House of Commons Debates

FIRST SESSION—TENTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 15, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

VACANCY IN NORTH OXFORD.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I beg leave to notify you and this honourable House that, through the death of Hon. James Sutherland, there is now a vacancy in the constituency of North Oxford, and to desire you to take notice of it in the usual way.

THE PORTFOLIO OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to inquire of the government whether or not there is any truth in the rumour, which has appeared in the public press, that the member for London (Mr. Hyman), the acting Minister of Public Works, has been sworn into office as a member of the administration ; and also, if that has not taken place, if the government will be good enough to say whether it is contemplated that that shall take place at an early day ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). The rumour referred to as to the acting Minister of Public Works having been sworn in as minister is not correct. With reference to the second part of my hon. friend's question, perhaps he will be good enough to repeat it to-morrow, when the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will be in his place.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like also to call the attention of the government to certain papers which were to be brought down, but which, I think, have not been laid on the table. I refer to the papers relating to the contract for a wire fence along the international boundary between the Northwest Territories and the United States. In that connection, I thought possibly the government would bring down some explanation from the secretary of the department, which, I think, has not yet been laid before the House. The explanation which was read before the House on a previous occasion was not, as I understand it, from the gentleman who wrote the letter to the company which made some complaints because they were not afforded an opportunity to tender.

There was also a promise by the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) to bring down the papers in connection with a contract and a proposed contract for bitulithic pavement—the contract being for a pavement in front of the parliament buildings and the proposed contract for a pavement on Wellington street.

In one of these cases there was a promise by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that the original papers should be brought down—I think that was in response to a request of my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), and related, if I remember well, to the proposed contract with respect to the wire fence.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. When this subject of the wire fence was referred to in the House on Thursday last, the Prime Minister stated that he would have the papers laid upon the table at the earliest possible moment. I have no doubt that orders were given for their preparation, and there will be no delay in carrying out the promise made. My hon. friend will permit me to say that, as I understand it, there was no contract, although he spoke of a contract——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, no.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. There was a draft sent over to the Justice Department of what might have become a contract. That is what he refers to, I suppose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I refer to all the papers in relation to that particular matter.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I understood the hon. gentleman to speak of a contract, and I wished to make the distinction, for fear that otherwise it might be assumed that I had assented to that view. I do not understand that there was a contract. As to the bitulithic pavement, my hon. friend the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) will answer.

Hon. CHARLES S. HYMAN (Acting Minister of Public Works). I shall be glad to lay the papers on the table or hand them to the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) tomorrow.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. J. BARR. I would call the attention of the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) to a question previously asked with regard to the franking privilege of members.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The matter has been arranged in accordance with what I understood to be the wish of this House. I do not want the House to think that I am dominating their view. I understood the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) to suggest that, instead of adhering to the decision of the House of some time ago, that the actual signature or the initials of a member should be required, we might still allow a stamp to be used on condition that the member whose stamp is being used should deliver the mail matter to the postmaster himself. The Deputy Postmaster General informs me that that can be arranged, and he is sending a letter on the subject to the postmaster here.

Mr. BARR. That is satisfactory.

PORT ARTHUR AND FORT WILLIAM DREDGING CONTRACT.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT. Can the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) inform me if the contract has been let for dredging at Port Arthur and Fort William ? The time for tendering, I think, expired on the 1st instant. If the contract has been let, would the acting minister say who are the successful tenderers ?

Mr. HYMAN. The contract has not been signed, but the Order in Council to let the contract has been passed. The successful tenderer is A. F. Bowman. I do not recollect the particulars. Some ten or twelve tenderers were included in the schedule submitted to Council.

Mr. BENNETT. Is A. F. Bowman the Great Lakes Dredging Company ?

Mr. HYMAN. The Great Lakes Dredging Company—I speak from recollection—were also tenderers, but the lowest tenderer was A. F. Bowman.

PRIVATE BILLS.

OTTAWA AND NEW YORK RAILWAY COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 92) respecting the Ottawa and New York Railway Company.

Mr. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). In the printed Bill there is only one clause. But I understand that another clause has been added, which is not open to objection.

Mr. HYMAN. If I may be permitted, I will read the second clause, which was added in committee :

> The directors may annually appoint from among themselves an executive committee composed of at least three directors, for such purposes and with such powers as the directors by by-law determine ; and the president shall be ex-officio member of said committee.

Mr. DANIEL. What is to become of section 1 ?

Mr. HYMAN. I shall move that section 1 be struck out. It was understood when this Bill was under discussion the other night that there would be a motion to strike out section 1 as reported by the Railway Committee, and that there could be little if any objection to section 2 as now contained in that amended Bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER We are on the preamble now.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would ask the government to define their policy in the matter of the creation of executives and in the management of large companies. There are some very large interests in this country controlled by boards of directors, and we have in some instances allowed these directors to appoint executive committees of three to administer the affairs of the company. Now if that is to be an accepted principle the public ought to know it. I take objection to it for instance in the case of insurance companies that have large trusts to handle. I object that an executive should be appointed to take control, say, of the funds of an insurance company. It is well worth the attention of the government, and a declaration as to whether they intend to allow great corporations to be managed, to all intents and purposes, by a small executive of three. I believe it is the case in the matter of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was refused in the case of the Canada Life Insurance Company. I would like to know the underlying rule of the government in these matters.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not view this question raised by my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean) as one of public policy. It is not a question of policy. Each case must be determined upon the merits surrounding it. There may have been some good reason for withholding the privilege from the Canada Life Insurance Company ; I presume that the committee of that day considered that there were strong reasons why the privilege should not be accorded. They have granted it in several instances. It is not a question of governmental policy. I presume that in the case of the Canada Life Insurance Company it was the judgment of the committee that the privilege should be refused.

Preamble agreed to.

Mr. EMMERSON moved to strike out section 1 of the amended Bill.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. EMMERSON moved to substitute the following therefor :

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Can it be the case under this legislation that not one of the members of this executive shall be British subjects, that the executive may be composed absolutely of aliens?

Mr. HYMAN. I presume so, under the wording of that section. But they must be elected by those they represent, a majority of whom must be British subjects. A majority of the directors must be British subjects, and it is they who elect the executive and have control.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. But this is another way of having an American directorate over a Canadian railway company. That is the thing we have been trying to avoid, and now we have got it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it a condition that the executive must be members of the directorate?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. The same principle has been followed in the matter of some other Bills that were before parliament, notably, that of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and there was no exception raised at that time. The object of this is to have a committee right on the spot here in Canada, and necessarily they would require to be British subjects residing here.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Now will not the same thing happen in regard to the other Vanderbilt interests in Canada? Take the Canada Southern and roads like that—they will be administered and managed in the same way. The object of the Railway Commission is to have men in Canada responsible to the Canadian people and to the Canadian Railway Commission, and who can be brought before it. Now there will be an executive that you cannot reach, men residing in New York; they may be the board and elected by residents here. The other day the Minister of Railways said the object he had in view was to have somebody in Canada who could be called before the Railway Commission, or before the government's Railway Committee, to make explanations, and who could be held responsible. That was declared to be the policy of the government. Now this executive can be in New York, or can be outside of this country ; and in a few days it will happen that the Vanderbilt interest will ask for the same legislation for all their railroads, and once they get in the thin edge of the wedge, they will start buying railroads all over this country and administer them by a small executive in 42nd street station, in New York. If that is the object of the government, they ought to say so.

Mr. EMMERSON. It does seem to me that my hon. friend is straining at a gnat in this matter. In all our corporations we have what we call managing directors, they control the routine, and they practically control the entire business of these corporations.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Who do ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The managing directors, under the responsibility that rests with the directorate who appoint that managing directorate. Now here you have under your legislation required that every railway corporation shall have a board, a majority of whom shall be British subjects. Now that majority can control the board, they can control the selection of the executive provided by this section. Therefore, it seems to me that no difficulty can arise. The mere management, the mere directors, the mere train service surely are not of very material moment in this Bill. They are of moment to the company who are interested in serving the needs of the people, and in accommodating its patrons. But the real responsibility for the corporation rests with the board, a majority of whom are British subjects, and this executive must be responsible to that board ; they must be guided by it, and directed by it on every point. Surely there are no Canadian interests that will suffer by reason of this fact, nor would it be good policy to invite capital to come into Canada and to tie it up at every point. I think it is carrying the principle of restriction quite too far indeed for us to refuse to give a Board of Directors, a majority of whom are British subjects, the right to select any one, two or three of their number to manage the everyday affairs of the company.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are not the managing directors of the Grand Trunk Railway all Americans to-day and have they not been for some years ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not personally familiar with the facts but if what my hon. friend says is so I can see no wrong in it.

Mr. SPROULE. But you have given no information whether it is fact or not. It would be well for the government through the Minister of Railways to give to the House some information as to the usual custom on the American side with regard to this question. Even with a majority of the directors British subjects a case might arise where the Railway Commission would require some one of the three composing this executive to appear before them and if they were foreigners what powers would the Railway Commission have to compel their attendance ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Railway Commission have ample power to deal with the railway in Canada even if the board live in Omaha. I do not think it is at all material that the members of the board should reside in Canada. We have corporations the members of whose boards almost wholly reside across the Atlantic, but that does not affect the corporation which has its entity in Canada and is controlled by the laws of Canada and by the Railway Commission. The Railway Commission has power over the entity of the railway in Canada regardless of the residence of the directors ; it can stop the railroad trains, abolish a tariff and impose penalties. I might almost say in numberless ways, the Railway Commission have full power to require any railway corporations to fulfil the will of parliament and the requirements of the laws of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. We had a case only the other day in the Telephone Committee which bears upon the subject. The committee, if we may accept what appears in the papers as correct, invited the manager of the Grand Trunk Railway to come before them. He said that he could not come and that they had better get the vice-president, who made a similar reply and said they should get Mr. McGuigan, but Mr. McGuigan said he could not come. Suppose the president, the vice-president and the managing director were all in the United States, the question which suggests itself to me is what power would the Railway Commission have to insist on one of those members coming before that committee.

Mr. MONK. At that rate where will we stop ? You would have to oblige the railway company to have all their employees Canadians as the commission might require the presence of an employee other than a director. Not only would require them to be British subjects but all resident within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. It is perfectly absurd.

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all.

Mr. MONK. At the present moment what jurisdiction has the Railway Commission over directors residing for instance in England ? No jurisdiction at all: And to render nugatory all the processes and endeavours of the Railway Commission the directors even if they were all British subjects would simply have to cross the line and go into a foreign country to escape the jurisdiction of the commission and render the acts of the commission absolutely impotent. The whole disposition of The Railway Act seems to me to be going very far under the policy which we ought to adopt of encouraging foreign capital. I do not think that the fact of the majority of the directors being British subjects is any assistance at all to the government or to the Railway Commission in carrying out the principles of the Railway Act. Anyway in this case it is only an executive committee, and I believe that without this disposition of the law the directors of this company could name an executive committee, but even if they could not why should we not give them power ? The executive committee is named by a majority of British subjects and I think it is carrying the idea of loyalty a little far to adopt such a restriction as is now proposed.

Mr. SPROULE. I want it understood that I am not objecting ; I only desire to get the information to which I think the House is entitled, so it can understand what power the Railway Commission has and whether there is any necessity for that executive committee or not, and whether the appointment of that executive would in any way retard the Railway Commission. I think the government should be able to give that information.

Mr. EMMERSON. That question is purely a question of law as to what power the Railway Commission has, I am not the keeper of the law conscience that has been referred to in this House.

Mr. SPROULE. You ought to know the railway law.

Mr. EMMERSON. I know just exactly how far, in my judgment, the powers of the Railway Commission go, and I know that in the exercise of these powers it is not necessary to have directors either British subjects or residents of Canada. Some hon. gentleman may dispute that statement but it is a statement of fact based upon an interpretation of the powers of the commission, which of course is a legal question. It seems to me that the powers of the Railway Commission can be carried out without the directors being British subjects or without their residing in Canada.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The Minister of Railways does not apprehend what he is doing. He is making it clear that any great foreign railway interest can, if it desires, acquire all the railways in Canada and put their administration in the hands of an executive sitting in New York. That is the object of the Vanderbilt interests at this moment ; they want to get a small admission made in connection with this small railway, so that they can put the principle into effect in regard to all the railways in this country. They will not allow the administration of their railways in the United States to be placed in the hands of a small executive sitting in London, Ottawa, or Montreal ; they keep that authority in their own country and we should treat them as they treat us. This is a vicious principle that is being introduced by this legislation. The international complications that arise in the world to-day largely arise out of the administration of foreign capital in a country by a board of directors outside of that country, and there is nothing President Roosevelt takes so much interest in as backing up boards of directors living in his own country and exploiting some foreign country with their capital. He says he is the big policeman of this continent to compel all the governments in North America to carry out their commercial obligations and to respect the rights of United States corporations having interests in these countries. If you pass this legislation you are forming the ground work of international complications; you are opening the door for the administration of Canadian railways by a small executive committee sitting in New York and you are giving that power to the great Vanderbilt interests who will extend it and extend it until they take over all our railways. It is not good national policy, and it is not in line with the statement made by the Minister of Railways in this House last week. I am where I was last week, but he has changed his view. He now tells us that Canada has no national policy in maintaining in her own hands the control of the railways in this country. True, the Canadian Pacific Railway has an executive of three, but that executive is in the city of Montreal, and the proposition now before us is that this Ottawa-New York line shall be administered by an executive of three sitting in the city of New York.

Mr. EMMERSON. Selected by a board, the majority of whom are British subjects.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And the majority of whom are elected by one man in New York.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I agree with the member for East York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) as to affirming the principle of Canada for the Canadians, but it does seem to me that the strongest blow you can strike at this principle is to try to apply it in defiance of common sense. I suppose there is nothing more generally admitted in this country than that what every part of Canada wants is as much foreign capital as we can possibly induce to come here, and it is just a question whether or not we in this House are doing anything to assist the investment of foreign capital if we throw as many obstacles as possible in the way of foreigners investing their money in Canada. I feel very strongly that anything we may do to make it more objectionable from the standpoint of an outsider to invest his money in Canada, is doing just so much to retard the progress of this country. There is another consideration that strikes me. Looking at the matter practically, while I am very glad to see the majority of the board, Canadians, and while I would be very glad to see this committee of three, Canadians, I do not feel that practically it makes one iota of difference whether you have them Canadians or not. If the Americans are bound to purchase this railway, and if we pass a law that all the directors or a committee of three must of necessity be Canadians, we will have dummy Canadians, men who are merely placed there to do what they are ordered to do by those who own the road, and in such a case it seems to me the latter end of that railroad would be worse than the first. When my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) inquires as to whether or not the Railway Commission would have still more authority over this railroad in case the committee of three were all Canadians, it seems to me the Railway Commission has this advantage; that in case this railroad comes before the commission the railway is in the position of a litigant in court. If the litigant lives on the other side of the line and he has a case in a Canadian court I do not think his opponent need be worried as to whether or not he will call his witnesses, for the Railway Commission will have perfect power to proceed whether any witnesses are called on behalf of the railway company or not. I think we can give credit to these Americans for sufficient common sense to rest assured that if a question arises before the Railway Commission they will protect their own interests by calling all the witnesses they think necessary, and if they do not so much the worse for themselves and so much the better for the people of this country, because then judgment would be given in favour of those who are attacking the railway.

Mr. LENNOX. I am very sorry that I may be open to the insinuation that I am not capable of exercising ordinary common sense.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. We get that insinuation often now.

Mr. LENNOX. Even in view of the possibility of being open to that imputation I will venture to do my own thinking. I ventured to express my view on this matter briefly the other day, and it is of such importance that I feel justified in restating that view. I had not the pleasure of hearing the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) to-day, but I infer from something which has been said since I came into the Chamber that he had put the matter in a somewhat different light.

Mr. HAGGART. He has not spoken to-day.

Mr. LENNOX. Then probably he has done so by his silence. This is not a question as to what we shall do generally, but, it is a question as to what we shall do in a case where we have invested the money of the people of Canada, and in such a case I am perfectly sure that we have the right to have a say in the question of whether the directors shall be British subjects or foreigners.

Mr. PRINGLE. Does the hon. gentleman understand that clause has been struck out of the Bill ? It reads now that a majority of the directors shall be British subjects, and it simply gives these directors the power to operate this small line of railway by three delegates who must be three directors. I have accepted that amendment.

Mr. LENNOX. I was not aware until this moment that a change had been made, but the position I take is that we do not want special legislation for individual companies ; what we want is the same legislation for all companies and this company like all other companies should be made to conform with the general law we enacted a year ago. I have not had an opportunity of examining the proposed amendment to this Bill, but I assume it does not conform with the general railway law, and if it does not it ought not be allowed to pass. We have invested a very large amount of money in this railway. I cannot perhaps do better than read a few lines from an article on Canadian railway taxation in the 'Canadian Magazine a year or two ago by Mr. Pettypiece. He says :

> At Cornwall, a bridge across the St. Lawrence, connecting the Ontario and New York sections of the New York and Ottawa Railway, furnishes another example. The New York end of the bridge is assessed at $40,000, and pays taxes on that amount ; the Ontario end is neither assessed nor taxed. On the New York portion of the road the fare is two cents per mile ; on the Ontario portion three cents. The New York end of the bridge received no government aid ; the Ontario end received $125,000 from the Dominion and provincial parliaments.

All that I mean is expressed in the statement which I have already made that what I want to govern this railway is the General Railway Act.

Mr. PRINGLE. I feel that the request of the owners of this railway is a very reasonable one, in view of the fact that the money which built the Ottawa and New York Railway was invested at a time when the law was on an entirely different footing from what it is to-day. However, I have accepted the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and have consented to the elimination of section 1 from the Bill. The reason for asking for this substituted clause is simply this. The original Act incorporating this company requires a board of directors of nine. As I stated the other evening, this is a very short line of railway, extending from the town of Cornwall to the city of Ottawa. It was a line of little or no use to either of the great railway corporations running through the province of Ontario, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is of use only to the New York Central Company, who have acquired the system to the south of the River St. Lawrence, and who have acquired it as a result of its sale by the bondholders. Now, they are about to expend some $400,000, I am instructed, in putting this road in first-class condition. It seems to be the desire of some hon. gentlemen here to get the matter into such shape that it will be absolutely impossible for the New York Central to carry on business in this country. That is not the feeling which I have in regard to capital coming in from the United States of America. We have seen some splendid results from American capital coming into this country. You have only to look at the city of Hamilton to see the enormous works which have been constructed there by American capital ; and it is much the same in other cities throughout our Dominion. So far as I am personally concerned, while protecting the rights of our own people, I would like to see encouragement given to the Americans to come in here and invest their money, which is absolutely subject to and under the control of our laws. Some hon. gentlemen seem to be very much alarmed that if the New Yory Central comes in and runs this fifty-six miles of railway, and expends some $400,000 in improving it, it is going to do a great injury to the Dominion of Canada. All I have to say is that we are pretty well safeguarded by the Railway Act of 1903, from clauses 23 to 25, which give the Railway Commission large powers over every railway corporation doing business in this country. I have accepted this amendment with the greatest reluctance, because I felt that we had made out a very strong case in favour of exemption under the general law. However, as there seemed to be objections to that, we have accepted this amendment, which simply gives this board of directors power to appoint three directors for the purpose of carrying on and managing this road. I think it is important in the interest of this country, that the New York Central should be put in a position to carry on and manage this road by this board of three directors. We do not in any way amend the general law.

Mr. FOSTER. When this Bill was in the Railway Committee, without the amendment which has been moved at the present time, I was opposed to it, because it was cutting out the general law in the special instance. I thought then and I still think that it is a good thing sentimentally, and it may be a good thing practically, to have a majority of the directors of a road which is being operated in Canada, British subjects. That is maintained by the excision of the first clause, and at the same time a modus vivendi is prepared, by which this road can be managed practically by an executive ; but it seems to me that we have kept all the power in the Dominion of Canada. That executive may manage the road from New York, but all the operations of the road are under Canadian law and are subject to the Canadian commission ; and if the officers who reside in New York do not bring their evidence and make their case good, that does not deter the commission or the laws of this country from having their full effect. Foreign capital is a thing we require in this country. The more we get the better, and we can scarcely consider it foreign capital after it comes here and becomes fixed. It then becomes Canadian capital, and all that the foreign holders will get will be the profits over and above the working expenses. I am quite willing that the Bill, with the amendment now proposed and the first clause taken out, should pass and become law.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say a word in answer to the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle). He says that it seems to be the desire of those taking part in this discussion to retard or prevent these people bringing capital into Canada. I think that statement is quite gratuitous. So far as I know, that is not our desire or intention ; but while we are willing that capital should come in with the greatest possible freedom, we merely wish to know what safeguards are taken so that these railways may be controlled in the interests of Canadians. I asked for that information from the Minister of Railways, who speaks for the government and ought to be able to give it, but with no desire to prevent these people from spending their money in Canada. That is not the intention, at least it is not mine, and I have never spoken with that object in view.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CITIZENS' BANK OF CANADA.

House in committee on Bill (No. 133) respecting the Citizens' Bank of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Finance Minister any objection to this extension ?

Mr. FIELDING. That was considered in the committee ; and as we have granted a similar privilege to one or two others, we agreed to grant it in this case. We desire however, to discourage the policy of extending charters, and our hope is that hereafter we may apply the rule more rigidly.

Mr. TISDALE. Is this the first extension ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think there was a previous extension.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PROVIDENCE SAVINGS ASSOCIATION (LIMITED).

House in committee on Bill (No. 134) to incorporate the Providence Savings Association (Limited).

Section 3—capital stock.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason the capital stock is so very small as $25,000 ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is certainly small capital, and the first impression of the committee was against the charter. On examination it will be found that the Bill has been changed very materially. We objected to the title as calculated to associate the company in some way with a savings bank, and we had the name changed. It is merely an investment company for the doing of ordinary financial business ; and it was represented that if we insisted on a larger capital, we would be shutting out smaller people from doing business which is very legitimate.

Mr. TISDALE. Are they allowed to take deposits ?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 6—the number of directors.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The new subsection has been added to section 6 by the Banking and Commerce Committee ; a director must be a holder of at least ten shares capital stock and have paid up his shares and all the liabilities incurred by him to the company.

Section and subsection agreed to.

On section 7—power of company,

(a) Underwrite, buy, pledge and otherwise deal in, for cash or on the instalment plan, stocks, bonds, debentures or obligations of corporations, whether secured by mortgage or otherwise, and Dominion, provincial, British, foreign or other public securities, with the privileges and rights thereto attached ;

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The words 'for cash or on the instalment plan' were struck out by the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. What powers does this give them with regard to stocks ?

Mr. FIELDING. The right to buy and sell these securities which an individual could exercise for himself without a charter.

Mr. FOSTER. If you give them power to underwrite and buy and sell and pledge, you give them all they sought to have. Otherwise they could deal in stocks on margin.

Mr. HYMAN. There is no doubt they could, under subsection (h).

Mr. FIELDING. Why should they not be allowed to deal in margin, if they wish to ? It may be inadvisable, but it is no crime. Any individual can do it. If it were a trust company or insurance company, it might be different, but I do not see any objection to this company being allowed to deal in margins with their own funds.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not simply that they buy themselves on margin, but they buy for other people.

Mr. FIELDING. Even so, that is an ordinary broker's business, and any individual would have a right to carry it on.

Mr. HENDERSON. The object of the Banking and Commerce Committe in striking out the words 'or on the instalment plan' was to prevent dealing in margins. But I think the committee went too far when they struck out the word 'cash.' Had that been left in, the clause would have had much stronger effect in preventing the corporation from being used as a means of buying and selling on margin—it would limit them to the cash plan. I would favour having the word 'cash,' reinserted, to accomplish the purpose the Banking and Commerce Committee had in view.

Mr. TISDALE. Why should not this company have, to the extent of their capital, the right that any individuals would have? This is simply a combination of capitalists instead of any of them acting separately.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understand that the promoter of the Bill has accepted the amendments as they are.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose that a large estate is left in the hands of this company and they use it to deal on margin ?

Mr. FIELDING. That would be a breach of trust. Any individual might be made trustee of an estate, and if he used it on margin, he would be guilty of a breach of trust. As I understand it, there is nothing here except an ordinary Act of incorporation allowing these people as a company to do what any of them can do individually if he has the money.

Mr. DANIEL. I was under the impression, though I may be wrong, that bucket shops were illegal and that those who frequent them were breaking the law and were liable to being arrested. I know that in my own city such people have been arrested.

Mr. FIELDING. This does not affect the criminal law. Whatever is illegal remains illegal. We give no power to the company that they would not have as individuals.

Mr. FOSTER. There are many things which an individual can do alone which you do not authorize a company to do.

Mr. FIELDING. Not many, I think. The object of incorporation is to enable individuals to unite their capital and so put themselves in a position to do what they would not have the financial strength to do as individuals. Though there may be exceptions I think, that, as a rule, whatever a man has a right to do alone we authorize the formation of a company to do.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that under subsection (h) they will have to borrow money on what they absolutely own.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

ANTHRACITE COAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 136) to incorporate the Anthracite Coal Railway Company.—Mr. Galliher.

Mr. FOSTER. Where does this railway run ?

Mr. GALLIHER. It runs from the town of Lethbridge in a westerly direction south of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway and crossing the Calgary and Edmonton Railway and on to a point called Lineham, and from there jogs down to some coal lands, although I forget the number of the township and range in which these lands are situated. It is entirely through a new portion of country, and I may say that the amendment that was made to the first section is simply because they wish to have five names instead of three.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

POSTMASTER AT KENTVALE.

Mr. BOYCE—asked :

1. Who is the postmaster at Kentvale, Ont. ?
2. Who were his sureties ?
3. When was he appointed ?
4. Who was the former postmaster there ?
5. When did he vacate the office ?
6. Was he discharged ? If so, for what reason ?
7. Has the post office been removed from the site on which it was established ? If so, when, and for what reason ?
8. Where is it now established ?
9. Has any protest been made against such removal ?
10. If so, how was such protest dealt with ?
11. What is the salary attached to the office ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General) :

The former postmaster at Kentvale was F. B. Kent. On the 4th January last, he was directed to be removed from his office because of his having been an active political partisan during the last Dominion election, and also with a view to removing the office to a more convenient site. The present postmaster is John Rousseau, who was directed to be appointed on the 4th of January, 1905. He is insured under the assessment system. Instructions were given to the inspector to transfer the office to the new site, and the department is not aware whether such transfer has actually taken place. A petition against the change in the location was presented, but the decision of the 4th January last has been adhered to. The salary is $25.

FISHERY OVERSEERS IN COLCHESTER.

Mr. LAURENCE—asked :

1. How many fishery overseers are there in office in the electoral district of Colchester ?
2. What are their names, what is their remuneration, and the names of the rivers over which they have care or jurisdiction ?
3. Does the government assume the duty and responsibility of enforcing the laws and regulations respecting the preservation of the inland and coastal fisheries of Canada ?
4. Is the law regarding the pollution of rivers, especially in respect to depositing sawdust and other substances therein, being enforced ? If so, by what officials ?
5. Does the government contemplate any efforts to restore or revive the shad fisheries of the Bay of Fundy ? If so, what scheme for the revival of said fisheries has been decided upon ?
6. Have the federal and provincial governments completed any agreement or understanding in regard to the protection and preservation of the river, lake and coastal fisheries of Canada ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Three.
2. J. W. Davidson, salary $100 per year. E. H. McGregor, salary $100 per year. G. W. Henderson, salary $75 per year. Each of these overseers has jurisdiction over the whole county of Colchester.
3. Yes.
4. Yes ; by the federal fishery officers.
5. Yes ; provision has already been made for the construction of a shad hatchery.
6. The federal government, by constitution, possesses the sole right to legislate for the protection of the sea-coast and inland fisheries. No agreement in this connection is therefore necessary. There is a question pending between the Dominion and the provinces regarding rights of fishery below low-water mark in tidal waters. While this is undecided, by arrangement with the local governments, the federal government is continuing the policy obtaining before the Privy Council decision, with regard to fishery licenses affecting proprietary rights, except in the province of Ontario and a portion of the province of Quebec.

PACKING AND SALE OF STAPLE COMMODITIES.

Bill (No. 155) respecting the administration of an Act respecting the packing and sale of certain staple commodities.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier—was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Section 8 of the Act to be amended says :

> The Governor in Council may assign the administration of this Act to such member of the King's Privy Council for Canada as he sees fit, and may make such regulations as are deemed necessary for the proper working of this Act.

A portion of this Act is in regard to fruit packing. Under the Fruit Marks Act, the Department of Agriculture has a staff of inspectors to deal with fruit marks and we thought it better and more convenient that they should also deal with the administration of the fruit packing. We therefore desire to have the power to transfer to the Department of Agriculture the administration of that part of this Act which deals with fruit packages. The administration of the rest of the Act remains in the Department of Trade and Commerce. As the law now stands only the whole of the Act can be allotted to any one department, but by the amendment a portion of the Act can be so allotted.

Mr. HENDERSON. This amendment will transfer the administration of this particular Act respecting the sale of certain commodities, absolutely from the Department of Trade and Commerce to the Department of Agriculture ?

Mr. FISHER. No ; the present law covers a number of things such as the size and weight of certain measures, standard of weights, the size of packages of salt and registered trade marks, and it also refers to apple packages and the size of fruit packages. The intention of the amendment is to transfer by Order in Council to the Department of Agriculture, the administration in regard to fruit packages, but it does not deal with any of the other matters. This is done for the convenience of utilizing the inspectors under the Fruit Marks Act to administer the law in respect to the size of fruit packages.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am under the disadvantage of not having a copy of the Bill before me, but I understand that the Act or any part of it can be transferred to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FISHER. The present law authorizes the administration of the whole Act being put under any minister, and the amendment allows any portion of the Act to be put in charge of a minister as well as the whole Act.

Mr. HENDERSON. The administration of the law as regards the matters referred to in this Bill is now under the Department of Trade and Commerce, and the amendment will authorize the Governor in Council to transfer the administration of that Act entirely to the Department of Agriculture ?

Mr. FISHER. The present law allows the administration of the whole Act to be transferred to any minister, and as a matter of fact an Order in Council has been passed entrusting its administration to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. There is no desire to put the administration of the whole Act under any other minister, but we think it better to put the fruit inspection under the control of the Minister of Agriculture so that his officers who are doing similar work may be enabled to do this work. It just happens that although the whole administration might be transferred to another minister, a portion of it cannot be, and we want to have the power to transfer a portion without transferring the whole.

Mr. HENDERSON. But the power to transfer a portion gives the power to transfer the whole.

Mr. FISHER. We have that already.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have noticed from time to time the tendency of the Minister of Agriculture to practically take away from the other departments matters which properly belong to them and to overload his own department. We have had an example to-day when the Minister of Agriculture presumed to answer for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Minister of War. That was referred to prominently last session, when the hon. gentleman was acting for the Minister of War. To-day he is answering for the Minister of Militia and Marine. I think the great agricultural interests of this country demand that the Department of Agriculture should not be overloaded with every other conceivable thing, detracting from the time which the minister should devote strictly to the interests of the farming community. We know that large interests pertaining to agriculture have been neglected. Last year that was prominently brought out in regard to transportation, when it was shown that the Minister of Agriculture or some other minister had neglected to see that the people of Canada got as fair rates by shipping from a Canadian port on lines which had been largely subsidized by the parliament of Canada, as were obtainable on the same class of goods shipped through American ports. My own impression is that the Minister of Agriculture is so extremely fond of work that he has practically overloaded his own department by adding various branches to it. Why should the Census Department be added to the Department of Agriculture? It should be taken away and given to another department. We have the Department of the Secretary of State with practically nothing to do, practically a non-existent department, while the Department of Agriculture is overloaded with a great deal more work than any ordinary minister can properly attend to. I think there should be a fairer division of the work of the various departments. The Minister of Agriculture especially should devote his time exclusively to matters pertaining to agriculture, and leave the Minister of Trade and Commerce to deal with matters of commerce, so that we can have a more thorough administration of the agricultural affairs of this country. I think the minister is making a mistake in reaching out at every opportunity to get some further power, to aggrandize himself and make himself exceedingly prominent in the face of the country. If we go on in this way, in the course of a year or two we shall be able to dispense with nearly all the other departments and simply have the Minister of Agriculture, with power to add to his powers by Order in Council, and taking away matters belonging to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who, I am sorry to say is not now privileged to have a seat in this House. I think the work of the departments should be more fairly divided, and more especially that the Minister of Agriculture should be left free to deal with matters belonging strictly to what we understand by a Department of Agriculture, and not have every other department robbed for the sake of aggrandizing that minister.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend, in his care for me and my interests, has I think, made a little mistake ; because he will notice that this Bill came from the Senate, where it was proposed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. So that, instead of my grasping for things, it was the Minister of Trade and Commerce who desired to put this into my charge—not with any desire of relieving himself, but simply as a practical matter of administration, because I had officers who had to look after the fruit, and who could quite easily, with out adding to the expense of the government of the country, look after the packages as well. That is the only reason for it. I can assure my hon. friend that I am not desirous of adding to my prestige or responsibility. I have quite enough without anything more, and I would be glad to divest myself of part of the work of my department if I could induce some of my colleagues to take it. Perhaps that good day will come, when I shall be relieved and my hon. friend's mind will be set at rest.

Mr. LENNOX. The text of my hon. friend from Halton may be wrong, but the sermon is all right. In this particular instance, the Minister of Agriculture may be right ; but I have had occasion to speak of this matter before, and if a remedy is not brought about, I shall have occasion to speak of it again.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. LENNOX. And the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who are uneasy, if they consult the agricultural interests of this country, will have occasion to think of it as well. A year or so ago we were discussing our exhibits in Great Britain, when the question of the Imperial Institute came up. The Minister of Agriculture was good enough to give us a description of the Imperial Institute, or that branch to which our exhibit, was assigned, and he said that it was an ' omnibus department, into which was put everything that there was no other place for, similar to the Department of Agriculture in this country '—in other words, a general dumping ground where everything that was not wanted anywhere else was put. We have not only the speech of the hon. member for Halton to-day, but evidence all along the line to show that there are too many matters undertaken by the Minister of Agriculture, at the expense, I venture to say, of the best interests of Canada. The minister on the occasion I refer to spoke of the fact that he had charge of the census and some other things that might very well go to some other department not so loaded with work as his. The minister to some extent misapprehends, I think, the meaning of the hon. member for Halton when he speaks of his solicitude for the Minister of Agriculture. I think it is not so much that as it is solicitude for the best interests of the farmers of Canada. I have ventured on previous occasions, and I will again venture, to call the attention of this House to the fact that the interests of agriculture in this country, are large enough, great enough, important enough, to have a minister whose attention shall be undistracted, and solely and exclusively devoted to agriculture. The interests of the farming community require it, the magnitude of our farming operations justifies it, and from time to time I shall take occasion to press upon the minister, my good friend the minister—and, as I have said before, there is a very strong bond of union between us, because of the similarity of our pursuits—the importance of applying all his energies, all his talent and all his industry to the interests of the farmers of Canada.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST.

House in committee on Bill (No. 69) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Alberta.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. To repeat what I said a few days ago, there is not a single province in this Dominion to-day, as their Lordships of the Privy Council held in the second Manitoba case, which can exclusively make laws in relation to education. That subject is separately dealt with, and has its own code in section 93 of the British North America Act, by which section the power to make laws in relation to education is expressly limited.

1. The right to denominational schools which any class of persons has by law in each province at the union must be preserved ;

2. The powers, privileges and duties conferred in Upper Canada upon separate schools and school trustees of the Roman Catholics are extended to the dissentient schools of Protestants and Roman Catholics in Quebec ;

3. Where in any province a system of separate or dissentient schools exist by law at the union, or is thereafter established, an appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authorities affecting any right or privilege of the minority.

Manitoba has a special code, contained in section 22 of the Manitoba Act. This section 22, which, as Sir John Macdonald, who drafted the Bill and introduced it into this parliament, declared, was intended to establish a separate school system in Manitoba and to make section 93 applicable as far as possible to that province, failed to accomplish the object this parliament then had in view, as was subsequently determined by the judgment of the Privy Council in the case above cited.

The Territorial draft Bill, called 'Haultain's Bill,' which contains the provisions of the constitution which the inhabitants of the Northwest Territories asked this parliament to grant them, by section 2 makes applicable to the new province all the provisions of the British North America Act applicable to all the provinces originally embraced in the union, except where inconsistent with the expressed provisions of that Bill.

There being in that Bill no provisions relating to education, the provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act would have become applicable to the new province.

The effect, therefore, of that Bill would have been to preserve 'any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools (not merely separate) which any class of persons had by law in the province at the union.' If the words 'in the province at the union' mean the time at which the Territory came into the union as a province, the word 'law' would include the provisions of section 11 of the Northwest Territories Act of 1875 and ordinances 29 and 30 of 1901.

The effect of section 16 of the Autonomy Bill would be no greater than the effect of the introduction of section 93 of the British North America Act by section 2 of the Territorial Bill, and clause 16 was only deemed necessary to remove doubt which had been expressed as to the meaning of the words 'province' and 'at the union,' and to secure to the schools, whether public or separate, of the minority, the government aid which in practise they have always received, and which is necessary to place those schools 'in a position to play their necessary part in the scheme of national education.'

Section 16, as originally drafted, was intended to confirm the minority in the rights they now enjoy and makes :

First. Section 93 of the British North America Act applicable to the new province as if it were a regularly organized province coming into the union at the date of the passing of this Act ;

Second. Re-enacts section 11 of the Northwest Territories Act of 1875 ;

Third. Makes provision for the continuation to the schools of the minority of the grant now made in aid of education by or through the territorial government.

The effect of the section which it is proposed to substitute for the original section 16 is to limit the rights and privileges of the minority to those secured to them by chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances, to the exclusion of the rights and privileges guaranteed either by section 11 of the Northwest Territories Act, 1875, or any other legislation in force in the Territories with regard to any class of schools.

The differences in the rights and privileges under section 11 of the Northwest Territories Act, 1875, and those under the ordinances, chapters 29 and 30, are as follows :

1. Section 11, Act 1875, empowering the 'majority of the ratepayers of any . . . portion of the Northwest Territories . . . to establish such schools therein as they may think fit,' and the minority of the ratepayers in any . . . portion of the Territories to establish 'Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools.'

The meaning of this section was expressed in the earlier school ordinances.

Under the present ordinances, chapters 29 and 30, the public schools are the schools of all the ratepayers ; so that under the present ordinances only three classes of schools are authorized, viz.:—

(a) Public (undenominational) schools ;

(b) Protestant separate ;
(c) Roman Catholic separate ;
And a separate school district can be established only in an existing public school district.

2. Under the ordinances no rights or privileges exist with respect to separate schools as contrasted with public schools, except the initial right of effecting the separation, which right carries with it resulting advantages hereinafter set out in detail.

Under the regulations there is one difference only :

'Authorized text-books, standards i—iv, approved, August, 1903 ; the Dominion (Catholic) Readers, first (part 1, part 2) and second. These are optional for Roman Catholic separate schools.'

The rights and privileges which result from the right of effecting the separation, and which the proposed substituted clause 16 preserves to the minority, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, in a public school district, appear to be these :—

(1) Right of separation—by the ordinance —common to Protestants and Roman Catholics alike ;

(2) Half-hour religious instruction—by ordinance—to Protestants and Roman Catholics alike ; common to public and separate schools ;

(3) First and second Catholic readers—by regulation ;

(4) Right to elect trustees, who choose the teacher—by ordinance ; common to all schools.

I thought proper to carefully draft what I intended to say on the subject and read my opinion, so that there might be no doubt or uncertainty as to the position I take.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the hon. minister has adopted a very proper course in carefully preparing and reading, as a judgment, so to speak, his opinion as the law officer of the Crown on a question which has been discussed a good deal in this House. I do not know whether it is the intention of the hon. minister to go on this afternoon with clause 16, and move the amendment——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I thought, that, in the absence of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) we might allow clause 16, the amendment to which is to be moved by the Prime Minister, to remain over so that my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) might have an opportunity to consider the matter. We might take up one of the other clauses of the Bill now.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Clause 16 stands.

On clause 15.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will ask to have that kept over. Part of it has reference to joint stock companies. I am drafting a clause in view of the objection made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). We might take that up to-morrow and in the meantime go on with clause 20.

On clause 20 :

The Dominion lands in the said province shall continue to be vested in the Crown and administered by the government of Canada for the purposes of Canada, subject to the provisions of the Northwest Territories Act, as amended, with respect to road allowances and roads or trails as in force on the thirtieth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and five, which shall apply to the said province with the substitution therein of the said province for the Northwest Territories.

2. The Rocky Mountains Park shall continue to be subject to the provisions of the Acts of the parliament of Canada applying thereto and to regulations made or to be made thereunder; provided that the provincial laws shall apply to and be operative within the said park so far as they are not inconsistent with such Acts and regulations.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If I am not out of order, I would ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) if it is possible to have a reprint of these Bills with the amendments as proposed by the government so arranged that we could readily turn to them and deal with them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The practice is when the Bill is in committee, to prepare the amendments and have them read here so that they may go on 'Hansard' that hon. members may have an opportunity of reading them ; and then have the Bill reprinted before the third reading. If it would suit the convenience of the committee, I should be glad to have a reprint made. I think, however, there are only three clauses left over. And it might take a little time, as just now work cannot be rapidly pushed through the Printing Bureau. I will be glad to give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) personally typewritten copies should he desire them.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What is the object of the change ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The addition of the subsection is to provide that the control of the Rocky Mountain Park shall remain in the federal government as it has been heretofore. That is the only thing. Of course, the intention of the section generally is to retain in the Dominion government the public lands of the territory.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The provisions with respect to lands in the draft Bill submitted by Mr. Haultain are contained in sections 18, 19, 20 and 21, which are as follows :

18. All lands belonging to the Crown situate in the province of other than lands reserved by statute or Order in Council, for the use of Indians or for and earned by any person or corporation, and lands entered for homestead or pre-emption, but not granted, and all sums due and payable on the first day of January, 1903, for such lands shall belong to the province.

19. All mines, minerals, timber and royalties belonging to the Crown situate, being or arising in the province of , and all sums due and payable on the first day of January, 1903, for such mines, minerals, timber or royalties shall belong to the province.

20. The province shall receive and retain all the public property of the Northwest Territories not otherwise disposed of in this Act.

21. All buildings in the Northwest Territories belonging to Canada used or intended for court houses, jails, and land titles offices and for residence and offices of the Lieutenant Governor and government of the Northwest Territories, together with all appurtenances connected therewith, and all moneys, the proceeds from the sale or leasing of school lands in the Northwest Territories, and all moneys forming the assurance fund under provisions of the Territories Real Property Act, and the Lands Titles Act, 1894, shall be the property of the province of .

These are all the provisions, at least all that I have noticed, relating to the disposal of lands which are contained in the draft Bill submitted by the government of the Northwest Territories some two or three years ago. I assume that my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has had these provisions under consideration—possibly not so much under consideration as would have been the case if the government had adopted a different policy from that embodied in their Bill. But he has probably had them under consideration sufficiently to answer a question which I now wish to ask. That question is: Whether, assuming that the policy of the government had been the reverse of that which has been announced, that is, assuming that they had thought proper to hand over to the control and administration of the new provinces these public lands which are not at present used for the public service of Canada, would the provisions of these four sections which I have read, in the opinion of the government, be reasonable provisions? In other words do these sections provide for reservation to the government of Canada of such land, public buildings, &c., as might properly be reserved to the government of Canada if a policy the reverse of that which has been announced had been entered upon by the government in connection with the establishment of the new provinces?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have not considered the sections from that standpoint. As we have decided to retain the control of the lands, it seemed unnecessary to consider the matter. Such sections as my hon. friend refers to would have been necessary had it been intended to divest ourselves of that title. I had not looked at it from the other standpoint whether or not we would have left to us that share or part of the public domain which, taking into account the distribution made at the time of confederation, would have accrued to the Crown under the British North America Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I may inform the Minister of Justice that it is probable an amendment will be moved to this clause, and in moving that amendment I desire to give such information as will make it a reasonable amendment, and one which will fully protect public rights.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will be prepared to answer that question to-morrow afternoon. But I would like to consult the officials of the department, who are more familiar with these details than I am.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will be much obliged to the minister. I think it would facilitate our work, perhaps.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We might perhaps discuss the general principle.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. While we have had, of course, a great deal of discussion of a general character on the question, sometimes we can endeavour to test each other's conclusions a little better by short discussions in committee. As I understand the policy of the government on this question, it is largely based upon the necessity of the retention of these lands for the purpose of immigration. I realize that there have been other reasons put forward by individual members on the other side of the House; but so far as the policy of the government is concerned, my understanding is that if it were not for the supposed danger to the policy of immigration upon which the country has entered, we might have expected that the lands would be handed over to the Northwest provinces for the purpose of administration and control. It is true that one hon. gentleman opposite, speaking when he was not a member of the administration, I refer to the Minister of the Interior, took the view that from the standpoint of the finances of the new province it would be better for the government of Canada to retain these lands, to administer and control them at the expense of Canada, and to make the provision for carrying on the government of the Northwest provinces which have been made in the Bill we are now discussing. The Prime Minister, however, in introducing the measure and in speaking to it subsequently, has not, I think, put forward any such contention as that. He has based his argument solely upon the ground to which I have already alluded, except that he drew an argument from the example in this respect of the government of the United States which has retained control of the administration of the public lands in that country. So far as immigration is concerned, I am bound to say, with all due deference to the views of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, that I have not yet heard any argument or any statement of facts which leads me to believe that the new provinces would not as thoroughly conserve the interest of the country as a whole in respect to immigration into the Northwest, as the government of this Dominion might be expected to do. Let us consider for a moment what has been the trend and object of the immigration policy of the present administration during the last four or five years. It is a complaint in some of the eastern provinces, as I personally know, that the money which has been expended on immigration by the government of Canada during the past four or five years has been expended practically altogether in the interest of the Northwest Territories and for the purpose of attracting immigration to those portions of the country. I am not for the moment concerned with discussing the question as to whether that complaint is well founded. As a matter of fact we know that the efforts of the government, if they had any result at all, have resulted in attracting immigration to the Northwest Territories rather than to other portions of the country. I am inclined to think that the immigration to the Northwest Territories has been the result, not so much of any efforts on the part of the government or of its officials, as of the advertisements which the Northwest Territories have received by reason of the splendid crops which have been raised in that country, and by reason of the enormous amounts of wheat it has sent forth to the markets of the world. But if the immigration which has come to Canada during the past four or five years has come chiefly to the Northwest Territories, if an expenditure of $600,000 or $700,000 is to be made annually for the purpose of keeping up or possibly of increasing that immigration, is it to be considered that the people of the Northwest are likely to embark upon any policy which would have the result of deterring immigrants from coming into that country? We are told, I think by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, certainly by other gentlemen, that an immigrant going into the Northwest is not of value so much to the Northwsst as he is to the people of Canada as a whole. I would not be inclined to look at the matter from that standpoint. I would think that when you send into the new province of Alberta for example 100,000 or 150,000 immigrants each year, the settlement and development of the country thus created must be a very potent factor in increasing the value of the possessions of the people of the Northwest who are already settled there. There cannot, it seems to me, be any doubt about that. It is quite true that that immigration may be a source of increased expenditure to the government of the new provinces, and for that reason some provision must be made for such increased expenditure. But to say that an immigration of 100,000 or 150,000 annually is not of benefit to the people of the Northwest Territories, seems to me to arrive in short at this conclusion, that it is not the interest of the people of the Northwest that there should be any more immigration into that country. That is the logical result of it, and that is a conclusion, I am sure, that no one of us would concur in. Then if I have made my premise good that the people of the Northwest of Canada are interested not only equally with the rest of Canada, but to a far greater extent than the rest of Canada, in attracting immigration to that country, in having it opened up and settled, then surely we might reasonably arrive at the conclusion that the people of the Northwest, through their representatives in their legislature, would not embark upon any policy or undertake any action which would be inconsistent with the best interests of the country viewed from the standpoint to which I have just alluded. Therefore it seems to me that so far as that particular aspect of the case is concerned, the government have not founded their policy upon good and substantial grounds in declaring that these lands shall continue to be administered and controlled by the Dominion as a whole.

And in that connection I might point out to the gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches the words of the Minister of the Interior, words it is true, uttered not exactly in this connection, but equally apt and equally appropriate to this occasion. That hon. gentleman said that in his opinion the government of Canada should lose no time in ridding itself of the control and administration of distant territory—and for very good reason. Does any one for a moment contend that the people of the Northwest Territories are less capable of dealing with their own lands than the people of Ontario, Quebec or the maritime provinces? Is there any special advantage or reason in making it necessary that the people of the Northwest Territories should come to Ottawa or send to Ottawa for the purpose of dealing with their lands, their mines, their minerals, or their timber? For what reason should the people in the Northwest Territories, 2,500 miles away from Ottawa, be obliged to have these matters dealt with at the capital of the Dominion instead of by their own officials at their own provincial capital. For what reason should these matters be considered by 215 men in the House of Commons of whom only a small proportion come from the west, rather than by the people of the province itself in their own legislature every one of whom has an intimate personal knowledge of the local affairs of that country? For all these reasons it seems to me that the policy upon which the government has entered is a mistaken policy, and one which is not in the interests either of the people of the Northwest Territories, the people of the new provinces, or the people of Canada as a whole. Then my hon. friend the Prime Minister alluded to the example of the United States. I think some hon. gentleman from the Northwest Territories on the other side of the House during this debate has expressed his apprehension that if these lands were handed over to the control and administration of the provinces we might expect maladministration. I venture to think that that suggestion should be repudiated by every hon. gentleman in this House and especially by every hon. gentleman from the Northwest Territories. I think these people are as fully alive to their rights, as fully alive to the necessity of utilizing the public domain in the public interest as the people of any part of Canada. The brief observation of the conditions in that country which I was enabled to make some two and a half years ago and my knowledge derived from some acquaintance with the public affairs of this country in connection with the Northwest Territories, would lead me to the conclusion that they are at least equally alive to the value of the public domain as are the people of the rest of Canada and certainly we might expect that the people of the Northwest Territories would be at least as much alive to the value of their own domain to themselves as the people of the whole of Canada would be alive to the value of that domain to the people of the Northwest Territories. We are referred to the example of the United States. Well, if we are to look to the example of the United States, do we find any very great encouragement so far as the hope of wise administration is concerned? I think that if we look to the example of the United States we would rather reach the opposite conclusion, than the one at which the Prime Minister has arrived. We would find in the United States that administration of distant territory in the departments of the government at Washington has not been conducive to good legislation, good administration, good executive action, and if I am not mistaken—although I have not refreshed my memory recently on this point—I think that the administration of public lands by the central government in the United States of America upon more than one occasion has been attended with grave scandals. For these reasons it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the grounds advanced by the Prime Minister to the House in support of this policy are not well founded, and that it would be in the interest of the people in the provinces, in the interest of the people of Canada as a whole, to entrust the administration of those lands to the people of the provinces, and in doing that we would be doing exactly that which the British government has done so far as the public lands in Canada are concerned. Every one who has the slightest acquaintance with constitutional history knows that the idea of British statesmen years ago was to retain the control and administration of public lands of all the British dominions in North America, and to administer those lands not for the benefit of British subjects residing in British North America, but for the benefit of the empire at large. That was the view expressed by British statesmen of years ago, that was the policy embarked upon by British statesmen years ago, that is precisely the policy on which the government of this country has embarked in connection with these lands in the Northwest Territories, and as the British government and British statesmen long years ago abandoned, and wisely abandoned, the policy upon which they then entered, so I venture to think it will be found that the policy on which the government of this country has entered with respect to the administration of lands in the Northwest Territories is equally unwise, and will have to be abandoned sooner or later with the result that complications will arise in respect of provincial subsidies and financial assistance which would not arise if the government had adopted the policy which has been adopted by the home government with respect to the public domain in Canada. What would have been the result in British North America long before this if the home administration, the imperial government had insisted upon retaining the public domain throughout the British possessions in North America and administering those lands, not for the benefit of the people of this country, but for the benefit of the empire at large? Could any one realize what the result would have been? Can any one at this moment, looking back over the history of this country for the past 50 or 60 years, have any doubt as to what the result would have been? It seems to me that the same reason, to a certain degree at least, exists for giving the control and administration of these lands to the people in the provinces and I for one have in conclusion to express my regret that the government have not seen fit to adopt that policy.

Mr. OLIVER. This question has been gone over already in the House since the Bill came up, and I do not know that anything new requiring special attention has been brought before the House on this occasion. The contention as I understand it is that the province is the better authority for the administration of the land. That contention has already been placed before the House and in opposition to it has been placed the contention that the Dominion is the better authority for controlling these lands. There is no question involved as to the respective business ability of the people of the Territories and of the Dominion. There is no question as to the respective honesty of administration on the part of the territorial or provincial government as compared with that of the Dominion. I presume there are honest men in the Territories as well as in other parts of the Dominion and that the honest men are fairly represented in the territorial or provincial governments.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I only mentioned that because one gentleman from the Territories pointed out a danger from that source which I did not think existed more than would exist here.

Mr. OLIVER. Probably not. I can only repeat that the Dominion government under the necessity of the case, under our system of confederation, necessarily has a greater interest in securing the establishment of a settler upon land in the Northwest than the provincial government has. As I understand it the Dominion revenue is principally derived from customs and excise, and each individual in the country contributes on an average about $8 or $40 per year for a family of five. I do not know that these figures are exactly correct but they will do for the purpose of comparison. When you consider the different expenditures of those settled on lands in the Northwest as compared with the dwellers in eastern cities, I think it will be admitted that a family in the Northwest Territories is worth a great deal more than $40 per year to the Dominion revenue. I would be inclined to think that such a settler's family established on their land would be worth perhaps $100 per year instead of $40. To the provincial revenue they are worth absolutely nothing; the province does not levy direct taxation upon these settlers. It is true that a school district or a local improvement district may be organized and the settlers may contribute to them by direct taxation, but under the system that has prevailed so far, the establishment of a school district or a local improvement district does not mean relief to the provincial treasury. Every group of settlers coming into the Territories may be taken to mean the establishment of a new school district and local improvement district, which in turn means a direct charge upon the provincial government just as their settlement means a direct contribution of the Dominion treasury. The local government is consequently not in the same position to derive revenue from the influx of settlers that the Dominion government is, and therefore it cannot afford to spend money in attracting settlers. The Dominion government for a number of years has expended about a million dollars a year to secure an influx of immigrants, and no provincial government would be in a position to make such an expenditure because there is no source from which, according to our system of confederation, the provincial government could acquire a compensating amount in revenue. The influx of settlers means increased revenue to the Dominion, irrespective of the value of the land. The Dominion government can well afford to spend large sums in attracting the attention of prospective immigrants and in providing for the security of life and property throughout these Territories, which has a very important bearing upon the question of immigration and which at present entails an expenditure of about half a million dollars per year. As a pure matter of business, as the plainest and simplest business transaction, if we expect to have inducements held out to people to settle on our vacant lands, and if we expect to have law and order maintained, there is no question but that we have better grounds for looking to the Dominion authorities than to the provincial authorities. If we do not reach that conclusion by any other process we might very well reach it by looking at the conditions in the various provinces. British Columbia has a very large land area which is under the control and administration of the province, but so far as I know, within recent years British Columbia has not spent a dollar in attracting immigration to that province. The province of Ontario has a vast area of vacant land, and I do not know that Ontario has spent a dollar in attracting immigrants within recent years. The same may be said of Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, all of which provinces own their own lands. The reason for this is that the provinces cannot afford to do so; there is not enough in it for these provincial governments. The interests of the entire Dominion depend upon the successful filling up of these prairies with desirable settlers and neither the Dominion nor any interest in the Dominion can afford to place the responsibility in hands other than those best fitted by circumstances to discharge that responsibility. It is not by reason of any greater business ability, or any greater honesty, but because the Dominion gets $40 revenue per family while the provincial government is billed with $20 say, annually of additional expense for each family. Another feature of the case is this. The leader of the opposition has said, and said truly, that the influx of settlers increases the value of the land and that the increased value of the land is of benefit to the province. But, we cannot have an influx of settlers unless we take means to secure it, and the success of the immigration policy is due mainly to the fact that the settlers have been able to get free lands. We send immigration agents to different parts of the world; we supply them with literature and they give information to the best of their ability, and there are no doubt good crops in that country. These factors are a consideration in securing immigration, but the main consideration is the free grant of land. It is the Dominion which can afford to give the land away and not the province. The increase in the value of the land which benefits the province and the people already in it, comes from the general influx of immigrants which is attracted, not by the lands which directly receive the increase of value by the coming in of the settlers, but by reason of the land which is given away. The tendency of the provincial government naturally would be to direct settlement so as to increase the value of the land already occupied, just as the tendency of the Dominion government is to secure settlers on the lands which they have to give away. The process of increasing the value of lands can be carried on independently to a limited degree, but as any man who has ever lived in that country must know, it is the spread of settlement over the still vacant areas that is really the main cause of the increase of land values, If for any reason attention is withdrawn from this effort to spread settlers over the yet unoccupied territory, the tendency to increase in the value of land now occupied, would be retarded to the extent to which the effort was relaxed.

