

DOCTOR ADVISED AN OPERATION

Read Alberta Woman's Experience with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Provost, Alberta.—"Perhaps you will remember sending me one of your books a year ago. I was in a bad condition and would suffer awful pains at times and could not do anything. The doctor said I could not have children unless I went under an operation. I read testimonials of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the papers and a friend recommended me to take it. After taking three bottles I became much better and now I have a bonny baby girl four months old. I do my housework and help a little with the chores. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to my friends and am willing for you to use this testimonial letter."—Mrs. A. A. ADAMS, Box 54, Provost, Alberta.

Lachine, Quebec.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I suffered with pains in my left side and back and with weakness and other troubles women so often have. I was this way about six months. I saw the Vegetable Compound advertised in the 'Montreal Standard' and I have taken four bottles of it. I was a very sick woman and I feel so much better I would not be without it. I also use Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I recommend the medicines to my friends and I am willing for you to use my letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. M. W. ROSE, 680 Notre Dame St., Lachine, Quebec.

The joy of a letter gives the link that binds friendship.

751 SETTLERS CAME TO N. B. LAST YEAR

Agricultural Committee Hears Details of F. E. Sharpe's Tour of Europe.

Fredericton, April 24.—Seven hundred and fifty-one persons entered the province of New Brunswick last year with the intention of settling according to Dominion Statistics, F. E. Sharpe, provincial immigration superintendent, told the members of the Agriculture Committee of the Legislature this morning. Mr. Sharpe added that there was nothing to show how many had remained.

A striking feature of the transformation is the fact that the change has come about without change of technical engineers or skilled laborers. In fact, one reason for turning into such activities as watch and clock making, moving picture manufacturing, and the construction of delicate mechanisms for optical and microscopical instruments was the consideration that a large staff of skilled workers and engineers used to be engaged in perfecting the delicate mechanisms of rapid-fire guns and the like. These men, after the war, were compelled to turn from inventing and constructing engines of death to devising machinery for the advancement of civilization.

Thus new types of turbine engines are being evolved, Diesel motors are being improved upon better processes of steel are being experimented with, and with each other travels nearly five miles from one end of the plant to the other. The longest of the buildings, that devoted to locomotive construction, covers an area of 800,000 square feet and has a frontage of 1,640 feet. The four hydraulic presses for compressing blocks of steel exert a pressure of 4,000 tons each. Some 900 workmen are employed for bringing high grade steel to the melting point having a capacity up to 90 tons each. The plant is equipped to employ 115,000 men. The work was the figure reached during the peak of war-time production, and applies to Essen alone. If one adds other plants, at Kiel and in the Ruhr valley, the Krupps can furnish up to 180,000 men.

As a matter of fact, however, only 28,000 workers are now on the payroll. The Krupps are going through the same readjustment which is being experienced by other firms. Some of the smaller firms had to face when the war was over. Before the war they were doing a thriving business with 36,000 men employed.

Mr. Smith E. Baird has returned to L'Anse-aux-Cousins to resume his former position as filer in the shingle mill of the Shepard and Morse Lumber Co.

The impression made by the Krupps works to-day is a rather desolate one. Only in the department of agricultural machinery does the place seem really busy. The railway locomotive construction department, for instance, is equipped to turn out a locomotive each working day, or about 300 a year. At present it has orders for only 20 German locomotives, and a small number of wood-burning engines intended for Brazil. Ship construction is at a low ebb, as the world generally is overstocked with ships.

As far as the agricultural machinery department is concerned, its present orders are largely of Russian origin. It will be remembered that in 1923 the Krupps concern signed an agreement with the Russian Soviet government by which 67,500 acres of land in the Don region of Russia are to be cultivated under the auspices of the Krupps. The Krupps have undertaken to put into the venture all the most modern agricultural machinery necessary, and to develop the region into one vast model farm.

It is understood that this Russian venture lies outside the usual activities of the Krupps, which have strictly limited themselves thus far to production within the German Reich, and have only exported articles that could be manufactured on German soil in their own plants.

If the Krupps nevertheless embarked upon a new policy, this was obviously done in the hope that Russia may yet prove the richest export field for German industry. Whether the hope will be justified, remains to be seen.

Mr. R. D. Ferguson, who has been one of our successful merchants for the past few years, left with his wife and family on Monday of last week for St. Catherine's, Ont., where he has purchased a fruit farm. The wishes of his many friends follow him in his new venture.

NOTED GUNMAKERS DIRECT ENERGIES TO PATHS OF PEACE

Quantity production three years ago of battleship turrets and rapid-fire guns was a feature of the work here of the firm of Friedrich Krupp, once the symbol throughout the world of armament manufacture; to-day this organization is making artificial teeth and surgical instruments.

Swords or bayonets more hideous modern successors, the "Big Bertha" cannon, have literally been beaten into ploughshares. The Krupps now turn out agricultural machinery, railway engines, automobile trucks, merchant ships, steel bridges, and a thousand and one smaller things. Artificial teeth and surgical instruments are but two of the many minor articles manufactured in what was once the most formidable armament plant in the world.

A striking feature of the transformation is the fact that the change has come about without change of technical engineers or skilled laborers. In fact, one reason for turning into such activities as watch and clock making, moving picture manufacturing, and the construction of delicate mechanisms for optical and microscopical instruments was the consideration that a large staff of skilled workers and engineers used to be engaged in perfecting the delicate mechanisms of rapid-fire guns and the like. PREFERENCE WILL BE CARRIED OUT

Churchill's Budget Also Expected to Give Assistance to Manufacturers.

London, April 23.—That Mr. Churchill's budget will carry out the policy of Imperial preference to which the committee is taken for granted, says the Morning Post. "Nor is it altogether improbable that it may contain some provisions for assisting British manufacturers which will not conflict with Mr. Baldwin's election pledges that nothing in the shape of a general tariff shall be proposed during the existence of this Parliament. The general impression is that remission of duty will be confined to the income tax. Even so it is hard to see how the money is to be found to take off even a pence. Mr. Churchill's friends have persistently declared that he will reduce the tax and that his budget speech will be the magnum opus of his political career. The danger, therefore, is that he may suffer from the indiscretions of his admirers."

