how exhaustively the Committee on Corrections investigated the points I have raised. They are of basic importance, and clear-cut decisions on them, based on up-to-date information, must be made before any great leap forward can be taken in our system of criminal justice, our penal system, and our correctional programs. A further inquiry in depth by a Senate committee could, therefore, be very valuable. With the reservations that I mentioned at the beginning of my speech, I support the motion.

Hon. Keith Laird: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must inform honourable senators that if Senator Laird speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Laird: Honourable senators, I have listened with a great deal of interest to Senator Carter, and I have listened to or read with similar interest the speeches of other honourable senators who have contributed to the debate.

I have chosen to wind up the debate tonight because those who have spoken were good enough to indicate that they were in favour of the motion.

The question was raised—and it was mentioned by Senator Carter tonight—as to why the resolution was so narrow and confined itself to the parole system. In reply, it seems to me that the motion, by virtue of its wording, was bound to bring in as auxiliary subjects the various matters mentioned by Senator Carter and others.

For example, I noticed with interest that Senator Hastings indicated, and rightly so, that in any examination of the parole system it would be quite impossible to overlook the operation of penitentiaries.

It is not my function to offer an opinion at this stage, because the matter should be thoroughly examined by the committee. However, from what has been said, it seems rather obvious that one conclusion to be reached by the committee is that in the operation of penitentiaries there is a marked deficiency in the number of psychiatrists and psychologists. Perhaps that is the secret. Perhaps this factor is tied in with the question of whether or not the parole system is succeeding in Canada.

I would strongly suggest that we do not enlarge the wording of the motion. By doing so we might be biting off more than we can chew. Let us take it one step at a time. One has to consider two points of view. On one side we have those who say that the increase in crime is due to the improper release on parole of prisoners. On the other side, there are those who say that it is wrong to maintain in an incarcerated condition an individual who, if he were outside, would readjust to society. This argument is too widespread to ignore. Even if we come to the conclusion, as we may, that the present system is as good as one can hope for and the present Parole Board is doing as good a job as can be hoped for, we will have served a real public need in the sense that if we properly examine and report on the matter it will remove public criticism which, I am sure, we have all heard.

It seems to me, under the circumstances, that we should conclude our debate tonight. The Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, I suggest, is not so overloaded with work that it cannot take on this function and do a good job. This is the type of study that this chamber and its committees are particularly well suited to make.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, it is hoped that the Senate itself will meet for only a short period of time tomorrow and then adjourn until Thursday. The Standing Senate Committees on Banking, Trade and Commerce, National Finance, and Foreign Affairs plan to meet tomorrow afternoon. As we have progressed very well with the work we have to do in the chamber, I feel it would be advantageous to adjourn the house early tomorrow to enable honourable senators to attend the committee meetings.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald tabled:

Copies of Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics respecting general exchanges in scientific, technical, educational, cultural and other fields. Done at Ottawa October 20, 1971.

He said: Honourable senators it is not my intention to comment on the document I have just tabled. Senator Martin will be returning to the Senate immediately upon the completion of the tour by the Soviet officials, and he will make comments on this document at that time.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, may I ask that all items under Orders of the Day stand? As I informed honourable senators yesterday, three of our standing committees are sitting this afternoon. The Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and the Committee on National Finance will meet at 2.15 p.m., and the Committee on Foreign Affairs will meet at 3.30 p.m.

It seems to me, and to those with whom I have discussed this matter, that we are well advanced in our work in this chamber and that it would be to our advantage to use our time this afternoon in committees. Therefore, if there is agreement, I will ask that all the orders stand and then I will move the adjournment of the house.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: There is one clarification I should like to obtain from the acting leader. A few moments ago he spoke of the return to the chamber of the Leader of the Government. Do I understand that when the bell rings we are to come back? I think we should adjourn now until tomorrow, and the leader can make his comments at that time.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Apparently there is a misunderstanding. Senator Martin will be travelling with Premier Kosygin during his tour in Canada. I was referring to the remarks that Senator Martin will be making on his return to the chamber next week.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I thought you meant later today.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: No, at a later date.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that items 1 to 7 under Orders of the Day stand?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Supplementary Report of The Canadian Wheat Board on the 1969-70 Pool Account for Wheat for the period August 1, 1969 to April 30, 1971, certified by the Auditors, pursuant to section 7(2) of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, chapter C-12, R.S.C., 1970.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF SENATE

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 26, 1971, at 8 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE—MESSAGE TO COMMONS

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 44(1)(a), moved:

That Rule 67(1) of the Rules of the Senate be amended by relettering paragraphs (d) to (k) inclusive as paragraphs (e) to (l) inclusive and inserting, immediately after paragraph (c), the following as new paragraph (d):

"(d) The Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, to which shall be appointed eight senators.";

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house that the Senate agrees to unite with that house in the establishment of a joint committee of both houses for the purpose of reviewing and scrutinizing statutory instruments standing permanently referred thereto by section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act; and

That the Senate will appoint eight of its members, to be designated at a later date, to serve on the said joint committee.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this motion is to enable us to join with the members of the House of Commons in a study of regulations and other statutory instruments.

Motion agreed to.

WEATHER MODIFICATION INFORMATION BILL

COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill S-11, to provide for the obtaining of information respecting weather modification activities.

Hon. Harry Hays moved that the amendments be concurred in.

He said: Honourable senators, on March 23 the Senate gave third reading to this bill and sent it to the House of Commons for consideration. It was seen fit in the other place to amend the bill, and clause 5 was deleted and a new one substituted therefor.

Clause 5, before amendment, read as follows:

DISCLOSURE

5. Any information obtained by the Administrator or his authorized representative pursuant to this Act may be made public or made available on request to any member of the public, but where the information (a) relates to the equipment, materials or method used or to be used in carrying out a weather modification activity, or (b) is contained in papers filed under the Patent Act in connection with an application for a patent that is still pending or has been abandoned, such information shall not be made public without the written consent of the person who carried out or proposes to carry out the weather modification activity to which the information relates.

The new clause 5 reads:

> Any information obtained by the Administrator or his authorized representative pursuant to this Act may be made public or made available on request to any member of the public.

In reviewing Hansard and the committee proceedings it is quite obvious that clause 5 was repetitious. The amendment does not change the meaning, but improves the wording.

Amendments concurred in.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the honourable Senator Benidickson, P.C., seconded by the honourable Senator Cameron, for the second reading of the Bill S-17, intituled: "An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act".—(Honourable Senator Benidickson, P.C.).

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: With the consent of honourable senators, I should like this Order to stand until November 4.

Order stands.

COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

CONFERENCE AT KUALA LUMPUR, MALAYSIA—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, October 13, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Grosart, calling the attention of the Senate to the Seventeenth General Conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, held at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, September 3 to 18, 1971, and in particular to the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I have in my hand the official report of the Canadian delegation to the Seventeenth Annual Conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association held at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia from September 3 to 18 of this year. On October 13 last, in my brief introductory remarks on the notice of inquiry standing in my name, I indicated that I would ask leave to have this report, which has been approved by all members of the delegation, appended to our proceedings today. I now ask for that leave.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

(For text of report see appendix, p. 1378-81).

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I thank honourable senators for their indulgence. I hope they are not under the impression that it disposes of the matter, because I feel that it is important on this occasion to bring other aspects of the proceedings to the attention of the Senate, whose representative I was together with Senator Cameron.

Senator Cameron has already given the chamber what, I am sure all will agree, was a very instructive and enlightened account of what went on at this very important conference in Malaysia.

Some 200 delegates and observers were present, representing the 32 independent nations of the Commonwealth. There was some question in the minds of academics whether the number was 31 or 32, having in mind the status of a very small island in the South Pacific, namely, the independent Republic of Nauru. Though it has a population of only 6,000, it is an independent nation with a special relationship in the Commonwealth.

There were, of course, delegates from many other legislatures in the Commonwealth to which are attached branches of the C.P.A., and that accounts for the total of some 200 delegates and observers.

I find myself in general agreement with, and, indeed, in admiration of, Senator Cameron's remarks. I am glad to see him here because I am sure he will not mind if I make a small qualification in respect of one remark he made. Referring to me, Senator Cameron said:

> With his typical Irish intransigence he found himself from time to time at odds with certain members of the delegation from the United Kingdom.

I have no objection whatsoever to the first part of that remark, because it is true that I was born in Dublin, Ireland. It is equally true that I have made no claim at any time to invariable amiability in all circumstances and situations. Indeed, if that is a quality properly ascribed to me, some of it may have come indirectly from Ireland in view of the fact that for some seven years it has been my privilege to sit beside my distinguished and eloquent colleague, Senator Grattan O'Leary. It may well be that some, though I regret not all, of his qualities have rubbed off on me in those years. However, it is far from my intention to attempt to blame him for any intransigence I may from time to time be guilty of in this chamber or elsewhere.

On the matter of disagreement with members of the United Kingdom delegation, I think it is fair to say that my disagreement was on certain matters of direct interest to Canada as well as to other member nations. It was not with any persons or personalities in the United Kingdom delegation. I did object, and with some success, to certain recommendations made by the Executive Committee to the General Council, and through the General Council to the general meeting of the association. It so happens that the Executive Committee has in its senior personnel a number of members of Parliament from the United Kingdom. But it is also fair to say that the Executive Committee consists of representatives from all the regions of the Commonwealth, and it was not my intention to make any individual group of members responsible for any recommendations to which I might have taken objection. Indeed, there is one distinguished member of the Executive Committee, who over the years has certainly upheld the Canadian interest and who, like many others, has done much to increase the ties that bind us together in the Commonwealth. I refer to Mr. Jimmy Walker, the former chief Liberal whip and former Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister. He is one who certainly cannot be regarded as being responsible in any way for any recommendation that in the judgment of himself and his colleagues on the Executive Committee would be disruptive of the Commonwealth, or against Canadian interests.

My disagreements were with some recommendations of that Executive Committee, and, if honourable senators are interested in the substance of those objections, they will find them in the report which will be appended to our proceedings today—a report which, I reiterate, had the approval of all members of the delegation including the leader, the Honourable George McIlraith, Senator Cameron, and members of the House of Commons, Mr. Douglas, Mr. Coates, Mr. Guay, and Mr. Rodrigue. Mr. Walker, whom I mentioned a moment ago, was there as the Canadian regional representative. He was not as such a member of our delegation.

Honourable senators, I gave considerable thought to what message I might bring back to this chamber from Malaysia. As I have said, I was one of your two representatives. As I was making some notes on impressions I received during the conference there kept ringing in my ears the words spoken by the Prime Minister of Malaysia at the opening ceremony. I regard his speech as one of the greatest I have ever heard. If it is not too extravagant to say so, I regard it as of considerable historic importance, because it dealt with what is almost certainly the greatest issue facing the Commonwealth, if not indeed the entire world. I refer to the method, the timing, and the extent to which what we know as the Westminster tradition of parliamentary government can or should be adapted to the developing nations of the world, particularly those of the Commonwealth. We inherited that tradition in Canada as we emerged from colonial status. Other emergent nations freely admit to having inherited that tradition, and in many cases—perhaps in all cases—they are doing what they can to apply those principles to the difficult social, economic, and political circumstances they find in the new world into which they have emerged.

Those of us who have lived a long time with these Westminster traditions are prone to criticize other countries who vary them, and who take constitutional and other steps that appear to us to abridge them fundamentally, The message that I bring back from Malaysia is that we should be infinitely more tolerant than we are, and we should be infinitely more informed about the conditions that have made many of these modifications necessary. Moreover, perhaps we can learn much from the skill with which they have made the adaptations they have found necessary in their own circumstances.

With that introduction, honourable senators, I ask your indulgence while I read to you a considerable portion of this great and historic speech made at the opening ceremony by the Prime Minister of Malaysia, whose short title is Tun Haji Abdul Razak bin Hussein. I have tried to abridge it, but I found that very difficult to do. However, I have made a few abridgements. I believe it is a speech which fully merits a place in the official proceedings of this chamber. Among other things, the Malaysian Prime Minister, speaking to the delegates, said:

> As you well know, the transformation of an empire into a commonwealth of free nations is one of the wonders of modern history—a process which ensures that after the political ties have been severed, the military and economic ties weakened, there still remains the important ties of good will.
> Thus, the Commonwealth today represents a network of personal and institutional relationships which defy any simple description... In other words, we have been the recipients of a most intricate and successful case of multiple transplant. The judicial and parliamentary systems, together with the administrative machinery, provided the first sinews of early nationhood. We were imbued with the principles of democracy and inherited not only the institutions but the instincts of the British system of democracy. Therefore, for those of us who were educated in the British tradition, the possibility of forsaking such deeply rooted and deeply cherished ideals as the rule of law and equality of man before the law seemed unthinkable.
> Nevertheless, we cannot fail to note that this parliamentary system of democracy has not succeeded in many of the new nations that have gone through the process of transformation from colonial territories into independent nations.
> It must be clear to us that the Westminster model of democracy does not transplant automatically. it needs suitable environmental conditions; otherwise—

And here, to my mind, is a brilliant metaphor.

> —the receiving tissue will reject the transplant.
> We cannot, therefore, follow the British system of democracy blindly without comparative economic and social foundations. It is, therefore, precisely in the developing countries, with their incubus of poverty and instability, that parliamentary institutions find uncertain place in the midst of rapid social and economic changes.
> Our search for national identity inevitably leads to political experiment; mutations develop in the constitutional structure simply in order to make it work better. Subtle forms of trespass at first begin to erode the parliamentary process until, in some extreme cases, the very concept of democracy is abandoned and decried.
> The result is that many people, whilst sharing the ideals of British parliamentary democracy, are sceptical of its chances of survival under conditions different from those found in Western Europe. It is also clear from experiences in some countries that democracy will not grow and flourish by merely adopting initially a democratic constitution.

> Therefore, this morning, I propose to explain to you our experience of democracy in this country and our Malaysian concept of democracy. I hope I can do this with frankness, as must be the practice in the Commonwealth Assembly such as this.

Perhaps at this point I may digress to remind honourable senators that Malaysia, since it achieved its independence, has gone through some very difficult stages. As the Prime Minister points out, it is a country of many diverse races. According to the 1967 census there are 4.3 million Malays, 3.5 million Chinese, 1 million Indians and Pakistanis, 200,000 or 300,000 members of more or less indigenous races, particularly in East Malaysia; that is, in Sarawak and Sabah.

This is one of the new Commonwealth countries which has been confronted with an attempted communist take-over. It resisted that take-over. It has been faced with internal strife—racial strife. As I read some further remarks of the Prime Minister, I am sure honourable senators will see many close comparisons with some of our Canadian experiences. The Prime Minister continued:

> From May 13, 1969 to 20th February, 1971, this country was under emergency rule. Parliament was suspended and the supreme executive and legislative powers were vested in the Director of Operations who exercised these powers on the advice of the National Operations Council.
> We came under criticism from some quarters, from those who feared that this state of affairs would remain a permanent feature of the government of this country. Generalizing from experience in some other parts of the world, they saw this as a prelude to a military regime with the Director of Operations cast in the role of Dictator.
> However, as soon as we were satisfied that the security situation had improved sufficiently, we voluntarily divested ourselves of the emergency powers and reconvened parliament in February this year. This fact, in itself, is clear evidence of our faith in the concept of parliamentary democracy and our determination to uphold and practise it.
> Now, today, parliament is once again supreme in this country—that the nation has accepted certain restrictions on the democratic process is a sincere and practical attempt to make it workable and acceptable to a new set of political and social facts.
> Naturally, there may be misgivings among some who see democracy only in terms of a rigid conformity with the Westminster model. We, however, hold the view that, while we acknowledge and respect the Mother of Parliaments, such a mother may produce diverse offsprings—each one the individual product of environment as well as of inheritance.
> The Malaysian type of democracy is the one we feel best suited to the needs of our unique multi-racial society. It has had to be adapted to realities of economic and social conditions. It is not always possible for a developing country to achieve the standard of democratic practice equal to that of a country which has had experience for centuries.
> In 1957, we in Malaysia—then Malaya—set out trying to do this very thing. However, we were following a system rooted in a relatively homogenous community that had also reached a degree of social cohesion to which we ourselves were not quite ready to aspire. We were probably guilty of over-idealizing the Westminster model. Today, we have sought to apply a corrective balance suitable to our circumstances and acceptable to our people.
> In our country, the principles of democracy are as fixed and abiding as ever and we have never departed from our fundamental democratic values.
> It is true that we have made adjustments in our constitutional framework; and, for a short time, we were compelled by circumstances to sacrifice some freedom in order that that freedom could ultimately be protected and preserved.

I may say, in passing, that that particular argument is one recently used—and used properly, I think—in our own Canadian context. Continuing, the Prime Minister said:

> The view we take is that democratic government is the best and most acceptable form of government. So long as the form is preserved, the substance can be changed to suit conditions of a particular country. We recognize that each nation must develop, according to its own light, its own chosen political and economic systems and that the developing world has a special need of an articulated political system suited to its own problems.
> The major concerns of Malaysia, ladies and gentlemen, are communalism and militant communism. These are problems which, by their very nature, impose constraints on any completely liberal concept of democracy. The attempt to evolve a reasonable and workable system for ourselves, however, is not a bid to abandon democracy at any fundamental level, but an earnest and sincere attempt to make it work here in our country and to make it answer the imperatives of racial and social integration towards greater progress and stability.
> For those who doubt this, comparison may be made with those nations who have discarded the Parliamentary system. For Democracy to work, it must produce results. It must demonstrate that the one-man-one-vote system can produce an honest and effective government, working through an honest and effective administration, in the interests of its people. If the people lose faith in this system, then they will look for other alternatives.
> Let us consider our case—the case of Malaysia. At the very outset of our Independence, our loyalty to Democratic values was severely tested in the crucible of the Emergency created by Communist terrorism. Our doubtful critics should remember that the Communist menace which we experienced was not only a proving ground of Democracy in Malaysia, but was in fact the ground on which the seeds of Democracy were grown.

We are essentially a Government elected by the people, for the service of the people. We have held elections four times and practised Parliamentary Democracy for 14 years. We hold free elections, and the machinery of Government between elections operates to serve the public, through processes intelligible and visible to the public and subject to public criticism. Rule is by consent.

We support and practise the Party system and believe in a loyal Opposition whose role is to keep Government under critical surveillance and provide an alternative Government, if necessary. Every five years, ladies and gentlemen, we hold our breath as we seek a fresh mandate from the people.

Independence brought the unique opportunity of nation building to occupy the thoughts and energies of our people. This involved the high responsibility of devising a written Constitution.

Again this is an echo of our own contemporary Canadian experience. The Prime Minister continued:

We sought to enshrine the guiding principles of Democracy along with our aim of achieving a meaningful and purposeful philosophy to meet the special circumstances of our environment.

We are a country of many races, and, therefore, many different cultures. Full protection of individual rights is guaranteed under the Constitution. Special provisions also exist to guard against any form of discrimination for reasons of race, religion or colour. There is a provision safeguarding the special position of the Malays and other natives as well as the legitimate interests of other communities.

The struggle for political justice has yielded to a new struggle for social justice. Skill and technique had to be applied to the delicate handling of a racially mixed community.

Our problems here are unique. In no other country is the balance of major communities so delicate. In no other country are political and economic powers divided so sharply along communal lines. The Constitution was, therefore, an attempt to lay secure foundations to preserve peace and harmony among our people of various races.

Some two years ago, in May, 1969, our Constitution was molested by forces destructive to the Rule of Law. The very foundation of this Rule of Law and the safety and security of our people compelled us to invoke Emergency Rule.

Again a Canadian echo.

However, the aim of the Emergency Government was solely to restore law and order and prepare the Nation for the return to the Parliamentary processes which, as you know, were clearly vindicated in February this year.

However, the social, economic and political problems which brought about our crisis cannot be erased overnight. So, therefore, sincere and persistent efforts must be continually made by all our people in a genuine attempt to foster harmony, goodwill and complete unity, which are vital for the foundation of the peace, stability and integrity of our country.

Certain vital priorities and issues emerged from this tragic passage in our history that could no longer be swept under the carpet. We had to think afresh, in order to construct a political framework on an unshakeable and firm foundation consistent with the realities of our multi-racial society and our economic conditions. We could not use the Westminster yardstick of 1957 in Malaysia in 1971, as to do so would have been to miss a valuable lesson in history.

We, therefore, had to give our people a new sense of direction and re-set the compass of our country. We formulated the Runkunegara, which in English meant National Ideology and, at the same time, amended our Constitution.

The Runkunegara proclams the basic principles underlying our Constitution, and includes a declaration of our belief in the Democratic way of life. It was intended as a synthesis of thoughts and feelings that have evolved in our common history as a Nation.

The Amendments to the Constitution are, in fact, a pre-condition for the Malaysian concept of Democracy.

Our Constitution, Ladies and Gentlemen, was originally drawn up in wise and judicious recognition of the multi-racial nature of our society and the countervailing interests of our different communities. The delicate balance we reached, as long as it had the agreement of all concerned, was the main foundation of our collective existence.

When this balance was upset, the trouble began and these provisions became "sensitive issues". These issues came under persistent attack for purposes of political gains in the Elections. They became the subject of heated controversy and, therefore, the focus of historical prejudices, emotionalisms were abused for individual, selfish and anti-National interests! What had been intended as safeguards became a threat to our survival.

We found ourselves in the unique and explosive situation in which the freedom of speech upheld by Democracy was being exploited to such a degree that our national security was challenged by the democratic process itself.

This situation, which I describe as unique, such as the West has seldom found itself in the parallel position, where liberal Democracy can be made the instrument by unscrupulous and ruthless elements to undermine the very foundation of the Nation.

And I again interject a comment of my own, that that experience is not entirely unique to Malaysia. We have had some experience with it here in Canada, and for that reason should understand better than we may have in the past the problems and solutions faced by a country such as Malaysia.

> The aim of the Constitutional Amendments, therefore, was to remove the sensitive issues from the realm of public debate and to ensure the smooth functioning of Parliamentary Democracy. Certain provisions were entrenched to assure our people that their rights and privileges under the Constitution could not be threatened. As an enforcement and deterrent measure, the Sedition Act was passed. A National Unity Council was set up, composed of people from all parties and all walks of life, to assist in formulating long-term and permanent solutions to our racial problems.
> The Amendments to the Constitution were fully debated in Parliament and approved by an overwhelming majority of both Houses. They were, therefore, not imposed by direct rule, but made Law by the duly elected representatives of our people.

Again perhaps a lesson to some other countries, including our own, when in emergency situations we have a tendency to resort to Orders in Council to achieve these things, rather than to have in advance approval, as the Prime Minister said "by an overwhelming majority of both Houses."

> Nevertheless, these Amendments have been questioned by other as curbs on a truly Democratic system. But, as far as I am aware, no State which had a Democratic Constitution, translates the right to freedom of speech into an absolute right. Even in America, freedom of expression enjoys no absolute immunity from constitutional limitations, but must be measured by standards that satisfy the First Amendment.
> The Malaysian concept of Democracy subscribes also to the need to balance individual interest against the general security of the State. Our concept may not necessarily be suitable for other peoples but it meets with the national temperament and accords with the realities of contemporary society in Malaysia.
> Finally, may I reiterate that our Malaysian formula does not depart from the true spirit of Democracy. We have, in fact, re-dedicated ourselves to such basic principles as loyalty to King and Country, the upholding of the Constitution and of the Rule of Law.

Perhaps I may interject again, honourable senators, and say with respect to that mention of loyalty to the King, that Malysia happens to be, as far as I know, the only country in the world where the King is elected. The heads of the states comprising some of the present Federation of Malaysia periodically elect, from among their own number, a new King. I am not suggesting that as a parallel to be considered in the revision of our own Constitution, at present under study by a joint committee of both houses.

> We are a society pledged to the concept of equality. Under the representative system, as opposed to Custodian-type Colonial rule, the moral and legal authority underlying Government derives from the interests and welfare of our citizens.
> My Government, the Government of Malysia, is actively regulating and rectifying the inequalities in our society in the interests of economic Democracy. If I may quote from Aristotle—"The State comes into being that men might live; it continues that men might live well".
> Economic Democracy tries to ensure a fair share for all and in any prosperity this country achieves, a place in our country for all our citizens. But, in order to achieve this, we have to take positive measures in earnest to eradicate poverty as a democratic aim in order to establish a just and stable society.
> We would do well to remember, Ladies and Gentlemen, that in the West, social systems tend to be more supportive of Democracy. Here, under the threat of hostile counter-influences, there is a correspondingly greater need for commitment to the Democratic ideal.
> It can be contended that in Malaysia we continue to defend the cause of Democracy as fervently as we did through 12 years of the Emergency, by posing a workable alternative to the Communist ideology. To this end, we have devised an institutional framework that assures each community in this country that its right and freedom are entrenched and cannot be abrogated by the other.
> This is the Malaysian concept of Democracy and with the help of Almighty God, we will strive to uphold this concept, nourish and nurture it for all time.

Honourable senators, I hope that my reading of that speech—far less eloquent than its original presentation—will validate my opening statement that it was a great speech, and an historic document which deserves a place in our proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to speak in the debate, this inquiry is considered as having been concluded.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, items 8, 9 and 10 have been on our Order Paper for some time. One stands in my name, one in the name of Senator Langlois and one in the name of Senator Hays. It is my understanding that at the moment no one wishes to speak on any of these items. If any honourable senator intends to speak on any of them he should let the officials know before Tuesday next, otherwise they will be removed from the Order Paper.

In view of this, I ask that items 8, 9 and 10 stand.

The Hon. the Speaker: Perhaps the honourable Senator McDonald will permit me to point out that item 10 is a motion and is of a different character to items 8 and 9, which are subjects of inquiry. When Item 10 is called next week, Senator Cameron should state whether he is agreeable to having it removed from the Order Paper. In the meantime, items 8, 9 and 10 stand.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 26 at 8 p.m.

COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

REPORT BY THE CANADIAN MAIN BRANCH DELEGATION

The 17th Annual Conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association was held in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, from 3-18 September this year.

The Canadian Main Branch delegation consisted of seven delegates as follows:—Hon. George McIlraith, P.C., M.P. (Leader), Senator Allister Grosart (Chairman of the Branch), Senator Donald Cameron, Robert Coates, M.P., T. C. Douglas, M.P., Joseph Guay, M.P., Romuald Rodrigue, M.P.

The delegation from the Canadian Provincial Branches consisted of Premier Gerald Regan of Nova Scotia, Speaker Fred Cass (Ontario), Speaker Peter Fox (Manitoba), Speaker Charles Miller (Prince Edward Island), Guy Leduc, M.H.A. (Quebec), Dr. Howard McDiarmid, M.L.A. (British Columbia), Charles McIlveen, M.L.A. (New Brunswick), Charles Meakes, M.L.A. (Saskatchewan). Elections in Alberta and Newfoundland prevented the attendance of delegates from those provinces.

Delegation secretaries were Ian Imrie (Main Branch) and Gordon Barnhart (Provincial Branches).

Mr. James Walker, M.P., attended as the Canadian Regional Representative.

The Conference Opening

Approximately 200 delegates, official observers and delegation secretaries from all parts of the Commonwealth were in attendance at the Conference which was opened in the Parliament House (where all conference sessions were held) by H. M. the Yang di-Pertuan Agong, Head of State of Malaysia. He reminded the delegates that this was the second time within the past decade that Malaysia had been host to a Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference. In 1963 the 9th Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference had met in a "younger Malaysia still in the throes of a bitter struggle for national survival." Malaysia had in the interim progressed rapidly. He paid tribute to the beneficial effect both to Malaysia and to the World Community of the Commonwealth of Nations, and particularly of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association for its frank discussions of political, economic and social problems in an atmosphere of mutual tolerance that exists in no other comparable body in the world today.

The Prime Minister

The Prime Minister of Malaysia, Tun Haji Abdul Razak bin Hussein, also welcomed the delegates. He acknowledged the bond of common heritages between all Commonwealth Nations, but also observed that the "Westminster" system of parliamentary democracy cannot be transplanted automatically to all the new nations of the Commonwealth as they emerge from colonial status to full independence. This, he said, is one of the critical problems of the developing countries. Speaking frankly about the experience of his own country, the Prime Minister referred to the suspension of Parliament in Malaysia and Emergency Rule which took place between May 1969 and February 1971. He acknowledged the criticism that had been directed at Malaysia about this from some quarters. This was, however, a necessary step forward in the struggle for national survival against forces, internal and external, that were seen to be seriously eroding the whole process of parliamentary democratic government in Malaysia. It was undertaken, he said, with full understanding of the values inherent in the "Westminster" system of parliamentary democracy, in the rule of law and in the equality of man before the law. Temporarily, the Nation had accepted certain restrictions on the democratic process in a sincere and practical attempt to make it workable. "Today, Parliament is once again supreme in this country. The principles of democracy are as fixed and abiding as ever. The view we take is that Democratic Government is the best and most acceptable form of government."

A new Constitution, the "Runkunegara" has been adopted to incorporate the principles of parliamentary democracy within the special circumstances of the Malaysian political environment. Malaysia is a country of many races and many different cultures. "Special provisions also exist to guard against any form of discrimination for reasons of race, religion or colour. There is a provision safe-guarding the special position of the Malays and other natives as well as the legitimate interests of other communities."

The unique problem of Malaysia lies in the exceptionally delicate balance of the major ethnic communities. "In no other country are political and economic powers divided so sharply along communal lines." The new Constitution recognizes the multiracial nature of Malaysian society and the varying interests of the different communities, and also the need to balance individual interests against the general security of the State. It was adopted, the Prime Minister told the delegates, after a full debate in Parliament and approved by an overwhelming majority of both Houses.

The Chairman

The delegates were also addressed by the Chairman of the Conference, the Hon. Tun Tan Siew Sin, Minister of Finance of Malaysia and a recent visitor to Canada, as guest of the Canadian and P.E.I. Branches of the C.P.A., who reminded the delegates that the Parliament Buildings in which the opening ceremonies and Conference were taking place were, in fact, first officially utilized by the 9th Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference in 1963.

The Vice-Chairman

The Vice-Chairman of the Association, the Hon. R.J. Sembereka of Malawi addressed the delegates as representative of next year's host branch for the 18th Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference.

Subjects of Discussion

Discussions were carried out in five plenary sessions three of which were devoted to "The Commonwealth and Problems of World Security", and two to "Problems of the Environment". In addition, two Committees sat concurrently for three sessions each to discuss "Challenges to Parliamentary Democracy", and "Economic Development". Canada was selected to give the opening speeches in the debate on "Pollution and Control", and "Preservation of Endangered Wildlife". The opening presentation was made by the Leader of the Canadian delegation, the Hon. George McIlraith.

General Council and General Meeting

The General Council met several times to consider the recommendations made by the Council's Executive Committee when it met early in the year for the first time in Canada at Charlottetown. One full General Council session was devoted to the consideration of a special report of the Executive Committee dealing with proposed amendments to the Constitution of the Association. During the meetings of the General Council the Canadian Branch was represented by its Chairman, Senator Allister Grosart, and the ten Canadian Provincial Branches, first by Mr. Speaker F. M. Cass of Ontario and later by Premier Gerald Regan of Nova Scotia.

The Charlottetown Report of the Executive Committee* contained several items of particular interest to the Canadian Branch. The Canadian Councillors took exception to two recommendations made by the Executive Committee, one that a proposed exchange of information and observers between the C.P.A. and the International Association of French-Speaking Parliamentarians should not be approved on the grounds that the purpose of the latter Association was "not primarily parliamentary". Senator Grosart termed this a "gratuitous comment" about an Association of which the Canadian Parliament was a co-founder and currently host to its 3rd Annual Conference in Ottawa. He pointed out that the C.P.A. has for some years exchanged information and observers with the Inter-Parliamentary Union, in which most, if not all, of the AIPLF member-countries also participate. He suggested that the C.P.A. in this and other recent "judgment" decisions might be becoming more inward-looking than the Commonwealth itself.

The Executive Committee recommended against a proposal from the former Speaker of the Saskatchewan Legislative, the Hon. James Snedker, that a provincial Branch, now entitled to only one delegate, should be permitted to also send an observer to C.P.A. Conferences, entirely at the expense of that branch. Among other reasons put forward was the desirability of having both the Government and Opposition parties represented. The Executive Committee had based its decision on the possible problems any substantial increase in the number of observers might pose for the smaller host countries.

The Canadian Main Branch representative appealed to the Council for reconsideration of the Executive Committee's decision.

The Executive Committee gave careful consideration to the Canadian objections and modified its recommendations in respect of the AIPLF and Saskatchewan requests.

The Constitution

Suggested amendments to the Constitution by the Executive Committee (circulated to all the member-branches last summer) were considered by the General Council in Kuala Lumpur. The revised Constitution as approved will be circulated shortly to all Canadian Branch members. Eight additional amendments were submitted to the General Council on behalf of the Canadian Branch. These were considered by the Council, along with seven other amendments proposed by other branches. Most of these were of a purely technical nature and need not be outlined here. However, Canadian Branch members might be interested to know that of the eight amendments proposed by the Canadian Branch, six were accepted by the Council. An important amendment proposed by the Maharashtra (India) Branch, in co-operation with the Canadian Branch, was accepted by the Council. Its effect is to provide for independent status for provincial and state branches in federal states, i.e. Canada, India, Malaysia and Australia, by mutual agreement.

Branch Representation

Some dissatisfaction has been expressed from time to time by the Canadian Federal Branch and some of the Provincial Branches with the number of delegates allotted by the Association at the annual conferences. This has been fixed since 1967 at seven from the Federal Branch and one from each of the ten provinces. Branches are assessed an annual financial contribution which is in part related to the number of delegates allotted. Some provinces have felt that one delegate annually is inadequate. The Federal Branch may be entitled to greater representation on the basis of its status as a Main Branch and the size of its financial contribution. This would facilitate a better balance of representation between the various parties in both Houses.

Members of the Executive Committee of the General Council of the C.P.A. are: Sir Fredric Bennett, M.P., (United Kingdom), Chairman; Hon. Aleke Banda, M.P., (Malawi), President of the Association, and Vice-Chairman; Rt. Hon. Sir Alec Douglas-Home, M.P., (United Kingdom), Vice-President of the Association; Hon. Tun Tan Siew Sin, (Malaysia); Mr. Bryant Godman Irvine, M.P. (United Kingdom), Hon. Treasurer of the Association; Hon. Roy McNeill, M.P., (Jamaica); Hon. P. A. Kisumo, M.P., (Tanzania); Dr. the Hon. G. S. Dhillon, M.P., (India); Hon. J. C. O. Hadson-Taylor, M.P., (Sierra Leone); Hon. F. R. D. Bandaranaike, M.P., (Ceylon); Mr. W. F. Nankivell, M.P., (Australia); Mr. James E. Walker, M.P., (Canada); Hon. Dr. Guido DeMarco, M.P., (Malta); Hon. P. L. B. Pitt, M.P., (Trinidad & Tobago).

The amended constitution now provides for a 5-year review of both Branch representation and financial contributions. The next review will be undertaken by the Executive Committee at its meeting next May in Singapore. The elected officers of the Canadian Federal Branch will consult its members and the provincial branches and the Regional Representative (Mr. James Walker, M.P.) as to what action, if any, we should take on this matter.

A major change in the Constitution proposed by the Executive and endorsed by the Council enables the Association to be registered as a charitable organization in the United Kingdom, exempt from certain United Kingdom taxes,—an annual saving of some £8,000.

In another amendment, the categories into which branches of the Association were divided was reduced to four: Unitary Main Branches, Federal Main Branches, State and Provincial, and Auxiliary Branches. Of special significance to Canada is that it is now possible for the Yukon Territorial Council and possibly also the Northwest Territories Council to obtain membership in the C.P.A. It is hoped that these legislative bodies will consider joining the other eleven Canadian branches in the Association, although it may be necessary to propose a further liberalization of the Association rules to allow them delegate representation.

Participation by Main Branch Delegates

All the Federal Branch delegates participated actively in the Conference sessions and seminars, dealing both with previously assigned topics and in ensuing discussions. In keeping with the now well-established practice, they came fully briefed following a two-day session in Ottawa with the Malaysian High Commissioner and his staff and senior Canadian public service officials. To these were added a most useful briefing on arrival in Kuala Lumpur by the Acting High Commissioner, Mr. Neil Haffey and members of his staff. Mr. Haffey and others attended many conference sessions and were of the greatest possible help to the delegation in many ways, including hospitality arrangements for delegates to meet Canadians engaged in business and social service activities in Malaysia. All delegates were impressed with the thorough knowledge and understanding of Malaysian affairs by our official representatives.

The specific subjects on which Federal Branch delegates addressed the Conference are indicated in the attached summary of the Conference agenda. A full verbatim Report of the Conference sessions is being published and will indicate the full extent of Canadian participation in the proceedings.

Conference Tours

During the first week delegates had an opportunity to familiarize themselves with many aspects of life in the beautiful capital of Malaysia and to visit four of the eleven mainland states: Selangor, Negri Sembilan, Malacca and Penang. In Selangor they visited the famous pewter and batik industries and were magnificently received by H.R.H. the Sultan of Selangor. In Negri Sembilan, they were entertained at luncheon by H.R.H. the Yang di-Pertuan Besar. In the historic city of Malacca delegates visited the ancestral home of the Chairman of the Conference, the Honourable Tun Tan Siew Sin, and were guests of the Governor at a colourful display of traditional folk dancing and an exhibition of the lively art of self-defence.

Delegates were flown to the Island State of Penang in the Northwestern part of the Malaysian Peninsula, where they were guests of the Penang Legislative Assembly, which had, coincidentally, just formed the newest branch of the C.P.A. They were entertained at dinner by the Speaker of the Assembly and visited a number of picturesque points of interest on the Island, including the famous Snake Temple. In Kuala Lumpur delegates were given a most instructive tour of the Rubber Research Institute Experimental Station just outside the capital.

1972 and 1973 Conferences

An invitation was accepted from the Malawi Branch to hold the next (18th) C.P.A. General Conference in that country in the early fall of 1972. The 1973 conference (19th) will be in the United Kingdom and the 20th C.P.A. General Conference in Ceylon in 1974.

Post Conference Tours

A number of Malaysian State Branches, among them Pahang and Trengganu in West Malaysia and Sabah and Sarawak in East Malaysia, generously invited a few delegates each to visit those States for a few days following the conclusion of the conference in Kuala Lumpur.

Conference Arrangements

In the view of all of the Canadian delegates and wives the program and conference arrangements organized by our Malaysian hosts were of the highest quality throughout the entire visit. We record our sincere thanks to the Chairman of the Conference, the Hon. Tun Tan Siew Sin, for his brilliant direction of the entire undertaking; to the Deputy Chairman, Hon. Enche Mohamed Khir Johari for his untiring efforts and to the Secretary of the Malaysia Branch Enche Ahmad bin Abdullah and all his staff for the planning and carrying out of their many onerous duties and for the long hours they devoted to our welfare.

General Council Secretariat

We must also record our great indebtedness to the Secretary-General of the Association, Mr. Robin Vanderfelt, O.B.E., whose name and fame are well known throughout the Commonwealth. Without the benefit of his wisdom, judgement and quiet and efficient diplomacy we would not have had such a very successful conference. Our thanks go also to the other members of the General Council Secretariat, the Deputy Secretary-General and Editor of Publications, Mr. Ian Grey, to the new Assistant Secretary-General Mr. Palitha Weerasinghe, to Mr. Jack Fowler, also Assistant Secretary-General, and Miss Betty May, Miss Penny Lancashire and Miss Helen Sommerville.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski) has been substituted for that of Mr. Lachance on the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada.

CANADA-UNITED STATES PERMANENT JOINT BOARD ON DEFENCE

APPOINTMENT OF HON. JOHN B. AIRD AS CHAIRMAN OF CANADIAN SECTION

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators will have read of the appointment of Senator Aird as Chairman of the Canadian Section of the Canada-United States Permanent Joint Board on Defence. Senator Aird is not here this evening. He is at Bagotville in New Brunswick at this moment discharging his new responsibilities. He was briefed on these, I understand, on Sunday and left yesterday to spend this week in Bagotville discussing with his Canadian and United States colleagues the work of the session of that board.

Honourable senators will recall that the Permanent Joint Board on Defence dates back to a meeting between the then Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. Mackenzie King, and President Roosevelt, at Ogdensburg, New York, in 1940. The board has parallel Canadian and American sections, each headed by a civilian chairman. Senator Aird will be assisted by three representatives from the Department of National Defence and two from the Department of External Affairs. There are also observers from the Department of Transport and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Normally the board meets three times a year at defence establishments in the two countries, and on this occasion the meetings are taking place at Bagotville. It is an advisory rather than an executive body, but formal recommendations may be passed unanimously and submitted to the two governments. If both governments approve, this approval becomes the executive directive to the government agencies concerned.

The Permanent Joint Board on Defence is an important agency for the preliminary discussion of ideas at the official level, for joint military diplomatic consideration of defence matters, for distribution of information, for hastening executive actions and smoothing out difficulties, and for following up on decisions already taken to ensure that they are effectively carried out.

As we all know, Senator Aird has been serving on the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, the National Finance Committee, the Science Policy Committee, and has been chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Senate. With his long interest in the interaction of defence and foreign policy, Senator Aird is, I believe, singularly well fitted to take over the work of the late Arnold Heeney as chairman of the Canadian section of the board. It will be recalled that General McNaughton was the first chairman of this body.

I would wish honourable senators not merely to take note of this particular appointment but to consider also the implications of the appointment. The Prime Minister has appointed a distinguished colleague of all of us to an important position, which does not entail his resignation from this chamber. I think it is significant that the Government recognizes that a senator can serve in the Senate and, simultaneously, work in a specific official agency. I am sure that Senator Aird will become a successful chairman of the Canadian section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, while simultaneously continuing to function as a distinguished member of this chamber.

I should like to table a copy of the release of the Prime Minister announcing Senator Aird's appointment.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government if I heard him well when he talked about Bagotville, New Brunswick? Is there such a place?

Hon. Mr. Martin: It is Bagotville, Quebec. I am sorry if I said New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I thought so.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I join with the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Martin) in congratulating Senator Aird on his having been appointed chairman of the Canadian section of the Canada-United States Permanent Joint Board on Defence. Agreeing with the Leader of the Government also, it is my sincere hope that the appointment of a senator to such a position by the Government is an indication that it plans to make fuller use in future of the pool of talent available to it in the Upper Chamber. We have men of exceptional ability here who could easily serve the country in certain other capacities while simultaneously carrying out their duties as senators. The Government has shown commendable good sense and imagination in calling upon a member of the Senate whose interest and expertise in the area of defence are unquestionable.

I cannot help but make reference to Senator Aird's difference of opinion with the administration in April of 1969 when he resigned from the chairmanship of the NATO Parliamentary Association. At that time Senator Aird was quite upset about Canada's cutback in the number of troops it was willing to contribute to NATO in Europe. He was of the opinion then—and I presume still is now—that the presence in Europe of substantial numbers of Canadian troops was necessary to a proper defence of our own interests.

The same Prime Minister with whom Senator Aird then disagreed, and who is not known for his flexibility—although lack of flexibility is not contrary to the capacity of making about-turns, now appoints Senator Aird chairman of the Canadian section of the Canada-United States Permanent Joint Board on Defence. The Joint Board, as well we know, is intrinsically linked with NORAD, which in practice is an integral part of the defence system provided by NATO. The appointment is then a good one. Senator Aird is a knowledgeable and perspicacious, reasonable man. May I suggest that he was just as knowledgeable and reasonable when he opposed two years ago our announced intention to eventually remove all our troops from Europe.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I would not want this occasion to pass without saying a word about the appointment of Senator Aird to this very important position. I think this is very much the kind of appointment that, as the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Flynn) has suggested, might well be considered on more than one occasion for the Senate. Certainly, in this case the Senate is honoured by the fact that we have here among our members the new Joint Chairman of the Canada-United States Defence Board.

This is not the first time that such an appointment has been made here. When the late Senator J. J. Bench was a member of this chamber he was also, if I remember correctly, a member of the Wartime Labour Board, of which Mr. Justice McTague was chairman.

John Aird, as the leader said, is going to bring a vast knowledge and experience to this new work. One should not forget that he had a very distinguished career in the Royal Canadian Navy during the war. He has a feeling for the needs of the armed forces and of the need of this country for the armed forces. The appointment redounds very much to his credit. He is a busy man, and I suppose it is for that reason among others that he was chosen to take on yet another job.

He is a young man, and that I think will be of valuable assistance to him because there will be a great deal of work involved. But, honourable senators, if it is to his honour and to his credit that he should be appointed to this position, it is also a great honour to this chamber to have one of our members appointed to such a position, and I think all honourable senators will applaud the appointment.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, Senator Aird is Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have had the privilege for some time past of serving with him in the capacity of vice-chairman of that committee. I think it is proper to say that this distinguished appointment of Senator Aird to this very important position is to some extent at least a tribute to the tremendous work he has done as chairman of that committee. It is also, if I may say so, very much to the credit of the Government that this appointment has been made. Senator Aird has not always agreed with the policies of the Government, particularly in matters of defence. He was in many ways the leading spirit in the preparation of the report of the committee on the Caribbean which was not entirely complimentary to the Canadian posture over the years vis-à-vis our relationships and obligations in the Caribbean.

If I may speak now, honourable senators, not as a member of the committee but as one who sits on this side of the house, I would hope that the appointment may mean that the Government is reconsidering some of the positions it has taken in respect to Canadian obligations to Canada and to the world at large with respect to the share we should take in the defence of this part of the free world.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CANADA-U.S.S.R. GENERAL EXCHANGES AGREEMENT AND CANADIAN-SOVIET COMMUNIQUÉ—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, with leave I would like to direct the Senate's attention to the Canadian-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement done at Ottawa, October 20, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on that day, and the joint Canadian-Soviet communiqué, dated October 26, 1971, and tabled this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Do I understand that the Government Leader wishes to proceed with this now, with leave?

Hon. Mr. Martin: Only with leave.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave being granted to the Government Leader to proceed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Honourable senators, last Wednesday, October 20, there was tabled in the Senate a Canadian-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement which had been signed a mere two hours previously. This evening I tabled the communiqué issued this morning at the time of the departure from Canada of the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers of the Union of the Soviet Socialist Republics. I suggest, subject to the concurrence of this chamber, that the agreement and the communiqué be printed as part of today's Hansard.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is this agreeable, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of Canada-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement, see Appendix "A", pp. 1393-4).

(For text of Canadian-Soviet Communiqué, see Appendix "B", pp. 1395-7).

Hon. Mr. Martin: On June 2 last I spoke in the Senate on the protocol which had been signed in Moscow on May 19 respecting consultation on important international problems of mutual interest and questions of bilateral interest, on which the Leader of the Opposition also commented, and I also explained the protocol of May 28 which was issued at the conclusion of the Prime Minister's visit to the Soviet Union.

Before speaking about the communiqué, I might mention that this was not the first visit of Mr. Kosygin to Canada. Rather unexpectedly and unofficially he paid a brief visit to Newfoundland in 1967. On this occasion, however, he was officially returning the visit of the Prime Minister of Canada to the Soviet Union last May.

I should like to say that I think the Senate has played its proper role in the reception of this distinguished guest. Quite a few senators had the opportunity of meeting or listening to Chairman Kosygin on one or another of certain events. His Honour the Speaker showed Chairman Kosygin around the Senate, and welcomed him on a tour of his own chambers. I would like to compliment His Honour for his imaginative choice of gift which he offered Mr. Kosygin. I hope he is successful in bringing to fruition his invitation to Mr. Kosygin to send a pee-wee hockey team to Quebec. I have nothing but praise for the contribution that senators from both sides of the house made to the discussions with Mr. Kosygin in the meeting that took place with members of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Standing Committee on External Affairs of the other house. This was a very important event. As one who attended the meetings I cannot help but feel it is my duty to tell honourable senators of the way in which the members of that committee from this house distinguished themselves in the important questions that they put. Everyone who was present on that occasion will agree that it was a successful meeting. The formula employed at that meeting is one that we might well bear in mind for future use.

I think the visit of Chairman Kosygin has had considerable value for him, his party, and ourselves. The Government had full working sessions on Monday and Tuesday of last week here in Ottawa. Mr. Kosygin has had the opportunity of talking to parliamentarians in Ottawa, and in the provinces that he has been able to visit.

He has seen something of our research operations and our export industries, and I mention in particular Bell Northern Research Central Laboratory near Ottawa, the Canadian International Paper Company in Gatineau, the Furness Withy container terminal in Montreal, ATCO Quebec Limited near Montreal, the particle board plant of MacMillan Bloedel Limited in Vancouver, the nickel refinery of Sherritt-Gordon Mines Limited at Fort Saskatchewan, Alberta, and the Ontario Hydro nuclear generating station at Pickering, on which occasion he was the guest of the Government of Ontario.

I had the responsibility of accompanying Mr. Kosygin through his national tour, and I can testify that he is an able man, who was greatly impressed with our country.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Did you communicate through an interpreter all the time?

Hon. Mr. Martin: Oh, yes; he had to have an interpreter.

The General Exchanges Agreement is a follow-up to the Canada-USSR Agreement on Co-operation in the Industrial Application of Science and Technology, which was signed in Moscow on January 27, 1971. That agreement, known as the Industrial Application Agreement, was tabled in this house on February 9, and I spoke to it on that occasion. It was originally to have been signed by the Prime Minister, had he been able to leave this country for a visit to the Soviet Union at that time. Owing to the rather critical situation then prevailing, the trip had to be postponed until May, and the Industrial Application Agreement was in fact signed by my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, when he visited Moscow in January.

At the time of the signing of the Industrial Application Agreement, we were already looking forward to a General Exchanges Agreement. I think it fair to say that when we agreed to sign the Industrial Application Agreement we understood that the Soviet Union would be prepared to enter thereafter into negotiations on a broader general exchanges agreement.

This agreement is intended to provide a framework for the development of Canadian-Soviet exchanges and contacts over the whole range of exchange activities not included within the terms of the earlier agreement. We were looking toward an agreement a few years ago on broad exchanges with the U.S.S.R. The agreement might have been obtained much earlier but for a temporary setback in relations which occurred as a result of disturbances in Central Eastern Europe about three years ago. As for this current visit of Mr. Kosygin, we regard the conclusion of the General Exchanges Agreement as the best testimony to Canadian-Soviet co-operation.

When drafting this agreement, we might have opted for an agreement which listed in detail the various exchanges that might take place. Had the agreement been too specific, it might have been necessary to renegotiate the whole agreement every couple of years.

The agreement sets up a Canada-U.S.S.R. mixed commission which is to meet every two years to work out and review programs of exchanges. This method will ensure that the effective implementation of the agreement is current and up-to-date. It will be somewhat more flexible to review programs, however, rather than having to renegotiate the entire agreement.

The first article is the important one, since all the other articles flow from it. It states that the two governments undertake to promote and develop exchanges and other forms of co-operation in scientific, technical, educational, cultural, and other fields on the basis of mutual benefit and reciprocity, in accordance with the laws in force in each of the two countries.

Whereas the Industrial Application Agreement may be considered to have dealt with scientific and technical fields, the General Exchanges Agreement is much broader, and lists educational and cultural besides other unspecified fields. It is indicated that the purpose of the exchanges is for mutual benefit, and they are on the basis of reciprocity.

With two countries of such unequal population, and unequal in their capacity for power in doing the negotiating, it is as well to clarify that the basis of exchanges is to be one of reciprocity. Methods of implementation are bound to be different in the two countries, and provision is made for this in the ultimate phrase which points to the laws in force in each country.

Although the agreement is a general one, there are some references to specific agreements which have been in operation. The ninth article of the agreement, for example, refers to the agreement between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the State Committee of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. on Television and Radio Broadcasting.

There are two agreements mentioned in the second article, namely, that between the National Research Council of Canada and the U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences, and that between Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the U.S.S.R. State Committee on the Uses of Atomic Energy.

The agreement between the NRC and the Academy of Sciences, it may be recalled, dates back to 1959, and was authorized by the Government of that day.

There are other agreements which are currently in existence, but which are not mentioned in the General Exchanges Agreement. It does not mean that these unlisted agreements are not working properly, nor does it mean that they are intended to be temporary. It is merely that some agreements are listed for illustrative purposes. The General Exchanges Agreement is, if you like, an umbrella agreement rather than a catalogue.

The agreement is similar to broad exchanges agreements that the Soviets have had with a number of Western countries, and the drafting was intended to reflect the earlier precedents.

As far as our own internal situation is concerned, we understand that the General Exchanges Agreement is likely to be welcomed as a useful framework by the provinces. It is to remain in force for a period of four years, and thereafter will be extended automatically for four-year periods unless terminal notice is given six months prior to the expiry of the initial agreement or any renewal thereof.

The communiqué was tabled by the Prime Minister in the other place early this afternoon, and by me some few moments ago.

It passes over a number of subjects. For example, my colleague, Mr. Jack Davis, the Minister of Fisheries, acknowledged last Wednesday in the other place that there had been discussions with the Soviet leader regarding the conservation of fish stocks off both our coasts. I recall the discussion on this subject lasted some 20 minutes in the ministerial meeting, and yet room was not found to elaborate on the discussions in the communiqué, beyond a brief reference to the marine environment. I mention this to indicate that even the fullest communiqué must necessarily omit some topics.

We are consulting with Soviet officials much more than would have been the case some years ago, and the communiqué itself draws attention to this fact. For example, there have been recent meetings in New York between our respective foreign ministers, between our respective permanent representatives accredited to the United Nations, and between the Canadian and Soviet representatives in the Committee on Disarmament in Geneva. We regard it as mutually advantageous to continue this type of exchange of information.

The two governments recognize the importance of the Quadripartite Agreement of September 3, 1971, between France, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, and the United States. This is an important step toward the easing of tensions in Europe. The communiqué also expresses the hope that negotiations between the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic, and between the Senate of West Berlin and the German Democratic Republic, will be concluded without delay. The communiqué notes the conclusion of the treaties between Bonn and Moscow, and between Bonn and Warsaw.

Without mentioning him by name, we were perhaps paying tribute to the constructive work done by Chancellor Willy Brandt toward a European settlement, and I think we were in good company since the Nobel Peace Prize has just been awarded to Chancellor Brandt for his endeavours on behalf of European and world peace.

Both governments declared themselves in favour of a properly prepared conference on security and co-operation in Europe which would include the participation of Canada and the United States. They believe that such a conference could contribute to the normalization and improvement of relations among all European states.

I mentioned in this chamber on June 2, while speaking on the Prime Minister's visit to the Soviet Union, that the communiqué following that visit was the first between the Soviet Union and a Western country which explicitly recognized the right of Canada and the United States to participate on an equal footing with European countries in a European security conference. I also mentioned at that time that such a conference should be properly prepared, a phrase which recurs in the present communiqué. We hope that the progress that has already been made in negotiations affecting central Europe may be further consolidated, and that such a European Security Conference will be held thereafter.

The two governments draw attention to the recent draft convention on the prohibition of the production, development, and stock-piling of biological weapons and toxins, and on their destruction. Both countries call upon other powers to endorse the convention at the current session of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

Mr. Kosygin was very concerned with the development of relations between the United States and Russia, and the communiqué indicates that the Soviet Government attaches great importance to the continuing talks between these two great powers. As honourable senators know, it is the intention of the President of the United States to visit the Soviet Union.

I have noted the criticism from some quarters—not a particularly large body, but still worthy of note—that there was something anti-American in the welcome which the Canadian Government accorded our Soviet guest. In view of President Nixon's own declared interest in continuing his discussions with Soviet leaders, this kind of criticism of the actions of the Canadian Government is really very difficult to sustain.

• (2040)

The communiqué suggests that it is necessary to achieve an urgent political settlement in East Pakistan that would take into account the legitimate rights and interests of its population, and would facilitate a speedy and secure return of refugees. I believe those senators who had the opportunity of listening to the Soviet Premier at the joint committee meeting are well aware of the extent to which he is concerned, as we all are, with the situation in the Indian sub-continent. Soviet Central Asia borders on South Asia, and Premier Kosygin recalls vividly the India-Pakistan conflict of six years ago. I would regard the work undertaken by him at the Tashkent Conference as pertinent and constructive. It did not eradicate the conditions which had lead to the outbreak, but it was not intended to have that effect. What it did was restore the status quo ante, which represented an improvement on the situation prevailing prior to the Tashkent Conference.

[Hon. Mr. Martin.]

The communiqué notes the continuing tense situation in the Middle East, and Ambassador Jarring's efforts to ameliorate the situation. It is recommended that all powers concerned endeavour to implement the provisions of Security Council Resolution 242 of November 2, 1967.

The communiqué notes the common concern of both countries in preserving and improving the human environment, including dealing with such problems as marine pollution. It is suggested that the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment to be held in 1972 could make an important contribution to the study of this problem. Honourable senators will recall that this is the conference being prepared under the direction of a Canadian, Maurice Strong, who was for some years a very successful president of the Canadian International Development Agency.

The communiqué of May 28, 1971, following Prime Minister Trudeau's visit contains a paragraph which reads as follows:

> The Soviet side proposed that consideration should be given to the conclusion of a treaty covering economic development, technological and industrial co-operation. The Canadian side agreed to study the proposal.

The present communiqué indicates that the two sides had a useful discussion of this earlier Soviet proposal. It promises the Canadian side will give further study to this proposal.

Both sides express satisfaction with the progress made in implementing the Industrial Application Agreement. They noted that the Canadian Soviet mixed commission set up under that agreement was functioning well, and that the next regular meeting of the commission will be held in May, 1972, here in Canada. The working groups have been concentrating on those sectors of industry offering the best prospects for further co-operation and the development of trade. The commission and working groups are also promoting co-ordinating programs for joint technological and economic projects and research.

The communiqué reveals that the Canadian side expressed satisfaction with their recently concluded wheat sales contract. Last Friday in the other place the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce referred to the intimate contacts that the Canadian Wheat Board has developed—contacts, I may say, which go back to the pioneering work of our colleague Senator McNamara. Last Friday Mr. Pepin referred to the 3.5 million tons of grain being exported from Canada to the Soviet Union under the current contract, which comes to an end in April, 1972. It is anticipated that late in the winter negotiations will begin on the prolongation of the trade agreement for a further four years.

The communiqué notes that during these negotiations the Canadian proposal to set up a joint commission for consultations on trade will be discussed. It also mentions that Canada would welcome and facilitate an expansion of imports from the Soviet Union, including machinery and equipment, and that the Soviet Union would do likewise with respect to imports from Canada. In his talks and discussions with both members of provincial governments and institutions in the private sector I gathered this was foremost in Mr. Kosygin's mind.

It was clear during our discussions that the Soviet leader was familiar with Canadian laws respecting maritime and environmental control of the Arctic. Noting our common severe climatic, ice, and navigation conditions, the communiqué sets out the common desire to expand bilateral co-operation on Arctic problems. The two sides agree that this kind of co-operation could be aimed in particular at preventing pollution in Arctic waters, and taking other measures for the preservation of the ecological balance.

The communiqué ends with an expression of gratitude of the Chairman of the U.S.S.R. Council of Ministers for the warm hospitality accorded to him in Canada. This same sentiment was conveyed by Mr. Kosygin very sincerely to me this morning, and his public expression of thanks last night at the dinner given by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in Toronto was, I believe, heard by a number of senators.

Both governments attach great importance to the maintenance of regular personal contact between government leaders of the two countries, and expressed their intention to continue such contacts. That sentence is, I think, not only a capsule summary of the purpose of Mr. Kosygin's visit, but a promise on the part of both governments that we will continue these contacts for the common good in the months and years that lie ahead.

Our approach in our foreign policy is to seek a balanced position. In that way we can, we believe, lay sound and solid foundations for peace. Our approach, based on the discussions we had with Chairman Kosygin, does not overlook differences, but takes into account the desire to bring about an easing of tension, and a promise of stability and peace in the world. The Canadian position is that we wish to promote good relations with other countries. We are not the only country taking a balanced position. It is being taken now by our great and friendly neighbour, the United States, in the initiatives that the President of that country is taking, first of all in his proposed visit to the People's Republic of China, and shortly thereafter to the Government of the U.S.S.R.

We believe sincerely that this visit of Mr. Kosygin brought an interesting and highly intelligent man to our midst. We believe that this visit will cement relations between one of the super-powers of the world and our country, just as the good relations which we enjoy with our neighbour and with other countries are directed toward the same end.

Hon. Mr. Bélisle: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government a question? He referred to a joint meeting last week of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Standing Committee of External Affairs of the House of Commons. I was among those who attended that meeting and had the opportunity of listening to Premier Kosygin. When the Premier introduced the friends he had brought from Russia, they were all wearing the same insignia in their lapels that the honourable leader is wearing tonight. Does this mean that the Leader of the Government in the Senate has been made one of them, or could he explain why he is wearing that insignia?

Hon. Mr. Martin: As Senator Bélisle knows, there were security arrangements. This little pin was worn by members on both sides in accord with these arrangements.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Are you still afraid of something happening to you?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I had forgotten to remove it.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I have a question to put to the Leader of the Government, and I want to be fair to him, in beginning to direct the question. If I heard him correctly, he said that the communist leader expressed his thanks to Prime Minister Trudeau. I was rather intrigued by the fact that he did not express his thanks to the Prime Minister and the Canadian people. I wonder why the Canadian people were left out in the words of thanks to Prime Minister Trudeau?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I was referring to two heads of government—one who was treated with great hospitality and consideration when he went to the Soviet Union, and the other, Premier Kosygin, who was accorded similar hospitality by the Government of Canada when he came to Ottawa.

Mr. Kosygin took several occasions, wherever he went, not only to thank provincial governments and the federal Government but the people of the city, whose guest he was, for their hospitality. This was done in Montreal; it was done in Vancouver and in Edmonton, and last night in Toronto. Those who heard Premier Kosygin last night know that he was generous—certainly not meriting the implied cirticism by Senator Phillips—in his acknowledgement of what he owned to the people of Canada generally.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: If I may say so, the leader has referred to compliments and he referred to television. Mr. Kosygin paid certain compliments to a certain individual—in fact, to the one who has just replied to my question. I find it hard to accept the reply of honourable Senator Martin, in view of the compliments which were paid to him by Mr. Kosygin last night.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I have but a few words to say on this report. I listened carefully last evening on the radio to the farewell of the Prime Minister of the U.S.S.R. I noted that, as has been mentioned, he paid not only a tribute to the Canadian people but he started with particular thanks, naturally, to the head of our Government. He referred to several members of his cabinet by name, and he referred to the premiers of the provinces which he visited, and to the mayors and to the people of the cities he visited. I did note also that he came back in his personal references and repeated particular thanks to Senator Martin, the Leader of the Senate.

Honourable senators, it was probably not unobserved by our guest of this week that a very appropriate appointment had been made. We have referred to another most appropriate one already this evening, which we thought gave great honour and credit to this Upper Chamber. I think the appointment of our leader as the escort of the Premier of the U.S.S.R. also is one of great honour to this house.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: I hope it was not unobserved by our guest that it was very appropriate indeed that our leader should be selected to be his escort. Not only is honourable Senator Martin the leader in the senior chamber of our Parliament, but he happens to be the dean of parliamentarians in both Houses of Parliament, having the longest record of service of anyone still in either house.

I observed also that last evening the Premier said he was very grateful to our leader for the courteous and efficient way that he assisted and escorted him. It is surely no surprise to any of us in this house that Premier Kosygin recognized the tremendous drive and energy of our leader and said that if he had any complaint against Senator Martin, it was only that he was a great task master, a very hard driver. This we all know well.

I should like that this be on the record, that Canada could not have provided an escort with more prestige, with a higher record in Parliament, than was provided to Premier Kosygin. During the week also I heard members of the press media and the electronic media say that this hopeful growth in friendship is not of a very new creation. It does not particularly originate in the fact that our Prime Minister recently paid a visit to the U.S.S.R. Several commentators recollected that our leader was a former Minister of External Affairs and they recognized and paid tribute to the fact that if some ice is being broken, and broken very hopefully, one of the first western statesman to commence attempts in this direction was the Leader of the Government in this chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, before I make a few comments on the remarks of the Leader of the Government and on the communiqué, I would like to put a question to the leader in connection with the communiqué itself, with special reference to page 5. The Government Leader has referred to the easing of tension between East and West Germany and between West Germany and Poland. The communiqué, at page 5, has a paragraph reading as follows:

> Since the military confrontation in central Europe is particularly dangerous, it was agreed that early steps should be taken to seek a general agreement on the mutual reduction of armed forces and armaments in that area without detriment to the participating states.

I cannot exactly understand the meaning of this paragraph, under the circumstances. I can understand that we want a reduction of armed forces, as far as the two blocs are concerned—the NATO members and the Warsaw Pact members—but why central Europe is mentioned here, under the circumstances cited by the Leader of the Government, I cannot figure out.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I can only say that the first part of the paragraph clearly speaks for itself. No one can deny that the situation there is a serious one and has been serious for some time. Both sides agree, as indeed the foreign ministers at the ministerial council a few months ago agreed, that steps should be taken to bring about an agreement for the mutual reduction of armed forces.

[Hon. Mr. Benidickson.]

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Not because of the situation in central Europe.

Hon. Mr. Martin: That is one of the reasons.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It may be.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Mr. Sharp has taken a very strong position in promoting a balanced reduction on a mutual basis. We have agreed to the holding of a conference on European security, leading toward this objective. We believe that such a conference has to be well prepared and that the mutual reduction should take place as a result of a general agreement that it be done on both sides, and toward this end steps have already been taken by the appointment of Mr. Manlio Brosio, former secretary general of NATO, to begin exploratory discussions with the other side. Mr. Brosio is seeking an opportunity to begin his exploratory talks on behalf of the nations concerned at the earliest possible moment. When Mr. Kosygin was here there were discussions about this matter, and I look forward to a continuing progressive development of this program.

• (2050)

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I would suggest, first, that the length and the irrelevancy of the reply of the Leader of the Government shows that the paragraph to which I referred is badly drafted.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition will realize that a paragraph of this sort in such a document is the result of very careful debate on both sides. There is very careful consideration in the preparation, and very careful study before final acceptance. I can assure Senator Flynn that it speaks for exactly what I have tried to explain.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Yes, as you have said, you have "tried to explain".

Honourable senators, judging from the Canadian-Soviet Communiqué made public this afternoon, Mr. Kosygin's visit to our country was mutually beneficial. Both our countries have reaffirmed their attachment to peace, security and international co-operation, and have agreed that, regardless of their political and social systems, states should in their relations with each other steadfastly abide by the principles of mutual confidence, reciprocity, respect for independence, national sovereignty, territorial integrity and equality of all states, non-interference in internal affairs, renunciation of the use or threat of force, and the settlement of disputes through negotiation in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations. In saying this I am practically quoting the communiqué itself.

I had no doubt but that we adhered to such fine principles, and I find it inspiring to see that the U.S.S.R. is equally interested in international justice, for certain events of recent years might have raised some doubts in this respect.

Along with the Prime Minister and Mr. Kosygin I also am pleased with the positive steps that have been taken towards peace in central Europe, and the significant measure of success which they have enjoyed.

I agree that much can be gained from a well-organized and properly-prepared conference on security and cooperation in Europe with the participation of all European states, Canada and the United States, and I am elated to see that steps are soon to be taken to arrive at a general agreement on the mutual reduction of armed forces and armaments in central Europe. There lies a time-bomb which must be defused as a first step to ensuring world peace.

The fact that both our countries are striving to have their respective ideological blocs accept a general and complete disarmament offers a ray of hope; that they are willing in the meantime to settle for partial disarmament measures, including the banning of underground nuclear tests, the limiting of stragetic arms and the reduction of military expenditures, is a manifestation of their good sense and practicality.

It is interesting to note that the U.S.S.R. is in favour of a political settlement in Indochina that would guarantee its various peoples the possibility of shaping their own destiny in accordance with their national interests and without foreign interference. If we could only convince our new friend, the People's Republic of China, to adopt the same attitude, some significant headway toward a lasting peace in this area could be achieved.

The U.S.S.R., as a civilized group of nations should be, is just as concerned about the dangers to the human environment as we are. About this there can be absolutely no doubt and, consequently, this area could offer one of the best grounds for common effort.

It is also encouraging to see that trade between Canada and the U.S.S.R. is to be increased, if for no other reason than that we need to increase our exports.

The General Exchanges Agreement signed here last week is, as the Leader of the Government mentioned, a logical extension of the Protocol on Consultations signed between Canada and the U.S.S.R. on the occasion of Prime Minister Trudeau's visit there last May. It, in effect, specifies in what areas there will be exchanges, and in what particular way these are to be implemented. The document is a business-like one which displays the interest of both signatories in giving effect, as soon as possible, to the common wishes expressed last May.

Exchanges in the scientific, technical, and technological fields are bound to be of mutual benefit. We can surely be of help to the U.S.S.R. in the development of its light industry, while it can be of help to us in the development of our Arctic and sub-Arctic regions, the prevention of pollution in Arctic waters, and the maintenance of the ecological balance. Both Canada and the U.S.S.R. have vast expanses of thinly populated underdeveloped land. This, along with the similarity in our climates, should provide a wealth of areas in which it would be profitable to both to increase the exchange of data and perhaps even carry on joint research. Exchanges such as these, which will involve experts in virtually every field of science, students, educators, artists of every description, athletes, and governmental and non-governmental professionals, must of necessity enhance relations among our peoples.

However, as much as an improved relationship between Canada and the U.S.S.R. may be a goal worth striving for, the value is indeed tempered, if not completely nullified, when the impression is created that our vigorous interest in closer relations with the U.S.S.R. has as its prime purpose the counterbalance of American influence, which we have of late taken to qualifying as dangerous and oppressive. The Prime Minister in some of his public statements has by means of tone and attitude deliberately insinuated as much.

At the end of Mr. Kosygin's visit the impression to be gleaned from it all is quite manifestly that the relationship with our traditional and closest ally, the United States, could cool markedly. Mr. Trudeau displayed an annoying degree of calm and self-control in the face of his guest's using the guise of a toast to Russian-Canadian friendship to denounce U.S. economic policies and their influence on Canada. Such an unabashed attempt at the old military principle of divide and conquer seems to have left Mr. Trudeau unmoved, if not pleased.

The Prime Minister could have seized the opportunity to point out to Mr. Kosygin that the ideal we should be seeking to reach in our relationship one with the other is that which exists now between Canada and the United States. Perhaps Mr. Trudeau's idea of détente is to take us down the road to neutrality. If he believes that the Canadian people would stand for this, he is very naïve.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I do not think there is anything to warrant that statement.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: This is the impression left after the events to which I have just referred.

We want no part of neutrality if it means loosening our defence agreements with the United States. We can sell all the wheat imaginable to the U.S.S.R.; we can increase our trade many-fold, but the fact will still remain that Russia is not a natural trading partner, whereas the United States is. The United States is infinitely closer to us in character and institutions, our peoples are much more similar, and we have more in common with the Americans than with the Russians.

Aware as I am of the fact that the U.S.S.R. is now calling for "international co-operation" across ideological barriers in terms that go far beyond the "peaceful co-existence" of bygone days, nevertheless I cannot bring myself to forget those fruitless periods of so-called "peaceful co-existence" and the "building of bridges of communication".

The frustration that has attended western relations with communist powers since World War II is not reduced to insignificance by the mere fact that the new Kremlin line is remarkably free of sabre-rattling and brinksmanship. The Soviet Union, it appears, now wants to brush aside ideological differences as matters internal to each nation, and to go as far as possible toward concrete co-operation in fields of science, technology, industry, and the arts. The same co-operation is to be extended into the realm of international politics with a view to defusing tensions rather than allowing them to develop into tests of strength.

Canada, apparently, is to serve as a prototype of this new approach, an example of the close ties which any well-disposed western nation can expect to develop with this new, peace-seeking Soviet Union.

Trust and understanding are generative of friendship, and perhaps the time has come for us again to make an act of faith in the goodwill of the U.S.S.R. to see if we can restore the concept of peace from its present debilitated condition to one of vigorous good health.

The U.S.S.R. in its most recent attempts at rapprochement may not be motivated by more than a very negative, though very human, fear of eventual nuclear holocaust.

However, it will do us little good to question their motives. There is nothing to be gained from adhering to such a position—quite the contrary. We may, in fact, fail to seize an opportunity to make significant strides toward peace by rebuffing an agglomeration of nations which may have undergone a genuine change of heart.

The international communist conspiracy headquartered in Moscow may well have become a myth. The headquarters for the direction and financing of communist subversive activities and communist revolutionary wars may be elsewhere. It may be that the Soviet Union is now willing to fight the west merely on the level of ideas. If this be the case, then we welcome the challenge. If the communist bloc wishes to compete against us in trying to win nations over to its political ideology, and it is willing to eschew violence, then let us have at it and may the sounder philosophy win.

Just as there is evil in every man so is there good; and the same can be said of nations. We have all played a part in making the world the mess that it now is. None of us is Simon pure. We are given by this General Exchanges Agreement the opportunity to perforate the iron curtain, to alleviate fears, to nullify mistrust, to educate and to be educated. Human contact and communication is the best antidote possible to the poison of suspicious chauvinism.

One gleans the feeling from Mr. Kosygin's visit, indeed from the more frequent visits of the political leaders of the U.S.S.R. to foreign countries, that they are slightly uneasy about the ultimate end of their course of domination. If this be the case, then their attempts at righting wrongs should not be rebuffed, but rather welcomed. Peace is a worthy goal. It should never be allowed to escape us for want of the effort necessary to harness it.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, I have one or two questions to ask of the Leader of the Government. Before doing so let me say that I was keenly interested in the visit of Chairman Kosygin to Canada, and I followed very closely everything that took place.

As I said, I should like to ask a number of questions, but I think most of us here are at somewhat of a disadvantage in that certain documents are said to be tabled, but the Leader of the Government speaks on those documents before they are in fact tabled. As a result we are in no position to ask pertinent questions which I think would have an important bearing on many of the matters with which those documents deal. For instance, why did we not have access in this chamber to the treaty that was signed on October 20?

Hon. Mr. Martin: May I say to Senator Yuzyk that that treaty was tabled last week. However, I have no objection to adjourning this matter at this stage, and he could raise it again tomorrow or the following day after he has had an opportunity of reading the documents.

[Hon. Mr. Flynn.]

Hon. Mr. Yuzyk: It was tabled, but it was not published in our proceedings.

Hon. Mr. Martin: It was tabled last Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. Yuzyk: That is one matter. However, this treaty of October 20 is a treaty which provides for wide exchanges, much wider exchanges than the former protocol provided for. Mention is made of a mixed commission which I understood to mean a Soviet-Canadian mixed commission, if I understand the word "mixed" correctly. Would the Government Leader explain the composition of that commission? How many members of that commission will be from Canada, and how many from the Soviet Union? Furthermore, will the commission meet only once each year?

Hon. Mr. Martin: It will meet every two years, and its members will consist of appointees by the two governments. There will be an equal number of representatives from each side on the commission, of course.

Hon. Mr. Yuzyk: Has that commission been appointed?

Hon. Mr. Martin: Not yet.

Hon. Mr. Yuzyk: Thank you.

It also became evident right across Canada that not all Canadians were happy about the visit of Mr. Kosygin. I should like to bring to the attention of the Senate and all those who are within hearing range that the matter of ways in which Canadians could democratically express themselves, mainly through demonstrations, was brought up, and we have read about these demonstrations in the papers. I think that in general these demonstrations were quite peaceful.

• (2100)

I feel that the fact has been brought home that we are dealing with the leader of probably one of the greatest police states in the world. This is something we should keep in mind when we are having a relationship with the Soviet Union. I recollect that in Winnipeg Prime Minister Trudeau made a commitment that he was going to bring up problems regarding particular nationalities within the Soviet Union which have been deprived of certain freedoms—religious freedom and cultural freedom. The Prime Minister of Canada said that he would discuss these matters with Prime Minister Kosygin.

As a matter of fact, I raised this matter at one of the joint external affairs conferences of both houses. I was able to obtain this press release because I asked for it, and I notice that in spite of what I considered to be a pledge by Prime Minister Trudeau in Winnipeg, there is no mention made of it at all. There is no mention of the fact that certain of the rights of such groups as the Jews, the Ukrainians, the Lithuanians and others had been curtailed; that some of their leaders have been sentenced in what have been called closed courts, and imprisoned. I understand the Prime Minister was to have made some mention of this matter in his discussions with Prime Minister Kosygin. Yet there is no mention of it at all in this Canadian-Soviet communiqué.

Does this mean that this matter has been dropped entirely, and that the matter of human rights has been left aside for the sake of other relations?

Hon. Mr. Martin: Of course it does not. As I said in my statement in chief, there are many matters that were discussed between the two sides, both here in Ottawa and elsewhere, that are not in the communiqué.

Hon. Mr. Yuzyk: I ask the honourable Leader of the Government: How are these groups to have confidence in the Prime Minister if there is no statement made regarding certain commitments that he has uttered in public?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I am sure that Senator Yuzyk is aware of the fact that the Prime Minister is not a person who readily makes commitments he cannot keep, and does not keep. I can assure my honourable friend that, while we may not all agree on the best method by which the Government could pursue its objectives, the course the Government is pursuing is not one that is inimical to the interests concerned.

Hon. Donald Cameron: I am wondering if, in view of the importance of this communiqué which the Leader of the Government has just tabled and which most of us have not had the opportunity of reading yet, he would give consideration to a debate on developments in foreign affairs in this chamber at a very early date? I am thinking not only of this very significant agreement regarding discussions with the Russians, but also the implications of the recent decision in the United Nations with respect to China. I am wondering if we could adjourn the debate and go into this matter—

Hon. Mr. Croll: This debate can be adjourned.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I say at this point that we are now in the midst of a debate on an inquiry, because the Leader of the Government asked for leave of the Senate to proceed with the inquiry. If this debate is not adjourned, it will be considered debated.

Hon. Mr. Martin: In answer to Senator Cameron's question, I have no objection, as Senator Croll has suggested, to the adjournment of the discussion at this point and proceeding along the lines Senator Cameron has indicated. Obviously, what has happened at the United Nations is not unrelated, in general terms, to the discussion that took place. I see no reason why Senator Cameron's wish could not be respected.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Honourable senators, if it is agreeable I would be very pleased to adjourn the debate. I would like to have an opportunity to read this document, and have a little time in which to think about it, because it is a significant milestone in international affairs, and only one of a number of such milestones in the last few months. These are developments that are very significant to Canada. We could very well spend some time debating this, and I would like the opportunity of doing so.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: You do not need permission to adjourn the debate.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: I would like to say how happy I was that the Leader of the Government was selected to chaperone—if I may use that term—Mr. Kosygin because there is no one, having regard to his experience, his attitude, and so on, who is more qualified. I know that he did a very good job for Canada.

With permission, I would like to adjourn the debate until the next sitting.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable Senators, I rise on a point of order, before the motion to adjourn is put. I think this has come about rather suddenly and in a very oblique way. It is possibly complicated by the fact that once again we have by-passed our rules. Since this carries over the whole spectrum of this debate I would like to respectfully suggest to the Leader of the Government that this be the last time that an important matter is brought before this chamber by asking leave to suspend the rules. This is a perfect case of the propriety of our rules. The rules, I suggest, are drafted to prevent exactly what has happened tonight. We are faced with a presentation on a most important subject with no notice whatsoever as to what might take place. I suggest that in the future the Leader of the Government be more cautious before he takes this course of action, and relies on the courtesy of senators to grant him leave. Leave to proceed would not have received my consent if I had known it was his intention to raise a highly controversial issue without giving any notice that it was his intention to do so tonight.

So I would suggest to honourable senators that the motion for adjournment be not put, unless His Honour the Speaker is satisfied that other senators are not prepared to comment at this particular time when the issue is before us.

The Hon. the Speaker: I must say, following the point of order raised by the honourable Senator Grosart, that had there been a dissenting voice when the Leader of the Government asked for unanimous consent he could not have proceeded. But now we have a motion to adjourn the debate, which is in order and I have no alternative but to put it.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: On the point of order, my suggestion to Your Honour is that the question be not put. The motion is not debatable. I was not debating it, but rising on a point of order. I suggest the motion be not put until Your Honour is satisfied that no other honourable senator wishes to discuss the matter at this time.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: We have before us an undebatable motion; may we have a decision on that?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: On the particular point raised I would point out that we have a motion which has been neither seconded nor put.

The Hon. the Speaker: I have not yet put the motion. I would like to inquire if any honourable senator wishes to take part in this debate at this time; if not I will put the motion.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Are we discussing the point of order or the debate that was raised by the honourable Senator Yuzyk, who has now left this house? Which one?

The Hon. the Speaker: I must say that I did not hear the honourable Senator Yuzyk raise a point of order. He raised a few questions, which I think were answered by the Government Leader. However, a point of order was raised by the honourable Senator Grosart after a motion by the honourable Senator Cameron to adjourn the debate. I will now put the motion for adjournment.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: On the point of order, I suggest that Your Honour might follow the procedure which I think you began, to find out first of all if any other honourable senator wishes to speak at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker: I have asked precisely that question, and no honourable senator has indicated that he wishes to pursue this debate tonight.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Senator Croll rose.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Had Senator Cameron not adjourned the debate, I would have done so.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: If Your Honour will give me the opportunity, it is my intention to make some comments, with leave of the house.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: The motion by Senator Cameron is to adjourn the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: This is not a debatable motion. The honourable Senator Grosart may raise a point of order or a question of privilege.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Your Honour, I have no question of privilege nor point of order to raise. A motion was proposed, not seconded nor put; I merely suggested that Your Honour not put that motion.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: He cannot avoid it.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I do not wish to argue the point; of course he can avoid putting it.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Will Senator Grosart permit me?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I think the practice is that when the debate is about to be adjourned it is on the understanding that no one else wishes to speak. I am sure that Senator Cameron would agree that Senator Grosart, or any other senator, should if he wishes take part in the debate now, and at the end of the sitting Senator Cameron might then propose the adjournment of the debate. However, I am sure that no one would wish to preclude Senator Grosart or anyone else from speaking at this time.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: The only reason I moved the adjournment of the debate is that I consider the topic to be so important that I think we should have more time to discuss it. Everyone should be given an opportunity to do so. I quite willingly withdraw the motion now if Senator Grosart or anyone else wishes to speak at this time, but I do reserve the right to adjourn the debate later.

The Hon. the Speaker: We had a motion to adjourn the debate and in order to accommodate honourable senators I asked if others would like to participate in this debate at this time. I did not see any honourable senator rise in his place.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: If you will recognize me at this time, Your Honour—

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Honourable senators, I am not sure what is happening, but I am sure that it is not according to the rules. There is a motion before this house and I do not think that His Honour the Speaker or anyone else can set aside procedure for a nice little quiet deal. There is a motion by Senator Cameron to adjourn the debate and I move the previous question.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: He has withdrawn it.

The Hon. the Speaker: I will repeat what I have already said: We have a motion now to adjourn the debate and I have inquired if any honourable senators wish to proceed tonight. I will follow our past practice with respect to motions to adjourn debates. Usually the name of a seconder is not mentioned and I choose a neighbour of the mover.

It is moved by the honourable Senator Cameron, seconded by the honourable Senator Boucher, that this debate be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

FILM "UN PAYS SANS BON SENS"—QUESTION ANSWERED

Hon. Leopold Langlois: Honourable senators, on September 14 the honourable Senator Forsey asked the following question in the Senate:

> Honourable senators, I have a few questions for the Government Leader. The first is related to a report in the September 10 issue of the Globe and Mail to the effect that during a program produced at the University of Montreal a definitely separatist film was shown to new students, titled "Un pays sans bon sens"—a film about Canada. Furthermore, still according to the same report, the film is said to be a National Film Board production.
> I would ask the Government, following that report, how it is that the National Film Board can issue such films. I have given notice to the Government Leader of this question.

The written answer received from the National Film Board, through the Secretary of State of Canada, is as follows:

[Translation]

The film Un pays sans bon sens is a National Film Board production. It may strike some as a separatist film, but the Board considers it as a film dealing with the French-Canadians' search for a homeland. Produced by the distinguished French-Canadian film maker Pierre Perrault, who is on the staff of the National Film Board, this film is designed, according to the provisions of the National Film Act of 1950 "to interpret Canada to Canadians and to other nations".

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CANADIAN-SOVIET COMMUNIQUE

In response to the invitation issued by the Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau, during his visit to the USSR last May, the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR, Mr. Aleksei N. Kosygin, visited Canada officially as a guest of the Canadian Government from October 17 to 26, 1971.

The Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR and his official party, who received a warm welcome, held discussions in Ottawa and visited Montreal, Vancouver, Edmonton and Toronto. An opportunity was provided for them to see different parts of Canada, to meet Canadians in many walks of life, and to become acquainted with their institutions, their life and achievements in a variety of fields, political, economic, scientific and cultural.

Mr. Kosygin's talks with Mr. Trudeau were carried on in an atmosphere of frankness, cordiality and mutual understanding, appropriate to the friendly, good neighbourly relations between the two countries and to the spirit of the Protocol on Consultations signed in Moscow on May 19, 1971. These conversations provided an opportunity for a useful exchange of opinions on international problems of interest to both sides and on questions affecting Canadian-Soviet relations.

Taking part in the discussions were:

On the Canadian side: The Honourable Paul Martin, Leader of the Government in The Senate; the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, Secretary of State for External Affairs; the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce; the Honourable Jean Chrétien, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development; the Honourable Jack Davis, Minister of the Environment; the Honourable Donald Jamieson, Minister of Transport; R. A. D. Ford, Ambassador of Canada to the USSR; B. J. Danson, Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister; and other officials. On the Soviet side: G. D. Dzhavakhishvili, Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Georgian Soviet Socialist Republic; T. B. Guzhenko, Minister of Maritime Shipping of the USSR; S. P. Kozyrev, Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs of the USSR; M. I. Misnik, Deputy Chairman of the State Planning Committee of the USSR; B. P. Miroshnichenko, Ambassador of the USSR to Canada; N. M. Lunkov, Member of the Collegium of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs; and other officials.

The Heads of Government noted with satisfaction that Canadian-Soviet relations had further developed since their last meeting and that the desire expressed by both sides to expand exchanges between the two countries in as many areas as possible, on the basis of reciprocity and mutual advantage, was being implemented.

In the course of their meetings and talks both sides agreed that the Canadian-Soviet Protocol on Consultations had already been of value in the strengthening of mutual confidence, friendship and good neighbourliness between the two countries. A good beginning had been made in exchanging views at various levels and in exploring the possibilities of cooperation on a number of issues; they noted that these consultations had revealed a similarity of views on a number of current international issues. Examples of consultations under the Protocol included the recent meetings of the Foreign Ministers of Canada and the Soviet Union in New York, of the Permanent Representatives of Canada and the USSR to the United Nations, and of the Canadian and Soviet representatives in the Committee on Disarmament in Geneva. In the light of the experience so far in their consultations, the two sides decided to develop them further.

The Prime Minister of Canada and the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR, having set forth the foreign policy principles of their respective Governments, reaffirmed the attachment of Canada and the Soviet Union to peace and security and the development of international co-operation. They agreed that all States, regardless of their political and social systems, should in their relations with each other steadfastly abide by the principles of mutual confidence, reciprocity, respect for independence, national sovereignty, territorial integrity and equality of all States, non-interference in internal affairs, renunciation of the use or threat of force, and the settlement of disputes through negotiation in accordance with the United Nations Charter. The sides declare that in their mutual relations as well as in solving international problems they will invariably be guided by these principles.

The Prime Minister of Canada and the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR considered developments in the international situation since their last meeting in Moscow.

They stressed in particular the importance of ensuring European security for the preservation of universal peace and expressed their desire to promote the positive processes under way in Europe.

The Government of Canada and the USSR recognized the importance of the Quadripartite Agreement of September 3, 1971, between France, the UK, the USA, and the USSR, as an important step toward the easing of tensions in Europe. Hope was expressed that negotiations between the FRG and the GDR, and the Senate of West Berlin and the GDR would be concluded without delay—an outcome which would be a step towards further measures to promote détente and stability in Europe. Noting the favourable impact of the treaties concluded by the Federal Republic of Germany with the USSR and the People's Republic of Poland on the entire course of European affairs, the sides expressed themselves in favour of their entry into force as soon as possible.

Welcoming these positive prospects, both sides declared themselves in favour of a properly prepared conference on security and cooperation in Europe with the participation of all European states, Canada and the United States. They expressed the hope that such a conference would contribute to the normalization and improvement of relations among all European states. They considered that multilateral consultations on this matter between all interested countries would be useful.

Since the military confrontation in central Europe is particularly dangerous, it was agreed that early steps should be taken to seek a general agreement on the mutual reduction of armed forces and armaments in that area without detriment to the participating states.

Both sides support the objective of ending the arms race and achieving general and complete disarmament, covering both nuclear and conventional weapons, under strict and effective international control. Both sides consider it necessary that further practical steps should be taken in the field of disarmament; first of all, the effective prohibition of the weapons of mass destruction—nuclear, bacteriological and chemical. An important recent achievement was the draft Convention on the prohibition of the production, development and stockpiling of biological weapons and toxins and on their destruction. Canada and the USSR fully support this draft and call upon other countries to endorse the Convention at the current session of the United Nations General Assembly. They believe that the adoption of this Convention would constitute a first step towards the complete prohibition of chemical and bacteriological means of warfare.

It is the intention of both sides to continue furthering, jointly and separately, the adoption of partial disarmament measures, including the banning of underground nuclear tests, the reduction of military expenditures, and others.

In the course of discussions, a useful exchange of opinions took place on the proposal for a World Conference on Disarmament to consider the questions of disarmament in their entirety and especially the prohibition and destruction of nuclear weapons. The two sides agreed to consult further on this matter.

The Prime Minister of Canada welcomed the understanding reached by the Soviet Union and the United States of America on measures to guard against the accidental or unauthorized use of nuclear weapons under their control and expressed the hope that further progress would be achieved in working out agreed measures to limit and reduce strategic armaments.

The Chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers stated that the Soviet Government, attaching great importance to the continuing talks between the Soviet Union and the United States of America, would go on making efforts to achieve agreement on limiting strategic arms on the basis of the principle of equal security, which would meet both the interests of the peoples of the Soviet Union and of the United States of America and the objective of strengthening universal peace.

Various areas of tension throughout the world were examined by the two sides. It was noted that the situation in East Pakistan, the presence of many million Pakistani refugees in India and the resulting tension in that area continued to be a source of concern. It was agreed that to maintain peace and to prevent a further deterioration of the situation in that region it was necessary to achieve an urgent political settlement in East Pakistan that would take into account the legitimate rights and interests of its population and would facilitate a speedy and secure return of the refugees. This would be facilitated if the interested parties exercised restraint.

Both sides expressed concern about the continuing tense situation in the Middle East. They emphasized the need for urgent measures of a constructive nature on the part of all the States concerned to achieve a just and enduring political settlement of the Middle East problem. They agreed that the efforts of the special representative of the United Nations Secretary General, Ambassador Jarring, and of the four powers in consultation to promote progress toward a comprehensive settlement which would implement all the provisions of Security Council Resolution 242 of November 22, 1967, should be supported.

Having exchanged views on the situation in Indochina, the Heads of Government of the two countries noted that it continued to be a source of anxiety. They were in favour of restoring lasting peace in the area through a political settlement which would guarantee to all the peoples of Indochina the possibility of shaping their own destiny, in accordance with their national interests and without foreign interference.

Canada and the Soviet Union attach great importance to the United Nations, and confirm their determination to seek to strengthen the organization and to enhance its effectiveness in maintaining universal peace and security in accordance with the United Nations Charter. They attach great importance to the implementation of the Declaration on Strengthening International Security adopted by the United Nations and they express the hope that the member States of the United Nations will jointly agree on practical measures to put its main provisions into effect. The sides are in favour of the restoration of the legitimate rights of the Peoples Republic of China as the sole representative of China in the United Nations.

The Governments of Canada and of the USSR attach great importance to the widest possible participation in the solution of the problems involved in preserving and improving the human environment, including such problems as marine pollution. The United Nations Conference on the Human Environment to be held in 1972 could make an important contribution to the study of this problem so vitally connected with the living conditions of people and the further progress of civilization.

In their exchange of views on Canadian-Soviet bilateral relations, the two sides noted with satisfaction the further development of exchanges of visits of government and political leaders of the two countries and of representatives of business and other circles, as well as wider contacts in the fields of science, education and culture.

They affirmed that increased exchanges and cooperation, particularly in scientific, technical, cultural, as well as other fields, would provide a firm basis for the strengthening of friendly relations on the basis of mutual benefit. To this end, a General Exchanges Agreement designed to facilitate a broader range of exchanges was signed by the Heads of Government during the visit.

Attaching due significance to the expansion of Soviet-Canadian cooperation in the economic, scientific and technological fields, which is facilitated by the similarity of the natural conditions and economic problems of the two countries, the Governments of Canada and the USSR agreed to authorize the appropriate agencies to explore ways of establishing bilateral cooperation in these fields on a long-term basis, making use of the advantages of the international division of labour.

The two sides had a useful discussion of the Soviet proposal for a general agreement covering the fields of economic development and technological and industrial cooperation. The Canadian side will give further study to this proposal.

The two Heads of Government also expressed satisfaction with the progress made in implementing the Agreement between the Governments of Canada and the USSR on Cooperation in the Industrial Application of Science and Technology. They noted that the Canadian-Soviet Mixed Commission set up under that Agreement was functioning well and planned to hold its next regular meeting in Canada in May, 1972. The working groups set up by the Mixed Commission have been concentrating on the sectors of industry offering the best prospects for further cooperation and the development of trade. Useful programmes of practical activities have been formulated by these working groups to take place through the coming year. Both sides indicated their intention of promoting the further useful work of the Commission and of the Working Groups on various sectors of industry and of elaborating and coordinating programmes for joint technological and economic projects and research.

Reviewing Canadian-Soviet trade, the Canadian side expressed satisfaction with the recently concluded wheat sales contract. This commodity would continue to be an element in mutual trade between the two countries. The Canadian side indicated that it would welcome and facilitate an expansion of imports from the Soviet Union, including machinery and equipment, and the Soviet side indicated that they would do likewise with respect to imports from Canada.

It was agreed that negotiations concerning the prolongation of the Trade Agreement for a further four years would begin early next year. It was also agreed that during these negotiations the Canadian proposal to set up a joint Commission for consultations on trade would be discussed.

Confirming the importance attached to the Arctic regions of both Canada and the USSR, both sides reviewed the progress made in the field of northern development. It was noted that the exchanges of experience and technology in this area, which is of common interest to the two countries had been productive and that opportunities existed for further advances in this area. Satisfaction was expressed over the recent successful visit to the USSR of the Canadian Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Honourable Jean Chrétien. A promising result of that visit was that it facilitated agreement on a meeting in Moscow of technical experts to elaborate topics, organizational forms and methods for scientific cooperation on Arctic problems.

Noting that the severe climatic and unique ice and navigation conditions in the Arctic, as well as other specific features, call for increased efforts in developing and using the northern territories of the USSR and Canada, the two sides consider it useful to expand bilateral cooperation on Arctic problems. The two sides agreed that this kind of cooperation could be aimed in particular at preventing pollution in Arctic waters and taking other measures for the preservation in these areas of the ecological balance which is of importance for the protection of the human environment.

With a view to the further expansion of commerce between the two countries, it is the intention to continue discussions on the expansion of cooperation in the field of air transport and maritime shipping.

The Governments of the USSR and Canada, attaching great importance to the maintenance of regular personal contacts between government leaders of the two countries, express their intention to continue such contacts. The Chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers expressed his gratitude for the warm hospitality accorded to him in Canada.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF SENATE

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, in the absence of Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today and Thursday, October 28, 1971, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: May I ask why the honourable leader says "in the absence of Senator Langlois"? Why does he not take the responsibility of moving the motion?

Hon. Mr. Martin: Because it is a division of functions; I asked Senator Langlois to do it and asked him to be here.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Yes, but it is as valid when moved by the leader as when moved by one of his deputies.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition will not understand this, but there are occasions when the Leader of the Government would like to be a little modest.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It is not a question of modesty; I am quite sure it is a question of prudence.

Hon. Mr. Martin: You never get into trouble if you are prudent.

Motion agreed to.

TAIWAN

READMISSION TO UNITED NATIONS—QUESTION

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Martin) whether, in view of the decision taken in the United Nations to expel Taiwan because it claimed that it represented China—I did not say the Republic of China, but China—Canada would be ready to support an application by the people of Taiwan, represented by the government which has ruled the island for 20 years, to be readmitted as such as a full member of the United Nations?

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, it is not possible to answer that question, for the simple reason that Canada recognizes as the Republic of China the country in which Peking is located, and Taiwan regards itself as the Republic of China. There cannot be two Republics of China, as the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons said last night on television. There can be only one Republic of China. Canada has now recognized the Republic of China as being made up of the mainland territory. Taiwan continues to insist that it is the Republic of China.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: From the answer of the Leader of the Government I would understand that he considers the Republic of China does not claim to represent the Island of Formosa. Therefore, I am merely asking whether, if the Island of Formosa asked for readmission to the United Nations under the name of Formosa, or whatever you like, would Canada be willing to support the admission?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I do not think we should speculate in a matter like this. The fact is that Taiwan regards itself as the Republic of China. Canada does not regard Taiwan as the Republic of China.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Not any more.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CANADA-U.S.S.R. GENERAL EXCHANGES AGREEMENT AND CANADIAN-SOVIET COMMUNIQUÉ—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Martin, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate, to the Canada-USSR General Exchanges Agreement, done at Ottawa, October 20, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, October 20, 1971, and to the Canada-Soviet Communiqué, dated October 26, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, October 26, 1971. (Honourable Senator Cameron).

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Honourable senators, I ask that this order stand until tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Unless Senator Grosart wishes to proceed today.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, this is tantamount to a motion. I understand that the honourable Senator Cameron wishes this item to stand. I am taking it upon myself to inquire whether any other honourable senator wishes to speak on this matter today. There being none, the order stands.

Order stands.

THERAPEUTIC ABORTIONS IN CANADA—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Sullivan calling the attention of the Senate to the number of therapeutic abortions performed in Canada in the first six months of 1971. (Honourable Senator McDonald).

Hon. Mr. Langlois: Stand.

Hon. J. Harper Prowse: Honourable senators, if everyone wishes this to stand, it could stand.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: If it is to stand, I am satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: You are always very flexible.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the honourable Senator Prowse speak now instead of the honourable Senator McDonald?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: That was just a façade.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Honourable senators, my speed in rising before I had been granted permission to speak should not be interpreted by the Senate as a great desire to become involved in a subject in which anyone with any sense would not wish to become involved.

Hon. Mr. White: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: First, I should say that I would be less than fair if I did not thank Senator Sullivan for his contribution in this debate.

Hon. Mr. White: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: This is a matter upon which there is a complete divergence of opinion. Senator Sullivan not only clearly and succinctly, but beautifully, put the conservative position—the position of the conservative section of the Roman Catholic church. If my description is not correct, I shall be pleased to be so informed, but that is the position as I understand it.

Honourable senators, it is my thought that the members of this house, having reached an age where they are not too personally concerned with the problem, might not be prepared to put on the record the other point of view. It is my intention this afternoon to complete the record partially, not with the suggestion that I have all the answers or that I have read all the source material. Who ever will? I am participating in this debate to try to balance the position taken by Senator Sullivan with that taken by the women's liberation movement, who ask for abortion on demand. My only reason for bringing up this matter is that at some time this house will have to deal with legislation to resolve the great differences that exist between those who believe that abortion plain and simple, at any stage after conception, is a form of murder—is that fair?

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: —and those who say that, at least, up to some stage—which nobody can determine, so I do not apologize for not being able to determine it—the fetus is something that is merely an extension of the tissue of the mother, and what happens to that fetus is her business, and her business alone. These, as I see it, are the two extreme positions.

With respect to the judgment of Solomon I wish to say right now that Solomon was a coward. He was born 3,000 years before the kind of problem we have to deal with appeared. Otherwise he would never have gained the reputation for wisdom that is his today.

The problems that face us today are real and pressing problems, and we seem to be expected to exercise the kind of mythical discretion history has accorded to Solomon. As I recall the story, Solomon demanded that the child be brought before him and split down the middle, knowing that that command would never have to be obeyed.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: How many wives did Solomon have?

Hon. Mr. Prowse: I believe he had 1,000 wives.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Then he had 1,000 problems.

Hon. Mr. Langlois: Only one problem for each wife?

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Honourable senators, on such a solemn topic, perhaps we should comport ourselves with less levity.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Senator Choquette is just envious.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I agree with Senator Prowse in his assessment of history's depiction of Solomon, because if Solomon had cut that baby in two, rather than just suggesting it, he would have been known as the world's worst fool.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: I am glad that the Leader of the Opposition said that. I suggest to him that the beautiful part of Solomon's decision was that as a result of having had 1,000 wives to instruct him he was able to make a decision based on an understanding of women that he knew would not result in any damage to the child. Let us pray that God will give us the same kind of wisdom.

The facts are simple enough. Senator Sullivan has usefully placed before us the fact that since the legislation concerning abortion was changed a woman can go to her own doctor to request an abortion, and her request can then, on his recommendation, be sent to an abortion committee. Abortion committees are set up in hospital districts. These committees do not talk to or see the women. Nevertheless, they act as a kind of court of appeal considering merely transcripts of evidence, and we are not even sure that it is transcripts of evidence that they consider. Sometimes, possibly, they listen to tape recordings. In any event, they are supposed to decide whether, having regard for the physical or mental health of the woman, it is necessary to permit her to have an abortion.

Since that law went into effect there has been a great increase in the number of abortions in this country. We have no way of knowing whether this means that abortions which were previously illicitly obtained are now being obtained in this manner, or whether those who would not have considered an abortion before are now able to have it.

However, the argument is made, and I think probably with some justification, that it is not "little Susie" who is getting the abortion; it is not the little girl who is running around having not yet found a husband, and who trusted someone and was doublecrossed. It is not the little girl at the corner who is getting these abortions on which the honourable senator gave figures; it is married women and those who have money and contacts, who come from good families and who have access to a reputable gynaecologist, whose reference carries weight with the committee. It is not those in the lower social strata.

Whether this be true or not, the fact is that that is what is believed by the people who come to Ottawa, whether they call themselves Women's Lib or anything else, screaming for abortion on demand. Their story is that they should not have to go through this screening. They are not fools. They ask what kind of doctor it is who can sit on that committee and, never having seen the patient and having no knowledge of the problems involved, give a useful, honest, and proper decision on something of so much importance, to the child in being. Perhaps I should use that term throughout, agreeing beforehand that it is subject to many interpretations. This is done without any consideration for the child in being, and without any knowledge of the facilities for looking after that child if it were brought into being. On what do they decide? Do these medical men make purely medical decisions? Do they make socio-economic decisions? Do they make psychiatric decisions? I would assume that somewhere medical men not trained in psychiatry are making psychiatric decisions, otherwise why would the psychiatrists petition and ask that this be taken out of the Criminal Code?

That brings me to ask: What are these provisions doing in the Criminal Code? I will tell you why they are in the Criminal Code. They are there because this subject is a carry-over from the old ecclesiastical courts, when everything that affected what can be generally described as morality was a matter of their jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Do you mean natural law?

Hon. Mr. Prowse: No, natural law as perverted by a priesthood down through several centuries. I know this is an extreme statement, but I will not back down. I say the ecclesiastical courts did just that. They did it for their own reasons, but that is a matter for some other time. I do not have to bore you, because you know the answer.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Honourable senators, I happen to know a little bit about the ecclesiastical court and I have no hesitation in, and no objection to, backing the statement of the honourable gentleman, although I am a practising Roman Catholic.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: The problem is not that. I was attempting to discover the difference between ecclesiastical law and natural law.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): If he will permit, I would refer the Leader of the Opposition to an article in Le Devoir of this morning. He will know something about it.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I read Le Devoir, but not with the same fervour as does Senator Fournier (De Lanaudière).

Hon. Mr. Prowse: If you are finished with this little by-play, perhaps I can proceed.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Who is making the speech?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: That is a very good question.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: I should perhaps have said this first. The ecclesiastical law that we have translated into the Criminal Code is not the Code of Rome, but the code of the Anglican Church. Whether it started while they were still part of the Roman Church or after they deviated from it, it came down in the same way. The point I am making is that in this day and age we should be concerned with laws that are carry-overs from the days when it was felt that the church, as it always has been, was responsible for morals, because when it is associated with the state the state is expected to back it up.

Today the churches are themselves divided within themselves. When the honourable Senator Sullivan spoke as eloquently as he did the other night, he did not speak for all Roman Catholics. He spoke for a particular section of the Roman Catholic Church, whose honesty, decency, usefulness and contribution to the welfare of mankind is beyond question. He was dealing with a question which is interesting, and which is not limited to the Roman Catholic Church. I have here an article from the United Church of Canada on abortion in which, surprising as it may be, full credit is given to the Roman Catholic Church for the belief that from the moment of conception there is at least a child in being, and that abortion is never less than the wilful taking of human life.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: This is a simplification, I would say.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: At that point Senator Sullivan and I have no quarrel. Unfortunately, I do not share with him the ability to leave the problem there. Today we live in a world in which the population is increasing more quickly than our ability to produce food. It has been called the over-population problem. If we let the matter rest by saying that God will decide, whenever people come together and have intercourse, whether there will or will not be children, then we have to face the fact that by the year 2000 we will have an over-crowded world. It can be likened to squeezing all the members of this house and the officials into the space now occupied by His Honour the Speaker. Our ability to feed one another will vanish.

I accept Darwin's theory that we have reached this point in our development as a result of natural selection; that there were casual and other kinds of couplings that went on, and then nature took care of the situation and only the strongest and cleverest survived.

