"The Advertiser" advocates Con-and as early as possible after, free trade with the whole world. The British trade model cannot be improved upon.

"The Advertiser" looks forward with hope to Canada's would be best for Canada, best for Great able relations with the United States.

"The Advertiser" advocates prohibition

"The Advertiser" is an advocate of equal rights for

"The Advertiser" is a believer in Chris-

 Christian denominations should come closer together. Those bodies which are now nearest should unite first. Under the pres-men, means and effort. The Advertiser will endeavor to promote the movement for Christian union not alone by direct appeal and argument, but by seeking to present the best rather than the worst side of each denomination.

"The Advertiser" advocates Obligatory would so much enforce the idea that the TYPHOID FEVER SUPPRESSION.

Whether in national or in municipal shortcomings, it appears to be necessary that there should be suffering and alarm before a speedy and effective remedy can be obtained.

This has been illustrated in the case of the outbreak of typhoid fever in South London. Before the beautiful suburb amalgamated with the city, the need of sewerage on Craig street and the necessity for cleaning out the sewage-contaminated pond in the adjoining flats was recognized. The medical health officer had again and again reported to the Westminster Township Council. The city inherited the legacy when annexation took place; indeed, one of the influences held out to the suburbs was that when amalgamation was effected the nuisance would be removed, drainage would be provided, and the purest water supply would be added. Through one reason or another, the reforms have been delayed, until typhoid fever has broken out in a number of families, and remedial measures have become an immediate civic necessity.

The action of the Board of Health, in adopting the medical health officer's report, provides for the immediate cleaning out of the disease-breeding pond, for the proper drainage of Craig street by means of a sewer, and for the compulsory use of city water in the infected district. These are imperative reforms. No further delay in carrying them out should take place.
 Who knows to what extent the epidemic may spread unless prompt action is taken? The district affected needs but this sanitary precaution to make it one of the healthiest as it is one of the prettiest suburbs to be found in a Canadian city.

Some there are who think "the old way the best," because in the past, when there were fewer residences, and the soil was not so strongly impregnated with household refuse, typhoid diseases were not of frequent occurrence. Those who so contend ignore the fact that sanitary laws cannot be ignored without entailing suffering, and the longer the evil is continued the more frequent becomes the punishment.

For a genuine man it is no evil to be —[Cervantes.]

LANGEVIN HAS HIS REVENGE.

The fall of Sir Hector Langevin is one not unmixed by a tinge of sadness, for it is not the fall of a great man in a noble cause, but rather the fall of a somewhat small man accidentally exalted that is being witnessed. The Liberals at all times fought him openly, and in the setting of his sun he cannot complain of any lack of chivalry from his political opponents, who only used the lawful weapons furnished by his own political camp followers. It is well known that for many a long day his associate and colleague in the Government, Mr. Chapleau, has been reaching out the assassin's knife to strike him, and at last the fatal blow was dealt, and politically Sir Hector dies by the hand of his ambitious and jealous comrade in guilt.
 But the friends of Sir Hector have not had their day of revenge long delayed, for even now the gulf of disgrace yawns at the feet of Chapleau, and in his shameful repose he will not be accompanied by the regret of one honorable Conservative.

Langevin is not, and never was, entitled to any generous treatment from the Liberal party; but the spectacle of Chapleau assassinating the public life of his brother brigand is as loathsome a sample of human depravity as political life has ever seen in any age or country; and let us hope for the honor of Canada's public life, that we shall never look upon its like again.

ONTARIO GRAIN GROWING.

Last year a writer in one of our contemporary, devoted exclusively to Canadian agriculture, proclaimed in trumpet tones to the world that grain growing was played out in Ontario, and raised a dismal cry about low prices, at the same time advising farmers to go into horse breeding more extensively. We entered a vigorous protest against his defamation of Ontario soil and the skill of Ontario farmers, showing by reliable and official data how that in the principal cereals Ontario far excelled the best of the adjacent grain growing States and venturing the prediction that this Province was on the eve of still greater things in grain culture.
 We also took occasion to warn farmers against rushing into horse breeding, and have since repeated the advice. The present condition of the horse business here, largely in consequence of the McKinley tariff, coupled with the rapid introduction of electricity as a street car motive power in American cities, fully warranted our position on that point, while this season's harvest still more strikingly confirmed our view of the agricultural capacities of this grand Province. Prices, too, as a rule, have been encouraging, thus putting another damper on the pessimistic outcry raised by the writer in question. It is quite true that in the case of winter wheat, for example, which has done so remarkably well, the past season was exceptionally favorable, but we believe that the good results secured are largely due to greater care in the selection of seed, the more general introduction of better varieties, more liberal enrichment of the soil and decidedly improved and more thorough cultivation—in short, better farming. There never was a time in the history of agriculture in this Province when farmers read and thought as much about their own business as they do to-day, and they are putting the acquired knowledge into practice. In this desirable process the increased circulation of agricultural literature through the press, and the work of the farmers' institutes are two most important factors.