CANADA'S AUTO BILL LAST YEAR

It Probably Cost Canadians Two Hundred Million Dollars or For Their Joy Riding

Ten years ago there were less than 85,000 automobiles in use in Canada. Last year there were 689,114. By the end of 1925 the number will undoubtedly exceed 700,000. The buying of cars is not a matter of satisfying the demand of people in cities and towns. Far from it. The manufacturers report that their heaviest orders for spring delivery have come from Manitoba and Saskatchewan. And that sort of thing is sure to grow. The other day a group of Progressives in Parliament made a strong plea for a material reduction in the duty on auto cars, on the ground that they were no longer a luxury so far as the farmer is concerned. He now regards his automobile in the same light as he looked on his horse and buggy ten years ago. There can be no doubt, however, that his rising purchases have been impelled as much by social considerations as economic. This represents a great change.

It has been calculated by an expert that our auto bill last year earned over the $200,000,000 mark, all factors included. That much of that huge expenditure must be classified in the luxury column goes without saying; but it was on the side of open-air living and health. The money flowed through many channels. It did much good as it flowed, making for high wages for many and stimulating business in a good many other forms.

This Lassie Has Her Colds "Rubbed Away"

The mother of this attractive little girl, Mrs. E. E. Emmans, of 215 Seventh Ave., N. E., Fortage La Prairie, Man., is one of the many Canadian mothers who are enthusiastic about the vaporizing salve, Vicks VapoRub, for treating children's colds. Mrs. Emmans writes: "My little girl had croup at night pretty badly and Vick's did her a lot of good. I have also used it with very satisfactory results for head and chest colds."

Vicks is just "rubbed on" for sore throat, tonsillitis, bronchitis, croup or deep chest colds. When so applied, Vick's has a double direct action: internally medicated vapors are inhaled while at the same time, externally, it is absorbed through and stimulates the skin.

BE CAREFUL

As one travels about these days he is likely to see many people burning up grass or rubbish around their homes. The Brooklyn Eagle declares that it is surprising that so few of these homes are burned up. It says: "In the country, where the fire departments are few and far between this volunteer fireman in a menace. To smelt the aromatic odor of burning kalam on a mild April night under a full moon generally means that somebody's bonfire has taken to the woods. It happens every year. It is about time that it occurred to everybody that there could be no better time to put an end to the annual waste in forest fires arising from bush fires than now.

"Fall dead grass, last year's leaves, brushwood half full of sap and broken branches from the winter's storms make ideal tinder for burning up woodlands. A stanch ally of the burning householder is the motorist. With the return of mild weather he fares forth on the Sabbath, flicking lighted cigarette and cigar butts along the highways, building campfires which he neglects to extinguish, scattering a trail of live coals, heedless that it may sweep through the hills and endanger whole villages. Between the amateur forester of the commuting districts and the careless motorists in the hills it's a wonder that the springtime destruction from open fires is not greater. As it is, it remains an appalling indictment of the most inexcusable brand of carelessness."

Not all motorists are careless, nor all householders. But too many people give no thought at all to the destruction that is almost sure to result from carelessness in connection with camp fires, burning grass, or lighted cigarettes thrown into the grass along the highways. From this time on let carelessness be the watchword.

FIFTY YEARS FROM NOW

Such amazing developments have marked the past fifty years of world progress that scientific men hesitate to predict the future. Once and awhile, however, one gives flight to his imagination and puts into words some of his visions. The latest to speak along this line is H. W. Corning, president of the Architectural League of New York who suggests that fifty years hence the American metropolis will be a city 75 miles long and 50 miles wide with buildings rising half a mile in the air. Tubes underground, he thinks, will serve vehicle traffic and pedestrians will be facilitated on their way by movable sidewalks and escalating galleries. This vision of the New York of the future deals only with transportation. The architect may have allowed his fancy to carry him much farther and to make other predictions as did a noted British scientist only a few weeks ago. Like the New York architect this British writer, H. Gurnback, editor of Science and Invention, devoted much attention to the transportation problem of the big city. He predicts several levels of streets, with the top one for high passenger vehicles, motor cars, etc. Of course there will be movable sidewalks at varying speeds to accommodate those going short and long distances. One interesting prediction is that the pedestrian, if that is the right word to use, will not walk but will travel on skates driven by electric current taken from the air as radio is now taken. This will permit of getting about at a rate four or five times quicker than by walking. Other and more amazing predictions of the future are suggested by the vision of the weather, bringing rain or dispersing rain as the necessity predicts. It is also suggested that man's control of high frequency currents will make it possible greatly to stimulate the growth of our crops and plants, producing perhaps ten times as quickly as now. It is also suggested that man himself will be so developed by this vitalizing energy that the child of six will then be the mental and physical equal of today's eighteen year old. Of course the vision sees the sun and the wind as the sources of power for light and heat and all the purposes of industry and instead of the waste in electricity which is now very great the loss will be reduced to such a small fraction that man will be utilizing for his many needs, practically all the developed energy of the wind, the sun, the tides and the other forces of nature. Houses will be warm in winter and cool in summer and the comforts of the home and the office will be many times greater than those of today. The telephone user will see, as well as hear, the one with whom he speaks. The radio will not only bring the concert to the home but will enable you to see the singer and watch the theatre while resting in your easy chair in your luxurious apartment. These are only a few of the many things envisioned by those who from their knowledge can speak with a measure of certainty about the future, but the story of the last fifty years suggest that these flights of the imagination are likely to fall far short of the realities. Fifty years ago there were no telephones, no electric lights, no moving pictures, no electric trains, under water navigation and the heavier-than-air flying machines were the impossible dreams of crazy cranks and the suggestion of sending a picture by the recently discovered telegraph would have been laughed at as a child's fancy. Today these are realities of our daily life and it would be practically impossible to enumerate the advances made along every line of human endeavor. The next fifty years is certain to bring even more remarkable progress, even if it does not exactly follow the lines indicated by those who now venture to predict. Ex.