• (1420)

By the very perfection achieved by the medical profession in keeping alive people whom nature obviously never had any intention of permitting to continue to exist we are caused, as a substitute for the ordinary, terrible, inexorable and cruel laws of nature, to face the necessity of somehow limiting our population.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Does the honourable senator seriously suggest that the number of children a couple have should be limited? This is the only conclusion I can draw from his statements up to now.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: You know, at times you get really smart. You have got it, but you did not hear the whole story.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I have to be smart, I agree with you.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Take it easy.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It may get a little livelier. That is possible.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Honourable senators, today we are faced with a problem which nature never intended. Instead of being able to depend on natural selection to decide who shall be the next generation, we now have to decide who shall be the next generation. I think this puts us in the position where we start to play God. So we have the problem, as has been pointed out, that some people do not want children, for a variety of reasons many of which are certainly justifiable.

We should take the abortion law out of the Criminal Code. I say this for two or three reasons. One is that the whole thing is based on the idea that sex is wrong unless it has been approved first of all by the church.

There is much talk about the generation gap today. You can believe it, and you can practice it. You can preach it, but you are going to have a lot of empty pews if you preach it, because for years our magazines and media have been persuading people that sex is fun; that if you have not been having fun you have been cheated, and if you do not have fun where you are it may be that you can get it somewhere else.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: That is entirely irrelevant.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Then we wonder why the divorce rate goes up.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: That has nothing to do with abortion.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: This is the beautiful innocence of those who have never been able to find out how others think. I envy him.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Do not worry about that, as far as I am concerned.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: I had a friend, a newspaper columnist, whom I met at one time laughing. Turning to him, I asked what was so funny, and he replied that he had just read that a puritan could be defined as a man who goes through his life with a terrible fear that somewhere, somehow, sometime, someone may be enjoying himself.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Do not worry about that.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: We have taught our young generation, in all the things we have made available to them, that sex is fun. We have taught them that all they needed to do was use the right kind of protection, and no one would know they were having fun—and I suppose secret fun is more fun that public fun. Unfortunately, all the little devices will not always work as they should. So, for the benefit of those who need to have it pointed out, abortions are sought by a great variety of women—unmarried women, married women who have all the children they want, and married women who just do not want a particular child for any one of a number of reasons. But out of the ecclesiastical past comes the old pressure: You must pay for your fun.

Let me say at once that I do not think society has any right any longer to try to exact that kind of price. First of all, there is no reason why a woman should be made to feel she has to have a child she does not want. As a happily married man with a family including grandchildren of whom I am proud, it has fallen to my lot to watch a woman going through the period of pregnancy, and I could not bring myself now, or then, to insist that I had a right to tell her that she had to undergo that trial. No matter how much I loved her or she loved me, it was her body and her child. If I could not by reasonable means persuade her that she should carry my child to completion and give it a chance to live, then I would not have guts enough to force her to bear a child she did not want.

We can talk about morality, but at what point does the child in being about which we have talked become a human being? At what point does it become a part of the state? At what point is the church able to give it absolution for sins that it has never committed, and guarantee its entry into heaven? And what have we proved? Not one thing. But we can argue about it from now until somebody drops a bomb and stops all our arguments. I would say that morally there can be one sin greater than an individual's sin, and that is a public sin. I suggest to you that it is a public sin which, by the sanction of the criminal law, tries to force a woman to bring into this world a child she does not want, and does not care for.

God knows that life is difficult enough for a child who has all of the advantages and all of the love it is possible for loving parents to give him. It is hard enough for that child, with his two loving indulgent parents giving him all of the material goods at their disposal. It is difficult enough for that child to find his way in the world today. Tell me what God says! Do you, or I, or the church have the right to say that that girl must pay for her sin—whatever that may be—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: What do you call a sin?

• (1430)

Hon. Mr. Prowse: —by forcing some poor, unsuspecting thing to become a living thing in a world where not only does it have no chance, but where everything is stacked against it?

That, honourable senators, is the argument on the other side, as well as I am able to present it.

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan: The honourable Senator Prowse used my name in vain. I just wish to thank him very much for his kindness to me, and to tell him that he has stimulated me so much that I propose to speak again on this subject.

Having said that, I wish to correct two very erroneous statements he made early in his discourse. Doctor J. S. Walters, the distinguished Professor of Obstetrics and Gynaecology at the University of Western Ontario, speaking last week at the Academy of Medicine, Toronto, before members of the Ontario Chapter of the College of Family Physicians of Canada, said he disagrees > —with women who say they own the unborn baby, that the fetus is part of them, without independent existence or rights, and that they should be able "to have it scraped out if they don't want it." The fetus is not a part of the mother's body: she is the carrier.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: With all respect, are you correcting your speech or mine?

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: Yours.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Well now, what did I say?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: If you do not know, who does?

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: Furthermore, the Catholic church today does not recognize abortion in any of its ruling circles. There may be a few out in left field who talk in that way, and we have a few of them in this country. However, at this moment I can see that for a long, long time in the future it will maintain that stand, and I will do everything in my power to help it in that regard.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Quart, debate adjourned.

FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO MAKE PAYMENTS—OMISSION OF ACT FROM REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1970—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, October 13, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of the Hon. Mr. Forsey calling the attention of the Senate to the Government's failure to make certain payments as required by the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and to the omission of that Act from the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I had the impression when Senator McDonald last spoke on Senator Forsey's inquiry that he had the intention of terminating the debate. Senator McDonald said that the whole issue of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act is now a dead horse. I adjourned the debate at that time because I had the impression that far from being dead—an expression in which Senator Smith joined Senator McDonald—the horse is still very much alive and kicking, and will remain so for some time to come. It reminded me of the famous remark of Mark Twain who, when apprised of a report of his death, said the report was exaggerated.

As a matter of fact, I have the impression that the dead horse is very much alive and kicking out in the direction of the aptly named Kicking Horse Pass, and perhaps also some 400 to 500 miles this side of Kicking Horse Pass, in an area named Assiniboia by the Indians, the English translation of which is "The place where they cook with the hot stones." The impression I gain from what I have heard is, if I may change the metaphor, that the hottest of the hot stones in that area at the moment is the failure of the Government to make payments under the act and to make sure that the act, still in effect, was included in the Revised Statutes of Canada. Those are phrases taken from the notice of inquiry given by Senator Forsey.

I am perplexed about the whole matter arising from the very strange actions of the Government in connection with this act, perhaps because I am not a lawyer. I am aware that in this chamber there are lawyers not only learned in the law, but eminently learned in the law. I asked some of them questions that occurred to me, and to my surprise not one of those whom I asked was able to answer. These questions occurred to me particularly when I was in receipt, free of charge, of this magnificent set of blue books, the cost of which is $125 at Information Canada. I, as a layman, assumed that in these seven beautiful volumes and appendices, and one entitled "1st Supplement" and another which I understand is to be issued, which will be entitled "2nd Supplement"—nine volumes in all—would be found the law of Canada. As a layman, I thought that if someone asked me if such and such is the law of Canada, I could look it up here and I find if it is the law of Canada. If it is not here, of course, it is not the law of Canada.

When the matter of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act arose I decided I was interested, and might speak on it. Therefore, the first thing to do, of course, was to find the act. So I began to look through these volumes. For a layman it is not a simple thing to find his way through these eight volumes. I looked first at the index, which is in Volume I. It is worth reading into the record, because there are some important aspects of this whole matter that affect not merely the past but, in my opinion, the future handling of this very important subject of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

The Table of Contents first lists Volumes I to VII, which contain chapters A-1 to Y-4, consolidated to the 31st day of December, 1969, which was the original cut-off date of the commission. The 1st Supplement contains amendments to acts contained in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, and new acts passed during the second session of the 28th Parliament in the year 1970. That brings it up to date to the end of 1970. The 2nd Supplement has not yet been issued, but it will contain acts passed during the remainder of the present session.

Appendix I deals with the history and disposal of acts; Appendix II with constitutional acts and documents; and Appendix III with the Bill of Rights. I assumed that in some place or another I would be able to find this act. It occurred to me that perhaps the place where I would get some direction is in the explanation which I find in a volume entitled "Appendices" under the heading "Revised Statutes of Canada. Explanatory Note". I said to myself, "Surely I will get some help here." The explanatory note says:

> This is the first time that a revision of the Statutes of Canada has been published in a bilingual format,

Something I think we all applaud.

> It is also the first time that a revision of the Statutes of Canada has been computerized.

Because I was unable to find the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, I assumed I would also see a statement that this is the first time an act of Parliament still in effect had been left out, but the explanatory note was of no help to me there. It made no reference to the fact that an act unrepealed, still in force, had been omitted.

There was reference to Schedule A, which is the list of acts that have been repealed. This we find in the 1st Supplement, and I said to myself, "Surely it is here. It must have been repealed." The Schedule starts at page 1119. I looked through it very diligently, but there is no reference whatsoever to the act.

I still asked myself, "Where is it?" Then I found another section entitled "History and disposal of acts", which is in the volume of Appendices. I said to myself, "Surely, it is here. Here is the history of all the acts, and here is the account of their disposal." I looked through it and I found two letters "Om" against the number, year and chapter. I looked to see what "Om" stands for, and found that it stands for, "Omitted, repealed, spent." This is misleading, of course. The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act was not at the time of publication of these volumes, and is not now, repealed or spent.

Finding that possible source of information unreliable I said, "Well, it must be somewhere else. There must be a good reason." I therefore looked further, and to my amazement I found that although an act that is still in force was omitted, there were the B.N.A. Act of 1867 and subsequent B.N.A. Acts—amendments to the original act. I found the Constitutional Act of 1791, the Act of Union of 1840, the Rupert's Land Act of 1868, the Manitoba Act of 1870, the Prince Edward Island Act of 1873, the Yukon Territory Act of 1898, the Alberta and the Sakatchewan Acts of 1905, and even the Statute of Westminster of 1931; and finally the Bill of Rights tucked away in the very last pages, for some reason that I do not understand. The Bill of Rights is an act of the Parliament of Canada, but for some reason it is given separate treatment.

Again unable to find the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, I thought, "Well, perhaps the minister has said something about it." The minister has discussed this bill. He has discussed the complaints made by farmers and others that payments have been illegally withheld from them, and complaints from members of Parliament on the same score and on the score of the omission of this act from the Revised Statutes of Canada. The minister was asked, "Did you authorize the omission of this act from the Revised Statutes of Canada?" He replied, "No, I did not." He was then asked, who did, and he said that this was a decision of the commissioners; it was a joint decision. The minister is chairman of that commission, and he said it was a joint decision. Then he said that the same decision was made with respect to about 150 other statutes.

As a layman, this perplexes me. I have asked a number of honourable senators learned in the law whether there are many statutes still in force that are left out, and they have told me there are not. The minister said that there are 150 statutes of Canada that have been left out. The minister's answer was:

> It was a matter of judgment as to which statutes merited inclusion in the Revised Statutes of Canada.

I ask honourable senators—and perhaps somebody will explain it to me afterwards—how any commission is able to take to itself the authority to decide what statutes merit—and that is the word used—in their judgment inclusion in these beautiful blue books.

Naturally, I assumed there was some authority for this, and I turned to the act which set up the Revised Statutes Commission, chapter 48 of the Statutes of Canada, 1964-65. Again, as a layman, I was amazed to find the kind of authority that had been given this commission. Among other things, this commission, by act of Parliament, that is, the language of acts passed by Parliament.

> —may make such alterations in their language—

> —as are necessary to preserve a uniform mode of expression, and may make such minor amendments as are necessary to bring out more clearly what it—

That is, the commission.

> —deems to be the intention of Parliament.

I do not know whether my very slight legal education was all in the wrong direction, but in the few years I spent studying constitutional law it was made clear to me that not even the courts have the right to interpret the intention of Parliament. I have been told that you cannot plead the intention of Parliament because the courts, quite properly, say, "It is our business to say what Parliament did, not what it intended to do." My understanding is that this inhibition holds for the Supreme Court of Canada, yet somehow by this act a commission of five or six people—I do not know how many; I have never heard their names mentioned—was given authority to decide what Parliament meant. To be fair, the word "minor" is used, but even the Supreme Court of Canada, if my interpretation of the law is correct, has not the authority to make even minor decisions on what Parliament meant, but only on what Parliament did.

I hope that in due course the Leader of the Government will give me replies to some questions arising out of this more or less fruitless, and certainly disappointing, search of mine for the raison d'être of this strange and, as far as I know, unparalleled decision taken by a Canadian government at any time in history in regard to a statute passed by the Parliament of Canada and currently in force.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government would also in due course inform the chamber who the commissioners are. There may have been changes and so on, but on a quick search I was not able to obtain this information. Perhaps he would tell us what the future plans are in respect to a commission to revise the statutes. No doubt the matter will be under consideration very soon. I should like to know what the plans are, and when the new commission will be appointed to revise the statutes as they accumulate.

I should like him to predict, if he will, as a member of the cabinet, whether they will be given the same extraordinary instructions. Will they be given explicit instructions to include in the Revised Statutes of Canada all acts currently in force and not repealed, in contradistinction to what this commission appears to have done in these blue books we received recently?

Will they be given instructions not—as they have done this time—to adjudicate upon the intentions of Parliament? Will they be told that it is the exclusive right of Parliament itself to decide what its intention is?

I would ask the Leader of the Government to tell us something about these 150 acts which are not repealed, but which are not included in the Revised Statutes of Canada. Where do we find them? Are there ready citations? Is there a ready index? Or should we be content to be in complete ignorance of these 150 statutes, and to take someone's word for it—the word of the commission—that they do not merit inclusion in the Revised Statutes of Canada?

I ask him also, in view of the result of this extraordinary situation, whether he will inform the chamber as to what steps are being taken to ensure that the rights of Canadian citizens under existing acts are to be respected by the Government in future.

I ask that question because it is clear now that the rights of citizens were arbitrarily swept aside by the Government, in defiance of a statute of the Parliament of Canada. I have to assume that it was on the instruction, or at least on the initiative, of the Government that the commission was induced to leave out the statute.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: You do not have to assume. It is obvious.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I would agree with the Leader of the Opposition in that observation. Perhaps the observation is one that only one eminently learned in the law can make. I said it was an assumption of mine, as a layman, but I am glad to hear that it is obvious to lawyers.

I ask the leader also what action is being taken to discipline whoever was responsible for this, and not merely for the omission. I presume that the commission will not be allowed to get away with this without some reprimand, in spite of the fact that the Minister of Justice is the chairman. I assume that in due course he will carry, as chairman, a reprimand to himself and his colleague commissioners from the cabinet, who must be concerned because of the great difficulties that this has placed them in.

I am sure the Leader of the Government will not take the attitude of his deputy that this is a dead horse, because I am quite sure that he knows as well as I do that the horse is going to be kicking for a long time, and it will be kicking even harder if something is not done to make sure that this kind of thing does not happen again.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Would my honourable friend permit me to say that I have just been reading the debate of October 13, a very interesting one. I am surprised that Senator Grosart, who always protects us against any violation of the rules, apparently was in great violation that night.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I am not sure whether this is an intervention, a comment, a judgment, a stricture, or a question.

Hon. Mr. Martin: It was a healthy intervention.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I did not understand the reference to "that night."

Hon. Mr. Martin: I am referring to the night of October 13. After the matter was seemingly closed, Senator Grosart, with the approval of the Leader of the Opposition, came back to the matter. That was contrary to the rules of the house, and he did not ask leave.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I thought the Leader of the Government was referring to the fact that I had quoted from a statement the minister made in the House of Commons, in which event I am prepared to justify that particular action.

I do not think I will argue the point the Leader of the Government has made, because it is quite normal to revert from one point of our proceedings to another.

Hon. Mr. Martin: With leave.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: As a distinguished senator once said in my hearing in this chamber, these are matters that His Honour decides. On that particular occasion His Honour apparently approved by moving the adjournment of the debate. Having the respect I have for His Honour, I must say, with great deference to the Leader of the Government, that I have to take His Honour's judgment as being correct, in spite of the suggestion—which I am surprised to hear from the Leader of the Government—that His Honour was not acting within the complete proprieties, because—

Hon. Mr. Martin: On a point of order, I said nothing that in any way would reflect on His Honour. What I said would reflect quite obviously and clearly on Senator Grosart. It is apparent that reference to the matter obviously is not very satisfactory from the senator's point of view. It seems to hurt.

[Hon. Mr. Grosart.]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I intervene at this point to say that, following the discussion which took place on the date mentioned by the Government Leader, I examined the matter very thoroughly. I have a few pages here covering this particular point. Since this debate was proceeding very peacefully and amicably—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It still is.

The Hon. the Speaker: —and since the honourable Senator Grosart has the floor, I thought we would escape getting into any legal arguments. I hope that we might proceed now with the honourable Senator Grosart.

Hon. Mr. Langlois: It is a dead horse.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I thank Your Honour for your usual diplomacy. I take that as an amicable and peaceful settlement of the matter.

I might say personally that if I was egregiously out of order, and became convinced that I was, I would certainly apologize and accept the statement of the Leader of the Government that it hurt. If I was in that position, I agree with him that it should hurt to be so told. I have no objection to his drawing that to my attention. On the next occasion when, in a similar situation, the Leader of the Government attempts to move the adjournment of a debate through his deputy, I will make sure that I get my adjournment motion in much more quickly.

Honourable senators, there are some more questions which the Leader of the Government might be good enough to answer in due course. What is the present and future status of this act that has been so strangely dealt with? Has the Government any plans to compensate those citizens, whose rights were so clearly abrogated, for any inconvenience or loss they might have been put to as the result of what has been called the illegal action by the Government of Canada?

Perhaps I have said enough generally on the matter. I would like to make it clear that I am not concerned only with what happened in the past. I am equally concerned with what projection it may have into the future. I would certainly appreciate any information the Leader of the Government can give me on the extent to which I, as a layman, in future can rely on the Revised Statutes of Canada, in respect of scope, authenticity and general reliability, as a guide to the laws of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Honourable senators, Senator Grosart has asked me some questions, and I shall be glad to look into them.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: We will be looking forward to the replies.

The Hon. the Speaker: Do I understand that the honourable Leader of the Government has taken under advisement the questions that have been put to him?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Your Honour, in order to clarify the record and avoid having the Government Leader make the objection he made just a moment ago so far as Senator Grosart is concerned, I think implicitly he adjourned the debate.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I have no objection to doing so explicitly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Do I understand that the Government Leader is now moving the adjournment of the debate?

Hon. Mr. Martin: Yes, although until my honourable friend Senator Flynn spoke, I had not intended to do so.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Martin, debate adjourned.

AIR CANADA

ANNUAL REPORT REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cameron, seconded by the Honourable Senator Boucher:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the Report of Air Canada for the year ended December 31, 1970, tabled in the Senate on Monday, 5th April, 1971.—(Honourable Senator Hays, P.C.).

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, Senator Hays has advised me that he does not wish to speak on this matter. It is my understanding that His Honour the Speaker may now put the question on the motion. I wish only to say that in the light of events that have transpired since I spoke on this motion, it is my opinion that it is all the more desirable that we ask the officers of Air Canada to appear before the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance at the earliest convenient opportunity.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

STATEMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS ON NUCLEAR TEST AT AMCHITKA—QUESTION

Leave having been given to revert to Question Period.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, may I direct a question to the Leader of the Government? In view of the statement made today by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, to the effect that the United States has just announced President Nixon's decision that the underground nuclear test at Amchitka will take place on or shortly after November 3, I wonder if the Leader of the Government has any comment to make.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Honourable senators, I have the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in which he announced that the test was going ahead. Perhaps I could table this statement, and make it part of the record.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Martin tabled:

Copies of statement made today in the House of Commons by the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, Secretary of State for External Affairs, respecting the announcement by the United States that the underground nuclear test at Amchitka will take place on or shortly after November 4, 1971.

(The text follows)

Members of the House will be aware that the United States has just announced that the underground nuclear test at Amchitka will take place on or shortly after November 4.

The Government deeply regrets this decision and shares the widespread concern of the people of Canada as expressed in the resolution of this house of October 15.

I need not remind the house that the Government has both publicly and privately made clear to the United States Canada's firm and consistent opposition to the continuation and escalation of nuclear weapons testing, and our specific concern about the threat the Amchitka test poses to the North Pacific environment that we share with them, with the Russians and the Japanese.

Our Ambassador in Washington was notified of the President's decision this morning shortly before it was made public. I at once took steps to contact Mr. Rogers, the American Secretary of State, and have conveyed to him that this action on their part can only result in a deep sense of disquiet among Canadians.

The hard fact, Mr. Speaker, is that in the end the American Government has the legal right to carry out this test. It presumably is doing so in accordance with what it perceives to be the national interest of the United States. We have never suggested that this test involves a high element of risk but no one denies that risks exist.

Canada and other nations threatened will necessarily hold the United States responsible for any short or long term effects of this test.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the House that our specific objections to this test are wholly consistent with Canada's opposition to nuclear weapons testing of all kinds and by all nuclear powers.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Essentially, it means that the Government can do nothing about the test.

Hon. Mr. Martin: The Government regrets the decision to go ahead, but obviously there is nothing that the Government can do except express, as the Prime Minister did and as Mr. Sharp did, very strong disagreement.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Leopold Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, November 2, 1971, at 8 p.m.

MASS MEDIA

SALE OF INDEPENDENTLY OWNED NEWSPAPERS—QUESTION

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the following question of the Government Leader: In view of the demise and expiry this Saturday of the Toronto Telegram and in view of the disappearance in recent weeks of three more independently owned Ontario dailies into chain ownership—specifically the purchase of the Belleville Intelligencer by the Thomson Newspapers Limited, and the purchase by Southam Press Limited of not only the Brantford Expositor but also the Windsor Star—would the leader agree with me that it is regrettable that the Government has failed to implement the proposal of the Senate Committee on Mass Media calling for a Press Ownership Review Board, an agency which would have been required to consider whether or not these purchases, as well as the purchase by the Toronto Star of Telegram subscription lists, were in fact in the public interest?

Will the leader draw this problem to the immediate attention of his colleagues in the cabinet while there are still at least a few remaining independently owned daily newspapers in Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, Senator Davey gave me a copy of his question this morning and advised me of his intention to ask the question this afternoon. I can say that I will see that the question which he raises is again directed to my colleagues. It is a fact that the Government has considered the implications of the sale of the Toronto Telegram. I can say no more at this time because, as a result of the Government's review of this matter, a statement is about to be made by my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, who comes from Toronto. I think that I should not anticipate what he is going to say.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I am sure that the Liberal members of this chamber feel very badly about the Star taking over the Telegram mailing list.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is a local question.

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, October 26, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Martin, calling the attention of the Senate to the Canada-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement, done at Ottawa, October 20, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, October 20, 1971, and to the Canada-Soviet Communiqué, dated October 26, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, October 26, 1971.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, first of all, I should like to compliment the Leader of the Government on the very full statement he made on the agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the U.S.S.R. This was printed in Hansard on October 26.

I would like also to compliment the Leader of the Opposition on the very fair statement he made on the same day. I was particularly struck by two paragraphs in his speech, which are indicative of the usual generous and fair line which he takes. I recognize that at times he feels the need to insert a needle into the Government but this adds to the piquancy of debate in this house. The first of these paragraphs, which epitomizes what most Canadians feel, is found at page 1390 of Hansard of October 26, and it reads:

> Trust and understanding are generative of friendship, and perhaps the time has come for us again to make an act of faith in the goodwill of the U.S.S.R. to see if we can restore the concept of peace from its present debilitated condition to one of vigorous good health.

That is a statement with which all of us can agree. Further down, in the same column, Senator Flynn made a further statement:

> We are given by this General Exchanges Agreement the opportunity to perforate the iron curtain, to alleviate fears, to nullify mistrust, to educate and to be educated. Human contact and communication is the best antidote possible to the poison of suspicious chauvinism.

These are very good statements.

All members of the Senate will have read with interest the agreement and the communiqué to which I have referred. Both of these documents are printed in Hansard of October 26. They are significant documents, marking a further practical and common-sense attempt to bring about closer relations with our powerful northern neighbour, based on intelligence and understanding. To have good relations with our northern neighbour need in no way cause us to have poorer relations with our powerful neighbour to the south, who has been around a long time and will continue to be in the future.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: As a matter of fact, it is only common sense for Canada to seek the best possible relations with both of our neighbours, and, as far as possible, to work toward the development of better relations between the U.S.S.R. and U.S.A. By so doing, we are supporting the recent initiative of President Nixon who, as we all know, is going to Russia for the purpose of exploring the matters of arms reduction, troop withdrawals, trade relations, and related matters.

By the fact of geography, Canada stands between the presently two most powerful nations in the world. If the tragedy of conflict between those two nations and their conflicting ideologies ever came to pass, Canada would be the Belgium of World War III. This is an eventuality which must be avoided at all costs. Anything that Canada can do to develop closer relations between the two and between ourselves and them is a cause worthy of our best efforts. It is in this context that we welcomed the visit of the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R., Mr. Kosygin.

In spite of some unpleasant episodes caused by irresponsible groups and individuals, I think it must be concluded that Mr. Kosygin's visit must be looked upon as a very successful beginning to what we hope will lead to a mutual expansion of trade, scientific and technical, as well as cultural knowledge. Canada can only be the gainer from such an interchange. Russia's technical and scientific skills are second to none while her cultural programs in both the performing and visual arts are the envy of most countries in the world.

I think it is appropriate at this time to draw attention to the fact that in the last 18 months Canada, on the initiative of the Prime Minister, has played a role of importance on the international stage far out of proportion to her status as a small power. Some 18 months ago the Prime Minister announced a reduction in Canada's deployment of armed forces as part of NATO in Europe. By taking this decision he acknowledged the fact that we were a small power and that we had no pretensions to the role of being even a middle power. This decision was not universally popular, but it was one which made common sense. It needs to be emphasized in this context that Canada did not withdraw from NATO. She is still a partner in that exercise and I hope an understanding one.

I do not think for a moment that any reasonable person will suggest that the reduction of Canada's contribution to the NATO forces in Europe from 10,000 men to 5,000 will have any significant effect on the balance of power in NATO. Furthermore, it seems to me that those 5,000 men can be more usefully employed in Canada, and, in particular, in Canada's northern and Arctic regions. I think Canada's armed forces can and should play a much greater role than they have in the past in the Arctic, and I do not think our northern neighbours will feel particularly that these forces are being deployed against them; rather, they will feel that these forces are being deployed as part of our development of the resources of the Canadian north. On the other hand, if we should be faced with the ultimate disaster of conflict between the super powers, Canada as a part of the real estate of North America would be so looked upon by the United States whether we liked it or not.

So there is no question but what our fortunes are inextricably involved with those of the United States. In fact, we will be lucky if in the next 25 years Canada will not become an economic appendage of the United States. There are some people who suggest we are now, although I do not think that is quite accurate.

Without in any way intending to denigrate the United States, I hope we will be able to maintain and enlarge our political and cultural identity as something different and distinct from that of the United States. The Prime Minister's initiative vis-à-vis NATO was the first of a number of major developments of the last few months. The second instance in which Canada played a significant and major role was in the steps she took to recognize the People's Republic of China. Canada did recognize the People's Republic of China and in so doing caused many other people to re-examine their thinking, with the result that was so dramatically confirmed in the United Nations on October 22. This was a major step in the changing pattern of world affairs, and one which will have far-reaching results in the years to come.

The third event of significance was the Prime Minister's visit to Russia, when he toured that country and saw first hand its people, institutions and particularly its developments in the north. He received a cordial and very warm welcome, and I have reason to believe he made friends for Canada. The result of that visit was his invitation to the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. to come to Canada.

The fourth event of significance in this chain of events was Prime Minister Kosygin's visit to Canada last week. I think that this was a very significant step forward in international understanding and the evolution of more friendly relations. I think from the standpoint of the expansion of trade it came at a very timely moment in our history.

The fifth step in this series of events was the one I referred to earlier, the admission of China to the United Nations in a very decisive way on the evening of October 22. The march of events has been dramatic and rapid. The admission of China to the United Nations marks a change in the international power structure and a very significant one. I wish to point out in this context that in the long pageant of history half a century is but a moment in time. In the last half century, from 1917 to 1971, a matter of 54 years, we have witnessed tremendous changes in the power structure in eastern Europe and in Asia.

As I said in my speech in this house on October 13, we are at a stage in our history where even greater changes are taking place in the evolution of a new power structure in Asia. In 1917 we witnessed the Russian Revolution, which by 1920 had pretty well established the Communist party in power in that country, where it remains strongly entrenched today.

I think it is hopeful, as the Leader of the Opposition emphasized, that there is a change in attitude. The attitudes of the cold war are breaking down, thank goodness, and there is a greater receptivity to the seeking of understanding of different ideologies and differences in people.

As far as the Russians are concerned, I feel confident that they are liberalizing their programs. And probably those of us in this country who have been very much anti-communist or anti-Russian are somewhat less so today than 10 or 15 years ago. This does not mean that they are compromising their political views or ideals, but that they are being pragmatic and are attempting to realize an accommodation, that a compromise is inevitable—and compromise is the art of politics. We must be prepared in Canada to accept change, and I am happy that Canada has played such a major role in the last few months in assisting in bringing about changes in the international structure which will have far-reaching and long-term consequences.

I think in the main that the visit of the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. was looked upon as a significant and important event in Canada. In general there was a warmth to the welcome which exceeded anything I expected; I am happy this was so. Unfortunately, there was an unpleasant side to this visit.

I refer particularly to the actions and the attitudes of some of the protest groups. Now, let me make it perfectly clear that this is a free and democratic society. One of the things that we have prided ourselves upon in years past, and I hope we will in the future, is the right of dissent. However, there are ways of dissenting which are acceptable to people, and some of the things we witnessed in the last week are not acceptable to me nor to many other Canadians. The attack on Mr. Kosygin in front of the East Block left a rather sour taste. As our Prime Minister said, he was chagrined, he was ashamed that this could happen in Canada.

The point I wish to make is that the actions of these groups have caused Canada to lose something that has been very precious. I am sure some of you will remember that in days gone by Prime Minister St. Laurent used to walk from this building to his home on Sussex Drive alone or with a friend. John Diefenbaker did the same, and Prime Minister Trudeau does it today. Distinguished visitors should be able to come to this country and walk about the mall, and downtown, see it and get the feel of it.

I was rather touched that in an interview Chairman Kosygin gave to Bruce West of the Toronto Globe and Mail he said he was sorry he was not able to go into a Canadian home. As one who has travelled widely around the world, I know from personal experience what it means to go into a home in a foreign country. It is something that is good for the guest and good for the host. I hope the time will come when a foreign visitor, whether it be Chairman Kosygin, President Nixon or someone else, will be able to walk about our streets freely.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: How can you expect that when we have here ethnic groups who have come from behind the iron curtain and have been pushed around extremely by those who are our guests? Do you expect them to wave flags? Do you expect that kind of response as long as there is that kind of treatment given to those people over there?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: My answer is that you will catch more flies with honey than with vinegar. If I were striving to influence Mr. Kosygin, or whoever it might be, to achieve something for myself or my people, I think I would get further by observing the amenities and by following protocol. This does not mean in any sense that I would deny the right of people to protest, but there is a way of doing it that can be much more effective, dignified and in keeping with the traditions of freedom in this country. To be practical about it, I would advise them to obtain a permit for their protest and to hold it at Lansdowne Park, or somewhere similar, where they could do all the shouting, screaming and yelling they liked, but they should not use Parliament Hill for that purpose as they did last week. I resent the sort of thing that occurred when I went to the National Arts Centre the other night and was obliged to walk on the street because a group of not very bright-looking people were on the sidewalk shouting, "Kosygin pig, go home". The nearest thing I saw to pigs there that night were the people who were doing this. This does not reflect any credit on us.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: They did not do that to Senator Martin.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: I am sure that had Senator Martin been trying to get in, as were the rest of us, he would not have been very happy about the incident either.

In a democratic society we must preserve the right of people to dissent. There is a way of doing it that is much more effective than the methods we have witnessed not only this past week but on several occasions in the past. I hope that we can return to a standard of conduct regarding international visitors, no matter who they are, by which Canada lives up to its reputation as a free country where people's individuality is recognized, and where nothing happens to cause us shame.

Hon. Mr. Yuzyk: Did I understand Senator Cameron to say that the nearest he saw to pigs were those who were demonstrating legally before the National Arts Centre?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: I said that I saw one particular group of about 20. I do not know who they were. They were young people. I do not think they were Ukrainians, but they were acting in a manner that was not a credit to themselves or to Canada.

I come from a part of Canada where there are many Ukrainians, and I have a lot to do with them. I have always had great admiration for them. Sometimes they exasperate me a little. I have been invited to towns like Vegreville, Smoky Lake and Mundare under the auspices of the Ukrainian Nationalist Association. On more than one occasion groups—they did not call themselves communists—set up an opposition meeting in a hall across the street. I have seen this happen in reverse. I know the sort of thing that goes on, and the division that exists even among people of the same ethnic background.

Ukrainians, Jews, Latvians, and Estonians have added a great deal to the culture of this country. They have been productive in industry, agriculture, and in the arts, and we want to keep it that way.

The point that I wish to make, with all the emphasis that I can muster, is that there is a better way to conduct protests than the happenings of last week. One of the reasons for the unpleasantness that developed in some areas—and in the main we were fortunate that there was not more unpleasantness—is that we have been rather lax in the enforcement of our laws. There are laws on our statute books to deal with infractions of the peace, with assaults and the invasion of people's rights, and when these have occurred the police have taken people into custody. They may have arrested them, but usually they have taken them away and nothing has happened. They have been released without penalty, and in my judgment this is a mistake.

The time has come when Canadians for their own protection and the protection of the good name of this country must enforce the law regardless of the offender. We have to keep that in mind. My feeling is that, as a result of what happened in some instances last week, Canada lost a little of the image of which we are all so proud. Our escutcheon as a dignified and free people has been tarnished by this action.

I wish here to say something about the news media which played up the attack on Mr. Kosygin by a man named Matrai, who was hailed as a freedom fighter from Hungary. Members of this chamber are very conscious of what happened in Hungary in 1956, and Canada, again with her traditional hospitality and generosity, reached out the hand of friendship to those people. We welcomed many thousands of them here, and most are now good Canadian citizens.

The young man who is reported to have attacked Mr. Kosygin, according to the newspaper stories, was 12 years old when he came to Canada. He is now 24, and was described as being a freedom fighter from Hungary. Such nonsense! This kind of person, when played up by the news media, becomes a hero to a certain type of people. On a CBC program a fellow whose name is Campbell, and who was associated with Matrai, was interviewed in front of the East Block. He was asked "Were you with Mr. Matrai?" and he answered yes. He was then asked "Did you come from Toronto to attack Mr. Kosygin?" and he said no. He was further asked, "Why did you do it; why was it done?", to which he replied that he had jumped over the barricades in the excitement of the moment. When he was asked why he did that, he said he did it to get the publicity. That is exactly the sort of thing that happens when the media feature the actions of irresponsible publicity-seeking people.

Hon. Mr. Belisle: Senator Cameron mentioned that the person who attacked Premier Kosygin was from Toronto. He also said that he came to Canada at 12 years of age, that he is now 24, and was a freedom fighter. He then said, "Such nonsense." May I ask Senator Cameron whether he is saying "Such nonsense" to all those who are fighting for freedom?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: No. I said that he was labelled a Hungarian freedom fighter. If he had been in Ireland this past week, at 12 or 14 years of age he could have been a freedom fighter, because two boys there of that age were packing machine guns. But certainly this lad was not a freedom fighter in Hungary 12 years ago. It is nonsense to say that he was a freedom fighter.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Would Senator Cameron not agree that he could be a freedom fighter in Canada even if he came to this country at the age of 12, and is now 24? To Senator Cameron's knowledge, did he say that he was a freedom fighter in Hungary?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: That is the way he was described in the newspaper story. I do not know whether he could be a freedom fighter in Canada. I need not remind honourable senators of some of the things that happened a year ago in October. Those people probably thought they were freedom fighters.

Hon. Mrs. Quart: I heard the interview to which Senator Cameron referred. The young man who was interviewed said that at 12 o'clock that day they did not even realize what was going on until they saw all the limousines and found out that Mr. Kosygin was here. I do not agree in any way with the attack upon Mr. Kosygin, but it was mentioned in the interview that had the Prime Minister and Premier Kosygin followed the original security plans, the incident could not possibly have happened. Therefore the attack could not have been premeditated. Had the Prime Minister and Mr. Kosygin left the Centre Block by the route they should have taken, instead of going the way they did, the incident would not have happened. Does not that, to a certain extent, exonerate this young man?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Not in my book. The honourable senator is quite right in that the young man did say that up until 12 o'clock he did not know that Mr. Kosygin would be there. However, he was asked the question, "Why did you climb over the fence?", to which he replied, "In the excitement of the moment, and to get publicity."

The point I am making is that had this happened in the U.K., or in some other country, it would not have had the degree of publicity it received here. In fact, I think the media is doing a disservice to the Canadian people by overplaying and distorting out of all proportion incidents of this kind. As a result, many of these young irresponsible people, students and older people equally mischievous and irresponsible, are participating in these incidents because they know they will be featured on television, and become heroes to the members of their particular group.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Senator Cameron referred to the events of last October in the Province of Quebec, and suggested that some of the people concerned in those events, in some way which I could not hear, might conceivably have been described as freedom fighters. Could I ask Senator Cameron to explain what he meant by that reference, because it was slightly obscure to me?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Some people in Quebec referred to themselves at that time as freedom fighters. I do not wish to get into that argument because, again, I think this is one of those inconsequential things that is distorted out of all proportion by the media. That is all that I meant by my comment.

On the same CBC program—and I might say that I have been a defender of the CBC all my life—there was an interview with the President of the Edmund Burke Society. Again, I do not think he had much to say. I have no quarrel with the fact that he was given time on the CBC, but we have to be very careful that things are not distorted out of proportion.

Some of last week's events which were actually insignificant in the total picture of the Canadian scene were played up by the national news media, both print and electronic, out of all proportion to their importance. It will only encourage more of the same kind of action. I hope that more responsibility will be exercised by the media in the future. This kind of activity, this disturbance of meetings and assault on personalities, must be stopped—and it can be stopped if we simply enforce the laws now on our statute book. We have been all too namby-pamby in this respect. We have witnessed a breakdown in discipline in our society, a discipline that I am sure will have to be re-imposed if we are to play the role we should in this country. The pendulum has begun to swing back, certainly in the universities and, I think, in young people's groups, and this is all to the good.

I want to emphasize that the events of the past week have underlined the need to enforce the law. One of the reasons individuals and groups have flouted the law and caused trouble is that our law enforcement authorities have been too lenient. They have let these people go unpunished or undisciplined. Our news media has distorted the incidents out of all proportion, and as a consequence some people think they can break the law with impunity. Once any law comes to be looked upon as something that can be flouted, there is a depreciation of the currency of law to the detriment of the whole country.

On the whole, the visit of the Prime Minister of the U.S.S.R., and the discussions which took place while he was here, were all to the good. But he was not given the opportunity to see Canada in the way I was hoping he would see it, and in the way I hope President Nixon and President Tito will see it when they come here. One cannot see much if one is behind a wall of security people who are trying to hold off those who might attack. This was a sad thing that happened in Canada last week and I hope it will not happen again.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Do you not think that if you went to those countries you would be surrounded by security men?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: I was in some of those countries but, not being a president of a country or of that level, I did not need protection. They have security forces, but I do not think they were as obtrusive anywhere as they were here last week. Even if they were, this is something that is alien to Canada, something I hope will never happen again. It will require the collective effort of all of us to re-establish the standards and the traditions which we have lost in the past few days.

Hon. Mrs. Kinnear: Honourable senators, on behalf of honourable Senator Croll, I should like to move the adjournment of the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Croll, it is moved by honourable Senator Kinnear, seconded by honourable Senator Boucher, that this debate be adjourned to the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I think Senator O'Leary wants to speak.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I take this opportunity to deal with a certain problem which occurs from time to time when an inquiry or debate is proceeding and an honourable senator rises in his place to move the adjournment of the debate. I think I should at that point inquire if there is any other honourable senator who is ready to speak.

In this case, the honourable Senator Kinnear is moving, on behalf of the honourable Senator Croll, that the debate be adjourned. Is there any honourable senator who is ready to speak now?

Hon. Mr. Yuzyk: Honourable senators, I intend to participate in this debate, but I would prefer to speak after Senator Croll, now that he has indicated he wishes to speak. I shall be ready to speak next week.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, my intervention at this time was to inquire, before I put the motion, whether any honourable senator would like to speak now. There being no honourable senator who indicates a desire to speak now in this debate, I will put the motion.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Kinnear, for Hon. Mr. Croll, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, before I move the adjournment of the house, I would remind you that this debate, which has just been adjourned, will continue next week. I understand that at least two honourable senators will speak on Tuesday evening.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet next Wednesday and Thursday. There will be meetings also of the Joint Committee on the Constitution. Therefore, the Senate will be busily engaged during the coming week.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 2, 1971 at 8 p.m.

PRIVATE BILL

CENTRAL-DEL RIO OILS LIMITED—COMMONS AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-12, respecting Central-Del Rio Oils Limited, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with one amendment, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate:

Page 2, after line 42, add the following as a new clause:

A majority of directors of the company or its successor shall at all times be Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, when shall this amendment be taken into consideration?

Hon. Ernest C. Manning moved, with leave of the Senate, that this amendment be concurred in now.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I wonder if Senator Manning wishes to comment on this amendment, or perhaps he would suggest that it does not deserve any comment.

Hon. Mr. Manning: Honourable senators, you will recall that when this bill was first dealt with in the Senate it made provision for the Central-Del Rio Company, which was incorporated under the Companies Act of Alberta, to become recognized as a company with federal status in order to permit its amalgamation with another federal company under the Canada Corporations Act. When the bill was dealt with in the House of Commons it was felt that a clause should be included requiring that a majority of the directors in the company or its successors should at all times be Canadian citizens. That is the sole purpose of the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is satisfactory.

Amendment concurred in.

Hon. Paul Martin tabled:

THE SENATE

USE OF CHAMBER BY INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS—APPOINTMENT OF AD HOC COMMITTEE—MOTION WITHDRAWN

On the Motion:

That a Special Committee of the Senate composed of five senators be appointed to consider and report upon the use of the Senate Chamber.

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, I am given to understand that certain positive steps are soon to be taken which should lead to our establishing a clear policy with regard to such matters as the use of the Senate Chamber. The assurances that I have been given satisfy me; consequently, I ask that my motion be withdrawn.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

CANADA GAZETTE

PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS—QUESTION

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government. The question refers to the three sheets of paper which were, I believe, received by all honourable senators during the last week. They are extras of the Canada Gazette, Part II.

• (2010)

One, for example, deals with shirts—men's shirts, boy's shirts—and describes how a person may receive permission to import 12 shirts if he so wishes under the relevant act. The question I want to direct to the Government is: Why is it regarded as necessary to print these inconsequential regulations as an extra in view of the fact that Part II of the Canada Gazette is published regularly on the second and fourth Wednesday of each month. Is there some particular reason why we are now adopting this particular approach to the publication of the Canada Gazette?

Hon. Paul Martin: I will take that as notice.

GOVERNMENT FOREIGN AID POLICY—QUESTION

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the honourable the Leader of the Government in this house. The United States Senate defeated a $2.9 billion foreign aid bill last week. According to a press release, Senator Mike Mansfield stated that this move may well mark the end of the foreign aid program. In view of this new American attitude with respect to foreign aid, may I inquire from the leader as to what will be the foreign aid policy of the Government of Canada in the coming months?

Hon. Paul Martin: There will be no change in the policy of the Government of Canada on foreign aid.

THE SENATE

APPOINTMENTS—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the Senate. Perhaps the Government Leader may be able to clarify it. In the Montreal Gazette on Saturday last there was published an interview between the Prime Minister and Mr. Charles Lynch. I should like to quote part thereof:

> Q: Well, the first one is are you going to fill the vacancies in the Senate, and why have you waited so long?
> A: Well, that's linked with the parliamentary secretaries. The accusation is that I'm naming too many parliamentary secretaries and spending government money . . .
> Q: Well, you're fulfilling Parkinson's prophecy . . .
>
> A: Well then, why fill the Senate?
> Q: Well, because it's there. The Senate with all these vacant seats is hard pressed to do its work.

I could quote the answer that was given, but it is not relevant to the question at all. However, if honourable senators would like me to quote it, I shall do so. In my view it would serve no useful purpose and would not even help the Government Leader to defend the Prime Minister. I think the answers given by the Prime Minister in this instance are too easily subject to misinterpretation. If we take his answers as they are printed in the Gazette, there is an implication that by filling the vacancies and by helping the Senate to do its work the Government would be wasting the taxpayers' money. I think that is a question affecting the privilege of this house, and I would hope that the Leader of the Government might say something about it and might suggest to the Prime Minister that he should correct the statement or at least clarify it.

Hon. Paul Martin: I have not seen the statement, but I am sure there was no intention on the part of the Prime Minister in any way to reflect on the Senate.

NUCLEAR POWER DEVELOPMENT

HEAVY WATER PLANT IN NOVA SCOTIA—QUESTION

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Government Leader. In recent press reports it has been indicated that the federal Government proposes to allocate another $95 million to the heavy water plant in Nova Scotia. I should like to ask if that report is correct, and, if it is, what will the total amount of federal investment then be in that project?

Hon. Paul Martin: I shall also take that as notice.

CANADA-U.S.S.R. GENERAL EXCHANGES AGREEMENT—QUESTION

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, I should like to direct to the Leader of the Government a question in connection with his remarks as reported in Hansard of October 26. He referred to the Canada-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement, which was placed on our record as an appendix that day. In that agreement there is this paragraph:

> Both Governments will encourage and facilitate the fulfilment of existing working agreements, including the agreement between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the State Committee of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. on Television and Radio Broadcasting which is deemed to be annexed to this Agreement.

Would the leader table a copy of that agreement with the CBC?

Hon. Paul Martin: I would be happy to look into this at once.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, October 28, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Martin, calling the attention of the Senate to the Canada-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement, done at Ottawa, October 20, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, October 20, 1971, and to the Canada-Soviet Communiqué, dated October 26, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, October 26, 1971.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, when Prime Minister Trudeau announced that Premier Kosygin was coming to Canada there were indications from various parts of the country that there would be demonstrations. I remember at that time the Prime Minister said these statesmen from behind the Iron Curtain are pretty hard-nosed people and they are not overly influenced by demonstrations. Premier Kosygin is not only a hard-nosed politician, but a no-nonsense politician who is able to take over in a situation. We must remember that he rose in the toughest political machine in the world where the stakes are high. The loser becomes a non-person if he is lucky, and if he is unlucky he becomes an un-person. He is a most able man and he knows the score, whether by our or any other standards.

In 1966 I was a member of the Canadian Parliamentary Delegation to Russia. We had seen most of the top leaders, but we wanted to see some other leaders as well. It was suggested that we might see Mr. Brezhnev. But, being rather obstinate, we said we wished to see Premier Kosygin. We were informed this was not possible; that he would not be available. But strange things happen, and in the next day or so we were informed that an appointment for our delegation had been arranged. We spent most of a morning with him. During that time we discussed many matters of interest to both our country and Russia. We were very much impressed by his knowledge, his facility, and his capacity in dealing with rather important matters.

He came to our country in search of goodwill, understanding and peace. He won our respect and our sympathy on the very first day of his tour when he was attacked. He did not panic. As a matter of fact, the Prime Minister did not panic either. Premier Kosygin knows how to handle himself. He has been in circumstances such as this before. However, throughout the country we at once felt sorry for him. He was our guest, and the egg was all over our face. The longer he stayed, the more he took on the image of a favourite uncle. He brought his daughter, who is a very presentable lady, with him and that gave his visit a warm touch. Our charming first lady and Premier Kosygin's daughter hit it off well, and became warm companions.

Security at that stage became so tight that I do not know what he could have seen in this country except police almost everywhere he turned, which he rather regretted. In my opinion Vancouver, better than any other part, expressed the mood of the country. He went to a hockey game, at which there was a full house. Hockey crowds are usually a cross-section of Canadians and normally there is hooting, Bronx cheers, and booing rather than cheering, the presence of a VIP making no difference. They gave him a standing ovation. It pleased all of us across Canada that he was so warmly welcomed.

When he was leaving Toronto the Government Leader was present with Mr. Macdonald, the Minister of National Defence. I am not sure whether they made speeches. In any event, if they did, I do not think anyone remembers what they said. Most people will remember that the first lady of this land walked up to Mr. Kosygin and pecked him on the cheek in saying goodbye. In that way she gave a cheerful goodbye from all of us.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Would the honourable senator pardon me for interrupting him? I rise on a matter of protocol. I was of the opinion that the first lady of the land is the wife of His Excellency the Governor General, and if my memory serves me correctly she was in Iran at that time. That would require a rather long arm, would it not?

Hon. Mr. Croll: You may be right in the first part of your remark, but certainly not in the second. At any rate, I was referring to the Prime Minister's wife.

Honourable senators, allow me to deal for a moment with the protests and demonstrations. I believe that approximately 50,000 men, women and children protested peacefully during the visit. Now, that was not a small, silent minority. They had a right to make their views known—a fundamental right acquired and prized in our country. Who were they? Why were they there? What did they hope to achieve? In my view they were solid citizens. They were not radicals, not the lunatic fringe, although it is true there were some of those in the crowd. There were some nuts without bolts, and there were some present for the purpose of disrupting and destroying the proceedings. There were also some professionals. But we get that sort of thing at every protest meeting.

In the main they were Canadians of ethnic origins with long pent-up bitter and emotional feelings toward problems which affect them, their relatives and their friends. In many cases it was their first opportunity of bringing their grievances to the attention of the head of state.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Our head of state?

Hon. Mr. Croll: No, the visiting head of state, Premier Kosygin.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: You do not mean that it was a revelation to him?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I said it was the first time they had the opportunity of bringing their grievances to his attention. Although they were directing their remarks to Premier Kosygin, there was a message for all of us, because their grievances and hurts are real.

I think they wanted Premier Kosygin to know that they could protest and demonstrate in their adopted country as they could never do in his country, and that it was a right they cherished. They were also saying that a gilded cage is still a cage. They were saying to the Canadian people, "Watch your step. Be on your guard. These agreements may be empty and hollow." They were hoping to get their message across to Mr. Kosygin, for those people know better than most that historically the Russians are interested in only themselves.

What was their protest? It was an expression of the freedom which they have and enjoy. They were saying, in effect, "Our friends, relatives and co-religionists want the freedom to emigrate, and to re-unite families. They want freedom of religion; cultural freedom."

Although the Ukrainian portion of the protest was directed to these fundamental freedoms, it was directed mainly to cultural freedom. On the other hand, the Jewish element directed its protest more towards the freedom to emigrate. Their plea is as ancient as time and as old as history: Let my people go. There is a place for them to go. They could go to Israel where they are welcome.

When one talks in this context, it provides an opportunity to say a word on behalf of the Government of Canada, which, through the then Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson, was instrumental in bringing about the recognition of the State of Israel.

I realize that there are some people in this country who have misgivings as to whether this type of protest and demonstration has any favourable effect upon the policy of the Soviet Union. Does it do any good? Does a great country adjust its policies from day to day? I feel those people who have such misgivings are mistaken. In my view, the protesters made their point in the context of Canadianism. They were noticed, and what they said will be heeded, although perhaps not immediately.

We are living in a time of confrontation. It is happening every day in the country to the south of us, where there are many marchers, protesters, sign carriers, shouters, and so forth. There was a group of sign carriers outside the Parliament buildings this afternoon. I asked one of the youngsters why he was doing it, and he said that it was better than going to school.

We are now protesting the forthcoming nuclear test explosion on Amchitka. Who is doing the protesting? Last week the Parliament of Canada protested by way of resolution which was passed, I believe, almost unanimously. The Parliament is a forum for protesting, but the only forum these other people have is the street, and, consequently, they use it. That is the mood of the times.

A couple of years ago the university students were protesting. What were they protesting about? They were protesting about the curriculum; about the poor professors; and about the failure to have representation and participation in the administration of the university. If you look around you now you will find that the professors have updated their lectures; they are not giving the same ones they gave ten years ago, or at least they are changing the numbers on the pages. You will find the curriculum has become more relevant to today, and there are young people on the board of directors, and they are doing away with the canes and the hearing aids in the board rooms. What is more important, however, is that they have taken the universities of our land out of the control of the presidents of the large corporations, the large donors, and men who were status quo extremists. If you look at the result of their protests objectively, you must realize that it is a plus. I did not like the way they did it. I did not agree with them at the time as to the method they employed, but in the end they made their point, and they are now participating in the administration of the universities. They are having something to say about the universities, and I believe the universities are better for it.

Last week in Montreal there was as serious a confrontation as we have had in a long time, and we do not want another like it. There have been many in that province, but one did not have to go there for a confrontation. Last week in Ottawa there was a Conference on Law and Poverty. Mr. Justice Hall, one of our great jurists and one of the most liberal minded men in Canada, who honourable senators will remember was responsible for the Royal Commission on Health Services from which came Medicare, and for his report on education in Ontario schools, attended before the conference to try to help them. Goodness knows, he is busy enough as a judge and works hard enough. They were rude and insulting to him. Those of us who know him are humiliated that that can happen in Canada. Those who subjected him to that treatment knew nothing of his attainments, his achievements and his contribution to making life easier for the poor. The trouble is that persons are exposed unnecessarily to that sort of thing when such conferences are so hurriedly and badly organized by men who have a great deal of book learning but would not know how to replace a fuse.

I am certain that the problems which were raised by the people during the recent visit were discussed by the Prime Minister on humanitarian grounds. They were friendly enough and able to discuss these matters. There was some indication that that had been done.

We parliamentarians played our part. We senators and the members of the other place made our protest too. What role did we play? For the very first time the head of a foreign government appeared before a joint parliamentary committee and subjected himself to questions that were not censored.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): I am sorry to interrupt the honourable senator. I have been trying to follow his remarks as best I could, but I would like to know what he is talking about.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Kosygin.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): If the honourable senator is talking about the visit of Monsieur Kosygin, I think he should tell the Senate what questions were put, what the answers were, and then make his comments.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I was saying that for the first time the head of a foreign government appeared before a joint parliamentary committee and subjected himself to questions that were not censored. The members of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Standing Committee on External Affairs of the other place were asked by the joint chairmen to submit questions. Some 17 questions were sent in, but there was not time to deal with all of them. The questions were asked through the joint chairmen, Mr. Ian Wahn, the member for St. Paul's, and Senator John Aird. It was a most successful meeting.

• (2040)

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: May I ask a question? Were not these questions, in fact, screened?

Hon. Mr. Croll: No, they were not screened. What do you mean by "screened"?

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: I mean that they were submitted to the chairmen, and some of the questions which it was deemed inadvisable to ask Mr. Kosygin were struck out, and not put. They were screened just as in political conventions resolutions are screened.

Hon. Mr. Croll: No, that is not so. I understand the chairmen permitted a question from each political party in turn, commencing with members of the House of Commons. A question was given to Senator Grosart, then to me, and then to Senator Yuzyk. They then started again with a question for each political party. Someone made the suggestion that you are making now, and I understood that Mr. Brewin, who was a member of the small committee, said that they had not been screened at all, that they had been taken in turn. The questions were so diverse that that must have been the case.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): This is all very nice, but I would ask: What was the question of the honourable gentleman and what was the answer? When his question was answered, what were his remarks?

Hon. Mr. Croll: If you are patient I will come to that. Senator Grosart asked a question dealing with the European Security Conference, and he received his answer. Senator Yuzyk's question was:

> The Ukrainian people in Canada, 80 per cent of whom are Canadian born, enjoy full freedom in this country. They are active in every aspect of Canadian life, including politics, having elected in the last 50 years over 100 federal and provincial parliamentarians, many of whom have been and still are cabinet ministers.

The Ukrainian Canadians are very much interested in the developments in Ukraine, which many of them visit every year. Recently, news from Ukraine indicate that some Ukrainian intellectuals, such as Valentyn Moroz, have been sentenced in closed trials to many years in prison, for writing essays. At the Congress of Ukrainians in Winnipeg last week, Prime Minister Trudeau was approached by Ukrainian students, who were on a hunger strike, and leaders of Ukrainian organizations, to plead with you, the Premier of the U.S.S.R., to have the cases of imprisoned intellectuals reconsidered and also to have them freed. Since this is in keeping with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of the United Nations, and to improve Canadian relations with the Soviet Union, will Premier Kosygin undertake to have these cases reviewed and the prisoners released and freedom of expression safeguarded?

Senator Yuzyk received an answer. He will follow me in this debate, and he will give you the context of the answer that he received.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Did he not like the answer at the time?

Hon. Mr. Croll: He will tell you that himself.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Did you like the answers you received for your people?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Now—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: But did you, and were they true answers?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Let me make my speech.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I am asking you.

Hon. Mr. Croll: You will get the answer in a little while.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, I understood that this meeting of Premier Kosygin the week before last with the External Affairs Committee of the House of Commons and the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs was in camera. There were no press reports, but questions were asked and answers given.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: And everybody shut up when they got their answers.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I do not think it is fair—

Hon. Mr. Croll: I do not think you should make any comment. You said you thought the meeting was in camera. I think that at that moment you had the right to an answer, without comment, as to what was or was not done.

I agree that it was an in camera meeting. Immediately that afternoon the reporters called me and asked for a statement, which I refused. I then called the chairman, Mr. Ian Wahn, and asked if the meeting was in camera, and he said no, because the same questions were asked at the press conference and I was no longer bound.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Why did the honourable senator not explain that at the beginning? He is talking about a press conference. If he had said that he had received these questions and answers at the press conference, that would have been fine. I think he should indicate how we, who were at that in camera meeting, should be allowed to stand on the floor of this house and explain whether we liked the answers or not. I think he should have explained that at the beginning, so that it would be on the record that his statements are a result of the press conference.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I did not say that at all. The statement, with the same question, was made at the press conference. But the question that I asked was my question, and I got an answer. I indicated to the chairman that I had been called by the press and that I had refused to give an interview. He said the question I had asked had been answered, and that I was no longer bound. I did not reply to the press, and this is the first time I am bringing it to public attention.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I still think, honourable senators, it is very unfair.

Hon. Mr. Croll: When the Prime Minister visited the Soviet Union, Dr. Stanley Haidasz, M.P., provided him with a list of persons who wanted to be re-united with their families in Canada. The Prime Minister submitted the list to the Soviet Government, with the hope that visas would be forthcoming immediately. It appears that the Soviet authorities got bogged down in red tape and permits were not coming forward as quickly as they should, although many of the applications had been dealt with. Dr. Haidasz was one of the people who raised that question in the committee. There was an admission of slackness, and a very direct undertaking by Prime Minister Kosygin that it would be remedied.

My honourable friend asked what was my question. I asked this question—

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Honourable senators, before Senator Croll tells us the question, I would like him to answer my question.

Hon. Mr. Croll: The question I asked was this:

I am a Canadian, born in Russia in the City of Mogilev. I ask whether there is hope in the foreseeable future of any further relaxation in the provisions governing the emigration of Soviet citizens to other countries.

My question is general, but I am primarily interested in all minority groups within the U.S.S.R. including citizens of Jewish derivation.

As one who retains an affection for Russia, I offer with the utmost good will the widely-held view that such a relaxation would be universally and warmly welcomed and would bring much good will.

I understand that is what this trip is all about.

Hon. Mr. Haig: And what question did he ask you?

Hon. Mr. Croll: He did not ask me any question.

Hon. Mr. Haig: He sure did. He asked you when you were last in Russia, and you replied it was four years ago. He then asked you why you were there, and you said you were there as a parliamentary delegate, to which he replied, "I hope you come back." Why do you not give the whole story?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I started out by saying that this was the question that I asked. I indicated earlier in my speech that I had been to Russia. I said I was there in 1966. I did not think the fact that he asked me when I was in Russia last was important. That was not the context in which the question was asked.

• (2050)

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Did he ask you if you saw any Jewish persecution?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: What did you say?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I did not say anything to him.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Because there was not any.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I did not say that, no.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: You did not say anything because, I say to you, there was not any at that time.

Hon. Mr. Croll: We were there for the purpose of asking a question, and we were limited to that. He took my question and that was the extent to which I was prepared to go. He was our guest at that time.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (de Lanaudière): Honourable senators, I think I shall have to leave the chamber because I cannot depend upon the word of Senator Croll in this matter. I do not know if it is the feeling of all members of the house, but many of us miss Senator Phillips (Rigaud) around here.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Go in peace.

Hon. Mr. Phillips (Prince): But I am still here.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Honourable senators, I drew my question rather carefully, and I felt that I had touched all the bases. I was given a firm reply which was publicized later that day when a similar question was asked by one of the reporters at the press conference. The point I was trying to make was that the Senate had lived up to its traditions as a spokesman for minorities.

Those of us who could take advantage of the opportunity asked the appropriate questions and received, in some cases, prepared answers. For example, the answer to my question was a prepared answer which they had taken some pains to prepare. Moreover, it was made public.

One thing I regretted about the atmosphere of the visit was that suddenly out of nowhere an anti-American feeling seemed to surface. It is true that there was some background to that. The United States had taken some bold, harsh steps to protect its economy. There was Vietnam, the balance of payments, economic blunders, and, generally, they had the same problems with inflation and unemployment as we had. The fact is that the culprits in the main were Japan and Germany but, although we were less culpable, we were treated rather callously. The fact that we were good friends, fine neighbours, and the best customers seemed not to mean very much. People in this country were angered and hurt by the action taken by the President of the United States. Despite that, many of us felt that it would be unwise to retaliate.

[Hon. Mr. Haig.]

Interestingly enough, the United States Congress last week lashed out in anger at that country's foreign aid policy—something we ought not to emulate in our own anger. They were particularly angry with the United Nations in view of the fact that some of the member countries had shown a rather jubilant hatred of the United States on the occasion of its defeat in the historic vote on the admission of the People's Republic of China.

As to our reaction to the American economic posture, our hurt was deep because they are our friends, and because we were somewhat let down when we realized that the President of the United States did not seem to know just who is the best customer of his country. We were surprised that he knew so little about Canada. Nonetheless, I believe the Americans are our friends despite the fact that what they have done is not friendly. I believe also that they will set this matter right at an early opportunity.

In our anxiety to correct the situation, the one thing we cannot afford to do is arouse more anti-Americanism. I say this because we are part of the western world, and our security lies in that context. The Americans will always be closest to us, and no one can replace them.

We are making approaches to the Russians for friendship and peace; for technological and cultural trade. We are also making approaches to the Chinese for friendship and peace, and for trade and cultural involvement. But that is no reason for kicking the shins of our next-door neighbour. As for me, better a peck from the American eagle than a hug from the Russian bear.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Croll: The Prime Minister was the perfect host in returning the warm hospitality extended to him by Premier Kosygin in Moscow. His guest received from him a hearty welcome. Canadian parliamentarians were equally polite and receptive. Moreover, the vast majority of Canadians welcomed the thaw in the so-called cold war that the Kosygin visit betokened. But we must also understand the strong views of a minority of our citizens who feel a personal sense of grievance against the Soviet Union, and we must neither deny nor decry their moral and legal right to dissent and peacefully protest as citizens of a free country. We do not ride roughshod over minority groups in Canada; on the contrary, we value their contributions.

The overriding consideration concerning Premier Kosygin's visit is that it constituted further evidence of improving relations between our two countries. It represented progress, having regard to the interim aim of easing tensions and the ultimate aim of world peace.

Like Senator Cameron, I must congratulate Senator Flynn on his excellent speech. In reference to the General Exchanges Agreement, I agree with his remark that it affords us:

> —the opportunity to perforate the iron curtain, to alleviate fears, to nullify mistrust, to educate and to be educated. Human contact and communication is the best antidote possible to the poison of suspicious chauvinism.

• (2100)

Both the Agreement and the Communiqué printed in the Debates of the Senate of October 26 are practical documents which, hopefully, will bring about closer relations and better understanding between Canada and the U.S.S.R. It is also very encouraging to note that the trip which Prime Minister Trudeau took for the purposes of improving relations with the U.S.S.R. is to be followed by a trip by President Nixon to China and to Russia. It is to be hoped that these also will result in better relations among the three great powers, and a greater hope of genuine world peace.

Honourable senators, this debate, at least until my intervention, has been an excellent one.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, invited by the Government, Chairman Kosygin came to Canada, saw some of our country, our leaders and our people, signed an important agreement and has gone. In some ways, this visit reminds us of Caesar's famous three words when he invaded Britain—veni, vidi, vici. I hope that the third word, vici, will never be fulfilled. Kosygin has left a strong imprint on the minds of Canadians.

In this chamber on October 26, the Leader of the Government, Senator Paul Martin, explained the stand of the Canadian Government vis-à-vis the Canadian-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement of October 20, 1971, and the joint Canadian-Soviet Communiqué of October 26, 1971. As could be expected, Senator Martin was happy with the visit of Chairman Alexei Kosygin.

There is no doubt that the present Canadian Government has embarked on a new course in our foreign policy—closer relations with the communist powers—the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China as well as their satellites and the former satellite, Yugoslavia. Many Canadians are left wondering where this new course is going to lead our country.

Certainly the moves made by Prime Minister Trudeau are bold. Is Canada now a real factor in international relations or is she merely a pawn in the game of international chess? Much as I would like to see Canada an important factor in international affairs, I think we should remember that although we are a large and wealthy country, we are a relatively small nation with many weaknesses and drawbacks.

Prime Minister Trudeau has stated that we have had to learn to live with the United States elephant. Judging the recent moves, does he think that the Canadian beaver will be better off living with the Soviet bear and the Chinese dragon?

My stand with regard to Canadian-Soviet relations is well known in the Senate. Recently I presented my views as reported in the Debates of the Senate on June 3 and June 28. I gave examples of how the Soviet government employed deceit, intrigue and subversion in foreign policy, while ostensibly paying lip-service to the principles of freedom, sovereignty, self-determination and equality of peoples. Most of the treaties made by the Soviet régime have been broken at the expense of the other contracting nations and states. In such a manner and by the use of brute force, Soviet Russia has emerged as the largest colonial empire in the world under a totalitarian system of government propped up by an extensive and efficient ruthless police machine. Kosygin's visit, which required the most intensive and extensive extraordinary security measures, with the co-operation of the Soviet police—the KGB—gave Canadians a taste for a while of the police state, which is the last thing that we want in Canada.

In our own interests, it is only right to remember the boastful proclamation of Kosygin on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the communist Soviet revolution as reported in Pravda, June 20, 1967:

> In the fifty years of her existence the Soviet Union has respected all other nations great as well as small. Every nation is entitled to establish an independent national state of its own. This is one of the basic principles of Soviet policy. Supporting the right of self-determination of nations, the Soviet Union condemns and resolutely opposes the attempts of any power to conduct an aggressive policy and to work for the annexation of foreign countries . . . No country in the world could claim to have solved the nationality problem as successfully as the Soviet Union . . . No nationality in our country is discriminated against.

This declaration in no way deterred Kosygin's government from sending the Red Army together with the forces of its satellite states, which in August 1968 invaded its socialist satellite, Czechoslovakia, where "liberalization" was considered to have gone too far. It was the same case with the uprisings in Hungary in 1956. The Brezhnev doctrine, as applied in Czechoslovakia, was condemned by the Canadian Government at the time.

Consequently, it is extremely important to have the principles of Canadian foreign policy proclaimed very firmly. These can be only such principles as are basic to our way of life and which reflect the course of our history and the spirit of our people. The defence of freedom, democracy, justice, prosperity and honourable peace have been and must always be the cornerstone of Canadian foreign policy. To these principles we must always be dedicated and always be ready to co-operate with those countries which also uphold them.

A considerable proportion of the Canadian population is composed of ethnic groups whose background and heritage stems from countries which have been conquered by Soviet forces and today are behind the Iron Curtain. These people have seen the freedom and democracy of their motherlands destroyed. The Ukrainians, Poles, Byelorussians, Czechs, Slovaks, Russians, Lithuanians, Latvians, Estonians, Hungarians, some Germans, Bulgarians, Roumanians as well as Serbs, Croatians, Slovenes, Macedonians and Jews have settled in Canada to enjoy the freedom, democracy and opportunities which they had been deprived of before they came here. They have helped to build every aspect of Canadian life as loyal citizens. Above all, these ethnic groups cherish the freedom and way of life of Canada, which they would not like to see undermined or even threatened.

During Kosygin's visit in Ottawa, Montreal, Vancouver, Edmonton and Toronto some of the organizations of these ethnic groups took the opportunity to demonstrate peacefully and with permits, for the national, cultural, religious and personal freedoms of their countrymen under the Soviet Russian domination. There were no extreme incidents caused by the organized members. Those that hit the headlines were carried out by individuals, for which the ethnic groups were not responsible. As has been explained by Senator Croll, the demonstrations were one democratic way of conveying their messages to the Soviet Government, the Canadian Government and to the world. Many of the ethnic groups used another method. They approached the Canadian Government, particularly Prime Minister Trudeau, to plead their cases with Chairman Kosygin.

After his return from the U.S.S.R., Prime Minister Trudeau invited the Ukrainians to Ottawa to present their requests. On June 7, the President and other leaders of the Ukrainian Canadian Committee, composed of over 30 organizations, which represents the vast majority of the 600,000 Ukrainian Canadians, presented a memorandum, most of which I put on the record in the Senate in my speech of June 28. The Prime Minister appeared to have apologized for comparing the Ukrainian intellectuals in the Ukraine, who were demanding constitutionally-guaranteed rights, with the revolutionary FLQ, but shrugged off the brief.

The announcement of the visit of Chairman Kosygin to Canada caused the Ukrainian Canadian Committee to write a letter, dated October 5, 1971, to Prime Minister Trudeau. I shall quote the important sections:

> The most urgent issue, as we feel, is to ask the Soviet Government to initiate the revision of long and hard prison terms imposed on Ukrainian priests for exercising their religious duties and those imposed on Ukrainian writers and intellectuals for expressing their free opinions.
> Among the most flagrant cases of recent years is the case of Valentyn Moroz, a Ukrainian historian and writer, who in 1966 was sentenced to five years of hard labour and in 1970, almost immediately after his release, has been again condemned to nine years of prison for his report on conditions in Beria labour camp which he dared to submit to Soviet authorities.
>
> Another case is the imprisonment of the Ukrainian Catholic Archbishop-designate, Msgr. Vasyl Velychkiwsky, for having discharged his ecclesiastical duties at his home, converted into a private chapel.
> In our report addressed to you on March 8, 1971, we mentioned 16 other names of Ukrainian intellectuals who have been reported by the international press as having been imprisoned without legal foundation.

The second important issue was the reunion of families with a request for the revision of Soviet emigration regulations.

The third question was a balanced exchange of Soviet Ukrainian publications and Ukrainian Canadian publications. It was stated that: "Canadian Ukrainian publications are forbidden in Soviet Ukraine to such a degree that Canadian tourists are subject to arrest or deportation for having with them Ukrainian literary works, published in Canada." In exchange for the Soviet consulate operating in Montreal, the Ukrainian Canadian Committee urges the establishment of a general consulate in Kiev "to help Canadian citizens with necessary legal, financial and moral protection in case of emergency". The letter also raised the question of the "free development of the Ukrainian language and culture on Ukraine's own territory" where it is discriminated against in favour of Russian.

The letter closes with a special appeal:

> The questions that we raise are based on principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, of which the Soviet Union is one of the signatories, as well as on the principle of the reciprocity of privileges between Canada and the Soviet Union. Should Mr. Kosygin not be ready or willing to consider these questions, our permanent delegate to the United Nations should be directed to raise these matters before the forum of the present United Nations General Assembly.
> This move may seem, at first view, as being diplomatically undesirable. Yet, it would serve to put the message across in placing before world public opinion the reaction of Canadian people against violations of human rights under the Soviet regime.

All these matters were subsequently raised at the Tenth Ukrainian Canadian Congress, with delegates from all the important Ukrainian centres in Canada, which was held in Winnipeg, October 8 to 11. Prime Minister Trudeau spoke at the banquet where he explained his new policy of multiculturalism to a receptive audience. A group of students staged a four-day hunger strike prior to his arrival to protest the unfair treatment of Ukrainian intellectuals in Ukraine and, with the support of the 700 delegates of the Congress, held a meeting with the Prime Minister. Mr. Trudeau agreed to intercede with Soviet Premier Kosygin on behalf of Valentyn Moroz and other imprisoned Ukrainian writers. This was reported in the daily newspapers.

I considered the issue of cultural, religious and personal freedoms to be of such importance that I would raise these questions with Kosygin should I find an opportunity. Fortunately, it was announced that Premier Kosygin would appear at a joint meeting of the External Affairs Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs on October 20, which was held in camera.

Hon. Mr. Martin: May I ask Senator Yuzyk if it is his intention to put Prime Minister Trudeau's reply on the record?

Hon. Mr. Yuzyk: I do not have the reply, but I would like to see it go into the record. The members were restricted to only one question, with no right of discussion or rebuttal. My question dealt with Valentyn Moroz and the imprisoned Ukrainian intellectuals. Since Kosygin subsequently answered most of these questions at a press conference, I am giving his reply.

• (2120)

As expected, it was that he had never heard of Moroz and the imprisoned writers. He admitted that there was some dissatisfaction with the government in Ukraine, but he was also aware that there was some dissatisfaction with the Government in Canada. He boasted that the Soviet Union has successfully solved her nationality problem. Stating that the U.S.S.R.-Canada Agreement provided for parliamentary exchanges, Kosygin invited me in the first Canadian delegation to familiarize myself with the true state of affairs in his country. Asking me whether I agreed to come, I stated that I agreed, provided I would be assured of free movement.

At this meeting, Dr. Stanley Haidasz of Toronto raised the question of the reunion of families, receiving a favourable reply. Senator David Croll pleaded for the right of the Jews to emigrate from the U.S.S.R. He received a negative reply.

We are too near the event of Kosygin's visit to assess it properly in relation to the effects on Canada and the Soviet Union. If managed wisely, the Canada-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement should benefit both sides. The mixed commission will be in a position to promote and facilitate exchanges on a fair basis and other forms of co-operation in scientific, technical, educational, cultural and other fields in accordance with the laws in force in each of the two countries. The Canadian Government should see that experts who know Canadian needs as well as the Soviet reality should be appointed to the mixed commission, which should screen out Soviet communist propaganda and maintain a reasonable balance in the exchanges.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): I hope the honourable senator will permit me to interrupt. He knows I am a good friend of his. With respect to his statement that the honourable Senator Croll received a negative response with regard to the emigration of Jews from the U.S.S.R. to any other country, I would like to repeat the question I put to Senator Croll. Would you kindly give Mr. Kosygin's exact answer with respect to that problem?

Hon. Mr. Yuzyk: Well, Senator Fournier, I am not in a position to repeat the exact answer given by Mr. Kosygin. I could tell you that his answer was prepared and he read it off. Subsequently at the press conference he repeated the statement, so I think that it can be read in the press.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): If the honourable gentleman would permit me, the mere fact that someone reads the answer is not evidence that he is lying. He might be telling the truth in exactly the way it should be told. I ask the honourable gentleman that before accusing Mr. Kosygin of giving a negative answer he should produce the answer as it was given. If it was written, that is more reason for the honourable gentleman to produce it before this house.

Hon. Mr. Yuzyk: Well, since I do not have his written answer—

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Tomorrow will do.

Hon. Mr. Yuzyk: I think it can be secured. With regard to the matter of the truth as Mr. Kosygin sees it, I do not agree with his version of it. He certainly omitted many things in that answer, which we can deal with a little later, with respect to the real situation in the Soviet Union. However, I wish to deal with my own topic now.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): I will be patient.

Hon. Mr. Yuzyk: The memoranda and letters to Prime Minister Trudeau, who did intercede, and the demonstrations, evoked the promise of Kosygin to ease emigration restrictions for Soviet citizens who wished to joint their families in Canada. Chairman Kosygin is aware of the cases of the imprisoned Ukrainian intellectuals but there is no assurance that the U.S.S.R. will heed the universal declaration of Human Rights, which it signed. It is hoped that Prime Minister Trudeau will keep his pledge and continue to pursue this matter on humanitarian grounds and in keeping with human rights.

There are now guarantees of fairer cultural, educational, scientific, travel and other exchanges which should help to strengthen the ties between the citizens of the respective countries. It was unfortunate that the media made it appear that there was a conflict between the national goals and objectives of Canada and those of the demonstrators and the ethnic groups, when in reality there was none, except perhaps in tactics.

We should bear in mind that there were some beneficial effects of the exchanges between Tito's Yugoslavia and the western countries. As a result Yugoslavia, although still a dictatorship, today is an independent country with a greater degree of democracy and prosperity than the U.S.S.R. and the satellite socialist countries.

Now that the Canadian Government has adopted a similar approach in its relations with the Soviet Union, we must be realistic and hope that the expansion of trade between the two states, the broad exchanges in various fields and increasing tourism will bring about an interdependence, which could lead to liberalization in the Soviet Union and perhaps begin the gradual development of democracy in that country. Perhaps in this way Canada may make a contribution towards the easing of tensions and the prevention of a third world war, which could destroy all mankind. But it is certain that, in the first place, it will require the continuing co-operation and concerted effort of the democratic states of the world who share our ideals.

Contra spem, spero. The price of freedom and democracy is eternal vigilance. In the pursuance of our foreign policy, Canada must never sacrifice the principles of freedom, democracy, honourable peace, justice, progress and prosperity. Otherwise, we stand to lose our precious heritage, which accounts for the dynamic spirit of our Canadian nation.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Grosart, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL HEALTH

THERAPEUTIC ABORTIONS IN CANADA—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, October 12, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Sullivan calling the attention of the Senate to the number of therapeutic abortions performed in Canada in the first six months of 1971.

Hon. Josie D. Quart: Honourable senators, unlike my honourable colleague, Dr. Sullivan, who is both nationally and internationally respected for his professional knowledge and extensive medical research, I do not claim to be an authority on medical matters. I regret that I was not in the house when Senator Sullivan made such a wonderful contribution to the debate. His speech should help convert the unconverted. However, since the abortion issue has been discussed pro and con, I have read countless articles written by experts on medical research, and have received many letters.

At this point, may I say that I respect the viewpoints of persons such as Senator Prowse, who assess differently the moral, religious and medical reasons for lending their support for abortion on demand.

In participating in the debate, I am following the dictates of my conscience and adhering to the principle that I have followed all my life, namely, that of standing up to be counted for what I believe to be right.

Some people would have us believe that abortion is merely a religious issue; others that abortion is essentially a medical problem and one which should therefore be left to doctors. However, Canadians are becoming increasingly aware that the most important reason for opposing abortion is that it destroys innocent human life.

That fact is recognized by many atheists and agnostics, as well as by Jews and Christians, by Protestants as well as Catholics. Yet the promoters of abortion have tried to brush this fact aside as being just a religious issue. In doing so they are using religion as an excuse for avoiding the real issues, for human life is not a religious belief but plain reality.

Not so long ago the theory that abortion was a medical problem was sold to the Canadian Government, and it is the basis of our present abortion law. Our Criminal Code, as amended in 1969, permits abortion for undefined "health" reasons, at the discretion of hospital medical committees. Such committees are free to interpret the word "health" as narrowly or as broadly as they wish, even sufficiently broad to justify abortion on demand.

One doctor who appeared before the parliamentary committee said that health could be stretched to mean happiness and comfort. In effect our present law tells the medical profession, "Doctors, the problem is yours, and we agree that you may do what you like about it."

The parliamentary committee was told of two New York City hospitals within a few blocks of each other, both of which had abortion committees. In one hospital there was one therapeutic abortion per 16,000 normal deliveries. In the other, the rate was 800 times higher, being one abortion for every 20 normal deliveries. Surely no one believes that the different decisions of those two hospital committees were based entirely on objective medical considerations.

When abortion committees work with vague mental health concepts, the scope for moral bias is obvious. Even when hospital committees are faced with clear-cut medical problems, their decisions are still moral ones. In authorizing abortion, they imply that the benefit to the mother is worth the loss of her child, that assuring her a certain degree of health, convenience or comfort is worth the sacrifice of a child's life.

To suppose that abortion is essentially a medical problem is a basic and serious error. No group of doctors, however upright and responsible, should have authority to judge the value of any human life. Therefore, the health provision in our abortion law should be repealed.

Social changes in any nation can bring about progression or regression. For a nation to progress, its laws should be so structured that they preserve justice, truth, and the rights of all human life. Social changes such as abortion on demand will not give to a human being the right to life.

Abortion is no ordinary medical procedure, no matter how we try to excuse it. Abortion is the destruction of unborn human life. That is admitted not only by doctors who oppose abortion but also by those who sanction and perform it.

Of 26 doctors who appeared before the House of Commons committee studying abortion, only one tried to deny that abortion destroys human life. Such arguments were rejected by other medical witnesses. Those doctors, many of them highly qualified specialists, agreed that abortion killed a living human being.

I am sure that many of you have received a circular letter from the Nurses for Life Association, which was formed on March 18, 1971. Knowing the high esteem in which registered nurses are held by honourable senators, I propose using their arguments rather than my own to help plead the cause of the unborn child. I quote from the association's letter as follows:

> Seeing that the offspring of human beings must be human, we, as nurses, must be free to give an equal measure of tender loving care to all humans, regardless of age, in or out of the uterus, race, colour or creed.
> Good ante and post-natal care should be stressed to ensure safe delivery of baby and safeguard the mother's health.
> To regard the fetus as "philosophical" or "potential life" is a lie, as we all know. It is a living, growing, little human.
>
> Development of an individual begins at conception. At this time the human pattern of this development is fixed by the genetic make-up of the fertilized ovum. It is at conception that we receive our humanity. This is a scientific fact.
> The child is a separate, formed body growing inside the womb—a separate, living organism with functioning organs and tissues of its own.
> Birth changes only the baby's environment and the special way it depends on its mother, but it cannot change the baby's essential nature.
>
> Dr. Robert E. Hall of New York's Columbia University is a leading crusader for easy abortion. He wrote in the Saturday Review; "Abortion is a medical issue only because it is the doctor who wields the necessary instrument. He is no better able to judge who qualifies for an abortion than the patient's minister, the patient's lawyer or the patient herself."

• (2140)

> Abortion aimed directly at the fetus is murder. We are being reduced to the status of "professional killers". Man is the highest form of animal life, but his young are the most helpless. Could we deny these helpless children who cannot speak for their own little bodies their chance to live and grow? We who talk of the unmerciful slaughter of seals, the wickedness of killing civilians in Vietnam, how can we condone abortion? How can we measure human life in terms of money or convenience? It might change a few minds if they could see a twenty-week-old, unarmed, innocent baby struggling to survive.

If we fail to give an equal measure of concern for all human life from beginning to end, we are not nursing.

Abortion is murder! This measure defeats its own purpose. It does not guarantee the return of women to society, whole mentally or physically. Abortion is not a sure care measure. Many will get away scot-free—many suffer and even die!

Abortion will not help our sex surmount difficulty. Men suffer little or none of the effects of abortion; and, seeing that the majority of doctors are men, their pockets grow fatter every day. Until women smarten up, men must continue to decide our fate.

The alternative to this gruesome and uncivilized act is to obtain from the government appropriate teaching re birth and venereal disease control. Since 1968 there was ample time to implement these sensible measures which are by far more humane, will put less pressure on the taxpayer's pocket, and cause less frustration, embarrassment and dissatisfaction for some patients and concerned doctors and nurses.

It is often argued that society will not accept illegitimate children. Nowadays we find many one-parent families. The action of parents, married or single, cannot be guaranteed. Therefore, the government should continue to provide home care for children of irresponsible, ill or deceased parents. Proper counselling and supervision should be given the people providing this care to ensure good care and psychological support for them and the children receiving the care. Why? Why? Why has Parliament or the Medical Association not educated the public via T.V. media re human development? Many people do not understand it.

Do you sanction killing a human being because of a temporary, emotional upset? All obstetricians and gynaecologists know of many cases where the mother, be she single or married, has spoken of abortion early in pregnancy, and later on has confessed her gratitude to the physician who has not performed the abortion. On the other hand, we have all seen women who have been troubled, consumed with guilt, and developed significant psychiatric problems following, and because of, abortion. I quote Dr. John L. Grady, Medical Examiner for Florida State Attorney's Office: "I believe it can be stated with certainty that abortion causes more deep-seated guilt, depression and mental illness than it ever cures".

We hear a lot about the risk of suicide among those who threaten such action if their request for abortion is refused. How real is that risk? It isn't. In fact, the suicide rate among pregnant women, be they happy or unhappy about the pregnancy, is one-quarter the rate among non-pregnant women in child-bearing years. An accurate 10-year study was done in England on unwed mothers who requested abortions and were refused. It was found that the suicide rate of this group was less than that of the average population. In contrast, among the first eight deaths of women aborted under the liberal law in the United Kingdom, two were from suicides directly following the abortion. Dr. Milton Halpern, Chief Medical Officer of New York City, states that he can "hardly recall an autopsy on a death by suicide during the last twenty-five years which revealed pregnancy". Abortion to try to prevent the mother committing suicide is a myth. Not only does it kill an innocent human being, it may actually harm the mother, and cause the very loss of life it was out to prevent.

Are there any medical indications for abortion? As an obstetrician and gynaecologist, I know that, if there are any in the second half of the 20th Century, there must indeed be very few. As was stated by Dr. Hefferman at the Congress of the American College of Surgeons: "Anyone who performs a therapeutic abortion is either ignorant of modern methods of treating the complications of pregnancy or is unwilling to take the time to use them."

Abortion is a grave moral issue, and every registered nurse should have the opportunity to vote upon this matter whether she is a member of the R.N.A.O. or not. Miss McLean, Senior Consultant, National Health & Welfare, said that nurses must speak out! We are speaking out!

Canada housed American draft dodgers on moral or religious grounds by the thousands—those who did not want to take part in the Vietnam war. What protection will Canada give its nurses who do not want to war on the helpless unborn—the future of Canada?

We, the 'Nurses for Life', will not be conditioned by society to kill, and we demand the right to legislation, as individuals and taxpayers in a supposedly democratic society, to abstain from this deleterious and mischievous task.

We demand legislation to prevent participation in abortion being mentioned as a condition of employment, or a condition by which a nurse is asked to leave her place of employment.

Measures must be taken now to prevent 'abortion on demand,' which will be certainly used as a means of birth control, and the next downward step in humanity, euthanasia.

Honourable senators, the Nurses for Life Association is now affiliated with the Nurses Chapter of the Alliance for Life Association and the Right to Life Committee, and there are several other committees across Canada whose purpose it is to protect the unborn child.

The letter from the Nurses for Life Association goes on to read:

> The Alliance for Life is a national federation of groups and individuals who believe that all human life—before and after birth—has a right to care and protection. It insists on our special obligation to the weak and helpless, including the unborn. An educational body, one of its main concerns is to promote respect for unborn human life.
> Within the Alliance for Life are men and women with many different occupations, diverse religious backgrounds and political views. Among them are doctors, nurses, lawyers, housewives, social workers, teachers, students, clergymen, office and factory workers. They include Protestants, Catholics, Jews, and members who profess no religious faith; but all subscribe to the following principles:

(1) The right to life is the basic human right, on which all other rights depend.

(2) All human beings have an equal right to life, before and after birth.

• (2150)

(3) Society has a duty to uphold and protect that right.

The Alliance for Life was founded in 1968 by a group of concerned men and women who recognized the push for easier abortion as a threat to human life. Since its founding meeting in Ottawa, the Alliance for Life has spread from coast to coast. Besides its work of education and research, it provides a national voice for those opposed to abortion.

Then, from a legal point of view, I quote a paragraph from the Toronto Life Committee brief which was presented in Toronto to the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada:

From a legal point of view, the unborn child in Canada is clearly recognized as a human person. Canadian law on this point closely follows English law which, since the 18th century, has steadily given more and more protection and recognition to the fetus. In Giddings v. Canadian Northern Railway (1920) the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal held that even though a child was unborn at the time of his father's death, he was nonetheless entitled to receive compensation for the loss of his father. In Montreal Tramways v. Léveillé (1933) the Supreme Court of Canada held that a child deformed through injuries caused to him—while still in the womb was entitled to bring an action in the courts for wrongful injuries.

Furthermore, in Re Charlton (1919), the Manitoba Court of King's Bench held that an unborn child was entitled to participate in a gift left "to all living children".

Since under our law an unborn child is clearly recognized as a person and his property rights are so carefully protected, then it would be highly incongruous that that child's life could be extinguished at the discretion of his mother. Such an anomaly would be less likely to occur if the child's right to life were protected by the constitution.

The law's evolution toward recognizing the intrinsic dignity and value of the unborn has in recent years met with a counter-movement by some who would assert that the rights of the mother supersede that of the child.

There is no denying the great difficulty and strain that is imposed on a woman who is confronted by an unwanted pregnancy. The resulting anxiety and desperation can be traumatic. Those who advocate removing abortion from the Criminal Code argue that the question is one of private morality in which the State has no right to legislate. They argue that a woman has the right to control her own body, and that the decision as to whether she will bear the child that she has conceived is hers and hers alone. The flaw in this argument is that it ignores the scientific fact that human life begins at conception. Not one body but two are involved, and the real question is whether the woman has the right privately to decide to deny life to a separate and distinct human being. It is no more a matter of private morality than is infanticide or other forms of killing.

[Hon. Mrs. Quart.]

Honourable senators, as a member of the Catholic Women's League of Canada, I wish to associate myself with this group of over 100,000 women and to give my full support to the following resolution which was passed at the 51st Annual Convention in Regina last month:

Whereas we have expressed opposition to abortion and

Whereas because of this opposition, we have a responsibility to women with unwanted pregnancies; and

Whereas because of this same opposition, we have a responsibility to those children who are born unwanted by their natural parents.

Therefore be it resolved that we offer moral and material support to those women with unwanted pregnancies . . . both individually and through such organizations as "Birthright", "Voice of the Unborn", "Alliance for Life", etc. and

Be it further resolved that we continue to assist local agencies to ensure that unwanted children are placed in suitable homes.

Whereas the Canadian Bill of Rights specifies the right of the individual "to life, liberty and security of the person . . ." and

Whereas abortion is the taking of human life and so denies the basic right to life, and

Whereas Section 18 of the Omnibus Bill passed in 1969 amending Section 237 of the Criminal Code, does in fact legally allow the taking of the life of the unborn, if the life and health of the mother is in jeopardy.

Therefore be it resolved that we urge the Government of Canada to clarify the Bill of Rights by including the unborn as human beings, ensuring their protection and right to life from conception.

Honourable senators, before concluding I wish to read a few paragraphs from letters I have received from doctors, and one or two from nurses. One quotation is:

14,188 abortions were reported in Canada in the first six months of 1971 under its new liberalized laws.

Suppose the above item had read: "14,188 new-born infants killed immediately upon delivery by physicians because their mothers did not want them". Imagine the public outrage. Simply reduce the age of infants by a few weeks and their destruction becomes a laudable medical service in some quarters and generally tolerated publicly.

I read this paragraph from another doctor:

If the "fetus is a part of its mother's tissue or an extension of it" then after birth it would still be an extension of its mother's tissue and not another individual. Any first-year student in medicine histology is aware of this.

> We are aware that there is very little reverence for life today. This decline in the reverence for life has stimulated the demand for abortion. The suggestion that abortion should be granted on demand is another facet of the decline of the reverence for life.

Another quotation I would like to give is:

> It is society that has fallen apart. People have traded their religious beliefs and substituted drugs for penance, dissent for respect, permissiveness for sacrifice, abortion for self control and discipline.

I would like to read this letter from a nurse. It is dated June 23, 1971:

> According to the Oshawa Times last night a head nurse was demoted to general floor duty with a hundred dollars less per month. She refused to participate in abortions of course. This was reported to be the Henderson's General Hospital in Hamilton, Ontario. Unless we could get legislation, many poor nurses would continue to suffer, often in silence.

• (2200)

I could go on reading from these letters. There are two others:

> Why are nurses shook up over abortion? They, too, would be shook up if they were a part of this inhuman treatment. I doff my hat to the nurses who quit in protest.

That was from a registered nurse. The other reads:

> Why should the poor operating nurse have to be responsible for the disposal of the ruined fetus? If a mother can decide to take life away from her child, yet unborn, throwing the lifeless remains into a furnace should be a snap. Why not let her complete the job she started? Is she to be spared every consequence of her decision?

Honourable senators, I forgot to mention that about a year ago in British Columbia an organization was started called "Voice of the Unborn". It is a non-sectarian non-profit organization and it plans to inform as many Canadians as possible that every unborn child has a given right to life. It is also beginning a "dial for life" telephone service, which will act as a crisis clinic for those women who feel their pregnancies will impose dilemmas and burdens on them beyond their capacity to support.

Gynecologists, scientists and clergy of all faiths will be available for counselling through this service. Volunteers will attempt to persuade those women to carry their child to full term and to obtain professional counselling. They also go out for legal protection for nurses and doctors who refuse to assist at abortion operations on religious or moral grounds.

There is also a group which has a centre for distressed girls. I received a letter from an unwanted child. I have her name. She was very happy to tell me that she was an unwanted child. She was adopted when she was 12 weeks old. She was very happy with her adopted parents. She was well educated and now she is a woman gynecologist and doing everything she can to persuade young people, or older women—probably single ones—to have their baby.

There are many people today who want to adopt children. In New York and Montreal there are long waiting lists. Why deprive these children of the happiness of growing up in an atmosphere of being wanted? Good schemes will avoid murder of a human being.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to take part in this debate, I will declare that this inquiry is considered debated.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN SENATE GALLERY

HONOURABLE NORMAN A. MACKENZIE

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, may I observe at this point that a former senator, the Honourable Norman MacKenzie, has been a very interested observer. He is sitting in the gallery. I do not see any change in his appearance now from when he was last sitting on the floor with us.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Pringle has been substituted for that of Mr. Hogarth on the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada.

NATIONAL HEALTH

THERAPEUTIC ABORTIONS IN CANADA—INQUIRY REINSTATED—ORDER STANDS

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, yesterday evening when Senator Quart had finished her speech on the motion standing in the name of Senator Sullivan, no other speaker arose to follow, and no one moved the adjournment of the debate. Unfortunately, two honourable senators who wished to speak were not in the chamber at the time; another senator was, but was unfamiliar with some aspects of the applicable procedure.

On this account, it seems only fair to those senators that we should agree to have the item reinstated on the Orders of the Day and, if it is so agreed, that it should stand in the name of honourable Senator Heath as follows:

> 12th October—Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Sullivan calling the attention of the Senate to the number of therapeutic abortions performed in Canada in the first six months of 1971.—(Honourable Senator Heath)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, under Rule 46 no notice is required for the revival of an order, or of an item on the Order Paper.

Is it agreed, honourable senators, that this item be reinstated?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF SENATE

Hon. Leopold Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(a), moved:

> That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today and tomorrow, Thursday, November 4, 1971, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA GAZETTE

PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS—QUESTION ANSWERED

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, yesterday Senator Grosart asked me a question regarding three sheets of paper, as he referred to them, which he believed had been received by all honourable members, being extra copies of the Canada Gazette Part II. He inquired why this practice was being pursued in this instance.

My reply is that the issuing of the Canada Gazette, Part II, extras is not a new practice. Extras are issued when it is considered necessary or advisable to acquaint the public of certain statutory orders or regulations before the next regular issue of the Canada Gazette, Part II, is printed.

• (1410)

The measure with regard to the importation of men's and boys' shirts affects the livelihood of a number of importing companies in Canada, and the extras were requested by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to make certain that every Canadian businessman with an interest in the importation of shirts into Canada would be aware of this measure without delay.

NUCLEAR POWER DEVELOPMENT

HEAVY WATER PLANT IN NOVA SCOTIA—QUESTION ANSWERED

Hon. Paul Martin: Senator Manning yesterday asked me a question regarding the appropriation for the heavy water plant in Nova Scotia. He wanted to know if the report was correct and what would be the total amount of federal investment in the project. In reply, there is no direct federal investment in the project now. The estimated cost to date of $120 million, including interest, is all Nova Scotia money.

The $95 million referred to by Senator Manning is in the form of a loan to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, which will acquire a leasehold interest in the Glace Bay plant and will assume full responsibility for its reconstruction and eventual operation. The necessary funds will be loaned by the federal Government to AECL, to be repaid with interest out of sales of heavy water once the plant is in operation. The lease of the plant to AECL will terminate upon completion of that repayment.

Senator Lang also asked me a question yesterday. I am sorry, but I am not yet in a position to reply.

CANADA-U.S.S.R. GENERAL EXCHANGES AGREEMENT AND CANADIAN-SOVIET COMMUNIQUÉ—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Martin, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the Canada-USSR General Exchanges

Agreement, done at Ottawa October 20, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, October 20, 1971, and to the Canadian-Soviet Communiqué, dated October 26, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, October 26, 1971.—(Honourable Senator Grosart).

Hon. Allister Grosart: I have reason to believe that the honourable Senator Lang, who is listed to speak on Order of the Day No. 3, has a particular reason for wishing to speak immediately. I would therefore ask leave of the Senate, notwithstanding Rule 21, that the order in my name stand until immediately after Senator Lang has spoken.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, October 19, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Desruisseaux calling the attention of the Senate to some aspects of the economic climate.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: May I express my appreciation to my colleague, Senator Grosart, for deferring at this time in order to meet my request. It is the kind of co-operation that I can always expect from him.

I should like, on behalf of all honourable senators, to thank Senator Desruisseaux for introducing this inquiry several weeks ago, calling the attention of the Senate to some aspects of the present economic climate. Certainly nothing is more topical at this moment than the widespread concern felt throughout the country about the economic situation in which we find ourselves, indeed, not only ourselves but also our neighbours to the south and practically all of the Western world.

In his address on October 19, Senator Desruisseaux exhibited his usual appreciation and grasp of his subject. He very ably summarized the background and events that led up to President Nixon's recent decisions, which have caused such widespread reverberations in this country and around the world. Senator Desruisseaux emphasized the importance to the Western world of the United States regaining its economic health as quickly as possible, and particularly how important that fact is to us, being so dependent upon our exports to that country. Senator Desruisseaux warned us of the dangers of a universal depression which hangs over the world today. He warned us particularly of the dangers inherent in the loss of confidence in the Government now being felt by more and more Canadians. Let me read from what the senator said on October 19:

> Our Government is losing the confidence of Canadians—and I believe I have listed some good reasons for that. Our Government, and the political parties, should immediately pull back from their continuous attempts to force the private sector to meet the political and social objectives of governments. The function of the private sector is to generate growth with its accompanying employment. Attempts to make it a vehicle for political ambitions will, in the end, destroy it.

Those are strong words, but with the sentiment of those words I concur. I assume, as I am sure Senator Desruisseaux does—and I hope we do not do so incorrectly—that it is not the intention of the Government to destroy the private sector but to encourage it and to make it flourish.

This afternoon I should like to deal briefly with what I consider to be certain of the specifics underlying the thesis expounded by Senator Desruisseaux. Last June, in our debate on the state of Canada-United States relations introduced in this place by Senator Manning, I dealt with some of the matters that are relevant to this subject. I particularly dealt with what I considered to be the negative and somewhat self-defeating way we tend to engross ourselves in a form of Canadian economic nationalism. Interestingly enough, what I was saying last June is summed up by that eminent author and journalist Bruce Hutchison in a column just this week in the Toronto Globe and Mail. In that column Mr. Hutchison says:

> Any Canadian who ventures to question the manners of his government is widely accused of being soft on Americanism, nowadays an offence almost as inexcusable as being soft on communism. Any man who sees faults in his own country will be suspect of selling it out. Any man who thinks that Canada must get along with the United States (for reasons far more important than economics) will be charged with un-Canadianism because he sees no hope in anti-Americanism.

• (1420)

Honourable senators, on August 15 last, with one stroke of the pen, President Nixon accomplished what some of our most devoted economic nationalists have been attempting to accomplish for quite a few years. He has made the tax climate for United States business at home so much more hospitable that today foreign branch plants and subsidiary companies of United States parents are beginning to shut down their operations across Canada and indeed elsewhere in the world and move home. President Nixon has accomplished this by bringing in the now famous surcharge, by introducing a system of investment tax credits and, if approved by Congress, through the DISC program.

There has been a rather significant and pregnant silence from certain quarters in Canada today, subsequent to this development.

Furthermore, and I think quite properly so, the Government is delaying the tabling of what is now referred to as the Gray Report on Foreign Ownership in Canada.

Honourable senators, permit me for a few moments to review briefly the recent developments. It would appear that our Government failed to foresee, or foresee adequately—as I believe did most other governments in the Western world—the United States moves of last August. It should have been apparent that steps like these were bound to be taken by the United States. It should have been apparent from the balance of payments figures of the United States, as they were developing over the last year, and from those figures alone.

However, these moves seemed to have come as a major and unexpected shock. To its credit, our Government reacted, reacted strongly—hopefully, not too late—and if this is the case we can assume that we are now at least at a position of dead centre and will be able to swing back in the correct direction, particularly if the programs now being brought forth are skillfully administered from Ottawa.

We now have the special employment plan of $80 million, the local incentive program of $100 million, the Canadian manpower job-training program of $20 million, and the supplementary manpower program of a further $15 million. We have the income tax reductions of 3 per cent for individuals and 7 per cent for corporations, retroactive to June of this year and carrying through next year. And we are now looking toward a budget containing a massive $1 billion deficit.

It should be pointed out that we have met with a most unfortunate confluence of events during these past six months. First, we had the Government's untimely preoccupation with inflation. The Government's effort in that regard, although not known to be doing so, was in fact pressing down on an already declining economy, with concomitant rising unemployment. That decline was not purely a Canadian phenomenon, of course; it was a worldwide phenomenon, a phenomenon even more self-evident in countries other than Canada. That decline, now being pushed by government anti-inflation measures, was then greatly accelerated—this time by the United States moves of last August.

Honourable senators, one further and most serious coincidence for Canada was the fact that while all those adverse forces were converging to bear at more or less the same time, and for other reasons not related to these forces, the business and industrial segments of our country were rapidly losing confidence in the Government. I do not need to remind honourable senators that that confidence per se is the keystone to our economic survival.

I think I should detail why I believe the private sector was and is labouring under this lack of confidence. There are probably many reasons, but I will mention but a few here which appear to me to be paramount.

First, there is a widespread and, I would even go so far as to say, almost unanimous view that the Government—and I will not confine this to our federal Government but apply it to many of the provincial governments—does not understand the private sector and, what is worse, does not really care about it.

Many private sector groups feel that those in influence and in power, whether in cabinet or in parliament, listen to them but do not hear, and that few if any persons either in the executive or in parliament today have ever had, as C. D. Howe once said, the responsibility of having "to meet a payroll".

Secondly, I believe the private sector is uncertain of and fearful over the widening administrative powers now being continually and increasingly vested in the bureaucracy of our public service. I am afraid that many in the private sector regard this bureaucracy as aloof, intransigent, doctrinaire and often hostile. They are leery of the bureaucratic impedimenta of such laws as our packaging and labelling legislation. The desirable objects of the proposed Competition Bill and the Canada Labour Code are diminished in the eyes of many businessmen today who primarily see the former as emasculation of business competitiveness at a time when it must compete as never before. Similarly, the private sector sees in the proposed Canada Labour Code an almost complete block to the rapid technological changes that must come about in our industry today if it is to remain competitive. It sees also that failure to meet these rapid technological challenges as they are thrust upon us can only result in loss of business and higher unemployment.

Honourable senators, I submit, thirdly, that the private sector today is also greatly concerned over the economic consequences which could flow from our shifting government foreign policy. Our traditional European trade patterns and Commonwealth preferential systems are obviously on the line right now with the strengthening of the European trading blocs and the entry of the United Kingdom into the European Common Market.

The Japanese and other Pacific rim countries do not at the moment offer us an adequate alternative to our traditional trade patterns. Talk of increased trade with the Soviet Union is ephemeral, and I think it is widely felt and/or recognized that the resources of that great country are competitive with rather than complementary to our own. And, in fact, we would have to accept in the final analysis unconvertible rubles in payment. It is generally considered that to warrant putting a major thrust into the development of trade with the Soviet Union we would have to be in very dire straits and bereft to a stringent degree of our normal markets.

In connection with our foreign policy, more particularly as it impinges on the United States, there is a strong feeling today that, to put it charitably, the Government has been careless and inconsistent in its relations with the United States and, as a result, it now finds itself in a poor posture for dealing with them, particularly today when that government is under severe pressures of its own.

As a footnote to this I would add that the timing of Premier Kosygin's visit, falling as it did in the present economic crisis, may be somewhat less than fortuitous. I think so, particularly in view of his audacity in teeing off at the United States as he did at the Rideau Club two weeks ago. I certainly have too much respect for Premier Kosygin's intelligence to think that he did not know what he was doing. He undoubtedly did know, and it was an overt attempt to drive a further wedge between Ottawa and Washington. Honourable senators, with friends like that, who needs enemies?

Fourthly, and finally, I wish to mention the tax reform bill and its effect to date on the confidence that the private sector has in the Government of Canada. Ten years of Carter, White Papers, and now this tax reform bill. I suggest, honourable senators, I would be hard put to think of any other sequence of events that would be more likely to undermine the confidence of any business community.

Just to illustrate, let me quote at random a few headlines which appeared in the Toronto newspapers last week: "Bill C-259 appals Petroleum Association"; "Market falls to lowest level in 15 months"; "Tax bill's international aspects called overkill"; "Manitoba Premier releases information projecting an even worse unemployment situation in the winter of 1972-73 than the one upcoming"; and "Multi-national companies to pull out of Canada because of Tax Reform bill".