I think the experience of the past few years has shown clearly, in the first place, that the results in regard to the settlement of the lands in the Territories have been satisfactory. Those results to the whole Dominion have been so very definite and so very satisfactory, that we cannot afford—it would not be sound public policy —to change a system which has resulted so satisfactorily, in the face of the experience which we have in regard to the provinces which have the ownership of their lands. It may be said, and it is quite true, that a government sitting here in Ottawa might at some future time reverse the present policy of free lands in the Territories. If that were done, it would reverse the argument which I have made here to-day. Certainly the government that was in power until 1896 did not have the policy of the land for the people which has prevailed since; but I believe that the people of this country, through the experience of the past few years, have arrived at a definite understanding that the policy of free lands is the policy for the well-being of this Dominion, and I can scarcely believe that even a change of government would bring about a change of that policy. The people of the Dominion at large have become so well aware of the benefits resulting from the rapid settlement of the Northwest through the giving of its lands free to settlers, that I cannot imagine any Dominion government reversing that policy. But a provincial government cramped for money, as all our provincial governments are, deriving no direct revenue from the influx of settlers, but carrying an increased burden by reason of every ship load of immigrants that arrived would be likely to adopt a policy of administration of the lands for revenue, which would be injurious in the ultimate end of the province itself, and still more to the whole Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. The experience of the province of Ontario is the very reverse of that. In that province the land is not only sold at a very small figure, at one time as low as twenty cents an acre, but there are free grants as well.

Mr. OLIVER. That was not the point I raised. The point was that the government of Ontario has not made expenditures for the purpose of promoting immigration in order to settle up those lands.

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, it has an agent at Liverpool now, and has had for years.

Mr. OLIVER. Even if the hon. gentlemen hold that the province of Ontario has an immigration service, the facts show that that service does not produce the results that have been produced by the Dominion service, and I take for granted that there is some reason for that inherent in the case, and not in any lack of desire on the part of the Ontario government to secure the settlement of the lands. It cannot afford to go to the expense that the Dominion government can.

Mr. SPROULE. The great reason why Ontario does not get the bulk of the immigrants whom it otherwise would get is the fact that so much prairie land has been opened up for settlement, on which people prefer to go and get immediate returns rather than go on timber land and clear it up. I want to put myself on record as being in favour of the provinces having their lands. We have only one instance in the Dominion of a province not owning its land, that is, Manitoba, and we have had complaints from that province ever since it has been a province, and applications for the right to control its lands. In view of that experience, it seems to me that we should avoid committing the same blunder in connection with the new provinces which we are establishing. The hon. gentleman says the Dominion has a greater interest in securing settlers than the province has. I do not think it has, and I do not see why it should have. It is said that the province would not have as much interest as the Dominion, because it would not have free grant lands ; but all the land in the Northwest is not free grant. While a portion of it is free, as is the case in Ontario, we still reserve a portion that may be sold to recoup the public treasury for the outlay. The Dominion is following very much the same system as is being followed by some of the provinces. We gave the province of Manitoba a portion of the swamp lands ; it applied for more, and complained because we withheld what we did. If it is a grievance to the people of Manitoba that the Dominion withheld the public lands, it must be equally so to the people of the Northwest Territories. I see by a return which has been brought down that there are 938,813,210 acres of land in the Territories not yet taken up. A large portion of that is not fit for settlement ; but as settlement goes on and improvements take place, and drainage is made throughout the country, this land which is to-day not fit for settlement will much of it become fit for settlement. Who will make the improvements? The settlers. Whom do the settlers belong to? The province in which the lands are located, and if the province makes the improvements in those lands which are not settled to-day and increases them in value, will the province not claim to be entitled to the increased value resulting from its expenditure and labour? Will that not be regarded as a very important grievance in the future? I think it will be. The land for which we give these new provinces a return we estimate at the value of $1.50 an acre. Much of this land, if held back, may increase to $8, $10 or $12 an acre. Will the province be satisfied with the moiety of the return which they get to-day? I do not think they will. They will be applying for a larger subsidy in lieu of that land, or for the land which ought to belong to them; because the British North America Act, I submit, contemplated that every acre of public land in each province should belong to the province when it came into the confederation. The hon. gentleman says the present system is very satisfactory, but they have never been able to test any other system, because it is the only one that has been in effect.

How long will they remain satisfied when they are set apart as provinces of their own and have an opportunity of testing the other system, such as Manitoba has had for several years? Every year they will be coming back and complaining that while they were treated with apparent liberality, there was really no liberality at all and what belonged to them was withheld. They will point out to the increased value of these lands given to them by their labour, which increased value inures only to the benefit of the federal government, and they will continually be demanding a readjustment of the financial arrangement. We have heard some members of the Northwest say that the people are perfectly satisfied, but if so, why are they sending petitions and resolutions against these land clauses? Years ago I put myself on record with regard to this very question when I claimed that the province of Manitoba should be given its own land, and I take the same position to-day.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BLAIN. The discussion of clause No. 20 has brought out certain statements that, I think, do not do justice to the province of Ontario. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has ventured to say that this province has not been spending a dollar towards the location of settlers in the northern district. The hon. gentleman is not well informed on that point. If he will study the history of provincial government in Ontario, he will learn that year after year that government has been spending a considerable amount of money surveying new districts and locating settlers. I have here a report on the province prepared by the direction of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, and published in 1903, containing a great deal of valuable information, and showing that the government of the province have devoted a good deal of attention to settling our northern districts. This shows that the agricultural lands explored in the several districts of northern Ontario are as follows:

Agricultural lands explored.

	Acres.
Nipissing	1,920,000
Algoma	11,200,000
Thunder Bay	2,560,000
Rainy River	384,000

I do not say that all this land is suitable for agriculture, but if we are to believe this report—and I suppose it cannot be questioned—a considerable portion of it is farming land. We know that during the discussion on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill in this House last session and the session before much stress was laid by hon. members on the other side of the House upon the fact that a large and valuable clay belt, heretofore unknown, existed in the northern part of Ontario comprising many millions of acres of valuable land. There have been located and sold in New Ontario, during 1901, according to the returns of the Crown land agents, farms of some 100 to 160 acres each to the number of 2,541, amounting to 330,000 acres, and representing a population of nearly 10,000 souls. These official figures, however, do not fully represent the total influx of people into New Ontario. Let me give a comparison of the increase of population in the northern part of this province:

	1891.	1901.	Increase
Muskoka and Parry Sound	6,919	45,356	38,437
Nipissing	1,791	36,552	34,761
Algoma	7,018	63,669	56,651
Total	15,728	145,577	129,849

So my hon. friend will see that the province of Ontario has not altogether neglected the settlement of the northern districts. Then it is to be borne in mind that the provincial government are constructing a railway, largely at the cost of the province, from North Bay northward to the Timiskaming district, which will open up a large area for settlement. Concerning the Timiskaming country, let me read a short extract from this report:

The Timiskaming country forms the south-eastern extremity of the great clay belt, the existence of which was established by the extensive explorations undertaken by the provincial government in 1901. Beginning at this point it stretches in a northeasterly direction with a slight break to the Height of Land across the district of Nipissing and Algoma and into Thunder Bay district, comprising a total area of some 24,500 square miles or 15,680,000 acres. This almost unbroken stretch of good farming land is nearly three-quarters as great in extent as the whole settled portion of the province south of Lake Nipissing and the French and Mattawa rivers.

Now, let me give the railway mileage in that country :

Railway Mileage.

	Miles.
Muskoka and Parry Sound..	184
Algoma..	537
Thunder bay and Rainy river.. ..	873
Total..	1,804

In 1891 there were only 12 miles of railway in that northern section of the province. I do not venture to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway system was constructed by the provincial government, but the province of Ontario had something to do with the construction of that railway, and the people of that province contributed largely towards the expense. And one of the purposes they had in view was the opening up of the northern section of the province. The production of iron ore for 1902 was 359,288 tons, most of which was smeltered in Ontario. Mining operations were commenced at Sudbury in 1886, and the district now furnishes about half the world's supply of nickel. So it will be seen that the provincial government have been giving some attention to the mining interests of northern Ontario. The copper-nickel matte is at present shipped to the United States, where the final stages of the processes of extraction and refining are carried on. That policy I do not agree with. I am in favour of a policy that will cause these final operations to be carried on in Canada. I hope the time will come when this mineral will be completely refined in Canada and the wages earned by Canadians. This is a policy that should receive the support, not only of the government of Ontario, but of this government as well. In 1902 11,890,000 pounds of nickel were produced, valued in the matte and before being exported for refining at $2,210,961. And in the same year, 1902, 4,932 tons of copper were produced, valued in the form of matte at $680,283.

Now, I would like to say something of what has been done by the provincial government for the settlement of that part of the province. I may say that it has been a disappointment to the people of the province of Ontario that a larger number of the sons and daughters of the province do not go to northern Ontario rather than to the west. One of the reasons of that is that the policy of the Ontario government—and I do not wish to refer to this in a party political sense—has not altogether been in the interest of the people of the province. Let me give you an example. In 1901 the legislature of the province passed an Act to provide for the appropriation of certain lands to be given to the volunteers who had served in South Africa and to those who had served on the frontier in the Fenian Raids of 1866. One reason urged in favour of this policy was that, of the men returning from South Africa, many would want to take up farming pursuits, and would be more likely to settle in the northern part of Ontario if the provincial government were liberal with them. But there is a clause here over which a great deal of comment has arisen by the people of Ontario, and which, I venture to say, is one of the chief reasons why a large number of the voters in the northern part of Ontario voted against the government in power in the province at that time. Clause 9 reads thus :

> Every location of Crown land under this Act shall be subject to the reservation of the pine timber.

That is, they were willing to give the land to the volunteer, but they reserve to the provincial government the pine timber ; in other words, the volunteer could go and settle upon the farm, and he could clear the pine timber that he needed to construct his house or outbuildings ; but if he ventured to put an axe to any portion of the pine timber upon his own farm, to sell then he had to pay to the provincial government timber dues. Thus a large number of volunteers complained bitterly, and a contention arose in the province of Ontario upon this question. There was a division in the House, but the government of the day insisted that in their opinion the better way to settle that northern country was to reserve the pine timber. However, when this question was tested before the electors in the northern part of the province they declared that that kind of policy was not in the best interests of the people, and was not calculated to invite settlers to locate in the northern part of the province. It is a policy which will now, I suppose, be made right, a policy that will of necessity be made right in the near future, because the people of all shades of politics in the province will be in favour of a liberal policy to the settler, so that he shall have the right to cut pine timber to sell if he wishes, and put his money in the bank and thereby help to make his home prosperous and happy. We must keep in view the fact that to-day the province of Ontario has an agent in the old country, and has had for some time, Mr. Byrne, who is stationed at Liverpool. The Ontario government has also had for the last year a special agent for the purpose of bringing out hundreds of men to engage in agricultural pursuits, it has been expending a large amount of money in this way for the purpose of settling up the northern part of the province. Let me also point out that the policy of the provincial government is to give free grants of lands. To hear some of our hon. friends from the west, one would almost think that the people of the province of Ontario were not given free farms in the northern parts of the province to settle. Let me read from the regulations under the 'Free Grants and Homesteads Act:'

Persons desiring to take the benefit of the Free Grants Act must apply to the Crown lands agent for the district in which they intend to settle. The agent will give them information as to what land is open for settlement, and will furnish them with printed forms of affidavits which are necessary to be made by the applicants.

On being properly located by a Crown lands agent and on performing of settlement duties, a single man over eighteen, or a married man, without children under eighteen residing with him, or the female head of a family having children under eighteen residing with her, is entitled to a free grant of one hundred acres. If the hundred acres selected consists of a considerable portion of rock, swamp or waste land, the Commissioner of Crown Lands may make an allowance for such waste land, and may increase the quantity of land located to any number of acres not exceeding two hundred acres. The male head of a family having a child or children under eighteen residing with him or her may be located for two hundred acres as a free grant. And such male head of a family is permitted to purchase another hundred acres at fifty cents per acre cash at the time of location.

So you see there is some inducement for people to come from the old country and elsewhere, and for the surplus population of Ontario and the other older provinces of Canada, to locate in the northern section of Ontario. I do not understand why the government of the two provinces that are to be created on the 1st day of July next—if these Bills get through the House before the 1st of July next, there seems to be some little doubt about that at the rate they are going; however, when the two provinces are inaugurated and each sends twenty-five representatives to their legislature for the purpose of taking care of their provincial interests, these men will represent every section of those two great provinces, they will understand the local conditions, they will understand the requirements of the people who are residing there and who are coming in to settle; and when they meet together in their provincial legislatures I am of the opinion that if the lands were given to the provinces, these 25 men in each legislature would be well able to administer them in the interests of the people; and if, after due consideration, they decided that the best policy was to give the lands free to the settlers, or if they adopted that policy and it was found after experience that a small charge should be placed upon the land, then it would be for them to do as they wish; and if these representatives did not adopt a policy in the best interests of the people, the electors would take care of them when they went back for re-election. So they would have the matter entirely in their own hands, they would have an opportunity of developing the country and appropriating their lands in the way they considered best. Men can go into those provinces now and receive free grant lands; but in five years from to-day it may be considered prudent that the new settler should contribute a small amount per acre for his land. I do not think that would be a very harsh provision, the proceeds would go towards helping the settlers. This would bring in a considerable amount of money to the provincial treasury, and if they did not have the land they would have the money. I think it was stated the other day by the Minister of the Interior that the new provinces would require an enormous amount of money to build their roads and other purposes, and it would be for them to say whether it would not be good policy to derive some revenue from the lands. If these lands were given to the provinces, as I think they should be, they would still form part and parcel of the Dominion of Canada, they would be given to the sons and daughters of the people who live in older Canada, men who are going from other parts to help develop that country. I do not think that the federal government at Ottawa is in the better position to administer and control these lands, and to adopt the best policy for the settlement of that country. I am rather inclined to think that a provincial government would be in a better position to administer the lands for the best interests of the country. Therefore I am not in favour of clause 20 of this Bill. I submit that in my humble opinion the policy of giving the lands to the provinces as they were given in Ontario and Quebec, would offer a stronger inducement to people to go out and settle there. I think it would be one of the very best policies that could be adopted by this government for the further settlement of that western country.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. If it be true, as the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Blain) states, that it is possible we may be discussing this Bill until the 1st day of July, there is one feature of this Bill that I think we might spend a good deal of the intervening time in considering, and which affords one reason why the Dominion should own the lands in the Northwest instead of handing them over to the provinces. As you know, Mr. Chairman, there is a large extent of territory in both of those to-be-provinces of what is called arid lands; but these lands, when they are properly irrigated become the most fertile and productive lands we have in the Northwest. It is true also that in the neighbouring state of Montana, there is a large amount of the same kind of land. Now in order to carry out this irrigation scheme it is necesasry to have a sufficient amount of water to irrigate these lands. It so happens that there are two of the most important rivers which have their sources in the United States, one of these is the St. Mary and the other is the Milk river. Both these rivers have their sources in the United States and run into our territory, and from these rivers we derive the water which will be required to irrigate those lands.

Now, when we started to do this, and to draw water from the Milk river which runs for over 200 miles in our territory and then finds its way back again into the United States, the American government found fault with us for doing this and difficulties arose. I wish now to draw your attention particularly to this fact, because in my opinion it is one of the most important features connected with this Bill. When the American government found out that we undertook to draw water from this river they said it should not be done. They sent delegates down here to the Dominion government to protest against our doing anything of the kind and said that they owned these waters themselves inasmuch as the source of this river was in the United States. If we had the provinces owning the so-called arid lands, and they undertook to draw water from these rivers about which there is dispute, we would not be able to handle the difficulty in the same manner as we would if it was owned by the Dominion of Canada alone. How does the matter stand? When they found that we were going to take water from the Milk river they protested against it and said that they had a prior claim themselves, because they had undertaken to draw water from the sources of these rivers. Then they proposed another scheme, that they should dam the water of St. Mary lake and Milk lake and then by increasing the water hold it there, draw it through the Milk river through our territory and get a large quantity of water to supply the valleys of the Milk river in Montana with water. When they tried to arrange that matter with our officers the scheme fell through. Then the secretary of the interior of the United States took the matter up along with the present president of the United States, and intimated that he would pursue a more vigorous policy, and that they would guard their own interests. The result is that $1,000,000 was set apart by the United States government in order that they might dam the waters of these two lakes in the United States, and then if no arrangements could be made with the Canadian government whereby they could take the water through the Milk river and into the United States in Montana, they would take the water and divert it from our rivers entirely, bringing it into one of their own streams, the Cut Bank creek, and then into another the Maria river, and then dig a canal and take it through the lower waters of the Milk river to supply their own territory with water, depriving us of our supply. Now you see here is the very important feature of this matter and it is necessary that we should guard against any difficulty of that kind. They now propose that Mr. Grunskie, a reclamation engineer shall inspect the sources of these rivers, inspect our irrigation arrangements in Canada and then report to the United States government who shall see what terms they shall mete out to us. We are all anxious—I am, and I believe every one is —that we should live on friendly terms with the United States, but you know, and the House knows, that the United States has not always treated us in the most friendly manner possible. You must bear in mind that they purchased the Alaskan territory, not because they wanted that territory, not because they had any necessity for it themselves, but because they wanted to deprive us of as large a portion of the seashore on the Pacific as they possibly could and prevent us having any harbours on that coast if they could avoid it. We have not treated the United States in that manner I can assure you. When they had their civil war we sent at least 30,000 of our men over there who fought for the freedom of the United States under the Stars and Stripes, and to-day the bones of hundreds of our brave sons lie bleaching on the plains of Tennessee and Kentucky, where they died fighting for the cause of the Union. And when the American government wanted to bring armed troops through our territory from Detroit to Buffalo we allowed them to go over our old Great Western Railway without any trouble whatever. On the other hand, when we had our little difficulty in the Northwest and wanted to take armed troops up through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, how did they treat us? They said: No, we will not allow you to take armed troops through our canals. The consequence was we had to debark our troops, convey them across the portage, and embark them again causing great inconvenience, expense and delay. That is the way we have treated the United States. Now you know how the American government is trying to treat us. If they propose to treat us in the same manner in this case as they have done on previous occasions, I think it is time to look about and to see if it is not advisable that the Dominion government should own these lands, so that if difficulties of this kind arise as they are almost certain to, we would be in a position to handle them without any trouble, and instead of the United States government having to treat with two or three provinces in the Northwest it would be able to treat directly with the Dominion government and we shall see that our rights are properly protected and that no undue advantage is taken of us by the United States.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior if he can give us any idea of the acreage of unsold land in these two new provinces? In the return we have the acreage in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Assiniboia, some 122,309,000. Has he any information to give us on that subject?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If the Minister of the Interior will allow me. If my hon. friend will look at sessional paper 97 on page 3 he will find there the information he requires. He will find that in Alberta there are 38,160,964 acres.

Mr. SPROULE. I have that. But are the three provinces all included in the two new provinces?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Is any portion of Athabaska?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. How much?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. All of Athabaska.

Mr. SPROULE. There is none of Franklin or Mackenzie, which is 155,600 more; that would be approximately 277,000,000 acres of land in the two provinces that is still unsold. Does not the minister see that we have recognized that the beneficial ownership of that land is recognized by us—as being vested in this because we agree to pay them practically a certain interest upon $37,500,000, which is at the rate of $1.50 per acre on 25,000,000 acres. We take 25,000,000 acres out of nearly 278,000,000 acres and say we value that at $1.50 an acre, and we are now going to pay you on that annually 1 per cent until the population reaches 400,000, or $375,000 a year; thereafter until the population reaches 800,000 we will pay you at the rate of 1½ per cent or $562,000 a year; thereafter until the population reaches 1,200,000, two per cent or $750,000 a year, afterwards three per cent or $1,112,500 a year, and an addition annually for five years of one-quarter of one per cent for building purposes, or $94,500 a year. We are practically giving them at the maximum, a fraction over three per cent of the money that would be realized by the sale of 25,000,000 acres of that land at $1.50 per acre. I suppose the people of the west will in time come to say to us: You have taken 25,000,000 acres but there are 125,000,000 acres left; we ought to have some interest and some rights in that land but you have allowed us nothing for it; you only gave us a very small interest upon 25,000,000 acres valued at $1.50 per acre, and most of which would sell to-day at from $3 to $5 per acre. I assume that the people of the west will not long be satisfied with this financial arrangement, nor will they regard the federal government as having done full justice to them. I take it that in the near future they will set up other claims against us. I see herein another return that each province is supposed to contain 75,000,000 acres of arable land and grazing land—I wonder if that is grazing land or grazing and agricultural land combined, because there is no distinction made between them in the return. At all events it would indicate that there are to-day 150,000,000 acres of good land there and if we deduct 25,000,000 acres from that, it would appear that we have taken 125,000,000 acres from the provinces and given them nothing in return. I have no doubt that will be their claim after a while. From whatever standpoint you view it, it seems to me we are only building up arguments for the people of these two provinces to appeal to us on in the near future, either for additional financial aid or for some compensation in lieu of the land.

Mr. BARKER. It appears to me that this clause 20, dealing with the lands, is an example of that which runs throughout the whole of the Bill. The government seem to have been concerned to find some means to do, not what the interest of the province or of the Dominion requires, so much as what party exigencies demand. We find that from the beginning to end of this whole measure; history is knocked endways, dates are upset and everything is done to fit in alleged facts to certain intentions of the government. I would like to call attention to what I think is really before us. In my opinion it was the intention of the British North America Acts, 1867 and 1871, that when any portion of the Territories became so far developed as to justify provincial status, it was not merely the privilege but it was the duty of this parliament to confer such status upon that portion of the territory. It was not only our duty to do that but we were not at liberty to add anything which could hamper new provinces in the enjoyment of such provincial rights. What do we find here? We find south of the 55th parallel of latitude, three districts, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Assiniboia, all of a somewhat similar nature and developed very much in the same degree. They would constitute, so far as area is concerned, a compact province of reasonable dimensions; a little larger than Ontario and not quite so large as Quebec. The government, instead of granting the wishes of these districts and constituting out of them a new province, chooses for its own purpose apparently—because I cannot see any other purpose in it—to add to these provinces a territory that is yet undeveloped, that requires perhaps the nursing and administration of the Dominion. It adds that territory to these three developed districts, cuts the whole area in two parts and says: You have got in each province something that requires fostering and care, and therefore we will not give you the control of your lands. The government thus set up a condition of things to palliate their desire to withhold from the provinces the reasonable control of their own lands. I have not heard from any hon. gentleman opposite one word of explanation why these new provinces should be obliged to take in undeveloped Athabaska, a territory of over 200,000 square miles in which we are told there are only 242 white people. Why should that territory be added to this developed territory which is itself entitled to provincial status, unless it be to enable the government to say: Oh, you cannot have your lands, we must develop these undeveloped portions. If there had been no such desire on the part of the government I doubt if we should have heard a word as to withholding from the three older districts the administration of their own lands. What other excuse has been given? We heard from the Prime Minister that in the interests of immigration it was essential that the Dominion should retain control of the lands because the new provinces might act adversely to the interests of the Dominion as a whole in that regard. That was an extraordinary reason to come from the Prime Minister. Section 95 of the British North America Act provides for such a case and in a way which leaves no room whatever for any question on the part of the Dominion. That section provides:

> In each province the legislature may make laws in relation to agriculture in the province, and to immigration into the province; and it is hereby declared that the parliament of Canada may, from time to time, make laws in relation to agriculture in all or any of the provinces and to immigration into all or any of the provinces——

So, stopping there for a moment, you will see that even if we gave all this territory to these new provinces, it would not deprive this parliament of its power to legislate as regards agriculture and immigration. The province could legislate and we could legislate. So that we could take care of the Dominion interest. But the clause goes further:

> ——and any law of the legislature of a province relative to agriculture or to immigration shall have effect in and for the province, as long and as far only as it is not repugnant to any Act of the parliament of Canada.

So that the very reason that was given by the First Minister for removing from the control of the province the administration of its lands is provided for in the British North America Act. That was the one reason given in all this debate that seemed to have anything in it to justify the withdrawal from the province of the control of its lands; and section 95 seems to have been most thoughtfully provided for the purpose of meeting such a case. If there is any other reason why this new province should not have the control of its lands we would like to hear it, because the reason that has been given is absolutely without foundation. The Minister of the Interior, who is familiar with this clause, could perhaps tell us some other reason than that given by the First Minister; for it seems to me, after reading section 95 of the British North America Act, that there is no reason whatever in what the First Minister has told us. Until the Minister of the Interior gives us some other reason it seems to be our duty, in constituting this new province, to give the province full control over its lands.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I think the hon. member for Hamilton is very innocent if he does not see what the real reason of this legislation in regard to the public lands is. The real object of this Bill is to carry out a contract by which the government seeks to impose an unpopular school system on the two provinces of the west. To do that, in the first place, they interfere with the boundaries of the provinces. Athabaska is taken in in order that the two legislatures may be constituted with a certain political complexion; in the next place, the schedule of constituencies, as outlined, has a very distinct object, and that is to secure two legislatures, if at all possible, that will endorse this obnoxious school legislation; and, in the third place, the government are keeping control of the lands for the political power which it gives them in the elections which are to come off in those provinces. That is the object of this legislation, especially with regard to the lands. The government, with their agents, will be masters of the situation. They will have land agents administering the land laws, and these agents can intimidate the settlers just as they wish. These land agents will be political agents and nothing else; they will be there in the interest of the government. Their whole energies in the forthcoming provincial elections, if they are ever held, of which I have some doubt, will be devoted to the object of electing two legislatures that will pass such school legislation which, once passed, will be fastened on those provinces for all time. Any one can realize what the power of the government will be in those provinces, with the full control of these lands. They will have the granting of patents to the settlers; and especially the large foreign element which is in a portion of the constituency of the Minister of the Interior, can be handled by the land agents, as they are called, but the political agents, as I would call them, of the government. In that way there will be two legislatures elected that will try to fasten this obnoxious school system on these two provinces. That, to my mind, is the main object of this Bill, and that is the reason the government propose to retain control of the lands. Why are not the men of the Northwest making the fight they did in the old days to have the lands reserved for the people of that country? Why are they abandoning the old claim of the Territories to have the possession of their own lands? For years they stumped the Northwest in support of the demand that the provinces, when created, should have the complete ownership of their lands, and not only the lands, but the mines. Now they propose to surrender all these to this government. I pointed out the other day that the people of the Northwest should control the lands if for no other purpose than to control the supplies of fuel, which are essential to the development of the country. But as it is, the coal lands, as all others, will be in the hands of this government, who will be free to alienate them and hand them over to corporations of all kinds, so that the people of the Northwest, instead of getting cheap fuel, will have to pay extortionate prices for it. That is not what the people of the west desire. They have expressed themselves on this subject time after time, and in the mouths of gentlemen who to-night are silent on this question, and who, I believe, are ignoring the instructions given to them by the voters of the two new provinces. We even heard the Minister of the Interior in the old days claiming that the settlers of the west ought to own their own lands. Now the song is: We want the Dominion to own them in order that it may develop our country. I do not see that that argument fits the case at all. On the contrary, the policy of those hon. gentlemen from the west to-day is against the interests of that country. That policy is dictated solely by a political reason, and I think they will hear from the west before this debate is through.

Mr. OLIVER. We have heard.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. In what way?

Mr. OLIVER. From Edmonton.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Some sessions ago the hon. gentleman wanted the lands for the people. At that time he was speaking the sentiments of the people, but he certainly is not to-day. His sole object now is to help the Liberal party, and he and his colleagues on that side from the Northwest are willing to rob the people of that country of their undeniable right to own and control their own land.

Mr. SCOTT. What did Edmonton say?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It said it wanted the control of the lands by the people.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I think these hon. gentlemen will find that when the people are given the opportunity, they will say they want what should belong to them. If a man has a farm, he wants to keep that for himself; and just as sure as we are here, an agitation will begin in the west and grow and grow until the people get control of their own land. They will insist on being put in the same position as the other provinces and not be treated as wards, incapable of self-government, incapable of making their own school laws and administering their own public lands. This whole Bill it intended for the one express purpose, and that is to fasten this vexatious school legislation on the people. In order to do that, the government are treating the people as wards, not competent to make their own laws on education, or administer their own lands, or have a voice in the fixing of the boundaries of their own provinces. In the same way also Manitoba is being punished for its course on the school question. Everything that is taking place in connection with this Bill, has its origin in the school policy and has for its object the forcing of that obnoxious policy on the people. Are not the people in the west capable of administering their own lands just as well as this Dominion government? In my opinion they could administer them much better and create out of them a great reserve fund which would save them from taxation for years. But if this Bill passes, they will have to resort to municipal taxation of all kinds to enable them to carry on their own affairs and will be dependent on this government for whatever income they may get. What we should do instead is give these provinces a fair start and then let them manage for themselves. The First Minister declared that he was completing the freedom of the Northwest. Well, there never was a province so hampered as these two are going to be. They are to be cribbed, cabined and confined in every sense of the term, and by men who have always posed as the advocates of their rights. If the people had control of their own public lands, they might find in them a means of freeing themselves from the tyranny of the railway companies or from any railway monopoly. I am not in favour myself of giving land bonuses to railways, but a solution of the great transportation problem might be found in the control by the provinces of their own lands. But under this Bill, these lands are to be administered by the Dominion.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition reneated this afternoon some remarks which he had made on several previous occasions. He appears very much concerned because he thinks a doubt has been expressed on this side that should these new provinces be given possession of their lands, they might some day make a mistake. Well, it is the hon. gentleman himself who has made a mistake. He has attributed that doubt to the wrong partner. It is held by his own follower, the hon. gentleman from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) and not by any one on this side. Last year the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) told the House that every legislature in Canada was corrupt and turning handsprings with the public resources, and he gave that as reason why new provincial legislatures should be endowed with public resources. We cannot expect that versatile gentleman, however, to keep in his mind one day what he said the day previous or to be guided by any fixed principle; and when he talks about some ulterior, dark, hidden political purpose animating the present government, no one in this House really takes him seriously. Had he taken the trouble to look up the records, he would have found that there have been other governments in this country which have dealt with this same matter of public lands. More than twenty years ago, there was a Conservative government in this country, led by the late Sir John Macdonald, and that government dealt with the public lands in a new province. Does the hon. member for South York think that the late Sir John Macdonald had any ulterior, political motive in the policy he then pursued?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. He may have had.

Mr. SCOTT. I have here a portion of the record on that subject, contained in the journals of Manitoba for 1884. I find here the report of the subcommittee of the Ottawa government, which reads as follows:

After having very fully discussed with the delegates all the points embraced in the said memo and the other matters referred to, report as follows:

That following the order of the memo of instructions the delegates urged with great earnestness:

1st. The right of the province to the control, management and sale of the public lands within its limits, for the public uses thereof, and the mines, minerals, wood and 'timber thereon, or an equivalent therefor, and to receive from the Dominion government payment for the lands already disposed of by them within the province less cost of surveys and management.' And they, the subcommittee, have given to all the views advanced by the delegates in support of this claim the fullest consideration, and with every desire to meet their wishes as far as possible, in the general interests of the Dominion cannot advise Council to recommend to parliament to grant this request.

The lands of Manitoba hold a very different position in relation to the Dominion government, from the lands of the other provinces.

This applies with equal force to the lands of the Northwest Territories.

Shortly after the union of the old provinces, the government formed from that union purchased at a large price in cash, all the rights, titles and interests of the Hudson Bay Company in and to the territory out of which the province of Manitoba has been formed. It incurred further a very large expenditure to obtain and hold this territory in peaceable possession, and at a still further cost which is continuous and perpetual, is extinguishing Indian titles and maintaining the Indians, so that the Dominion government has a very large pecuniary interest in the soil which does not exist in respect to any other of the confederated provinces.

Further on I find the following:

Parliament pledged its faith to the world that a large portion of those lands should be set apart for free homesteads to all coming settlers, and another portion to be held in trust for the education of their children.

This was a statement of the government of Sir John Macdonald that parliament was not free to transfer these lands to the local government of any province without attaching to them the condition that the free homesteading policy should be continued:

No transfer could, therefore, be made, without exacting from the province the most ample securities that this pledged policy should be maintained; hence in so far as the free lands extend there would be no monetary advantage to the province, whilst a transfer would most assuredly seriously embarrass all the costly immigration operations which the Dominion government is making mainly in behalf of Manitoba and the Territories.

The great attraction which the Canadian government now offers, the impressive fact to the mind of the men contemplating immigration is that a well known and recognized government holds unfettered in its own hand the lands which it offers free, and that that government has its agencies and organizations for directing, receiving, transporting and placing the immigrant upon the homestead which he may select. And if the immigration operations of the Dominion, which involve so large a cost, is to have continued success and to be of advantage to Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, your subcommittee deem it to be of the utmost importance that the Dominion government shall retain and control the lands which it has proclaimed free to all comers. Were there other considerations of sufficient force to induce them to recommend this transfer to Manitoba, and as a consequence and by precedent the surrender to the provinces to be created from the Northwest Territory, all the lands within their boundaries, then they would advise that the provinces holding the lands should conduct their own immigration operations at their own expense.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. From what is the hon. gentleman reading?

Mr. SCOTT. From the journals of the assembly of Manitoba for 1884.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Would the hon. gentleman read what follows—what the people said in answer to that?

Mr. SCOTT. I think I have read sufficient.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Well, if the hon. gentleman will give me the page, we will have some one else read it.

Mr. SCOTT. It is page 142 of the journals of the provincial assembly of Manitoba, 1884. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. F. Maclean) dispute that the portion I have read conveys the real meaning of the report of that subcommittee?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I want the answer to it that the people of Manitoba gave.

Mr. SCOTT. Was the action of the government of 1884 not in accordance with that report? Of course it was, and the lands were withheld from the province of Manitoba. I do not say that I agree with every sentiment expressed in this report. But our friends opposite are extremely suspicious of the intention of the present government in dealing with this subject in the same way as their predecessors dealt with it. Are the suspicions of hon. gentlemen opposite based on their experience of twenty years ago? The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) made some reference for the fourth or fifth time, to the idea that the government here is going to the United States for a precedent. And he spoke for the fourth or fifth time of the British practice with regard to lands and put the question: What would have been the result with regard to the northern half of the North American continent if the British practice of many years ago had not been changed. The obvious answer is that the British Crown would have lost British North America as she lost the thirteen American colonies. But it seems to me that the cases put by the leader of the opposition are not parallel, and, if my hon. friend will look further into the matter, I think he will agree with that view. What did the United States do? Immediately they obtained their independence, the first thing they did was to provide for control of all lands throughout the United States by the central government. I think that is sufficient proof that the cases are not parallel.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in understanding the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) to say that the United States government held control of all the lands?

Mr. SCOTT. I understand that to be the case, with the exception of perhaps the state of Texas.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Outside of the original states.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the United States government hold the lands in the state of Michigan?

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) states that they held it outside of the original states.

Mr. SPROULE. Let me understand. Was Michigan one of the original states?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Because, I lived in Michigan for a time, and I never heard or knew anything of the United States government, holding the lands. When a man got land he got it from the local agent of the state government.

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly the states west of the Mississippi river do not have control of their own land. In those states the lands are controlled by the federal government. I was going on to say that if I could get satisfaction as to how our local governments were going to carry on their business without the amount of money paid in lieu of the lands—even if the lands were to be transferred absolutely, without string on them—certainly with the string suggested by the leader of the opposition and stated to be necessary by the report I have just read, that the provincial government must maintain the free homestead policy, the local government's difficulty in obtaining revenues would be greater,—I, for my part, would have less objection to the local government assuming the responsibility of administering these lands.

Mr. SPROULE. The report the hon. gentleman read laid down the principle in regard to the Manitoba lands, that the government were bound to the world to give free homesteads. That would take away half the land, but we would hold the other half. Could not the province do exactly the same thing, giving every alternate section as a free homestead and reserving the others for sale?

Mr. SCOTT. Will the hon. gentleman tell me that after giving away the even numbered sections as free homesteads the local government will get enough out of the odd numbered sections to enable them to carry on their business? Parliament has had these lands in its control for thirty-five years and its experience so far is that, with the free settlement policy, it has not made a cent out of the lands, in fact it is about $1,000,000 behind. I have a calculation to show the amount that these new provinces will receive in the next thirty-five years under the arrangement proposed by the government. In the first place it is proposed in the resolution that the sum of $937,500 is to be paid to the two provinces as a special grant from the land fund for public buildings within the next five years. Then, within the same period the two governments will receive as ordinary land subsidy, $3,750,000. And if, at the end of five years it is found that the population of each province has increased to 400,000 souls, which is altogether likely, in the succeeding five years the two provinces will receive a total of $5,625,000 from the lands. I calculate that, at the end of that period of five years the population of each province will be 800,000, in which case, in the next period, they will receive $7,500,000 for the two provinces. If, at the end of that period, the population has increased to 1,200,000, the payments will amount, within the next period of five years, to $11,125,000. Then in the fifth period the amount will be equal, $11,125,000. In the sixth period the same, in the seventh period the same, bringing us up to the end of the thirty-fifth year with a total amount of $59,301,250, roughly $60,000,000 in the thirty-five years. I venture to say that the provinces, even if they obtained the land unreservedly and carried out the free homesteading intention to a reasonable extent, and the settlement policy which is in force at the present time, could not hope to obtain such an amount of money in that period. We heard the leader of the opposition say the other day that his suggestion to hand the lands over to the provinces with a restriction as to prices, was only an alternative suggestion,—that it was only in the event of there being danger in doing otherwise that he would ask the people of the province to consent to accept the lands and give an agreement to continue the free homestead policy with regard to the even numbered sections and the low-settlement-price policy with regard to the odd numbered sections. Well, Sir, it struck me as peculiar that the hon. gentleman was willing to invade provincial autonomy to that extent, and that he should be unwilling to do the same thing with regard to schools. Now, I say in all sincerity that I think the people would much more readily agree to the limitation upon their autonomy that is being put upon them in relation to the subject of education, than they would be willing to agree to such a limitation of their autonomy as the leader of the opposition has suggested with regard to their substantial resources.

Mr. SPROULE. They would like freedom in both.

Mr. SCOTT. The verdict of Edmonton was not to that effect, as I have pointed out. If there was any reason to prevent hon. gentlemen going to Edmonton to lay down their school policy, that reason could not apply with regard to the land policy, because the interests of Roman Catholics and Protestants must be precisely identical with regard to the lands. The sentiment of the people of the Northwest is that the school question which we have discussed is a very immaterial matter. The letter that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) read the other evening, and which he said came from a prominent Liberal in his district, is a proof that the people of the Northwest Territories consider the school issue as being an immaterial matter, they consider the land question as far more important. If there is any difference of opinion in the Northwest Territories, the matter of the land is looked upon as a very much more serious one than the matter of the schools. There was no reason in the world why the hon. gentlemen should not have gone up to Edmonton and presented their land policy. Some hon. gentlemen rather jeered when I mentioned Edmonton. What objection have they against the verdict of the people of Edmonton? Is it not a fact that the leader of the opposition, before the Minister of the Interior was appointed, got up himself and suggested that the district of Edmonton was a proper district in which to ask for a verdict of the people of the Northwest Territories upon the question of autonomy?

Mr. SPROULE. In the language of the boy on the street, that is too thin.

Mr. FOSTER. I have been listening ever since this debate commenced two months ago to try if possible to get at the reasons why members from the Northwest, including the present Minister of the Interior, were not in favour of the provinces having their own public lands; and so far as I can see now one of the chief reasons has been defined by the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Scott). They would like to have the lands, they would like to have the whole outfit for the provinces, but they do not like to assume the responsibilities. They want to be men full grown, but they don't quite know whether they could walk if they were left alone. They would like to have the full birthright, but the little mess of pottage which is handed out to them just now is so enticing that they would rather lap that up and let the future take care of itself. Now the financial policy and the land policy are closely joined. The speech that has been made by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat shows that if it was not for the financial difficulty he would like to take the lands, and the west would like to have their lands, would like to be full-blooded in that respect, have all their rights, but they don't quite see how they could raise the money for the present and current expenses of the provincial governments. My objection to the matter as it stands is on two grounds, first, because these terms are not arranged on any ground of principle. There is no well grounded principle upon which the whole financial system with reference to these two provinces has been reared. The other ground of objection is that there is no finality to it. I think every member on either side of this House, must feel that there is no finality in this arrangement. Neither province will be satisfied if it does not have what really belongs to it. When either province is fully organized what will it have? It will have no control over its timber lands, it will have no control over its mineral lands, it will have no control over its prairie lands, it will have no control over its agricultural lands, it will have no control over its irrigable lands, it will have no control over its grazing lands. What is there but the mere skeleton of a province, in so far as regards the vast possessions which are yet undeveloped in each one of these territories? Not over a single acre or foot of all the soil which is yet unalienated will either of these provinces have any rights at all, so far as these rights are concerned in ownership. What have they, then? They have the name of a province, they have the municipal work of a province to legislate for, they have the small provincial functions of road building and bridge building, the duties and responsibilities which belong to the ordinary routine management. They have that. But there is not a foot of their soil, not an acre of their resources outside of what are possessed now by the inhabitants of that country, not one acre of this, not one foot of that will belong to them. So I say it is against human nature to suppose that these two provinces will be satisfied with this settlement. From the very moment they begin to be provinces they will commence an agitation which dissatisfaction will arouse, and which dissatisfaction will push further each year, and it will be reinforced by their necessities which will constantly grow. So I say this feeling will grow as the provinces grow, it will be accentuated by their necessities ; as their population increases demands upon them will become greater. They will feel more and more that in the first place they were defrauded of their full heritage, that they have not got what actually belonged to them, that consequently they are not a full and independent province, and they will not rest until they get these rights. As my hon. friend who sits beside me (Mr. R. L. Borden) well observed, the longer the thing goes on the greater the dilemma, and the more the difficulty there will be. Therefore I say these provinces will not be satisfied, because they will feel from the first that they have not power over their own belongings.

Suppose you take the converse of it and the argument is shown with greater strength. Suppose a proposition were made in this House to-day to take over the lands of the other provinces of the Dominion to administer them and assume all the cost of administration and take all the profits of administration. Is there a single province in the Dominion which would look upon a proposition like that as being fair, which would admit it for a single moment. The argument is not a bit stronger by reason of their being now already full-fledged provinces and in possession of their lands, than it is with reference to the new provinces from which you would withhold what every old province has and possesses in its own right, from which you withhold what the British North America Act considers to be and contemplates as the possession of a province. Simply because you hold the lands at the present time and refuse to give them up the argument is not a bit stronger in the one case than it is in the other and the injustice of it will be equally felt. Every year that these provinces are provinces, while this condition of things with refenence to their lands prevails they will feel more and more that they are marked off from their sister provinces, that they have not the resources and not the powers and consequently not the full rights which their sister provinces have. These feelings will become seeds of dissatisfaction which will grow and spread and ripen into the harvest of desire and of a constant agitation until the desire be realized that they shall have their own birthright and their own lands. As I said before you can hardly approach the question of lands without approaching the financial question as well and that is the crux of the whole matter. As my hon. friend has said, they would like to have their lands but they do not see how they are to get their money. As far as that is concerned it seems to me there must be some way in which that difficulty could be met. Taking all the information which I got from the Minister of the Interior and from the return which was brought down it seems that the grain growing, irrigating, ranching and general farming lands in the areas of the two provinces which are to be formed will amount to 294,000,000 acres, in round numbers. No one can say just how much of that will be agricultural land, just how much will be good grazing land, just how much will be land which proper irrigation will make very valuable and very desirable, but the whole of it is returned as above. The total area, as I said, is 294,000,000 acres, deducting the water acreage. Alienated lands have been returned as 65,000,000 and if you subtract the 65,000,000 from the 294,000,000 it will give you about 228,000,000 or 228,500,000 of lands belonging to one or other of these categories. As I said before, it would not probably be wise to prophesy just how much of that would be excellently good land, how much worthless, and how much would come between the two ; but judging from our experience in the Northwest Territories and as our knowledge has progressed it is possible that we may ourselves be surprised to discover what a very large proportion of these lands are really serviceable lands, suitable for agricultural, farming and grazing purposes. If that be true—and I think we are not pushing the matter too far to take that as fairly true—you will have an acreage of 228,000,000 of this serviceable or fairly serviceable land. That is an immense patrimony. Suppose you leave the odd-numbered sections still to be used for immigration purposes, for settlement purposes as an inducement to the outside world for speedier, better and more rapid settlement, suppose you leave that to be deducted from the amount which still remains, you have still the immense acreage of 114,000,000 or 115,000,000 acres of land which would be at your disposal. No one thinks or suggests that these are lands that you could put into the market and sell now, but let us take the history of the past which should throw some light on the history of the future. Twenty years ago in that western country along the main line of the Canadain Pacific Railway and up there where there were no lines, but where to-day there are lines stretching parallel and crosswise at the present time there was great doubt if large proportions of these lands were good agricultural lands. Within twenty years out of those areas which are well known now, but were not then so well known, the proportion of really good land has risen very high indeed, and the proportion of really unserviceable land has diminished almost to a minimum quantity so that in these large areas now better explored and better known there is very little of what you might call waste land; the greater part of it is land which is valuable for what it will actually produce and which becomes more valuable as railway and transport facilities are brought every year nearer to it. You have to take the same possible progression of things in connection with the northern part of the old provisional districts and the new provisional district which you have taken in and as year after year passes, in the course of fifteen, twenty or twenty-five years, how much of that land of which I have spoken, lying farther to the north in the old provisional districts and in the one to the north of the Saskatchewan will become absolutely as good and as valuable, treated generally as the same quantity of lands farther to the south ? You will say there are arid belts in the northern portion and so there were said to be arid belts in the southern portion. There is no doubt that there are, but the arid belts that were thought so serious a few years ago in the southern portion do not have any great depressing influence on us now when we forecast the future of that country. Whether the seasons have changed, whether agriculture has done its work in to a certain extent changing conditions there, we cannot tell the reason, but these are the facts of the case, that the area of what was thought to be unserviceable or arid land has gradually and constantly receded and the area of what is serviceable and useful has gradually and continually grown. I think that probably the same change and the same course of events which has taken place with reference to the southern portion of it will take place with reference to the northern portion of it, so that the whole trend of my argument is that we have not by any means exhausted the serviceable land, and in the areas which are to be put in these two great provinces if you allow the same progress and development to go on in the future as in the past with accelerated rapidity as will be the case twenty or twenty-five years, we will see not only the area of serviceable land largely extended, but the area of transport facilities equally as largely extended and consequently the value of the lands will become greatly enhanced.

There is the patrimony which, I think, ought to belong to these provinces ; there is the patrimony which to-day you are selling for $37,500,000, and you are selling it for $37,500,000, why ? Simply because you do not see how you are going to finance your province through unless you take the ready cash and give up your patrimony. Is there not another way ? I have no doubt there is. Suppose a business corporation had 228,000,000 acres of that land, would it be an impossible thing for that corporation to set off a certain proportion and to raise money upon these lands for actual current purposes from year to year, and hold the power of redemption of these lands, and hold the power of the management and of the sale of these lands as well ? That is not a difficult thing. My hon. friend has said that within a certain number of years that would make away with a certain number of millions of dollars. Would it be a difficult thing by way of their lands, a certain proportion of them as security, to raise that money which is necessary for the provinces in the initial period ? It is not a difficult thing for business people to do, and why should it be a difficult thing for a legislature ? But, Sir, there is another way in which it might be done, and I throw this out for what it is worth. The Dominion of Canada is proposing to pay in lieu of lands and as compensation for these lands ; it is proposing to pay, outside of all the other sums which it gives to each province, one per cent for a certain number of years on $37,500,000, and so on upwards. That is, for a certain number of years they will get $375,000 a year out of the Dominion treasury ; after that, and when the population comes up to a certain figure, they will be paid each year from the Dominion treasury $562,500, after that for another certain period $750,000, and after that they will be paid for all time $1,125,000 per year. Would it be a difficult thing, in the interest of both the Dominion and of those provinces, that the Dominion should undertake to advance that amount of money for that length of time—just exactly the amount it is proposed to give now—and that it should hold in trust as security for that money a certain number of acres of the lands of these provinces set off in certain divisions ? Suppose, for argument's sake, you were to set off 25,000,000 acres of land for one of the provinces out of your 228,000,000 ; set off 25,000,000 acres of fairly serviceable lands, and suppose that you should hold these lands without having any necessity placed upon you to sell from year to year under present conditions and at the present price ; suppose that you could hold these lands, selling as the price suited you (the price coming up to a good fair amount alongside of your settled portions), selling a certain number of acres of these lands each year, as much as you deem prudent and wise, but not by necessity forced to sell them, and so on, for a period of ten or fifteen years ; do you not think that the rise in the price of the lands from $1.50 an acre, which is now the upset price, would become so much greater that it would be worth while to make some arrangement by which you could husband these lands until they became more valuable, and at the same time provide for your current expenditure during that time? And in the end, when your lands did become valuable, you would have the patrimony which would last, not only for your necessities of ten or fifteen years, but would be an endowment which would largely meet your necessities for all time to come. Take, for instance, a calculation—you may vary it according to your practical view—But I take this as not being far out of the way: Suppose you were to set aside 25,000,000 acres of land and keep them for ten years. Am I right or wrong in saying that that 25,000,000 acres of land, after the progress of ten years, with your railway building, your increased settlement, your homesteading, your development; am I wrong in saying that those lands would rise to the value on an even basis of $6 per acre?

Mr. LAMONT. Might I ask the hon. gentleman just what that would include? Would it include the even-numbered sections as well as the odd-numbered sections?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a matter of arrangement.

Mr. LAMONT. Would the hon. gentleman allow settlement on these 25,000,000 acres?

Mr. FOSTER. I should think it would be a wise thing to provide that settlers would percolate through the part you set aside and get their 160-acre free homesteads, and thereby become the absolutely necessary purchasers for the lands you held close by.

Mr. LAMONT. Has not the great grievance of the Northwest settlers been that they could only settle on the even-numbered sections, and is not the fact that they have been debarred from the odd-numbered sections a great hardship on the settlers?

Mr. FOSTER. They could buy the adjoining sections, and they are buying them now in innumerable instances. Much of that land now belongs to railway companies and other companies. But suppose a reasonable government were looking at it, they do not want to retard settlement, they do not want to charge the settler who comes there more than is reasonable, but if they have the acreage set apart and it fringes on to the homesteads that are taken by the settlers that come in, does the settler to-day in the Northwest, if he can get good land next to his homestead at $5 or $6 or $7 per acre, does he thinks he is paying too much for it? Hundreds and thousands of them are paying for it to-day, and they are glad to get it at that. I am just opening out what may be a possibility in the way of financing this matter, which would be good for both the Dominion and the provinces. But not to keep you too long; suppose at the end of ten years the land became virtually worth $6 an acre, there would be an endowment of $150,000,000, which, at 3½ per cent, would give a yearly income to you of $5,000,000. Under your present arrangement after your population gets to 1,200,000 you get $1,125,000 per year, no more and no less. There is a finality then. All your years of progress in the future bring you nothing more than that unless you sit in your seats to-day and say: We will take care of that when the time comes; we will look for better terms.

Mr. FIELDING. Why stop your land value at ten years, why not carry it on to one hundred years?