EDITORS ARE INDISPENSABLE

The editor of a newspaper is as indispensable to a community as a banker, physician, or lawyer, and he is worthy of as much financial reward. One of the first things to do if he is to get this reward is to make a fair charge for editorial service. This charge will vary with the size of the paper. It should be based not on what the editor does, but on what he knows, just as is the reward of other responsible persons. The editor who knows when to play up when to use the 'soft pedal' and who will do this with an eye single to the well-being of the community is entitled to a salary commensurate with the service he performs. He is entitled to charge as salary an amount equal to that received by other community leaders—bankers, lawyers, doctors, school principals, etc. In some of the smaller towns community leadership is vested in men who receive $1,200 to $1,500 a year; in larger towns leaders are about $2,000 men; and in still larger towns they are $3,000 to $5,000 men. In each case the editor is entitled to similar compensation. The second thing to do is to charge adequate advertising rates. It is commonly believed that there is a rate which should be charged for each thousand of circulation. There is no such rate. Each class of paper must have a different rate per thousand, and the smaller the paper, the higher the rate.

Will the advertiser pay the small paper a higher rate per thousand than larger papers ask? The little paper has its five hundred prospective customers who can be reached in no better way than the local merchant practically must use it if he is to reach these prospects; and, if the general advertiser can see additional profits in reaching these five hundred people, he also will pay the rate. The rate should depend a great deal on the effectiveness of the paper as an advertising medium. If your readers are interested in your paper, from the standpoint of news and editorials, your advertising will be effective. Again, the advertising in a paper with small circulation is really worth more than that in many large papers because there is not so much competition.

NEW CARLISLE HONORS CURE FOR LONG SERVICE

New Carlisle, April 27.—A fitting celebration by a large gathering of parishioners marked the twenty-fifth year of a splendid career in the priesthood of Cure Napoleon Dion yesterday at his church in New Carlisle. The edifying service was beautifully decorated by the ladies of the parish. For the occasion, which was a solemn one, Cure Dion, assisted by Abbes F. Plourde and James LeBlanc, chanted the grand Mass. Magistrate J. F. B. Bunsand had the honor of presenting the cure with the best wishes of the populace of New Carlisle. He spoke of the spirit of friendship and good will which had always existed among the parishioners.

As a priest working in the cause of Christ the Cure had labored with indefatigable zeal. The magistrate sympathetically referred to the death of the cure's aged mother. Mr. David McKinnon and Mr. McIsaac sang sacred songs which were well received.

SETTLEMENT OF WORLD DISPUTES

Washington, April 28.—Secretary of State Kellogg declared himself to be heartily in favor of United States participation in an international tribunal for the settlement of International Law here. Mr. Kellogg asserted it was "strange that though we are approaching 1926 the United States, one of the leading of no higher enterprise than 'to make the religion which calls itself by his name, more like him.'"

Stop quarrelling about non-existent, urged, and all strive to practice the golden rule and the unifying teachings laid down by the Lord.

HAS PRECEDENTS FOR SUCH A CHOICE

Should Prince of Wales Marry Outside of Circle of Royalty.

If the Prince of Wales were to choose for his wife a lady outside the circle of royalty, he will be able to quote many excellent precedents for such a choice, for many of his royal predecessors have found happiness in such unions. In fact, until the Royal Marriage Act put an obstacle in the way of such unorthodox matches, English princes were free to give their hand where their heart could go with them. When for example Edward, the Black Prince sought a wife, he turned his back on the fairest of princesses, to woo the beautiful Joan of Kent, a lady who had no drop of royal blood in her veins, and no ancestor more exalted than a baron. But in Joan the prince found happiness such as no more exalted wife could have given him and she also gave him a son to perpetuate the line of kings. Where his eldest brother led the way, John of Gaunt was glad to follow, when he went a-wooing Catherine Swynford, a lady who had no exalted birth to add to her beauty and charm. She bore four children to her romantic lord; and from her was descended Henry IV, who raised the humble Swynford blood to the throne of England.

But the most unconventional of all royal lovers was undoubtedly Henry VIII, who in four of his half dozen marriages decided to wed where he loved. This he declared when he bestowed his hand upon pretty Anne Boleyn. And though Anne and a city apprentice, Godfrey Boleyn, for great-grandfather, Henry loved her with a passion no emperor's daughter had ever inspired. And yet in spite of all his passion and protestations, Anne's beautiful body was scarcely cold before the royal Lothario was vowing love and loyalty at the altar of her successor, Jane Seymour, a lady who had a plain country knight for father, and nothing but a pretty face to commend her to his favor.

And Jane Seymour had two unroyal successors in Henry's feckless heart, to both of whom he was devoted, for a time, with equal passion. When James, Duke of York, younger brother of Charles II, decided to take to himself a wife he chose Anne, daughter of Edward Hyde, Earl of Clarendon, and Grand-daughter of a Welshshire squire—a young woman of no great birth and little beauty. From this unroyal union came two of England's queens—Mary II, and Anne—to mingle the rustic squire's blood with that of Stuart.

Of the sons of Frederick Prince of Wales, no fewer than three put wedding rings on the fingers of commoners. There is little doubt that George III, made a wife of Hannah Lightfoot, the pretty daughter of a quaker linen draper, on whom he first set eyes as she stood in the doorway of her father's shop as he went to Westminster.

George's younger brother, the Duke of Gloucester, in a similar mood of infatuation led Lady Waldegrave to the altar; the Duke of Cumberland, another brother, gave his hand to Lady Luttrell. No less passionate was Augustus eldest brother, George Prince of Wales (later King George IV) in his devotion to Mrs. Fitzherbert, a pretty widow, to whom he succumbed at first sight of her loveliness, and whom he married in her drawing room on the alter of the Duke of Cumberland, another brother, gave his hand to Lady Luttrell.

The PERILS OF URBAN LIFE
 A Chicago newspaper asked a number of people if they would like to accompany the Roosevelt on their expedition to the heart of Asia. "No" one woman replied, "because I don't believe it would be half as exciting or dangerous as living here in Chicago."