TEMPERANCE IN THE SCHOOLS.

Under the title of "The Child's Health Primer," "Young People's Physiology" and "Hygienic Physiology," an admirable series of text books has for some years been in use in the public schools of the United States, having special reference to the effects of alcoholic drinks, stimulants and narcotics upon the human system. The series was originally prepared to supply the demand created by the laws for temperance instruction. They were written and published under the supervision of the national W. C. T. U., and are carefully revised from time to time under the same supervision to keep them abreast of the latest teachings of science.

The immense amount of good accomplished by habituating the minds of people in their youth to a knowledge of the effects of alcohol and other popular poisons upon health and character cannot be estimated.
 The Primer series is admirably adapted to its work, and it is to be regretted that we have nothing in this country corresponding to it. Canadian boys suffer as much from the cigarette habit, and their older brothers are as liable to be led away by the rum habit as any among their American relatives, and as yet there is no strong counteracting influence in the public schools. Temperance works to be of real service should be graded to suit every intelligence, from the child of 7 to the youth of 20, in order that the idea of how much degeneracy and disease is caused by alcohol and narcotics may grow with his growth and strengthen with his strength.

CORRUPTION AT OTTAWA

The Augean Stable at the Capital Must Be Cleaned Out.

So say the Leading Preachers of the Dominion.

The Cure or Alleviation of Misgovernment Their Theme.

The leading clergymen solicited for their views on the cure for the corruption in the management of the Dominion, now recognized as far too prevalent, still continue to send their views to the AD-VERISER. Some of our contemporaries—the Kingston News, for example—raise the objection that the preachers are not practical enough. Perhaps some of our clergymen friends will note and meet the accusation laid at their door by the Kingston paper, in these terms:

"The trouble with the clergy, it seems to us, is that they have scouted an alliance with culture in their warfare on all forms of self-seeking and arrested human development. They have preferred to fight the evils with which life is beset and all of which spring from man's mistaking the true end of life, by facilitating an abstract religiosity which has very little relation to practical life. The church, or some denominations at least have taught as if virtue were valuable only as a means of insuring a happy life in some transcendental future state, while the concrete interests of this life were constantly drawing the bulk of mankind away from that distant and shadowy ideal, although men might occasionally bring themselves to imagine that they believed in it. The church, in our opinion, will never successfully combat lower forms of self-seeking which fill our jails and penitentiaries, and result in such racialities as those unearthed at Ottawa, until it makes an alliance with science and culture. Science is necessary to bring the church to see that the future member of the great human family, the present and that therefore the best preparation for it is a properly directed life in the present; and culture is necessary to be able to see clearly that riches, fame, position, power or selfish gratification do not constitute any part of the true end of life which is the humanization of every member of the race, the bringing to flower in every member of the great human family, all the possibilities of intelligence, refinement of manners, excellence of conduct and of a taste for the beautiful and elevated in nature and in human life, which possibilities are to be found in every human soul.
 When the church enters into such an alliance with science and culture much may be done for the regeneration of mankind."

Our own opinion has always been that the clergyman who does not teach that the only acceptable preparation for the future life lies in the proper living of the present life fails in his duty. The great Exemplar of Christianity made this point clear. He did not soar away up in the clouds when denouncing popular evils. He drew his illustrations from everyday life, and he denounced wrongdoing wherever found. The news accuses clergymen of having acquiesced for years in the condition of affairs that has brought about the gross corruption in public life, and alleges that they are "now whacking their pulpits to pieces in their denunciations of the racialities unearthed at Ottawa, simply because it is popular to do so." Therefore, it thinks that the clergy are not the most sensible guides for the public to follow. There are illogical and injudicious men in the pulpit as well as out of it, and it must be confessed that the clergy have not always spoken out against national wrongdoing as they ought to have done. It is a good sign, however, if it is "popular" for the clergy and for everyone else to recognize and to speak out against that which is wrong. When that takes place a remedy may not be far off.
 Long may it be popular to demand that rectitude of conduct shall be the first requisite in our rulers. The influence of such a demand, persistently and continuously made, cannot be over-estimated.

