Water Power Is Available For Newcastle

Engineer Completes Survey and will Make Report to Council—Understood Power is Available

Mr. McKechnie, a hydraulic engineer, of Halifax, N. S. finished a survey of the water powers in the vicinity of Newcastle, on Saturday night. Mr. McKechnie who was employed by the Newcastle Town Council made an exhaustive survey of all streams for their adoption for power purposes and it is rumored that his report, which will be submitted to the Council in the few days will declare the scheme feasible, and that there is abundant power available to supply Newcastle's wants for years to come.

More than 30,000 women volunteers are now engaged in work directly connected with the German Army in the field.

Disastrous Fire At Lower Derby

Barn Containing all Farm Machinery and Hay of Malcolm Amos Destroyed

The little village of Lower Derby was visited with a most disastrous fire about five o'clock on Friday evening and damage to the extent of about three thousand dollars was the result of the burning of the barn of Mr. Malcolm Amos.

Messrs. Malcolm and George Amos, both use the same barn and the day previous to the fire had finished harvesting their hay crops of about fifteen tons all of which was destroyed together with farm machinery, wagons, sleighs, harness etc. The fire several times spread to Mr. Malcolm and George Amos houses and also Capt. Spurgeon Amos barn and only heroic efforts of the bucket brigade saved these buildings from destruction. The destroyed building was a large one about seventy feet long and twenty-six feet wide. The insurance carried was only $300.

Allies Continue to Push Enemy Back on Western Front Despite Fierce Resistance

Tuesday
The French continue to extend and consolidate their gains on both sides of Noyon. They have penetrated further toward Roye and Lassigny and the latter town virtually has been occupied.

The Germans are furiously bombarding the entire region, while the

The origin of the fire is thought to have been a spark from the flue of Mr. George Amos house, but when discovered the entire building was a mass of flames. This is the third time that Mr. Malcolm Amos has suffered loss by fire, on two previous occasions he lost his barn and then his house.

French are shelling Noyon from two directions.

Wednesday
French troops are now firmly in possession of the Lassigny and Carlepont plateaus, the gateposts of the Oise, and are threatening Noyon. They are within five miles of that town from the south. General Mangin's artillery is sweeping all this territory, except a narrow out-toward Guiscard.

British forces have captured Courcelles Achiet Le Petit and have reached Moyenville and Beaucourt-sur-Ancre in their drive, which began this morning north of the Ancre river.

The British attack was between Merleville and Beaucourt-sur-Ancre,

Newcastle To Have A Navy League

Committee Appointed to Make Arrangements for its Formation—Will Assist Sailors Dependents

A very interesting lecture was given in the Town Hall last evening by Rev. Dr. Hall, of Toronto, commissioner of the Navy League of Canada and the "British Navy and the activities of Sailors ashore and afloat." His Worship Mayor Troy presided and there was only a fair attendance of citizens. Dr. Hall is a forceful speaker and his lecture was much enjoyed by those present and as the close of which the following resolution was passed on motion of Ald. Stuart and Mr. R. Corry Clark:

"That this meeting of the citizens of Newcastle with the Mayor in the chair, agree with the objects of the Navy League of Canada and that a committee be appointed at this meeting to make arrangements for the formation of a branch of the Navy League in Newcastle."

The committee were selected as follows: Chairman—Mayor H. Troy; Messrs. J. R. Lawler, H. H. Stuart, R. C. Clark, J. H. Ashford, J. M. Troy, A. L. Kerr and R. A. N. Jarvis.

The object of the Navy League is to urge the formation of a Canadian Navy and also to assist the dependents of sailors, who have lost their lives in the present war.

It is likely that another Public Meeting will be held in the near future to complete organization.

a distance of about eight and a half miles.

Tuesday afternoon the British threw back strong German attack against the new British positions south and north of the Scrape.

French troops are continuing their advance between the Oise and the Aisne, and have made additional important gains at some points. Several more villages have been occupied.

Thursday
Between two and three thousand prisoners were captured by the British in yesterday's operation.

North of the Ancre, the Arras-Bapaume railway has been crossed. In spite of strong enemy resistance, British troops have reached the village of Neuf Bosquis, northeast of Merville.