Mr. FOSTER. I am going to carry it on; I will satisfy my hon. friend in that respect, I say you have to carry on this in a reasonable way. You cannot set your 25,000,000 acres off and say you will not sell a single acre of it, but you can be careful to sell it as a reasonable price and if you can sell what you do sell, and as little as is necessary for $5 or $6 per acre, you will have the remainder of it to sell later on at an enhanced price. Suppose that you kept it for fifteen years. With the tide of progress and development going on continuously, and accelerated as it will be, is it too much to say that your land at that time will be worth $8 per acre, intrinsically worth it? If you saved a portion of it, and a considerable portion, unsold for twenty years, you would have land which would be certainly worth $10 an acre, intrinsically worth it.. If you had 15,000,000 acres left, you would have at the increased price a still larger endowment upon which you could draw for all time to come. Now, you can pick flaws in that arrangement if you please; you can settle down on the plan which you have thought out and are going to put through, or which you have not thought out still are going to put through. But it is not outside of fair financial ability and of fair practical arrangement with reference to the best interests of that country to take some such measures as that, and to raise for your present necessities, either on the security of your land, which it would pay you to do, or on some such arrangement as I have outlined with the Dominion government, what you require, and to keep your patrimony intact as a large endowment for your future needs. That would accomplish two things. The Dominion government would be lending a helping hand at the present. It would get back everything it had advanced. The government of each province would be getting what was necessary for it during the time of its adolescence, its infancy, so to speak, and it would be saving that patrimony for an enhanced endowment for the future, when it could well afford to pay back the capital which had been advanced to it, with the small interest rate that would carry it, and it would be the better off by hundreds of millions of dollars, and not merely by tens of millions. That is not very good statesmanship, it seems to me, which starts in to-day with a plan which will tide you over the present, but which has to come to its final block sooner or later. Do you mean to say that when you get 1,200,000 people or 2,000,000 or 3,000,000 in each of those provinces, you are going to get along without your lands and a subsidy of $1,000,000 a year in lieu of your lands? What are you going to do when you get to that point? There is only one of two things that you must do; you must either come to direct taxation of the people there, or come back to this Dominion, and say to it: You put us off with a paltry 25,000,000 acres of land out of all this rich patrimony, and you allow only $1.50 per acre on it to set up housekeeping with; we come back to you now, and say it was unfair; we want our full birthright. So much for that. I listened with a great deal of attention to the Premier's criticism of the old confederation methods of settling the finances of the provinces. He criticised them. He always does criticise whatever the fathers of confederation have done. He leaves it to be inferred that if he had been a father of confederation and had lived at that time, he would have done differently. He entered into a somewhat elaborate criticism of the financial methods on which the old provinces were framed. He said: You make one set of authorities the gatherers of the money, and you make another set, the provinces, the spenders, and the spenders who do not gather it do not feel any responsibility, and consequently they are not held in check. And to-day, if there is one menace that fronts this Dominion of Canada, it is the menace of financial terms which seemingly can never be finally settled; which arises from the fact that every province has gone into competition with the Dominion in matters which it never should have taken up. Take the subsidizing of railways, for instances. For that purpose it has lavishly run into debt and lavishly expended; and when the time for payment comes, it sets its face Ottawawards, and says: We want the financial terms of this confederation opened up again. They have been opened up again and again. That is what the Prime Minister inveighed against; that is what he characterized; that is what he deplored. Well, Sir, he had a brand new slate—there was not a mark upon it. He was making too great provinces, the greatest that ever were made in this Dominion. He had only one responsibility, and no ties or bonds in arranging the financial terms of these two great provinces of the west on a better basis, such as would please himself and avoid the rocks and shoals of the old financial arrangements made by the fathers of confederation, and what is the result? He has done two things; he has violated the very system which was adopted previously in arranging the financial terms of this Dominion with these provinces. He has, on the other hand, laid down no principle and adopted no financial arrangement which has avoided the very rocks and shoals of which he spoke, and which he deprecated should have been left by the fathers of confederation. Where has he been consistent with the old terms in the matter of legislative allowance? If you take population into account, the legislative allowance is not on the same level with the legislative allowance given to the older provinces. If you take the debt allowance, there is no parity between them. If you take the subsidy based on the population allowance, the others stopped at a population of 400,000. On what principle should these have a population allowance of 800,000? And so, all through, he has not improved upon the principle, but he has violated the spirit and the letter of each of the arrangements with the old provinces. What has happened? Two things have happened. The first is that all the older provinces have already commenced their march towards Ottawa to ask for a revision of the financial terms. They say: Our expenses are increasing; we have exploited all we well can for the purpose of revenue; we want more money; you have been lavish with these new provinces, and we want you to revise our terms and give us at least the equal of what you give to them. How can the Premier after this say to the province of New Brunswick and the province of Nova Scotia, your eighty cents per head stops when you reach 400,000, when you say to Alberta and Saskatchewan your eighty cents per head does not stop until you reach 800,000. Why should not the limit be placed at 800,000 for the other provinces as well as for the these two? That is the kind of reasoning which will be relied upon; and when all the provinces join together and march upon Ottawa and demand a revision, who is to withstand that demand? Not the gentlemen who are in power to-day. Of that I feel quite certain. They will make terms at once, for party and political reasons if for no other, and there will be a vast increase in the expenditures of this Dominion in the way of subsidies to the older provinces, while on the other hand there will be no finality with regard to the west. It is as impossible as it would be to make water run up hill, to limit those two great provinces, after having kept all their land, to a million a year of revenue; if a million dollars per year, compared with their needs are not at all sufficient. And so I say that you have no finality in your arrangement with the new provinces and that you are giving to the old provinces just cause for demanding a revision. I do not suppose that I have all the wisdom in the world, and whilst I have outlined these few suggestions as to what I think might have been done. I dare say there are gentlemen on each side of the House who will find weak spots in them ; but there is a way by which the early years of these provinces could be tided over and they could be set out on their great life race with a much more magnificent provision for their yearly expenditures than they now get under these Bills, and that is by endowing them with the lands. With reference to immigration I was sorry to hear the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver)—I know he did not mean it in his heart—express the view that every man who came as a settler to the Northwest was really a load on the province. You should not say that out loud. You may think it in your own heart, but keep it behind doors, because it is not politic to say to these settlers : Every one of you is a burden to us ; you make us pay out $20 a year, and we would not have to pay that if you had not come. I do not believe that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) really thinks that but he should not say it.

Mr. SCOTT. Has my hon. friend ever glanced over the communications from the Northwest government to this government within recent years ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes I have, and I have listened to my hon. friend reading the minutes of council of 1884. I do not suppose he has any great reverence for the authorities he read. These are all nice things for an argument ; they may be useful in a debating school ; they may be pitched at an opponent so as to give warrant for saying to him : I have floored you. But after all can we not come down to the principle which should guide us. I have not argued this question from a party point of view. There is nothing in my argument which I intended to be taken in that spirit. What I want is that we should do the very best we can by these great provinces. I want them to have for all the years of their future the best provisions we can give them. With regard to that immigrant, I think he is of infinitely more use to your new provinces than to the Dominion. True he pays his customs tax ; and if he be liberal in his eating and drinking and smoking, he pays some excise taxes too. But how small a proportion that is to the yearly toil he is putting into his land as a citizen of your province, adding to it two-fold, four-fold, twenty-fold, becoming a citizen who is a member of your society, who keeps up your schools and your churches, who does for himself and his family what is absolutely necessary to make a country great, who makes of himself and his family, reputable, honourable, moral, religious and progressive citizens. If that immigrant is worth $8 a year to the Dominion from a money point of view, he is worth, from all the best points of view, eighty times that to the province in which he builds his home, raises his family and rears citizens for the state. So we must not look at the question merely from the point of view of dollars and cents. But there is enough in it in dollars and cents to make the Dominion government still do its duty in the matter of immigration, even though these lands are given over to the provinces. I would not say that the Dominion government should not continue its immigration work in a reasonable and moderate way. I believe that every year from this out less will have to be spent to bring immigrants to Canada, and not many years will pass before this extraordinary expenditure may all be stopped. The men and women who will be your immigration agents will be those who have gone out to that country, who have made themselves homes there and who have spread the news of what they have done to the great outside portions of the world from which they came. Every year there will be less necessity for this immense expenditure until within a comparatively short period we will be where the United States is to-day, and instead of spending a dollar to get people to come to the country we will have to spend money to regulate the stream of immigration. There is no reason for the Dominion government giving up its efforts in the way of immigraton ; and the argument of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has not affected me in the least, regarding the likelihood of the local governments not encouraging immigration. Why should not the local governments want to get settlers into that country ? In order to build up the country you must have settlers. And these provinces propose to go ahead and therefore will be in sympathy with all well ordered immigration. Surely the people living in the atmosphere of the Northwest, who have been born and brought up there, or have lived there a number of years and are right on the spot, will know better what kind of immigrants they want, where to place them, and how to deal with them, than we who come here from all ends of the Dominion, and the majority of whom have never lived in the Northwest. It is impossible for a man born and brought up in Nova Scotia, and who has never seen the western prairies, to form any adequate idea of that country. A man requires to have visited it often or to have lived there, or to have been born and have grown up there, to appreciate it properly. Why should there be any clash between the Dominion and a well ordered province, in directing the stream of immigration. There could not be, because men are sensible and reasonable in the west as well as here. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) gave a very good legal reason why, if it were absolutely necessary, there should not be conflicting laws with reference to immigration. We have not heard a really good argument why these provinces should be deprived of the great land possessions which lie within their borders, either as regards financial terms or immigration.

But, judge yourself what pride, what hope, what energy would be given to the great province of Alberta or Saskatchewan if it knew it had these millions of fertile acres, that it was the manager of them, that it was the trustee for its future citizens, and that out of that immense acreage, so vast and so rich a heritage, it could provide for all the wants of a great future and could administer its own. What a different feeling that would be from that which will arise when they look at the lands, at the timber, at the minerals and are compelled to say: We have nothing to do with these; they are here in our midst, and our police regulations, our municipal laws, our provincial administration conserves them and to a large extent adds to their value; but they do not belong to us, we are not permitted to have them or administer them. There is something in the pride of a country as in the pride of a man. The settler who goes to northern Ontario and takes up 160 acres of land, is told: You may have this land, but of all the timber standing up on it you shall not have one stick except what you need to build your house and barn. And he feels: This is not my farm; I have the surface soil, but what grows upon it does not belong to me. And is he satisfied? No, he is not and will not be. He has not the pride of a man who owns what he uses. The same pride and the same energy that ownership inspires would give more intense life to the province that has its complete birthright. Now, my remarks have been crude; and they may meet with favour or they may not. But such as they are, Mr. Chairman, you and hon. members on the other side of the House are perfectly welcome to them.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has taken some credit to himself—and I think he is entitled to it—for not having made a partisan speech. I wish I could congratulate him on making a speech that would tend to good understanding and goodwill throughout the Dominion. I think there can be only one conclusion reached by those who have heard the remarks of the hon. member, and that is, that he was most anxious to create dissatisfaction between the new provinces with the terms that have been granted them, and likewise to create dissatisfaction in the old provinces for the same reason.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) may say that I was anxious to do that, and I could say there was not the least trace of that anxiety in my mind. I wanted to show what were the absolute results of the policy that is being carried out. But I had no desire to sow dissension in Edmonton.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. OLIVER. Perhaps I have made a mistake in suggesting the hon. gentleman's motive.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman may say that my remarks will have that effect. but certainly that was not what I had in mind.

Mr. OLIVER. That is what I wished to say; and I thank the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) for giving me the right words. I think it will be agreed that that must be the effect of his remarks, so far as they have effect. I thought that the most regrettable feature of the argument was that which laid great stress on the assumption that the people of the west were deprived of their control of the timber, lands and minerals because these things were held in the ownership of the Dominion. The people of the west are citizens of the Dominion, and the ownership of these lands by the Dominion is not less ownership by the west than if that ownership rested with the provincial government. I think it is a pity that, in the stress of argument in this House, such ideas should be advanced, especially in the forceful, energetic and logical way which the hon. member (Mr. Foster) has at command. It would be most unfortunate if the people of the west should be educated into the idea that in any way they were not citizens of the Dominion, sharing in all the liberties, all the rights, all the properties of the Dominion, as they certainly do. It matters not so much whether these properties are administered by the provincial or by the Dominion government, so they be well administered, so the policy and administration is in the best interest of all the provinces. In this case it seems to me what is in the interest of the country must be in the interest of the province, and what is in the interest of the province must be in the interest of the country.

I have one criticism to offer on the point of view taken by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). That point of view is the same that has been taken so persistently by our friends on the other side of the House. They insist on treating this question of ownership of the lands and dealing with the lands as a matter of revenue rather than of as a matter of development. Now, in my estimation that is where they are absolutely at variance with the whole spirit of the west. The spirit of the west is that, whether these lands are given away or sold, or whatever shall be done with them, the object and aim shall be the development of those resources, the bringing of those resources into active use; the main object is not to derive a sum of money for their sale.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN: If the hon. gentleman will permit me I would like to ask a question. I understood distinctly from his predecessor (Mr. Sifton) that the policy of this government was to make a revenue from these lands. Argument was made and the policy distinctly announced by the ex-Minister of the Interior in the session of 1903. He said: We have 25,000,000 acres of land which will be readily disposed of, and we can sell them within ten years at $3 per acre, and in that way we can reimburse the country for more than its expenditure in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not dispute the statement, but I do dispute the inference. If the leader of the opposition will make a comparison between the statement said to have been made by the ex-Minister of the Interior in regard to the sale of these lands at a low fixed price and the suggestion made a few minutes ago by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) that the lands should be treated on the same principle as our school lands which are held for the purpose of squeezing the last cent of value out of them, he will realize the difference between the two policies and systems of administration; the difference between the idea held by the people out west and the idea so persistently advanced by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House in this discussion. In one case the idea was that these lands should pass out of the hands of the Dominion and into the hands of the settlers. I think that idea was specifically stated in the remarks of the Minister of the Interior; certainly, it was the intention; and, inasmuch as that hon. gentleman mentioned a fixed price, whether that price should be adhered to or not, it was clear that the idea was absolutely contrary to the idea suggested by the hon. member for North Toronto.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me a word? When the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) sold for $1.50 an acre, part in money and part in scrip, a very large acreage to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, did he do it with the idea that the land should pass at the cheapest rate possible from the hands of the government into the hands of the settler? Let my hon. friend say from the information that he has whether one single acre of this land which passed for $1.50 of money and scrip to that land company, has gone into the hands of the actual settler at less then from $5 to $10 per acre. There is a practical proof of what my hon. friend's predecessor thought with reference to it. Add to that the proposition explained by my hon. friend that 50,000,000 acres could be set apart and sold in order to reimburse the cost of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and you have both the proposition and actual thing carried out, and both are against my hon. friend.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not gather that the sale to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company is at all against the proposition I laid down. The sale was made to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company at a certain price per acre, as the hon. gentleman has said, a low fixed price per acre, on condition of the lands being settled. The company which got the lands at that low price were under contract, it was a condition of purchase, that they should place settlers upon the lands, and neither he nor I have any means of knowing to what expense the company was compelled to go in securing these settlers and placing them on those lands. The essential point is to get settlers on the land, and that is a point which our hon. friends opposite seem to miss. The land as land has no value, it is worth nothing, it is the use of the land that gives the value, it is the requirement of that land by the people that gives it value. That land may stand from now till doomsday, as it has stood from the creation until now, without being of any value unless settlers go upon it and make it of value by producing wealth out of it.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend must not carry that argument too far, because the instance I cited is directly against them. The land does have value given to it by the work of the labourer. The land has a value before the labourer has put his spade into a single foot of its soil. The land that was sold for $1 or $1.50 per acre had no settlers upon it, the land that was retailed out by the go-between company had no labourer's spade or plough put into it when it had increased in value from $1.50 up to $5 or $10, but it was the prospective idea that by-and-by the real worker would come in and would raise enough from it to enable him to pay the $10 that came to the go-between. But my hon. friend has no basis, financial or otherwise for saying that there is no value in the land until the settler goes to work on it, there is.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course I do not wish to enter into an academic discussion with my hon. friend at this moment on the question between us. He must know that that particular land was not worth anything until it came into the possession of the worker. The value that it had was because of somebody having worked the land and having demonstrated that it could be worked to advantage. The ultimate increase in the value of the land does depend, not necessarily on that particular piece of land being worked, but on the possibility of its production being demonstrated by the work on land there or thereabouts, and the demand for that land that comes by reason of the presence of the settlers. The company who bought that land had to go to the expense of advertising it and of bringing settlers there. I do not know, and he does not know what the expense was, and there is where our hon. friends opposite altogether miss the point of how the value of land comes about. Our lands lay there for many years after they came under the control of the Dominion of Canada, after we had railroads built through the country, and instead of increasing in value, if such a thing were possible they decreased in value. But they at last began to increase. We on this side of the House say it was because of the policy of the government, because of the administration of the Minister of the Interior ; they may give any other reason they like, but the fact was that the land did not increase in value until settlers came in to settle upon it. When they hold that the land was a value in itself, I say they are mistaking the point altogether. The land only has a value in so far as it is in demand by settlers. When my hon. friend made his careful calculation as to setting apart certain tracts of land, and the Dominion government advancinig money on the security of that land, he based the success of his project on the idea that the country would continue to prosper, that settlement would continue to increase, that the price of land would continue to rise. Now that supposition is all based on the success of the administration in securing progressive settlement upon the land, and if circumstances arise in which that increase of value does not continue, then his whole calculation falls to the ground. The first thing is to have such a policy and such an administration as will bring settlers into the country, as will give value to the land, as will give revenue to the Dominion, and will do all those desirable things that my hon. friend depicted as occurring if the land were in the hands of the provincial authorities. The thing is to get the settler, and the question of who administers the land is a small consideration. It is a small matter whether it is the Dominion or the province, but we say that the Dominion is in a better position to administer the lands satisfactorily and well than is the province. My hon. friend spoke of the time when these provinces would have a population of millions, and he declared that when that time came they would have their faces set towards Ottawa, and come here demanding inicreased subsidies. Otherwise they would have to resort to direct taxation, or else they would not have the funds with which to carry on the provincial government. There is a possibility such as he has spoken of. But when a few minutes after, he suggested that I was under a mistake in saying that the increase of settlement would increase the burdens of the provincial government, and went on to point out that the settler who goes into the province is a benefit to the provincial government and not a burden, that he is not a source of expenditure to the provincial government, I ask him respectfully, how he reconciles his two arguments. If so large a population is going to put the provincial government behind financially, then certainly my statement is borne out that the increase of settlement does increase the burden of provincial government. As my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) has pointed out, every communication that has come from the Norhwest government to this Dominion asking for an increased subsidy from year to year has pointed out, and properly so, that the increase became necessary on account of increased settlement.

Now, I want to say a word in regard to the objections that have been persisted in by some of our hon. friends on the other side to the inclusion of the district of Athabaska in these two new provinces. Do these gentlemen not know that the province of Manitoba, this pet province of theirs, is, as we are told by the papers, on the verge of rebellion ? The government is about to resign and demand a dissolution, because that province has not had the territory to its north included within its boundaries ; and the reason that it makes these demands, the reason for the excitement in that province, is because these provinces of the west have been given the increase of territory that the province of Manitoba desires, and which every authority of our friends on the opposite side in that province declares it is entitled to and should have and cannot get along without. If the government of Manitoba is honest and sincere in its declaration that the province of Manitoba is entitled to an addition to its northern boundary—and who is there to say it is not—surely these two provinces are equally entitled to the inclusion of this territory of Athabaska. I shall not go over what has been gone over so often as to the certainties of development of that part of the district of Athabaska, which will form part of the province of Alberta. There is no reason from any point of view why that country should not be included in the new province. There is every reason, from every point of view, why it should be included in the new province.

As to the causes of offence which the other provinces have against the Dominion for the terms that have been made with these new provinces, I will take the liberty of thinking at any rate that our hon. friends who argue so eloquently, who have argued so eloquently and forcefully, for the control by these new provinces of their lands for the sake of revenue from those lands, are rather anxious to save the Dominion treasury from the payment of the subsidy which this agreement gives those provinces than to give the provinces control of their lands. I think that if the matter is discussed to a finish that will be found to be the principal trouble. As far as we in the west are concerned, we know perfectly well, we are practical people, and we know that we cannot eat our cake and have it, we know that we cannot sell our lands and give them away, and we believe that so long as the government of the Dominion pursues the policy of using the lands for purposes of settlement rather than for purposes of revenue, it is a very much better arrangement for us that we should get a cash subsidy and have the Dominion still administer these lands in this way than that we should depend on the lands for our revenue, and thereby be driven to administer them, as our friends on the other side seem to persist they should be administered, for purposes of revenue. We had that principle in the west too long, and we do not want it any more.

Mr. BENNETT. I happened to be in the Northwest a couple of years ago, when the leader of the opposition held a series of public meetings throughout that country, and I must say that this question of the ownership of public lands attracted a great deal of attention at the different meetings, and if at these meetings the arguments advanced by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and those advanced by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) in this House had been presented, I think that my friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) would have scored rather heavily on the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). As I understand it, and I have listened very carefully to the Minister of the Interior, he bases the claim that the Dominion should still hold the lands on two important points. The first one is the policy that more money was gained by the Dominion as a whole than by these provinces from the introduction of settlers into that country. Now, if that is a good argument, it is not one that was relied upon by the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), for this reason, that a settler in the Northwest, if you are going to look only at what you get out of him in the way of customs duties, would be no more valuable than a settler in Ontario. I have here an atlas published by the Department of the Interior, 'Geography of the Dominion of Canada,' which deals largely with Western Canada. Out of sixty odd pages, nearly all are devoted to the Northwest country, and not a plea is advanced asking people to come into the old provinces other than the west. This is rather a reflection on the province of Ontario, because hon. gentlemen opposite will remember that when the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill was before the House one of the greatest pleas that was advanced for the taking up of that measure by this parliament was the fact that we had in Ontario a vast area known as the clay belt, which was one of the greatest assets in the whole Dominion, and the ministers from Ontario upheld their position by continually referring to that great asset of Ontario, and yet the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) apparently in this atlas pays little or no attention to that, so that his view was that the asset which the country desired was not a settler from whom to draw customs duties, but rather it was that a settler should come into the country, become part of the country, raise grain and other products, send these out of the country and in return bring back the money and spend that money among our own people, and I think that is the great basis of success, not only of this province, but of the whole Dominion, or any part or portion of it. The next point the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) took was on the question of immigration, that immigration could be more successfully handled and induced by the department over which he presides than by provincial departments. It would be very easy for any province to imitate the methods which the Department of the Interior has employed to induce that immigration. In the first place, I think that if they had left politics out of this matter to a great extent it would have been much better. One of the greatest experiments for inducing settlers to come to this country from England was the sending of a number of settlers from Manitoba and the Northwest to the old country who lectured at different points and endeavoured to persuade the people that this was a desirable field for immigration. I have no fault to find with that; I think it was an admirable plan. These were men speaking from actual experience, and I believe no better system could have been pursued in the old country than that. It was asserted at that time that these lecturers were chiefly recruited from the ranks of hon. gentlemen opposite. Be that as it may, I think that if the provinces had the handling of a similar line of scheme they could do it better than the Dominion, but the fact is, as pointed out by the hon. member for North Toronto, settlement has gone in there and the government could not have prevented it. This administration have had, according to this atlas, about a dozen immigration agents in the United States; I notice the names here of some gentlemen who were known to me personally. These were stationed at Spokane and at one point and another in the United States. We all know that years ago settlers went from Ontario to the Dakotas, and settled there and in Minnesota, and the reports they made induced other settlers to go from Ontario to these states. I know that from the township of Tiny, in Simcoe county, where there is a large French Canadian settlement, a large number of men, twenty-five or thirty years ago, went to these states, and by reason of the fact that they were successful, they led others of their friends in the same direction.

How much more difficult is it to attract immigrants from Ontario and the older provinces into our Territories, than to induce them to come from the Dakotas and the adjoining states. There was only an imaginary boundary between Canada and the United States; these American farmers knew they had been successful in the States where conditions similar to those in Canada existed; they knew their lands in the United States could be sold at a high price and they knew that the terms on which they could acquire lands in Canada were easy. The greatest factor which has tended to the development of the Northwest has been the trips made through the country by newspaper men who disseminated their experience through the United States press. No fair man will deny that more has been done by this agency which cost us nothing, than by all the immigration agents this government has placed in the United States. I quote some samples of the literature published in the American press :

A special correspondent of the Chicago 'Tribune,' writing from Rosthern, Saskatchewan, Northwest Territories, on July of last year says:

The American invasion of Canada is no more a figure of speech. The tide of emigration now setting in to the Northwest Territories is a movement of population comparable only to the great wave which for four generations swept into the United States from the Atlantic to the Rockies. The United States became for the first time a country of emigrants as well as immigrants, and is giving her northern neighbours experienced farmers, intelligent, trained in western agriculture, good citizens, thrifty, progressive sons of the men who turned the rock prairies into an agricultural empire, and now seek new homes with a patrimony and experience which their fathers lacked.—Chicago 'Tribune.'

A new nation is being born under our very face and eyes. Things are shaping faster in Canada than most of us here in the United States realize ; indeed, faster than Canada herself realizes. The Northwest of Canada is rapidly filling up with a new life from eastern Canada and from our own Northwest. Farmers in Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, and the Dakotas are selling their valuable farms and are moving with their families, implements and live stock, up into this great harvest field, and are receiving a most generous welcome.—'Saturday Evening Post' Philadelphia, Pa.

The editors of the 'American Agriculturist,' recently made a 4,000 mile tour through Manitoba, Assiniboia, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The report of what they saw, after referring to the adaptability of western Canada for the growing of small grains and to the excellence of the stock, says :

Among the settlers are many from the United States. Such rapid development as we saw is only possible in a country blessed with a fertile soil and a prosperous people. The future of western Canada is full of promise. Rapid and substantial development is certain. When the newer part of the United States was settled, it had much to contend with. There were no railroads, consequently no markets. With the settlers in Canada everything is different. Railroads have preceded them, furnishing at once a market and means of securing the comforts of modern farm life.—'American Agriculturist.'

This information and this advertising of Canada in the newspapers of the United States has tended greatly to help the cause of immigration into our Territories. It has been argued by my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) and others, that if these lands had been given to the provinces they had peculiar advantages to administer them wisely, and, they would have had the opportunity to apportion them to railroads by way of bonuses if they so desired. There are cases in which the provinces can better deal with these assets than can the Dominion. In the district of Nipissing in the province of Ontario there are large deposits of nickel and copper, which I believe will become of vast value to the province and to the Dominion at large, when by salutary laws the export of nickel in its raw state is prohibited.

Another case, which may by analogy turn out in the Northwest is the fact that the Dominion government—I am not now referring to either political party—neglected to place an export duty on logs, resulting in the closing of the saw-mills on the Georgian bay and Lake Huron. Millions and millions of Canadian logs kept the Michigan mills busy at the expense of Canadian mills, and mill owners after failing to impress their ideas on the Dominion government, appealed to the government of Ontario. The government of Ontario bowed to public opinion in the matter and did what the Dominion government failed to do, to the great advantage of the province and to the great advantage of the Dominion at large. Indeed so successful has been the result of this policy that no political party would dare to interfere with it to-day. I believe that the administration of the lands in the Northwest could be much better conducted by the local ministers of the Crown who are on the spot, than by the mere agents of the Dominion ministers who are of necessity twenty-five hundred miles away from the scene of operations. For all these reasons I believe that the administration of the lands should be handed to the provinces, and I believe further that if the provinces are to be tied down to a fixed annual payment, some day, perhaps in the not distant future, these provinces will be coming back to us asking for better terms. I believe that if the Minister of the Interior advanced before public meetings in the west the argument which he has advanced in this House to-night he would not touch a very responsive chord in the hearts of the settlers in the Northwest, who, I believe, are of the opinion that the provinces should have control of their lands, and not the Dominion government as this Bill proposes.

Mr. LAKE. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has proposed one method at any rate under which it might be possible for the new provinces to realize to some degree the actual value of their public resources. I consider that the figures quoted by the hon. gentleman were not in any way too roseate. The member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) made a very hopeful estimate of what the population of these new provinces might be in the near future, and if that estimate be correct it is not only possible but probable that the figures given by the hon. member (Mr.

Foster) would be soon realized by the provinces should the public lands remain in their possession. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has shown further, that there is a way by which ample means would be placed at the disposal of the local administration without entrenching on their capital in the way of public lands. The Minister of the Interior in his reply did not attempt to criticise the figures given by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). In fact he admitted there was a great deal in them when he stated that the effect of that speech would be to create dissatisfaction with the financial terms among the people of the west. That statement clearly proves to this House that the Minister of the Interior thinks that the people of the west will be satisfied that the suggestions made by the member for North Toronto are well within the bounds of probability.

The minister says the object of the sale of lands in the west should be to develop the country rather than to derive a revenue, and he has deprecated the policy which he says the members of the opposition would adopt, of squeezing the last cent of value that could be got out of the land, as he claims has been done in the disposal of the school lands. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) very well called his attention to the sale of homestead lands to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company a short time ago at $1 an acre. Surely the fact remains that in that particular case every cent is being squeezed out of the people who want to buy these lands. There is this bad feature about it also, that the proceeds of this squeezing goes into the hands of a private company, and not into the hands of the Dominion or provincial authorities ; and yet it seems to me that the Minister of the Interior approves of the policy which was initiated at that time, of selling a vast tract of land to a private company, with the intention of making that company an immigration agent on a large scale. I hold that if this policy is continued, as we may anticipate will be the case if the Minister of the Interior so highly approves of it, it will have a most pernicious effect upon the immigration into the Northwest. I have already seen, in the part of the country with which I am familiar, the result which the possession of these lands held for speculation by the land companies is having upon immigration. There are a number of homesteads in that part of the country, but it is impossible for the ordinary settler to get a homestead from the government. As a general rule, however, one of the land companies will be able to offer him for sale one of its pieces of land, and in some way or another procure for him the right of homesteading a piece of government land alongside of it. That is a matter of common report all over that country, and persons have told me of it from their own personal experience. I wish to say a word or two with reference to the arguments put forward by the Minister of the Interior in regard to the Dominion government having a greater interest in the establishment of settlers in the Northwest than the provincial government has. Talking of governments alone, I think that is perfectly true ; but I think the deduction he draws from that statement is altogether wrong. It appears to me that the Immigration Department will continue to be maintained on its present very elaborate basis ; but if you had in addition the province directly interested in the lands, you would have it also working for immigration. We have already had an explanation of the way the provincial government of Ontario is working for immigration on its own account. Reading the report of the Minister of the Interior the other day, I noticed that the Dominion Department of Immigration was claiming credit for putting a large number of farm hands into the province of Ontario during the year. I was told that the provincial authorities rather objected to that claim on the part of the Dominion authorities, considering that they had had a very large share in obtaining those immigrants. At any rate, the efforts of the Ontario government must have been successful to a very large extent ; and I hold that it is better to have both the Dominion and the provincial governments interested in procuring immigration, for the more immigration agents we have the better for the country. I wish to put on record an argument which was used by the Northwest government when it was requesting the grant of provincial autonomy from the Dominion government and was requesting at the same time that full ownership of the public domain should be vested in the province. As this deals to a certain extent with the legal aspect of the question, I wish to see it upon Hansard :

> The right and title to the public domain is in the Crown, but in the colonies directly established by Great Britain the beneficiary interest in the revenues arising from the sale or other disposal of the public domain has been surrendered by the Crown for the benefit of the people residing in such colonies. The Union Act of 1840 specifically provided that the territorial and other revenues then at the disposal of the Crown should be placed in future at the disposal of the province of Canada then being formed. Similar dispositions were made, either by statute or by the exercise of the royal prerogative, in favour of the other colonies in British North America. The British North America Act continued these arrangements for the benefit of the provinces forming the confederation, and the sections of the Bill under reference provide for the extension of the principle to the province of which it purports to provide for the formation.
> It may be noted that there has been no legislation or exercise of the royal prerogative transferring to Canada or otherwise, any right to enjoy the beneficiary interest in the territorial revenues of the Northwest Territories. The fifth section of Rupert's Land Act of 1868, like the Order in Council of June 23, 1870, for which it is the authority, goes no further than to provide that upon the admission of Rupert's Land into the Dominion, it shall be lawful for the parliament of Canada . . . to make, ordain and establish within the land and territory so admitted . . . all such laws, institutions and ordinances, and to constitute such courts and officers, as may be necessary for the peace, order and good government of Her Majesty's subjects and others therein. The words of the Order in Council dealing with the admission into the union of that part of the Northwest Territories formerly known as the Northwestern Territory are more sparing as to number but appear to convey a somewhat wider extent of power, as they not only provide for the 'good government' of the territory, but also for its 'future welfare' at the hands of Canada. With the exception of the grant made to the Hudson Bay Company by the imperial Order in Council of June 23, 1870, section 30 of 'An Act to amend and continue the Acts thirty-two and thirty-three Victoria, chapter three, and to establish and provide for the government of the province of Manitoba,' confirmed by the British North America Act, 1871, appears to be the only authority under which any portion of the rights of the Crown in Rupert's Land or the Northwestern Territory has ever been alienated.

The Act last referred to is the Act under the authority of which the parliament of Canada has from time to time made 'provision for the administration, peace, order and good government' of the Northwest Territories, being a territory not for the time being included in any province, and it is also the Act under which parliament will provide for the constitution and administration of any province which may be established, and for the passing of laws for the peace, order and good government of such province.

The difference between legislative jurisdiction and proprietary rights was clearly laid down by Lord Herschell in the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the Fisheries case, but it may be admitted that the necessities of administration, and the duties and obligations of government and legislation as regards these Territories, assumed by parliament, together with the established imperial practice in such cases, would probably, though not necessarily, carry with them the privilege of appropriating the territorial and other revenues of the Territories for the purposes of maintaining good government and furthering the ends of legislation. Upon the formation within the Territories of the promised political institutions bearing analogy to those which exist in the several provinces of the Dominion, it is submitted that whatever interest Canada may have had or exercised in respect of the territorial revenues will devolve upon the new province. As Great Britain has divested herself, for the benefit of her colonies, of all her proprietary rights in the public domain within those colonies so, it is thought, Canada should do with respect to any claim that may be referred on behalf of the Dominion to the beneficiary interest in the public domain within that part of the Northwest Territories to be included in any province to be established.

I desire to put that short argument on record. It is expressed in much clearer and more concise terms than I could possibly hope to do it. I do not wish to take up the time of the House further than to say that in my opinion the members from the Northwest Territories on the government side must accept their full share of responsibility for all time to come for the policy of this government in retaining the public lands of these Territories. Without their support, that policy could not have been forced through the House. No doubt these hon. gentlemen consider they are acting for the best, but I hope they will seriously consider the arguments which have been advanced this evening and endeavour to have this clause in the Bill changed and the public lands given to the new provinces.

Mr. P. TALBOT. I would like to take up a few minutes explaining the basis on which I reason out this matter from a practical standpoint. As nearly as I could estimate, the area of the two provinces will be about 300 million acres or perhaps slightly more than that. We know that the northern and eastern part of Athabaska and the northeastern part of the old Saskatchewan district will never be fit for actual settlement. I think it is a very liberal estimate to say that we have 200,000,000 acres of agricultural land in those two provinces. Now, since the Dominion government continues the policy of giving free grants to settlers or homesteaders, we actually in the provinces get half the land. We get the even-numbered sections just as thoroughly, just as completely as if we got all the land and were to continue the policy of giving free homesteads. That leaves then 100,000,000 acres of odd-numbered sections which will be retained by the Dominion government. We must remember that the odd-numbered sections 11 to 29 already belong to us by a previous arrangement. These are the schools lands. That will make 11,000,000 acres of that land which clearly belongs to the province, in spite of anything we can do at present. That leaves to the Dominion government really 89,000,000 acres, that is 89,000,000 of odd-numbered sections. But there have been alienated to railway and colonization companies some 30,000,000 acres of these odd-numbered sections; that leaves a balance of 59,000,000 acres.

Mr. SPROULE. This return which I hold in my hand only gives 25,000,000 of acres alienated, namely, Alberta, 13,000,000; Saskatchewan, 12,000,000.

Mr. P. TALBOT. In addition to that a large amount was given to colonization companies, so that you may take 30,000,000 acres as about correct. That will leave 59,000,000 acres in the hands of the Dominion government for the two provinces. So that when we made that calculation of 25,000,000 acres for each province, we were not very far astray. If hon. gentlemen opposite will look into this matter carefully, they will come to the conclusion that there has been a fair arrangement both for the provinces and the Dominion government. Our revenue will be at least equal to that of the other provinces in the Dominion, and I think it is fair to all parties.

Mr. HENDERSON. I confess that the figures given by the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. Talbot) rather surprise me. In the statement brought down by the government giving the quantity of land vested in the Crown in these proposed provinces I find the following :

Lands vested in the Crown in the proposed provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan respectively :
Alberta, 129,556,903 ; Saskatchewan, 120,880,366.

These are certainly very far in excess of the figures mentioned by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. P. TALBOT. Your estimate is 250,000,000, and I was estimating the whole at 300,000,000. The hon. member for North York estimated that there are 228,000,000 of agricultural land. I put it at 200,000,000 and I think I am more nearly correct. I claim that not more than two-thirds of the entire area is land fit for agricultural purposes.

Mr. HENDERSON. The figures I gave are the number of acres of land still vested in the Crown, not what is contained within the area of the two provinces. I am not dealing with that. I am aware that a considerable portion has been disposed of in a variety of ways, such as subsidizing railways, homesteads and so forth. That leaves us still nearly 250,000,000 acres in the two provinces. That is very far in excess of the amount given by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. P. TALBOT. The hon. gentleman will surely not say that there are 250,000,000 acres of agricultural or arable land.

Mr. HENDERSON. The statement is of lands vested in the Crown.

Mr. P. TALBOT. That portion of eastern part of Athabaska is of the same formation as the Rainy River, which is not arable land.

Mr. HENDERSON. Possibly not ; but, of course, we have no information at hand to-night on that point.

Mr. P. TALBOT. Any good map will give a person an idea of what are agricultural lands, and that is how I reach my conclusion.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not intend to detain the committee for more than a short time. I confess that I have been more than surprised to hear the statements of hon. members from this Northwest country. I confess that I had the opinion that the people of the Northwest wanted complete autonomy, wanted the full right of self-government including the right to administer their lands. As it was very forcibly put by Mr. Haultain in a letter addressed to the Minister of the Interior on the 31st of January, 1903 :

What the people wanted there was equal rights with all the other provinces of the Dominion and the same financial consideration that has been given to those provinces. Control of public domain in the west by the west and for the west.

Now, I am sorry to say there has not been a single member on the other side of this House coming from the west who has shown himself willing, during this debate, to stand up in defence of these provinces and to advocate the rights of the people of the west in the west. What their motive is I cannot possibly conceive. I have always understood that what the people of the west wanted was complete autonomy. In the petitions laid before this House during the present session with reference to the Bill before us, wherever reference was made to the land, in every instance, I believe I am right in saying the prayer of that petition was that the people of the west should have the right to govern their lands. I do not recall a single instance where the people petitioned that the Dominion government should administer the lands belonging to the Crown in that country.

Now, I do not believe that the people of the west will be satisfied with this kind of legislation. I believe we are simply creating a grievance that will have to be removed some day, otherwise there will be dissatisfaction in that country for many years to come. Hon. gentlemen opposite may be perfectly sincere, but I cannot for the life of me believe that members from the west supporting the government reflect to-day the feeling of that country. But then they tell us : See the verdict in Edmonton. Have we had a verdict from Edmonton with respect to the land question or the school question ? I say we have not. Edmonton is a very large district and I apprehend that a large proportion of the people, probably one-half or three-quarters did not know that there was an election going on. The statement that they expressed an opinion is absolutely absurd. They had no opportunity to vote, nor do I believe they had the opportunity of knowing that the question was being submitted to them who their representative should be. When these hon. gentlemen say : Look at the verdict from Edmonton ; I say : Look at the verdict from Western Assiniboia. If I mistake not, Western Assiniboia was asked to pronounce a verdict on this question before Edmonton was. And their answer was : Stay away, don't come here, for the verdict will be against you. That is a section of the country where the people could be consulted. I do not think that there is anything in the statement that because Edmonton votes for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) to be Minister of the Interior, we are to accept that as an evidence that everything was satisfactory that the people wanted a dual system of schools, that they do not want to have ownership of their own lands, and that they are satisfied to remain simply like the Indians in that section, wards of the government, ready to remain under the tutelage, care and protection of the Dominion government. Notwithstanding all the discussions that have taken place, I have not changed my mind one whit. I have not heard one argument to convince me that the people of the west do not want to have the lands within their boundaries, but would prefer that those lands should be retained and administered by the Dominion. I say that involves a grievance that never will be removed until this parliament—or some other parliament ; I do not know whether this parliament would have the power or not —undoes the mischief that we are now doing in taking away from these people what, I believe, of right belongs to them. Now, why deal with these provinces in a way different from the way in which other provinces are dealt with ? The older provinces were allowed to retain their lands. And it was a matter of pride with them. The younger western country may well point to the older provinces and ask of the Dominion : Why place us on a different basis from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, and Ontario ? Why deprive us of what belongs to us as a free people ? Or, take especially the case of the province of Quebec. In 1898 that province was given a very large addition to its Territories—I think something about 75,000,000 acres. Did any hon. gentleman on that side of the House ever suggest at that time that the province of Quebec should not be given the lands contained within the boundaries prescribed by the Act of parliament ? Not at all. The province of Quebec got that land added to its territory. The Act of parliament transferred everything that was in that area—lands, timber, minerals, water-power ; everything. Yet the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan are to be refused what the province of Quebec was given only some seven years ago. To my mind the treatment of one province by one method and of another province by another method will create dissatisfaction and constitute a grievance that will not be remedied for many years.

Now, I cannot imagine why the Minister of the Interior should believe that the people in these new provinces are better satisfied to have a financial consideration and to do without the lands. If the Minister of the Interior has carefully considered this matter he will have observed that a large consideration is to be given to the provinces besides that given as payment for the lands which the Dominion retains or takes back from the provinces. There is an allowance of $50,000 to each province for governmental purposes. There is an allowance of 80c per head of the population according to the census which is to be taken at intervals of five years—this will be a very considerable subsidy. Then here is an additional allowance on account of the provinces having no debt, amounting to something over $400,000 to each province. These are very large financial considerations out of which they can make a revenue for themselves. And I feel that the provinces would be very much better satisfied indeed than to have an additional $1,000,000 handed over, which, in any case, will not be immediately, but after the population has reached, if I remember well, a maximum of 1,200,000.

Even an increased subsidy of $1,200,000 I do not believe will satisfy the people of that northwestern country. It will be a burning question year after year amongst those people. They are a high-minded people, many of them have gone in from the old province of Ontario, from the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, many of them have come from the United States and from the British Isles, from Germany and other European countries, and they will say, why is this thus ? Why are we treated as serfs ? Some of them have come from Russia and other European countries, and they will say, we lived a long time in serfdom, we came to a free country, and we are not allowed to call our own our own, we are not allowed to call this country our own. We come here and settle in this country, and we are told it belongs to the people of Quebec, it belongs to the people of Ontario, it belongs to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Are you going to make a happy and contented people in that way ? Don't you think you would conduce a great deal more to the prosperity and happiness of that people if you were to hand over to them, or rather allow them to retain what already belongs to them, or will belong to them when we create the provinces ? When we create these new provinces, as a matter of course, automatically the land belongs to them.

We buy it back as a Dominion by paying a consideration for it. Why should the older provinces be called upon to put up a large sum of money, to tax themselves to buy back a large country simply for the purpose of giving it away—giving it away for whose benefit ? Giving it away in order to provide free homesteads. Now there are two sides to this question, there is the Northwest side and there is the side of the older provinces. For all time to come —because we assume that this law is to remain upon the statute-book—the older provinces of this country will have to tax themselves practically for eleven-twelfths of this entire payment that is given for the lands of those two provinces ; for all time to come the older provinces will have to tax themselves practically for eleven-twelfths of that sum in order that we may have lands to give away to people who go into that western country. Now what return are we going to get for it ? I am not sure but there will be a grievance in the older provinces as well as in the new. They will say, what benefit is it to us ? We are told we are going to get an immense revenue from that western country, that people will come in, and every man that comes in will be worth so much, and will contribute to the revenues of the country and make good what we tax ourselves to pay. Now I would not rely very much upon that. If the Minister of Finance is going to increase the revenues in this country so as to get money to buy this immense territory of 3,000,000 acres, he will be obliged to cripple every industry in this country by reducing taxation down to a revenue basis in order to get money to do it ; and the result will be that the old provinces of the country where industrial pursuits are carried on, will be handicapped for all time to come, and the next Minister of Finance will not be able to give this country a policy which will carry it on successfully, and give us that prosperity which we all hope will continue for many years to come. Now this is a big question. It is not simply to be looked at from the little picayune idea of whether it will be the Liberal party or the Conservative party that is going to control the vote in the Northwest, whether we are going to be able, through the land agents of the Dominion government, to go to the electors who have not yet secured patents for their lands, and tell them: Now, if you vote right you will get your patent, if you do not, dear knows when you will. Now that is a mighty small consideration if it is going to cripple the commercial industry of this country for all time to come. I think we had better broaden out our ideas ; and I hope that the Minister of the Interior, now that he occupies this high and honourable position, will throw away these picayune politics and take hold of this matter as a statesman, and be guided by statesmanship rather than by politics in dealing with the affairs of that great country.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is understood by agreement that this clause is not to be pressed to a vote to-night, and as we have been told that an amendment is likely to the moved, I propose that we proceed to consider the clause respecting the Hudson Bay Company, which was held over the other night, but which I believe is not likely to be further debated.

Mr. SPROULE. That was the agreement.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 22 is struck out, and the following is substituted therefor :

22. Nothing in this Act shall in any way prejudice or affect the rights or properties of the Hudson Bay Company as contained in the conditions under which that company surrendered Rupert's Land to the Crown, and all rights, privileges and properties conferred on the Canadian government by the said conditions shall, in so far as they relate to matters within the legislative authority of the province, belong to and be vested in the government of the said province.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What are these rights of the Hudson Bay Company which you wish to protect ?

Mr. FIELDING. If there is any further information desired, we will have to postpone this discussion.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the lands of the Hudson Bay Company be subject to taxation by the local government ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am advised they are subject to taxation now.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May 16, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES REPRESENTATION.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 156) to amend the Northwest Territories Representation Act. He said : I promised to introduce a Bill at the request of the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) to amend the Representation Act. It is based practically upon the lines of the Bill introduced last year by Mr. Casgrain, then member for Montmorency. In this Bill I have added a provision to cover a difficulty that the member for Calgary pointed out with respect to the question of the residence of a voter in the polling subdivision in which he is supposed to vote.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

VACANCY IN NORTH OXFORD.

Mr. SPEAKER. My attention having been called by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), in his place, to the fact of the demise of the Hon. James Sutherland, member for the electoral district of North Oxford, I have, in accordance with section 8, chapter 13, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, issued my warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

THE PORTFOLIO OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER. Yesterday the question was asked as to when the vacancy in the Public Works Department would be filled, and I think the minister who was in charge asked that that question be repeated to-day.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I see by the statement just made by His Honour the Speaker, that the seat of North Oxford is now vacant; and the portfolio of Public Works is also vacant. I am not in a position to make any statement to-day, but I shall have pleasure in doing so at an early day.

VETERANS OF 1866 AND 1870.

Mr. F. D. MONK. Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to call the attention of my right hon. friend to a matter of some urgency, and that is the request that was made a few days ago by the veterans of 1866 and 1870 for a grant of land from the government in recognition of their services. As my right hon. friend is aware, and the matter has been brought to my notice, the provincial legislature of Quebec is going to prorogue very shortly, and many of those interested in the petition which was presented a few days ago to the government are anxious to obtain some kind of answer from this government before that prorogation takes place, because upon that answer will largely depend the steps they intend to take with the government of Quebec. My right hon. friend will remember that when these gentlemen, who are deserving of the highest consideration, went before the Quebec government they were told by the provincial Prime Minister that their request would more properly be addressed to the federal government. Consequently, they are waiting with some anxiety for the answer of the government here in order that, before prorogation, they may, if necessary, bring the matter once more to the notice of the provincial government, and that the provincial government may, if necessary, obtain legislation for the purpose of satisfying the petitioners. I have received several letters in reference to this matter, and have been requested to call the attention of the government to the request of these claimants, and to ask for as prompt an answer as possible.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I think it is obvious to any one, and my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will agree with me, that if the veterans of 1866 and 1870 have a claim against anybody, it is the Dominion government, although I do not say that the veterans, from their point of view, have not done well to address themselves to the provincial government. Mr. Gouin, the provincial premier, I do not think went further in his answer than to say that they should first of all address themselves to the Dominion government. This they have done, and the matter is now under consideration. But I must say, and my hon. friend will not be surprised, that up to this moment the government has had no time to take that matter in hand and give it the attention which it will require before we can come to a conclusion. The matter is under consideration, and without making any pledge, I will say that I will give an answer during the present session. When the answer will be given, I am sorry to say that I can give no indication to-day to my hon. friend, but certainly it will be given during the present session.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I may add that this matter has been mentioned to me by some gentlemen residing in the province of Ontario who were on military service in 1866 and, possibly, in 1870; and I would like to make on their behalf the same claim for federal aid that has been made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) for the veterans of the province of Quebec.

THE DEFAULTING LAND AGENT, NIXON.

Mr. FOSTER. I brought a matter to the attention of the Minister of the Interior six or seven days ago, one in regard to which it should not have taken him a very long time to furnish the information. It is a matter which is a little urgent and pressing, and I would like to call the attention of the First Minister to it. The new Minister of the Interior is not as punctual in getting in here at three o'clock as some of the older ministers, for instance, my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, and that is the only period when we can well refer to the matter without delaying proceedings. If the First Minister will mention it to him, I will bring the matter up to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no objection. If the Minister of the Interior does not come in before the House rises to-day the hon. gentleman will have his answer, because it is ready.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 69) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Alberta.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

On section 22,

Nothing in this Act shall in any way prejudice or affect the rights of properties of the Hudson Bay Company acquired, held or existing under and by virtue of the conditions of the deed under which that company surrendered Rupert's Land to the Crown.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved that the following be substituted in lieu of section 22 :

Nothing in this Act shall in any way prejudice or affect the rights or properties of the Hudson Bay Company as contained in the conditions under which that company surrendered Rupert's Land to the Crown, and all rights, privileges and properties conferred on the Canadian government by the said conditions, shall, in so far as they relate to matters within the legislative authority of the province, belong to and be vested in the government of the said province.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I asked the hon. Minister of Justice last night why it was necessary to protect these rights. To my mind, if they have rights, they are protected by the original agreement and why should we go out of our way to protect these rights in this clause and especially in the clause succeeding ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) is aware that when the imperial government acquired this property from the Hudson Bay Company they acquired it subject to certain conditions which are mentioned in the title. The property was vested in the Queen in the right of the imperial parliament, and was handed over to the Dominion government subject to the same conditions as those under which the property passed from the company. The only condition of the original surrender which this section is intended to cover is the condition repeated in section 11 of the Order in Council under which the property was handed over to the Dominion and which reads as follows :

The company is to be at liberty to carry on its trade without hindrance in its corporate capacity, and no exceptional tax is to be placed on the company's land, trade or servants, nor any import duties on goods introduced by them previous to the surrender of 1870.

That last question of the import duties has ceased to be of any effect. It was merely applicable to goods imported into the country previous to the surrender of 1870.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Are not these rights protected by the original agreement without any restatement in this Act ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That may be my hon. friend's view. I do not think it is the correct view and it was not the view taken at the time that Manitoba was admitted into the Dominion as a province. This provision is adopted from the Manitoba Act.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 23,

The powers hereby granted to the said province shall be exercised subject to the provisions of section 16 of the contract set forth in the schedule to chapter 1 of the statutes of 1881, being an Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I urge the same objection in this case with even more force. Why should we go out of our way to protect the exemption the Canadian Pacific Railway has in its original contract ? This may also have been in the Manitoba Act.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, it is not there.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Whatever rights the Canadian Pacific Railway has under the contract made with the Dominion government are set out in an Act of parliament and there is no reason why we should re-enact this legislation. It is almost emphasizing its claim. This claim, in a way, has been in the courts and the matter has caused a great deal of dissatisfaction to the people in the west. This may be reinforcing the claim and we may be abandoning something that is of interest to the public by re-enacting this clause. Whatever rights the Canadian Pacific Railway has are set out in black and white in a solemn contract which has been made an Act of parliament and they ought to rest there and not be brought into this Act. On the contrary it ought to be the duty of the government to ascertain exactly what the rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway are in regard to these exemptions, and if they are burdensome, as they appear to be burdensome to the people of the North-west Territories, it should negotiate with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the surrender of any rights which it may have as to exemptions. We all know, because we have heard from the west year after year, about the grievance that exists there in regard to these exemptions. There is the Canadian Pacific Railway, the wealthiest corporation in this country. It is paying large dividends on its stock. It is making handsome profits every year. It is the richest corporation we have in Canada. The company has great possessions in the shape of lands in the west on which it pays no taxes. The poor settler in the west is paying his taxes while the Canadian Pacific Railway pays no taxes. Grant that the Canadian Pacific Railway has a right ; if that right could be commuted and if these lands could be immediately made subject to taxation an effort should be made to abolish this exemption. In the province of Ontario we know what tax exemptions are. They are an enormous burden on the people who have to pay taxes. In the city of Toronto there are millions and millions of dollars worth of property of the most valuable kind which is increasing in value every day and which is yet untaxed. It is relieved from taxation by reason of exemptions granted years and years ago. We have had some of these exemptions removed. We have given a great deal of attention to the question of exemption from taxation in the province of Ontario.

Gradually we are removing these exemptions. More and more we are asking the people who are exempt to pay their taxes. Take, for instance, the situation here in Ottawa; the citizens of Ottawa find it a great grievance to have so much Dominion property exempted from taxation and the government, recognizing that condition of affairs, is making liberal concessions to the people of Ottawa in the way of the improvement of the city and in other ways. In this way the Dominion is contributing to municipal taxation. We were told in the House the other day that Wellington street in front of these grounds is to be paved at the expense of the Dominion authorities. I say much more ought the poor settler of the west to have this grievance removed whereby he is to-day paying the municipal taxation of the Canadian Pacific Railway, one of the richest corporations in the country, and whose land which was at one time valued at $1 an acre is to-day worth $5 an acre upwards. If that is the case some effort should be made in the interest of the settlers of the west to remove this exemption and above all things we should not by this Bill re-enact the rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway whatever they are. Leave their rights to look after themselves. The Canadian Pacific Railway can look after them in the courts. I do not think it is in the public interest that this clause should be introduced into the Bill and I would ask the government not only to withdraw this clause but to take into its serious consideration the necessity of negotiating with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the commutation of its rights in this respect, so that the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the west shall pay their proper share of the municipal taxation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Chairman, the argument of my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean) is not at all directed against this clause. He has ended his argument as he commenced it, by stating that the government should enter into negotiations with the Canadian Pacific Railway in order to obtain from them a commutation of their rights, improvidently granted to them, I admit, but which were granted at the time that they were organized into a company for this national undertaking. I do not dispute there may be something in that. Some day or other I have no doubt this line of action may have to be taken into consideration and acted upon. I am conscious for my part that as the country advances this burden will become intolerable to the people of the new provinces, and even to the Dominion government itself, because it is not only the provinces which have been restrained, the Dominion government has been restrained also. But if that be so, if you are to negotiate with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that is an admission that they have acquired a right, that they have a vested right by legislation.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. We do not admit anything in the law.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does my hon. friend pretend that when we have passed a law—and I agree with my hon. friend that it was not proper legislation—but there it is and under it the Canadian Pacific Railway have obtained certain rights to which they are entitled. What is the contention of my hon. friend? Does he pretend that we should withdraw this clause and give to the new provinces the power to legislate and to tax the Canadian Pacific Railway? Let me call the attention of my hon. friend once more to the clause of the statute in that respect:

> The Canadian Pacific Railway and all stations, and station grounds, workshops, buildings, yards and other property, rolling stock and appurtenances required and used for the construction and working thereof, and the capital stock of the company, shall be for ever free from taxation by the Dominion, or by any province hereafter to be established, or by any municipal corporation therein.

