The time was spent in connection with the sale of lands and other property of the company in the counties of St. John, York and Northumberland. The referee had granted $250,000, but Mr. Winslow contended that the referee had no right to an additional allowance outside the taxed bill. Judge Palmer stated that the order was made under the impression that the referee had no right to an additional allowance outside the taxed bill. The referee had granted $250,000, but Mr. Winslow contended that the referee had no right to an additional allowance outside the taxed bill. The St. John evening Gazette in referring to his death, says:—He was born in Surrey, Eng., in 1818 and began the study of the law in London. Owing to poor health he came to America, and decided to locate in St. John where the climate appeared to agree with his and his health rapidly improved. He resumed his legal studies in the office of Moses H. Terley and was admitted to the bar in 1841. Many years ago he was made Q. C. It was the equity court, and before the supreme court of the province that he made for himself a high reputation as a lawyer. Mr. Kaye married Miss Annie E. Bonall, daughter of George Bonall, whose father came to St. John with the Loyalists. Mrs. Kaye and nine children survive him.

Rev. Andrew J. O'Neill, of the diocese of St. John, is the winner of the moral prize in the Grand Seminary, Quebec.

We learn from our Halifax exchanges that the Rev. Monsignor Howley, bishop elect of St. John, is the winner of the moral prize in the Grand Seminary, Quebec. He was accompanied by Archbishop O'Brien and Rev. F. Murphy, of Halifax. His Bishop McDonald, of Fredericton, E. I. The two bishops will assist at his consecration.

Tisdale, have left in a private car for a trip through Ontario, which will include a visit to Niagara Falls and the military camp at Niagara.

DROWNED AT COACUQUE.—The Moncton Times furnishes us with the following account of the drowning of Wilfred Bourgeois at Coacouque bridge, Kent Co., on Thursday last.—It appears that Wilfred Bourgeois, brother of Mr. Simon Bourgeois, lobster packer and merchant, came in from the factory, of which he is manager, on Thursday. He remained until evening, when he met a number of friends and took several drinks. About ten o'clock he started to go to his boat at the bridge. He was accompanied by two of his companions, a nephew and a cousin, who saw him safely aboard his boat, lying down on the deck. He was not seen afterwards, but next day his hat was found floating near by and this led to the suspicion that he had been drowned, which has proved to be correct. Search was made but the body was not found until Saturday. The impression is that the unfortunate man started to get up from his boat during the night and fell overboard. He was quite a young man and leaves a widow and two children.

Several accounts say that there are suspicious signs of a foul murder in connection with the drowning of Wilfred Bourgeois at Coacouque bridge, Kent county, who was found on Saturday last. Dr. Leger, of Shediac, held a post-mortem and at the request testified that the injuries found on the head of deceased had undoubtedly been made before death, as the blood had flown freely and was considerably clotted. His opinion was that the wounds had been made by some blunt instrument. A woman testified that during the night she had heard the noise of a quarrel in the vicinity of deceased's boat. What has increased the suspicion of foul play is that the deceased had trouble during the last provincial election. The matter will be thoroughly investigated.

Dairy Farming Lectures.—Mr. W. W. Hubbard is expected here today and will deliver lectures in different sections of the county on Dairy Farming. According to bills he will deliver his first lecture at the School House, Middle District, Napan, on Friday evening next.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN NEWCASTLE.—One of the most destructive fires that has occurred in Newcastle for years broke out at an early hour on the morning of Friday last completely destroying six buildings together with the greater portion of their contents. The fire is supposed to have started in one of the buildings of Newman's carriage factory about one o'clock but it was not discovered until some time after. When the alarm was given shortly after two, the blacksmith's shop, the old shop and the large new shop in course of construction was a mass of fire and flames and as there was a strong north-west wind blowing at the time, the fire made rapid progress and they were speedily burnt to the ground.

The new building was 35x50 feet, 20 foot front and 22 feet high; it was rough boarded, roof shingled and window and door frames in, and contained a number of wagons in for repair or to be painted. Messrs. Clark & Lonsbury had a number of new wagons stored in it, three of these were destroyed with the rest. Their loss is close on $1,000; no insurance. Mr. Newman lost all his stock in trade, finished and unfinished work, tools, and his loss is estimated at $5,000; no insurance. Mr. Peter Forsyth, of Northport, who was working on the new building, lost his tools, a wagon, some harness, and his horse was led out of the barn after it apparently had been burning for some time.