A wise answer. The Roosevelt's chances of being knocked down and run over by a mountain sheep are slight compared with the chance of being struck and crippled by a speeding motor. If they are held up by bandits a couple of governments will get busy in their behalf, while if one is stuck up in Chicago one is not only robbed, but often shot in addition, and authorities do little about it. The Roosevelt brethren will be as immune from disease as science can make them, but the Chicago stay-at-home must run the daily risk of contagion as he mingles with unsanitary crowds. Theodore and Kermit may fall off a cliff or be caught in an avalanche but it is not likely; not half as probable as that the Chicago pedestrian will stumble into a coal-hole or be hit by a falling brick as he passes a building under construction. City life is exciting and risky; one has to be on one's guard whenever one stirs abroad. The Asian wilderness is a peaceful sanitarium in comparison.

THRILLING STORY OF THE DISCOVERY OF THE WORLD'S LARGEST GOLD NUGGET

Weighed Over 146 Pounds and Was Bought for $60,000 in London—A Monument Is Now Proposed For the Discoverer, Napier, Ex-M. P. P. For Gloucester County.

Stephen Leger, Acadian member for Gloucester, during the course of reminiscences of his constituency in the New Brunswick Legislature, proposed the erection of a bronze memorial tablet in the Legislative Assembly hall to the memory of Samuel Napier, ex-M. P. P. for Gloucester, who died in the wilds of the Gathineau River Valley as a watchman after having established world-wide fame and prominence as the miner of the largest gold nugget of the world in Australia.

The late Samuel Napier had been member of the crew of the Marco Polo which had brought considerable fame to Saint John for her sea-going qualities. He had abandoned the ship in Australia, drawn by the gold lure, and had there found his nugget which was the largest the world has ever known. Considerable ingenuity had been required to smuggle it aboard a ship bound for England, where, once his find became known, he became one of the outstanding figures of his day and had on one occasion been entertained by Queen Victoria.

The nugget was disposed of by the Bank of England and converted into 10,000 gold sovereigns. Following his return to New Brunswick Mr. Napier had become a representative of Gloucester in the Provincial Legislature. What sort of a representative he was, Mr. Leger was unable to say, but, like most politicians, he soon became disassociated with his wealth and his death occurred in the wilds of the Gathineau where he formerly had been employed as a watchman.

Premier Veniot interjected a statement that Mr. Napier had been an excellent representative of his constituency.

Knew Napier Well

Mr. J. David Fraser, Superintendent of the Welcome Hall Mission, Montreal, who knew Mr. Napier well, gave The Standard an interesting account of Mr. Napier and his adventures as follows:

A Romantic Story

A romance and tragedy were bound up in the life of Mr. Samuel Napier, in charge of one of the Gilmore & Hughson Lumber Company's supply stations, two hundred miles up the Gathineau country, in the pine woods, far away beyond the utmost limits of civilization, whose body, half eaten away by rats, was brought down to desert for interment. He was the discoverer of the greatest nugget of pure gold that the world ever knew.

Travelling with it from Melbourne, Australia, to London, he became one of the lions of the world's capital and the guest of royalty. Returning to Bathurst, New Brunswick, he was elected a member of the Provincial Parliament for his native county of Gloucester. But long since the fortune which came to him so easily passed from his hands, and his former possessor was glad to earn his daily bread by the sweat of his brow at almost any employment he could command. The story is one for the latter-day novelist, but with this feature about it, that it is altogether true.

In 1852 the world was stirred by the reports of the fortunes won by the work in the gold fields of Australia. The adventures of Europe and America found their way thither, some to the realization of the dreams they had cherished, others to the disappointment and grief of unsatisfied ambition.

At that time a purser on a clipper sailing ship plying between Liverpool and Melbourne was the subject of this sketch. The fever in time caught him and in 1857 he threw up the sea to join his brother at the King's diggings, not far from Melbourne. Their claim was not a large one in extent, 36 feet square, but in it was hidden a treasure that made even the eyes of the Queen of England sparkle. The two brothers toiled away with indifferent luck till August 14, when the find was made that won the twin at once fortune and fame.

The circumstances are best given in Napier's own words, as taken by Mr. John Lambert, secretary to the Minister of Railways here:

"We had got down to the pipe-clay bottom which marked the bed of an extinct river, and was the chief characteristic of all alluvial diggings in Australia, when my pick struck something hard. I knew at once that it wasn't boulder. There was not the same ring to it. It struck dead. Scraping the dirt away, I caught sight of the bright yellow of pure gold. I knew at once that it was a nugget, but its size I could not tell. This was at about ten o'clock in the morning. My brother was working in another part of the claim and I immediately called to him to come. My first thought was that some one would come along and see what we were digging out; so we tried to keep it partly covered while we dug away with pick and shovel."

"Weren't you excited?" I asked. "Excited! I cannot describe to you how excited I was, especially when the nugget was at last got free. It was all I could do to lift it, and I saw that it was solid pure gold. It was two feet four inches long, by ten inches wide, and from an inch and a half to three inches and three-quarters thick. It weighed exactly 146 pounds, 1 ounce, and 3 pennyweights, and was actually the largest and finest nugget of pure gold ever found anywhere in the world. One or two others were found that weighed as much, but they were not solid or pure gold."

"You knew that it was of great value."

"Certainly, I knew it was a fortune, and the very knowledge that it was enormously valuable made us afraid that some one would discover what we had found, and rob us of it."

The first thing we did was to cover it over with loose dirt, and then we sat down to plan how we would get it out, so as to prevent any one knowing it. We discussed scheme after scheme until we worked ourselves into a state of anxiety. How could we get that nugget out without some one seeing it?

Had we only unearthed a fortune to find ourselves in danger of losing it? "At last we hit upon a plan. We remembered that we had loaned a tub to a tailor in the mining camp. We would go down to his place and get the tub on a wheelbarrow, and as we passed the hole where the nugget lay we would place it in the tub. We arranged the whole thing very carefully. We were to take turns wheeling, and if any one spoke to us one was to stop and talk while the other wheeled right on. The scheme worked well, and just about dusk we landed the nugget in our tent. We threw it under one of the low beds and sat down to wait till midnight. Early in the night we put out our light and pretended to go to bed. It seemed to us twelve o'clock would never come. But at last our light went out and not a soul stirred in the camp. Now was our time to put the nugget in a place of safety."