General Mangin's troops have reached the Ailette river in their advance between the Oise and the Aisne.

Fighting continued last nights on the whole front from the region of Lassigny to the neighborhood of Soissons.

The French captured St. Paul-Au-Bois (11 miles northwest of Soissons), passing out to the northward and reaching the Ailette at Laquin-cy-Basse.

Friday
Paris Aug. 25—Between the Oise and the Aisne, French troops advanced their lines during the night to Gony and Pont St. Mars, just south of the Ailette river. They hold the right banks of the Oise and the Ailette from Semigny to the railroad west of Coucy-Le-Chateau, according to the official statement issued by the war office today.

The British troops are making progress at a number of points. Two enemy attacks near Beaucourt were repulsed during the night.

On the Lys front, the British line was slightly advanced east of Le Touret, northwest of Neuf Berquin and east of Outterretein.

Bristol troops are reported to have captured Chieggelles and Herleville, south of the Somme river. More than a thousand prisoners were taken in this operation, which eliminates the bend in the line. Field Marshal Haig's forces are also reported to have taken Boyevillers and Boiry Terguerele and to be still pushing forward. They are piling up prisoners and guns.

The Germans have reached Gommeourt, which is considered to be the chief point of the German defense positions. South of Gommeourt the British were attacking and (Continued on page 4)

THE TWO BRASSEYS.

Curious Parallels in Careers of Famous Men.

The death of Lord Brassey recalls curious parallels between the careers respectively of the two Brasseys and the two Stephensons, who were their forerunners.

Lord Brassey was born in 1836, and he became, in spite of an exceptionally strenuous life, an octogenarian. His inclination, however, was toward political life and naval administration.

WOMEN!
If there were no women, men would have no object in life; their mustaches would cease to interest them; they would not care a Chinaman whether their collars were ironed or not; they would have nobody to nurse them when they had the toothache, or to keep them from believing they were going to die when an old-fashioned stomach ache had a grip upon them. There would be nobody to take for ice cream and no small edition of flesh and blood to huz. There would be no body to fight against being kissed and then to take it as natural as the cat does to cream.

Baby's Great Danger During Hot Weather

More little ones die during the summer months than at any other time of the year. Diarrhoea, dysentery, cholera, infantum and stomach disorders, come without warning and when a medicine is not at hand to give promptly the short delay too frequently means that the child has passed beyond aid. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in the home, where there are young children. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent stomach and bowel troubles or if the trouble comes suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will cure the baby. LORD BEAVERBROOK'S POSITION

Under the heading "Beaverbrook and his silly job" the Sackville Tribune quotes a vicious attack upon Lord Beaverbrook from the Toronto Saturday Night, which questions as to whether his Propaganda Department is worth the money expended and claims there is no need of "Counteracting the enemy in Canada."

Just where the Saturday Night or Sackville Tribune gets the idea that there is no need to "Counteract the enemy in Canada" we are at a loss to know, for we believe that the enemy propaganda Department is still working and doing effective work in Canada, and due alone to its mischievous, yes damnable plans caused many Canadians unknowingly to give comfort to the enemy, and cause the loss of many Canadian lives. The statement by these papers that all enemy aliens have been interned, is not true, for daily we read of their arrests and their nefarious work in Canada.

What Canada needs is more propaganda, and then some more Canadians need to have their eyes opened, so that they may see and realize the enemy with which we have to contend. Then we would not hear words of pity for enemy aliens which have been intoned or captured in their devilish work as we heard in Sackville recently, because these men were made to work, to earn their bread. Just think for one moment, what our boys are suffering at German hands in that country. Forced to work twelve and fifteen hours a day with not enough food to keep body and soul together, goaded by whips and bayonets, and spat-upon by the citizens, and yet in Canada they are allowed practically as much freedom as Canadians, with the exception of the few that have been interned, and there they live in luxury in entertainment camps.

Yes, we also criticize Lord Beaverbrook, not for what he has done, but because he has not done enough. We want more of Beaverbrook, more propaganda to fight the sympathy that is now extended to our enemies. To make us a nation united in one cause—that to defeat the Hun, the enemy of civilization.