Well, Sir, it is evident to me that the Dominion government not only undertook for themselves never to tax the stock and property of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but they undertook also to see and to make themselves answerable to the company that the same exclusion shall be imposed on any province which may hereafter be created, and we could not excise this clause not only without breaking faith with the Canadian Pacific Railway but without making ourselves liable for any loss they might incur by being subjected to taxation.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I want to bring the matter before the right hon. gentleman in another way. Here is a copy of a petition which has been presented to this House:

> Whereas in the division of the Northwest Territories into two provinces, arrangements are made for a perpetual exemption from taxation of the property of the Canadian Pacific Railway.
> And whereas, such legislation is contrary to public policy and sound legislation, and inasmuch as such legislation binds the freedom of people yet unborn and forever limits the scope of legislation in matters which are by right the sole business of the people who now live or will live in the said provinces.
> And whereas such legislation cannot be morally passed by men who are elected for a maximum of five years and are then trustees for the people.
> And whereas, this unjust privilege has already been enjoyed by the company for nearly a whole generation, and inasmuch as one generation cannot morally dictate the terms upon which another generation may live, and use the earth, any such privilege granted them in the past must be continually renewed in order to keep it alive.
> It therefore follows that this legislation is a fresh exemption and is practically an injustice.
> We therefore pray that this exemption clause be struck out and the provinces be allowed to tax the property of this and all other corporations just as are the other provinces.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

That may be a rather far-fetched resolution but it points to a grievance. Hon. gentlemen say the King's government must be carried on. So it must, but the King's government must also deal with the grievances, to give better and improved laws to the people, and now that this grievance does exist I say it is the duty of the government to remedy it. They may be bound by the clause in the original charter just read, they may be bound to put this clause in the Bill but they are also bound in some way to secure commutation of this right that the Canadian Pacific Railway have acquired. The Canadian Pacific Railway had other rights in the original charter; they had the right to prevent the running of lines to the American boundary; they had also certain rights which they surrendered in the negotiations in connection with the building of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, but the grievances in connection with the law which prohibit the building of lines and the grievances which existed in regard to the freight rates which were commuted at the time of the building of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway were not equal to the grievances which exist now in regard to this exemption from municipal taxation. We are asking settlers to come to Canada, to take up lands, to go to the great wheat fields of the Northwest, to settle there, establish themselves on farms and bring up their families and in order to give the poor man a fair show—and every man is entitled to a fair show—I say that some steps should be taken by this parliament to commute these rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway in regard to exemption, and while the hon. gentleman may say that he is obeying the law he may state what is true, but he has a duty to discharge to the people of the west and I am surprised that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) does not speak for the people of the west in this matter, and that all the members from the west are not aiding in it. I hope he will join with me because in other days he did join with me on the floor of this House in pointing out how widespread and serious this grievance was to the poor settlers in the west. I am not proposing any confiscation here to-day, but I am asking the members from the west to join with me in pressing upon the government to secure in some way commutation of this right to exemption now enjoyed by the Canadian Pacific Railway which we acknowledge to-day by this clause. I say it is not progressive legislation. We are actually committing, as I believe, a wrong. We may be respecting a right of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but we are permitting a wrong against the settlers of the west. The Canadian Pacific Railway is well able to pay this taxation. It is a rich company, it is increasing its service every year, it is expanding and, as one of its directors said the other day, there is no other railway company in the world whose credit is so good and which can borrow money so cheaply as the Canadian Pacific Railway. If that is the case why should the richest corporation in Canada, the company in receipt of the largest revenue and which has the greatest prospects in the world, have this exemption which the poor man has not? It may have been improvident legislation when it was made originally, but it is worse than improvident to allow it to continue if there is some way of securing its removal, and I believe there is a way for securing its removal; that is by negotiation with the Canadian Pacific Railway just as Sir John Macdonald cancelled the right to prevent lines running to the American boundary and the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) cancelled their rights in regard to certain freight rates, when he made his arrangement with them for the building of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. Now let him come forward and let him negotiate and in some way remove this grievance, a most substantial grievance as it has proved to be to the settlers of the west. In the province of Manitoba the Canadian Pacific Railway pays municipal taxes on their lands, but they do not in the west, and yet for some of their lands in the west they are getting $10 and $20 an acre, and as soon as the lands are sold they are of course liable to municipal taxes. But as long as the Canadian Pacific Railway hold them they pay no taxes on them, and I say to the right hon. gentleman and to the members from the west that I hope they will join with me in urging upon the government to do something to remove this grievance and not to re-enact it as they propose to do by this clause in the Bill.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend has changed his front and very properly so. The ground he took at first was that we should have clause 23 of this Bill excised altogether; now he says that it would not be possible to do so without being guilty of a breach of faith with the Canadian Pacific Railway. He quite understands that that would be altogether reprehensible; we cannot do that. We have to abide by agreements whether they are good or bad. My hon. friend says we are committing a great wrong to the settlers of the Northwest Territories. We are committing no wrong towards the settlers but a great wrong was committed towards them twenty years ago when this Bill was passed against the protest of the party to which I belong. We pointed out then the very thing which is pointed out by my hon. friend, the great mistake, the very great mistake of passing such legislation.

Our protest was unheeded, the contract became law, and if it is law it must remain law until another law can be substituted for it, but not in the manner suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean). I must say to my hon. friend that there are two classes of exemptions in this Bill. There is exemption in respect to the property of the Canadian Pacific Railway and there is also exemption of their lands. The exemption on their lands is in process of extinguishment; that exemption is to last only twenty years, and it is in process of extinguishment now. We have had a judicial decision on that and in the course of twenty years that exemption will become extinct.

But the exemptions of the stations and the station grounds, the workshops, buildings, rolling stock, capital stock, road-bed, &c., are there, and there for ever. My hon. friend says this is a grievance which ought to be remedied. There is only one of two ways in which it can be remedied; that is, by the government negotiating and agreeing to pay a certain sum to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or by this parliament passing a law to expropriate the exemption. I do not say that we may not have to come to that. I dare say that it is possible and more than possible that we may have to come to that eventually. But that question has nothing at all to do with the present legislation; it stands quite apart from this legislation. We have been petitioned by the legislature of the Northwest Territories to grant them provincial autonomy; we are in process of doing so; but they must take it such as it is, with all the exemptions created by law. So long as we comply with their request, we can only give them what it is in our power to give them.

Mr. HAGGART. I expressed my opinion on this question pretty fully the other day. My contention is that the Dominion government had no power to enter into an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, by which it bound itself, when a province was to be created out of the territory, to see that the company's property was exempt from taxation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is that agreement null and void?

Mr. HAGGART. That agreement, so far as it refers to a province, is null and void. That is my contention. As to the moral obligation, that is another thing. Although the government may not be legally bound by the agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, they may be morally bound, which is quite another thing. This parliament has no power to limit the constitutional rights of a province in regard to legislation by inserting any such clause. It may be good as a notice that there is such an agreement; but the province, when it chooses to legislate on the subject, can legislate itself out of any imposition of that kind. You have not full power to create a province under the Act of 1871. You are bound by the provisions of the British North America Act. By no Bill of ours can we limit the power of the province. The hon. Minister of Justice steers pretty clear of that question. He is in a quandary between the powers he has claimed under the Act of 1871, and the limitations and proscriptions of the Act of 1867. He brings them into force in the Autonomy Bill by a statement that all the powers granted to the province by the British North America Act shall be given to this particular province, except those which are expressly excluded by the Act. My contention is that the bargain that was made between the Dominion government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company by which the government bound themselves when a province was being constituted out of the Territories to limit the powers of the province, was ultra vires of the Dominion parliament.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would like my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) to ponder over the argument we have just heard from the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart). If I understood aright the argument of the hon. member for South York, it was that we shall enter into negotiations with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to compensate it for the exemption given to them in 1881.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. If necessary.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, if we negotiate with them, they will say it is necessary. My hon. friend has no great faith in corporations—I do not think he has much faith in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—and he knows that they will ask for all they can get. So if we go to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to negotiate for relief from the exemption which was given them in 1881 from taxation by this Dominion and by the provinces also, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will answer us at once: We have a double exemption, the exemption from taxation by the Dominion and we value that at so much, say $1,000,000 or $2,000,000; we also have exemption from taxation by the province, and we value that at say $2,000,000 more. But my hon. friend from South Lanark says the company have no exemption from taxation so far as the province is concerned, and therefore if we negotiate with the company, we would pay them for what they have not. We had better wait, then, until it is decided judicially whether the contention of the hon. member for Lanark is right or not. Until such time as the courts decide, if they so decide, that the provisions so far as the province is concerned are null and void, we shall have so much less to pay to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company than we would to-day if we entered into negotiations with them. So my hon. friend will agree that we have acted wisely in inserting this clause in the Bill. If the contention of my hon. friend from Lanark is right, I have no doubt what will be the action of the new legislature of Alberta. My hon. friend says that this clause by which we continue the exemption of the Canadian Pacific Railway property from taxation is absolutely null and void, that it is not worth the paper on which it is written. If that be so, the legislature of the province of Alberta will next session pass an Act to tax the property of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and then the question will have to be determined by the courts. If the courts decide that the statute passed in 1881 was ultra vires of this parliament and that we could not impose any such exemption of taxation on the new province, then, when we come to negotiate with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, we shall have to negotiate with regard to taxation only so far as the Dominion is concerned, and not at all so far as the province is concerned. Is that not full justification of our policy and is not my hon. friend satisfied that in this, as in many other instances, he has been speaking before going into the subject and is altogether too quick in jumping at conclusions ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is it not evident now that I spoke most timely and that good has come out of the discussion, because the First Minister has expressed himself as largely governed by the opinion of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart), and that hon. gentleman is of the opinion that the claim of the Canadian Pacific Railway is not worth anything ? But the First Minister is putting into this Bill a clause that is ultra vires, if the contention of the hon. member for Lanark is well founded. In the old days the right hon. gentleman denounced the Canadian Pacific Railway contract as a most improvident bargain and he appealed to the people : Put me in power and I will remedy your grievance. He sang two songs then but he is only singing one now. He is only singing the song of the improvident bargain now, but I would ask him to sing the other one and remedy the grievance. According to the British North America Act each province has the right to impose direct taxation within the province in order to the raising of a revenue for provincial purposes. The province of Ontario is to-day exercising that right with regard to the railways in that province, and the legislatures of these new provinces will be able to tax the Canadian Pacific Railway notwithstanding these exemptions. That is a right which this parliament cannot take away from the province. Within the exclusive powers of provincial legislature there is also by subsection 1 of clause 92 :

> The amendment from time to time, notwithstanding anything in this Act, of the constitution of the province, except as regards the office of Lieutenant Governor.

That being the case and the jurisdiction of municipalities being a matter within provincial control, no act of ours, no contract or statute, can affect that jurisdiction ; and if the right hon. gentleman persists with this legislation, the best the two provinces can do, as soon as they are organized, will be to pass such legislation as will compel the Canadian Pacific Railway to pay taxes. And if the new provinces cannot reach the Canadian Pacific Railway by means of municipal taxation, they can reach that company under the clause giving the provinces the right to impose direct taxation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Everything said by my hon. friend is a vindication of the government. The construction of the hon. member for Lanark may be right but there are others who think he is wrong. It is a question on which I offer no opinion. It is one of those mysterious questions of law which had best be left to the judges to decide. But in the meantime there are two sides to it. There are some who pretend that the Act of 1881 is good and valid, and there are others who, like my hon. friend from Lanark, take the opposite view. If it is right and valid, we have to comply with it ; but if it is null and void, so much the better.

Mr. SCOTT. As a taxpayer in the proposed province of Saskatchewan, I would be delighted if the hon. member for Lanark and the hon. member for South York were right in their contention that this legislation will be found to be ultra vires and that the provinces will have the power, regardless of this legislation and the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, to tax the Canadian Pacific Railway. But the facts, as we have them so far, are against that contention. We all know that our courts are governed to a considerable extent by precedent and unfortunately we have a precedent against us in this very matter. A portion of the Northwest Territories was added to the province of Manitoba in 1881 and a similar provision to this was put in the Bill adding that area to Manitoba. Litigation ensued and a few weeks ago a decision was handed down by the Supreme Court of Canada, which is entirely against the contention of my hon. friends. A municipality in the added portion of Manitoba levied taxes upon the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway protested and a suit was carried through the courts in Manitoba. The judgment in Manitoba was in favour of the company and has been upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada. The hon. member for South York is perfectly right however in his contention that this is a very serious matter for the new provinces. On the second reading of the Bill, I explained that it was the detail which gave the greatest amount of difficulty. As the matter stood in January last, the situation has become changed in some degree by the Supreme Court judgment given in the meantime—it was my very pronounced opinion that it would have been advisable that this subject of autonomy should be left pending until the tax matter was in a more determined stage. Practically three months have been spent by this House in discussing what is called a limitation on the autonomy granted the new provinces; and with all deference to my hon. friends opposite, the matter they have held this House talking about all this time does not compare in importance with the limitation of autonomy contained in this section 23 of the Bill. If we left the people of the Territories absolutely free with regard to education, they would retain the system they have there at present. Ninety-nine out of every hundred are entirely satisfied with the present system of separate schools. But this tax limitation does make a difference and a very material difference. This is a real and substantial limitation which is placed on their autonomy.

Mr. OLIVER. By the late government.

Mr. SCOTT. By the late government. It must be one of the hon. member for South York's handsprings which the Conservative government turned for this corporation.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. When did I say that?

Mr. SCOTT. Not very long ago.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Of what government?

Mr. SCOTT. Of every legislature in this country. The hon. gentleman lectures members from the Northwest Territories about principles and compromises. I would suggest that he should abstain from compromising his common sense so frequently as he does in this House. He gave as a reason why independent legislatures should be created and endowed with resources, that all legislatures were corrupt and turning handsprings at the bidding of corporations. I am inclined to agree with him that section 23 is unnecessary. That section says:

> The powers hereby granted to the said provinces shall be exercised subject to the provisions of section 16 of the contract set forth in the schedule to chapter 1 of the statute of 1881, being an Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

If that clause were not in the Bill at all, the relations between the provincial government and the Canadian Pacific Railway would still be fixed by the statute of this parliament embodying the Canadian Pacific Railway contract. I may say that I am very pleased indeed to hear the words of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) indicating that it is the intention of this government, and that it will be the duty of this parliament, as soon as possible, to cancel the rights possessed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in this connection by means of either the ordinary powers of expropriation or——

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Did the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) make that statement this afternoon?

Mr. SCOTT. I understood him to make that statement this afternoon. Certainly he made that statement on the 21st of February in introducing these measures, and I understood him to repeat this afternoon his intimation that it would be the duty of parliament to revoke in some way these rights which the corporation holds under the contract. If there is any necessity for putting section 23 in the Bills, there is an equal reason for putting something additional in the Bills to give some tangible intimation to the people of these provinces and the people of Canada that that is the intention of parliament. I wish to suggest to the government the addition of a few words. I would move that the section be amended by adding the following words:

> Provided that the foregoing shall not prejudice the right of the parliament of Canada, by expropriation or otherwise to obtain the relinquishment by said company of the company's rights under section 16 of the contract aforesaid.

I am not a lawyer. I have myself drafted these words and if the government and the House assent to the principle of my suggestion it may be found necessary to recast what I have suggested.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have not had an opportunity to consider this amendment, and therefore am not able to advise about it. But, at first sight, I would suggest that it is unnecessary. Just now, we are giving effect to a contract entered into with the Canadian Pacific Railway; and it seems to me that if we did not enact the clause we should be guilty of a violation of every canon of decency and good faith. The right of this company to exemption of taxation in the Northwest and in that part of Manitoba which formed part of the Northwest Territories in 1881 is based on section 16 of the contract between the syndicate, now represented by the company, and the Crown, represented by the government of that day. The contract is dated 21st October, 1880, and forms part of the statute 44 Victoria, Chapter 1. This section 16 to which we are practically giving effect to-day is as follows:

> The Canadian Pacific Railway and all stations and station grounds, work shops, buildings, yards and other property, rolling stock and appurtenances required and used for the construction and working thereof, and the capital stock of the company, shall be for ever free from taxation by the Dominion, or by any province hereafter to be established, or by any municipal corporation therein; and lands of the company, in the Northwest Territories, until they are either sold or occupied, shall also be free from such taxation for 20 years after the grant thereof from the Crown.

This provision, of course, was ratified and approved of by parliament by means of the statute to which I have just referred. No property of the company within the limits I have described has been subject to taxation from the time the railway was constructed up to the present. That contract, in my opinion, created a solemn obligation on the part of the Crown, ratified by parliament; and I submit that nothing can be done, justly, by this parliament to impair that solemn obligation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought there was another statute which expressly provided——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am just coming to that. I would like the committee to take note of the fact that the section I have quoted provides expressly for the case we are now dealing with, that is to say, the formation of the Northwest Territories into a province. Now, this exemption is to extend to any province thereafter—that is after the section has been passed—to be established. The Act to which the leader of the opposition has referred, I presume, is 44 Victoria, Chapter 14, which provides for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba. Subsection (b) of section 2 of that Act provides as follows:

(b) The said increased limit and the territory thereby added to the province of Manitoba shall be subject to all such provisions as may have been or shall hereafter be enacted, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway and the lands to be granted in aid thereof.

So that this parliament has given legislative sanction to the obligation we assumed under the original contract. My hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) suggested that this matter was up for consideration incidentally in the Supreme Court in connection with a number of cases of municipalities, two in the Northwest Territories and one in Manitoba. These cases were to test the validity of by-laws taxing for school purposes the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's lands. In that case the argument was put forward that if Manitoba chose to commit a breach of this agreement by taxing these lands, there was no power to prevent this. Thus there was a direct test of the validity of this enactment. The point was dealt with by Mr. Justice Nesbitt who said in delivering judgment:

In the case of the tax levied in the Northwest Territories, to give effect to the contention of the appellants would, in reality, be to hold that the contract did not exempt the land while in the Northwest Territories, but to make it subject to taxation and to be exempt only when the contingency of provincial autonomy occurred, if it ever did occur within twenty years from the issue of the patents. Such a construction is so opposed to good sense and good faith and so foreign to the object of the contract that apparently it never occurred to any one until after the opening of the argument of the case before the court in Manitoba. In my view the company's lands to be earned by building the railway were exempted for twenty years from the issue of the patent, from any Dominion taxation, or from provincial or muncipal taxation, by any bodies subsequently obtaining provincial or municipal authorities in respect of such lands.

There is the opinion of a distinguished judge of the Supreme Court on this very point. And, in the face of the statute and of this construction put upon the statute, I conceive that it would be an absolute impossibility for us to do otherwise than to give effect to the provision of the contract I have referred to. As to the question whether we shall negotiate with the company to obtain a release from them of the rights under the agreement, that is a matter of policy and one that I have nothing to do with now. What I have to do with is to give effect to a solemn parliamentary contract.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, in the case to which my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has made an allusion, Mr. Justice Nesbitt in the portion of the judgment dealing with the exemption in the province of Manitoba based his judgment to some extent at least on the ground that Manitoba had not attempted to repeal the provision.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is not the point I referred to at all, I referred to the Northwest Territories.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I refer to Manitoba, I was distinguishing it from the Northwest Territories. I do not know that there would be any special distinction between the case of Manitoba and this territory added to Manitoba, and the case of the Northwest Territories. In considering this section it is necessary to distinguish absolutely between the question of legislative power and the duty of observing a contract made between the Crown and a company—they are two absolutely distinct things. Let me illustrate that in this way. The Crown made a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which has been ratified by Act of this parliament. The making of that contract does not take away from this parliament its legislative power; parliament may to-morrow destroy the effect of that contract by means of a statute, but it would be absolutely wrong, improper and even immoral to do so. So far as the legislatures of the new provinces are concerned, the matter is pretty much in the same position. I do not know whether the section which has beeen inserted in this Bill is intended as a constitutional limitation which deprives the new province of a certain power which it would otherwise have, or whether it is intended, as my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has suggested just now, as a notice to the province that the Crown had entered into a contract which must be observed, or which ought to be observed, by the legislature of the province in dealing with that question. Let us not forget that it is the same Crown which is represented by the executive of Canada and by the executive of the new province ; it is the same Crown, which in respect of Dominion matters acts by the advice of the Dominion executive, while in respect of the new province it acts by the advice of the provincial executive ; but it is the same Crown, there is only one Crown in this country. Then let us for one moment see what would be the position if this power were handed over to the legislature of the new province in so far as section 16, of the contract deals with taxation by the province or taxation within the province. The position would be no worse from the standpoint of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company than it is to-day, assuming that we handed over to the new province that power. Thereafter, as I would understand it, this parliament would still retain the legislative power of dealing with the contract so far as the Dominion is concerned, and the legislature of the province would receive, by virtue of this statute, the power to deal with that particular provision of the contract in so far as provincial and municipal taxation is concerned. The Dominion would be bound by every canon and standard of good faith to observe the contract, and the province would be equally bound by every canon and standard of good faith to observe the same contract. That is the position as it occurs to me.

Mr. SCOTT. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that his opinion is that the province would have rights of expropriation ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They would have the right of expropriation, that would necessarily follow of course if the assumption which I made in dealing with the question were a correct assumption. I said that I was not quite sure whether this would operate as a constitutional limitation, in which case the provincial legislature would have no power to deal with the matter at all—that is, if we have the power to restrict the legislature in that regard—or whether it was intended as simply a notice to the legislature that the Crown had entered into a contract which ought to be observed by the new legislature. If I did not make myself clear, let me repeat for a moment what I said in order that I may do so. This parliament has the power to deal with the subject matter of section 16 of the C.P.R. contract so far as it relates to Dominion taxation, and we would not be willing to deal with it otherwise then upon terms absolutely fair to the Canadian Pacific Railway, that is, we ought not to expropriate without compensation. If the legislative power were confided to the new province it would stand exactly in the same position. The Crown is represented in the province and the Crown is represented in the Dominion. The Crown made a contract, the Dominion parliament can deal with it so far as the Dominion is concerned, and the legislature of the province can deal with it so far as the province is concerned, if such power is conferred by this parliament in establishing the new province. Well, what is the position we are in to-day in that regard? I am as strongly in favour as any man can be of absolutely observing contracts. If we handed over the subject matter of clause 16, so far as provincial and municipal taxation is concerned, to the new province, I would regard it as absolutely essential that the province, in attempting to deal with that matter, should deal with it upon the just and fair terms which would be incumbent upon this parliament if we were dealing with it. For example, if the Prime Minister should adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend from West Assiniboia and should attempt to relieve the people of the Northwest, and indeed relieve the Dominion as a whole from this exemption, parliament could only do it upon perfectly fair terms.

In that connection let me say that possibly some of us in this country are not fully alive to what may be done in the way of taxation by the new provinces. In considering that question a little as it presents itself to-day in Manitoba, I find that the province of Manitoba has passed a statute, which is to be found in the consolidated statutes of Manitoba, 1902, volume 2, chapter 166, and which in effect provides that every railway company shall pay to the province such part of its gross earnings, not exceeding three per cent, as the lieutenant governor in Council shall determine. Under that statute the province of Manitoba has levied taxation upon the gross earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and during the year 1904 they collected from the Canadian Pacific Railway, under the terms of that statute, no less a sum than $56,450. So that although the lands and buildings and other properties of the railway are exempt from taxation, it would appear—I do not know that the question has been tested in the courts—but it would appear that notwithstanding this provision in the contract of 1881, the new provinces may, in the exercise of the same rights as those exercised by Manitoba, tax the gross earnings of the company, although they cannot tax its lands and property. Therefore the grievance in the Northwest Territories might not be found so great as has been suggested. I myself, two years ago, in the session of 1903, when the members from the Northwest were pressing strongly upon the attention of parliament the discontent and dissatisfaction which had been created in the Northwest by this tax exemption, suggested to the Prime Minister that if that discontent and dissatisfaction prevailed to so great an extent as had been represented, and if it were likely to obstruct the flow of immigration into those Territories, it would be a reasonable thing for the government to consider forthwith the project of entering into negotiations with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the purpose of doing away with this exemption, and I was prepared to support a reasonable measure for the purpose of removing this exemption at the expense of the people of Canada as a whole, because I thought it would be in the interest of the people as a whole to do so rather than to have immigration obstructed and the development of the Northwest arrested. So far as this provision is concerned, I would like to have the view of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice—either to-day or at some convenient time, if he does not feel disposed to answer to-day, because, being of the same profession as the Minister of Justice, I realize that it is much easier sometimes to ask a question than to answer it offhand—whether he would regard this as a constitutional limitation upon the powers of the new province, or whether it might not be its true effect that the Crown, having made a contract, is bound to carry it out in good faith in so far as the Dominion as a whole is concerned; and thus while we retain the legislative power in the Dominion, so far as exemption from Dominion taxation is concerned, we are really handing over the legislative power to the new province to be exercised by it in so far as section 16 of the contract concerns provincial taxation by municipalities within the province.

To sum up once more: the Crown has made a contract and parliament ought to observe that contract. The advisers of the Crown must insist always that parliament shall observe that contract. They would be perfectly justified in resigning if parliament did not see fit to do so and any subsequent advisers of the Crown ought to pursue the same course. But, after all, under the terms of section 23, will not that remain, as far as the Dominion is concerned, a matter for consideration by the Dominion parliament in connection with any action of the Dominion executive and will it not, in so far as the province or the municipalities are concerned, remain a matter for legislative action within the province by the legislature of the province acting in connection with the provincial executive? It is a question which I have not as fully considered as I would like to have done, but it struck me in listening to the arguments which have been made upon the question and in listening to the explanation of the hon. Minister of Justice that possibly after all that might be the true result, and I do not think the result is one which may be regarded as very prejudicial to the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not think that any statute which should be passed by the legislature of the province, except on fair terms in respect to the contract entered into by the Crown many years ago, is one which should be approved by the Dominion executive in whom, of course, rests the final decision by way of disallowance.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As I said on a previous occasion in connection with this debate, this is one of the two clauses of this Bill for which I am personally responsible. I would like to say that this particular clause was drafted for the purpose of imposing a constitutional limitation on the legislature of the new province. The view I took of the matter was that by virtue of section 16 of the contract we had constitutionally—I will not say bound ourselves for all time, because parliament has the power to do what is wrong—but constitutionally we bound ourselves to observe this provision in the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we bound ourselves not only to observe it ourselves, but to see that when a province was created, which province would have jurisdiction over these Territories, it would effectually carry out that contract, and therefore, I think that we should enact a provision which would prevent the legislature—and I do not for a moment suggest that it would do such a thing—from in any way legislating in any such way as to interfere with the provisions of that contract.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I quite appreciate what the hon. Minister of Justice has said. Of course, I am presenting it from the standpoint that we would not necessarily suppose any greater danger of violation of the terms of the contract by the legislature of the province than that which we might apprehend from any future parliament of Canada. Therefore, I think that possibly in that view the section might have been intended to distribute the exercise of legislative power in future between the parliament of Canada on the one hand and the legislature of the province on the other hand. That, as I said before, might not be regarded as prejudicial to the interests of the company.

Mr. GALLIHER. If it is necessary to carry out the legislation passed in 1881, in so far as the Dominion parliament had power to legislate in regard to this exemption from taxation of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to insert a clause in this Act, or in the Acts creating these provinces, such as clause 23, then, I perfectly agree with the position that the government are taking in the matter, but if it is not necessary then

I want some more light on the subject. I think it will be admitted that the Dominion parliament in 1881 had power to legislate as to this exemption up to the time that these unorganized Territories, should be created into provinces. While these were unorganized Territories, and while they were not formed into provinces the only way by which that legislation could be interfered with would be by a repeal of the statute. That, of course has not taken place up to the present time nor should it have taken place, because, in so far as the Dominion parliament in 1881 had power to legislate on the subject, I agree with the contention that it is the duty of this parliament to observe and maintain that compact. As my hon. friend beside me says it is a contract. I have not been able to give as much attention to this matter as I should have, and I may be wrong, but this question strikes me: Had the parliament of Canada, in 1881, power to legislate for these unorganized Territories beyond the time that they remained unorganized Territories and to extend the operation of that legislation to the time after they became provinces? If they had the power to do so we are right still in continuing the exemption that is proposed here, but if they had not the power to do so, if when these unorganized Territories are created into provinces they should have the right under the British North America Act to deal exclusively with the subject of taxation then this question suggests itself to me: Are we justified in making good, as I believe we would be by this provision, what might have been an excessive power exercised by the Dominion parliament at the time that this legislation was enacted in 1881? If that could be made clear to me I could quite easily see the position of the government and of those who are supporting it on the other side of the House. But, I would like to see the necessity for enacting this section 23. If we were to put something into this Bill which would destroy the rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway under the enactment of 1881 we would be doing wrong just as much as we would be doing wrong by repealing the Act, but if we leave that absolutely alone, if we are absolutely silent in these Bills creating these provinces as to the exemption clause, what is the position? If the Act passed by the parliament of Canada in 1881 was good or sufficient and they had the power to extend the exemption as they have specified that they have extended it to the time when these Territories should become provinces, then, that cannot affect it, because, even if there is a provision in the British North America Act which gives the Territories exclusive jurisdiction as to taxation after they became provinces they can only assume provincial powers subjet to the exemption created by the Act of 1881, granting that the Dominion parliament had full power to go as far as they did go. Now I may be wrong in the conclusion to which I have come, but if I am right in that conclusion I think that they should be left to whatever exemption they actually receive and actually are entitled by law to receive under the Act of 1881.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Act of 1881 does not give any exemption beyond the period during which they shall have a territorial government.

Mr. GALLIHER. The reading, as I understood it, would extend to the time also when they became provinces.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. 'Make provision for becoming provinces'; you will have to have something new then.

Mr. GALLIHER. I did not understand it, and I do not understand it in that way.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The statement of the Minister of Justice is in substance that this is a limitation of the provinces.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not of the provinces, of the constitution.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Of the powers of the provinces, and in that way it is asserting the actual jurisdiction of this parliament to do almost whatever it likes. I say this further, that apparently the Canadian Pacific Railway have no confidence in their position as regards this province when it is created, and that they are the petitioners for this clause, and I think hon. gentlemen opposite ought to tell the House whether the Canadian Pacific Railway have come to them and said: You must protect us now from this province, as we imagine our rights will cease to exist after the province is created, and if you do not we will come upon you. The hon. gentleman has been saying a great deal, and so have all the legal gentlemen in the House about the sanctity of contracts and of vested rights. Let me tell the hon. gentlemen, and especially the Minister of Justice, that the government is compelling these little provinces to assume the obligations of the Dominion. The Dominion, which entered into this contract and granted something to the Canadian Pacific Railway, whose honour is at stake, has no hesitation in imposing upon these two little provinces the discharge of the obligation they entered upon. If the minister wants to unload the obligation on the smaller party—on the provinces—he ought to make provision for the provinces assuming the obligation of the greater parliament. But he has not done so, and I do not think there are any morals in that. When hon. gentlemen are talking about morals in law and the sanctity of contracts, I asked them what is their opinion of unloading on these two new governments in the west, these new settlers, the obligations that the Dominion assumed a great many years ago ? Have not these settlers some rights ? Have they no vested right to fair play in this country ? Are the people of the Dominion to come along to them and say : We entered into a solemn obligation with the Canadian Pacific Railway twenty-five years ago that they were to be exempted from taxation in your country, and now the time has come to erect you as provinces, and we are going to dump the load on you. Let us look into the matter from that point of view, and I say that the government cannot justify the discharge of the obligation they owe to the Canadian Pacific Railway by imposing it on these provinces, and I also bring out this view now that here is a confession in this House by the Minister of Justice of the supremacy of parliament to do anything it likes in regard to the creation of new provinces ; that we are not bound by the British North America Act. They are asserting the right to impose limitations on the provinces in regard to their municipal taxation, and they are imposing other limitations on the provinces in a way they should not. I was glad to hear the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) endorse what Manitoba is doing. It is within the competence of these new provinces to tax these railways on their income, and they have further power even—they can tax one company more than another. The cure may come in this way, that the two new provinces—and I advise them to do it at the first session—may put a tax on the earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway unless the Canadian Pacific Railway agree to surrender this advantage that they have. And let us just see what it is. Here is the original clause, which I shall read again in order to emphasize it :

> The Canadian Pacific Railway and all stations and station grounds, workshops, buildings, yards, and other property, rolling stock and appurtenances required and used for the construction and working thereof and the capital stock of the company, shall be for ever free from taxation, &c.

Is that fair ? Is it fair for the Dominion parliament to put this imposition on the young provinces, that this great corporation, the Canadian Pacific Railway, all its stock, all its stations, its roadbed, shall be for ever free from municipal taxation ? Is it fair, is it honourable? The provinces have some vested rights under the British North America Act, and there is a solemn contract with the provinces in that Act. Does the Minister of Justice admit that this is a solemn contract, and are there solemn rights defined in this solemn contract ? Surely this contract, the British North America Act, is as sacred as any contract ever made in this country, and if these provinces have rights, and if other people have obligations, and they seek to discharge these obligations by imposing them upon a lesser power and a lesser community, a struggling community, who are our settlers, and who are also to be the best customers and clients of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to supply them with freight and to build up their road ; is it fair to respect the contract contained in the constitution ? I put it to the Minister of Justice that there is as good a contract in this British North America Act, as between the Dominion and the provinces, as there is between the Dominion and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and when you come to choose as to which contract has the most sanctity, I say that the original contract between the Dominion and the provinces is the one that has the senior position in that regard, and I say that parliament ought to leave this clause out. There is nothing mandatory even in the contract that we shall reimpose this, or if there is anything mandatory it is that we must respect provincial rights in this case ; and if the cure is not effected in one way, it shall be in another. It is all very well to give us lawyers' opinions, as has been done in this House. Let me recall to the people and to this House an instance bearing on this. In Ontario not long ago the attention of the Attorney General was called to the existence of a certain pool-room nuisance in my own constituency. The Attorney General went into the law and said : The law is this, and I am powerless ; I can do nothing, but I am obeying the law. He said : That is the law ; just as we are told here to-day : This is the law. But a change of government took place, another Attorney General comes in, and he says : This is the law. He enforces the law, and the result is altogether different. What is the difference between these two legal opinions ? Lawyers do not always agree, in fact they differ all the time. As I said before, you can get as many opinions as you care to pay out fees ; and if that is the case, the people of the province, as their rights are defined in this solemn contract, the British North America Act, ought to be defended to-day from the imposition that is being put upon them ; and again I call the attention of the Minister of Justice, when he talks about vested rights, to the fact that the government is to-day putting on the statute-book a statute which enables the Dominion government to evade its obligation and to impose it upon these two small provinces in the west. If that is the case, I say it is not good law ; it is not the constitution ; it is not respecting sacred rights, and I trust the Prime Minister will give me some credit for, perhaps—although, not being a lawyer, because I do not profess to be one, and I thank God I am not one—but I hope he will give me credit for saying something in the interest of the settlers, and bringing to the notice of parliament a grievance that can be cured in spite of the opinions of lawyers. There is a way to cure these grievances, and they can be cured without doing injustice to anybody.

It is all very fine to cure these grievances by sending them to the courts ; but that is not the way to cure public grievances. The cure of them is rather in negotiation and in legislation. Any amount of litigation will arise out of this Act which we are now considering and I do not know where it is to end. What we ought to try to do is to respect the rights of all and give fair-play to all. I am not proposing any confiscation against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, notwithstanding that it is a very rich and powerful corporation ; but I am urging on parliament and on the government the necessity of their doing something for the relief of the settlers of the Northwest in the matter of this exemption clause. The relief in regard to the lands is coming gradually by the sale of the lands after twenty years. But this other frightful exemption, which declares that the company shall be for ever free from taxation by the Dominion or any province, is the worst exemption that was ever put on the statute-book of Canada. There is no such exemption in any other contract in this Canada of ours. I challenge any one to produce an equal one. It may not have been regarded in that light at the time it was imposed. The opposition of that day did so regard it, but the government did not ; but it is to-day the most iniquitous exemption in Canada or in any province of Canada; and I do not think the hon. member for West Assiniboia should attack me for bringing that forward, even though I have not agreed with him on some things. I may have been inconsistent in some things ; but when I am pointing out the iniquity of the exemption and asking for some cure for it, I ought to have the sympathy and support of the hon. gentlemen from the west.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The hon. gentleman a moment ago admitted that he was not a lawyer. The evidence of that was so obvious in the suggestion he made that he need hardly have taken the trouble to give us the information. My hon. friend wished to know if this clause had been imposed on the government by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I may tell him that I drew the clause myself, and that I consulted the Canadian Pacific Railway with reference to it and as to the form in which it should be put, because I felt that it was necessary to consider the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and to take its interests into account. If I were dealing with the interests of a beggar on the street, I would consult him before I would endeavour to dispose of them.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Did the hon. gentleman, then, consult the settlers of the west ?

An hon. MEMBER. They are the beggars.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. They are the beggars on the street.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is another suggestion on a par with the one the hon. gentleman made a moment ago, only in this instance the hon. gentleman acts the part of an echo. The people of the Northwest were represented, I presume, at the time this contract was made. That was the time when those who are now protesting ought to have protested. That was the time when those who suggested a moment ago to my hon. friend to make this observation ought to have been heard ; but they were not heard. Let me draw my hon. friend's attention to clause 16 in the contract, which provides that the stations and station grounds, &c., of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall be exempt from taxation by this parliament. To that extent that clause is a contract between this parliament and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. But there is more than that. That clause is in effect a contract between this parliament and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, by which this parliament undertook to provide that if thereafter the Territories were erected into a province, a constitutional limit would be put upon their powers as a province with respect to the right of taxation. That is what this parliament agreed to ; that is what this contract drawn by Sir John Abbott and supported by other distinguished men of that day decided ; and there was no protest then by the men who are now protesting against this exemption.

Mr. SPROULE. If the minister will excuse me, I think there was a discussion in the Railway Committee as to whether we had or had not the power, and my remembrance is that the contention of Sir John Abbott was that we had the power in the event of erecting a province.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And parliament confirmed that opinion, and all we are doing now is to give effect to what parliament had in contemplation at that time. We are doing nothing more than that, and, so far as this load on the Northwest Territories which my hon. friend refers to is concerned, if parliament wants to rid the Territories of that incubus, if I may use the word, parliament is free to do it. Parliament has the means in its own hands, if the people of this country want to assume additional burdens to those which they already assumed in connection with that railway. But let us do one thing at a time. Let us give effect to what we contracted to do in 1881. When we have done that, the door is still wide open to us if we want to go further.

Mr. LAKE. This exemption from taxation is certainly a very serious burden on the people of the Northwest. The matter was laid before the present government some years ago, when the people of the Territories were asking for provincial autonomy, and I propose to put upon ' Hansard ' the argument with reference to this particular subject which was used by the representative of the Northwest Territories at that time. He said :

In addition to the matters dealt with in the foregoing draft Bill, I have also to direct your attention to, and to press for the removal by ancillary legislation of the exemption from taxation granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company under clause 16 of the schedule to chapter 1 of the Dominion statutes of 1881. The exemption as is well known is two-fold. First that in the words : 'The Canadian Pacific Railway, and all stations and station grounds, workshops, buildings, yards and other property, rolling stock and appurtenances required and used for the construction and working thereof, and the capital stock of the company, shall be for ever free from taxation by the Dominion, or by any province to be hereafter established, or by any municipal corporation therein,' and, second, in that part of the clause which reads 'and the lands of the company in the Northwest Territories, until they are either sold or occupied, shall also be free from such taxation for twenty years after the grant thereof from the Crown.' The effect of these exemptions is to prohibit any province which may be established—or any municipal corporation therein—from requiring the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to assist in the administration of the country or the maintenance of 'peace, order and good government' within its bounds with respect to a part of its property for ever and with respect to another part for a limited period of time. This exemption falls hardly upon the people of the Northwest Territories in a number of ways. The nature of the land grant to the company, in that it is spread over the whole country in small blocks of one mile square alternating with those open for homesteads, causes every dollar spent by the settler in the improvement of his homestead, where it lies within the districts reserved for the selection of the land granted on account of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to enhance the value of the lands held for the company in its neighbourhood. All public expenditures made in such districts for roads, bridges and other works of a similar description improve the value of the lands still held by the company under its main line grant, the company contributing nothing on account of such lands towards the cost of the works by reason of which they are benefited.

An examination of the terms of the grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shows that the exemption will bear with particular stress upon any province established within the area referred to in the draft Bill. The paragraph lettered 'A' of clause 9 in the schedule to the 1881 Canadian Pacific Railway Act—chapter 1 of the statutes of that year—reads (a) the said subsidy in money is hereby divided and appropriated as follows, namely :

Central Section.

Assumed at 1,350 miles—
1st—900 miles at $10,000 per mile.. .. ..$9,000,000
2nd—450 miles at $13,333 per mile.. 6,000,000
$15,000,000

Eastern Section.

Assumed at 650 miles, subsidy equal to $15,384.61 per mile.. 10,000,000

25,000,000

And the said subsidy in land is hereby divided and appropriated as follows, subject to the reserve hereinafter provided for :

Central Section.

1st—900 miles at 12,500 acres per mile.. .. ..$11,250,000
2nd—450 miles at 16,666·66 acres per mile 7,500,000
$18,750,000

Eastern Section.

Assumed at 650 miles, subsidy equal to 9,615 acres per mile 6,250,000

The original land grant of 25,000,000 acres has been reduced by 6,793,041 acres at a cost to Canada of $10,189,521, thus leaving the company to receive 18,206,986 acres. In other words, the amount of that apportionment of the land grant on account of the construction of the eastern section—or that part of the railway between Callender and a point east of Red River to which the road had been constructed from Selkirk by the government, all of which lies in the province of Ontario—has been exchanged for cash at the cost of the people of the Territories equally with those of every other part of Canada. Of the balance of the land grant, the company has selected some 2,500,000 acres within the province of Manitoba, leaving the balance to be selected from the lands within the Northwest Territories out of the extensive areas reserved for that purpose. This particular grant is that made on account of the construction of the central section of the railway, namely, that from Selkirk to Kamloops, which has been definitely ascertained to be a distance of 1,250 miles. This distance is divisable as follows : Manitoba, 220 miles ; Northwest Territories, 760 miles ; British Columbia, 270 miles. It is therefore apparent that a proportionate area, based upon the mileage through the province at the rate granted per mile through the prairie portion of the central section (220 miles at 12,500 acres per mile, being 2,750,000 acres) has not been taken from Manitoba lands, and that in addition to this shortage of 25,000 acres the whole of the grant earned by construction through British Columbia (at the mountain rate of 16,666·66 acres per mile) is being made, out of the lands of the Territories. Even if, under any process of reasoning, the exemption clause can be justified as regards the construction of the railway through the Territoiries, it is not thought that the Territories can in equity be required to bear this extra burden on account of the construction of the railway through the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia. If they are so required, the people of the Territories, who are individually contributing equally to the cost to Canada of the interest upon the debt created by the payment of the original bonus of $25,000,000, the payment of $10,189,321 for the repurchase of the land grant on account of the eastern, or Ontario, section of the railway, together with the annual payment of $100,000 to British Columbia for the lands conveyed to Canada under the terms of the imperial Order in Council of May 16, 1871, to aid in the construction of the railway, will be also liable to bear whatever the exemption from taxation under the Canadian Pacific Railway Act of 1881 may mean. By the terms of that Act the province to be established—or any municipal corporation therein—will be prohibited from taxing the company or its property in any manner or for any reason. Unless invidious comparisons are made between the Canadian Pacific and other railway companies this will mean the involuntary relinquishment of resources to that avenue of revenue as no competing company will be liable to expend the necessarily vast sums of money required unless it has prospects of obtaining similar exemption from taxation at the hands of the province.

The necessity for the extraordinary burden upon the people of the west is not obvious. Ample evidence exists to show that the railway was not in any sense built for the benefit of the Northwest. In 1865 the Honourable George Brown voiced the opinion of the government of the day when he stated in his place in the parliament of Canada during the confederation debates 'the confederation is, therefore, clearly committed to the carrying out of both these enterprises,' his reference being to the construction of the Intercolonial Railway and the opening up of communications with the Northwest Territories. 'I doubt,' he proceeded to say, 'if there was a member of the conference who did not consider that the opening up of the Northwest and the improvement of our canal system were not as clearly for the advantage of the lower provinces as for the interests of Upper Canada. Indeed, one gentleman held that the lower provinces were more interested—they wished to get their products into the west—they wanted a back country as much as we did—they wanted to be the carriers for that great country—and they were, therefore to say the least, as much interested in the questions as we were.' But there is no need to go back beyond the solemn compact entered into between Canada and the colony of British Columbia in 1871.

The imperial Order in Council of May 16, 1871, respecting the province of British Columbia, sets forth as one of the terms and conditions upon which that colony consented to enter the confederation, the undertaking of the government of Canada 'to secure the commencement simultaneously within two years from the date of the union, of the construction of a railway, from the Pacific toward the Rocky Mountains, and from such point as may be selected east of the Rocky Mountains toward the Pacific, to connect the sea-board of British Columbia with the railway system of Canada; and further to secure the completion of such railway within ten years from the date of the union. The preamble to chapters 71 and 72 of the Dominion statutes of 1872 and chapter 1 of the statutes of 1881 all set forth the fact in various ways that—to quote from the last mentioned Act—'by the terms and conditions of the admission of British Columbia into the union with the Dominion of Canada, the government of the Dominion has assumed the obligation of causing a railway to be constructed connecting the seaboard of British Columbia with the railway system of Canada.

All this being so, it is difficult for the people of the Northwest Territories to understand why they should be called upon to assume any other burden than that of contributing proportionately—and no more—with the people of other parts of Canada towards the cost of carrying out the obligation assumed by Canada under the compact with British Columbia. The exemption from taxation granted by the Canadian Pacific Railway Act is undoubtedly such an added burden, and an imposition upon the people of the Northwest Territories that cannot be justified. For no reason that is conceivable, this exemption bears with greater stress upon the Territories than it does even upon Manitoba. Except those lands selected by the company under its land grant which lie in that part of Manitoba added to the original province after the contract of 1881, none of the property of the company is exempt from taxation in Manitoba. That province to-day is taxing the company under chapter 57 of the Provincial Acts of 1890.

In view of the foregoing it is submitted that parliament should be asked to take such steps as may appear advisable in order to countervail the operation of the exemption clause of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract within the limits of the province to be created.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Would the hon. gentleman say whose statement that is?

Mr. LAKE. That is a portion of a letter sent by Mr. Haultain inclosing the draft Bill on behalf of the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories. I have heard it suggested in this House, I think, that there had been an omission on the part of the legislative assembly to ask that this exemption from taxation should be done away with, and so I consider it advisable to place on the records the statement I have just read. I think the statement shows quite clearly that a very considerable burden is imposed upon the people of the Northwest Territories by this exemption. As I understand, it was admitted just now on the other side of the House that the reason for the clause it was proposed to insert in the present Bill was to protect parliament. Now, it seems to me that this is not just. This burden was imposed upon the people of the new provinces without their consent—there can be no question about that. There was no province at the time, there was no representative body in the Territories, and there was no representation of the Territories in this parliament. Therefore, it appears to me that, as it was the Dominion itself which made the contract, it is the Dominion which is responsible to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the benefits which that company were to receive on the completion of their share of the contract. I think, therefore, that it is only fair that the Dominion, at the present time, should assume that burden itself and relieve the people of the Northwest from it. As has been pointed out in the statement which I have just read, the Northwest Territories are paying their share, along with the other people of Canada, of the money grant required to aid the Canadian Pacific Railway. They are also finding the land grants, not only for the line constructed in the Northwest Territories, but also for a portion of that constructed in Manitoba and for the whole of the line constructed in British Columbia. I fail to see why, in addition to all this, this burden caused by the exemption from taxation should be placed upon the people of the Northwest. And it is a burden. With reference to the exemption of taxation on the land grant, I think we have a very strong claim to relief upon the Dominion government. I believe it to be generally admitted that the intention of the contract was that there should be a twenty years' exemption. Whether the period was to run from the date of the contract or from the date on which the lands were earned does not matter now, for the period has expired in either case. If it had been intended to extend the exemption any longer the contract would have so stated. It was to be an exemption for twenty years from a certain date, now more than twenty years ago. And if the exemption is now in force on a very large portion of these lands in the Northwest Territories that is not due to any fault or any laxity on the part of the Territories themselves; it is really due to the neglect of the Dominion administration. I think that is quite clear. If the patents had been issued to the company immediately, the exemption period would have expired by this time, and the people of the Northwest would have been able to tax this land. It becomes the duty of the Dominion government, whose fault it is that the exemption still runs, to see to it that that exemption is taken away. When I went into that country upwards of twenty years ago, one of the first things I heard was that the odd-numbered sections were exempt from taxation for twenty years. I firmly believed that at the end of the twenty years we would be able to call upon the owners of the alternate sections to pay their share of the necessary expense for carrying on the local government of the country. I speak from experience as to this exemption being a burden upon the people. I live at this time in a section of the country where a considerable number of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands have been undisposed of and where there are still areas undisposed of, and all the time my taxes have been higher on that account than they would otherwise have been. For instance, I had to pay for school taxes at one time nearly twice what I should have had to pay if all these lands had been occupied by settlers, and the lands would have been occupied by settlers, I have little doubt, had not it been for the fact that they were being held at a price by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. At present I have to pay considerably more than I would have to pay if these lands had been settled on. And the same is true of the local improvement tax. Every farmer throughout that country who settles in a district which the Canadian Pacific Railway lands have not been disposed of is exposed to this great increase of taxation on account of the exemption. It has been stated that, in the course of time, owing to the sale of lands by the company, and also owing to the fact that, in any case, within fifteen or twenty years the exemption will cease, therefore this is a vanishing question. Still, I cannot see the reason why even for the next fifteen or twenty years the farmers of that country must continue to bear this additional burden. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have been disposing of considerable portions of their land grants lately. But this is frequently done in such a way that we are unable to tax the lands they thus dispose of. I know of one large company which is selling Canadian Pacific Railway lands, but which claims that it is merely acting as agent for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in this service, although I think there can be little doubt that it has really taken over the lands from the Canadian Pacific Railway. They are claiming this exemption and the people in the portion of the country to which I am referring, which has only recently been settled have to bear this additional burden, although those who purchased and those who did not buy their lands from the Canadian Pacific Railway but from this large land corporation. I consider that it is in the interest of the settling up of that country that this exemption of the land grant from taxation should be swept away. If there were not an exemption the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would certainly try to dispose of these lands as quickly as they could. But so long as there is no taxation to be paid on the lands, just so long will they continuue raising the price to obtain the highest figure possible. When the Canadian Pacific Railway had a monopoly of the carrying trade in the Northwest it was to their interest, as it is still in many parts of the country, to dispose of these lands as quickly as they could. Every new settler they put upon the lands brought them an added profit in the carrying business which they did for them. Some time ago they used to sell the lands at a very low figure in order to promote settlement. But in certain parts this condition is now changing. The Canadian Pacific Railway owns lands which are tributary to some of the new railway corporations which are coming in, and it is not to the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway to sacrifice those lands when the people who buy them will do their carrying business through other railways, and naturally the Canadian Pacific Railway will retain these lands which are exempt from taxes in their possession in hope of a rise. I do not wish to suggest that the contract of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be interfered with in any way. I consider that contract as sacred; but I do hold that it is the duty of the Dominion government to accept the obligations incurred by themselves under this contract, and not place all those obligations upon the shoulders of the people in the new provinces.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Let me point out to the right hon. gentleman and to the government how they can immediately secure the commutation of this exemption. There is always a way out of every difficulty, and I will show the right hon. gentleman a legal way out of this difficulty. Let me read clause 20 of the Canadian Pacific Railway Act :

> The limit to the reduction of tolls by the parliament of Canada provided for by the eleventh subsection of the 17th section of 'The Consolidated Railway Act, 1879', respecting tolls, is hereby extended, so that such reduction may be to such an extent that such tolls when reduced shall not produce less than ten per cent per annum profit on the capital actually expended in the construction of the railway, instead of not less than fifteen per cent per annum profit, as provided by the said subsection; and so also that such reduction shall not be made unless the net income of the company, ascertained as decribed in said subsection, should have exceeded ten per cent per annum instead of fifteen per cent per annum as provided by the said subsection.

Now here is a provision whereby the parliament of Canada can compel the Canadian Pacific Railway to come before it and show what it has cost to build that railway, and they are entitled only to earn ten per cent on the actual cost of that railway. Parliament has had that power over the Canadian Pacific Railway ever since the contract was entered into, and the time has now arrived, indeed it arrived long ago, when the government of this country should demand a statement of the cost of the construction of that road and should tell the railway : The day has come when your rates must be reduced as provided for in the statute, and we intend to reduce them. If the Canadian Pacific Railway had been brought before parliament, supposing an Act were passed in which we said to them : You must go before the Board of Railway Commissioners and show the original cost of your railway, and be prepared to submit to this reduction—I say the Canadian Pacific would have given up this exemption clause the day they got that notice. But instead of that, instead of dealing with the whole question now as the government should deal with it, they only deal with a part of it, they strengthen the Canadian Pacific Railway in their exemption, and they refrain from taking any action in regard to the regulation of their tolls, notwithstanding that the hon. gentleman says it is a bad exemption, an improvident exemption. He agrees with me in saying that it was the worst exemption on the statute-book of Canada. He still has under this Act power to go after the Canadian Pacific Railway and bring them before him, to compel them to produce papers in connection with the cost of the railway, and to say the time has arrived for a reduction of the old rates by the parliament of Canada. Now we have that power, and if we exercised it we would get a commutation of this exemption. The hon. gentleman thinks not. Well, let him try it. He has taken jurisdiction over other companies ; combines like the tobacco trust are under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Inland Revenue, and we can compel them to do certain things. We have the Canadian Pacific Railway Company within our jurisdiction as regards their rates, and you can always make a trade in a matter of this kind, and in that way the provinces can get relief. I say this clause should not be passed to-day as it is proposed without some provision being made by which the government can get a settlement of both these questions, in one of which the Canadian Pacific Railway has the advantage and in the other the people have the advantage. Let the government settle both questions together, and if that is done the Territories will be afforded relief. Show them we have more strings to our bow than they imagine. Here is a solemn contract signed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company providing for a reduction of their rates at a certain stage of their earnings, and this government to-day can, by enforcing that condition, obtain one of two things : They can probably make it clear that there ought to be a reduction in the tolls ; or they may say : We will not enforce that reduction of tolls for five years hence provided you commute this exemption. The hon. member for Assiniboia stated just now the character of this exemption. Let me point out, on similar lines, that this exemption is what is called an unearned increment, that is to say, the people of the west are constantly increasing the value of the Canadian Pacific Railway by every dollar that they tax themselves. They tax themselves for local improvements, they build roads, the Canadian Pacific Railway contributes nothing, but the Canadian Pacific Railway takes up all this unearned increment, and the settler taxes himself for his own roads ; he not only provides for himself but for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and he doubles and trebles the value of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now that is the greatest injustice that exists in the world, the injustice that inures to the benefit of the few against the many, the injustice that is called the unearned increment. It is happening all the world over, it is happening in this case, it is happening in cities. We may not be able to reach it in the case of cities, but in some way we can reach it. The Minister of Justice has confessed to-day in this debate that he consulted the Canadian Pacific Railway. He says he did not consult the Territories, I do not know whether he even consulted the representatives of the territorial government, although from the statement that has been read to-day the territorial government has presented an unanswerable case. That statement as read by the hon. gentleman just now and put on record in the 'Hansard,' is unanswerable, because it is the statement of a great injustice being done to the people of the west, an injustice which calls for a remedy. Therefore I say a remedy ought to be given. The Minister of the Interior, who is not in the House just now, if ever he did make an outcry in this House it was about the unfair customs taxes the people of the west had to pay to this Dominion government. He estimated last year at from $40 to $100 per family the amount that the people of the west paid in customs taxes to this government. This government says: you shall not only pay $100 per family in customs taxes but you shall pay the exemption of the Canadian Pacific Railway in your own country. The member for West Assiniboia says this is a great grievance. Well, if it is a great grievance it is entitled to a remedy, it can be remedied in some way. Now I will make this suggestion; that before this Act is passed the government ought to make an intimation that under this clause 20 of the contract that I have read, they will pass an Act referring this whole question to the Board of Railway Commissioners for ascertainment of the actual cost of that railway, and that under that clause they will see whether the time has not come for a reduction or regulation of the tolls of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The interests that my hon. friend represents in this House are so wide and so varied and so much of his time is taken up making speeches that he appears to be in entire ignorance of the things that have been going on during recent sessions. He is probably in ignorance of the fact that a session or two ago it was decided to refer this very clause to the Supreme Court so that we might ascertain in what our rights are in regard to the regulation of rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway. He is probably also in ignorance of the fact that some months ago the Canadian Pacific Railway agreed to submit their rates to the supervision and control of the Board of Railway Commissioners and they are now in the same position as any other company in respect to their rates.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Under that clause a commutation of these rights to exemption might have been obtained. As it is nothing has been done. Their rates are not being regulated.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They are being regulated.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The jurisdiction may be in the Railway Commission, but nothing has been done. The Canadian Pacific Railway are not having their rates regulated, but they are having their exemption protected in a way in which they should not be protected in this Act. It is all very fine to say that something has been done, but it is the old story of neglecting the settler and protecting the capitalists and vested rights. It is not sound public policy that these things should be continued. I hear the hon. Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) say 'hear, hear.'