"With a pick and shovel we began to work right in the middle of our tent. We worked hard, and in the course of a few hours we had a hole six feet deep. Into that we laid the nugget, and filled in the earth with our hands, so as not to leave a trace of our work. Then we felt safe. No one had seen the nugget but ourselves, and it was now buried six feet out of sight."

No one could get it without great trouble. But a nugget buried in the ground was no use to us. We must get it to Melbourne. There was plenty of time to organize a plan, and we thought it might be other nuggets in our claim. We must see about that. For a time we watched the tent but after a while we went to work every day and left the tent open. We thought it the best way to prevent suspicion, and it worked all right. No one in the camp knew of the nugget, and our fortune and lives depended on the secret being kept. For three months the nugget lay buried in the earth, and at the end of that time we washed out our claim. We found a number of nuggets in the same hole, one of which weighed eight pounds. But for the most part the big nugget was all we got out of the claim. After paying up all our stores we had only a thousand dollars left each from our washings. Supplies were enormously dear. Then we arranged to quit the diggings and go to Melbourne, which meant a long ride. Armed only with a shotgun and a revolver, we started in a horse-cart, and in due time, without delay or suspicion on the part of the others that we had a prize, reached Melbourne. Next day we deposited the nugget in the bank, and our news spread like wildfire, and thousands rushed to the King's diggings. While in Melbourne we named the nugget the "Blanche Barclay" in honor of the beautiful daughter of the Governor, and by that name the nugget in the British Museum is known. The bank gave us an insurance of $50,000 for the safe delivery of the nugget in London, and we sailed for England."

"When we arrived in England we were made the lions of London. The papers wrote up the story of the nugget, and we were everywhere. I was born on the Baie des Chaleurs, so that I was recognized everywhere as a Canadian. The Queen sent for us, and we dined at Buckingham Palace. We drove down from the Bank of England under a heavy escort, taking the nugget with us. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort received us most graciously, and the Prince of Wales, who was a lad of fifteen, showed a very deep interest in the nugget. I do not

EARTH SHOCKS IN SEVERAL STATES

Slight Disturbances Experienced in Parts of Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois But No Damage Was Done.

Chicago, April 27.—Earthquake shocks were felt through parts of Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois last night. There were three distinct tremors, but no damage was done, except for slight interruption to wire service in a few places. According to seismograph reports the first shock lasted six seconds beginning at 10:30 o'clock. The second, eight minutes later, was of like duration, but the third, beginning at 10:30 lasted half a minute.

Last night's disturbance was the most widespread of any recorded in this region for many years. No reports of the shock were received from points north of Central Illinois and apparently the belt did not reach the Ohio river to any extent. Small articles were upset at Springfield while only slight tremors were felt in and near Cincinnati. At Indianapolis slight damage was done to brick-a-brac, but in most places within the seismic zone, the disturbance was so slight that it was not even noticed by most of the inhabitants.

CHILDREN PERISH IN
POWDER EXPLOSION

Nolala, Ore., April 27.—Four children were killed and two others injured, one probably fatally, as the results of a powder explosion Saturday, on the homestead of a farmer named Kolschinski in an isolated community sixteen miles south of here. The dead are: Clare Kolschinski, 11; Joe, 14; Carl, 9, and Paul 5.

Meagre reports of the accident say that Kolschinski had secured three gallons of powder with which to blast stumps. The powder was stored in a small building in which six or seven children of the family were playing and one of the boys placed a lighted match to the explosive. The building was destroyed.

If the custard had been boiled too much and has curdled it will be quite all right if it is rubbed through a very fine sieve and then stirred up.

wonder at that, for it was one of the prettiest sights one could see. It was as if a child were playing with a very pure gold as it is possible to get it. Of course the young Prince could not lift it. Then the nugget was put on exhibition at the Gros Palais for which privilege we were paid $250 a week. We lived at a swell hotel on the Surrey, and had a great time. This lasted for three months, during which time Sir Rodick Murchison had a cast made of the nugget for the British Museum. The work was so perfectly done by an Italian that you couldn't tell one from the other, and the latter here he also gave me a duplicate. Finally, we sold the nugget for $60,000. It was not worth more than $50,000 intrinsically, but being the largest and finest gold nugget ever found we got $10,000 more for it than its real value. After a time it passed into the hands of the Bank of England, intention being to keep it for the British Museum. But about that time a new general manager or directorate came in, and to the surprise and regret of every one, the nugget was melted down and turned into money. It yielded 10,000 sovereigns, and that was the end of the great nugget."

The writer sat opposite to Napier and listened to the recital of his strange account. That was in 1896, when he was hanging around the precincts of Parliament Hill, presumably on the lookout for Government employment, which he never got. For a time thereafter he worked in Ontario's section of the Soulages Canal, then was sent up to the bush for Gilmore and Hughson, his only companion a faithful dog, whose remote from mankind he perished, in all probability from heart disease, and was not found till days afterwards, sitting at a table and half chewed away by the rats.

Tide Head

An interesting event was staged at Tide Head on Friday evening the 17th, when the Trail Rangers Class of the Sunday School entertained the teachers and officers of the school, also the Canadian Girls in Training Class to a banquet.

Twenty-eight in all sat down to the table, and after full justice had been done to the repast, a good programme of toasts and songs was carried out, the toasts being proposed by the boys and responded to by their guests. Although "maiden" speeches were the order of the evening, the young people acquitted themselves well, and all felt the evening to have been both pleasant and profitable.

Early in the same week the C.G.I.T. girls presented their leader, Mrs. Forbes with a fine copy of the "Book of Praise" accompanied by an address expressive of their appreciation of her work among them.

"Boy discovers opium while chasing a cat"—read a news dispatch. Nothing unusual about that. We just saw a fat fellow discover concrete while running down the street after a bus. Yep, slipped on a banana peel.