CAMPBELLTON SHOWS THE WAY

The decision of the Town Council of Campbellton to lay no more plank walks is a move in the right direction and deserves the consideration of our own town council. Each year the upkeep of these walks, is growing more expensive and it will only be a matter of time before they will have to be discarded altogether.

An extra assessment of a thousand dollars each year to be spent on permanent streets, would be a paying investment and one that would meet the approval of the ratepayers and we trust that when the estimates are made up this year that it will include sum for permanent sidewalks.

The announcement that two Newcastle girls, Misses Alice Campbell and Margaret Callahan, had lead the Province, in the Normal School Cipeing Examinations, speaks well for Newcastle's educational institutions and especially St. Mary's Academy where these young ladies received their educations. Miss Campbell's marks of 98.8 are among the highest ever made in the Province and are only 1.2 of being perfect.

pushing forward all along the line. A battle has developed which seems to be one of the greatest of the war. The town of Meaulte, south-east of Albert, fell early in the British drive. The British troops pressing on here are using the Bray-Albert road. Happy Valley, to the north of Bray, was taken by Marshal Haig's troops after hard fighting.

Three German battalion headquarters have been taken in the locality of Happy Valley. Additional thousands also have fallen into the hands of the British. A number of fresh new German Divisions have been identified. They were pushed up in the hope of saving something from the disaster which threatens the whole German army on this front.

Sunday

Field Marshal Haig's great drive in Picardy yesterday spread on both its wings, the British and Australian forces hammering the foe back along a thirty-mile front from the Cojeul river, south of Arras, almost to Chaulnes, gaining more than two miles at certain points, capturing many villages and thousands of additional prisoners.

The French further south made new gains against the stiffening German resistance pushing north across the Divette river between Lassistay and Noron, and forcing the enemy back in two sectors along the battle line north of Soissons.

North of the Somme, Byng's third army captured the villages of Comlecourt, Ervillies, Hamelincourt, Rhyelles, Boiry-Becquerelle, Achiet-Le-Grand, and Binucourt, pressing eastward from these places and driving to within two and a half miles of the railroad centre of Bapaume. Rawlinson's fourth army south of the Somme captured Chugnelles and Herleville in terrific fighting, and pushed further east toward Courcelles and Cappy.

Two thousand prisoners taken in the day's fighting have been counted, and other thousands have been captured or killed by the advancing forces.

Monday

This morning's attack was conducted between the river Scarpe at Fampoux and the heights northeast of Neville-Vitasse. In a few hours the British made an advance of two miles on a front of four miles.

The British took Morcy and made progress to the southeast of the village.

The number of prisoners taken by the British since August 21 has reached twenty thousands. Three new divisions have been identified opposite the British. Since August 8 nearly

Real West Canadian Fur

THOSE who have never had the privilege of seeing a wild fox in the full glory of his winter clothing cannot begin to form a conception of the beauty of the dress. In the foothills and mountains of western Canada these animals reach practically the same perfection they do in the bitter cold of the Arctic. Some people claim they possess a more showy coat because they generally fare better.

The ordinary dweller of the cities pictures a fox as an indefinite red creature something like a wolf or a dog, but possessing a big tail. They know a fox is called red generally, but they do not know the shade. These people who have seen foxes in cages also cannot appreciate the vast difference between the captive and the free.

The true wild fox in winter is a wonderful creature of soft blendings of bright gold, cream, the purest of white, the sharpest of black. Every hair shines with life and vigor, and the brush is a magnificent appendage which would make a true cross-country fox-hunter kill an Irish hunter to obtain.

A splendid type of red fox trotted up the snow-covered ice of the headwaters of the Red Deer River in Alberta. He heard the sound of splintering shell-ice and he paused to listen. Far ahead some Stoney Indians, returning from their big annual game drive to the Clearwater and the Saskatchewan were crossing southward, their ponies laden with the meat of bear and deer and moose. They were bound for their homes in Morley, thirty miles distant, where they would sit in comfort in the warm log cabins for the remainder of the winter, going out perhaps only to feed their saddle horses or to pose in their blankets on the Canadian Pacific Railway platforms for the benefit of any tourists who might be travelling.