The latest communications received on the subject are as follows:

[Rev. Dr. Withrow, editor of the Canada Methodist Magazine.]

A stringent anti-corruption law, visiting with heavy penalties the giver and receiver of bribes, a higher standard of morality in politics as well as in commercial life, that the Christian man should vote as they pray. The cure lies in the hands of the electorates; they can "turn the rascals out" if they will.

[Rev. Dr. Grant, Principal, Queen's University, Kingston.]

The best cure for the present-day political corruption in Canada is for conscientious men to do their duty. Let us have a few honest men in Parliament of the highest class, men who will not take office, and let it select the best man in the party and see to it that his election does not cost him one dollar.

[Rev. Hugh Johnston, D.D., Toronto.]

It seems to me that the best and only radical cure for the political corruption which has made Canada a sink in the nostrils of the nation is to arouse the public conscience, to elevate the tone of moral sentiment. We are the most extravagantly and the most corruptly governed country under the skies, and all because the people love to have it so. Unscrupulous men are in the seats of power, and boodles and rascality hold high carnival, because public life is honeycombed with dishonesty.
 Venal voters who will use political influence for their own personal ends and gains, will also tolerate wholesale thieving in the public departments. Do you ask by what means can the public conscience be stirred and the moral sentiment of the community be keyed up to a higher pitch? I answer: Let the press thunder; let it cry out against that loyalty to party which would condone rascality; let it call for reform, and, rising up in its moral might, demand the disgrace and punishment of every political wrongdoer, irrespective of party. And let the pulpits work for deeper foundations, not by the denouncing of party, but by showing the humiliation and disgrace of corrupt legislation, by bringing men to a consciousness of their duties to the State, and enforcing Christian living, fidelity, integrity, honor, a good public sentiment, a good public practice; in short teaching men that they must be good citizens if they are to be Christians. Yours, HUGH JOHNSTON.

[Rev. G. M. Milligan, Toronto.]

Cures for present political corruption:
 1. One at the head of affairs of Cromwellian determination regarding wiping out this stain upon our national honor and hurt to our national credit. 2. A party of honesty pledged above every other consideration to stamp out this evil. 3. Want of readiness to disclose public pilfering should be held as arguing guilt on the part of him displaying it. 4. Disqualify for public life perpetually anyone using his position to obtain funds for purposes of self or power. 5.
 Penal treatment should be meted out to all found guilty of dishonesty against the State, whether in the form of sins of omission or commission. 6. Ceasing at the capital to imitate in a poor country the luxury and extravagance which had better disappear from an old and rich one. 7. To hold a national fast day instead of thank-giving day this year to lament the evils that have naturally followed condoning in 1878 the misdoings of 1873.

G. M. MILLIGAN.

[Rev. John Wood, Ottawa.]

You ask a hard question, but among the means of cure I would name: Punishment of the guilty, whether high or low (when you can catch them); plain speaking on the subject from pulpit and press; an occasional lesson at home and in our public schools on the meaning of the eighth commandment, "Thou shalt not steal;" woman suffrage, and a law compelling all taxpayers to vote.

JOHN WOOD.

[Rev. H. E. Barnes, Sherbrooke, Que.]

"Cure for political corruption," etc.
 The case is difficult of diagnosis, because "symptoms" are not always clearly made out; enough seems evident, however, to show serious trouble.

Prescription: A dilution of the strong partisanship (for party right or wrong) imbibed. Large doses of regard for righteous principles rather than for men who are available and can lead shrewdly and successfully; heroic treatment for eliminating from official blood the element of desire for "boodle." H. E. BARNES.

A GREAT GAMBLER ROBBED.

John Daly, Manager Steals $60,000 to $100,000 from His Principal's Safe.

New York, Sept. 12.—John Daly, the king of New York gamblers, has been robbed of a sum of money estimated at from $60,000 to $100,000. The man who took the money was William S. Hollingsworth, Daly's manager. The story is that Hollingsworth took the big roll of bills from Daly's safe, of which he held the combination, and used it for the greater part of it to cover losses in Wall street.