"TO-MORROW'S CAR - TO-DAY"

A Romance of the Spanish Main CAPTAIN BLOOD by RAFAEL SABATINI

"You are no longer that," she said, and strove to smile.

"Yet I owe no thanks to you that I am not," he answered. "I think there's no more to be said, unless it be to add the assurance that Lord Julian Wade has also nothing to apprehend from me. That, no doubt, will be the assurance that your peace of mind requires!"

"For your own sake—yes. But for your own sake only. I would not have you do anything mean or dishonouring."

"Thief and pirate though I be?" she clenched her hand, and made a little gesture of despair and impotence.

"Will you never forgive me those words?"

"I'm finding it a trifle hard, I confess. But what does it matter, when all is said?"

Her clear hazel eyes considered him a moment wistfully. Then she put out her hand again.

"I am going, Captain Blood. Since you are so generous to my uncle, I shall be returning to Barbados with him. We are not like to meet again—ever. Is it impossible that we should part friends? Once I wronged you. I know. And I have said that I am sorry. Won't you—won't you say good-bye?"

He took the hand she proffered. Retaining it, he spoke, his eyes somberly, wistfully considering her.

"You are returning to Barbados," he said slowly. "Will Lord Julian be going with you?"

"Why do you ask me that?" she confronted him quite fearlessly.

"Sure, now, didn't he give you message, or did he bungle it?"

"No. He didn't bungle it. He gave it me in your own words. It touched me very deeply. It made me see clearly my error and my injustice. I owe it to you that I should say this by way of amend. I judged too harshly where it was a presumption to judge at all."

He was still holding her hand. "And Lord Julian, then?" he asked, his eyes watching her, bright as sapphires in the copper-coloured face.

"Lord Julian will no doubt be going home to England. There is nothing more for him to do out here."

"But didn't he ask you to go with him?"

"He did. I forgive you the impertinence."

A wild hope leapt to life within him. "And you? Glory be, ye'll not be telling me ye refused to become my lady, when—"

"Oh! You are insufferable!" She tore her hand free and backed away from him. "I should not have come—Good-bye!" She was speeding to the door.

He sprang after her, and caught her. Her face flamed, and her eyes stabbed him like daggers. "These are pirate's ways, I think! Release me!"

"Arabella!" he cried on a note of pleading. "Are ye meaning it? Must I release ye? Must I let ye go and never set eyes on ye again? Or will ye stay and make this exile unendurable until we can go home together? Oh, ye're crying now! What have I said to make ye cry, my dear?"

"I thought you'd never say it," she mocked him through her tears. "There was never, never anybody but you, Peter."

Governor Blood forgot the duties of his office. He had reached home at last. His odyssey was ended.

They had, of course, a deal to say thereafter, so much, indeed, that they sat down to say it, whilst time sped on, and Governor Blood forgot the duties of his office. He had reached home at last. His odyssey was ended.

And meanwhile Colonel Bishop's feet had come to anchor, and the Colonel had landed on the mole, a disgruntled man to be disgruntled further yet. He was accompanied ashore by Lord Julian Wade.

A corporal's guard was drawn up to receive him, and in advance of this stood Major Mallard and two others who were unknown to the Deputy-Governor: one slight and elegant, the other big and hawkey.

Major Mallard advanced. "Colonel Bishop, I have orders to arrest

you. Your sword, sir!"

Bishop stared, empering. "What the devil? Arrest me, d'ye say? Arrest me?"

"By order of the Governor of Jamaica," said the elegant little man behind Major Mallard. Bishop swung to him.

"The Governor? You're mad!" He looked from one to the other. "I am the Governor."

"You were," said the little man dryly. "But we've changed that in your absence. You're broke for abandoning your post without due cause and therefore imperilling the settlement over which you had charge. It's a serious matter. Colonel Bishop, as you may find. Considering that you held your office from the Government of King James, it is even possible that a charge of treason may lie against you. It rests with your successor entirely whether ye're hanged or not."

Bishop rapped out an oath, and then, shaken a sudden fear: "Who the devil may you be?" he asked.

"I am Lord Willoughby, Governor-General of His Majesty's Colonies in the West Indies. You were informed, I think, of my coming."

The remains of Bishop's anger fell from him like a cloak. He broke into a sweat of fear. Behind him Lord Julian looked on, his handsome face suddenly white and drawn.

"But, my Lord—" began the Colonel.

"Sir, I am not concerned to hear your reasons," his Lordship interrupted harshly. "I am on the point of sailing and I have not the time. The Governor will hear you and no doubt deal justly by you." He waved to Major Mallard, and Bishop, a crumpled, broken man, allowed himself to be led away.

To Lord Julian, who went with him since none deterred him. Bishop expressed himself when presently he had sufficiently recovered.

"This is one more item to the account of that scoundrel Blood," he said through his teeth. "My God, what a reckoning there will be when we meet!"

Major Mallard turned away his face that he might conceal his smile, and without further words led him a prisoner to the Governor's house that so long had been Colonel Bishop's own residence. He was left to wait under guard in the hall, whilst Major Mallard went ahead to announce him.

Miss Bishop was still with Peter Blood when Major Mallard entered. His announcement startled them back to reality.

"You will be merciful with him. You will spare all you can for my sake, Peter," she pleaded.

"To be sure, I will," said Blood. "but I'm afraid the circumstances won't."

She eluded herself, escaping into the garden and Major Mallard fetched the Colonel.

"His Excellency, the Governor, will see you now," said he, and threw wide the door.

Colonel Bishop staggered in and stood waiting.

At the table sat a man of whom nothing was visible but the top of a carefully curled, black head. Then this head was raised, and a pair of blue eyes solemnly regarded the prisoner. Colonel Bishop made a noise in his throat, and stared into the face of His Excellency, the Deputy-Governor of Jamaica, which was the face of the man he had been hunting in Tortuga to his present undoing.

The situation was best expressed to Lord Willoughby by Van der Kuylen as the pair stepped aboard the Admiral's flagship.