The fox took to the brush. It was high noon; clouds had rolled down from the peaks and soft new snow was falling. Crossing another bend of the river he came to a river flat where the body of a dead horse lay. He was as cautious as any fox but he was confident that no harm lay in the meat of this carcass because on the preceding night he had slunk by while coyotes made the darkness ring with their unpleasant bickerings over the feast. So, picking out a choice part of the neck he ate, and then went on.

But sometime during that morning a hunter in the district had "salted" portions of the dead animal. He had heard the coyotes at it and he had been waiting for just that development, knowing that after their caution had been blunted by one feed they would be back again and he would be able to harvest some fur. By and by he came to inspect his "bait." He saw the fox tracks in the fresh snow and he followed, but not far. In a wooded dell where the spruces and birches gloomed and sparkled, at the foot of an open, snow-filled coulee he spied his catch. It was dead, its toes turned up as is usual with the victims of strychnine. Its shining red and white and black coat, its huge, soft brush, were as striking points of beauty as anything else in that ermine covered, green and silver studded spot of northern beauty. But the hunter was material. He was pleased because he had promised a girl in New York that when he returned home from his holiday in the foothill hunting country he would bring her some real Canadian fur.

In a time needing food economy many people are not getting all the nourishment they might from their food. It is not how much you eat, but much you assimilate, that does you good.

The addition of a small teaspoonful of Bovril to the diet as a peptogenic before meals leads to more thorough digestion and assimilation and thus saves food, for you need less.

New Light Now Thrown

On the Kruger Telegram

By Sir Va'entine Chirol

SIR VALENTINE CHIROL, during many years foreign editor of the London Times, contributed a deeply interesting account to the Times of the notorious telegram despatched by Kaiser Wilhelm II. to President Kruger 22 years ago. At the time Sir Valentine was the correspondent of the Times in Berlin, and, being a master of German as he is of French, enjoyed exceptional opportunities of studying and understanding German policy.

The Foreign Secretary (Baron von Marschall) had already warned him to look out for squalls as the German Government intended to give the British Government a lesson. He was, therefore, hardly surprised when on the day of publication in January, 1896, he was summoned to the Berlin Foreign Office, where he received from Baron von Marschall this very different account of a document to the popular legend which attributed this piece of calculated Anglophobia to an unpremeditated imperial impulse.

"He himself at once laid stress upon the gravity of the action taken by the Emperor with the complete concurrence of the Chancellor, and also, he added, his own (Baron von Marschall's) momentary surprise arrived when it became necessary for Germany to give England a plain warning that she was deeply interested in South African affairs and in the maintenance of the Dutch Republics, and therefore intended to make her voice heard and listened to. The Imperial telegram was no mere impulsive expression of sympathy with a kindred people, but an action of state—'eine Staatsaktion'—when His Majesty had invested with special significance by putting it in the form of an 'all-highest' message addressed direct to the President of the South African Republic. Baron von Marschall wished to understand this quite clearly, as, though he was as anxious as ever to preserve the friendliest possible relations between Germany and Great Britain, he felt that for that very reason it was most important that the British public should not be left under any misapprehension as to the meaning of what had happened and the unfortunate consequences that the tendency of British statesmen to ignore German interests would involve. The situation had been fully discussed at a special Council of Ministers, presided over by the Emperor, who had himself prepared the draft of the telegram to President Kruger. (I learned subsequently, on very good authority, that the Emperor's original draft had contained a still more threatened passage which was ultimately omitted at the instance of the Chancellor, who was then Prince Hohenlohe.)

"Baron von Marschall, whose manner was throughout quite frank and friendly, as I indeed always found him, then proceeded to rehearse to me once more the whole list of German grievances against Great Britain—many of them arising merely out of the British Government's reluctance to irritate the French unnecessarily in colonial questions—and wound up by reiterating that it had been high time for Germany to give us a lesson, for which his previous conversations had doubtless, he said, prepared me.