It was said last night that when Daly demanded its return Hollingsworth told him he was rightfully entitled to it, and dared Daly to go to court. Daly has taken no steps in that direction. Some of the money belonged to bookmakers and to some fortunate ones who had winnings a-had given them to Daly to keep for them.
 Hollingsworth for years has been a resident of Harlem, and to all appearances a devout worshiper at one of the leading churches there. He is also owner of one of the finest residences in the city.

Natural Selection.

A Romance of Chelsea Village and East Hampton Town.

And although these quoted utterances tell in a broad way, the truth about Celia's differences with the family standard of ethics, it is safe to say that truth. If they perceived in the young woman an unwise and futile ambition, they misapprehended the nature of the ambition itself, and pictured the aspirant as destructive of those material things the possession of which represented to them social superiority. If they had been asked to put their ideas in words, they would have said that Celia wished to live in a house on Fifth Avenue, to drive on that thoroughfare in a fine carriage, to give balls, and to dance the German, whatever that was, and to have her name in the Home Journal every week. And, doubtless, these things were all in Celia's list of vague desires; but also her heart yearned after a certain something which sometimes grew with these things, which yet she knew was not hers by birth—whereas the notion that there was any difference in human quality between themselves and the haughtiest of the people in what was called society had never entered into the head of any living Lete until Celia was sent to a boarding-school in the Orange Mountains, the year that they thought her lungs were weak.

The Letes had, like other folks, their own little foot-rule to measure the world with, and they used it with stern and unimagineable justice. They measured all people with it—king and chieftain, poet and peasant. If you fell below what they held to be the proper stature of man, they might scourge you in your place as a fellow-creature and a factor in the affairs of life; but they would have none of you socially. If you touched the exact mark, you were a "gentleman" or a "lady" as the case might be. If—by mischance—you rose above that fixed line—why there was something wrong about you, that was sure; at the best, you were queer, and queer was a word of serious condemnation in the Lete vocabulary.

As an instance of this impartiality in judgment, let us take the case of the Wykoffs. The Wykoffs were the owners of the whole block in which Mr. Lete's factor stood, and for thirty years old John Wykoff had been a model landlord. That is, he had treated Mr. Lete like a gentleman, and Mr. Lete had treated him like a gentleman, and everything was perfectly satisfactory. But now John Wykoff was dead, and his son reigned in his place, and it appeared that this young whippersnapper of a Randolph Wykoff, through his lawyers, had ordered that Mr. Lete's lease should not be renewed when his five years came to an end in the spring. The lease was not to be renewed that had been renewed once every five years since 1862. The rent had always been paid promptly—John Wykoff had never had to wait a day's grace, nor had he ever been called upon to pay a cent for repairs. And here was this young pup of a son turning out his best talent, just for some crazy scheme of building a great co-operative factory to cover the whole block. John Wykoff was a perfect gentleman, but his son was no gentleman at all, that was one thing sure and certain.

"But I'll give him a piece of my mind," said Mr. Lete, at dinner. "I'll give him a piece of my mind when he comes back from his glorifying about Europe. Gimmie some more cabbage, Ma Lete; I ain't lost my appetite, if the Wykoffs have gone back on me."

Celia Lete, whose brief experience of a strange world had led her to the acrimony and the usefulness of the Lete family, sat alone, on this particular afternoon, in the chamber which she shared with Triada. She was trying to read a novel of local manufacture, which, according to a message-note quoted from the Peoria Tattler, gave "a vivid glimpse into the highest stratum of New York's most exclusive society." It told about a young countess, of overpowering refinement and general moral and mental correctness, who had come to New York to pay a visit to some wealthy and aristocratic relations, several of whom she lured into righteousness during her stay. This young lady was finally saved from the wiles of a titled foreign countess by the intervention of the hero, a dark and superficially cynical person who had sounded all the depths and heights of swiftness, and who, finding all things hollow and objectionable, married and took her off to do missionary work in the far West, where he felt that he could readily win the confidence and friendship of the miners and the Red Indians, and let the light of apostolic Episcopalianism into their darkened lives.