Notwithstanding this, the Minister of Finance insists, despite the pleas of the Prime Minister of Quebec in the last few days, that this bill must go through before the end of the year. Honourable senators, I suggest that that may very well be the case and it may very well be the case notwithstanding the fact that the best tax lawyers and chartered accountants in Canada openly confess they cannot understand the meaning of many sections of the bill. It will also be passed, although the provincial authorities are unable to understand its effects on provincial economies and provincial tax revenues. I think that this bill will go through although the Minister of Finance has already submitted a hundred amendments in the other place and has now introduced 40 pages of further amendments and amendments amending the amendments.

I do not think that in the history of legislation in Canada we have ever been faced with such a situation, a technocratic and bureaucratic foofaraw over legislation that will affect every business, commercial and industrial activity and every citizen in this country.

I submit further that this Tax Reform bill basically fails in understanding of the complexities of the operations of our large domestic and international corporations in Canada today. It is based on simplistic concepts which, if they are not 10 or 20 years out of date are even more so.

Companies and trusts now located in Canada who can carry on as well elsewhere are now preparing to locate outside the country. This bill in its foreign affiliate provisions is the complete reverse of U.S. policy and its DISC program. Our businessmen are expected to compete abroad against their American counterparts who will enjoy, literally, full tax exemptions under their policy and that program; ours are to pay full tax on all foreign operations, whether earnings are repatriated to Canada or not.

I submit that, if ever, some parts of this bill may have been valid in Canada in 1959 and 1960. In the changing economic picture in which we find ourselves today I suggest to you that its basic premises and concepts are an anachronism. This is a time when we must travel light and fast and be flexible, whereas our businessmen are now to be encumbered, burdened and hobbled with this piece of incomprehensible legislation. Honourable senators, rather than be entirely negative, may I suggest what I would do. In our present circumstances I would first call a halt or a slowdown in our overly ambitious schemes, such as those under the proposed Competition and Labour acts. Secondly, I would slow down and delay implementation of the business taxation sections of the tax reform bill until the end of next year. Thirdly, I would reject outright the international approach contained in the legislation, for reasons that I have mentioned. Fourthly, I would try to develop a positive incentive for Canadian owner-operators through re-investment roll-over rules as part of a new capital gains tax system.

• (1440)

In conclusion, may I say something that I consider to be very important. The strength of Confederation depends in very large measure on the strength of the Canadian economy. I do not need to labour that point, for honourable senators are familiar with the situation, particularly as it exists in Quebec. As our Confederation is dependent upon the strength of our economy, so, in turn, the strength of our economy is in the largest measure dependent on the confidence which the private sector has in the federal Government.

I hope we may now see—and I say this very sincerely—a rapid return to that condition of mutual respect and confidence between business, industry and government—that condition which is so basic to our unity and continued progress at this point in our history.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Langlois, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Martin, calling the attention of the Senate to the Canada-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement, done at Ottawa, October 20, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, October 20, 1971, and to the Canada-Soviet Communiqué, dated October 26, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, October 26, 1971.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, to date we have had a very interesting and instructive debate on the inquiry of the Leader of the Government calling the attention of the Senate to the General Exchanges Agreement between Canada and the U.S.S.R., and the Communiqué issued on October 26, documents that appeared in our proceedings on that date.

The debate has made it clear, as it has been clear to many outside this chamber, that the events leading up to the issuing of the Communiqué—namely, the visit to Canada of the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R.—have been received by Canadians with mixed feelings. This applies not only to Canadians who have personal connections in other countries or with other peoples in Europe but, as indicated in the debate, it has been received with mixed feelings by honourable senators, by members of Parliament, and by many other Canadians.

It is my observation that the mixed reaction is observable not merely between different groups, but also in the response which we make individually to important and complex questions such as those which arose from the visit of Premier Kosygin.

I am one of those who finds himself with these mixed feelings. I will not deny for one moment that visits such as this, and also the one today, of executive heads of state, meeting from time to time in each other's country, has a potential of great benefit for the countries concerned and for the world at large. I agree that it is most important that executive heads of state, as they meet on such occasions, should exchange views, conclude useful agreements, and even issue communiqués, no matter if they are as unrealistic as the one issued on this occasion.

In general, the criteria for the effectiveness of such meetings have been met generally in the circumstances surrounding the visit of Premier Kosygin. I know, for example, of one Canadian M.P., for whom I have the greatest respect and who travelled constantly with Premier Kosygin, who found himself developing a genuine affection for him as a man. I do not, of course, deny him that privilege, or question his judgment. That is one side of the mixed feelings to which I have referred.

The other side I find less pleasant and, indeed, it is less pleasant to discuss. It is in relation to recent Canadian history. However, I feel it is my duty to bring it to the attention of honourable senators.

I should repeat that it is unpleasant not merely because of the overt dissidents who made clear their particular reactions to the visit. It is also important to say that there are many others who would not feel there is wisdom in regarding the visit as an unqualified success, that the protests were without considerable justification, or that they were devoid of usefulness and effectiveness to Canada, the U.S.S.R., and particularly to those fellow human beings who remain involuntarily behind the Iron Curtain. I say that whether they be Jew or Gentile, Moslem or Buddhist; whether their skin be white, black, brown or yellow; whether they be peasants, factory workers, intellectuals, or professionals. I do not condone violence, either personal or collective. I do not condone illegal demonstrations.

Fortunately, in this particular case, while there was one disgraceful incident, the protests by and large were made by responsible groups. They were organized in a responsible manner. The protests may have been loud. One honourable senator objected to that. They may have been noisy, and that was also objected to. They may have been rude, as I think they were on occasion. But I have some doubts whether those of us who do not have emotional involvement with some of those who were protesting have much right to blame them for giving vein to their emotions, tied as they are by family and relations, the fate of friends, and memories of the knock on the door at midnight. Surely we can withhold judgment on those people if, confronted with a situation such as the visit of Premier Kosygin, they violate some of the canons of respectability which we, in normal circumstances, find so easy to observe.

I suggest that these demonstrations have done a lot of good. They will certainly do a lot of good if the Premier carries back to the U.S.S.R. a wider knowledge of the spectrum of Canadian feelings about the treatment of human beings anywhere in the world, which he had an abundant opportunity to observe while he was here. It will be a good thing if from these demonstrations—and it would be hard to see how else he could carry back this impression—he carries back the impression and knowledge that there are people in Canada, some of whom have lived here all their lives and have no family background of oppression anywhere, and others who have not always lived here and have such backgrounds, who are concerned about the essential freedoms and liberties, and who believe in the rule of law enshrined in the Declaration of Human Rights of the United Nations, and observed by and large by most countries of the free world. I hope he will carry back the knowledge that there are Canadians who have escaped from the rigours—which is the mildest word I can use—of the totalitarian police state, who know what they have escaped from, and who have compassion for their friends, relatives and others whom they do not know, who have not had the opportunity to escape.

Premier Kosygin, of course, dismissed these protests in his own country, and we heard him on several occasions refer to the protesters as self-interested agitators, people of no consequence. It is not for me to say a head of state was deliberately stating an untruth, but I would be very surprised if Premier Kosygin was not aware that there were people protesting in the U.S.S.R., and imprisoned for so doing whom we would welcome in this chamber for their qualities of intellect and concern for others.

An important aspect of these demonstrations is that they were not self-interested. They were other-people-interested. That is one of the things that most people believe is the product of a grounding in the principles of democracy, which we have been fortunate to have. I think we should take off our hats to those people who expressed, at the proper time and place and when they had the opportunity, some part of the Canadian concept of democracy—an opportunity others of us had but did not take, of whom I was one.

It is interesting to note that some of the matters not in the communiqué were matters raised by senators. It so happens that of the three senators who asked questions I was the only one who received an adequate answer then or at any other time. I am rather ashamed of that because it was an innocuous question. I asked a question in connection with the projected European security conference. It was an easy one to answer. Other questions, which were not easy to answer, do not appear; there is no reference to their subject matter in the communiqué.

Turning to the subject of the two documents before us, I have not much to say about the General Exchanges Agreement. Senator Lang asked the Leader of the Government to table one of three agreements that are deemed to be annexed to this agreement, namely, the one between the CBC and the State Committee of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. on Television and Radio Broadcasting. However, there are two others—one between the National Research Council of Canada and the U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences, and another between AECL and the U.S.S.R. State Committee on the Uses of Atomic Energy. If the Leader of the Government is tabling the document referred to by Senator Lang and having it annexed to our proceedings, I would ask that he include these other two documents respecting the National Research Council and AECL, about which I have some curiosity.

I have rather more to say about the other document which is headed "Canadian-Soviet Communiqué". First of all, I point out that this refers to an agreement or an understanding between governments; not between peoples. The Leader of the Government is well aware of the stand I have taken over the years about this type of agreement. I know the answers he has given me, and will no doubt give me again, and I always appreciate his constitutional lecture on the status of the Crown prerogative in respect of treaties and agreements. I say to him again that in my view it is an archaic concept, which is doing a great deal of harm to Canada and to the world at large. I refer to the concept that governments can make agreements, can sign them, without any prior consultation with Parliament and without even general approval in advance from Parliament, and that they are under no requirement even to submit them to Parliament unless they wish to do so. Yet these are government to government agreements.

The Government Leader was good enough to table this particular communiqué. I do not know what the intention of the Government is in respect of it. I would be interested to know if the Government is going to ask for ratification. Again, the leader will give me a lecture on the particular types of treaties that require ratification, and those that do not. I am not interested in those particular aspects; I am interested in the principle. Does this document stand only as an agreement between "the two sides"? That is the phrase used throughout. It sounds like a hockey game. On one side there is Canada: Trudeau, Martin, Sharp, Pepin, Chrétien, Davis, Jamieson, Ford and Danson, and on the other side for the U.S.S.R. there is Kosygin, Dzhavakhishvili, Guzhenko, Kozyrev, Mishnik, Miroshnichenko and Lunkov. It is interesting to note that the Canadian side has an advantage in the numbers of players. That is probably why it occurred to me that it has some relevance to a possible hockey game between two teams.

• (1500)

Honourable senators, I am concerned very much as to what has been left out of this communiqué. I am concerned as to whether there are any secret agreements or understandings, and as to whether there are things that we, as parliamentarians, are not told, and things that we are not going to be told.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I can assure you there are no secret agreements.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I am glad to accept the word of the Leader of the Government for that, but he will not object if I recall that, on much the same subject, I asked him in April last whether there was a secret understanding in Stockholm that Canada, as part of the undertaking to recognize the People's Republic of China, would also undertake to approve the expulsion of Taiwan. At that time, the Leader of the Government said here he would take that as notice and reply. He has never replied.

Hon. Mr. Martin: May I intervene? Canada never moved to expel Taiwan from the United Nations, if that is the implication of what my honourable friend has said. Canada simply voted that that question was not an important question within the meaning of the rules of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: That is one of the most extraordinary statements I have heard from the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Why is it extraordinary? If my honourable friend says it is extraordinary, he leads me to conclude that he does not understand what was involved in this matter—and I cannot believe that that is the situation.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I hope I understand, but my understanding would never match that of the Leader of the Government. I say that in no rhetorical sense; he has had long experience. The resolution to which Canada assented called for the expulsion forthwith of Taiwan. That is the wording of the Albanian resolution, and I shall be glad to read it to the Leader of the Government:

> The General Assembly recalling the principles of the charter of the United Nations—

And I do not know what principles they were recalling, as I will indicate in a minute.

> —considering that the restoration of the lawful rights of the People's Republic of China—

I do not know what is meant by "lawful rights".

> —is essential both for the protection of the charter of the United Nations and for the cause that the United Nations must serve under the charter, recognizing that the representatives of the government of the People's Republic of China are the only lawful representatives of China to the United Nations and that the People's Republic of China is one of the five permanent members of the Security Council—

With all of which I agree, except the suggestion that they had some lawful right to be there.

> —and that it is time to restore all its rights to the People's Republic of China and to recognize the representatives of its government as the only legitimate representatives of China to the United Nations and to expel forthwith the representatives of Chiang Kai-shek from the place which they unlawfully occupied in the United Nations and in all the organizations affiliated with them.

It is proper to comment, perhaps, that I find it surprising that the Canadians, with knowledge of the rules of decency and fairness, would vote for such a resolution, when the Charter of the United Nations does not provide for the expulsion of a nation without cause.

I should say at this time that I am not here objecting to the decision to admit the People's Republic of China to the United Nations, or to award that country the seat in the Security Council which was formerly occupied by the Republic of China.

To simplify matters, because the terms are so closely connected, I will refer to "mainland China" and to "Taiwan", without any suggestion that their claims to be the People's Republic of China or the Republic of China are being arbitrated by me at this time.

What happened? The communiqué deals with interesting subjects. It has something to say about the Middle East, Pakistan and India, and the European Security Council, Indochina, and China. The document refers to the "sides", and I do not know whether it means the governments or just the "sides", because there seems to be a difficulty of definition here. When you get these two teams lined up, the two captains are left out. I do not know who the sides are, but there is this sentence:

> The sides are in favour of the restoration of the legitimate rights of the People's Republic of China as the sole representative of China in the United Nations.

Apart from the use of the word "lawful"—which I do not understand in that context—I have no objection up to that point. But what the communiqué does not tell the Canadian Parliament and people or the world is that they have agreed to vote to expel forthwith a nation of 14 million people, which had an unblemished record in the United Nations. It does not say that Canada voted with the Soviet bloc against the American resolution—

Hon. Mr. Martin: Nor does it say that Canada voted with Britain.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: —and against almost every nation, large or small, in the China Sea area, including Australia, New Zealand and Japan, all of whom voted the other way. We voted with the solid red bloc. I am not saying there is anything wrong in that; there may be times when the red bloc is right, as the honourable Leader of the Government points out.

• (1510)

Hon. Mr. Martin: I wonder if I—

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Let me finish, if you will.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Very well.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I want to say that the vote was 59-54. It was a close vote. However, the decision was taken by a majority, and naturally on the majority side were countries such as Britain and many others which are our friends whom we respect.

Perhaps the Government Leader will make his objection now.

Hon. Mr. Martin: It is not an objection. My honourable friend said that Canada voted for the solid red bloc.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I did not say for the solid red bloc; I said "with".

Hon. Mr. Martin: Yes. Surely that is a misleading statement. Canada voted with many countries, including countries which are communist. However, the vast majority of those which supported the position that Canada took were not communist countries. The impression that my honourable friend leaves by that statement—and, I suspect, he wanted it to go far and wide—is that Canada was lined up only with communist countries. Now, that is a misleading statement.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Honourable senators, I do not know where we stand on the rules of parliamentary procedure. The Leader of the Government is going rather far when he says it was a misleading statement—

Hon. Mr. Martin: It is.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: —because when he reads the proceedings he will find that I said immediately that I can understand Canada being aligned with the Soviet bloc on certain matters. I made that very clear. In fact, I would ask the Leader of the Government to withdraw his statement that I made a misleading statement, and his implication that I did so with the intention of having it go far and wide. I can assure the Leader of the Government that I am discussing this matter as objectively as I can, as a Canadian, and I resent the implication.

I will give him the opportunity, if he wishes, to withdraw.

[Hon. Mr. Grosart.]

Hon. Mr. Martin: If the honourable senator says he did not intend his statement to go far and wide, then under the rules I have no option but to accept that, and I readily do so. However, I cannot withdraw a statement of fact, namely, that the statement is misleading.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I did not expect a withdrawal, but perhaps when the Leader of the Government reads Hansard he will find that his statement accusing me may itself be misleading. He is a very generous man, and I will give him the opportunity to reflect on it. I will say no more at the moment because as I go on it may well be that I shall raise his ire considerably more than I have done so far by indicating the role he played in giving an assurance to the people of Taiwan that Canada would not vote for their expulsion. I am sure he knows to what I refer.

I was speaking of facts which the communiqué does not mention. The communiqué does not mention that this is the first time that a nation—a small nation it is true—in good standing was forthwith expelled to accommodate the wishes of a very large nation, which was itself at the time and still is the subject of a resolution of the United Nations branding it as an aggressor.

It does not mention that the independence of Taiwan was guaranteed by the United States and, perhaps by implication, by Canada because that came about at the time of the Korean war and was part of the broad strategy of that war, in which a Canadian division was engaged with great distinction. So we can say that the guarantee of the independence of Taiwan has a background of Canadian participation.

The communiqué does not say, in spite of our previous assertions of our undying belief in the principle of universality in connection with membership in the United Nations, that we have now abandoned this; we do not believe this any more. It does not say we believed it until the crunch came; that when the crunch came we forgot all our assurances in the United Nations and elsewhere, including assurances by the present Prime Minister of Canada, that we would hold to the principle of universality. I would be glad to give the Leader of the Government, if he wishes, the citation for that, because I have it here.

The communiqué does not say that we have banished a nation of 12 million or 14 million people to the outer darkness in perpetuity. The seating of mainland China in the Security Council means they have a veto on the admission of any new nation. There are 131 nations in the United Nations. As the Leader of the Government said very eloquently on one occasion—and I will recall it word for word in a moment—this important little nation had a larger population than two-thirds of the members of the United Nations. That is a very good reason for not taking the action which we have so recently approved. Therefore it is very doubtful if these 14 million people can or will ever again join the community of nations as represented by the United Nations. I would be very surprised, having in mind the attitude of the government of the People's Republic of China to Taiwan, if they ever voted for the admission of Taiwan, whether Chiang Kai-shek is there or not, in view of their claim that it is one of the 21 provinces, which I believe is the current count. What hope does this country of 12 million or 14 million people, forthwith expelled from the community of nations for the first time in history, a founding member with no blemish, ever have of joining the community of nations?

As a Canadian I am ashamed that we took part in this abandonment of these people. I hold no brief for Chiang Kai-shek—none whatsoever. I know his record and background. I have no brief for the two million followers and supporters of Chiang Kai-shek who, discredited and dispirited, left the mainland and took refuge in Formosa. I have respect for the right of self-determination of the 12 million indigenous people who are not by any means all Chinese—certainly not by any means all Han Chinese in the modern sense—who have a long history of independence and co-operation with other countries. However, that is not a question which I wish to argue. I merely say that they have been abandoned, and abandoned by Canada. The communiqué does not tell us that Canada went back on her assurances, that Canada broke its word.

• (1520)

I know of no better case to be made for a "rational" treatment of these millions of people, than that made by the distinguished Leader of the Government when speaking in the United Nations in 1966. In one of his most eloquent speeches, and he made many—we must keep in mind what has happened in the last few days—the Leader of the Government referred to two options, and then said:

> The other option also asks us to close our eyes to a part of the reality of the Chinese situation.

He was speaking of the option to insist on the expulsion of Taiwan. He went on:

> It would have us do so by extinguishing for all practical purposes the international personality of a government which controls the destiny of some 12 million people, a greater population than that of three-fifths of the member states of this organization.

That was Senator Martin speaking on November 23, 1966 at the United Nations:

> That is why these options have not carried us forward. They do not take account of fundamental changes which have occurred in China since the UN was established. They do not point to a rational solution of the problem. They do not point to a solution which is in accord with that common interest which should be the basis of a world organization.

Further on he said:

> We also have before us once again the proposal of the Albanian Delegation and other co-sponsors. The intent of this proposal—

He was coming back to his early remarks:

> —is to seat the representatives of the People's Republic of China in the UN. With this we are in full accord, but the resolution embodying this proposal goes on to stipulate that this be done by expelling the representatives of the Republic of China. The Canadian position on this resolution has been that two wrongs do not make a right.

I suggest to honourable senators that that applies every bit as much now as it did then. Two wrongs do not make a right.

Speaking for Canada, the Leader of the Government said:

> We can see neither sense nor justice in the United Nations General Assembly denying to the Government of the Republic of China the right and responsibilities of UN membership or in withholding from its people the benefits of international co-operation. If we are to seek a rational and realistic answer to this problem before us, I cannot see that such an answer is to be found in terms of the Albanian resolution.

And that resolution was almost identical to the one we voted for recently.

Hon. Mr. Martin: No, it was not. At that time Taiwan, in the view of the Canadian Government, was the Republic of China. Since that time the Canadian Government has recognized the government of the mainland as being the Republic of China. There cannot be two Republics of China.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: It is essentially the same situation. Later on in the same speech, Senator Martin dealt with the whole question of two Chinas. It certainly was not necessary, if Canada or anyone else was seeking a rational solution, to insist that Taiwan be seated in the Assembly as the Republic of China. However, I will deal with that a little later. Senator Martin went on:

> It was with these practical requirements in mind that the Canadian Delegation, in the course of the consultations we have held, suggested the following guidelines as a basis for a reasonable interim solution:
> First, the participation of the Republic of China—

That is, Taiwan.

> —in the UN General Assembly as member representing the territory over which it exercises effective jurisdiction;—

That is something that has not changed a bit since.

> —second, the participation of the People's Republic of China in the United Nations General Assembly as member representing the territory over which it exercises effective jurisdiction; > third, the participation of the People's Republic of China in the Security Council as a permanent member.

Yet the Government Leader now rises and says that it was different; "We were not talking about two Chinas."

Hon. Mr. Martin: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: He gives the answer here himself, that the Government was prepared to accept two Chinas.

Hon. Mr. Martin: No, never.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: The language could not be clearer. The Leader of the Government says no. Let me read it again.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Yes, please do so.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: It reads:

> I want to make it clear at this point that the solution we envisage is in no way intended to imply the existence of two Chinas.

The proposal was that the Republic of China be admitted to the General Assembly as the Republic of China, and that the People's Republic of China be seated in the Security Council. If that is not accepting a two-China policy, then what is? The proposal was: We will have two Chinas, one called the People's Republic of China, and the other called the Republic of China. If that is not a clear statement of a two-China policy, I do not know what is. The Leader of the Government, then Secretary of State for External Affairs, said:

> Some 11 years ago my Delegation was instrumental in helping to break the deadlock which then debarred a substantial number of states from being admitted to membership in the UN. The action we took at that time was prompted by our concern—

Hon. Mr. Martin: I am not laughing at you.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I am sure you are not.

Hon. Mr. Croll: He was laughing at me. He said that I too did not understand it, because I agreed with you.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: The Leader of the Government never laughs at the wrong time. He continued:

> The action that we took at that time was prompted by our concern for the principle of universality which was so eloquently commended to us in the memorable address given in this Assembly last year by His Holiness Pope Paul VI. In his words: "Once more we repeat our wish for you: 'Go forward.' We shall say more: 'Strive to bring back among you any who may have left you; consider means of calling into your pact of brotherhood in honour and loyalty those who do not yet share in it. Act so that those still outside will desire and deserve the confidence of all; and then be generous in granting it'."

That represents a considerable change of viewpoint over the years. The Taiwanese are looking to the time when there will be a plebiscite, when they will have the right of self-determination about which we talk so much. I would not blame any Taiwanese who looked back and said, "Why didn't Canada keep its word? Why did she give us those assurances if she had no intention of following them through? Why did she abandon us to accommodate our rivals?"

That was in 1966. Let us go on to the next year. I shall now read a paragraph from the Canadian Annual Review only because it has specific quotations:

> On May 3 the Prime Minister was asked in the House about his statement of two days before to the World's Veterans' Federation in Toronto that Canada's position was that UN membership should be universal. He replied that he had not said anything new on this question, but admitted that he had discussed the question of Chinese membership in the UN with Mr. Arthur Goldberg on May 16. On July 11 Mr. Nesbitt asked whether the government had decided on its position regarding the seating of Communist China in the next session of the General Assembly. The Prime Minister replied: "No."

• (1530)

This is the Canadian Annual Review comment:

> However, the Government perceptibly shifted on this question on August 26 when Mr. Martin said in Banff that "we consider that the isolation of Communist China from a large part of normal international relations is dangerous . . . We are prepared to accept the reality of the victory in mainland China in 1949 . . . We consider however, that the effective political independence of Taiwan is a political reality too."

I move on to the next year, 1968. Senator Carter asked Senator Martin a question in this chamber, and in reply the Leader of the Government said:

> The debate on the China question in the United Nations opened yesterday. As the Prime Minister indicated over the weekend, the Canadian position with respect to the admission of mainland China will be that stated by me, as Secretary of State for External Affairs, two years ago in the General Assembly. Canada favours the admission of mainland China to the United Nations, and is of the view that mainland China should occupy a seat on the Security Council, but admission of Peking should not prejudice the participation, as a state member, of Taiwan . . .
> A third resolution, put forward by Albania, is two-pronged. It calls, first of all, for the admission of mainland China, and in another part it calls for the expulsion of Taiwan. As we are in favour of the first part of the resolution but are opposed to the second part, we will abstain from voting. By our abstention we indicate our view of the desirability of admitting mainland China to the organization, but we oppose the expulsion of Taiwan.
>
> The question of bilateral relations is a matter that is engaging the attention of the government—

This is Senator Martin in this chamber:

> —and in participating in such relations—

This sounds almost pathetic to me.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Up to now we have been friends.

Hon. Mr. Grosart:

> —we take into account our ties with Taiwan.

Bless the ties that bind our hearts in Christian love.

We move on to 1969. I read now a brief extract from the official publication of the Department of External Affairs:

> Also, on February 12, 1969, in reply to a question that compared Mr. Sharp's statement with a previous statement by Mr. Trudeau, the minister said: "The Government's policy with respect to the recognition of China has been expressed by the Prime Minister and myself in recent days."

I interject at that point that there had been some suggestion that Canada had reversed its position, and some of us expected a full and perhaps apologetic, at least understanding, explanation. What did the minister say?

> That is our policy and if it varies in any respect from what has been said previously, it varies.

International diplomacy? Mr. Sharp said on May 29, 1969:

> Canada has a one-China policy and, since the Nationalist Government purports also to be the Government of China, we cannot recognize both Peking and Taiwan at the same time.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Right.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: That was said in spite of the clear suggestions over and over again in the previous years that Canada could recognize both Peking and Taiwan. I would agree that Mr. Sharp's words were ill-chosen. He must have regretted that he said "Peking and Taiwan" and not "The People's Republic and the Republic of China". The extract I read from the speech by the Leader of the Government clearly indicated to all the world and to Taiwan that we were prepared to recognize two Chinas, one in the Security Council, one in the Assembly.

I could go on I suppose. It is a long, sorry story, starting with the time when we opposed the expulsion of Taiwan. Then we were not too sure, our courage was not up, and we said, "At the next stage we will abstain from voting". Then our whirling dervishes went all of the way round and we finally wound up voting for a resolution in almost identical terms to the one we said we could not vote for on these humanitarian grounds. The humanitarian grounds had not changed; we had changed; we had changed. That is why I say, as a Canadian, I am ashamed of the position we have taken in regard to these 12 million people over the years.

On April 7 of this year I asked the Leader of the Government a question in this chamber:

> Would the Government Leader tell us whether any undertaking was given at the time of the negotiations in Stockholm that Canadian diplomatic relations would be severed with the Island of Taiwan, as reported officially in the official organ of the Department of External Affairs?

The Leader of the Government replied:

> My honourable friend told me last night during a social hour that he proposed to ask this question today, but since it touches on a very important subject I should like some time to consider a reply.

That is what he said, and very wisely too. I have not changed my opinion on that; I would not say there has been a refusal to reply; he was very wise to take this kind of time, but I would still like a reply.

As I said earlier in dealing with this communiqué, it is a complete unreality; it refuses to deal with the very issues that Canadians brought to the attention of the two governments in the clearest possible terms, not merely the segment of the public at large, not merely very concerned people, but also senators and members of Parliament. The communiqué has nothing to say on what stand Canada took on these matters and what the reaction of the other government was. It would seem to me that with the two sides, if you like, together this was a glorious opportunity presented to Canada to say to the other side, "Here are the things that concern the people of Canada. You can hear it outside; you can see it on the signs; you saw it at the in camera meeting; you saw it at the press conference. These are the matters between us on which Canadians are showing great concern. Give us your answer". I am not saying that was not done; perhaps it was. If it was, the communiqué remains unrealistic. If it was not, the whole exercise is even more unrealistic than I thought it was.

Hon. Mr. Martin: A very good debating speech.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Thompson, debate adjourned.

TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO MAKE PAYMENTS—OMISSION OF ACT FROM REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1970—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, October 27, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of the Hon. Mr. Forsey calling the attention of the Senate to the Government's failure to make certain payments as required by the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and to the omission of that Act from the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970.

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, I had not intended to speak on this item today. I thought Senator Grosart would speak even longer and even more critically than he did. Nevertheless, he spoke with such vigour that I have some doubts as to whether I should reply now, as I want him to follow what I am going to say in the carefully prepared statement that I have. In speaking about the liberties which he alleged were taken by the commission on the revision of statutes, we are moving from one vitriolic subject to one of relative peace, but there is a lot of real friction in this subject just as there is in the other. However, I think I might as well make my statement now and get it on the record.

Senator Grosart's remarks on October 27 last on the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, raise a number of matters some of which relate to technical difficulties which will not have much meaning without an explanation of the problems associated with the preparation of a general consolidation and revision of the public general statutes.

One matter should be clarified at the very outset. Senator Grosart assumes, and he may not be alone in this assumption, that the omission of an act from the revision was on the instruction, or at least on the initiative, of the Government; that the Statute Revision Commission was in this way induced by the Government or by the Minister of Justice to leave acts out of the revision. I can assure Senator Grosart that that is not the case.

At no time during the preparation of the revision did the Government or any minister of the Government, or any person on behalf of a minister, instruct, suggest or seek the inclusion or exclusion of any act or any part of any act in or from the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970.

It is important to make this denial, not only on behalf of the Government but on behalf of responsible members of the Public Service who constitute the commission.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Who is the chairman?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I am going to give the name of the chairman and a list of the personnel, in a few moments.

Decisions of this kind were decisions of the commission, reached after a consideration of the nature of an act, its application, and whether it was likely to be current law at the time the revision was published and available for distribution. This is what the Minister of Justice referred to the other day as a matter of judgment by the commission.

The commission was charged, under the law, with the duty of arranging, revising and consolidating the statutes, and in carrying out that task is required to follow the directions of Parliament in the performance of its statutory obligation. The commission is not subject to directions from Government in the performance of its work, nor were the powers of the commission, to which Senator Grosart made reference, unusual powers. He spoke of this as though this were the only commission which acted in this way, in this country or in any other jurisdiction. What are the facts? The same powers as exercised by this commission were given to the Revision Commission in the case of the revisions of 1927 and 1952, and the same or similar powers are given in the case of provincial revision bodies to carry out general revisions of provincial statutes.

It is difficult to see how a revision commission could carry out its task without such powers, for a revision is never simply a paste-up of a statute and its amendments. The language used in statutes, and the mode of expression used in statutes, change over a period of time. It is impossible to obtain any improvement in the language of statutes if these powers are not given by Parliament. Also, over a span of time, amendments made in one statute create inconsistencies or anomalies in other statutes which cannot be removed without exercising such powers.

These powers—I am sure Senator Grosart will agree—are exercised with great care. If a commission exceeds its powers to make minor amendments, to correct inconsistencies or to provide more uniform expression, but attempts instead to make substantive amendments to statute law by way of a revision, then those amendments would be unauthorized and ineffective and they would not form part of the substantive law. It is clearly the intent of the Revision Act that the statutes contained in the Revised Statutes shall not be new laws, but shall be construed and have effect as a consolidation and as declaratory of the law as contained in the acts and parts of acts repealed by inclusion in the revision.

Senator Grosart—industrious and resourceful as he is—leaves the impression, perhaps inadvertently, that there was some secrecy surrounding the membership of the commission. He implied that in the question he put to me a few moments ago. On a number of occasions since 1965, in response to inquiries in the other place, the names of the members of the Statute Revision Commission have been published.

The commission was established on May 4, 1965, and constituted at that time the following: The late Honourable Guy Favreau, ex-officio as Minister of Justice; Dr. E. A. Driedger, then Deputy Minister of Justice; Honourable R. Bedard, then Associate Deputy Minister of Justice, now a judge in Quebec; D. S. Thorson, Q.C., then Director of the Legislation Section of the Department of Justice, now Associate Deputy Minister of Justice, and, I think, one of Canada's outstanding public servants; Jean Miquelon, C.R., then Under Secretary of State, now President of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation; J. Q. Ryan, Q.C., known familiarly to members of the various Senate committees, then Senior Advisory Counsel to the Department of Justice, now Director of the Legislation Section of the Department of Justice, formerly revisor of the Revised Statutes of Alberta, 1955.

[Hon. Mr. Martin.]

The present Minister and Deputy Minister are now Messrs. J. N. Turner and D. S. Maxwell. The other members have not changed.

Because of the large amount of legislation emanating from Parliament in the years 1966 to 1969, the commission had to revise continuously the manuscript of the revision during those years. When it began to commit the manuscript to the printing process, development of a computerized printing process was still under way. It was therefore necessary, in order to fix the material to be contained in the manuscript of the consolidation, to provide an arbitrary "cut-off date" of some kind which would not be inconveniently too far before the time when the revised statutes could be expected to be available in published form.

It will be noted in the table of contents in the volumes of the Revised Statutes of Canada 1970—I think my honourable friend mentioned this—that the commission settled upon December 31, 1969, for this purpose.

The Statute Roll is referred to in section 3 of the Revised Statutes of Canada Act (1964-65, chapter 48), and is the official copy of the consolidation that is required to be presented to the Governor General upon completion of the consolidation. The Statute Roll, attested under the signature of the Governor General and the Clerk of the Parliaments, is required to be deposited in the office of the Clerk of the Parliaments. It will be interesting for honourable members to know that the Clerk of the Parliaments is in fact the Clerk of the Senate. Thereafter the Statute Roll is to be held as the revision of the statutes so arranged and consolidated by the Statute Revision Commission.

Because of the need to develop the computerized printing systems and programs, and the time involved in doing this during the production of the Statute Roll, it became apparent in 1970 that the Statute Roll could not be completed and in printable form until some time in early 1971. This necessarily involved a time lag of a year to a year and a half from the setting of the contents of the revision and its subsequent promulgation and circulation to the public. In point of fact, the printing process went into full production, without further development delays, about the middle of August 1970, as it was only then that the last of the programming difficulties were solved.

The commissioners—and I have discussed this with them since my honourable friend made his speech—were aware during this period that there were a number of statutes contained in the manuscript of the revision that were in course of either being repealed or amended by matters either before or coming before Parliament in the period during which the printing of the Statute Roll would be in process. In the desire to avoid having too much of the revision out of date, or duplicated, by statutes replacing matter in the manuscript, a number of statutes were omitted from the revision. This was done where there was a reasonable anticipation that these statutes would be repealed or replaced by legislation in the period during which the printing was in process.

This decision seemed warranted on the basis of the authority of the Revision Act, and seems indeed to have been contemplated by section 3(2) of the statute itself. It is provided therein that any other public statute of Canada, not included in the consolidation, that the commission may consider advisable to so incorporate, may be placed in a supplement.

Some difficult decisions had to be made with respect to statutes to be included or omitted under these circumstances; for example, whether it was advisable to include the Canada Elections Act and have it appear in both the revision text and in the supplement, since that act was being considered for replacement during that period. Similarly, the Expropriation Act was in course of being replaced. Because of circumstances concerned with the printing, it was possible for the commission to exclude from the manuscript of the Statute Roll the Elections Act, but it was not possible to exclude the Expropriation Act without unduly delaying the printing process. Now, that is the explanation given.

The power to add supplements clearly contemplated the inclusion of omitted public general statutes in a supplement. Indeed, this practice was followed in the 1952 revision by the omission therefrom of the Criminal Code, Canada Evidence Act, and Combines Investigation Act, among others, from the Revised Statutes of 1952. The last two acts were later included in the supplement volume of that revision. It was therefore possible to include by way of the supplement public general statutes that had been omitted from the revision proper, should it be considered advisable to do so later.

The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act fell within a class of statutes that, technically, could be omitted from the main body of the revision at that time without delaying the printing of the revision and could later, if advisable, be included in a supplement.

Not all acts of the Parliament of Canada are included in a general revision of statutes. I am afraid that Senator Grosart has been guilty of making an unwarranted assumption when he says, "If it is not here, of course it is not the law of Canada." Only those acts or parts of acts set out in Schedule A to a revision are included. Schedule A is required in the case of the present revision by section 4 of the authorizing statute (1964, chapter 48) to be appended to the roll, and has the effect under that act of repealing those acts or parts of acts so listed therein and included in the revision. This section also authorizes the inclusion in Schedule A of acts inconsistent with acts in the revision, and acts, the force of which is spent. In point of fact, that schedule in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, includes therein only those acts and parts thereof that are superseded by the acts consolidated or included in the revision. All acts not referred to in that list are not consolidated and not repealed.

Certain public acts not included in revisions of the Statutes of Canada since the 1906 revision are set out in the Table of Public Statutes at the end of each annual volume of the Statutes of Canada. The latest published edition of this series is the Statutes of Canada, 1969-70. The table there is entitled "Table of Public Statutes, 1907 to 1969-70," and lists a number of statutes omitted from earlier revisions.

Other public acts normally omitted from but not repealed by a revision fall within the following categories:

1. Acts considered to be of a local or personal nature, that could be the subject of a private bill.

2. Acts which by their nature take on the aspects of constitutional acts. Into this class fall such acts as the Alberta Act and Saskatchewan Act of 1905, provincial boundary acts, et cetera.

3. Acts which are required to be printed with the revision. This class generally includes only the act authorizing the revision.

4. Acts which have fallen into disuse or the usefulness of which is vanishing or has disappeared.

5. Acts which relate to one place or subject, such as specific boards of trade or medical groups.

6. Acts which by their nature are temporary and the time within which they are to operate has expired.

• (1600)

A new category was added by the 1970 revision. Senator Grosart touched upon this new category when he asked why the Canadian Bill of Rights was not included in the revision or the first supplement thereto. The commission did not include that act in the revision, but instead printed it with the acts contained in the appendices volume, because it could be considered in one sense to be different in character from the other acts being consolidated, in as much as it applies to all statutes of the Parliament of Canada. In this aspect, it has some of the characteristics of a constitutional act.

More important in the view of the commission, its inclusion in the revision proper would have involved a technical repeal of the Bill of Rights, which thereafter would be cited as a chapter of the Revised Statutes of each succeeding revision. The citation 1960, chapter 44, would no longer be apt and the Bill of Rights, which had been extensively circulated by reference to 1960, chapter 44, would be in a similar situation to acts often seen in public places such as Innkeepers Acts, which are referred to by the original citation when the original had been replaced.

It seemed advisable to the commission therefore—and I think eminently and correctly so—not to include the Bill of Rights in the revision, and thereby substitute a chapter of the 1970 revision for chapter 44 of the Statutes of Canada. In short, the Statute Revision Commission did not consider it desirable that the Bill of Rights, by inclusion in the revision, be taken to be "the original of the" Canadian Bill of Rights as enacted in 1960.

Senator Grosart persisted, as he always does, in boring within, giving the impression that something sinister had happened. He went on and said that he had sought information about where the omitted acts would be shown. His remarks may help to lead to this compilation of statutes and its publication in easily accessible form. He will therefore have rendered a service. However, his main theme of sinister, back-door action on the part of someone with regard to the Temporary Orders Act simply cannot be sustained.

The revision of statutes is not an easy accomplishment. That there are so few errors made in revisions in Canada by those charged with carrying out what has to be one of the most thankless tasks in the country says much for those who in the past have undertaken this task. It is unfortunate in the present case that a circumstance beyond the control of the Revision Commission has cast aspersions on the manner in which the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, were prepared. That revision, which is still underway, had more than the usual difficulties.

It may be that in this day and age, with Parliament enacting legislation on a virtually year-round basis, both the Government and Parliament will have to consider whether the old method of seeking ad hoc revisions is now the best way of carrying out a general revision. Some jurisdictions have moved to continuing revisions, and a greater use of updating by loose-leaf system of adding to the Revised Statutes.

It may well be that with the experience obtained and available through this revision, the Government will be making proposals to Parliament along those lines after the completion of this revision. As was indicated in the explanatory note to the revision referred to by Senator Grosart, the Statute Revision Commission has attempted to make use of modern technological developments to assist future revisions, whether ad hoc or continuing.

The commission itself had full responsibility in this matter. The commission is made up of responsible public servants with the greatest integrity. I know that Senator Grosart will accept their explanation as an answer to what I thought were ill-considered charges.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: The Leader of the Government has asked me a specific question. First, I should like to thank him for his very detailed reply. It always amazes me how he finds time to do the tremendous amount of homework involved in obtaining all the necessary details, and how he finds time to put down on paper such a compendious speech. I congratulate him.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I never go to bed.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Secondly, it was not my intention to cast any aspersions on the members of the commission. My concern or interest was largely how such a group of eminent and brilliant politicians and lawyers could have managed to embarrass the Government to the extent they have. Thirdly, the Leader of the Government at one point termed my questions as being sinister. He found me guilty of—it was not misrepresentation.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Mischievous conduct.

Hon. Mr. Molson: Boring from within.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: As Senator Molson said, "boring from within." The very full and complete answer given to a question of some interest indicates that there are specific functions which we can perform in this chamber, because our friends in the other place were not able to get anything like such a complete answer to the questions they raised.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: May I ask the Leader of the Government about something that is not altogether clear to me, even from his very compendious, detailed and admirable reply? In which of the categories which he described—I think there were seven of them—did the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act come? I could not fit it into any one of them. I still cannot understand how it came to be left out, except on the dubious assumption that the passing of the repealing act was a dead certainty.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Clearly it was within that category of those acts which it could reasonably be presumed would be repealed. Certainly that was a very valid presumption to make. Civil servants could not be expected to think that Her Majesty's Opposition would take such a long time with a measure that involved a repealing of the act in question.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: The act was introduced only last spring, some considerable time after the process of revision was well under way. I remain profoundly mystified by the assumption that there was absolute certainty of the passage of this bill. I should have thought that was a most imprudent assumption, whether on the part of a public servant or the Government.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I am sure that Senator Forsey is mystified, but not profoundly so.

The Hon. the Speaker: I must inquire if any other honourable senator wishes to take part in the debate; if not, the inquiry will be considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, pursuant to a request put to me the day before yesterday by Senator Lang, I wish to table the following:

> Copies of General Agreement on Co-operation in Radio and TV Broadcasting between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the USSR Council of Ministers Committee for Radio and Television Broadcasting, signed at Montreal March 10, 1969, together with copies of Supplements A and B.

Senator Grosart was also interested in this yesterday.

There is one other report required to be tabled by law which I would table now. It reads as follows:

> Report of the Department of National Revenue containing Statements relative to Customs-Excise Revenue and Other Services by Ports; Excise and Income of Canada, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1971, pursuant to section 5 of the Department of National Revenue Act, Chapter N-15, R.S.C., 1970.

TAX REFORM

PRELIMINARY REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON TAX REFORM LEGISLATION—TABLED AND PRINTED AS AN APPENDIX

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I desire to table the preliminary report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the summary of the 1971 tax reform legislation, and I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent record of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[For text of report see Appendix to today's Hansard.]

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, with leave and notwithstanding Rule 78—which "notwithstanding" is put in there for the satisfaction of Senator Grosart—I should like, if it is the wish of the Senate, to add a few words to expand the substance of the report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before we proceed with this matter perhaps the honourable Senator Hayden will permit me to make a few remarks. It was agreed by honourable senators to permit Senator Hayden to make a few comments on this interim report, but I should remind the house that there is no order of the Senate dealing with this matter and there is no motion to sustain it. In the past I think it has been the practice in these cases to permit some other honourable senators, especially on my left, also to make a few comments. I would hope that this would be understood if any other honourable senator should wish to add a few comments. In asking for your co-operation in this matter, I do so with a view to ensuring that this does not develop into a general debate. We are dealing here with an interim report, and I understand that the remarks of Senator Hayden may be followed by remarks from some other honourable senators. The point I am making is that I should like at this time to prevent a general debate which in the circumstances would be out of order.

• (1410)

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, what His Honour the Speaker has just said is exactly what I was going to say. This is a preliminary report and since the legislation is not before us it would be unfortunate if a debate were generated, because some people might take positions in relation to it. When the bill is finally before us, honourable senators will be in a position to deal with the merits of the bill itself.

The purpose of referring this study to the committee initially was to obtain as much information and understanding of the proposed 1971 tax reform legislation as we possibly could in order to be better prepared when the legislation finally came before us. We feel we have done this, and I am not boasting the fact that we are in any way walking encyclopaedias on Bill C-259. I would challenge the statement that it would be possible for anybody to be a walking encyclopaedia on this bill at the present time. We feel that we have covered the various points in an understanding way.

In the month of October we had up to 30 submissions before us. They were selected on a basis which would give as much information on an individual point as we could possibly obtain from one original or main source. In other words, when we were dealing with the White Paper we had mining subsidiaries, the mining association, and some of the larger mining companies before us. We felt there would be substantial repetition if we did that on this occasion. Therefore, when we had a request for appearances we asked that two or three substantial mining companies and the mining association appear before us. We felt that this would cover the various phases of the bill. We did not make any other appointments in that regard.

When we were dealing with foreign sources of income or multinational companies we heard from several of the major multinational companies. We also had several other briefs presented to us. We thought we had achieved a reasonably good understanding of the matters presented and were now able to transmit them to the Senate along with our suggestions and recommendations. Since we have made recommendations I feel this is another reason why there should not be debate on the merits of Bill C-259 at this time. These are recommendations by your committee to the Senate as to what we feel is required in order to bring about a better bill and to remove some of the burden and onus imposed on different classes of companies by this bill.

The problem now is to summarize the substance of the report, and if you wish to put some meat on the bones of what I present to you today you can read the report. I feel it is readable.

The epilogue on pages 47 and 48 list a number of subjects not covered in the report. They are not covered because we are still analyzing and studying some submissions. We intend to start immediately on the subject matters, or most of them, contained in the epilogue, which contemplates a further preliminary report.

The only other report which we propose to make will be entitled "Technical". There have been many "technical amendment proposals" submitted to the committee relating to the language, drafting and lack of clear intention. The Institute of Chartered Accountants has been very helpful in that regard, having furnished us with a complete memorandum of the various items, together with section-by-section reports of points they feel require tidying up.

They stated they had submitted the same document to the Minister of Finance. Approximately one-third of their suggested technical changes are dealt with in the first series of 95 amendments. They were very frank in admitting that with respect to some other items the relative parts of their memorandum were drafted before they had sufficient time to consider the implications fully. On further reflection they agreed to withdraw several items in the list. We have asked them to present their list to the extent that it has now been recognized and accepted, striking out those items for which they have now had opportunity for second and third thought. We informed them that we will submit a second report on the technicalities. By that time we should have finished work in connection with the reference and, we would hope, the bill will have been received here.

In discussing the report today, I propose to comment on various phases of the proposed legislation which affect many people such as farmers and employees who are members of employee profit-sharing plans and deferred profit-sharing plans. I will also discuss the proposed departure tax, and the matter of gifts and bequests on death.

[Hon. Mr. Hayden.]

We believe there is a glaring problem to be dealt with in the matter of inter vivos gifts to registered charitable organizations. I wish to illustrate to you just what the effect is—it is difficult to conceive what was intended—but I will not go into it in detail.

The attitude of your committee has always been that in our social order farmers are entitled to a little more consideration in the tax laws. This is by reason of their service and dedication—sometimes for generations—to the development of farms and the growing of food. Bill C-259 proposes to do away with what is called the "basic herd" concept, which has been in force administratively for many years. Under this concept the farmer is entitled to build up a basic herd which would represent a capital asset. If he sells off part of that herd or replaces it in each year, this does not attract tax. The bill proposes to do away with that. The committee is of the opinion, however, that the basic herd concept is a good thing and should be continued.

• (1420)

Submissions were made from agricultural organizations on a problem that has worried farmers. I am referring to a situation where a farmer wishes a farm to remain in the family at the end of his lifetime. Under the bill as originally drawn, there was the problem of the possible attraction of capital gains tax. The farmer would have attracted a gain, and would therefore be subject to capital gains tax even in the process of selling the farm to his son or sons. In this respect the committee's recommendation is as follows:

> Your committee recommends that consideration be given to extending the rollover provisions—

The word "rollover" is an expression used where the incidence of tax is deferred for a subsequent period and it is necessary to provide what that subsequent period will be.

> —to permit land together with any other capital property which is used by an individual in a farming activity to be transferred, either during lifetime or on death, to lineal ascendants or descendants without being subject to capital gains treatment under the deemed realization provisions. This exemption should only be available in those circumstances where the transferee or transferees continue to carry on the farming activities.

The Committee recommends removing the weight of capital gains tax from being applied in a situation where a farmer meets those circumstances and is keeping the farming operation in the family.

It may be worthwhile to devote a couple of minutes to discuss the deferred profit-sharing plans, because there are literally thousands of employees who participate in such plans. They enjoy a certain position at the present time and have done so for years.

Some who appeared before us had a deferred profit-sharing plan which had been in existence for 50 years. In another instance a similar plan had been in operation for 48 years.

Theoretically a deferred profit-sharing plan is for the purpose of accumulating in a trust, during the working lifetime of the employee, sums of money made up of his own contributions, company contributions, and earnings and gains in the fund. At the end of the road, when the employee withdraws from the plan, he receives a lump sum payment.

It would appear from the bill that a somewhat paternalistic attitude exists, that perhaps it is a bad thing to allow employees to take out accumulated amounts in a lump sum. However, the evidence from responsible organizations indicated that they constantly and continually kept in touch with their employees, even after retirement, and that there has not been any waste or loss of that money. The retired employees have used it quite wisely. They have paid off their mortgages and reduced their obligations in order that they may live more freely afterwards. If they want to go into a small business of some type to occupy themselves they have the money available to do so. They have a fund which to them represents security at a time in life when they are leaving their main occupation and their main earnings.

The way in which a deferred profit-sharing plan works at the present time—and until Bill C-259 is passed, if it is passed unchanged notwithstanding our recommendations—is this: The employer contributes to the plan just as if he was paying a higher salary to the employee. This extra amount is income to the employee, and is subject to income tax. The employee also pays into the plan, and he pays into it with tax-paid dollars because he is not permitted to deduct the amount he contributes from his income, as he can in respect of a pension plan. If an employee contributes a certain amount in a year to a pension plan, then that amount is deductible from his income. There are earnings in the plan which are income, and these are taxed annually in his hands.

The tax treatment of deferred profit-sharing plans differs from the treatment accorded employees' profit-sharing plans. The provisions of the present law relating to deferred plans are, in summary, as follows:

1. the employee is not taxed currently on any amounts which his employer may contribute to the plan on his behalf nor on the income earned in the year by the plan; and

2. instead, the employee is subject to tax on the full amount received on his withdrawal from the plan minus any portion representing a refund of contributions paid by the employee into the plan; the exclusion of the employee's contributions follows from the fact that the employee is not allowed a deduction for contributions but is obliged to make these payments out of tax-paid dollars.

It is significant to note that the amount taxable as income in the employee's hands represents not only his share of (a) the employer's contributions, and (b) the income earned by the plan, but also (c) his share of any net capital gains of the trust. This treatment has been acceptable to member employees partly because of the tax deferral feature inherent in these plans but also in large measure because the employee has the right to avail himself of the special tax averaging provisions of section 36 of the present Income Tax Act in respect of a lump sum payment received on his withdrawal from the plan.

In 1961, I believe, the then Minister of Finance saw the merit and virtue of this type of deferred profit-sharing plan. He realized that if the employee were to continue to pay income tax on the employer's contributions the burden was going to be quite heavy. This realization resulted in the need for some basis on which the incidence of income tax on the employers' contributions could be deferred until a later date. Consequently, a section was inserted in the present act in 1961 under which the incidence of tax on the employer's contributions was deferred until the employee withdrew his money from the plan. This meant that the tax was deferred until the employee was in a financial position to deal with it. The section went on to give him the benefit of averaging in order to determine what his rate of tax would be. It would not necessarily be at the marginal rate. The averaging could go back for three years prior to the particular year in which the payment was made.

That section had a top limit. A person could not accumulate more of the employer's money in this deferred plan under this special rate of tax than the product obtained by multiplying $1,500 by the number of years he had been in the plan. This was the limit that was subject to the section 36 rate of tax. This, of course, was of considerable benefit to these people. They continued to make their contributions with tax-paid money, and they continued to pay income tax on the income in the fund.

Under the proposal in the bill a number of things happen. The bill does propose a capital gains tax and, therefore, in our opinion, the gains in the plan should be treated as capital gains and should be subject to the capital gains rate of tax. That is our recommendation. It does lighten the load for them, and properly so. Why should they not get the same benefit as any other person who has a capital gain? The employee still contributes his money on the same basis, but he gets it out at the end of the road and there is no further tax on it.

The real kick comes in dealing with the employers' contributions. If this bill comes into force on January 1, 1972, we could be faced with some retroactivity of taxation. We have to be careful about this. Retroactivity of taxation could result because the employee might have been in the plan for some years, during which the gains of the plan and the amounts of the employer's contributions have built up. The aim or scheme of the bill is—and this is why I used the word "paternalistic" a while ago—that the employee under a deferred plan has two courses open to him. He can elect to go along under the bill and buy an annuity with the lump sum payment, in which event his tax liability would be substantially reduced, but also the lump sum withdrawn would be more or less dissipated and he would be getting a small annuity each year. If he does not choose to take that course, then in order to avoid retroactivity in taxation on what is in the fund up to January 1, 1972, the employee has the right to elect to apply the pre-1972 provisions under section 36 to average his rate of tax and get the benefit provided.

• (1430)

In calculating the amount of the benefit, you assume that on January 1, 1972 he has withdrawn from the plan, and you determine the amount of the withdrawal at that time. Therefore, to the extent of that amount he gets the benefit of the averaging provided under section 36. If he elects to take that averaging he is not entitled to apply the other averaging provisions in the bill. One is general averaging to iron out years of high income and lower income, where there is method for averaging, and he cannot take advantage of that. In any event, on the calculations made by our staff and the people who appeared before us, the benefit of that general averaging in the case of an employee in a deferred profit-sharing plan would not be very much.

Alternatively, he can take what is called forward averaging provided for in the bill. Forward averaging means that you take your withdrawal moneys and apply them successively in the purchase of forward averaging annuities, and you roll along in that regard. Of course, what you get out of the annuity you buy is income, but most of the withdrawal that you were counting on so heavily is dissipated in these transactions, and whatever is left—there would be something left, because there is not tax of 100 per cent—is subject to ordinary rates of income tax. We felt there was a happier way to deal with this.

In our report we have not dealt completely with the forward averaging element. We intend to do a little more study on that. Our thinking is that, first, the employee should enjoy the right to elect so as to avoid retroactivity up to January 1, 1972; secondly, that he should also enjoy the right to make either of the elections in the present act for the period subsequent to 1972. In other words, if general averaging helps him he should be entitled to take that, and if forward averaging helps him in some circumstances he should be entitled to take that. This is the substance of the recommendations.

I began by saying that I was going to deal with people first, and I think this is dealing with people, and proposing methods by which they should be dealt. People who have the idea in their minds of providing for their own security after the prime of life has gone, and organizations actuated by the same kind of theory which promote the interests of employees—which is good employee-employer relations—should be encouraged. The road should not be made tougher for them, and the amount they expect to get should not be lessened. We say that anything that is a capital gain over the whole period should carry the capital gains rate of tax. On the rest of it we say the deferral should continue, and the election you make covering the period up to January 1, 1972 should continue but it should not be eroded, and the benefits, if any, of general averaging and forward averaging should also be available.

Under present law, an employee who is a beneficiary under an employees profit-sharing plan is taxed in the same manner as an employee who receives a profit-sharing bonus directly from his employer and invests the money received. In summary, the employee's position is as follows:

1. the employee is taxed annually on an amount which his employer contributes to the plan on his behalf in the same manner as he would have been if he had received a bonus of an equivalent amount directly;

2. the employee is not allowed a deduction in respect of any contributions which he himself may pay into the plan;

3. the employee's share of the income earned each year by the plan is taxed annually in his hands; and

4. amounts received by the employee out of the plan (whether on retirement or otherwise) are, in general, non-taxable since these amounts will normally have been taxed previously.

Under the proposed legislation, the same general rules will apply. However, with the taxation of capital gains, the employee will also be taxed annually on his proportionate share of one-half of the net capital gains realized by the trust in each year (excluding any portion accrued up to Valuation Day) as well as on his share of the income earned by the trust in the year.

In addition, provision is made in the proposed legislation with respect to the taxation of any unrealized gain on property distributed is specie to an employee on his withdrawal from the plan. Under these provisions, the employee is subject to tax in the year of his withdrawal on any accrued gain in respect of property received from the trust (excluding any portion accrued prior to January 1, 1972) but it would appear from the proposed legislation that such accrued gains will be treated as ordinary income rather than as capital gain.

Quite evidently, these accrued gains should at least receive capital gain treatment and this should be clearly stated in the proposed legislation. However, even this treatment is unsatisfactory inasmuch as it places a member employee at a severe disadvantage vis-à-vis an employee who invests after-tax earnings directly. In the opinion of your committee, property which is in substance the employee's property should not be considered as having been realized at fair market value on distribution to the employee. The deferral of gain would be consistent with the treatment to be accorded to a capital beneficiary of an ordinary trust.

Our recommendations on the point should be studied.

If I want to take the benefit of the other election that is provided in the bill, then there is no collision between them. We think it is good equity to do that. So we have made that recommendation.

The employee profit-sharing plan runs somewhat along the same lines. There are some differences, but in essence we have made the same recommendation in relation to capital gain.

We have said one more thing in relation to capital gains on both these types of plan. Sometimes the trustee of the fund will hold securities in the form of shares that are producing income. At a certain stage—certainly when an employee is withdrawing from the plan—the trustee will make an allocation of that employee's share of these securities. We have recommended that when shares or other securities are delivered by the trustee out of the plan, at the retirement of the employee, their value for purposes of capital gains taxation should be the cost to the trustee. Then we have said that the capital gains tax should not apply until these shares have been disposed of. The general rule in respect of capital gains is that tax is not attracted until there is realization on the security. We do not think the general rule should be eroded in a situation of this kind.

Honourable senators, there are many pages in this report and I am just highlighting some of the provisions. Further on we deal with the matter of gifts, bequests and devises. The proposed legislation provides that all capital property, other than depreciable assets owned by a taxpayer at the date of his death, will be deemed to have been realized at its then fair market value, and any capital gain or loss shall be included in income for that taxation year. In the case of depreciable property there will be a deemed realization at a midway point between fair market value and undepreciated capital cost.

A similar rule is proposed in respect of gifts inter vivos—that is, gifts made during lifetime. There is an exception to the general rule where assets are transferred on death, or by way of inter vivos gifts to a spouse, or to certain trusts in favour of a spouse. In the latter circumstances, the transferee is considered to have acquired the property at an amount equal to the "cost amount" of the property to the transferor, so that is some benefit.

Here is what happens, particularly with gifts inter vivos—and even gifts on death—where the person is making a gift to a registered charitable organization. We had a couple of illustrations of this, and I will tell you briefly what they are. One example is of an individual who, in his will, leaves to a community camp council his summer property with the surrounding land. Let us say he makes the gift in 1972, his cost is $10,000, and he dies in 1980 at which time the property is worth $35,000. There is a gain of $25,000, and he will be deemed under the bill to have disposed of this property immediately before his death for $35,000, resulting in the realization of a capital gain of $25,000, one-half of which, or $12,500, will have to be included in computing his income for the year in which he died.

Just stop there for a minute and contemplate that. A man is moved to make a substantial gift to a registered charitable organization. You would think that would be the end of it. He is charitably inclined. But now, if this remains in the law, he will begin to realize that if the property appreciates in value that increased value by way of gain is going to be taxable on an income basis as a capital gain in his estate when he dies. He may easily understand what the liquidity of his estate is at the time he makes the gift, but who could possibly look ahead and understand what the liquidity would be when he dies. Remember, he does not get the gain. The property has gone to the charitable organization. Yet, under our estate tax succession duty laws, either by will or by gift, you can make gifts and not attract tax in your estate if the gifts are being made to charitable organizations.

I do not wish to impose on your patience, but let me give you one further example. Under his will an individual leaves to a charitable organization a fully rented factory building. This, of course, is depreciable property because you can write off capital cost allowances, et cetera, on a building. Let us say that the building had cost him $400,000 in 1972 and that at the date of his death in 1980 it had an undepreciated capital cost of $200,000 and a fair market value of $700,000. He will be deemed to have disposed of the property for $450,000 immediately before his death. This will result in the addition to his income of the whole of the $200,000 of recaptured depreciation, and that is capital cost allowances taken during his lifetime. In addition he will be treated as having realized a gain of $50,000, one-half of which, or $25,000, will also be required to be included in his income. Now, if this was not in a will but was an inter vivos gift, the situation might even be worse, because there it is provided that where a taxpayer has disposed of anything to any person by way of a gift inter vivos he is deemed to have disposed of it at its fair market value at that time.

You can see the implications of that. The application of this rule to capital property other than depreciable properties is similar to the first example I gave. In other words, you have a piling up of an obligation years after your charitable intention has manifested itself in a gift to a charitable organization of either capital property or depreciable assets. Now, you can translate that into many other applications such as a gift of pictures, which would have the same implications.

I suggest to you, and certainly the committee felt, that this is definitely a discouragement to giving, because if a man realized the risk and the obligations that he would be buying for himself by exercising his charitable urge, he would not exercise it. If he considered the obligations that would fall on his estate after his death, when he would not be there to manage the assets or to take care of the estate, and if he considered the implications this might have so far as concerns those who would be dependent on that estate, he might think twice before making a gift.

I am not saying that these things are put into the bill deliberately in order to gouge. I do not believe that at all. We see too much evidence of honest intent in the drafting of this proposed legislation. Certainly, many of the sections are complex, but we cannot point to anything that you could say was deliberately designed to gouge. In my opinion there was simply not enough thought given to, or follow-through in the thinking out of, the application of certain general principles in the bill.

There are certain other items that I should like to touch on. We recommend that there should be consolidated returns for corporations. This would mean that the company in making an income tax return could consolidate the operations of all its companies in the chain instead of each one, for tax purposes, having to make its own accounting. This provision used to be in the income tax law some years ago but then it was taken out. If consolidated returns were reintroduced into the tax law, the tax revenues would suffer only insignificantly and the consolidated returns would greatly facilitate the operations of companies.

We were told the story the other day in committee about the man who received some legal advice when he was setting up a series of hotdog stands. Wherever he got his advice—and I hope it was not from a lawyer—he decided to have a separate company for each hotdog stand. In the end he had 140 companies, some of which made money and some of which lost money. He found in the overall picture that his tax liability amounted to about 400 per cent. The point I am making is that if he had been able to use consolidation he could have saved some headaches because he could have consolidated all these companies and could have netted out the gains and the losses. I only cite this story as a loose illustration; nevertheless, you see the point.

Bill C-259 does not deal with the question of consolidated returns. However, in our Senate report we recommend that the consolidated gains principle be incorporated. The House of Commons, in its report, did the same thing. The Carter Report did the same thing as well. The Canadian Bar Association recommended the same course of action when it appeared before us. So did the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. Thus, in making this recommendation to you, our committee is moving along in pretty good company, where there is a great collection of understanding of business operations and where you are likely to get reasonable and sound advice. That is all I will say on that.

Another item I should like to mention is the designated surplus. Perhaps this is a lawyer's problem, but years ago there was a scheme of tax avoidance by which people used to be able to buy shares of a company and get control of the company. They always picked a company that had a lot of money in the till. Having done that, they could get that money out of the company to pay the purchase price of the shares they had bought. It was a wonderful sort of operation until this scheme of designated surplus was introduced. All the scheme said was that in a sale where control changes, the surplus at that moment is locked in. If it is paid out, it is subject to tax. Since that time the Government introduced another provision. I refer to the famous section 138A in our Income Tax Act, which gives the minister and Treasury Board the widest possible powers in their discretion to determine that the main thrust of a particular action is to strip moneys and dividends out of the company. The point here is that section 138A is much broader than the provision on designated surpluses, so we do not think it is necessary to have both provisions in the bill. Section 138A, being broader, can stop anything of the kind I have just mentioned. Therefore, we suggest removing the designated surplus provision because it is superfluous. Its removal will reduce the large number of complex sections and transitional provisions, and reduce the number of pages that we have to read, and it will do so without losing anything material in the way of revenue to the Crown. In other words, we recommend that they should tidy it up.

I should like to mention credit unions and caisses populaires. Their representatives appeared before us, and in respect of them we make a recommendation in relation to one of the things they wanted. Most of them are reasonably small operations and they wanted to be able to qualify under the small business provisions in the new bill. One of these provisions is that when your accumulated income from year to year reaches $400,000, you stop getting the benefit of the lower rate of tax. They wanted to be able to move in and be a small business where they could satisfy the conditions except for this problem, that the provincial laws require credit unions and caisses populaires to take a percentage of their earnings—and they have to pay tax on it—and put it into a reserve. Once it goes into that reserve, the company itself cannot get at it again. It is simply there to take care of the depositors and to protect them. Then, if there should be a liquidation, it must be distributed to certain named charities, and, as I say, it never gets back into the financial stream of the company. But these organizations have also in many instances adopted the policy of having a supplementary and voluntary reserve. They pay tax on the movement of funds from earnings into the voluntary reserve. They felt they should not have to add in these reserves for the purpose of arriving at an accumulation going over $400,000 when they would no longer be able to get the benefit of the lower tax rate provision covering small businesses.

We thought this was reasonable, but we put a limit on it since we did not want them running wild on the movement of funds from earnings to voluntary reserves. As I say, we considered this to be reasonable and we recommend accordingly.

Coming now to the departure tax, here again we are dealing with people and by "departure tax" I mean where somebody is leaving Canada for good. Where a person is emigrating, there is a provision under which he has to give an accounting to the tax collector and also in relation to any non-resident assets which he may have. He is then deemed to have made a realization at the moment of departure and, to the extent that he realizes more than his costs, he has a capital gains subject to tax.

Under the bill there are two courses open to him. He may pay the tax or he may ask for a deferral, and if the minister agrees he may give him a deferral on the basis of his providing an amount of security which the minister estimates is sufficient for the purpose. But other ramifications follow from this by way of deeming that this man, even though he is emigrating, continues to be a resident of Canada for purposes of income tax. In subsequent years and even when he realizes on these assets on which he is charged the capital gains tax, he is deemed to be a resident of Canada and his whole world income is subject to income tax.

Now, this could not be classified as anything other than an oversight, I am sure. We set out to correct that. We said that deeming him to be a resident should only be in relation to capital gains tax on his non-Canadian income. You can see the situation where a man has established a residence in another country and he would be subject to income tax in that country; there would be a classic element of double taxation if something were not done. We felt that in the discretion of the minister a couple of other things should be done to ease the route for leaving Canada. We deal with this in our report where we recommend:

1. That provision should be made to enable the Minister of National Revenue to grant relief if, in his opinion, hardship will result and the departure is occasioned

a) by reason of illness;

b) by reason of the transfer of an employee at the direction of the employer; or

c) by any other reason which the Minister considers deserving of relief.

We thought those were humane elements in the problem, and instead of making the rule of law absolute we considered a discretion would be appropriate in the administration of this law. If a deserving case were met with, it could be dealt with accordingly.

May I now move to something which is very important and which has been the subject matter of a great deal of discussion. I think our report deals with it comprehensively so I am just going to touch on it now. I am referring to what are called multinational corporations. We have many multinational corporations in Canada, and I suggest that we take two as an example, Massey-Ferguson and Alcan. Massey-Ferguson operates in Canada and employs between 4,000 and 5,000 people. It exports 80 per cent of its products to markets outside of Canada, and in many of those markets it has its own foreign affiliates from which income comes back to it. Now the amount of employment Massey-Ferguson is able to give in Canada is determined by the amount of its export sales and by the flow of money back from these foreign affiliates.

Alcan, from the evidence we have had before us, employs directly about 18,700 people and it exports 85 per cent of its production which is related to the employment the company provides. Here you have to be very careful that you do not expose the company to more onerous conditions abroad in marketing its product than those under which its competitors operate. If we were going to look for any support for that statement, I could call as my first witness the White Paper itself, the Minister of Finance and the Government. Dealing with this subject the White Paper on page 72, paragraph 6.9 says:

> 6.9 On the other hand, Canadian business is often required to go abroad to seek foreign sources of supply and to develop foreign markets. Going international is frequently necessary to enable Canadian companies to achieve the economies of scale which are otherwise denied them by the relatively small size of the Canadian domestic market. Such companies would find it hard to compete on the international scene if they were subject to more onerous taxes than those which apply to their competitors.

Then again on page 73, it says:

> 6.16 Where it applies, the exemption system would permit Canadian corporations to compete abroad without being at a fiscal disadvantage vis-à-vis their competitors, including the competing subsidiaries of European corporations.

Let me tell you very briefly what happened. If dividends come from a foreign affiliate to Massey-Ferguson or Alcan and the business from which they come is an active business, under the present law—and these companies hold at least 25 per cent of the voting shares of such company—those dividends when they come back are exempt. The bill proposes a change in 1977, which is this: If Canada has been able to negotiate a tax treaty with the countries in which these companies are operating, then they will continue to enjoy that receipt of exempt income, but if Canada has not been able to negotiate a tax treaty, then they will not enjoy exemption from tax because such income is not from exempt dividends and when it comes home it is subject to deductions and they will get a credit for the amount of tax they have paid in this other country. But if that amount is lower than the Canadian rate, they pay the difference between them as a Canadian tax.

Many of these countries have tax incentives. They may have a low tax rate. In some countries they may have a 20 per cent tax rate. They tell you to go ahead with certain developments and the tax rate will be 10 per cent. They give you encouragement to carry on with projects. These incentives are not recognized as deductions, but they reduce the amount of money that comes back into the Canadian multinational company.

Our recommendation is based on the fact that these multinational companies are not in a position to negotiate tax treaties. If the Government is going to take on that responsibility it should do it on its own and should not penalize the multinational Canadian company by depriving it of exempt income because it has been unable to negotiate a tax treaty. They are independent of each other, and we recommend that this is the way it should be.

Another area is that of diverted income. We do not recommend in our report that relief be given to a person engaged in the business of diverting income, which in the ordinary business sense would be Canadian income, to a tax haven country merely to avoid the incidence of tax. We indicated in the White Paper that there was ample provision in the present law to cover this situation. However, quite apart from that, we feel there should be a clear definition of what they call the foreign accrual property income, FAPI. These refer to investments, royalties, rents, interest, and so on. We feel that this penalty should apply only in cases of diverted income in Canada because there is inherent an element of tax avoidance. We agree that cases of diverted income should be penalized.

In dealing with royalty income, if a multinational company in Canada had patents and set up a company in Europe and transferred the patents to that country and received income in that country—which country might have a lower rate of tax or be tax free—that income would qualify as diverted income. But as it happens in many cases, some of the foreign affiliate companies operating in Europe develop patents, and we feel that the income of that foreign affiliate company should not be made the income of the Canadian company in such circumstances. The bill provides for the taxation of the Canadian company whether the money is repatriated or not. It does not matter whether the foreign affiliate pays the money back to Canada, the Canadian holding company must include it when accounting to Canada. We feel this is not a business-like proposal and is not necessary. The income tax authorities are very active in this field. In some instances the authorities assess on the basis of an agency operation only, and in such case the Canadian company is held to earn the income and is taxed on that income.

This is a lengthy subject and a very important one to Canada because several of these holding companies depend on the setup which exists here whereby they can avoid the incidence of tax where there is no treaty. They can avoid this by simply converting the Canadian company into a subsidiary company outside Canada. Then the application of this rule disappears. In making our report we felt that we should approach this in a reasonable unbiased way, not merely looking at the question of tax avoidance and diverted income with the thought in mind of using the largest stick in the world to knock them down. You do not have to use the largest stick at all. What is the source of the income? Is it from an active business? Is it from normal steps taken in a bona fide business? If so, these things should be excluded from FAPI. It would exclude royalties which have been previously described, certain rents, interests and things of that nature. This would accomplish our purpose and it would not take a nickel away from Canada. We are adopting a policy which is exactly opposite to the policy which other countries are adopting.

Under this bill we are not enjoying a tax advantage that other countries enjoy. In the United States, under proposals developed a year or so ago, 25 per cent of all payments received from export operations in the base period 1968 to 1970 were to be subject to tax abatement until paid out in the form of dividends. From 1970 forward, and as long as the law remains, 100 per cent of that income is subject to tax abatement until the dividends are paid out. Other countries have incentives. Canadian multinational companies could not continue to operate successfully in Canada unless they could maintain an export market outside Canada. You are tying one if not both hands behind their back by placing them at a monetary disadvantage to their competitors. All witnesses appearing before us supported this 100 per cent. Canadian companies must be placed in a position where they are not at a disadvantage vis-à-vis their competitors in the same field. This is the burden of our report.

I am taking more time than I had intended, but I would like to refer to one or two other matters. Some of these fall into place and you can read them for yourselves. We have a lengthy section on mining and petroleum. We feel there is a conflict between the proposed regulations dealing with earned depletion and accelerated depreciation as against the minister's letter dated August 1970 in which he indicated he was going to enlarge the benefit in the area of earned depletion. This would expand the areas qualifying for earned depletion. The mining industry have had automatic depletion. During a year of operations they could deduct 33-1/3 per cent of the amount of money spent from their earnings. This was called automatic depletion. Now the concept is earned depletion. Certain expenditures will qualify for earned depletion, which means that for $3 of expenditure in that category $1 of earned depletion is allowed. This means that $1 can be deducted from what might otherwise be taxable income. In addition, accelerated depreciation is provided for machinery and equipment, allowing the write-off of the full amount during the year. There are capital cost allowances as well.

The representatives of a very large Canadian company appeared before the committee to explain their problem. They told us that the announcement made by the minister in August, 1970 was in order to encourage more exploration and development, which certainly was lagging. A substantial amount of this development was proposed to take place in the Province of Quebec, but was not proceeding. These additional advantages were such that the developers proceeded.

In report we state:

> One witness stated that his company had incurred expenditures of $120 million in expanding its production facilities—

That was in Gaspé, in the Province of Quebec.

> —$30 million of which were spent on major smelter and refinery expansions.

[Hon. Mr. Hayden.]

They now discover that unless there are certain revisions or a broadening of the earned depletion clauses they will not be able to earn depletion on the $30 million expenditure. They considered the original language to be general in its terms. The proposed regulations announced by the minister are narrow, containing qualifications and conditions such that they could not qualify this expenditure of $30 million although on the general interpretation of the original statement such an expenditure would qualify.

They thought they did qualify, made a public announcement in the newspapers as to their intentions, went ahead and spent their money, and now have problems. In my opinion, it helps in such difficulties if attention is focused on the point.

We have made certain recommendations of changes that should be made in the definition of earned income and the qualifications for earned depletion and accelerated depreciation. I will not burden you with all the details, but this particular item is well developed by our staff, and is really worthy of full consideration.

I have avoided going into detail, because this is just a general discussion of headings. I should tell you that we have proposed certain changes in the administration and enforcement provisions, which are legal in nature. Improvement of the position of those who come into conflict with the law under the provisions of the income tax law is recommended. While the bill to a certain extent gives them the right to be represented by counsel at an inquiry, it is not clear that the counsel has any status, other than to be there. It is not clear that he can even examine his own witness or other witnesses at the same inquiry. We consider that to be a very important item. It was directed to our attention by various briefs, including that of the Canadian Bar Association. We have recommended certain amendments to make it clear that when a person is under investigation by an inquiry, which is usually conducted by a departmental officer, he should be entitled to be there himself, and to have his lawyer attend with the status of any lawyer in a court of law to question on matters relating to the law and otherwise. We consider that to be only fair and reasonable justice, and we recommend it.

An administrative procedure has existed in the Department of National Revenue with respect to the construction industry allowing tax returns to be filed with respect to contracts running beyond a year or two, and to be filed on the completion of the contract. Although administratively this has been the practice for years, the bill ends it. We consider the practice to be good. The representatives of the construction industry who appeared before the committee recommended it, and we suggest that it should not be abandoned.

I think that perhaps I have covered the major portions. I have not dealt with what are termed rollovers. That may sound like an odd expression, and each one in his own mind may give it a different meaning. However, while the disposition of an asset might attract tax immediately, rollover means a deferral to a later date. For instance, when a man dies and leaves property to his wife any incidence of tax or capital gain that might arise is allowed a rollover so that the tax does not apply at that time. The tax would be payable if the wife in her lifetime disposed of the asset, or when the wife died. We feel that to the extent that the bill provides for such situations it is good. But, there are many more equally valid occasions and cases where the rollover should apply. We have listed them and recommended that they be carefully considered for incorporation into the list of allowable rollovers.

This has not been exhaustive of our report, nor exhaustive of the subject matter of the bill. It may be approaching the stage of being exhaustive to you who have been so kind as to listen. I have attempted to summarize it.

Before I conclude I wish to pay tribute to the members of the committee and our staff. To produce this report in order to comply with requests to forward our amendments and proposals as quickly as possible to the other place, last night and the night before five of the staff of the committee worked until 3 o'clock in the morning and were back on the job three hours later at 6 o'clock. They would report to me or the Honourable Lazarus Phillips, who is chief counsel to the committee and whose retainer is $1 per year. Preferences were made to us requesting our opinions regarding the draft of various portions of the report. So, we had intermittent disturbances during the period of their work, which were not subject to any limitation as to time. That is the only manner in which a report can be written.

We did it. We are satisfied that technically we have covered the ground. In the matter of interpretation, we are satisfied that we have not distorted the scope and effect of the provisions in the bill. We are also satisfied that, with the assistance of our staff and from the presentations received from those who appeared before us, we have made a reasonable interpretation. We have submitted recommendations to cover those things which have been left out of the bill, or situations not contemplated in the bill which could lead to great difficulty and many penalties. We have given our reasons for the recommendation in each case so that there might be no confusion, and so that nobody might be able to say, "I do not understand what you mean by that." We have written the report in simple language.

The committee met last night and approved the report. Every member of the committee has given of his time willingly. Our hearings have commenced at 9.30 in the morning and at times have continued until 5 o'clock in the afternoon or later. No one has begrudged the time, and, as chairman of the committee, I have enjoyed the hearings very much.

I commend the report to the house. I do not think its subject matter should attract debate at this time. Debate will no doubt ensue on the second reading of the bill.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: With leave of the Senate, I should like to add a few short remarks to those of the chairman of our committee who has explained the highlights of the committee's preliminary report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Molson: Senator Hayden failed to touch on one subject, namely, the contribution which he himself has made to the very exacting task of the committee, which is revealed in the interim report.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Molson: There is no need for me to say that the subject is complex, or that the report itself is complex. The explanation of the chairman should convince honourable senators better than any words of mine that the subject is an extremely difficult one. It is vitally important, and one in which the Senate has a valuable role to play.

The interim report is similar to that on the White Paper which was also presented by the committee of which Senator Hayden is chairman. Having attended nearly all of the recent hearings, I have been impressed by the fact that what was said in the committee's report on the White Paper remains valid today. However, I would have wished that the recommendations contained in that earlier report had carried a little more weight in formulation of the legislation now before us.

As time goes on, the Senate report on the White Paper will prove to have been an excellent one, and this interim report of the committee will also prove invaluable. Its recommendations are needed at this time. As honourable senators will note from reading the report, it is not in any sense critical, and the recommendations contained therein should be of great benefit to innumerable Canadian taxpayers.

Senator Hayden mentioned the valuable assistance given by the staff. He has, as always, selected an excellent staff. Again he has Mr. Alan Irwin, a lawyer; he has, as confrere, Mr. Douglas Ewen; and he has Mr. C. Albert Poissant, C.A., an outstanding tax expert. In addition, the committee is extraordinarily fortunate in having our former colleague, the Honourable Lazarus Phillips, as chief counsel.

I can only say that under the guidance of our chairman, and with the extremely hard work of a devoted staff, the success of the committee is assured. When the report is read by the public, it will be seen that the committee is doing a first-rate task job in tackling the vital problem of reforming the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, in the absence of the Leader of the Opposition, I wish to say that we on this side of the house do not wish to debate the preliminary report. I wish to add my compliments to those already given to the committee that prepared this gigantic work. It has been done expertly, as always, under the chairmanship of Senator Hayden. I have nothing but congratulations and praise for the work done.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the Notice of Motion for Adjournment:

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, November 9, 1971, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

I beg leave to bring to the attention of honourable senators the fact that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has planned meetings for next Wednesday morning and afternoon. There is every likelihood that the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada will be sitting next week, and preparations are presently under way for the inquiry into the parole system which is to be carried out by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. There will be, therefore, something of interest for most honourable senators next week.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Is it a subcommittee that will study the parole system, or is it the whole committee?

Hon. Mr. Smith: Some planning has already been done, and consideration is now being given as to what direction the committee should follow. However, nothing formally has been decided upon, or can be decided upon, until the committee meets.

Motion agreed to.

PARLIAMENT HILL

SECURITY—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege in connection with a matter of security. I direct my inquiry to the Leader of the Government and possibly to His Honour the Speaker.

Security measures have been very much in evidence over the last few weeks around Parliament Hill. The specific incident I have in mind occurred yesterday afternoon. I drove up and parked my car just before the Senate was being called into session. I was walking from my car to the Senate entrance when I was stopped at a barricade by an RCMP officer. He told me that I could not go past the barricade without producing an ID card. I informed him that I had been coming into the building for 16 years and I had never been supplied with an ID card nor had I ever been asked for one. Without inquiring where I wanted to go, he simply repeated that I could not pass without producing an ID card. I told him that I was a member of the Senate and that I was on my way to attend a sitting of the Senate.

I should make it perfectly clear that he never asked me for identification; he asked me for an ID card. To me an ID card has on it a photograph or likeness of yourself, and you wear it on your lapel or carry it in your pocket.

I told the officer that I had every intention of going into the Senate. Again he insisted that I could not pass without producing an ID card. At that time a well-known broadcaster came along and, upon hearing the discussion, told the officer that I was indeed Senator Cameron, but the officer again said that I could not pass without an ID card. Two more officers came along and said the same thing. This was all within fifty feet of the Senate door. I then asked the RCMP officers if any other type of identification would do, and I showed them my Senate railway pass. This proved to be acceptable.

The point I wish to make is that this is the first time this has happened to me in sixteen years, and it has happened to a number of other senators in the last few days. I am just wondering whether some advance notice could be given on occasions like this when it is necessary for senators to produce ID cards or other identification. I do know of cases where some senators did not have any identification on them whatsoever.

I feel an announcement from yourself, Mr. Speaker, or from the Leader of the Government, would obviate an embarrassing situation.

This all relates to something that is happening much too often. We are increasing the importation to our land of quarrels involving foreign countries, and it is changing our way of life. It does not apply only here. You may have noticed in the press the other day that the Queen had 4,000 policemen and soldiers guarding her on her way to the opening of Parliament at Westminster. This has never happened before.

It is important that we give some attention to this kind of thing, and perhaps we can check the drift into what I feel is an unfortunate situation.

Honourable senators, thank you for giving me the privilege of bringing this matter to your attention.

The Hon. the Speaker: I understand that the question of privilege was directed to the Leader of the Government, but since it was also indirectly addressed to me I will make a reply.

Honourable senators, I understand that the RCMP have complete authority on the grounds of Parliament Hill; that is, outside the Parliament Buildings. Having said that, there is no doubt that there should be co-ordination as regards special occasions; we should be told in advance of any security measures as a result of which honourable senators might have to identify themselves. Then we would be in a position to discuss the matter in this chamber.

Up to this time I have not been informed of any particular agenda or of any impending visit, but I am just wondering if indeed we might not have a visitor in the gallery sometime today. I do not know.

This matter of security has to be dealt with. If honourable senators are to be affected by any security measures on Parliament Hill, we should be informed in advance. Once we have been informed, there may be some initiative that we should take. The least we can expect is that honourable senators be informed. I will take up this question of privilege with the RCMP and I will report back on it as soon as possible.

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, I would just like to say that where the rights of members of Parliament are involved, so too are the rights of Parliament itself.

The statement just made by His Honour the Speaker will be quite helpful, and I too will look into the matter.

NATIONAL HEALTH

THERAPEUTIC ABORTIONS IN CANADA—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, November 2, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Sullivan calling the attention of the Senate to the number of therapeutic abortions performed in Canada in the first six months of 1971.

Hon. A. E. Haddon Heath: Honourable senators, I feel I am speaking on a subject for which we all have a certain distaste. It was clear from the presentation by the honourable Senator Sullivan that the number of therapeutic abortions in Canada today have risen to the extent that, if the projected figures to the end of this year are correct, they will have more than doubled over last year.

I was interested in the eloquent point of view of some nurses as put forward by the honourable Senator Quart. It is a view that, if we are going to be wise in our legislating offices, we must take into account. I was also impressed with the clear exposition given by the honourable Senator Prowse of the opposite point of view; that is, the point of view of people who consider "freedom", and I put this in quotation marks, in the matter of abortion laws.

I feel that the statistics are merely a symptom of sickness in our society today and we must face this. You cannot face things by running away. We are going through a difficult time right now with respect to our overall development and we can only hope that it will be a brief period.

• (1540)

Perhaps the main difficulty is in the misinterpretation of the word "freedom". I think that when we learn that freedom and responsibility have to go together hand in hand, that freedom and responsibility are inseparable, we will then have very little need for laws at all, including abortion laws. However, we unfortunately have not reached that period in our development. Because of this striving, shall we say, to improve our social situation, I think our abortion law as it stands today is the right one for our country and for this period in our development.

I would remind honourable senators that in the law as it presently stands there are four points we should keep in mind:

1. Abortion must be performed by a qualified medical practitioner in an accredited or approved hospital.

2. The practitioner must first receive a certificate in writing from the therapeutic abortion committee of that hospital, stating that the continuation of the patient's pregnancy would or would be likely to endanger her life or health.

3. The therapeutic abortion committee must consist of not less than three members, each of whom must be a qualified medical practitioner.

4. The practitioner performing the operation cannot sit on the committee.

This legislation provides safeguards, as can be seen, but we must remember that in Canada abortion is illegal unless those four conditions are met.

What is perhaps very valuable about the current law is that it leaves it up to each community how the legislation will be applied. The wishes of all regions in the country are not the same. A community may conceive of its need in a direction quite different from that of another nearby community in the same province, but they have what might be called a local option on how this law will be applied.

Most hospitals are tax-supported institutions these days, and a tax-supported hospital is usually administered by a board of directors elected by the taxpayers of the community. In this way the taxpayers' view will be represented in the administration of this law in the hospital. The doctors who sit on therapeutic abortion committees of the hospitals will probably reflect the feelings and wishes of the people in the community. If those wishes are not being reflected by the current practice, what is to prevent these people at the next annual meeting electing a different board of directors from among their own members, their own taxpayers? Perhaps all of us have at different times seen meetings packed when we wanted a change, whether it was a private company meeting or a political meeting or whatever. If a community feels strongly enough they can do something for themselves at the local level, which is surely where it should be done in our country, in our Canadian way of doing things.

Senator Sullivan mentioned that the State of California initially brought in very sweeping abortion laws. They were followed by some extremely sweeping laws in other states. It should be remembered, I think, that probably California did this to reflect the views of the people of California. The practice of medicine in that state was becoming intolerable. A doctor who had to perform a therapeutic abortion, which is necessary in some cases, left himself open to the most serious damage suits, in which incredible sums could be awarded. A doctor would have to be insured to the extent that an airline insures against a major air disaster.

In Canada our laws are not so sweeping; they have breadth, and a doctor can exercise his professional discretion, if you like, when in his opinion a patient should have this operation. He can do so knowing that he has the full protection of the law. Our medical practitioners must have confidence that what they are doing within their profession will be protected by the law, and that is what this legislation provides them with. We should keep that in mind, and in this respect regard it as a sensible law.

The only other point I would like to make, which really sums it up, is this. Let us not be pressured and stampeded by different groups who are dissatisfied with the legislation as it now stands. Let us give the legislation a fair chance and see how it works out. I am sure that Canadians, being a responsible group of people, responsible as individuals, will show this responsibility and their good sense if we let this law have time to see how it serves the public. If we wait for a few more years of statistics, I hope Senator Sullivan will be able to come back and show a substantial proportionate decrease. If not, that will be the time to re-examine our law.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 9, 1971 at 8 p.m.

INTRODUCTION

On September 14, 1971 there was tabled in the House a document entitled "Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation" and on the same date, by resolution of the Senate, consideration of same was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

For the purposes of brevity and identification, the "Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation" will be referred to in this report as the "proposed legislation" and the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will be referred to as "your Committee" or "the Committee".

The Committee would like to take the opportunity at this time to commend the Government in respect of many of its proposals pertaining to individuals, in particular for the reduction in taxes, the increased personal exemptions for both single and married taxpayers and for taxpayers aged 65 and over, the allowance of a deduction for child care expenses, the deduction for moving expenses occasioned by a job change and the increased deductions for pensions and charitable contributions. Your Committee also notes with approval the allowance of a deduction by corporations of interest paid on money borrowed to acquire shares of other corporations. The Committee would further commend the Government for modifying many of the proposals put forward in the White Paper "Proposals for Tax Reform" in response to the many representations made in respect of same.

Pursuant to the order of reference dated September 14, 1971, your Committee has heard a number of representations and has received a number of written submissions on the proposed legislation. Having studied the various representations which have been heard or received up to and including the 27th day of October 1971, your Committee has concluded that it is desirable to submit to the Minister of Finance, as expeditiously as possible, a number of recommendations in respect of the proposed legislation which is presently being considered by Committee of the Whole in the other House. It is the hope that, upon the receipt by the Minister of Finance of these recommendations, the same will be accepted by him as being pertinent and relevant, and to the extent so regarded, that appropriate amendments will be submitted by him to the other House while the said proposed legislation is being considered in the Committee stage.

Having regard to the urgency of the matter and the problem of time, your Committee is submitting for your approval at this time a limited number of recommendations but it is hoped that the Committee will still be in the position to make further recommendations before the proposed legislation reaches this House. Alternatively, the Committee will submit these further recommendations when the said proposed legislation reaches this House after having passed the other House.

The proposed recommendations are hereinafter submitted in seriatim form.

IMPACT ON THE CONTINUING VIABILITY OF CANADIAN MULTINATIONAL CORPORATIONS—THEIR DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN OPERATIONS THROUGH FOREIGN AFFILIATES, THEIR NEED FOR SUCH FOREIGN OUTLETS TO MAINTAIN HIGHER LEVELS OF EMPLOYMENT IN CANADA, THEIR CAPITAL NEEDS IN CANADA AND ABROAD AND THEIR COMPETITIVE POSITION IN WORLD MARKETS

Your Committee is deeply concerned with the possible effect of the proposed legislation on the competitive position of Canada's international corporations in world markets. To the extent that Canada's world trading position is adversely affected, it follows that our economic growth as a whole must likewise suffer.

A. Passive Income

One of the areas which gives rise to this concern is that relating to the treatment of income earned abroad by Canadian residents and their foreign affiliates. The principal purpose of these provisions is to prevent Canadian residents from avoiding or unduly deferring Canadian income tax on passive income such as dividends, interest, rents, royalties and certain types of capital gains by diverting such income to a non-resident corporation or trust and allowing the non-resident corporation or trust to accumulate such income abroad instead of repatriating it to Canada.

To prevent any possible abuse in this regard, it is proposed that Canadian residents (both corporate and individual) will be obliged to include in income their "participating percentage" of any diverted income earned by a non-resident corporation or trust which is "affiliated" (as defined) with the Canadian taxpayer. This income must be taken into account each year by the Canadian resident whether or not received in the year from the foreign affiliate.

Most certainly, the objective of attempting to thwart tax avoidance is a valid one. However, the anti-avoidance rules relating to diverted income are extended in such an indiscriminate manner as to encompass not only diverted income but also all passive income of foreign affiliates even though the affiliates are established for bona fide business purposes and are not established or used for the purpose of diverting passive income abroad in order to avoid or unduly defer Canadian income tax.

This is particularly unfortunate in the light of the fact that the proposed legislation does not define what income is to be excluded from the diverted income rules as being "active business income". Because of this, there is a serious danger that income such as interest received by a foreign affiliate on short term deposits or on trade receivables and royalties received by such an affiliate in respect of patents or know-how developed by it abroad in the course of its active business operations (to name but a few) may be taxed currently in the hands of the Canadian shareholder as diverted income even though such income is in fact directly attributable to the foreign affiliate's active business. Such income is not diverted income.

Further, it has been noted that international corporations are not infrequently obliged by the laws of a foreign country to carry on their business operations in that country through a foreign affiliate which is controlled by residents of that country. In circumstances such as these, the fact that the foreign affiliate earns passive income is often a matter which is beyond the control of the Canadian international corporation and is therefore not motivated by tax avoidance considerations. Nevertheless, in the absence of adequate de minimis relieving provisions in the proposed legislation, the Canadian international corporation will be subject to Canadian income tax on its "participating percentage" of such passive income.

This indiscriminate extension of the diverted income rules to include all passive income of foreign affiliates is further aggravated by the following:

1. Because of the manner in which the term "participating percentage" is defined, the amount taxable in a Canadian shareholder's hands under the passive income rules may, in some instances, be greater than the portion of the foreign affiliate's passive income that actually accrues to his benefit; this could occur where the foreign affiliate is not wholly-owned by one Canadian taxpayer and there is more than one class of shares of capital stock outstanding (treating certain income debentures as capital stock for this purpose).

2. No provision has been made in the proposed legislation to allow a taxpayer to apply losses sustained in one year in respect of a passive income source against passive income "earned" in other years under a loss carry-over provision.

Even if the assimilation of passive income with diverted income could be justified, the above-described defects should be rectified.

B. Dividends received from foreign affiliates

Your Committee is also concerned with one other matter that is inherent in the proposals relating to international income. It is intended that the treatment to be accorded to dividends received from foreign affiliates will differ according to whether the foreign affiliate is, or is not, located in a country with which Canada has a tax treaty.

Your Committee has difficulty in appreciating the reason for this difference in treatment. Until such treaties are negotiated, uncertainty will prevail. This can only have an unsettling effect on our trading and business operations abroad. Quite apart from this, it offends your Committee that business decisions should be influenced by the government's success, or lack of success, in negotiating tax treaties. Our international trading position should not be either jeopardized or used as a means of bargaining between governments.

In this connection, while the Committee is aware of the Government's intention to provide tax-sparing relief with respect to operations established in developing countries pursuant to commitments entered into prior to 1976, nevertheless, we cannot agree with the taxing of dividends from affiliates operating in non-treaty countries. Many of these countries are developing nations which offer tax incentives to foreign corporations. Canada should not tax away these incentives and reduce their value to Canadian corporations.

C. Other considerations

As a result of the foregoing proposals, the after-tax return to Canadian international corporations from foreign business operations will be reduced and their competitive standing in world markets will be prejudiced. If this occurs, the effect may be to discourage foreign business operations and, having regard to Canada's dependency on world trade, the curtailment of these operations can only have an adverse effect on our own economic growth. Further, any such restriction on foreign business will reduce the support for marketing and research facilities in Canada, which again will worsen our competitive position abroad. Needless to say, the demand for technical skills and other employment opportunities will be reduced, compounding our present unemployment position.

In voicing its concern about the impact of these proposals on employment opportunities in Canada, your Committee is not unmindful of the fact that two of Canada's largest international corporations who appeared before the Committee and who stated that they would be adversely affected by those proposals are understood to employ approximately 25,000 Canadians. As is well known, any loss of employment in a particular sector of the economy such as this has a ripple effect on the economy as a whole and must inevitably lead to further unemployment. Copies of the briefs submitted to your Committee by the two above-mentioned corporations were forwarded to the Department of Finance at its request.

It is imperative that we, as a nation, do not lose sight of the fact that Canada is one of the major trading countries of the world and that the encouragement of Canada's international corporations in their efforts to expand world markets is of the greatest national importance and the highest priority. Any measures such as those contained in the proposed legislation which inhibit these efforts are to be deplored, particularly in view of the fact that these proposals run counter to the patterns being set by other developed nations. For example, the effect of the proposals recently put forward by the United States government with respect to domestic international sales organizations (commonly referred to as the DISC proposals) would be to defer payment of U.S. income tax until dividends are distributed.

Indeed, the Government in its original approach to the taxation of foreign source income, as outlined in its White Paper "Proposals for Tax Reform" (1969), conceded that Canadian international corporations should not be placed at a competitive tax disadvantage. At page 72 (paragraph 6.9) of the White Paper it is stated:

"On the other hand, Canadian business is often required to go abroad to seek foreign sources of supply and to develop foreign markets. Going international is frequently necessary to enable Canadian companies to achieve the economies of scale which are otherwise denied to them by the relatively small size of the Canadian domestic market. Such companies would find it hard to compete on the international scene if they were subject to more onerous taxes than those which apply to their competitors."

In addition to all of the foregoing, recent comments of the Minister of Finance indicate that the Government is also aware of difficulties that may be encountered when he stated as follows:

"We have already received a number of representations relating to the passive income provisions and it seems clear that some changes to the law as necessary should be made before the provisions take effect. However, we have concluded that it would be premature to introduce changes at this time before all representations have been received and given the study they require."

Your Committee recommends the following:

I A. Foreign accrual property income (passive income)

That the Government give renewed consideration to the "foreign accrual property income" (FAPI) rules with a view to making at least the following changes:

(a) that the definition of the term "foreign accrual property income" be amended to exclude from the category of income which is subject to the foreign affiliate rules any income or capital gains from property that may reasonably be regarded as having been used for the purpose of gaining or producing income from an active business; or, that the term be re-defined in such other manner as to ensure that the overall thrust of the foreign accrual property income provisions will be restricted so that the income subject to these rules will include only diverted income; in the result, that income such as interest on short-term deposits, interest on trade receivables, gains on the disposition of capital property used in a bona fide business operation and other like items will not be classed as foreign accrual property income.

(b) that the de minimis rule contained in the proposed legislation be broadened to the effect that the passive income rules will not apply to any foreign affiliate whose passive income does not exceed a specified percentage of its total gross revenue (such as the 30 per cent rule in the United States); alternatively, the de minimis rule may be expressed as a percentage of the foreign affiliate's gross assets.

(c) that the term "foreign affiliate" be re-defined for purposes of the foreign accrual property income rules to include with respect to foreign corporations only those corporations which are controlled directly or indirectly in Canada.

B. Dividends received from foreign affiliates

That the proposed differentiation in treatment of dividends received from foreign affiliates, depending on whether the foreign affiliate is located in a treaty country or non-treaty country, be eliminated and that all dividends received by resident corporations from foreign affiliates be exempt from tax. In any event, your Committee can find no valid reason for the failure to provide a tax credit in respect of foreign withholding taxes on dividends from non-treaty countries.

II. That the Government announce any changes in these provisions at the earliest opportunity and, pending same, that the effective date of the passive income rules which are to commence with respect to passive income earned in taxation years commencing after December 31, 1972 be deferred in their implementation for a period of at least one further year to December 31, 1973.

In conclusion, your Committee feels constrained to reiterate the views expressed by it in its report on the White Paper "Proposals for Tax Reform" condemning the implications inherent in the Government's proposals that vast tax avoidance schemes exist through the use of foreign entities. As stated in its report, the Committee believes that tax avoidance of this kind can be effectively blocked under existing legislation and failure to block such abuses (if they exist) is due more to lack of enforcement of existing law than to lack of legislation.

FARMERS

A. Basic herds

At the present time, farmers who maintain a permanent herd of animals for the purpose of producing livestock or livestock products for sale are construed as having a capital asset in the form of a "basic herd". This treatment has been sanctioned by the Department of National Revenue in its "Farmer's & Fisherman's Tax Guide" which sets out rules for establishing and enlarging basic herds. In other words, the brood animals forming part of the basic herd are analagous to other capital assets of the farmer such as land and orchards and to the fixed capital assets of any other business.

Under the proposed legislation, it is intended to abolish the concept of the basic herd and to treat such herds as inventory or stock-in-trade. Under the transitional rules, basic herds which have already been established will continue to be treated as capital assets to the extent that gains accrued at the commencement of the new system will not be subject to tax. However, gains accruing thereafter will be treated in the same manner as profits on the sale of inventory.

Your Committee is not aware of any reason for not continuing to recognize a permanent herd for what it is, namely, a capital asset.

Your Committee recommends that provision be made in the proposed legislation for the continued recognition of a farmer's permanent herd as a "basic herd" and, therefore, as a capital asset.

B. Capital gains and farm land

Your Committee is of the view that farmers occupy a special position in the economic structure of this country. Over the years, this sector of the economy has become increasingly subjected to pressures which have led to a profound change in the nature and use of farm lands. Your Committee is concerned by this trend and believes that measures should be taken to reverse it.

Your Committee recommends that consideration be given to extending the rollover provisions to permit land together with any other capital property which is used by an individual in a farming activity to be transferred, either during lifetime or on death, to lineal ascendants or descendants without being subject to capital gains treatment under the deemed realization provisions. This exemption should only be available in those circumstances where the transferee or transferees continue to carry on the farming activities.

EMPLOYEES PROFIT SHARING PLANS

Under present law, an employee who is a beneficiary under an employees profit sharing plan is taxed in the same manner as an employee who receives a profit sharing bonus directly from his employer and invests the money received. In summary, the employee's position is as follows:

1. the employee is taxed annually on any amount which his employer contributes to the plan on his behalf in the same manner as he would have been if he had received a bonus of an equivalent amount directly;

2. the employee is not allowed a deduction in respect of any contributions which he himself may pay into the plan;

3. the employee's share of the income earned each year by the plan is taxed annually in his hands; and

4. amounts received by the employee out of the plan (whether on retirement or otherwise) are, in general, non-taxable since these amounts will normally have been taxed previously.

Under the proposed legislation, the same general rules will apply. However, with the taxation of capital gains, the employee will also be taxed annually on his proportionate share of one-half of the net capital gains realized by the trust in each year (excluding any portion accrued prior to January 1, 1972) as well as on his share of the income earned by the trust in the year. In addition, provision is made in the proposed legislation with respect to the taxation of any unrealized gain on capital property distributed in specie to an employee on his withdrawal from the plan. Under these provisions, the employee is subject to tax in the year of his withdrawal on any accrued gain in respect of the property received from the trust (excluding any portion accrued prior to January 1, 1972) but it would appear from the proposed legislation that such accrued gains will be treated as ordinary income rather than as capital gain.

Quite evidently, these accrued gains should at least receive capital gain treatment and this should be clearly stated in the proposed legislation. However, even this treatment is unsatisfactory inasmuch as it places a member employee at a severe disadvantage vis-à-vis an employee who invests after-tax earnings directly. In the opinion of your Committee, capital property which is in substance the employee's property should not be considered as having been realized at fair market value on distribution to the employee. The deferral of gain would be consistent with the treatment to be accorded to a capital beneficiary of an ordinary trust.

Your Committee recommends the following:

1. that where property is distributed in specie to an employee by the trustee of an employees profit sharing plan, the trustee should be deemed to have disposed of the property for proceeds equal to its cost amount (as defined) to the trust;

2. that the employee should be deemed to have acquired the property at the cost amount to the trust; and

3. that the employee should not be taxed until he ultimately disposes of property, at which time any gain should be subject to capital gains treatment.

DEFERRED PROFIT SHARING PLANS

The tax treatment of deferred profit sharing plans differs from the treatment accorded employees profit sharing plans. The provisions of the present law relating to deferred plans are, in summary, as follows:

1. the employee is not taxed currently on any amounts which his employer may contribute to the plan on his behalf nor on the income earned in the year by the plan; and

2. instead, the employee is subject to tax on the full amount received on his withdrawal from the plan minus any portion representing a refund of contributions paid by the employee into the plan; the exclusion of the employee's contributions follows from the fact that the employee is not allowed a deduction for contributions but is obliged to make these payments out of tax-paid dollars.

It is significant to note that the amount taxable as income in the employee's hands represents not only his share of (a) the employer's contributions, and (b) the income earned by the plan, but also (c) his share of any net capital gains of the trust. This treatment has been acceptable to member employees partly because of the tax deferral feature inherent in these plans but also in large measure because the employee has the right to avail himself of the special tax averaging provisions of Section 36 of the present Income Tax Act in respect of a lump sum payment received on his withdrawal from the plan.

Under the proposed legislation, the lump sum distribution from the plan will continue to be treated as ordinary income whether the distribution is made from employer contributions, income accumulated by the trust, capital gains realized by the trust or unrealized gains in respect of property distributed in specie to the employee.

However, the tax averaging provisions of Section 36 of the present Act are not carried forward into the proposed legislation in respect of amounts accumulated by the trust after 1971. Instead, these provisions are to be replaced by averaging provisions which, for purposes of members of deferred profit sharing plans, appear to be quite inadequate. In this regard transitional provisions are to be introduced to permit employees to take advantage of an averaging provision equivalent to Section 36 of the present Act in respect of amounts accumulated in the trust up to December 31, 1971. However, if such an election be made by an employee, he cannot avail himself of either of the proposed averaging provisions (general or forward) in respect of that portion of the amount accumulated in the trust after December 31, 1971. Also, in future years, the transitional rule will be of diminishing benefit.

The general and forward averaging provisions available under the proposed legislation are not only much less generous than the elective provision under section 36 of the present Act, but the requirement to purchase an income averaging annuity in order to obtain forward averaging in effect removes the basic purpose of a deferred profit sharing plan, i.e. the accumulation of a lump sum on retirement.

In the opinion of your Committee, the effect of the proposed legislation will be to legislate these plans out of existence. Relief should be granted; the most appropriate means of achieving this relief is by the application of capital gain rules to the property of the trust.