"This last statement was perfectly correct, for, having been away from Berlin in the Far East during a good many months of 1895, I found the atmosphere so heavy with un-friendliness to England on my return that I had warned the Times privately to look out for squalls from the Wilhelmstrasse. The Emperor's telegram to President Kruger was all the more significant as Sir Edward Malet, who had just retired from the British Embassy in Berlin after 12 years' tenure of the office, had warned Prince Hohenlohe, when taking leave of him, very earnestly, though speaking merely in private capacity as an old and tried friend of Germany, that the onerous cloud on the horizon of Anglo-German relations appeared to him to be the position in certain responsible quarters in Berlin to interfere in South Africa—an interference which would be deeply resented both by the British Government and the British people.

"As he was fated to do again and again, the Emperor miscalculated on that occasion the psychological moment. We speedily composed our differences with the United States over the Venezuelan question, on which the Portuguese stoutly refused a right of way through L'azena Marques to the German naval detachment which was under orders to proceed to Pretoria as an earnest of German support for President Kruger.

"Germany's attempt to secure the diplomatic co-operation of France and Russia elicited no response, though Baron Hohenlohe went so far as to warn me, and to suggest that I should get his warning conveyed to the British Foreign Office, that never since the beginning of the nineteenth century had Britain stood in greater danger of a formidable coalition against her. The 'lesson' in the sense contemplated by William II, when he despatched his telegram to President Kruger, turned out a complete failure. More the pity that it failed also to make any permanent impression upon our rulers, whose easy optimism required many more 'lessons' of a similar kind before they began to realize the true inwardness of Germany's higher policy toward this country."

"At the Boarding House.
"My dear friend, this is bad again this morning! I cannot possibly sit it."
"Have you tried the other end?"

Potato Lice Are The Latest Pest

Farmers Should Look to Their Fields for This New Destroyer of Potatoes

(Gleaner)
It seems there is always something new bobbing up to make the life of the farmer miserable, and cause him extra moments of worry. He has had trouble in gathering the hay, because of shortage of labor and too frequent showers. He was resting comfortably with the idea that his potato plants had safely passed the danger point, when he discovers a new insect that is sapping the plant, and destroying its nutritive giving qualities.

There has recently been reported to the Dominion Plant Pathologist, G. C. Cunningham, a little green insect that seems to strike a field all at once, and before the farmer is aware of it, the field is ruined. These reports have been received this week in many Aroostook fields. The insects called lice, are trimming the field badly. They have not been noticed on this side of the border until within the last few days. The laboratories of the Dominion Plant Pathologist and Dominion Entomologists are busy preparing directions for combating the lice.

Potatoes fields should be examined now for the pest. It is a tiny green bug, with sharp, slender beak, which it thrusts into the stem and leaves of the plant. In order to suck out the sap. These lice breed very fast and soon overrun the potato field in multitudes. After they have gotten in their work the leaves begin to curl up, then turn yellow and black, then fall from the plant. A few of these lice on the plant may not seem dangerous now, but they will develop into thousands in a very short time. These will suck juice from the plants, and potato plants cannot produce lice and tubers at the same time.

If your fields are infested, get in touch with the Dominion specialists on plant life. They will tell you how best to meet this new pest. Spraying must be done at once, and nicotine preparations are suggested. It is said arsenical preparations have no effect on the lice. However, your experts will give the proper advice, and should be consulted at an early date.

"When Can You Deliver?"

THAT'S the customer's first question, usually. How do you answer him?
Your goods may be superior, your clerks may be courteous, your store attractive, but after all, unless your deliveries are prompt and dependable, your customers will be disappointed and trade elsewhere next time. Do you realize how many people judge a store by its deliveries?
Is your delivery system on a par with the rest of your business? Does it draw new trade or lose customers for you? Are your horses as suitable for you as they were at one time? If not, why do you persist in being a little behind the times, when a Ford One Ton Truck would be more in line with your other business standards?
Perhaps your deliveries cost you too much. If you are using motor trucks, they may be too heavy for your line of business and therefore too expensive. The Ford Truck uses less fuel when handling a full load than some trucks use running empty.
The Ford One Ton Truck is a money saver, so why not modernize this department of your business at once?