"Id is fery bodigal!" he said, as blue eyes twinkling. "Cabdin Blood is fond of boodry, you remember de abble blossoms. So? Ha, ha!"

FACTS ABOUT TBA SERIES—No. 5

What 'Orange Pekoe' Means

Many buyers of tea have come to ask for 'Orange Pekoe' believing that it signifies fine quality. This is not, however, necessarily the case. In the trade 'Orange Pekoe' is only a name given to the first leaf below the bud or tip on any Indian or Ceylon tea bush. An 'Orange Pekoe' leaf grown at a high elevation usually possesses a very fine flavour. If, however, the plant is grown at a low elevation, it may still be 'Orange Pekoe' but also be of very poor quality. The consumer's only safeguard is to buy a tea of recognized goodness. High grown 'Orange Pekoes' comprise a large part of every blend of 'SALADA' and give to 'SALADA' its unequalled flavour.

Disappointed to Find He Was an Ex-Premier

Sir Robert Borden was Sadly Disillusioned in His Own Home Riding of Halifax

Having represented the city of Halifax in the Commons for many years, Sir Robert Borden for a time believed he was no stranger to the good people of the eastern gateway to the Dominion. He was sadly undeceived, however, shortly after he laid down the onerous duties of premier, according to the Toronto Star Weekly.

Included among the large number who pressed forward to meet him at an informal reception in Halifax was a middle-aged lady well known for her interest in child welfare.

After the manner of so many other one-idea enthusiasts, this lady imagined everybody else must necessarily be particularly interested in her particular field, and when she got a chance to talk to the guest of honor launched forth into her favorite topic.

Sir Robert was bored, but did his best to simulate a polite interest, though listening with only half an ear.

Suddenly he became all attention when he realized the lady was thanking him profusely for what he had done to make the lives of little babies healthier and happier. He was particularly puzzled when he heard himself referred to as "the greatest benefactor of future generations this country has ever known."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier would have carried off such a situation with graceful ease. Hon. Arthur Meighen would have looked wise and maintained a discreet silence. Premier Mackenzie King would have tactfully changed the conversation.

But however great may have been his ability in other lines, Sir Robert Borden never was a nimble-witted politician.

Try as he would, the ex-premier could not recall any child legislation of his that deserved such extravagant praise, and said something to this effect to his fulsome admirer.

"Legislation, legislation!" said the lady, with a look of extreme surprise. "What has legislation to do with your business?"

"As member of parliament and former premier, I am naturally supposed to have something to do with legislation," explained Sir Robert, his brows compressed in perplexity.

The lady gasped with dismay, then said: "Oh! Are you a member of parliament?" "I am so disappointed! I thought you were the man who condenses milk for babies."

APPLES OF GOOD QUALITY FOR THE HOME GARDEN.

A good home fruit garden is a great asset to any family. It provides an abundance of appetizing and healthful food, and often prevents children from yielding to temptation and "stealing" apples from the neighbors.

For the home garden the varieties planted should cover the season well, and be of good to very good quality, if such trees are available.

Early Summer—Two of the hardiest and best early summer apples are Tetofsky and Yellow Transparent. Tetofsky is the better and earlier eating, but is rather small and bears only every other year. The Yellow Transparent is the best for the home garden. Crisp, juicy and of a very early but is inferior in quality.

Summer—The principal summer apple for commerce is the Duchess of Oldenburgh, and this is a very reliable sort for home use as well, but the quality is not good enough for a dessert apple. For the home garden the Molta, originated at the Experimental Farm, Ottawa, will, it is believed, soon take the place of the Duchess. The Lawland Raspberry is a Russian variety of good quality. In some parts of the Maritime Provinces, Williams Favorite does well and it is good in quality.

Autumn—The Wealthy is the outstanding autumn variety for the home garden, as it comes into bearing early, the trees bear heavily and the fruit is good both for eating and cooking.

Early Winter—The Fameuse and McIntosh are the two most desirable varieties for home use of this season, and if only one is planted it should be the McIntosh. Where it will succeed, the Cox Orange Pippin is an excellent sort for home use, but this is not suitable for the colder sections. Grimes Golden is also a good one.

Winter—Where they will succeed, some of the best winter apples for the home garden are Tompkins King, Northern Spy, and Delicious, but the last variety, on account of its mild flavor, is not very suitable for cooking. For the colder sections there are no good hardy late-keeping apples to compare in quality with the above, but Bethel, Scott Winter and Golden Russet all keep well and are among the hardiest.

SPY DISCOVERS 'REDS' PLANS

Propaganda Factory is Thrown Wide Open to British Agent.

The British authorities are enjoying a hearty laugh at the expense of the Bolsheviks, who recently exposed their whole Eastern propaganda factory, at Tashkent, and the disposition of the Indian frontier is a British agent. The latter, who appeared at Tashkent in the guise of a leader of Indian revolutionists, was received with open arms and shown the entire working of the Eastern Communist college.

The visit synchronized with that of a British Communist, who had come to tell his comrades how the British Empire is crumbling in the East. The Indian observer accompanied the British on a tour of the Russian region, visiting the Russian Rifle Brigade stationed there. The Briton was represented with a Communist flag, and talked about the coming march on India.

The Indian says the Soviet Republics in the East are governed automatically from Moscow. The President of the Russian Republic is a porter from a Tashkent bazaar, who cannot sign his own name, and carries out the orders of the Russian Secretary. The economic situation is bad, the people are crushed by taxation, prices are high, and the price of cattle is only 75 per cent of what it was before war. All troops are Russian, and the natives are disarmed.

auditors last evening in Pythian Castle with her repeat performance of a pro-church. Mrs. J. M. Barnes was her

Archibald assisted in several well executed duets. Mrs. Miller also read with the taste a "Lad of Pairts," from Ian MacLaren, and gave for encore, a French Canadian story. The concert was under the auspices of the Men's Association of St. David's church, of which O. J. Fraser is president. He was convenor for the successful concert, which was attended by a capacity audience—Friday's

ARBOR DAY, MAY 8TH.