Your Committee recommends the following:

1. that any amount distributed by the trustee of a deferred profit sharing trust out of capital gains realized by the trust should qualify for capital gains treatment in the employee's hands;

2. that where property is distributed in specie to an employee by the trustee, the trustee should be deemed to have disposed of the property for proceeds equal to its "cost amount" (as defined) to the trust;

3. that the employee should be deemed to have acquired the property at the "cost amount" to the trust; and

4. that the employee should not be taxed until he ultimately disposes of the property, at which time any gain should be accorded capital gain treatment.

DEEMED DISPOSITION ON CEASING TO BE A RESIDENT OF CANADA

One of the provisions of the proposed legislation which has occasioned widespread concern is the Government's proposal that taxpayers who emigrate from Canada will be deemed for capital gains purposes to have disposed of all of their capital assets (other than "taxable Canadian property") for an amount equal to the fair market value of the property at the date of their departure. Any taxable capital gain (or allowable capital loss) determined by reference to such fair market value must then be taken into account in computing the emigrant's income for tax purposes for the year in which he ceases to be a resident.

One of the effects of these provisions is that a taxpayer who leaves Canada to take up residence abroad will often be subject to double taxation—first in Canada in the year in which he ceases to be a resident and secondly in his new country of residence in the year in which he ultimately disposes of the property. This will occur if the foreign country imposes tax on capital gains (but does not have a provision similar to that contained in the proposed legislation to the effect that there is a deemed acquisition on becoming a resident) and if the tax payable in one country is not available as a credit against the tax payable in the other. The only possible relief in such a situation would be by way of tax treaty and, in your Committee's opinion, this type of relief is unlikely as we know of no other country which uses an accrual basis of accounting for capital gains upon entering or leaving the country. Failure to provide adequate relief runs counter to the principle in our law that double taxation is to be avoided.

The proposed legislation does provide an alternative to the foregoing. Instead of paying tax on his deemed gains as aforesaid, the taxpayer may elect to defer taxation until the year in which the gains are actually realized. However, if such an election is made, the taxpayer will be subject to Canadian income tax in the year of realization on his world income for that year (and not simply on the capital gain) to the same extent as if he were still a resident in Canada. This alternative will often prove unduly harsh in so far as it applies to persons who are not in fact resident in Canada when the gain is realized. For example, a taxpayer who has ceased to be a resident of Canada may find himself in the position of having to pay a substantial amount of Canadian income tax under these provisions in the year in which such a gain is realized even though the amount of the gain be nominal

Your Committee notes that the problem alluded to in the preceding paragraph only arises in respect of property other than "taxable Canadian property". It is important to realize that a taxpayer who leaves Canada and who has assets consisting of "taxable Canadian property" is not subject to the aforementioned rule. When he subsequently becomes a non-resident, he may dispose of his "taxable Canadian property" and, although subject to tax, the tax is calculated on the basis that he has no income other than his gain on the disposition of his "taxable Canadian property". Unless the taxpayer is otherwise deemed to be a resident of Canada, it is obvious that this rule has quite different tax effects from those which would apply if the same taxpayer also had property other than "taxable Canadian property". In the latter situation, the taxpayer will be subject to Canadian income tax in the year of realization on his world income. Your Committee does not appreciate the necessity for such a difference in tax treatment.

There are other anomalies such as the lack of carry-forward provisions in the event of capital losses

Your Committee also considers it unfortunate that no allowance has been made in these provisions for the many exceptional circumstances which are bound to occur; for example, where the taxpayer is forced to leave Canada for health reasons or by reason of a transfer abroad at the request of his employer.

Your Committee recommends:

1. that provision should be made to enable the Minister of National Revenue to grant relief if, in his opinion, hardship will result and the departure is occasioned

(a) by reason of illness;

(b) by reason of the transfer of an employee at the direction of the employer; or

(c) by any other reason which the Minister considers deserving of relief.

2. that when a taxpayer ceases to be a resident of Canada he should be deemed to have disposed of all his capital assets, wherever situate, for an amount equal to fair market value and that a fixed rate of tax, say of 20 per cent, be levied on any gains at that time; and

3. that if the taxpayer elects to defer payment of tax as provided for in the proposed legislation, he should not be obliged to pay Canadian income tax on his world income if he is not in fact resident in Canada in the year of realization; instead, all of the capital property owned by the taxpayer at the date of his departure should be deemed to be "taxable Canadian property" and the taxpayer should be subject to tax on any taxable capital gains realized in respect thereof in the same manner as other non-residents.

GIFTS, BEQUESTS AND DEVISES TO CHARITIES—DEEMED REALIZATION

The proposed legislation provides that all capital property (other than depreciable assets) owned by a taxpayer at the date of his death will be deemed to have been realized at its then fair market value and any capital gain or loss shall be included in income for that taxation year. In the case of depreciable property, there will be a deemed realization at midway between fair market value and undepreciated capital cost. A similar rule is proposed in respect of gifts inter vivos. There is an exception to the general rule where assets are transferred on death or by way of inter vivos gift to a spouse or to certain trusts in favour of a spouse. In the latter circumstances, the transferee is considered to have acquired the property at an amount equal to the "cost amount" of the property to the transferor.

Your Committee is concerned that no exception has been made in respect of gifts, bequests or devises to registered charitable organizations or to other similar tax-exempt organizations. By way of contrast, gifts, bequests and devises to such organizations are not subject to tax under the present Estate Tax Act nor under the provincial succession duty Acts. Your Committee therefore considers it unreasonable that a taxpayer should be subject to an income tax on a deemed realization when making a gift, bequest or devise to a charitable organization or to other similar tax-exempt organizations.

Your Committee appreciates that, in some circumstances, it may be more beneficial from an income tax point of view to accept a deemed realization of an amount equal to the fair market value of the subject matter of a gift and claim a deduction for the full market value thereof. On balance, however, your Committee believes that the legislation should be neutral in respect of any tax benefits resulting from the making of a charitable gift (except as otherwise provided).

Your Committee recommends that the proposed legislation be amended to provide that, where capital property is transferred to a charitable organization or other similar tax-exempt organization by way of gift, bequest or devise, the taxpayer will be considered to have disposed of the property for an amount equal to the "cost amount" thereof to him.

MINING AND PETROLEUM

Since the majority of provisions of the proposed legislation affecting the resource industries are to be implemented by amendments to the Income Tax Regulations, most of the comments which follow refer to the news release of the Department of Finance dated July 6, 1971. That document outlines the regulations proposed to apply to the mining and petroleum industries.

A. Earned Depletion

The proposed legislation will remove the automatic 33⅓ per cent depletion presently permitted under the Income Tax Act; it is to be phased out gradually over the next 5 years. Automatic depletion will be replaced by the concept that depletion must be earned by incurring exploration and development expenditures. The formula adopted will be that for every $3 of eligible expenditures made after November 7, 1969 a taxpayer would earn the right to deduct $1 of depletion in computing his taxable income after 1976, subject to a maximum of 33⅓ per cent of net production profits.

The proposed regulations define expenditures which will be eligible to earn depletion as including the following:

(a) Canadian exploration and development expenses, except for:

(i) the acquisition cost of Canadian resource properties,

(ii) costs in respect of such community and transportation facilities as houses, schools, hospitals, sidewalks, roads, sewers, sewage disposal plants, airports, docks and similar property (other than a railroad not situated on the mine property) acquired to establish community and transportation facilities necessary for the operation of the mine,

(iii) Canadian exploration and development expenses in the vicinity of the mine after it came into production, and

(iv) interest on funds required to finance exploration, prospecting and development.

(b) New depreciable mine assets (i.e. a building except an office building that is not situated on the mine property; mining machinery and equipment; and electrical plant set forth in Class 10 of Schedule B by virtue of subsection 1102 (9) of the Income Tax Regulations in connection with a new mine or a major expansion of an existing mine), and

(c) Expenditures on new buildings and machinery, to the extent that they are to be used to process ore from Canadian mineral resources beyond the stage to which they were previously processed in Canada, up to but not beyond the prime metal stage or its equivalent.

Expenditures for the acquisition of Canadian resource properties should, in the opinion on your Committee, qualify to earn depletion. The acquisition of such properties is an integral part of exploration and development expenditures: indeed it is the first step in any exploration or development program. Your Committee recognizes, however, that the inclusion of the cost of Canadian resource properties as expenditures which would be eligible to earn depletion would require that safeguards be inserted into the proposed legislation to prevent the buying and selling of such properties between related taxpayers to artificially earn depletion. One suggestion would be to deduct $1 of the transferor's earned depletion for each $3 of proceeds of disposition. If the transferor had no earned depletion capable of the reduction, it could be subject to recapture of depletion previously allowed.

Following the publication of the White Paper on Tax Reform, the Department of Finance issued a news release dated August 26, 1970 which contained a letter from the Minister of Finance to the provincial ministers of finance and treasurers. That document stated that the Government was "prepared to propose three further important changes affecting the taxation of the mining industry".

The first two changes were to widen the definition of expenditures which would qualify for "earned depletion" to include

(1) "the costs of new facilities located in Canada to process mineral ores to the prime metal stage or its equivalent"; and

(2) expenditures "for mine buildings, and machinery and equipment acquired in connection with a major expansion of an existing Canadian mine. This extension would put the major expansion of an existing mine on a roughly comparable tax footing with the opening of a new mine."

Your Committee heard evidence of expenditures of the type set forth in that letter which were incurred by reason of the acceptance by mining companies of the above-proposed changes. In your Committee's view, the mining industry was entitled to accept the government's proposals at their face value, namely as being "further important changes affecting taxation of the mining industry". In effect the Government represented that the changes proposed in its news release of August 26, 1970 would be implemented in legislation and regulations so that the mining industry might more immediately undertake the opening of new mines and the major expansion of existing mines in the interest of expanding employment and the national economy. One witness stated that his company had incurred expenditures of $120 million in expanding its production facilities, $30 million of which were spent on major smelter and refinery expansions. The Company made public its reliance on the August 1970 changes to the White Paper when it announced that expansion. The Government did not at that time contradict what was apparently the clear intention of its news release.

However in the proposed regulations released on July 6, 1971 there appears the statement that "expenditures on new buildings and machinery, to the extent they are to be used to process ore from Canadian mineral resources beyond the prime metal stage or its equivalent" would be eligible to earn depletion. The restriction to "new" buildings and machinery appears to contradict directly the Government's August 26, 1970 proposal to permit expenditures for "mine buildings and machinery and equipment acquired in connection with a major expansion of an existing Canadian mine" to earn depletion.

Your Committee heard evidence that officials in the Department of Finance have stated that their interpretation of the proposed regulations would render ineligible for earning depletion, expenditures on a major expansion of existing facilities. Their alleged interpretation will require eligible buildings to be new from the ground up. However since your Committee has not yet heard any witnesses from the Department of Finance, it has set out the facts in connection with

(1) the news release by the Minister of Finance on August 26, 1970 proposing additional changes to widen the definition of expenditures that can qualify for earned depletion;

(2) the proposed regulations released on July 6th, 1971 by which such proposed changes would be administered;

(3) the interpretation allegedly put upon the language of the Minister's proposal of August 26th, 1970 substantially limiting its scope; and

(4) evidence submitted that it was only following the Minister's widening of the proposed scope of the definition of earned depletion that projects involving substantial expenditures became feasible.

Your Committee recommends that serious consideration be given to the situation presented by this set of facts.

In any event, your Committee believes that if the government's intention be to encourage additional processing in Canada, all expenditures on structures and machinery incurred to increase Canadian processing facilities should qualify to earn depletion. Companies which cannot afford to construct elaborate smelting and refining facilities as part of their initial investment should not be penalized if subsequently they expand their existing processing facilities. Nor should the construction of custom smelters and refineries be denied this incentive to the extent that they process foreign ores.

In the White Paper on Tax Reform, at page 67, the Department of Finance proposed that expenditures "on exploration for or development of mineral deposits in Canada" be eligible to earn depletion. The August 26, 1970 news release reiterated the White Paper proposals in this regard. However the proposed regulations issued July 6, 1971 exclude the four above-noted categories of Canadian exploration and development expenses which will be eligible to earn depletion. Your Committee heard numerous submissions urging that these exclusions be eliminated.

The company engaged in the $120 million expansion programme referred to above incurred $10 million of expenditures on development of an existing open pit mine by stripping waste rock, only to discover that expenditures eligible to earn depletion are now to exclude "Canadian exploration and development expenses in the vicinity of a mine after it came into production".

Other witnesses stated that such an exclusion would penalize small mines that have insufficient capital to enable them to complete their total exploration before bringing a property into production. Your Committee feels that this particular exclusion is not warranted. The Government may be concerned with the difficulty of determining whether an open pit or underground operation is exploration or actual mining. Your Committee considers that to be a question of fact to be decided in each case, and does not consider that problem to be sufficiently burdensome to warrant excluding any bona fide exploration from being eligible to earn depletion.

Your Committee is of the opinion that the risks of the oil and gas industries are of sufficient magnitude to require that depreciable property such as production equipment and natural gas plants be eligible to earn depletion in the same manner as mining machinery and equipment are treated in the case of new mines and major expansions of existing mines. At a time when the cost of production equipment (such as drilling and production platforms) required for the development of off-shore and far-north petroleum and gas properties will be enormous (likely double and triple present costs), your Committee recommends that those and similar expenditures qualify to earn depletion.

In order to encourage the development of remote areas of Canada, your Committee recommends that the cost of social capital and transportation facilities be eligible to earn depletion. Those expenditures, when incurred in remote regions, can form a major portion of total exploration and development costs and are essential to the operation of a mine. Without such expenditures there could be no development of the property.

The exclusion from eligibility to earn depletion of interest on funds required to finance exploration projects can only penalize smaller companies with limited capital. Your Committee therefore recommends that the cost of borrowing money to be used to finance exploration qualify to earn depletion.

In summary your Committee recommends that all "Canadian exploration and development expenses" as defined in the proposed legislation should earn depletion, as should depreciable mine assets (whether new or used), depreciable production equipment and natural gas plants in the petroleum and natural gas industries, and expenditures on new buildings and machinery as well as on expanded buildings and machinery, to the extent that they are to be used to process ore from any mineral resources beyond the stage to which they were previously processed in Canada, up to but not beyond the prime metal stage or its equivalent. Therefore any expenditure which is required to reduce the profit from which depletion may be deducted should qualify as an eligible expenditure.

In the event that your Committee's recommendation in this regard be not adopted, an alternative (but less satisfactory) treatment would be to permit the expenditures enumerated above to be deducted from income by resource companies for purposes of computing their taxable income, but to stipulate that such expenditures would not reduce their production profits from which earned depletion is deductible. In other words if the expenditures in question are not to be permitted to earn depletion, they ought not to reduce the base on which depletion is calculated; however they should remain deductible in computing taxable income.

Your Committee recommends that the transitional period required to convert from automatic depletion to earned depletion be extended to 1980. Alternatively, companies should be permitted to "bank" eligible expenditures whenever incurred (that is, including expenditures incurred prior to November 7, 1969) after deducting from such "bank" all depletion previously allowed. Expenditures made prior to November 7, 1969, (which is the date prescribed by the proposed regulations as being the date after which companies can accumulate expenditures which will qualify to earn depletion) were incurred on the basis that automatic depletion would be available. Accordingly those expenditures should at least be included in the computation of earned depletion.

B. Accelerated Capital Cost Allowance

The three-year exemption from tax of profits derived from the operation of a new mine is to be withdrawn on December 31, 1973. It will be replaced by an accelerated write-off of specified capital equipment and facilities. The proposed regulations provide that the following types of new depreciable assets acquired before a new mine comes into production and for the purpose of gaining or producing income from the mine (including income from the processing of mineral ores up to the prime metal stage or its equivalent) will qualify for accelerated capital cost allowance:

1. a building (except an office building that is not situated on the mine property),

2. mining machinery and equipment,

3. electrical plant that would otherwise be included in Class 10 of Schedule B by virtue of section 1102 (9) of the Income Tax Regulations, and

4. houses, schools, hospitals, sidewalks, roads, sewers, sewage disposal plants, airports, docks and similar property (other than a railroad not situated on the mine property) acquired to establish community transportation facilities necessary for the operation of the mine.

Depreciable property of the type listed in clauses (1), (2), and (3), will also qualify for the accelerated capital cost allowance where it is acquired in the course of the major expansion of an existing mine and before the commencement of production at the higher level of capacity. For this purpose a major expansion will be considered to have taken place if the productive capacity of the mine mill is increased by at least 25 per cent.

The proposed regulations will enable both new mines and existing mines engaged in major expansion programmes to claim accelerated capital cost allowance on specified types of "new depreciable assets", provided they be acquired before the mine came into production (or, in the case of major expansions, before production at the increased capacity commences). The purpose of this incentive appears to be to promote increased development of new and expanded mines, rather than to encourage the purchase of new assets instead of used assets. Your Committee considers that if a company decides that it should, for economic and business reasons, purchase used assets rather than new ones, the cost thereof should be eligible for the accelerated capital cost allowance.

In addition your Committee sees no reason to limit this incentive to assets acquired before production begins. That restriction places at a severe disadvantage those mines with insufficient financing to defer the commencement of production until after all of the qualifying assets have been acquired.

Similarly many "new" mines cannot afford to build a smelter or a refinery immediately. If a smelter or refinery were added after a mine had established itself, the addition would not appear to qualify as a "major expansion", since that term is defined in the proposed regulations to mean an increase by 25 per cent in the productive capacity of the "mine mill". Your Committee is of the opinion that new or used smelting and refining assets, whenever acquired, should be eligible for accelerated capital cost allowance. This will help to promote increased processing of minerals in Canada.

Your Committee also wishes to draw attention to the following items which, although technical, do merit serious consideration:

(a) an expenditure which the proposed regulations describe as a "building (except an office building that is not situated on the mine property)" should be amended to include other "structures" to make it clear that dams, conveyor trussels, tanks and sub-structures will qualify for accelerated capital cost allowance;

(b) the phrase "mining machinery and equipment" should be amended to read "mining and processing machinery and equipment" to accord with the preamble to the proposed regulations. The preamble states that various assets acquired for the purpose of producing income from the mine, "including income from the processing of mineral ores up to the prime metal stage or its equivalent" would be eligible for fast write-off;

(c) the definition of the social capital transportation costs which will qualify for accelerated capital cost allowance should be re-phrased by stating the general categories of expenditures which are to qualify. That general principle should be followed by an enumeration of particular items which would not restrict the generality of the guiding principle. As presently worded, the proposed regulations would appear to exclude dams, lighting installations and water lines, for example;

(d) social capital and transportation costs incurred on a major expansion of an existing mine logically should qualify for fast write-off to the same extent as buildings, machinery and equipment; and

(e) the definition of "major expansion of an existing mine" should be revised to include a 25 per cent increase in the productive capacity of a mine or mill. On occasion the output of a mine could increase by 25 per cent without a corresponding increase in mill capacity (for example, where ore is custom milled). It is seldom that ore is custom milled outside Canada.

C. Transfers of Resource Properties

Under present law, mining properties and royalty interests are treated as capital assets. That is, their acquisition cost is not deductible and proceeds on their sale are not taxable. However, since 1962 the acquisition cost of oil and natural gas rights have been deductible as exploration and development expenses, and proceeds on their disposal have been fully taxable.

The proposed legislation will, following an eight-year transitional period, require the inclusion in income of the entire proceeds of sale of all Canadian resource properties. Correspondingly, the cost of acquiring such properties will be deductible from income.

Your Committee recommends that the transfer of Canadian resource properties between related companies should be permitted to occur without incidence of tax.

DEFERRED RECOGNITION OF CAPITAL GAINS (ROLLOVERS)

With the introduction of taxation of capital gains in Canada, provisions must be made for the deferring of tax in appropriate circumstances such as where there is no change in economic interest. The proposed legislation duly recognizes this and contains a number of provisions to defer the tax on gains. The principal ones are:

1. Involuntary dispositions where property has been destroyed or expropriated and the compensation received is used before the end of the following taxation year to replace the property.

2. The conversion of convertible bonds, debentures and notes for shares of the same corporation or bonds for bonds from the same debtor.

3. The transfer of assets to a corporation if the tranferor (which may include a partnership) owned at least 80 per cent of each class of the corporation's capital stock immediately following the transfer. This deferral is subject to a number of limitations and restrictions.

4. The transfer of capital property to a spouse or to specified classes of trusts for the benefit of a spouse.

5. The transfer of property by a partner of a Canadian partnership to the partnership. This deferral is also subject to certain restrictions and limitations.

6. The transfer of partnership property to a member of the partnership provided that the transferee subsequently carries on the business formerly carried on by the partnership.

7. The liquidation of a wholly-owned Canadian subsidiary into its Canadian parent corporation.

8. The disposition of shares on the reorganization of a corporation's share capital to the extent that any money or property (other than shares of the corporation) received by the shareholder does not exceed the adjusted cost base of the shares disposed of in the course of the reorganization.

9. The disposition of shares upon the amalgamation of two or more corporations provided that

(a) where preferred shares are disposed of, the shares of the successor corporation which the shareholder receives in exchange therefor have substantially similar rights and conditions as the preferred shares which were exchanged, and (b) where common shares are disposed of, the shareholders of the predecessor corporation receive in total at least 25 per cent of the issued common shares of the successor corporation.

Your Committee is of the opinion that the aforementioned rules which provide for deferred recognition of capital gains (rollovers) are of assistance but are not adequate. A tax system should not impede transfers of properties in bona fide legitimate business transactions. Sound management decisions often dictate that transfers of capital property be made between related groups of corporations for example, transfers of unused equipment from one subsidiary to another which could employ it more efficiently. Unfortunately the proposed legislation imposes a barrier to such transactions unless the corporation is willing to pay the tax on a deemed gain or is willing to assume a non-allowable capital loss. There is no valid reason for imposing penalties in circumstances such as this especially when appropriate safeguards have been incorporated in the proposed legislation to disallow superficial losses and to block artificial transactions and tax avoidance.

Your Committee fails to understand why the Government has departed from the ground rules it laid down in its own White Paper on Tax Reform, which read on page 42, paragraph 3.43:

"The government believes that there are some situations in which it would be unfair to collect a capital gains tax even though the taxpayer has sold or otherwise disposed of an asset at a profit. These situations fall into two broad classifications—those where there is a forced realization and those where there has been no change of underlying ownership even though there has been a sale."

Provided that there is no change in economic interest, no deemed realization should occur in any circumstances where, for example,

(a) there is a forced transfer,

(b) corporate reorganizations occur,

(c) property is transferred to a corporation by its "incorporators"—the proposed legislation restricts deferral to those situations where the transferor (which may include a partnership) transfers property to an 80 per cent controlled corporation,

(d) there is a transfer of assets to a business trust.

The Committee believes that there are other transactions which are as equally entitled to a deferral as those specified in the proposed legislation and suggested above. It is not possible for your Committee to envisage all of the transactions which should be accorded deferred gain treatment, therefore:

Your Committee recommends that the tax-free deferral provisions be broadened to the greatest extent possible to include all situations where underlying ownership remains the same. Because it is impossible to foresee all of the situations in which deferrals should be permitted, it may be appropriate to authorize the Minister of National Revenue to expand the deferral provisions by way of regulation as the need for such provisions becomes apparent, perhaps requiring prior approval as a condition of obtaining the benefit of a tax-free deferral.

DESIGNATED SURPLUS

Your Committee has noted that the concept of "designated surplus" is to be retained in the proposed legislation. This concept was originally introduced into the present Act in 1950 to prevent taxpayers from being able to distribute their corporate surplus free of tax. Prior to the enactment of these provisions, it was possible to arrange to receive a corporation's undistributed income in the form of a non-taxable capital gain through the relatively simple expedient of selling the shares of a surplus-laden corporation to another corporation which could then distribute the surplus of the first corporation free from income tax.

In order to offset any advantage to this kind of transaction, provisions were enacted to the effect that, where one corporation acquired control of another, the surplus or retained earnings on hand in the controlled corporation at the end of the taxation year immediately before control was acquired was designated and any dividends paid out of such surplus became taxable to the receiving corporation.

As events have shown the designation of corporate surplus was not entirely satisfactory and in 1963 a further provision was enacted known as Section 138A, whereby the receipt of amounts by a vendor of shares should be construed as a dividend and could be taxable as such in his hands. With the introduction of Section 138A it might have appeared that the designation of corporate surplus was no longer necessary, but it was nevertheless retained.

In considering the need for retaining the designated surplus provisions, your Committee notes that the tax savings that might be achieved under present law in the absence of designated surplus provisions could be as great as 60 per cent of the surplus involved (i.e., tax at the 80 per cent maximum rate of personal income tax less the 20 per cent dividend tax credit). The proposed inclusion of one-half of capital gains in ordinary income combined with the proposed reduction in the maximum rate of personal income tax and the change in the dividend tax credit system will substantially reduce the amount of tax saving which could be achieved by converting corporate surplus into a capital gain. Therefore, there is not the same need for the designated surplus provisions under the proposed legislation as there is under the present Act.

Despite this, various amendments have been made to these provisions which will effectively deter many valid corporate reorganizations. An example of this tightening of the designated surplus provisions is the deeming of a dividend to have been paid out of designated surplus in the event of a vertical amalgamation, e.g. the amalgamation of a parent and its subsidiary.

Having regard to the reduced need for the designated surplus provisions and the obstacles which these provisions place in the way of bona fide corporate reorganizations, these provisions should be eliminated; particularly in view of the fact that Sections 137(2) and 138A(1) of the present Income Tax Act, with which the Department of National Revenue has successfully attacked dividend stripping arrangements, are to be carried forward into the proposed legislation. It would also appear desirable for the purpose of simplification that your Committee give consideration to the abandonment of designated surplus, particularly when the proposed legislation is introducing so many new types of surpluses.

It might also be relevant to note that since the deemed dividend provisions of the proposed legislation do not apply to foreign corporations, Canadians who control such corporations will be able to convert corporate surplus into a taxable gain. There is therefore some precedent in the proposed legislation for eliminating the designated surplus concept. However their counterpart Canadian corporations will be refused such a treatment.

Your Committee recommends that the special taxes which are to be levied on dividends paid or received out of a corporation's designated surplus be withdrawn.

It is recognized that the elimination of tax on dividends paid out of designated surplus will presumably require amendments to the proposed legislation to provide that these dividends will reduce the cost base of shares for eventual capital gains purposes. It may also be necessary to provide that a corporation which wishes to make a distribution of pre-1972 designated surplus will be required to "tax pay" amounts distributed from such surplus by paying the special 15 per cent tax relating to 1971 undistributed income.

Recent amendments to the proposed legislation were tabled pertaining to the definition of designated surplus. One of the effects of these amendments would be to designate the undistributed income on hand of a corporation the control of which changed prior to the end of its 1972 taxation year. This would appear to mean that an amalgamation which was effected before 1972 would result in the designation of the entire surplus of each of the amalgamating corporations. Such designation of surplus would carry over into the amalgamated corporation.

Your Committee considers that such a result could not have been intended, and it desires to voice its disapproval of designated surplus in general and this amendment in particular.

CONSOLIDATED RETURNS OF INCOME

The question of consolidated returns of income by related corporations is not a new one, having been raised many times in the past. In point of fact this concept was part of our taxation law for some 20 years, between the periods of 1932 and 1952. The apparent reason for its introduction into the law during that period, was the absence of business loss carry-forward provisions and as a result, qualified corporate groups were permitted to consolidate their incomes and thus absorb their losses on a current basis. In effect, these corporations were prepared to be associated for income tax purposes as if they were a single entity.

In 1952, with the introduction of provisions allowing taxpayers to a business loss carry-over, it was believed that there was a reduced need for consolidated returns of income by corporate groups and the concept was therefore abandoned. There is also some suggestion that the decision was dictated by administrative convenience.

In appreciating this matter it is noted that for some period of time we have also had in our law the concept known as associated corporations. In order to assist small business corporations, provision was made in the income tax law for a dual rate of corporate tax. That is, the corporation was subject to tax at one rate on a defined amount of taxable income and at a higher rate on any taxable income in excess of this amount. However, it was decided that corporations which formed part of a related group (as defined) should be considered to be associated and that one corporation in the group should be entitled to the lower rate of tax or, alternatively, that the amount eligible for the lower rate should be allocated amongst the group. These associated corporation rules were for the purpose of determining the applicable tax rate and did not permit the application of current losses from one corporation to another within the group.

Throughout the years, extensive rules have been enacted for the purpose of deeming corporations to be associated. Under the present provisions, the Minister of National Revenue is also entitled, in his discretion, to treat corporations as associated. The effect of these provisions is to associate corporations who would not otherwise wish to be associated.

In the opinion of your Committee it appears somewhat incongruous that there exist situations wherein some related corporations wish to be associated, and other related corporations do not. To this end, the concept of the consolidated return of income provided a vehicle for the former while the concept of the associated corporation provided the vehicle for the Minister of National Revenue in respect of the latter. The difficulty is that upon the abandonment of consolidated return of income provisions, the former group continue to be associated corporations without the ability to apply current losses from one corporation to another.

Your Committee recognizes the fact that separate corporations must often be created for various commercial purposes. In some cases, provincial or federal laws will require separate corporations to be established. These corporations are nevertheless in substance part of the same corporate family and their financial consolidation should therefore be duly recognized.

While the loss carry-over provisions permit application by each corporation of current losses to other taxation years, nevertheless, the immediate application of such losses to the income of other corporate members of the group is a more realistic view of the situation. Your Committee recognizes the basic principle that profits of one member of a group should be used to reduce the losses of another member of the group. This principle has been duly recognized in the United States.

Because of the restricted number of rollover provisions in the proposed legislation and the resulting difficulty which will be encountered in merging the operations of a related corporate group, your Committee believes that it is essential that corporations should be permitted to file consolidated returns of income, if they so elect.

The Committee has made this suggestion on previous occasions. This view has been reinforced by other notable committees, commissions and professional bodies, including the House of Commons Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the Royal Commission on Taxation (Carter), the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants.

Your Committee recommends that provision be made in the proposed legislation to permit corporations which are members of a qualifying group to elect to file on a consolidated return of income basis. If it is found that such a provision is impractical, your Committee recommends that consideration be given to the introduction of a scheme of subvention payments similar to that formerly used in the United Kingdom.

CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Your Committee has studied the representations made by this industry and has come to the conclusion that two major points should be modified in the proposed legislation.

The first one relates to the reporting of income and arises from the fact that it is extremely difficult to determine the annual income from contracts such as stipulated sum contracts of more than one year's duration. For this reason, the construction industry has historically reported income on the completed contract method of under two years' duration. This method has been approved by the Minister of National Revenue as a matter of administrative practice. However, there is no statutory authority for this method of reporting income and the taxpayer has accordingly no right of appeal if the Minister refuses in any given situation to accept this method of reporting.

The second problem raised relates to the fact that the description of assets falling within class 12(h) and class 22 of Schedule B to the present income tax regulations is unduly restrictive in respect of the conditions referred to therein. It is the view of your Committee that the conditions set forth in these classes do not reflect present-day prices for the purpose of class 12(h) and that a more extended definition should be provided for the equipment to be included in class 22.

Your Committee recommends

1. That the completed contract method on fixed sum contracts of under two years' duration should be incorporated in the proposed legislation as an accepted method to determine a construction business' taxable income for a year.

2. That special attention be given in regulations to be issued concerning capital cost allowance related to the construction industry in order to remove unnecessary restrictions and to expand its application.

CAISSES POPULAIRES AND CREDIT UNIONS

Under the proposed legislation, caisses populaires and credit unions will no longer be exempt from tax. Instead, it is proposed that these organizations will be taxed in substantially the same manner as other private corporations. As such, they will be entitled to take advantage of the small business deduction to the extent allowable to other private corporations.

One of the defects of the proposals originally put forward by the Government was that the provisions relating to the small business deduction failed to give recognition to the constraints that are placed upon caisses populaires and credit unions by their governing legislation. These organizations are required by law to set aside an annual mandatory reserve, no part of which may at any time be distributed amongst the organization's members. In addition, they may set aside such additional reserve as they consider necessary to assure their financial stability. Like the mandatory statutory reserves, these voluntary reserves cannot be distributed to members.

In considering the effect of the original tax proposals on these organizations it should be recognized that amounts set aside as reserves annually pursuant to the relevant governing legislation are not allowed as a deduction in computing income for tax purposes. These reserves should not be confused with the allowances which caisses populaires and credit unions will be allowed to claim as a deduction under the proposed legislation in respect of their outstanding loans and investments.

In view of such statutory restrictions, these organizations are unable to distribute all of their after-tax income by way of dividend and are therefore unable to perpetuate the small business deduction in the same manner as other private corporations. Having duly considered the representations submitted by these organizations, your Committee concluded that the following recommendation should be put forward:

> That caisses populaires and credit unions should not be required to include in their "cumulative deduction account" (for purposes of determining the available balance of their total business limit of $400,000) such portion of their taxable income as is set aside in the year as a reserve to the extent that such reserve is not available for distribution to members. This should be subject to the further limitation that no recognition be given to any such reserve to the extent that the total amount set aside does not exceed, say, 5 per cent of the organization's total deposits and share capital at the commencement of the year.

The effect of the amendments which the Government recently tabled in this regard is to alleviate, at least in part, some of the problems which confronted these organizations under the original proposals. We commend the Government for introducing these amendments. However, as the effect of these amendments differs somewhat from the afore-mentioned recommendation, your Committee recommends that this matter be given further consideration by the Government.

ADMINISTRATION AND ENFORCEMENT

Your Committee has had referred to it several provisions of the proposed legislation relating to enforcement. Your Committee concurs with attempts to protect the rights of taxpayers whose affairs are under investigation. The Committee is concerned however, that these attempts have not gone far enough, and furthermore, that other existing defects have not been dealt with.

Under the proposed legislation the power of holding an inquiry pursuant to the Inquiries Act is continued. Nevertheless, the changes proposed permit:

(a) the hearing officer to be appointed by the Tax Review Board upon the application of the Minister of National Revenue,

(b) the person whose affairs are being investigated is entitled to be present, and to be represented by counsel, and

(c) the hearing officer may, upon application by the Minister, exclude the person whose affairs are being investigated, and his counsel, if their presence would prejudice the conduct of the inquiry.

Your Committee has also noted that in matters of evasion, if the Minister of National Revenue has elected to proceed by way of a criminal prosecution, no liability for any ministerial penalty may be levied unless such penalty was assessed prior to the laying of the information or complaint.

Finally, the saving provision relating to the prevention of double ministerial penalties as found in Section 56, ss 3 of the present legislation, is omitted from the proposed legislation.

Your Committee recommends the following:

1. that in respect of inquiries into the affairs of a taxpayer under the proposed legislation:

(a) the appointed hearing officer should not be an official of the Department of National Revenue,

(b) the taxpayer whose affairs are being investigated should be entitled either personally or through counsel, to cross-examine all witnesses and should also be entitled to receive a copy of the transcript of all evidence taken at such inquiry, and

(c) any order excluding from an inquiry the taxpayer whose affairs are being investigated, or his counsel, should be subject to immediate review by a judge of the Federal Court of Canada;

2. that the double jeopardy provision should be expanded so that if the Minister of National Revenue elects to proceed against a taxpayer by way of information or complaint, the Minister cannot as well levy a ministerial penalty; or, conversely, if the Minister elects to proceed against a taxpayer by way of ministerial penalty, the Minister cannot as well commence criminal proceedings by way of information or complaint; and

3. that the saving provision contained in Section 56, ss 3 of the present Act be introduced into the proposed legislation.

VALUATION DAY

With the introduction of a capital gains tax in Canada, it is essential that such a tax should not apply to any portion of ultimate proceeds of disposition which represent simply a recovery of original cost. This was the error of the White Paper when it originally proposed that capital property should generally be valued at fair market value at Valuation Day.

To some extent the foregoing error has been corrected by the introduction of the concept popularly referred to as the "tax-free zone". Gains will be included for taxation purposes only to the extent that the proceeds exceed the higher of actual cost and Valuation Day value, and losses will be deductible only to the extent that the proceeds are less than the lower of actual cost and Valuation Day value.

Your Committee commends the Government for introducing this concept in the proposed legislation. However, the Committee regrets that the Government did not see fit to provide that property acquired by a taxpayer prior to June 18, 1971 by way of gift, bequest or devise should be deemed to have been acquired at a cost equal to the fair market value of the property at date of acquisition. Such a provision would be inconsistent with the proposed treatment of property so acquired after December 31, 1971.

Your Committee recommends that provision be made in the new law to the effect that property acquired by way of gift, bequest or devise prior to June 18, 1971 be deemed to have been acquired at an amount equal to its fair market value at date of acquisition for the purpose of calculating any taxable gain but not for the purpose of calculating any allowable loss.

EPILOGUE

The foregoing sets forth the observations, opinions and recommendations of your Committee on the briefs presented and witnesses heard up to and including the 27th day of October, 1971. It is therefore of a preliminary nature only.

Your Committee intends to present a second report after the termination of its hearings covering submissions made subsequent to October 27, 1971.

Some of the topics with which your Committee intends to deal in its second report are:

1. professional income on an accrual basis,

2. new rules applicable to partnerships and to trusts and their beneficiaries,

3. the treatment of mutual funds, investment corporations and clubs,

4. investment income of private corporations,

5. Canadian income of non-residents such as withholding tax, branch tax, non-resident owned investment corporations, capital gains of non-residents,

6. corporate distributions,

7. natural resources (other than those already dealt with) for example the pulp and paper industry,

8. mutual funds (registered retirement savings plan),

9. treatment of income of insurance companies

10. the ability of recipients of all forms of lump sum payments to avail themselves of general and forward averaging even though they elect the equivalent of section 36 averaging in respect of the pre-1972 portion of such payments.

11. Tax incentives for fixed income securities.

Your Committee finally notes with approval that the proposed legislation has been the subject of discussion at the recent conference between the Minister of Finance and his counterparts in each of the provincial governments. It is to be hoped that these will be continuing discussions. The Committee's views as to the need for these consultations in order to develop a unified tax system are adequately expressed in its report on the White Paper "Proposals for Tax Reform" where it was stated:

"Your Committee, however, wishes to again express its appreciation of the Government's desire to work closely with the provinces in an attempt to evolve with the passage of time a symmetrical taxation system, and it urges the Government to continue its quest for the attainment of this highly desirable goal."

Respectfully submitted,

Chairman

CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that messages had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the names of Messrs. Hymmen, Deakon and Stewart (Cochrane) had been substituted for those of Messrs. Caccia, Hymmen and Guay (St. Boniface), and that the names of Messrs. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo) and Osler had been substituted for those of Messrs. Gibson and Stewart (Cochrane) on the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

JOINT COMMITTEE—ADDITION TO COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. John M. Macdonald moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(h):

That the name of the honourable Senator O'Leary be added to the list of senators serving on the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

PROPOSED STUDY OF PROCEDURES BY LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—MOTION WITHDRAWN

On the Motion:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be instructed to consider and from time to time report on procedures for the review by the Senate of instruments made in virtue of any statute of the Parliament of Canada, and to consider in connection therewith any public documents relevant thereto; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the preceding session be referred to the Committee.

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, this motion stands in my name. It need not be proceeded with, because the Senate has already acted on the suggestion that we join with the other place in the establishment of a joint committee pursuant to the Statutory Instruments Act.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Do you mean you had originally intended to speak and now you find that it is not useful to do so?

Hon. Mr. Martin: We will have the opportunity later on, as will the Leader of the Opposition.

The Hon. the Speaker: The motion has not been put and the Leader of the Government is asking that the motion be now withdrawn. At the request of the honourable Senator Martin, this motion is withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: No, it is adopted. How can you speak on a motion that has already been adopted?

Hon. Mr. Martin: One day in my absence the invitation from the other house carried on a proper motion made by Senator McDonald. I was unaware, although the motion stood in my name, that we agreed to the appointment of members of the committee. For these reasons it is not necessary to proceed with the motion standing in my name.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It cannot stand once it is adopted.

Hon. Mr. Martin: It was placed on the Order Paper before I was aware that the House of Commons wished to join with us in setting up such a committee.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: From my viewpoint it is senseless.

Motion withdrawn.

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, November 3, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Martin, calling the attention of the Senate to the Canada-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement, done at Ottawa, October 20, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, October 20, 1971, and to the Canada-Soviet Communiqué, dated October 26, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, October 26, 1971.

Hon. Andrew Thompson: Honourable senators, I have read with much interest the speeches which were made in the Senate concerning the recent visit of Premier Kosygin. I think that all of us would agree that it is an encouraging sign for better world understanding when leaders of nations embark on global visits outside their traditional ideological regions. This seems to be the year for such travel. President Nixon will be visiting the People's Republic of China and the Soviet Union. Mr. Brezhnev has recently visited France. President Tito has just visited the United States and Canada. Senator Cameron documented the sequence of the initiatives by the Prime Minister which led to the visit of Mr. Kosygin.

Small nations such as Canada are playing a significant role on the international scene. In order to re-examine and re-define familiar world patterns, Willy Brandt removed some of the hostility of over a quarter of a century with such moves as the recognition of the Oder-Neisse Line. Today there are momentous decisions resulting not from the agony of war but from painstaking negotiation.

The General Assembly has now admitted the People's Republic of China to the United Nations, and Britain has voted to join the European Common Market. In this process of re-defining familiar world patterns, Canadians are retaining a realistic knowledge that, through geography, language, trade, and a general similarity of democratic institutions, our closest ties are with the United States of America. An acknowledgement of this fact does not exclude Canada from looking to developing friendly relations with other nations.

Contained in all the Senate speeches concerning Mr. Kosygin's visit was an acceptance that we should try again to embrace the renewed call by the U.S.S.R. for international co-operation. The Leader of the Opposition said:

> Aware as I am of the fact that the U.S.S.R. is now calling for "international co-operation" across ideological barriers in terms that go far beyond the "peaceful co-existence" of bygone days, nevertheless I cannot bring myself to forget those fruitless periods of so-called "peaceful co-existence" and the "building of bridges of communication."

Over the years whenever there was initiative on the part of the Soviet Union to build bridges of communication, one member of the Senate who always maintained the hope that such bridges could be built was the honourable Senator Paul Martin.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Thompson: I recently read some of the speeches made by Mr. Vishinsky in the United Nations when he lashed out at Canada's representative, the Honourable Paul Martin, for his condemnation of the ruthless annexation by the Soviet Union of over 103 million people. I therefore marvel that on the occasion of another visit, yet another call for building bridges of communication, Senator Martin, despite those earlier rebuffs, once again steps forward with tireless vigour and dedication to answer the call.

I noticed that the Leader of the Government, in referring to the agreement between the Soviet Union and Canada, said:

> We were looking toward an agreement a few years ago on broad exchanges with the U.S.S.R. The agreement might have been obtained much earlier, but for a temporary setback in relations which occurred as a result of disturbances in Central Eastern Europe about three years ago.

By "temporary setback" I assumed he was referring to the movement of tanks of the Soviet Union into Czechoslovakia.

We all know that when the occasion demands, the Leader of the Government can speak with as much bite, and has as passionate a regard for the freedom of the individual as any one in this house, but if he feels it serves the purpose to speak in a softer tone he can do that with great ability. The Leader of the Opposition on this occasion said that perhaps the time had come to make an act of faith in the goodwill of the U.S.S.R. in order to determine whether we can restore the concept of peace from its present debilitated condition to one of vigorous good health.

I am making these statements because I believe there are people in this country, particularly those with eastern European backgrounds, who are not aware that in every party represented in Parliament there is a commitment to the freedom of the individual. This commitment transcends any party consideration. As Canadians we have always upheld the objective of bringing about this freedom of the individual throughout the world.

When I was a guest at a luncheon in Mr. Kosygin's honour, I could not help having considerable scepticism concerning this offer to build bridges of goodwill. I was thinking of the statistics of the massive military might of the Soviet Union; the fact, for example, of their nuclear armaments. They have over 380 nuclear armed submarines and they are building ten more every year.

It is not long ago that I was in Austria watching the anguish on the faces of Czechoslovakian refugees as they waited at the airport to travel with me to a new homeland. It is not that long ago that members of both houses endorsed the opening of Canada to over 40,000 Hungarian refugees, many of whom had crawled through barbed wire in order to get to freedom. It is not that long ago that some who live in Canada witnessed brutality inflicted on their relatives by the might of the communist system.

I talked with a few of these Canadians this weekend, some of whom were former members of Parliament. They love freedom and the parliamentary system. They were people who were distinguished for their contribution to their former country and society. They showed me pictures of men who looked like His Honour the Speaker, the Government Leader, and the Leader of the Opposition.

They said that within the sanctity of their parliament they were told what was to be their fate when the communist system swept over their country. One night there was an order for the arrest of members of parliament, judges and other intelligentsia, which stated that care was to be taken to ensure that these operations were "carried out without disturbance and panic, so as not to permit any demonstrations and other troubles not only on the part of those deported, but also on the part of a certain section of the population".

[Hon. Mr. Thompson.]

In one night, in one small democratic country, over 40,000 men and women were herded into cattle cars and carried off; others were beaten and shot. Many had relatives in Canada who have received no news of them, and who, despite the fact that they know of the belief in freedom of the leaders of our Government and Opposition, felt they were obliged to protest when Mr. Kosygin came to Canada. Frankly, I was thrilled when I read that a ram's horn sounded the traditional call of the Jewish people in the streets of Ottawa; that 7,000 Jews, with solemn dignity, came to protest in the only way they knew, peacefully, against the suffering of their people in the Soviet Union. I was proud of those moderate Canadians who stood silently in the rain, demonstrating on behalf of their people, whether in the Ukraine, the Baltic, or the Soviet orbit. To me, these orderly, peaceful demonstrations showed the virility of our democracy. To those who belong to the majority groups, and who may not readily feel compassion for refugees and families which cannot be united I would say, paraphrasing John F. Kennedy, that those who make peaceful dissent impossible will make violent dissent inevitable.

The members of the Senate who appeared before the second most powerful man in the world asked him questions as free men. I was proud to listen to Senator Croll's speech, and to hear the questions asked by himself and Senator Yuzyk, and of the part played by Dr. Haidasz, Mr. Deakon, and others. I was proud to have the opportunity, on behalf of my wife's people, of handing to the interpreter standing beside this second most powerful man in the world the names of some families who are hoping to be re-united. I was able also to hand to the interpreter a document containing some of the reasons why people are unable to leave Estonia, one of which is that it costs the equivalent of $500 to obtain a visa. This is a lot of money for many Estonians. Another fact is refugees who have settled in Canada, and who are still hoping to keep in touch with and give comfort to their relatives in their former land, are paying an import duty of over 1,000 per cent, and they are not allowed to send second hand clothing.

Honourable senators, there are some who feel that protest is foreign to Canada. In looking at our country and at the United States, I would say we must recognize that this approach to dissent, by protesting in groups, is going to be very much a part of our political scene.

I read the report to the President of the United States by the National Commission on Causes and Prevention of Violence. A study which was done in 1968 indicated that, even at that time, in the major cities of the United States there were seven demonstrations a day. Whether we like it or not, confrontation, as a method used by minorities to express their aspirations, is going to be part of the political picture.

Over the weekend I read an article in the Canadian Bar Review, by Dr. Mark MacGuigan, entitled "Democracy and Civil Disobedience". I know that some of us would like to hark back to former times and say that this kind of protest or confrontation is foreign to the history of either Canada or Britain. In his article, Dr. MacGuigan points to a study in which there was a behavioral analysis of such civil confrontation in the period between 1948 and 1965. It took into account only violent events and provided a profile of political violence in 84 countries. In this analysis the country which ranks first, having the least number of these confrontations, is Finland with a score of zero. Indonesia is last, with a score of 190. Canada stands seventeenth with a score of 10, and the United Kingdom twentieth with a score of 17.

Dr. MacGuigan refers to a recent essay by Professor Kenneth McNaught, in which he pointed out that confrontation has been very frequently an essential ingredient in Canada's historical evolution. He goes on to say that, apart from such major events as the rebellions of 1837 and 1838, the Riel rebellions of 1869 and 1885, the anticonscription riots in Quebec City in 1918, and the Winnipeg general strike in 1919, Professor McNaught has discovered that between 1876 and 1914 there were at least 33 interventions in strikes by the military and five occasions on which troops were called out to control Orange-Catholic rioting. He concludes that the confrontation of protest for reforms is an integral part of our political processes.

I think that there is also a tradition of non-violent confrontation which is part not only of the spectrum in Europe but also in Canada. I suggest that Daniel O'Connell used such a type of non-violent approach in order to wage a victorious campaign on behalf of Catholic rights in Ireland. I suggest that the Mennonites and the Quakers in the 17th century also demonstrated the effectiveness of this approach. This concept was espoused by Thoreau and Tolstoy in the 19th century and by Gandhi and King in the 20th century.

Those people who feel they have a justifiable cause to protest, but need an example of a method by which to protest successfully, can look to Martin Luther King. Martin Luther King stated that acquiescence and violence are morally unacceptable. He considered acquiescence cowardly, and violence both impractical and immoral. Jerome Frank made a study of this whole subject, and in his book The Psychology of Non-Violence he points out that the effective fighter, in order to achieve his end through non-violence, does it through his candor, his courage, his sense of responsibility and his personal dignity. By demonstrating the highest moral principles he continuously reminds himself and his adversary that he is not only human but is a better human specimen than his opponent. The non-violent fighter tries to win by turning the opponent's values against him by morally embarrassing him.

I would suggest that the Canadians of Jewish, of Ukrainian and of Baltic background, as well as those of other ethnic origins, demonstrated with a quiet dignity when they stood in the rain and through the night to show their protest to the system which Mr. Kosygin represents. By the quiet and dignified manner of their protest, I think they were showing courage and a sense of responsibility with an emphasis on the highest moral principles. But unfortunately you also get people who will destroy the efforts that such people have made, and here I am thinking of those who would resort to violence. The great irony is that the young man who posed as the fighter for freedom has dispelled any regard for freedom when by his very action he abused it. In my view not only did he destroy his credentials as a fighter and as a believer in freedom by grabbing the elderly Mr. Kosygin, but he also caused the loss of respect for his particular cause on the part of the general public across Canada.

It is also my view that those who control television have a responsibility when there is protest—and here I agree with Senator Cameron—and I am not sure that they have yet learned to assume their responsibility in reporting protest demonstrations. It seems to me that they focus too much on the sensational. I think that in the case of this young man Matrai and the dishonour which he brought not only to the cause he espoused but to all people of European background in Canada who were demonstrating, as well as Canadians generally, the television medium, in focusing on him, failed to provide balance with the articulate voice of responsible leaders and showed an approach which will only encourage violent protest.

Honourable senators, I wanted to talk about protest because while we all welcome visits by leaders from other countries and the opportunity to have dialogue with them, I do not think that we should feel that legitimate protest does us any disservice. We must keep in mind that peaceful demonstrations by minority groups can take place only in a free country. I think that these demonstrations, carried out in a peaceful and orderly manner, indicate to leaders such as Mr. Kosygin the vitality and strength of our democracy and emphasize our concern for the rights of individuals throughout the world.

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, before I crave your indulgence to make some observations on the motion currently before us, may I say how delighted I am, and I know in this I am joined by all in this house, at the addition to this assembly of the three honourable senators who have joined us this evening.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Manning: I should like to say to Senator Goldenberg, Senator van Roggen and Senator Buckwold that from my own experience in the relatively short time I have been in this house I am sure you will find your presence here and your participation in the work of the Senate stimulating and rewarding in many ways. I am confident that you will come to enjoy and appreciate the friendship of a body of men and women who represent a great many years of experience not only in the field of public service but in many of the walks of life pursued by the people of this country.

I listened, as I am certain all honourable senators listened, with attention and appreciation to what has just been said by Senator Thompson. I find myself in very substantial agreement with much of what he has said. My reason for entering the debate is that I feel strongly there are other aspects of the subject under discussion that should be examined by all of us and should be placed on the official record of this house.

Under ordinary circumstances the subject matter of this inquiry would have very limited significance and importance. There is nothing unusual about the head of a foreign government visiting this country, and there is nothing unique about a joint communiqué couched in diplomatic generalities being issued at the close of such a visit. The same is true of the General Exchanges Agreement signed by the Prime Minister of Canada and by the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. What gives this debate significant and important dimensions is the fact that certain of the circumstances relating to Mr. Kosygin's visit were far from being ordinary. Senator Thompson pointed out that Mr. Kosygin represents the government of the most ruthless totalitarian world power of modern history, a government that has repeatedly resorted to military aggression and used its vast military might to crush into subjection a whole list of small neighbouring nations. In the words of Churchill, it has "rung down an iron curtain behind which the light of freedom has been extinguished, and millions of once free people are held fast in the iron fist of this ruthless dictatorship".

We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that Mr. Kosygin represents a government that has abolished free elections and has banned freedom of the press, a government that denies to its subjects freedom of expression, freedom of movement and the right to dissent. In Canada, on the other hand, we are a nation whose people hold that human dignity and personal freedom are the inalienable rights of all human beings.

We profess allegiance to a way of life that respects spiritual verities, the processes and institutions of democracy, the rule of law, freedom of the press, the right to dissent, and the right of every individual to decide and pursue his own interests and desires within the framework of a free and democratic society. The Canada which Mr. Kosygin visited is a nation which shares the North American continent with a neighbour nation, also a world power, but one whose free and democratic way of life is in many respects at variance with communist dictatorship but more parallel to our own, a nation with whose destiny and future we are inseparably linked, not only because of our mutual interests and heritage but because our economy, our standards of living, and our national security are all dependent on our close and continuing relationship with the United States. These factors prevent Canada from playing the role of an unaligned nation in matters of foreign policy and international relations. The ideological convictions and the national interest of the Canadian people dictate that we remain a nation committed to the concepts of life and government which we share with our southern but not with our northern neighbour.

It is against this background that the Canadian-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement and the Canadian-Soviet Communiqué should be assessed in the context of a series of recent developments in the field of Canadian foreign policy. These developments include the publication of the White Paper on Canadian Foreign Policy which stressed a new role for Canada in international affairs. What that role was to be was not stated in precise terms, but the implication was that Canada intended to establish a more independent status. There was to be an extension of Canadian domestic policy into the field of international relations. Our sovereignty and our domestic interests were to become more and more the number one concern. It is not unreasonable to suggest that these statements were intended to counter a certain measure of public criticism that in the past Canadian foreign policy had been unduly influenced by the United States.

About the same time as the White Paper was issued an increasing number of statements were made by federal Government spokesmen critical of United States economic influence in Canada. They asserted the Government's intention to insist on more rigid control of United States companies operating in this country and, in general, a lessening of United States influence in Canadian affairs. Some of these statements were intemperate and ill-advised and they contributed significantly to the fostering of emotional negative nationalism which was fanned by the mass media, by the socialistic element among pseudo intellectuals, and, of course, by the NDP and other anti-American political factions. I am aware that the Government of Canada denies that any anti-American sentiment was intended to be conveyed by those statements, but we must face the fact that this is not the impression of Canadian citizens, and it is not the impression of some men who, over a long period of time, have been staunch supporters of the present Government of this country. Comments have been made by Mr. Bruce Hutchison, to which reference was made by a previous speaker in this debate. These comments appeared in the Ottawa Journal on October 27. Mr. Hutchison has been a staunch supporter of the Liberal Government for a long time. In this article he expresses in strong terms his impression of the feeling which has been created by the actions and statements of the present Government. I quote:

> How, one is constrained to ask, could the Government imagine that its continual anti-American gestures would bring no response from Washington, that Joe Greene's shouts at Denver, for instance, would not be heard within the White House, or that any president would ignore Mr. Trudeau's ultimate whoop of complacency—"we know darn well" that the United States will have to defend Canada no matter what Canada does or does not?
> To assume that these yelps and pinpricks did not penetrate and hurt our neighbours was to assume that they were not human like us. To be sure, the American public heard little from Canada, taking it for granted, as we always complain, but the American government heard all right and reacted humanly, if not wisely . . .
> How have we managed, in the three years of Trudeau, to reverse the healing work, the climate and the continental understanding achieved in the five years of Lester Pearson?

I call your attention to this statement because I am sure it will be accepted that Mr. Hutchison is not speaking from an anti-Government partisan bias. Then came the Prime Minister's visit to the U.S.S.R. There was nothing improper about Mr. Trudeau's visit. What rightly disturbed a great many Canadians was his use of the occasion to link Canada's desire for closer friendship with the U.S.S.R. with his expressed wish to counterbalance the presence and influence of the United States in and over Canadian affairs. I am aware that the Government Leader of this house, the Prime Minister himself, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have all denied that any anti-American sentiment was involved.

• (2100)

But, honourable senators, such denials do not undo what was said and the conclusions drawn, not only by the media in this country and abroad but by the public and many who have commented on this matter since the time it occurred.

I hold in my hand a newspaper clipping from the Toronto Telegram of June 2, in which a columnist, L. J. Zink, made these observations regarding the comments of the Prime Minister in Moscow and the events relating to them:

> Mr. Trudeau's actions and pronouncements during his Soviet trip were neither simple nor guileless, and they certainly cannot be ascribed to ignorance ... in 1968 he received the report of the Royal Commission on Security which warned him in the clearest possible terms that "the main current security threats to Canada are posed by international communism and the communist powers ..." the Soviet Union is the major communist power.
> Also in 1968 the Soviet Union invaded and occupied Czechoslovakia whose communist government, while repeatedly affirming loyalty to the Kremlin, tried to gain a modicum of independence in the administration of the country's internal affairs.
> ... these Soviet actions, coupled with a rapid military buildup (particularly of the naval forces and the nuclear arsenal), and with relentless communist fomenting of subversion and "liberation struggles" around the world, heightened international tension.
>
> Yet, with these developments before his eyes, Mr. Trudeau decided, against the advice of the Parliamentary Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to go ahead with his preconceived scheme of unilateral reduction of Canada's modest contribution to western collective security.
>
> This decision wasn't made by an innocent ignoramus acting on some irrational impulse, but by a man embarking on a major re-shaping of Canada's foreign and defence policy in accordance with his life-long political theories.
>
> To Moscow, which for decades has been trying to disrupt NATO from within, the Trudeau move signalled the best possible, and indeed undreamed of, operational opportunity. For while de Gaulle's nationalistic separatism and vengeful personal anti-Americanism was an asset in the drive to weaken NATO and isolate the United States, the geographic and political-economic position of Canada in the Atlantic Alliance offered a damaging potential France could never match.
>
> The Trudeau regime thus became the prime target of Soviet "detente" and "peaceful co-existence" wooing. For if Canada, a direct neighbour and closest friend of the U.S., could be manoeuvred into a distinctly anti-American position, such a position would have deep repercussions all over the world.
>
> A subtle, indirect exploitation of the remarkably sudden blossoming of xenophobic nationalism in Canada, coupled with a crescendo of anti-American propaganda, served to prepare the psychological and political ground for Mr. Trudeau's next step: Open friendship with Moscow.
>
> The Kremlin spared no effort and expense to demonstrate the significance it attached to Mr. Trudeau's official visit.
>
> Mr. Trudeau rewarded his beguiling hosts not only with signing the friendship protocol they suggested, but with two gratuitous statements which are priceless to the Kremlin.
>
> One was his assertion in Kiev that Soviet and Canadian citizens were living under similar federal systems of government, the other was his repeated allegation of acute U.S. "danger to our identity from the cultural, economic and perhaps even military point of view".
>
> The Kiev utterance is the cruelest blow any Western politician could have inflicted on the countless millions of ruthlessly regimented people—not only in the Ukraine but throughout the Soviet totalitarian empire—who look to the western democracies for at least moral support of their aspirations of a bit more human life. Along comes the Prime Minister of Canada, their dreamland of freedom, and tells them that the political system in his country is not really much different from the Bolshevik dictatorship. No head of government of any other free country (including Finland which lives in fear of and under constant pressure from Moscow) has ever come anywhere near rendering such a macabre service to the Kremlin.
> And on top of that Mr. Trudeau tells the world from Soviet soil that Canada is in such a danger of being smothered by the U.S. that he finds it necessary to seek Moscow's support for the preservation of Canadian identity and independence. No wonder the butchers of Hungary and Czechoslovakia were falling over themselves in honouring Trudeau.

Honourable senators, the conclusions drawn by this writer may be expressed in language that inclines to the extreme, but this does not render the conclusions invalid nor does it obscure the fact that similar conclusions were drawn by countless others, both in this country and abroad.

Then came Mr. Kosygin's return visit to Canada. I find it interesting that the head of one of the greatest world powers of our day was so willing and ready to return so quickly the visit of the Prime Minister of this country. Soviet premiers in the past have not been in the habit of visiting Canada. It is equally significant that while here he did everything possible to ingratiate himself with his hosts and reciprocated the Prime Minister's comment about the United States in Moscow by criticizing Washington's recent economic measures which have adversely affected this and other nations.

There is a further chapter in this sequence of inter-related events which has been discussed by others who have participated in this debate. That is the role played by the Canadian Government in helping expel from the United Nations the representatives of the Government on Formosa and the seating of the representatives of the Peking regime in their stead. This matter is specifically mentioned in the communiqué in these words:

The sides—

That is Canada and the U.S.S.R.

—are in favour of the restoration of the legitimate rights of the People's Republic of China as the sole representative of China in the United Nations.

• (2110)

I shall not dwell on this deplorable incident in Canada's conduct at the United Nations—conduct which, up to this point, I submit, could be defended by Canadians with a considerable measure of pride.

I found myself in substantial agreement with the conclusions expressed by Senator Grosart in his detailed analysis of this issue last week. However, I would like to add a few further comments. Canada's first step leading to her repudiation of Taiwan was to establish diplomatic relations with Peking. I shall not discuss this decision, except to say that in my opinion it was unwise, and I am convinced time will prove that it was not in Canada's national interest.

Having given diplomatic recognition to the Peking regime, Canada opened the way to repudiation of the Government of Chiang-Kai-shek.

The admission of the People's Republic of China to the United Nations was a logical and desirable step. However, making recognition of the Peking regime grounds for expelling the representatives of 14 million Chinese on Formosa, who have nothing in common with Red China other than ethnic origin, was an international disgrace.

Certainly Taiwan could not properly call itself the government of mainland China. That fact is obvious to all. But what real effort was made by those anxious to seat Red China to preserve a place in the United Nations for the government of 14 million faithful friends and allies of the nations of the remaining free world? None whatever, except that made by the United States, whose resolution Japan reluctantly agreed to co-sponsor. I submit, honourable senators, that the logical co-sponsor of that resolution would have been Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Manning: Certainly on moral grounds we had an obligation to fight for the recognition of a people who had the fortitude to resist the tyranny of a communistic military takeover, and who for 22 years, with our concurrence, were recognized as an accredited member of the United Nations Organization.

Surely this was an issue on which our position and that of the United States properly should have been the same. Instead, the Canadian Government chose to make this another matter on which to take a position in opposition to the honourable course proposed by our closest neighbour and friend, and to pursue a course which was not only morally wrong, but one from which this country could not possibly have anything to gain.

I am well aware that supporters of Canada's decision to recognize Red China, and those who are enthusiastic about something worthwhile coming from efforts to establish closer ties of friendship with Soviet Russia, maintain that these steps will help Canada in the matter of international trade. I submit that that conclusion is too naive to be accepted by men with any perception and experience.

It is a fact of history that communist nations always do that which is in their own interest. If a communist nation finds that it is to its interest to trade with Canada, it will do so. It will buy wheat from Canada if it is in its interest to buy wheat from Canada. But the first day that it is in its interest to buy wheat from somewhere else, it will buy wheat from somewhere else, no matter what diplomatic relations have been established, or how many gestures of friendship have been made.

This past week we read in the press that the Soviet Union has just completed the purchase of $136 million worth of feed grain from the United States, while, at the same time, continuing its ranting against U.S. involvement in southeast Asia. When it suited her interests, the Soviet Union's condemnation of the United States did not deter her one iota from dealing with Washington rather than with Canada, whose customer in the purchase of grain she has been for years.

From this whole sequence of events, I find it impossible to draw any other conclusion than that the present Canadian Government is intentionally seeking to align this country more closely with the world bloc of communist nations, and, in the process, is doing incalculable harm to Canada's relations with her traditional friends and allies, particularly the United States.

For this reason I wish to place on record, in clear and forceful terms, a solemn warning that the course being pursued by the present Government is the height of folly and dangerous in the extreme to Canada's long-range national interest.

May I now comment briefly on a few specific statements contained in the Canadian-Soviet communiqué. On the third page it says:

The Prime Minister of Canada and the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R.—

I call the attention of honourable senators particularly to the following words.

—having set forth the foreign policy principles of their respective Governments, reaffirmed the attachment of Canada and the Soviet Union to peace and security and the development of international co-operation.

My question is: What were the Canadian foreign policy principles which the Prime Minister spelled out for Mr. Kosygin as a basis on which to begin their discussions? Did he tell Mr. Kosygin that Canada's foreign policy position is based on two fundamental considerations: first, that we share this North American continent with the United States, and that our economy, our national security and our way of life are inseparably linked with that of our southern neighbour by the facts of geography as well as our own free-will choice; second, that the ties which join us so closely with the United States are not ties imposed by the ruthless hand of military might or the tyranny of a police state, but are ties which stem from sharing a mutual respect for the freedom and dignity of men, the processes and institutions of democracy, our common belief in free elections, a free press, and the right to dissent?

Did he make clear to Mr. Kosygin that while we wish peace and friendship to prevail among all nations, including Soviet Russia, our relations with nations who reject those concepts will never be enhanced at the expense of our friendship with those who subscribe to them, including our great southern neighbour, with whose people we share an allegiance to the free and democratic way of life?

• (2120)

Did the Prime Minister start from that position to discuss closer relations with the U.S.S.R.? Of course he did not. He had already told Mr. Kosygin in Moscow that he would welcome closer ties with Soviet Russia to counterbalance the presence of the United States next door to Canada.

The communiqué continues:

> They agreed that all States, regardless of their political and social systems, should in their relations with each other steadfastly abide by the principles of mutual confidence, reciprocity, respect for independence, national sovereignty, territorial integrity and equality of all States, non-interference in internal affairs, renunciation of the use or threat of force, and the settlement of disputes through negotiation in accordance with the United Nations Charter. The sides declare that in their mutual relations as well as in solving international problems they will invariably be guided by these principles.

Honourable senators, I submit that that statement is sheer hyprocisy in the light of the historic record of Soviet Russia's action toward the once free nations who are now puppet states behind the Iron Curtain.

The communiqué states further on:

> Both sides support the objective of ending the arms race and achieving general and complete disarmament, covering both nuclear and conventional weapons, under strict and effective international control.

What credence can be attached to that statement when it is a well known fact that the Soviet Union is vigorously engaged in building up its naval strength, a nuclear arsenal, military satellites, and an inventory of intercontinental ballistic missiles on an unprecedented scale? It is an equally well known fact that Russia has repeatedly refused to permit on-site inspection by an international agency and that this has been one of the biggest stumbling blocks to curbing nuclear testing and stockpiling of nuclear weapons.

In the light of this common knowledge, how can the following statement be taken seriously?

> It is the intention of both sides to continue furthering, jointly and separately, the adoption of partial disarmament measures, including the banning of underground nuclear tests, the reduction of military expenditures, and others.

May I refer again to the excerpt from the communiqué wherein it is stated:

> The sides are in favour of the restoration of the legitimate rights of the People's Republic of China as the sole representative of China in the United Nations.

The Leader of the Government took exception to a statement by Senator Grosart to the effect that in the matter of expelling from the United Nations the representatives of the government of Chiang Kai-shek the Canadian Government had voted with the Soviet bloc. Certainly this communiqué makes it clear that in their discussions the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of the U.S.S.R. were in full agreement that the representatives of the People's Republic of China should be the sole representative of China in the United Nations and that the representatives of Taiwan should be expelled.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Will Senator Manning permit me to ask him a question? Is the honourable senator not aware that the purpose for that interjection was to indicate that Canada had taken that position on that particular question in the General Assembly along with every member but one who belongs to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization?

Hon. Mr. Manning: I am well aware that Canada was not alone in taking the position that the representatives of Taiwan should be expelled and the representatives of the regime in Peking be recognized as the official delegation of China, but in my view that makes not one iota of difference. If a thing is right, its rightness is not altered whether you are on the minority or majority side when a decision is made.

May I close with a brief observation about the public protests which marked Mr. Kosygin's visit? It was pointed out by Senator Cameron and others that such protests are legitimate expressions of the right of dissent which our free and democratic way of life assures to every citizen. In the case of the ethnic groups who chose to exercise this right, their actions were certainly understandable. The great majority of these people or their parents came to this country as refugees whose homelands had been invaded and raped by communist aggressors, initiated and directed from Moscow. Many had seen their loved ones and their friends martyred or imprisoned or dispatched to slave labour camps by the government of the country whose Premier the Canadian Government was welcoming and honouring as a guest. Many had themselves suffered the loss of their possessions and endured the cruelties of concentration camps for resisting the Soviet destroyers of their freedom. Many of these people are still afraid to disclose publicly what they know of life under communist rule for fear of reprisals against loved ones who did not have the good fortune to escape to the refuge of a free land. Those who did protest publicly did so because they had learned from bitter experience what the present Government of this country seems not yet to have learned despite the grim and unmistakable lessons of history, that is that there can never be friendship between communist dictators and men who genuinely respect human dignity and individual freedom.

The closest parallel to the ruthless oppression Soviet communism has imposed by force on the millions behind the Iron Curtain was the tyranny which Hitler's Nazi regime sought to impose on the world only 30 years ago. We would do well to remember the words of Sir Winston Churchill in 1939 in the British House of Commons when Prime Minister Chamberlain was defending his proposition that he had assured "peace in our time" by offering the hand of friendship to Hitler at Munich. This is what Mr. Churchill said:

• (2130)

The Prime Minister—

That is Mr. Chamberlain.

> —desires to seek cordial relations between this country and Germany. There is no difficulty at all in having cordial relations between the peoples. Our hearts go out to them. But they have no power. But never will you have friendship with the present German government. There can never be friendship between the British democracy and the Nazi power—that power which spurns Christian ethics, which cheers its onward course by barbarous paganism, which vaunts the spirit of aggression and conquest, which derives strength and perverted pleasure from persecution, and uses, as we have seen, with pitiless brutality the threat of murderous force. That power cannot ever be the trusted friend of British democracy.

I wish that we had in the Government of this country today leaders with Churchill's perception and courage.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Phillips, debate adjourned.

POVERTY

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I beg leave to table the final report of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty, in English and in French. I ask permission to make a statement of explanation of the report, notwithstanding Rule 78.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that the honourable Senator Croll may make comments after the tabling of his report?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is agreed, of course, on the understanding that if honourable senators, especially on my left, wish to make comments, they will be free to do so.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Mr. Speaker, the word "especially" is not necessary.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Honourable senators, I rise to speak of the work of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty, which is embodied in the report I have tabled in English and in French. An interim report was made on July 6, 1970, and a progress report on November 12, 1970. A brochure containing the highlights of the report and recommendations will be available in a short time.

I think the country should know and I now record the names of the members of the committee:

The Honourable John Nichol, British Columbia

Hon. Mr. Walker: Have you also the names of your advisers and assistants?

Hon. Mr. Croll: The committee held 93 public hearings, received 209 briefs and heard 810 witnesses. In addition, members of the committee met with hundreds of the poor in their homes and at evening gatherings. The members were devoted, concerned, and untiring in their efforts. In 1970 they gave up their holidays to travel across the country to meet and hear the poor. This year, during the summer recess, they attended many meetings of the committee in Ottawa.

During the hearings, the vice-chairman, Senator Edgar Fournier, took ill and was hospitalized. I therefore asked Senator Carter to fill his place. I received considerable assistance not only from Senator Carter but from other members to whom was given some special work in connection with the report.

Senator Fournier attended some meetings of the committee following his illness, but he took sick again and is now re-hospitalized. He made a worthwhile contribution to the work of the committee and was kept informed of its progress.

The committee owes a special vote of thanks to Senator Carter for being available at all times. He gave of himself completely, and the report has arrived earlier and is better for his efforts.

I do not propose to utter paeans of praise for the committee although it is worthy of them. In a sense this is an historic occasion for the Senate and for members of the committee in that the report is the first of its kind ever presented.

The committee has kept faith with the thousands of Canadians with whom it met, with the millions who followed its proceedings, with those who acquainted us with the hurt and frustration of their lives, and with those who entrusted to us the task of suggesting practical remedies.

We believe that we have read the mood of the country, that the report is in tune with the times, and that we have justified the confidence reposed in us.

The report is not an accusatory document. There is nothing difficult in identifying where the responsibility lies. "The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars, but in ourselves. . ." It is three years since the committee was set up to investigate and report upon all aspects of poverty in Canada, and to define and elucidate the problems and recommend appropriate action.

Those are the words contained in the terms of reference, and I venture to say that no parliamentary committee in modern history had such a clear, unhampered mandate, and one of such social, economic and political significance.

We undertook our unique pilgrimage across the country with the determination to listen and learn. Our report is the result.

The men and women on this committee had widely divergent backgrounds. They came face to face with poverty in all its ugliness, misery and hopelessness. The country owes them a debt of gratitude for their wholehearted co-operation and dedication. They saw at first hand the blighting effects of poverty on physical and mental health, and its degrading influence on the human spirit. The results of the confrontation with the realities in the lives of the working poor and the non-working poor are reflected in the report and its recommendations.

What we have attempted to do is define and diagnose poverty in its Canadian context, and to describe what we believe must be done if five million Canadians are to break out of the monstrous trap in which they are now hopelessly pinned. But let me make it perfectly clear, honourable senators, that we have no panacea, no overnight solution for this great social problem. It would be presumptuous and foolhardy for us or anyone else to make such an exaggerated claim.

But we do say we have conceived from our experience of the past three years a Magna Carta for the dispossessed. We have opened a door to a world the poor have never before been allowed to enter. There is no joy in being poor, or to feel overwhelmed and neglected in a money-oriented competitive society. It is easy for many of us to overlook poor people—because they are invisible, living in remote rural locations, in urban ghettos, rarely visited by other Canadians. They are the silent ones—the neighbours most of us have never met. They are the non-persons in our society.

We believe the recommendations in this report, if implemented in a phased program perhaps lasting as long as the seventies, will open a vista of hope for the low-income Canadian families, but it will remain no more than just another dream unless it receives an endorsement and a commitment from the Canadian people and the Government of Canada.

We are not proposing that the obsolete and archaic welfare system—and I will deal with this at greater length in a few minutes—be replaced simply by giving money to the working poor and the jobless. Our purpose is not to put another label on the existing system. The committee's concern is to keep the working poor off welfare and to raise those who are on it to a level of self-sufficiency. It is not enough to free people from poverty; they must be taught how to use this freedom for their own benefit and the benefit of all Canadians.

The Senate Committee opened a dialogue with the poor of Canada. Frank and open communication was established, and now we present this report in the hope of continuing the dialogue with the more fortunate majority who, after all, are footing the bill, and who will be called upon to continue to provide most of the tax dollars required. What we are proposing, in essence, is an income-maintenance-incentive plan, one that will restore dignity, pride and self-confidence to people long victimized by the economic order which has produced the good life for others but not for them.

This plan has a philosophical basis which is essential to its success—and which is conspicuously lacking in the existing social welfare system—a clearly defined work incentive. We want the working poor, the disadvantaged citizens of this country, to participate in their own salvation, if that is not too strong a word to use. All that we have learned in three years of contact with the poor convinces us that a system that robs a man of the incentive to work, that makes it more profitable to stay on welfare than to work, is a degrading, inhuman, soul-destroying scheme. All experiments, whether pilot or special, of which we are aware to date, show that incentives help encourage the heads of working families to earn more and not less.

The time is long overdue when we must rid ourselves of myths which we have long accepted as facts. In our attitudes toward the poor we have been passionately wrong with a high degree of consistency. Good intentions alone have never lightened the burden of poverty. The ugly subculture of poverty has become a way of life for generations of Canadians who are victims of frustration, despair and apathy.

The existing welfare system is a social wasteland, and an economic morass into which we have poured more than $6 billion a year without reaping any but the most meagre returns.

We say it must be scrapped because it is obsolete, lacking in regard for human values, and unable to alleviate poverty, let alone eliminate it. It has no defenders, only offenders. The report says:

> The system has failed because it has treated the symptoms of poverty and left the disease itself untouched. It certainly does not reach the working poor, that vast army in the labour force whose income is grossly insufficient.

This is tough language, an indictment which should shake all Canadians out of a complacency that has helped to perpetuate the wrong approach to combating poverty.

Time and time again at its public hearings and in the course of its nationwide travels, the committee was confronted with the grim evidence of a well-meaning society's failure to grasp the true significance of poverty and its cancerous effects not only on the individual but on the whole community. It is all too apparent that one of the contributing causes of the failure of the existing social welfare system is society's lack of commitment to anti-poverty programs. We fashioned a social welfare machine, lubricated it with our dollars and then turned our back on its operation.

We insulated ourselves from any misgivings by conveniently taking refuge in the myths about poverty. The poor don't want to work, we said; they are lazy and content to live on handouts; they are chronic complainers. They won't help themselves; they are anti-social, and so on and so on.

The committee, after three years of seeing them, emphatically rejects these false and long-held assumptions. If the poor are always with us, as we hear so often, then why haven't we planned for them?

As the report says:

> We have forgotten that the welfare system was designed merely as a supplement to the economic system and not as an alternative to minimum wages. It provides for certain particular groups: the handicapped, the aged, the unemployed and those unfortunates who are unable to support themselves. But it does not reach the working poor. Sixty per cent of the poor are not on welfare.

There was a time when the retarded child was virtually hidden from the world and kept in isolation. There was a time when we avoided saying, "Death was due to cancer." We faced up to the problem of mental retardation and to the existence of cancer. We have made considerable progress in their alleviation. So we must face up to the issue of poverty and choose our options from those available to us.

Many times in our history we have declared war on poverty. Banners have been unfurled, trumpets have sounded, brave speeches have been made on the eve of battle, but never has the battle been fought. There have been skirmishes but not wars. This shallow and inconclusive contact with the enemy appeared to satisfy the collective conscience of the more fortunate majority.

If we are going to commit ourselves to a major offensive against poverty, a war that must be waged on many fronts, it must be done by more than the spending of huge sums of money. As I have said, we must rid ourselves of prevailing attitudes and prejudices about those who live below the poverty line. It simply is wrong to conclude that the poverty problem will solve itself as the economy booms. This has been proven wrong. In the sixties when our economy was booming, our poverty rate continued to grow and the welfare rolls increased.

We must open the door of opportunity for a productive, satisfying life for those five million Canadians who today exist in a vacuum. Our national will must be put to the test. Are we satisfied with the system we have, or do we want something better? Can we devise a system which at once is more efficient and more decent in its approach to human beings? The answer, of course, must be yes.

The time has come for us to move from welfare strategy to income strategy; from services to money; from hopelessness to hope; from despair to destiny. An income-maintenance-incentive plan will achieve that.

On economic grounds alone there is a powerful case for giving the poor their own bill of rights. The gross national product, the sum total of goods and services produced in Canada, would be increased by approximately two billion dollars a year if the poor could make a normal contribution to the nation's productivity. We are all losers by their non-involvement.

But there are also compelling humanitarian grounds to which one cannot attach a dollar value, the factors of social betterment, well-being and community harmony. The last is not to be taken lightly. The poor are groping for unity, for effective means of voicing their frustration, and we would do well to heed them. We must remove their sense of alienation. We must stop treating them as second-class citizens for no other reason than that they are economically deprived. Non-persons belong to another ideology.

Welfare is an attempt to deal with distress that is left over after all specific means of social policy have done their work. The existing social welfare system, dehumanizing, inadequate and falling far short of even minimum goals, must be dismantled. All the evidence presented to the committee overwhelmingly endorses this view. As a result of poor planning, overlapping and fragmented services, the poor lack the information vital for the optimum use of these services. No amount of tinkering with this obsolete welfare apparatus can make it an effective instrument for the 1970s and beyond.

The crucial question we faced, as a committee charged with the responsibility of recommending a more effective and meaningful system, was what kind of a program should take its place? We receive many definitions of poverty, many suggestions, and it was our task to fix as best we could the dimensions of the problem and the factors contributing to it.

Our concern was in three main areas: subsistence, which is the minimum income necessary to maintain health and working capacity; inequality, which speaks for itself; and externality, which deals with the social effects of poverty on the rest of society.

We received, considered and discarded many proposals made to us. We were not seeking a Utopia or an instant solution for a vast and complex problem. Happy are those who solve the problem in fifty lines, or over a television interview. We wanted to evolve a radically new approach that would be imaginative yet able to withstand the test of economic and social realities. We listened to the experts, to the professionals, to lay persons, and we listened to the voice of poverty itself, which speaks thunderously in this country.

• (1430)

The committee members agreed that what is defined as poverty must change continually as general living standards change—a principle that governments seem to have neglected. In this sense we say that poverty's definition can never be precise and invariable. The poverty line established by the committee is a compromise solution which takes budgetary needs as a starting point, and adjusts the resulting line to take account of the yearly increase in average income. We fixed a poverty line as an operational definition of poverty.

We discard the grocery-basket concept as well as the subsistence concept. We take budgetary needs as a starting point and adjust the poverty line to take account of yearly increase in average wages. We define and fix it in terms of adequacy—one-half of average income—and make allowances for inflation as indicated by the Consumer Price Index and the standard of living by increases in the gross national product. So it will remain a relative, changing concept, and can never become obsolete.

We sifted the vast volume of evidence placed before us. It amounted to more than five million words. We came to the unanimous conclusion that there must be a major departure in our approach to anti-poverty programs. To this end we made a series of interdependent recommendations which must be considered as a whole and not as single entities. Some call for new concepts for reaching social goals. Others relate to updating and improving worthwhile aspects of what is now in effect.

At this point I would ask the house to permit me to put on record a summary of the recommendations with respect to 13 areas of concern contained in the report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The Summary of Recommendations follows)

The recommendations in this report provide the basis for a comprehensive Canadian anti-poverty program for the seventies. The individual recommendations are important, but their significance also lies in their interdependance. Their effectiveness depends on the extent to which they are integrated into an over-all strategy. From the Committee's point of view, the most important of these recommendations are those which involve new concepts, structures, and approaches intended to achieve a new social goal. In this summary, these recommendations are presented first.

The other recommendations relate to existing structures and practices and are intended to improve and update the systems which are now in effect.

Recommendations with Respect to a Guaranteed Annual Income:

1. that the Government of Canada implement a Guaranteed Annual Income (G.A.I.) program using the Negative Income Tax (N.I.T.) method, on a uniform, national basis.

2. that the proposed G.A.I. program be financed and administered by the Government of Canada.

3. that the proposed G.A.I. plan be designed to cover all Canadians who need it. Initially G.A.I. would not cover residents of Canada who are not Canadian citizens and Canadian citizens who are single unattached individuals under forty years of age.

4. that Basic Allowance Rates under the G.A.I. be set initially at 70 per cent of the poverty line for each family size as determined by the methods outlined in this report and raised progressively as quickly as possible.

5. that the G.A.I. plan incorporate a work-incentive mechanism to ensure that those who work receive and keep more income than those who do not. It is proposed that initially Basic Allowances be reduced at the rate of 70 cents for every dollar of other income.

6. that income-maintenance under the proposed G.A.I. plan be divorced from the provision of social services. The provision of social services would remain the responsibility of provincial governments.

7. that the Canada Assistance Plan (C.A.P.) be retained and up-dated to serve as a vehicle for federal-provincial co-operation and cost-sharing in the delivery of social services. C.A.P. would also be used to cover, on a "needs" basis, those not covered initially by the G.A.I.

8. that all existing federal income-maintenance legislation be progressively repealed. Social-insurance programs such as Unemployment Insurance, and the Canada Pension Plan, would be retained, as would certain contractual programs such as Veterans' Allowances and programs related to Canada's native peoples. The G.A.I. would immediately replace the Family Allowance, Youth Allowance, and Old Age Security programs, operated by the Federal Government.

9. that the G.A.I. program be based on the principle that no one would receive less income under the G.A.I. than he or she now receives from other federal programs such as Old Age Security and income supplements. Other allowances or insurance payments would be treated as "other income" and augmented through the G.A.I. program where they are less than the G.A.I. allowances.

10. that income tax exemption levels be raised so that no Canadian whose income is below the "poverty line" would be subject to income tax.

Recommendations with Respect to "Poverty Lines":

1. that the method developed in this report (see Appendix) be adopted by the Government of Canada. This method relates poverty to a measure of the "average standard of living" and is sensitive to changes in national average incomes and family size.

2. that the poverty lines established through this method and updated annually be accepted as a basic social indicator and be used to measure the extent and dimensions of poverty in Canada and their changes.

3. that these "poverty" lines be used as a basis for the G.A.I. program proposed in this report.

Recommendation with Respect to a Council for Applied Social Research:

1. that a Council for Applied Social Research be established at the national level,

a) to be responsible for comprehensive human-resource development and social-welfare research of an applied nature;

b) to co-ordinate and encourage the dissemination of the research information available on social problems, and on poverty in particular;

c) to conduct and disseminate applied research on social problems;

d) to develop national social indicators;

e) to be concerned with research on social problems as they affect groups within our society—the young, the old, single heads of families, and native, immigrant, and other minorities, etc.; and

f) to be responsible for development and refinement of the G.A.I. proposal made herein and to prepare plans for implementation.

Recommendation with Respect to Workmen's Compensation:

1. that the Federal Government take the initiative in seeking federal-provincial agreement on uniformity with respect to Workmen's Compensation benefits.

Recommendations with Respect to Economic Policies:

1. that "full employment" must be the prime objective and responsibility of government fiscal and monetary policy.

2. that "equal pay for equal work" legislation be passed and enforced by all levels of government for both the public and the private sector.

3. that easier access to labour unions for workers, particularly those in low-wage industries, be encouraged and facilitated.

4. that prohibitions against discrimination in hiring be enforced.

5. that job-development, particularly of para-professional careers, be vigorously pursued.

6. that a formula be adopted to ensure the upward revision of minimum wage rates through the Canadian Labour Standards Code—such as the following:

a) the minimum wage should be determined as a percentage of the average wage rate for a province or zone;

b) a uniform basis should be used for the determination of zones within provinces;

c) no minimum wage should be lower than 60 per cent of the average wage-rate in each province or zone; and,

d) a planned program of raising minimum wages should be adopted. This would mean increasing the rates one step at a time and analysing effects of the increase before proceeding to the next.

Recommendations with Respect to Social Services:

1. that, with the introduction of the Guaranteed Annual Income, federal and provincial governments negotiate to increase the quantity, quality, accessibility, and uniformity of social services available under the Canada Assistance Plan.

2. that user-participation be significantly increased at every level of the social-service structure, in the field (through outreach facilities and the use of para-professionals) and in the administration (on appeal boards and in planning and organization).

Recommendations with Respect to Consumers:

1. that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs disseminate information on consumer purchasing, consumer credit, interest rates, and contractual loans through adult education and information programs directed specifically to the low-income consumer.

2. that joint government-industry schemes be established to provide insured loans to high-risk borrowers for essential requirements. This would permit industry to extend credit to many people now ineligible for reasons unrelated to bad credit history.

3. that collection agencies be made subject to uniform licensing and control by provincial governments.

4. that in the light of the inadequacies of the present arrangements under Part X of the Bankruptcy Act, the law be amended to provide for easier and cheaper personal bankruptcy.

Recommendations with Respect to Education:

1. that the Government of Canada establish a National Office of Education without in any way interfering with or limiting or denying the constitutional and traditional prerogatives of the provinces in education. It must be recognized that there are national interests in education as distinct from provincial and inter-provincial interests. The functions of such an office would include the following:

a) to develop and articulate national educational goals;

b) to co-ordinate the distribution of federal investments in education and training to ensure the achievement of national educational goals;

c) to sponsor and support educational research and research on education at the national level;

d) to provide a national centre for information and data on education throughout the country;

e) to sponsor and support action-research programs such as the Canada NewStart Program with the objectives of developing and testing new approaches to education and training among the disadvantaged;

f) to support local communities and organizations, including those of Canada's native people, in achieving their participation in local educational systems.

Recommendations with Respect to Health Care:

1. that hospital and medical services be financed entirely out of general revenues.

2. that the Medical Care Act or similar legislation be the vehicle for bringing additional forms of necessary health care, including dental services and prescription drugs, to all Canadians.

3. that comprehensive community-based neighbourhood health centres be encouraged, and that more emphasis be placed upon preventive and rehabilitative aspects of health care.

4. that family-life education and family-counselling and family-planning programs be made available and easily accessible to the poor.

Recommendations with Respect to Housing:

1. that, in areas of urban renewal, the persons affected be allowed to participate in decisions as to how the area is to be "renewed". This could be effected by the setting up of neighbourhood committees. Such citizen participation would help assure the comprehensiveness of the contemplated renewal—the inclusion of planning for social services, health services, education services, library, recreational, and other services.

2. that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs take the initiative with provincial authorities to establish effective methods of ensuring that the benefits provided to the poor through the recommended G.A.I. are not absorbed by increased housing rents and costs. Cases were brought to the Committee's attention in which rent increases were made to coincide with Social Security benefit increases.

3. that further to protect low-income families in receipt of the G.A.I. from unscrupulous landlords the Federal Government, alone or in conjunction with provincial and/or municipal authorities, set up a fund for the purchase of houses which may be old but are still structurally sound, make them habitable, and rent them at cost or at subsidized rates to such families.

4. that public housing programs be enlarged and expanded. They are obviously not ideal, but no better solution has been found to the housing problems of the poor.

Recommendations with Respect to Law:

1. that one jurisdiction, the provincial, should be responsible for the entire administration of legal aid.

2. that federal funds, on a shared basis, should be made available to any province that enacts bona fide legislation providing legal aid to the poor on any basis. There is as much justification for federal participation in "Justicare" as there is for federal participation in Medicare.

3. that all persons below the poverty line be entitled to legal aid as of right, and without qualification or contribution.

Recommendations with Respect to the Manpower System:

1. that the Government of Canada shift its emphasis from Manpower training in narrow labour-force terms to a broad policy aimed at developing and making the best use of the human resources of the nation. This will require a number of changes in the priorities and emphasis which are reflected in the policies and programs of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. The departmental activities should be re-oriented from a service to employers to a service to individual citizens in terms of their particular needs for academic up-grading, occupational training, mobility assistance, and job placement. Restrictions which now effectively exclude the poor and disadvantaged from departmental programs must be removed.

2. that the Federal Government sponsor action-research programs aimed at the investigation and solution of the problems of Canada's disadvantaged citizens. The Canada NewStart Program is an example of how this type of essential work can be carried out.

[Hon. Mr. Croll.]

Recommendations with Respect to Day-Care Centres:

1. that child-care services be recognized and supported as a necessary resource for the contemporary Canadian family.

2. that expansion and development be carried out along the following lines:

a) day-care facilities to meet the needs of children under the age of three;

b) for children three years and over, day-care facilities should be related to the educational system and located where possible, in school buildings;

c) in the operation of these centres every effort should be made to make the maximum use of local para-professional such as teachers' aides and teachers' assistants; and,

d) public subsidy should ensure equality of access to all of these facilities.

Hon. Mr. Croll: We believe the major tool in tackling poverty is a guaranteed annual income plan based on the negative income type. We recommend to the Government of Canada that such an income-maintenance-incentive plan be implemented on a uniform national basis with a national administration and a national floor. This, we believe, is an enlightened and thoughtful program in this field. While we propose that such a plan eventually cover all Canadians who need it, initially we recommend that it not cover single Canadian citizens under 40 years of age, or residents of Canada who are not citizens. During the transition period their needs will be met under the Canada Assistance Act at the provincial level.

Incorporated in the guaranteed income plan is the work incentive I have already referred to which ensures that those who work will receive and keep more income than those who do not. We feel this is vital to the success of the plan from a self-help standpoint. The plan meets two other basic requirements: the provision of adequate income, and fiscal responsibility. Our most successful programs have been those of national, uniform application—old age security, family allowances, youth allowances, unemployment insurance, and the Canada Pension Plan.

In essence, the guaranteed annual income simply means providing a floor below which the income of Canadian families will not be allowed to fall. Taking 1969 as a base year, when the committee's poverty line for a family of four was $5,000, we recommend that for a start the guaranteed income would be 70 per cent of that figure, or $3,500. Initially, basic allowances would be reduced at the rate of 70 cents for every dollar of other income, and the worker would retain 30 cents. This incentive is not as high as we would have wished. We had to consider what is possible and what is not. The guaranteed annual income is not a minor procedural change. It rejects some goals and concepts in our existing system of social institutions. It makes certain that the dole is dead. It is a new beginning; a new path with new purposes and new objectives.

One of the major advantages of the guaranteed annual income plan is that it would be uniform throughout the nation, and for this reason must be financed and administered by the federal Government. National uniformity is the only way we can ensure equality for all our citizens.

Instead of a hodge-podge of provincial plans with different standards, allowance levels and regulations, we would have one plan which would not be influenced by geographical, monetary or other considerations. In order for the plan to work it will require changes in existing tax laws, redefinition of income and accounting period, as well as taxable unit.

There will be those who will say that such a national plan will benefit rural areas more than urban centres where the cost of living is higher. But the committee feels there are offsetting factors, an important one being the limited access to many services in rural and semi-rural parts of Canada. One of the dividends of uniformity in benefits is that the migration toward the cities would be slowed down. We believe the cause of national unity would be stimulated by eliminating some of the economic inequalities which now exist.

The committee recommends that the poverty lines developed in this report, in which poverty is related to a measure of the average standard of living and geared to the gross national product, be adopted by the Canadian Government. We ask that the poverty lines be accepted as a basic social indicator, and used to measure the extent and dimensions of poverty.

Industrialization and urbanization, the breakdown of traditional modes of behaviour, are the chief causes of our social problem.

We recommend that the income-maintenance-incentive plan be divorced from the provisions of social services which would remain the responsibility of the provincial governments; that the Canada Assistance Plan be retained and updated to serve as a vehicle for federal-provincial co-operation and cost-sharing during the transition period; and that all existing federal income-maintenance legislation be progressively repealed, with the exception of certain social insurance plans such as unemployment insurance, the Canada Pension Plan and programs for Canada's native peoples. To be replaced by the guaranteed annual income plan would be family allowances, youth allowance, and old-age security programs operated by the federal Government, with others to follow.

The committee further proposes that no one receive less income under the guaranteed income plan than he or she now receives from other federal programs such as old age security and supplement. A vital link is our recommendation that income tax exemptions be raised so that no Canadian whose income is below the poverty line is subject to income tax. What fair-minded Canadian conscious of all the facts can object to this? We must discard the myth that the poor pay relatively less in taxes than others. True, they pay less in income tax, but the proportion of their income they pay in other forms of taxation is actually greater than the proportion of income paid by the relatively well off. This is a rank injustice.

The guaranteed income plan is not an unproved theory. We already have it in the form of the Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement. And we are already using the negative income tax in connection with the supplement. Filing of an income tax return is a common practice for all citizens and this income tax return would be the basis for income payments. There would be no inquisitions, no subjecting of the individual to humiliating procedures. Admittedly, the negative income tax method poses problems, but we do not regard them as beyond solution.

It cannot be emphasized too strongly that the committee does not regard the guaranteed annual income plan as being the total answer to our concern over poverty. It is, in our submission, an effective tool. In our view it represents the first firm step in the war on poverty, the first recognition that we must depart from traditional and obsolete concepts in favour of a new approach. It is the cornestone of a new and challenging endeavour that seeks to involve the poor in creating for themselves greater income-earning potential. We want the working poor and the employable unemployed to give as well as take, to leave the sidelines and become involved as they have never been involved before. Only by this process of involvement, participation, and the provision of greater educational and job-training opportunities, can we hope to break the tragic cycle of poverty from one generation to another.

The committee believes that the poverty lines it has developed are superior to poverty standards currently in use, and their flexibility, geared as they are to the average standard of living and to the gross national product, is assurance that the basic guaranteed income will not, in fact cannot, become obsolete.

Now I come to the question of finances. What will a guaranteed annual income plan cost? If the plan had been put into effect in 1967, the net cost would have been between $600 million and $700 million which would have been about one per cent of the gross national product. Projecting this figure to 1970 or 1971, the cost of the program would be about one per cent of the gross national product of $84.5 billion. There would be substantial savings in the cost of administration under the guaranteed income plan. There is no statistical guide to what this saving might be—and there will be substantial savings if such programs are discarded—but in the United States, where they have made a serious study of this matter, one estimate of savings in administration costs on a similar plan was of the order of 40 to 60 per cent.

There is no doubt that the $600 million to $700 million in 1967 and the increased costs in 1970-1971 for a guaranteed annual income program is a heavy one, but when viewed as being about one per cent of our gross national product for that year it cannot be considered unreasonable or unduly onerous. It is true the figures are based on 1967, but it has been calculated, projecting the cost to 1970 or 1971, that the figure increases by about 15 per cent. The price of reform is always high. The recommendations contained in the report can yield so much in return that the reform it seeks is really a social bargain.

Honourable senators, this is of necessity a capsule review of the proposed guaranteed annual income plan. The breadth and depth of the problem, reaching as it does into every area of human existence, does not permit me to give a detailed analysis. The report and the summary of recommendations do that.

It is a sad commentary on our economic system that the working poor toil for poverty wages that are generally less than they would receive on welfare. Even those who receive minimum wages would be better off at basic welfare levels. What kind of a system have we developed that says it is more profitable to go on welfare than work? And so I repeat, our recommendation will put an end to that system. It will reverse that trend. Under the new system it will be more profitable to work full time, parttime, broken time, or overtime. Work and benefit is the theme of our submission.

Insufficiency of income lies at the core of the problem of the poor. This is the common denominator. It gives rise to the handicaps they face as consumers, and the handicaps of lack of education, experience, training and opportunity.

The inequalities which exist in education opportunities are most glaring among our native populations. Twenty per cent of the Indians and Métis of the northern Prairies have had less than four years of schooling. In the words of the National Indian Brotherhood, the native peoples are the poorest of the poor, culturally alienated, economically handicapped, and socially deprived. Committee members saw some of the living conditions in native communities, and they came away with a sense of shame that such a situation should exist in a supposedly enlightened age.

There have been many well-intentioned plans for improving the lot of our indigenous populations, but their failure is a scathing indictment of our lack of understanding and our ignorance of what is required. The plight of our white-skinned poor is miserable enough, but that of our native peoples is infinitely worse. Being an Indian or an Eskimo adds to the burden of poverty.

Honourable senators, the Special Senate Committee on Poverty performed the task it was assigned, and in many respects it was a difficult one, though always an enlightening experience. The men and women on this committee, coming as they do from different backgrounds and with preconceived ideas about poverty and the poor, were forced to re-evaluate their thinking. The discarding of many lifelong ideas and opinions was a painful process, but the adjustment was made. It is my sincere hope that the public discussions which are bound to follow the publication of this report will cause Canadians in all walks of life to acquire a better understanding of poverty, and what is proposed for its elimination.

The report which has been tabled is the work of concerned Canadians and I refer not only to the membership of the committee but to its staff, some of whom contributed very much, and to the army of men and women who came to us in Ottawa and those we went to meet in our travels. These were the professionals, the lay people, the clergy, the municipal representatives, and the poor. We began a dialogue with them, a dialogue which we hope will broaden to include all concerned citizens to the end that in time we will cease to create a class of citizenry whose lowly status makes a mockery of the philosophy of equal opportunity for all.

Despite the billions we have spent in the 40-year history of the modern welfare state, Canadians who exist below the poverty line, some five million of them, are second-class citizens living in a drab world not of their own making, a world where the good life does not exist. They are defeated by a system which rejects them, and which they do not understand. And the overriding tragedy of it all is not only the plight of the adult poor, but the enslavement of their children who, as surely as night follows day, are destined to inherit this mantle of poverty because we have to date provided no escape.

Unless we make an honest, all-out effort to wipe out social and economic injustice and break once and for all the cycle of poverty, we will have failed to keep the faith with our fellow man.

The authors of this report believe that if the recommendations are implemented over the next decade, Canadians will have gone a long way along the road toward creating the kind of society which gives all our citizens the opportunity to live—not merely to exist.

We believe that poverty will no longer be regarded with complacency. This is our proclamation of faith.

CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Watson had been substituted for that of Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski) on the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada.

THE LATE HON. WALTER M. ASELTINE, P.C.

TRIBUTES

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, I am sure that all honourable senators learned with much regret of the passing on Sunday night, November 14, of the honourable Senator Aseltine who died in his home community of Rosetown in the Province of Saskatchewan.

I am pleased that tributes were paid to Senator Aseltine while he was still a member of this house. Senator Aseltine occupied his seat in the chamber for the last time on March 24, when the Leader of the Opposition and other honourable senators joined with me in a bevy of tributes to the man who had sat in the Senate longer than any of his contemporaries. I do not intend to repeat what I said about Senator Aseltine on that occasion, except to recall that perhaps few senators were the subject of such recognition as he received on the occasion when he sat in this house for the last time. We all looked back at his long career which spanned that of any man now on Parliament Hill. We recalled with admiration his work on various committees in the Senate; particularly his work on the Divorce Committee, which laid the ground work for the rich contribution made on that subject by Senator Roebuck.

• (2010)

Senator Aseltine was a man of great judgment; he enjoyed the confidence of those who sat to Mr. Speaker's right and left. He was an indefatigable leader of his party in this house, and for a period served as Leader of the Government in the Senate. His was a rich contribution to the Government and to the politics of Canada. He served his country nobly as a member of the Senate. On behalf of all Canadian people, speaking as the spokesman for the Government, I should like to record the debt we owe Senator Aseltine for his unselfish devotion to public duty in municipal life, provincial life, and on the national scene through the Senate which he loved so much.

I send to his wife and family this expression of sincere sympathy.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, Walter Aseltine was a man of exemplary virtue; a consummate statesman worthy of the highest praise. His standards were exalted, his ability exceptional, his dedication to duty singular. The record of his achievements as a senator speaks eloquently of the man as an aware and concerned legislator, a masterful parliamentary tactician, a patient, wise, considerate, mild-mannered humble gentleman, liked and respected by everyone.

Walter Aseltine was, above all else, a Canadian; one who served his country admirably well. He sat in the Senate for some 37 years, which is a record in itself. Few have served as long and few have served here with such distinction. Canada is the better for Senator Aseltine's having lived and worked among us.

It is on those Prairies which he loved so dearly, among the wheat fields which fueled his existence, that he will be laid to rest tomorrow afternoon. This noble son of the West will be profoundly missed by all who had the privilege of knowing him.

To his widow and children we extend our most heartfelt condolences.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, in the tributes that have been paid to Senator Aseltine this evening, mention has been made of his ability as leader in this house on the Government side and on the Opposition side. I feel that all who have held that responsibility would agree there were few leaders who have enjoyed the respect and affection of this chamber which Walter Aseltine enjoyed. While he was leader of the Senate he had a minimal amount of difficulty with his legislation. I feel this was due to the fact that everyone in this chamber had the utmost confidence in the way he conducted the affairs of the house. While he was in the Opposition he made responsible speeches which were always considered.

I am pleased that the Leader of the Senate has referred to the fact that Senator Aseltine made a notable contribution to the Standing Committee of the Senate on Divorce. Too little credit was given to the work of that committee throughout the years, particularly since World War II, and to the contribution it made to the comity of Confederation. Divorce was not available through the courts in some of our provinces. Senator Aseltine shared in the exhausting and arduous work of that committee. Divorce is no longer a problem for Parliament. Very early in my days in this chamber Senator Aseltine brought in a bill which proposed that divorce be moved from Parliament into the courts. He lived to see this desire fulfilled. He anticipated by many years this desirable reform.

Mrs. Aseltine has also made a great contribution to parliamentary life. She is a beloved woman, and we send our sympathy to her at this time.

POVERTY

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the Order:

Consideration of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty in Canada, tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, 10th November, 1971.—(Honourable Senator Croll).

Hon. Chesley W. Carter: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the honourable Senator Carter do now speak instead of Senator Croll?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Carter: Honourable senators, my first words must be to congratulate Senator Croll on his masterful exposition of the report of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty which he tabled on Wednesday last.

I should also like to thank him for his very kind references to me personally, and to the committee as a whole.

Senator Croll's background and experience qualified him eminently for the chairmanship of this committee, and as chairman he lived up to his nationwide reputation as a great humanitarian and the champion of the causes of the little people—particularly the underdogs. He set a hard pace for the committee but he spared himself even less and it was a privilege to serve under his leadership.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Carter: As Senator Croll has pointed out, the essence of the report on poverty can be summed up under three main headings:

1. A guaranteed annual income provided by the federal Government.

2. Provision of services by the provinces.

3. A national council for applied research which could also include a national office of education.

All the other recommendations revolve around these three proposals, and my purpose today is to expand these concepts somewhat by adding to what Senator Croll has already said.

First, the guaranteed annual income: Here we must be careful to distinguish between the guaranteed income payments and the method and mechanisms by which they are implemented. There is a tendency to combine and treat them as two aspects of the same thing, and this leads to confusion. Actually, they are two different things.

The guaranteed annual income by the federal Government has a philosophy behind it. This philosophy permeates the whole report and is based on the following principles:

1. That human beings count as individuals in themselves and that in a democratic society all its citizens are equal—equally worthy of respect and equally entitled to the freedom necessary to develop their own talents and capacities.

2. That the poor must be allowed to enter into a world where they can truly exploit the promise of education, the opportunity to choose a meaningful occupation and enjoy decent standards of housing and health care; that this should no longer be looked upon as a privilege but as a basic social right. Only in this way can each man and woman explore fully the dimensions of his or her own personality, and make a contribution to society. Today the valuable contributions of thousands of such people lie untapped and wasted.

3. That every individual should have the right to participate in the decisions that affect their own lives, and in the organization and administration of programs created for them. For too long the poor have been people to whom and for whom things were done by others. Patronage is stultifying and demoralizing. The essence of a new program must be to help them help themselves—to give them a voice in what is to be done and how it is to be done.