The Stowaway

By LOUIS TRACY

During that quick twist on the horse's withers she had plucked a revolver from a holster. She meant to shatter that false face of his utterly, to blast him as with lightning, but the lock snapped harmlessly, for San Benavides had indeed borne himself gallantly in the fray. He struck at her now in a whirl of fury. She winced, but with catamount activity drew back

"I HAVE KILLED HIM," her arm and hit him on the temple with the heavy weapon. He collapsed limply, reeled from off the saddle, and they fell together. The frightened horse, finding himself at liberty, galloped to the camp, where already there was an unusual commotion.

Carmela flung herself on the man's body. She was capable of extremes either of grief or passion. "Salvador, my love, my love!" she screamed. "What have I done? Speak to me, Salvador! It is I, Carmela! Oh, Mary Mother, come to my aid! I have killed him—killed my Salvador!"

He looked very white and peaceful as he lay there in the gloom. She could not see whether his lips moved. She was too distraught to note if his heart was beating. It seemed incredible that she, a weak woman, should have crushed the life out of that lithe and active frame with one blow. She rose and ran blindly.

Long before Carmela reached the finca San Benavides stirred, groaned, squirmed convulsively and raised himself on hands and knees. He turned and sat down, feeling his head.

"The spittle!" he muttered. "The she devil! And that other! Would that I could wring her neck!"

A spattering of rifles cracked in the valley. There was a blurred clamor of voices. He looked at the sky, at the black summits of the hills. He stood up, and his inseparable sword clanked on the stony ground.

"Ah, well," he growled, "I have done with women. They have had the best of my life. What is left I give to Brazil!"

CHAPTER XVII. A COUP OF THE NAPOLEONIC ORDER. CARMELA went back to a household that paid scant heed to her screaming. Dom Corria was there, bareheaded, his gorgeous uniform sword sashed and blood bespattered. General Russo, too, was beating his capacious chest and shouting:

"God's honest! Not a single fight of it!"

"A sprinkling of soldiers, an dismounted cavalry, or gendarmes, a few disheveled officers, had accompanied De Sylva in his flight. With reckless bravery he and Russo had tried to rally the troops camped at headquarters. It was a hopeless effort. Half breeds can never produce a military caste. They may fight valiantly in the line of battle—they will not face the unknown, the terrible, the harpies that come at night, borne on the hurricane wings of panic. Unhappily De Sylva and his bodyguard were the messengers of their own disaster. The cowardly genius at Pesqueira had planned a surprise. He would not lead it, of course, but in Dom Miguel Barraca he found an eager substitute. It was a coup of the Napoleonic order. An infantry attack along the entire front of the Liberatorist position cloaked the launching against the center of a formidable body of cavalry. The project was to thrust this lance into the rebel position, probe it thoroughly, as a surgeon explores a gunshot wound, and extract the offender in the guise of Dom Corria.

The scheme had proved eminently successful. The Liberatorists were crumpled up, and here was Dom Corria making his last stand.

He deserved better luck, for he was magnificent in failure. Calm as ever, he tried to be shot or captured when the reserves in camp failed him. Russo and the rest dragged him onward by main force.

"They want me only," he urged.

My death will end a useless struggle. I shall die a little later, when many more of my friends are killed. Why not die now?"

"They would not listen. "It is night!" they cried. "The enemy's horses are spent. A determined stand may give us another chance."

But it was a forlorn hope. As San Benavides lurched into the patio the horses of the first pursuing detachment strained up the slope between the house and encampment.

Carmela, all her fire gone, the pallid ghost of the vengeful woman who would have shattered her lover's skull were the revolver loaded, was the first to see him. She actually crouched in terror. Her tongue was parched. If she uttered some low cry none heard her.

Dom Corria, striving to dispose his meager garrison as best he could, met his trusted lieutenant. His face lit with joy.

"Ah, my poor Salvador!" he cried. "I thought we had lost you at the ford!"

"No," said San Benavides. "I ran away!"

Even in his dire extremity De Sylva smiled.

"Would that others had run like you, my Salvador!" he said. "Then we should have been in Pernambuco tomorrow."

The Brazilian looked around. His eye dwelt heedlessly on the cowering Carmela. He was searching for Iris, who had been compelled by Coke and Bulmer and her uncle to take shelter behind the score of sailors who still remained at Las Flores.