Close adjoining on the lower side, was a double house owned by Mr. George Brown; the kitchen of both houses were destroyed, when the fire engines were at work and the main building saved with little or no damage. Mr. Brown had his furniture removed. He lost two pots and watches; one had been taken in charge for the owner and returned, the other is missing. Both Mr. Linsley and Mr. George Lonsbury have fully insured. The cause of the fire got in its work, totally destroying the Newman household; then the double house owned by Mr. Thos. Russell; the house was fully insured. The cause of the fire got in its work, totally destroying the Newman household; then the double house owned by Mr. Thos. Russell; the house was fully insured. The cause of the fire got in its work, totally destroying the Newman household; then the double house owned by Mr. Thos. Russell; the house was fully insured.

Dr. Adams is the engineer of the proposed road, and as the engineer of St. John capitalists has raised $60,000 to build the road, the dream stage of the project, at least in the present the road had been a lot of furniture, etc., the property of an employee of Mr. Newman who was expecting shortly to set up housekeeping with an estimate young woman. The other half was occupied by Mr. Keith Anderson, who was insured for $500.

The next building was owned and occupied by Mr. James Beazley, and was totally destroyed; insurance $250. About one hundred feet further on in the residence of Mr. James B. Russell, the roof of which on the side nearest the fire is badly scorched and will require to be re-shingled.

Just across the street from the Newman factory is the house owned and occupied by Mr. Louis Nivert; the front is scorched, but the rest of the house is saved, and presented it spreading on that side of the street. His hands are blistered badly with the heat.

The wind was blowing briskly from the southwest, and huge files of burning embers were carried to the water street and the roofs of several buildings were set on fire by them. The precaution of the fire ward in holding the steam fire engine and dispatching the hand engine to the scene of the fire saved the town from a general conflagration.

As soon as the people were aroused and plenty about to extinguish the falling embers, the fire engine was engaged at the front rear. The shape of the roof of the car is between the centre of the tracks. The motor car will be a half car, and will come down to a point near the ground and have the shape of a half car, and will come down to a point near the ground and have the shape of a half car, and will come down to a point near the ground and have the shape of a half car.

There will be a pilot wheel on each side of the car at the front and rear, and a driving wheel on each side of the front and rear. The motor car will be a half car, and will come down to a point near the ground and have the shape of a half car, and will come down to a point near the ground and have the shape of a half car.

"PARKER." The officials in the office still have a vivid recollection of Dean Thurlow. For three days, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, he permeated the entire establishment; he interviewed registrars, clerks of the seals, and all kinds of high officials; he was as urbane, as cordial and pleasant, that he talked over everybody. He gave two little luncheon parties, and it is said that he put several of the juniors on a "good trip" for Kempton park. Many fathers of widows who dropped in there to prowl about him for a judge at least, and adored him, and the worthy dean took them on hand and piloted them through the intricacies of probate practice. At four o'clock the very day before the funeral, probate was granted to the dean, and he returned to his wife with the precious document in his hand.

That evening he felt he had won the first trick, but he owned to his wife that, of course, Parker might have the trump in her hand after all. "Parker," he said, "may have got him to execute a will subsequent to mine; that will be annoying, certainly, but I may upset it on the ground of undue influence; but the thing I dread most is she may have married him, and that would revoke my will and leave her in a splendid position." This, indeed, was a tremendous fly in his pot of ointment. "Why," asked his wife, "did you not search the marriage registers?" "Of course I did," he growled back, "but the last six months are never posted up and she may win the old trick yet."

The dean wrung his hands at the prospect of such a thing. Then he went to bed and prepared for the funeral on the morrow. CHAPTER II. Next morning he and his son Jack took train to Claxton Manor. Of course Jack was to go, as he, in fact, was the heir. All the real estate, and there was a good bit, was to go finally to him, Jack was a wild, undisciplined, but of twenty, very comely to look upon, with his bright, young English face, his merry eyes and tawny hair. The dean loved and was proud of his son, but for all that Jack was a thorn in his father's side. When his bills came from Oxford there was always a dreadful scene. "He is absolutely ignorant of the value of money," sighed his father. "What that boy costs me no one will ever know."

The dean always preached little immoral essays to his son in this wise: "Providence, as a rule, endows a man with one of three things, brains, money or good looks—all three are negotiable securities; you have no brains and no money; but you have the third, make the best use of it and marry an heiress. Jack always promised he would. As they drove up to the closed house the dean admonished his son to treat Parker with great respect, and he added: "And I do wish, Jack, you would throw away that cigarette and contrive to look a little more depressed."