4. That welfare payments should be completely separated from the counselling and welfare services, and handled by separate agencies each completely independent of the other. It is the mixing of the economic and social functions of the present system that has done so much to dehumanize it. The payments are to be considered a right; they are not to be looked upon as a club to humiliate or force recipients into counselling programs or other various schemes.

5. That all welfare services be provided by the same agency or by agencies under the same umbrella.

6. That the provision of services be closely integrated with the needs of particular communities so as to meet local needs. The provision of services should, therefore, be a provincial matter since so many of the areas in which they operate will be within provincial jurisdiction.

7. That the financial burdens be borne by the federal Government because only the federal Government has access to the sums of money that will be necessary to institute the wide range of programs necessary, and because only the federal Government can ensure equity throughout Canada, and also because only the federal Government can take the steps necessary to maintain a strong economy which is essential for the success of any serious anti-poverty program.

8. That when a worker's job is destroyed through measures that have become necessary for the management of the economy, or in the interests of society as a whole, then society through government is obligated to provide him with an alternative means of support.

9. That any income maintenance plan should provide an adequate income combined with an incentive to work, and at the same time be fiscally possible.

These principles are the basic requirements of a just society. Only by adhering to them can we ensure that the poor will enjoy the benefits of freedom, democracy, and equality. Today, in effect, the poor are not the equals of other Canadians, and they are not as free.

The concept of poverty has many dimensions, but, basically, poverty consists of material deprivation. The loss of self-respect, social exclusion and other evils associated with poverty are its effects rather than its essence. People consider themselves poor in relation to the living standards of the people around them. The poverty level of 1971 will not be the same as the poverty level of 1961, because living standards will have changed during the decade. Consequently, people on fixed incomes will consider themselves increasingly impoverished as living standards around them rise. The poverty level must therefore rise annually in proportion to the rise of the national standard of living, and not merely in proportion to the increase in the cost of living. Both must be included.

The committee found there is no objective yardstick that can be used to measure either different living standards or their adequacy. Material deprivation, however, which is the basic ingredient of poverty, can be measured quantitatively with sufficient accuracy to permit the determination of fairly distinct poverty targets. Any poverty line, however, for the reasons already stated, must of necessity be arbitrary and subjective.

• (2030)

The committee felt that to be satisfactory a poverty line must be at a level where no one, or at least relatively few, would receive less than they do now under the various provincial rates, and yet at the same time it must meet the test of adequacy and be within the range of fiscal possibility.

Within the framework of these limitations your committee studied the poverty lines that had been developed by a number of people including Molly Orshanski of the Social Security Administration in the United States, and by Miss Jennie Podoluk of the Consumer Finance Research Section of Statistics Canada.

In 1961 Miss Podoluk examined the family expenditures of some 2,000 families and discovered that on the average these families spent roughly half their total income on food, clothing, and shelter. She reasoned that families who spent more than 50 per cent of their income on these three basic necessities would have correspondingly less to spend on the numerous other items so essential for daily living. Following this reasoning she eventually decided that a family which spent 70 per cent or more of its income on food, clothing, and shelter alone would be at the poverty level, and this definition of poverty was adopted by the Economic Council of Canada.

A study of family expenditures also revealed, with respect to any definite standard of living, that for every $3 needed by a family of one a family of two requires $5, a family of three $6, a family of four $7, and so on. This discovery makes possible a formula whereby the relative needs of families of different sizes, except families of one, can be determined by a point system. The number of points per family is determined simply by adding three to the size of the family. For example, a family of four—a typical Canadian family—would have seven points. We have called these family-size equalizer points—FSEP for short. These family-size equalizer points can be used to determine yearly changes in the standard of living. For example, in 1969 Statistics Canada shows that the average income for a family of four was $9,000. Dividing this by seven—the number of points for a family of four—gives a figure of $1,282 which represents a unit which is related to the average living standard for a family of four in that year. This unit is called the family living standard equivalent or index.

Our first thought was to take half the average annual income for a family of four—that is $4,500—as the base poverty line for 1969. By using the living standard equivalent and the family-size equalizer points, this figure can then be adjusted to determine poverty lines for other size families. However, after studying the components of the average annual income as compiled by Statistics Canada, the committee felt that average annual incomes were not satisfactory for this purpose.

A survey was conducted for the committee by the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion. The answers to this questionnaire showed that the Podoluk line, when updated on the basis of the rise in the general living standard and modified to provide cost allocations to the sixth and subsequent family members, coincided exactly with the results of the public opinion survey. This was a most significant discovery.

After comparing these figures with the welfare payments scales of the various provinces with low income budgetary guides and with related data from Statistics Canada, having regard to the limiting criteria I mentioned earlier, the committee decided to set the poverty level for a family of four at $5,000 and the guaranteed income to start at 70 per cent of that figure, or $3,500.

Having decided on a poverty line and the initial amount of guaranteed annual income, together with methods of adjusting these figures for family sizes and for yearly changes in the standard of living, the committee then turned its attention to methods and mechanisms of implementation. The committee was convinced that there was absolutely no manner in which the present system could be patched up and utilized in any serious attempt to eliminate poverty or implement the philosophy that underlies this report.

A guaranteed annual income can be implemented by using universal demogrants in a way to ensure full recovery from those who do not need them or by the negative income tax method or by a combination of the two. Whichever system is adopted, however, must be integrated into the tax structure.

The demogrant method, despite some administrative advantages, would require a complete and revolutionary change in our present tax structure based on the philosophy of the Carter Report, which the Government appears to have rejected. It would involve a uniform flat rate of taxation for all, and to recover fully the demogrants from those above the poverty level, the tax would have to be around 50 per cent.

The committee felt this was not the time to recommend revolutionary changes in the tax system. Furthermore, the responsibility of funding the guaranteed annual income rests with the federal Government, as does the responsibility of devising the kind of tax structure best suited to the prevailing circumstances.

Having regard for the urgent need for immediate action, the committee has recommended the negative income tax method with a work incentive. The negative income tax method is flexible and the use of the tax mechanism removes the degrading means test from the system. Questions have been raised about constitutional problems in connection with the guaranteed income plan, but it should be remembered we already have a guaranteed annual income in the form of the Old Age Pension and are using the negative income tax method in connection with the guaranteed annual supplement. The committee is merely recommending that the present process be expanded and carried one stage further.

The filing of an income tax return is a common practice for most citizens. The tax return becomes the basis for making payments. There would be no other inquisitions. The committee is aware that the use of the negative income tax method involves some difficulties. However, we do not regard them as insuperable and we are convinced that the constitutional problems involved in the demogrant method would be infinitely greater.

Income maintenance represents only one part of the solution to poverty. The other part is the provision of services, which can best be provided by the provinces. The committee has, however, recommended that the provision of services be completely separated from income payments.

The vehicle recommended by the committee for the delivery of services is a revised version of the present Canada Assistance Plan. The present Canada Assistance Plan introduced by the federal Government in 1966 has several serious defects, the most serious of which is the 50-50 federal-provincial cost-sharing structure and the requirement that provinces make full expenditures before receiving federal payments. This benefits the richer provinces, because those who can afford to spend only little can receive only little in return.

One of the objectives of the Canada Assistance Plan was to do away with the invidious means test by substituting a needs test. However, need was not defined and every province was therefore free to determine its own definition and to set its own rates of assistance.

The Canada Assistance Plan covered a variety of welfare programs, and provinces were free to pick up, accept and reject as they chose. Many governments, particularly of the poor provinces, could not afford to make full use of the plan. Furthermore, the Canada Assistance Plan did not require any minimum standard or quality of service. Consequently there was a wide divergence between provinces in the amount, type and quality of service available.

The welfare system embraces not only official agencies—federal, provincial and municipal—but a multitude of private agencies as well. For example, we were told that there were over 200 private agencies in Winnipeg alone, and they are numerous in every large centre. These private agencies came into being to fill specific social needs. They were motivated by Christian love and compassion for mankind and a desire to help and serve their fellow man. Taken as a whole, however, they add to the confusion, their programs being unplanned and uncoordinated. The result is considerable duplication and overlapping, while serious gaps in social services are completely neglected.

Furthermore, this multiplicity of agencies gives a false impression of adequacy whereas, in fact, most private agencies are operating on a shoestring with a low level of service and minimal attention to the individual. For these reasons the committee has recommended that all agencies be under a single umbrella. Perhaps it would be better if private agencies concentrated on the prevention of social problems, leaving official agencies to take the responsibility for providing services. In so doing they could still utilize whatever special facilities or advantages private agencies may have to offer.

The third recommendation of the report is that a council for applied research be established at the national level. In carrying out its task the committee found itself terribly hampered by the woeful lack of adequate up-to-date information and statistical data. This problem was emphasized by the Economic Council of Canada and by a number of agencies that appeared before us. Even where knowledge exists, it is compartmentalized, diffused and not easily accessible.

The Human Resource Development Authority of Alberta stated in their brief, and I quote from page 195 of our report:

> There is a great need in Canada to develop a federated information system which integrates our emerging data and knowledge about social, economic, political and related matters.

• (2050)

A national council for applied research would take care of these needs and would not only conduct policy research directed toward short- and long-term social goals, but also toward criteria whereby the effectiveness of social policies could be measured and possible policy breakdowns detected in time for remedial action.

The report also recommends that the Government of Canada establish a national office of education. This office, which could very well be a branch of the national council for applied social research, would not infringe on the constitutional prerogatives of the provinces, but would limit its activities to the national interest in education as distinct from provincial and interprovincial interests. By so doing it could very well perform a vital service for the provinces.

[Hon. Mr. Carter.]

For example, one of the functions of this proposed education office would be to sponsor and support educational research, which is something that is seriously lacking in Canada today. In fact, Canada is doing very little fundamental research in education today because, in the first place, only two or three provinces can afford it, and, secondly, our education system is so fragmented that any meaningful research could be carried on only by a central body.

The committee discovered that the federal Government was already conducting a number of action-research programs under the name of Canada NewStart Programs, sponsored by the Department of Manpower. Their purpose was to develop and test new approaches to education and training among the disadvantaged, and NewStart programs were operating in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. These have now been discontinued with the exception of that in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, which I understand ends next June, and that of New Brunswick which continues until 1974.

The one I examined most closely was that at Prince Albert, and I was tremendously impressed by what was being done. Manpower retraining programs are implemented by purchasing vocational courses from the provincial governments. This amounts to purchasing seats in provincial vocational classrooms, but to gain entrance applicants must meet provincial entry requirements which are usually set at the Grade 10 level. This means that before being admitted to these vocational courses, the applicant must pass the provincial Grade 10 examination.

At Prince Albert I saw a girl who wanted to take a beautician's or hairdresser's course, another who wanted to take a course in typing, and a young man who wished to be a barber, all struggling with algebra and geometry because that was a prerequisite subject for admission to the course. This demonstrates the lack of realism so prevalent in our educational system.

Unskilled jobs are today practically non-existent. Lack of skills means unemployment. Lack of education is, therefore, a prime contributor to the problem of poverty. Most applicants for vocational courses have a functional level of education of around Grade 4, and the problem is to get them up to the Grade 10 level in a minimum period of time. This was the basic problem that the NewStart programs were grappling with. Some had succeeded in advancing the applicants three grades a year, but at this rate it would take applicants two years to qualify for entrance to the courses.

Like the others, the NewStart program at Prince Albert was experimenting with a number of different approaches with a view to advancing their students even more rapidly, for the sooner they gained admission to vocational training, the sooner they would become productive citizens. This in itself was educational research of tremendous importance.

However, what intrigued me most about the NewStart program at Prince Albert was the research being done to determine why some people fail and others succeed. They kept a case history of every applicant who participated in their program, analysed their social attitudes and performance during the program itself, and followed them up after they had been placed in employment.

They found that to be successful in a job a person must have a balance between two different types of skills. One type they called marketable skills, such as a trade, vocation, or profession, and the other they called problem-solving skills, which included the ability to adjust, adapt, and get along with others. They found that neither set of skills in the absence of the other could ensure success.

The provision of marketable skills was, of course, the purpose and responsibility of the manpower training program, but the development of problem-solving skills is the responsibility of the educational systems of the various provinces. Our system of education in Canada is simply not providing that basic requirement, and the discovery of this defect in our system is of the greatest importance.

It is tragic that the top officials in Ottawa responsible for appraising and continuing the program appear not to appreciate the significance and the value of this type of work, its objectives and results. Educational research calls for planning over a period of years, and therefore requires long-term financing. When we were there nearly two years ago the program had hardly started, but it had no assurance of continuing longer than one year. Although it has since continued on a yearly basis, due, I suspect to Senator Croll's urging, it is now scheduled to end next June.

The committee noted many other aspects of education as it applied to the poor. The children were handicapped before attending school by poor accommodation, dilapidated, uncomfortable, rat-infested homes, lack of nutrition, lack of books and educational materials in the home, the parents' attitude towards education, and the general home atmosphere and environment.

Although there were some notable exceptions, which time prevents my mentioning, the schools they attend are usually in the oldest buildings, in the poorest neighbourhoods, with the poorest equipment, and in some cases with the poorest teachers because it was brought to the committee's attention that some teachers consider that their prestige suffers if they teach in a poor neighbourhood.

Poor children attending a middle-class school are often humiliated by being treated differently from other children by the teachers, by the administration, and at school functions. Children are sensitive about such things, particularly when their dress does not compare favourably with that of other children. Consequently they often suffer psychological and personality injuries.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (de Lanaudière): May I be permitted to interrupt the honourable gentleman? I should like to know what kind of school the honourable senator from Newfoundland attended when he was a boy.

• (2100)

Hon. Mr. Carter: I went to the little red school house.

In the case of children of our native peoples, this humiliation is compounded by derogatory and demeaning references in our curricula, our textbooks, slides, films and other educational materials which depict them as ignorant savages and add insult to injury.

Thus under our system the children of the poor suffer tremendous handicaps that deprive them of the opportunity to develop their innate talents, abilities and capacities, and of the educational benefits which is theirs as a right.

Honourable senators, this report has a message and a challenge to each and every Canadian. To the working poor the report offers the hope of assistance with a work incentive that will enable them to stay on the job, assist and encourage them to improve their standard of living and thereby avoid being entrapped in the welfare system.

To those outside the labour force—the old, the infirm, the incapacitated and those on fixed incomes—the report recommends a guaranteed annual minimum income which will be revised upwards in proportion to the rise in our living standards so that their standard of living will be maintained instead of being eroded by inflation as happens under the present system.

To the unemployed employable, the committee recommends a means whereby they and their families can live at least decently while being provided with new skills that hopefully will enable them to help themselves to become productive citizens.

To all four million Canadians below the poverty level, the report's recommendations will restore their human dignity and their right to live their own lives in their own way, because the report banishes patronage, together with the humiliation and human degradation that go with it.

The federal Government says the guaranteed annual income plan is too expensive to implement at this time. To the federal Government the report says we realize $1 billion is a lot of money, but your present system is costing over $6 billion. To that must be added at least another $1½ billion in lost production. Then there are the social costs—the cost of sickness and poor health, the cost of crime, violence and social unrest, and, above all, there is the human cost in human misery, loss of dignity and self-respect. The present system does not work. Its continuation can only make a bad situation worse.

Furthermore, the report emphasizes all these costs are escalating at a rapid rate and in time will be certain to overwhelm us. An extra billion dollars now will arrest these conditions and over a period of time will eliminate poverty as we know it today and its social effects. It is therefore an expenditure we cannot afford not to make.

To the provincial governments we say: The ball is now in your court. It is up to you to decide now whether political considerations will take precedence over the needs of the poor.

To the mass media, the churches, church leaders, fraternal organizations and other moulders of public opinion, the report makes a plea for their assistance in changing the attitudes of our people with respect to the poor and in debunking the myths on which these attitudes and prejudices are based—the myth of equal opportunity for all, that it is a person's own fault to be poor, the myth that economic growth is the answer. We know now that poverty is produced by the way our economy operates. The myth that our tax burden is equal: those earning less than $2,000 pay 60 per cent of their income in taxes as compared with 37 per cent to 38 per cent for those with incomes over $10,000. The myth that our tax structure redistributes income and wealth: in 1951, the lowest 20 per cent income group received 6.1 per cent of the total national income; the top 20 per cent received 41.1 per cent. In 1967, 15 years later, the figures were 6.8 per cent and 38.5 per cent respectively. The myth that the poor do not want to work: some 600,000 working poor who would be better off on welfare give the lie to that statement. The myth that the poor are chiselers: the committee verified that only about 3 per cent of welfare recipients abuse the system. What other groups in our society are in a position to point the finger?

To industry and labour, big business and big unions, the report offers the opportunity to make the guaranteed annual income possible without undue increase in the tax burden by increasing productivity.

Finally, to Canadians everywhere, the report says it is up to you. In the final analysis, it is you, the people of Canada, who will decide whether we shall spend $6 billion perpetuating a system that perpetuates poverty with all its human degradation and misery or spend an extra billion and launch a war to end it. Nothing worth while can be accomplished without cost. The eradication of poverty is a great and worthy cause. It demands sacrifice, dedication and, above all, commitment. Acceptance of this challenge will give Canadians a new national purpose and a new sense of national unity.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Honourable senators, may I put a question to the distinguished and honourable Senator?

Are you suggesting by your words that political expediency overcomes the poor? You are suggesting that the Canadian Government is able to afford to pay a guaranteed annual income. Are you suggesting that this is political expediency on the part of your Prime Minister?

Would you be good enough to answer the question, if you know how? I believe you wrote that speech yourself; I am not sure, but you sometimes do.

Hon. Mr. Carter: I do not follow your question.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Well, you followed your own speech. Perhaps you did not write it.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Walker has the floor.

[Translation]

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Would Senator Walker let me have the floor?

Hon. Mr. Walker: I gladly comply with my honourable colleague's request.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Thank you.

[English]

Senator Walker is much better in French than I am. When he is talking about the Prime Minister—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I do not believe one is allowed to answer a question for someone else.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the honourable senator was not at his seat, and he has no right—

[Hon. Mr. Carter.]

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I was at my seat when I rose on the point of order. I am still on the point of order. I am quite sure that the honourable Senator Carter is better able than you to answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): You can rise on a point of order at any time but you have to be at your seat.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I am at my seat.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker: Order, please. Allow me to sum up the situation.

[English]

The honourable Senator Walker had the floor and it was at the request of the honourable Senator Fournier (De Lanaudière) that he yielded. If the honourable Senator Fournier has a question to put at this time, he has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. the Speaker: The point of order was that the honourable Senator Fournier could not answer a question which was directed to the honourable Senator Carter, and on those grounds, of course, the point of order stands. If the honourable Senator Fournier has a question he may now have the floor.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): I was very kindly given the floor by the honourable gentleman on the opposite side, and then the Leader of the Opposition, who was not at his seat, tried to mix everything up.

• (2110)

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I did not have to. Once you were up everything was mixed.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Senator Walker told Senator Carter that the Prime Minister was his leader. We have no leader here—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Oh!

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): —except the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Don't make it worse.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): The Government has no leader here. That was my point.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Touché! Senator Carter, would you kindly reply to my question?

When you refer to the government of the day, let us have it in Newfoundlandese, which we hear from Senator Cook every time he speaks—and very nice too. It is a nice accent; it sounds like Spanish to me. When you say the government of the day, of which Mr. Trudeau is the Prime Minister at the moment, has bowed to political expediency against the poor in refusing the report of the distinguished Senator Croll, the chairman of this magnificent committee, do you really mean that?

Hon. Mr. Carter: I think you must have misunderstood.

Hon. Mr. Walker: It is what you said. I did not misunderstand. You may have been a little upset, or you do not understand what you said, or you may not even have heard what you said. You said that political expediency on the part of the Government has been responsible for the refusal to consider the report of our venerable Senator Croll. Would you answer that question? Is that so? You sit down when you should stand up, and vice versa. Are you compos mentis tonight? Stand up and answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): What is the question?

The Hon. the Speaker: I must remind honourable senators that when a question is asked an honourable senator is under no obligation to reply. He may decline to answer. That is the situation.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): I rise on a point of order. I should like to know exactly what the question of the honourable gentleman is, because if I do not know what the question is I will have no understanding of the answer. Would my good friend—he knows I am a good friend of his—put his question clearly in order that everyone understands, even I?

Hon. Mr. Walker: When I have it put to me like that, honourable senators, by my distinguished colleague, the former mayor of Montreal, it means I could not have made myself clear. It is very simple. Is Senator Carter serious when he says that political expediency on the part of the Government, of which Prime Minister Trudeau is the head, has been responsible for the refusal to consider the report of Senator Croll, whose recommendation was that we should have a guaranteed annual income? Is he serious in saying that it was political expediency on the part of the Liberal Government?

Hon. Mr. Carter: I did not use the word "expediency" in my whole speech.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Oh, yes, you did.

On the motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, November 9, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Martin, calling the attention of the Senate to the Canada-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement, done at Ottawa, October 20, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, October 20, 1971, and to the Canada-Soviet Communiqué, dated October 26, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, October 26, 1971.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I am happy to rise at a time when the house is in such a genial mood, in which it might be inclined to agree with my later remarks.

Before proceeding I should like to digress for a moment to welcome all our new colleagues to this honourable chamber, including a certain lady who I presume will meet with some difficulties since she did not want to be a senator. I hope time will overcome that difficulty for her. In particular, I should like to welcome the honourable Senator Lorne Bonnell from my province, who is a medical doctor.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: He replaces my former seatmate, the Honourable J. J. MacDonald. If I may, I should like to take a moment or two to make an Islander feel welcome in the rest of Canada. It will be realized that coming from a small part of the country with a small population we sometimes feel a little outnumbered, and I want to make Senator Bonnell feel really welcome this evening. I was a classmate of his brother, Dr. George Bonnell. Somehow or other I felt I had injected a certain amount of Conservative philosophy into the Bonnell family through Dr. George Bonnell. I do not know whether or not he passed it on; I have not seen any evidence of that. However, I did enjoy my association with our colleague's brother.

I would also point out that there is something of a tradition of King's County medical families being associated with the Senate. Many of you will remember Senator Grant, who was a medical doctor. If my memory serves me correctly, he had five sons who were doctors, one a doctor in dentistry, and a daughter who was a Ph.D. in bacteriology. Senator Bonnell's family has carried on that tradition, he as a very highly regarded medical practitioner and two of his brothers as specialists.

Senator Bonnell has had something like 20 years in provincial politics, a career that I have followed with interest. I cannot in all honesty say I have agreed with that career, but I have followed it with interest, and sometimes, I must say, with admiration.

Senator Bonnell's uncle, the Reverend Dr. Bonnell, who was minister of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York, was considered to be one of the outstanding speakers in the United States for a number of years, and even at an advanced age was still an outstanding speaker. Senator Bonnell's speeches—and I am sure he will be the first to agree with me—will not have the eloquence of those of his uncle, but he has those traits and he can give an interesting and a challenging address. At times, Senator Bonnell and I will disagree on the methods of achieving our objective, but we will have something in common and that is our representation of the Atlantic Provinces and, in particular, Prince Edward Island. As I say, we may disagree on the method, but we will never disagree on the objective.

• (2120)

Honourable senators, I turn now to the second item on the Order Paper, the Canada-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement. Perhaps if I were a clergyman I would select as my text the words of Paul, as they are found on page 1384—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Give him a sainthood.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I have a high regard for this individual, but I cannot confer sainthood on him.

These are the words of Paul as found on page 1384 of Senate Hansard of October 26. Really, I do not think the honourable senator was happy in making these remarks. We were sorry for him when he did so, but it was more or less foisted on him and he did the best he could. He stated:

> I think the visit of Chairman Kosygin has had considerable value for him, his party, and ourselves.

This is a rather unusual statement and it is more unusual when we consider that it has gone by with very little notice. I repeat those words:

> I think the visit of Chairman Kosygin has had considerable value for him, his party, and ourselves.

I am not particularly interested in the benefits to Mr. Kosygin or his party, and I would first like to look at the benefit to ourselves. Possibly the greatest value to Canadians was realized after the departure of the two recent communist visitors—the realization that the traffic moved normally, that there were no police barricades, no security checks, and no demand for identity cards. If Canadians realize the freedom we enjoy, a freedom that perhaps we take too much for granted, then the visits may have had some value.

It is rather disheartening, discouraging, to think of a motel or a hotel in Toronto guarded by 3,000 policemen. This is not Canada, honourable senators. It has never been the way of life here, and I hope it never will be.

Senator Croll, in his half-apology, half-explanation speech, in which he attempted to explain the Jewish protest, was interrupted by Senator Flynn with what I think was one of the most pertinent interjections I have heard in fifteen years in Parliament.

Senator Croll said that, after Premier Kosygin had undergone his unfortunate attack on Parliament Hill, he had seen nothing but policemen in Canada, and Senator Flynn interjected and said: "Yes, but in Canada they wear uniforms." Unfortunately that was not recorded in Senate Hansard, and I want to put it on Hansard because I think it so briefly and so aptly described the difference between our two systems.

We know a policeman, we respect a policeman and, yes, even at times we turn to a policeman for help.

Honourable senators, the first and the most difficult question that must be asked concerning Senator Martin's remarks is why he—or any other Canadian, for that matter—should boast that a visit of the communist dictator to this country had favourable results for that dictator and the communist party. Surely benefit to the communist party is the last thing that anyone in Canada—yes, even this Government—would have as an objective of a state visit.

Throughout the visits of Messrs. Kosygin and Tito, the Government and the media were very careful not to mention that the state visitors are ruthless dictators, holding millions in a life of fear and misery. Not once in his remarks did Senator Martin use the word "communist". It is still in the dictionary, Senator Martin; I wonder why you choose to ignore it? Were you instructed to ignore the word "communist"?

The Government of the day seemed determined to give an air of respectability and acceptability to our communist visitors. One must wonder if this was deliberately done in order that Canadians would accept communism on the same ready terms as they accept our neighbours to the south, the Americans, and their way of life.

Nothing the Government can do can give communism an aura of respectability to people of our ages. We remember too well the past actions. On the other hand, those who are younger could be very drastically influenced by the extensive coverage of our leaders toasting the friendship of the two countries. They could be influenced by our guest, Premier Kosygin, when he attacked our neighbour at a banquet.

All this disturbs me greatly and, frankly, I wondered if we were not in somewhat of a lion's den and needed some very extraordinary assistance and guidance. We must remember that young Canadians do not recall the sudden, brutal, murderous rise of communism during World War II and immediately following it. Are our young people of today to be indoctrinated by visitors, by communist leaders, described by members of our cabinet as able and wise men? They may be wise and able when compared to members of this cabinet, but I cannot think of any other criterion by which they could be described as being able and wise. The old expression "faith, hope and charity" is one that has been used in a good many speeches. I am fully aware of that, honourable senators, but sometimes I wonder if we are not moving to the same faith as the U.S.S.R., to the same lack of hope and, indeed, I wonder if both countries do not show the same degree of charity.

It is rather surprising that Canada should suddenly become selected as the site of so many New Ideas of communism: Communism has changed! Communism has now come to Canada with New Ideas! The Prime Minister of Canada visited the U.S.S.R. in the spring of this year. Premier Kosygin returned the visit early this fall. To me, honourable senators, that is rather unusual diplomatic haste. To me that smacks of something suspicious. There is a bad taste about the shortness of the interval of time.

As distinct from that, both officially and unofficially, the Prime Minister of Canada has visited the United States on numerous occasions since his election and yet there has been no great pressure on President Nixon to pay a return visit. Could it be that since Prime Minister Trudeau failed to become a star on Broadway, he has turned to the Bolshoi Ballet or the Moscow Circus? In the meantime he seems to be carrying on a tightrope act between Ottawa and Moscow. It is a circus performance that has every Canadian disturbed. Half the population is terrified that he will complete the tightrope act from Ottawa to Moscow; the other half is worried that he will not slip and fall off that tightrope.

It is my belief that the Senate record should remind Canadians of all ages of at least a few of the actions of the Russian communist party, and of the fact that those actions were approved by, and were carried out by, the present hierarchy. In the present hierarchy, of course, are Mr. Kosygin and Mr. Brezhnev. Let us not forget that fact. Nor were Mr. Kosygin and Mr. Brezhnev acting as unpaid lance corporals during the war. They were in the strategic group planning postwar movements. Let us not forget that for one moment.

Ask any school child about the Baltic states, about Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. School children have little or no knowledge of those states, because those states no longer exist as such. Perhaps they have never existed so far as the children are taught today. They do not know that the communists invaded those small, neutral states and, as Senator Thompson mentioned, murdered, deported, and tortured their leaders. Neither do most Canadians realize that the young people born in those states today are taken as teenagers and moved into the interior of Russia while, in turn, Russians are moved into their country. This is done in order that the young people from the Baltic states will be assimilated into the Russian nation. Thus can Mr. Kosygin boast that Russia has solved its nationality problem.

As a Canadian, I sometimes become tired of the so-called "hyphenated-Canadianism". But I would prefer our method, with all its problems, difficulties, and need of understanding, to that of the communist method.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Perhaps this is an appropriate time to remind Canadians of all ages that those invaded nations were neutral, and that their peoples were friendly to the Russians. Unfortunately for them, they could not, as we can, look south to a large, powerful, and friendly nation for protection.

Perhaps more Canadians realize the manner in which the Russians seized, and to this day hold in bondage, the Polish nation. However, Canadians seem to be completely unaware and unconcerned that Poland is held in the ruthless bondage of Russian communism. Polish citizens who question the Russian occupation of their country disappear—not into the hands of Polish police but into the clutches of the Russian secret police.

It was my privilege in May to attend a wedding at the Polish church in Ottawa. Following the ceremony, the guests looked back at the Polish Crown and the Polish Eagle and, in a moment of nostalgia—yes, even more than nostalgia—said, "We remember; we had freedom in those days when we had the Polish Eagle."

I have alluded to that at this point because I should like those people, who are so intent on destroying our Crown and the symbols that have meant so much to us over the years, to realize what happened to the Polish people when they lost the symbols they respected. By way of replacement they received nothing but the Hammer and Sickle.

• (2140)

If we go back to the conferences of World War II between the great leaders Churchill, Roosevelt and their counterpart on the other side, Stalin, no one can imagine that it was ever intended that East Germany was to remain permanently a communist state. Yet behind the Berlin Wall, the electric fences, the mine fields dividing the east and the west, the communist puppets there carry on the rigid rules of a Soviet régime. We hear a great deal about self-determination for various nations and respect for national boundaries. There is only one way that self-determination can be achieved and that is by free democratic elections such as we have in Canada, Britain, and the United States.

Honourable senators, I should like to direct this question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Is it the intention of the Canadian Government, now that we have established such a close mutual admiration society with the communists, to ask them to allow free elections and self-determination in those nations that are under their domination and in the complete control of their KGB.? Are you, Senator Martin, going to do that? If you are not, then all your speeches and all your state visits are nothing but a complete and utter farce.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: As we move southward through Europe we find that the Balkan nations and the Ukraine were ravaged, first by the invasion of the Nazi armies and secondly by the repulsion of that invasion. They went through a very difficult time. Yet, they ended up in the same situation. They have permanent Russian communist occupation, and an occupation that appears to have the blessing of this government. Imagine how those who love freedom in Hungary and Czechoslovakia will read Senator Martin's words as they are recorded on page 1385 of Hansard:

> The agreement might have been obtained much earlier, but for a temporary setback in relations which occurred as a result of disturbances in Central Eastern Europe about three years ago. As for this current visit of Mr. Kosygin, we regard the conclusion of the General Exchanges Agreement as the best testimony to Canadian-Soviet co-operation.

I should like to ask you, Senator Martin: What was so temporary about that situation three years ago? What has changed in the meantime? Has a Russian tank gone home? Have the machine gunners gone home? Have the KGB agents gone home? No. They are still there. You know that, and you know they are going to stay there. So why describe it as a temporary situation? Surely you, as a former Secretary of State for External Affairs, know they have no intention of going home. You must also know how discouraging it is to those people in those countries who are undergoing the most utter misery when you say that this is the ultimate in Canadian-Soviet co-operation. I am sorry, Senator Martin, to appear to be so critical of you, but unfortunately you report to this chamber for the Government, and therefore I shall be referring to you quite often. Surely, after your long career, you did not believe this was a temporary situation.

It must also not be forgotten that Marshal Tito, our second visitor, is not exactly the world's most popular head of state. His welcome in Canada must leave a lot of people in Yugoslavia confused. While I have not received any official communiqué on that visit, I have read press reports indicating that the Canadian Government is considering ways for Canadians to invest in Yugoslavia. After the events of the last few days when we have had Gray reports, black reports and red reports concerning foreign investment in Canada, I wonder what is the difference between a foreigner investing in Canada and a Canadian investing in a communist state such as Yugoslavia.

It is my understanding, Senator Martin, that you intend to reply at the conclusion of this debate, and I should like you at that time to elaborate on, and explain, the difference. I find myself very much confused in that regard.

Great emphasis was placed on a so-called detente and peaceful co-existence. It would almost seem that the western nations were the aggressors, and that Canada in a sudden new-found diplomatic role is persuading the communist nations that they need not fear aggression from the west. Let us compare the record of the western allies with that of the communists—and here, honourable senators, let me say I love to read these phrases from the communiqué:

> —the principles of mutual confidence, reciprocity, respect for independence, national sovereignty—

They are nice phrases, are they not, Senator Martin?

> —territorial integrity and equality of all States, non-interference in internal affairs—

Nobody has ever interfered in a communist state.

> —renunciation of the use or threat of force, and the settlement of disputes through negotiation in accordance with the United Nations Charter.

• (2150)

You know, this sounds like something that someone would memorize in kindergarten or grades I and II, rather than something that the Canadian Government would sign. Surely this Government cannot be naïve enough to believe that the communists have changed that much.

Let us just go back for a moment and consider the communist activities. Immediately following World War II weapons delivered to Russia from the allied nations—and they were delivered over that difficult Murmansk route—for use against the Nazis were given to the communists to replace the lawful government of China. Now, admittedly this was not the most desirable form of government, but they had been in a war with Japan and really never had much of a chance. The Russians, the strategists Kosygin and Brezhnev, immediately recommended a move into China. Perhaps they regret that move today, but our weapons were poured into China. Anyone who has the idea that the present government of China was a unanimous choice is very greatly mistaken. The people of Taiwan are not there because of a free enterprise system, but because they are refugees from communism.

Several senators, including the honourable Senators Grosart and Manning, have expressed their opposition to our disgraceful abandonment of Taiwan. I am sorry, Senator Martin, to interrupt your discussion with Senator Smith, but I will in a moment be directing a question to you; would you mind? I share their disgust at the callous manner in which 14 million people have been flushed down the sewer of the communists. The question I would like to direct to the Leader of the Government is simply this: What will you do if the communists continue their aggression and, as they indicated in their first speech at the United Nations, one which you very much desired, say they will recover Taiwan? What will be the Canadian Government's attitude in that case? When you sum up I would like an answer to that question. We do not have to confine ourselves and—

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): That is not our business.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Communism is always very much our business. You might not realize it, but there are a great many Canadians who do.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): I would like to ask the honourable senator, with his permission, what he would suggest? It is always nice, you know, to offer suggestions before asking others to do what you wish them to do. Make a suggestion of your own—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: You make it!

[Hon. Mr. Phillips.]

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): —and take your responsibility as a senator and a member of a party in the Opposition here. Just tell the honourable Senator Martin what you would do if you had the power to do something. It is very easy for you, when you can do nothing, to ask others what they would do.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: The question directed by the honourable Senator Fournier is actually rather amusing. I have given my fair share of advice to this Government, but despite my best efforts they continue to get into difficulties through disregarding my advice. That is one point.

Secondly, under no condition can I imagine myself abandoning Taiwan, a respectable member of the United Nations. In addition, I would say to you that if Canada had voted according to the provincial laws at least, they could not have admitted mainland China to the United Nations, because of discrimination. Take the example of a golf club. One cannot say he will join provided so-and-so is expelled. That would be discrimination under most provincial laws. Yet the federal Government votes in the United Nations for expulsion of Taiwan, despite all the laws of Canada against such discrimination.

You asked me what I would do? The first recommendation I would make to you, Senator Fournier, would be a complete change in Government, including the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure you would be the first to agree with me with respect to that.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): That is quite all right, sir, but it is no answer. You change the Government, but you do not change the situation.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I think the Leader of the Government should thank Senator Fournier for his help.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): No; changing the Government of Canada will not change the situation in Asia.

Hon. Mr. Walker: It would be a good thing though.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): What would you do to change the situation in Asia? Whether it be a Liberal, Conservative or New Democrat government, what are you suggesting would change the situation there? We would like to hear from you, whether as a Conservative, a Liberal, or a blind man such as you are.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I would suggest to my friend that he consider my record in this house. He can expect my answer and anticipate it, that I will stick with my friends. I would be damned if I would go to Moscow. Does that answer your question?

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Your record in this house up to now, sir, has been nice, fine and clear. Do not spoil it by avoiding the answer to my question.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I am sorry if I have disappointed my honourable friend in the answer. However, I am sure that he will agree that one answer which does not agree with his opinion in eight years is really not that bad. I am sure that he will accept the fact that I am entitled to my views as he is to his.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): We know that.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I had intended before the interruption of my honourable friend to proceed to discuss the Middle East, an area that I know concerns this Government, as well as a good many other governments, and ask what is the attitude of the international communists in the Middle East. Throughout your communiqué discussions you kept mentioning disarmament. Where is the desire for disarmament on the part of the U.S.S.R. as illustrated in the Middle East? We cannot even trust the communists to maintain the so-called balance of power in the Middle East. If we go a little bit further to the east and southeast, we come to the Ho Chi Minh Trail. Just as many Russian and Chinese arms come down the Ho Chi Minh Trail as American arms enter South Vietnam.

• (2200)

Communist arms come down for one purpose, which is to subjugate and make South Vietnam another communist puppet state. Yet in Canada we find that our Government is concerned only with United States involvement there. They have conveniently put on blinkers and ignored the fact that Canada, as a nation represented in the demilitarized zone, has witnessed one crossing after another by communists into South Vietnam.

We can all recall the rather unfortunate and disastrous events that occurred in Biafra. We recall that Egyptian pilots flew Russian Migs in Biafra. I wonder if it was considered as being non-interference in the internal affairs, or as merely another aspect of a technical agreement whereby the communists agreed to train Egyptian pilots? Many emerging nations who accepted Russian technical advisers now find those same advisers remaining as their political masters.

Even the North and South American continents cannot escape the amoebic-like expansion of communism. Can Cuba be considered a bastion of freedom? Can the building of Russian naval bases in Cuba, even after the forced withdrawal of Russian missiles, promote mutual confidence on the part of the United States of America?

The communiqué states that in their mutual relations, as well as in solving international problems, they will invariably be guided by those principles which I read to honourable senators.

I should like at this point to ask what reforms in the pattern of communist conduct did Premier Kosygin promise in Ottawa? Certainly there must be a complete reformation of Russian communist conduct before any sane person can believe that the Russians will be guided by that long list of principles that I read a few moments ago. Not even Mr. Sharp, naïve as he is, believes that communism has reformed to that extent.

Senator Martin went on to say that many items had to be left out of the communiqué. He referred to attempts by Canada to negotiate with the Russians on a fisheries treaty. Fishermen on the west coast complained that Russian trawlers had threatened to run them down at night, and they appealed to the Canadian Naval Forces for protection. They probably could have done better on their own, but they appealed to the Canadian Government. On the east coast, our fishermen have complained that the Russians do not adhere to international agreements and are seriously depleting the fishery on that coast.

According to what Senator Martin said, as reported on page 1385, less than 20 minutes discussion was devoted to this important subject, and the discussion was carried on through an interpreter.

We have a saying in the Maritimes: "Fish are cut bait". In that discussion one could not even begin to cut bait with or without an interpreter, and it shows how much importance was attached to the subject of fisheries.

Among what might be described as the sins of commission and omission in the communiqué is the fact that the Minister of Defence entertained Mr. Kosygin and held discussions with him in Toronto. I wish to emphasize this point. We have been told of the wonderful trade and technical aspects, and all the other side benefits arising from this visit. But no one mentioned defence. It was the Minister of Defence who held talks with Mr. Kosygin in Toronto.

Honourable senators, does it not scare you a little bit, does it not disturb you to think of our Minister of Defence holding talks with Mr. Kosygin? One might use the excuse that the Minister of Defence is a cabinet minister from Toronto. However, this chamber recommended the appointment of a Minister for Scientific Affairs. One was subsequently appointed, and, by a strange coincidence, represents a seat in the Metropolitan Toronto area. Why did not the Minister for Scientific Affairs, rather than the Minister for Defence, hold discussions with Mr. Kosygin in Toronto?

I am disturbed by the fact that we are holding discussions with the Russians on defence. Emphasis was placed on disarmament and on the European Security Conference.

Disarmament, troop reductions, and so on, are very desirable objectives if they can be achieved. Senator Manning and Senator Thompson mentioned the huge increase in Russian armaments, including missiles, submarines, and conventional land forces. We are all aware that the Russian naval fleet has expanded into the Mediterranean and the Indian Ocean, where Russia did not exhibit any great interest in the past. Compare this with the fact that most NATO nations have frozen their defence budgets. On the other hand, the Russian defence budget has gradually increased. In fact, it has increased by about 12 per cent during the past two years. This fact indicates a negative viewpoint to disarmament.

• (2210)

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): I do not want to disturb the honourable gentleman; I just want to know what he is talking about. It might be useful for everyone to know at least what he is talking about, and where he is leading to.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Honourable senators, if the honourable senator fails to follow me—

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): It is not easy, sir.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I realize that with his limited capacity it is difficult for him at this hour.

I am quite willing to move the adjournment of the debate until tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): The honourable gentleman is now using my remarks as an excuse to take his seat. I do resent that, and I want him to know it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Do I understand that the honourable Senator Phillips is moving the adjournment of the debate?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: With leave, yes.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): It is about time.

On motion of Honourable Mr. Phillips, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the names of Messrs. Lachance and Hogarth had been substituted for those of Messrs. Deakon and De Bané; that the name of Mr. Gibson had been substituted for that of Mr. Laflamme; that the name of Mr. De Bané had been substituted for that of Mr. Watson; and that the name of Mr. Watson had been substituted for that of Mr. Hogarth on the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wonder if I might have leave to inform the house that tomorrow it is expected Senator Everett will table the report of the Finance Committee, which has been making the special study on Growth, Employment and Stability. This is an important document and I am sure most of us will want to be here in order to obtain a copy of the report as soon as possible.

It might also be useful to inform you that in order to facilitate the work of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, which is studying the important tax reform legislation, consideration is now being given to the possibility of adjourning tomorrow until Wednesday afternoon of next week, at which time that committee may be in a position to table its important second set of recommendations. Following the tabling of these two committee reports, the Senate will have its agenda fairly well completed, with the exception of consideration by the Standing Senate Committee on Finance, and by the Senate, of supplementary Estimates which will be received from the House of Commons. There is nothing firm in that respect at this time.

I mention this because it might be useful for members to have advance notice that instead of coming back next week on Tuesday night we will likely assemble on Wednesday afternoon.

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty in Canada, tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, November 10, 1971.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators—

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: On a point of order. Last night when, in the middle of my speech, I adjourned the debate on the Canada-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement and the Communiqué—and incidentally it is not easy to adjourn in the middle of a speech and subsequently continue with one's line of thought—I did so on the distinct understanding that this item would be first on the Order Paper today. I also did so at the request of the honourable Senator Fournier (De Lanaudière) on behalf of the Government. I am now confused about how our Orders of the Day are made up. Since I adjourned the debate last night I would have thought I would be first today, although I am not really concerned whether I am first or not. However, I should like an explanation of how the Orders of the Day are made up, and why I do not at this stage continue with the speech I was making last evening.

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, I suppose this is a matter that really concerns His Honour the Speaker, who should answer Senator Phillips. However, let me tell him that the Order Paper for today was prepared as it always has been ever since I have been in the Senate. I do not think there was any intention or reason to depart from the standard procedure. Since this matter has been raised, I could find out exactly what the procedure has been in the past and let my honourable friend know.

I have a concrete suggestion to make to Senator Phillips. If he would like to speak first today, all he has to do is to ask leave and I am sure that we on this side of the house would give him leave to continue his speech now. However, there are other items on the Order Paper, one of which is of particular importance, which would have to yield to the one on which Senator Phillips wishes to speak. He would first have to get leave from his colleague, Senator Macdonald.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: It is not my intention to ask for leave. As I pointed out earlier, it is immaterial to me whether I speak first or second. I am merely curious, and am wondering why I, having adjourned the debate last night at the request of the Government, am not now speaking first. I do not blame honourable senators opposite too much for requesting me to adjourn the debate last night; I did not realize I had been speaking so long. I am quite willing to follow Senator Macdonald, although I doubt whether I will maintain the same standard, or make a speech of the quality that I am sure he will make. That is not my problem. I am just curious to know how the Order Paper is made up.

The Hon. the Speaker: I should like to get this clear. Do I understand that I should ask honourable senators if they agree that item No. 2 on the Order Paper be called now instead of item No. 1?

• (1410)

Hon. Mr. Smith: I do not think that Senator Phillips wants it that way. I conclude that he was not asking for leave.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: No, I was not.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before item 1 on the Order Paper is called, I must inform you that Rule No. 21 covers this matter. Since I have nothing to do in the organizing or the planning of the work, I do not want to have any responsibility other than saying that Rule No. 21 provides the order in which the items should be called. We will proceed now with the Orders of the Day.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, the report of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty is a very comprehensive document. It is certainly worthy of much study, and its recommendations deserve great and, I think, favourable consideration. That the report is the result of much study of the problem of poverty is obvious.

The report is a tribute to the members of the committee. It shows that they had the zeal, the dedication, the persistence, the knowledge and the determination to carry out the task they accepted, to make a study in depth of poverty in Canada, to tell of its causes and effects and to recommend ways and means whereby, to a large measure, poverty can be eliminated. Members of the committee deserve our thanks for the work they have done. Their report is a valuable one and will influence the treatment of the problem of poverty in Canada for years to come.

Honourable senators, I know the other members of the committee will not object when I say that the chairman deserves a special word of thanks and commendation from us. It is fairly obvious that the recommendations contained in the report reflect the economic and social philosophy of the chairman, a philosophy which has motivated his lifelong drive and determination to help the less fortunate members of our society.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: In my few remarks today I do not propose to deal with the report in any detail. Last evening, Senator Carter, who was a member of the committee, dealt with certain parts of it in a very detailed and comprehensive manner, and I expect that other members of the committee will also speak in this debate.

In discussing the report we must have a very clear idea of what we mean by "poverty", and examine how widespread it is according to our definition. We must consider whether the recommendation of a guaranteed annual income would solve the problem in whole or in part.

I suppose everyone has a general idea of what constitutes poverty—even though we have been fortunate enough not to have experienced it. I have always lived in a small community, a town of less than 10,000 population. My work brought me in contact with a great many people. I know those in that community who were considered to be poor and, indeed, some were considered poor by whatever standards were used to judge poverty. But in a small community, if you know the type of work a householder does, you can estimate pretty well how he is getting along in an economic way. However, I have no knowledge whatsoever of poverty in a large city. I expect and assume that poverty in a large centre is a much more impersonal thing and a much more dreadful condition than that experienced in the small community, although both are bad.

[Hon. Mr. Smith.]

My reason for making this distinction is that I do not think the effect of poverty in a small community is as serious as it is in a larger centre. I do not think, for example, that children of poor people in a smaller community experience humiliations or frustrations in their activities in school and outside school or that they are made to feel inferior in any way to other children.

As set out in the report and as mentioned by Senator Carter, various definitions have been given as to what constitutes poverty. While the report recognizes that insufficient income to provide a decent standard of living is not the whole concept of poverty, yet it is the one generally accepted and readily understood. Using this standard, > —the committee decided that the sum of $3,500 should be adopted as the initial benefit level for a family of four for the year 1969. The provision of a $3,500 income floor, on a national basis, as a social right, represents a substantial gain for the great majority of families with little or no other income. For instance, $3,500 represents about $1,000 more than the amount received in 1969 by a four-person welfare family where the lowest benefit levels prevailed.

Senator Carter explained in detail how the proposal would work for other family units. I was pleased to see that the committee took care to state that if the guaranteed annual income scheme was adopted, provision would have to be made so that the recipients would receive at least as much as they do under present legislation. This is important. It could be that a recipient of old age security and the full supplemental income might receive more than is proposed under the guaranteed income for a single person.

I might mention here that the supplemental income is not generous. It provides an additional $55 a month, but only when a person has no other income whatsoever. If a person has any other income, the $55 is reduced and in many cases nothing is paid at all. One of the tragic things that I have noticed about this is that elderly people who have always paid their own way and who regard welfare payments as charity are forced to apply for welfare. I can tell you that it is a bitter blow to them.

How widespread is poverty as the report defines it? Well, let me quote from the report again. The first sentence of the Foreword reads:

> Poverty is the great social issue of our time. Unless we act now, nationally, in a new and purposeful way, five million Canadians will continue to find life a bleak, bitter, and never-ending struggle—

Another sentence reads:

> The grim fact is that one Canadian in four lacks sufficient income to maintain a basic standard of living.

If five million Canadians are considered to be below the poverty line by any standard, then it is a tragic and dismal indictment of our economic system and it is a sad commentary on our sense of social justice.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I think perhaps the report is a little too harsh on its treatment of the present social welfare structure. I do not agree that it has clearly outlived its usefulness. It certainly could stand improvement, but I think it should be remembered that it grew not only as the need became more apparent but it grew and developed as public opinion either demanded it or accepted it. Over the years it has accomplished much, and I think the Canadian people can be proud of what they have done in this field. Of course, every time their conditions changed, a new concept of social welfare was necessary, and I think it is conclusive proof that a new concept is now necessary when five million Canadians are living below the modest poverty line set out by the committee. Many of these are known as the working poor; they are employed, but do not earn sufficient income to take them out of poverty.

• (1420)

Honourable senators, if we think that the committee has overemphasized the problems, let us look at what might be called outside evidence. The Toronto Star of November 15 carried this headline, "Star Santa Fund seeks help for 24,000 children". Then the story goes on to say, in part:

> The Star Santa Claus Fund today opened its 66th consecutive Christmas season of appealing to readers for money to turn into those meaningful extras for Metro's youngsters—and a lot of essentials, such as sweaters and socks and baby clothing and leather mitts, too.
> This year, $175,000 is needed to provide Christmas boxes containing these things for 24,000 Metro children 12 years of age and under—

Honourable senators, I think that something must be done if in the great City of Toronto $175,000 is needed by the Star Santa Claus Fund to provide Christmas boxes for 24,000 children 12 years of age and under. I have no doubt that there are many other organizations and many other groups in that city who are also providing some kind of Christmas cheer for many other children. You will find the same thing happening in every city and town in Canada.

I support the recommendations contained in the report. Perhaps they will not do all that the committee hopes for, but in any event they are a sincere, honest and honourable attempt to find a solution to this great social issue of our time. I know there is resistance to the report. Immediately after its presentation the cry went up that its recommendations would be too costly and that Canada could not afford it. Well, I am never overly impressed by that argument. I have heard it so many times in the past, and it is usually propounded by people who would like to turn back the clock and live in days long since gone. I remember, and I am sure many other honourable senators remember, that with the introduction of the old age pension of $30 a month the cry went up that we could not afford it. We were also told that we could not afford family allowances. I know that taxes are high and I realize that there is a great and growing resistance to additional taxation, especially on the part of young married people when husband and wife must both work in order to meet their obligations, and they resent the amount of income tax deducted from their salaries. Yet, where a need exists a solution will be found if there is a desire and determination to find it.

It is not so long ago that $1 billion to fight unemployment was announced and found. I heard no objection to this on the grounds that we could not afford it. I know, of course, that employment, good employment, is the best weapon against poverty in so far as the working poor are concerned. However, in an all-out attack on poverty I believe that the recommendations of the committee deserve great, serious and favourable consideration.

To close my somewhat rambling remarks, I would like to make one further quotation from the report:

> A new approach is urgently needed. Such an approach must bring help and relief at once to those in need, and it must provide the foundation for policies that will ultimately—

And I emphasize that word, "ultimately".

> —eliminate the causes of poverty from our society.
>
> It is the committee's recommendation that the Parliament of Canada enact legislation to provide a guaranteed minimum income for all Canadians with insufficient income. This includes the elderly, the infirm, and the handicapped, female heads of families, the unemployed, those whose incomes are too low because they work in seasonal occupations, and those who are victims of jobs where the pay is insufficient to provide for their basic needs.

A little further on this comment appears:

> The funding of the guaranteed annual income is the responsibility of the federal Government, which would also have the responsibility of devising the kind of tax structure best suited to the circumstances.

Now, objection may well be taken that no mention is made of the difficulty of overcoming divided jurisdictional authority between the federal Government and the provinces and that no mention is made of the detailed machinery which would be necessary to put the plan into effect. However, I believe that the emphasis should be on a positive approach and that we should examine the proposal of a guaranteed annual income, using the negative income tax plan, to see how far it, or an adaptation of it, can be made to work, rather than look for extreme examples to show how it could not work.

Honourable senators, I congratulate and thank all members of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty for the work they have done on behalf of those in Canada who now live below the poverty line.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Smith, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Martin, calling the attention of the Senate to the Canada-U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement, done at Ottawa, October 20, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, October 20, 1971, and to the Canada-Soviet Communiqué, dated October 26, 1971, and tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, October 26, 1971.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, as I indicated earlier in my point of order, I had adjourned my remarks last evening as a result of questions from the other side. I had not realized that I had been verbose, and had taken up so much time. Therefore those requests were, perhaps, completely justified.

• (1430)

However, I should like to point out the difficulty in recommencing part way through one's speech, of proceeding in the same vein of thought, and, what is even more important, with the same attitude. Before I do so, I should mention that I have often said that this chamber is overloaded with lawyers.

Hon. Mr. Croll: And dentists.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: You are coming to the point, Senator Croll. This chamber is overloaded with and hindered by lawyers. I point out that at this time a former dentist—I am not sure whether or not he is retired—who is acting as Government Leader. Also, at this moment, a dentist is speaking to you, and perhaps for a few moments I could have the indulgence of the lawyers.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: You might extract something from us.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: On the other hand, you could probably do some extracting from us, and learn a little. I would remind the Acting Leader of the Government, Senator Smith, of a remark made by Mr. Speaker Fauteux, who was a dentist as well as Speaker of the House of Commons. It is a remark that I always enjoy telling honourable senators. Shortly after he became Speaker, things got a little noisy, as they sometimes do, and he had to call for order. He did so in a way that I thought delightful. He said that as a dentist he spent most of his life asking people to open their mouths, but now he had to reverse the procedure and ask them to close them.

I am not suggesting that I will close my own mouth any earlier than I intended, but I hope that I shall not take a long time to say what I have to say, and that honourable senators will be kind enough to give me their indulgence as they did last evening.

When the house rose last evening I had touched upon a topic in which I am very interested, namely, the European Security Conference. The communiqué states that we must be prepared for that conference. Having been a delegate to the recent NATO conference held in this chamber, I am very much aware of the attitudes of European countries to the European Security Conference. I am concerned that Canada, with its newly acquired admiration for communist nations, will attend that conference and will disrupt and destroy, even more so than we have in the past, the cohesion and resistance to communism which has existed throughout the life of NATO.

There are many advantages for Russia and communism in having a so-called disarmament conference, and troop withdrawals from Europe. It is very easy for Russian troops to withdraw into Poland or East Germany, and still be within a short distance of the border dividing East and West. Also, they withdraw into a complete police state where no reporter, newspaper, or radio and television station, would dare publish or broadcast troop movements. Within a matter of hours Russian troops could be back in their former position. It is most important that we be well aware of this fact when attending the conference, because Canadian and American troops would have to withdraw across an ocean.

Canadian and American troops are in Europe not because we particularly want them there, but because European nations which are members of NATO requested their presence in Europe. If any honourable senator has doubts about that, let him consider the confusion caused when Canada reduced its small token force in NATO. The total complement of Canadian troops and armaments in NATO amounts to very little, yet it provides a great boost in morale.

Mr. Hillenbrand, the United States Assistant Secretary of State, said less than a month ago that European nations tend to look upon the American commitment to NATO, and their presence in Europe, as a barometer or an indicator of American interest and involvement there.

Honourable senators, I think we can say that our own barometer in that regard is not rising, and, as one who is a wholehearted supporter of NATO, I am disappointed.

Let us consider for a moment the effect of certain troop withdrawals. Here I am assuming, I hope wrongly, that Canada will, because of this new attitude, go into this conference with the idea of co-operating with the Soviets, to use the new term—I still prefer the old-fashioned term "communists"—and recommend troop withdrawals. Consider the psychological effect on the Europeans. They are much closer. They have seen the dividing wall. Many of them have had an opportunity to look upon the barbed wire and electric fences, the mine fields, and so forth, that divide East and West. If they are left defenceless the psychological effect will be such that the communists will dominate Europe without any struggle whatsoever. Make no mistake in that regard, honourable senators. The Europeans will live in an atmosphere where they will see a mass of communism move towards them as a glacier, and they will live in fear. When persons live in fear of domination they tend to accept it. I hope, in the forthcoming European Security Conference, that Canada will bear in mind this fear that the Europeans must have when they see this massive communist machine ready to dominate their lives.

• (1440)

Throughout the debate there has been repeated reference to the fact that Canada, because of its new-found admiration for communism, is attempting to do what was once called "horse trading"; that we are attempting to balance our position between our neighbours to the north and our neighbours to the south. I know there have been repeated denials from the Government benches in this regard. No one seems to believe there is anything but trade involved.

Honourable senators, we all know the cost of living in this country; we all know how difficult the average Canadian finds it when he goes to buy a certain appliance and other articles he would like. We are also aware of the fact that he is probably paid five to ten times the salary of his counterpart in Russia. In light of these facts, how can we ship goods to Russia and expect the Russian people to buy them on their salaries? It cannot be done. There is no way you can send an appliance manufactured in Canada, be it a refrigerator, a television set, an automobile, or any other article, to Russia in trade and expect the average Russian to walk into a store and buy it. He cannot do it. He does not make enough money under socialism to be able to buy these things. It is utterly stupid to be talking about trade with someone who cannot afford to buy what you have to sell.

In my remarks I have criticized the Government quite strongly for its association with communism and with communist nations. I must now change to a different attitude, and say that perhaps we have been tied too closely to the United States. Perhaps we have taken the obvious markets when there are other available outlets; but, as I have already attempted to point out, they are not the communist nations. On the other hand, I am not opposed to the idea, to use the popular terminology, of building bridges between the communist nations and our nation although I have great doubts about the so-called bridging.

Article 1 of the communiqué states that all exchanges will be on the basis of the laws in force in each of the two states. If we are going to respect every law that exists in the communist state—laws that are contrary to our system—how, in the name of Heaven, are we going to change those people? We are not going to be able to. I am disturbed that we are establishing two-way traffic over a bridge and we do not have a twentieth century Horatio on our side. Honourable senators, we need someone at our end of the bridge—not a customs officer, but someone to make sure that the communistic techniques used in the past are not being funnelled into Canada.

The agreement also deals with cultural exchanges. We can have all the ballet we like. We can have various exchanges providing, of course, there is 30 days' notice, which really is not that much.

Perhaps I am showing my right-wing tendencies a bit too much, but in Canada we have many professors who are Marxist members of the NDP. There is little distinction between those philosophies in my book, but I will call them Marxist-NDP professors, and they are attempting to indoctrinate our youth during their university years when they are most susceptible. I find it rather amusing to picture a cultural or educational exchange between professors of this type in Canada and their counterparts who dare to speak out in Russia. Can you imagine these professors receiving a Canada Council grant for two years' study in a Siberian labour camp? I would like to see that happen. It would probably enlighten many of them, and bring them back to reality.

• (1450)

Part of the tenor of the debate has been to show that Canada is attempting to play the United States versus Russia and Russia versus the United States, and take advantage of that situation. This has been denied by the Government a good many times. But I have listened to so many denials, so many predictions and so many quotations, from this Government that I no longer accept or believe anything emanating from the East Block. I am greatly disturbed that we are suddenly changing not only our political but our economic tradition; that we are attempting to play the south against the north, and the north against the south.

This may seem extreme, but at times I feel that this Government looks upon the Canadian people as a bunch of lemmings that they can lead over the Arctic and into Siberia or Outer Mongolia. We are not lemmings; we do not make the same savage run to self-destruction. We still respect and trust our friends in the Commonwealth and the United States. Admittedly there are difficulties. Certainly no one can overlook the 10 per cent surcharge imposed by the United States. On the other hand, can we honestly overlook the American difficulties?

I think back to some remarks made by Senator Javits of New York, when he was speaking in this chamber at the NATO Conference, to the effect, "We ask you to realize we have problems. We ask you to negotiate with us in good faith. Trust us to be reasonable and we will trust you to be reasonable."

Honourable senators, I think this should be our approach to the problem confronting us. Unfortunately, Senator Fournier (De Lanaudière) is not present. Yesterday evening he asked me for a suggestion. I did not want to give it to him at that time, but I do now. It is that we approach the problem with reason and in good faith, and I am sure we will be met at the other end by people who will reciprocate.

In conclusion, I would ask honourable senators to remember that St. Peter, at a moment when he was disheartened and dispirited, was asked "Quo vadis?" I think it is high time that the present St. Pierre was asked "Quo vadis?" I also think it is time that each and every one of us as senators, and that each and every Canadian, paused to ask the question, "Quo vadimus?"—where are we going?

On motion of Honourable Mr. Smith, debate adjourned.

ASPECTS OF ECONOMIC CLIMATE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the honourable Senator Desruisseaux calling the attention of the Senate to some aspects of the economic climate.—(Honourable Senator Langlois).

Hon. L. P. Beaubien: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the honourable Senator Beaubien do now speak instead of the honourable Senator Langlois?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Honourable senators, I am indebted to Senator Desruisseaux for introducing this motion. I congratulate him on his speech, and also Senator Lang who spoke on the same subject.

I am delighted to have the opportunity today to speak on one aspect of the economic climate. I wish to criticize the leadership of organized labour, because I feel that in a great many cases the leaders have not stood up for those they are supposed to be leading.

Since I am going to attack labour, let me begin by saying that I started work 10 years before the great depression. During the depression many people whom I knew intimately lost their jobs. They had no pensions; there were practically no pensions available. They were out on the street. There was no old age pension, no welfare, no unemployment insurance. There were very few charitable organizations. All of us who were working in those days will remember the long lines of people waiting to get something to eat. I came out of that depression with the very strong feeling that the working man was not able to defend himself unless he combined with his fellow workmen so that they could protect themselves through sheer weight of numbers.

• (1500)

Honourable senators, during the war years there was an important change in the amount of money the average working man earned. In my province, it was unbelievable. Before the war in rural Quebec, many people living on farms had literally no cash income.

There has been a tremendous change, but what impressed me most was how good it was for business to have the working man get a big salary and, in many ways, in spite of the enormous complications, the bigger the better. I am not going into inflation and allied problems, but wish just to make that statement. As far as the capitalistic system is concerned, there is no place where the climate could be worse than in a country where a few families own everything, and the working man has nothing. Therefore, I am for labour a hundred per cent, but it is time that labour leaders worked for the best interests of their own people.

Let me take you back to the time when Mr. Kenneth Carter produced his report. I wish to deal specially with the greatest industry we have, the industry in which we are absolutely tops in the world—the mining industry, the extraction industry. Mr. Carter studied that industry very carefully, and in his report pointed out that we were tops. He thought that because the tax laws were very favourable, the mining industry was not paying its fair share of the tax burden, that this was unfair, and, therefore, that the unearned depletion should be abolished.

It seems to me that if I had been a labour leader, I would have pointed out that the tax laws under which all corporations operate in Germany require just about what our mining companies pay now under the present act. This is also true of Japan. These are the two countries which have made great economic strides since the war.

Since the Carter Report was published there has been a lot of discussion about labour intensive industries. I do not think that that kind of discussion makes any sense. Let me try to prove my point.

In 1970, the extraction industries produced $5,700 million in value extracted. Just about every cent of that money was spent on wages—90 per cent of it in Canada. Therefore, it is safe to say that every dollar's worth of production turns out to be a dollar of salary somewhere.

To try to prove my point let me take the greatest mining company in the world, International Nickel. In 1970, International Nickel produced $1 billion worth of nickel, copper, platinum, and a few other metals. That was their biggest year. In that year they increased their funded debt by selling $75 million worth of bonds. At the beginning of this year they sold another $150 million worth of bonds. So they raised new capital, after their greatest year, of $225 million.

[Hon. Mr. Beaubien.]

What does that mean? It means they spent every cent of the $1 billion plus a little more, and that practically all of it was paid as salaries.

It is true they paid a dividend. Let us look at that aspect. In 1970, International Nickel paid $1.40 a share on 74 million shares. That works out to $103 million paid in dividends. Who got that money? By far the biggest shareholders in Canada of International Nickel are life insurance companies, pension funds, mutual funds, and widows and orphans. One might say that they do not receive a salary, but if a man has worked all his life and gets a pension, then in a way it is a continuation of his salary. The same is true of the bond interest.

Honourable senators, of that $5,700 million produced by the mining industry in 1970 just about every cent was paid out in wages to somebody. How else could it go?

I remember that at the end of the war it was found that the federal Government had three horses on its payroll at Petawawa. Even in Ottawa, that is unusual. On the streets, it is true, you do not see many horses. However, if you think of that part of the animal that is facing south when the horse is looking north, in Senator Manning's direction, then I think we have quite a few of those in Ottawa.

Honourable senators, I want now to deal with what I consider is anti-American feeling in our labour movement. Let me take you back to the end of the war. In 1946 Imperial Oil—which, as you know, is owned by Standard Oil in New Jersey—sold its interest in International Petroleum for $90 million. It took the lot, and threw it into exploration for oil. In 1947 they brought in Leduc No. 2. That discovery changed this country from a long string bean with very little in the middle except a few wheat fields. It is true that we sold some wheat but the markets were very far away, and to be competitive the government had to subsidize the freight rates, and the shippers continued to pay the rates set in 1886.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The Crow's Nest Pass rates.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: At the same time, Hollinger Mines formed a consortium made up of American steel companies. They built a railway 360 miles long through the most difficult terrain in the world. They developed there that enormous iron ore complex which did so much for our province—a complex which, as you all know, at the moment is expanding to the tune of $600 million now.

• (1510)

Honourable senators, the oil companies, as we were told when they appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, have in the last 15 years spent over $5 billion on exploration. Every cent of that has been spent in wages. It cannot have gone anywhere else. In other words, if you buy machinery, supplies, or anything else that you must have to carry out your exploration work, that expenditure turns out to be salaries paid to somebody.

I would say that the benefit we have received from these two developments is enormous. Now what is on the horizon? The only way of getting the gas from the Arctic islands and Prudhoe Bay is by pipeline. Should it be decided to expropriate a long strip of country to lay a gas pipeline, no doubt it would be sensible to put in an oil pipeline also. I do hope these developments will take place. It is estimated the pipelines would cost $4 billion.

Again, at the other end of the country, there are five rivers that run into James Bay, which is the only potentially enormous reservoir of hydro-electric power we still have untapped.

Hon. Mr. Smith: Except the Bay of Fundy tides.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Whether that development could ever be economical is another matter.

Hon. Mr. McElman: But it is still untapped.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: We think the James Bay development would cost $6 billion. Where are we going to get the money? Who is going to do these things? It seems to me that we will need a lot of help from our American cousins. Our people need the work. Every one of our provinces is on its knees trying to get people to come and give us employment. Surely the great responsibility of any government today is to create an environment where trade and commerce will flourish so that we can give work to our people.

Look at what the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is doing. It is providing money all over the country trying to stimulate business. It certainly believes that the economy needs stimulating.

Labour and management are married. There is no conceivable possibility of a divorce. They might, as an awful lot of married people do, fight every now and again, but surely when the Government is increasing taxes, or creates conditions which are harmful to business, labour and management should take a common stand. It is labour's job to put pressure on bad government. Labour has the votes.

The big advertisers seem to have decided that radio and television are better than newspapers as advertising media. As a result, everywhere in the world—not just in Canada—newspapers are hanging on the ropes. They are fighting desperately to cut costs in order to keep alive. I do not object if labour wants to fight with them. Let them fight. But does it make much sense? The papers are folding up anyway.

In my thinking there is only one way to keep increasing our standard of living—we have to have a profit-sharing arrangement between labour and business. We have to have this in order to get our costs down. By sharing the profits our efficiency will increase a great deal, and both business and labour can make more money.

Could anybody have thought, before the war, that it would be possible to carry on any kind of business in Canada with a federal sales tax of 12 per cent? The Americans have none. Moreover, in our province we have another 8 per cent on top of that. Thus, before you buy anything, there is 20 per cent added to the cost. It just makes no sense. And if a business makes a profit after paying civic and provincial taxes it then pays half its profit to the federal government in income tax.

If a business fails, who suffers most? Management? No, management has the know-how and can move somewhere else. Management can start up again. They can borrow money to get going again. But labour cannot move. Labour is stuck. Labour always suffers the most.

Honourable senators, it is time that labour grew up. They know all about fighting management to get the increases they feel they are entitled to, but when it comes to dealing with the Government they seldom take management's side. Labour should say, "Leave us alone. We pay the taxes."

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, I feel compelled to make a few brief comments in reply to honourable Senator Beaubien's remarks. It will be necessary for me to leave in a few minutes to attend a meeting where proposals will be made for new regulations to bind employers. Before going to that meeting I think I should point out to my honourable friend that I do not think he is correct when he suggests that the large majority of labour is anti-American. On the contrary, an overwhelming majority of 70 per cent is comprised of members of international unions that, by and large, are American in flavour.

I have been absent from this chamber the last couple of weeks because I have been attending in the United States two regional conferences of our organization. It came to me as a surprise to find that one of the critical issues decided at one conference was what was going to be the attitude of labour towards working with the Nixon administration on the second phase of the wage and price controls. The international president said to the assembled group, representing 600,000 members in the United States, "Our position is that we should work and participate on the inside of this committee; work with the committee. We have a responsibility to the total economy, and we cannot do it from the outside and we cannot do it with other people making decisions for us."

Honourable senators, it came as a complete surprise to me that the unanimous decision of the delegates there assembled, representing 600,000 American workers, decided to work with the Nixon administration on phase 2 of the wage and price controls. Whether this attitude will continue is still to be determined because it involves many questions, including the sanctity of contracts. However, as I say, the conference decided to go along with this.

Reference has also been made to this wave of anti-Americanism that prevails in some quarters at the present time, and I think we have to assume some of the responsibility for it. Let me say here that I was impressed by the remarks of Senator O'Leary, that nothing could be more foolish or more ridiculous than to keep feeding this wave of anti-Americanism. I had the opportunity of speaking at the convention and I expressed there the same views that Senator O'Leary expressed here. How could they say that the Japanese were their best customers? It just is not true. We are their best customer, as they are ours. Treating the matter somewhat in jest, I suggested that in response to the surcharge perhaps we should declare war on them but if we were to do so we would probably end up in the situation they are in now, having the same problems they have, and we certainly would not want that.

Then, speaking seriously, I suggested that we had a responsibility, as they had a responsibility, to act in such a way that it would be possible to combat this anti-Americanism that prevails, as I have said, in certain quarters. Unlike the American government and people, we know exactly where we stand on these issues, and we realize that we have such a responsibility. So often we find that there is no positive approach, and the only time we hear anything from one side or the other is when there is something to criticize.

Honourable senators, I am still waiting to hear industry say to labour, "We want to congratulate you on the particular position you have taken." But, perhaps they have not found too many positions on which they would want to congratulate them.

I agree with the point made by Senator Beaubien at the outset of his speech concerning mining. I know that in my own province we have many low-grade mines which now produce a considerable amount of revenue in taxation, quite apart from the fact that they provide employment in small communities, where previously there was no economy and where many people who existed on welfare payments have now become self-supporting. It rather surprises me, when questions that vitally concern such communities arise, that civil servants in Ottawa should say that those problems have to be put aside for some time to be dealt with later. If the problems are not dealt with and these low-grade mines cannot provide employment, then these communities will go back to being areas of high unemployment. There is a need for labour's voice to be heard in support of amendments to encourage that kind of development.

There were some points mentioned by Senator Beaubien with which I cannot agree. There are too many cases where we endeavour to come to the aid and support of industry, and fail to remember that where industry and labour are concerned there is a mutual responsibility.

Let me take one example from my own province where recently there was a merger of two companies. One of my personal friends had worked for one of these companies for 33 years, and was within two years of pensionable age. But, he has no pension, and there is no provision in the regulations compelling a company to do anything about it. We have many workers who have worked for that length of time, and who now find themselves out on the street with no job and no pension. They have nothing. Surely in a situation like that the voice of labour must be heard to ensure that there will be some form of control to guarantee the protection of workers' rights. There are too many cases of this kind.

Honourable senators, I have said many times that I cannot understand the concern of industry when they talk about the power of labour and the great impact of labour. Only 30 per cent of the labour force across the country is organized. Even in the Province of British Columbia it rises to only 40 per cent. What about the other 60 per cent or 70 per cent? These are unorganized workers whose voice is not being heard.

Within 10 miles of any of our major cities you can find companies which are not even paying the minimum wages, which are not providing holiday pay, and which are not even complying with the basic regulations. There are agencies which are devoting many hours and great sums of money to collecting the thousands of dollars resulting from the unpaid claims of many workers.

Let me point out that trade unions would become obsolete if employers were to treat their employees fairly and honestly. Unfortunately, we have always been able to rely on employers to steal from their employees, to deny them basic rights, and to cheat them out of wages and fringe benefits, thus ensuring the continuation of labour unions and causing them to expand and grow at an accelerated rate. I look forward to the day when industry conducts itself in such a manner that trade unions will, in fact, become obsolete because all social problems will then have become obsolete, and I shall be able to devote more of my time here.

Honourable senators, I should like to make one final comment relating to the anti-Americanism to which I referred earlier. While I was at the conference it transpired that they could not commence until they had a Canadian flag in recognition of the presence of a very nominal number of Canadian members of the organization. Eventually they found one, and during the course of the conference they presented me with that flag which was 12 feet tall and had an estimated value of $200. On my return home I could not take it on the aircraft, so they sent it to me. I have now been informed that it is at customs and I can pick it up by paying $16.75—to bring a Canadian flag into Canada.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Smith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE LATE SENATOR ARTHUR W. ROEBUCK

TRIBUTES

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, we learned last night of the death of one of the most senior members of this chamber, Senator Roebuck, who died at the age of 93. Senator Roebuck has been bed-ridden for almost two years. His vacant chair to my left was held for him in the forlorn hope that, in spite of the seriousness of his illness, he might return to the Senate where he served Canada with such distinction and for so long a time.

I am sure that even those who did not know Senator Roebuck personally—and I think particularly of the newer senators—are nevertheless familiar with his long career, both parliamentary and in national and provincial affairs generally.

One of the great figures of Parliament Hill has passed away, one of the great figures of both Houses of Parliament is now gone to his reward. The memory of him will serve as an inspiration to all of us and to generations that will follow.

Senator Roebuck was born in Hamilton, Ontario, and educated in the law at Osgoode Hall. For a time he served as a journalist, working for the editorial staff of the Toronto Star, and later as owner and editor of the Temiskaming Herald and Cobalt Citizen.

He had an early interest in politics, though his initial efforts in provincial and federal elections were unsuccessful. His public life spans a period of 59 years. He won a seat in the Ontario Legislature in 1934 and became Attorney General, Minister of Labour and a member of the Hydro Electric Power Commission.

Arthur Roebuck, as we all know, was a man of principle. He resigned from the cabinet of Mitchell Hepburn over a policy disagreement with the premier. He was, however, re-elected in the 1937 Ontario elections.

Senator Croll, who was his seatmate in this chamber for a number of years and who was his colleague in the Hepburn government, is not here today to add his tribute to Senator Roebuck. Senator Croll was in touch with me this morning. He was called away yesterday because of the deteriorating condition of Senator Roebuck. He would have wished to have been here today and I am sure we all recognize that no one has a greater right to pay a tribute to Senator Roebuck than has Senator Croll. It will be understood that when he returns at the beginning of next week his wish to pay a tribute to his late colleague and friend will be at once recognized and acknowledged.

Senator Roebuck moved to the federal scene in 1940, when he was elected at the general elections of that year and became a member of the House of Commons. His Senate career began on April 18, 1945. He served on many Senate committees—the Immigration Committee, the Private Bills Committee, the Finance Committee, the Tourist Traffic Committee, the Public Health Committee, and the Civil Service Committee. It is as chairman of the Divorce Committee that perhaps he is best remembered. He assumed that chairmanship on November 18, 1953, and retained it until the termination of that committee. Honourable senators who were in this chamber on Tuesday evening, when tributes were paid on the occasion of the death of Senator Aseltine, may be interested to recall Senator Roebuck's final speech on divorce, on November 26, 1969. He generously paid tribute to his colleague and predecessor as chairman, Senator Aseltine. And now we learn of the demise of these two great senators, both in the same week.

At the time of his passing, Senator Roebuck was chairman of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, a committee which had been created in 1969 when it was decided to re-allocate the work of our committees. He will be missed on this committee, and in the chamber, where he spoke with authority and eloquence. Those who heard him speak will recall the facility with which he spoke, whether delivering an off-the-cuff comment or a formal address prepared with his own notes.

• (1410)

Honourable senators, to say that someone was a friend of the poor and of the oppressed has become somewhat of a cliché, but in the case of Senator Roebuck it was literally true. We know that his political philosophy, his political conduct, his political program was based upon love and concern for dependent groups. He was a champion of civil liberties. He was a recognized champion of the rights of labour, whose cause he served in an objective manner.

This morning in the Globe and Mail tribute was paid to him in an editorial which read:

> He continued to be a man able to command respect through his evident concern for human rights and his instinctive defense of the underdog. The pattern of his life ran unbroken to the end: he was a reformer all the way, and the years failed to drain his zeal.

I am sure that no words better express our characterization of Senator Roebuck's political philosophy than these words I have quoted from the Globe and Mail. He undoubtedly was a great figure, a greater figure perhaps than many of us earlier had realized. He was a man dedicated to the cause of the democratic process and one who was unwilling to accept unfair criticism of this body or of Parliament itself.

I have served in the Senate but for a short period of time. I know there have been some very great senators who have adorned this chamber; but I cannot believe that there were too many who possessed to the same degree Senator Roebuck's greatness, his imagination and his desire to serve his country and his generation.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, yet another of the grand old men of Canadian politics has passed away.

Arthur Wentworth Roebuck was a reformer, a man who many would say was always well ahead of his time; a humanitarian and a progressive. His only concession to the past was his sartorial preference for starched angel-wing collars. This was, of course, a deliberate and endearing affectation.

Throughout his career, which spanned some 75 years and involved three different professions—journalism, law and politics—Senator Roebuck acquired a reputation as a defender of the underdog, a crusader against injustice, discrimination, and official high-handedness in all of its many and varied forms. He was at once a good friend and a wily adversary.

He went from the hardships of a poor Ontario farm in the 1880s to selling dry goods and working as a reporter and editor in Toronto and New Liskeard.

His working-class background had a significant influence upon the now historic stand which he took in the General Motors strike at Oshawa in 1937. At that time, he took the position along with Senator Croll that he would rather march with the men of the production lines than ride with management.

[Hon. Mr. Martin.]

Besides his championship of labour's right to organize, he fought valiantly for civil rights. He was one of the first to call for a Canadian Bill of Rights. He also laboured indefatigably in support of legislation to suppress the use of hate propaganda. His noble efforts in this area merited him, quite deservedly, the Anti-Defamation League's annual Human Relations Award for 1969. He was a great libertarian for whom the protection of minorities was a matter of paramount importance.

He worked arduously at trying to have the Constitution modernized and the social security laws improved, but he often met with frustration and defeat as every reformer does. However, setbacks seemed only to act as stimulants in his case, and one could always look forward to his bouncing back soon afterwards with another idea from his most fecund mind.

An uncompromising freetrader and an unabashed follower of the Henry George School of economic thought, he found himself quite often at odds with his own party in matters pertaining to trade and taxation.

I can recall his saying in his contribution to the debate on the motion for an Address in Reply to the Throne Speech in November 1969 that the continued decrease in the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar, and the consequent decrease in the living standards of Canadians, was a national disgrace directly attributable to the Government's wrong-headed insistence on watering the money, and irresponsibly increasing the money supply with a frightening lack of concern for the inflationary effects of such a measure.

He will be well remembered by many for his violent opposition to that amendment to the Supreme Court Act which would have limited the number of automatic appeals to the high court.

But most of all will he be remembered as the moving force behind the extension of the grounds for divorce in Canada. In this area was he convinced that we were antediluvian, and in this area did he proceed to show us the way.

The man was a legislator of great depth and understanding. He had a feeling for the common man which he was able to articulate with great fluency and volubility.

The Senate loses a fine incisive legal mind, a twentieth-century small "l" liberal, a tireless worker who chaired the Divorce Committee and the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee with a deftness verging on genius. The country loses one of its foremost citizens.

We are deeply saddened by his death and take this opportunity to extend to his family our most sincere condolences.

Hon. H. Carl Goldenberg: Honourable senators, I regret that my first words in this chamber should be occasioned by a death, but I must take advantage of this sad opportunity to pay tribute to a grand old man who was a great friend of mine over a period of many years. I refer to Senator Arthur Roebuck as a grand old man, but he never really grew old. I remember attending his 90th birthday party at which he said to me there were only two members of his family who had died young; one had died at the age of 83 and the other at the age of 84. At this same party he kissed my wife on the cheek, and as she turned around he said, "Oh, no, Mrs. Goldenberg, we must have balance," and he kissed her on the other cheek.

• (1420)

It was my good fortune to be associated with Arthur Roebuck in the field of labour relations over a period of some 25 years. We sat on boards of arbitration, and were associated in mediation. I learned to admire this man of high principle, integrity, sincerity, and humanity. He loved humanity, but above all else Arthur Roebuck was loyal to Canada. He was a great Canadian, and Canada is far poorer without him.

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to add a very few words to the eloquent tributes, every word of them deserved, to our late colleague?

I knew him only slightly. It is one of my great regrets that I did not arrive here soon enough to sit in the same chamber with him. However, I wish to add my special word, my small tribute this afternoon because I happen to be one of the few members of this chamber who has been a trade union official. I was one for many years, and I think it only right to say that I am confident that the trade union movement of this country will long hold Arthur Roebuck in grateful remembrance.

I think that in 1917, the first time he presented himself as a candidate for the House of Commons, he ran as a labour candidate, or at any rate a Liberal-labour candidate. He came very close to winning the seat in Temiskaming in that election. Candidates of that stripe were not very popular in most of the country in that election.

He continued to be a loyal friend of labour throughout his career notably, of course, in that crisis in Ontario of the Oshawa General Motors strike, to which Senator Choquette referred. When any of us from the trade union movement appeared before the then Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour we were always sure of a sympathetic hearing from Senator Roebuck. This was something we appreciated the more because a great many members of those committees appeared to feel that here was an opportunity to get a bit of their own back against those detested trade unions. So we always appreciated especially the very sympathetic hearing we received from Senator Roebuck—the very kindly and sympathetic reception.

Until his very last illness I think one could say his eye was not dimmed, nor his natural force abated. I never saw any sign of age in him at any time we met. Even his physical appearance was astonishingly youthful. No one would take him for anything like the age he had in fact attained.

Finally, may I be permitted to say that Arthur Wentworth Roebuck bore a great and illustrious name, not only in this country, but in Great Britain, and he added lustre to that name.

NATIONAL FINANCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I now table the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, which was authorized to examine and report upon the question of methods by which fiscal and monetary policy in Canada may be exercised to achieve full potential growth and employment without inflation. The report is entitled "Growth, Employment and Price Stability". In view of the fact that honourable senators have had the report since this morning, I request leave to make a statement in explanation of the report, notwithstanding Rule 78.

The Hon. the Speaker: Has the honourable senator leave to make a statement respecting the report?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Everett: Honourable senators, the report by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on Growth, Employment and Price Stability is now before you. Before proceeding with an explanation, I should like to thank the members of the committee who worked so hard on the hearings and the production of the report. In particular I should like to mention the Deputy Chairman, Senator Molson, and the Whip, Senator Laird.

I should like also, as we have done in the report itself, to thank the staff of the committee under the able leadership of Dr. James Gillies, the study director. As we say in the report, "They were burdened with many complex administrative and technical problems which they have solved with patience, skill and grace."

The committee was authorized to proceed with its hearings on March 17 of this year. On May 4 it commenced the first of 27 hearings involving 45 witnesses. The witnesses were knowledgeable in the field of economics, and came from business, government, and the academy, from throughout Canada, the United States, Japan, Germany, and the United Kingdom.

Appendix II of the report lists the witnesses who appeared before the committee. Appendix III lists the many individuals and organizations who submitted briefs, proposals and comments to the committee.

Honourable senators, the report is about economic stabilization, which is a branch of government policy which attempts to hold the economy close to its potential growth path while keeping down unemployment and inflation. The main theme of the report is that in a growing economy the war against inflation and unemployment is a long one, which will be fought successfully if people realize this fact.

The main weapons in this war are the demand levers of monetary, fiscal and exchange rate policy. The problem is that these levers suffer from what economists call lags, in that there is a time difference between the application of these policies and the effect on the economy itself, and the time difference can be extremely long. Therefore, these major levers should be used to deal with prolonged deviations from the growth path, and should not be used to fine tune an economy. They should be set and allowed to work on a medium-term forecast, which means that government policy should not over-react, as it has done many times in the past, to short-term crises. Government policy in the use of these major levers of demand must be studied, and the public must be made aware that these levers do suffer from lags, and that policy takes time to work.

There are those who suggest that the way to handle this dilemma is to have rules. They say that the demand levers of monetary, fiscal and exchange rate policies should be exercised in accordance with predetermined rules. We looked at this, and in the case of fiscal policy we recommended a rule called "high employment budgeting". By "high employment budgeting" we mean that the federal Government, for any given rate of unemployment, should set its revenues and expenditures at such a level that if the economy was operating at high employment the budget would be in balance or in slight surplus.

In the case of monetary policy we were confronted with the "monetarist" rule that the money supply should grow at some predetermined rate associated with the growth of the gross national product. Regretfully, the committee had to reject the monetarist rule, because we concluded that while the money supply aspect of monetary policy is of overwhelming importance in running the economy, nevertheless, the Bank of Canada must be concerned with interest rates, exchange rates, liquidity and the financing of government debt. While we reject the rule, at the same time we say to the bank, "Historically you have been too concerned with short-term crises; you have over-reacted, and, while we say that you cannot operate to a rule, you should give more concern to the aggregate of the money supply than you have in the past."

In the case of interest rate policy, we heartily endorsed the continuation of the floating rate in Canada, because it gives Canadian economic policy a degree of independence that is not available to it when the rates are fixed. We say to the Canadian policy-makers that no matter what they do they should attempt, in the interest of independent Canadian policy, to maintain the floating exchange rate for Canada. While we say that the exchange rate should float, we do not mean that it should float in an uncontrolled manner. What we mean is that the Bank of Canada and the Government of Canada should use monetary and other policies to control the exchange rate where it is necessary to do so in the interests of our country's economy.

Therefore, the first major point we make is that the demand levers of fiscal, monetary and exchange rate policies are the main levers that we have in controlling the economy and they should not be used to fine tune.

The second major point we make is that at the present time and in the present state of economic policy a trade-off exists between the goals of high employment and price stability. By this we mean that when demand is expanded and unemployment falls towards the 3 per cent goal set by the Economic Council of Canada, we will have too much price increase. When demand is restrained and the price increase is reduced towards the 1½ per cent inflation rate recommended by the Economic Council of Canada, we will have too much unemployment. Therefore, we say that in the present state of economic policies in Canada we are faced, whether we like it or not, with a compromise between the goals of high employment and price stability. If we want too much of one we are not going to have enough of the other. It seems to us on examination that the refusal to recognize this is the basic reason for the stop-go economy of the past few years.

We believe that the Government should recognize the fact of the trade-off and should improve its policy in three areas.

First of all, if a trade-off exists, it should get the best it can out of the compromise in the medium term. So, what we strongly suggest is that the Government should commit itself now to moving the economy over a reasonable but definite time period to a point where unemployment is at a seasonally adjusted rate of 4½ per cent. This would be a great improvement over the present rate of 6 to 7 per cent, and in our judgment it would allow us to achieve a medium-term goal for inflation—and I underscore "medium-term goal"—of 2 to 3 per cent.

We as a committee accept the Economic Council's goals for full employment and price stability, but we say that the medium-term goals, because of the trade-off, are far better than past performance which has been anywhere from 3½ per cent up to 8 per cent unemployment, with an inflation rate of up to 5 per cent. We believe that a commitment by the Government of the nature that we suggest would produce a steady policy that the public could understand and support.

But while we talk about the medium-term goals we must also realize that 4½ per cent unemployment and a 2 to 3 per cent inflation rate are, for the long term, unacceptable. We suggest there should be protection for those who suffer from unemployment and inflation. We believe there should be improved arrangements for unemployment assistance for those who are not adequately covered by unemployment insurance, and we believe that there should be full adjustment of old age security and payments from the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan to cover price increases in the Consumer Price Index.

That is our medium-term goal for the type of trade-off that exists today. But we cannot stop there; we cannot accept the trade-off as it is; what we have to do is move the trade-off to a level that is consistent with the Economic Council's goals. We suggest, therefore, that there be a vigorous implementation of supply and structural policies which will have this effect. Fiscal, monetary and exchange rate policies are demand policies; they affect the level of demand in the economy. Supply policies are those policies that keep down the waste of resources, and increase the amount of goods and services to meet any level of demand that exists. Structural policies are those policies that shift resources to the right place at the right time to meet whatever demand exists at that place. Examples of those policies are manpower policies, competition policies and regional development policies. They are one of the keys, over the long run, that reduce the trade-off to the goals set by the Economic Council.

The third area in which we can deal with the trade-off is in that of controls and incomes policy. We do not find much fertile ground there. However, we had to look at it, because there is a body of opinion that states that the way to operate the economy is to put the demand levers in high gear—fiscal, monetary, and exchange rate policies—and get to full employment. They recognize that there will be a pressure, and a very grave pressure, for price increases, but they say the way to handle the economy then is to clamp on controls, and the result will be full potential growth and full employment, but zero inflation. The question is: Will it work?

We examined the members of the incomes policy and controls family one by one. We looked at general direct wage and price controls. I am talking now of the sort of controls that were exercised by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board in World War II. We found from the evidence that they were extremely difficult to operate in wartime. Many people who were involved, such as Douglas Gibson, are not convinced that they operated that well, and not one organization or private individual said that they would work in a peacetime economy. We therefore rejected the idea of general direct wage and price controls.

There is a school that says you do not need general controls; that you can have selective controls. These are wage and price controls of a direct and mandatory nature that are applied to the giant corporations and unions which have discretionary market power. The supporters of those sort of controls say that the controls will keep these people in line, and competition will look after the remainder of the business community. On examination we concluded that market power is not confined to the giants, that it can be found in the construction industry with a plethora of small units.

Some of the biggest price increases the economy has suffered over the last little while have been in the service industries, which in many cases are not composed of giant unions or giant corporations. When you put selective controls on the giant corporations and unions—because one part of your economy is controlled and another part is not controlled—you have distortion of investment and of the demand for labour. The result is that the controllers are then put in the position of having to make a wider and wider selection. The matter of public acceptability then comes in, and you are faced with the question, "If I am controlled, why isn't he?" So the controllers widen the circle again, and in the end you finish up with general controls, which we have already rejected. We agree with the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission when he says that for an incomes policy to be effective it must be general. So we reject selective direct wage and price controls, and we reject a selective incomes policy.

The third member of the family of controls is called "freezes". Freezes are possible. There was one recently in the United States. They are calculated to hold wages and prices in abeyance for a short time while other more effective measures are taken. But they really do not affect the trade-off because they are extremely short-term; otherwise they become a form of general control. It must also be remembered that when you apply a freeze you take the risk that there will be a price and wage explosion when the freeze is lifted.

The fourth member of the family is an incomes policy based on guidelines. There are, I suppose, two forms of incomes policies; one is short-lived, and the other is long-lived. One assumes that if they are to be effective they will both probably have a mandatory tincture to them. One hears today about mandatory guidelines and an incomes policy based on mandatory guidelines. If it is long-lived, then what you are really talking about are wage and price controls of a direct nature. We can see an incomes policy based on guidelines working only if it is extremely short-term, and is used as an adjunct to the main demand levers of fiscal, monetary, and exchange rate policy after they have had their effect. They reduce the lags created by public expectations of continued inflation. Again, while they are usable in this one particular case, we do not really think they affect the question of the trade-off.

There is only one area in the scenario of controls that we think is useful in affecting the trade-off, and useful as a means of an on-going economic policy in Canada. We call it spot-lighting, and we endorse it. We believe the Prices and Incomes Commission should be a federal-provincial body; that it should focus the glare of publicity on price and wage increases that are out of line by any reasonable standard when viewed against our medium-term goal for inflation. We recommend this as a viable method of control, because it is the only incomes policy that could possibly have a long life, and it would act in concert with the supply and structural policies over the long run to reduce the trade-off to the goals that have been enunciated by the Economic Council of Canada.

Honourable senators, that is the centrepiece of our report. It states there is a trade-off in the medium term. We have to get the best we can out of the trade-off. We do that by the federal Government undertaking to reduce unemployment over a definite term, to 4½ per cent. For the long term we use supply and structural policies and the spotlighting role of the Prices and Incomes Commission to reduce the trade-off to the levels of full employment and price stability enunciated by the Economic Council of Canada.

We have several more recommendations, which I will deal with very briefly. We call for a new openness and evaluation for economic policy making in Canada. By "evaluation" we mean that the effect of policies on the economy should be estimated as carefully as possible before and after the event. By "openness" we mean that the research, the background research, and the decision-making process that was behind the policy should be made available to the public. We believe this because if we are going to ask the public to have patience while we achieve our medium- and long-term goals, we can only expect them to extend us that patience if they actually see what is going on and if they actually see the mistakes that are being made.

Therefore, we recommend the formation of a commission for economic analysis. It would be government financed, but independent. It would be composed of professional economists, not representative of any group.

It would involve itself in short-term forecasting and in the evaluation of government and Bank of Canada policies.

Secondly, we say that the reports of the Economic Council of Canada and of the Commission for Economic Analysis should be directed to the Privy Council for submission to a standing committee of Parliament, and that the appropriate ministers and their officials should be called upon to testify on the content of those reports. We believe this to be another way to bring the public into the decision-making process in Canada.

As to the Economic Council of Canada, we believe that its role is to help us determine the long-range achievement goals of our society. This is important when we are talking about stability, because if it is not done in relation to the resources that are available the danger is that we over-commit our resources and we very much interfere with our stability. The method of operation we suggest for the Economic Council is that they should determine from time to time the total pool of resources available to us in this country, that they should determine how much of those resources should be used for current consumption and how much should be used for investment in new resources, and they should determine the cost in resources of the various major goals that might be desired by the people of Canada.

For example, if we are considering the guaranteed annual income, it is important before we make a final decision to know precisely what the cost, and the cost effects, will be. This is a role we think should be played by the Economic Council, a role it can play extremely well because of its representative character and expertise.

We deal in the report with regional development policies, but we do not make an all-inclusive study of them. That would be a report in itself. However, we do come to some conclusions that spring from our study on the economy itself. As far as regionalizing monetary policy is concerned, we do not think there is much hope for it but we think that the Bank of Canada should take advantage of the fact that we have a centralized banking system. It does it now, and ought to do it more so in the future. That is, it should cause the banks to exercise their policy more in favour of the weaker regions than the stronger regions.

As far as fiscal policy is concerned, we find that there is a greater opportunity to regionalize fiscal policy. Fiscal policy does not suffer from the leakage that monetary policy does. And since provincial governments exercise a large percentage of fiscal policy, we suggest that there be much greater co-operation than there is today between the provincial governments and the federal Government in the exercise of fiscal policy.

We also recommend that, because of today's vastly improved network of communications systems, government decentralize its decision-making and encourage major business to do the same thing. We do not see any reason why all of government should be concentrated in Ottawa, or the bulk of it, or why the bulk of business should be concentrated in Toronto and Montreal. In today's communication, we believe a lot of that decision-making process could be decentralized to other areas of the country, with very good effects. We believe that service industries, which are high-employment industries, should be underscored more in regional development policies. We believe that the Government should give more concern to suppliers outside the central provinces, in its purchasing activity.

Honourable senators, I have given you a brief overview of the report. In closing, I would like to make two points.

This report was formed during the international upheaval of the last two or three months. We were aware of everything that was going on while we wrote the report—that is, everything that was public. There is no recommendation in this report that we find cause to change because of the international developments or the developments that we think may take place as a result.

For example, we recommend against direct wage and price controls. I do not believe the Americans will be able to make Phase 2 work for very long. I believe that if they do they will have to tighten it more and more until they have direct price controls. If they were willing and able to do it—and I find it hard to believe that they are—it is possible that we would have to institute our own controls at this time. But that does not change our recommendation that wage and price controls, either of a direct or of a selective nature, are bad business for Canada.

It may be possible that in the negotiations that take place on international currency arrangements, the end result may be the suggestion of some sort of fixed rate, or a fixed rate with a wider band than one per cent. That still does not change our recommendation that Canada and the negotiators who go to that international conference should do everything in their power to maintain a floating rate for Canada, especially in relation to the United States dollar.

• (1500)

My second point is that there is no easy way of running an economy. On the one hand you have the failure to recognize that there is a trade-off, so you bounce back and forth between 3 per cent and 8 per cent unemployment and up to 5 per cent inflation and you have a stop-go, overly-reactive economy. On the other hand, you run the economy at full employment and you try to put on controls that either will not work or will destroy economic freedom—and maybe some other freedoms besides. We do not think our way is easy, but, honourable senators, we think it is the only way that we can run this economy and achieve the goals and results that the public wants.

We think that, if we could cause the Government and the public to endorse the recommendations in this report, it would change the fabric of economic life in Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Everett: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by honourable Senator Nichol, that the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on Growth, Employment and Price Stability be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Wednesday, November 24, 1971, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Honourable senators, I gave some intimation yesterday that I might move this motion today. As I indicated yesterday, the purpose of adjourning until Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock is to give adequate time and opportunity to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to consider its final report on its study in depth of the tax reform proposals. It is expected that that report will be tabled on Wednesday and that it will likely be accompanied by an explanatory statement by the chairman of the committee, the honourable Senator Hayden. The other items on the Order Paper will, of course, proceed as usual next Wednesday.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, with respect to items 1, 2 and 3, I should mention that I moved their adjournment in the expectation that someone would be prepared today to speak on them. If no one is prepared to speak on those items now, I would ask that they stand.

With regard to item No. 4, I should point out that Senator Benidickson asked me to stand the item until December 2. I should also like to stand items 5 and 6 at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that items 1 to 6, inclusive, stand?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, November 24, 1971, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 24, 1971

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

THE LATE SENATOR ARTHUR W. ROEBUCK

TRIBUTE

Hon. David A. Croll: I want to thank honourable senators for their consideration in permitting me to pay tribute to Senator Arthur Roebuck. Senator Martin has already explained to you why I was not able to be here on Thursday. I have read the tributes that were then paid to Senator Roebuck. They were worthy of him.

Prior to his illness I had hoped that the occasion would not arise when I must pay final tribute in this chamber to the memory of the late Senator Arthur Roebuck. I had the privilege of presiding at a function in Toronto honouring his 90th birthday, and many senators will recall that festive occasion. Ten years earlier I had presided at a similar function honouring him on his 80th birthday. It was my hope and expectation, if I should myself be spared so long, to preside once more on the occasion of his personal centennial.

He bore the burden of the years as though it were no burden at all. In February 1970 this hope and expectation seemed fully attainable. He was then presiding as the first chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. He was as active, as diligent, as faithful to his duties as a senator as he ever had been. In that month he was stricken down, at almost 92 years of age, at the height of his power and at the height of his fame as a great Canadian. So great was his reputation, and he was held in such high respect and affection, that it was accepted by most Canadians.

Honourable senators, it is not necessary for me to recite at length the various stages of his illustrious career of public service, nor to enumerate the many contributions he has made to the progress of this great country. He was at various times a member of the legislative assembly, a provincial cabinet minister, a member of the House of Commons, a senator of the Canadian Senate. The longer he lived the more significant his contribution became.

He was the prime mover in the enactment of the new Divorce Act, a tremendous boon to thousands of Canadian couples forced by archaic laws to live in a common law relationship. The time for such reform had come. Public opinion was ready for it and a man was available. That man was Arthur Roebuck, who, as he always did, rose magnificently to the occasion.

It is not equally well known that Senator Roebuck was a man of unusual versatility. He was, in the 20th century, a true Renaissance man. His range of knowledge was wide indeed: he was an artist, a writer, a photographer, and an expert mechanic. He was, until his last illness intervened, a dedicated golfer and was proud to claim and demonstrate that his golf scores did not at any time extend beyond the number of years that he had lived. He was also a devoted family man, although his wife, the former Inez Perry of Toronto, predeceased him in 1954.

Ninety-three years is a long time. For Arthur Roebuck it was a good long time. What did these years bring to Senator Roebuck? They brought him success and honour beyond his brightest young dreams. They brought him joy and sorrow, laughter and tears. Yet he clung to noble values, the mark of dignity and character. What did he give in return? Honesty, devotion to duty, and hard work with sympathy, understanding and respect for his fellow man—especially the underdog. He understood the problems of the unfortunate, the underpriviledged and the unhappy. His was indeed a full and generous life.

Why do we pay tribute to his memory now? Because those years have given us a shared experience we may well cherish as long as we live—the privilege of having walked a little of the way with Arthur Roebuck.

His greatness was coupled with humility. He was always courteous, even courtly, yes, to all, whether of high or low estate, who came in contact with him.

His countrymen will miss him; his fellow-parliamentarians will miss him; above all this Senate will miss his presence. Fortunately, he did not die in obscurity. He is on the Canadian record and his example will be there for the inspiration of us all for generations to come.

Honourable senators, I have no wish to parade my grief, but I walked with him for more than 50 years, and my sense of deep personal loss is profound and will be abiding. It could not be otherwise. I had so much in common with him.

Senator Roebuck's daughter, Glenna—Mrs. A. R. Patterson—and his two grandaughters, Wendy and Gay, and his sister, Edna, survive him. Theirs will be the greatest loss of all, and we send them our deepest sympathy.

I am happy to recall that on the occasion of the 90th anniversary of his birth, his fellow senators established in his name a scholarship fund at Osgoode Hall, of which he was a distinguished graduate and long-time bencher. Accordingly, the Arthur Wentworth Roebuck Award is awarded annually, in perpetuity, to a law student at Osgoode Hall who has done work of outstanding merit in the field of domestic law. A former colleague of ours, the Honourable W. Ross Macdonald, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, himself a most distinguished Canadian statesman, presented to Senator Roebuck at the time an embossed certificate commemorating the event and the occasion.

It is sad indeed to say farewell to this great man, to this complete man, the Honourable Arthur Wentworth Roebuck, Senator, We shall not soon see his like again.

THE ESTIMATES

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Leopold Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(e) moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the Supplementary Estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1972.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Honourable senators, we are being asked to give leave to dispense with this rule. Is it intended that this committee should meet tomorrow? I am particularly interested in this because if we meet tomorrow I do not feel we will have had adequate time to study the Supplementary Estimates (A). I would like to know when the committee intends to meet.

Hon. Mr. Langlois: The chairman of this committee is not present, but I do not believe that the committee will sit tomorrow. I presume it will sit next week.

Motion agreed to.

POVERTY

NEWSPAPER ARTICLES—PRIVILEGE

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I beg to rise on a question of privilege in connection with articles which appeared in the Toronto Star of November 11 entitled "Poverty Report had Little to Say about Wealth", and in Time magazine of November 22 in an article entitled "passionate wrongs".

Both of these articles, referring to criticism in the report of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty of pulp-cutting operations in New Brunswick, state that the camp is located on land leased by me.

The article in the Toronto Star describes the workers as "poor, trapped souls, engaged in cutting wood for a Canadian Senator"—referring to me—while the language of the article in Time magazine implies that the committee was seeking to protect me because it failed to mention that the land in question was leased by Liberal Senator G. P. Burchill.

I beg to state that I do not hold one foot of land under lease in New Brunswick and that I am not an officer, a director, or even a shareholder of Geo. Burchill & Sons (Plywood) Limited, on whose Crown land Mr. Allan Shaddick held a contract to cut eight-foot wood.

I visited Mr. Shaddick over the weekend and he gave me the following information: First, the crew of 1970 pulpcutters have been working for him for several years, and are still cutting wood for him in 1971. Second, as subcontractors they are paid $7 per cord for cutting, and $3 per cord for hauling the wood to a trucking road. This price is based on current rates paid by the pulp and paper industry to pulpcutters, as negotiated with their unions.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Why do you not sue them? I would.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: One pulp and paper company informed me that the rate specified in their union contract was $6.85 to $7.55 for cutting, depending upon the chance the operator had, and $2.65 for hauling. That represented an average gross take-home pay of $20.87 per day, after allowing for power saw costs of $1 per cord. This is on the basis of cutting 3.43 cords per day. Depending upon the amount of wood a man cuts, which ranges from two to nine cords per day, the hourly earnings vary from a low of $2.12 to a high of $6. This, of course, depends upon the ability of the individual, and the nature of the stand.