"It is true nevertheless," he said laconically. "I knew the game was lost, so I came here to try to save a lady."

"Ah—our Carmela? You thought of her?"

"No!"

Then the spell passed from Carmela. She literally threw herself on her lover.

"Yes, it is true!" she shrieked. "He came to save me, but I preferred to die here—with you, father, and with him."

Dom Corria did not understand these fireworks, but he had no time for thought. Bullets were crashing through the closed venetians. Light they must have or the defense would become an orgy of self destruction, yet light was their most dangerous foe when men were shooting from the somber depths of the trees.

The assailants were steadily closing around the house. Their rifles covered every door and window. Each minute brought up fresh bands in tens and twenties. At last Barraca himself arrived. Some members of his staff made a hasty survey of the situation. There were some 300 men available, and in all probability Dom Corria could not muster one-sixth of that number. It was a crisis that called for vigor.

The cavalry lance was twenty miles from its base, and there was no knowing what accident might reunite the scattered Liberatorists. One column at least of the Nationalists had failed to keep its rendezvous or this last desperate stand at Las Flores would have proved a sheer impossibility.

So the house must be rushed, no matter what the cost. This was a war of leaders. Let Dom Corria fall and his most enthusiastic supporters would pay Dom Miguel's taxes without further parley. A scheme of concerted action was hastily arranged. Simultaneously two detachments swarmed against the chosen points of assault.

One crossed the patio to the porch, another made for the stable entrance, a third attacked the garden door, a fourth assailed the servants' quarters, and the fifth, strongest of all and inspired by Dom Miguel's presence, battered in the shutters and tore away the piled up furniture of the ballroom.

The Nationalist leader's final order was terse:

"Shoot the women; shoot every rebel; do not touch the foreigners unless they resist!"

With yells of "Abajo De Sylva!" "Morto por revoltados!" the assailants closed in. Neither side owned magazine rifles, so the fight was with machetes, swords and bayonets when the first furious hail of lead had spent itself. No man thought of quarter nor ceased to stab and thrust until he fell.

One at length summed his simple words exalted him into the kingdom of the heroic David Verity occupied a lower plane. Prayers and curses alternated on his lips. He was stupefied with fear.

A tall, distinguished looking man, wearing a brilliant uniform, his breast decorated with many orders, now appeared on the scene. He shouted something, and the attacking force redoubled its efforts. He raised a revolver and took deliberate aim at Dom Corria. Coke saw him, and his bulldog pluck combined with avarice to overcome his common sense. Without thought of the consequences he sprang into the swaying mob and pulled De Sylva aside. A bullet smashed into the wall behind them.

"Look out, mister!" he bellowed. "Ere's a blighter 'oo wants to finish you quick!"

De Sylva's glance sought his adversary. He produced a revolver which hitherto had remained hidden in a pocket. Perhaps his bullets were not meant for an enemy. He fired at the tall man. A violent swerve of the two irregular ranks of soldiers screened each from the other. An opening offered, and the man who had singled out Dom Corria for his special vengeance fired again. The bullet struck Coke in the breast. The valiant little shipper staggered and sank to the floor. His fiery eyes gazed up into Verity's.

"Damme if I ain't hulled!" he roared, his voice loud and harsh, as if he were giving some command from the bridge in a gale of wind.

David dropped to his knees.

"For Gawd's sake, Jimmie!" he moaned.

"Yes, I've got it. Sarve me dam well right too! No business to go ag'in me own pore old ship. Look 'ere, Verity, I'm done for! If you get away from this rotten muss see to my missus an' the girls. If you don't blast 'em!"

"Fire!" shouted a strong English voice from without. A withering volley crashed through the open windows. Full twenty of the assailants fell. Dom Miguel de Barraca among them. There was an instant of terrible silence, as the shock of an earthquake.

