does not reliah. They need the toning up of the stemach and digestive organs, which a course of Heod's Sarsaparille will give them. It also purifies and enriches the blood, cures that distress after eating and internal misery only a dyspeptic can know, creates an appetite, overcomes that fired feeling and builds up and sustains the whole physical system. It so promptly and efficiently relieves dyspeptic symptoms and cures nervous headaches, that it seems to have almost "a magic touch."

BACON.

Our advices by private letter from Liverpool refer to the great increase that is being made in the sale of Canadian bacon, not only in the large centers, but in the provincial towns and country districts, and is known as Canadian pea-fed; and so much is it liked that certain lean brands have sold as high as 54s and 56s, or as much as Danish brands will bring. This speaks volumes for our export bacon trade, which promises to develop into a very important one. It seems that the most favored brands of Canadian bacon in England are lean, although medium fat cuts are also appreciated. MILLFEED.

There appears to be a good demand for Ontario bran, with sales of car lots at $10 to $10 25, some holders refusing to sell under $10 50. The demand has been stimulated by inquiries from United States buyers, who have taken quite a lot of Ontario bran. Notwithstanding this, some dealers have reported sales of Ontario bran at $9 to $9 50; but it has turned out that the bran thus sold was ground in Ontario from Manitoba wheat, which makes all the difference. Bran made from Ontario white winter wheat is wanted at $10 to $10 25.—[Trade Bulletin. There appears to be a good demand wanted at $10 to $10 25 .- [Trade Bul

The much-heralded "Cymbeline" realzed the blazoning of the press agent and more than fulfilled every expectalast night enjoyel the most gorgeous Shakespearean production that has faof public congratulation. From a spectacular standpoint alone it was a thing of beauty, a delicious exception to the scantyscenery-shipped-through-in-bond ment was a tri imph of imaginative art, the rapid st coession of bewitching stage pictures lending the genuine atmosphere of romance and antiquity in which the characters breathed. Every scene was a poem to the eye. The barbaric splendor of the British court, the tains, the primi ive effects of a rude age, and all the minute accessories of stagecraft, blended perfectly with the intrinsic loveliness of the play. Miss Mather's Imogen must add to the laurels she has already won in the highest sphere of her profession. You understand the meaning? We do. It means money down when you buy, bigger bundles of better goods at less than formerly, and more satisfaction all round. When we have ready cash we get better terms, and when we get better terms so do you. The goods enumerated below were bought in this way. That's why the following all new goods are selling at such close prices. We could have bought old styles for less money-so could you. But who wants old things? This store is up-todate in every way. BACON.

Our advices by private letter from liverpool refer to the great increase that is being made in the sale of Canadian bacon, not only in the large centers, but in the provincial towns and country districts, and is known as Canadian pea-fed; and so much is it liked that certain lean brands have sold as high as 54s and 56s, or as much as Danish brands will bring. This speaks volumes for our export bacon trade, which promises to develop into a very important one. It seems that the most favored brands of Canadian bacon in England are lean, although medium fat cuts are also appreciated.

1.2 There appears to be a good demand for Ontario bran, with sales of car lots at $10 to $10 25, some holders refusing to sell under $10 50. The demand has been stimulated by inquiries from United States buyers, who have taken quite a lot of Ontario bran. Notwithstanding this, some dealers have reported sales of Ontario bran at $9 to $9 50; but it has turned out that the bran thus sold was ground in Ontario from Manitoba wheat, which tario from Manitoba wheat, which makes all the difference. "Cymbeline."

A Splendid Shakespearean Production at the Grand,

By Margaret Mather and Her Company -Superb Scenery and Acting.

The much-heralded "Cymbeline" realized the blazoning of the press agent and more than fulfilled every expectation. The large audience at the Grand last night enjoyed the most gorgeous Shakespearean production that has favored London in many years. It is an achievement that renders Margaret Mather's return to the stage a matter of public congratulation. From a spectacular standpoint alone it was a thing of beauty, a delicious exception to the performances that usually embody the classic drama here. The stage equipment was a triumph of imaginative art, the rapid succession of bewitching stage pictures lending the genuine atwhich the characters breathed. Every baric splendor of the British court, the sylvan majesty of the Welsh mountains, the primitive effects of a rude age, and all the minute accessories of stagecraft, blended perfectly with the intrinsic loveliness of the play.