"But, dad, I am not depressed at all; I never saw the old gentleman. In fact, I am looking forward to a jolly good row between you and Parker, and I say it's three to one on Parker." The dean growled softly; it was so hard that one's own flesh and blood should take so melancholy a view of his chances of success. As they passed through the old hall the dean was startled by Jack calling out: "Hullo dad! This was caused by a passing glimpse of a very pretty girl of about 17. She was dressed in very neat mourning with a pretty white scarf, she moved away with such a swift dainty grace that before the dean could get his eye-glass up she was gone."

"Dad, Miss Gladys Munroe from the hall," he said. "They all greatly esteemed your uncle." "Jack looked less depressed than ever. Park received them in the old oak dining room, to use Jack's phrase. She certainly put a lot of side on, but her manner, if cold, was certainly respectful and deferential, and she alluded to the deceased as her late master. The dean professed the service with a sonorous dignity that was extremely impressive. Jack followed first as chief mourner, and, rather to his surprise, immediately after him came Parker and the young lady from the hall. Jack was desirous that the pretty young lady should walk beside him, and bowed to her to do so, but she only shook her head and smiled tearfully, the gentlest, sweetest, shonery smile one could imagine. She looked so pretty, and sweet and sad, that Jack all but said, "Oh, I say, don't cry." She was the only one of all those assembled who shed a tear. As she stood beside the open grave, a bunch of white lilies relieving the intense blackness of her dress, her pretty golden hair framed by the little black bonnet Jack vowed to himself that Gladys Munroe was the prettiest girl he had ever seen. Half an hour later all the party were assembled in the dining room to hear the will read.

"Let all the servants be called in," said the dean with great authority. "You will perhaps allow me also to be present," said Parker, in her smooth voice. "Certainly," replied the dean, with emphasis. "The young lady may remain also, if she wish." "A ghost of a smile crossed Parker's calm face as she spoke. If the dean read the funeral service impressively, he had yet retained a still more pathetic key in which to read the will. It was dated ten years ago, and, as our readers know, everything went to the dean and his son, except some legacies to the servants living with deceased at his death. As the dean finished, the parchment crackled as he folded it up, but the dean heard another rustling behind him. Parker had risen in her crisp, new mourning and was facing the audience. The dean began with a proprietary smile: "I need hardly say, Parker, that I shall be glad to increase your legacy of £20 to £50. Parker's manner is respectful still, but has an unexpected austerity. "I thank you for your kindness, but I do not now need it. I am Mrs. Thurlow, your uncle having married me a month before his death." A hum of approval rose from the other servants. Mrs. Thurlow (though for convenience sake we will continue to call her Parker) moved with some dignity from her seat and took the head of the table. Jack laughed softly and said: "There, dad, I told you it was odds on the black mare."

The dean preserved his serenity admirably. "I presume you are in a position to prove the marriage." "Certainly, I have the certificate here." Whereupon, without more ado, she produced it. "I have obtained probate of the will I have just read," continued the dean, when he had inspected and handed back the certificate. "A little premature (she said reproachfully) but that was only a slip she made." You know of course, that marriage cancels a will? Then, indeed, the dean felt his plank giving away beneath him. "If that is so, my uncle died intestate and you will take your half of the property." "Excuse me a moment," replied Parker. She then called to one of the maids who handed her a box, out of which she produced, and duly put on, a widow's cap, and a very comely widow she made as she sat there in her becoming mourning, the light of victory in her bright eyes. "It is my turn to read a will now," said the buxom widow, and she dived once more into her neat little reticule. When things came to this pitch the dean said he felt he could have no more blows in store for him. The will was dated three days after the marriage and after leaving a legacy of £500 to the dean the entire residue of his property went to "his dear wife Anna Maria and to her daughter Nellie."

"To your what?" cried the dean, glaring at her through his glasses. "To my daughter Nellie," she replied, waving her hand to the pretty young girl with the sweet eyes and hair. Nellie blushed and half held out her hand to the dean in a proprietary way. Jack blushed too to the very roots of his ruffled yellow hair; she was Miss Gladys Munroe after all, only a cook's daughter. Up till then the dean had kept the curb on his temper, but now the tempest of his wrath broke loose. There was a terrible scene. He denounced the whole thing as an abominable conspiracy; he would upset both marriage and will; he banged the table, he stamped on the floor; he called his uncle a confounded old fool; and to Parker he said every dreadful thing an outraged dean may say. I am bound to admit that Parker scored off him as far as dignity went, but then it is easy to keep your temper when you have won the game and have only to gather up the stakes. The dean left the house threatening all kinds of pains and penalties; he shook the dust off his feet and leaped out fire and fury as he leapt into the fly. Jack ought to have supported and seconded his father, but Nellie was crying softly in a corner and she looked so troubled and pretty that Jack, after a moment's hesitation, took her hand and said softly: "Good-by, Nellie, don't cry; you and I'll remain friends whatever the old folks do, and straight away Nellie did leave off crying and little watery drops of a smile crept back into her eyes as she looked up at Jack and whispered: "How kind and good you are Good-by!"