According to their records, the cutter's daily average in 1971 was 3.43 cords. I might explain there are many men in the crew who do not cut two cords per day. They are there for the benefit of earning a dollar, and the small amount of cutting carried out by them appears in the average.

Obviously, a small contractor, in order to attract workers, must pay at least comparable rates. In Mr. Shaddick's case earnings of $21 per day, or $2.62 per hour, were recorded and verified by the contractor's bookkeeper, who came all the way from Tracadie yesterday, a distance of 60 miles, to interview me in my office and verify those figures.

I regret to add here that Mr. Shaddick's crew was conscripted this season by the Lands and Forests Branch of the Department of Natural Resources of the provincial government to help fight forest fires. They charged and were paid $27 per day, which was assumed to be comparable to their earnings on the operation.

Furthermore, honourable senators, a contract has been signed recently, I am informed, with another union on behalf of sawmill workers. This contract specifies an hourly basic rate of $1.90 per hour for casual workers. Skilled workers and those doing specific jobs, of course, are paid on a higher scale. So the wages paid woodworkers are not out of line with the standard of wages paid throughout the sawmill industry in the area.

The "huts" referred to are mobile units, constructed in such a manner that they can be conveyed over the roads from the site of one woods job to another. They are approved by the Department of Labour of the Province of New Brunswick, the representatives of which inspect these camps. They are built 10 feet wide in order to negotiate the roads, and are 18 feet long. They are constructed to house the men. As the contractor said to me yesterday, "Senator, when men come along looking for work, where are you going to put them?" The report complains that the huts are really trailers holding eight men.

• (1430)

While I stated that I am not a shareholder in Geo. Burchill & Sons (Plywood) Limited, I should add that I have a very deep interest in the company's success, because it is a pioneer venture started by my son, utilizing previously unused species of New Brunswick wood in the manufacture of softwood plywood. It is the first and only operation of its kind in the Atlantic Provinces, and I am very proud of it.

Faced with tough competition from other species, its establishment has been a difficult struggle, and in 1970, while still operating in the red, about 250 people earned their livelihood from this industry. That, to my mind, is one way of fighting poverty.

I apologize for seeking the indulgence of the Senate to make this statement, but as the articles referred to were given wide publicity I felt that I owed it to myself and the Senate to set the record straight.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I do not doubt for one moment that the question raised by Senator Burchill is an important one. It would clarify the record if we were to hear from the chairman of the committee as to whether any evidence was given which permitted anyone to draw conclusions or to write the stories referred to in the press reports mentioned by Senator Burchill.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It had nothing to do with the report. The suggestion was made—

[Hon. Mr. Burchill.]

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I am inquiring whether evidence was presented before the committee.

Hon. Mr. Croll: The suggestion was made that he was in some way connected, and that we had shielded him.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I have read the story. I was wondering whether any witness said anything before the committee that justified anyone making that kind of accusation or comment.

Hon. Mr. Croll: At no time did I hear Senator Burchill's name mentioned. I was amazed when I read the article. It does not appear in the Senate Report on Poverty for the simple reason that Senator Burchill had nothing to do with the enterprise. I explained that to Senator Burchill, but he felt, quite properly, that he should make a statement in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I am in full agreement with that. As we have had some problems with other questions relating to the committee's report, it is about time that we looked into the matter of dealing with this kind of situation. This is another incident where I think the Senate should be able to take action.

Hon. Josie D. Quart: Honourable senators, Senator McGrand, Senator Fergusson and I visited that camp, accompanied by Mr. Joyce and Mr. Georgio Gaudet, a social worker with the Health and Welfare Department of the Province of New Brunswick.

I am quite pleased to hear, Senator Burchill, that you had nothing to do with it. I assure you that I did not contact the press one way or another.

I do not know the name of the man you mentioned, Senator Burchill, but I was absolutely shocked at the condition of that camp, as were those who accompanied me. I have visited other logging camps. We visited and reported upon the conditions at a camp in Saskatchewan, and it was a paradise compared to the logging camp we saw in New Brunswick. We stayed for what might be called a meal—pies and this type of food—which we shared with hundreds of flies. We also took a peek into the so-called trailers the loggers used.

Hon. Mr. Lamontagne: How many men were there?

Hon. Mrs. Quart: We did not go in when the men were there; in fact, one peek was quite enough, Senator Lamontagne. The general condition of the whole area was terrible. I think Senator McGrand will agree with me.

The loggers told us that because of what they had to pay for chain saws and other equipment and for their transportation back to Tracadie, they would not work in the camp next year. They said that those who remained in Tracadie lived better on welfare.

Over the Christmas period most of us on the committee received telephone calls inquiring whether we would make a statement to the press about the four renegades who resigned from the staff of the Poverty Committee.

Being loyal to the chairman, I said that any statement regarding the so-called renegades would have to come from him.

In any event, we were extremely shocked at the conditions in that logging camp. As far as I am concerned,

Senator Burchill, I would not want my dog to live in one of those trailers.

COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN UNITED KINGDOM AND RHODESIA—QUESTION AND ANSWER

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Martin) whether the Government of Canada was consulted or is being consulted regarding negotiations which the Government of the United Kingdom, through its Foreign Secretary, has been carrying on with the Government of Rhodesia?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I would like to take that question as notice.

[Later:]

Leave having been given to revert to Question Period:

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, Senator O'Leary asked me whether or not the Government had been informed of the discussions that have taken place in Salisbury. In reply, the Canadian Government was informed of the departure for Salisbury of the British Foreign Secretary, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, on November 9. The Government has not been informed of the progress of the discussions, nor to date has it been informed of the outcome of those discussions.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: Let alone consulted. My question was whether the Government of Canada had been consulted. You used the word "informed". They were not even informed, let alone consulted.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I said that we were informed of the departure for Salisbury of the British Foreign Secretary.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: We were all informed of the departure.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I am sure that Senator O'Leary is awaiting with great interest, as am I, the official announcement tomorrow in the British House of Commons and in Salisbury.

NATIONAL FINANCE

CONSIDERATION OF COMMITTEE REPORT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the Order:

> Consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance entitled: "Growth, Employment and Price Stability", tabled in the Senate on Thursday, 18th November, 1971.—(Honourable Senator Everett).

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed that the honourable Senator Molson speak now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

• (1440)

Hon. Mr. Molson: Honourable senators, in tabling the report entitled "Growth, Employment and Price Stability" in the chamber on November 18, the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance made an exceptionally fine speech, meeting a high standard that we are beginning to take for granted from him. He dealt with the report with such facility and clarity that he disguised much of its background. First of all, the idea of this report was his own. He felt that this foggy area of an economic stabilization policy necessary, perhaps I should say vital, to our future in Canada was a proper ground for our Finance Committee to examine in depth.

Secondly, assisted by the very able staff he recruited, to whom our debt is acknowledged in the final paragraph of the introduction to the report, he planned and organized the selection and attendance of the witnesses, and the schedules of the committee.

Thirdly, in his speech of last Thursday he made a complex and sometimes dull subject appear to be relatively simple and absorbing, and he did it concisely and quickly. May I say that it was a great pleasure for our fellow committee members to be privileged to work with Senator Everett in this task.

In speaking on the report, Senator Everett covered the essentials so well that there is no need for me to add much. If I may, I should like to emphasize the fact that we found that there is no easy or simple panacea for our economic problems. We really thought this to be the case, we all do, but the quality of the evidence before us laid to rest any doubt that we might have had about it. This knowledge is valuable in tending to eliminate wasteful, time-consuming criticism of public policy for the wrong reasons. It should help to create better public understanding of the nature and dimension of the difficulties which arise from time to time.

A second point that may be worth calling attention to is the width of spectrum covered by the experience and the knowledge of the witnesses who so willingly came before us. It would be quite wrong, I believe, to single out personalities, but the impact of a report such as this depends entirely on the weight of the evidence on which it is based. When you examine the list of witnesses in Appendix II you will observe that there is not only a wide cross-section of university representation from coast to coast in Canada, but there is a dean of British economists, two former chairmen of the United States President's Council of Economic Advisers, the president of the Japanese Economic Research Centre, bankers, American economists, representation from the unions, the former chairman of the West Germany Council of Experts on Economic Development, and others of wide reputation. Their interest and co-operation in the study of our problems demonstrated a wealth of good will which we must, most gratefully, acknowledge. The private submissions, which you will see in Appendix III in a long list there attached, were also very valuable and most helpful to the committee.

The third point I should like to make may perhaps be the most important. Senator Everett touched on it when he said, quite rightly, that while we were fully aware of the impact and the changed conditions brought about by President Nixon's moves in August, our report dealt with long-term principles and therefore remained unchanged by these immediate developments. I should like to emphasize that the Canadian economy as we know it is indeed wide open. While responsive to some extent to our actions to influence its direction, if the weight of events or trends beyond our borders develops enough thrust, we are absolutely obliged to give ground or roll with the punches. We are not a rock on which we can stand watching, undisturbed, the impact of external economic storms.

In particular, the privilege of living peacefully in such close proximity—and in trade so intimately related—to our American cousins makes us specially sensitive to any major economic squalls in the United States. Nevertheless, economic policy in Canada must be taken in the long-term view and in consideration of the basic principles. That is why our chairman emphasized that in spite of these developments our report still stood.

The report has received considerable coverage in the press and on the air. Generally the articles have been very fair. There has been no suggestion that the Senate is suffering from the illusion that it has all the answers, and this is, I believe, in keeping with the report. We offer a number of suggestions, quite reasonable ones I believe, and not really too critical. They are all backed by solid evidence.

Personally, I have heard only two criticisms to date. One was from an economist who does not agree with our recommendation to maintain a floating exchange rate. I told him that our evidence was overwhelmingly in favour of a floating rate, and that I thought he was outweighed by his professional brethren about 24 to one.

The second criticism was from a well-respected journalist who said that he did not expect the Government to pay too much attention. I do not think we ever expected the Government to rush off and change to a policy as outlined by us. We do hope the Government will study our report carefully, and perhaps find some help from it in developing economic policy. I am sure we will be well satisfied with that.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It merits very careful consideration.

Hon. Mr. Molson: Honourable senators, I do not have any more to say. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, our chairman covered the matter fully, and certainly better than I ever could do. I would like to conclude by congratulating Senator Everett on the quality of his report, and once again expressing our appreciation of the many months of effort he devoted to it.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Grosart, debate adjourned.

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty in Canada, tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, 10th November.—(Honourable Senator Smith).

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed that the honourable Senator Inman speak now instead of honourable Senator Smith?

[Hon. Mr. Molson.]

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mrs. Inman: Honourable senators, I wish at this time to extend a warm and sincere welcome to those senators who have recently joined us in this chamber. I am especially pleased to welcome Senator Bonnell, who comes from Prince Edward Island. Senator Bonnell is a very successful doctor and politician, and was a member of the provincial cabinet. He is also an outstanding citizen of our province.

I hope our new senators will enjoy their tenure here. I know that they will contribute much to the deliberations of the Senate.

Honourable senators, in 1968 Canada rediscovered poverty. The poor, however, were always there. It could be argued that because of the sustained economic growth in Canada during the 1960s, poverty became a relatively minor problem. Canadians were busy managing a boom, and money was plentiful. Poverty was invisible, submerged in the sea of affluence. Poverty has always been invisible except at those times when there were practical reasons for its rediscovery. Each nation has unique physical, regional, and social factors which have raised the poverty question in a national debate in which solutions have been demanded.

The Economic Council of Canada, in its Fifth Annual Review, shook the complacency of the Canadian people by proving that not only did the problem of poverty exist, but it was far more serious and widespread than most thinking Canadians imagined. The Economic Council challenged the Senate of Canada to inquire into the problem of poverty in Canada. They suggested that such a committee could do much to define, and throw light on, the problem, and at the same time build public support for a more effective structure of remedial measures.

Consequently, a committee was set up under the very able chairmanship of Senator David Croll. Senator Croll all his life has been dedicated to the relief of the sufferings of the poor, and no better choice could have been made for chairman of a committee to study poverty in Canada. I have had the privilege to sit on several committees chaired by Senator Croll, dealing with social problems concerning Canadians in general, and I always found him most untiring and sincere in his efforts to improve the conditions under which the less privileged must live.

At the outset the committee was faced with major problems. From all the data and reports available for study it was difficult to decide just where our investigation should begin. There was, for instance, no generally accepted definition of poverty. Statistical data was sparse and outdated, so that even basic questions such as "Are there more poor today than last year?" could not be answered with any reasonable degree of certainty. In addition, the committee was confronted by a jungle of conflicting opinions and diverse, complex social economic arguments. On the one hand, the committee was told that the poor are lazy, shiftless and indifferent; social dropouts beyond help. On the other hand, the committee met with well-organized poor groups who told us that Canadian society imposed poverty upon them as a way of life. Once they were trapped in the poverty milieu, they claimed society made it exceedingly difficult for them to escape.

Faced with this immensely complex problem and no general consensus, it was a great temptation to seek a remedy. This course would have ended in frustration, for mankind has been fruitlessly searching, with various degrees of enthusiasm, for such a panacea since civilization began. The committee dismissed this course, for it realized that the social welfare system could not be patched over again; that new insights had to be gained, and revolutionary new remedies investigated.

The committee set itself two aims. The first, to seek the elimination of the obvious injustices immediately, and the second, to outline a plan for Canadian socio-economic development that if implemented would, it was hoped, eradicate poverty in less than a decade. To pick out the injustices which currently exist and recommend how these injustices could be removed is relatively simple. While these injustices persist and are tolerated, Canada is a lesser country than it could easily be.

To many people the world appears to be divided into the just and the unjust. The result is constant tension and conflict between individuals, nations, and races. Often the main motivation is self-justification and self-righteousness, although most people are unaware of this.

Prejudice is too often a negative prejudgment. We should learn to accept each other's values. We should put ourselves on equal footing in order to accept the values of others.

As the committee began studying the long-term aspects of the poverty program, it became aware that poverty is really a manifestation of fundamental flaws and inherent inconsistencies in our social and economic system. The Canadian way of life is significantly better than most, but is far from perfect. The committee found that in our professed humanity, Canadian society was inconsiderate by denying access to rising wealth to the weak, the handicapped, the old; that in our professed charity we are only one cut above throwing alms to a street beggar, because we destroy the dignity of those in the greatest need and who have little else; that our bureaucracies and administrations, although charged with helping those in need, have failed, in that the combined increased financial and human efforts at all levels of government and private agencies have not succeeded in alleviating, let alone eradicating poverty. There must be a better way.

The gap between rich and poor is growing wider every year as the population grows larger. There are the working poor. There are 30 million poor in the North American continent, and welfare costs have doubled in five years. Toronto is housing the poor in armouries. There are half a million rural poor in Canada. Many of our poor are too young, too old, or too disabled to work. Work has to be redesigned, and work has to be found for those able to work. We cannot rely on private industry any longer.

Faced with these truths, the committee became increasingly concerned with more general principles, in the hope of ascertaining where and why we have failed. Do we really wish that all our citizens should receive a portion of the rising standard of living, as we profess? The evidence indicates that we place this stated goal relatively low on our list of social priorities. As Winston Churchill warned, a society without a conscience and a soul is doomed.

The chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty noted on April 22, 1969:

> It is much too late to tinker and patch up the present system, for I think it will come apart again; and above all, we cannot and must not do a papered-over job.

In accepting the challenge presented by the Economic Council, the Special Senate Committee on Poverty set out from the assumption that our social security system was beyond the state of worthwhile repair. New ideas and new programs had to be devised. When the committee was formed, and indeed throughout its life, it was dogged by the statement, "The poor will always be with us." In searching through the Holy Bible, it was found that that was taken out of context. Even though the poor have always been with us, there is no God-given prophecy that they should remain. In fact, there is reason to change this concept of the poor being always with us.

The problem of poverty in Canada had never been tackled as a total problem. An analysis of all its characteristics and causes had not been made. The committee realized that if a solution were to be found a systematic approach to the problem was necessary, or the committee would become bogged down, or be side-tracked along courses which might prove to be relatively unimportant.

• (1500)

Probably the most important revelation to the committee during the course of its investigation was the fact that Canada has the resources available today to eradicate economic poverty in Canada. In other words, Canada is in the position of being able to remove the economic aspect of the poverty problem. Once this fact is accepted, it must also be stated that an attack on only one component of the poverty "income" is doomed to failure. This is the course that has been followed in the past. The committee then is convinced that it is feasible, in the economic sense, to tackle poverty and eliminate it, if that is what Canadians wish to do.

Knowing there was a feasible economic solution, the committee wondered why the problem had not already been solved. The committee found that Canada is devoting approximately 10 per cent of the gross national product to maintaining the existing system; that the people in need are not receiving the financial aid and services they should; that they are not receiving the services most Canadians believe they are receiving, and which all Canadians are paying for.

The next main conclusion is that poverty, in a general sense, is a manifestation of the sum of the individual social attitudes that exist in our society. It is a perpetual, visual reminder of each individual's inhumanity to his fellow man. Poverty exists and persists because of federal, provincial, and municipal laws, and the interpretations placed upon them. Poverty exists because the judicial system is, in a very real sense, unjust. Poverty exists because the Christian church, which was founded upon hope, justice, peace and love, has failed to convince its adherents that this moral commitment is worthwhile or relevant. Canadians, therefore, should not be smug. We have not that much to be proud of; nor should we be naïve enough to attempt to preach to others the virtues of the good Canadian life, for as this report of the committee shows, the good life is denied to many of our fellow Canadians.

Bearing in mind the economic resources available to Canada, the committee questions the goals of a society which accepts or even tolerates the fact that a significant minority of its population does not enjoy the standard of living of the majority. The existence of poverty in Canada indicates the indifference of the great majority of the people of Canada to their fellow citizens. This indifference is a major, recurring factor in the system of causes, and is one of the main reasons why poverty persists.

I believe that the working poor are by far the most unfortunate of the poor population—unfortunate in the sense that they cannot get ahead. The working poor are excluded from union membership. They work for provincial minimum wages, which are poverty wages. They live, out of necessity, in the breeding grounds of unrest. How can a father convince a son that the good life is achievable, if he himself does all he is capable of doing but is still denied?

Considering the poor as a whole, in the majority of cases the head of the family is a full-time member of the labour force, and the chances are that the main wage earner never succeeded in completing elementary school. In fact, there is a 70 per cent chance he did not. It is also a fact that the greatest majority of the poor live in the urban centres of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Thus, the chances of such a wage-earner getting a high-paying job are remote. Our technological advancement is guaranteeing an ever-increasing supply of what could be called technological dropouts. It is very difficult to take a man over 45 years of age and train him for an occupation when he lacks the basic education to learn, and, at that age, is reluctant to enter a new vocation or, indeed, leave the environment that he knows and understands.

The poor pay most for inflation—this is aptly demonstrated by those who are living on fixed incomes—but even for the poor man who is working full-time wages have gone up considerably less than the average, and significantly less than those of organized labour. The children are the ones who pay the highest price. They are surrounded by apathy and frustration because the head of the family is trying his hardest, but is still falling behind. We acknowledge the need for education, but we do not make the effort to spend the additional resources in those areas where they are needed most.

We must realize the need for education of those less fortunate than ourselves, not only in schools and colleges but in other fields, because a child's education begins at birth. We must see that each child has the opportunity to become educated, in order to grow into a productive and respected citizen of the community wherever he or she may live.

One of the saddest groups affected by poverty in this country is that of the elderly or aged: those away from relatives and close friends, living a hand-to-mouth existence, victims of rising food costs, with health problems, inadequate and uncomfortable housing, living in loneliness, despair and fear. To these people the golden years have become a nightmare. Much can and must be done to improve life for these people who in their productive years helped to build this country. Much must be done to take the burden from their sunset years.

The guaranteed annual income recommended in the report of the poverty committee would help greatly to make life more comfortable for those who have not the means to procure some of the comforts to which they are entitled. With it they could achieve a measure of the amenities of life enjoyed by those in more affluent circumstances. Our senior citizens should be kept well and happy so that the evening of life is not a burden.

I remember seeing a moving picture showing the plight of so many of our elderly citizens—those who live in poverty with no means of support, other than the old age pension. I shall never forget the look of loneliness, helplessness, and despair in their faces. From these groups of elderly people we heard too of the many hardships they endure in trying to look after themselves.

At this stage I should point out that at least the Province of Prince Edward Island does look after its aged very well. A large measure of the credit for this must go to one of our new senators, Senator Bonnell, who, when he was Minister of Health and Welfare for Prince Edward Island, saw to it that the aged were well cared for.

In conclusion, I feel that all people dependent upon public support should be provided with the basic resources needed to live a healthy, decent, and dignified life. A guaranteed annual income could be the answer. To achieve this goal it is necessary to have the faith and best efforts of all citizens. A country with our resources can afford to give generously to the welfare of the underprivileged.

One might say that the recommendations contained in this report are the distillation of the vast amount of evidence, both oral and written, presented to the poverty committee by the numerous people who appeared before it.

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, in rising to speak on the subject of poverty, the first thing I should like to do is to congratulate Senator Croll for his excellent presentation of the report, and, although I was a member of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty, I should also like to extend my congratulations to the committee itself, not solely for undertaking such a difficult job but also for the method in which it undertook it and handled the study of poverty in Canada. I should also commend the Senate for causing this study to be made.

• (1510)

Previous speakers to this debate spoke of the contribution made by all members of the committee. I should like to take this opportunity of adding my congratulations and thanks to those members. Two of our lady senators today made reference to poverty, and I should like to point out that we were fortunate in having three very active concerned ladies on that committee. Their contribution to the work of the committee was outstanding. Travelling across Canada was both tiring and onerous, but this fact did not in any way lessen their efforts. They are to be commended for the work that they have done.

In commending the report to all honourable senators, may I also recommend that if you have not already read the report you should do so now. I also recommend to all the people of Canada and particularly to those people who are directly involved with the poor people of Canada to read and study this report. In my view it is the most extensive, thorough and comprehensive study of poverty ever made in Canada or, indeed, anywhere in the world.

In its preparation all areas of Canada were covered and every aspect of poverty that was brought to the attention of the committee was thoroughly examined. Personal visits were made to farms, factories, woodcutting operations, to skid row, to the rundown hotels that provide accommodation for poor people, to unwed mothers and to single-parent families. Problems concerning housing, schooling, crime, jails—and here I could go on and on outlining and detailing the areas—were covered by the committee. In fact I think that all the committee members would agree with me in saying that no aspect of poverty that was brought to the attention of the committee was overlooked or bypassed. It is for that reason that I say it was the most extensive and thorough study ever made on poverty.

I think the greatest impression that was left on my mind from our hearings was that of the total frustration of the people who appeared before the committee and the poor people whom we visited. They seemed to lack all hope, hope for themselves, hope in society and hope for the future. In many instances they did not know where to turn or whom to turn to for assistance. On many occasions we were flooded with problems that were not matters of national concern but were, in fact, matters of provincial concern or municipal concern. But the people who were in need had no idea where they should go to seek a solution to these problems. In fact, it became rather frustrating for members of the committee to have to say, "Well, that is not our problem;"—although in many ways it was—"we are not the body to deal with this problem; it is a municipal problem or it is a provincial problem."

Another frustrating element was the fact that in many areas there were no services available for the poor while in others there was a duplication of services. There were many instances of people just not knowing really where services were available. Senator Carter mentioned in his speech that in the City of Winnipeg alone there were some 200 agencies assisting people in need. If there are that many in Winnipeg, then I have no doubt that every community of similar size or larger will have as many or more, and the report states that there must be some type of umbrella, some type of gathering point or some focal point where people who are in need can obtain the services they require.

The most outstanding recommendation in the report, of course, and the one that has received the greatest press coverage, is the guaranteed annual income concept—an income maintenance program. I commend this recommendation to the Senate as I commend it to the Government of Canada and to the citizens of Canada since it is the taxpaying citizen of Canada who must eventually foot the bill. But I would also point out that there is some danger in our looking at the report and thinking that that recommendation in itself will solve the problem of poverty. It will not. It is only one small step. It is probably the most important step in that it will give to those people the basic income to meet their immediate needs, but in no way does it take away the need for the many other social services required by many people in Canada. It is recommended in the report that the federal Government accept the financial responsibility for this income maintenance program and leave with the provinces the many other social services that are required, but with some provision made for federal financial assistance in this regard.

Honourable senators, you may ask, as many people may ask, what other services are required to assist people who are trying to break their way out of the poverty cycle. Let me point out that education, for example, plays a very important part in assisting people to rise above the poverty level. In addition, there are matters concerned with health, with housing and with manpower training. Then there are problems concerned with children, family planning, and rehabilitation assistance. Perhaps the most important part of the whole thing is explaining to people who are on this income level the opportunities available to them in our Canadian society. We claim there are opportunities for everyone in our society. However, from what this committee could determine, in many instances people are not aware of the opportunities that are available to them, or they are not aware of the opportunities which we think are available to them. There is nothing new in the area of guaranteed annual income. This is not a new concept. As you are all aware, it exists today in the area of old age pension supplements. The principle of guaranteed annual income is established by legislation. We are not breaking new ground. The new ground to be broken, if and when it is broken, is that all citizens in the country will be entitled to this basic allowance.

Although we have been reluctant to admit it, we do have, and we have had for a number of years, a guaranteed income in every province of this country. People who have no income have received financial assistance from their provincial government. If they have been receiving financial assistance, then there are only two areas involved in this report that need to be dealt with: the amount that these people receive, and the method in which they receive it. I am sure every member of the committee would agree that there are areas in Canada where the amount received is too little and that the method in which it is given is unsatisfactory. Surely if we accept the basis of the report, the amount to be given will be reasonable. The report does not indicate that the amount recommended at this time is sufficient, but it does say that at least it is a beginning, so that in the future the amount given to every Canadian in need will be sufficient to meet that need.

The method in which it is given becomes very important. We have seen and heard from welfare recipients and welfare workers of many inhumane and degrading instances in which people received their needed financial assistance. If a person in need is entitled to certain aid, surely it could be given to him in a more humane and less degrading way than it is now. Surely it is not enough to say that we do not have people starving in our streets. In our society it is no longer possible to compare our poor people with the poor people in less fortunate countries. You would be surprised at the number of times our committee heard this standard being raised by a number of individual Canadians. We must realize that poverty is relative to the rest of society—from the poorest on the economic scale to those who are well off. Unless we realize this we will not have a true understanding of what poverty is, and we will be in no better position than some of the poorer countries or some of the countries dominated by communism or by dictatorship.

The attitude of many people who have looked at poverty only on the surface has been that people on welfare are lazy or no good. I do not want to deal with statistics today because I feel they were covered very well by previous speakers. If you accept the poverty level referred to, you know that 60 per cent in this group are working people. Three per cent was the highest estimate of people who were cheating the system, or who could have been working but were not. I am sure we have all been guilty of looking only at areas we can see at a glance, and not looking deeper. We see a person on welfare who is a drunk as well. This does not mean that all people on welfare are drunks. It reminds me of the story of a man who made a quick trip into Mexico. When he returned he thought he was an expert on Mexicans. He said that all Mexicans walk single file—at least the ones he saw did. It happens so often that we see a person on welfare who is a drunk and we tend to place all of them in the same category.

We hear complaints with regard to the mother on welfare, the single family parent, who played bingo and was criticized for spending public money on recreation. We heard of people who had their automobile driver's licence taken from them when they applied for welfare because they were out of work. That licence was necessary for them to travel in search of another job. There are many, many areas of injustice in our present system. It is easy for many of us to say we know what poverty is like because we were brought up in a shack where there was three inches of ice on the water in the morning. It is easy to say we fought, struggled and rose above it. There are a great many Canadians who can say that. If, in fact, it was that easily done, and it is as easy today as it was 20 or 30 years ago, perhaps there is some point in saying it. It cannot possibly be that easy when there are four to five million Canadians who have not been able to win that struggle. It is not enough to say, "We did it; so can you." It reminds me of the story of the child who said, "Mother, I do not want to go to London," and her mother replied "Shut up and keep swimming." That situation prevails in Canada. We have been telling these people to shut up and keep swimming, but we have, through our laws, kept them out of the main stream of affluence in this country. The attitudes of the Canadian people must change if the back of poverty is to be broken.

I mentioned that probably the most important part of the report relates to the concept of a guaranteed annual income. In order for that concept to work it must contain an incentive, which is provided by the report. However, the report agrees that it is not as great an incentive as, in fact, is necessary.

That could be remedied in time, when more funds are available, so that those who earn over the poverty level will not be taxed to the extent of 70 per cent of their income. I know that all honourable senators agree that a tax of 70 per cent of income is too high. We recommend in the report that a person who earns an amount additional to his supplement can keep 30 cents of each dollar earned. It can be said that that is not enough. However, it is a much greater incentive than Canadians in poverty have ever known before.

Since the committee began its hearings three years ago we have seen a number of good changes in social welfare legislation in many provinces. I believe that the Senate Poverty Committee, through the publicity it received and its meetings with provincial governments and municipal authorities, prompted many of those changes. I shall refer to some of them in my discussion of the lack of incentive. We saw areas of this country where a person on social welfare who attempted to better his position by planting a garden in his back yard had the value of the garden assessed, and that amount deducted from his welfare payment. Surely that is not much of an incentive for a person to better his position?

I mentioned earlier that drivers' licences had been taken away. This means that an unemployed worker looking for work is expected to walk five, six, or 10 miles to find employment.

Another great problem arises with those who are prepared to take any type of job in order to get off welfare. There were many such individuals, who found that when they started work their welfare was reduced 100 per cent, dollar for dollar. However, the great sin in the system is that when they lose that job for any reason there is a time lag before welfare payments are restored. This period varies from area to area and province to province, from 10 days to more than a month, because of the red tape involved in re-applying and being restored to the welfare roll. If a welfare recipient were ambitious enough to obtain employment he would find that upon termination of that employment he would lose income for the length of that time lag. What type of incentive is there for those on welfare to obtain employment when they know that their total loss would amount to perhaps one month's income? There are not many in Canadian society who can afford to lose a month's income, but these people are expected to do so.

• (1540)

The two areas that I mentioned earlier, of financial maintenance and social services, should be distinct areas of service available to Canadians.

We have often seen the frustration of not only the receivers of assistance but also the givers. The social worker who wishes to spend his or her time in effectively meeting the many social needs of people often finds, in fact, that his time is taken up with the management of money. Trained and conscientious social workers find that their work load is too great, and that their purpose is really to check up on people on welfare, to determine whether the money is being well spent, whether they are receiving more money than they should, whether they have a garden in their back yard, and whether there are men's shoes under a woman's bed. Such workers find themselves checking these matters, while ignoring the social needs.

We as Canadians console ourselves by supporting some of the 200 agencies that I referred to earlier. If we contribute $5 or $1 to our church, to the Red Shield campaign, or to the Empty Stocking Fund, we console ourselves by thinking that we have done our share. I am of the opinion that the Empty Stocking Fund at Christmas time and, in many instances, the Red Shield campaign are farces. In saying this, I do not mean to belittle either the campaigns or the campaigners, who do an excellent job. The farce to which I refer occurs when we as individual Canadians, having given to the funds, having given someone a package at Christmas, or a turkey to a family that has no stove to cook it on, say that we have done our share. We tend to leave it at that, and we do not feel that there is anything further to do.

If a family requires assistance at Christmas time from the Empty Stocking Fund, surely that family requires assistance on the other 364 days in the year. We are not justified in consoling ourselves by making their load a little lighter for one day only.

I do not wish to leave the impression that I am critical of the Red Shield campaign and its workers, of the Empty Stocking Fund, or of any of the other worthwhile charitable organizations. However, Canadians must realize that all this is not enough, that there are better and more efficient ways of looking after the needs of people while still retaining a place for those charitable organizations.

The report states that we are on the side of the less fortunate in our society, that we have compassion and understanding, and a desire to make Canada a better country in which to live, particularly for the less fortunate. If any action is to be taken, this message must be received sympathetically by all Canadians. Only in this way can the committee's recommendations be acted on by the Government.

I am not suggesting there will be action taken tomorrow. The report will be looked at, and studied very closely. If the Canadian people understand its contents, there will be such pressure on the Government that action will be taken shortly.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the names of Messrs. Weatherhead, Smith (Saint-Jean) and Gendron have been substituted for those of Messrs. Lachance, Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo) and De Bané on the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada.

PAROLE SYSTEM

MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF FIRST REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—DEBATE POSTPONED

Hon. J. Harper Prowse, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the first report of the committee to examine and report upon all aspects of the parole system in Canada:

> Your committee recommends:
>
> That the committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purpose of the said examination; and
> That the committee, or any subcommittee so authorized by the committee, may adjourn from place to place inside or outside Canada for the purpose of carrying out the said examination.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Prowse: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(f), I move the adoption of the report now.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Honourable senators, before we adopt this motion I think we need some explanation of certain aspects of the report. For example, where are we going to sit outside the country and what is contemplated? I should like an explanation, if it is possible.

• (1410)

Hon. Mr. Prowse: That is fair enough, honourable senators. In using the phrase "inside or outside Canada" we are merely seeking a general authority. It is not proposed that this committee should at any time go on junkets, but it is felt that at some stage we may wish to receive evidence from people in penitentiaries in Canada and we may even wish to receive evidence from people who have experience with parole problems in, for example, the State of Wisconsin or even in California. What we have considered is not that the entire committee should go on a junket, but that one senator might go to places such as I have mentioned and act as a commission to receive evidence. In saying this, I am not implying that it will be necessary for us to go outside Canada. In fact, we may be able to achieve our purposes without even calling witnesses from outside Canada. As I have said, this is just a general authority so that we may proceed with the work in which we are particularly interested.

We will in fact need three technical people, the first being an executive director. In this connection our budget has been submitted to the administrative personnel of the Senate and will eventually go to the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts for approval. I might add that we have in mind as executive director a person who is eminently qualified to serve in that capacity without prejudicing our position in relation to any other governmental institution which might itself be subject to investigation and report.

Secondly, we require a special adviser, and here we have particularly in mind a person who is now a parolee and whose name has been suggested to us by Senator Hastings. We feel that he could be of value to us while at the same time giving us credibility in the eyes of those who are most concerned, the prison inmates.

Thirdly, we require a press relations officer whose duty it will be to make sure that adequate service is provided the press.

We have arranged for the Solicitor General to start our hearings on December 15, and thereafter as long as the house is sitting the committee will work with various departmental people. Following that we will have reports to consider together with material that will be sent to committee members for their consideration over the holiday period. When we come back we will move into the public hearing aspect and will invite interested parties to submit recommendations and briefs.

Honourable senators, in my view this is the first of a number of reports, but we require this authority to set up what we consider to be the minimum staff necessary to do an acceptable job in this important area.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I wish to make one brief observation with respect to the report submitted by Senator Prowse, and it has to do with the hiring of staff. It was my suggestion, and I am happy to say that the committee agreed, that in this important area of parole investigation there is one segment of society vitally interested, and that section is made up of present and former inmates of our penitentiaries as well as those who are on parole now. I wish to commend the committee for the step that they have taken, and I am pleased they have concurred in my suggestion that the special assistant to the committee shall indeed be a parolee, an inmate or a former inmate. I believe such an individual working for our committee will give us the needed credibility since there are a few who hold us in disrespect and who ask just how sincere we are about the job we are performing. The individual who will hold this position will fill that gap and will also perform work which is needed for the committee and the present inmate population.

The press officer is another very important individual whom the committee will need. He could conceivably be a former inmate. One of the duties we need to perform is to educate the public as to the exact meaning and purpose of parole and how it operates in Canada. With this purpose in mind, that particular function would be performed for the committee by the press officer.

I wish to thank the committee for their consideration in hiring these individuals to perform this work for the committee.

Hon. Mr. Walker: My distinguished friend has used the word "credibility". Is he suggesting that we are bound to employ a parolee in order for us to have credibility? This is what he has said. He has suggested that we employ someone on parole. I cannot understand his reasoning.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Honourable senators, if I may be permitted to speak on behalf of the committee, first of all, I am not obliged to apologize for the difficulty the honourable senator from Toronto has in understanding anything.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Would you please speak for yourself.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: I am speaking for myself.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I rise on a point of order to call the attention of honourable senators to Rule 78(2).

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Would the honourable senator read the rule, please? I do not have my copy of the rules with me.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it will take me a few moments to deal with the point of order which has been raised. The report of the committee has been made, and we have a motion that the report be adopted now. I put the motion and I did not hear a dissenting voice. At this point we are debating a motion for adoption Looff this report. We are proceeding according to the rules.

• (1420)

Hon. Mr. Prowse: I am sorry if I misinterpreted the honourable Senator Walker's statement, he being up to his old trick of having a little fun. I was under the impression that it might be fair enough if we also had a little fun on our side. If I have done anything to hurt the sensitivities of anyone in the house or if my remark can possibly be construed as an insult to the honourable senator, I will withdraw it.

Now, the use of "credibility" here has nothing to do with our relationship with the public. We are dealing with a very sensitive group, and, without wishing to sound like a bleeding heart, I maintain that if we are to succeed in our endeavour it is important that we receive full co-operation from those most concerned, the inmates to whom parole is available. We must convince them that this will not be just another whitewash on behalf of the Establishment. The committee unanimously agreed with Senator Hastings that there are individuals with the necessary background who can gain for us credibility among prison inmates. Because of our very success in the world in which they do not ordinarily live, they find we lack credibility. It is as simple as that.

Hon. Mr. Molson: The purpose of Rule 78 is to provide honourable senators with an opportunity to think about any report containing serious elements or recommendations. For this reason, reports are ordinarily presented and then placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting. I am very interested in this report, but I must say I am completely taken by surprise and have no opinion on it this afternoon. I might be able to muster one by the next sitting.

I would say to the honourable senators who presented this report that if it does not involve a matter of timing or haste it would be beneficial to those of us who are not so well informed if consideration could stand to the next sitting of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Speaking for the committee, although we would like to have it dealt with promptly we are completely agreeable to having consideration of the report set over if there is any concern on the part of anyone.

The Hon. the Speaker: I understand that it is now moved by the honourable Senator Prowse, seconded by the honourable Senator Hastings, that this report be put on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: That is one way of putting it, or debate adjourned by Senator Molson.

The Hon. the Speaker: Do I understand that the debate is adjourned by the honourable Senator Molson?

Hon. Mr. Molson: No.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: The honourable Senator Prowse, with leave, moved the adoption of this report, and we have been debating that motion. I suggest that our course now should be to adjourn the debate. If Senator Molson does not wish to do so, I will move that the debate be adjourned, in the event others wish to speak. If I have nothing to say, I will say nothing.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Perhaps I might say to honourable senators that if we wish to be strictly correct according to our rules, it might be worth calling to the attention of the Senate that we have no provision whatsoever in our rules for the adjournment of a debate. Our rules specifically prohibit the adjournment of the debate. Rule 36(1) states:

> When a question is under debate—

And I believe that is the situation, in view of the fact that a motion was made and put by Your Honour which makes it a question:

> —a motion shall not be received unless to amend it, to refer it to a committee, to postpone it to a certain day, for the previous question, or for the adjournment of the Senate.

Rule 46(c) states that no notice is required for the postponement of a debate on a question to a certain day. In order to bring ourselves into line with our rules, this might be the time to suggest that, instead of attempting to adjourn a debate, we postpone it to a certain day. This would, I submit, be in keeping with our rules, which I believe is the desire of this chamber.

Some honourable senators may have other views, but my suggestion would help overcome the problem which arises from time to time in this chamber, of whether a motion to adjourn a debate is debatable.

Our rules very wisely provide for a motion to postpone a debate to a certain day to enable us to overcome that problem. It is true that there is nothing in our rules that prohibits debate on a motion to adjourn. However, there is an understanding in connection with the generally agreed rules of procedure that a motion to adjourn is not normally debated. The reason our rules provide only for postponement of a debate on a question is to enable us to overcome that very problem. Your Honour may wish to take this into consideration in the future.

The Hon. the Speaker: But in the meantime I should like to find a way whereby we can extricate ourselves from the difficulty we are in. I believe it is the concensus of opinion in this chamber that the debate on the motion be postponed until the next sitting.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: I am wondering what steps we should take to reach this goal. Perhaps the honourable Senator Prowse would agree to drop his original motion, or perhaps we should consider the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition to adjourn the debate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I move that further discussion on this motion be postponed until the next sitting of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I withdraw my motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I will look into this matter. I will put the motion by the honourable Senator Macdonald, but it should not be considered as a precedent before I have had time to consider the matter. Would the honourable Senator Macdonald please repeat his motion.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move that further discussion—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: With leave.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I move that further discussion of this motion be postponed until the next sitting of the Senate.

On motion of Honourable Mr. Macdonald, debate postponed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Leopold Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, November 30, 1971, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Leopold Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(h), moved:

[Hon. Mr. Grosart.]

That the name of the honourable Senator Fergusson be substituted for that of the honourable Senator Inman on the list of senators serving on the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada, effective Monday, 29th of November, 1971; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

UNITED NATIONS

TWENTY-SIXTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux rose pursuant to notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-sixth Meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations (1971), and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Assembly and the participation therein of the observers from the Parliament of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a brief report; I hope it will be helpful.

It was my privilege to spend the second week of November with the Canadian Permanent Mission as an observer at the Twenty-sixth Meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations. This proved to be a most interesting week since the representatives of the People's Republic of China were expected from day to day to make their entry into the General Assembly.

For an observer from Canada there is a profound interest in noting the Canadian operation at the United Nations. A modest but a most efficient delegation under the direction of the Permanent Representative of Canada, His Excellency, Mr. Yvon Beaulne, and his assistants, are doing an extremely good job for Canada.

Parliament is represented by two members of the House of Commons, Mr. Groos of Victoria, and Mr. R. Guay of Lévis. These two members of the House of Commons are attached there for the Twenty-sixth Session. It is my hope that a senator might also be attached to the General Assembly during future sessions. I believe it would serve an excellent purpose.

Also present during that same week were six other members of the House of Commons: Mr. K. R. Hymmen, Mr. V. Forget, Mr. M. Smerchanski, Mrs. G. MacInnis, Mr. W. Smith and Mr. A. Brewin.

Each morning we were briefed at the Canadian mission headquarters as to what was going on; what the Canadian position was; what the attitude to be expected from the other nations might be; and what might be the conclusions and the Canadian strategy. These meetings were sometimes presided over by His Excellency, Mr. Yvon Beaulne. You could feel the seriousness of the Canadian participation at the United Nations. While we were there the Canadian delegates and the Canadian observers were received by Mr. Beaulne and his charming wife at their residence at a delightful informal luncheon and a formal dinner.

During our stay at the United Nations the Canadian mission participated in the meetings of the General Assembly, six of the permanent committees, and in the Special Political Committee. We saw an impressive performance. It was pleasant to note the constructiveness of the Canadian discussion and the respect it commanded. They were impressive performances that spoke well for the Canadian personnel.

At the Thursday briefing we were honoured by a visit of the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, who participated in the briefing and spoke on the work to be done at the United Nations, and the importance of being constructive and positive in the Canadian approach. We learned then of the summoning of one of the Permanent Mission delegates to the Senate.

I feel this is a good occasion for me to eulogize on our new senator, the Honourable Renaude Lapointe. To all who know her it was a pleasant surprise. Her intelligent and effective representations for the Canadian Permanent Mission to the United Nations were very noticeable indeed. We were pleased to see her hard at work at the United Nations. I have known Senator Lapointe as a journalist and key executive of Le Soleil in Quebec City, and I recall some of the very flattering remarks made about her efficient and constructive work on that important newspaper. Her extensive experience has been concentrated particularly on social welfare, education, and political reporting.

[Translation]

The writings of Senator Lapointe have always had a deep impact on her readers. Her articles and her views have been reported often in our Canadian press. As an editorialist of La Presse, Miss Lapointe was the first woman to hold such a post in the French-language press of our country.

Of course, her work has been widely recognized. We know that our new colleague has written many radio programs and scripts, particularly for the International Service of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Senator Lapointe served with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

In 1970, Senator Lapointe became a member of the Canadian permanent delegation to the Twenty-fifth meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations. When she was called to the Senate, she was a distinguished and very active member of the Canadian delegation to the Twenty-sixth meeting. It is on the occasion of that briefing that I had the honour to congratulate her in the name of the honourable senators of this house.

[English]

This is the 26th year of Canada's participation in the United Nations. The support of the United Nations has been and is an essential element of Canadian foreign policy. In its participation thus far Canada has contributed generously to United Nations efforts to keep the peace in the Middle East, Kashmir, the Congo, West Iran, and Cyprus.

During the crisis in 1956 Canada played a significant role in establishing the United Nations Emergency Force to keep peace in the Middle East. That force was only withdrawn in 1967.

As long ago as 1960, at the request of the United Nations, Canada supplied military and civilian specialists to the Congo, and also pledged political and financial support for the maintenance of peace. Also in 1960 Canada was asked to provide aircraft, pilots, and maintenance crews to assist the United Nations temporary executive authority in the exercise of its peace-keeping functions in West Iran. It was at the request of the United Nations again that Canada maintained a military contingent in Cyprus to help keep peace between the Greeks and Turks.

As can be seen, honourable senators, it is a matter of record that Canada has always firmly supported the peace-keeping operations of the United Nations throughout the world. At the present time, Canada's participation in the work of the United Nations is channelled through various U.N. bodies, including all of the 13 specialized agencies as well as the very important International Atomic Energy Agency.

After serving for some years on the Economic and Social Council, Canada now continues as a member of most of its important subsidiaries, including the Regional Economic Commission for Latin America, the Committee for Program Co-ordination, the Inter-governmental Committee of the World Food Program, the Commission of Social Development, the Statistical Commission, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, and the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning. Canada also serves on the governing council of the United Nations Development Program and the Industrial Development Board of the United Nations, the industrial development organization.

Canada is on the executive committee of the Office of the United Nations Children's Fund, and is also a member of the Trade Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. This country is a member of the executive committee of the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Refugees, and I might say that since the end of World War II we have, by means of that office, received and installed in Canada approximately 350,000 refugees from overseas.

Moreover, Canada is represented on 16 subsidiary bodies of the General Assembly, including the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, the Disarmament Commission, the Special Committee for Peace-Keeping Operations, and the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation. It is a source of amazement that our representatives can handle so ably their duties on so many important agencies.

I am informed that Canada pays roughly 3 per cent of the regular budget of the United Nations, and that we are the eighth largest contributor. In 1968 the total expenses of the United Nations amounted to $152 million, of which Canada's share was approximately $3.8 million.

Apart from what I have mentioned so far, I should point out that Canada also makes generous voluntary contributions to special United Nations programs such as the United Nations Development Program, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency in the Middle East, and the World Food Program. It is part of the duties of the Canadian mission to follow through on these contributions.

During the period from 1945 to 1968 Canada's contributions to the United Nations, including its specialized agencies and related bodies, amounted to approximately $378 million. Compared to that, in the year 1970 alone Canada's share was $40 million.

In 1967 Canada's quota for assessed share of capital in the International Monetary Fund was increased to about $45 million, and the Canadian subscription to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development now totals some $860 million.

I shall not undertake to single out any of the numerous specialized agencies with which it is necessary for the Canadian permanent mission to deal. It is more than evident from even a surface study of the United Nations that Canada's participation has been constant and deeply active with respect to all of these agencies from their very inception.

The United Nations now comprises 131 member countries. There are only a few nations which have not yet become members, and they include East and West Germany, North and South Korea, North and South Vietnam and, because of internal political divisions, Taiwan, Switzerland, and Rhodesia. From the news we have heard recently it appears likely that Rhodesia will be joining the U.N. very soon. Thus, with the exception of the countries I have just mentioned, all of the world's nations are represented in the United Nations.

On terminating his term of office as Secretary General of the United Nations, U Thant presented his final annual report. In the speech he delivered at the opening of the 26th Session of the General Assembly, U Thant made this important remark:

> I have never been so convinced as now of the usefulness, the potential, and the absolute necessity of the United Nations. The Organization is evolving, as all vital institutions must evolve, through a process of trial and error, towards a goal and an ideal that all can accept. It is customary now for radicals to join with reactionaries in condemning the United Nations as an ineffective, outmoded and hypocritical instrument for peace and justice. What they would be able to put in its place is not clear. I, too, like most of the member governments, am critical of much that goes on in this house. But I am convinced that the institution itself is sound, and that it can, must, and will be made to work.

U Thant, on the same occasion, also said:

> I am convinced more than ever that it is a dangerous illusion to believe, in the present state of the world, that life can be safe without that concept and without a world organization that embodies it. Much of the usefulness of the United Nations is unknown and, indeed, intangible. But, however faulty, it represents an aspiration and a method of trying to realize a great ideal.

Canada's participation at the United Nations has the highest humanitarian objectives. We have a right to be proud of the Canadian participation, even though it is not in all cases possible to give justice the worldwide dimensions we believe it should have.

[Hon. Mr. Desruisseaux.]

What I have seen, as your observer at the United Nations, I have liked. The Canadian representatives on the Permanent Mission are to be commended for their intelligent work there. Their high calibre has proven their full worth.

The United Nations respects Canada and its representatives, for the goals of peace, good will, and brotherly help they have set for all to see and follow. It was with pride and satisfaction that I saw the Canadian Mission in action. Their highly productive work is building the best relationships with the nations of the earth.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, this inquiry is now to be considered as having been debated.

PARLIAMENT HILL

SNOW REMOVAL FROM SIDEWALKS—QUESTION

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I wish to put a question on housekeeping to the Leader of the Government. I call his attention to the fact that with the arrival of winter there are indications we are going to suffer the same inconvenience as we did last year in coming up the Hill. His colleague, the Minister of Public Works, or the Chairman of the National Capital Commission, did not find it necessary to plough the sidewalks on the Hill.

During last winter we had the difficulty, when arriving here on foot, of wading up to our knees in snow. Last year it was considered unnecessary to plough near the fence to keep clear the pathway made famous by Mackenzie King. When we are diverted to the roadway, we find that cars parked at the back of the East Block force us into the slush.

I ask the leader to take into consideration the plight of members of this house and the other house, and to see what can be done.

Hon. Mr. Martin: It would be impossible to resist any request by Senator Molson. I will look into the matter.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I say I accompanied the honourable Senator Molson up the Hill today. Inquiries have already been made about the possibility of the sidewalks being cleaned throughout the winter. I can assure the honourable Senator Molson that the Leader of the Government can rely on my co-operation in order that this problem will be solved.

COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN UNITED KINGDOM AND RHODESIA—SANCTIONS AGAINST RHODESIA—QUESTIONS

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if the Government of Canada has yet received any word from Britain's Foreign Secretary on the results of the negotiations—about which we were not consulted or even informed—regarding which I understand a statement was to be made today in the British House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Honourable senators, I anticipated this question. All I can say is that the Government has received, during the last hour or so, details of the proposed settlement between the British Government and Rhodesia. I have not had an opportunity to read the proposed settlement. Consequently, I am not in the position to comment on it. I have just been advised that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is now in the process of examining the terms of settlement.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: Honourable senators, may I ask a supplementary question? We were told, because of the sanctions taken against Rhodesia, that that country would be brought to its knees within three weeks. This has not occurred. My question is: If Rhodesia has not acceded to the five principles laid down by Britain in the first place, and if only a compromise has been reached—which according to press reports has resulted in a complete victory for Rhodesia—will the Government of Canada continue the sanctions it has been carrying on against Rhodesia?

Hon. Mr. Martin: Honourable senators, until such time as we have seen the terms of the statement, it would be most imprudent to comment. As I am a very prudent man, I propose to wait until I know the terms of the statement.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: Honourable senators, will the honourable gentleman be also prudent enough to read the statement made in the Rhodesian Parliament, or will he accept merely what Mr. Arnold Smith says has happened, or what Sir Alec Douglas-Home says has happened?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I do not know that Mr. Arnold Smith has anything to do with this matter. This matter involved an agreement between Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom and the Government of Rhodesia. I undertake to read the statement made by both Mr. Ian Smith and by the British Foreign Secretary. I am sure that will be done also by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I believe Mr. Sharp will be seeing the Minister of State, Mr. Godber, who is coming to discuss this matter with him tomorrow or Saturday.

As soon as there has been an opportunity of reading the document, the Government certainly will come to its conclusions.

NATIONAL FINANCE

CONSIDERATION OF COMMITTEE REPORT—DEBATE POSTPONED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance entitled: "Growth, Employment and Price Stability".

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, while this debate stands adjourned in my name, might I suggest to honourable senators that it would be more appropriate if Senator Buckwold were to speak at this time as I understand he is prepared to contribute to the debate in my place.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, as I rise to address this house for the first time, I should like to take this opportunity of expressing my very sincere appreciation to all my honourable colleagues in the Senate for making me feel comfortable here so quickly, and for extending to me the warm hand of friendship as I entered this chamber. For this I shall be eternally grateful, and I hope that I shall be able to contribute to the work of this house. I should also like to thank my longtime friends who escorted me into the chamber, Senator Martin and Senator Croll, two distinguished gentlemen. It was a great privilege for me to have them introduce me to the house. They took me gently but firmly down the aisle and got me safely ensconced in this seat in this chamber.

Honourable senators, I should like to contribute to the discussion on the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance entitled "Growth, Employment and Price Stability". I think all of us and the Canadian public in general have received this report with enthusiasm, and regard it as being the result of a job well done. However, I should like to discuss from my own particular point of view that part of the report dealing with price and income stability, because I feel that conditions have somewhat changed in the last few days as a result of American actions. I must also say that I feel rather strongly that consideration should and must eventually be given to some form of price and income regulation in Canada.

Inflation is still a very serious problem in this country, and I agree that fiscal and taxation policies and exchange rate policies and the various recommendations of the committee will certainly be significantly impressive in meeting the long-term problems of inflation. On the other hand, I feel that the committee has perhaps passed over a little too lightly the contribution made by the Prices and Incomes Commission and the effect it has had on the future of that particular body. Of all the bodies in Canada this is the one that has had the least honour although it was worked very hard to bring about controls on a voluntary basis to combat the inflation, the price and wage spiral, facing Canada. As I say, it tried to bring it about on a voluntary basis, but I do not think that we could in any way say it has been successful in so far as its acceptance by the various bodies in Canada is concerned, and here I include labour, management and perhaps the general public.

It did have some success in bringing about—and here I admit it is certainly not all the result of their particular activities—a very low rate of price increase in 1970, about 1½ per cent. This is the result of many other extraneous situations and positions, but I would point out that this low rate in 1970 did not significantly hold back the request for wage increases in 1971. The average contract negotiated in Canada this year is just about the same as it was in 1970; we see approximately 8 per cent as the average increase to our labour friends. I am not in any way suggesting that it was not deserved, but I realize that the pressure for higher prices is continuing, and the temporary lapse that took place in 1970 has certainly exploded since then and we are back on the old merry-go-round of higher and higher prices.

It was my privilege to serve for some years as a member of the National Productivity Council, and honourable senators on the other side will understand that I was very proud to have been appointed by the then Prime Minister, the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker. This council was the forerunner of the present Economic Council of Canada. As a result of the discussions in that council concerning the competitive position of Canada's industries, and also as a result of my exposure to the experts and professionals who appeared before that council and the cross-Canada meetings it entailed, I came to realize that part of our problem was a lack of competitiveness, a lack of ability to compete on the part of Canadian industry.

In my view this situation has not been adequately dealt with in the report now before you, and yet I think that we see more and more clearly that one of the causes of unemployment is the fact that in foreign markets Canadian products have become less and less competitive as a result of the inflationary spiral here. It is not that our products are not up to the standard of those produced by other countries, but in many instances we cannot export because our prices have become higher than those for similar products exported by other countries. We have only to look at the Polymer Corporation to see what can happen when we price ourselves out of competition. In years gone by we were able to compete despite an inflationary spiral because we had technological superiority. But those days have long since gone. Our friends in other countries are now just as technically competent as we are, and in some cases even more so. We have settled down now to a completely different global trading pattern, and I suggest since trade is the key to employment, our competitive position plays a very important part.

Coming now to the report itself, honourable senators, I should like to draw to your attention the last sentence on page xiii:

> Controls are one of the least desirable of all economic price stabilization tools. If they are used at all in peacetime it should be on a short-term emergency basis.

Then at page xiv, paragraph 3 states:

> 3. We recommend that the Prices and Incomes Commission identify and focus the glare of public attention on situations where price or wage increases occur that are out of line by any reasonable standards. When the structural flaws or other special circumstances have been uncovered that permitted groups to hurdle the barriers of normal market restraint there should be action to keep increases within more acceptable boundaries.

But in my view it really is not sufficient to say to the Prices and Incomes Commission, "You are the watchdog of what goes on in management, industry and labour, and you growl when something doesn't please the Canadian public."

• (1510)

I feel the commission has a more important role to play. We are witnessing the actions of the Americans in moving into phase two of their price income control. When you read the evidence that Dr. John H. Young, Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, presented to the committee, along with the commission's submission, it is obvious that very intelligent questions were asked by members of the committee. It was apparent they were reluctant to move into what seemed to be the bureaucracy of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board. I do not blame them, and I am sure the Canadian public would not want to see this kind of government action taken to control prices and income. Time and time again the experts indicated this would not work. Dr. Gillies, the Committee's Study Director, brought this out in the following question he put to Dr. Young:

> Many of the witnesses have said flatly that price and wage controls will not work. John Crispo said that there was no way the labour force would accept this, even if the leaders did agree. What do you feel about these observations?

Dr. Young replied as follows:

> First, I feel that if they were true, it would be very unpleasant. Look where it would leave us. We would have no solution. But we are not prepared to accept that this is a no-solution situation. The public of this country are going to have to understand how narrow the choices are and how difficult the problem is. Then you are going to have to ask the question whether, if the public can understand that, they are going to take the view that it is impossible to deal with the problem in this way. If we get that degree of public support, then we can do it.

The final paragraph of the commission's statement to the National Finance Committee reads:

> Given the intractability of the high employment-price stability dilemma and the limited scope for resolving it quickly or easily by other means, the Commission is of the view that an effective and acceptable form of prices and incomes policy in Canada, though by no means costless in economic terms, could serve as a useful supplement to other policies, that it should not be impossible to devise such a policy, and that further effort and innovation in this direction would be justified.

Dr. Young probably pinpointed the problem when he said it will not work until the Canadian public is prepared to accept it. Honourable senators, I would like to suggest that the Canadian public is coming round to this point of view, even as the American public has had to.

In an article in the Christian Science Monitor, a non-political source, one columnist writes:

> The wage-price freeze got a tremendously positive reception by the public.

He is referring to the American public.

> We were all tired of inflation, tired of the seemingly slow progress being made to bring the inflation rate down, and welcomed bold and drastic action.

I feel the Canadian public is reaching this stage, and I believe it is our responsibility to inform the Canadian public about the importance of this action.

Phase two is in effect in the United States, and we see the bold and imaginative program which has been brought about. Many people say it will not work. These are the same people who said phase one would not work. The United States has a program, but I am not suggesting that Canada should follow that program in detail. The United States program allows for prices to rise only to the extent that they reflect actual increases in costs, minus any rise in worker productivity, and even then only if the price increases do not contribute to higher profit margins.

An editorial in the New York Times of November 14, under the heading "Start of Phase Two", reads:

> The fight against inflation turns a crucial corner today, with the economy coming out of the ice box into the even more agonizing challenge of comprehensive federal regulation of wages, prices, profit margins, corporate dividends and rents.
>
> No businessman, no landlord and no worker relishes the prospect of living under controls, but in a real sense there can be neither general prosperity nor security for American living standards unless brakes are put on the runaway wage-price spiral . . . .
> The two boards created to establish basic guideposts for controlling wages and prices have addressed themselves responsibly to the necessity for coupling fairness with firmness in the new standards. The Price Commission's goal is to hold the economy-wide increase in prices to 2.5 per cent a year. The companion standard for the Pay Board is a ceiling of 5.5 per cent on new increases in wages and fringe benefits—a figure tailored to fit inside the guidepost for higher prices through allowance for the normal long-term expansion of 3 per cent a year in industrial productivity.

Honourable senators, I suggest we watch this American experience very closely. I also suggest that we cannot follow the guidelines established in the report of our committee by putting out of our minds the importance of price income control through some form of government action. I feel that our role is to inform the Canadian public of the importance of this action. Although we have the problem of organized labour, I believe it can be done.

I would like to quote from a speech Senator Lawson made in this house on November 17. He said:

> Honourable senators, it came as a complete surprise to me that the unanimous decision of the delegates there assembled,—

He was referring to the labour conference which he attended in the United States.

> —representing 600,000 American workers, decided to work with the Nixon administration on phase two of the wage and price controls. Whether this attitude will continue is still to be determined because it involves many questions, including the sanctity of contracts. However, as I say, the conference decided to go along with this.

Already there are problems with Mr. Meany and the President. But I feel the American people will respond to this challenge just as I feel the Canadian people will respond. I feel we should watch the American program, and quite possibly we should attempt to duplicate it in some form to achieve price and income security which will bring our economy back into balance and minimize the nightmare of high inflation which could seriously affect the Canadian way of life.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Honourable senators, I move that the debate be postponed until the next sitting of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Until I come to a ruling on a point raised by honourable Senator Grosart at the commencement of the sitting, I feel I should put this motion as we have done so in the past. It is moved by the honourable Senator Grosart, seconded by the honourable Senator O'Leary, that this debate be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

• (1520)

Hon. Mr. Grosart: With respect, Your Honour, that was not my motion. I suggest regardless of any ruling Your Honour may wish to make on consideration, that the motion I have put is proper and can be considered by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Smith: Let us take a vote on that now.

The Hon. the Speaker: May I ask the honourable Senator Grosart if he is moving that this debate be postponed? That is the exact word he used.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Your Honour, that was my motion: "Postponed until the next sitting of the Senate."

The Hon. the Speaker: Again I will put this motion, reserving, of course, the ruling which I may come to after examining the points that have been raised.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Before you put the motion, Your Honour, Senator Cook reminds me that we should give consideration to the clear directions contained in Rule 46. I am surprised that Senator Grosart, who generally does not overlook these points, did not have the quick perception to notice the implication of Rule 46, as did Senator Cook. In this regard I am in the same position as Senator Grosart.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Perhaps the Leader of the Government also made the error of not listening to what I said. In my earlier remarks I referred specifically to Rule 46(c) as one of the authorities for the position I took. Rule 46(c) provides:

> No notice is required of the following motions: (c) for its postponement to a certain day;

Hon. Mr. Martin: I have given Senator Grosart an opportunity to repeat what he said.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I did not quite catch what the Leader of the Government said, but I presume he may have referred to Rule 46(h) which provides that no notice is required "for the adjournment of the debate;".

Hon. Mr. Martin: That is right; that is the point.

Hon. Mr. Smith: That is the motion which has always been made.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, with the reservations I have already indicated, I will put the motion as it was phrased by Senator Grosart. Next week, of course, this matter will be cleared up.

It is moved by the honourable Senator Grosart, seconded by the honourable Senator O'Leary, that this debate be postponed until the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

POVERTY

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE POSTPONED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, November 17, consideration of the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty in Canada, tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, November 10, 1971.

Hon. Eric Cook: Honourable senators, I would like to take this opportunity to say a word of welcome to our new colleagues. I have known Senator Goldenberg for some 20 years and am sure he will make a very worthwhile contribution to the Senate. His wide knowledge of the Constitution, labour laws and economics, together with his great experience, will make his voice one of authority in our deliberations.

I have known Senator Buckwold also, but only for a very short period. Having had a little experience myself in municipal government, in a junior capacity, I am aware of how valuable his knowledge in this field will be to his fellow senators. Indeed, we have this afternoon already heard a most interesting and informative speech by Senator Buckwold.

I have not had the advantage of knowing the other distinguished newcomers to our chamber. I feel sure that they will be a great asset to the Senate, and we all look forward to their taking part in the work of this house.

Honourable senators, I hesitated before deciding to take part in this debate. Considering the five million words of evidence, the report itself, the comments of the media and the speeches of honourable senators who have spoken before me, surely nothing has been left unsaid or unwritten. However, I am a member of the committee and as I agree in general with the contents of the report, at least I should say so.

I am very glad to be a member of the committee and I am happy now to pay tribute to Senator Croll in particular for the tremendous amount of dedicated work he did and the outstanding leadership he gave. Other members also worked hard and long, particularly Senator Carter, to whom we also owe a debt of gratitude. This is all the more so because towards the end he acted as deputy chairman due to the very regrettable illness of our good colleague, Senator Edgar Fournier. While he was with us, Senator Fournier made a very worthwhile contribution. He displayed his usual good sense and wide knowledge, not only of his own province, but of the whole Atlantic region.

Mention must be made of the three lady senators, particularly Senator Fergusson, who has special knowledge because of her career in public service before she was called to the Senate. I am sure it was not always easy for the lady senators to be such faithful attendants at our sessions, not only in Ottawa but throughout the country, but I can assure the Senate that the report is a better one because of their membership on the committee. In any case, our meetings were made more pleasant because of their presence.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

I do not intend to spend any time on what may be referred to as the emotional or sentimental aspect of poverty. There has been more than enough said already regarding appeals to our sympathy, our hearts and our conscience. Words will help little in mitigating the evils endured by the poor. Really, there should be no need to debate further the evils and existence of poverty. Nor is there any great advantage in debating the evils of urban as contrasted to rural poverty. Either type is more or less hell on earth. I would stress that it is particularly hell for the young and the old and the sick who are helpless. It is not so bad for the able-bodied, particularly the irresponsible able-bodied, but it is always the helpless who suffer the most.

It is no doubt true that we will always have poverty with us but, like everything else, there are degrees of need. There is no absolute permanent solution, but we have no alternative except to continue the battle so that as far as possible it becomes less and less detestable. Even if we could give every man, woman or child twice the amount proposed by the report, there still would be poverty. For instance, many people have no ability whatsoever to handle money. Money will go twice, three and four times as far with some people as it will with others. So money alone will not make everyone equal.

As the report makes clear, it will always be necessary to provide services for those who so badly require them. The evidence given to the committee by men and women of good will, and by voluntary groups, illustrates not only the good they do but the very real need for their services. There will always be a demand for the helping hand to guide and to counsel, and above all to listen—as, indeed, your committee listened to all who did us the courtesy of attending before us and submitting their views.

The fact that there is no absolute solution to poverty now or in the future does not excuse us from doing whatever can be done to lessen its effects. It is no answer to say that the poor will be with us always, or to say that people in Asia, Africa and South America are worse off, or to throw up our hands and say that the problem cannot be solved. If it cannot be completely solved, it can at least be improved upon. Indeed, all one need do is compare the social system today with that of the 1870s to see that it has been improved since then. But surely we have not reached the ultimate. It is therefore our duty to consider what steps should be taken so that the advances already made may be continued, and 2071 may be as far ahead of 1971 as 1971 is ahead of 1871. The real question, therefore, is not can the problem be solved but are we now doing all we can to solve it as far as it can be solved?

I have to say that I do not go all the way with the report's reference to the present system. I say this, although I read every word of the references while the report was being written, and did not object. I agreed with the comments simply because they were, of course, the words of an advocate pleading a cause. Any advocate worth his salt has to use colourful language and sometimes overstate his position, otherwise he might not get the point across.

The present system is not all that bad. One only has to think of what it would be like for some four million Canadians if old age pensions, family allowances and the like were suddenly stopped. Let us think what would happen to farms, factories, shops, and employment generally, if the transfer payments were to cease. I will have more to say about this point later.

Many of the comments contained in the report are, of course, absolutely correct, but it is only fair to say that everything can be improved. No system is completely fair. Parliament is now spending a great deal of time revising the income tax system. There is nothing more sure than the fact that the revised income tax law will contain inequalities. Equally, there is nothing more sure than the fact that there will be taxpayers who will cheat the revenue department, as there will be welfare persons who will cheat the welfare system. The only difference is that the revenue department suffers more when a taxpayer cheats than the welfare system suffers when a welfare applicant cheats.

The biggest single fault with the present system is that it stifles any possible incentive. A short time ago the Prime Minister was reported in the press as insisting that:

> All Canadians unemployed could find themselves short-term jobs if they were willing to do work which did not answer precisely to their hopes.

It may well be true that there are many short-term jobs available. If so, the real reason people do not accept them is twofold. The first is that under the present system they and their families may be as well off in the long run on welfare. The second reason, and perhaps more important one, is that if they go off welfare to take a short-term job, they fear that before too long they will again have to go on welfare, having first to re-apply for their benefits, and so on. They have to suffer the delays and frustrations to which Senator Sparrow referred in his remarks yesterday.

The report makes many worthwhile recommendations, the most important being a guaranteed annual income. I suggest that in many cases the only thing new is the use of the word «guaranteed». Canada already provides an annual income for many citizens, including the aged, handicapped, and the young. Indeed, the system goes further and aids many who are not deserving of aid.

It should be stressed that most, if not all, of those who are able to work but will not work are now receiving an annual income. To those concerned citizens who fear that people will refuse to work if they receive a guaranteed annual income, I would point out that today no one is allowed to starve. The result is that the chronically lazy person who is able to work but does not do so is at this very moment receiving through his welfare payments a guaranteed annual income. His position will not change, and there is nothing we can do with these irresponsible, selfish men and women except to let them starve. However, it is not they who would starve, but rather their dependents.

Fortunately, such people are few in number, just as tax evaders are few in number. Therefore, let us forget about them, as they serve only to confuse our thinking and colour our views. Comparatively few persons are successful in exploiting the rest of the nation, so this should not prevent us from doing what should be done for those who deserve well by us. What cannot be cured must be endured. It is clear, therefore, that in many instances we have already established a guaranteed annual income in principle. We have it in the case of old age pensions and family allowances, even where there is no need for them.

It has become obvious that we cannot afford welfare payments unless real need exists, and therefore family allowances and old age payments must cease wherever those receiving the payments have no absolute need for them.

As we have already accepted the principle of annual income payments, the only question remaining is whether we can extend the system into one of a guaranteed annual income along the lines recommended in the report. I suggest that where there is a will there is a way.

Canada has no problem with production. She can produce more from her farms and factories than we are presently consuming. But to some degree we still have the problem of underconsumption. If a way could be found to boost consumption it would help us sell what we now produce.

I can remember when family allowance payments were being considered. At that time Newfoundland was not part of Canada. I recall a very important and knowledgeable Canadian businessman speaking to the Newfoundland Board of Trade, telling us what an outrage the proposed family allowances would be. He indicated that Canada would be in danger of national bankruptcy. As I have already said, I wonder what the effect on farms, factories, shops, and employment generally would be if the family allowance and other transfer payments were stopped.

I suggest that the effect of stopping the present payments would be a national economic disaster. I wonder what would be the effect of increasing them. Might it not be beneficial to the economy as well as to those receiving them?

What would be the real cost of adopting the main recommendation in the report? Let us examine the situation from a hard-headed business or economic point of view. In doing so, let us think back to the time when many sensible people thought Henry Ford was insane and laughed at him when he paid his workmen $5 a day. However, Henry Ford had the last laugh when he visited his bank and looked at his savings.

The cost of approximately $1 billion to have a guaranteed annual income system is, of course, the gross dollar cost. But let us look at the other side of the coin to see if there is any recovery or savings in estimating the real net cost to the country. First and foremost, about 30 per cent of this amount would be recovered in taxes. It is true that the federal Government would not receive all the amount paid in taxes, but that is an item that might be adjusted and allowed for between the several levels of government.

Also to be considered would be the additional employment created by putting $1 billion in extra purchasing power in the hands of the consuming public. The sale of goods and services totalling $1 billion would surely have a very beneficial effect on production and employment and, in turn, generate a very large tax revenue. There would also be a marked saving in the annual cost of sickness.

A few brief highlights from the history of the fight against tuberculosis in Newfoundland will indicate how great can be the cost of sickness. I am confining myself to Newfoundland because the facts applicable to that province are better known to me. I am told that other provinces have had more or less the same experience, but to a lesser degree. In 1907 the death rate in Newfoundland and Labrador resulting from tuberculosis was 801, or 343 per 100,000 of population. There were no hospital beds for the treatment of this disease, the first unit being established in 1910, with six beds for consumptive women.

Nearly 40 years later, in 1945, the death rate had fallen to 500 per annum, or about 140 per 100,000, although there was one large sanatorium of some 500 beds. In that year a team of tuberculosis experts from England made an independent investigation of the problem in Newfoundland.

Their report was published in May 1946, and they made the following observations with respect to the standard of living:

> Generally speaking, the great majority of the Islanders prior to the war were subject to marked poverty. One-third of the population at one period (1933-1937) were on public relief. While the war is said to have brought "prosperity", we regard this phenomenon in so far as it has affected the mass of the inhabitants as little more than a reduction of the poverty to a more tolerable level, with the elimination of the able-bodied relief roll. Nevertheless, this improvement has coincided with a downward turn of the tuberculosis mortality curve, as measured from year to year. Should a post-war economic recession occur, there is reason to fear a reversal of this favourable trend and that the tuberculosis death rate may rise.

The English doctors went on to say:

> The food allowance that a tuberculosis patient usually received in St. John's was found to consist of one pint of milk daily and a dozen eggs weekly, that is to say, to the value of about $8.00 a month. Outside St. John's, up to $7.50 worth of food was allowed.

This independent investigation took place in 1944, five years before Newfoundland became part of Canada. In that year the tuberculosis death rate was 500 or some 140 per 100,000 of population.

I quote now from the report of Dr. N. H. Wass of Corner Brook, dated March, 1971.

> In 1951, a modern fully-equipped sanatorium of 270 beds was opened in Corner Brook.

This was two years after union with Canada, and gave Newfoundland some 700 beds for the treatment of tuberculosis. I quote again from what Dr. Wass said in his report:

> For the first four or five years of its existence the sanatorium was full, indeed it was impossible to find beds for the very old and for children. After this, as everyone knows, came the almost precipitous decline in the number of cases diagnosed. Firstly, it became possible to admit elderly cases, secondly, we were able to open a floor for the treatment of childhood tuberculosis. The decline went on until we were able to hand over one hundred beds to be used as general medical beds and finally in November 1964 it was decided to phase out the sanatorium altogether.

Note the dates. In 1951, two years after union with Canada, there was a new 270 bed sanatorium. Four or five years later, in 1955 or 1956, there was an almost precipitous decline in the number of cases. In 1964, 15 years after union with Canada, the sanatorium was closed altogether. The number of deaths from tuberculosis in 1944 was 500, or about 140 per 100,000; in 1971 it was 10, or two per 100,000.

If the incidence of tuberculosis had remained what it was in 1944, the cost today of maintaining hospital buildings, supplies, and staff, and of supporting the patients and their families would be a staggering sum. The successful battle against tuberculosis has resulted in the saving of many millions of dollars each year. The same is true of all Canada, although perhaps not in the same proportion as in Newfoundland.

This same financial benefit will also be reflected in some degree in the case of all types of sickness which will be avoided or be of shorter duration as the general standard of living of the nation as a whole is improved. You cannot tell me that poverty does not exact a terrible penalty in increased and costly sickness.

Increased crime also stems from poverty. I am sure that substantial sums would be saved in connection with all aspects of crime prevention and the detention of wrongdoers if the burden of poverty could be lessened.

Honourable senators, the budget of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion runs to over $300 million per year. The department seeks to do all that it is possible to do to create new jobs in special areas of Canada. To do this it offers generous grants to projects which create jobs. To my way of thinking there should be no need to provide these grants. If a proposed project in a special area can be viable only because of the incentive grant the project receives, then more than likely it is not in fact viable at all. Indeed, instead of giving permanent employment it could prove to be a serious liability after it does get started. On the other hand, I am well aware of the difficulty of obtaining long-term loan capital at reasonable rates of interest for small- and medium-sized businesses located in special areas. Therefore, if the federal Government, instead of giving these generous grants, provided guarantees to the financial institutions which would make available long-term loans at a reasonable rate of interest, this should be sufficient to allow any reasonable viable project to start up or an existing one to expand. A greater proportion of the department's annual budget would then be available for other purposes. The long-range purpose of the incentive grant is to assist projects which create jobs for people residing in the special area.

I believe this indirect way of helping people is not as effective as giving people the money directly. They would spend it, thus creating more jobs in the area with all the benefits flowing therefrom. At the same time, in cases where projects cannot start or be expanded because of non-availability of capital, the department can help by guaranteeing loan capital instead of giving grants.

To sum up, therefore, the real cost to the country of funding annual amounts of $1 billion to finance a guaranteed annual income will not be too great if we credit to the cost of the plan the following:

1. The increase of taxes arising directly from spending this amount;

2. The benefits of the increased employment created by spending this amount—benefits with the consequent increased tax revenue flowing from the increased employed;

3. The savings in the cost of sickness;

4. The savings in the cost of crime;

5. The savings that can be made in the budget of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, by amending the thrust of the department's aid to special areas.

Honourable senators, at the outset of the committee hearings I was definitely opposed to the idea of a guaranteed annual income. However, as the work of the committee proceeded I became a convert to the proposal. Now I feel it might be good business to adopt the guaranteed annual income scheme, and, as I said before, where there is a will there is a way.

I urge the Government to listen to the voice of the poor. They make up the largest single group in Canada, there are over four million of them and they have the greatest need. The principle of the state providing for all an annual income should be accepted now and should be given top priority. Canada already provides for many of her citizens, those who are unable to earn a living because of age or because they are handicapped. Indeed, Canada now does much but it can still do more.

I do not suggest that the report of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty is the last ultimate unalterable word on what is the poverty line, how much the annual income should be, how much it is going to cost, or when and how it should be introduced. These are all questions which may or may not require further study. I do urge, however, that the Government should accept the recommendations in principle, and, if these questions do require further study, I urge the Government to undertake these studies now so that the policy of providing an annual income to all citizens of Canada may become a reality before too long.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, on behalf of Hon. Mrs. Quart, I move that further discussion on this motion be postponed until the next sitting of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: I must remind honourable senators that my ruling on this question might be given some time next week.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, for Hon. Mrs. Quart, debate postponed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 30, 1971, at 8 p.m.

GREY CUP

NATIONAL FOOTBALL FINAL IN VANCOUVER

Hon. Harry Hays: Honourable senators, I would like to draw to the attention of this house that on Sunday last there was a football game played in Vancouver. I should like to acquaint the members from a village between Hamilton and Thunder Bay that on page 16 of one of their daily newspapers they will find the results. We wish them good heart in the future.

The Hon. the Speaker: May I draw to the attention of honourable senators who might be fans of the Toronto Argonauts that they have a right to speak on this question of privilege.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: But I would not suggest that the fans of the Montreal Alouettes do.

COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

PROPOSALS FOR AGREEMENT BETWEEN UNITED KINGDOM AND RHODESIA—QUESTION

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if it would be possible to make the text of the agreement entered into between the United Kingdom and Rhodesia available to members of this house.

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, Senator O'Leary was kind enough to speak to me earlier regarding this matter. There is, of course, no agreement. The document in question is referred to as Proposals for Agreement. I will take steps to see that it is made available in due course.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: Thank you.

NATIONAL FINANCE

The Senate resumed from Thursday, November 25, consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance entitled: "Growth, Employment and Price Stability".

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I take this opportunity to participate in the debate on the motion for consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, the steering committee of which I have the privilege to be a member. I do so, first of all, to join in the tributes that have been paid to the chairman of the committee, Senator Everett, both here and in the national press.

Senator Everett not only conceived and initiated this important project dealing with the dilemma which concerns our and other governments in relation to the high rate of unemployment and stability of prices, but he carried it through with a degree of efficiency and, if I may say, of expedition which in some aspects is unprecedented in the history of our committees. The first hearings of the committee were held in May and the report is now before the Senate, in November.

It has been my experience in Senate committees that one of the keys to the success of a committee is the respect in which the chairman and his staff are held by eminent witnesses. We had them in profusion before this committee.

Senator Everett has already paid special tribute to Professor James Gillies and his associates on the staff. On this occasion I add my tribute, because I was familiar with the long hours they put in and the expertise they brought to the planning of the hearings and the preparation of the report. I wish to point out that the respect of eminent witnesses was a prevailing condition throughout our hearings.

Senator Everett in his statement when tabling the report gave us an excellent summary of it. In his opening words—and in my view this is the pith of the whole report—he said:

• (2010)

> The report is about economic stabilization, which is a branch of government policy which attempts to hold the economy close to its potential growth path while keeping down unemployment and inflation. The main theme of the report is that in a growing economy the war against inflation and unemployment is a long one, which will be fought successfully if people realize this fact.
> The main weapons in this war are the demand levers of monetary, fiscal and exchange rate policy. The problem is that these levers suffer from what economists call lags,

One of the main distinctions of the report is that it makes clear policy recommendations for dealing with this problem. It rejects the concept of fine tuning; that is, of quick ad hoc responses to changes in the economy. It rejects the concept of stop-go economic planning on behalf of the Government.

The report deals with the very special problem, which all honourable senators are aware of from their own experience, of extreme pressure on any government to make immediate responses of some kind to satisfy public opinion, of internal and external pressures on the Government.

The report suggests throughout that one of the answers to the problem is that governments today must have the intestinal fortitude to resist those pressures and must plan on a long-term basis. On page 31 of the report it says:

> It may be observed that while parliamentary oppositions do indeed tend to look into the economic future and see dark things, they generally find themselves on better fighting ground when they can talk about how inflation or unemployment or both are demonstrably hurting Canadians now. This, especially when it is reinforced by objective evidence, and by friendly warnings from caucuses, constituency groups and individual members of the government party, is a kind of criticism that governments understandably feel keenly, and are strongly tempted to respond to by producing packages of measures that can be alleged to offer fast, fast relief to the economy. But the truth may be that rather little fast relief is actually available. Worse still, the relief nevertheless proffered may have adverse effects later on, when the economic situation has changed. Even knowing this, however, governments may be under too much political pressure not to make decisive-looking policy moves of some sort.
> There is here then a serious, compound problem. In part, it is a problem of economic analysis and a challenge to economic research. In part, it is a problem of the institutional structure of government decision-making. But in large part also, it is a political and public information problem, and much of its ultimate solution will have to take place on that front.

The report stresses throughout the consistent use of certain demand levers that are available to the Government. It synthesizes them by referring to them as monetary, fiscal and exchange rate policies. The report stresses, as the quotation which I have just read indicates, the essentiality today of openness in government policy decision-making.

Over and over again throughout the report—I will touch on this later when I refer to some of the press comments—there is emphasis on the fact that one of the real problems which have confronted economic policy decision-making on the part of the Government has been the tendency to do it in secret. Some of the recent indications of the dangers of that are the so-called leakages. It seems that within the hierarchy of the Public Service, and perhaps at higher levels, there is a reaction to this type of secrecy and a tendency to say "the public is entitled to know". Surely that must be the attitude of those who are leaking these confidential documents to the press. I can only speculate as to their reasons. I merely say that our report calls attention to the danger of too great an attempt to maintain secrecy in the policy decision-making of the Government.

The report is in favour of the floating exchange rate. It points out that this is perhaps necessary insulation against the carryover of conditions of inflation in the United States. The report comes down rather heavily in favour of monetary policy, endorsing the views by and large of those economists who are called "monetarists", although it does qualify to some extent the rather extreme views of the leaders of that school of economic thought.

As honourable senators are well aware, the report takes a rather dim view of controls—guidelines, wages and price controls, and income policies. Senator Buckwold, in his maiden speech, referred at some length to this aspect of the report. I say to Senator Buckwold that some of us who listened to him were delighted to hear him speak as he did. He obviously spoke from a background of rich experience, and his speech gave promise of a great contribution from that corner of the chamber in the future.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: However, I wonder if Senator Buckwold, in his plea for consideration of controls at the right time and place, might not have, to some extent at least, misunderstood some of the qualifications that the committee placed on its recommendations with respect to this important subject. The committee made it quite clear that it had examined not only the superficial popular aspects of wage and price controls, but the whole "family", to use Senator Everett's word, of suggested controls, namely, general controls, selective controls, the guidelines theory, economic policy, supply policy, structure policy, competition policy, and manpower policy. What the committee said was that income policies, hard general price control policies, are the least desirable of the alternatives before the Government. The committee did not say—and it had the American experience in mind at the time of the writing of the report—that it was against the introduction in Canada of those types of controls at any time. In fact, the committee recognized that if Phase 2 of the Nixon economic policy proves to be successful and fairly permanent, it might put Canada in a position of having to use some type of controls.

• (2020)

The committee made a clear distinction, which I think is an important distinction that should be made in any consideration of this subject, between what are generally thought of as income policy controls and wage and price "freezes." They pointed out that there could be a place for a sudden general freeze, such as has been invoked by President Nixon in the United States. In that case it was a 90-day freeze. We all know it had many objectives, and was supported by a large number of other measures. I think nobody would have the slightest doubt that it would be a complete failure without the support of those other measures, many of which are not available to us in Canada because of obvious differences in the two economies.

Senator Buckwold made an excellent point in drawing attention to the importance of export markets in any consideration of the future economic growth in Canada. However, he said that in his view this situation has not been adequately dealt with in the committee's report. I agree with him on that, but I point out that it was the committee's view that it was quite unnecessary to deal with it, because if there is any aspect of our economy that has not in any way contributed to this dilemma of high unemployment and price stability, it is our performance in the export markets.

The United States, for example, takes about 75 per cent of our exports at the present time. From 1965 to 1971 we have had this kind of performance. In 1965 we had a trade deficit with the United States of about $1 billion. By 1971 this had become a surplus of $1.15 billion, so it can scarcely be said that the export trade situation, taking the United States as a prime example, was a consideration with which the committee should have concerned itself very much. I say the United States is a prime example because if we look at our trade picture we see the closest to that 75 per cent, which may be a little high, is the 9 per cent of our total merchandise trade that goes to Britain, and the next closest is the something less than 5 per cent that goes to Japan.

In the services sector of the market, which is somewhat different from the trade sector, the same general pattern appears. In 1966, for example, we had a deficit in the services sector of $2 billion. By this year that has become a deficit of a mere $200 million, and perhaps by the end of the year there will be no deficit at all. There has been a switch of $2 billion in the services sector in four years, which is one of the reasons why our American friends found it necessary to take some action to protect their own interests in that respect. The services sector, of course, embraces such things as travel account, dividends, interest, freight and shipping charges, and other items that come under the general heading of services.

I followed the press comments on the committee report rather closely, and one particular recommendation that has scarcely been commented upon at all appeared to me to be one of the most important.

The committee considered the problem of the control of the economy between the private and the public sector. As honourable senators are well aware, at the present time the tax take of all levels of government in Canada is certainly 37 per cent, and probably a little more. This means that 37 per cent of the total gross national product is siphoned off by all governments for their own purposes, which are usually good purposes. If we add to that the additional product of GNP in dollar terms that comes under Government control—through loans, investments, advances, Crown corporations, and so on—it is entirely possible that something like 50 per cent of the entire product of the economy today is under government control, direct or indirect.

I remember asking Mr. Benson, when he was before the committee, whether the Government had made any studies of the significance of these figures. He said it had not. I suggested that this may be something which should be part of Government policy; that the Government should say there must be a danger line. After all this is the private sector, which is the goose that lays the golden eggs. How far can it be plucked? It still seems to me that that is the kind of thing the Government should be referring to its economists for some kind of guidance and direction.

The committee made some strong recommendations. I read from page 3 of the report:

> There must be constant vigilance to ensure that government concentrates its available administrative talent and other resources on those things which government really must do, and that the public sector of the economy is not further distended to cover things which could better be done by private enterprise.
> However, we think it wise to do as Dr. Beryl Sprinkel did in his testimony before us, and to treat the size of the government sector of the economy as a distinct and important issue in its own right, deserving of continuing attention regardless of whether or not inflation also happens to be a major problem at the time. Those who, in their concern to restrict excessive growth of the public sector, seize on the desirability of controlling inflation as the best available stick with which to beat the expansion of government spending, are apt to find their arguments considerably weakened at times when the total economy is obviously slack and requires stimulating. There is no need for them to suffer this embarrassment, or to be tempted into making more of the threat of future inflation than the evidence really warrants. Proper control of the size of the government sector is a valid, respectable concern and a subject for public debate at all times.

And later on the report suggests:

> —there should be a constant search for governmental activities ripe to be handed over to the private sector—

That seems to me to be almost a revolutionary recommendation. I have seen no evidence anywhere in Government today that there is this kind of inquiry, or any person, committee, or group charged with the task of overseeing the takeovers from the private sector to the public sector, and asking whether they are necessary; whether they make sense.

The committee recommends that we take a very hard look at this phenomenon of our times and find those areas—and there must be some—that could be turned back to the private sector. The private sector perhaps could handle them more efficiently than is normal in the handling of such affairs by the public sector.

• (2030)

It is an interesting fact that the report of the committee did not initially attain any sensational headlines, but as time has gone on it has been the subject of thoughtful comment and very serious consideration at many levels of financial thinking in Canada. I should at this time like to read to the chamber a few of the comments which have been made here and there and which honourable senators will find interesting. The Globe and Mail on November 25 said:

> The report was notable for its strong sense of realism, a long memory of past experience and, perhaps, a greater degree of conservatism than is appropriate in the present circumstances.

I am sure Senator Everett will be surprised to find that emphasis on the degree of conservatism in the report, but I hope honourable senators will excuse me if I state that I considered that as one of its best qualities.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Spelled with a small "c"?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: In this report it is a small "c"—probably a typographical error.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Today a small "c" means a big "C". You have gone so far away from the small "c" it is not recognizable.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I will not at the moment get into this rather interesting argument as to the relationship between the big "C" and small "c" and the big "L" and the small "l", because I do not want to confuse the party lines, now so finely drawn here, any more than is necessary.

The Toronto Star of November 18 drew attention rather interestingly to the fact that the Bank of Canada made an almost instant response to one of the recommendations of the committee. It pointed out that the committee had said:

> —that no one in Canada had yet attempted to publish a quarterly economic review of "the quality and usefulness of those turned out by the U.S. federal reserve system and the Bank of England.

Honourable senators, I have received permission to read a paragraph from a letter received by the chairman of the committee from the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Rasminsky, where in the final paragraph he says:

> By a curious coincidence, we have today put out a public statement (copy of which I enclose) which is in some sense directly responsive to one of your recommendations regarding the Bank.

So Senator Everett has the satisfaction of knowing that there has been what I might term an instant response to his report.

The Toronto Star of November 19, while it approved of the recommendation of the committee about a continued floating of the Canadian dollar, said:

> —but it doesn't explain how expansion laudably aimed at creating jobs is to be prevented from causing prices to rise by more than the 2 or 3 per cent a year that the report is prepared to live with.

This is reference to the fact that the committee had suggested that a reasonable target for bringing the present situation into some kind of line was 2 to 3 per cent inflation with 4½ per cent unemployment rate. The Star editorial went on to say:

> The committee does have ideas on how to fight inflation, but they seem more like a strategy for the long run in which we are all dead than measures that would be immediately and practically applicable to rising costs and prices.

I suppose the obvious comment is that the Star's enthusiasm for quick fast and immediate relief measures—quick doses of aspirin or bufferin—is undertandable, but the whole theme is that this is a chimera in that we are going to have to look to long-term, cautious consistent planning if we are to have the kind of uninterrupted growth of the economy that seems so necessary at the present time.

Quoting from the Star again, it refers to the committee's assertion:

> The Canadian economy can achieve its full potential growth and the goals of our society without recurrent bouts of unacceptable unemployment or inflation.

It appears to be contradicting the position it has taken elsewhere.

The Toronto Globe and Mail of November 19 had this to say:

> Maintaining a healthy economy is not a task that can be accomplished in academic ivory towers or the secret conclaves of cabinet and the Bank of Canada. These worthies have to take the rest of us into their confidence if they expect to get good results.
>
> If the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance can get this message through to our economic overlords, as the result of its report on Growth, Employment and Price Stability, it will have accomplished a good deal. It is a subject which the committee dwells upon.

The Globe and Mail also agrees with us when it says:

> The Government's three most powerful instruments for managing the economy—monetary, fiscal and exchange rate policies—"are subject to long time lags and therefore should not be used to produce instant solutions to instant problems. No effort should be spared to convey this truth to the public."

The Ottawa Citizen quotes a very significant passage from the report on the question of openness, which I have stressed as one of the important aspects of the recommendations. That passage reads:

> We believe that a new openness should be brought to the process of economic policy-making in Canada. This means that the direction of important government policies and the impact they have on the Canadian economy should be systematically estimated before and after the event. This means that Parliament and the public should be told more about these policy evaluations, and about the processes of economic decision-making.

After quoting this passage from the report, The Citizen goes on to comment:

> So runs the final recommendation of the Senate Finance Committee's Report on Growth, Employment and Price Stability published on Thursday.

[Hon. Mr. Grosart.]

Here is a further quote from the same article:

> It is a refreshing argument to hear amid the loud wailing and gnashing of teeth over the breach of security on the Gray report. The senators believe that more open policy-making would have practical benefits through better public understanding because an informed public can help the government achieve its policy goals, as an ignorant or confused public cannot.

The article goes on to quote this important passage from the report:

> We repeat that the public and their parliamentary representatives are mature and experienced enough to appreciate that economic policy-making is an ongoing learning process, subject to trial and error. The people have a right to be told more about this process because its outcome so greatly affects their jobs and living standards.

Commenting on that the Citizen says:

> The people have a right to be told—that is the central point. If they are not told, the press has more than a right, and obligation, to help them find out.

Honourable senators, as a member of the committee I take considerable pride in the work it has done, although my part in its activities and in its achievement was small.

By placing before our policy makers a very clear statement of the alternative to the consistent long-range planning that is recommended, Senator Everett put the situation rather well when he said in this chamber:

• (2040)

> On the one hand you have the failure to recognize that there is a trade-off, so you bounce back and forth between 3 per cent and 8 per cent unemployment and up to 5 per cent inflation and you have a stop-go, overly-reactive economy. On the other hand, you run the economy at full employment and you try to put on controls that either will not work or will destroy economic freedom—and maybe some other freedoms besides. We do not think our way is easy, but, honourable senators, we think it is the only way that we can run this economy and achieve the sort of goals and sort of results that the public wants.
> We think that, if we could cause the Government and the public to endorse the recommendations in this report, it would change the fabric of economic life in Canada.

Senate Hansard records that some honourable senators remarked "Hear, hear". I say "Encore" to this.

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, I shall not speak at any length on this subject.

The Senate is certainly not the Government of Canada, but the members of the Senate and a great many Canadians think it is a most important and essential part of the machinery that makes Government work. In my opinion, it does share the responsibility of helping to provide the best possible government along with the responsibility of helping to establish the best policies. The Senate places the final seal of approval on all proposed Canadian legislation.

Whatever reports are tabled by Senate committees in this chamber, and whatever parts the Senate chooses to approve, are the unbiased and non-political views of most members of the Senate. The arguments and debates carried on in the committees of the Senate and in this chamber are, in my view, meant to carry their whole meaning, their deepest implications, to the Government and to all Canadians. They are meant to convey the way honourable senators look at the problems, their conclusions, and the consequences they see for Canadian taxpayers in their "sober second look" at the legislation that is being assessed, and which is sometimes considered "avant gardiste". The performance of such duties—and let me say this without humility—is often recognized at some time or another as an expression of wisdom. This is one of our greater rewards, along with the satisfaction of serving Canada well and to the best of our ability, and in knowing that in so doing we carry out the task of safeguarding the rights of minorities, and the rights of the provinces.

The committees would be useless if, after their studies, they did not call the shots as they saw them. The report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on Growth, Employment and Price Stability is, in my judgment, very useful and helpful to the Government and to the Canadian people.

I congratulate the Chairman, the honourable Senator Everett, for initiating this important study. I congratulate also my other colleagues on the committee for their straightforward views which are based on the knowledge and judgment of some of the best economists in Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom, West Germany and other countries. The recommendations should clear the air and dissipate some of the propagated fallacies of our economic situation. They justify the fundamental review of some of our basic money policies in our common search for what is best. We can achieve full potential growth along with the goals of our society, without having to put on the brakes occasionally in fits of high unemployment.

The report recommends policies which are acceptable to the best economists as means of achieving a much better equilibrium. It is to be hoped that this will prevent the confusion we have been witnessing.

[Translation]

The committee has arrived at the conclusion that the three big levers of monetary, fiscal and exchange rate policies are the principal and necessary means for stabilizing our economy. Hence the committee has necessarily rejected the use of price and income controls as efficient means of stabilizing the Canadian economy. This conclusion has not been invented by the committee but is rather based on serious economic data submitted to our consideration by groups of prominent and recognized economists.

In the light of past experience the committee has questioned the merit and value of most political systems of income.

Thus the committee has realized that some systems were no good for us because they would involve, among other things, so many obstacles to the economic vitality that is necessary in Canada, and would threaten individual liberty in its conception and in its application.

The report shows in their true light all sorts of proposed economic theories. The study was based on the data submitted. The results were examined and analysed through the application of some economic principles that were advocated. All this contributed to the preparation of the recommendations that you now have before you.

I have already given unqualified support to the committee's recommendations, which I feel are very wise. I hope that now, after they have been dealt with here, they will also be analyzed, accepted and endorsed by the Economic Council of Canada.

Finally, I express the hope that the bilingual report will be distributed in all our universities concerned with our Canadian economy, among our labour unions, our manufacturing organizations and our Chambers of Commerce, in order to dispel clouds and doubts about our economic system and assist in conceiving and establishing the real Canadian policy most likely to contribute to our progress.

[English]

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Hear, hear.

Hon. Leopold Langlois: If no other honourable senator wishes to participate in this debate tonight, I move its adjournment.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Have we decided whether the word is "adjournment"?

On motion of Hon. Mr. Langlois, debate adjourned.

PAROLE SYSTEM

FIRST REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, November 25, the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Prowse, for the adoption of the first Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, when I moved that further discussion on this motion be postponed until this evening it was simply for the purpose of keeping it open, as some observations had been made that perhaps other senators would like to consider its implications during the weekend.

The first report actually consists of only two paragraphs, the first of which recommends that the committee have the power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purpose of the said examination. Now, that is a routine authority given to every committee investigating or studying any such subject.

The second part of the report is that the committee or subcommittee may adjourn from place to place inside or outside Canada for the purpose of carrying out such examination. Perhaps it was fear of the mention of inside or outside Canada which caused some senators to have doubts as to whether this should be passed. I do not consider that there is anything extraordinary in this recommendation. Actually, if the committee is to carry out the study in depth of the parole system in Canada which has been entrusted to it, such an authorization is necessary and I do commend it to the favourable consideration of the Senate.

Hon. L. P. Beaubien: Honourable senators, when we consider the question of parole in Canada, those who should be most interested and to whom we should first listen are representatives of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Secondly, we should consult at great length with members of the provincial police forces of the provinces which maintain such bodies. We should call for representations from chiefs of police of all large centres.

I am not aware of the record of the National Parole Board during the last three or four years, but I do know that the nation's crime record is completely shocking. Those who have the responsibility of enforcing the law must be consulted in any consideration of this subject. We should request the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to recommend the appointment of one of their experts to work with the committee.

As an illustration of what is going on, let me say that my car was stolen in April and in it were a few credit cards. I called one oil company an hour after the theft, but already approximately $600 had been charged on two cards alone. The insurance adjuster informed me that every dealer has a telephone number which connects him with a computer which indicates whether a card has been reported stolen. The dealer is perfectly safe in accepting the card after checking with the computer. However, if the computer indicates that the card has been reported stolen, the oil company will not honour it.

This was a practically brand new car and I asked how it could be that within one hour six tires and a considerable number of parts had been bought for it. I was informed that the thieves do not buy anything. They go to a dealer, give him the card and ask for $100 saying they will sign for $150. If the dealer will not do that, his pumps are soon smashed. Honourable senators, this is the sort of thing that is going on.

Think of all the murders committed in Montreal, not in robberies but in night club slayings and so on. Four policemen were shot in one week, but I am not referring to that type of crime. These gangs obtain a great deal of money by armed robberies. They pay no taxes and they have power of life and death over others. The crime situation in Canada has become almost out of hand. In my opinion the motion for this study comes at the right moment. We should examine this subject very thoroughly, keeping in mind that Senate committee reports have been excellent and that anything we do will be widely publicized. We should therefore ensure that we do a thorough job.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, a study of the parole system will have nothing to do with the type of situation referred to by my honourable friend. It has always been my opinion that a committee of the Senate should not confine itself to a study of the parole system. It should invite all chiefs of police in Canada to make representations as to amendments to the Criminal Code which will enable them to cope with the gangsters in this country.

• (2100)

That is the type of study the Senate should authorize. That is the kind of invitation that should be extended to all chiefs of detectives and chiefs of police, because we have heard such people say repeatedly over the radio and on television that today's gangsters are organized, and the powers of the police are restricted.

Unless and until the Senate decides to invite the chiefs of police to advise the committee on what can be done to help them combat the gangsters and their methods of operating, the parole system itself becomes a secondary matter. I think my honourable friend had in mind something along these lines, because a study of the parole system alone will not deal with the problems he has presented.

When examining the parole system we must be very careful not to make recommendations that would liberate the gangsters too early, because they will simply continue to do what they have done in the past. We must set up a committee to study all these problems.

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Honourable senators, without taking anything away from the deputy chairman's remarks when presenting this report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, I would say to Senator Beaubien that the problem he raised is one of those which should be discussed. In reply to Senator Choquette I say that the committee would make arrangements to have the Solicitor General and his staff, the National Parole Board and its staff, the police chiefs of Canada, and representatives of the John Howard Society and the Elizabeth Fry Society, appear before it. In addition, the committee is prepared to hear certain parolees.

The committee will deal with the parole system in all its aspects, from the point of view of the Solicitor General, the Parole Board, the Chiefs of Police, the Elizabeth Fry Society, and the John Howard Society. The loss of Senator Beaubien's car and credit cards could be the subject of another study.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, it was at my suggestion that the report was not considered at the last sitting but was deferred until this evening, because I wished time to give thought to the matters raised.

I agree with the deputy chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs that the subject is indeed a very important one. I agree also that it is very timely, and that there are few subjects in our sphere of activity that could be more usefully studied.

I am concerned, however, about the emphasis placed on the proposed work of the committee. When I heard it proposed that the committee should make such a study, I felt that its investigation would be completely open-ended; that it would not be aimed at any particular group, or phase of the problems affecting the criminal and his rehabilitation.

However, in reading more carefully the remarks of my colleagues, I am a little concerned that we may be doing what we have done in the past on such matters as capital punishment, namely, putting undue emphasis on the point of view, the problems, the struggle for existence of a small minority group. In so doing we run the danger, perhaps, of disregarding the interests of a very much wider group who could be considered to be at least as important, if not more so.

Senator Prowse, in his remarks the other evening, recommended the appointment of a special adviser who might be a parolee, and said that the name of such a person had been suggested by Senator Hastings. Honourable senators, I do not say that this is wrong—it might be very helpful—but I became a little concerned when Senator Hastings said in support of that remark:

> —in this important area of parole investigation there is one segment of society vitally interested, and that section is made up of present and former inmates of our penitentiaries as well as those who are on parole now.

I am sorry, but I do not find that a balanced statement, and I question it. I think there are far more people than those in that one segment who are vitally interested. Every time a crime is committed with violence and brutality I am more concerned about the victim and his family than I am about the person who finds himself in miserable circumstances after being sentenced for the crime.

Senator Hastings went on:

> I am pleased they have concurred in my suggestion that the special assistant to the committee shall indeed be a parolee, an inmate or a former inmate.

Honourable senators, I do not think that we should have inmates of prisons advising a Senate committee. I question this.

Senator Hastings also said:

> I believe such an individual working for our committee will give us the needed credibility since there are a few who hold us in disrespect and who ask just how sincere we are about the job we are performing.

In my opinion the Senate is very sincere about the job it is performing. I do not think any Senate committee, even one dealing with parole and imprisonment, and all the social connotations attached, is dependent on such persons in order to obtain credibility.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Molson: The committee should be completely impartial. I do not think it should appoint a policeman, an inmate, or a parolee as special adviser. I believe it should be set up as our committees have generally been set up; that is, with the greatest endeavour to have a completely impartial committee which will be able to examine the problems and difficulties of the parolees and those who hope to be paroled, yet never forgetting the responsibility it has to the public at large who generally not only pay the cost of the crimes that have been committed by those on parole but who also suffer as a result of them.

• (2110)

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. J. Harper Prowse: Honourable senators, I presume that my remarks will close the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Before the honourable Senator Prowse speaks, may I ask if any other honourable senator wishes to participate in the debate now; otherwise his speech will end the debate.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: First of all, I would like to thank those who took part in the debate, both the other evening and tonight. I assure honourable senators that we are not asking the house to approve of any details involving the work of the committee. Perhaps, in my innocence, I was at fault in outlining too many details about what the committee is planning to do. I am not going to apologize for that fault because I think it is too nice a fault to apologize for.

You now know what it is we have in mind, and one way of making sure that this committee does not go off the rails is by attending its meetings. Some of the senators who have spoken in this debate are members of the committee, but have not attended our organizational meetings. A meeting has been called for 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, and if this report is adopted tonight the committee will proceed to discuss the details.

I can assure you that we have been guaranteed by the Solicitor General and by the National Parole Board the complete use of their staffs in any way we may require them at any time.

I did suggest when I spoke previously that I thought it important that we keep away from governmental people in order to give ourselves credibility with the public. This is why I suggested that the person who is appointed adviser to the committee should be neither a public servant nor a parolee.

The parolee question, I will admit, is a difficult but important one. This subject was discussed in committee the other day and it will be discussed again before any decision is made. I did say at the last sitting that it was not with the public that we wanted this man to give us credibility. Obviously, I did not make myself clear, and this is why I am now repeating it. We do not need him to give us credibility with this house, but if we are to do a useful job we must have the confidence of the people, as Senator Hastings has said, who are most involved, namely, those who are presently on parole and those who expect to be paroled. If they are going to tell us what they actually feel, they have to believe that we are sincere. If we are successful, perhaps there will be fewer people like those described by Senator Beaubien.