About the time the farmer plants his early potatoes is a good time for the transplanting of trees. Care should be exercised in the selection of trees. To grow in the open they should be taken from open ground.
The making of flower beds and the planting of shrubs may be left to the teacher and pupils but Trustees should attend to the procuring and planting of trees. The Elm and Maple which grow rapidly and are perhaps our prettiest shade trees should be planted just inside the line fence.
They should be from eight to ten feet high. It may be that the school grounds are not fenced, then plant the trees where the fence should be, stake them and some will surely grow.
The ratepayers at the next annual meeting may vote money to fence
the grounds.
After celebrating Arbor Day for so many years it is to be regretted that we have so little to show for our work in many instances not a single shade tree. If trees do not grow or are destroyed plant others next year, but make a real good start this year. Be persistent and you will succeed. There is no good reason why every school ground in the county of Restigouche or elsewhere in the province should not be a pretty spot.
P. G. McFARLANE.

OBITUARY
Rev. Sister Walsh
The community was shocked last week to learn of the death in Mon-real of Rev. Sr. Walsh one of the formest members of the local Order of the Hotel Dieu of St. Joseph, who had gone to Montreal about a month ago for treatment of what was hoped to be a passing ailment. But she had given of her life so generously to the charitable and generous work of the Order that medical aid was of no avail. Sister Walsh had been a great worker; her executive ability was wonderful and a monument to herself and the Order of which she was a member is the splendid institution known as the Hotel Dieu Hospital. At the time the new Hotel Dieu was built in Campbellton, she was branch of the Order.

Rev. Sister Walsh was a daughter of Richard Walsh of Gatham and is survived by her brother, William M.

one sister, Rev. Sister Dwyer also of the Hotel Dieu of St. Joseph.
Mr. W. M. Walsh left Wednesday night for Montreal on receipt of a telegram announcing the serious turn to his sister's illness, but did not arrive there until after her death.
Accompanying him were Rev. Mother
Kane, Superior, and Sister Dwyer.
Alice O'Casey
We regret to learn of the death of Alice O'Casey of Miquasha, who passed away quietly at her home on Tuesday, April 7th, at the age of 22 years.
She had been ill about seven weeks.
She leaves to her sorrowing mother, one brother and six sisters.
The funeral which was largely attended was held from her home Thursday
the 9th. The Rev. Father St. Lawrence performed the very impressive service at St. Jean L'Evangéliste R. C.
Church. The pall bearers were, Mr.

Interment was made in St. Jean L'E-

ADVERTISING

Everything must agree that advertising has now a distinct place in the requirements of all businesses. When newspapers speak of advertising they are usually accused of talking shop to catch customers. But advertising is something more than "shop." It has done things that have made for the progress of civilization. It has brought home new uses and new conveniences to millions. It has created much larger demands which brought
charges for services at a lower cost
to the people. Advertising increases business and good will. It creates
new habits and stimulates new thinking. The advertising columns of every publication are more valuable to
the general public than the mere carrying of the shop windows of the merchants into their homes. There is a psychology of advertising.
Go back a few generations and consider the laborious and slow process
of getting even a great invention to
the aid of the people and the surprisingly important part of advertising as
a spur to civilization will be quickly
apparent. Advertising is a vital factor to progress, directly and indirect-
ly. Had the invention of steam carried its publicity agent and modern
advertising methods, its great benefits
would have been delayed in short order. It would have been speedily
put to general use in the manufacturing world had the present avenues of
publicity been open to the inventor.
Steam was long in being "discovered"
as a revolutionary improvement in the mechanics of industry. Advertising
would have put on the market with
speed a store of labor and time-saving steam. Civilization would have been advanced sooner by the advertising of
steam to turn the wheels of the world.

HOSPITAL DAY AT CAMPBELLTON

National Hospital Day at Hotel
Dieu Hospital

National Hospital Day, May 12th, is looming on the horizon of Hospital activities as the largest single day event of the year 1925.

Could Florence Nightingale, whose birthday is commemorated in the annual celebration of National Hospital Day, return to this earth and see the demonstrations of modern care for the sick which will be made throughout this broad land on that day she would be astonished. Little did she dream, when during the stirring days of the Crimean War and subsequent events during which she helped to carry out the first methods of practical and sanitary care for the wounded and sick, that out of her noble work would grow the modern scientific hospitals of to-day. Probably by no stretch of her imagination could she have foreseen that in the years to come great nations would unite in honoring her memory and paying tribute to the fruits of her efforts.

Primarily the object of National Hospital Day is to acquaint the public with the present day hospital and to this end the Hotel-Dieu Hospital shall hold "OPEN HOUSE" on May 12th, for the public. Demonstrations, exhibits, and inspections made possible on this particular day, will have a far reaching benefit. It is hoped Special music will be provided throughout the hospital for the patients, luncheon will be served to visitors and special guides will be provided to take visitors through the hospital.

ADVERTISING

Everything must agree that advertising has now a distinct place in the requirements of all businesses. When newspapers speak of advertising they
are usually accused of talking shop to catch customers. But advertising is something more than "shop." It
has done things that have made for
the progress of civilization. It has
brought home new uses and new conveniences to millions. It has created
much larger demands which brought
charges for services at a lower cost
to the people. Advertising increases
business and good will. It creates
new habits and stimulates new think-
ing. The advertising columns of every publication are more valuable to
the general public than the mere carrying of the shop windows of the merchants into their homes. There
is a psychology of advertising.
Go back a few generations and consider the laborious and slow process
of getting even a great invention to
the aid of the people and the surprisingly important part of advertising as
a spur to civilization will be quickly
apparent. Advertising is a vital factor to progress, directly and indirect-
ly. Had the invention of steam carried its publicity agent and modern
advertising methods, its great benefits
would have been delayed in short
order. It would have been speedily
put to general use in the manufacturing world had the present avenues of
publicity been open to the inventor.
Steam was long in being "discovered"
as a revolutionary improvement in the
mechanics of industry. Advertising
would have put on the market with
speed a store of labor and time-saving
steam. Civilization would have been advanced sooner by the advertising of
steam to turn the wheels of the world.