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I made no such observation.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then the hon. gentleman agrees with me and he will join with me in weeping for the farmer of the west. He used to weep for the farmer in Ontario, for the widow and the orphan.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. No, I do not agree with such rubbish.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The hon. Minister of Justice does not give up his time, and he does not——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think you might weep a little for those who have to listen to this.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The hon. Minister of Justice should weep for the people of the west and for this legislation, because, if there is anything that the Liberal party ought to be ashamed of, it is in the passing of this legislation binding these new provinces. The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) introduced his Bill by saying that he was laying the corner stone of complete autonomy in these new provinces. Where is that autonomy? He is restricting them in the matter of schools, restricting them in the matter of municipal and provincial rights, restricting them in the matter of their boundaries, laying down a schedule of constituencies, limiting them in every way and robbing them of their lands although all the other provinces have been given their lands.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Was Manitoba given its lands?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. No, it asked for them, but it could not get them. The Conservative government refused them. The hon. gentleman cannot justify himself in wrong doing by pointing to the Acts of the Conservative party. The Conservative party was not an immaculate party, it was guilty of many mistakes and because it did make mistakes my hon. friend says that he may commit every mistake in the calender, that he may violate every commandment of the decalogue because Sir John Macdonald or some one else did this.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman supported them in their wrong doing. The hon. gentleman belonged to the Liberal party until that act was done, but as soon as the Conservative party was guilty of a wicked act he joined that party.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Explain.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I can explain. I regret the sins of my adolescence and I am trying to redeem myself and to lead a better life, but here is the hon. Postmaster General getting up in years and to-day he is glorying in the fact that he is imitating the sins of those who preceded him. I am willing to be judged by the people of the country as between my record and conduct and that of the hon. gentleman in the past, and I say that the government to-day in passing this Act of complete autonomy for these two new provinces, in putting the coping stone on the edifice, are doing nothing but restricting and imposing conditions on these great new provinces of the west, and again I tell them that there is that free, fresh air of liberty that glows from the west across the prairies that will not submit to this kind of legislation, that will not submit to this kind of restriction and the day is coming rapidly when all of them will have to weep for the principles which they have enunciated here to-day.

Amendment (Mr. Scott) negatived, and section agreed to.

On section 15,

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Since this question was up for consideration before, I have considered the observations that were made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), and by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) in respect to the question of joint stock companies, and I have concluded to substitute for the last paragraph of the amended section 1 proposed a day or two ago a new provision. The last paragraph, as I propose to amend it, will read as follows:

Every Joint Stock Company lawfully incorporated by or under the authority of any ordinance of the Northwest Territories shall be subject to the legislative authority of the province of Alberta if,—

(a) The head office or the registered office of such company is at the date upon which this Act takes effect situate in the province of Alberta; and,

(b) The powers and object of such company are such as might be conferred by the legislature of the said province and not expressly authorized to be executed in any part of the Northwest Territories beyond the limits of the said province.

The effect of this will be to declare that every joint stock company that is incorporated now by the Territories, which has for its purpose and object works which are clearly of a local character, which is merely a local undertaking, will be a joint stock company within the power of the provincial legislature to deal with. Those having powers and objects on the face of their charters extending over the whole Territories, will of course, continue to have a local existence, but they will be what they evidently would be under the law if nothing was contained in these Bills, Dominion companies and they must be dealt with by the Dominion. A joint stock company that is now incorporated in the Territories, if no provision were contained in this section, would, by the fact that the Territories are divided into two provinces, if that company had power to carry on business in both provinces, become, ipso facto, a Dominion company. The intention is to continue that company if the company desires to be treated as a local company, if its object and its powers are matters of mere local concern within the limits of one of the provinces and the province within which the head office or registered office of the company is will have jurisdiction. I use the words 'registered' office to meet the difficulty suggested by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in respect to those companies that are incorporated to do business and the head office of which is beyond the limits of the province, for instance in England.

Mr. HAGGART. Can they make the choice?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, the Act says that where the head or registered office is that will be the locus of the company.

Mr. HAGGART. I mean as between a Dominion and a local company?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They may be registered wherever they choose. They have to take out a license under the ordinance. But, I use the word 'registered' to meet the difficulty suggested by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in respect to those companies, the head office of which is abroad beyond the limits of the province. The local ordinances provide for a foreign corporation and the word 'foreign' applies to all corporations incorporated beyond the limits of the Territories. They must have a registered office in the province so that where the registered or head office is will be the place which will determine the jurisdiction of the province.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In other words, the registered office will be the guide where the head office is out of the Territory?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is it.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST.

House in committee on Bill (No. 69) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Alberta.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 17—subsidy to province,

Mr. SPROULE. Who is to take the census in this case? Is it the province?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The decennial census is provided for by the Census Act, but the census in the intervening period will have to be taken, I suppose, by arrangement between the provincial and the Dominion governments.

Mr. FOSTER. So far as I am concerned, in discussing the land question last night I discussed the financial question, because the two seem to be intimately combined; and having said all that I would have said if I had divided my remarks into two parts, the one on lands and the other on financial terms, I do not know that it is worth while to repeat them again to-night, unless the Minister of Justice is very anxious to hear a good speech a second time. There is another reason which would induce me to repeat it, if I had a little more faith in the stiff-necked and rebellious ministry which sits opposite me. I might think it worth while to repeat it if I thought they yould take good suggestions and put them into practice; but I can quite see that having arranged their method and plan, which is to my mind an entirely fictitious one, and placed on a fictitious basis, they propose to carry it out. I get no assistance from the Northwest members, who seem rather to be indisposed to make a good and enduring provision financially for their country. They shiver on the brink of a little responsibility, and do not seem to feel that the people or the legislature will care to take up the matter in a business way and arrange for their present necessities, and at the same time conserve the resources which would suffice for future and better use. Having exhausted my store of wise and prudent counsel, I do not know that it is of any use to cast any more pearls before the government opposite. I have said my say, and I hold to my contentions.

Mr. SPROULE. On what basis do you make the maximum 800,000 of a population?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think that was fixed by taking into account the conditions existing in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, the population of which was fixed at 400,000. I went through the debate which took place at confederation to see why 400,000 was selected, but I could not find any reason for it.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the maximum of Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The population according to the census of 1861.

Mr. SPROULE. Each of these Northwest provinces will in the course of time be as populous as Ontario or Quebec, and we fix their maximum population on which they are to receive 80 cents a head at 800,000, while the maximum of Ontario and Quebec is over 1,000,000. It may be that we are making up for this difference in other ways, but the question is, will the people of these provinces be satisfied with that?

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. OLIVER. I may say that in the draft Bill prepared by the Northwest assembly and presented by the Northwest goveernment, if my memory is not mistaken, the limit of population upon which 80 cents per head should be drawn was placed at 400,000 for the single province which it was proposed to organize out of the territory. The demand of the territorial government was for 80 cents per head on 400,000, The concession, on the terms of the existing Bill, is eighty cents on 160,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was the 400,000 not the minimum population?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, 250,000, and the maximum was 1,396,091. My hon. friend will observe that 1,396,091 was for the two provinces.

Mr. LENNOX. I presume that our dealing with these financial figures is without prejudice to what may be determined hereafter as regards allowing the Territories to have their land. Am I right in assuming that they will be entitled to these moneys in any case?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This has no reference at all to the payment in lieu of land. This is what we call the legislative grant and the 80 cents per head on the population. There is another provision for a grant in lieu of debt and an allowance in lieu of land.

Mr. HERRON. I think it will be found on looking back over the last five or six years and seeing the increase in the expenditure of that country, that the new provinces are not going to get, even with the whole Bill, the same money they are getting now. The amount looks large to hon. members on both sides of the House, but I do not think it is going to be nearly sufficient for the needs of the country. A few years ago we were getting about $300,000 from the Domion for the purpose of carrying on local government in the Territories. It was found that that was not nearly sufficient. The population has been increasing so rapidly that the expenditure has gone up until to-day we are spending over a million dollars a year, and even that is not found sufficient for our needs. The money we will have to spend under this Bill will not be half sufficient for our needs. True as the country becomes more settled, our annual grant will increase, but the needs of the country will increase far more rapidly, and the result will be that in the very near future, if not at the outset, the new provinces will have to resort to direct taxation, and every hon. member for the Northwest will acknowledge that direct taxation would be one of the worst things that could happen us in the way of retarding immigration. Settlers coming to our country have left other countries because of the high taxation, particularly in the United States. It is the high taxation in that country which is bringing the bulk of American settlers to our Northwest, and consequently it would be very injurious to us to have to resort to direct taxation. But that will be the result, I believe, under this Bill.

Mr. P. TALBOT. I would like to draw attention to a source of revenue which has attracted little notice, and that is our school lands. According to estimate, we have at least eleven million or twelve million acres of school lands which in time will be sold and the money held in trust by the Dominion government and on that money we will be paid three per cent yearly, every half year. The policy has been to hold these lands until they are worth $7 to $10 an acre. We will have, therefore, ten million acres which will be eventually sold at $10 an acre, or $100,000,000, on which we will receive an annual income of three per cent, or three million dollars per year. That amount, along with what is arranged in this Bill would be sufficient for the new provinces.

Mr. HERRON. The hon. gentleman has given one of the best reasons to prove why this government is not treating the Northwest properly in the matter of lands. If ten million acres of school lands are going to give the amount of revenue the hon. member mentions, viz.: three million dollars per year, and that almost immediately, what about the hundreds of millions of acres of land which this government is keeping from us, and in return for which it is giving but a million dollars a year?

Mr. SPROULE. I doubt whether these school lands will realize very much more than we got from the old school land grant of Ontario. In Ontario, when we add to the revenues from school lands what is required to meet the expenditure on education, education becomes a pretty expensive burden on the people. In Manitoba they have been trying from time to time to get the use of the capital of the school lands fund and have frequently expressed great dissatisfaction because the Dominion government would not give more than the interest I think the Dominion government are right because they hold these lands in trust. But I am merely pointing out that the interest on the sales of these lands is very much too small for the needs of that province for educational purposes. It is quite possible that there will be a similar experience in the new provinces.

Mr. LAKE. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) said that the draft Bill presented by the Territories fixed the limit of population upon which the capitation allowance would be given, at 400,000 souls. I think he is mistaken. The clause of the draft Bill is as follows:

Section 22,

On an estimated population of 250,000 at eighty cents per head, $200,000, subject to be increased as hereinafter mentioned, that is to say: A census of the province shall be taken in every fifth year reckoning from the general decennial census of 1901 and an approximate estimate of the population shall be made at equal intervals of time between such quinquennial census and such decennial census; and whenever the population by any such census or estimate exceeds 250,000, which shall be the minimum on which the said allowance shall be calculated, the amount of the said allowance shall be increased in accordance therewith until the populaion reaches 1,396,091, after which there shall be no further increase.

In the explanation that follows, it is stated that taking into consideration the extraordinary rate of increase in the population, it would be manifestly unfair to limit this grant to a population of 400,000.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member (Mr. Lake) has corrected me in the statement I made as to the figures contained in the draft Bill. I find, on reference to a copy of the Bill which is before me that there is some ground for the correction, and that still there is some ground for the statement I made. The Bill in the form in which it was received at Ottawa specifically states the limit of population at 400,000 on which the payment of 80 cents per head is made. But I find in one of the later pages of the return, page 30, is a copy of a telegram dated December 16, 1900, which is as follows:

Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier,
Ottawa.

Have just noticed that seven words at end of paragraph 22, draft Bill, were inserted through clerical error. Kindly strike them out and substitute one million, three hundred and ninety-six thousand and ninety-one, after which there shall be no further increase.

That is to say, the statement I made as to the terms of the Bill, which, I presume, was absolutely assented to by the Northwest Assembly, was a limit of 400,000. But we will admit that was a clerical error which was amended afterwards, as stated by the telegram sent to Ottawa. Therefore, we are bound to consider that that was the intention in the first place. I would merely point out again that, even accepting the correction suggested as being what was in the mind of the assembly at the time the Bill was passed, there is still a difference to the Northwest Territories in favour of the present arrangement as between 1,396,091 and 1,600,000. We are getting an advantage of $160,000 a year under the arrangement by the Autonomy Bills, as compared with even the amended provision of the Northwest government's draft Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. That will not be a very wonderful difference if you have to keep up two governments instead of one.

Mr. LAKE. I think the Minister of the Interior forgets that the autonomy draft Bill was not passed by the assembly before being submitted to this government. This was drawn up on the responsibility of the Prime Minister of the Northwest Territories and his colleagues. And his telegram, I think, followed immediately after his letter forwarding the Bill. His letter forwarding the Bill was dated 7th December, and his telegram followed immediately. So it is evident that this was a clerical error. I appreciate the statement of the Minister of the Interior that the population upon which the Territories as a whole will get the capitation allowance will, in view of the fact that there will be two provinces under this Bill, be larger than it would otherwise have been. But, after all, it must be taken into consideration that it will mean that two separate local governments will have to be carried on with a great deal of expensive machinery; and this, in my opinion, does not compensate for the increased expenditure which will be necessary.

Mr. OLIVER. It is not required to compensate for the increased expenditure which will be necessary, because provision is made to the amount of $50,000 a year for each province, as compared with $50,000 a year for one province provided for in Mr. Haultain's draft Bill.

On section 18,

Inasmuch as the said province is not in debt, it shall be entitled to be paid and to receive from the government of Canada, by half-yearly payments in advance, an annual sum of $405,375, being the equivalent of interest at the rate of five per cent per annum on the sum of $8,107,500.

Mr. HENDERSON. On a former occasion I made a reference to this clause 18, which clause I will read:

18. Inasmuch as he said province is not in debt, it shall be entitled to be paid and to receive from the government of Canada, by half-yearly payments in advance, interest at the rate of five per cent per annum on the sum of eight million one hundred and seven thousand five hundred dollars.

What I fear is that in after years——

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman has not the clause in its present form. Having regard to my hon. friend's suggestion, we changed that so that we pay an annual sum, 'being the equivalent of' the interest, which, lawyers tell me, means the same amount of money, but on a different condition.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand the Minister of Finance to say that he made the change in this clause with a view to meeting the opinion of his legal adviser, who, I presume, is the Minister of Justice in this case. Now, we in the province of Ontario have had a good deal of experience in the interpretation of a clause of this kind; and it is owing to the very great difference of opinion that exists there among legal men as to the meaning of such a clause that I draw attention to the matter now. I am very much inclined to think, notwithstanding what the Minister of Finance has said, that with his own interpretation given in a similar matter in the province of Ontario, the difficulty which I apprehended would arise, and which I think the Minister of Finance did not intend should arise, may still come up. If I understand the minister, he has no intention to go further than to pay over to the province of Alberta each year the sum of $405,375 as an allowance on account of the province having had no debt. I assume that it is not his intention at any time to pay any part of the principle sum on which this interest is calculated. I believe that is the hon. minister's intention; at any rate, I think that is the intention of parliament.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Now, are we sure in the light of the experience we have had in the past that that will be the interpretation in after years put upon this clause? A favourite argument in the province of Ontario, under a very similar condition, in fact a case not nearly so strong, was that where there was interest there must be principal behind it; and if the Dominion was entitled to pay to the province of Ontario a fixed amount of interest yearly, certainly there was a capital which the province was entitled to call for. That was the case in reference to the subsidy granted to the province of Ontario in the year 1884 of $142,414, being the equivalent of 5 per cent interest on $2,848,000. Now, to put the matter plainly, I will read a letter written by the Minister of Finance, and we will ascertain whether his opinion is the same to-day as it was in the year 1900; if it is, then I think we should make some further change in this clause. The letter is somewhat lengthy, but I can read it in a very few minutes. I think it is well that hon. members should hear this letter, because it reviews the whole matter. The letter is written to the provincial treasurer of the province of Ontario, dated, Ottawa, January 12, 1900, in answer to a communication sent by the Hon. Mr. Ross to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance, the Hon. Mr. Fielding, writes as follows:

Ottawa, January 12, 1900.

My Dear Mr. Ross,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo on the subject of certain moneys placed to the credit of the province and the accounts of the Dominion.

The advantage to the province in permitting these moneys to remain to the credit of the province in the Dominion, where they yield to the province five per cent interest, are so obvious that I do not suppose you are contemplating their withdrawal. As a pure matter of finance between the Dominion and the province. it would of course be profitable to the Dominion to pay you the money, as we could easily raise it at much lower rates.

I do not think your government have any unconditional right to demand this money from the Dominion. There are certain limitations provided by the statutes ; but no doubt if you desired to obtain the money, you could easily comply with these conditions.

In the earlier history of confederation it appears to have been contemplated that the moneys placed to the credit of the provinces in what was called the debt account should remain in that account, and the annual interest be paid to supplement the allowances for the support of the provincial governments. I find, however, that in 1874 there was a change of policy in this respect. Section 2 of chapter 17 of the statute of that year provides as follows:

The Governor in Council may in his discretion advance from time to time to any province of Canada such sums as may be required for local improvements in the province, and not exceeding in the whole the amount by which the debt of the province for which Canada is responsible then falls short of the debt with which the province was allowed to enter the union, such advances to be deemed additions to the debt of the province, with permission to the province to repay them to Canada, on such notice, in such sums and on such other conditions as the Dominion government and that of the province may agree upon, any amount so paid being deducted from the debt of the province and calculating the subsidy payable to it.

Under this statute it appears to have been intended that the moneys at the credit of the provinces could be withdrawn for the purpose of assisting in the construction of provincial public works. Considerable sums were so drawn by the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, British Columbia and Manitoba.

By chapter 4 of the Acts of 1885 the section above quoted was re-enacted with a further limitation placed upon the action of the provincial governments by requiring the passing of the provincial statute as a basis for an application to the Dominion government for payment of these moneys.

I think that practically the Act of 1884 operates as an extension of the Acts relating to the debt account, and that, therefore, the moneys credited to Ontario by the Act stand in the same position as a balance of debt account favourable to a province under the British North America Act. This was the view apparently taken by this department in 1884, and since continued, as appears by the public accounts.

Looking at these several Acts, I am of opinion that you would not have the right to withdraw these moneys for the ordinary purposes of government, but what parliament intended that they might be withdrawn by a provincial government, with the previous sanction of the legislature, for local improvements. I have no reason to doubt that if, instead of raising the moneys for your public works by the issue of securities, you had seen fit to make application under the Acts above cited, for a portion of these moneys from the Dominion, the government of the day would have recognized this as a proper use of the moneys, and would have authorized the payment of the sum required.

If you desire now to withdraw, subject to the above conditions, any moneys standing to the credit of the province, there would not be any objection to your so doing.

Yours faithfully,
W. S. FIELDING,
Minister of Finance.

To the Hon. G. W. Ross,
Premier of Ontario,
Toronto.

Now, to my mind the two clauses are practically similar, with this difference, possibly, that the case before us is a stronger case in favour of the province withdrawing the money than was the case of Ontario. It is doubtful whether this sum of $2,848,000 was a debt or not; but in any case it was practically a sum made up as the basis of a subsidy, but in the Act of parliament creating that subsidy it was called capital, and then 5 per cent of that sum was to be paid as additional subsidy. Here we declare this sum of $8,107,500 to be a principal sum, and we name the amount of interest that is to be paid on account of that principal sum, namely, $405,375. Now to my mind, as the resolution is now worded, this sum of $405,375 being specifically designated as interest under the Act of 1885, the Minister of Finance would be obliged, if the proper application was made by the province of Alberta by Act of the legislature, to pay over any portion of this sum of over $8,000,000 so long as it was required by that province for the purposes of public works. I do not think that is the intention of the Minister of Finance, but I do not think that he has yet secured a wording of the resolution that would actually prohibit the province from demanding it. Now we may say : Let us pay it to the province if they demand it, because the Dominion can borrow money at a much lower rate of interest, it would be a saving to the Dominion, and we would thenceforth require to pay a much smaller subsidy. But we know the danger of provinces exhausting their revenues in this way. It will simply result in after years in a further demand being made for an additional subsidy on account of their having lost or spent what was originally provided for them. If the minister can assure me that the wording of this will make it absolutely clear that the province of Alberta will have no right to call upon any part of the principal sum, then I have nothing further to say, because I am making no complaint with regard to the provision that is made for the province.

I am not saying it is too small or too great. I have not gone into the calculation as to whether this is the correct equivalent to the debt of the other provinces or not. I take it for granted the officials of the Finance Department have thoroughly investigated that, and that it approximately, at any rate, approaches the exact figure. But legislating, as we are here now, on a matter that is to last practically for all time to come, we want to make sure that we are making provision for a permanent revenue for that province, and one that cannot be used for an improper purpose—I would not say for an improper purpose—but used in a way differently from that in which this parliament contemplates it should be used, so as to open the door for the legislature coming back here at a future time and asking for an increased subsidy. I fear very much that having designated this as interest, the argument will be set up that where there is interest there is principal, and that under the Act of 1885, which is in force today, the province would have the same right to demand the capital sum in this case as it was interpreted they had in the case of the province of Ontario.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the intention in the mind of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) and the intention in my own mind are precisely the same, but whether we are able to get a form of words which will correctly carry out that intention is, of course, a matter for his legal advisers and my legal advisers.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have none.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, then, I am more fortunate than my hon. friend. I have some. It is certainly intended, by the common consent of the House, that this sum shall be an annual payment to the province. A change has been made in the wording which makes it materially different, as we think, and as we are advised, from the Act respecting the province of Ontario. The difference of a few words in the statute will be such as to make the first statute entirely inapplicable to the second, and we are advised that the difference in the wording is entirely sufficient to account for one interpretation being given in the case of Ontario and another in this instance. After the discussion which took place in the House, the intention of both sides, I may say, has been that this shall be an annual payment to the province. The words employed seem to me to be sufficient for the purpose. On the day that I made this amendment at the table my hon. friend the Minister of Justice was not present, and, as I stated then, I had not the benefit of his advice. Since that time he has looked into the matter, and he concurs in the view I then expressed, that the words used are ample to carry out the intention in the mind of my hon. friend from Halton and the intention in my own mind. If there is any good reason to believe that that intention has not been carried out, I will willingly have any other words suggested that will serve the object better, but I think my hon. friend will agree that the words now used do carry out the intention which is in the mind of the committee generally.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not read for some years the debate that occurred in 1884, but I remember reading it years ago. My recollection is that a question very similar to this came up, when Sir Richard Cartwright asked the question of Sir Leonard Tilley whether it was the intention of the Act of 1884 to pay over simply the 5 per cent yearly on the $2,848,000, or to pay over any part of the principal, and the answer of Sir Leonard Tilley was distinctly that the intention of parliament and the intention of the government at that time was to pay only the annual sum. Sir Leonard Tilley seemed to be just as firm in his opinion as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance is in his opinion now, but, notwithstanding that fact, lawyers and others, including the hon. Minister of Finance himself, afterwards interpreted the meaning of parliament at that time as different, and the hon. gentleman assented in fact to the payment over of a portion of the princial sum, or all of it, if it was called for. My objection of the wording of this clause is to the use of the word 'interest.' If the hon. minister could pay over the sum of $405,375 as an additional allowance, and make no reference whatever to interest, it would be better. As long as you leave the reference to interest you will have some person coming up ten or fifteen years afterwards and stating, as the late government in the province of Ontario did, that where there is interest there must be principal, and they would simply capitalize this sum of $405,375 and say: As you owe us that much interest you owe us the capital sum. I said before that if the hon. minister assured me that he had the matter absolutely clear I would withdraw my objection, and he seems to think that he has it absolutely clear. Whilst I withdraw my objection, I confess that I cannot agree with him in the wording of the clause. However, the hon. minister is responsible for the government and not myself, and I discharge my duty when I point out the difficulty that has arisen in a similar case.

Mr. FIELDING. I think we have really benefited by my hon. friend's earlier suggestion. I think he will find that the words as now used express his own idea.

Mr. BLAIN. I rather agree with my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) that the word 'interest' should be removed from these resolutions. I accept, of course, the statement of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), endorsed by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick), that the change in the wording of the clause will remove any doubt in the minds of the people as to whether there is an amount of money deposited with the Dominion government to the credit of these two new provinces. My hon. friend from Halton has read a letter addressed by the hon. Minister of Finance to the Hon. George W. Ross. I remember very well when Mr. Ross, then premier of Ontario, contended before the electors of Ontario that the provincial government had deposited with the Dominion $2,848,000, that they could draw it at any time to be expended in the interest of the people of the province with certain limitations. I will venture to read the letter written to the hon. Minister of Finance by Mr. Ross:

Toronto, December 29, 1899.

My Dear Sir,—The government of Ontario have appointed a royal commission for the purpose of inquiring into and reporting on the financial affairs of the province. For the purpose of assisting the commission in the prosecution of their inquiry, I am desirous of ascertaining how your department regard the sum of money ($2,848,000) which has been placed to the credit of the province by chapter 4 of the statutes of 1884.

Although we have not called on the Dominion for payment of this money, we have assumed in our accounts that it belongs to the province, and that if we had desired to use it for provincial purposes we would have been free to do so.

Kindly let me know the view which your department takes of this question.

Yours truly,

G. W. ROSS.

Hon. W. S. Fielding, M.P.,
Minister of Finance,
Ottawa.

This is a statement over the signature of the premier of Ontario that the government of Ontario had deposited with the government at Ottawa $2,848,000, and they so stated in their financial statement to the people of Ontario at that time. Thus they were enabled, by the placing of that amount to the credit of Ontario, held by the Dominion government in trust, to put before the electors of Ontario the statement that they had a surplus of money when the fact is they had no surplus. And then it was the great question of debate in the legislature of Ontario for many years, and was a great question before the electors in that province. I believe that the Minister of Finance, and particularly the Minister of Justice, should be very careful now when they are legislating for the new provinces to remove altogether the word 'interest,' and make it so plain that the people of western Canada will not be confronted with that question as the people of Ontario have been confronted with it for so many years.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the event of the language being so construed at any time by the courts or by any government, that the province of Alberta was entitled to call upon this capital sum the province would not only be entitled possibly to call upon that capital sum but would be entitled to capitalize the annual payment at the current rate of interest. I have made a calculation. Suppose Alberta established the fact that being in receipt of an annual income of interest of $405,375 from the Dominion of Canada—and wherever there is interest there must of necessity be principal—they would certainly have just as much right to capitalize that at 3 per cent as at 5 per cent if money was not worth more than 3 per cent. and instead of taking a capital sum of $8,000,000 or rather of $8,107,500 they would practically have a capital sum of $13,512,500 rendering this Dominion liable for a much larger sum than we contemplate at the present time. It is no simple problem, and if the English language can possibly make it clear beyond a doubt I would say decidedly, make it clear. I do not want to rob those provinces of anything to which they are enitled but when we agree to give a substantial sum let us leave no doubt whatever as to the exact sum they are entitled to get. The illustration I have given of what might be the demand of the province of Alberta is simply a repetition of a calculation made by the Hon. Mr. Ross, in the province of Ontario. He contended that he had a right to capitalize his interest at 3½ per cent when money was worth 3½ per cent and showed a very much larger amount of capital in the hands of the Dominion than he was actually entitled to in the first instance, when in fact there was practically no capital. But in this instance we admit there is capital because there is interest and where there is smoke there is generally fire, according to the old saying; where there is interest we consider there must be capital, there must be something behind it, what I fear is the dangerous word 'interest.' I apprehend that even if we satisfy ourselves now, possibly ten or fifteen years hence there may be men who will take a different view of that interest.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend and I will have to leave this matter to the lawyers and if they say the words used fail to express the intention of the committee I will consent to consider an amendment. I do not think anything which Sir Leonard Tilley said years ago or anything I may say now will be of any value in interpreting this statute in the future. It must be interpreted like other statutes, according to its own words, and it is not likely that any one will refer to the debates in this House to ascertain its meaning. We must make it clear and if we have not done so let us do so. But since the hon. member from Peel (Mr. Blain) has also read the letter which I addressed to the Hon. Mr. Ross, whether that letter was wise or unwise, right or wrong, it was based on the language of the statute as it then existed. That is not the same language as we have here, and therefore we do not get any assistance by importing into the discussion that letter giving an opinion, possibly an erroneous one, based on the statute as it then existed. The statute here is in different terms and is designed for a different purpose. If my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) finds, after he consults his legal friends, that this language fails to express the intention of the committee I have no desire to adhere to the words used.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the letter written by the advice of the Department of Justice.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. Since I heard the letter read in the fine round voice of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) I am rather proud of it. I think it is rather a good state document and I think it stands the fire to-day. It was written as a business document, but after I had obtained advice as I should in important matters from the Department of Justice. The only reasons for inserting a capital sum and the interest thereon is this that in all past negotiations or arrangements between the Dominion and the provinces, you make a certain allowance in connection with what is known as the debit account and in order that you may deal fairly with a province it is necessary to know the basis on which such arrangements are made. It is a convenience in comparisons hereafter, to have the matter thus stated, but the amount allowed is not interest; it is a sum equivalent to the interest and I believe that legal gentlemen say the difference is very great.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the Act of 1884—and I am sorry I have not the statute before me—it is stated distinctly that the 5 per cent on $2,848,000 should be paid over each and every year, half-yearly, to the province as an additional subsidy.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that is a stronger term than anything used here.

Mr. FIELDING. Am I not right in saying that in that case the sum was to be treated as capital?

Mr. HENDERSON. I believe the hon. minister is right.

Mr. FIELDING. We do not so treat it in this case.

Mr. HENDERSON. By inference we certainly do, by he fact that we are paying a sum that is declared to be interest.

Mr. FIELDING. Not interest, but the equivalent of interest.

Mr. HENDERSON. The equivalent of interest.

Mr. FIELDING. That is all the difference in the world.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the difference is not sufficient as long as the word is used there.

Mr. SCOTT. I trust the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) is not arguing that this province in this respect should be placed on a different basis from the other provinces of Canada. I am not very clear on this matter myself.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me. I thought I had made myself so clear that he who runs might read. I stated distinctly that I was not attacking the allowance made to those provinces, and I was very careful in all the discussion to find no fault with the allowance. I only desired that the province should clearly and distinctly understand what it is getting and that this parliament should clearly and distinctly understand what it is giving. Now beyond that I am quite sure I have not gone, and it does not remain for the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) to charge me with trying to keep anything back from the new province which the government is disposed to give it.

Mr. SCOTT. I am still somewhat in the dark myself about this matter, but I recollect that we had a discussion concerning capital accounts a couple of years ago when it was proposed to advance a quarter million dollars to the Northwest Territories as a capital advance, and I think I recollect the statement made in the House at that time that it was possible for the other provincial governments to draw from their capital if they wished to do so. For instance there was a certain number of million dollars standing as capital account to the credit of New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, and it was open to those provincial governments to draw that capital although of course afterwards they would draw less interest and certainly, speaking on behalf of a portion of the people who are to compose one of these new provinces, I wish to stand out for equal treatment. If I am mistaken about this matter well and good, but we certainly should be placed on exactly the same basis as the other provinces have been in regard to capital or debt account.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend were wise and were looking after the interests of the Northwest provinces, I think he would rather have the matter arranged so that they could not withdraw and dissipate their capital. If they had the sum of $8,000,000 which they felt they could withdraw by the million or half million each year, it would be an additional temptation to them to dissipate for present needs what should be kept for the future. I would have it understood that while they could draw the percentage of that from year to year, it should be kept as a never-failing source of income. I think it is a question whether the maritime provinces have done the best for themselves by dissipating their capital and drawing upon it for present necessities and coming to the point of finding a diminishing revenue because they have eaten up their capital. If I were from the Northwest, I should want to have it fixed that the capital from which the yearly payments arose should never be diminished, or liable to be taken for present and pressing necessities. I think it would be better for the province.

Section 19 agreed to.

On section 15,

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This section is a highly technical one, and is intended to deal with a somewhat embarrassing situation which will exist in the Northwest after this Act comes into force. I have consulted the Deputy Minister of Justice, who drew this Bill, and he in turn has consulted those who represented the Northwest Territories. The section as it is now proposed to amend it, meets with the approval, I understand, of the representatives of the Northwest Territories and those who represent the Northwest government. Under these circumstances I would suggest that the clause be allowed to pass with the understanding that at any time it may be reconsidered at the suggestion of any member of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That, I think, should be quite satisfactory. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) was good enough to give me at six o'clock a memo. prepared by Mr. Newcombe, Deputy Minister of Justice, dealing with some points which had been raised on this side as to the possible construction of section 15 as proposed to be amended. I expected to have had an opportunity of looking over the memo. of the deputy minister between six and eight o'clock but was prevented by other engagements. Under the circumstances, I shall not ask the committee to wait until I have examined it. If I think any difficulty arises under the words of the amendment, I will ask the government to permit us to return to clause 15 for the purpose of moving any amendment which may be thought necessary on this side. The only important question raised on this side was whether or not section 11 of the Act of 1875 might not be continued as part of the constitution of the Territories by the very words of this section. Mr. Newcombe thinks that is not possible. I am not prepared, without considering his opinion, to say I do not concur, and therefore I shall be very glad to accept the suggestion of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. SPROULE. How will the societies at present existing be affected ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They are continued in their provincial existence. They can only be dissolved by the Governor in Council after the province has made provision for substitutes. These societies, being in operation, will immediately, when this Bill passes, come under the jurisdiction of the Governor in Council, and we must deal with them, in so far as their present corporate existence is concerned ; but we will deal with them in such a way as to dissolve them after the province has arranged by legislation for their continued existence within the province. The province must first arrange for other societies being substituted for the present ones.

Section agreed to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is nothing left but the land clause, the distribution of seats and the school clause, which includes number 2. In view of the fact that we have a number of amendments, I would move that the committee rise so as to give us time to consider the present condition of the Bill and come to some conclusion about dealing with the other clauses.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will the Bill be reprinted ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am afraid that will take too much time.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It is not very long, and I think you could have it set up in two hours.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I was going to suggest that possibly to-morrow we might take up some other measures, and in that event we might get the Bill reprinted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that will be desirable. We have had a pretty steady grind at the Bill for some time, and there will be amendments moved to all the clauses still undisposed of. It will be advisable to put the amendments in such a shape as will, with as little prolixity as possible, express the views we entertain on this side ; and a day or two devoted to a little consideration for that purpose will not be time wasted. I would suggest that some other business could in the meantime be taken up. I did intend to have made this afternoon some observations with regard to the difference between the original and the amended clause 16. However, I did not wish to make any suggestion to the government as to the course they should take, but I would think that when we take up the Bill again, we should dispose of the land clause first and then take up clause 16, unless the government specially desires to take up the school matter first and deal with the other afterwards. I am not particular except that I would like to know a little in advance what the course of the government will be in that regard.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As regards the order in which we will take up the clauses, we are quite willing to leave that to hon. gentlemen opposite to decide. I would like to keep the redistribution of seats to the last, but it is a matter of indifference to us whether we deal with the educational clause or the land clause first.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is the understanding that the Bill lie over till next Monday.

Mr. FIELDING. We might agree that the Bill may not be taken up to-morrow and that will leave us free to take it up Thursday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the House sit Thursday evening ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is probable we may not and we can always come to some understanding as to when the Bill will be proceeded with.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 9.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 17, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill to further amend the Railway Act, 1903.—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST—DISTRICT OF MACKENZIE.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 157) respecting the district of Mackenzie.

Mr. SPROULE. Explain.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. All the Bills that stand in my name on the order paper, as well as the two Bills which stand in the name of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), and the one Bill which stands in the name of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), are necessary legislation in view of the Autonomy Bills that have just been introduced. I might as well, with the permission of the House, explain all the Bills at the same time. By the Bill respecting the district of Mackenzie it is proposed to erect into a district, with a constitution based upon that of the district of Keewatin, the territory to the north of the new provinces and extending to the Arctic ocean.

The Bill to amend the Keewatin Act will add to the present district of Keewatin (1) those parts of the provisional districts of Saskatchewan and Athabaska which are not included in the province of Saskatchewan ; (2) the corresponding strip of the present provisional district of Mackenzie which is not to be included in the new district ; and (3) the territory lying to the east of the district of Keewatin as now constituted and extending to Hudson Bay.

The next Bill is a Bill to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act. This is the same Bill which I introduced yesterday, and which I then explained. It is necessary to amend the Controverted Elections Act in order (1) to give jurisdiction to the new provincial courts when they shall be constituted ; (2) in order to provide for the transfer of pending business from the Supreme Court of the Territories to the new courts when the latter are established ; and (3) to make special provision with regard to cases which may arise under the Act affecting elections in the districts which are partly in one province and partly in the other.

The Bill to amend the Northwest Territories Act is intended to carry into effect the proposals of the Bill introduced by Mr. Casgrain in the session of 1904, and also the suggestions made by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy). I explained this Bill yesterday.

The Bill respecting the Northwest Territories will provide for the appointment of a provisional liquidator for the Northwest Territories, with power to get in the properties and assets of the Territories, and to make such distribution of these, including the public records and documents, as may be immediately necessary or convenient, and also to pay out of moneys coming into his hands the liabilities of the territorial government.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 158) to amend the Keewatin Act.—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

Bill (No. 159) to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act.—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

Bill (No. 160) with respect to the Northwest Territories.—Mr. Fitzpatrick.

Bill (No. 162) to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894.—Mr. Oliver.

NORTHWEST IRRIGATION ACT, 1898.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 161) to amend the Northwest Irrigation Act, 1898.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. FOSTER. We are afraid he is going to do something with the Milk river that was spoken of so sympathetically the other night.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not in a position at the moment to give an explanation of the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. You cannot introduce a Bill without an explanation.

Mr. OLIVER. I will be prepared at an early date to make a satisfactory explanation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I must apologize to the Minister of the Interior. I prepared the Bill and as it deals with matters in his department I thought I would put it in his name. The Bill is merely formal and it simply transfers the Irrigation Act to the new provinces.

Mr. FOSTER. When the Minister of Justice was so kind as to introduce the Bill he ought to be kind enough also to post his brother minister about it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is my fault. All these Bills are necessary as a result of the autonomy Bills.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CENSUS AND STATISTICS ACT.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 163) to amend the Census and Statistics Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. FISHER. In the Census and Statistics Act which was passed early in the session there is a clause requiring that the census for the province of Manitoba, with the provisional districts of Assiniboia, Saskatchewan and Alberta should be taken every five years. As the autonomy Bills change these provisional districts into provinces we require to amend the Census and Statistics Act so as to provide that the census of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta shall be taken every five years.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPH LINES.

Mr. BOYCE asked :

1. Has the government constructed, or aided in the construction of, any telephone line or telephone cables ?
2. If so, what lines have been constructed or aided, when, and upon what terms ?
3. If any lines have been constructed or aided by the government, what control is now exercised by the government over each line so aided or constructed ?
4. Under whose charges or superintendence, on behalf of the government, are such lines or cables now maintained or operated; and at what annual cost for maintenance and management ?
5. Under what departments of the government were such telephone lines or cables constructed or aided ?

Mr. BOYCE. I have arranged with the Acting Minister of Public Works to let this question drop.

Question dropped.

POSTMASTER OF THESSALON, ONTARIO.

Mr. BOYCE asked :

1. Who is the postmaster at Thessalon, Ontario ?
2. When was he appointed ?
3. Who were his sureties ?
4. Who was the former postmaster ?
5. Why did he vacate the office ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). I do not know that I have all the information my hon. friend asks for. The postmaster is J. B. Dobey, and he was appointed many years ago before this government came into office. If my hon. friend wants the exact date I will get it, but my secretary is ill to-day and I cannot state precisely the date. The postmaster resigned on the 21st of May, 1904, and was reappointed on the 16th of February, 1905. In reference to questions 2 and 3 as to when he was appointed and who were his securities, I will get my hon. friend the information later if he thinks it material.

Mr. BOYCE. What about question 5 ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. He chose to resign.

Mr. BOYCE. Is that all ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. There was a reason.

SEIZURE OF THE SCHOONER 'AGNES DONAHOE.'

On the Orders of the Day being called.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wish once more to bring to the attention of the government the case of the 'Agnes Donahoe,' a sealing vessel which was seized some time ago by the Uruguayan government. I received a letter in April last which contained some particulars that I think I have not yet communicated to the House. I need not read the whole letter but briefly the particulars are these : The 'Agnes Donahoe' was seized for alleged poaching on November 10th, 1904, by the Uruguayan authorities and taken to Montevideo where she is still held with a crew of twenty men ; the schooner was several miles from land when she was seized ; she was then under sail with all hands on board. Proceedings seem to have been taken by the Uruguayan government which made the charge that the ship was then fitted out and on her way to raid seal rookeries belonging to the government of Uruguay. They asked the captain to show his authority for sealing in the southern seas. Before going on this voyage or any voyage, the owners of the ship had endeavoured to obtain information as to whether or not any sealing license was necessary, and on the 11th day of October, 1900, they received from John Hardie, Acting Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa the following telegram :

> Sealing licenses issued only at Victoria and Vancouver under Paris award. No such licenses are necessary in Atlantic or in Pacific south of 35th degree north latitude.

The owners had a great many communications with the British Consul who thought there was no ground whatever for the seizure by the Uruguayan authorities. The letter which I have is a little involved in the way in which it deals with the question, but another complaint which the owners make is this : They started their business in 1900 and they shipped the skins from Port Stanley, Falkland Islands, to London. At the personal request of the governor of the islands, in order as he said to protect the interests of Chili and Argentine, and in opposition to a petition signed by the people of the islands, a tax of 10 shillings per skin was imposed on all skins shipped from that port by Canadian sealers. This compelled them to give up that port and to ship from another port, and during the year 1904 Brazil accorded to them the privilege denied to them at a British port. They preferred Port Stanley, the British port, as it is cooler and the skins did not deteriorate there as they do in the port to which access is given to them by Brazil. They were informed, in fact they have a cable from London from persons there wishing to purchase sealing schooners, in which these persons in London state that they have a concession to seal at Cape Horn, and these owners—perhaps without foundation, do not know about that—suggest that the impost of 10 shillings per skin was imposed in the interests of persons in London. Of course this is rather a grave suggestion, and I only mention it because it is emphatically stated by my correspondents, who are members of a respectable firm in Halifax.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Would the hon. gentleman repeat that ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He says there is an impost of ten shillings per skin if they should ship their skins from Port Stanley, and that it is imposed in the interest of persons in London who desire to go into the same trade. That is a very grave statement, and I only mention it because it comes from very respectable men, engaged in business in Halifax and personally known to myself and also no doubt known to the Minister of Finance. If necessary, I will send their names to the First Minister. That is the position of these men. They complain of an unlawful seizure. They complain that their vessel was detained for months, and the information came from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries himself that the vessel was detained during this very long period in order that the Uruguayan legislative body, whatever it is, might pass a law for the purpose of dealing with the case. The second complaint is that having gone into the southern seas, upon representation that no license was necessary, their vessel was seized while a long distance out at sea, on the pretense, which they declare absolutely unfounded, that she was engaged in an attempt to poach in rookeries belonging to the government of that country. The telgram which came to me last evening from Halifax is as follows :

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Captain 'Agnes Donahoe' sentenced three years penal servitude mates one year, crew six months ship confiscated.

If the facts are as detailed by these men, it seems to me that no time should be lost in making the most urgent possible representations to the British government. A Canadian ship was seized on the high seas and held in custody about six months. The captain and crew were virtually detained as prisoners with the result that the ship is confiscated, the captain sentenced to three years penal servitude, the mates to one year, and the crew to six months. Under the circumstances there does not appear any justification for the course pursued by the government of Uruguay ; and it further appears that whatever representations may have been made by this government to the British government in the matter do not seem to have produced a very profound impression on the imperial authorities. It may be, as my correspondent suggests that the British government thought no further action could be taken until the decision of the courts had been obtained. But now they have the decision of the courts pronounced in a fashion which should stimulate this government and the foreign office into some degree of activity. Nothing so bad as this took place in connection with the seizures in the Behring sea ; and I sincerely trust that whatever representations may have been made in the past, they will be renewed in a still more urgent form, and it may be ascertained whether or not there is some redress.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The case to which my hon. friend has called attention is one, so far as I know, of very great hardship, but it is difficult to see what action this government could take. As I remember, the 'Agnes Donahue' was seized for a violation of the laws of Uruguay. It was alleged that she was poaching.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That she was intending to poach.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Poaching or intending to poach in territorial waters of the Republic of Uruguay. She was seized under the laws of that country, was tried by the tribunals of that country, and apparently was condemned according to its laws. I have nothing to say, and my hon. friend has said nothing, as to the proceedings of the court; but it seems a very extreme and hard sentence on the Captain that he should be condemned to three years penal servitude. There is just one point which I want to clear with regard to the responsibility of this government. My hon. friend states that the owners of this schooner applied to this government in 1900 to know whether a license was required and they were told that none was necessary south of such a degree of latitude. I do not know what answer was given, but there seems to have been misapprehension between the owner of the schooner and the officers of the department who gave that information, because the licenses which we issue at Victoria and Vancouver are licenses under the Paris award, passed in 1794, as the result of the Arbitration treaty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is just what the telegram says.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This treaty probably does not affect at all the Republic of Uruguay. It is simply a treaty between the United States and Great Britain and affects solely our sealers in our relations with the United States. I do not know that we have any treaty——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He got no license.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have had representations made to us by sealers that they were condemned to pay a tax of ten shillings per pelt when they came from the southern rookeries and landed in some of those south American ports. That was not a measure of taxation, but simply a measure passed by some of our own colonies in order to protect their own rookeries. It is possible they may have had such a law in Uruguay. Apparently they had. The only thing we know is that the vessel was seized, the crew and captain were made prisoners. If I remember rightly, the crew were set free some time afterwards, but the captain and the mate were kept prisoners. We shall be only too glad to call the immediate attention of the government of Great Britain to this matter. I am in very much doubt what action we can take more than make representation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I regard it as serious because the seizure was on the high seas.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is a point in controversy, but the court has not passed upon whether it was on high seas or in territorial waters.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We would like the government to obtain definite information with regard to that. Suppose one of our Canadian cruisers would go fifteen or twenty miles out of sight of land and seize an American schooner upon the allegation that that schooner intended to go into Canadian waters and fish in defiance of the law, and suppose we sent the captain to penal servitude for three years, the mate for one year, and the crew six months, there would be some trouble about it. It seems to me that it is equally serious from our standpoint when such conduct as that is carried on in the southern seas by this government of Uruguay. It may turn out that the statements of fact are all wrong. I am only presenting the case to my right hon. friend in order that he may place it before the imperial government from the standpoint of the facts given by these owners. If they are mistaken, we can find it out. The courts of Uruguay may find the facts otherwise. And I suppose we have to run the risk of a finding by the courts that is not in accordance with the true facts. The mother country may say: We are bound by the decision of the courts. And the courts, of course, are bound to judge from the facts as presented to them. That is a question to be discussed afterwards. I shall be very glad indeed to know that the right hon. gentleman would take it up at once.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The subject of the first part of my hon. friend's (Mr. R. L. Borden's) remarks touching the tax levied on the seal skins at Port Stanley in the Falkland islands, I remember, was brought to my notice a year or so ago. It appeared that that tax had been levied by the colonial government, a colonial government not, perhaps of the same rank and position as the government of Canada or Australia, but nevertheless a colonial government; and they claimed that it was a matter quite within their right to decide whether it was or was not a proper tax. Though we might say it was unreasonable, still, it was claimed to be within the authority of the colonial government. It was found difficult to deal with the matter on that account.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I can see that there was a great deal in that, provided there was no discrimination against Canadian sealing vessels.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think that any such discrimination was alleged. It was an obnoxious tax generally, and it was claimed by some to have been done in the interest of some particular parties in England. But still, that was the statement of a rival interest, and it would be somewhat difficult to enter upon negotiations on the basis of questioning the motives of the government of a sister colony.

JOSEPH NIXON, SUB-AGENT DOMINION LANDS, MACLEOD, NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER. (Minister of the Interior). A few days ago the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asked a question with regard to a man named Nixon at Macleod. In reply to that question I beg to say that a sub-agency of Dominion lands was opened in Macleod on the 3rd May, 1899, with Joseph Nixon as sub-agent. From the date of his appointment up to the 1st April, 1900, he was paid by commission. From the 1st April, 1900, to the 1st June, 1902, his salary was at the rate of $25 a month. From the 1st June, 1902, up to the time of his resignation on the 31st March, 1905, his salary was at the rate of $50 per month. On the 1st October, 1901, he was appointed caretaker of the immigration building at Macleod, and land guide for the district, at the rate of $10 per month. This sum was increased to $25 per month on the 1st May, 1904, which rate of pay continued until his resignation.

Owing to Mr. Nixon's connection with the immigration branch as caretaker of the hall and land guide, a good part of his time was employed in outside work, and he left his office in charge of his son. Some time in the month of March, 1905, information was received by the department that there were some irregularities in the conduct of the office at Macleod. The inspector of agencies was immediately wired to investigate and report. His report showed that there was a shortage of moneys which should have been returned to the agent of Dominion lands at Lethbridge to the amount of $499.-05. Mr. Nixon's son, who had been in charge of the office, left for parts unknown on the 15th March. This was the first intimation Mr. Nixon had that anything was wrong with his accounts. He immediately paid over to the agent of Dominion lands at Lethbridge the sum of $499.05, the amount found to be short by the inspector's report. He also handed in his resignation as sub-agent of Dominion lands at Lethbridge, and upon the recommendation of the inspector that sub-agency was closed.

The immigration branch of the department required the services of a man as checker of immigrants on the train between Macleod and Fernie, and on the 20th April, 1905, the commisisoner at Winnipeg was instructed to engage Mr. Nixon temporarily for this week. Had Mr. Nixon not been engaged it would have been necessary for us to secure the services of some other man. Before the date at which it was decided to employ Mr. Nixon as checker on the train, the immigration building at Macleod had been closed, therefore, Mr. Nixon's services as caretaker were no longer required. The only salary he receives now from the department is $75 per month as checker on the train between Macleod and Fernie, together with his actual travelling expenses. Up to the time the report was received in the department as to the above shortage, Mr. Nixon's services as sub-agent were satisfactory, and as no reflection was cast upon his character by the said report, it was considered that there could be no objection to the department employing him again in a different capacity.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the hon. minister (Mr. Oliver) bring down the report of the inspector who was sent to investigate the matter and also the correspondence preceding and succeeding that inspection, so that we may have all the papers before us ? My information is a little different from that which the minister has read. I would prefer not to go into the matter until I had all the papers before me. And if the minister will hurry them, I would be glad to look them over before taking it up yet.

Mr. OLIVER. All the papers ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes—ancient and modern.

THE AUDIT ACT.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON. Before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if it is the intention of the government to amend the Audit Act during this session ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). We have no amendments at present in mind. If anything should arise to show that amendments are needed, we will consider it. But we have no intention of amending the Act at present.

CIRCULATION OF AMERICAN SILVER.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) if it is the intention of the government to amend the Banking Act this session ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). A slight amendment of the Banking Act is contemplated, but not a matter of importance. A Bill has been introduced in the other chamber making an amendment, not a very important one, with respect to a particular bank. I think we had better confine our banking legislation, as far as possible, to general Acts. Instead of amending the special Act of the bank referred to, we are inclined to introduce an amendment to the general Act, serving the same purpose.

Mr. BERGERON. Will there be anything in that proposed Bill with regard to the circulation of foreign money in Canada ? There was some discussion of that point at the beginning of the session. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) was not in his place at that time. But the House was informed that there would be an amendment of the Banking Act and that, in that connection, this subject would be taken into consideration.

Mr. FIELDING. I think that no amendment of the Banking Act would be necessary for that purpose. I take it that what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) has in mind is the circulation of American silver ?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. That matter is under consideration. We hope to be able to make satisfactory arrangements to displace American silver to a large extent and substitute Canadian silver.

RATES ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to make an explanation with respect to a question raised by my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) in connection with the freight rates on the Intercolonial. On the 27th of April my hon. friend spoke of an alleged increase in these rates. I quote from the hon. gentleman's remarks as they appear at page 4997 of the Revised 'Hansard':

Some time ago, I made the statement to the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) that since the Railway Commission was formed we were paying a higher rate on our goods than formerly. He stated that there had been no advance on the Intercolonial Railway.

And he then goes on to read a letter which he received from a gentleman who does business in the city of St. John. I shall not take up the time of the House by repeating that letter. Later on my hon. friend states:

He explained that the rate to Fredericton had been 58 cents per hundred pounds—a pretty round, full rate, I should say. They billed the goods to Lennoxville, and they went from Lennoxville to Fredericton. But since my hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Emerson), acquired the Canada Eastern Railway, the Grand Trunk have instructions to ship everything to Fredericton over the Intercolonial Railway, and the rate to be paid is 66 cents per hundred pounds. If the minister desires to verify the figures, he will find them in Grand Trunk supplementary tariff D. G. M. 4, page 10.

My hon. friend also referred to another case and went on to state as follows:

We had the misfortune to lose by fire our carriage works at Brockville. We had a contract with the Nova Scotia Steel Co. for a quantity of tire steel. It happened that a car came immediately after the fire. We could not use it at Brockville, so we instructed the railway people to give instructions to have it forwarded to Gananoque, where the tiring had to be done after the fire. The rate from the works in Nova Scotia to Brockville was 25 cents per hunderd pounds. The car arriving at Brockville was not unloaded, but was simply forwarded 30 miles to Gananoque, and when it arrived there, the rate charged was 37 cents per hundred pounds—or 12 cents per hundred pounds for the 30 mile haul from Brockville to Gananoque. We have refused to accept the car, and the question is in dispute. A few days ago we received a circular headed 'Canadian Freight Association'. It appears that nearly all the railways in Canada and the United States have joined this combine in freight rates. I see that the Intercolonial, under the direction of the Minister of Railways, is a member of this combine for fixing and settling rates.

He then goes on to read an extract from a circular which was issued by certain railways. I took this matter up with the general traffic manager of the Intercolonial, and desire now to read his answer and to have it placed on record as an explanation, not merely of the charge made that there had been an increase of freight rates on the Intercolonial, but as an explanation with respect to the tariff charge on the cars from Brockville to Gananoque. The letter I am reading is written by Mr. E. Tiffin, the general traffic manager of the Intercolonial, and is dated 11th May, 1905:

Dear Mr. Emmerson,

Referring to the revised edition of the House of Commons Debates, Thursday, April 27th, which you sent me, and that part of it having particular reference to the statements made by Mr. George Taylor, M.P., for South Leeds.

I have to say that the statement made by Mr. Taylor as to there being any advance in the Intercolonial rates to Fredericton is not correct in so far as the Intercolonian Railway is concerned. You will remember that the case to which Mr. Taylor refers is one over which a good deal of correspondence took place with the Grand Trunk, Canadian Pacific, and Messrs. A. F. Randolph & Co., of Fredericton, and I think a complete answer to Mr. Taylor's statement is contained in my letter to you of January 10th last, in which I inclosed you a copy of a letter which I had written to Messrs. A. F. Randolph & Co. on this subjtcet. and I cannot do better than send you herewith copies of the correspondence referred to, which I think will give a complete answer to Mr. Taylor's statement.

In regard to that part of Mr. Taylor's complaint in which he refers to a shipment of a car of steel shipped by the Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Co., which was consigned to them at Brockville, and was afterwards forwarded to Gananoque, we have nothing whatever to do with it. The property was consigned to Brockville, it was way-billed to Brockville and carried to Brockville, and after its arrival at Brockville I judge from Mr. Taylor's statement that they required the car sent on to Gananoque. This being so, it became a question entirely with the Grand Trunk as to what charges they should make from Brockville to Gananoque, and it being a local shipment purely and entirely subject to Grand Trunk control, the question of the rate of freight to be charged from Brockville to Gananoque was one in which they alone had anything to say, and if Mr. Taylor has any complaint it is against the Grand Trunk Railway and not against the Intercolonial, because on the arrival of the car at Brockville all connection that the Intercolonial had with the shipment ceased.