"Now, come on!" shouted the same voice, and Philip Hozier rushed into the ballroom, followed by his scouts and a horde of Brazilian regulars. No one not actually an eyewitness of that thrilling spectacle would believe that a fight waged with such determined intolerance could stop so suddenly as did that fray in Las Flores. It was true now as ever that men of a mixed race cannot withstand the unforeseen. Dom Miguel fallen and his cohort decimated by the leader's storm that tore in at them from an unexpected quarter, the rest fled without another blow. They raced madly for their horses, to find that every tethered group was in the hands of this new contingent. Then the darkness swaled them. Dom Miguel's cavalry was disbanded.

At once the medley within died down. Men had no words as yet to meet this astounding development. Dom Corria went to where his rival lay.

"All Brazil is your debtor, now, for eyes met De Sylva's in a strange look of recognition. He tried to speak, but choked and died."

Then the living president stooped over the dead one. He murmured something. Those near thought afterward that he said:

"Is it worth it? Who knows?"

But he was surely president now. Seldom have power and place been more hardily won.

His quiet glance sought Philip.

"Thank you, Mr. Hozier," he said. "All Brazil is your debtor, now, for eyes met De Sylva's in a strange look of recognition. He tried to speak, but choked and died."

"Who is that with Miss Yorke?" he said to Dom Corria.

The president had a rare knack of answering a straight question in a straight way.

"A Mr. Bulmer, I am told," he said.

"He pulled De Sylva aside. A bullet struck Coke in the breast. The valiant little shipper staggered and sank to the floor. His fiery eyes gazed up into Verity's. "Damme if I ain't hulled!" he roared, his voice loud and harsh, as if he were giving some command from the bridge in a gale of wind. David dropped to his knees. "For Gawd's sake, Jimmie!" he moaned. "Yes, I've got it. Sarve me dam well right too! No business to go ag'in me own pore old ship. Look 'ere, Verity, I'm done for! If you get away from this rotten muss see to my missus an' the girls. Record In Concrete Bridge-Building

THE double tracking of the North Toronto Sub-division of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Leaside and North Toronto is now nearing completion, and involves the replacement of bridges (known as 0.3 and 1.3) which heretofore had been trestles constructed of steel. Owing to the high price of steel and the difficulty of procuring it since the war began it was found that reinforced concrete competed successfully against steel.

The bridges were therefore constructed of this material and are a triumph of railway construction work. No. 0.3 being 156 feet long and 90 feet high carrying two tracks, and No. 1.3 of similar dimensions, but a three track structure. The length of the 156-foot spans and the details of their construction are unprecedented in the engineering world. Previous to this no reinforced concrete beam with a length of more than about 25 feet had been attempted; the spans of these two C. P. R. structures are each from 35 to 37 feet long. These spans have been made possible by the employment of unit construction by which each span was designed as two T beams which, after being manufactured and securely wired together. When all was in readiness the concrete was poured by means of long spouts which led in several directions from the main mixing tower. The pouring of the concrete was maintained as continuously as possible until a whole tower was completed. This work was done during the winter at a time when the temperature was below freezing point; it was performed inside of what was virtually a building erected to maintain a suitable temperature around the newly deposited concrete until it was out of danger of being damaged by frost.

These two structures are provided with narrow sidewalks and hand rails, which enable tralmen to move conveniently along side-standing trains. The hand rails add considerably to the aesthetic appearance of the structures, which are extremely artistic in appearance and at the same time satisfactory from a general and utilitarian point of view, besides being absolutely permanent. Both are designed to carry the heaviest engines in existence with a considerable margin of safety, and are epoch-making in the art of bridge engineering inasmuch as they have demonstrated that reinforced concrete can take the place of steel for a very large number of permanent bridges. These two structures are so solid that when passing over them on a train one gets the impression that he is on a solid fill instead of a bridge. The method employed in the erection of the reinforced concrete spans is a specially interesting feature of the structures. Each slab, as a unit, weighed 55 tons, which was the limit load that could be handled by the C. P. R. 100 ton standard wrecking cranes. The crane engaged handled no less than 110 slabs, each 55 tons in weight, or in all something like 6,000 tons, and all this was done without a single mishap to either men or material. Another remarkable feature is that both structures were built without interruption from June, 1917, to July, 1918, which was a shorter period than would have been required to manufacture and erect similar structures in steel. Passenger and freight traffic on the C. P. R. main lines was continued without interruption during the progress of these operations.