Our present penal system results in 68 per cent of those released from penitentiary ending up back in prison. It is just possible that we may be able to recommend, through this inquiry, a system whereby less than 68 per cent return. This is the hope of the committee.

Quite frankly, honourable senators, we are worried about obtaining a quorum. The committee has 30 members. The quorum is seven. There is concern about getting a quorum, so the committee has decided to establish a subcommittee which will consist of the steering committee plus any other member of the Senate who wants to sit with it. This is an open invitation. We want to do a job of which both the committee and this house can be proud. We can do it only if you attend the meetings. Do not just talk at us; participate in the meetings. The invitation is there, and I ask you to give us an opportunity to do this job.

Report adopted.

Donald Smith: Honourable senators, I do not rise to make a speech on this subject but simply to point out that in my capacity as Acting Whip I stood this item with the expectation that someone else might wish to participate in the debate. I assume that the item will be dropped from the Order Paper if no one else wishes to speak to it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Under the circumstances, honourable senators, this inquiry is now considered as having been debated.

INTRODUCTION

On September 14th, 1971, there was tabled in the House a document entitled "Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation" and, by resolution of the Senate on the same date, consideration of same was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

For the purposes of brevity and identification, the "Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation" will be referred to in this report as the "proposed legislation" and the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will be referred to as "your Committee" or "the Committee".

On Thursday, November 4th, 1971, The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of your Committee, submitted a preliminary report on the proposed legislation and, in such report, a number of recommendations were submitted with respect thereto.

In the report of November 4th, 1971, hereinbefore referred to, the following statement was made:

> "Having regard to the urgency of the matter and the problem of time, your Committee is submitting for your approval at this time a limited number of recommendations but it is hoped that the Committee will still be in the position to make further recommendations before the proposed legislation reaches this House. Alternatively, the Committee will submit these further recommendations when the said proposed legislation reaches this House after having passed the other House."

Since the submission of the preliminary report, your Committee has heard a further number of representations and has received further written submissions on the proposed legislation. Having studied these further submissions and representations which were received in the period following the 27th day of October, 1971, to the 10th day of November, 1971, when the last hearing took place, your Committee has concluded that it is desirable to submit to the Minister of Finance, as expeditiously as possible, a number of further recommendations in respect to the proposed legislation which is presently being considered by Committee of the Whole of the other House. It is the hope that, upon receipt by the Minister of Finance of these further recommendations, the same will be accepted by him as again being pertinent and relevant, and to the extent so regarded, that appropriate amendments will be submitted by him to the other House while the said proposed legislation is still being considered in the Committee stage.

In your Committee's report of November 4th, 1971, and in the section captioned "EPILOGUE", your Committee recorded its intention to present a second report after the termination of its hearings covering submissions made subsequent to October 27th, 1971. Your Committee referred in such captioned "EPILOGUE" to some of the topics which it intended to cover in its second report. Having regard to the exigencies of time, your Committee has been able to deal with only some of the topics referred to in the "EPILOGUE". The proposed recommendations with respect to these topics are hereinafter submitted.

PULP AND PAPER INDUSTRY

1. General considerations

The pulp and paper industry plays a vital role in the economy of this country. It is because of this predominant role that your Committee has given special attention to the representations made by the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association.

Corporations in the natural resource industries are characterized by the following common factors:

(a) development and processing of natural resources,

(b) investment of large amounts of capital,

(c) creation of substantial employment, and

(d) sales on a world-wide basis.

Corporations in the natural resource industry are also characterized by a large degree of risk. Part of such risk is represented by the huge capital investment in machinery and equipment required in the pulp and paper industry.

From the information provided to your Committee, the following resume is submitted:

> For the year 1970 the industry exported 12.54% of the total Canadian domestic exports and ranks as one of the largest exporters in Canada. In 1970 the industry employed 156,400 persons including permanent and seasonal woodland operators. In addition, a substantial number of persons are employed in related fields. The statistics submitted by the representatives of the industry indicate that the five major suppliers of wood pulp and newsprint in the world are Canada, United States, Scandinavia, Japan and Russia. United States and Scandinavia are Canada's main competitors in this industry.
>
> The following table illustrates the change and the continuous deterioration in Canada's position in this field in relation to its major competitors over the last 20 years.

	Relative Percentage Share of Production
	Wood Pulp		Newsprint
	1950	1970	1950	1970
Canada	28	23	72	58
United States	49	53	14	22
Scandinavia	23	24	14	20
	100%	100%	100%	100%

> Representatives from this industry have expressed the view that this decline is caused by, among other factors, tax disadvantages suffered by Canadian corporations in relation to their major foreign competitors. These representatives prepared an analysis of comparative income tax payable by United States corporations and Canadian corporations for the 5 years ended in 1969. This analysis indicates that these United States corporations incurred average taxes of 34% of income (taking into account both capital and income) whereas Canadian corporations incurred comparable average taxes of 49%.

As to Sweden's tax treatment, the current annual rate of corporate income tax payable is approximately 40% as compared with 51% to 54% in Canada. To this tax advantage Swedish corporations obtain more generous capital cost allowance (depreciation and depletion) and also investment reserves. In Finland, the currency devaluation of 31% which occurred in 1967, coupled with that country's fiscal policy has further placed its pulp and paper industry in a relatively advantageous competitive position as a world supplier.

It is therefore apparent that the Canadian pulp and paper industry is at a great disadvantage vis-a-vis its international competitors. It is therefore essential that special consideration be given to assist the industry to maintain and improve its international position.

This industry's reliance on world markets also has an important direct effect on employment in Canada.

It is generally acknowledged that Canadian corporations which sell their products in international markets are in a difficult competitive position if their tax burden is much greater than that applicable to their competitors. It is apparent that the incidence of tax on the pulp and paper industry in Canada deserves to be examined carefully and that some attempt should be made, if at all possible, to place this industry in a reasonably fair position vis-a-vis its foreign competitors if Canada wishes to promote its export trade and employment in this industry.

At the risk of repeating itself, your Committee would again quote part of a statement made by the Government in the White Paper "Proposals for Tax Reform."

"6.9—. Going international is frequently necessary to enable Canadian companies to achieve the economies of scale which are otherwise denied them by the relatively small size of the Canadian domestic market. Such companies would find it hard to compete on the international scene if they were subject to more onerous taxes than those which apply to their competitors.—."

Your Committee concurs with this statement but deplores the fact that no recognition has been given to this very problem in respect of the pulp and paper industry under the proposed legislation.

The pulp and paper industry is subject to high capital requirements. As a consequence, carrying charges and amortization costs have a very great effect on the cost of production. For this reason, your Committee is of the opinion that any alleviating measures should be related to this factor, and that a concept of "earned depreciation" should therefore be given consideration in the proposed tax legislation.

The concept of "earned depreciation" could be formulated in the following manner: a corporation would earn the right to claim a special deduction based upon amounts incurred in respect of any qualified expenditures made after the commencement of the new system.

Earned depreciation would be in addition to the normal capital cost allowances. It would not reduce undepreciated capital cost and would not be subject to recapture of capital cost allowance. The corporation would have the right to claim all, or part, of this earned depreciation in the year in which its capital expenditures are made or to defer all, or any part, until some subsequent year. Appropriate safeguards could be introduced to prevent abuses.

In order not to discriminate against corporations which embarked upon a modernization or expansion program prior to the commencement of the new system, it would be necessary to establish a deemed earned depreciation. The amount of this deemed earned depreciation could be calculated as a certain percentage of the undepreciated capital cost of qualified expenditures on hand at the commencement of the system. If necessary, a limit could be placed on the maximum amount deductible in any year.

2. Pollution abatement and control

Apart from the tax disadvantages mentioned above, a new factor has recently been added to the industry's operating costs. This is the requirement to install and improve equipment and measures for the abatement and control of pollution.

Pollution abatement and control is not merely a local problem: it is primarily a national problem. The need for anti-pollution measures cannot be overemphasized, however. At the same time as Canada is endeavouring to improve the general environment for all Canadians, it would be short-sighted to overload the costs of some of our exporting industries which are competing in world markets.

Without debating the relative effectiveness or fairness of the use of tax incentives for the purpose of abatement or control of pollution generally, the nature of the pulp and paper industry is such that it must be located near large bodies of water for both production purposes and for direct, inexpensive transportation. Apart from the requirement of adequate hydro-electric power, such locations are usually somewhat remote from centres of population except where the concentration of people and ancillary businesses have developed in that particular area. The importance of the contribution to the national wealth produced by this industry clearly appears to warrant some spreading of the cost to include more than local communities and the pulp and paper industry.

With a view to correlating the national and local objectives of pollution abatement and control and to obtain a fair sharing of the cost burden, it appears advisable to supplement existing grant programs and tax incentive programs by developing a special loan program for the pulp and paper industry. This could consist of long-term federal loans without interest or federally guaranteed loans to pulp and paper corporations.

Alternatively, if interest be charged, part or all of such interest might be rebated from year to year. This could be achieved by allowing an annual additional capital cost allowance whereby the original capital cost could be increased by a percentage factor sufficient to accomplish the desired after-tax effect equivalent to a rebate of interest.

Your Committee considers that the foregoing would prevent an undue loading of additional costs on production by distributing some of the burden on a national basis.

While loan programs, forgiveness of loans and rebate of interest cannot be expected to fall directly within the scope of fiscal policy, your Committee is of the opinion that equivalent results could be produced by translating the after-tax effect into special capital cost allowance (depreciation) measures and rates in the proposed legislation.

Such measures are now available under the present legislation. As a matter of fact, in the Government's budget tabled on December 3, 1970, additional capital cost allowances were created whereby manufacturing and processing enterprises are permitted to value new investments in machinery, equipment and structures at 115 per cent of their actual cost as a base for calculating capital cost allowances. This is applicable to new capital investments acquired during the period commencing December 4, 1970, and ending March 31, 1972.

Having regard to the foregoing factors and special disabilities affecting this industry your Committee recommends:

1. that a concept of "earned depreciation" be introduced in the proposed legislation or, alternatively, that additional capital cost allowances be granted by one of the following methods:

   (a) increasing the present rate of capital cost allowances,

   (b) introducing additional yearly capital cost allowance through permitting the original capital cost or the undepreciated capital cost as at the commencement of the new system to be valued at more than 100 per cent, and

   (c) granting accelerated capital cost allowance.

2. that expenditures by corporations in the pulp and paper industry for the control and abatement of pollution be financed and assisted by one of the following methods:

   (a) government grants or long-term interest-free loans, or

   (b) special capital cost allowances such as those referred to above.

3. Logging tax credit

It was submitted to your Committee that there exists an element of double taxation for some corporations because the abatement for the provincial logging tax is not 100 per cent. This is caused by the fact that the credit for federal abatement is not calculated on the same basis as that calculated for the logging tax itself. This present anomaly, far from being cured by the proposed legislation, has been compounded by a further limitation in calculating the logging tax credit, namely the required inclusion of taxable capital gains in the tax base, which gains are to be excluded from the taxable income available for the logging tax credit (although such gains could be included in the calculation of the logging tax itself). This double taxation becomes very severe in a loss year or when the non-logging operations suffer a loss.

Furthermore, there are provinces which do not levy a logging tax as such, but instead levy other taxes corresponding to the logging taxes of other provinces. It is suggested that the government should examine the various taxes levied on the pulp and paper industry in provinces which do not have a formal logging tax, and determine if some provinces or municipalities are levying taxes which are in substance similar to logging taxes but which are nevertheless not deductible from income tax payable.

Your Committee recommends:

1. that the amount of provincial logging tax paid be credited against federal income tax payable within specified limits and with the following additions:

   (a) that the base upon which the logging tax credit is calculated for federal purposes should be the same as that upon which the provincial logging tax was imposed, and

   (b) that any creditable logging tax not deductible in a taxation year be carried forward and be deductible against future federal income tax payable.

2. that the Government consider the possibility of granting similar relief to those corporations that are paying provincial or municipal taxes on their logging operations not levied as logging taxes but which are in substance similar to a logging tax (and are not subject to the federal abatement).

TAX-EXEMPT NON-RESIDENT INVESTORS

Under the present Income Tax Act the Minister of National Revenue is authorized to issue a "certificate of exemption" to any non-resident person who establishes that he resides in a country which imposes an income tax and that he is exempt from such tax under the laws of that country. The effect of obtaining a certificate of this kind is that the non-resident person is exempt from Canadian non-resident withholding tax in respect of interest payable on any bond, debenture or other similar debt obligation that was issued to him after June 13, 1963.

The obvious purpose of this provision (as hereinafter noted) was to encourage the sale of Canadian debt obligations to tax exempt non-residents by removing the tax disadvantage which such persons otherwise would suffer if they reinvest in Canada rather than in their country of residence. Unlike the non-resident person who is subject to tax in his country of residence and who is generally able to recover part, if not all, of the Canadian income tax payable on Canadian source income by way of credit against the income tax otherwise payable by him, the tax-exempt non-resident is unable to recover any part of the Canadian income tax which he may be required to pay. Therefore, but for the "certificate of exemption" provisions, a tax-exempt non-resident would suffer a tax disadvantage by investing in Canadian debt obligations rather than in securities issued by persons resident in his country of residence (the income from which would be exempt from tax).

In order to qualify for a certificate of exemption under the proposed legislation, a non-resident must not only be exempt from income tax in the country in which he resides but must also be

1. a person who would be exempt from Canadian income tax under the relevant exempting provisions of the proposed legislation if he were resident in Canada, or

2. a trust or corporation established solely in connection with an employee's superannuation or pension fund or plan.

Any non-resident person failing to qualify under these new requirements who holds a certificate of exemption which was issued under the provisions of the present Income Tax Act and which is still in force on December 31, 1971, will continue to be exempt from Canadian non-resident withholding tax in respect of interest payable to him on or before December 31, 1974—provided that he continues to be exempt from tax in his country of residence. Interest received by him thereafter will be subject to the normal withholding tax provisions unless he is able to meet the new requirements of the proposed legislation.

In considering the effect of these new provisions, your Committee heard evidence presented on behalf of a major non-resident investor who now holds a certificate of exemption but who will fail to qualify for a similar certificate under the proposed legislation. This organization has invested substantial amounts in long-term Canadian debt obligations and has entered into commitments to purchase additional Canadian bonds, in each case on the assumption that its exemption from Canadian non-resident withholding tax would remain in force as long as it continued to qualify as a tax-exempt person in its country of residence. Having regard to the amount invested in Canada and having regard also to the fact that many of the debt obligations were purchased privately (consisting of securities in respect of which no prospectus has been filed), this particular organization appears to have valid reasons to believe that it will encounter considerable difficulty in selling its Canadian securities and thereby avoid the tax disadvantage which it would suffer if it continued to own such investments after December 31, 1974.

This particular situation is presumably by no means unique and your Committee considers it inequitable that the exemption should be withdrawn with respect to investments or commitments which have already been made—and on such short notice. In fact, your Committee believes that the sale of Canadian debt obligations (as distinct from Canadian equities) to non-residents should be encouraged by extending the present exemption from withholding tax provisions instead of restricting it.

When the exemption presently accorded to tax-exempt non-residents was first introduced, the Honourable Mr. W. Gordon, the then Minister of Finance, stated as follows:

> "The purpose of this resolution is, of course, to make it easier or make it more desirable for pension funds in other countries to invest in Canadian bonds. As we all know, we are primarily interested in and thinking about the inflow of capital: Certainly, in totals and magnitudes, we are primarily interested in the sale of Canadian bonds abroad rather than Canadian equities."

In the opinion of your Committee the circumstances above described have not changed and indeed are perhaps more necessary than ever.

Your Committee recommends that the exemption accorded to tax-exempt non-resident persons under the present Income Tax Act should be continued in the proposed legislation.

MINING AND PETROLEUM (NON-OPERATORS)

Your Committee stated in its preliminary report of November 4, 1971, that the 33⅓% automatic depletion which is allowed under present law to an operator of a resource property will be abolished under the proposed legislation at the end of a five year transitional period (i.e. after 1976) and will thereafter be replaced by an earned depletion allowance equal to $1 for every $3 of eligible expenditures incurred on exploration and development after November 7, 1969. The Committee recommended in this connection that the transitional period be extended to the end of 1980 or, alternatively, that taxpayers be allowed to "bank" for earned depletion purposes an amount equal to all eligible expenditures incurred, whether incurred before or after November 7, 1969, but that all depletion previously allowed be deducted in determining the balance of the "bank" available for earned depletion allowance.

As a result of its continuing study of the tax reform measures, your Committee has noted that the proposed legislation would also remove, as of the end of 1976, the 25% automatic depletion that is now allowed to non-operators in respect of income such as royalties which they may derive from resource properties. Royalty income received after 1976 is to be treated in the same manner as productions profits and therefore, will be eligible for the proposed 33⅓% earned depletion.

Your Committee is of the view that it is equally important that the five year transitional period relating to the withdrawal of the automatic depletion allowance should also be extended to non-operators, at least in respect of income derived from a royalty or other similar interest in a resource property which the taxpayer acquired prior to June 18, 1971, or which he was obligated at that date to acquire. The alternative recommendation which the Committee put forward in its preliminary report with respect to the basis of computing earned depletion for operators of a resource is unlikely to afford much relief to non-operators in respect of interests acquired prior to June 18, 1971, as these taxpayers will not have incurred as extensive exploration and development expenditures as operators. They will therefore not be entitled to a comparable amount of earned depletion if the Committee's alternative recommendation is implemented.

Your Committee recommends that the 25% automatic depletion now allowed to non-operators in respect of income derived from a royalty or other similar interest in a resource property be continued for royalties received prior to 1981 in respect of interests which the taxpayer owned at June 18, 1971, or which he was obligated at that date to acquire.

TRANSITIONAL AVERAGING PROVISIONS CONCERNING LUMP SUM PAYMENTS OUT OF PENSION PLANS AND DEFERRED PROFIT SHARING PLANS

Single payments out of a pension plan or deferred profit sharing plan which are received in a taxation year ending after 1973 will be eligible for relatively generous averaging provisions presently afforded by section 36 of the Income Tax Act to the extent of amounts vested up to January 1, 1972. The proposed legislation would restrict the right to such averaging by providing that once a taxpayer has elected to utilize section 36 averaging in respect of amounts vested up to January 1, 1972, he is precluded from invoking the general and forward averaging provisions of the proposed legislation in the same year in respect of amounts vested after 1971. The amount available for section 36 averaging is thus limited to that portion of the lump sum payment which accrued up to January 1, 1972.

It is apparent that as the benefits under pension and deferred profit sharing plans which vest after 1971 increase in relation to those which vested prior to 1972, the benefit afforded by section 36 averaging will decline in respect of lump sum payments received after 1973, until the point is reached when section 36 averaging will become unattractive.

Your Committee recommends that

(a) section 36 averaging should be available in respect of the portion of a lump sum payment received in a taxation year ending after 1973 out of a pension plan or deferred profit sharing plan which the taxpayer would have received pursuant to such a plan if he had withdrawn therefrom on January 1, 1972, and also

(b) the general and forward averaging provisions of the proposed legislation should be available in respect of the portion of such payments which have vested after 1971.

Single payments received out of a pension plan or a deferred profit sharing plan made in a taxation year ending after 1971 and before 1974 are to be entitled to section 36 averaging in their entirety. Your Committee considers such treatment to be equitable.

NON-RESIDENT-OWNED INVESTMENT CORPORATIONS (N.R.O.'s)

The effect of the provisions of Section 70 of the present Income Tax Act (which relates to non-resident-owned investment corporations) is, in general, to treat non-residents who hold Canadian investments indirectly through the medium of a Canadian holding company in substantially the same manner as they would have been taxed if they had owned such investments directly—provided, of course, that the Canadian holding company qualifies as a non-resident-owned investment corporation (referred to hereinafter as an N.R.O.).

Certain exceptions to this general rule do exist in the present Income Tax Act. For example:

1. A non-resident who owns shares of a corporation which has a degree of Canadian ownership (as defined in Section 139A of the Act) is subject to a 10 per cent Canadian non-resident withholding tax on dividends received from that corporation whereas all dividend income flowing through an N.R.O. attracts a 15 per cent tax under Section 70.
2. Interest payable to non-residents on certain types of Canadian debt obligations (e.g. certain federal and provincial bonds) is now exempt from Canadian non-resident withholding tax but is subject to the 15 per cent N.R.O. tax if paid to an N.R.O.
3. Any investment income which an N.R.O. may derive from non-Canadian sources is subject to Canadian tax under the N.R.O. provisions whereas such income would not be subject to Canadian income tax if paid to the non-resident directly.

However, these and the various other exceptions which exist under the present Income Tax Act have generally been considered relatively insignificant and have not discouraged non-residents from investing in Canada through the medium of an N.R.O.

It is implied on page 58 of the "Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation" that this neutrality in the taxation of non-resident investors, whether they invest directly in Canada or indirectly through an N.R.O., would be continued under the new system; and, in particular, that non-resident shareholders of an N.R.O. would not be subject to Canadian income tax in respect of any capital gains which would not be taxable in Canada if realized personally by a non-resident investor. However, contrary to the statements contained in the Summary, the tax position of a non-resident shareholder of an N.R.O. is not equated with the treatment accorded to non-residents who invest directly. For example:

1. Capital gains realized by an N.R.O. on the disposition of capital property other than "Canadian property" will be subject to Canadian non-resident withholding tax when ultimately distributed by way of dividend to the N.R.O.'s non-resident shareholders. This treatment is clearly anomalous and the proposed legislation should be amended to provide that any net gains realized on the disposition of non-Canadian property should form part of an N.R.O.'s "capital gains dividend account" which may ultimately be distributed to shareholders free from Canadian non-resident withholding tax.
2. Any capital gain realized by a non-resident on the disposition of shares of an N.R.O. (including a gain arising on death) will be subject to Canadian income tax under the proposed legislation. This treatment is inequitable as it could result in double taxation or in the taxation of amounts which should not attract Canadian income tax. For example, part or all of the gain realized by non-resident shareholders could be attributable to gains realized by the N.R.O. on the disposition of taxable Canadian property which had not been distributed to shareholders at the date on which the particular shareholder disposed of his shares of the N.R.O. These gains would have been taxed in the N.R.O.'s hands and would accordingly be available for distribution as a tax-exempt dividend out of the N.R.O.'s "capital gains dividend account". Therefore, the non-resident shareholder should not be subject to Canadian income tax on any portion of the gain realized on the disposition of his shares of the N.R.O. that is attributable to gains previously realized by the N.R.O. on the disposition of taxable Canadian property.

   Similar problems exist where the gain realized by the non-resident shareholder is attributable to:

   (a) undistributed capital gains which the N.R.O. previously realized on the disposition of any other type of capital property,

   (b) any unrealized appreciation in the value of the N.R.O.'s capital property, and

(c) any accumulated income already taxed in the N.R.O.'s hands.

It follows that, unless appropriate amendments are made to the proposed legislation so as to ensure that N.R.O.'s and their shareholders are treated in a manner consistent with the treatment accorded to non-resident persons who invest directly in Canada, non-resident investors will no longer look upon N.R.O.'s as a suitable investment vehicle and many of these corporations will be wound up. In the result, a considerable amount of the capital now invested in Canada through the medium of N.R.O.'s may be lost. Such a consequence would be most unfortunate having regard to the importance of the role played by N.R.O.'s as a source of capital in Canada and to the contribution which such corporations otherwise make to the Canadian economy.

Your Committee recommends that furtner consideration be given to the provisions of the proposed legislation relating to non-resident-owned investment corporations and appropriate amendments be made to ensure that there is neutrality (similarity) of tax treatment as between non-residents who invest directly in Canada and those who choose to invest through the medium of a non-resident-owned investment corporation, particularly with respect to the treatment of capital gains.

INSURANCE CORPORATIONS

A. Life insurance corporations

There was referred to your Committee a matter which does not arise directly out of the proposed legislation but, rather, represents a problem which exists under the present Income Tax Act and which will continue to exist under the proposed legislation. In view of the fact that this matter will continue to represent a problem under the new legislation, the Committee considers it appropriate and proper to raise this issue at this time.

The problem which has been raised relates to the income tax treatment of dividends received by life insurance corporations in respect of investments in shares of other taxable Canadian corporations and which are acquired out of non-segregated funds. These funds (which, for the sake of simplicity, are hereinafter referred to as the "General Funds") of a life insurance corporation are invested and held for the benefit of the following groups of persons:

1. tax exempt policyholders, e.g., any person who owns a policy which is registered with the Department of National Revenue as a registered retirement savings plan or which is issued pursuant to a registered pension plan;
2. other policyholders (excluding those persons owning policies, the reserves for which are invested in "segregated funds"), and
3. the corporation itself or, in the case of corporations other than mutual life insurance corporations, the corporation's shareholders.

In order to determine the amount of the corporation's liability for income tax, it is necessary to allocate the corporation's total investment income amongst these groups in accordance with a formula set out in the Income Tax Act and the Income Tax Regulations.

In examining this matter, your Committee was advised that the total amount of investment income allocable to each group under the provisions of the present law is reasonable in the circumstances and that no objection is taken to the use of a statutory formula for this purpose. The problem lies in the fact that each group is deemed under the allocation formula to share proportionately in each type of investment income earned by the General Funds (including dividends received from taxable Canadian corporations even if such corporations are subsidiaries of the life insurance corporation in question). As a result, part of such dividends are allocated to tax exempt policyholders, thereby reducing the amount of the deduction allowable in computing the corporation's taxable income in respect of dividends received from other taxable Canadian corporations. This also holds true under the proposed legislation.

As is often the case, the assumptions made in devising statutory formulas such as this can be in error. In the case of life insurance corporations, the policyholders' funds must be invested in such a manner as to ensure that policy guarantees can be made and that such obligations can be met when the policies mature. Therefore, policyholders' funds are generally invested in fixed-interest type securities rather than in shares of other corporations. Most, if not all, of the investments in corporate shares are acquired out of the corporation's (or shareholders') funds and it follows that any allocation of dividend income contrary to this fact will result in the life insurer being effectively denied all of the dividend deductions to which it should properly be entitled. Most certainly, such a problem does not exist with respect to other corporations such as banks, trust companies and other similar financial institutions.

Your Committee recommends that corporate dividend income received and arising from investments made by a life insurance corporation out of its non-segregated funds in shares of capital stock of corporations be excluded from the allocation of investment income formula set forth in the proposed legislation.

PRIVATE GENERAL INSURANCE CORPORATIONS

Under the proposed legislation there exists in at least two respects, a distinction between a private and public corporation. That is to say, depending on whether a corporate taxpayer is public or private, the income tax treatment of transactions may differ. These two differences may be summarized as follows:

1. A public corporation may receive dividends from other corporations without payment of tax, while a private corporation receiving a dividend from a non-controlled corporation, is subject to a tax of 33 1/3 per cent. This tax however is refundable to the corporation upon the payment of a further dividend to its shareholders.
2. A public corporation will not be entitled to any preferential tax treatment in respect of its taxable business income, however, a small private business corporation will be entitled to preferential tax treatment on its first $50,000 of taxable business income. This preferential treatment is subject to a number of restrictions. One of these restrictions is that the after-tax profits of such a corporation must not be applied towards defined "ineligible investments" otherwise the corporation will be subject to a tax for so doing.

At the outset, your Committee wishes to commend the Government for retaining the concept of a preferential tax treatment for the small business corporation. However, as will be noted, your Committee believes that, first, the requirements are unusually restrictive and may defeat the purpose of the relieving provision; and secondly, little account appears to have been taken of other statutory provisions, both federal and provincial, relating to the business conduct of corporations, which provisions may be in conflict with the restrictions as set forth in the relieving provisions. Private general insurance corporations are but one example of this latter category.

Moreover, the private general insurance corporation may not only be at odds with the proposed legislation in respect of "ineligible investments", because of other legislation that is imposed upon it, but such a corporation may also be unable to comply with the proposed "33⅓ per cent refundable tax" rule, for the same reason. Both of these matters are hereinafter dealt with.

Your Committee would turn first to the question of the "33⅓ per cent refundable tax" rule and its application to a private corporation. In the case of private general insurance corporations, your Committee has ascertained that the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act (R.S.C., 1970, Chap. 1-15) will severely limit such a corporation from applying this rule in its favour. There are two reasons:

1. Pursuant to Section 105 of this Act, a federal Canadian insurance company is prohibited from declaring and paying dividends in excess of 75 per cent of its average profits for the three preceding years.
2. Further, pursuant to Section 103 of this Act, a federal Canadian insurance company must maintain at all times, assets of 115 per cent in relation to 100 per cent of its liabilities as a solvency test, this test conditioning as well, the payment of dividends. Unfortunately, "refundable tax" would not be treated as an admitted asset for the purpose of the solvency test under this Act.

The only comment which your Committee can make with regard to this question is that it represents an almost classic example of income tax theory being contrary to the required practice of the everyday business world.

Similarly, and as already noted, there is danger that an analogous result may also occur in respect of the private general insurance corporation and the tax to be levied where a corporation has made an "ineligible investment". Pursuant to Section 63 of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act (R.S.C., 1970, Chap. I-15) an insurance company is obliged to invest in securities that would otherwise be considered as "ineligible" for the purpose of the proposed legislation. In this respect the proposed legislation is therefore possibly in conflict with and inconsistent with, another federal statute known as the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act (R.S.C., 1970, Chap. I-15). A similar result will also prevail in respect of the various Provincial acts.

Your Committee recommends that special provisions be introduced to alleviate the position of those private corporations which cannot take advantage of "refundable tax" by reason of any conflicting or inconsistent statutory law governing their conduct.

Similarly, that special provisions be introduced to provide that in the case of a private general insurance corporation, compliance with the investment requirements of governing federal or provincial legislation shall not constitute "ineligible investments".

Respectfully submitted,

Salter A. Hayden,

Chairman.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, December 1, 1971

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. Paul Martin tabled:

Copies of list of the Directors and Executive Officers of the Canada Development Corporation.

He said: Honourable senators, later this afternoon I will table the Proposals for Agreement between the United Kingdom and Rhodesia, which Senator O'Leary has asked for. At the same time I will give a brief explanation of the Government's position. The Secretary of State for External Affairs will be making a statement this afternoon in the House of Commons. I would prefer that his statement be made before I make mine.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Leopold Langlois: Honourable senators, I would ask that the house agree to proceed now with item No. 2 on the Order Paper and then revert to the agenda as it has been drafted. Senator Welch, who would normally be proceeding first today, has been informed of this proposed change and is in agreement.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that we proceed as requested by Senator Langlois?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

TAX REFORM

CONSIDERATION OF PRELIMINARY REPORT NO. 2 OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON TAX REFORM LEGISLATION—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Leave having been given to proceed to Order No. 2:

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Preliminary Report No. 2 of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the Summary of the 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, tabled in the Senate on November 30, 1971.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, first I wish to thank Senator Welch for giving me the opportunity to proceed at this time. I hope my speech comes out all right. I may be like the fellow who when he plays the bugle blows it in very well but sometimes it does not come out so well. However, I shall do the best I can in discussing Preliminary Report No. 2 of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, which was tabled last night.

It will be recalled that the first report of the committee on the tax reform legislation, 1971 contained an account of events and submissions up to October 27. We continued to hear submissions until November 10, on which date we terminated our hearings. Preliminary Report No. 2 deals with the points raised during that period and which we regard as important. There were not too many, the most important being the submission by the pulp and paper industry with which I shall deal a little later.

• (1410)

I should like first to deal with the item in our second report headed Tax-Exempt Non-Resident Investors. I have identified it with the name of the company which made those submissions, the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association of America, which at the present time is located in the United States. The company was originally established by Carnegie, and I estimate their total assets at this time to be in excess of $2 billion. The company has been doing business in Canada since 1963, and their assets in this country amount to approximately $120 million.

In the United States the company enjoys the position of being tax exempt, but in Canada since 1963, by virtue of the provisions in our Income Tax Act, the company has been exempt from payment of withholding tax on the movement of dividends representing interest received by the non-resident corporation in the United States.

To assist honourable senators, I should explain the history of that incorporation. Its purpose was to provide a vehicle and the money to underwrite, or provide and support, pension plans, to provide funds for the establishment of pensions for teachers and university professors, and for the assistance of universities in setting up and operating such pension plans.

In 1963, the then Minister of Finance caused an amendment of the Income Tax Act under which, in certain circumstances, a certificate of exemption from withholding tax might be issued to companies operating in Canada in a certain way.

I should explain that this company—there are other instances also where this applies—deals in debt securities, and therefore the assets involved are interest payments. As I have already mentioned, the company is tax exempt in the United States. In 1963 the then Minister of Finance, the Honourable Walter Gordon, decided that it was of importance to Canada that the operations of this company be carried on in Canada, because it operated in the field of acquisition of debt securities and was a substantial purchaser of Canadian bonds. The explanation given by Mr. Gordon, when introducing his amendment to the Income Tax Act in 1963, is very interesting. As a matter of fact, I read Senate Hansard of that period, and discovered that it was I who explained that bill in this house. Mr. Gordon, at that time, said:

> The purpose of this resolution is, of course, to make it easier or make it more desirable for pension funds in other countries to invest in Canadian bonds. As we all know, we are primarily interested in and thinking about the inflow of capital: certainly, in totals and magnitudes, we are primarily interested in the sale of Canadian bonds abroad rather than Canadian equities.

Those are the key words.

This company, in its operations in Canada, and similarly with respect to its operations in the United States, is not in the field of the acquisition of venture securities. In Canada this company holds approximately $40 million in Canadian Government bonds, and it has financed many enterprises in Canada in a manner different from the ordinary in the field of financing. For instance, it financed the fuel system installation at Malton, as well as quite a number of other ventures.

What is unique about this company's enterprises is that they are not approached from the point of view of creating something, and providing money in relation to marketable securities. Their interest is income and security—an assurance of continued income and security. Therefore, in all their ventures in Canada this has been their modus operandi. They have taken no steps to create a market for the securities. In other words, they receive the interest income, and the interest income provides the basis upon which they may do their financing. They are not subject to any tax in the United States, and in the period since 1963 they have not been subject to tax in Canada.

This seems to fall into a pattern that has become emphasized over a number of years. You can understand why the then Minister of Finance was greatly interested in it even in 1963, and he took pains in his statement to point out that these operations by the non-resident in Canada, and the investment in Canada, did not relate to the acquisition of equities but only to debt securities.

This bill puts a limit on the period of time within which the present tax exemption will carry on, namely, until 1974. The financing which this company, and other companies of a like nature, have done in Canada has been on the basis of what their income is and what their charges are. Therefore, since they were tax exempt in Canada they made no provision in the rate which they charged to take care of having to pay a withholding tax which, in this instance, would be 15 per cent. We were informed that it would take longer than the period up to 1974 for this particular company with its holdings, although the security is good, to qualify for public issue. It would take much longer than that period in order to satisfy all the security commission requirements, and to build up an interest in the type of security which they have. It would seem that while they would propose to move out with this penalty of the 15 per cent withholding tax applying on and after 1974, they could not accomplish that within this period of time, and consequently they felt they were being subjected to an unjust penalty.

The committee feels, of course, that it is beneficial to Canada to have an inflow of capital which is in the form of debt securities, so that no question of non-residents acquiring control of Canadian industries in the sense of acquiring equities can arise. We have recommended, as you will note, that the exemption accorded to tax-exempt non-resident persons, under the present Income Tax Act, be continued in the proposed legislation. We think it is good for Canada. It provides an enlarged market for Canadian security issues, both government and otherwise. The feeling of the committee is that the circumstances which gave rise to the introduction of this amendment in 1963 exist just as strongly and as forcibly today, and on that point we feel that the law should be continued.

It takes this form. If under the income tax law in the country where the non-resident resides the company is tax-exempt, those circumstances are presented to Canada's Minister of Finance, who may issue a certificate of exemption from the withholding tax for so long as that position is enjoyed by this company in its home territory. The bill proposes to make some changes; the certificate in its present form, and based on the requirements now in the Income Tax Act, would run out in 1974. If this condition were to continue a company, to be entitled to a certificate, would have to meet the conditions in Canadian law entitling it to tax-exempt status. The company I have referred to does not meet those conditions.

I have stressed the purpose of the provisions of the act, the scope of the amendment, the position of the company, and the view of the committee that it is in the best interests of Canada that this situation be permitted to continue.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Would I be right in adding that the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association is a non-profit corporation that devotes its income to higher education? Is that not what it is?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is right. It is a non-profit organization, and that is the basis on which it secured tax exemption in the United States.

There is an item in our report headed Mining and Petroleum, which deals with non-operators. The committee heard evidence on this aspect. Non-operators in the mining industry, for instance, would be persons who have engaged in exploration and development and at some point in time have passed on the resource, in whatever its stage of development at that time, to a group concerned with and interested in, and having the facilities for, providing the money to go ahead with the development of that operation. Usually in those circumstances the remuneration to the vendor would be by royalty payments on the basis of a percentage of the production profits, and so on. Over the years, and even now, under the income tax law these non-operators were entitled to a 25 per cent automatic depletion allowance. In other words, 25 per cent of their royalty income could be deducted before arriving at their taxable income.

The White Paper and Bill C-259 proposes to do away with automatic depletion in relation to both operators and non-operators, and this is to be effective in 1976. It is to be replaced by what is called earned depletion. In other words, for every $3 that you spend, you could earn $1. You could reduce your production income and profit by the amount of $1 for every $3 that you spend.

So far as the non-operator is concerned, he is unfortunate in that it is difficult for him to earn any depletion, because he has royalty income which arises out of his exploration and development, and as a result of his disposal of the properties to those who have carried on the development.

The operator, of course, is in a different position. He has operations and expenses which qualify as expenses for earned depletion. He has those and, therefore, to some extent he can set off his expenses on the basis of $1 of earned depletion for every $3 that he spent. The non-operator is in a different position.

In addition to this, the non-operator has had a build-up of expenses in previous years before he parted with the property on a royalty income basis which, if he retained the property and made expenditures in connection with it, would qualify for earned depletion. He is going to be sitting there with his royalty income and no set-off, even though it may be in relation to commitments he made and property he acquired prior to the cut-off date of June 1971. He may have obligations and commitments that were made prior to June 1971, and he has no kind of set-off against which he can spend money and earn depletion.

The non-operators who appeared before us felt that they should have a longer time in which to run out this string. They have embarked on programs, and they have made commitments which will run out in 1976, but thereafter, because everything they earn will be taxable, they will not be in a position to take care of the projected liquidation, over a period of time, under the law as it existed when they made the commitment.

Therefore, we have recommended that the 25 per cent automatic depletion now allowed to non-operators in respect of income from a royalty or other similar interest in a resource property be continued for royalties received prior to 1981 in respect of interests which the taxpayer owned at June 18, 1971, or which he was obligated at that date to acquire.

These representations were made by quite responsible people who said that if they did not have this ability to acquire these write-offs, by way of depletion, over a longer period of time in relation to what they have done in the past, and before this change in the law takes place, they will suffer considerably and will not be able to continue exploration and development. The committee was impressed, and it has made this recommendation.

Honourable senators, I should next talk to you about deferred profit-sharing plans and pension plans. In the first report we developed the subject quite extensively. I gave what I thought was a reasonably full explanation of it when the report was presented, but I indicated that there was still one element about which we were thinking. That element is included in this report. It has to do with deferred profit-sharing plans and pension plans.

In such plans the attraction to the employee is the provision with respect to the lump sum payment that will come to him at some time. As long as those plans carried on in the fashion permitted under the present law, and as long as employees had the benefit of averaging provided in the act up to the present time, the employees were still paying their taxes on a reasonable basis as and when the lump sum payment came out. In other words, in the period that the plan or trust was operating, during which there was a build-up of the employees' interest in the fund, there was a tax deferral. But when the lump sum payment came out, then there were all the implications of tax levy, and on a lump sum payment that could very well be substantial.

Indeed, by way of example we were told of a woman who had contributed for 45 or 50 years to a plan. Although her position was not particularly remunerative, nevertheless, because of the length of time involved, her lump sum payment was very substantial. It amounted, when she finally became entitled to withdraw it, to $50,000. The point is that, if she had had to pay income tax on the basis of that lump sum in one year, it would have represented a very substantial penalty. Fortunately, some years ago—I believe in 1962—section 36 was put into the Income Tax Act which provided for an averaging. In other words, the average rate over your last three years of employment would be the rate applied rather than the rate in that one year based on a very substantial lump sum. In the example cited, the rate would have been fixed according to the average of the woman's last three years' income rather than being based on the lump sum of $50,000.

So these plans have gone along on this basis, and people have made their contributions and assumed their responsibilities. But in this bill the treatment in some of these cases is a bit difficult to understand. The bill provides for two forms of averaging: general averaging and forward averaging. General averaging is the kind of averaging in which you iron out what would be a very high rate in one year of substantial income and very low rates in other years of little or nominal income. In other words, the rate is arrived at by averaging over several years—five years or something in that order. Under the bill, general averaging is available to these plans in the future, subject to certain conditions.

The other kind of averaging I referred to is forward averaging. In forward averaging you take your withdrawal amounts of money in each year, and you apply them to the purchase of what are called forward-averaging annuities. The difficulty with this is that the reason for the employees' entering into the plans in the first place is dissipated, because the lump sum payment is dissipated in the acquisition of the forward-averaging annuities.

One way of escaping the tax is open, however, in that you may take the whole lump sum and purchase an annuity. In this way only the income element in the annuity would be taxable in each year and, therefore, the rate of tax would be very reasonable. Nevertheless, this defeats the purpose of the lump sum payment.

What the bill does say is that for the period to the end of December 1971, even though you are still in the plan after that period, you may assume that you have received your lump sum payment at that time and are entitled to apply the section 36 averaging provision, and that that is the extent of your tax liability in relation to that. But then in certain circumstances, if you elect to take the benefits of that provision which entitles you to use section 36, the other averaging provisions in the bill are not available to you.

We think that all the averaging provisions should be available, and if some person has elected in relation to a period before this bill passes into law to avoid a heavier penalty of tax under the bill, we recommend that because he has made that election he should not be debarred if he continues in the plan. We must remember that his election at that time, while he is still in the plan, is constructive in the sense that he has not actually taken his money out.

But when he does take his money out the calculation of his tax will be in part in relation to section 36, and in part in relation to whatever tax he may have to pay under the bill. Under this bill in those circumstances, if he has made an election, his tax would be very substantial in that it would be at the marginal rate since he would not have the benefit of general averaging or forward averaging.

In order to make absolutely clear the steps in this—and there are very few of them—I have created what I call a ladder. This is a constructive statement too. As it will take only a moment, perhaps I might read it:

> Single payments received out of a pension plan or a deferred profit sharing plan, under the present Income Tax Act are entitled to be averaged under section 36. The section 36 averaging is more generous than the forward averaging and general averaging which are to be available under the proposed legislation.

That is the first point. I come now to the second point:

> Single payments received out of a pension plan or a deferred profit sharing plan in a taxation year ending after 1971 and before 1974 are also to be entitled to section 36 averaging in their entirety. Your committee considers such treatment to be equitable.

The third point is:

> Single payments out of a pension plan or deferred profit sharing plan which are received in a taxation year ending after 1973 will be eligible for relatively generous averaging provisions presently afforded by section 36 of the Income Tax Act to the extent of amounts vested up to January 1, 1972.

That is a very important point.

> The proposed legislation would restrict the right to such averaging by providing that once a taxpayer has elected to utilize section 36 averaging in respect of amounts vested up to January 1, 1972, he is precluded from invoking the general and forward averaging provisions of the proposed legislation in the same year in respect of amounts vested after 1971. The amount available for section 36 averaging is thus limited to that portion of the lump sum payment which accrued up to January 1, 1972.
> It is apparent that as the benefits under pension and deferred profit sharing plans which vest after 1971 increase in relation to those which vested prior to 1972, the benefit afforded by section 36 averaging will decline in respect of lump sum payments received after 1973, until the point is reached when section 36 averaging will become unattractive.

By that I mean it will be unattractive because you cannot elect out of it any longer, and you will have a less attractive and less remunerative basis of general averaging and forward averaging.

• (1440)

As I explained the other day, the attraction of the lump sum payment has been terrific. We were told that 100,000 people are members of these plans, and perhaps there are more than that. When this money comes in a lump sum it enables a man to make his own provisions for security, pay off his mortgage, or do what he wishes with it. This is an amount of money which he has built into his lifetime of earnings, expecting that under the conditions of the existing Income Tax Act it would be available to him.

In addition to our recommendations in the first report, we are recommending that section 36 averaging should be available in respect of the portion of a lump sum payment received in a taxation year ending after 1973 out of a pension plan or deferred profit-sharing plan which the taxpayer would have received pursuant to such a plan if he had withdrawn therefrom on January 1, 1972, and also the general and forward averaging provisions of the proposed legislation should be available in respect of the portion of such payments which have vested after 1971.

In other words, when people spend a lifetime providing for their own security this should be recognized in the most tangible way possible. They should have the benefits of both worlds—the benefit of a world in which they embark on these commitments to create a situation by which they are entitled to withdraw from the plan, and the benefit of anything else projected in the bill during the period they are still in the plan.

The next item concerns what are called N.R.O. companies. N.R.O. companies are simply non-resident-owned investment corporations. For years we have had sections in the Income Tax Act which have provided for non-resident-owned investment corporations, and they have been subject to a special 15 per cent rate of tax. On payment by such a company of 15 per cent on its profits the proceeds on distribution to the non-resident do not attract withholding tax. In other words, this 15 per cent is in lieu of withholding tax. You may ask what are the benefits to Canada? When I was explaining the first report, I said that we were looking at the various points in the bill on the basis of people and employment. This touches directly on that point, because by making these provisions apply to N.R.O. companies we have provided a basis upon which a non-resident can bring capital into Canada, and invest a quite substantial portion of it in debt securities producing interest income.

The requirement under the present law was that 95 per cent of the voting shares of an N.R.O. company must be beneficially owned by non-residents. The bill proposes to make that requirement 100 per cent. That does not create any particular hardship. As we were informed in committee, the net result of this is that very substantial amounts of capital have been attracted to Canada from other areas of the world. Non-residents from other parts of the world, and all not necessarily from the same country, can group together and invest their money in corporate form. Under our income tax law the benefits afforded such N.R.O. companies can be equated to the benefits afforded a non-resident individual who invests in Canada. It is not of greater benefit or advantage to take the corporate structure from the point of view of tax, but it is from the point of view of operation.

This matter was developed in the White Paper. In the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation the Government said that it was their intention to equate the position of N.R.O. companies with that of non-resident individuals as far as the incidence of tax was concerned. At the bottom of page 58 under the heading "Non-Resident-Owned Investment Corporations" it reads:

> The special tax treatment for non-resident-owned investment corporations (NRO's) is continued in the new bill.
> Once the new system is fully operative in 1976, it will provide for:
>
> —a 25 per cent tax on the income of the NRO, including capital gains that are taxable to non-residents, but excluding other gains; the tax paid (including only one-half of the tax on capital gains) will be refunded to the corporation when the earnings are distributed; and normal withholding tax on dividends paid—
> Until 1976 the rate of tax on income will stay at 15 per cent and the new ownership rules will not apply.

The bill proposes that the withholding tax be increased from 15 per cent to 25 per cent. In cases where tax treaties are negotiated you would still receive the 15 per cent benefit. The language in the bill is significant. They have not equated the position of an N.R.O. company to that of a non-resident individual. Yet the language here seems very clear—a 25 per cent tax on the income of the N.R.O., including capital gains that are taxable to non-residents. There are certain types of capital gains that are taxable under the bill to non-residents. If a non-resident makes a capital gain in what is called a taxable Canadian property, that gain is taxable to him as an individual; but if he makes a gain on property which is not taxable Canadian property, then that gain is not subject to tax in his hands as an individual. What this bill proposes so far as N.R.O. companies are concerned is that capital gains realized by an N.R.O. company on the disposition of capital property other than taxable Canadian property will be subject to Canadian non-resident withholding tax when ultimately distributed by way of dividends to the N.R.O.'s non-resident shareholder. This is a complete about face between the position of a non-resident individual and the position of the N.R.O. company.

In the Preliminary Report No. 2, under the heading "Non-Resident-Owned Investment Corporations", the committee states:

> This treatment is clearly anomalous and the proposed legislation should be amended to provide that any net gains realized on the disposition of non-Canadian property should form part of an N.R.O.'s "capital gains dividend account"—

• (1450)

It must be borne in mind that in committee we had a few lectures on this subject. It is proposed that capital gains dividend accounts be established within these companies. To the extent that capital gains occur which are either not subject to capital gains tax, or which have borne their share of capital gains tax, those dividends might thereafter be distributed out of that capital gains account without any further tax. This aspect was either overlooked or not recognized. I do not know the reason, but here the N.R.O. company would be subject to a tax to which a non-resident individual would not be subject. It is really a negation of the description of the intent of the legislation which we find in the summary I just read to you.

In other aspects the result could be double taxation. For instance, paragraph 2 of this section of the report states:

> Any capital gain realized by a non-resident on the disposition of shares of an N.R.O. (including a gain arising on death) will be subject to Canadian income tax under the proposed legislation. This treatment is inequitable as it could result in double taxation or in the taxation of amounts which should not attract Canadian income tax.

These are areas in which we recommend that there should be correction. A more thorough development of this subject is contained in the report; I am simply highlighting, which I consider to be all I should do at this time. Our recommendation is:

> that further consideration be given to the provisions of the proposed legislation relating to non-resident-owned investment corporations and appropriate amendments be made to ensure that there is neutrality—

We have adopted that word because it seems to be a favourite of the writers of the Summary and the White Paper. They refer to "neutrality of tax treatment."

Hon. Mr. Flynn: You have also used the word "similarity", have you not?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, we have inserted the word "similarity" in brackets to translate it into ordinary English. We recommend that:

> —appropriate amendments be made to ensure that there is neutrality (similarity) of tax treatment as between non-residents who invest directly in Canada and those who choose to invest through the medium of a non-resident-owned investment corporation, particularly with respect to the treatment of capital gains.

That is the area in which I developed this subject.

There is no question involved in this, and it is not even suggested in the White Paper, the Summary, the legislation or in interviews, that this is a vehicle for tax avoidance or tax evasion. It is a legitimate manner in which to conduct business in corporate form rather than as an individual. The moment the Government affirms that the principle will be equality, whichever way it is elected to proceed, then the legislation should carry that out. All we are saying is that the legislation does not do that, and it should be amended to carry out the intent of those who brought it forward.

Representatives of the pulp and paper industry appeared before the committee with really substantial problems. They provided all the information we needed. It is a capital-intensive industry, and one of the largest employers of labour. Figures provided us showed that 156,400 persons were in the employ of that industry in Canada at or about the time those representations were made. There was an estimate as to the indirect employment in related fields. The estimate for such indirect employment in the mining industry was that for each man directly engaged there are six in various servicing industries. For the pulp and paper industry the estimate, on the basis of the 156,400 directly employed, is that as many as 99,000 or 100,000 persons are indirectly employed. Therefore we are discussing a large segment of employment which can be provided by a healthy pulp and paper industry.

Many have ventured to define the difficulties as a result of which the pulp and paper industry is experiencing great financial problems. Some suggest that over-capacity may be one of the factors, but certainly a very substantial factor is the tax disadvantage to the Canadian pulp and paper industry vis-à-vis its competitors in the various countries of the world in which it has to market its products.

For instance, as is illustrated in the report, in the five years ending with 1969 the United States companies, competitors to Canada—and Canada exports many of these products to the United States—experienced an average tax of 34 per cent of income, taking into account both capital and income. Over the same period in Canada the comparable average was 49 per cent. In Sweden, which is a very substantial competitor, the current annual rate of corporate income tax is approximately 40 per cent, as compared with 51 per cent to 54 per cent in Canada.

Those circumstances illustrate a tremendous tax disadvantage. The question is what can be done? What is available to be done? We received suggestions from the industry itself, which we felt were not at all realistic in the sense that the corporate rate for this industry cannot be set at so many points less than the general corporate rate. In view of this, with the help of our experts, we evolved a group of suggestions which we incorporated in the report.

Just to emphasize again the deteriorating position of the industry, Canada's share of the production of woodpulp in 1950 was 28 per cent, and in 1970 it was 23 per cent. The United States' share in 1950 was 49 per cent, and in 1970 it was 53 per cent. Scandinavia, which is the third real competitor in the field, in 1950 produced 23 per cent, and in 1970, 24 per cent. In the newsprint field, Canada produced 72 per cent in 1950, and 58 per cent in 1970; the United States, 14 per cent in 1950, and 22 per cent in 1970; Scandinavia, 14 per cent in 1950, and 20 per cent in 1970.

The question was: In what way can we approach this matter in order to provide some benefit or relief? We finally evolved a plan which is contained in the report, bearing in mind the acknowledgements made in both the White Paper and the Summary. This has been quoted very often, but it is short, and I think I can quote it again from the report:

> At the risk of repeating itself, your Committee would again quote part of a statement made by the Government in the White Paper Proposals for Tax Reform.
> "6.9—. Going international is frequently necessary to enable Canadian companies to achieve the economies of scale which are otherwise denied them by the relatively small size of the Canadian domestic market. Such companies would find it hard to compete on the international scene if they were subject to more onerous taxes than those which apply to their competitors.—."

The committee, of course, concurred in that statement. Its problem was to work out an answer to it, and it came up with the suggestion that there should be what could be called "earned depreciation".

Honourable senators know that in the mining and petroleum industries there is what is called "earned depletion". Earned depreciation would work along similar lines. For an amount which one might spend in connection with machinery, equipment, et cetera, one could earn depreciation, which would be over and above capital cost allowances, and would be deductible from what might otherwise be one's production profits but which would not reduce those production profits for the purpose of determining capital cost allowances and other write-offs. It would be in addition to accelerated depreciation. In this way we could remain within the limit of the tax structure, and permit companies such as pulp and paper companies to have a greater cash flow by reason of the extra write-off. By so doing we would enable them to generate more substance in cash in order that they might be more competitive in export markets where they must do most of their business.

I omitted to explain that in the sphere of export markets the pulp and paper industry occupies either second or third place. I believe it is a contest between the mining industry and the pulp and paper industry. Which one is on top today and which one will be on top tomorrow, I cannot say. However, they are reasonably close. In 1970 exports of the pulp and paper industry represented 12.54 per cent of total Canadian domestic exports, which indicates that it is a substantial operation.

The committee has gone to some trouble to develop the idea of earned depreciation. The idea is not new. In 1970 I explained an amendment to the Income Tax Act concerning special depreciation, or write-offs, in respect of machinery for manufacturing and processing plants. At that time we provided a base for write-offs which would be 115 per cent of the cost instead of 100 per cent, the idea being that by providing a higher base a company would receive a more substantial write-off, and would thus be encouraged to expand and provide more employment. Therefore, there are precedents for doing the sort of thing recommended here.

The problems of the pulp and paper industry are compounded by reason of the requirements for pollution abatement, which involves heavy cost. The committee felt in respect to an industry as important to Canada as this, and with the problem of pollution being a national problem, some effort should be made to enable the industry to provide the money, and to do whatever is necessary to abate pollution and meet local objectives. The committee felt it is a national problem and has suggested various ways by which it might be dealt with, namely, by more substantial grants and by way of long-term loans. Such long-term loans might carry a provision under which in appropriate circumstances they would become interest-free for a period of time. Perhaps there could be continued or accelerated depreciation in order that such companies might have the funds to deal with this problem.

There was also the element of a logging tax credit. Under the provisions of the bill, the pulp and paper industry receives a tax credit in relation to the logging tax which it pays to those provinces which have such a tax—and there are only a few provinces. However, other provinces levy what might be regarded as a logging tax, but which is not called a logging tax.

The committee felt that there should be some realistic approach to this matter. Its recommendation is that whatever the title of the levy, whether it is called a provincial logging tax or a tax based on the wooded acreage, if it is an obligation which a company must meet to a municipality or a province, the company should qualify for a tax credit.

This would provide reasonably substantial relief to the industry without robbing the various levels of government of revenue. In the opinion of the committee such a step is worthwhile if we are to realize the objective of attempting to re-establish as quickly as possible the pulp and paper industry on a sound basis.

We have said a good deal more in the report. It makes interesting reading, but I will not weary the house with further reference to it at this time.

There are two other points which I should like to mention. One is in relation to general insurance companies. Such companies appeared before the committee and explained some of their problems. General insurance companies are faced with two major problems. One is that many of them come within the description of small businesses. The bill contains limitations, restricting the investment of profits of small businesses to certain types of securities. However, the overall governing restriction on insurance companies is contained in the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, in which there appears to be a difference between what constitutes ineligibility to qualify as a small business, and those things with which a company must comply in order to be in good standing under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. It is the feeling of the committee that some branches of government should get together.

• (1510)

This reminds me of what is sometimes seen happening on city streets where, after the installation of beautiful pavement, the Works Department comes along and digs it up to put in a new sewer, and when this has been done the gas company comes along and tears it up again. A little co-ordination in administration as between the essential requirements which govern the operation of insurance companies, and the definition of "ineligible investments" for purposes of the use to which one puts one's profits in a small business, should harmonize these problems. Surely, any investments which are allowable under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act are not of such a nature that they could impel or be considered a misdirection of funds in a small business operation.

The committee recommends that special provisions be introduced to provide that in the case of a private general insurance corporation, compliance with the investment requirements of governing federal or provincial legislation shall not constitute "ineligible investments".

The other aspect, of course, is the refundable tax for a private company. It will be remembered that a private company is subject to a 33 per cent tax on its earnings, and if it pays out a dividend the tax that is paid is refunded because the recipient then pays tax. Under the British and Canadian Insurance Companies Act a company can only pay out 75 per cent, and then the entitlement to the refundable tax does not qualify as an asset for these purposes. There is no way by which the bill presently deals with this situation in relation to these private general insurance companies so that they can get the full benefit of the refundable tax.

We feel that what is required is some harmony or some co-ordination between the two spheres of power. It should not be too difficult for the Department of Finance to get together with itself in its capacity as the author of the Income Tax Act and in its capacity as having the direction, through the Superintendent of Insurance, of the administration of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. I do not believe that is asking too much, and our recommendation is that this is what should be done.

Honourable senators, I have taken much longer than I had intended. There is only one other comment I should like to make. I read the papers these days, and I guess you do too. We will present only one more report before we might expect the bill, if we are to get it at all, and that will be on technical amendments. We have compiled a list of areas where we feel it is obvious, from looking at both the draftsmanship and what was intended to be covered, that changes are necessary to make for a more intelligent administration of the provisions of the legislation. We were proposing to file that as our third report. It will be a guide for any person who is working on the redrafting of the bill, as and when we may get to that stage.

That will finish our work, and until such time as situations outside our control and outside this chamber are resolved, there will be nothing more that your committee can do. I am sure that the members of the committee are going to feel lost for a few days because they have really been tied to their desks by a determined chairman who decided that this thing had to be done before December. The second report is in. The next one is of a formal nature and we will present it next week. So we have met our deadline pretty well.

It has been tough, but co-operation has paid off. Where we are going from here I do not know at this moment. I have certain ideas, but they are not in a form in which I would care to express them. We shall just wait and see how events develop, and then take the guidance of our own good judgment in the light of those events.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, with the permission of my leader I would like to say a few words. I understand that as of noon today, come hell or high water, this bill is going to be rammed through before the Christmas recess, so all the work that this committee has done to date will certainly be taken into consideration.

In a national newspaper chain a wonderful article appeared recently about the Senate and the value of its committees and their chairmen. However, one reference was omitted. There was no mention of the chairman who has just sat down, the dean of all our chairmen, the honourable Senator Hayden.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Walker: As a member of the committee and as a Tory talking about a Liberal—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Who is the Tory and who is the Liberal?

Hon. Mr. Walker: —and as one who, in the field of law, has been in court with Senator Hayden and, it would seem, always as an opponent, I want to pay this tribute to him. I have never seen a group work as hard as this one worked both in season and out of season and on days when the Senate was not sitting as well as in the evenings. The result was a wonderful job. These two reports, the last of which was tabled today, speak for themselves.

Senator Hayden was not satisfied with just his own direction. He called upon the former Senator Lazarus Phillips for assistance, and he certainly made a great contribution. Senator Hayden also called in a Quebec tax lawyer, Albert Poissant, and the two top tax people in his firm of McCarthy and McCarthy. Even with all this talent, to try and explain this tax bill was a formidable task. How in the name of heaven is the public going to understand this bill if it goes through the way it is presently contemplated it will go through? It was a titanic job just to understand it, not to speak of making amendments to it. Expert witnesses were called from across Canada, and I am proud of the result that the senator has just tabled.

I do not often have a chance to congratulate anyone; I am always criticizing people. Senator Hayden should not be here today; he has been ill. Senator Hayden is a person who can bring, and I have noticed this over and over again, order out of legislative chaos. I have never seen anyone before who could so ably do this and who could dictate amendments to difficult legislation with the same ease in which you and I recite the Lord's Prayer. I have never seen anyone who has such a background, such a vast reservoir of knowledge and common sense to apply to a subject. He usually has a sound answer to difficult problems.

Finally, with all the business interests he has and with his standing at the bar and in the corporate world, I have never seen him allow that interest to interfere with his judgment on any particular problem, nor have I seen the fact that he is a Liberal interfere with his judgment. In fact, he has always appeared to me to be fair.

• (1520)

As but a modest member of the committee, and not an outstanding one, I can nevertheless appreciate the debt every one of us owes to the brilliant work of our chairman, culminating in this report today. The Senate owes him a great debt, and while he is here, in generally good health and well, I want to pay him this tribute. The Government also should be greatly obligated to him. Indeed, I understand the Department of Finance, even as of today, will be considering this report and trying to make use of it in the best way they can. The people of Canada are under a debt to the very distinguished dean of the Senate, and we ought to be very proud of the work he has done in the past and is continuing to do.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, if nobody else wishes to speak at this time I should like to make a few comments, after which I will suggest that we adjourn the debate.

My first comment is along the lines of the remarks made by my dear friend and colleague, Senator Walker. In recent years the Senate has been given a lot of praise for the work of its special committees and of its standing committees undertaking special assignments. I do not want to limit the list, but well deserved praise has been given to special committees of the Senate dealing with poverty, science policy, and growth, employment and price stability. These are only examples. However, on a very immediate and practical basis the Standing Committee of the Senate on Banking, Trade and Commerce has accomplished something that is even more important, and the praise showered on its chairman is well deserved. I have always been interested in the work of this committee for many reasons, because of its terms of reference, and especially because of the way in which its chairman has conducted its business. I join wholeheartedly in what has been said by Senator Walker about the chairman.

Emphasis should also be put on the fact that the work done on this so-called fiscal reform has been opportune and fully adequate. The consideration of fiscal reform is not a recently undertaken task; it has gone on since the Carter Report.

In order to give the Senate some perspective of what we are trying to accomplish in this respect, I have here the statutes of 1917. Chapter 28, "An Act to authorize the levying of a War Tax upon certain incomes", takes up 10 pages of the volume, including the forms. The bill that Parliament is now being invited to pass contains, excluding the regulations and forms, 707 pages. I realize that this total should be halved, because we now have a bilingual form of the bill. I want to be fair and not exaggerate, although sometimes I do despite trying not to. What has happened can be assessed by comparing the bill and the regulations with the act of 1917.

The idea behind this so-called fiscal reform is, of course, to achieve the principle of equality. In our examination of the so-called fiscal reform we have found that equality does not necessarily mean equity. I do not know how voluminous such legislation has been since the act of 1917, but it must be close to the present Bill C-259, and its purpose has been to achieve not necessarily equality but equity. It is not an easy task to throw away all the experience of those 50 or more years and try to achieve simple rules such as those contained in the 1917 act. I think at one time the idea of the Minister of Finance was merely a dream, an ideal. I hope he has discovered from the reaction to the White Paper, from the reports of both houses, and from the work of the appropriate committees of both houses, that there is a wide gap between what one would like to achieve and what ends up being possible for one to achieve.

To simplify and to elucidate, this has been the task and purpose of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, first in publishing its report on the White Paper, part of which has been taken into consideration by the Government and made Bill C-259 a much better bill than it otherwise would have been; secondly, representations made, not only by outside groups or interested parties but also by the Senate and its committees, have resulted in more than 150 amendments to the bill.

Now that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has tabled its first and second preliminary reports, there is this question to be asked:

what has the Government done about report No. 1, and what will it do about report No. 2? We all agree that all the recommendations in the reports have not the same importance, and may not be considered as having the same priority by the Minister of Finance or by the Government. However, it is very important to know, under the special circumstances which are facing the Senate with regard to the eventual adoption of Bill C-259, what the Government or the Minister of Finance, intend to do about it.

• (1530)

The second point I want to raise is a technical one. In this legislation, as in any other legislation, and perhaps more so, many points are left to the discretion of the Government.

In this second report, for instance, there are some regulations governing the mining and petroleum industries. Under the existing legislation, the tax treatment of this industry is contained essentially in the income tax regulations. The regulations are as voluminous—and it is time to use the word—as the bill itself. It now appears that this concept is to be carried forward in Bill C-259.

We made some recommendations in the second report as to what should be done about this industry in particular. The specific reference to this industry is made in clause 65 of the bill, page 155, where the following is set forth:

> 65. (1) There may be deducted in computing a taxpayer's income for a taxation year each such amount as an allowance in respect of an oil or gas well, mineral resource or timber limit, if any, as is allowed to the taxpayer by regulation.

And I find that at the present time it would apply also to the pulp and paper industry. Some of these proposed regulations, which affect the mining and the oil and gas industries, were issued by the Minister of Finance in August 1970, and again on July 6, 1971.

Although our Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee has spent considerable time discussing and evaluating these proposed regulations, we have not so far said anything about the principle of taxation by regulation with regard to this specific problem.

We have done this in other respects. We formed a joint committee of both houses to consider the regulations, but only after the regulations have been enacted—which is something entirely different—and not on a specific reference to proposed regulations for the mining and the oil and gas industries.

I wonder what the Senate feels about giving the Government the right to implement broad ranging tax legislation through the mechanism of regulations passed after the enactment of the bill and over which Parliament has no direct control, when considerable documentation can be provided to support the contention that the spirit and the intent of the proposed regulations pertaining to this bill have already changed, and may again change in the future, before the bill becomes law.

This is an important problem. The report recommends that 25 per cent be allowed by way of depletion, but if the Government decides tomorrow that it will be only 10 per cent, it can so decide without Parliament being consulted. Of course, we can criticize in the joint committee. There is here, in a matter as vital as taxation, a very important problem for the Senate. In any case, I am bringing it to the attention of the Senate for its consideration, before the bill comes to us.

The second point is this. What are we going to do if the Government does not accept the more important recommendations contained in our committee's two reports? I know what everyone has heard that the Government may decide to force the bill through the other place and send it to us by the end of next week. This would mean that we would have the bill for the last full week before Christmas. If nothing has been done about our recommendations and the bill is pushed through the House of Commons, it would not be fair to ask the Senate to rubber stamp the decision of the Government in this respect.

I am not indicating at all what the position will be, because it would be mere speculation, since the circumstances may change before the bill reaches us; but I would like every honourable senator to think about it. We have a very serious responsibility. We have a responsibility to the Canadian people, and we also have a responsibility to the institution to which we belong. I hope we will show in what respect we hold our responsibilities and obligations.

Under the circumstances, and because of the events that may take place today or tomorrow, if no one else wishes to speak now, I will move the adjournment of the debate. If the Leader of the Government wishes to make some comment, I will yield to him with the understanding that I may eventually adjourn the debate.

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, I rise not to discuss the matter in substance, nor to deal with some of the questions that I detect were implied in what the Leader of the Opposition said, but merely to do what the Minister of Finance has already publicly done, that is, to recognize the value of the examination and study made by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, under the chairmanship of Senator Hayden, prior to the Senate being seized legislatively with the bill now before the other house.

Senator Walker has said essentially what we all would wish to say, and what I had proposed to say at a later date, about the contribution made in this instance, as in so many other instances, by the chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee.

Senator Hayden spoke today under considerable disability, because he has not been well. On that account, his performance today—as his performances on other occasions—was nothing but a very great achievement in itself.

• (1540)

The work of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in the examination of the White Paper was constructive and helpful, and its work up to the presentation of the first interim report was of an equally high order. I am sure that this particular report will bear the examination and study which the Minister of Finance and the Government will give it.

I want to say to Senator Hayden that his work in this chamber over a long period of time—longer now than of any other senator—has been distinguished. It has enabled him, as an expert in a particular field, to make a very special contribution, and I want him to know how grateful all of us in the Senate are, and, more particularly, how grateful the Government is, for the attention he and members of that committee have given to this matter.

As I said at the outset, the Minister of Finance has already publicly acknowledged in the other place the committee study that has been made under the chairmanship of Senator Hayden. I want Senator Hayden to know that I concur earnestly and sincerely with what the Minister of Finance has said.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Flynn, debate adjourned.

UNITED NATIONS

TWENTY-SIXTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 44(2), I give notice that tomorrow, Thursday, December 2, 1971, I will call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-sixth Meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations (1971), and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Assembly and the participation therein of the observers from the Parliament of Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Normally this would call for two days' notice, but honourable Senator Haig is giving one day's notice with leave. Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, although Senator Welch had first place on today's agenda, he was kind enough to give way so that Senator Hayden could make his report. I now propose that we revert to Inquiries to enable Senator Welch to make his indictment against the administration of which I happen to be a humble member.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: The agricultural expert.

AGRICULTURE

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT POLICY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Leave having been granted to revert to Inquiries:

Hon. Frank C. Welch rose pursuant to notice:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to certain shortcomings in the agricultural policy of the federal Government.

He said: Honourable senators, now that the great brains of the Senate have dealt for a short time with the tremendous tax bill, I wonder if we can get our minds back to the soil for a few minutes and talk about agriculture. It is not my intention to deal with agriculture as a whole. It is too vast a subject. I should prefer to wait until Bill C-176 comes before this house, if the Government ever has the courage to bring it forward. Today I would ask you to bear with me for a few moments, while I speak briefly about the apple industry and the apple market.

The once great Canadian apple industry is in deep trouble. It is in trouble because it is losing its markets. It has lost its export market, and is presently losing its home market, because the Government is indifferent to the problems of the industry. It is true that some of these problems have cropped up only recently. It is equally true that some of these troubles are of long-standing and that our Government has failed to help in any way.

Imports of concentrated apple juice from Mediterranean countries have been taking over our markets for years because they have been favoured by a policy of almost free entry. They have had an imposition of but a paltry 10 per cent duty.

Free entry of American apples into Canada has long been in effect, but there has been no reciprocal arrangement. In fact, there is now a duty of 21 cents per bushel on Canadian apples entering the United States. Last year we imported over one million bushels of apples from the United States, and we sold to the United States over one million bushels. Such a sale to the United States will be more difficult this year. Moreover, American apples are now underselling Canadian apples in Canadian markets.

Last year, when Canada was having all kinds of trouble disposing of its apple crop, the Government permitted free imports of apples and apple products from Australia, New Zealand, France, South Africa, China, and Japan. But none of these countries will accept Canadian apples. Surely this is a one-sided arrangement. Last year China shipped 1,239,000 pounds of canned apples to Canada; Japan shipped 1,042,000 pounds to Canada. These shipments pretty well took care of the western Canadian market, and even affected the eastern Canadian market.

The same situation applies to the market for Ontario apple juice. Of all the apple juice made in Ontario—and this will floor you—35 per cent is made from imported apple concentrate. This apple concentrate is reconstituted by adding seven and a half gallons of water to each gallon of concentrate. Sometimes there is a strong suspicion that even more water is added. This juice is imported from European countries where growers are heavily subsidized, and it is sold here at prices below our costs. It is shipped here—or should I say dumped on this market—by Austria, Greece, Hungary and Switzerland.

For years the apple grower in Canada has been selling apples for manufacture below cost of production. The Government is sitting by doing nothing while European countries are subsidizing their growers. It is allowing them to use our country as a dumping ground while, in the meantime, this once great industry is going bankrupt.

Honourable senators, if the apple industry is to survive in Canada and give employment to Canadians, then Government policies in respect of international trade in apples must be completely revised—that is, if Canada is interested in the apple industry.

I cannot understand why the Canadian Government should permit fresh apples or apple by-products to be shipped into Canada by Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, China, Japan, France, Bulgaria, Switzerland, Roumania and the United States, if, as is the case in the off-seasons of Australia, China, Japan, South Africa and Brazil, we cannot ship apples to them.

The apple season is the same in Canada and the United States. Although American apples come into Canada duty-free and unhindered, if we wish to ship apples to the United States we must pay a duty of 21 cents per bushel. Thus it would appear that Canada uses apples and apple products at the bargaining table to say: "We allow you to ship apples and apple products to our country practically free, so you must allow us to ship textiles and other goods to you."

• (1550)

Many devious means are used to keep Canadian apples out of foreign markets and strengthen the agreement of the negotiators who would sacrifice the well-being of the apple industry for something with more volume, like textiles, Japanese toys, or Australian lamb. In the attempt to protect so many other industries, our experts surely point out to foreign countries how generous we are to competition where the fruit industry is concerned.

Ian Greenwood, General Manager of B.C. Tree Fruits Ltd., a growers' agency, which has really tried by every possible means to develop export markets, made this statement at the National Apple Conference held in Toronto last January:

> Many of the barriers (imposed against Canadian apples) seem to aid cut-price French apples.

He pointed out that the last time Canada made a significant shipment of apples to Brazil was in 1967-68. The following year the French came in with apples at $3.50 a package, delivered, subsidized under the European Common Market agriculture policy.

To meet that price the British Columbia company, which had been previously selling apples to Brazil, would not be able to pay the growers in that province anything for the fruit and, in addition, would lose $1.45 on transportation, packaging, selling, and storage costs.

In Venezuela, Mr. Greenwood said, the government introduced a system of import licenses and quotas several years ago which allows importers to dictate terms and prices and waive quality consideration. Only French apples get into this market. This market used to purchase 600,000 cases of apples from Canada annually and was an important market for Canadian exporters. Obviously France is subsidizing the movement of these apples.

In other Caribbean markets, French apples are selling at $2.50 or even $3.50 below Canadian prices. Such prices would be impossible without subsidies on both products and freight. Canadian apples are prohibited from entering many possible importing countries on flimsy pretences that would not stand examination. Canada could also adopt such pretences against the importation of fruit from other countries if the Government wished to do it.

Japan bans fruit imports from countries where codling moth exists, but reliable sources claim that Japan already has codling moth. Australia bans Canadian apples because of fire-blight, and refuses to accept research evidence that this disease cannot be transmitted on fresh fruit. Since 1966 South Africa has prohibited the entry of any fruit suspected of being infested with mites or mite eggs. Since Canadian apples had previously been imported into South Africa for 50 years, and since red mites do exist in South African orchards, this barrier is obviously a pretext to protect South African producers.

At the National Apple Conference it was pointed out that we do not seem to have any greater right in our own country's markets than Australia, France, Japan, or even the People's Republic of China. How can the Canadian grower be expected to compete with a country that produces on non-capitalistic principles and will sell at any price for hard currency? It was argued that if, because of foreign political policies, we cannot sell our products in other countries, then the Canadian Government should provide necessary protection to allow us at least our own domestic market.

The apple industry is quickly going down the drain. Employment is falling off. Orchards which once brought thousands of dollars to this country are now being neglected. Trade is being lost, yet the Canadian Government is not making a move to help. By this I mean it is doing nothing to help save this once great industry. Yet the Government is pouring millions of dollars into just about every other industry to provide dubious jobs. It is a policy of dropping the bone for the shadow, of neglecting something real while reaching out to grasp the unsubstantial schemes of promoters.

Honourable senators, let us consider how differently the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, under the Honourable Jean Marchand, operates in its attempts to keep the manufacturing industry healthy. A recent communiqué gives a long list of outright grants of the taxpayers' money to assist in the establishment or expansion of industrial projects, including grants of up to $5,000 for each new job created. It would be much cheaper to provide jobs in agriculture. Government planners should do some rethinking.

The list I refer to starts out with an incentive grant of $216,000 to assist in the establishment of a new footwear plant in Ontario, a modest $2,000 for each new job created.

Another grant is very interesting since it concerns a knitwear promotion in Quebec, and involves the creation of 167 new jobs. I describe the grant of $403,000 to Stage Seven Knitwear of Canada Ltd. as interesting because the textile industry in Canada has many features in common with the fruit industry, particularly in the area of competition from foreign countries where wage rates are low.

Consider this grant in the light of a statement made on October 29, according to a CP despatch, by Howard A. Pippy of Elmira, Ontario, President of the Knitters' Association of Canada. He told the Association's 56th Annual Meeting that the current Canadian knit boom appeared to be limited because of the imports pouring in from more directions than there are winds. I might add that this is a perfect description of the situation in the Canadian apple industry.

Mr. Pippy went on to say that he hoped the federal Government would develop global quotas to bring all low cost imports of textiles and clothing under control. "At stake," he said, "are 95,000 primary textile industry jobs".

So the knitwear industry is in the same position as the apple industry, yet here the Government makes it a grant of $403,000 to finance expansion, and to create 167 new jobs which will not last long, if Mr. Pippy is on the right track, unless the Government can drastically control imports. Surely this is a striking parallel.

A few pages further in the list is an account of a grant to a fabricating metals plant in Moncton, which is for a generous 20 per cent of the alleged capital cost plus $5,000 for each new job created, with no reservations apparently as to how long these jobs must last. It is a long list, with many of the grants inviting scrutiny and criticism, but the final one I mention is really good. It is a grant of $58,000 to a company in Sherbrooke, Quebec, to modernize its carbonated beverage plant. The project will create an estimated two new jobs. Surely, if there is one product that we can well do without it must be carbonated beverage. Apple juice would be a much more healthy drink and, as for creation of new jobs, much less money spent to support the fruit industry would pay off in far more jobs.

I also note that Canada Packers has received several thousands of dollars under this incentive plan, but they state there will be no new jobs. So Canada Packers takes a piece of the cake too but offers no jobs in return. Enough of this waste of money; let's get back to the fruit market—or should I say lack of market.

Canada produces 21,440,000 bushels of apples per year. In 1965 we shipped to the United Kingdom 1,181,800 bushels which amounted to 28 per cent of United Kingdom imports, but each year since 1965 the quota has dropped so that last year we shipped only 412,801 bushels, or 8 per cent of their total imports. In 1965 France exported to the United Kingdom 429,000 bushels, or 10 per cent of their imports. But last year France shipped 2,730,667 bushels to the United Kingdom, or 54 per cent of their total imports.

It should also be noted that the period of time for our marketing opportunities in the United Kingdom tends to diminish each year. In July and August 1969, over one million cartons of Australian apples remained to be sold in the United Kingdom. Last August the dock strike in the United Kingdom resulted in the diversion of over one million boxes of Australian apples to continental ports. Later these were returned to England and sold in competition with early English apples. The consequent over-supply situation, and the heavy losses taken by importers, have dampened United Kingdom importers' interest in Canadian apples. The entry of South African apples is earlier each year, and it is now the month of February. This restricts the sale of Canadian apples late in the season.

The freeing of the Canadian dollar had an adverse effect on all export markets, particularly the United Kingdom. This development, along with an increase in Atlantic freight rates, resulted in increased costs on Canadian apples, even when quoted at last year's prices. Transcontinental rail rates, which mostly affect British Columbia, have increased 30.5 per cent in the last five years, and Atlantic ocean freight rates affecting all provinces have increased by 15 per cent in the last five years.

Honourable senators, in 1963 Canada imported 70,885 bushels of apples, from Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. But in 1970 Canada imported 367,672 bushels from the same countries. Do not forget that Canadian apples are not allowed in any of the three countries named.

[Hon. Mr. Welch.]

Faced with declining outlets in the United Kingdom and the European markets, southern hemisphere countries are looking to North America as an alternative. Apples arriving from southern hemisphere countries are allowed free entry into Canada, without restriction. This is cause for grave concern. Volume arrivals, whether to Canada or the United States, can have a serious effect on the marketing of Canadian apples from controlled atmosphere storage.

Some form of reciprocal trading agreement is an urgent necessity. In the opinion of the Canadian apple industry, the Pacific area offers the best prospect for future marketing development. Japan is the country with the potential which our industry needs. With its 100 million people, Japan has the highest population density in the world. As an emerging superstate, with a gross national production second only to that of the United States and the Soviet Union, Japan has made one of the most remarkable economic recoveries ever recorded. Canada is the primary market for Japanese exports of mandarin oranges. Total shipments thus far this season, valued at $4.25 million, represent 4 million boxes of fruit. This is already in excess of the previous record established in 1969. The Japanese Trade Centre in Toronto has stated that Canadians consume more mandarin oranges than any other country outside Japan. The sale of this bumber crop to Canadians is fully supported by a Japanese Government-sponsored multi-media advertising campaign across our country. This sale of mandarin oranges and its intensive on-market home-government support is allowed in our country, and not a single pound of fresh fruit from Canada is accepted in return.

Japan desperately needs enormous quantities of our natural resources, and it continually seeks increased supplies. No world precedent is involved in our seeking export market assistance. New Zealand, Australia, and the United States are among the countries which are already actively exploring every facet of trade entry into Japan, with their efforts supported by their governments.

The Federal Task Force on Agriculture of December 1969 had little to say regarding the sale of apples. They did say we should look to the south for apple sales, and I suppose this means the United States of America. These men came into the valley in Nova Scotia where our apples are grown and talked to the deputy minister of agriculture for 20 minutes, as I understand from his own words, and then they say we should ship our apples to the United States. This is nonsense.

Over one-third of each annual Canadian apple crop is processed. In 1967 approximately 50,000 cases of solid pack apples were imported into Canada. Two short years later this figure had increased by 60 per cent to 80,000 cases. It should be noted that the impact of this import has resulted in the British Columbia apple processing industry ceasing production of this particular product. Solid pack apples from the People's Republic of China and Japan have virtually taken over the British Columbia market, and the import tide is rapidly encroaching eastward. Japanese solid pack apples are being offered to Nova Scotia at unrealistically low prices. The existing Canadian duty of .01 cent per pound of product is totally inadequate to serve the needs of the Canadian producer.

A supplementary statement by the Apple Committee of the Canadian Horticultural Council to the recent Agriculture Congress stated in part:

> —the importation of apple concentrate into Canada has reached such alarming proportions that in Ontario, for example, it is reliably estimated that at least 35 per cent of the "apple juice" sold is being made from this imported product.

Canada produces from 20 million to 24 million bushels of apples per year. Surely the Government will give this industry some consideration before it is too late. Other countries are taking our trade, mostly through Government support in one way or another. I suggest that a royal commission be set up to investigate the apple industry.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hays, debate adjourned.

COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

PROPOSALS FOR AGREEMENT BETWEEN UNITED KINGDOM AND RHODESIA TABLED

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, I indicated earlier in the day that in answer to the request made by Senator O'Leary I would table copies of a booklet presented to the British Parliament by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs setting forth the proposals for a settlement with Rhodesia. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has tabled this document in the other house. I may say that I had some doubt about the propriety, if that is the proper word, of tabling a document which is of direct concern to two governments and not to this Parliament. However, there can be no doubt as to Canada's interest and concern in this problem. Consequently, it has been decided that the document should be formally tabled, and I now table:

• (1610)

> Copies of a White Paper presented to the British Parliament by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, setting forth proposals for a settlement with Rhodesia. (English text).

Honourable senators, the United Kingdom government announced on November 24 certain proposals for a settlement of the constitutional position of Rhodesia, which include provisions on broadening the franchise, the composition of the legislature, reduction of racial discrimination, a development program, and a test of the acceptability of the proposed settlement through a commission appointed by the United Kingdom government.

The Canadian position has been one of advocating the rapid election of a government broadly representative of all people of Rhodesia. The proposed settlement falls short of that objective. The transitional period towards the attainment of majority rule is not specified in the proposed settlement, and the means of achieving it are extremely complex. This has left us with some concern as to how these arrangements may be implemented. Attainment of the ultimate goal appears dependent on a large element of good will and co-operation, qualities which have not always been present in the policies of the Rhodesian regime.

The Government is well aware that the white minority in Rhodesia is unwilling at present to yield power to the black majority, yet the capacity of the United Kingdom government to influence the situation is somewhat limited. United Nations sanctions have not secured a transfer of power. The alternative of a recourse to force has been dismissed by British governments of different parties.

The British Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Mr. Godber, was in Ottawa on November 27, and he conferred with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Mr. Godber indicated that there were serious disadvantages in the continuation of the status quo. In the period of stalemate there had been political stagnation for the Rhodesian Africans, a drift toward apartheid, isolation from the outside world, and a distortion of economic and social development within Rhodesia. The British Government suggested that these were considerations in their recommendation of a new point of departure.

There may well be serious misgivings on the part of many African governments about these proposals. Their own experience is likely to lead them to recommend independence through majority rule. The Canadian Government strongly supports their advocacy of an end to racial discrimination in all forms, and the realization of full political rights for all Africans. This has been made clear on many occasions in the past at the United Nations, and at meetings of Commonwealth Prime Ministers. The position of Canada is well known.

The British proposals envisage an attempt to assess the views of the people of Rhodesia. A commission is being constituted by the British Government to assess the opinion of Africans in Rhodesia. In the past, the great majority of Africans in Rhodesia have had little opportunity to express their political views, and certainly not on complicated constitutional matters. There are physical limitations on the ability of the commission to carry out its mandate. It appears that the state of emergency will be maintained during the commission's deliberations. The African parties, such as ZAPU and ZANU, will apparently be unable to operate during the period of consultation.

It is the hope of the Canadian Government that irrespective of these limitations on the work of the commission, the commission will be able to ascertain the views of the Rhodesian Africans. We trust that the commission will report not only on the views communicated to it, but also on the adequacy of the consultation process.

We may believe that the proposals fall short of what is desirable but the judgment before the people of Rhodesia will be whether to go on as at present or to accept the new settlement that has been suggested.

Whatever is the outcome of the process of consultation, the Government of Canada and Canadians will continue to be concerned with the attainment of full democracy and social justice for all the people of Rhodesia.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, if the rules permit, I would like to offer a few observations on what has been said by the Leader of the Government. First I wish to thank him for his courtesy in tabling this document, which technically does not belong to the Parliament of Canada, but to those of Rhodesia and the United Kingdom.

He has spoken with great restraint and, I think, with great caution with respect to this document, and that is understandable. Indeed, if I were a member of an administration which over the past two years has been led down the garden path by certain politicians in the United Kingdom, and the violation of its own charter by the United Nations Security Council, into the sanctimonious hypocrisy of using sanctions against Rhodesia, and interfering in the internal affairs of another state, I would not only be driven to caution, but to apology and silence.

I shall not go further at the present time and, indeed, will not say anything more until I have read this document. I do, however, serve notice—perhaps I should say warning—that I shall have certain observations to make with respect to the document. It is clearly a victory for Rhodesia, for Mr. Ian Smith, and a humiliating backdown by people such as Mr. Wilson and others in the United Kingdom. This remark applies also, I might say, to others in this country.

The observations I shall have to offer may not accord with the collective thought of my friends on this side of the house, but perhaps that is a good thing for this side of the house.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, November 25, consideration of the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty in Canada, tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, November 10, 1971.

Hon. Josie D. Quart: Honourable senators, may I add my name to the list of senators who, in glowing tribute, deplored the loss of two distinguished Canadians, Senator Walter Aseltine and Senator Arthur Roebuck. I extend my most heartfelt sympathy to the members of their families.

On a more joyous note, it gives me great pleasure to welcome the five new senators. Living up to their reputations, they will excel in their contributions to the debates of this chamber. It is with pardonable pride that I mention in particular Senator Renaude Lapointe, a Québécoise of outstanding ability. It is extremely rewarding for the feminine element in the Senate to welcome with open arms another lady senator.

Honourable senators, at last the long-awaited poverty report has been tabled in the Senate. Within hours the proposal for a guaranteed annual income became a controversial issue, not merely in the news media but also in Government circles. However, whether or not the recommendation for a guaranteed annual income is accepted by the Government, Senator Croll deserves our congratulations. Fully realizing, as a member of the Poverty committee, that expressions of appreciation may labour repetition, nevertheless it is pleasantly imperative that I add my congratulations to the deserving chorus of praise already extended to Senator Croll.

Senator Croll was the driving force behind the committee and deserves high marks for his indomitable courage in standing by his guns despite numerous trials and tribulations, not the least of which were provided by the four so-called renegades who broke their oath of secrecy by publishing an article in the June edition of The Last Post, using research material which was the property of the committee. Their widely-read article threatened the credibility of the committee's official report.

I regret the fact—and this might be due, perhaps, to my Irish temperament—that most members of the committee did not have an opportunity of meeting those four employees and of having a round-by-round confrontation with them, a real Irish donnybrook, before they resigned.

The Poverty report backs the concept of a guaranteed annual income, but according to recent statements of the Prime Minister, and of the Minister of Health and Welfare Mr. Munro, its implementation seems several years away, if ever.

There are numerous definitions of poverty. It has been said that economic privation alone does not adequately define the tragedy of poverty. An article in the Evening Times and Globe, published in Saint John, New Brunswick, on Tuesday, August 4, 1970 during the committee's hearings, defined poverty in the following imaginative way:

> What is poverty? Poverty for the recently released prisoner is no job to go to, no money to spend, no one to help. Poverty for the store owner is the threat of broken windows and the fear of talking. Poverty for a tenant is three weeks without water before the landlord has the plumbing fixed. Poverty for a little child is a bag of potato chips and a bottle of pop for dinner and supper. Poverty for the old person is watching your neighbourhood disintegrate before your eyes. Poverty for a family is porridge for every meal the last week before the welfare cheque arrives. Poverty for the policeman is having an opinion, not being free to express it, and being blamed for the whole mess. Poverty for some people is the inability to realize that all these things exist.

Who can claim to be an expert on poverty? Only the poor can tell us what it is like to live on handouts. The committee had referred to it, in almost every place it visited, the quotation from the Bible that the poor will always be with us.

The Senate committee, in focusing attention on the plight of the poor, has perhaps created an incentive for the underprivileged to organize. The committee has been accused of opening a can of worms by holding its meetings across Canada. So what? Be that as it may, the poor in Canada are no longer silent and weak. They have become vocal, and have begun to fight for what they believe to be their rights.

Unfortunately the poor do not always know what their rights are or where to apply for information. Central information bureaus are essential, therefore, in order that the poor will not be given the run-around.

At the present time there are over 350 poor people's organizations in Canada whose membership includes unemployed men and women, welfare recipients, deserted mothers and wives, citizens' groups, low-income groups, pressure groups, university graduates, the very young and the very old. Such groups are frequently referred to as "poor power". We can thank our stars that most of these protesting groups express their feelings in noisy demonstrations and so far have not resorted to violence, even though their remarks are at times bitter and insulting.

What would happen if violence were to become the final resort of these "poor power" groups? The poor are now testing their power. What will happen if their protests are ignored? One shudders to think of what might happen, and one wonders what their reaction is to recent statements of the Prime Minister who was recently reported in the press as saying:

> All Canadian unemployed could find themselves short-term jobs if they were willing to do work which did not answer precisely to their hopes.

One wonders also what their reaction is to the statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, when commenting on the recommendation of the Poverty committee for a guaranteed annual income. I am quoting from page 9901 of the House of Commons Debates of November 25, 1971:

> "—that guaranteed annual income poses, to me at least, some very serious questions that have to be answered. I am not as sure as I once was that it is the panacea that many have claimed it is, and I think another look should be taken at it. One of the things we should look at is the effect it has on incentive. We should also look at the level at which the guaranteed annual income should be paid and whether or not we are just institutionalizing poverty.
> The advantages of such a proposal must be closely examined. One of the best ways to find out the answers to some of these questions is to undertake experimental projects. Many of the provinces agree with this. Provinces of all political complexions think that we should have experimental demonstration projects in the guaranteed annual income field and that over the course of the next year or so we might find concrete answers to some of these questions.

Senator Croll claims that the Government can always find money when they want to, and must do so in order to implement a guaranteed annual income. Personally I am not qualified to judge whether a guaranteed annual income is the answer, or whether the present welfare system should be revamped. However, one thing is certain: that with all the chorus of do's and don'ts, and "it should or it should not" be implemented, one is likely to become very confused.

Briefs were presented by many cities and municipalities stating that welfare costs had stretched their budgets to the edge of bankruptcy, that some cities and municipalities were being forced to choose between welfare payments, public schools, and other essential services. On the other hand, welfare recipients complain that they do not receive enough assistance to sustain a decent way of life. But those taxpayers who foot the welfare bill in this era of inflation and rising taxes claim it is all a question of dollars and cents, that the money must come from somewhere, and that we all know that it must eventually come from the already over-burdened taxpayers. Some businessmen are beginning to ask if it would not be a wise idea to have a "guaranteed annual customer" before they start getting too involved with the guaranteed annual income.

• (1630)

An editorial in the Montreal Gazette of September 8, 1970, stresses this point and I quote the last two paragraphs:

> What has yet to be recognized in Government is that the first condition for eliminating poverty is sustained real growth in the economy. Without it none of the measures that follow can succeed. Of what use is a program of slum clearance if the funds aren't available for it? Of what use are retraining programs for the chronically unemployed if there is no employment for their new skills?
> Real growth needs to be fuelled by massive and continuing infusions of capital. If that capital is taxed away growth is slowed. That's the direction to impoverishing the many, not enriching the few.

When the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Munro, poured cold water on the guaranteed annual income plan, his two reasons for not accepting it were the following: First, the cost to the taxpayer, and, secondly, that it might undermine the incentive to work. Mr. Munro was echoing a stand taken earlier by the Prime Minister.

But Senator Croll is a recognized authority on welfare and he knows all the answers. Besides, he is a fighting man to be reckoned with. And Senator Croll answers these objections with, "Of course the Government can afford a guaranteed annual income—of course they say they cannot afford it. Governments keep backing away from programs; they have done it for 40 years." The Prime Minister and Mr. Munro have not heard the last of Senator Croll's persuasive arguments.

The challenge is on, and the question is: Which side will win?

At this point I quote two paragraphs from a recent article on the Poverty report by Charles Lynch entitled "Will they Listen?"

> Will the ruling class, which in the Canadian context means the middle class majority, listen to the diagnosis of the senators? And, having listened, will they be willing to foot the increased bill, granting Senator Croll's point that the six billion dollars a year we put into welfare now is money down the drain?
> Or will they agree with Welfare Minister Munro that the Croll proposals would cost too much and might further undermine the incentive to work among Canadians? Much as reformer Munro would like to side with reformer Croll, political realities prevent him from doing so; it is at once a miracle and a tragedy that in Canada, the poor constitute a minority.

I am inclined to agree with Senator Macdonald, Senator Cook and Senator Sparrow that the present welfare system has not entirely outlived its usefulness. Many of the criticisms contained in the Poverty report are justified, but surely the present system could be revamped, for the time being, even if a new concept of welfare is necessary, and urgently needed. Since the federal Government will not implement the guaranteed annual income—at least not in the foreseeable future—then we are at an impasse, and the other alternative is to try to find ways and means to improve the present welfare structure.

I would like to quote here a paragraph from Senator Sparrow's speech on poverty:

> Another great problem arises with those who are prepared to take any type of job in order to get off welfare. There were many such individuals, who found that when they started work their welfare was reduced 100 per cent, dollar for dollar. However, the great sin in the system is that when they lose that job for any reason there is a time lag before welfare payments are restored. This period varies from area to area and province to province, from ten days to more than a month, because of the red tape involved in re-applying and being restored to the welfare role. If a welfare recipient were ambitious enough to obtain employment he would find that upon termination of that employment he would lose income for the length of that time lag. What type of incentive is there for those on welfare to obtain employment when they know that their total loss would amount to perhaps one month's income? There are not many in Canadian society who can afford to lose a month's income, but these people are expected to do so.

I ask: Why is it not possible to change our present welfare system whereby recipients could take part-time or full-time jobs and declare truthfully the salary earned to the welfare officer? The amount earned, in my opinion, should not be deducted from the welfare cheque. Let the persons receive welfare payments in addition to their salary for two or three months in order to pay their bills. Then, if the person is kept on the job, he or she could be taken off the welfare list. What a saving that would be to the taxpayer!

It is difficult to blame the poor for trying to find part-time employment to pay their bills and to hide this fact from the welfare officer, but if the poor person is caught "moonlighting", as I believe they call it, the welfare payments are cut off, perhaps for months. It is a vicious circle and something should be done to remedy it.

Mr. Ruben Baetz, Executive Director of the Canadian Welfare Council on Social Development, has some rough criticisms for the guaranteed annual income. He said the plan guaranteed "poverty" not "income", and he attacked the guaranteed annual income as worse than the existing system which, he said, at least tried to pay according to need.

In the Montreal Gazette of November 15, 1971, the Prime Minister was reported as stating:

> All Canadian unemployed could find themselves jobs if they were willing to accept work which did not answer precisely to their hopes. There are so many jobs which are not filled because on the one hand people live in a free society and thus nobody can force them to do anything, and on the other hand because various programs of social assistance are there to help them in case of need.

Perhaps that is true, but as Senator Cook reminded us, under the present system the unemployed and their families may be as well off in the long run on welfare payments.

Just what is the best way to help the poor? It is beyond denial that the obvious remedy for poverty is more money and more jobs. To strengthen my belief, I quote from the Daily Gleaner of Saint John:

> The best way to remedy poverty is to provide jobs for all who will work at them. And that can only be done by letting private enterprise be free, not handcuffed to government controllers. Standards of living are bound to rise in a sound economy based on lower taxes and business incentives.

• (1640)

Then there is this paragraph from the Atlantic Herald:

> One can't help but wonder whether the application of an equal effort and an equal amount of money to the provision of jobs across the nation might not solve the unemployment problem and in the long run reduce the welfare bill to tolerable levels.
> For provision of jobs in itself guarantees incomes. And if the hundreds of thousands of jobless could be provided with employment, it is a certainty that the numbers who would still require assistance would be reduced markedly, and the welfare roles would be cut dramatically. A switch in philosophy from welfare to jobs might well be worth considering.

As well as its Opportunity for Youth program, perhaps the Government should consider setting up a program for opportunities for the poor, to help the poor to help themselves. In this connection I am thinking of the Maison du Chômeur in Montreal, which is now a little more than a year old. It started out in a rented flat on St. James Street West. Now it has expanded to a group of stores centered in its own building. At first only unemployed men applied for jobs, but now there are about fifteen to twenty women who are working in a boutique, which is a basement that has been converted into a workshop. I understand that this is the first of its kind in North America. The dresses, coats, and suits that have been donated to the Maison du Chômeur are sold for as low as five cents each, so that women and men who cannot afford store prices can clothe themselves and their children. Maison du Chômeur, which has replaced charity for many jobless, is well worth watching.

In the Gazette today I read an article headed "Anti-poverty association holds open house in Verdun", which said:

> More than 10,000 welfare recipients in Verdun have a new place to take their queries about the city's often baffling welfare system.

It goes on to refer to legal aid, and says that even a doctor is co-operating with them.

Before concluding, I wish to express my best wishes to Senator Edgar Fournier for a complete recovery and a return to his usual good health. Senator Fournier was invaluable as deputy chairman of the committee, especially at our meetings in areas where French was essential to conduct the meeting. After Senator Fournier became ill, Senator Carter became Senator Croll's "good man Friday" in working on the report, and he was devotion itself.

Senator Michaud very kindly accompanied us to the Bathurst area and Tracadie, when three of the committee members went there and we needed someone to help out with the French.

Two members of our staff need special mention, Mr. Fred Joyce and Mr. Charles Askwith. No one could have shown more consideration to all members of the committee, and particularly to the three women senators. They were courtesy and efficiency personified.

All in all, it was a wonderful experience and a privilege to have been a member of the Poverty Committee.

I have seen and have been moved to tears by the many unfortunate human beings caught in the frustration and degradation of slum housing, hunger and the ravages of poverty, and at times it was difficult to go to sleep at night while spending many hours thinking of these poor people. I hope the many sacrifices that Senator Croll and the members of the committee have made in time and effort will not be in vain. The Government should not simply shelve the report but should give it the serious consideration and urgent priority it deserves.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Langlois, debate adjourned.

CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the names of Messrs. Gibson, Hogarth, Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo), Prud'homme and De Bané have been substituted for those of Messrs. Dupras, LeBlanc (Rimouski), Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi), Stewart (Cochrane) and Laflamme on the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: What is going on with that committee? I am really worried, honourable senators, about the frequent changes which are made in the representation of the other place on this joint committee. I will say that the work of the committee has not been helped by these frequent changes. Some members come in one day, make a decision on one question and vanish. Someone else joins the Committee the next day and takes another attitude. This results in real confusion. In my opinion we should protest these frequent changes.

Hon. Mrs. Quart: As a member of that committee, may I inform honourable senators that changes in committee memberships do not have to be approved by the House of Commons as they are in the Senate. They have three Whips and they simply arrange for the necessary changes, sometimes only 20 to 30 minutes before a committee meeting takes place.

I say with pardonable pride that the ten members of the Senate who are on the joint committee are always on time for the meetings and our attendance record is much better than that of the joint committee members from the other place.

The Hon. the Speaker: I have no doubt that the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition and of the honourable Senator Quart will be read as usual with the greatest interest by the members concerned in the other place.

RULES OF THE SENATE

SPEAKER'S RULING ON POINT OF ORDER RESERVED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators will recall that a point of order was raised last week by Senator Grosart. I was hoping to be able to give my ruling on it today, but I must postpone doing so until next week.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Douglas D. Everett, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented the following report of the committee, to which was referred Supplementary Estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1972, and asked that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of today and form part of the permanent record of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that this report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of today and form part of the permanent record of this house?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see Appendix pp. 1554-57.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Everett: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Senator Kinnear, that this report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Leopold Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, December 7, 1971, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

At this stage I would inform the house that it is expected that on Tuesday evening we will consider Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1972.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I am not too clear on this. I understand that the supplementary Estimates have been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, so it is not a bill we will be dealing with.

Hon. Mr. Langlois: No, it is the report of the committee.

Motion agreed to.

UNITED NATIONS

TWENTY-SIXTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Hon. J. Campbell Haig rose pursuant to notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-sixth Meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations (1971), and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Assembly and the participation therein of the observers from the Parliament of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, pursuant to notice given yesterday I wish to call the attention of this house to the Twenty-sixth Meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations, 1971, during the week of October 25 to October 29.

It was my privilege to have been selected as one of the observers to this meeting, and I appreciated it very much.

This week was the most momentous in the 25 years of the United Nations by the introduction of the People's Republic of China as members of the Security Council and of the Assembly and the exclusion of Taiwan. This is the first time in the history of this association that a lifelong member has been excluded. The vote was held on Monday, October 25, and there was a violent eruption by certain of its members, as reported in the newspapers and news magazines. The reason for the passing of this resolution has not yet been exactly explained, but the effect is a change in the direction of the Assembly and the Security Council. It means that the great powers of Russia, Great Britain, and the United States will not be dominant factors in the work of the Assembly or the Security Council.

As explained by Senator Desruisseaux on November 25 last, the format of our attendance was similar to his. We were briefed every morning on the work coming up that day in the plenary session or in committees. Every morning we received also a précis of the preceding day's activities in each of the committees or the plenary session. This is not like our Hansard, but it gives the result of the work done by the committees or the General Assembly.

• (1410)

The staff of the Canadian mission to the United Nations is very efficient, well informed, courteous and knowledgeable. The councillors at the Canadian mission are allocated to different committees and the delegates or the councillors speak at the committee meetings.

I would here advise honourable senators, if they do not know it as yet, that the state is the member of the General Assembly, not the government. Regardless of the political nature of the government of the country, it is the state that is the member. When it is realized that the Assembly consists of 131 nations, large and small, each member having one vote, one can imagine the changes that are taking place in the world today.

In conclusion, I should like to compliment our Government for sending down observers from both the Senate and the other place. I would suggest that one week, or five working days, is not sufficient time in which to understand the nature and work of the United Nations. As observers we had a great insight into the work of this world body. The pace is hectic, very political—much worse than in this place—and I think it will be some time before we know the reason for the failure of the position taken by United States towards the admission of the People's Republic of China and the exclusion of Taiwan.

Again may I thank the Government for sending me to the United Nations as an observer for this week.

The Hon. the Speaker: Unless there is another honourable senator who would like to speak on this inquiry, it will now be considered as having been debated.

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, I cannot stress too much what the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Flynn) mentioned to me a short while ago—the importance of senators who have indicated their intention to speak on a particular item being in the chamber. At the moment we are in a situation on two items where two senators who intend to speak are not present. In all probability they assumed that the item on which Senator Haig has just spoken would take a little longer than it has. Because of the absence of those who are to follow, our work is consequently being held up. So I may take possibly five minutes or so—in the hope that these senators will be apprised of the situation and be in the chamber—to say to Senator Haig that we are grateful for the report he has made about the General Assembly which he attended as an observer. We are grateful as well to Senator Desruisseaux for the report he made about ten days ago. He likewise attended the current General Assembly as an observer.

It may be recalled that at the first General Assembly of the United Nations—the first part of which was held in London in 1945 and the second part in New York in the fall of that year—the Canadian delegation was an all-party delegation. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, the then Prime Minister, was the head of the delegation. In addition to Mr. Mackenzie King and me as members of the ministry, there was the then Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party in the other place, Mr. John Bracken and Mr. Coldwell, Leader of the Co-Operative Commonwealth Confederation as full delegates.

In the second General Assembly Mr. Bracken—and I had no quarrel with this—took the view that other parties should not go as delegates, because this would put a restraint, he thought, on them. It would impair or restrict their right of criticism of government policy as enunciated at the Assembly of the United Nations.