Again, in Mr. Taylor's remarks he states, in reference to the freight from Nova Scotia to Brockville as against Pittsburg to Brockville that the rate of 20½ cents from Pittsburg to Brockville is much less than the rate of 25 cents from Nova Scotia to Brockville, and goes on to say that the distance from Pittsburg to Brockville is less than it is from Trenton, N.S., to Brockville. This statement is not correct, because the mileage from Pittsburg to Brockville is 595 miles, while the mileage from Trenton, N.S., to Brockville is 931 miles, thereby showing that the rate from Trenton to Brockville is very much less, according to the mileage, than is the rate from Pittsburg to Brockville, inasmuch as the 25 cents rate Trenton to Brockville is equal to 54-100 of a cent per ton per mile, while the rate of 20½ cents from Pittsburg to Brockville is equal to 77-100 of a cent per ton per mile. You will see from this that the rate from Pittsburg is much higher per ton per mile than is the rate from Trenton.

In regard to Mr. Taylor's statement as to the circular issued by the Railways addressed to the shippers, I cannot do better than inclose you herewith a copy of the circular, which fully explains the necessity for its issue, and when read altogether as a circular instead of taking extracts from it, surely it is not a circular that any shipper who desires to deal fairly with the Railways can object to. In fact, it is a protection to the shipper who conducts his business in an honest, straightforward manner, as against the shipper who does not, and the circular is one which, in my opinion, cannot reasonably be found fault with.

The rest of Mr. Taylor's remarks seem to concern only the acts of Railways other than the Intercolonial, and therefore, I assume, are not matters upon which you desire that I should express an opinion.

Yours truly,

E. TIFFIN.
General Traffic Manager.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, Ont.

I will read the circular letter a little later, placing them all on 'Hansard.' But I will now read the letter referred to in Mr. Tiffin's letter just read, dated 10th January, 1905, written by Mr. Tiffin to myself :

Dear Mr. Emmerson,—I beg to return you herewith the letter addressed to you by Messrs. A. F. Randolph & ,Sons, in which they attach copy of a letter they wrote me on January 4th relative to the recent advance made in the rates to Fredericton, and in reply to your request for an explanation, I cannot do better than inclose copy of my reply to Messrs. Randolph & Sons under date of January 6th.

I am certainly at a loss to understand why Mr. Randolph should make any reference to the Intercolonial sanctioning the tariffs, because in view of the letters which have passed between myself and Mr. Randolph he must have known that we vigorously opposed and did everything in our power to prevent the discrimination against Fredericton. I have written any number of letters to the Canadian Pacific, also to Mr. Loud of the Grand Trunk, in which we protested and protested most vigorously, against the unfair position in which they were placing Fredericton. At one time we thought we had the Grand Trunk won over to our views, but we were disappointed inasmuch as after Mr. Loud intimated to Mr. Wallace that he would not back up the action of the Canadian Pacific, he turned completely around and turned us down in our request for justice to Fredericton.

I cannot do better than inclose you herewith a copy of a telegram which I sent Mr. Loud on the 19th of October, also copy of my wire to him of the 28th October. These go to show that every effort was made that we could make to induce the Grand Trunk to meet our request and not permit of any advance over St. John rates to be made to Fredericton, that is, that wherever rates were current to St. John from points west of Montreal should also apply to Fredericton. We, however, failed to get the Grand Trunk to come in with our views ; had they done so, there would have been no change in the rates, and it simply goes to show the understanding between the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific as to the rates that shall be current from west of Montreal. Where we control the situation ouselves, as we do out of Fredericton on west bound business, we put in the St. John rates flat, and where we control the rates east bound, as we do out of Montreal, Quebec, &c., we made the St. John rates apply east bound ; and the whole trouble is the points west of Montreal reached by the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk from which we were unable to get them to adopt our suggestion and apply the St. John rates.

As stated in my letter to Randolph & Sons of the 6th of January (copy attached) I do not see what more we can do. If it is as I was advised, that in view of getting flour carried to Fredericton at the same rates as to St. John, they were willing to put up with the advance in the class rates on general merchandise, I think it is rather late in the day now for Randolph & Sons to come back at us and find fault with us for sanctioning a tariff which we did not sanction, but which, if I am correctly advised, at the meeting between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Fredericton merchants, the Fredericton merchants themselves agreed to.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) E. TIFFIN,
General Traffic Manager.

I now read from a letter dated 6th January, 1905, signed by E. Tiffin, general traffic manager, and addressed to A. F. Randolph & Sons, Fredericton, N.B., as follows :

Moncton, N.B., 6th January, 1905.

Messrs. A. F. Randolph & Sons,
Fredericton, N.B.

Dear Sirs,—I have your favour under date of the 4th of January, relative to Fredericton rates, and you will pardon me if I say that I am certainly very much surprised at its contents.

You have evidently overlooked the voluminous correspondence which we previously had on the subject of the Fredericton rates, more particularly my letter to you of November 3rd and your reply of November 7th.

I can only repeat that at the time the Fredericton rates were advanced over those of St. John, we made every effort possible with our connections, both the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railways, to bring about a result that would have been satisfactory to the Fredericton people. We failed ; both of our connections refusing to agree to our request that Fredericton should on no account be placed higher than St. John. Fredericton being a point on the Canadian Pacific as well as on this line, the Canadian Pacific being the short line have the right to name the rates, and as the traffic originates off this line we have no voice in the matter, excepting that we entered a strong protest against the injusice to Fredericton. Having done this, we could do no more.

Then, after the correspondence I had with you, I understood that the Fredericton Board of Trade, or the Fredericton merchants, had a meeting with Messrs. Bulling, Sutherland and MacInnes of the Canadian Pacific, and that the Canadian Pacific conceded to you that St. John rates on flour and grain would apply to Fredericton ; and I was advised that this concession on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway was satisfactory to the Fredericton people. I understand that at this meeting the question of rates on class freights was discussed and that there was only one of the staple commodities, namely, sugar, and it was found not to be affected because the sugar was shipped from Halifax. I further understand that at this meeting it was fully explained that from the Canadian Pacific standpoint any change in the proposed class rates would affect them seriously, and that the Fredericton merchants or the Fredericton Board of Trade were satisfied to allow the difference in that class of rates to continue.

Now then, if this report of the meeting which was held between your people and the Canadian Pacific is true, how can you now complain of your being charged higher rates from Toronto to Fredericton than from Toronto to St. John? If you will permit me to say so, I think you made a mistake, if I am correctly informed, when you agreed to allow the discrimination to continue in so far as the class rates are concerned. As the best evidence in the world that we did not permit that discrimination to points which we actually controlled, I would say that we insisted upon the Moncton rates (which are the same as St. John) applying to all intermediate points on the old Canada Eastern. This, I understand, was objected to by the Canadian Pacific Railway, but notwithstanding their objection we carried our point. We could not, however, carry it to Fredericton because, as stated above, the Canadian Pacific Railway are the short line and therefore have the control of the rates. The Intercolonial Railway, therefore, should not be blamed for the existence of a condition which they could not control, but to prevent which they did all in their power to meet what I consider a fair and reasonable proposition, that is, that the St. John class and grain rates should apply to Fredericton.

I have looked up Mr. Wallace's letter of the 7th of November to which you refer, and while I admit that it is perhaps ambiguous, yet I do not take from it the inference that you do, that is, that had we asked our connections to make St. John rates apply to Fredericton, it would have been granted, because you must know from the previous correspondence we had that we made an urgent and imperative demand that the St. John rates should apply to Fredericton.

In view of the fact of it having been stated that your people agreed with the Canadian Pacific representatives that if you obtained the same rates on flour and grain as were current to St. John for local delivery, you would not press the question of the class rates, I do not see how I can again approach the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific with a view of having this discrimination removed, and in fact if you have agreed with the Canadian Pacific as it is stated that you have, that the class rates to Fredericton may be higher than to St. John, it seems to me that you have taken the ground from under your feet if it is the intention to apply to the Railway Commission for relief.

I would like very much to have gone to Fredericton to discuss this matter with you and with your board of trade, but as I am obliged to leave for Montreal early next week, I regret that I will not have the opportunity of doing so.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) E. TIFFIN,
General Traffic Manager.

Now, to show that a protest was made by the Intercolonial Railway, I will read the following telegram of the 19th October, 1904, signed by E. Tiffin, our traffic manager, and addressed to Mr. J. W. Loud, who is the general traffic manager of the Grand Trunk Railway at Montreal. It reads as follows:

Moncton, 19th October, 1904.

J. W. Loud, Montreal, P.Q.

I have already advised you that there was no agreement as between myself and the Canadian Pacific Railway on Fredericton rates. As the traffic originates on your line and the Canadian Pacific west of Montreal, the usual custom is that it rests with yourself and the Canadian Pacific Railway as to what the rates shall be. We protest against any advance to Fredericton over St. John rates. This is all we can do. What I would like to know now is inasmuch as you have not put in advanced flour rates, if you propose to advance them, upon what date does the advance come into effect.

(Sgd.) E. TIFFIN.

The2 other telegram between the same parties and which bears date the 28th October, 1904, reads as follows:

Moncton, 28th October, 1904.

J. W. Loud, Montreal, P.Q.,

Your telegram date re Fredericton rates. I still consider as a matter of justice and right that Fredericton rates should be on the basis of St. John and not any higher, in view of local changes made by Canadian Pacific from St. John and Fredericton; and in view also of the reduction in their flour rates to their points North of Macadam Junction, this advance to Fredericton can have no other effect than that of crippling Fredericton as a distributing centre. We still protest against the action of the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific in regard to Fredericton rates.

E. TIFFIN.

My hon. friend made reference to a circular sent out by an association which he refers to as an association or a combine between the Canadian railways and United States railways. This association is known as the Canadian Freight Association and as I understand it is purely a Canadian organization.

Mr. SPEAKER. I presume the hon. minister intends to conclude with a motion?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am making this statement in answer to a statement made by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor). This is simply information.

Mr. TAYLOR. I shall move the adjournment of the House if he does not.

Mr. EMMERSON. With the permission of the House I simply wish to give this information. I think it is fair to the members, fair to my hon. friend and it certainly is something that is due to the business interests of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right, but the minister must recollect that there will be a right of reply. He is taking up arguments made in a previous debate by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor); he is controverting these arguments.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He has only read letters so far.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am merely reading letters, not arguing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not make any difference whether the hon. gentleman makes the argument himself or does it by reading letters to this House.

Mr. EMMERSON. These are simply statements of fact giving information with respect to the freight tariff of the Intercolonial Railway in answer to an inquiry made by an hon. member of this House. This circular letter reads as follows:

To shippers, consignees, agents, or whom it may concern:

The railway companies regret to say that they find the practice of false classification, false representation of the contents of packages, false report of weight, &c., continues unabated. It is therefore thought desirable that the attention of shippers should be called to the provisions of the law on the subject. Section 279, subsections two and three, of the Railway Act, 1903, are as follows:—

2. Any company or any officer or agent thereof or any person acting for or employed by the company, who, by means of false billing, false classification, false report of weight or by any other device or means, shall knowingly, wilfully, or shall willingly suffer or permit any person or persons to obtain transportation for goods at less than the required tolls then authorized and in force on the railway of the company, shall for each offence be liable to a penalty of not exceeding one thousand dollars nor less than one hundred dollars.

3. Any person or any officer or agent of any incorporated company who shall deliver goods for transportation to the company, or for whom as consignor or consignee the company shall transport goods, who shall knowingly or wilfully, by false billing, false classification, false weighing, false representation of the contents of the package or false report of weight, or by any other device or means, whether with or without the consent or connivance of the company, its agent or agents, obtain transportation for such goods at less than the regular tolls then authorized, and in force on the railway shall for each offence be liable to a penalty of not exceeding one thousand dollars nor less than one hundred dollars. The board may make regulations providing that any such person or company shall, in addition to the regular toll, be liable to pay to the company a further toll not exceeding fifty per cent of the regular charge. The company may, and when ordered by the board shall, open and examine any package, box, case or shipment for the purpose of ascertaining whether this subsection has been violated.

The practice of false classification, &c., not only deprives the railway companies or revenue to which they are justly entitled, but places shippers who do not adopt such devices, and who are averse to defying the law, at a most unfair disadvantage. The railway companies hope it is only necessary to bring this matter to the attention of shippers to have the abuse entirely discontinued.

H. R. PATRIARCHE,
Sec.-Treas. Western Lines,
Winnipeg.

JOHN EARLS,
Sec.-Treas. Eastern Lines,
Toronto.

Issued April 3rd, 1905.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there a joint tariff arrangement between the Intercolonial Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, and is that tariff arrangement under the control of the commissioners?

Mr. EMMERSON. As I am advised there is no such tariff arrangement. The Intercolonial Railway makes its own rates with respect to its own portion of the line, but it is bound to accept the joint arrangement which exists between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway on freight originating west of Montreal, the western terminus of the Intercolonial.

Mr. HAGGART. If I remember the Act that joint tariff must be approved of by the commissioners. I knew that the Intercolonial Railway tariff was not subject to the commissioners, but the joint tariff or the tariff which either of the roads could charge was subject to the approval of the commission. I cannot understand how it is that these railway companies vary outside of the tariff which is approved of by the commission.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood that the hon. minister intended to conclude with a motion.

Mr. EMMERSON. I thought I was simply giving information to the House which was asked, and that under the rules of the House such departmental information could always be given at this stage of the proceedings of the House. I may be incorrect in that belief. I think perhaps instead of making a motion I should apologize for taking up the time of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You ought to do both.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that in order to have the proceedings of the House properly in order the hon. minister should conclude with a motion.

Mr. EMMERSON. I bow to the Speaker's ruling and I will conclude with that motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. Mr. Emmerson moves that the House do now adjourn.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I would like to inquire from the premier through you, why it is that the members of the opposition should not be entitled to the same courtesies that ministers expect for themselves. If a member of the opposition brings up some trivial incident a minister will squeal like a little pig and say : I did not know it was coming up. The Minister of Railways brings up a matter here affecting as he says the hon. member for Leeds and this is the first intimation I had that he was going to bring it forward. I am not going to complain, I think I shall give him a Roland for his Oliver before I sit down. The discussion he referred to took place on April 27, and was a general discussion for the benefit of railways in general. During that discussion I referred to a case in point and expressed the hope that the Railway Commission which the government have established would look into the matter. The case in point was the shipment of our goods from Gananoque to Fredericton. Until the hon. gentleman acquired the Canada Eastern Railway our rate via Lennoxville junction by the Canadian Pacific Railway, to Fredericton, was 55 cents per 100 pounds. Yet, when the Canada Eastern is acquired, the goods go to Lennoxville just the same and then over the Intercolonial Railway and we are charged 66 cents per 100 pounds. The Minister of Railways could not contradict the statement I made in reference to that. He told me he would get the information and let me know, and I thought we would have a talk about it, but instead of that for half an hour he reads these long documents and circulars which are not pertinent to the question, and he does it for the purpose of obstructing the business of the House. I challenge him or any one else in the employ of the railroad to contradict my statement. For years I shipped goods to Fredericton for 55 cents per 100 pounds, and now when they go over the Canada Eastern we are charged 66 cents.

Mr. SPROULE. He explained that they all went into a combine.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Railways referred to a carload of steel and he corroborated my statement in every particular, because the rate to Brockville was 25 cents, but when it came 30 miles further we were charged 12 cents extra or 37 cents in all. I want the matter to go before the Railway Commission so that we may know why, if the Intercolonial Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway can haul from Nova Scotia to Brockville for 25 cents per 100 pounds, we should be charged 12 cents extra for hauling it on the same car without unloading, only 30 miles further. I did state that we received a car from Pittsburg, Pa., at 20½ cents per 100 pounds, and that I thought that was a lower rate than 37 cents from Nova Scotia to Gananoque. So it is. I was mistaken in thinking that the distance from Pennsylvania was further than from Nova Scotia, but at all events the 37 cent rate from Nova Scotia is higher in proportion. We have another case in dispute with the Grand Trunk. We got a carload of lumber the other day hauled 10 miles on the Grand Trunk Railway and 3 miles on a branch line, and they charged us $19 for hauling that car of lumber. In view of such outrageous charges the Railway Commission should at once deal with the matters which were brought to the attention of the House on the 28th of April by the report of the Agricultural Committee. The statements I made on that day were intended for the Railway Commission that they might take action with regard to the hardships that shippers are subjected to. The Minister of Railways has not given a particle of evidence to the House, that the Intercolonial is not charging 66 cents per 100 pounds for delivering goods from Gananoque at Fredericton, whereas before the Canada Eastern was acquired the rate was only 55 cents. He has not been able to deny my statement that this car of steel coming from Nova Scotia—intended for Brockville but ordered on—was billed 25 cents to Brockville and for the 30 miles west an extra 12 cents or 37 cents in all. The minister got on 'Hansard' a circular issued by the railway companies, not for the purpose of protecting shippers but for the purpose of protecting themselves, whereas the railways have their own protection in their own hands. In my opinion that circular is an insult to the shippers of this country. If you ship a parcel of goods and bill them to the railway companies at a certain weight, the railway companies have the scales and can test that weight, and my experience is that they generally charge more weight than there actually is. In the case of a carload of steel which came to us a short time ago, they tried to charge us for 1,940 pounds more freight than we actually paid for the number of pounds of steel which was weighed at both ends. We had that weight tested——

Mr. LENNOX. That's a steal.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is a steal on the part of the railway people who charge more than the actual weight. The Minister of Railways presented this statement as a government statement to-day without moving the adjournment of the House, and he said he was simply making a statement of fact, but while the letters he read may be a statement of fact they are not facts, and he has not been able to contradict my assertion. I want these matters dealt with by the Railway Commission, and it is for that reason I spoke the other day so that the Railway Commission may get down to business some time and see that there is a proper classification of freight and a proper charge made under it. I do not think the Railway Commission will allow the railways to charge 12 cents for a short haul of 30 miles and 25 cents for a long haul of 1,000 miles.

Mr. CROCKET. I wish to ask the Minister of Railways if the statement is true, that the freight rates from points west of Montreal to Fredericton, via Intercolonial, are higher now than they were before the government acquired the Canada Eastern ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly they are.

Mr. EMMERSON. To Fredericton, so far as the Intercolonial is concerned, they are not higher.

Mr. CROCKET. My question was : are the rates now higher from points west of Montreal to Fredericton via the Intercolonial and Canada Eastern than these same were before the government acquired the Canada Eastern ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They are from points west, because the arrangement was made before the Canada Eastern was acquired. That is not true with respect to the period since the Canada Eastern was acquired, because this change took place just previous to the acquisition of the Canada Eastern. My statement would be misleading if I said that this occurred since the Canada Eastern was acquired.

Mr. CROCKET. This discrimination which is complained of as against Fredericton has taken place since the government acquired the Canada Eastern.

Mr. EMMERSON. No. Just previous to that the arrangement was made by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. We took charge of the Canada Eastern in October, I think, and the arrangement I referred to was entered into in July or August of that year.

Mr. CROCKET. It was announced that the Intercolonial Railway was to take the railroad over on the 1st of September and all arrangements were made for taking over the road at that date ; in fact the cars were all ready and the Intercolonial Railway officials were there to take the road over. It was during that time as I understand that the announcement was made that the freight rates were to be increased, and it seems strange to me that the Canada Eastern should be able to procure a lower freight rate from points west of Montreal to Fredericton—the same rate as applies to St. John —and that the Intercolonial Railway, since it has obtained control of the Fredericton connection, has not been able to get as low a rate.

Mr. EMMERSON. The rate was fixed by the western railways, when the Canada Eastern was owned by the Alexander Gibson Railway and Manufacturing Company. The rate that now exists to Fredericton over the Canada Eastern portion of the Intercolonial Railway was fixed at that time, previous to the acquisition and operation of the Canada Eastern by the Intercolonial Railway and the fact of the Intercolonial operating the road is in no way connected with the fact that the freight rates were increased ; it is due to an arrangement entered into between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. CROCKET. I would like to understand definitely from the Minister of Railways if that rate was agreed upon by the Canada Eastern Railway Company before the government acquired the road ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I cannot say that, I do not know. I do not think it was, I do not think they were called upon to do it at all.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me the government had it all in their hands with the commission. The commission had control over the tariff rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, and if they had made an arrangement that was too high all that was necessary was to appeal to the commission and have them revise the tariff. Now if that lay with the government and they found the rates too high when they took over the Canada Eastern it was in their own hands and they could have reduced the rates. So I think they are practically responsible for it no matter who is at fault whether it was the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific or the government railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not know that anybody is very seriously at fault in connection with the matter. The rate has been continued through to Fredericton because of an agreement entered into between the Fredericton Board of Trade or the merchants of Fredericton and the Canadian Pacific Railway. They got certain concessions along another line whereby they were led to agree to these rates. That is the situation as I understand it. The tariffs have been filed and the Board of Trade of Fredericton could apply or application could be made by the Intercolonial Railway before the next tariffs are filed.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the shipping public ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The shipping public can file a complaint also, but the Fredericton merchants and the Fredericton Board of Trade who are agreeable to this and who have apparently consented to it are not complaining and therefore action, I presume has not been taken.

Mr. KEMP. Did I understand the Minister of Railways to say that the Gibson firm went into this arrangement previous to the time the government took over the Canada Eastern ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not state that, I said as a matter of fact I did not know whether they were a party to the arrangement or not, that it was an arrangement between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I was not aware that the Canada Eastern or the Alexander Gibson Company were party to the arrangement.

Mr. KEMP. The fact of the matter, as I understand the debate, is that the rates now are higher than they were some time ago, and higher than they were previous to the time the Canada Eastern was taken over by the government. If that is the case the Intercolonial Railway must have been parties to it because no freight could go over the Canada Eastern to Fredericton from points west of Montreal unless it went over the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. Whatever change was made in the rates to Fredericton was made previous to the acquisition of this road by the Intercolonial Railway, and therefore the Intercolonial Railway could not be a party to it because it did not own, operate or control the Canada Eastern at the time this arrangement was entered into.

Mr. KEMP. The Minister of Railways does not understand me. This discussion is with regard to freight originating west of Montreal. That freight has to go over the Intercolonial Railway in order to reach Fredericton by the Canada Eastern; it has to go over the Intercolonial Railway from Montreal to the junction point between that road and the Canada Eastern and therefore the Intercolonial Railway must have been a party to this advanced rate.

Mr. EMMERSON. No it was not; the Intercolonial Railway as I have stated, protested against their entering into the agreement. I have shown the telegrams from the traffic manager of the Intercolonial Railway, I have shown his statement wherein he protested and showed that he was not a party to it.

Mr. KEMP. To my mind he did not go far enough in these protests or he would have prevented the firm of Gibson & Sons from making such an arrangement.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Intercolonial Railway gets no more for its portion and has not increased its rate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That may be but the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) is perfectly correct in this that you cannot have a through rate over four roads by reason of the concurrence of only three of these roads in the rate. There were four roads, the Canada Eastern, the Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, and the Canadian Pacific Railway. You cannot get a through rate over four or three of these roads without the concurrence of all the roads interested. There is another observation to be made in that connection, that it seems a remarkable thing that the Canada Eastern, after it had actually agreed to convey its road to the government, after the terms had been arranged with the exception of some trifling details, should undertake to enter into an agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway just on the eve of the sale of that road to the government. It is to me absolutely inconceivable that the Canada Eastern Railway Company would have undertaken to assent to that alteration without the concurrence of the officers of the Intercolonial Railway, because I cannot think that the Company when it was about to part with the beneficial interests in that road undertook to enter into an agreement binding for a considerable time as to these through rates. I would think that notwithstanding the somewhat lengthly explanation which the minister has made to-day, he should give a further explanation on that point and if necessary again move to adjourn the House.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have stated that I do not think that the Canada Eastern was a party to this arrangement. The arrangement was entered into between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, it inures to the advantage of the Canadian Pacific Railway, because clearly the traffic will not go by the Intercolonial Railway to Fredericton when it could go at a cheaper rate from Montreal direct to Fredericton by the Canadian Pacific Railway and certainly the Canadian Pacific Railway would not be a party to an arrangement that would work against its own interests. Therefore there is no such arrangement to-day. The Alexander Gibson Company was not a party to it, the Intercolonial Railway was not a party to it, but the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway in the carrying out of their western proposition, for what purpose I know not, have entered into an arrangement whereby the Intercolonial cannot get this western traffic from points west of Montreal and carry it at a rate as low as the Canadian Pacific have agreed to carry it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it is a through rate embracing the carriage of goods over a number of different railways, does it not come within the definition of what is called a joint traffic arrangement between these railways? The hon. gentleman may say, so far as the Intercolonial is concerned, it is not subject to the provisions of the Railway Act, but if he takes the position he has taken just now, that it is solely due to the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, certainly they are subject to the Railway Commission.

Mr. EMMERSON. Now you are on correct ground.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have been on correct ground all along. If any one is on unsound ground it is the hon. minister from the time he began until he moved the adjournment of the House. Has the increase of rates been approved by the Railway Commission in respect of the Canada Eastern Railway Company? Was all this done on the very eve of the transfer of that railway to the government, and was the government asleep while all this was being done, although it knew that railway was going into its possession and would be operated by it in a very few days or weeks at the outside? These are matters worthy of consideration, and if the minister this afternoon had given his attention to some of these matters rather than indulge in a very elaborate criticism of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), the House would be in a much better position to come to a conclusion. I do not think the report was in very good taste. It is not usual to have the language of any member in this House, used in debate, made the subject of a somewhat controversial report issued by a departmental officer. But putting that consideration aside for the moment, the Minister of Railways ought to investigate this question a little further and find out whether this increase was made under the provisions of the law, and ascertain also whether or not it was made with the concurrence of the Canada Eastern Railway. He is not able to state to-day whether that is the case or not. And in particular, he should inform the House why it is that the rate which prevailed for a great number of years, while the Canada Eastern was operating that line, cannot prevail to-day when the government is operating it. That, after all, is the whole matter in question. The rate was a moderate and apparently a paying one, and was not increased while the Canada Eastern was operating the line, but upon the eve of the acquisition by the government of that line it is increased, and increased under circumstances the precise nature of which has not yet been imparted to this House.

Mr. STOCKTON. I certainly was under the impression, from the remarks of the Minister of Railways, that this present condition of affairs was brought about in consequence of an arrangement made with the Canada Eastern Railway just prior to its transfer to the government. Now he says that the Intercolonial Railway had nothing to do with it, that the Canada Eastern had nothing to do with it, but that in consequence of some action on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway this present condition exists. In other words, the government railway is under the control of two private corporations, and the minister has not taken any step to remedy that evil. Whatever the difficulties may be, it is now apparent that shippers of freight originating west of Montreal are paying more since the Canada Eastern has come under the control of government than before, although it was supposed and practically stated that the transfer was going to be for the benefit of the shippers. This is the way in which the public have benefited.

Mr. A. CAMPBELL. This debate, it seems to me, is a great ado about nothing. In the first place, there is no grievance suffered by the merchants of Fredericton. That is shown by the fact that they have agreed to this extra rate in return for some consideration that they have obtained. We have had no complaints from the board of trade or the merchants of Fredericton against the extra rate. As a matter of fact, I know that the rates on flour are lower to-day in the maritime provinces than they have been, and the rate to Fredericton is lower than it was some time ago and the same to-day as it is to St. John.

Mr. CROCKET. I think that the hon. member has overlooked entirely the correspondence read by the Minister of Railways. The letters he read contain very vigorous protests from the merchants of Fredericton against the increased rate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Everybody knows that the rate to Halifax is lower than it is to Fredericton, because at St. John you go right into water communication and have to compete with the water rate. The Canadian Pacific Railway can send its freight entirely over its own line to Fredericton, and need not send it over the Intercolonial Railway at all. They have their line right there; and if they and the Grand Trunk Railway agree to charge a certain rate to Fredericton, how can the Intercolonial Railway interfere? If they hand it over to the Canada Eastern, and the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway choose to exact from the Intercolonial Railway a certain rate to the terminal point, that is their own business, and the Intercolonial Railway cannot interfere. What the minister has made clear is that the Intercolonial Railway is charging no more than before; and if there is more charged on certain commodities, that is done by the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, who are controlling the rate for freight to St. John. But there does not seem to be any great hardship, because the merchants of Fredericton have made no complaint at all. With reference to what the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) says regarding the freight from Brockville to Gananoque being twelve cents a hundred, that, I think, is an excessive rate. But the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) quoting the rates from Trenton to Gananoque as 37 cents a hundred compared with 20½ cents from Pittsburg, should have quoted from Trenton to Brockville 25 cents, and 12 cents additional are charged by the Grand Trunk Railway, and was another contract altogether. For myself, it is an extraordinary rate—it is too high. As a shipper, I know that the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway both are charging altogether too much for short local hauls.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is the hon. member aware that a great portion of the goods shipped to Fredericton from Ontario are sold delivered, the shipper paying the freight? Therefore, it is the shipper and not the merchant who has to complain.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We sell goods delivered, and if the freight is higher we charge more. If we could have them carried for nothing, we would sell our goods that much cheaper. There is a lot of work cut out for the Railway Commission. I believe that the local rates from one point to another in Ontario especially, are altogether too high. And I am sure that the Railway Commission, now that they have got into working order—I believe in giving them time—will investigate this matter and bring the railway to a more reasonable view.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) seems to think that the government have nothing to do with this that we have given virtual control of the railroad and the fixing of tariffs over to the Railway Commission; and that, that having been done, the government may let things drift as they like. The argument is that the Intercolonial has not changed its rates but that the change in rates was by agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk.

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) will pardon me, I will point out that the change was with regard to Fredericton alone—there is no change in freight rates on the Canada Eastern or any other portion of the Intercolonial. The change is only with respect to Fredericton, and there it is because the Canadian Pacific Railway controlled this situation and had secured that rate. The result is that the Intercolonial does not get the traffic to Fredericton.

Mr. HAGGART. The observations of the Minister (Mr. Emmerson) are not pertinent to the argument I am making. I am answering the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) who said that this increase was by a private arrangement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. Does not that hon. gentleman know that a joint traffic tariff must be filed with the commissioners?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, this tariff must have been filed with them. What we want to know is by what authority the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific changed their tariff? To make any tariff legal, they must have the consent of the commissioners to it; and we ought to be informed, here in this House, by the Minister of Railways and Canals, whether consent has been given to this freight rate, and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I suppose that a tariff is filed with the commissioners and that, unless there is something radically wrong about it or unless some person enters complaint, it is approved as a matter of course. I suppose that in this case nobody objected.

Mr. HAGGART. All railway tariffs must be approved, formerly by the government, and now by the Railway Commission. Joint tariffs must be approved like any other. There was a joint tariff with the Intercolonial before the acquisition of the Canada Eastern. Under this joint tariff a certain rate was charged. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) excuses the government on the ground that the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific have entered into an arrangement to raise the rate. Why is it that the government, or the commissioners as the case may be, have consented to anything of that kind.? We have given the Railway Commissioners control over these rates, and one of the conditions we insisted on was that all tariffs should be approved by them. What we want to know is whether the commission approved of this joint tariff by which this higher rate is charged?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I suggest to the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) that when he brings down to read to the House, a long statement such as this containing correspondence which is likely to be the subject of discussion, it would be a very desirable thing—especially when he has given no notice—that he should have two copies made, so that one can be utilized on this side of the House. I sent in just now to asecrtain whether it is or is not true that the merchants of Fredericton assented to this. I find that a large part of the statement the minister read has gone to the Printing Bureau. But the fragments that remain seems to indicate that some of the merchants are vigorously protesting against it.

Mr. CROCKET. This firm of Messrs. A. F. Randolph and Sons, whose letter the minister read protesting against discrimination against Fredericton is, I believe, the largest importing house in the city of Fredericton, and the members of that firm are hearty supporters of the present administration. It is news to me that the merchants of Fredericton have assented to the increase of the rates. I do know that there was a vigorous protest in the city of Fredericton when the announcement was made that these rates had been or were to be increased. And the announcement of the increased rate was made just at the time the road was taken over by the government.

Mr. EMMERSON. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) allow me to ask whether, subsequent to the protest that was made, an arrangement was not entered into by the board of trade, the merchants of Fredericton, with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company whereby the flour rates should be lowered, and whether Messrs. Randolph, who are the chief dealers in flour and large distributors did not accept that along with the other merchants in consideration of some other thing? I am not personally familiar with the facts.

Mr. CROCKET. I am not in a position to say whether that is the fact or not, but the fact is that Messrs. Randolph did object, and I think that the protest that the minister read was subsequent to the conference to which he has referred.

Mr. TAYLOR. Do I understand the minister to say that the merchants of Fredericton were willing, in consideration of the tariff on flour having been lowered that the rates on other things should be increased ? The reduction on flour may have been a benefit to my hon. friend from Centre York (Mr. Campbell), but I do not know that that fact will be regarded as compensation by the other manufacturers the rate on whose goods has been raised.

Mr. EMMERSON. That was the question I asked of the representative of the constituency. I am not personally familiar with the facts.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT. In trying to put my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) in the hole the hon. minister has given the country some valuable information, and that information is that the acquirement of the Canada Eastern by the Intercolonial has led to an increase of rates.

Mr. EMMERSON. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt) allow me ? The increase affects the city of Fredericton alone. Right opposite, at Gibson, or at Marysville, on the line of the Canada Eastern, there is no increase on the Intercolonial.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the hon. minister say that this applies only to the city of Fredericton and that there is no increase at Marysville ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is no increase at Marysville or at any point on the Intercolonial, except at Fredericton, where there has been an increase by the two railways, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific which made this arrangement.

Mr. TAYLOR. That was my argument.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It appears clear that there has been an increase. Even if that increase affects Fredericton alone, the question arises who is pocketing the increase ? I understand the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) to say that the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway have done it. But, surely the Intercolonial is a party to it, for it carries the traffic for a part of the distance. I would like to know whether the Intercolonial does not or does get a part of it.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Intercolonial is not in receipt of any portion of that increase.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Then, it would seem that it goes to the short road. I presume that it is pocketing all the increase, though it is not entitled to it. This makes it all the more serious. If the Intercolonial can afford to do the hauling at the old price, it seems strange that the others cannot do so.

Mr. EMMERSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. If these railways say that this increase is justifiable why is it that the Intercolonial, which does part of the hauling, gets no part of the increase ? The minister's explanation does not seem to explain. Instead of putting my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) in the hole it seems to me that the hon. minister's department is put in the hole before the country, because the people see that the amalgamation of the two roads has led to an increase of rate. The minister says that that is not the cause of it, but we see that the practical result is an increase of rates.

Now with regard to the argument of the hon. member for York, who says that when goods are delivered you can put up the price and let the manufacturer pay the increased rate—the hon. gentleman may be satisfied with that line of argument, but it is not satisfactory to the merchants and the manufacturers that are shipping these goods from points west of Montreal. Allow me to state to the hon. member for York that frequently these contracts may reach a year or two ahead, the manufacturer has given that contract at a set discount off price list that cannot be changed when the railway puts up the rates, the manufacturer takes the risk of that change, and if the change is made while the contract is running he has to continue to pay the increased freight rate until the contract expires. He has no recovery against the railway or against the party himself. Manufacturers sell at a discount off list to stated points, manufacturers of agricultural implements in particular. Large shippers to all these points give a set discount off list. When that discount is fixed for a year or more they have no redress, they have simply to pay that increased rate. I think it is very unsatisfactory to find that in face of a Railway Commission having been appointed, and in face of the high rates that have been charged already, this amalgamation that has taken place between these roads has directly or indirectly resulted in increased cost on freights to certain points in the maritime provinces from points west of Montreal. I think the explanation the minister has given is highly unsatisfactory, and will be so considered by the manufacturers and large shippers of goods in the west.

Mr. W. S. LOGGIE (Northumberland, N. B.). I would like to add a word to this discussion as I am more or less interested in the subject. I realize the circumstances that led up to this difficulty with the Canadian Pacific Railway. In fact I understand from their own agents that they were not satisfied with the former rates charged to Fredericton. They claim that Fredericton was not a competitive point, as St. John was, and they proposed raising the rates on flour and provisions, also the rates on commodities such as dry goods and general merchandise. This protest having been entered, a compromise was made, as I understand it, by which the previous rates should stand good on flour and commodities of that class, whereas on dry goods, textile products and so on, the rates were to be increased, above those they were giving to a competitive point, namely, St. John, New Brunswick. For that reason the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk entered into a traffic arrangement concerning local traffic, by which they charged on commodities other than cereals, an increased rate. That agreement, or traffic arrangement, I have no doubt was confirmed by the Railway Commission at Ottawa, who, I suppose, considered it a reasonable one. But we must not forget that in freight arrangements it is very difficult to make rates that do not work hardly in some sections of the country. For example, let me point out to this House that to-day although Chatham is within nine miles of Chatham Junction, and Fredericton is within about 100 miles, yet freight is carried over the Grand Trunk and over the Intercolonial to Fredericton at a less rate than it is to Chatham. Now I wish particularly to state that that remark applies only to flour and that class of goods. Although is is hauled only nine miles from Chatham Junction into Chatham, we have to pay a higher rate than when it is hauled into Fredericton. Now the railway authorities answer us in this way, they say that Fredericton is nearer the point of production, and is a competitive point, and therefore we have not a right to the same rate that Fredericton has, because of our situation and our not being adjacent to the city of St. John. I can understand why the Fredericton merchants should claim the same rate of freight on heavy goods. But the difficulty in this case seems to be that two great railway corporations have made a joint tariff on local freight which tariff has been confirmed by the Railway Commission. Now the question at issue is this: Is it a justifiable action on the part of the Railway Commission to confirm such a tariff which charges those extra rates? If dry goods, for example, can be hauled from the city of Toronto for 55 cents a hundred, and pay three roads out of that rate, why should two roads charge 66 cents, 11 cents extra? Now we have to consider whether it would not be in the interest of the producer in the west and of the consumer in the east that the commission should revise that tariff and place Fredericton, so far as local trade is concerned, on the same basis that she was before. As I say, we have to pay on heavy goods coming into Chatham more freight than we pay on the same goods to Fredericton, although the haul is only nine miles from Chatham Junction to Chatham whereas it is over a hundred miles to Fredericton.

Mr. LALOR. I understood the minister to say that the freight rate had been changed to Marysville, a point near Fredericton. Might I ask which point pays the higher freight, Fredericton or Marysville?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think the papers which I read show that these points get uniform rates, all points from Chatham Junction through to Fredericton are given a uniform rate. If I mistake not, that rate is fixed on the basis of Moncton, and the rate to Moncton would be less than the rate to Fredericton because Moncton and St. John are placed on a par, that is to say, the rate which applies to St. John applies to Moncton. The contention of the Intercolonial was that the same rate should apply to Fredericton, while the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway act to the contrary. But where the Intercolonial have the control, that is up the river St. John to Gibson and Marysville, they continue the rate that had existed previously, that is, the same rate as the Moncton and St. John rate.

Motion, (Mr. Emmerson) to adjourn, negatived.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY—SURVEY OF ROUTE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the government whether or not they have any information as to the success which has been met with in locating the route of the Transcontinental Railway from Moncton to Winnipeg. I observe in an editorial of the 'Globe' of yesterday the following intimation:

> The news which comes from Ottawa that the surveys for the Transcontinental Railway have been able to locate a route from Moncton to Winnipeg with a maximum grade of four-tenths of one per cent is the most important piece of intelligence that has come from the capital in many a day.

If there is any information of that kind I think it should be laid before parliament at the earliest possible moment. It may be that the very regrettable illness of the chairman of the commission has prevented any report being made, but there are three other commissioners, and if they are able to give information of this character to the press they should be equally able to prepare a report giving, with a little more exactness, that information to the government who would lay it before parliament. I called the attention of the right hon Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) on one or two occasions before to statements of this character which I did not have before me at the time. I would like to ask whether the government has any information and if not how it is that an intimation of this character, apparently founded on information proceeding from the commission, should appear in the public press.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I have found it very difficult to check the press, and I have found it very difficult to trace the sources of information. Sometimes the information is accurate and sometimes it is not accurate. I am informed that reports have been received from the engineers by the Railway Department as to the character of the route that is now being tentatively surveyed and I may say to my hon. friend that at the present time I myself do not know what the character of this information is except from what I have read in the press. I understand, however, that the report is very favourable and that the engineers have been enabled to locate a line which will be very much of the character given in the press. But, I must acquit the government of any suggestion that they have given away this report. These things get out, my hon. friend cannot say how and I cannot say how, but as soon as the information is completed it will be brought down to the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not objecting to the information getting out, but what I am objecting to is that it is not given to parliament in the regular way.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is not in a position yet to be given in the regular way.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps that is the case. If the information is sufficiently exact and sufficiently important to be communicated to the press and to be referred to by the press in this way, it would also seem that it is sufficiently exact and sufficiently important to be communicated by the commission to the government and by the government to parliament.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the information is of the character mentioned by the press there will be no hesitation at all to bring it to the attention of parliament.

VACANCY IN NORTH OXFORD.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to inquire of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether or not any writ has been issued for the election in North Oxford and if not what is the intention of the government as to the date which shall be fixed ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No writ has yet been issued for North Oxford, but if my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) renews his question within a reasonable time I think I may be able to give him satisfaction.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What would my hon. friend regard as a reasonable time ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Within a few days.

REPORT OF RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) if the report that was promised a long time ago from the Board of Railway Commissioners has yet been placed on the table of the House ? I have taken occasion to ask the clerk of the House and I understand that it has not. When I was making an inquiry as to this matter at least two months ago, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals informed the House that it would be brought down within a very short time. It is important we should have the report and I think sufficient time has now elapsed.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would say to my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) that the report has not been laid before the House and that the department is not in a position to place such a report upon the table, but as soon as I am in a position I will submit it to the House.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not understand what the hon. minister means by saying that the department is not in a position to lay the report before the House. Probably the hon. minister will inform the House as to whether he has received such a report. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that there was a difficulty about this matter. The statute did not provide for a report and the House ought to know just in what position it stands in regard to the matter. If there is any serious difficulty or any objection to making a report we should pass a statute making the report available at once. It is time it was here. When I asked the hon. minister about the report, I understood him to say that it would be down almost immediately. It is important that he should inform the House definitely what he means by saying that the department is not in a position to bring it down. Has the report been handed to the department, or what is the difficulty ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think my hon. friend must be under some misapprehension as to any assurance that I gave him in respect to the placing of such a report upon the table of the House. I said that I would exercise due diligence in endeavouring to get that report and that I had been assured by the railway commissioners that such a report would be prepared. I have not received such a complete report. I was mixing up the two commissions. You are asking in respect to the Railway Commission ?

Mr. LENNOX. The Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not received that complete report yet, but I am expecting it.

Mr. LENNOX. If I may be allowed to call the hon. minister's attention to the matter so that we may not misunderstand each other, I think I recollect quite distinctly what occurred as to that. I was pressing the hon. minister for an answer as to whether he had interviewed the Board of Railway Commissioners to get such information as would enable him to promise this report to the House at an early day. I understood the hon. minister to say definitely that he had taken those steps and that he would be in a position to bring down a complete report such as we indicated when we were discussing the estimates and when the question arose to which I have referred. If it is necessary I shall take occasion to look up the reference to it and refer to it again, but aside from that verbal discussion it is time that this report was brought down. The hon. minister again is indefinite when he suggests that he has not a complete report. Either it is a sufficient report or it is not, and if it is not, steps should be taken to have it supplemented in such a way that it would be sufficient to be brought down.

SEIZURE OF SCHOONER 'AGNES DONOHOE.'

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the government to one or two new phases which have occurred in the case of the unfortunate captain of the schooner 'Agnes Donahoe.' I have just received the following telegram :

Halifax, N.S., May 17.

Wm. Roche, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

Montevideo agents cable : Ryan condemned ; sentenced three years penal servitude ; mates one year ; crew six months ; ship cargo confiscated ; we have appealed ; enforce claims immediately. Have Canadian government act with vigour and despatch ; answer.

(Sgd.) E. DONAHOE & SON.

That is a very serious matter, Mr. Speaker, but a more serious matter is this, that in so far as it relates to the crew——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have already had this matter up to-day.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. Then all I have to say is that the second phase of this question is a more serious one, as it affects our sea-faring population. Part of the crew of the 'Agnes Donahoe' took refuge on board an American man-of-war, and they, having been taken to a port in the United States, obtained their release and came to Nova Scotia. The serious part of it is this : Does the British flag protect British seamen as the American flag protects British or other seamen ? If our seamen obtain the idea that they have a protection under the American flag that does not exist under the British flag, it will strike a blow at the prestige of the British flag.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY—APPROVAL OF LOCATION.

A. C. BOYCE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) if he has yet approved of the plans of the Grand Trunk Pacific terminus at Port Arthur and Fort William ? In this connection, I would draw his attention to a report that appeared in the 'Daily World,' of Vancouver, of April 27th, which reads as follows :

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I assume that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) intends to conclude with a motion.

Mr. BOYCE. I am simply asking a question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The House will be moved into Committee of Supply during the day, and if my hon. friend has a statement to make he may proceed then.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think my hon. friend only wishes to ask a question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If he only wishes to ask a question, I have no objection at all.

Mr. BOYCE. I am only asking the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals if the following statement that appeared in this newspaper is correct :

Port Simpson and the Terminal.

Ottawa, Ont., April 27.—(Special)—Hon. Mr. Emmerson expects to approve the Grand Trunk Pacific application for terminals at Port Simpson and Kaien Island, some ten miles south, to-day or to-morrow. He has already approved of the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Minister of Railways has approved of the route to Port Arthur and Fort William ; that is of the location of the route of the Grand Trunk Pacific branch line of railway from the main line to Thunder bay.

Mr. BOYCE. Are these the plans that were sealed up ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No; these are the location plans. The other plans as to the terminals have not been approved.

REPORT OF RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. R. BLAIN. I have taken the trouble to look up the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in respect to bringing down the Railway Commission report. At page 602 of the revised 'Hansard,' my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asks :

When will we have the railway report ?
Mr. EMMERSON. I have not received the report from the Printing Bureau. It was promised for to-morrow.

I understand my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals to say that has not been brought down yet.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) is referring to the report of the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes ; I apologize.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS ACT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 132) to amend the Government Railways Act.—Mr. Emmerson.

On section 1,

Mr. EMMERSON. There are some slight amendments to be proposed to this section, most of which are merely intended to improve the wording and in order to make the meaning clear. The section as amended will read as follows :

The minister shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, have for the purposes of and in connection with the business and traffic of any government railway in his charge or direction by virtue of the Government Railways Act, running powers over the whole or any portion of the lines of Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada between Montreal and Coteau Junction and over all or any of the lines and tracks of the system known as the Canada Atlantic Railway system extending from Coteau Junction to Depot Harbour and the Georgian bay, as the said lines and tracks, including the said line between Montreal and Coteau Junction, now exist or as they are hereafter constructed, reconstructed, or extended.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the discussion that took place on the first reading, this Bill seemed to be regarded as merely an option to the government to exercise or not to exercise running powers over this railway. It may be that in one sense the government may not be bound to exercise those running powers, but this section expressly and explicitly says that the government shall have running powers. Now if you enact a statute of that character will you not, by the very circumstance that the government is placed in the position to enter at any time and to exercise running powers, place the government and the country in the position of having to pay compensation to the Grand Trunk whether those running powers are exercised or not ? For example the property of the Grand Trunk Company subject to a power of that kind which may be exercised under statute by the government would be a less valuable asset possibly to the company than it would be if it were subject to no such rights. It seems to me that the government by this legislation is doing something more than was suggested by the Prime Minister upon the introduction of this Bill and also by the Minister of Railways himself, and I would like to have a little more definite statement as to exactly what the result of this statute will be in this regard. Suppose this statute is passed and nothing more is done ; is it suggested that the Grand Trunk Railway whose property is made subject to this right will have no power of enforcing compensation against the government ? I would think that the opposite result is one which might be regarded as a fair result from the wording of this statute.

Mr. EMMERSON. Or course my hon. friend is asking a legal question as to the legal consequences. My own view of the matter would be that the Grand Trunk Company couid not by any possibility have any legal, moral or equitable claim against the government of Canada. This is the parliament of Canada, it is the supreme power, it is the highest court in Canada, and it has power to deal with these matters and it enacts with respect to certain property that the government can, if it chooses, shall if it will exercise, and have the right to running powers and of course that section is to be interpreted in connection with the other clauses of the Act and no possible damages can accrue to the Grand Trunk Railway or to the other company, reading the whole Act together.

Mr. HAGGART. Have there been any negotiations, or correspondence, verbal or otherwise with the Grand Trunk or the Canada Atlantic as to the passage of this Act either before the acquisition by the Grand Trunk or the Canada Atlantic or since, and what is the effect of those negotiations and what is the purpose you intend to carry out under the Bill ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I may say to my hon. friend that there were no negotiations with the company. Representatives of the company have been here when this Bill was before the committee and I think they addressed themselves to members of the Railway Committee when their Bill was before that body and this other proposition was spoken of. I think they are not disposed to favourably view this matter ; certainly they objected to the delay that resulted by reason of the desire which I expressed to have time to determine as to the character of the legislation that should be brought in giving running rights to the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. Then you have no idea as to what meaning Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson had when he was addressing the stockholders in London, and said that he was sorry he could not take them all fully into his confidence because there were some negotiations and correspondence going on connected with this bargain which it would be impossible for him to disclose at the present moment, but they must take his word and rely on it entirely that these negotiations and this correspondence were in the interest of the company ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not seen the remarks to which my hon. friend refers. I am speaking for my own department ; there have been no negotiations, there is no bargain. I thought it was in the interest of the Intercolonial Railway that this Bill should be introduced, I obtained the consent of my colleagues, the Bill was prepared and is now before the committee, but not as the result of any bargain or any negotiations with the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

Mr. KEMP. The hon. gentleman has said that so far as his department is concerned there have been no negotiations.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will make it wider, and say that so far as I know no negotiations of any kind were conducted with the government. I was speaking for myself and I was surprised when my hon. friend mentioned the remarks he did. I had not seen the remarks and I know of no negotiations with any other member of the government. Certainly there were none with me nor were there any with the Department of Railways and Canals and I assume that is where negotiations would be carried on.

Mr. INGRAM. Do we understand the minister to say that when the Canada Atlantic Railway Bill was before the Railway Committee, the government having in view the insertion of a clause in the Canada Atlantic Railway Bill and now foregoing that and introducing this Bill, there was no conference between the Grand Trunk Company and the government with respect to the conditions to be attached to this Bill?

Mr. EMMERSON. I was asked with respect to correspondence. I said there was no correspondence, but I stated that when this matter was before the Railway Committee there were some verbal expressions against the proposal which I had suggested to the committee. It did not take the form of negotiations ; it simply was an expression of opposition on the part of solicitors to the proposal which I had suggested to the committee.

Mr. INGRAM. That is to say that any clauses put in the Canada Atlantic Bill would affect the interest of the Grand Trunk Company in the matter of raising money and for that reason they did not want that class of legislation placed in their Bill. But apart from that I understood the hon. gentleman to say that neither verbal nor written communications nor conferences have taken place with the Grand Trunk Company. Now the minister says there was a verbal——

Mr. EMMERSON. Oh no, I qualified that before.

Mr. INGRAM. I did not so understand from the minister's answer to the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) and it seems to me a rather strange thing that there would be no conference or anything of that kind in reference to those Bills.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The reason that I suggested the construction which I thought might be placed on the words of this Act is this : You have under section 1 a right created in this government in respect of a railway owned by a private company. There is no ambiguity about the terms of that section. I shall omit the immaterial work : The minister shall have for the government railway running powers over that portion of the Grand Trunk Railway between Montreal and Côteau Junction and over all the lines and tracks of the system known as the Canada Atlantic Railway system. Then section 5 provides that the terms and conditions and the payment or compensation subject to which the said running powers may be so exercised shall be determined by the Board of Railway Commissioners. If you put those two provisions together, it seems to me that the Grand Trunk Railway will have the right to recover compensation against the Crown for that easement created in favour of the government over the property of the Grand Trunk Railway. For that reason I thought the Minister of Railways should be able to give us the opinion of the law officers of the Crown as to the effect of these two sections. The First Minister, on the first reading of the Bill, suggested that this was merely the creation of a right which might not be exercised for a long time, and which involved no obligation on the part of this country to pay anything. I am now stating it as my opinion that the converse is at least fairly arguable. I would like to know whether or not the minister has taken the opinion of the law officers of the Crown upon the construction of these two sections. If you create an easement and say that it shall be paid for according to the arbitrament of a certain tribunal, do you not permit the party against whom the easement is created to make application on its own initiative to the tribunal for the purpose of determining that compensation and incidentally the terms and conditions upon which this right shall be exercised. That seems an important question to be considered because you will find in the end that it is not the intention which the government may put into the Act, but that which is to be read in the words of the statute which will have effect and be carried out.

Mr. EMMERSON. As was stated by the right hon. the First Minister at the first reading, the exercise of these rights is not imperative. These rights need only be exercised when the government sees fit, and then the compensation will be determined by the Railway Commission. The question stated by my hon. friend was submitted by me to the Department of Justice. That department drafted the Bill in accord with the expressed policy of the government. I would not presume to give a legal opinion upon these sections, but, as an individual, I would read them very differently from the way my hon. friend reads them. I would take into consideration the whole Bill and not pick out a word here and there in the different sections. According to the fifth section the running powers shall be subject to the terms and conditions to be fixed by the Railway Commission ; but it is evident that the exercise of these powers is purely discretionary, and I cannot see how the Grand Trunk Railway could have any claim legal, equitable or moral against the government for the non-exercise of these powers and privileges, the exercise of which is discretionary with the government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I stated that I was omitting the immaterial words, and I did not observe in any of the other sections anything which at all cuts down what is contained in the words I did read. This seems to me to be a statutory expropriation of an easement in respect of the Grand Trunk Railway lines between Montreal and Depot Harbour. The Bill contains also provisions for compensation. Would the Minister of Justice give us his opinion, if he has had the opportunity of examining the different sections of the Bill ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Bill was originally drafted by the Railway Department and sent to the Department of Justice for consideration. It was sent back to the Railway Department and they amended it again, so that the form in which it appears before the House is not that in which it left my department.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If hon. gentlemen will have a little patience, they will hear something more. While the draft Bill was being considered, I thought it well to consult the solicitor of the Grand Trunk Railway in connection with the matter. I sent for him and we considered the point together. The conclusion to which we came was that this Bill gave to the government the right to exercise running powers over that portion of the Grand Trunk which extended from Montreal to Coteau and over the Canada Atlantic Railway and its branches from Coteau to Depot Harbour. I may say that, incidentally, my advice was that the Bill should be drafted in the way it is rather than have the measure appear as a clause in the Canada Atlantic Railway Company's Act. This Bill gives the government power, which it may only exercise in the dim and distant future, there is no immediate connection between the Canada Atlantic Railway and the Intercolonial which must run over the Grand Trunk from Montreal to Coteau Junction. I am old enough now in the profession to be willing to see an error, if there is one, in anything I am connected with. But I may explain that the object was to provide that the government should have running powers, and that those powers should not be exercised until two things had been settled by the Railway Commission. The first of these to be determined would be the terms and conditions under which this power should be exercised ; and, after the terms and conditions are settled the second would be to fix the compensation—because it is clear that the compensation must depend upon the conditions under which the power is exercised. That was the object, and this provision, it seems to me will carry out that object. I entertained no doubt about it, until some doubt was suggested by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). If there is any doubt, it is our duty to make the thing absolutely clear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I appreciate what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has said. Two points occur to me. The first is that the mere creation of an easement which may or may not be exercised, would afford ground for compensation. For instance, if a right of way is created which may never be exercised, but which the party is free to exercise if he chooses, that may be a subject for compensation. True, that compensation might be small. The second point is that if you enact legislation of this character, and if the view which the Minister of Justice has suggested be the correct view, would it not almost necessarily follow, that the Grand Trunk Railway company, owning property which is subjected or might be subjected to the easement, would have the right to go to the Railway Commission to have the terms settled and the compensation fixed ? There might be that view of the situation. That is to say, the courts, it seems to me, would refrain from putting the Grand Trunk Railway in the position of having a right created against it in the shape of an easement so that its property would remain subject to that right for an indefinite period in the future without giving the company the right to have compensation or without giving the company the right of its own initiative to have the terms and conditions settled and the matter closed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. To settle the terms and conditions, it would be necessary to know the extent of the user which the government may make. That is a preliminary step. To settle the terms and conditions of the user to be made, you would need to know what the dominant party, as we call it under our civil law, is going to do. In this case, the dominant party is the government, and we would need to know whether the government is going to exercise the right it undoubtedly will have if this Bill passes. No doubt my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has considered the matter. I cannot, on the spur of the moment, suggest the wording to meet his view. But, if I have correctly stated his position, I will make it clear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I simply suggest that it is a thing capable of being made clear and that it ought to be made clear.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I agree.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, we may give our considered opinion here in the House, but after all we cannot thresh out these matters as thoroughly and closely as they would be threshed out in the courts if the matter should come up for adjudication.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We do not want to get into the courts anyway.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN: No. But I would consider the matter sufficiently important and sufficiently doubtful to justify the government in making an amendment of this clause.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Clause 1 stands.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If the Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) is agreeable.