Miss Mather's Imogen must add to the laurels she has already won in the highest sphere of her profession. It was a most exhaustive part, intensely emotional throughout, and taxing the Mather, it is needless to say, was the incarnation of youth and grace, and

> "If," asks a well-known citizen, "our City Council enacts laws, why are they not carried out? There is a law regulating the street boulevards, which is not enforced. Property owners are allowed a portion of the street, which can be fenced in by a low iron fence. In some places, especially on the street corners, there is planted cedar hedges. In some cases they are from six to eight feet in height and from three to four feet wide, completely shutting out the view and close to the sidewalks of residence to rear of them. In most cases they run along the side of a corner lot. This is a good law, and should be strictly enforced. The only use of the hedge is to shelter the tramp or a hiding place for the dangerous characters at night, out of sight of our police. Why not enforce this law regulating the street boulevards or repeal it? The dog and cow bylaws are enforced, and all other good laws." THEIR SUMMER DUTY.

Anglo-Saxon Citizenship

Looking to This End.

How British Citizens and People of the United States Would Be Affected by It.

The other evening, in a public lecture, delivered at All Souls College by Prof. Dicey, the Vinerian professor of English law, "A Proposal for the Common Citizenship of Both Branches of the English People," was delivered and defended before a large and representative gathering of members of Oxford University. After deprecating the offhand condemnation of any such proposal as an absurdity. Prof. Dicey posal as an absurdity, Prof. Dicey surveyed briefly certain noteworthy signs of a widespread desire to recognize the unity and extend the power of the whole English-speaking race. The sentiment of the unity of the English people was, he said, beginning to take a more concrete and profitable form than questionable declarations as to the superiority and ultimately certain predominance of the Anglo-Saxon Apart from the stimulation in England of a friendly interest in the well being of English colonies, there had been on both sides of the Atlantic a unanimity, startling to politicians, in condemning war between the United States and England. Arbitration had already dec'ded questions which, a cen-tury ago, would have led to war. A permanent tribunal for the decision of disputes between two kindred nations was ultimately sure of establishment, whatever might be the momentary outcome of actual negotiations. Without believing that arbitration could dispose of all international disputes, we might reasonably maintain that the greater number of questions likely to arise between England and the United be referred to a law similar ideas of law and legal pro-

Proposition by Professor Dicey this might be somewhat different. On the other hand, the position of aliens in the United States, he said, was, retically, at least inferior to their position in the United Kingdom. Common law and the varying laws of the several states governed their right to hold and to inherit real estate, but state legislation had, on the whole, tended to improve their position. Englishmen in America would thus gain rather greater civil advantages than Americans in England by an change of citizenship, but in neither case would the ordinary transactions f life, outside the sphere of politics, be substantially affected. An English-man in New York undoubtedly feels that he has pretty much the same

He would be able to vote for a member of Parliament, and, if fortune favored, to ome a Cabinet Minister or Premier. He might aspire to the House of Lords just as a British subject might, under the proposal, aspire to a seat in the Senate. On the other hand, he would be liable to be tried in England for a limited number of criminal offenses though committed in the United States, but the common law doctrine that crime is territorial could and would set a strict limit here. The whole question of treason and of political offenses would have to be carefully and specially considered with other details easily adjustable, supposing the existence in both countries of a desire for common citizenship. If every American now in England any of her colonies were, by act of Parliament, made a British subject, he might be long in realizing any change. Suppose we could say that every Am erican in England would, by act of Parliament, become a British subject after the 1st of January, 1901, it would be startling, but surely not alarming. court, by disputants who entertain Americans would enter Parliament, but we do not regret the presence there of men who, by race, language and re-The lecturer's proposal was, he said, ligion are much less closely connected an attempt to give practical effect to with us. We need not, said Prof. widespread and growing belief in Dicey, be startled at the thought seeing a citizen of New York, or of Massachusetts, seated at Westminister by the side of a Parsee or a Bengalee. Our liberal laws of naturalization make it impossible to maintain that political life is to be open only to natural-born British subjects.

etween England and her colonies had passed away. We all know that George III. and his supporters were not consciously bent on tyran ny, but acted under the conviction that the independence of the colonies involved the ruin of England. Prof. Dicey declared that the national independence of the United States was a benefit to mankind, because it was well that the inglish people should have developed restoration of their old scale, the the English form of republicantsm, and said what he was now advocating was 5 per cent just the same. an attempt to preserve the good while undoing all the evil which flowed from under bond in the sum of the contest with the colonies. cturer now paid a feeling tribute to of employment in his mine. the peacemaking and reconciling efforts of Queen Victoria and her advisers, who made it possible for Lincoln to steer through the Trent affair without a war, arguing therefore that her reign was a peculiarly propitious one for close union. He then gave a really owerful picture of the greatness of Lincoln, whose civilian guidance of the American war he strikingly paralleled by the career of Lord Canning in In-dia during the mutiny. Finally, his discourse ended with the cordial words used by King George in welcoming Mr. Adams as Minister of the United States of America to the Court of St.