Celia Lete was not successful in her attempt to read the tender tale. She had got to the end of the Mechanic Library on the strength of the advertisement which quoted the Peoria Tattler's notice. Almost all the characters had names that began with "Van" or "Vander," and the dinner-table talk on ball-room chat were of an elegance that would have been intolerable in any but the very highest stratum of society. Yet Celia was not pleased with it. She longed for a higher social life, but this was too much for her. Her desire had in it a more modest working. She even wondered whether it was true or not—she wondered if the man who had written that book knew anything more about the life he described than she did herself. It was a puzzling thing. She wanted to be "nice"; but what was it, in fact, to be "nice"? Was it to talk in that long-winded way, and make reference to all sorts of things which she could only have learned out of books? If it was, it must be desperately stupid. She wished that she had some clear idea of what really constituted that better life which she knew existed—somewhere, somehow. She wished that some sudden miracle would open a higher circle of society (she believed in "circles") say, in iron-bound rings of society to the Lete family, and that all of them might be given a supernatural grace to fit them for their new surroundings.

Yes, she was looking for the Fairy Prince; that was it. She did not know it, but she was looking for him. If she could have seen deep enough into the depths of her unformulated fancy, she would have seen that the miracle she awaited was a man.

She let her eyes wander idly about the room, as she dropped the book on her lap. They rested first on Dorinda's bureau, resplendent with chrome cards of variegated gorgeousness; and she sighed. Then they fell on her own severely simple chest of drawers—these her mother had owned in her girlhood. Then they turned to the window, and she looked out, and sighed again, and saw the Fairy Prince.

For the Fairy Prince still comes among us, in spite of what the photographers of fiction say; and every now and then he marries the beggar maid, and takes her home to live with his people, and is mightily sorry for it afterward, although, as his antique prototype most likely did, he makes shift to live happily with her ever after—before the eyes of the world.

The Fairy Prince was instantly recognizable to Celia's eyes, although I am afraid other people would have seen in him no more than a good-looking, robust young man, with shoulders so broad that they drew attention from his six feet of stature—a young man with a well-bred carriage, a healthy, black skin, fine eyes under soft, heavy, black eyebrows, good teeth, and the promise of a mustache—a young man with an expression of dignified earnestness upon his face which suggested the idea that he took things in this world somewhat seriously, and regarded his own progress through it as an event not to be lightly considered. In short, other people would have seen just such a young man as Harvard College turns out by the dozen, into a glib, vulgar word, too much given to levity.

But Celia saw in this stranger, as he stood at her father's gate, a vast deal more than that. Perhaps she could not have told us anything further about him than that he was "different." Different, she meant, from the men she knew in her daily life, with a difference that was only in looks and in bearing, but that even went to her perception, to his very garments, or at least to his way of wearing a very plain everyday suit.

He felt about the gate for a bell-handle, and, not finding it, pushed in and walked up the path, casting an inquiring glance upward as he went, and catching a glimpse of Celia at her upper window. In another moment his ring clanged through the empty house. Mrs. Lete was making purchases for the household against Sunday. Dorinda was buying unnecessary personal adornments at twenty-seven cents and thirty-nine cents apiece, as was her wont of a Saturday afternoon. Mr. Lete and all those were at the factory, for it was pay-day, and they stayed later than the usual hours. And Susan, the "help," was enjoying herself at the eleventh annual picnic of the Daughters of Temperance and Grand Relief Protective Lodge. It was clear that Celia had to go down-stairs and answer the bell. Why should it make her heart flutter and throb with wild and irrational disturbance when she opened the door to a stranger of amiable and peaceful appearance?

C. E. An interesting programme was gone through, which partly consisted of speeches by Rev. Messrs. Talling, Clark and J. A.
Murray. These gentlemen gave brief sketches of Mr. Scott's career in connection with St. Andrew's Church, speaking of him in the most glowing terms, and were accorded hearty applause. Mr. Scott then responded, thanking the members of the society for their reception, and advising, not without emotion, to the warm friends he had made during his stay in London, and the kind way in which he had been received and treated by them. He closed by bidding them a fond farewell, and hoped they might soon meet again. Among others who took part were: Miss Laura Bilton, Miss Maggie Gilmour, Chas. Wheeler, and the St. Andrew's male quartet. Refreshments were also served. During his stay in London, Mr. Scott has made a deep impression on the people of the various Presbyterian congregations, and their hearty wishes for success in his undertakings go with him.

Coming to London.