Mr. EMMERSON. In view of the opinion of the keeper of my law conscience, I will certainly defer. If he thinks the clause should stand, I am quite agreeable.

On section 2—running powers defined,

Mr. BERGERON. I was not here when the discussion on this Bill commenced. I understand that clause 1 stands. But I would like to make a suggestion to the government relating to that section. If I understand the matter, the object of the government in obtaining running powers for the Intercolonial over the Canada Atlantic Railway to Depot Harbour would relate principally to freight traffic. The Canada Atlantic Railway, as we all know, crosses the St. Lawrence, at Coteau. I would suggest, that, instead of only obtaining running powers from Montreal to Coteau and thence to Depot Harbour, it would be well to obtain running powers from Coteau on the Canada Atlantic Railway to Howick Junction in Chateauguay, thence by Grand Trunk Railway to St. Lambert. This will be a shorter distance for traffic, and also it would serve at least three counties in which there is a good deal of traffic—Beauharnois, Chateauguay and La Prairie. As the clause has been allowed to stand I would throw out the suggestion for consideration, whether we could not take these running powers over the two lines from Montreal to Coteau on the Grand Trunk Railway, and, on the Canada Atlantic down to Howick Junction and thence by Grand Trunk Railway to St. Lambert. In the latter case the freight would go on straight by the Intercolonial without passing by the city of Montreal.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will consider the suggestion. Of course, the section is allowed to stand.

Mr. HAGGART. This section 2 reads:

> Such running powers shall consist of the right, perpetuity or for such period or periods from time to time as the Governor in Council determines.

And so on. What does the government intend to do—take it in perpetuity? Or are they going to exercise the option for such times as the Governor in Council from time to time decides?

Mr. EMMERSON. The right would be to take it in perpetuity. But when the moment arrives when it shall be determined as to the question of the exercise of the right, it is at the option of the Governor in Council for that time to decide as to whether it should be in perpetuity or whether it should be for a shorter period or series of periods.

Mr. HAGGART. Then the Governor in Council decides it. As I understand, the Governor in Council can decide whether they take it in perpetuity or for a short time. If they exercise it for a short time, they cannot have power to exercise it for another time under the Act.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think they could. I think they could exercise it for a short time, and if, at the end of that period, they wanted to extend the time, I think they could do so. The Act says 'or for such period or periods from time to time as the Governor in Council determine.' As the Governor in Council determines from time to time, I think would be a reasonable rendering.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What about the practical working out of this arrangement as regards, for instance, the running of trains over the line from Montreal to Parry Sound? Will you not have practically to operate the line, to create divisions of the train crews, and so forth? How will it work out as a matter of practical operation of this railway?

Mr. EMMERSON. That would have to be determined at the time. It could be worked out in the way we worked out the running of the Canadian Pacific Railway trains on the Intercolonial; that would be one method of doing it. It could be done in the same way as we have the right to run our trains over the portion of the Grand Trunk between Ste. Rosalie and the terminal at Montreal, as we now operate that section.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is a much longer section.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think the question is affected by the length of the line. Our men take charge of the trains that come off the Drummond section at Ste. Rosalie, they continue on those trains, but those trains are subject to the despatch and control of the Grand Trunk. Our train hands have to take their orders from the despatchers of the Grand Trunk Railway. We are running over their track, we are subject to their direction.

Mr. HAGGART. Of course, it must be operated by the owning company.

Mr. EMMERSON. So with respect to the line between Hamilton and Toronto—the Grand Trunk, I think, own the line and the Canadian Pacific Railway have running rights over it.

Mr. HAGGART. Under that arrangement the minister made provision as to the amount we will have to pay to the officials along the line of the road each year for the user. It was paid according to the user on a train basis. You paid your contribution for terminal facilities for the use of the line to the officials along the line of the road. There is no provision for anything of that kind here.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think this could be determined by the Railway Commission. They can put the compensation in any form their judgment suggests, that is under clause 5. It need not necessarily be a lump sum. It can be put in any form, as long as there is a consideration given. I think their powers are ample in that respect.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 4,

Mr. BERGERON. I always understood that the Intercolonial Railway did not come under the control of the Railway Commission. As a matter of fact would not this section give the Railway Commission control over the Intercolonial Railway to the extent that the Intercolonial Railway has running powers over this line?

Mr. EMMERSON. On the first reading of this Bill I explained this clause. It would not be fair to the other railways running west of Montreal that they should be obliged to have their tariffs determined by the Railway Commission, while the Intercolonial Railway could use these very same tracks and adjust their tariffs at their own sweet will. While I objected to the freight tariffs of the Intercolonial Railway proper east of Montreal being subject to the Railway Commission, I felt that in the common interest it was only just that the rates west of Montreal should be approved by the Railway Commission as in the case of other railways.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the practise on the joint section between Ste. Rosalie and Montreal?

Mr. EMMERSON. My impression is that we have no local freights between Ste. Rosalie and the Montreal terminals.

Mr. BERGERON. I presume that if there is any freight taken by the Intercolonial Railway there, it would be through freight?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, and we do not submit our through freight rates to the commission.

Mr. BERGERON. But you would carry through freight from Depot Harbour to the maritime ports?

Mr. EMMERSON. It would be under the commission only so far as that portion of it west of Montreal is concerned.

Mr. BERGERON. But you purpose doing a through freight business?

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the minister to mean that the railway companies may make a joint tariff arrangement between themselves, and against the Intercolonial Railway as one of the railways affected, which does not need to submit its rates to the Railway Commission?

Mr. EMMERSON. The companies can admit a joint tariff but it is subject to the approval of the Railway Commission. The leader of the opposition stated on a former occasion that the Intercolonial Railway, in proposing to do a through business should be subject to the same authority as the other railways are with respect to the through business west of Montreal.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think I said exactly that.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is my impression.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I remember correctly, I said that it seemed very anamalous that the Intercolonial Railway carrying through freight from the Georgian bay to the maritime ports should be subject to the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission in respect to a portion of the distance and not in respect to another portion of the distance. I did not see exactly how it could be worked out, because it seemed to me that the Railway Commission in determining a through rate must have regard to that portion of the line which is excluded from the provisions of the Railway Act. I confess that I do not yet see exactly how it can be worked out.

Mr. EMMERSON. We propose to do a through freight business and a through and local passenger business. It is proposed that the tariffs west of Montreal shall be subject to the Railway Board in order that there may be uniformity, and in order that the government railways should not be in a different position from the other railways. This would seem to be just and equitable when we are carrying freight over a railway belonging to a company which is under the Railway Act.

Mr. HAGGART. Then the commission would have jurisdiction from Georgian bay to Montreal on the freight that is carried on the Intercolonial Railway. That would be determined by the local rate, but the other railways would have the right to make a through rate and the Intercolonial Railway will not under this arrangement.

Mr. EMMERSON. That through rate is subject to the supervision of the Railway Commission.

Mr. HAGGART. The through rate on the Intercolonial Railway is subject to the supervision of the Railway Commission ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It certainly is under the Railway Act.

Mr. HAGGART. Not at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. Surely my hon. friend will not dispute that ?

Mr. HAGGART. The Railway Commission has no jurisdiction at all over the rates on the Intercolonial Railway. Where do you give them jurisdiction over the through rates from the Georgian bay to St. John or Halifax ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Let me explain. We are not allowed to do any local freight traffic on the leased line. Section 3 says :

> In exercising any such running powers the minister shall have the power to do a through freight and passenger business and a local passenger business.

We have not power to do a local freight business. Section 4 says :

> The minister shall submit tariffs of the tolls to be charged for the carriage of traffic upon the said line and track to which said running powers extend, to the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

The tariff so submitted must of necessity be a through tariff because the Intercolonial Railway can do no local freight business on the leased lines. The Intercolonial Railway would be compelled to file its tariff on that section with the Railway Commission just the same as the other companies.

Mr. BERGERON. Let me understand the matter. Take a freight train of the Grand Trunk Railway, starting from Depot Harbour for St. John or Halifax and passing over the Canada Atlantic Railway and the Intercolonial Railway, would the freight on that train be subject to the Railway Commission for the entire journey, although it would be running for the greater part of the way on the Intercolonial Railway which is not subject to the Railway Commission. Is that what I am to understand ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. EMMERSON. They could not do a local freight business on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. BERGERON. Whether it be through traffic or local traffic, it would be subject to the Railway Commission upon the Intercolonial Railway, a railway which is not under the Railway Commission. It might be a difficult thing to fix rates under such conditions.

Mr. KEMP. Will the Minister of Railways explain what 'through' and 'local' traffic mean ? Does the minister hold that local traffic means freight gathered on the lines between Depot Harbour and Montreal and destined for points in the maritime provinces? Can the Intercolonial Railway gather freight on the Canada Atlantic Railway lines between Depot Harbour and Coteau or on the Grand Trunk Railway lines between Coteau and Montreal for points on the Intercolonial Railway in the maritime provinces, and would that be considered through traffic ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is my understanding of the term 'through traffic.'

Mr. KEMP. I understand from the discussion that through traffic meant traffic from the lakes to points in the maritime provinces, but I am now told that through traffic also means traffic originating at various stations on the Canada Atlantic and destined for Intercolonial Railway points in the maritime provinces.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is my understanding of through traffic.

Mr. BERGERON. Local traffic is the traffic from one station to another.

Mr. EMMERSON. On the leased lines that is local traffic.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say the Intercolonial Railway can gather up freight where they have running rights on the Grand Trunk Railway ?

Mr. EMMERSON. For points on its own line east of Montreal, but it could not take traffic along the leased lines or the operated lines to Montreal or to any intervening points.

Mr. KEMP. Do I understand the word 'traffic' in clause 4 includes passenger as well as freight traffic ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. KEMP. Well then if 'traffic' in clause 4 means only freight traffic then the Railway Commission has no control over passenger rates. Is that what that clause means ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, it is only as to freight.

Mr. KEMP. Then the Board of Railway Commissioners will have no control over the passenger rates to be charged ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. KEMP. Why is that not included ? In clause 3 it refers to passenger and freight business but in clause 4 the minister says that the word 'traffic' only relates to freight traffic and not to passenger traffic and that the Board of Railway Commissioners will have no control over passenger traffic. I do not understand why the discrimination is made.

Mr. EMMERSON. That certainly is the case as I remember. I do not see the same necessity for bringing the passenger traffic under the supervision of the Railway Commission.

Mr. KEMP. Why ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Well for the reason that passenger traffic is not so much a subject of revision by the Railway Board. That is governed more by usage. Take for instance the passenger rate between St. John and Montreal. Necessarily that rate is governed by the shortest route, that is to say, the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have to take passengers from St. John who are destined for Montreal to Moncton by the Intercolonial Railway around up to Lévis, and on to Montreal, and that passenger rate is governed by the passenger rate of the Canadian Pacific Railway from St. John direct through Maine to Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. The charge is the same although the distance is longer.

Mr. EMMERSON. The rates are identical and that is a recognized principle that the short haul governs the longer.

Mr. KEMP. The point I wanted to make is this. On the present Intercolonial Railway there are some advantages which the Intercolonial Railway gives to passengers which the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canada Atlantic Railway do not give. The rates per mile are higher on the Canada Atlantic Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway than they are on the Intercolonial Railway for certain classes of passenger traffic. According to the reasoning of the Minister of Railways if this Bill came into effect, if the bargain was made, the Intercolonial would be fully justified in adopting the same schedule on the Canada Atlantic Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway which is leased as they do on the Intercolonial Railway at present, thereby reducing the passenger tolls if they saw fit and the Board of Railway Commissioners could not interfere with such a movement as that.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is the way it stands.

Mr. BARKER. I perhaps misunderstood something the minister said. I understood him to say that the leased line traffic would be local traffic. Is that what the minister said ? Does he mean by that that there is no local traffic except the traffic of the leased line ? Take traffic arising on the leased line of the Canada Atlantic Railway from some middle point to another middle point, what is that ? That is local traffic.

Mr. EMMERSON. For any middle point where——

Mr. BARKER. I am not talking of traffic going to St. John, take traffic going from some point on the Canada Atlantic to another point on the Canada Atlantic not to the termini, but to any intermediate point, never touching a leased line at all. Is that not local traffic ?

Mr. EMMERSON. When I say a 'leased line' I mean a line over which we would acquire running rights. We call that local traffic. That is to say we could not take traffic at any point along the present system of the Canada Atlantic or the Grand Trunk between Coteau and the terminal at Montreal ; we could not engage in that freight traffic. That is what is called local freight traffic ; that is what I would term local freight traffic.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman uses the words 'leased lines.' What did he refer to when he used that expression ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I was referring to lines over which we had running rights as distinguished from the line of the Intercolonial Railway as owned and controlled by it. Properly speaking of course, it is a misnomer because there is a portion of the line from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal which is a leased line properly so called, but I do not wish to be understood as including that in the term. It was not an expression taken from the Bill here ; a more correct expression would have been 'those lines over which we had running rights,' the running rights included in and given by this Bill.

Mr. BARKER. That is on portions of the Canada Atlantic.

Mr. EMMERSON. And a portion of the Grand Trunk as far as Montreal.

Mr. BARKER. You are not dealing with purely local traffic upon either of those lines if it is freight traffic but you are dealing with it if it is passenger traffic ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. And you are dealing with all through traffic whether passenger or freight ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. If you are carrying passengers from Depot Harbour down to St. John or Halifax that does not fall under this Bill. If the privilege enjoyed by the Intercolonial Railway of not coming under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission applies here, you could for instance carry passengers a great deal cheaper than the Grand Trunk Railway would and I think in that way you could take away the passengers from the other lines. What would prevent you from doing that? The hon. gentleman would have the right to do so if he chose.

Mr. EMMERSON. I grant that, just as there is nothing to prevent us to-day from carrying passengers from Montreal to St. John for one-half the Canadian Pacific Railway rate.

Mr. BERGERON. Except that the deficit might be much larger.

Mr. EMMERSON. We might have a great influx of passengers.

Mr. BERGERON. On the other hand, on the part I am talking of it would not be the same thing at all; even carrying passengers much cheaper might be good business.

Mr. HAGGART. The trouble about this Bill is that you give the Railway Commission jurisdiction over what you say are through rates, but by the Railway Act they have no jurisdiction over the Intercolonial Railway at all. Then the only jurisdiction they have is from Georgian bay to Montreal. Would the Railway Commission fix a different rate, having no jurisdiction over the Intercolonial Railway than what they would allow to the Canada Atlantic or the Grand Trunk? In other words, not having jurisdiction over the Intercolonial Railway they could only fix the rate from Georgian bay to Montreal as they would fix it for the Grand Trunk Railway. In that case you would be terribly handicapped because the Grand Trunk Railway may have a through rate a great deal lower than what you would have on the Intercolonial Railway. For this reason the rate from Georgian bay to Montreal would be the same rate as would be attached to the Grand Trunk Railway. Not having jurisdiction over the Intercolonial Railway, the Railway Commission need not take that into consideration at all in fixing through rates. Then what would the commission have to decide upon? They would only have the fixing of the rates between Georgian bay and Montreal, and they make them the same as over the Grand Trunk Railway. But the Grand Trunk Railway may have a through rate to St. John which is a great deal lower than from Georgian bay to Montreal. If the Railway Commission should take that into consideration, then they have the right to take into consideration what are the rates on the Intercolonial Railway in fixing the rate from Montreal to Georgian bay, if they are to fix a through rate.

Mr. EMMERSON. I fear that we do not understand each other. At present the Intercolonial Railway ends at Montreal and its rates are not subject to the determination of the Railway Commission. If this Bill should become law and the powers given by it be put into execution, the Intercolonial Railway would then have running rights clear through to Depot Harbour. Now the Bill as proposed makes it necessary for the Railway Commission to determine the through freight rates, that is the freight rates for any traffic originating on the Intercolonial Railway and going to any point along the line over which we had acquired running rights. Or if we, in the exercise of our running rights, gather up freight on the Canada Atlantic system destined for a point in the maritime provinces along our own line, we could not arbitrarily fix a through rate to those points. Although we have the power to fix our local rates as between points on our own original line, we could not fix through rates which would be subject to the determination and judgment of the Railway Commission, without at the same time fixing through rates for the Grand Trunk Railway and also for the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is presumed that the same principle which now applies and fixing those through rates would be applied under those circumstances and that there would be uniformity. It is required now that the freight tariffs shall all be filed at a certain date, whether local freight or general freight. All tariffs must be filed at a certain date. If the commission takes no action with respect to those freight tariffs thus filed, the railways are entitled to collect the rates fixed by them. But if the commission decide that these tariffs need to be revised, they would necessarily frame a uniform tariff applicable to all railways.

Mr. HAGGART. Where do you give the commissioners the right to fix a through traffic from Georgian bay to St. John or Halifax or any point on the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. EMMERSON. In the Railway Act there is such a power. Every railway running from Georgian bay or any other point in the west is compelled to file its tariff on a certain day each year or at certain stated intervals, and that through rate—I do not care what it may be—is subject to the revision of the Railway Commission.

Mr. HAGGART. If it passes over the Intercolonial Railway, the Railway Commission will have no jurisdiction.

Mr. EMMERSON. We propose by this Bill to make it subject to that jurisdiction.

Mr. HAGGART. Under what clause?

Mr. EMMERSON. By the fourth section of this Bill we are obliged to submit tariffs of the tolls to be charged for the carriage of traffic upon the side lines and tracks to which such running powers extend.

Mr. HAGGART. That is not the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. It must be because we are not allowed to carry local traffic over those lines. Therefore the traffic, with respect to which we must submit a tariff, is traffic that extends over the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. HAGGART. It is confined entirely to the said lines and tracks to which such running powers extend.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No doubt the Railway Commission has no control over the Intercolonial Railway freights purely and simply; but are we to understand that if a through freight rate is made between any other road and the Intercolonial Railway, the commission then has control over the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. EMMERSON. The commission has control over the rates of traffic which would be gathered on these lines and be carried over the Intercolonial to any point on it.

Mr. HAGGART. Why do you not say so?

Mr. EMMERSON. What other meaning can you get from that fourth section if you consider it in connection with the third section? Under the third section the minister, in the exercise of such running powers, shall have the power to do a through freight and passenger business and a local passenger business. He is not given the power to do a local freight traffic over those lines, and therefore any tariff he would submit could not relate to rates on local traffic over those lines.

Mr. BARKER. I wished, some moments ago, to ask a very simple question of the minister with regard to the fourth section. I wish to take the words of the section and ask how he interprets them to cover more than the Canada Atlantic Railway:

> The minister shall submit tariffs of the tolls to be charged for the carriage of traffic upon the said lines and tracks to which such running powers extend.

What lines and tracks? The Canada Atlantic Railway only?

Mr. EMMERSON. Excuse me. The Intercolonial can only carry the traffic to a point on the Intercolonial, and that must include the carriage of traffic over these through lines; and, in so far as the whole traffic is concerned, the board must determine as to the tariff. That is to say, the board can regulate the tolls to be charged and collected originating on these lines and carried by the Intercolonial over these lines to Montreal and to any point on the Intercolonial.

Mr. BARKER. It does not say so.

Mr. EMMERSON.

Mr. BERGERON. The section before us refers only to lines over which running rights are acquired, and does not speak of the Intercolonial at all. As the minister says, they will not carry any local freight, he must intend this to refer to through freight. It means, I imagine, grain coming from Depot Harbour——

Mr. EMMERSON. We will not refuse anything.

Mr. BERGERON—and going to St. John.

Mr. EMMERSON. Halifax as well, or Sydney.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course, the Grand Trunk Railway will carry grain from the same place, and so will any line that has running powers over the Grand Trunk Railway. What will happen if inducements are given by the Grand Trunk Railway in the way of cheaper rates, to send the traffic to Portland? What is taken into consideration by the commission in fixing the rates? Is it the distance? If it is, the Intercolonial from Montreal to St. John would be at a disadvantage. According to this clause there is nothing to say what rates should be charged on the Intercolonial.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think the clause, as it reads, covers what the minister (Mr. Emmerson) holds it covers. The expressions 'through and freight and passenger business' and 'local passenger business' in clause 3, apply to the lines of the Grand Trunk Railway from Montreal to Georgian bay, and 'through freight' means the carriage of freight from Georgian bay to Montreal, I should think. That is the only interpretation that could be given to section 4. Now, how is this to be worked out in practice? The Intercolonial is not subject to the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission so far as its lines east of Montreal are concerned. The Intercolonial, operating this line from Montreal to Georgian bay, will be subject to the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission so far as concerns the tolls in respect of the business it is authorized to do. The minister has in his mind through freight from Georgian bay to maritime province ports.

Mr. EMMERSON. Not necessarily maritime province ports, but any points on the Intercolonial.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They are all in the same category, I used that expression merely by way of illustration. If you propose to create a through rate from Georgian bay to St. John or Halifax—which again I use by way of illustration—you may probably go to the Railway Commission to fix the proportion of the rate which shall be charged from Georgian bay to Montreal over this line. But, so far as the remainder of the freight rate is concerned, that part which is to be charged by the Intercolonial in respect of its lines east of Montreal, the Railway Commission surely will have no jurisdiction under this Act or under the Railway Act. But you may, in the end, establish a through rate by adding these two together, the result being that, so far as one part of the rate is concerned, the Railway Commission has nothing to do with it; and, so far as the other portion is concerned, the Railway Commission may perhaps exercise control over it. That, it seems to me, is the only result you can get out of this Bill from the standpoint of the government.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There seems to be a little doubt even in the mind of the minister himself, and there is very decided doubt on the part of members on this side, as to the proper interpretation of this section. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) and the Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) if they consulted as to this interpretation?

Mr. EMMERSON. The terms used here are technical terms; and I consulted with the general manager of the Intercolonial, the general traffic manager of the Intercolonial and the deputy minister and chief engineer.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Not with the Minister of Justice?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Bill was submitted to the Minister of Justice. While I recognize the Minister of Justice as a very eminent authority in matters of law, he is not considered an authority on the technical terms used on railways. I consulted the experts who were available to me—Mr. Pottinger, Mr. Tiffin and Mr. Schreiber.

Mr. KEMP. Perhaps we could get at this better by illustrating it in another way. The Bill is passed in view of a bargain with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canada Atlantic Railway to give business to the Intercolonial and to direct business to St. John, Halifax and other maritime province ports. The Minister of Railways tells us that the through rates from Depot Harbour to St. John or Halifax will be controlled by the Railway Commission. At Depot Harbour traffic will be delivered to the Intercolonial in the shape of grain from Duluth, Fort Arthur and Fort William; and the minister says that, so far as concerns the freights to the sea-board over the Intercolonial, that traffic will be governed by the Board of Railway Commissioners. I would point out to the minister that the Grand Trunk Railway, owing to their arrangements for the handling of through traffic, are not wholly controlled by the Board of Commissioners. If the board settled upon a rate of freight from Depot Harbour to St. John or Halifax, immediately after it was settled and when the Intercolonial could not reduce its rate the Grand Trunk Railway would be at liberty in respect of its through freight, which goes by way of Sarnia to Portland, to make a slightly lower rate and get the business.

Mr. EMMERSON. They cannot do that.

Mr. KEMP. They could do it under the clause made by the minister.

Mr. EMMERSON. My interpretation was entirely different.

Mr. KEMP. Will the hon. minister dispute what I say? He admits that the rates from Depot Harbour, on the freight to which I have referred, are to be controlled by the Railway Commission. I submit that the through freight rate by Sarnia and Portland is not controlled by the Railway Commission.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is where I take issue with my hon. friend. I say where there are two railways passing through Canada the tariff must be subject to the Railway Commission, and any discrimination that is found to exist as respects its through rates in comparison with Canadian rates can be revised and can be controlled by the Railway Commission. There are two or three clauses in the Act enabling the Railway Commission to control that very matter.

Mr. KEMP. I never heard of it. I do not believe the Grand Trunk Railway ever considered the Board of Railway Commissioners with respect to its through traffic to American points.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then they are not conforming to the law.

Mr. KEMP. I do not think there is anything in the Railway Act in respect to traffic originating in the United States for shipment through Canada to Portland, giving the Board of Railway Commissioners any control over it whatever. But they will have control over the same kind of traffic that the Intercolonial propose to take, under this law.

Mr. HAGGART. Section 269 seems to give all the control that is required over traffic that comes from a foreign country passing through Canada into a foreign country, by compelling them to file the tariff.

Mr. EMMERSON. And if they do not conform to it in a case of that kind, they can be made to pay duty.

Mr. HAGGART. But there is no control of the kind over the rates. They file the tariff with the Railway Commission, but there is no control by the commission.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the minister is mistaken about that, I think that only implies where traffic originates in Canada and is carried through Canada to foreign points. I do not see that we could control a foreign corporation operating a railway in the United States which happens to make connection with the railway of a Canadian company. We might attempt to do it by some similar provision to that which has been made available in the case of traffic originating in Canada and going through a foreign country into Canada.

Mr. EMMERSON. When it reached Sarnia, for instance, what would we do ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You might apply the same principle, and say that freight originating in a foreign country and coming into Canada, which was brought into Canada by a railway not conforming to the regulation of the board, should pay fifty per cent more customs duty, or something of that kind. But you have not done that, you have no penalty or means of enforcing any control over a foreign company which takes traffic in the United States for the purpose of bringing it into Canada. My hon. friend says they may be obliged to file a tariff, but there is no means of enforcing any regulations made by the board in respect of that tariff, so far as I have been able to examine the provisions of the statute. There is of course a provision to which the minister has called attention with regard to traffic originating in Canada, brought through a foreign country and delivered at its destination in Canada—there you have the provision that customs duties will be charged upon it unless the company or the companies conform to the regulations of the board.

Mr. BERGERON. When it is only one company like the Grand Trunk coming from the States and passing through Canada into the States, what will be the effect ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In that case there are two companies, one an American company operating in Michigan and the other a Canadian company.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That point was up a few days ago, and that was the interpretation that the minister and the government placed upon it, namely, that the Grand Trunk, although it runs from Chicago to Portland, was virtually two companies, if not three, one in the western end, one in Canada and one at the Portland end. Therefore it comes under this clause 233 of the statute.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will read section 273 so that the members of the committee may have it in their minds :

Joint tariffs shall, as to the filing and publication thereof, be subject to the same provisions in this Act as are applicable to the filing and publication of local tariffs of a similar description ; and upon any such joint tariff being so duly filed with the board, the company or companies shall, until such tariff is disallowed by the board, charge the toll or tolls specified therein ; provided that the board may except from the provisions of this section the filing and publication of any or all passenger tariffs of foreign railway companies.

Now the second clause of this section is the one that is pertinent to this question :

2. The board may require to be informed by the company of the proportion of the toll or tolls, in any joint tariff filed which it or any other company, whether Canadian or foreign, is to receive or has received.

They can regulate and control in accordance with that.

Mr. KEMP. That does not cover the point we are trying to make. The board requires them to file these tariffs and requires them to make public what they charge for the haul through Canada. But this does not compel them to charge any more or less than the rate they make themselves.

Mr. EMMERSON. The board would then have power to disallow their tariff.

Mr. KEMP. But section 269, I take it, covers what we are discussing, and that is the only section that refers to the question before the committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I mean is this : The subsection to which the hon. gentleman has referred does not give the slightest control to the board over a foreign corporation. Suppose you are bringing goods from Chicago to Ottawa. The Railway Commission declares that the proportion charged by the foreign country shall be seven cents and the proportion charged by the Canadian company shall be eight cents, the total rate being fifteen cents. Suppose the foreign company says, We won't do anything of the kind, we will charge ten cents—what is the Railway Commission going to do about it ? Under the present provision they cannot do anything. Even if they could do anything about it under section 2, that would not affect the Intercolonial, because that is a railway owned by the Crown. The Crown is not affected by any act unless it is specially mentioned. In addition, there is an express provision in the Railway Act that none of its provisions shall relate to the Intercolonial.

Mr. EMMERSON. There are provisions as respects discrimination in favour of American ports.

Mr. INGRAM. Since confusion has arisen between the minister and hon. gentlemen on this side, I am bound to say I do not understand it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I hope you will settle it.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to settle it in my own mind. As I understand it, hon. gentlemen on this side claim that freight originating at Depot Harbour and going to Montreal is subject to the Railway Commission; but if it passes on over the Intercolonial line through to Halifax, then the Railay Commission have no control over its freight. Now it seems to me at present the government have control over the rates over the Intercolonial. The Railway Commission has control over the Canada Atlantic Railway, but by the legislation introduced by the Minister, the Railway Commission will have control of rates from Depot Harbour to Halifax. It seems to me that the hon. minister's section really provides for that. I may be wrong but it strikes me that way.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think my hon. friend is agreeing with me.

Mr. INGRAM. I do really agree with the hon. minister in this case and I may be wrong. I am in the minority and minorities rule just now; therefore I am willing to rest my case with the minority.

On section 5,

The terms and conditions, and the payment or compensation, upon, for or subject to which the said running powers may be so exercised shall, subject to this Act, be determined by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada upon the application of the minister in accordance with the rules of procedure of the said board, subject to the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to call the hon. minister's attention to what he is going to pay for. The right he is taking is to run through freight, through passengers and do a local passenger business. It is quite possible that he may find it contrary to his best interests to do a through passenger business or a local pasenger business, but, as this clause is drawn, he will have to pay for that right or privilege whether he afterwards chooses to exercise it or not. He will have to pay for the right. I think that a railway company would take the option to exercise all or any of these rights, and agree to pay for whatever portion of the rights they should from time to time exercise.

Mr. EMMERSON. The very definition of the word 'compensation' refutes the argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Barker). When it is determined that this right may be exercised the minister may make application to the board setting forth the powers which he would, in the interest of the railway, require to be exercised. Upon that statement the board of Railway Commissioners would determine and decide what the compensation should be. Compensation for what? Not for all the possible rights which the minister might exercise under this amendment, but simply compensation for the rights which he asks to be exercised. If there were no passenger business done then certainly the board would not take into consideration compensation for the permission to do a passenger business. It is only to the extent that the powers given by this Act would be exercised that compensation would be determined. That is my rendering of the meaning of the section and it seems to me that it would be a very strained interpretation indeed that would give it any other meaning.

Mr. HAGGART. When the point was up for discussion some time ago the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) made a promise to the House in regard to how far the country would be bound in reference to this question. The clause seems wide enough to give the power to the board of Railway Commissioners or the Supreme Court to fix the value which might be paid in a lump sum or an annual allowance just the same as they do with the Grand Trunk Railway Copany for the user to-day. On the basis of a joint ownership they fix the amount paid for the right of user by both railways. But this goes a great deal further. It gives to the board the power to fix the compensation. How would you arrive at the compensation for the right of the user of that railway the extent of which is to be determined by the minister in future? The only fair way to do it in the interest of the country is to agree to a payment of so much per mile for each car running upon the road. There should be no compensation in the shape of a payment for the property itself. The compensation should be fixed in the same way as was done in reference to the user of the Grand Trunk Railway bridge and terminal facilities at Montreal. If you give this wide power to the Board of Railway Commissioners or the Supreme Court to determine the value, they will do as is done in every other case where there is a joint user by different railways. A joint user means common ownership. If you have common ownership then you have to pay jointly half and half, as we do in reference to the terminal facilities and the bridge at Montreal. I understood from the right hon. leader of the government and from the hon. Minister of Justice that they would carefully guard against any payment of a lump sum or any annual allowance for the user of this road, and that it would be decided entirely on the basis of the use the Intercolonial made of the road or that they should pay for the use of this road on a mileage basis. This clause gives a greater power to the commissioners than that. I understood further that the compensation would be fixed on the same line and on the same basis as the Railway Act provides for one railway company using another railway company's property. This clause goes further.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This is the point in regard to which an objection was raised by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) previous to the adjournment and I then said, of course, subject to the better information of my hon friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson), that it would be well to see if we could not frame some amendment that would make the point absolutely clear. That would not affect this section that we are dealing with now, that would be an amendment which should be inserted in section 1 which was held over for that purpose. I understand—of course speaking offhand and without intending to commit the government in any way—that we are not paying for the option, but that we are merely taking the option and what we are to pay for is the use that we make of the option hereafter.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, but when you exercise that option the word 'compensation' is broad enough to mean payment for joint ownership.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think we are all at one in regard to that point and that it might be made clear.

Mr. HAGGART. By an amendment.

Mr. BARKER. I would suggest also to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals that it would be proper in this fifth clause to provide for the fixing of the compensation for short periods, say, for five years. This is a very common practice amongst railway companies, because it is usually found that errors are made and if you fix the compensation for a longer period you might find that you have been paying as the result of a mistake.

Mr. KEMP. One of the reasons why I object to this kind of legislation is that we do not know what kind of a bargain will be made under it. It is a peculiar way of proceeding for the government not to bring down an absolute bargain which they have made and submit it to the House.

They evade that mode of procedure and they say that the Railway Commission will fix the compensation and make the bargain, and that if either party feels aggrieved he can appeal to the Supreme Court. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) if he thinks the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway would be willing to make an agreement between themselves based upon legislation of this kind and submit it to the Board of Railway Commissioners or the Supreme Court to determine what compensation should be paid. Why is it that the government will not state in exact terms what compensation they wish to pay for this privilege? Why was it necessary to bring this Bill in upon which to base a bargain that will be decided by the Railway Commission or the Supreme Court. I imagine the country will get the worst of it in a matter of this kind. All sorts of evidence will be produced as to the cost of the roadbed and other facilities of the leased lines, and from the experience we have had of the Drummond County agreement we ought be very careful. I think the Grand Trunk Railway got the better of that bargain; it was more advantageous for the Grand Trunk Railway than for the people of Canada, and if a bargain is made under this legislation the country will get the worst of it too. I do not think this procedure is business-like; I think the government ought to be competent to make a bargain irrespective of the Railway Commission or the Supreme Court.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am sure it is not because of any want of ability that my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) has failed to grasp the intention of this Bill. He says, that it is not good business to not have a bargain prepared by the government, and then he says, that the bargain made by the government some years ago in connection with another, railway was an improvident bargain, and that the government always gets the worst of it.

Mr. KEMP. Did you admit what I said to be true?

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend is arguing both ways. The intention of this Bill is that we shall now reserve the right to exercise running powers, and I think that is a wise precaution. If it is deemed necessary in the public interest that we should take running powers then the question of the compensation shall be referred to an independent tribunal, and if the conditions imposed by that tribunal are unsatisfactory either party can take it to the Supreme Court. We all have confidence in our courts, especially in the highest court in Canada, and we need not feel any alarm as to what they may do.

Mr. KEMP. When I spoke of the Drummond County deal I had in my mind that this administration has been in power for several years since that bargain was made, and having had experience they might perhaps be better able to make a good bargain for the country in the future,

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend said that no matter what bargain was made the government always got the worst of it; he took the pessimistic view that no matter what course we took we would be worsted.

Mr. KEMP. My remarks applied to the Drummond County Railway deal. This section 5 is very indefinite, and the interests of the country would be better guarded if we had the terms of the bargain before us.

Progress reported.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the Minister of Justice concludes that any amendment is necessary to the first clause, would he be good enough to send a copy to us as my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) would like to see it ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Certainly.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) delivered a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the message as follows :

GREY.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons supplementary estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th of June, 1905, and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act of 1867, the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House.
Ottawa, 17th November, 1905.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the message of His Excellency together with the supplementary estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House went into Committee of Supply.

Experimental Farms, $100,000.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). This is the usual item.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is that all the information we are going to get on this big item ?

Mr. FISHER. I shall be happy to give the hon. gentleman any explanation that is required.

Mr. HENDERSON. It would seem that the Minister of Agriculture has adopted a new role. Formerly he gave a great deal of information, sometimes more than we thought necessary, but now he seems to think it sufficient to say that this $100,000 is for experimental farms. Where is the money to be spent ? The Minister of Agriculture might at least devote ten minutes to an explanation of this item.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend knows very well that the farm system extends over the whole country. There are the Central Farm at Ottawa and four branch farms : at Nappan, N.S., for the maritime provinces ; at Brandon, for Manitoba ; at Indian Head for the Territories, and at Agassiz for British Columbia. Salaries in general and the work of the officers, that is to say the expenditure in connection with the chief officers comes to between $19,000 and $20,000. That includes the botanical and entomological department of which Dr. Fletcher is head, $4,000 ; the chemical department of which Mr. Shutt is head, $4,700 ; the distribution of seed grain and potatoes, $4,800, and petty expenses about $2,000. The expenditure properly chargeable to the Central Farm comes to about $37,500 and the amounts expended at each of the branch farms were as follows : Nappan, $12,000 ; Brandon, $12,000 ; Indian Head, nearly $11,000 ; Agassiz, $7,500. These were the expenditures for the last fiscal year.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister give the amount received at each of the experimental farms ?

Mr. FISHER. The amounts received were as follows : At Agassiz, $392.23 ; at Brandon, $873.57 ; at Indian Head, $502.27 ; at Nappan, $585.67; at Ottawa, $3,074.64, a total of $5,828.38.

Mr. BARR. It is important for us to know the profit or loss on each experimental farm. I can understand where there is an agricultural college that there would be a deficiency, but where there are purely experimental farms we should know the deficiency on each farm.

Mr. FISHER. Of course the receipts are comparatively nothing in comparison with the expenditure. The receipts are practically from sales of surplus and what is left over from the experimental work. I do not call it a deficiency ; it is the difference between the expenditure and the receipts. It is not a question of balance at all, because the expenditure has nothing whatever to do with the receipts in most cases.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it the intention of the department to establish and operate a farm in the Grimsby district or has that been considered ?

Mr. FISHER. That question has come up not infrequently. I have been asked from different sections of the country to establish other branch farms. The statute defines the number of branch farms and I would have to change the statute ; I have no authority to establish or to spend any money on any branch farms beyond the four that are already in operation. I have had a great many applications from different parts of Canada for additional branch farms, but I have never seen my way clear to acceding to those requests. A good deal the same argument might be applied in probably as many as fifteen or twenty different parts of Canada as in any one part, and if I should once extend the system I think it would be likely we would have to extend it very considerably for the reason I have just mentioned. I therefore felt it would be a very serious new departure which I have not been ready to recommend. I take it for granted that in the near future a new farm will have to be established in one of the new provinces in the west. The system as outlined in the commencement was that there should be one farm for the maritime provinces, one here in Ottawa for Ontario and Quebec, and one in each of the three divisions of the west, one in Manitoba, one in the Territories, and one in British Columbia. Now that the Territories are to be divided into two provinces I rather think that we will have to look forward to the establishment of a new farm in the province of Alberta, which would otherwise have no farm, and which certainly is large enough to justify the establishment of another branch farm. But that is a little different from the question of establishing such a station as my hon. friend alluded to, in the Niagara peninsula. That would be of a different character, for a specific purpose, just as in many other cases I have been asked to establish branch stations for particular purposes in particular localities.

Mr. BARR. Has the government taken into consideration the opening of a farm in the Temiscaming district? We are told that there is in that country millions of acres of clay. There is no part of the Dominion so little known, and consequently no place where an experimental farm would be more desirable. We have reports that that clay belt is very productive and, on the other hand, we have contrary reports; and I think it is very advisable that we should have exact information on the subject. No doubt it would be advantageous to have an experimental farm in the new provinces, but there the nature of the soil and the climate is much better known than in New Ontario. Now that railways are going into that country, large numbers of immigrants will follow, and the government should be in a position to give these immigrants reliable information. That would save a great deal of difficulty in the future, should it turn out that the climate and soil of that clay belt are not what they are represented. We believe that there are greater possibilities in that country than anybody realizes, but these possibilities can never be tested until we have there a properly directed experimental farm. I hope the government will give this suggestion most careful consideration.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would urge on the minister the necessity of investigating more closely still, not only the Niagara district, but the western peninsula. They are seriously in need of an experimental station in one of those directions for the benefit of the fruit industry. My hon. friend realizes that the fruits and other perishable products amount to a very large sum in those districts, and the experimental farm at Ottawa is not very closely in touch with those districts.

Mr. FISHER. If I were to undertake to establish a branch station of some kind in the Niagara peninsula, it would also be demanded that I should establish one in the western peninsula, and there are about twenty other places which have asked for similar stations. With regard to New Ontario, just as soon as we can obtain information to justify us in the selection of the site, I think we ought to take steps to establish some kind of branch farm in that country. I have had that in my mind, but we have hardly reached the point when that can be done satisfactorily this coming year. That country has been pretty well explored; we know the character of the soil in a general way; but until the location of the railway is absolutely fixed and we know where settlement is going, it would be a little premature to fix on any one point. Of course, if anything of that kind is done, there will have to be an additional vote. We could not carry on the present experimental farm efficiently and do extra work of that kind on the present vote. Very likely in the supplementary estimates for next year I may ask for a small amount which would enable me to take action with regard to that very matter, not only in the clay belt, but also in the northern parts of the country further west, and in the province of Quebec as well as Ontario. The new railway is going to open up a lot of new country. I believe that immigrants will pour into it during the construction of the railway, and there will be a great demand for agricultural products. If we can do anything which will help the settlers going in there, the money spent will be well spent. I have, however, not quite formulated any plan, but hope to be able to do so before the close of the session, to a certain extent, and it is possible that we might be able to extend stations to the older parts of the country, but that would mean a very considerable vote in addition for experimental purposes. Whether I could justify the asking such a vote, I am not yet in a position to say.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am very glad to hear the minister at last give reasonable consideration to the suggestion to establish another experimental farm. I would suggest that he might possibly establish experimental stations, which would not be so extensive or expensive as an experimental farm.

Mr. FISHER. Any such stations would have to be on a small scale and much more limited than an experimental farm. I would not consider myself justified in expending anything like $8,000 or $10,000 a year on such stations.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand the department has been making experiments with regard to the introduction of fruit trees into Manitoba and the Northwest. Can the minister state whether the experiments so far induce him to expect that there will be some success attained in that line in the near future? As I understand it, the kind of fruit so far attempted has been in the nature of the crab apple, and I would like to know whether the hon. minister has had any other kinds of fruits tried or not.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend is quite right. We have been doing most excellent work with regard to hybridizing apples in the hope of getting an apple tree that will produce a useful fruit and will stand the climate of our Northwest. Professor Saunders, who is an expert in these matters, takes as a basis what is known as the pyrus baccata, the wild Siberian crab, which is perfectly hardy in Siberia and in our Northwest, and has cross-fertilized that with pollen from a large number of better apple trees, with the result that, while the pyrus baccata is about the size of a small cherry, we have produced from it apples as large as the largest crabs, as large as some of the small varieties of good apples. These trees have been bearing for about four or five years in various places in the Northwest. A number of them have been placed in the hands of people who wished to try them. This was about three years back and the trees have lived and borne fruit. The experiments are still going on. We hope to make further improvements and ultimately to produce a fair-sized apple of good, fair quality which will be absolutely hardy in our Northwest Territories. I need not explain how valuable an addition this will be to the resources of the settler there, perhaps not for export or anything of the kind, but for home use. Any apple that will make jelly or jam, or that can be used in cooking will be of the greatest value to the people there who are entirely dependent, for apples for cooking purposes, upon fruit brought from a long distance, and, therefore, pretty expensive. There is no doubt in my mind, nor, I may say, in Professor Saunders' mind that, in the near future we shall be able to distribute to the people of the Northwest a large number of trees which will bear a good, useful apple for ordinary household purposes.

Mr. DANIEL. I suppose the new apples are of the nature of crab-apples and have the flavour of the crab-apple ?

Mr. FISHER. Not altogether. One parent is a good apple, though the other is the pyrus baccata. And then it is graded up by cross-fertilization. The product partakes to a certain extent of the character of the true apple, although it has also a part of the quality of the crab. I would say that at page 8 of the Experimental Farms Report for 1904, there are illustrations showing the pyrus baccata and the apples that have been produced from it.

Mr. BARR. Has the minister made experiments with any other fruit, such as plums ? If so, what have been the results?

Mr. FISHER. We have been working on the same lines with regard to plums and cherries. These experiments, while they give hope, have not yet resulted in anything positive.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I would remind the minister of the petitions sent down from the west signed by the ex-Deputy Minister of Agriculture of the Northwest Territories and others pointing out the necessity of the establishment of an experimental farm in Central or Southern Alberta and showing how the farms at Brandon and Indian Head fail to serve that section of the country. I would point out to the minister that with a country of the extent and with the variety of climate and soil of the Northwest Territories, it is impossible that all parts can be served by one experimental farm. In Southern Alberta we have a condition of soil and climate entirely different from that existing at Indian Head, where the farm is located. The petitions I have referred to were sent down last July, and at least some hope was held out to the people that the matter would receive the early attention of the department. I might say that the petition was submitted to the minister through the then representative of Alberta the present minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). In reply to the ex-Deputy Minister of Agriculture of the Northwest Territories, he says :

> Yours of July 20th to hand regarding the establishment of experimental farms with copy of memorial inclosed. I am very pleased to forward my endorsation to the minister. . . . I regret to say that the reception which the estimates of the Department of Agriculture has received at the hands of the opposition during this session is such as to discourage the minister from making any new proposals of expenditure.

Mr. FISHER. Who wrote that ?

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. It is signed 'Frank Oliver.' Has there been any opposition to such an undertaking ? I think not. I should regret if anything were to stand in the way of the establishment of an experimental farm in that part of the country where it is so much needed. I would again urge upon the minister the necessity of an early investigation that he may ascertain for himself that it is impossible to serve that part of the country by the experimental farm at Indian Head.

Mr. FISHER. This is another evidence of what I said a few minutes ago to my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong). The portion of the Northwest Territories to which my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) has referred has been asking for an experimental farm, just as the northern portion of Alberta and also the territory of Saskatchewan have been. I would not like to detain the House by going over all the different places that are asking for the same. As I have said. there are fifteen or twenty of them. It is hard to discriminate—the arguments in the case of one are about as good in the case of another.

Mr. HERRON. I would like to corroborate what the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) has said about the need of an experimental farm in Southern Alberta. The experimental farm at Indian Head is about five hundred miles away, and the climatic conditions are entirely different from those of Southern Alberta. There is as great a difference, I suppose, as between any two provinces of the Dominion. One is a country where stock runs out the year round, while the other is a purely agricultural country with a cold climate. In that western country we have long been trying to find some grass that would make permanent pasture after the land is once cultivated. We have had a great many experiments made by private parties and these experiments have been going on for twenty years, but, up to the present time without complete success. If the government could solve this problem, it would be of the greatest advantage to the western province. In view of the difference of climate condition in different parts of the western province, I think the government should seriously consider the idea of having one experimental farm in the north and one in the south.

Mr. FISHER. I may say to my hon. friend that we have been for years distributing what is called Brome grass seed, with which a number of acres have been sown in the neighbourhood of Macleod, and it has proved very successful. I think I may say that large areas have been sown successfully, and this grass has proved a boon to stockmen. It was introduced by the experimental farm staff about seventeen years ago, and has been gradually distributed until it is now obtainable all over the country. There is no difficulty in growing it in immense sections in Alberta.

Mr. HERRON. I agree with the minister in what he says about Brome grass, but it has not always been considered an excellent quality for feed.

Mr. WILLIAM JACKSON. I would suggest the desirability of additional experimental farms in the province of Ontario. This idea has not originated with me, but with the county council of the county of Elgin, of which I have been a member. They have in the county of Elgin a home for unfortunates with about 100 acres of land adjoining. It has been suggested that we turn it into a sort of experimental farm. Although I have no fault to find with the experimental farm which is near the city of Ottawa, yet as a matter of fact it is not a guide for agriculturists in the southern part of Ontario. I would suggest that something like we have in the county of Elgin be established in other counties in the province of Ontario, and that the Dominion turn them into experimental farms. In that way this government would do more to instruct farmers in each county than it is now doing from Ottawa. Most of the counties in Ontario have these homes with farms belonging to them. The county of Elgin would be willing to pay any additional expense if there were some means by which they could receive seed in larger quantities than they now receive it, as well as shrubbery of different kinds to experiment with. They might even go further, and introduce better grades of stock and poultry with which to make experiments in each county. This experimental farm in Ottawa is not located where it can fill all the requirements for an agricultural province like Ontario.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would not like to ask the minister to incur the great expense of establishing so many experimental farms as my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. William Jackson) has just suggested; that is perhaps going a little too far. But if we had one in the western part of Ontario and another in the eastern part, dealing with the products that are raised in those districts, I am sure they would be vastly more beneficial to the people than a matter of $100,000. I think the minister will find members on this side of the house ready to assist in passing estimates that will be of advantage to the farming industry of our country.

Mr. INGRAM. At one of our meetings of our Agriculture Committee I advocated the distribution of grain in larger quantities so as to meet the idea expressed by my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. William Jackson). I found that grain is distributed in such small quantities that the farmers do not think it worth while to experiment with it.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I find on page 487 of the Experimental Farm report that the minister is paying $3,377 in wages for taking care of cattle and stock, including the salary of the herdsman. That seems to be a large amount.

Mr. FISHER. That includes the salary of the herdsman who has entire charge of the barns, an experienced and successful man. He gets this year, I think, $650. That includes the men who have charge of the barns, piggeries, sheep pens and horse stables.

Mr. WILSON. Can the hon. minister tell us how many there are and the wages paid at the different places?

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that these men get from $40 to $45 per month. I think there are six of them.

Mr. WILSON. May I ask the hon. minister to give us a statement of the stock that is kept at the central and other experimental farms?

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman will find at page 77 of the report of the Central Experimental Farm the live stock inventories. On the 30th June, 1904, there were 19 horses, 79 cows, bulls and heifers, 22 steers, 66 sheep and 260 swine. On page 78 there is a statement of the cost of labour in connection with the care of horses, cattle, sheep and swine, as follows :

Herdsman..	$ 660 00
Two men at $480..	960 00
Three men at $432	1,296 00
Extra help, teaming, &c..	461 40
	3,377 40

In the report of the branch farms the same kind of information appears.

Mr. WILSON. Are the same kinds of experiments carried on at all the farms in reference to cattle ?

Mr. FISHER. Not altogether. At Agassiz there is very little stock yet and very little experimental work being carried on in regard to stock. That farm is chiefly devoted to experiments in fruit culture ; and while there is some stock kept, there is not a very large amount spent for that purpose. At Indian Head there is a certain amount of stock kept, chiefly Shorthorns ; and at Brandon there are some dairy cattle and Shorthorns kept. At the Central Experimental Farm we have a large dairy, with thoroughbred and grade cows, and we raise young stock for the purpose of replenishing the herd.

Mr. WILSON. Perhaps the hon. minister, when he is telling us about the different farms, will tell us whether these cattle are kept for dairy purposes or for feeding, and will give us the particulars in regard to them.

Mr. FISHER. Of course, I could go into the details of these experiments by looking up the report of each farm.

Mr. WILSON. Take up the one in Nova Scotia, for instance.

Mr. FISHER. The farm in Nova Scotia is largely a dairy farm. At the same time we do feed some beef animals there every winter, but the farm is chiefly devoted to dairying.

Mr. WILSON. How many cattle have you ?

Mr. FISHER. From 20 to 25 cows are milked there, and then we get some young stock to replace the animals in the dairy herd. In doing that, as some of these animals are thoroughbred, we also raise their bull calves and sell them for breeding purposes to the farmers of the province.

Mr. WILSON. When you get good stock, do you not raise the heifer calves, too ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes ; we raise the heifers for the purpose of replenishing our own herd, although we sometimes sell heifers, too. We sell the bulls to the farmers at prices which are generally well within the reach of the ordinary farmers of the district for the improvement of their stock. We also feed a certain number of steers every year at the Nappan farm.

Mr. BARR. Do you purchase or raise these steers ?

Mr. FISHER. As a general rule, we buy them in the fall.

Mr. BARR. Do you purchase these animals that you raise for breeding purposes ?

Mr. FISHER. A few years ago I went to England and bought quite a little importation. We have bought a few pigs and sheep since, but no cattle have been imported for four years. We made an importation of 27 head of thoroughbred animals at that time. We sometimes buy thoroughbreds in this country, although, as a general rule, we are able to keep our herds replenished. At Nappan and at the experimental farm here we have been increasing the number of thoroughbreds and decreasing the number of grade stock. We have also bought a small herd of French Canadian cows to test them along with the others ; and, of course, we have bought these in the province of Quebec.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I notice that at the Central Experimental Farm $44,456.91 has been expended for wages and supplies. Are tenders asked for these supplies ?

Mr. FISHER. No ; I do not think so. These supplies are small items, as a general rule, and we buy them on the market at the market price, whatever it may be.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I notice that certain firms appear very frequently in the list.

Mr. FISHER. We try to buy them from the best firms.

Mr. BARR. I notice in connection with each one of these farms a very large item for the services of veterinaries. Have you had much disease amongst these cattle ? For instance, here is the sum of $205 for the Central Experimental Farm for drugs, &c.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think that is a very large charge for 100 head of cattle and 20 horses.

Mr. BARR. If the farmers throughout the country paid at that rate for veterinary services and also for wages, they would find that they would be very much in debt at the end of the year.

Mr. FISHER. That is one item, I am sorry to say, most of the farmers do not pay. It is for the testing of cattle. We test our cattle at the end of every year, and we have to pay a veterinary for doing it. This probably accounts for the greater part of this expenditure at the Central Experimental Farm.

Mr. WILSON. I see an item of $480 for feed for stock. Was that raised on the farm and just credited ?

Mr. FISHER. At Nappan we did not raise nearly enough grain to feed the stock, and I am sorry to say that last year the hay and straw crop were short.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How large is the farm ?

Mr. FISHER. We have a considerable area of land, but not a large amount cultivated.

Mr. BARR. Is it poor land ?

Mr. FISHER. Very poor land.

Mr. DANIEL. I thought you had marsh land there.

Mr. FISHER. We have about 50 acres of marsh land, but two years ago the dyke broke and it has yielded very little since. For the last two years the hay crop from the marsh was less than half the ordinary crop.