It was straight and smooth, and the child made famous progress. He trudged on and on until came where the road dipped to the level of the marshes. The South Marsh was not far now. But the wind was roaring in with great force, the dark clouds covered the sky, and all the sunlight was gone, save a narrow streak of angry red low down on the horizon. His father was nowhere to be seen, and Little Pierre began to feel lonely. He sat down of a stump by the roadside and gazed toward the South Marsh, which, with its battered old barn, was in plain sight, while, beyond, the surges of the bay crashed along the dikes as the tide came in. At last Little Pierre saw some black forms moving across the marsh in the distance. With a joyful cry he jumped up and ran down the road. Meanwhile Pierre had gathered together his cattle and was driving them This suggestion carried out will tell its own achievement."

The larva eats its way through the outer bark to the inner, and takes about three yars to develop. It works in th esapwood, where it forms flat, shallow cavities, filled with rawdust-like castings. These are often seen on the bark, and indicate where the "borer" is at work. As it reaches maturity, it cuts a passage upwards into the solid wood, and then curves towards the bark. The larva is a pale yellow, an inch long, and has a well-marked flat head much wider than the body. Remedies: 1. Examine the trees in autumn, and where the sawdust-like castings indicate the presence of the "borer," a stiff wire may be pushed in and the larva killed, or sometimes the larva can be cut out with a knife.

A Startling Contest, in Which a Woman Had a Part.

She Is in Great Danger From Her Fighting Pets-The Anaconda Finally Killed the Boa.

A battle royal between two huge snakes and an attempt on the part of the surviving reptile to count a woman among its victims were the cause of a great deal of excitement vesterday afternoon, says the New fork Times, among the visitors to the 'Grand Spring Show," otherwise the German County Fair, now eing held at Sulzer's Harlem River

The two snakes were a 10-foot anaconda and an 81/2-foot cross between a python and a boa constrictor. They were brought down yesterday morning to do duty in the menagerie which forms part of the Midway Plaisance arrangement at the fair, and were placed in charge of Mile. Madeleine, a professional snake-charmer. In pri vate life she is known as Mrs. W. Robinson. She weighs 296 pounds, and is the wife of a midget 28 inches in height and 99 pounds weight.

She ordered the box containing her two pets placed in a recess of the menagerie prior to their introduction to the audience. The close quarters, however, did not suit the anaconda, and it must have concluded that by swallowing its room-mate there would be more room for itself. Suddenly there was a commotion on the inside of the box that brought over Mile. Madeleine in a hurry. She found the two snakes intertwined so that it was hard to tell which was which. anaconda was making frantic efforts to get the boa's head into its wideopen jaws, and the boa, on the other hand, was contracting its muscles around the body of the enemy with strength born of despair.

TWINED ABOUT THE WOMAN. Mlle. Madeleine made a quick dive into the box through the glass lid, which had been broken in the melee, and seized the boa at the back of the head with one hand, while with her other hand she clutched the anaconda in the same spot. With all her might she began tugging away, but to no purpose. The snakes then wound themselves ground have body. During the state of the country of the state of the country of the snakes are not shaded by the state of the state purpose. The snakes then wound themselves around her body. During the struggle one of the woman's hands the struggle one of the woman's hands a flash the boat ward the door, stopped long enough slipped, and quick as a flash the boat turned and bit her hand, making a to say, "Well, good-bye, Tom!" The attack made Mlle. Madeleine relax her hold on the snakes. She dropped them in a hurry. The anaconda twisted itself with renewed vigor around the boa's body, and with renewed friend: a spasmodic, sudden jerk finally succeeded in breaking its enemy's back.

Mlle. Madeleine calmly ordered an she prepared to replace the victor in the box. But the victor was not quite ready to return. It again jumped found sometimes on the ground among the stout woman before it. With her hand bleeding profusely, but with the dried leaves or on the bush attached to the stems or leaves. This represents the purpa condition. The image again grappled with the snake, and appears in about two weeks after the All this time the onlookers had been standing around watching the triple battle, but with the 10-foot snake free

It took some time to quiet the crowd, out with the assistance of several of the barkers in front of the sideshows and other criers of stentorian voice, the people were finally reassured that all danger was past. Those who first ventured into the park saw the dead boa, its 8 feet 6 inches stretched out to full length, and Mlle Madeleine, with her hand in a bandage and her arm swollen and inflamed, gazing rue naconda was calmly reposing in it Contrary to all usual proceedings in the case of a snake bite, Mlle. Made-leine had refused to drink a drop of the whisky which was brought to her im-mediately after she was bitten, al-though she did pour some of it on the wounds. She explained her refusal by stating that she had promised her sister, who died some time ago, never to use liquor internally, no matter what happened. She has a drawing of her sister's grave tatooed on her