Therefore, from 1947 on, there were no all-party delegations at the United Nations General Assembly.

This feature of only a government delegation at the General Assembly of the United Nations was followed in the case of Mr. Diefenbaker. Indeed, Mr. Pearson, the Leader of the Liberal Party at that time, concurred in the view that Mr. Bracken had taken in 1947 with regard to his party's role and status at subsequent meetings of the General Assembly.

Honourable senators, this does not mean that other parties have not contributed to the work of Canadian delegations, but it does mean that they contribute in another way. I think that those senators who go as observers—as well as members of the House of Commons who go as observers as opposed to being delegates—find their experience as observers a useful one. Some members of the House of Commons have gone as full delegates. There is no reason why senators could not go as full delegates. I have already suggested to my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that he might find it possible to do what I was able to do in two instances.

It is good for us to have these reports from senators. The reports that we have had from Senator Haig and Senator Desruisseaux give us an opportunity to recognize that while the United Nations has its deficiencies it also has its great advantages and its great potential. We must do all we can, in my judgment, to preserve the integrity and increase the potential use of the world security organization.

Now, honourable senators, I happily note that those senators who were going to carry on the business of the day are here. They have discharged their important public functions outside this chamber and they are now with us to discharge their functions here.

• (1420)

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I understand that it is expected that Senator Forsey will speak this afternoon. May I assure the Leader of the Government that the time has been well spent during the interval we have been waiting for Senator Forsey. It is to be noted that the record will be complete because of the history given by Senator Martin of our representation at the United Nations.

I should like to recall a suggestion I made some years ago to the effect that all members of both houses should have, by the institution of some kind of system, occasion to attend the meetings of the United Nations. Further to that I would suggest to the leader that this should now be considered by the Government. No one sitting in this house or the other place should be deprived of the valuable experience of being an observer for at least a week at these meetings of the United Nations. In fact, according to Senator Haig, two weeks would be more appropriate as one week would not be entirely sufficient.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I fully agree with you on that subject.

PENITENTIARIES

CENSORSHIP OF MAIL—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to draw to the attention of the Senate a matter that certainly affects my privilege, if not the privilege of every senator. I find that I must again rise on a question of privilege pertaining to the matter of mail addressed to senators by inmates in our penitentiaries. This mail, allegedly privileged and confidential, is not to be subjected to the usual censorship practised by the Canadian Penitentiaries Service.

Yesterday I received a large envelope from Dorchester Penitentiary. It was mailed in Dorchester on November 30. I received it in the Senate on December 1. The envelope contained 13 sealed, individually addressed letters carrying the Government frank on the upper right-hand corner. They were all properly addressed to me and sealed; however, I found that these letters had been written to me between November 16 and November 28. In other words, these letters were held in the penitentiary for some unknown reason, although I have my suspicions about the reason. They were held between November 16 and November 30. That is an unnecessary delay and a breach of the privilege extended to the inmates and certainly to me. I suggest that the two letters written on November 16 could quite conceivably have contained important information or a request requiring my urgent attention. Yet, as a result of someone's actions within the penitentiary, I was precluded from receiving those letters until December 1.

[Hon. Mr. Martin.]

I bring this matter to the attention of the house and particularly of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Martin) in order to ask what right, title or authority penitentiary officials have for interfering with the free flow of mail to me from these inmates.

On a prior occasion I brought this matter to the attention of the Government. At that time I was assured that the regulations would be adhered to strictly. I should point out that those regulations take on an added significance in the light of our current inquiry into the parole system in Canada. These men must have, and we have promised them, access to their senators on a private and confidential basis, and therefore I appeal to the Government Leader to make certain that these letters and privileged mail either from inmates to their senators or from senators to inmates remain privileged and that no one interferes with the free flow of that mail.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Honourable senators, I shall certainly give the fullest consideration to what Senator Hastings has just said and I shall pass it on to my colleague for his immediate attention.

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty in Canada, tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, 10th November, 1971.—(Honourable Senator Langlois).

Hon. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the honourable Senator Bonnell do speak now in place of the honourable Senator Langlois?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Bonnell: Honourable senators, I should like first of all to thank you all for the welcome I was given on my entry into this chamber two weeks ago. It is a great honour and privilege for me to become a member of this house, and to be so warmly welcomed by such distinguished ladies and gentlemen. I should like to thank especially Senator Inman and Senator Philips for their kind references to me.

At this stage I would ask the indulgence of His Honour the Speaker in the event I should unwittingly contravene any of the rules of the Senate. I am sure all honourable senators will understand that for a new member it is quite difficult to learn all the rules immediately.

Honourable senators, speaking now to the subject under discussion, let me say that I believe that this great country, Canada, owes a debt of gratitude to Senator Croll and his committee for the tremendous job they have done in producing this report on poverty. I do not agree with all that is contained in the report, but that does not mean that the report itself is not the result of hard work on the part of the committee. One of its basic results is that the problem of poverty has been placed squarely before the Government and the people. It has caused them to realize that poverty constitutes a major problem in this country. In fact, if Senator Croll and his committee did no more than that they would have made a huge contribution to Canada.

I think, after reading the report on poverty, that we really have not decided yet what poverty is. I notice that the terms of reference of the committee required it to define poverty. In the report I read many different opinions by the committee as to what other people thought poverty was all about, but I could not discover which the Senate committee adopted in reaching its conclusions. It is my contention that before a problem can be resolved it must be identified.

• (1430)

It is also suggested in the report that heretofore the Government of Canada has looked upon poverty as a symptom, but now it should be treated as a disease. After reading the report I came to the conclusion that the committee considered poverty as another symptom and still did not got down to the disease, because I could not find any definition of the causes of poverty. Unless we know what we are dealing with, and its causes, it is difficult to find a solution.

I sometimes think that the committee had a notion before it started its investigation that the answer to poverty was a guaranteed annual income and it attempted to prove this supposition. I am not convinced that the guaranteed annual income is the answer at this time. I believe that the basic problem facing Canada today with respect to poverty is to rejuvenate the economy. I believe we must control inflation and make sure that the unemployment rate is below 4 per cent. When these goals are achieved many of the problems related to poverty will solve themselves.

We will not be without poverty, so will need special consideration for it as such. Perhaps in the not-too-distant future—and it may be within this decade—a guaranteed annual income will become a necessity. I do not think, however, that it as such will cure poverty in this country.

A guaranteed annual income will cost the taxpayers of this country large sums of money, which I am not convinced the economy can afford at this time. I am also not convinced such funds could solve the problem even if we could afford them.

I can think of a young lady in my area with a family of three. She raised them well, but she was poor. They had a very happy home. She and her husband got along well together. The children seemed to receive a basic education, but they were always poor until finally, one lucky day in Ireland, her horse came in first and she won $55,000, so she had money in her hands. She did not, however, have the basic education and training to know what to do with it, and within a year she lost her husband to another woman. Within another year three of her sons became alcoholics, and the next year she was back on the welfare rolls looking for assistance from the government. Money was not an answer to her problems, and is not the answer to all problems.

I agree with the report in respect to the line used as a poverty line. This is certainly something that we should endeavour to accomplish. The income of all lower-income workers should be raised to the standard of a poverty line.

It is also my opinion that even with a guaranteed annual income many would have great additional needs. Another young lady in my area comes to mind. She was injured in a car accident and is a paraplegic, paralyzed from the waist down. To put her on a guaranteed annual income comparable to that paid to others who are well would not be fair. This young lady needs special wheelchairs, nursing care, medicine, and special this and that. In those respects the Canada Assistance Plan serves her much better than would a guaranteed annual income. Her special needs can be recognized under that plan.

I believe also that a guaranteed annual income, in spite of the views of some honourable senators, will tend to induce laziness. I do not think that a 70-30 split is sufficient to encourage people to work. At the present time senior citizens over 65 years of age receive a guaranteed income supplement, but this involves a 50-50 split of additional earnings. For every two dollars they earn they lose one from their pension. Many of these people refuse to work in the face of this loss of 50 per cent of their earnings, and continue to live on the guaranteed income supplement. Therefore, if we apply a 70-30 split, 30 cents for every dollar they earn, to this other group, I do not think there would be too much encouragement for them to work and continue to better their positions.

I believe this country and its successive governments since 1945 have made tremendous strides in the fight against poverty. I can remember when the health grants were established in 1948. Previous to that there was not too much in the way of health and welfare benefits in Canada. Since then we have instituted many programs, such as the Family Allowances and Youth Allowances. The Old Age Security Act, Old Age Assistance Act, the Unemployment Assistance Act, the Disabled Persons Act, the Blind Persons Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, the Medical Care Act, the Canada Assistance Plan, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, the Canada Pension Plan, and the new amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act represent tremendous strides in the social and welfare program in this country. The amendments now put forward to the Income Tax Act provide for the payment of lower taxes by the lower income groups, which will be another boon to the economy of the poor and the working poor. I do not know whether it is a good thing to place a guaranteed annual income in the hands of the federal Government. I believe that the economy of the provinces and their rights in the field of health, welfare and education should remain with the provinces and should be administered by them.

Perhaps the best thing that the federal Government can do to assist the poor and eliminate poverty in this country is to enable faster and greater annual growth of our gross national product. We need an annual increase of somewhere in the vicinity of 5½ per cent to 7 per cent. I believe that we must do what we have done in the past few months with regard to unemployment. We must offer incentives for people to work by means of industrial loans to provinces and muncipalities to encourage the implementation of both winter and summer work and provide year-round employment.

In order to do this we must lower the unemployment figures to below 4 per cent. The federal Government should consider providing greater support under the Canada Assistance Act. Under the present 50-50 arrangement, many of the have-not provinces cannot afford to take full advantage of the act. That is why there are so many poor, would-be poor, and working poor in some provinces. A greater amount of assistance should be made available to enable such provinces to participate to the fullest extent in the advantages of the Canada Assistance Act.

The federal Government might consider paying up to 75 per cent of the cost of welfare and assistance under the Canada Assistance Plan, and do more than they presently do for the have-not provinces.

There is no reason why welfare should be treated any differently from health. In the sphere of health the federal Government participates in hospital insurance, paying 25 per cent of the cost of the national average and 25 per cent of the cost of the provincial average. With the have-not provinces this works out to better than 50 or 60 per cent. For example, in Prince Edward Island approximately 70 per cent of the cost of medical care is paid by the federal Government. Over 60 per cent of the cost of hospital insurance is paid by the federal Government. The federal share is based on a formula whereby the national and provincial average is taken into consideration.

The federal Government should look at these matters as they affect the have-not provinces, and provide those provinces with some financial support to enable them to look after their poor.

The Canada Assistance Act should be expanded to take into consideration provincial day-care centres and homemaker services. Manpower training programs throughout the country should be expanded so that those on low incomes, and those who are handicapped or who have not been part of the labour force, can take part in them and fit themselves for some type of employment.

The housing program of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has made tremendous strides in the past few years. The minister concerned must feel quite proud of what his department has done in the way of providing low rental housing and housing for senior citizens, and in providing other types of hostel care.

In Prince Edward Island we are encouraging people on low incomes to obtain their own homes by means of grants. If they have an income of less than $4,000, the provincial government will give them a grant of $4,000 to use as a down payment to CMHC on the purchase of a new home. Unless this housing program is continued and promoted, I do not believe that we shall be able to solve the problem of poverty.

The first thing needed by the poor is better housing, away from the ghettos and the slums to areas where the majority of people live, to enable them to mix and mingle with those with higher incomes. They need houses of which they need not feel ashamed, and into which their children can invite other children. Children who live in slum areas or in poor rural areas feel ashamed to invite other children into their homes. They feel a sense of inferiority when they meet other children. Expansion of the housing program is one of the greatest things that this country can do to discourage poverty.

The program undertaken by the federal Government this fall and last summer to provide work for young people should be continued through the winter months. It should be a 12-month program, and not be confined to any particular time of the year.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion has done a good deal, and can do a great deal more, to combat poverty. Despite criticism of the department, some of the have-not provinces would have a lot more poverty were it not for the efforts of this department. In my province alone unemployment often runs as high as 15 per cent, but the unemployment figure this fall and so far this winter has been less than 3 per cent. This has been due to the department's program. This percentage is the lowest in the history of Prince Edward Island since Confederation. Much of it is due to the assistance given by DREE and by CMHC. Employment has been made available, and people have been provided with better homes and have a feeling of independence. They feel that they are as good as the next fellow.

I would suggest that the Canada Assistance Act should make provision that when people return to work they will not immediately lose their pension or welfare allowances. They should not be discouraged from returning to work. They should be allowed to continue drawing assistance under the Canada Assistance Act for three or four months after getting a job. This would give them time to become adjusted and pay some of their bills, and generally to become real citizens and contributors to the economy. For a while after returning to work they sometimes cannot afford transportation or even sufficient food to keep them going until their first pay cheque comes in. As a result they become discouraged and quit their jobs and go back on welfare. We need an incentive program under the Canada Assistance Act to encourage them to work.

I would like to think that the federal Government might do more by way of cost-sharing and rehabilitation programs; rehabilitation for people now on welfare as well as for those who might find themselves on the welfare roll if something is not done in the near future.

I am one of those who believe that no one understands the people of a community better than those who live in it. When welfare powers are placed with the central government, immediate contact is lost with the individuals who are eligible to receive welfare benefits. This is one reason why I believe this program should not be a federal one. It should be on a provincial basis so that the needy can get satisfaction without difficulty, without having to appeal to Ottawa.

I believe that in order to implement a program to deal with poverty you must see it, live it, and understand it. Then you try to find what can be done about it. The Special Senate Committee on Poverty has done a tremendous job. It has isolated many cases of need, pointed to many of the problems and difficulties, and recommended solutions to some of the problems, but I have not found in this report the real causes of poverty itself. I feel that poverty is a welfare problem, a health problem, and an educational problem, the three being rather intermingled. It is difficult to find employment if you do not have a basic education or training in a specific area. It is difficult to find employment if you are handicapped or unhealthy. How you can separate health, welfare, and education is unknown to me.

The cost of health, welfare, and education is getting so astronomically high that taxpayers can no longer afford to expand these programs. Perhaps we should set up another Senate committee to look into the cost of medical care, of welfare, and of education, to determine whether the budgets for programs in these areas could not be brought into line with what the country can afford. If the cost for these programs continues to escalate we will find that rather than eliminating poverty we will be increasing the numbers on the welfare rolls. If some are too highly taxed, they may end up on welfare.

It seems to me that we need to consider the whole program of health, welfare, education and rehabilitation. We should aim at prevention rather than simply passing out cheques on a guaranteed annual income basis and hoping that the problem will disappear. I do not believe it will. I believe that the day is coming when a guaranteed annual income will become a necessity, but that will not wipe out poverty; it will only give the poor a bite to eat.

I got the impression from this report that the committee did not define "poverty", but instead came up with a poverty line and suggested a guaranteed annual income to bring individuals up to that line. Is this going to solve poverty? I do not believe it will. There are people in this country today who have a good income and yet they are poor because they do not know how to manage their money. Other people are so handicapped that they need a greater income in order to live with their problems. The answer for the future could be a guaranteed annual income, but at the present time the greatest need in this country in order of priorities—and we must look at priorities—is to get the economy rolling, to get unemployment figures down, to broaden the tax base, and to expand existing programs. We should look at the guaranteed annual income as a possibility for the future.

I believe we must maintain the economy of the provinces. The federal Government's contribution in this regard can be by way of research, by way of education, and by way of encouragement to the provinces to use the Canada Assistance Act to its full benefits. We should have special grants for the have-not provinces. Perhaps it could be set up on the same basis as health care is set up. I believe this would put the have-not provinces in a better position to serve the poor in their areas.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate, and I take the opportunity to note that we have just heard a very good speech.

NATIONAL FINANCE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance entitled: "Growth, Employment and Price Stability", tabled in the Senate on Thursday 18th November, 1971.—(Honourable Senator Langlois)

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: It is agreed that the honourable Senator Forsey may speak now instead of the honourable Senator Langlois?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, I must first of all solicit the forbearance of the Senate for having somewhat disturbed the proper order of the day at the beginning of this afternoon's sitting. As a former professor of political science, I was perhaps a little over-interested in the proceedings in the other place and I apologize to honourable senators for my absence at that time.

I must add that, fortunately for me, Senator Bonnell was kind enough to precede me, so that there has not been too much inconvenience.

Honourable senators, I want to take advantage of this opportunity, the first I have had, to congratulate the new senators, or rather to congratulate the Government for appointing them and the Senate to which they will make a valuable contribution. All the new senators have experience in various fields and I should like to mention particularly the two who are personally known to me, Senator Goldenberg and Senator Buckwold.

Senator Goldenberg is a friend of 47 years standing. We were at college together—needless to say I have the utmost respect and affection for him. I must also add that he is himself a kind of walking Royal Commission. He has been a royal commissioner, I believe, not only for the federal Government but also, if I remember well, for all the provincial governments, except perhaps, Prince Edward Island. Senator Goldenberg is indeed a phenomenon: he is unique in Canada. I would even say that Senator Goldenberg is a walking encyclopedia. As Voltaire said of some minor prophet, whose name I have forgotten, Senator Goldenberg "can do anything". He is a most versatile man, in the English sense of the word, of course. I well know that, in French, the word "versatile" has a pejorative sense, but in English it has a completely different meaning, it is a great compliment. So, it is in the English sense that I am using that word with regard to Senator Goldenberg.

Senator Buckwold was a student of mine at McGill rather a long time ago. He is still young but he is a friend of many years, and I also offer him my most sincere congratulations. Senator Buckwold is an expert in municipal affairs and, considering the representations made by the municipalities to the Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada, their requests to take part in federal-provincial discussions, for example, that appointment is also a very wise and very important one.

As for Senator Bonnell, we have just been shown an example of his qualities and of the contribution he will make to our debates.

Senator Lapointe, a renowned journalist, has succeeded our distinguished colleague of last year, Senator Casgrain, and suffice it to say that she is worthy of the succession.

We are anxiously waiting for Senator van Roggen's contribution to our proceedings. His skills as a jurist of high reputation will be most welcome.

Now, honourable senators, I should turn to the subject-matter of the debate. I apologize for having taken such a long time in congratulating the new senators and the Government, but this is the first opportunity I have had to do so.

On the report on Growth, Employment and Price Stability, I am the first to associate myself wholeheartedly with the honourable senators who have already spoken in this debate in congratulating Senator Everett and his colleagues of the committee.

I must congratulate Senator Everett himself for his masterly speech when the report was tabled in this house. I think the committee has accomplished an outstanding job and, within a very short time, a task of capital importance, exactly the kind of job that a Senate committee should do and can do better than anyone else.

Once again this report is ample proof of the usefulness of the Senate and its committees. I shall go further: the report is a masterpiece, a concise, thoughtful, balanced, realistic and, except for some small parts of it, a very sensible report. This is perhaps the rarest quality in public papers and statements by politicians. If one says "Well, this is a most sensible report", this may be taken as a rather dim and lukewarm compliment.

But, as far as I am concerned, that is not the case at all. This is one of the highest compliments that I could pay this report and its authors.

• (1510)

Indeed, the report is a masterpiece. Furthermore, it is written, at least the English version, in a clear and lively style. I regret to add—if I make these comments, it is with some modesty, because I am English and not French-speaking—but I must add that, in the French version, and I have read most of it carefully, in this French version—which is obviously a translation—some mistakes, not always too serious, are to be found and I think it is rather a pity. I am aware of the difficulties facing translators, and I dare suggest that, from now on, French-speaking senators who are appointed to our committees should examine carefully both versions so as to prevent misunderstandings which could arise from faulty translation.

By the way, I must add that in the proceedings of the Joint Committee on the Constitution, I have noticed the same deficiencies in translation, and this time in both versions because, for the most part, the interim report of the committee had first been drafted in French, and the English translation was often poor; but it was also true of the French translation and, from time to time, our French-speaking colleagues and myself have pointed out mistakes, not gross mistakes, but sometimes unfortunate ones just the same, which slightly distorted the exact meaning of the original.

I have noticed these few mistakes, and I believe that the French-speaking senators who are members of our committees could make a most valuable contribution by scrutinizing very closely—since they are all perfectly bilingual, since they have a true mastery of both languages—they could make a most useful contribution by scrutinizing both the English and French texts.

Well, I have been mentioning that by the way, but it is a problem. It is a problem which is often raised with regard to the government policy on bilingualism and I think it is worth pointing it out.

This report, in my opinion, should be closely considered by the Government, the organizations concerned such as the Bank of Canada, the Economic Council of Canada, Statistics Canada, et cetera, as well as by representatives of the business and labour worlds and the public at large, at least that part of the public which has an adequate grounding to appreciate the purport of several recommendations of the report.

As for myself, I approve almost all the recommendations. I would like to draw your attention to some of them, make comments on a few others, indicate the very few about which I disagree and perhaps raise some questions on doubtful points.

Now, the house having borne with my French long enough, I will continue in English.

[English]

Honourable senators, I have no doubt that there will be rejoicing among our French-speaking and English-speaking members that at last I have transferred my attention to my native tongue and that I shall therefore be more intelligible to all honourable senators than if I had continued in French.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: You were excellent.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: C'est la politesse du cœur.

I might add that I have read the bulk of the report in French and have only skimmed over the rest of it in English. This may invalidate some small parts of what I have to say but I think not in any great degree. Of course, I stand open to correction by any honourable senator if in any way I have failed to appreciate the force or meaning of certain of the recommendations, or if I criticize them without sufficient grounds, simply because I have not read them carefully enough or have not read both texts.

Honourable senators, I shall first call attention to one of the very few passages, or groups of passages, which I am inclined to regret, and whose presence in the report I find odd. These passages appear at pages 3, 4 and 5 of the report. I think the passages bear the same page numbers in both French and English versions.

Page 3 of the report refers to the evidence of Dr. Sprinkel and agrees with him that it is wise > —to treat the size of the government sector of the economy as a distinct and important issue in its own right.

I am thoroughly in accord with that. Then, I quote again from the report:

> There is no need for them to suffer this embarrassment—

As the report explains, bringing this in in connection with inflation.

> —or to be tempted into making more of the threat of future inflation than the evidence really warrants.

Here is the nub of the passage:

> Proper control of the size of the government sector is a valid, respectable concern and a subject for public debate at all times.

I agree wholeheartedly with that also. Now, here comes something a little more doubtful, in my judgment:

> Indeed, given that large and complex government programs often take a long time to mount, substantially modify, or terminate, only such a continuing concern, independent to a considerable degree of the immediate economic weather outside, is likely to prove very effective in practice.

I think that is well enough, but this leads on to something that bothers me:

> Government spending programs, therefore, should continually have to justify their existence—

That also is well enough by itself, perhaps.

> —quite apart from the general setting of stabilization policies.

Yes. Then:

> The best possible evaluative and information-feedback systems should be built into them, and as soon as it becomes clear that they are not efficiently achieving the objectives specified for them by Parliament, they should be changed or ended.

Now here is something that really surprises and worries me:

> Moreover, there should be a constant search for governmental activities ripe—

I emphasize "ripe".

> —to be handed over to the private sector, and it should be a generally respected touchstone that there is never a good time in the economy for government to be doing things that could better be done by others. A modern government has quite enough to do that only it is capable of doing well—

By the way, that is one place where the French translation is a little bit imperfect, assuming that it is a French translation and that this is not a bad translation of an original French version, which I rather doubt. Then:

> —it should not, at any stage of the business cycle, be wasting its fiscal receipts and the nation's resources on non-essentials.

The thing that worries me there is this remark about governmental activities being "ripe to be handed over to the private sector." That phrase "governmental activities" in itself takes in a pretty wide sweep. I am not sure what it is intended to cover. If it is intended to refer, for example, to social services or social security, I can scarcely credit my senses, because I cannot see how in the world one can expect to have a substantial part of social services or social security now carried on by government, transferred to the private sector.

I can only assume that the members of the committee did not intend to have anything like that in there and did not have anything of the sort in mind. If it is intended to refer to business enterprises carried on by the Government, again I find myself uneasy. It seems to suggest that various enterprises which are sickly, or at all events puny infants, should be nourished with tender loving care by the Government until they show signs of being not merely able to stand on their own feet but being able to bring in substantial profits to private enterprise. For the life of me, I cannot see why this general principle should be adopted. It seems to me that this savours of the American dogmatism on economic subjects which is one of the noxious importations into this country from the United States. I am a firm pragmatist in these matters. I was brought up in the Conservative tradition of Disraeli and Sir John A. Macdonald.

• (1520)

Hon. Mr. Martin: Do not forget Mr. Meighen.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: And, if you like, Sir James Whitney and Sir Adam Beck. At that point I seem to hear echoes of one of the two speeches always pronounced in the other place by the late Tommy Church: "Sir James Whitney and Sir Adam Beck and the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission power barons of the St. Lawrence." Oh, yes, he used to have one other speech also, about the "Canadian navy locked up in a garage in Halifax." Over and over again he would come back to this business of Sir James Whitney and Sir Adam Beck, the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission and the power barons of the St. Lawrence. He rang the changes on that over and over again. That is merely a reminiscence en passant. I am getting perhaps into my anecdotage, as is sometimes said of people my age.

But that brings up a serious point. Here you have, for example, an enterprise like Polymer which has been exceedingly successful. It has brought in substantial sums to the public treasury. Every now and again you hear suggestions that now it is doing well, now that it is bringing in money to the Government, now that the hazards that might have attended it at its establishment are past, it should be handed over to the private sector. The same thing might conceivably be said about Air Canada. I do not say that the committee necessarily had these things in mind, but I regret very much they used language which seems to suggest that all the duds, all the deficit-producing enterprises, all of the things that had to be provided as public services but which private enterprise would not provide because there is no money in them, that all these things should be left to the Government. But the minute there is any sign of revenue coming out of it, oh, horror, shades of Karl Marx, red ruin and revolution! We must immediately hand these things over to private enterprise.

I do not suppose that any member of this committee really seriously suggests that Ontario Hydro or Hydro Québec or any other publicly-owned enterprises in electrical power should be, in fact, handed over to private enterprise. But I think it is unfortunate that this very sweeping statement, and this extraordinary adjective "ripe", should be in here. "Ripe" for the private sector. There they are: fruits, first of all, green and small and hardly worth looking at, and then, as they ripen, swell out and become rosy, attractive and juicy, then private enterprise comes along.

I wish I had with me some passages from a song written some years ago by Professor Davidson Ketchum of the University of Toronto on the subject of free enterprise. If I had them with me, or could trust my memory, I might once again treat the Senate to one of the operatic performances which only senators of Newfoundland background have indulged in in this house—the late Senator Higgins and myself.

But I really think that this is exalting private enterprise and a doctrinaire notion of the primacy of private enterprise to an unfortunate degree. Furthermore, I cannot see why under the sun the committee dragged it in here by the scruff of the neck after saying this was a subject that ought to be considered on its own merits. Quite so. After saying that it does not need to be brought into this discussion, then suddenly the committee comes along and lugs the whole thing in and offers some sweeping a priori, theoretical pronouncements on this subject in terms so vague as to be rather alarming to those of us who feel certain that it is very valuable and useful, indeed necessary, for the Government to carry on—enterprises not necessarily of the nature of public services which have to be performed regardless of how costly they are and how unprofitable, but services which can actually bring in revenue to the Government of Canada, or to the government of the province, or for that matter to municipal governments.

So I regret very much that this, as it seems to me, dubious irrelevance has been imported into this otherwise masterly and extraordinarily sensible, well-balanced, temperate and pragmatic report.

Having said that by way of adverse criticism, I pass to pleasanter things. I am not going to weary the chamber by reiterating in inferior style what Senator Everett has said, and others have said, about this report. We had that masterly summary of its provisions from Senator Everett—really a speech that will live long in the memory of all who heard it, not only for its content but for the superb English and the organization and logic with which it was presented.

But there are a few points in the report which I want to say something about, even though it may be somewhat labouring the matter and merely underlining certain things that have already been said, and perhaps better said, by others.

All of us, I think, have been greatly disquieted by the fact that the Government's economic policy, since it engaged in the efforts to put a check upon inflation, has had the deplorable result of producing a very considerable amount of unemployment in this country. I am not saying that this was a deliberate intention of the Government. I am not saying that it is the Government's fault. But I think it is beyond question that the policy, for whatever reasons, has had this result. It has been a lamentable and indeed appalling result. I perhaps feel especially strongly about this because for many years—27 years, in fact—I was a trade union official. The problems of the unemployed, therefore, came home to me perhaps more closely than to some other honourable senators, not because I was more sympathetic, more enlightened, wiser, better, but simply because they were thrust at me day after day and my nose was rubbed in them and I kept hearing from people who were even more directly concerned with them than I was myself. Also, of course, like most honourable senators of my age or older, I remember the great depression and the appalling years when unemployment was at a level which, happily, it has never since reached and when thousands upon thousands of people who had regarded themselves as secure beyond peradventure found themselves without a means of livelihood and for a prolonged period. I feel very keenly, therefore, the very high rate of unemployment which has existed.

But on the other hand I have, as it were, a foot in the other camp: another interest of a rather special kind. I am now what is described in a certain document which I have in my pocket as a "senior citizen". The document in question adds rather unflatteringly, I think, that I am entitled to the child rate of fare on the Ottawa buses. I sometimes say that I possess an official certificate of second childhood. I trust that this is not too obvious in the remarks I am now making. At any rate, I am a senior citizen. I am an old-age pensioner. I am on pension from the Canadian Labour Congress. If I had no other means of support, if the Government in its kindness and benevolence and wisdom had not seen fit to summon me to this chamber, for example, and I had not been able to secure remunerative employment elsewhere—which is, I fear, only too possible—I could have found that my not-very-considerable income as a pensioner, whether of the Congress or of the public, was being seriously eaten into by inflation.

So the problem of inflation comes home to me directly too, or would come home very directly if I were not happy enough to be here, where I trust that I may succeed in coming somewhere near earning my keep. The size of pension that I have is, I fear, very much greater than the size of pension that most Canadians of my age would have. I should probably be rather lucky in comparison with the others. I shall not reveal to the chamber my financial affairs beyond saying that. Mine would not be a very large income, but would probably be vastly larger than most pensioners. It does seem to be a really serious matter that the incomes of pensioners and others on fixed incomes—many of them on very small fixed incomes—should be eaten into by inflation. So I have the very greatest sympathy with the Government in its battle against inflation, and I have often asked myself, with such recollections as I have of the economics that at any rate I used to know, exactly what alternative policy was available to the Government if it really wanted to check inflation; and I think it had really serious reasons for wanting to check inflation.

I have looked at other proposals and they have not seemed to me to be highly satisfactory; they have seemed to be very dubious. I have also watched, of course, as we all have, the alternation of stop and go both here and in Great Britain. It has obviously been much more extreme in its application there than here, but we have had some of it here also, and everybody, I think, would agree that this is a most unfortunate situation. Everybody is against unemployment, everybody is against inflation, everybody is against stop and go, but until this report appeared the general public at all events was not in possession of any practicable alternative policy, any policy which would reflate the economy and get it moving again at a satisfactory growth rate without at the same time causing a damaging degree of inflation. Here we have in this report a series of proposals, highly realistic, well-balanced, temperately and cogently and persuasively stated, which can be of the most immense value to the Government, to the various organisms of government concerned, to the business world and to the trade unions. I venture to add at this point that I hope that the proposals contained in the report will be especially recommended to the business world because of the fact that we have had on the committee such distinguished representatives of the business world as our colleagues Senator Beaubien, Senator Desruisseaux, Senator Gélinas,—shall I add Senator Grosart?—Senator Langlois and Senator Paterson. I think I might add Senator Walker as well. Perhaps I have left out some.

Hon. Mr. Martin: You left out a very important senator, and that is Senator Molson who is listening with great interest now.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: I left out several, but did I really not mention the vice-chairman? I intended to mention him first. "Abou Ben Adhem's name led all the rest." Well, Senator Molson's name leads all the rest, and I omitted him. I am much indebted to the Government Leader for drawing this to my attention. It was, quite frankly, the first name I intended to mention, and instead of that by one of those lapses of memory which attend us when we reach years of discretion or super-discretion, shall I say, when we are becoming too much the sober second thought, I omitted to do so. My apologies to Senator Molson and my assurance that it was a most inadvertent omission. I am sure he well knows that it was by no means an intentional slight. But I hope very much that these distinguished names in the world of business that appear on the front page of the committee's report will recommend its proposals to the world of business.

Honourable senators, I want to say something at this point also about the world of labour. Here I may be accused of parti pris, although I hope not of conflict of interest. I liked very much the passage in the committee's report in which it discusses the organization and the real situation of the trade unions in this country. I think it is a most just appreciation, shall we say, of the position of the trade unions. There is widespread misunderstanding on this subject, some of which should certainly be cleared up by the words of the report.

I digress for a moment to say how particularly pleased I am to find this temperate and sympathetic statement about the trade unions of the country in a report of a Senate committee, because some years ago, before I came here, I used occasionally to appear before committees of the Senate as a representative of the trade union movement and I must confess that it was rather a disillusioning experience. I say this because in a great many cases it appeared that the members of those committees were inclined to say to themselves, "This is where we get a chance to throw something at these people." I may have said this before in this chamber. "They are a collection of good-for-nothings, lazy loafers, battening on the workers of the country, autocrats, tyrants," and I could go on with the vocabulary of invective. I remember particularly one senator, now gone to his reward, who took the occasion of the appearance of Mr. Percy Bengough, then president of the Trades and Labour Congress, before the Senate Committee on Immigration and Labour, to say, "Mr. Bengough"—some senators may know and may possibly recognize who this was but I shall passer sous silence—"Mr. Bengough, there is one question I have always wanted to ask you and it's this—" and then he got off a perfect stinker of a question, rose to his feet and shot out the door of the committee room and slammed it behind him, before poor Mr. Bengough could so much as open his mouth. Like all my best stories that is quite incredible, but it is what happened. I am sure I could produce witnesses to this extraordinary occurrence. Very seldom did we get anybody quite as obviously and viciously hostile as that to the trade unions, but it was perfectly evident that on a great many occasions we were facing a group of people who considered that we in the trade union movement were responsible for most of the evils of the world—perhaps not everything, but pretty close to it. So it is peculiarly gratifying to me to see in this report the eminently sound and sensible statements, and I think I may say sympathetic, although not entirely uncritical, statements about the trade union movement.

I would add only one thing, that when it comes to the question of voluntary price and wage controls and this kind of thing, I think sometimes there has been a misunderstanding of the position of the central body or central bodies in this country, the Canadian Labour Congress and the Confédération des Syndicats nationaux—a misunderstanding of just how much they could do. People have said that they are very lacking in public spirit, that they are very unco-operative, and they are very this and very that of a disreputable kind. The fact is that the central bodies, at all events the Canadian Labour Congress of which alone I can speak with inside knowledge or anything like it—the central body, the Canadian Labour Congress, has really very little power. If we had been speaking of Sweden, for example, at least until very recently, we could have said that there the central trade union bodies have enormous power. They can sit down and bargain with employers' federations, also very powerful, for a general settlement of the whole level of wages for practically the whole country, partly, of course, because Sweden is so highly organized and partly because of the structure of the Swedish trade union movement. Our trade union movement is much more loosely organized and the Canadian Labour Congress is no more capable of speaking for particular member unions on wage questions, for example, than the Canadian Chamber of Commerce or the Canadian Manufacturers' Association is capable of speaking for the members of either of those bodies on price policy. You simply cannot imagine the Canadian Chamber of Commerce saying to the International Nickel Company, "Thus shalt thou do and not otherwise." Well, equally, it is quite impossible for anyone who knows the trade union movement in this country to suppose that the Canadian Labour Congress, however anxious it might be to accept voluntary wage controls, would tell any of its constituent unions they must do this or that. In the question of wages it is the affiliated unions of the Congress which are the real works, qui font la pluie et le beau temps, to use an expressive French phrase.

Therefore, in addition to the factors mentioned in the passage of the report to which I refer, there is a sheer incapacity, a sheer lack of capacity in the central organization to commit the member unions on matters of this nature. Having said that, I wish to endorse very strongly the words of the report with respect to hoping that the trade union leaders in the country will take serious account of the recommendations made here.

I believe I saw a statement on the subject of this report from the Canadian Labour Congress. It contained what I might refer to as routine or ritual objection to the medium goal suggested by the report of, I believe, 4¼ per cent unemployment. I was a little sorry to see that, because I think that in the context of the report it is perfectly evident that the members of the committee were not suggesting that this was the final goal, the ideal, the position for which we should strive. They were suggesting simply, as they put it, an interim goal, for the time being, as a great improvement over what we have now. We should try not only to keep inflation within reasonable limits, but at the same time bring unemployment down from the present over six per cent to a much more tolerable, although still not really tolerable, level of 4¼ per cent.

I suppose it is, perhaps, that we are politicians, after a fashion at least, not perhaps very partisan ones, but still members of the political body, and we realize that politics is the art of the possible. We realize also that Rome was not built in a day and if we are to get to the long-term goals suggested by this report, there are stages along the way. This is, of course, disconcerting to the young, who would like to have heaven on yesterday morning's breakfast table. To most of us, however, it seems to be a reasonable interim compromise, a reasonable trade-off, to use the excellent term contained in this report. I hope very much, therefore, that there will be a considered, well reflected response to this report by the labour movement of the country, because I think the labour movement has everything to gain from such consideration.

I wish to add just one or two other points. One is that I am extremely pleased to see the report take the strong stand it does for a floating exchange rate. I have long felt that this was the proper line to take, that it gave us room to manoeuvre and would mean that we would not be caught in the vise imposed upon us by a fixed exchange rate. It gives a Canadian Government the opportunity, at least within limits, to cushion the effect of ups and downs in the outside world. It would be possible to achieve some reasonable degree of stability in prices and in the rate of growth, rather than the stop-go and that sort of situation sometimes imposed upon us almost entirely by external factors.

Of course, as the report points out, ours is an open economy. We are one of the last countries in the world which can think of itself as an autarchy, self-sufficiency or a sort of economic Sinn Féin, ourselves alone. We are overwhelmingly dependent on the outside world economically and bound, I think, to remain so as far ahead as any of us can see. Nevertheless, I thoroughly agree with the recommendations of the report on the subject of a floating exchange rate as a further means of achieving, in addition to the use of the monetary and fiscal devices, the kind of balance and steady growth, without inflation and unemployment on any considerable scale, which the report envisages and hopes for.

I wish to speak of two other matters particularly. One is the view put forward in the report with respect to wage and price controls. Now, it would be very nice if we could say the simple answer to inflation is wage and price controls, whether selective, general, guidelines or any of the other variations. I entirely agree with the report and its conclusion that these developments are virtually impossible for any long period.

The report contains a beautifully qualified phrase. It is almost Mackenzie Kingly in its delicacy of qualification. It begins with "if", then says something about "for a short period" and "in certain special circumstances" and "provided that." It is as academically perfect as anything could be and, in my opinion, properly so. I would agree that in certain special circumstances for a brief period controls might work, but I do not believe they would work for any considerable period in this country, without extraordinary and, indeed, revolutionary changes in the manner in which we conduct our affairs.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: You mean if necessary, but not necessarily.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: Well, I refrained from quoting that classic. I am sometimes accused of having a King Charles' head in bringing Mr. Mackenzie King and his sins into every speech I make on any subject whatever. So I made the one very careful, passing and, indeed, rather laudatory reference to his oratorical style.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Neither Senator Forsey nor Senator Choquette should expose their prejudice.

Hon. Mr. Forsey: One would expect that intervention from the Leader of the Government, but I am afraid that on this subject my opinions remain "unrevised and unrepented". An outward and visible sign thereof is the signed photograph of my old friend and leader, Arthur Meighen, on my wall upstairs.

I agree with what is said with regard to the difficulties of selective controls. I think this is a will-o'-the-wisp, a mirage. I agree with what is said about the difficulties of controls and the impossibility of looking to them as a really serious long-term, or even medium-term, solution to the problem of inflation. This is the more so because it seems to me that unless there is adequate use of the monetary and fiscal levers, the difficulties, the sheer economic difficulties of making controls work, are really insuperable.

If, for example, there were a flood of new money hurled on the market we could impose controls until we were blue in the face and they just would not work. The whole effect would be one of a sea of black markets, because the pressure of the money supply on prices and wages would make the whole thing break down completely. That is a point which might have been made perhaps more precisely than it is in the report as I read it.

The last main point I wish to make has to do with the extraordinary amount of government planning which is proposed by the report, extraordinary in view of certain preconceptions held by many people in this country—I do not mean extraordinary in any bad sense; considerable would have been, perhaps, a better adjective—to use of government planning involved in the proposals contained in the report. It emerges over and over again. It is, of course, indicative planning, as the phrase goes. It is not planning of the type which attempts to clamp down long-term or medium-term plans over the economy but planning it is. There is an immense amount of it there. I think it is evident that the committee has profited from the degree of planning which has taken place, for example, in France. There is evidence also of the expert literature on the subject and the evidence which the committee no doubt heard, of which I am sure you are aware. I would have liked to be present at the hearings, but it was completely impossible at the time, chiefly because I was not in town during most of the hearings. It seems to me, however, that there is a great deal of planning involved, very salutary proposals for planning, indirect and indicative planning. I again feel that this is a peculiar merit of this report, because of the large number of members of the committee who, I should think, would have preconceptions, feelings rather hostile to such a degree of government intervention in the management of the economy. I think it is a tribute to their objectivity, balance, and good sense, that they were prepared to agree to the proposals in the report. I hope that this will sink in with some of those who say that certain honourable senators with vast experience in business and large business interests are nothing but the mouthpieces of the very wealthy, and do not really consider the public interests at all; that they are just dummies, puppets dancing at the end of strings, controlled by Bay Street and St. James Street.

I hope it will sink in that here are people, a large number of whom might well be considered to be associated very closely and deeply with what are sometimes called big interests, the moneyed interests, the employer interests, the capitalist class, who nevertheless have given their approval to a report which one would scarcely have expected them to feel very enthusiastic about. It is a tribute to their objectivity, and I should like, as an old trade unionist, to put in my two-penny-worth of congratulations on their share, their special share it seems to me, in this excellent report.

Finally, I wish to say that I am a little perplexed—this is a very minor point; perhaps like some of my other speeches, this one will end not with a bang but with a whimper—by the fact that the committee proposes that the Prices and Incomes Commission should become a joint dominion-provincial body. I do not quite know what they base that on, except perhaps the growing power of the provinces and the enormous increase in provincial and municipal expenditures.

I should have thought that there was no very cogent argument for a joint body, that it was better really to leave this question of national importance in the hands of a purely national body. However, this is perhaps another example of what the Leader of the Government would call my prejudices showing. Perhaps at this point I am once again showing that in certain ways I am basically still a John A. Macdonald Conservative. There are not very many left. Donald Creighton and I are, I suppose, the only ones who can be said to be still in existence. I am a little dubious about that, and I am not sure why it got into the report.

But when all is said and done, when some critic even more captious than I has gone over every word of this report and noted all the crumpled rose leaves, all the peas under the mattress, it seems to me that the judgment I initially ventured to pronounce upon it, that it is a masterpiece of balance, common sense, well thought out, cogently expressed opinion on this subject, of the highest value to the whole country, and absolutely overwhelming proof of the value to this country of the Senate and of its committees, that that judgment still stands.

Hon. Mr. Everett: Honourable senators, I propose to adjourn the debate. I do not intend to be here next week, but perhaps other honourable senators may wish to speak on it in the meantime. This would leave me free to wind up the debate at the appropriate time before the end of the session.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I know that there are other honourable senators who wish to participate in this debate. For instance, I believe that Senator Cook is anxious to speak. Therefore I will adjourn the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Martin, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, December 7, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) PRESENTED BY HON. DOUGLAS D. EVERETT

Thursday, December 2, 1971.

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, to which were referred the Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1972, has in obedience to the order of reference of November 24, 1971, examined the said Supplementary Estimates and reports as follows:

1. The Committee has examined the said Supplementary Estimates (A) and has heard evidence thereon from Mr. G. Osbaldeston, Deputy Secretary, Programs Branch, Treasury Board, and Mr. B. A. MacDonald, Director General, Budget Coordination, Treasury Board.

2. The said Supplementary Estimates (A) provide for total expenditures for which Parliament will be asked to provide funds in the amount of $361,925,284; budgetary estimates of a statutory nature of $198,111,500 and loans, investments and advances in the amount of $311,985,001. This brings the total of the Main and Supplementary Estimates for the current fiscal year to $16,212,940,921. The Main Estimates called for an expenditure of $15,340,919,136. Supplementary Estimates (A) increase this by $872,021,785.

3. Included in the said Supplementary Estimates (A) are eighteen $1 items, an explanation of which was provided by the officials of the Treasury Board and is attached to this report.

4. The budgetary expenditures to be voted upon amount to $361,925,284 and include the following major items:

$21 million to implement the first two steps to achieve pay parity in the Armed Forces;
$10 million to cover losses in coal mining incurred by the Cape Breton Coal Mining Corporation;
$22 million for relief of Pakistani refugees;

$100 million for the local initiatives program of the Department of Manpower and Immigration;
$20 million for the on-the-job training program of the Department of Manpower and Immigration;
$15 million for additions to the regular manpower training program; and $80 million for federal labour intensive projects.

$198,111,500 is provided for budgetary expenditures of a statutory nature, of which the main items are:

$80 million for the statutory provision for grants under the Employment Support Act; and $62 million for costs relating to the Medical Care Act and the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

Loans, investments and advances total $311,985,001 of which the main items are:

$95 million in loans to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to finance the rehabilitation of the Glace Bay Heavy Water Plant;
$32 million in loans under the automotive adjustment assistance program in connection with the Agreement on Automotive Products (Auto Trade Pact).

It is noted that approximately 60% of all the budgetary items, statutory and non-statutory, concern unemployment measures.

5. The Committee requested the Treasury Board to provide it with the terms, conditions and present status of loans under the adjustment assistance program in connection with the Agreement On Automotive Products (Auto Trade Pact).

6. The Committee complimented the Treasury Board on the excellent publication entitled "How Your Tax Dollar is Spent" and suggested that it would be improved by including more information on the subject of loans, investments and advances.

7. The Committee requested information concerning the present status of the $80 million provision for the statutory provision for grants under the Employment Support Act. More specifically, it requested information on the total amount of present commitments, the present outlook for commitments up to the end of 1972, a list of commitments by industry and by province and the total employment affected by such commitments.

8. The Committee requested the Treasury Board to examine its method of preparing Estimates to see whether more information can be provided on the terms, conditions and status of all loans, investments and advances in Main and Supplementary Estimates. Officials of the Treasury Board undertook to examine this matter and to report back on the feasibility of providing such information.

9. The Committee requested the Treasury Board to provide along with the Main Estimates and the Supplementary Estimates the total spending program of the Federal Government, including all loans, investments and advances of a previously approved nature, comparing them from year to year in dollar amounts and in terms of a percentage of the Gross National Product. Officials of the Treasury Board undertook to examine this matter and to report on the feasibility of providing such information.

Respectfully submitted.

PUBLIC BILLS

SUSPENSION OF RULES—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Leopold Langlois: Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, December 8, 1971, I will move that for the balance of the present session Rules 44, 45 and 78 be suspended in so far as they relate to public bills.

As honourable senators no doubt will recall, it is customary at this stage of a session to present this motion in order to expedite the work of the house. This is the only reason for the motion.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I feel this would be a proper time for the Deputy Leader of the Government or the Leader of the Government himself to inform us what business is contemplated for the rest of this week and next week. It has some connection with this notice. I do not mind if the leader prefers to wait until the question period.

Hon. Mr. Langlois: I did not want to anticipate what the Leader of the Government would be saying in this regard. I knew he was going to make a statement at a later stage.

Hon. Paul Martin: Honourable senators, Senator Flynn was kind enough to indicate to me that he intended to seek some clarification as to the schedule as we see it for the period prior to Christmas.

We will not have the supply bill tonight, and perhaps that could be a matter for further discussion with the Leader of the Opposition.

I do not profess to fully understand all the new rules in the other place. The leader of that house, however, has informed me that it is not possible for them to deal with the supply bill before Thursday and, consequently, we will not be able to deal with it, presumably, if we wished, before Friday. However, as I have said to the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Flynn), this is a matter I would like to discuss further with him. We would have to deal with it not later than next week, but we can discuss this matter privately before having further discussion in the Senate itself.

• (2010)

The leader of the house in the other place, who had something to do with initiating the new procedure there last week, has told me that he does not see how we can have the tax bill before four o'clock on Friday, December 17.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I say four o'clock, because under their rules, government business terminates at four o'clock on Friday. The reason is that on third reading a certain number of days have to be allocated for discussion. I suppose there could be an agreement, which certainly would please me, between the parties in the other place to shorten that period. This would mean we would have the bill much earlier. However, I can only say I envisage that it would be possible for us in the event the bill came to us on December 17—and that is a matter for the Senate to decide—to deal with the bill in the remaining hours of Friday. The Senate may, if it wished, deal with the bill on Saturday, December 18. The Senate has sat on Saturdays on other occasions. If it were not so disposed, we would have to deal with it on Monday, December 20, which would leave Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, December 21, 22 and 23.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Why not Christmas Day?

Hon. Mr. Martin: This is something I would hope we could avoid. In any event, if this prognostication is correct we would have at least those four days. I have left December 24 in the hope that it could be used by honourable senators to travel to their respective homes for Christmas Day.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: If we do not sit on Christmas Day.

Hon. Mr. Martin: If the bill is not finished, of course, in view of the effective date of January 1, there would be no alternative but for us to return and deal with the bill before the end of December in this calendar year.

That is the situation as I see it. Nothing would please me more than to find more alacrity in the other place, which would permit us to get the bill much earlier. If that does not take place, I think the schedule I have mentioned will be close to reality.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I have never heard such an alarming warning as the one we have just heard from the Leader of the Government. I would suggest to him that, if his fears are justified, the Senate will not be able to deal adequately with the bill. That is the first comment I have to make.

The second thing I suggest to the honourable leader is that the schedule in the other place is determined now, not by Parliament but rather by the Government, since the Government decides in what way it will impose closure in the Commons. As the only member of the present administration who was also a member of the St. Laurent administration which imposed closure in the pipeline debate, I suppose Senator Martin has been consulted and

I suppose he has given some advice, and I conclude his advice has not been followed.

Hon. Mr. Martin: That is a kind way of putting things.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Honourable senators, you will have noticed that I gave time to the honourable leader to make some comments.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Divide and conquer.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I am not trying to divide. That has already happened. The honourable former leader knows all about that. I will not broach that subject tonight. I shall keep it in reserve for use in due course.

I suggest to the Leader of the Government that if the Senate is to deal adequately with this bill and under normal circumstances, he should persuade the Government that if it has to impose closure it might as well impose it so as to permit the bill to reach us at the beginning of next week. There are ways of imposing closure. There are ways that will permit the Senate to deal adequately with the bill and to discharge its responsibility, at least in a more or less normal way. Closure should not be imposed in a way in which we will not be given an opportunity to deal with this bill in an adequate fashion.

I suggest to the honourable leader, conversant as I am with his vast experience and his authority within the Government, that he should persuade the Government to impose closure in such a manner as to permit the Senate to deal with the bill at the beginning of next week. Otherwise, it will create a very difficult situation for the Senate, for the Government, and for the country.

Hon. Mr. McNamara: Honourable senators, in my ignorance, might I ask a question? If we do not get the bill until December 17, as the Government has indicated, is there anything to prevent the Senate from meeting on Monday instead of on Tuesday and dealing with the bill all day Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday?

Hon. Mr. Martin: Not only is there nothing in the rules to prevent that, but there will be nothing to prevent our dealing with the bill on Friday, December 17, between the hours of 4 and 6, or even during the dinner hour, and on Friday evening and all day Saturday.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: And all night, even.

Hon. Mr. Martin: There is a precedent indeed for the Senate to meet on a Sunday. I have listened with interest to what the Leader of the Opposition has said. I know he intended it to be helpful. Anyhow, I have taken his suggestion.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Helpful to the Senate, not to the Government.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I am sure the honourable senator has greater influence with some Opposition groups than I have, and if there were some arrangement—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: But you have more influence on parts of the Senate than I have.

Hon. Mr. Martin: —on a principle under which closure could be more effectively and earlier applied, I am sure there would be a disposition in certain quarters in the other place to accede to that request. The procedure that is followed now, with regard to closing of the debate under compulsion, is pursuant to the new rules in that house.

• (2020)

As I said, I cannot profess to be an authority on those rules, but those who are have given me this timetable. I do not want to enter into a political argument, and I know that Senator Flynn was not at all political in the observations he made.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It was the furthest thing from my thoughts.

Hon. Mr. Martin: As Senator Flynn says, it was the last thing he had in mind.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Perish the thought.

Hon. Mr. Martin: But those who oppose closure are put in a very difficult position if they advise that there is a more effective form of closure that might be used. However, Senator Flynn's suggestion will undoubtedly be taken into consideration by those who sit to the left of Mr. Speaker in the other place, and they in turn might make suggestions that would cause some change to be made in the course that might have to be followed pursuant to those rules. Certainly, nothing would please the Leader of the Government more than to have this bill at as early a date as possible.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Do you mean the Leader of the Government in the Senate?

Hon. Mr. Martin: Yes. I can assure Senator Flynn that, when this matter was discussed in the cabinet, the point which he and others have in mind was very much in my mind, and was made known. But all of us are subject to the implications of the new rules of procedure. They can only be changed with consent. That is something over which none of us in this chamber has any control.

Hon. L. P. Beaubien: Honourable senators, it is all very interesting to hear what kind of rules of closure they have in the other place, but, after all, we have a certain responsibility in the Senate. We have worked on this bill for a couple of years now. As a matter of fact, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has worked on this matter for about five years. We have given it a very professional study. Under the leadership of our chairman we have had the best legal brains in Canada look at this whole question. For the other place to ask us to receive the bill on a Friday night, and to sit on Saturday and Sunday is just nonsense. We cannot begin to deal with this bill in less than four full days. If the members of the other house want to make all kinds of rules, then let them make them.

I must say that when Senator Dandurand was the Government Leader here he said what the Senate was going to do, and the Senate did that. We are not children. If they send us the bill on Saturday night, let them send us the bill on Saturday night; but we are going to take four full days to look at it and we are going to send it to committee. We are going to look at it and see if the amendments we consider to be "musts" have been put in the bill.

I am not trying to play politics. The chairman of the committee, when he proposed certain amendments, was not playing politics. Many of those amendments do not concern Government policy. They are necessary simply because of the fact that the bill is badly drafted.

We have to give the bill due consideration. I would just say to the other house that they can have closure or not have closure. If they do not send us the bill next week, we will come back at the beginning of the new year and pass it then. We are going to consider the bill fully. I do not think it makes any sense to do otherwise.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I agree with Senator Beaubien that we should have at least four days, and that time will be provided.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Four days, yes, but at the beginning of next year?

Hon. Mr. Martin: No, before next year.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: But Senator Beaubien has suggested, and I think I would agree with him if the Leader of the Government is willing to agree, that we should come back on approximately January 10 or 15 next to deal with this matter. We could then deal with it in a calm and quiet way, as should be the case, in which event the Leader of the Government may rest assured that we will give him our fullest co-operation.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I have always had that.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, perhaps I should stay out of this discussion, but when I made the motion earlier in the fall to refer the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, and the bills that were proposed to implement the same, to committee for study, the avowed and stated objective was that we would make ourselves fully cognizant of, and be fully researched on, the contents of the legislation, and that we would be ready to deal with it when it came to us. It was hoped in this way that we would avoid a situation which has occurred in the past. Yet here we are again right in the middle of the same situation.

The first point I should like to make is that we as the Senate have to steer our own course just as the House of Commons, obviously, has to steer its own course. If any thought had been given to the length of time we might require to deal with the bill when it reaches us, then considerations as to the termination of the debate could have been geared accordingly. But when you settle for four days to close the debate in Committee of the Whole and another four days for third reading, and then if you say that the House of Commons cannot avoid honouring Thursday as Opposition Members' day, the effect is to postpone the time at which the legislation will come to us for consideration.

So, honourable senators, what are we supposed to do? Are we supposed to sit around and wait? I suppose when the bill does come to us and while we are debating it the members of the other place, having struggled through it for 50 or 60 days, as they will say they have struggled, will take their Christmas recess and wave good-bye to us, leaving us to deal with it. This is completely unsatisfactory, and I think the other place should be told in every strong terms just how we feel about it. What do they expect? Do they expect us to stand around and wait for the bill to arrive, at whatever hour of the day that may be?

If it comes to us at 6 o'clock in the evening will we be told that we must deliver it back by midnight?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Never.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: This is the responsibility of the Senate, and while the members of the House of Commons may say that we cannot dictate to them we certainly should make it quite clear that we will not permit them to dictate to us.

It may well be that we shall be in a position to deal with the legislation much more quickly and thoroughly than we might otherwise have been because we now have a good understanding of it. However, the legislation is expected to reach us on the afternoon of Friday, December 17, and it has been indicated that if its consideration takes longer we can sit on Saturday. I am rather surprised that Sunday has not been mentioned as a day on which we might sit.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: It has been mentioned.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: This measure is proposed to become effective on January 1. In my view, if on January 1 the bill had not been passed and the present session of Parliament was still continuing then, whenever the bill was passed during the continuance of that session, that date would still be the effective date.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Indeed.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I have not heard any suggestions to the contrary, and I think the pressure, the speed, and the selfishness displayed show an utter disregard for the Senate. I am completely dissatisfied because the House of Commons is steering its own course without any regard for us. In my view, honourable senators, we should steer our own course straight down the middle of the road.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Manning: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government a couple of additional questions arising out of what has been said? Are we to understand from what has been told to us this evening about the proposed timetable, that when the House of Commons was deciding on its timetable for concluding its work on this bill that no consideration whatever was given to the amount of time this house could reasonably expect to be accorded to give a bill of this importance the attention it deserves? I submit that to attempt to give a bill of this magnitude intelligent consideration inside the space of two weeks is ridiculous. I agree with everything Senator Hayden has said to the effect that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has thoroughly analysed the bill. I feel they have done an excellent job. However, that committee consists of only a small proportion of the members of this house.

• (2030)

My first question is, when the other house gave consideration to its time limit did it take into account the fact that this house would need at least two or three weeks to consider the bill before translating it into law?

My second question is of a different nature. When this bill finally comes before us, has the Government Leader given consideration, because of the pressure of time, to having the bill considered in Committee of the Whole?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Honourable senators, before the Government Leader replies to Senator Manning's pertinent questions, may I also put a few questions to him? He will then not have to rise several times in the course of the evening.

If the Senate were to adjourn on December 17, which was a target date indicated some time ago, and return around January 10 or January 17 and at that time we were to take two or three weeks or if necessary, only four days to give consideration to this bill—this would be more favourable than having it presented to us a week before Christmas—would Government be hampered or would the legislation suffer? As Senator Hayden has indicated, the legislation can go into force on January 1, 1972, whether we give consideration to the bill before Christmas or at the beginning of the new year.

As all honourable senators know this is not retroactive legislation in any sense of the word. When the Minister of Finance makes a budget speech, usually the action he takes comes into force on that very day subject, of course, to approval by Parliament at a later date. What difference would it make to the Government if we were to pass the legislation at the end of January or the beginning of February next year, rather than dealing with it under pressure before Christmas?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I do not believe that Senator Hayden and I are in full disagreement. But under the bicameral system it is inevitable that the upper house is dependent, in certain circumstances, on the progress made in the other place. This is the present situation and it has always been that way. Generally speaking, I do not see how that can be fundamentally altered.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I have made the statement. Senator Flynn may not agree with it. But under general circumstances, I do not see how this situation can be altered. If he would look at the work of Campion, one of the great authorities on the rules of the parliamentary system, dealing with both the upper and lower chambers, he would see there is justification for the statement I have made.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I would doubt that.

Hon. Mr. Martin: If the bill comes to us before December 17, as I have said earlier, I will be pleased along with every member of this chamber. Of course, this was taken into account, in answer to Senator Manning, when the matter was discussed by the cabinet. The cabinet itself, however, also was subject to circumstances over which it did not have control. It was only after a protracted debate that resort was made to the provisions of the new Rule 75(c), under which the vote was taken in the manner in which those rules envisage a vote has to be taken.

So the answer is yes, this was taken into consideration. I can say that on more occasions than one I took the opportunity of emphasizing our problem very strongly.

Now, if the bill comes to us before the December 17, that would be preferable, but that is a possible circumstance over which we have no control. I had hoped, frankly, that the bill might come to us on December 13, but my calculations were predicated upon what was apparently a faulty understanding on my part of the new rules in the other place. If it does not come until December 17, we will have no alternative but to deal with it at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Why?

Hon. Mr. Martin: May I just finish my argument?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: This is the point. Let me interrupt the leader now. He is always very fluent, but this is the point at which we wish to have an answer. Why do we have to deal with the bill on December 17?

Hon. Mr. Martin: If my honourable friend will just allow me—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I hope you will answer my question and not leave it.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I will not be able to do so if you continue to interrupt me; that is clear.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It is not clear, because you always avoid the question.

Hon. Mr. Martin: If I were in another place I would ask His Honour the Speaker to come to my assistance, but that is not the procedure here.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: You have never needed assistance to avoid answering questions; you have been doing that for forty years.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Whenever my honourable friend finds himself in difficulty he becomes abusive and, when abusive, loses his lucidity.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: No, I do not, but you never come to grips with a question, whether you are pushed or not.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I thank my honourable friend for those compliments. Some would regard them as compliments.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Some would.

Hon. Mr. Martin: If the bill comes to us on Friday, December 17, we will have the alternative of dealing with the bill on that day, which gives us the opportunity of continuing on Saturday. We do not have to do so; it will be up to the Senate to decide whether it wishes to deal with the bill immediately. If it does not wish to do so until Monday, we will have four days, December 20, 21, 22 and 23. Then I presume senators will wish to go home for Christmas, although I do not see why we should not return afterwards and have December 27, 28, 29, 30 and 31 for this business.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: What a New Year's Eve it will be.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Surely there is nothing unreasonable in asking that.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Not unreasonable, but foolish.

Hon. Mr. Martin: Well, surely we are not that overworked.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Martin: By the way, if that is done, members of the House of Commons will not be able to go away and take a holiday while we are at work. They must remain here, because royal assent to this bill is necessary in order to make it effective on January 1. We cannot have royal assent unless the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod goes to the other place and advises them that we are waiting for them to come here. It cannot take place with only the members of one house present. The members of the House of Commons will have to come to the Bar of the Senate to await the pleasure of His Excellency the Deputy to the Governor General to give royal assent to the bill. Senator Flynn asks why cannot we deal with this in January. He knows the answer to that.

• (2040)

Hon. Mr. Flynn: No.

Hon. Mr. Martin: The answer was given some weeks ago by Senator Hayden.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: No.

Hon. Mr. Martin: He said that everything—the work of the Government, the Department of National Revenue and the other departments concerned—had been geared so that the bill would become operative in all its aspects on January 1 with regard to the imposition of taxes, which will become law regardless. But with regard to the reduction of taxation, the situation is otherwise. The reduction of taxes announced in June and October are dependent on the passage of the bill. Over four million people would be involved, and many more hundreds of thousands would receive the benefit of tax reductions.

The people in the business community—both those who like and those who do not like the bill, particularly the large operations in the private sector—have been preparing their operations to coincide with the date of January 1. There would be nothing but the greatest confusion in the country—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: You are certainly adding to the confusion that exists now.

Hon. Mr. Martin: My honourable friend is making very effective debating observations, but they are not helpful in this particular instance.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: You should know about that yourself.

Hon. Mr. Martin: My honourable friend should not take up against me old quarrels which had their origin in the other place. He and I have forgotten the other place.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Not me.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I know that Senator Walker and I have forgotten, and we used to have many arguments.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I never think of them.

Hon. Mr. Martin: I am quite sure that I have answered all Senator Flynn's questions.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I should like to put a question to the Leader of the Government. When the bill comes to the Senate, at whatever time that may be, from that moment on it is completely in the control of the Senate, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Martin: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Right.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: And it may be debated at length or briefly, and in due course it may be referred to committee.

Hon. Mr. Martin: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: And when it is referred to committee, the committee can make its own decision. It can decide whether it wishes to hear more evidence, and it may take a length of time to consider the bill. At that stage, when the committee is making its decision, I doubt that much thought will be given to whether or not consideration of the bill is completed by January 1, particularly in view of the fact that the leader said, as I understood him, that even if we should run past January 1, the bill, whenever it comes in, will be effective as and from January 1.

My honourable friend quoted something I said when I introduced my motion, namely, that we were gearing everything to be ready to make the bill effective on January 1. Certainly, so far as the Senate was concerned, that was the case. We set a deadline for all our hearings, and we tabled our Preliminary Report No. 2 on November 30, allowing ample time for the bill to come over and for our consideration of it. However, procedural trouble occurred and the bill became bogged down in the other place. If the decision for closure had been made earlier we would not be faced with this problem. The matter of the selection of the time limit within which debate was stopped was also a decision of the other place. I cannot quarrel with that because it is not my function as a senator to quarrel with those decisions, but when they trench upon the decisions of the Senate it is time for me to say something.

Does my honourable friend know that the Department of National Revenue has been distributing forms in relation to the returns that will be made in the coming year on the basis of this bill?

Hon. Mr. Walker: On the basis of the bill having been passed.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: On the basis of the bill having been passed or not. This is the usual practice of the department, whether a bill is passed or not. As and from the effective date, the collection procedures and the making of returns come into play, and ultimately the administration takes effect.

I gather that my honourable friend was protesting my statement that whether this bill is passed and receives royal assent on December 31 or January 10, it would have some bearing on the effective date of the bill. In my opinion it would not, and to my mind that is the question.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I agree entirely.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: This is a question that should be seriously looked at. We have on many occasions provided an effective date for legislation. We have provided for bills to come into force on proclamation. If we have an effective date, that is the date when a bill becomes law and the date from which it becomes effective.

Hon. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, I agree entirely with what Senator Hayden has said. I know that the purpose of his committee's study was to try to make it easier for the house to discuss the bill when it reached us. However, I do not think this house should be concerned with what has happened in the other place or with what is being done by the Department of National Revenue. If they have made decisions which will involve difficulty because of opposition in the Senate, that is their problem. I am concerned with the place of the Senate in the Constitution. The Leader of the Government in the Senate, if he is right, has put an argument into the mouth of every illiterate political hack in this country who says that the Senate should be abolished.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: That is right.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: Why are we here if it is not to take the time that we think should be taken to discuss important measures? I do not think any person in this house should care about who is inconvenienced, whether it is the other place or the executive, whether the Government or the Opposition in the other place are taking too long. I do not care what the problem is. The Opposition may have been wrong, the Government may have been wrong, but in what shape is this bill going to reach us? It will reach us, in fact, with some thirty amendments.

Some Hon. Senators: More than that.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: I would ask honourable senators not to interrupt me unless they know what they are talking about. Some thirty amendments, were made to the bill by the executive and the Government before being discussed in the other house, which is a terrible way to bring in legislation.

I say quite frankly that if we in this house are going to place ourselves in the position where we must accept the convenience of the other place, regardless of our place as an institution under the Constitution, then those who say that this house should be abolished are right, and I would be glad to accept its abolition under those conditions. But personally I will not accept that position. I think that this house can render a great service to the state, but it will not render that service and it will invite and deserve contempt if it accepts this bill under the conditions in which it is reaching us.

I give full credit to Senator Hayden. He referred this study to committee so that we could obtain as much information and understanding of the proposed 1971 tax reform legislation as we possibly could in order for us to be better prepared when the bill finally came before us. But how are we to know what the amendments are that the executive is presenting in the other place, and when closure is taking place? I will resist to the utmost the passage of this bill with any time limit attached to it.

• (2050)

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, I rise simply to support quite strongly what Senator O'Leary has said.

I want to draw the attention of this house to one possibility which I do not believe has been mentioned so far, and that is that this house may see fit to make amendments to this bill, with the result that the House of Commons will have to consider those amendments. I feel this is a strong possibility. If that is not so, then we are reduced simply to being a rubber stamp which I, like Senator O'Leary, am not prepared to accept.

I also wish to draw attention to something that has happened repeatedly for years, long before I came here. This house has often been subjected to what I call Christmas closure. It has been presented with important measures and told, in effect, that it must get them through in jig time, or else. To my knowledge, from my reading of the history of this place, this has occurred time and time again, and has been accepted under protest. I feel the time has come for this chamber to take a stand and say it shall not happen again and, more especially, with respect to a bill of this importance.

I make these comments without regard to the merits or otherwise of the measure. It is possible, after the measure has gone through the various stages, I shall vote for it. It is possible I shall vote against every amendment that is presented here—I do not know. I feel there must be adequate consideration by this house of this legislation. We should not be subjected, on a bill of this immense importance, to the Christmas closure which has been imposed upon us in the past.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I wish to add my voice to those who have spoken—Senator Hayden, with whom I agree entirely, Senator O'Leary, and Senator Forsey in the points he has just made.

I was thinking of what the Senate has done in respect to this tax reform legislation. I do not want to bore you with repetition, or to take an unduly long time to tell you that which you already know, but I do want to remind the house that, under the leadership of Senator Hayden, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce commenced its consideration of the matters contained in this bill at the beginning of September, before the Senate resumed its sittings after the summer recess. The committee worked hard and arduously and, in my opinion, very well. The result was, under the chairman's aegis, the tabling on November 4 of the Preliminary Report on the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation.

That report is not of a great many pages, but it contains the results of an enormous amount of work in committee and, as Senator Beaubien has mentioned, the expert considerations of people who are perhaps as knowledgeable as anyone in the country on the matter of taxation. It makes a considerable number of recommendations for either amendment or further consideration.

After further hearings, Preliminary Report No. 2 of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was tabled on November 30. Again a considerable number of matters were mentioned as subjects of recommended amendment or further consideration.

What is the inference to be drawn from the statements made this evening? Do they mean the committee has been wasting its time since September 8? Do they mean that the total work of the committee, with the former Senator Lazarus Phillips as its chief counsel, and Mr. Albert Poissant, Mr. Irving, Mr. Ewens, and other gentlemen, who as advisers rendered such a valuable service, was valueless? Why should this chamber, if it concurs in the work done by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, pass without amendment a bill which takes absolutely no account of the matters mentioned in the two reports submitted by that committee?

These are questions that, in my opinion, need to be answered. I do not feel that they can be just sloughed off. In other words, if this is the situation, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce need never have considered this matter. It should not have bothered to present these two reports. If it was simply reporting for the exercise it seems to me to be a useless—

Hon. Mr. Flynn: An exercise in futility.

Hon. Mr. Molson: —a waste of time.

I believe the suggested amendments and recommendations for further study contained in the two reports are all thoroughly worthy of consideration. I do not believe a single one of the matters in the reports has any touch of political direction. The recommendations are absolutely apolitical, and are worth while.

It is now suggested that we pass this bill in a hurry. If we decide that those recommendations are worthy and we so amend the bill and send it back to the other place, does this mean there will be no time for consideration of our amendments there? Will closure have to be invoked again to deal with this bill? Will it take the other place nine more days to deal with it?

How in the world can the Senate give this bill ordinary, sensible, and serious consideration and guarantee that it can be given royal assent by the end of the year? I feel this is an impossible task for the Senate, and it is quite unjust to ask the Senate to act in this way.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. John M. Macdonald moved, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(h):

> That the name of the honourable Senator Quart be substituted for that of the honourable Senator Méthot on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

He said: Honourable senators, I would ask that this motion be passed tonight because tomorrow this committee will meet to deal with the parole system in Canada. Senator Quart is interested in this subject, and I think it would be as well to have her as a member of the committee at the start of its present study.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT IN WASHINGTON—QUESTION

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I am changing the subject, honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Do not do that. The debate we just had was interesting.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I do it with sorrow. It may be more joyful to the Government Leader or those on the other side of the house to tell us what, in their estimation, was gained by the Prime Minister's flash visit to Washington?

• (2100)

Hon. Paul Martin: I think we all agree that nothing could be more important than a meeting between the head of the Government of Canada and the head of the Government of the United States. Our two countries are close friends; we are each of us deeply involved in trade both ways. The United States is our best customer; we are their best customer. The President of the United States is about to make a very important journey to Asia and to the Soviet Union.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Are you going to give an answer?

Hon. Mr. Martin: I think it would have been regrettable if the Prime Minister had not had the opportunity of conferring with the President, particularly when the President is to confer with Mr. Heath, President Pompidou, and Chancellor Brandt. I think it is a matter for great pride that the first one the President saw was the Prime Minister of Canada.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary: At the Prime Minister's request.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

TELEVISION PROGRAM

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Before the Orders of the Day are called, may I draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that on both TV networks tonight, at 10 o'clock Eastern Standard Time, there will be a program called "To be a Tory".

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty in Canada, tabled in the Senate on Wednesday, November 10, 1971—(Honourable Senator Martin, P.C.).

Hon. Fred A. McGrand: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the honourable Senator McGrand speak now instead of the honourable Senator Martin?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. McGrand: Honourable senators, I do not usually occupy much of the time of this house, but I feel I must express my opinion on the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty. I hope my rather lengthy remarks will not bore you, because I expect to detain you for one hour.

The recommendation of the guaranteed annual income is, in essence, the lifetime thought of the chairman, Senator Croll. He is not the originator of the idea, but he has in the Legislature of Ontario and in the Parliament of Canada been one of the foremost advocates of social justice and a champion of the underprivileged. Some twenty years ago I read a speech that he made in the other place on the guaranteed annual wage. I was impressed by it. It was perhaps the forerunner of his companion thought for the guaranteed annual income. If the Chairman of the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty were paid by the day for all the work he put into this study, he would have one of the largest incomes in Canada.

The chairman and I have many views in common. We have both been involved in municipal and provincial politics. We have held similar government positions in our respective provinces at times when it was difficult to convince our colleagues and citizens that the care of the mentally ill and turbercular patients should be a public responsibility, and that widowed mothers and their children should receive special financial aid.

He has lived most of his life in the great cities of Canada, with their wealth and poverty, with inadequate income and services for those who lived in the slums and the working poor who are everywhere. My background is different. I have lived all my life in rural New Brunswick. The only people I know are those on low incomes—the working poor. The marginal farms, with the disappearing value of its soil and what were once prosperous rural communities, are now on the fringe of becoming rural slums. But the natural resources of New Brunswick are still there, and if they were developed as they should be most New Brunswickers would have a guaranteed annual income that was earned. I hope the chairman understands my interest as well as I understand his.

When this committee was set up to study poverty under Senator Croll, it was not necessary for him to ask me to join his committee; I asked for the privilege to serve. We must remember that this committee was set up to "investigate and report upon all aspects of poverty in Canada, whether urban, rural, regional or otherwise"; and in one of the chairman's excellent speeches he said that the committee would study poverty in its totality. He made a statement that is worth repeating, when he asked "What do the poor want?" He answered that question by saying, "They want what the rich wanted when they were poor".

I do not think the chairman suggests that all the recommendations for a guaranteed annual income be implemented all at once, but should give assistance to the most needy, the old aged, the physically handicapped and the one-parent family. If some financial assistance could be given to the small farmer on what is so often described as marginal farms, or to the non-farm rural poor who can find only part-time employment, these people would stay where they are and not seek work and end up in poverty in the so-called growth centres.

When we met the poor in Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton or Vancouver, I was always looking for some lonely Maritimer who had given up a small income to find a better life in the large city and had found nothing but poverty, and I found many of them.

In Toronto I met a former New Brunswicker who had left a poor-paying job in New Brunswick to seek a better life in Toronto. He, his wife and four children, travelled to Toronto in their car with their few possessions and with a small amount of money. He found no job and he could not find accommodation; his money soon ran out. He could not park on the street; he parked in an alley. He and his family of four children lived in that car in the alley for two months. An Italian immigrant took pity on them and brought them food.

On our first trip to Halifax we had a number of briefs. Several of them were of great interest to me, including the brief of the Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Coloured People. Of all the briefs we received in Halifax two deserve special mention. One was a brief from the Institute of Public Affairs of Dalhousie University. Poverty in Nova Scotia is not confined to Halifax. The other brief was from the Extension Department of St. Francis Xavier University at Antigonish. Both were excellent. The brief from the Institute of Public Affairs of Dalhousie University was a massive document of 137 pages. It was a detailed description of poverty in every county of Nova Scotia.

The fifth paragraph of this brief begins with:

> It is apparent that poverty is predominantly a rural phenomena, a large minority of poverty groups are found in urban areas. The largest poverty group, in terms of actual numbers, is the rural non-farm poor.

It then goes on to give a breakdown of poverty in Nova Scotia, county by county, urban and rural—the extent of rural poverty, farm and non-farm.

The census of 1961 gives Nova Scotia a population of 737,000, of which 256,000, or 34 per cent, fell below the poverty line of an annual income of $3,000. Over 50 per cent of the farm population are classed as poor, and "the actual incidence of poverty in rural non-farm families is approximately 52 per cent as compared with urban poverty of 27 per cent." This exists in every county of Nova Scotia, and in some counties 80 per cent of the rural non-farm people are below the poverty line.

I was most impressed by the brief presented by the Extension Department of St. Francis Xavier University. The brief of the Institute of Public Affairs dealt with statistics; the brief of St. Francis Xavier University dealt with people. Everyone is familiar with the Antigonish movement. It started during the depression. Many persons are involved in its development. It is known throughout the North American continent. People from South America and the emerging countries of Africa come to Antigonish to study its philosophy. This movement helps people to help themselves. Its leaders were the famous big Moses Coady and little Jimmy Tompkins. Both are dead now, but their work goes on. Tompkins encouraged people to build homes by co-operating with each other. He started low cost housing in Cape Breton long before the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was thought of.

The brief of St. Francis Xavier University puts emphasis on people helping themselves by making use of the things that they have at hand—and that means the development of their natural resources.

Father Roach of the Antigonish group said there is just a shuttle service back and forth between the Maritimes and Ontario. "We just cannot throw these people out of the small areas and put them in urban areas. We have to do something with them where they are." And he discussed the potential of Nova Scotia's natural resources.

At this time the chairman brought up the question of guaranteed annual income. He asked for their opinions on how it could be implemented to serve best the needs of Nova Scotia. Should it be on a universal, regional, or some other basis? There was little comment and Dr. MacDonald replied for the Antigonish group as follows:

> I am afraid of the guaranteed income—not in principle—but as Father Roach said, if it is implemented now, what is it going to mean? All it will mean for us is that there will be more in Nova Scotia on a guaranteed income than in, let us say, central Canada. There are some problems which I would like to see settled before the guaranteed income. The first is a redistribution of the industrial facilities in the country or the building up in the Maritimes of its industrial structure; the re-organization of our rural industrial structure and then take the guaranteed income in to pick up the slack. I don't think that the guaranteed income should be used to cover the sores that our economic system is producing because what we are going to have relatively speaking then with the guaranteed income is very poor people relative to the people who are working in centralized industries with a very high rate of productivity.

I agree with our chairman on the principle of a guaranteed annual income but agree most emphatically with Dr. MacDonald of Antigonish that the needs of rural Nova Scotia, and also of New Brunswick and the Gaspé, are best served by building up the industrial structure, and the re-organization of our rural industrial structure. We should develop the natural resources of an area, and then let the guaranteed annual income pick up the slack.

New Brunswick had, in March of this year, about 60,000 adults and children on welfare, and at the present time it has about 20,000 unemployed drawing unemployment insurance—about 10 per cent of the New Brunswick work force. I do not have for New Brunswick the equivalent of the document descriptive of poverty in Nova Scotia produced by the Institute of Public Affairs at Dalhousie University. I do have the report of the Royal Commission on Primary Forest Products in New Brunswick published in 1964. The chairman of that commission was Professor Schuelt of the Department of Forestry at the University of New Brunswick. It is a very revealing document.

The area of New Brunswick is 85 per cent covered by forest. It has the highest forest coverage of most countries in the world, higher than Sweden or any other Scandinavian country. For a long time lumber was the source of New Brunswick's wealth and poverty. The first lumber cut in New Brunswick was for the masts of Louis XIV's navy during the French regime. According to Professor Schuelt, New Brunswick forests grow faster and yield more per square mile than the forests of Sweden. New Brunswick should be rich. Its people should be prosperous. The reverse is true.

Sweden has an area of 150,000 square miles as compared to New Brunswick's 28,000 square miles. Sweden, because of its larger area, has three times the forest area that New Brunswick has, but its forest area produces ten times the amount of harvest produced in New Brunswick. The yield per acre is three times that of New Brunswick. Why? Because Sweden has practised good forest management. New Brunswick has not, and this is the cause of our poverty.

Of 4,500,000 acres of New Brunswick's forest land, approximately 29.2 per cent is in small holdings, mostly farms with farm woodlots big and small. A stand of fast growing trees with proper care is like money in the bank—it is always growing. It is the farmer's cash crop. When he needed a few extra dollars he would cut some saw-logs or pulpwood.

From 1951 to 1961 farm lands in New Brunswick were abandoned at the rate of 10,000 acres per year, and are now growing up in alder bushes. Why? That is a long story—too long to discuss here—but it means poverty.

The land that has been stripped of its forest growth is idle land. It produces nothing, not even tax money. That means poverty.

When the small farmer is forced to over-cut his forest land in order to live, he soon comes to the end of his resources and is forced off the land. This means poverty.

Professor Schuelt writes in his report:

> However, if the woodlot is not improved it will remain a dedication to poverty.

• (2120)

I cannot think of a better argument in favour of the guaranteed annual income. It may enable such farmers to survive and to improve their resources, but I would suggest that, instead of paying them something which they may regard as a salary, we should make the payment to them as a subsidy for the improvements they make.

Professor Schuelt also writes that if the small farm woodlot were to receive the silviculture it requires to maintain the potential of rural employment and survival, it would give rise to employment amounting to about 300,000 man-days of work per year. That means employment.

If the forest resources of New Brunswick were to receive the attention they require, the result would be nearly one million man-days of work per year, and there would be little unemployment in rural New Brunswick.

When our committee met in Saint John, New Brunswick, we heard a brief from the New Brunswick Forest Extension Service. We discussed the large number of small farms that were being abandoned and then bought up by the large pulp and paper companies. I suggested that, if this were to continue, within ten or twenty years New Brunswick would become a province of landless people. The reply made by Mr. Bastin of the New Brunswick Forest Extension Service was very interesting. He said: "That is exactly right. You may question this, but I think that we will be reverting to the fuedal system that prevailed so many years ago." And that, honourable senators, means poverty.

Three years ago I spent three weeks travelling in Scandinavia—in Norway, Sweden, and Finland. I paid little attention to the large cities. I stayed in small towns and travelled through the countryside. I spent several days in the province of Finmark, where most of the Norwegian Lapps live. Upon my return to New Brunswick, I drove by car from Moncton to Ottawa and in every ten miles of highway that I travelled I saw more delapidated buildings, more idle land producing nothing, and more slaughtered woodlots than I saw in the 3,000 miles I travelled in Scandinavia. And that means poverty.

When the Special Senate Committee on Poverty in Canada met at Moncton, it was decided that we should see something of the poverty that existed in the northeastern counties of New Brunswick. Senator Fergusson, Senator Quart, and I made that trip. We were joined by Senator Michaud in Buctouche. In exactly nine hours we travelled about 300 miles in the three counties. That is too short a period of time in which to study the situation in these three counties in which the incidence of poverty is the highest for the province.

At one point Senator Fergusson and I dropped in to see a welfare recipient, a young man in his thirties with a wife and five children. He had worked in Toronto, but not being able to obtain suitable housing had returned to New Brunswick and had gone on welfare. When we met the family they were living on 100 acres of idle land where the man's father had raised a family of twelve during the depression. The small, old-fashioned farm house in which they lived was in fair condition, and the inside was scrupulously clean. There was some evidence of a garden, but it consisted merely of ten short rows of potatoes, which, when harvested, would not have exceeded one barrel. I asked the man if there was any lumber on his 100 acres of land, and he answered that there was not, that every tree had been cut.

So here was an idle man living on 100 acres of idle land. Neither the land nor the man were contributing one dollar to the economy of the province. My point is that if he were to receive a guaranteed annual income he would probably remain in idleness.

But I have a different solution. I would give that young man several thousand little spruce trees about 12 inches high. I would give him an implement for planting them. I would put him to work planting those trees on his own land, and pay him a good daily wage for doing that work. As an employed person he would have his dignity restored and he would have the benefit of his wages, while the benefit to the next generation would be 100 acres of prime spruce lumber.

Similarly, honourable senators, thousands of acres have been abandoned to grow up in bush and are in need of the same silviculture treatment. In this respect let me recall Professor Schuelt's remark, "If the woodlot is not improved, it will remain a dedication to poverty". A moment ago I was comparing New Brunswick and the Scandinavian countries. It is because Sweden recognized the truth of this and began to employ silviculture that her production per acre is now two or three times higher than New Brunswick's.

The shades of night are falling fast over rural New Brunswick, and that means poverty. The shades of night were falling fast over Sweden in the middle of the last century, and that, too, meant poverty. Indeed, during that period Sweden was one of the poorest countries in Europe. Poverty was the way of life in rural Sweden. In fact, in one decade 25 per cent of Sweden's population migrated to the United States. One million rural Swedes found new homes in America's mid-west. Then there was an awakening in Sweden. They searched for and found the cause of their poverty. They revamped their economy around a selective forest service practice, and thus it was that forestry gave Sweden's economy its muscle. Moreover, the most prosperous provinces in Sweden today are those very provinces that at one time had lost most of their population because of poverty.

In Sweden 142,000 farmers have organized themselves in associations of cutting and marketing operations. One association of 42,000 farmers owns and operates its own processing plants, and its sales amount to $150 million a year.

New Brunswick and the Gaspé could become the Sweden of North America, if we were to adopt suitable forest practices. But when we suggest this to the establishment in New Brunswick we always receive the same reply, "We can't catch up to the Swedes. They are 100 years ahead of us." They are really only 75 or 80 years ahead of us, but if we wait another 20 or 25 years they will be 100 years ahead of us. Poverty and unemployment will continue, and no amount of welfare—guaranteed or otherwise—will be able to take up the slack.

The committee also visited Newfoundland and the coast of Labrador. Senators Carter, Eudes, Hastings and myself travelled by car up the northern peninsula of Newfoundland. We heard several briefs at the Grenfell Mission at St. Anthony's and then we went by seaplane up the Labrador coast to Cartwright. We stopped for short stays at Cape Charles, Mary's Harbour and Square Island. We spent slightly longer in Cartwright itself. Our total time in Labrador of six hours was spent on the Labrador coast. It was much too short a time in which to study poverty in that area. Even so, we saw the best, not the worst, of the Labrador coast.

• (2130)

An extension worker of Memorial University at St. John's, Newfoundland told us that he had spent 12 years in the Canadian north, and that he would rather be an Eskimo in the Northwest Territories than a fisherman on the Labrador coast. At Hawke's Bay in the northern peninsula we met Norman and Faye McLeod of the Frontier College. They work at animators helping people to help themselves. I want to read a paragraph from their brief. This is a description of the northern peninsula—the Labrador coast is much worse.

> The poor people we know are not apathetic, nor are they lacking in motivation, nor do they have values alien to you and me. They are unhappy, they are under a great deal of strain, and they are very realistic. It is because they are realistic that they devote most of their attention to making the most of what they have, and do not dare to dream that they can leave poverty permanently behind them. If they have realistic hopes, they are for better wages at their next job, union wages if at all possible, and a few community amenities, such as sewerage, better roads, and some recreation facilities. You have undoubtedly heard of a "culture of poverty". There is no culture of poverty here, for that would imply a specifically impoverished way of life valued by those who live it.
> The poor people we know have a way of life, much of which they value highly; but it is the things they value which are not now part of their way of life, which makes them poor. They are realistic. They have learned the hard way just how little power they have to change their situation, and they have learned to live with that fact. That is the real meaning of the "culture of poverty". The man who tries to change his situation soon learns it's not much use.

While at Hawke's Bay we were told that 15 persons had left the area for Toronto, and had returned within a year. They would rather live with poverty on the Newfoundland coast than live in the slums of Toronto with its summer heat, pollution, and poverty. The people we met on the Labrador coast were intelligent and friendly, and openly discussed their conditions with us. I cannot recall one who asked for the guaranteed income. All they wanted were better fishing facilities, marketing, and services.

Dr. Thomas, Superintendent of the Grenfell Mission at St. Anthony, has been in the area for 25 years. He knows poverty on the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador, and knows the resources better than most people. He believes that the potential natural resources of the fisheries are high; all that is needed is the proper inducement to the fishermen.

It would be well to compare conditions on the Labrador coast with well-organized fisheries. Iceland, on the fringe of the Arctic Circle is a volcanic island with no minerals, not a commercial tree, and scarcely an acre of good soil. It depends on fish. Over 98 per cent of its exports are fish. It supports 200,000 people. They have excellent schools and medical services. Over 80,000 of its population live in Reykjavik. It has a high standard of living and no slums.

But it is best to compare the coast of Labrador with the coast of Greenland. Greenland is nothing more than the world's largest ice-cap with a fringe of tundra along the coast. Along that coast live between 30,000 and 40,000 Greenlanders who have lived by fishing the coastal waters for centuries. They have been one of the most isolated and poorest people in the world—a colony, now a province of Denmark.

Some 30 years ago things began to change for the better. The Danish government decided that Greenland should share the affluence of western Europe. They built this prosperity on the only natural resource that Greenland has—fish. Denmark put up the money for the development, based on the policy of "no profit—no loss". The planning was done by practical men, not theorists.

The fishing industry was mechanized. Melting water from the ice-cap was harnessed for electrical power. Those who wanted to leave the isolated and small hamlets were moved to selected townsites. Some of these communities now have a population of from 3,000 to 5,000. Town planning was introduced. Starting in 1966 a program was launched to build 4,500 homes with running water and sewerage which will be completed by 1975. Apartment houses three and four storeys high had been built at certain localities and the pipes carrying water to these houses are above ground because of the lack of soil or the presence of frost, and they are electrically heated to prevent freezing.

Income per capita has tripled during the post-war period. In 1963 the average annual income was 40 per cent of the average income in Denmark. Today it is about 50 per cent, and it is expected that by 1975 it will be 60 per cent of the average Danish income. It has been done by free enterprise under state management.

The Greenland people receive the same social security benefits as the Danish people, which are quite sufficient. They receive perhaps a little more but it does not come as guaranteed annual welfare but as pay for work input plus subsidy for excellence. The more prosperous Greenland becomes, the better it will serve the economy of Denmark, and the fishermen of Denmark and Greenland get their fish out of the same water, Davis Strait.

This is life along the coast of Greenland, with Greenland's icy mountains in the background.

What do the people on the Labrador coast want, to paraphrase Senator Croll's statement? They want what the people of Greenland wanted when they were equally poor.

The Gaspé is another area I would like to discuss.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Did you say gas bill or Gaspé?

Hon. Mr. McGrand: I said Gaspé, but you can call it what you want. The Gaspé is not a have-not region as far as natural resources are concerned. They are similar to the adjoining Province of New Brunswick, and like New Brunswick it has many rural poor.

When the welfare agencies from Montreal or Quebec City appeared before our committee, I asked them about the number of welfare recipients from the rural areas. One spokesman told us that the English-speaking poor usually come from the Maritimes, and the French-speaking poor from the Gaspé. A spokesman for the St. Vincent de Paul Society told our committee that the amount of social assistance going into the Gaspé exceeds the gross national product of that area. This is difficult to believe because the Noranda Smelter at Murdochville contributes much to the GNP. He may have meant that the amount of social assistance exceeded the GNP of rural Gaspé. This statement should make anyone stop and think and give it second thought. He described part of this problem as a social sickness and said it would take a generation or two to cure this illness.

I expressed my opinion that I preferred seeing people put to work to develop their resources than going on a guaranteed annual income. He replied, "Very definitely, I agree with you, except for this—are you forgetting that to a great extent we are already giving these sections of our country a guaranteed annual income?" This dialogue is recorded on page 11 of the proceedings of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty, October 20, 1970. Mr. Boudreau, the spokesman I referred to, is a national executive of the St. Vincent de Paul Society of Canada, an organization that helps people to help themselves.

There are people in Gaspé, as elsewhere, who prefer to live on welfare, while others do not. There is a growing unrest in some areas of the Gaspé, and Ste. Paula is one of them. On September 23 the Ottawa Citizen described a meeting in the Ste. Paula district where 1,200 people from the surrounding area protested the conditions under which they live. On September 22 the Montreal Gazette gave full page headlines to the following—

Hon. Mr. Thompson: Do you feel it is a choice between giving them work to do to develop their resources and going on guaranteed annual income? Could they do both?

Hon. Mr. McGrand: If you wait until I am through you will understand what I am saying. I am reading from the Gazette of September 22, 1970, under the heading "All this town in Gaspé wants is a chance to help itself." This is written by a Quebec correspondent for the Gazette. I will not read it all because it is a long quotation.

> "We want to stop living off welfare and start living in dignity—with jobs," says Leonard Otis, 46, a backwoods Gaspé farmer.

Residents of tiny Ste. Paula, high in the Gaspé mountains behind Matane and 300 miles east of Quebec, gave up waiting for the Government to help them and two years ago went ahead with a scheme of their own.

They claim it is profitable and say that if their project is applied on a regional scale it will bring prosperity and jobs.

Yesterday, about 30 representatives from the isolated, poverty-stricken part of the province travelled to Quebec by car to summon government officials to a giant rally tonight in Ste. Paula.

"We want to stop walking around with 'welfare case' branded on our foreheads," said Mr. Otis, who has received government assistance since he can remember.

The villagers want the government to set up a Crown corporation to create the Ste. Paula project on a regional scale in the 50-square-mile area around Matane.

They are so convinced it can work that they are willing to have the corporation financed out of the welfare money they are getting at present.

He calculates the province will spend almost $100,000,000 in welfare in the area over the next four years. If only one-quarter of that amount were invested in the tree farm project, "the people could live without welfare and in dignity."

I had urged the Poverty Committee to visit the Gaspé area. The mainland consists of nine counties: Kamouraska, Rimouski, Rivière du Loup, Temiscouata, Matane, Matapedia, Gaspé North, Gaspé South and Bonaventure. Before the committee left on tour of the Gaspé area, a member of the staff went ahead and organized our meetings. He spent a week or ten days in preparation. He travelled throughout those nine counties talking to people about the problems of the area and about the people we should meet. The Gaspé tour was to last four days and the most depressed areas were to be visited. The tour was reduced to three days, then to two days, and finally to one day.

It was arranged that we would stop at three small communities on the east side of the highway that passes through the Matapedia Valley on the way to Rimouski. They were not more than six or eight miles from the main highway, and one of these villages was Ste. Paula.

We left Campbellton, New Brunswick, at 1 p.m. and arrived, non-stop, at Rimouski at 3 p.m. We had no work to do until the meeting in Rimouski at 8 p.m. It is regrettable that we did not stop to talk with people in problem areas such as Ste. Paula. They were expecting us and were disappointed when we passed them by. We were to hold a meeting in Rimouski with the regional Chamber of Commerce for the lower St. Lawrence region, which we did. We met at 8 p.m. and adjourned at 9.30 p.m. We were to have another meeting the following forenoon. We met at 9 a.m. and adjourned at 12 noon. We were to visit two small villages in Rimouski county, but did not, because for some reason the visits were cancelled.

Gaspé is one of the tragic areas of Canada. It is 17,300 miles in area, 85 per cent of it, as in New Brunswick, forest covered. In 1966 it had a combined population of 338,000. From 1961 to 1966, 49,000 people emigrated. In the same period 3,000 farms were abandoned, and now useless bushes are growing over them. In 1961 the per capita income was $796, compared to $1,885 for Quebec as a whole. Unemployment runs from 20 to 30 per cent. I do not know how factual Mr. Boudreau's statement is that welfare exceeds the GNP.

In some of these areas which we were to visit and did not, the Government has assisted some farmers to move and settle in larger centres such as Rimouski and Matane. When I asked what their future would be, I was told that if they came to Matane or Rimouski they would survive on welfare.

In the nine counties of this area of 17,000 square miles, poverty is too prevalent to examine in a short period of five or six hours. I have talked to several people who are familiar with Gaspé, have studied its problems and have views on how to cure its poverty. One of these persons had appeared before the Senate Special Committee on Land Use about 10 years ago.

He was born in the Gaspé, received his agricultural education in Quebec and was employed by the World Food and Agricultural Organization as an agricultural adviser in Iran. He studied agricultural problems in Algeria at the close of the French regime and was later employed by the World Bank to study agricultural investment in Morocco. He was for 20 years superintendent of the agricultural station that served the 16 counties of eastern Quebec. He knows Gaspé and its problems as few men do. He was willing to come but he somehow was not invited.

The Senate Report on Poverty is a massive document, but it is an analysis of urban poverty. It has focussed public opinion on the presence of poverty in our cities. But it is incomplete because it does not include a study of rural or regional poverty—poverty in its totality, and its causes. Of its 200 or more pages, less than half a page is used to describe rural poverty. Urban poverty is easy to describe. The slums are there for everyone to see—so are the poor. The welfare agencies are in the cities and they have the statistics.

Rural and regional poverty have to be determined differently, but it is there and usually unseen. According to the brief of the Institute of Public Affairs of Dalhousie University, poverty in Nova Scotia is predominantly a rural phenomenon, which is true of New Brunswick and the Gaspé.

I have described poverty in New Brunswick, the Gaspé and the Labrador coast. If poverty is to be eliminated by stimulating our economy, I cannot think of a better way of getting our economy rolling than by putting people to work in the areas I have mentioned—doing the things that should be done, rebuilding what has been destroyed and allowing nature to do the rest. Then we can introduce the benefits of a guaranteed annual income to take up the slack. Experiments carried out in New Zealand have shown that there are more man units of labour employed in forest farming than in other forms of agriculture.

I believe that when the weather is better the Poverty Committee should make a study of poverty in various regions of Canada, including the Interlake region of Manitoba. We should talk to the people on the spot and not rely on the opinions of social scientists, who often develop their views from text books. It should not cost much. The Senate Land Use Committee was in operation each year from 1957 to 1963. It published a report each year, the cost of the undertaking being the modest sum of $32,700.

When we complete this study of poverty in Canada we should publish a supplementary report and on the cover we should put the picture of that radiant, enthusiastic grade 10 student from Sydney, Cape Breton, who attended our meeting in Halifax and urged us to approach our task from a position of strength rather than weakness. I suggest that if we need a slogan or a motto it should be "Make workfare, not welfare".

On motion of Hon. Mr. Langlois, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, December 1, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Welch calling the attention of the Senate to certain shortcomings in the agricultural policy of the federal Government.

Hon. Harry Hays: Honourable senators, I feel that someone should reply to the points raised by Senator Welch in the course of his speech on agricultural policy, particularly as it relates to apples. Because of the lateness of the hour I shall not take long in saying what I wish to say, but I should like to provide some additions and make some corrections for the record.

I am not an apple producer, but I have owned apple orchards and I know something about the industry. In my opinion we were misled by some of the points put forward last week, and I will attempt to correct those.

No one will argue that Canadian apple farmers have things nice and soft, and that they are rolling in money. However, I do not think they are all on the verge of bankruptcy either. No one will argue that the export picture looks rosy right now, but I do not think it is as bad as we have been led to believe.

It is true that Canadian apples have been kept out of some countries, and we think that some of the rules and regulations have been pretty flimsy and unfair. But we have not been standing still on this problem. We have made progress. Just last week, the Government announced that it had persuaded South Africa to allow our apples back into their market. The Government has done the same with New Zealand, and a trial shipment from Nova Scotia is on its way to that country.

We landed those markets for our farmers by sending our disease experts and scientists to those countries to talk to their officials, and they persuaded them that they did not have anything to worry about from Canadian apples. We are making progress in Australia and Japan, and I agree with Senator Welch that we would be doing a great deal to help our apple farmers if we could tap the Japanese market.

The honourable senator mentioned that there is a duty on our apples sold in the United States, but that we allow United States apples into Canada free of charge. What he failed to tell us was that the United States duty will be dropped completely on January 1, thanks to some hard-nosed bargaining by Canadian officials at talks held recently the Washington. He did not tell us that most of our sales to the United States market start after the new year begins, so that most of our sales to the United States from this year's crop will enter the United States duty-free.

We heard about the problem of apple concentrates flooding the Canadian market, but we did not hear anything about the fact that the Department of National Revenue had put an end to this. Senator Welch mentioned Austria, Greece, Hungary and Switzerland, and I would point out that the National Revenue Department took action on October 13 against those countries, including Bulgaria. The department took firm steps, through the anti-dumping tribunal, to stop that dumping. While on the subject of apple concentrate, I would remind the house that last year the federal Government gave farmers approximately $400,000 to help them meet this competition from imports.

Senator Welch mentioned a number of other problems in international trade, including subsidies received by farmers in France and Europe who competed in our markets. We all know that a trade war is going on, and that some countries are using subsidies and other methods to try to protect their farmers. I do not see how we can correct this problem by jumping on the same bandwagon and adding our own set of restrictions and subsidies. We have nothing to gain, and a lot more to lose, if we do things that will merely step up this trade war.

These nations are now trying to reverse the trend in order to get out of the problem they have created. The OECD is working on this problem and is trying to bring some order into world apple production and marketing. They know that the present merry-go-round of higher and higher subsidies, steeper and steeper trade restrictions, and bigger and bigger losses on export sales cannot continue. There are signs that some countries are coming around, and instead of pushing prices up still higher with even more subsidies, they are starting to pay farmers to cut back production and to rip out orchards.

We are, therefore, heading in the right direction, and when we achieve some common sense in world trade for apples, our Canadian farmers are likely to be sitting in the driver's seat. Farmers in some of the other countries have been getting pretty soft from high prices, subsidies, and protection from Canadian competition. But one day they will wake up to reality and find that Canadian farmers have been improving their industry and making it more efficient. When the smoke screen of their subsidies and trade restrictions is gone—and it is obvious that we must head in that direction—they will have to do a lot of scrambling in order to catch up to Canadian apple growers.

We were told last week that the Government had not done anything for Canadian apple-growers. The Government has done a good deal, and I think it is only our sense of fair play in international trade that has kept it from doing more. The Government has hired scientists and equipped research stations to work on problems in our apple industry. In the long run this kind of help and research will be worth a lot more than some short-term subsidy that does not solve any problems, but just creates a few more of its own.

I could recite a long list of research projects that have paid off for apple farmers. There are the award-winning products our scientists have developed, new processing and handling systems, new varieties, new methods of planting, pruning, managing and spraying orchards, disease and pest control programs, and so the list goes on. Anyone who is familiar with the research organization of the Department of Agriculture will know that we spend a very fair share of the total budget on apple research. The same is true of all other services which the department provides for the many producers of different farm products. Apple farmers certainly get their fair share of the total budgets.

We heard a speech of gloom and doom, but the outlook calls for a better year ahead. Apple farmers know that they get the highest prices for fresh apples, and less money for apples that go into processing. This year the market for fresh apples will be better than that of last year, and less of the crop will be sold for processing. So income should improve. Farmers in Ontario stand to gain more than most farmers from this shift to fresh apples, because they should be able to capture a big share of the Prairie market this year.

There are two more points that our honourable colleague did not mention, but which are important if we wish to obtain a complete picture of this industry. First, he did not mention that the federal Government will be giving a grant to the Canadian Horticultural Council, which is to be used to offset the bill apple farmers usually pay for promotion of their crop. That is a lot of money which he overlooked in his speech.

Secondly, I should like to point out that if the federal Government did offer the subsidies that Senator Welch seems to be asking for, our trading partners might impose a countervailing duty against our apple exports. If a countervailing duty prevents us from making export sales, our farmers could actually be hurt instead of helped.

I will not argue the point that Canadian apple farmers do not have problems, but I think it only fair that the whole story be told to show the bright spots as well as the problems. We should give the Government credit for the help it has provided and is providing the industry, and we should try to understand the reasons why the Government may not be able to give all of the help and subsidies it might wish. It is sometimes hamstrung by international trade rules.

Senator Welch called for a royal commission to study the apple industry. I do not think this is necessary. The situation and the facts are quite open, and a royal commission would simply tell us what we already know, and it would be a waste of money. I am willing to agree that we could study some of the factors that would help the apple-growing industry improve profits, but such help is already being provided by several government departments, including the Department of Agriculture. If we keep adding studies, we will need a study group to study all the people who are undertaking studies.

I am satisfied that the record shows the Government is not willing to stand by and watch the whole apple industry go down the drain. The record shows just the opposite. There is plenty of evidence that the Government has spent and is expending large amounts of money and effort in helping the Canadian apple industry.

I point out that there is a difference between the help the apple industry needs and the help the individual apple grower needs. The apple industry may be facing problems, but the apple growers, at least in some areas of Canada, are certainly far from financial ruin, because their land is worth $1,000 or more an acre. Farmers have a perfect right to choose to be apple growers, but that does not mean that the Government should be asked to guarantee that every single grower is to realize a profit.

I believe we should give apple farmers credit for doing a good job. I do not believe they want handouts and welfare payments. I think they want to make a go of it on their own and derive a profit from their apples. As far as I can see, that is exactly what the federal Government is trying to help them do.

There is one further observation I wish to make before I sit down. Sometimes we are not mindful of the fact that Canada is the largest per capita exporter in the world. We export goods to the value of some $750 per person. The next largest exporter is just over $400 per person. With the exception of two or three countries, Canada exports more than she imports, and this makes trading precarious when trying to deal with these people. In my opinion, the Canadian Government and Canada as a whole has done well. I wanted to have these comments on the record because there are two sides to the apple story.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Langlois, for Hon. Mr. Argue, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.