CHAPTER III. The next three months are a chronicle of doughty legal deeds. With a beautiful alacrity several sets of solicitors galloped into the fray. The dean questioned the marriage and that was established, he attacked the second will and that was confirmed. After that, to his horror, the widow carried the war into his camp, and impugned his twenty thousand pounds' consol arrangement, and to his utter dismay the court held it formed part of the deceased's assets and went under his will, and worse still, the costs were given against the dean. For many days he never read his papers; consol went up and down and he heeded them not. It was now summer time, and Jack had been away sketching and fishing for a month, and came back just as the crisis arrived. His father stared at him with a glassy eye. "Go and break stones by the roadside. All the freestones are gone, the valuable freestone ground rents gone. Claxton Manor and its rent-roll gone and now the consol will go and that woman is gloating over her ill-gotten gains." As Jack hears all this he flushes half guilty. "I say, dad," he answers, "there's one trump card you haven't played yet. May I play that card to you?" The dean turns sharply on his son. "No jesting, boy; what do you mean?" Jack takes his father's hand and says softly: "Let me marry Nellie."

"Men don't often have hysterics," but deans perhaps may, now and then; at any rate Dean Thurlow seemed on the verge of an attack, but in a few moments he pulled himself together and grasped the situation. Nellie was a cook's daughter, it is true; but she was an heiress, exceedingly sweet, gentle and pretty. All that month that young rascal Jack had been fishing near Claxton Manor, and, truly, he had fished to some purpose. Mrs. Thurlow was a little difficult to manage; for many nights she neglected "Wilhelm Meister" and listened to Jack's plausible pleading. Then, aided and abetted by his father, he got Nellie asked for by the dean and her sweet, winning ways completed the victory. Parker stood somewhat on her dignity, but she had grown to like that bright-faced boy and, having so completely overthrown the dean, she could afford to be generous. The dean girded himself together and brought all his diplomacy to bear on the marriage settlements. He enjoined Parker into resigning some of her life interests, and ultimately the entire property of Uncle Tony was brought back into the family. Having accepted of this the dean set himself to work to put a good face on the matter socially. He discovered that Parker's father had been a small oil and color man, who preached in a Methodist chapel on Sundays in a remote village in Lincolnshire. Parker was astonished and society duly invited to hear the dean allude to her father as "the well-known divine, Jonathan Parker." Within a year or two she relieved the dean of all further trouble by retiring once more to Lincolnshire and marrying a respectable local doctor. The years run on and still find Mrs. Dean struggling with "Wilhelm Meister," and the dean sips his old port as of yore, but a little grand-son generally rests upon his knee and persuades the reverend divine to tell him a story. I need only say that the morals of the dean's stories always have a distinctly worldly flavor, and invariably inculcate the supreme duty of getting on making money and duly investing it.

Facts About Dyspepsia. WRONG action of the stomach and liver often causes dyspepsia. Dyspepsia in turn gives rise to bad blood. Both these complaints are curable by B. B. B., which acts on the stomach, liver, bowels and blood, and tones and strengthens the entire system, thus positively curing dyspepsia, constipation, bad blood and similar troubles. LACRATA WING, New Dundee, Ont. The man who has the most to say about chaffy clothing is he who is best dressed. The man who thinks that reform ought to begin on the other side of the world. As a blood-purifier, the most eminent physicians prescribe Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is the most powerful combination of vegetable alteratives ever offered to the public. As a spring and family medicine, it may be freely used by old and young alike. It is conjectured that a specific may yet be found for every ill that flesh is heir to. However this may be, certainly the best specific yet found for diseases of the blood is Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and most diseases originate from impure blood. Gulp's Case. DEAR SIRS, I have been troubled for over a year with sick headache and stick stomach. Nothing did me any good until I tried B. B. B., which made a perfect cure before I had finished the first bottle. I recommend it as a safe cure for headache to all my friends. Mrs. ANNIE McNEELY, Gaspé, Ont.