The Berlin News says: "The Guelph Exhibition people have secured the services of the Waterloo Band, and will no doubt get very good music—not quite as good, however, as they would have got had they been successful in securing the Berlin band, for which they applied before looking elsewhere. The Berlin band would no doubt have felt pleased with the idea of going to the Royal City, but a previous engagement to play at the Western Fair, London, made it impossible. Still Guelph will get fairly good music from our westenders." Berlin will take a holiday on Tuesday, Sept. 22, and come to see an exhibition that enjoys a reputation throughout Canada second to none other in the Dominion. Tuesday will be Germania day —and a jolly one it will be.

The Royal Midgate.

At the Grand Opera House next Thursday evening and the two following nights and Saturday matinee, a most novel and interesting dramatic company will hold the theatrical stage. The company consists of about 50 tiny actors, varying from 30 to 40 inches in height and in age from 22 to 40 years. They have been organized by J. Chas. Davis, the well-known manager to represent the absentees of the Lake of Lilliput in a musical extravaganza, entitled "Gulliver's Travels," founded upon Dean Swift's celebrated work of that name. Extensive preparations are now being made for the production, which will be on a grand scale. The company brings its own scenery and is supremely well equipped. The music is under the direction of Mons. Gustav Gerbert, and Senor M. A. D'Allesandri, from the Theater Royal, Drury Lane, London, Eng., has been specially engaged as ballet master. Prominent among these little actors are: Commodore and Miss Foote, Miss Sadie Belton, the Misses Sara and Lucie Adams, Little Chip, Admiral Dot, Major James Doyle, Captain George Liable, Albert Huebner, the German Rose, Miss Annie Nelson, Prince Lewis, the Harrison sisters, and the beautiful Miss Jennie Quicker. A number of full grown actors accompany these little people, forming altogether a company which is remarkable both in ability and numerical strength. The management has decided to charge the regular prices and no doubt the Grand Opera House will be packed during this engagement. This company has created quite a sensation in Toronto this week where it is performing. The Toronto Globe in speaking of these clever little people says:
"Physically they are perfect in limb and figure, well proportioned and developed; mentally they are highly intellectual and well educated. They are, moreover, thoroughly conversant with the usages of polite society, and are as polished and courteous in their demeanor to one another and to strangers as the most recherche member of the 400 could desire."

St. Thomas Camp Notes.

Col. Dawson, the paymaster for this military district, says that there will be about $25,000 disbursed here on account of the camp. This does not include transportation. The pay roll of the battalions, in round numbers is $20,000, and it will take about $5,000 to pay the contractors. The pay roll of the Twenty-fifth in round numbers, is $2,000; Thirty-third $2,500; Twenty-sixth $2,500; Twenty-fourth $2,000; Twenty-eighth $2,000; Thirtieth $3,400; London Field Battery, $1,000; the brigade staff about $1,000 besides regular pay. The staff of the different battalions receive the balance.

Dr. Hanavan, brigade surgeon, says that he has changed his mind about ladies' aid societies during his stay in camp. His impression was formerly that the principal part of their labor consisted in gossip and praying, but the practical, Christian and philanthropic work done by the W. C. T. U. in camp has knocked his former opinions clean out of sight.

Col. Cotton, of Kingston, inspector of artillery, inspected the London Field Battery Thursday, and complimented Col.
Peters on the appearance of the battery, the cleanliness and discipline of the men.

A squad of Indians had a war dance on Thursday night, and one of them tried to scalp an Irishman who belongs to Company "D." The brave from Tipperary anticipated the native by knocking him clean off his pins, and the scalping act was postponed.

The eleven sergeants of mess of the London Field Battery had a mess of their own under the presidency of Sergt. Major Taylor. The sergeants employed a man to run it, and furnished an assistant from the gunners.

A member of "D" Company gave an exhibition of glass chipping Thursday night.
He lunched off a glass tumbler, and it took half of it to satisfy his voracious appetite.

On his hands in the ranks of the Twenty-fifth Battalion are heard praises of Sergt.
Major Cooper, of "D" Company, I. S. C., who has been acting sergeant-major of the Twenty-fifth Battalion.

Col. Martin, commandant Twenty-fourth Battalion, who has been indisposed and was unable to command his battalion in the route march, is somewhat better. It is the first route march he has missed in twenty years. Col. Martin was one of the last military school on Dufferin avenue before it was closed about 20 years ago. "D" Company will not return until Monday, as it is necessary for some of the men to remain to take down the tents when dry, rain this morning having damped them too much to be folded without danger of mildew.