Mr. DANIEL. I always understood the land was good round there.

Mr. FISHER. Our marsh land is very good but the other is poor.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It is not a good example to farmers to keep more stock than you can feed from the land. That would be a poor experiment to follow.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. You have to have the animals there to show what they are like.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It is not much use to have them if you cannot produce enough to feed them.

Mr. FISHER. The hay crop all through Nova Scotia was very short last year.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The ordinary farmer would make arrangements to produce a substitute if he thought the hay crop was likely to be short.

Mr. FISHER. The ensilage and the root crop were also short.

Mr. BARR. You bought $115 worth of fertilizers for the Brandon farm, is it usual for farmers to have to buy manure on a farm of that size ?

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. Yes, if they want to get the best results.

Mr. P. H. McKENZIE. I may say that we farmers in Ontario often find we cannot grow enough feed for our stock and we find it profitable to buy something in addition to what we grow.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. In time of the failure of the crops ?

Mr. P. H. McKENZIE. Not always in time of failure. We frequently buy grain to feed our stock in addition to what we produce.

Mr. BARR. Is that usual ?

Mr. P. H. McKENZIE. We find it profitable or we would not do it.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The ordinary farmer tries to raise grain enough to feed his stock and sometimes he has more than enough for that purpose. I do not know where they would get money to buy feed if they could not raise it on their own farms.

Mr. P. H. McKENZIE. Some of the most successful farmers in the old country buy their stock and their feed too.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That is not regular farming ; it is speculating.

Mr. P. H. McKENZIE. We farmers like to speculate a little too.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I am sorry the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane), is not here because this is a particular hobby of his and he would be able to describe that kind of farming in better language than I can.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister explain what experiments are being carried on at these different farms ? Have we been branching out into new lines, and if so, what new lines ?

Mr. FISHER. In a general way I may say we are testing different varieties of grain and fruit and corn ; first in experimental plots and then in large areas. At the Central farm especially we have tested different methods of cultivating soil, different periods of ploughing, ploughing immediately the crop is out and sometimes later——

Mr. SPROULE. Do you give data of all these in the report ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. We have our orchard experiments at the different farms and at Indian Head and some other farms we are experimenting with trees and shrubs, and with fruit specially in British Columbia. We have 65 acres of an arboretum at Ottawa in which we have practically every known Canadian tree or shrub that will grow in this climate. We have a variety of small fruits and vegetables in connection with the orchard. Mr. Saunders just reminds me that we have been studying very carefully for some time the inoculation of the soil and the seed of clovers. The growing of clover is one of the most crucial agricultural questions, and the successful growing of clover is I may say almost a basis of successful farming in most provinces. We have made careful investigation by the chemist as well as by the outside men on the farm as to what can be done to improve clover culture, and lately we have been inoculating, as it is called, the soil and the seed and the results have been on the whole very satisfactory. We have been experimenting also as to whether the crop succeeding a clover crop was better than a crop succeeding other crops than clover, or where other grasses were sown in the place of clover. These are very important experiments and the results have been very extraordinary, as I think I might call them, and very much to the credit of the clover crop. In regard to fruits we are trying different varieties of apples, plums and cherries, but we do not try pears here; we have not been successful with pears at Ottawa. At Nappan we have tried them as well as apples to a certain extent, and in British Columbia of course to a large extent. We try varieties of small fruit, strawberries, raspberries, black currants, &c., and we also try different methods of culture, the results of which are published in bulletins. We experiment a good deal with fruit at Nappan and Agassiz but very little at Brandon and Indian Head although there we are doing a good deal in the way of propagating hybrids which it is hoped will supply the Northwest with an apple good for household purposes.

I have been explaining what might be called the outdoor work. Apart from that we have the indoor experimental work in the way of feeding and dealing with animals. We have dairy cows here and at Nappan, a few at Brandon and very few at Indian Head, and just enough at Agassiz to supply the farm with milk, not really enough for experimental purposes at all. At Nappan, here and at Brandon and Indian Head we every year fatten some animals, experimenting with the different methods of fattening, different feeds and with animals of different ages. The most exhaustive of these experiments are carried on here because practically the feeding of an animal indoors is much the same wherever the feeding is done. When it comes to outdoor work it is a little different. The results of these experiments serve practically for live stock men all over the country to a great extent.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in understanding that you are not carrying on any experimental work in regard to butter and cheese on the farm?

Mr. FISHER. Not as to the making of it. We are experimenting all the time in regard to the production of milk, but as far as the making of butter and cheese is concerned we make no experiments here at all. We make up the milk at the Central Experimental Farm into butter and the same is done at Nappan. At Brandon and Indian Head there is just enough to supply the farm hands and people like that to whom it is sold, but there is not a dairy kept there for ordinary purposes, nor is there at Agassiz. Then of course we do experimental work in the fattening of pigs and sheep as well as cattle and also some experimental work here at Ottawa in regard to the feeding of farm horses so as to try and develop some method of feeding which will be more economical than the ordinary method of feeding farm horses on Canadian farms.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to ask the minister how many years the present experimental farms have been in operation and whether it would not be possible to expend less money on some of these outlying stations and thereby be able to establish others without a very great deal of extra expense?

Mr. FISHER. The farms have been established since 1886, about 17 years; this is the 18th season I think. My hon. friend suggests that a good deal less money might be spent on these branch farms. The establishment of course was made years ago, and I have not seen my way at all clear to reduce it at any of the farms. The expenditure is increasing a little all the time owing to the increase in the rate of wages and increases of salary to men who have been a long time in the service. There has also been some little increase in the staff because we have been doing a little more work at each farm. We have also an immense amount of correspondence at all the branch farms as well as at the Central Farm which has to be handled and dealt with. The distribution of seed grain involves a very large expenditure which is constantly increasing. Then we have the sending out of the bulletins, &c., which costs a great deal and is constantly increasing.

Mr. INGRAM. The circulation of the bulletins in connection with these experiments is very limited. I know I have had some inquiries about this and I drew the attention, I think, of Professor Shutt to this matter and got a copy of the experiment, but I think the bulletins ought to be circulated more freely and more fairly than they are.

Mr. FISHER. We have now a mailing list of over 60,000 and every bulletin is sent to 60,000 people the moment it is published and any farmer or any one else in the country who applies, has his name put on the mailing list perfectly freely, willingly and gladly.

Mr. WILSON. Is the evidence taken before the Agriculture Committee sent out on the mailing list?

Mr. FISHER. No, that evidence goes to the members of parliament and the department have nothing whatever to do with it, except that each officer who gives evidence is granted the favour of having 500 copies for his own personal distribution to his friends or anybody who applies.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot help feeling that since it is eighteen years since these stations were established, and since they have not grown very materially in that time, the necessity of establishing new stations, at least small stations, in different parts of our country is certainly a matter that deserves the serious consideration of the hon. minister.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I notice large amounts at the various farms are expended for the purchase of implements, tools, &c. I would like to know if these are bought by open competition or on what system the orders are placed. There is no information on that subject.

Mr. FISHER. They are placed on the judgment of the officers as to where they can get them best, as a general rule. Not infrequently, however, people send in implements and ask us to try them and then they send the bill afterwards and expect us to pay.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Are they always accepted in that way.

Mr. FISHER. If we use them we cannot very well refuse sometimes.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. If we send a few from Brantford, I hope they will be accepted in the same way.

Mr. FISHER. Send us good ones and we will use them.

Mr. BLAND. Would the minister say whether the live stock on the government farm pays or not? I would also like to know whether he proposes to experiment in the breeding of horses. Some time ago an imperial army officer was over here to see whether he could get in this country different classes of horses required for the British army, including horses for cavalry and artillery. For serviceable horses to suit the different branches he would pay from $125 to $150. At present we can breed light horses, but many of them do not come up to the standard required for fancy horses. When the South African war broke out this country was flooded with horses for which there was no demand, but we shipped them over to South Africa. If the government would establish a remount depot here and give the farmers an idea of the kind of horses to breed, and if the government would bring in sires for use by the farmers in improving their stock, that would be a benefit to the agricultural community all over the Dominion.

Mr. FISHER. The breeding of military horses is a matter entirely outside the experimental farm. I am glad to know there are in Canada some officers seeing what they can do in the way of purchasing horses for the War Office, but that is a matter which could not be handled in connection with experimental farms. There are other ways in which it could be dealt with more satisfactorily. The hon. gentleman asked if the live stock of the farm paid. If he will look at page 78 of the report he will find a full statement. The central farm showed a profit of $1,000 last year. The year before it was a little higher.

Mr. SPROULE. How do you get at the increased value of animals in your account?

Mr. FISHER. An inventory is taken on the 1st July each year and the valuations are made by the superintendent, Mr. Drysdale, who takes the market price.

Mr. HENDERSON. Certain stock is kept for feeding purposes and others for breeding purposes. Is the hon. gentleman able to show that the keeping of stock in the farm can be done at a profit, leaving outside altogether the profits that may be made by importing and selling cattle for breeding purposes?

Mr. FISHER. In general terms, without exception, we have bought steers in the fall, fed them through the winter, and sold them in the spring for more than they cost including cost of feed.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the hon. gentleman calculated the labour and then given credit for the manure?

Mr FISHER. I am informed that a careful estimate has been made of the value of the manure, and an accurate account kept of the labour, and taking those into account the balance is still more in favour of the animals. In a rough way manure is considered to pay for the care, but an absolute careful account has been gone into and the result has been still better than when the rough way was taken.

Mr. BLAND. Would it be a fair margin to create a profit after the winter's feeding?

Mr. FISHER. Of course that varies very much according to the prices at the time of the sale. We just sold a few the other day at the rate of six cents a pound. Eight weeks ago we sold at five cents a pound. We have still more to sell and do not know what we will get. Those cost all around 4·25 cents in the fall.

Mr. BLAND. Some years, I suppose, the experimental farm, like a private individual, makes no profit on the stock it feeds? I have bought and sold at all prices. Sometimes, there has been a balance on the wrong side.

Mr. FISHER. I have done that myself. It is true of the experimental farm also. In 1903, we did not make any profit, but I think that is the only year since I have had charge in which a profit was not made.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice by this report that the farm fed 457 head of stock, and returns amounted to a total of $11,092.96. The cost of everything charged up against these animals makes a total of $10,020.23, leaving a balance of $1,072.73, which is counted as profit. But the farm has credited itself with 1,100 tons of manure at $1 per ton. If it did not credit itself with this item, it would come about $28 short.

Mr. FISHER. Of course, all the labour is charged. And, if we have 1,100 tons of manure over and above everything charged in connection with the feeding of the animals and had that put on the land in the spring, I think it would be fairly profitable.

Mr. SPROULE. But the farmer who would allow himself $1 per load for manure would allow himself a pretty good figure. If the operations of the ordinary farmer did not come out better than that, I shoult imagine he was not making farming a great success. I do not wish to be understood as saying that the results of an experimental farm can be judged like those of an ordinary farm, because a great deal of labour must be devoted to carrying on experiments which give no direct return.

Mr. FISHER. It must be remembered also in the feeding of this stock he charged all the grain and hay fed to the animals at market prices, and not at what they cost. Moreover it was charged at what was harvested and not at what was actually fed, though there is considerable difference. If a man can take a barnful of animals and through them get for all he raises on his farm full market prices as if he had sold them off his farm, and has also 1,100 loads of manure at the end of the winter, he has done a pretty profitable winter's work upon his farm.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me pretty much like Mark Twain's experience in raising pork. He bought a lot of pigs, and fed them on corn. When the proper time came to sell and he went to learn the price of pork, he found that he would come out all right, because he could get as much for the pork as he had paid for the pigs. He was reminded that he was not getting anything for the corn. But he replied that he never was accustomed to charge for corn and besides he had the excitement of raising the pigs.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. Exactly—there was the educational experience. You can't expect to make money on an experimental farm.

Mr. CHRISTIE. The experimental farm is not a place to make money but a place to make experiments. I think that one experiment that should be made is to learn what we should sow after different kinds of grain. Another would be to experiment with different breeds of cattle to see which can be best fed at a profit—take Herefords, Polled Angus and other breeds, feed them, charge the cost of labour and feed, and find out which breed yields the best profit. I have fed some kinds of cattle and lost money, while on others I have had a good profit. The experimental farm does its work and earns a profit if it helps the farmers to a knowledge of what is best to do on their farms. The object is to enable the farmers to make money on their own land. If the experiments are carried out properly, even though they cost money, the country will get the benefit in the end.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad to hear the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Christie) speak as he does. I have always contended that the profit made out of the experimental farm was the information given to the farmers all over the country and not in what is sold. The experiments to which the hon. gentleman refers have been made, to a certain extent. Some years ago experiments were made with feeding steers of different breeds, Polled Angus, Shorthorns, and, I think, Herefords. The hon. gentleman will find the result in the report. At the experimental farm here we have been feeding almost entirely Shorthorn grades and trying experiments rather in the character of the feed than in the character of the animals. But the experiment to which the hon gentleman (Mr. Christie) refers is an important one and one which we will have to take up again sometime. I know that the information supplied as to different experiments carried on in these farms has been very helpful to the farmers in their work. Without going into details, I may mention again the experiment concerning clover of which I spoke. There was also the very careful investigation made six or seven years ago into the question of soft pork which showed clearly how bacon hogs should be fed in this country. Within the last few years we have heard practically nothing of soft pork in the export bacon trade of Canada, and I have no doubt that the results of the experiments of that time contributed very largely to this important change in our methods. Then the experiments undertaken in regard to Brome grass, were another triumph of the experimental farms and one of enormous value to the Northwest. There are many others which I might mention. These things show no results so far as the work on the farm is concerned, but they show great results in the country.

Mr. SPROULE. Either the minister misunderstood me or else he has a sensitiveness which many would hardly have been ready to credit him with. I was not dealing with the general experiments, but with the feeding of the animals on the farm. What is the object of this feeding? I take it that the object is to show how animals can be fed at a profit. If the experiment is a success, we naturally look for a return. The result with all the animals is a return of $9,992.96. Against this expenditure are charged for meal, hay, straw, cost of labour and so on. The results do not show very much profit made out of the stock, because the farm is obliged to credit itself with 1,100 tons of manure at $1 a ton which would be regarded by the ordinary farmer as a very big price. If farmers were paying 50 cents a load for manure they would think they were paying a pretty good price, not to speak of paying $1 a load. Now may you not have put these things too high to make up the account and bring it out on the right side? I take it that the aim is to show the farmers that the things he is doing from year to year can be done in a better way so as to bring in a better return. But I respectfully submit that with reference to stock this does not show a very profitable return. In saying that, I make due allowance for the fact that a great deal of labour must be put into the care of stock, into measuring and weighing the grain every day, and that increases the expense of keeping the stock.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. The men that are employed have to be first-class men in order to do their work accurately.

Mr. BLAIN. The other day in the Agriculture Committee the question was brought up of raising turkeys, geese and ducks on the experimental farm, and a resolution was unanimously passed requesting the minister to look into that question and see if it would not be in the interest of the farmers to set aside some portion of the farm for the raising of these fowl. A small portion of the farm is already set aside for raising poultry, and the bulletins that have been sent out to the farmers containing suggestions with reference to breeds of poultry have been very valuable. I am of the opinion that the experimental farm should undertake the raising of turkeys, geese and ducks. I do not think anything is produced on the farm that brings in a better revenue than these fowl. It is well known that the home market is a very valuable one, and the export market is growing from year to year. Farmers are exporting large quantities of turkeys from the central part of Ontario. The industry is so important that I think the authorities of the experimental farm might well pay some attention to it.

Mr. FISHER. I agree with my hon. friend that the raising of turkeys and ducks has not received the attention it deserves, in view of the importance that industry has attained, both in the home market and in the export market. As to ducks, I think there is now a good market for them. The raising of ducks is a specialty. I agree that the time has come when the experimental farm might undertake investigations in that line.

Mr. INGRAM. I am glad to hear the minister say that he proposes to go into the experiment of raising ducks and turkeys. In the section of the country I come from the raising of turkeys is a very important industry. Mr. Gilbert the other day gave us some information about the disease called 'blackhead' that attacks turkeys. That information would be useful to those who are engaged in raising turkeys.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. It might be difficult to conduct an experiment on a large scale in the raising of turkeys, for the reason that they are much given to wandering about. But there are no domestic animals we have that are as profitable as turkeys. After a turkey is three or five weeks old he begins to wander over the fields and through the shrubbery, but in doing so he performs a very useful work in destroying insects, grasshoppers and crickets, which are injurious to our crops. While it might not be a very easy job to raise turkeys profitably on experimental farms, yet the authorities might throw out some ideas which would be useful to those engaged in that industry. A turkey is a very profitable fowl to raise. There is an unlimited demand for this fowl in the United States and in Great Britain. But up to the present we have received no instructions from the experimental stations as to the best mode of putting them on the market. In some instances they are shipped just with their necks broken; in other cases the feathers are removed from fowl before shipping. I think the experimental stations should ascertain the best mode of putting that product of the Canadian farm on the foreign market.

Mr. SPROULE. To what extent are you distributing seed grain now?

Mr. FISHER. We sent out this spring 38,000 packages. We still continue the custom of sending out packages only to those who make request for the seed grain.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that you have a mailing list of 60,000 that you supply from the farm. When and how is that list revised?

Mr. FISHER. It is being revised all the time. We ask the postmasters to return to us anything that is not asked for. And we do get back a certain number. The names of the persons to whom these are addressed are struck off the list. Of course, we are always adding to the list as a result of the request of people to be put on the list. Hon. gentlemen in the House have frequently asked me for the list of those in their counties who were receiving it, and very frequently they have gone over the list and they have been able to say that so-and-so was dead or so-and-so had removed, and we struck off those names. We add any other names that members ask us to add. I have not called upon members to do that regularly, but those who take an interest in it do so as a rule, and we are always glad of their assistance.

Mr. SPROULE. That was the course followed years ago, but, as far as I can remember, there has not been a list submitted to us for revision for many years. I know that when I went over the list for my own county I found that there were names of many men on the list who were dead or who had moved away, and it was to my mind perhaps not entirely a waste of literature because it might fall into some one's hands——

Mr. FISHER. It was since the time of that revision that we asked the postmasters to return any unasked for mail and it has made a great difference.

Mr. SPROULE. Do I understand that the postmasters are instructed to return this literature?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, we ask them to do this. The request is printed on every envelope.

Mr. SPROULE. That would make an improvement, no doubt.

Mr. FISHER. It made a great change.

Mr. SPROULE. I would suggest that from time to time these lists be submitted to members of parliament who can look over them, revise them and perhaps add other names, because there are always new men coming to the front. This would make the list a more valuable one to the public.

Mr. FISHER. If members would take the trouble to do it we would be very glad to submit the list to them.

Mr. SPROULE. I have not been to the Central farm for the last year or two, but I would like to inquire if there have been any buildings put up lately or if there are any in contemplation?

Mr. FISHER. We have added one or two small outside buildings for poultry, costing $100 or something like that, but no other buildings.

Mr. SPROULE. It occurred to me when visiting the farm that it would be very desirable, especially when the weather was inclement, to have some place where the people could have shelter and where they could sit down, if they had their baskets along with them, and take a meal. I remember being out one day when it was raining, and the only places that the crowd of people, including men and women, could get into were the barns, stables and sheds. It occurred to me that we might be able to put up some cheap building that people could get into and have a little comfort and at the same time shelter from the inclemency of the weather.

Mr. FISHER. It is evident the hon. gentleman has not been there for some time, because five years ago, when we had to rearrange and rebuild the root cellar, we built over it an implement shed and above that again we provided a large open space with tables where excursionists can arrange for having their lunches and where people can go in large numbers when it is raining. There is room for several hundred people. In connection with the dairy building we have quite a large room, with conveniences where ladies can go. From 50 to 100 can get in there. Besides that there are the farm offices, laboratory and greenhouse where people can go.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not at the farm last year or this year, but previously I had been going over the farm every year, and I did not suppose there was much change. It occurred to me that it would be desirable to have such a building. If it has been provided I am glad to know it. It is not intended out of this vote, of course, to do any extensive building?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. If there were any buildings to be erected they would be provided for by another vote?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, out of the vote of the Public Works Department.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that for some time there have been experiments carried on in regard to fruit by hybridizing and otherwise. The present director, I know, has conducted a good deal of work in that line. We have not had any information in regard to his success.

Mr. FISHER. I gave a full explanation before my hon. friend came in to-night.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought I was only out a few minutes and that I would not miss very much.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) told me last night that I was learning better and I have been giving my explanations more concisely

Mr. SPROULE. I want to merely ask in regard to these experiments——

Mr. FISHER. If my hon. friend will examine the report he will find a complete statement of these experiments with pictures of the fruits we have produced.

Mr. SPROULE. I might go home and take the report with me and thus save asking any questions on the floor at all. But we shall continue to ask questions.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but it was because I had already given the explanation to the committee that I made that suggestion to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to know if the director's experiments have been the same as those of that man in California, and if he has been able to demonstrate that we are able to cultivate plums without stones and apples without seeds?

Mr. FISHER. No, we have been trying to do more practical work. We have been trying to produce apples as good as other apples, but we have not tried to produce seedless apples or seedless plums.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to inquire from the leader of the House what the government intend taking up to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think we will, if the House consents, proceed with supply, and I would be glad if hon gentlemen would give their attention to the estimates for the current year which I brought down to-night. The notice is short, but some of the departments are in need of money very badly and if there is anything which is not controversial we will endeavour to obtain the assent of the committee to these estimates to-morrow. Of course, if they are objected to they cannot go through.

Mr. SPROULE. That is for the civil service ?

Mr. FIELDING. These estimates are for the current year. If there is anything that is controversial we cannot proceed. Some of the services in connection with the House are out of money and unless we are enabled to secure an early vote it may be embarrassing to some of our officers.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, May 18, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

OPINION OF MONSEIGNEUR LEGAL.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE asked :

1. Is the government, or any of the ministers, aware of the following paragraph that appears every day in 'Le Canada,' of Montreal, under the heading : 'The Opinion of Monseigneur Légal.' 'We are satisfied with the system of education that we have, and we hope that it will be left to us' ?

2. Are these words an extract from any document of which the government or any of the ministers has a knowledge ?

3. If so, has the government or the minister who knows of that document any objection to communicate to the House the entire document in question ?

Mr. SPROULE.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The ministers, like all others who read 'Le Canada,' have seen the sentence which is quoted in the question. The words so quoted are not an extract from any document of which the government or any of the ministers have a knowledge. I may say to my hon. friend that Monseigneur Legal has not written to the government on this question so far as I know.

SALVATION ARMY—MR. RIDER HAGGARD'S REPORT.

Mr. URIAH WILSON asked :

1. Has the government received a copy of the report made by Mr. H. Rider Haggard to the imperial government respecting the working of the Salvation Army colonies in the United States ?

2. If so, will the government leave a copy of said report on the table of the House at an early date ?

3. If not, has the government any reports by its own officers of the operation of these colonies, and will they be presented to parliament ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The government has not received a copy of Mr. H. Rider Haggard's report, and has no reports of its own officers respecting the workings of the Salvation Army colonies in the United States.

CHILD IMMIGRANTS FROM ENGLISH WORKHOUSES.

Mr. URIAH WILSON asked :

1. Has the government, or any official thereof, had a conference with Mr. Neill, an English Poor Law Guardian, with reference to the migration to Canada of selected children from English workhouses ?

2. What is the nature of the proposal, if any, that Mr. Neill made ?

3. What answer was given by the government or its officials ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. Neill is in this country gathering information as to the progress of children emigrated from Great Britain by boards of guardians, and has not made any proposal to the government or its officials.

SUPPLY—PROHIBITION OF IMPORTATIONS INTO THE STATE OF NEW YORK OF FISH CAUGHT IN MISSISQUOI BAY.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. Johns and Iberville). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before this motion is put, I wish to draw the attention of the House and the government to a matter of some moment. The legislature of the state of New York has just adopted an Act prohibiting the importation into that state of fish caught in Missisquoi bay and the Richelieu river.

According to United States newspapers that Act was passed in retaliation against the Dominion government, the latter having thought proper to allow fishing in Pike river—viz., in that part of Lake Champlain which belongs to us—against the will of the United States government. That Act is such as to cause serious loss to fishermen in the district which I represent, and wherein the fishing industry is quite large. That trade has been established for quite a while, and our fish are sold largely on the New York markets. The matter is of interest, not only to fishermen in my constituency, but to the country at large. The United States government has adopted this vexatious law against the province of Quebec because the Canadian government would not comply with its request.

I shall not undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, what our government should do under the circumstances. It seems as if negotiations would not be of much avail; but there is surely some remedy at hand. The suggestion of people in my district is that tolls should be exacted as formerly on the Chambly canal. Traffic over that canal is carried on in United States bottoms. According to the Trade and Commerce returns, river boats in that part of the country are almost wholly controlled by people from the United States. The tonnage of exports in 1904 was as follows:—United States boats, 82,000 tons; Canadian boats, 10,000 tons. The tolls on the Chambly canal used entirely by United States boats, amounted to $24,000 yearly during the period tolls were levied on this canal. The exports of fish by the St. Johns farmers and fishermen average $23,736 yearly. Should we decide to exact tolls as we did formerly on the Chambly canal, we would thereby reach the shipping interests of the state of New York and be compensated for the loss resulting from that prohibitory law, the outcome of which will be to ruin that trade. Besides, that canal being used mainly by United States boats, it seems only reasonable that we should resume exacting the tolls which were levied formerly.

In order, Sir, to give you an idea of the loss inflicted on us by the prohibition of this trade, I may be permitted to read to the House an extract from a letter written by Mr. Pierce, agent of the American Express Company, who refuses to reopen the agencies of that company in the St. Johns district, on the ground that the trade with the United States will not in the future be of sufficient importance to warrant the carrying on of the business. I quote his own words:

> I beg to say that, after looking into this matter very carefully, I do not see how we can consistently reopen the offices at Clarenceville, Henriville and Sabrevois as there is not sufficient business to warrant the expense. The new law which has recently been passed in New York State prohibiting the importation of fish from the province of Quebec makes the prospect less favourable than it otherwise would be, as this fish business would constitute the larger portion of the revenue which we might hope to obtain providing we reopened the offices.

I trust that the government will at once take up this matter. It is a mere act of retaliation against us, an act which has no justification in itself, and which will surely be regarded in that light, not only by the people of the district I represent, but by the government as well.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). (Translation.) This is not a new question. It has come up in this House and before the people several times within the last few years. The Department of Marine and Fisheries has done all in its power to bring about a friendly settlement with our neighbours. However, we have not succeeded in concluding a satisfactory agreement. We had, a few years ago, in 1901 or 1902, I believe, made arrangements whereby Canadian fishermen were debarred from using nets in Missisquoi bay. On the other hand, it was understood that United States fishermen would be prevented from fishing on the remainder of Lake Champlain. It has often been the case, as shown by our past experience, that while we are expected to carry out our part of the agreement, United States people do not carry out their own pledges. Although Canadians were prohibited from fishing in their own waters, no watch was kept on the other side of the line, and United States fishermen were using nets almost openly and at will. While we conformed to the law in Canadian waters, they did not conform to it within their territory. Subsequently, perceiving that fish were diminishing in numbers in the waters of Lake Champlain, United States authorities took up the matter once more and requested the Department of Marine and Fisheries to re-enact the ordinance passed in this connection in 1900, as the misdeeds I have just referred to had induced us to repeal it as regards fishing in the Bay of Missisquoi.

These misunderstandings have given rise to a good deal of discussion and have induced our neighbours to renew their efforts towards bringing about an understanding with us on that point. We answered that this was not the only question awaiting settlement; that there were many others. For instance, there is the question of the Pacific coast fisheries, which is of much greater moment than this, and concerning which we are seeking to bring about an agreement with the authorities of the state of Washington, with a view to putting a stop to the destruction of salmon in Puget Sound and in the Fraser river. And we informed the United States authorities that if they would agree with us to appoint a joint commission for the purpose of considering all these controverted questions, all these difficulties which spring up in Canadian and frontier waters we would willingly co-operate with them in taking the necessary steps for the protection of the fisheries belonging to both countries. Of course, we are all well aware that in the neighbouring republic fisheries are left under the control of the respective states. There are seven of these interested in fishing. The President of the United States is in favour of appointing such a commission, but negotiations have fallen through.

I agree with my hon. friend from St. Johns and Iberville that the question is one of exceeding interest for his constituents; but, for the time being, I do not think it possible to remedy matters, except by reopening negotiations between the two countries. However, I have not lost all hope of attaining that object, seeing that the main issue, that concerning the fisheries of the Pacific coast, is one of interest, not only to the state of Washington, but, in a large measure, to the United States trade as a whole. As regards any other step which might be taken, the question is rather a difficult one just now; but the Department of Marine and Fisheries has not given up the idea of resorting once more to negotiations.

My hon. friend suggested the re-enactment of tolls on the Chambly canal. I am not sufficiently well posted on the question to give an opinion off-hand; but I am under the impression that such a step would not be productive of good results. I think that by means of diplomacy an understanding may be brought about with our neighbours, which will result in the passing of regulations satisfactory to both people.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, as these difficulties have been in existence for some time past, I think the House is entitled to know whether there has been an interchange of correspondence between the Dominion government and the United States authorities on the subject, and of what character have been the negotiations carried on between such authorities and Canada. There must have been an interchange of correspondence, there must be records and memos on file in the department, and I think the hon. minister would be meeting the wishes of the House by having this correspondence brought down.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. (Translation.) I may inform my hon. friend that when the supplementary estimates for fisheries are laid before the House, I shall be in a position to give all the information he wishes for, and to bring down papers which will shed new light on thet question.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) I also am of opinion that we would obtain more through diplomacy than by taking the means suggested by the hon. member for St. Johns, although the House should be grateful to him for the information he supplied as to the effect of such a measure. Our trade with the United States is extensive; we are all interested in it; and its profits are shared in, not only by the constituents of the hon. gentleman, but by those of other counties as well in the vicinity of Montreal. I am not sure that by exacting tolls on the trade carried on with our neighbours, as suggested by the hon. gentleman from St. Johns, we would be bettering the condition of things. More would be obtained through negotiations, provided they are followed up as they should be. The government may prove their watchfulness by laying before the House the correspondence, which will show what negotiations have been carried on with a view to settling the difficulty. It is contended that United States authorities were not the first to fail carrying out the agreement. The papers which I wish to have brought down would put things in their true light.

The following newspaper clipping, containing an item sent from Albany to the Montreal 'Star,' has been handed to me:

> Albany, April 3.—Confiscation of all fish caught in Missisquoi bay, Lake Champlain, if shipped into this state, is planned in the Bill introduced Friday by Assemblyman Knapp of Clinton county. This is proposed in retaliation against Canada, that government refusing to prohibit the use of nets in Missisquoi bay. The Bill was advanced to third reading, and introduced to-day in the Senate.
> Ninety-five per cent of perch, pike and bass of Lake Champlain are hatched in Missisquoi bay and at this season fish are running in large numbers. Until recently Canada issued licenses to fifteen men in Canada, who were able to take out fish valued at $30,000 a year.

According to the above item, dated, it is true, April 3rd, it does not seem to be such a foregone conclusion that we are not to blame in the matter, or that our government has not been neglectful of its duty. Under the circumstances, it seems doubly necessary that we should have access to the correspondence carried on, and that we should know where we are at concerning this disastrous state of things, for it is a disastrous state of things for parties concerned.

THESSALON, ONT., POSTMASTER.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). Mr. Speaker, I desire to draw the attention of the House, and particularly of the Postmaster General, to certain irregularities which have occurred in connection with the post office at Thessalon—irregularities of so gross a nature that if the facts which I have to present to the House remain uncontradicted, as I believe they will be, the House will be seized of one of the most notorious transactions that have ever characterized this government or any other government. I refer to the subject of questions which were asked in the House yesterday and the replies of the hon. Postmaster General thereto. The hon. Postmaster General was asked who was the postmaster at Thessalon, and he stated that the postmaster at Thessalon to-day is one J. B. Dobey. Then he was asked as to why the former postmaster whom J. B. Dobey succeeded had vacated the office, and the hon. gentleman stated that he chose to resign. When asked if that were all, the hon. gentleman said—I did not hear him say it, but read it for the first time in 'Hansard' this morning—that there was a reason for the resignation of the gentleman who was succeeded by J. B. Dobey. When I inform the House that the former postmaster at Thessalon and the gentleman who was appointed by the hon. Postmaster General on the 16th of February of this year to succeed him are one and the same person, it will be seen that the matter is so extraordinary that it demands some explanation from the government. The hon. Postmaster General, in his answers to the questions of yesterday, stated that this postmaster resigned on the 21st of May, 1904, and was reappointed on the 16th of February, 1905. Now, I have some information to offer to the House on the history of this extraordinary resignation. I propose to state the facts for the consideration of the House, and if the hon. Postmaster General can controvert or explain away the extraordinary facts which I am about to disclose, I am sure that the House and the country will be very greatly relieved. I understand that on the 11th of April, 1904, an investigation was ordered by the postal department into the Thessalon post office. At that time the same gentleman who now occupies the position of postmaster was in charge of that office. The inspector reported to the department in April of last year that there was a shortage in that office of $505.44, that that shortage had been unexplained, and that the postmaster had promised to make it good. In arriving at that shortage the postmaster had been credited with a remittance of $500, alleged to have been made by him to the postal department. If that remittance was a sham, if the statement that he had remitted $500 to the department was false and fraudulent, then the shortage as discovered by the inspector should have been $1,005.45. On the following day, the 12th of April, the department here telegraphed to the inspector that it was impossible to arrive at the balance of that office until the February accounts had been received. The Deputy Postmaster General about the 2nd of May wrote a letter to the inspector in which he referred to the alleged remittance of $500 which the postmaster had stated that he had made by registered letter, giving the number of the letter. The Deputy Postmaster General also makes the following statement to the inspector for his information in the inspection of that office; that the department is not satisfied that that remittance (referring to the remittance of $500) was ever despatched by the postmaster, because if he (the postmaster) misstated the date of mailing each of the cash accounts, it may be inferred that he would also mis-state the facts in connection with the remittance in question. The deputy also asks the inspector to visit the office again, and says that if the inspection proves that the remittance was not forwarded, he will take the money order books and place a reliable person in charge. He adds that there is scarcely any reason to doubt that the postmaster, for some reason unknown, has been making false statements for four or five months with regard to the returns to the department. The inspector visits the office, and on or about the 10th of May, 1904, I believe, he made a report to the postal department, with which doubtless the hon. Postmaster General is familiar. In order to draw the attention of the House to that report, I will just state a few heads of the subjects which were covered by it. He reports, I understand, that he visited the post office at Thessalon on the 7th day of May and made a careful audit, that before leaving Ottawa he had examined the letter book of the railway mail service in the department, and that there he had checked over the letter bills, with the entries in the registered letter book; and he found that the statements made by the postmaster in regard to the disposition of the accounts on the 8th and 11th of April were not correct, and were not substantiated by the letter books. He further states that the credit taken by the postmaster on the 5th of April, for $500 sent by registered letter No. 200, was not correct; that no such number appeared on a bill of that date; and that credit had been taken for a further remittance of $608 on the 30th of April, 1904, under registered letter No. 580, but there was no receipt for it. In that report he adds: 'I am satisfied it has not been sent.' He further says that the postmaster or his assistant has been falsifying the returns. He says he examined the assistant in the post office, from whom he obtained the following information, which is of an extraordinary character, in view of what followed. He says that the assistant stated that he had handed the postmaster, at his request, out of the post office till in the Thessalon post office the following sums: about the 10th of May, $450, which was to enable the postmaster to buy a house adjoining his own residence which he considered a bargain; $172 a short time before the date of the report, with which to buy pulp wood, as, forsooth, he was speculating in timber; $200 a few days before the report; and he thinks $300 further; in all about $1,100 out of the post office funds. The inspector in that report further says that he questioned the postmaster, and asked, as would be reasonable and proper, for an explanation; and this is the explanation that he got. The postmaster admitted that he had received sums of money from his assistant, but said that he supposed all the time that they were from what had been placed to his credit by salary warrants. The inspector criticises that statement, and says 'This statement I do not believe, but I am satisfied that there was an understanding between the postmaster and the assistant.' The inspector had said he was led to believe that the postmaster was well off, but he was now satisfied that he was in financial difficulties. As a matter of fact the postmaster at that time was, and now is as I understand—although I am subject to correction in this—an undischarged bankrupt. He says :

> I have been much deceived with the postmaster and his assistant. I told him that he would be dismissed. The postmaster said that he would prefer to resign.

And the report closed with a recommendation by the inspector that the postmaster be forthwith dismissed. That is the report of the inspector, as I allege it against the hon. the Postmaster General and his department. He may be able to explain it.

> The postmaster said he would prefer to resign.

Contrast that statement with what we got yesterday from the Postmaster General when he said that he chose to resign and there was a reason. On receipt of that report it appears that the Postmaster General was seized with a fit of most virtuous and righteous indignation because across that report he appears to have written his magnificent fiat that this postmaster be forthwith dismissed. That was on May 19, 1904, according to the report. Then in order to implement that and to make the dismissal effective the hon. gentleman, I believe, wired the member then representing that riding for a recommendation for a postmaster at Thessalon, intimating to the hon. member that the circumstances before him did not warrant any delay, and that he must dismiss the postmaster unless a resignation were filed. At that time I understand—the Postmaster General may set me right if I am wrong—the hon. gentleman had signed the fiat, for the dismissal, that the dismissal had taken effect, and that so far as the department was concerned, this gentleman, the postmaster at Thessalon, was a dismissed official and was no longer in the employ of the department.

The next circumstance that arises is a telegram on May 19th following, referring to the office and stating that the postmaster at Thessalon is still in charge of the office and that he signs the returns, and on May 20, there having been, as I understand, some correspondence in the meantime with regard to the employment of somebody else in the post office temporarily, the secretary of the postal department telegraphed the inspector that these arrangements were satisfactory provided the accounts and the cash were kept exclusively in the hands of a young woman who had been employed since the dismissal to take charge of the office temporarily. That is the extraordinary fact, Sir, that a postmaster could remain postmaster after his dismissal, that the arrangement was a perfectly satisfactory one to the Postmaster General provided he was not allowed to exercise the duties of postmaster or touch any funds or money or any returns which were within the responsibility of his office. On the 20th of May, the hon. gentleman again wired the hon. member for Algoma for the resignation of the postmaster at Thessalon. He had dismissed him the day before for the reasons set forth in the inspector's report, and no wonder he had been dismissed. I think the hon. gentleman could not have done otherwise. But having dismissed him and having signed the sentence of dismissal with his own hand, he sent two telegrams to the hon. member for the district, begging him to get this postmaster to be pleased to resign and saying that unless he did resign he would remove the postmaster whose sentence of dismissal he had already signed the day before. Then the hon. member for Algoma wired the Postmaster General that he had wired the postmaster to resign. Then there comes a letter from the inspector to the Postmaster General on the 21st of May stating that the postmaster is under the impression that the difficulty may blow over, and further, that when the difficulty has blown over he will remain postmaster. Then there comes under date of May 21st the resignation of the postmaster, and, Sir, I commend to this House the reasons which are given in that resignation of the postmaster. The postmaster after he has been dismissed, after he has been found, as the inspector found him, unworthy to continue in his office, after the hon. Postmaster General has signed the fiat for his dismissal and afterwards begged him to resign, then the postmaster writes a letter saying he finds his other business, which is that of keeping a grocery store in connection with the office, is such a pressing and important thing that he cannot any longer attend to the duties of postmaster at that place and therefore he respectfully begs to be allowed to resign and accordingly tenders his resignation. Now this farcical proceeding—because it cannot be characterized in any other manner, unless one realizes to the full the gravity of the situation and the seriousness of the farce—this farcical proceeding might well have stopped there and the hon. gentleman might well have ended his part of the play at that point, but let us see whether it ended there. The temporary employment was continued in the meantime and Thessalon apparently was without a postmaster; without a postmaster for two reasons, first, that the former postmaster had been dismissed on the report of the inspector, for the reasons I have disclosed to the House, and secondly, because he had finally yielded to the importunate request of the Postmaster General and had been persuaded after his dismissal to resign. Matters drifted along until July 13, when the hon. gentleman writes to the hon. member for Algoma for a recommendation to fill that office of postmaster at Thessalon and the member, I believe informed the Postmaster General that he had no recommendation to make at present. It is an extraordinary thing that on September 8, a gentleman applied for the position of postmaster and referred to the sitting member for that district, the government member for Algoma, as his recommendation, and his letter was politely acknowledged by the department on September 9. On September 5, the inspector wrote, I believe, to the accountant of the department instructing him to see that no payments were made to Dobey. This was on September 5, and Dobey had been dismissed on May 19, and his resignation had been accepted on May 23rd, but on September 5 the accountant was warned not to make any payments to him. Why? Let us see. The Postmaster General will contradict me if I am wrong, but I feel so satisfied that I am right that I challenge his contradiction. Then that post office at Thessalon was not actually transferred until September 3 and that the money of this country was paid to that postmaster up to the 31st August, 1904, or nearly four months after his dismissal and resignation. During the time that elapsed between the 19th May, when he was dismissed, and the 31st August, 1904, that gentleman was laughing in his sleeve at the Postmaster General. He was telling himself that his resignation was a farce, that his dismissal was a farce, that the Postmaster General was about the easiest subject he had ever met, and that he could remain out of the post office and yet continue to draw his salary for doing nothing; and during all that time, between the 19th May and the 3rd September, 1904, a temporary employee of the department was in charge of that office and paid a salary, so that there were two salaries going on at the same time. The postmaster, for some reason or other, probably because of the ingenuity he had displayed, as shown by the inspector's report, was being paid his regular salary, and a temporary employee of the department, who was doing the work, was also being paid. It was recommended by the hon. gentleman, that this temporary employee, who was in charge from the 19th May to the 3rd September, should be paid during that time the full salary of postmaster. I believe that on Oct. 6 there was a further application for the position of postmaster, but it appears that no notice was taken of it and that the post office remained in that condition until the appointment on the 6th February. I suppose it is not forgotten that last fall there was a general election throughout this Dominion, and among the most prominent advocates of the Liberal cause in East Algoma, was the late postmaster. He canvassed and spoke on the public platform and accompanied the government candidate to distant parts of the country, and did all he could to secure the election of the present member for Algoma East (Mr. Dyment). The late postmaster was then useful, he was doing well, but perhaps the work he was doing then was not sufficient to purge him thoroughly from the sins he had committed. Therefore when the Ontario government appealed to the country last January, he again came to the front. The provincial candidate for the district of Algoma was one Thomas G. Wigg, a Crown timber agent, who resigned his position in order to contest that riding in the Liberal interest. The hon. member for Algoma, who is a great friend of Mr. Wigg, went heartily into that campaign. He stayed away from this House for the purpose of advocating the cause of his friend, and I believe upon every platform on which he appeared, there appeared also Mr. J. B. Dobey, the postmaster at Thessalon, and Mr. Dobey was always ready to help the Liberal candidate with a speech. Mr. Dobey worked and spoke and strove along with the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Dyment) in order to secure the election of the Liberal candidate. But unfortunately he was unsuccessful because the electorate of that district were against Mr. Wigg and disapproved of him to the number of about 450. That election took place on the 25th January, and between the 25th January and the 5th February Mr. J. B. Dobey was able to satisfy the Postmaster General—without investigation or inquiry and without any denial of the serious charges against him, and for which he had been dismissed—that he was a fit and proper person, to be postmaster at Thessalon. Therefore the Postmaster General, over his own signature, on the 15th February, gave this order: Reappoint J. B. Dobey anew. The salary attached to the office of postmaster at Thessalon is in the neighbourhood of $1,000, a very snug little plum, and I presume that Mr. Dobey convinced the Postmaster General that his services deserved that salary. I am curious to know what explanation was made by the postmaster at Thessalon to the Postmaster General which induced the hon. minister, without inquiry or investigation of any kind, to recommend to Council the reinstatement of Mr. Dobey. Why did the Council reappoint him? Was it because of his political services and political activity generally on behalf of the Liberal party? Surely the hon. minister is above that sort of thing. Surely he would require something more than a mere political excuse to varnish such grave offences.

Might I ask the hon. minister to explain whether, before making that recommendation, he consulted his colleagues in the cabinet; and if so, what were the representations he made to his colleagues? Did he lay before them the facts on record in his own office? Did he give them the reasons why he had dismissed this postmaster? May I ask the hon. minister whether the facts reported by the inspector were false? Whether he believed the inspector, when he reported the facts and the hon. minister acted upon them? And whether, if he did believe the report of the inspector at the time, he subsequently found that the charges were without foundation? It is on record that the Postmaster General knew that this postmaster had been guilty of dishonest practices such as would render him liable to criminal prosecution on two or three points; yet in the face of that, not only does he not prosecute, not only does he not even censure, but for reasons best known to himself and which only can be described as political exigencies, he begs this postmaster to resign and then whitewashes him.

There are hon. members in this House, and no one knows it better than the hon. gentlemen who are acquainted with instances where righteous indignation for petty offences has been visited upon postmasters and their employees in the post offices, for far lesser offences than those that have been committed by the postmaster at Thessalon. Let us see. The day before yeterday upon the order paper were certain questions with regard to a post office in Algoma, at a place called Kentvale, and it is an extraordinary fact that this gentleman was dismissed after the Dominion elections. After the Dominion elections the postmaster at Thessalon was reappointed, whitewashed and sanctified by the Postmaster General, while the postmaster at Kentvale was summarily dismissed, and although petitions and requests have been made to the hon. gentleman to reinstate him, they were treated with scorn. The questions that I asked the hon. gentleman the other day with regard to the Kentvale office, were these:

1. Who is the postmaster at Kentvale, Ont.?
2. Who were his sureties?
3. When was he appointed?
4. Who was the former postmaster there?
5. When did he vacate the office?
6. Was he discharged? If so, for what reason?
7. Has the post office been removed from the site on which it was established? If so, when, and for what reason?
8. Where is it now established?
9. Has any protest been made against such removal?
10. If so, how was such protest dealt with?
11. What is the salary attached to the office?

To these the Postmaster General replied. There was no difficulty about answering these questions, although there was some difficulty about answering the questions with regard to the postmaster at Thessalon, and a part of those questions still remain unanswered. The hon. gentleman said:

The former postmaster at Kentvale was F. B. Kent. On the 4th January last, he was directed to be removed from his office because of his having been an active political partisan during the last Dominion election, and also with a view to removing the office to a more convenient site. The present postmaster is John Rousseau, who was directed to be appointed on the 4th of January, 1905. A petition against the change in the location was presented, but the decision of the 4th January last has been adhered to. The salary is $25.

Sir, Mr. Kent I know, Mr. Kent is a farmer and general store keeper in the prosperous little village of Kentvale, on St. Joseph's Island. It was well known when he was appointed many years ago, that he was a strong Conservative. But the little polling subdivision at Kentvale had the audacity to give a Conservative majority of thirty-seven out of forty-two votes cast, and no wonder the indignation of the Postmaster General was aroused. He had to do something, and the only luckless individual he could seize upon was Mr. Kent, and not only did the Postmaster General dismiss Mr. Kent for political activity on the Conservative side—and I may say to the Postmaster General that there was no political activity at all on the part of that gentleman, it was merely imaginary—not only that, but he took away the post office from the people of Kentvale to punish them for their sins, and removed it a mile and a half away where it would only serve the convenience of five or six out of the forty-seven people who were getting their mail there. Those facts have been reported to the hon. gentleman by petition of the residents. Out of the forty-seven people who were served by the post office at Kentvale, there were forty-three, I think, who signed the petition to have the office restored on the score of convenience. There is one instance. There was another the other day when my hon. friend for Dufferin (Mr. Barr) moved for a return in regard to the dismissal of the postmaster at Shelburne, and I believe the papers in that case will show that the hon. gentleman treated him as he treated the postmaster at Kentvale. But these are not the only sins which are visited by that hon. gentleman with grievous punishment. The hon. gentleman knows that he has pursued with persistence men employed in post offices, rural and city, who have been guilty of the smallest irregularities against the post office regulations. The doors of the penitentiary have yawned wide open for them, and he has not relaxed the ardour with which he pursued them. But when political reasons intervene the hon. gentleman is very apt to change his mind. Political principles the hon. gentleman adheres to sometimes. We have seen in the debates of this House that he has changed his mind for political reasons upon a very important principle, namely, the principle of provincial rights, which he championed so loudly in 1896. For political reasons and having regard to political exigencies of the situation, he changed his mind with regard to the enormity of offences committed by the postmaster at Thessalon, and he retracted his dismissal. He made up his mind that the gravity of that offence had been wiped out by the subsequent political activity of that gentleman. Sir, I look forward with some anxiety, certainly with eagerness, to the explanation of the hon. gentleman with regard to those facts. I would like to ask him what steps were taken by the Postmaster General towards visiting the consequences of those offences upon the postmaster, or his surety. Were the sureties of the postmaster ever changed ? Was a new post office bond ever entered into? Was the postmaster ever prosecuted ? Was any inquiry ever instituted further than that involved in the report of the inspectors ?

Now, Sir, there is appropriated out of the funds of this country thousands of dollars every year for the maintenance of an efficient staff of post office inspectors, whose duty it is to ascertain just such facts as these, and to report. They are presumed to be competent men, and are judged to be competent by the hon. gentleman who has acted upon a report in this instance. Then, Sir, of what value to this country is that corps of inspectors of the Post Office Department when all their reports, all their inquiries, and the result that was ascertained, are set at naught, as in this case, where the crimes that were reported by the inspectors to have been committed have been condoned by reason of political exigencies ? Let me summarize again. The offences of which this postmaster was guilty resolve themselves under three heads : First, the misappropriation, the misuse, the conversion, or any other name the Postmaster General, as a lawyer, likes to put to the facts, and he knows the proper term to apply—of the sum of at least $1,100, and possibly $1,600 ; second, the report of the inspectors that the postmaster has falsified returns for four or five months ; third, that the postmaster has been guilty of falsely pretending to send money in two registered letters, one with $500 and the other with $608, when there were no such letters on the letter bill. These facts require explanation. I ask the hon. Postmaster General to give a frank explanation to this House and to the country and to explain why, as Postmaster General, as holding the dignified office of a minister of the Crown, he could, without any investigation, without any explanation at all, condone offences so grave and foist upon the public the services of a man who was reported against by his own department for having committed such grave offences.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). Mr. Speaker, I think that fair-minded men will agree with me when I say that when a question is raised which goes to injure the character of a hitherto respectable citizen of the country it ought to be approached in a fair, impartial and non-partisan spirit, not for the purpose of trying to distort, or misrepresent facts, or create false impressions, but simply in a judicial and fair way to try to ascertain the proper view to take of a public transaction. In this particular case it is beyond controversy that there were irregularities at the Thessalon post-office, but that doubt arose because of the question : 'Who is responsible for them ? In the particular case of the Thessalon post office that doubt arose because of the fact that the postmaster chose to delegate the management of the office to a person in whom he had every right to place the fullest confidence. The postmaster, as is often the case throughout Canada, was not giving his detailed and exclusive attention to the office although he may have signed reports made out for him by those whom he employed. In the particular case in question the postmaster appears to have been trustful and to have throughout his tenure of office, in the last few years at least, relied on the fidelity of his employees. When my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) put a notice of motion on the order paper my attention was called to it by my hon. friend from East Algoma (Mr. Dyment) in whose constituency this post office is situated, and as it did not appear, as I viewed the case and as I view it to-day, to be one calling for any public criticism and as it was probable that no good would come out of it but simply that we might succeed in breaking the hearts of some people——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. The hearts of whom ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. At all events the hearts of people are entitled to consideration. In any event, before the matter was brought to the attention of the government, it would be reasonable that whatever information was possessed on the subject should be given to the hon. member (Mr. Boyce) that he might decide on his course. I had not the slightest doubt in my mind that any impartial man on seeing the information that I acted upon, would take the course I took. Therefore I at once invited the hon. gentleman to come to my department, and I instructed the officers to place before him whatever information there was within the reach of the department, anything that had any bearing on the question. I had not the slightest doubt that an impartial consideration of that information would have been accepted as a satisfactory reason for the course pursued. It seems to have been different. Some people might perhaps think that when a member is admitted to the files of the department in that way something is owing from him. In this particular case, on the information that I had in the month of May, 1904, I came to the conclusion that the postmaster should be dismissed. I gave him an opportunity to send in his resignation and, as my hon. friend says, a resignation was received. It is of no special consequence, I suppose, if a man is put out of office whether we allow him to resign or whether we dismiss him. Perhaps there may be cases where dismissal should take place promptly. However, he was ordered to be displaced from a position of responsibility and power in connection with the management of the office in the month of May, 1904. Subsequently information came to me which caused me to question the justice of my decision, and I am of the opinion that no lawyer in this House, if he stripped himself of bias, or that no judge on the bench would sustain my decision of May, 1904. As I say the postmaster left the management of his office to others, and I was in hopes it would not be necessary to have given publicity to these charges against people when you cannot pin down the responsibility to any one person. In this particular case I say it is not possible for any person to say without a reasonable doubt that the postmaster was the one to blame. On the contrary, I think a reasonable conclusion would be that there was another person to blame for whatever took place. The postmaster had been in office for a quarter of a century. He was appointed, I think, in 1880. He had an unblemished character. These circumstances were brought to my attention and other circumstances, all of which I am perfectly willing should be placed in the hands of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden).

Mr. FOSTER. Would my hon. friend (Sir William Mulock) allow me one question ? So long as the matter has developed as far as it has and the Postmaster General is giving publicity to the case, does he not think that he ought to be frank with the House and tell the House what these reasons were ? I think we ought to have all the information now that the matter has gone as far as it has.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. My information is that the postmaster was not the guilty one.

Mr. BARR. Who was ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I do not think I should say who is guilty.

Mr. BARR. Is my hon. friend attempting to throw suspicion on the assistant who is known to be——

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Known to be what ? I did not hear the conclusion of my hon. friend's sentence.

Mr. BARR. I ask the hon. gentleman if he is not attempting to throw suspicion on the assistant who is known not to be guilty and every person knows up there that he is not guilty.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Would the hon. gentleman say on what information he makes the statement that the assistant is known not to be the guilty one ?

Mr. BARR. That is what we want to know.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman says that every one knows the assistant is not the guilty person. I ask him upon what evidence he makes that statement ?

Mr. BARR. We would like to know who is the guilty one ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barr) has nothing on which to base that statement, and yet I have information upon which to base my conviction ; and my conviction and my firm opinion is that no person in the discharge of judicial duties could find the postmaster guilty morally of the offence of having for a certain length of time made use of post office funds. Though it would not, in my judgment, in one sense, mitigate the offence, I may observe that there has been no loss sustained and that the misappropriation was promptly made good. The member who introduced this matter made a statement about sureties ; I do not know upon what evidence he made that statement. I would say that Mr. Dobey, when formerly postmaster, was insured in a guarantee company for $800, and the hon. gentleman says the security was not renewed when he was reappointed.

Mr. BOYCE. I did not make that statement. I asked the Postmaster General whether there was a new bond or not.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. It is immaterial whether the hon. gentleman made that statement or not, because in one sense it was suggested by him, and, as his remarks will show, he challenged me to prove that there had been any new security obtained. The postmaster on being reappointed was insured according to our assessment system, which is the method of insuring postmasters almost generally throughout Canada to-day. We have a security from him to the extent of $1,200 ; a security set on foot since his reappointment. The hon. gentleman says that I knew the postmaster had geen guilty of illegal practices. I say I know nothing of the kind. I admit that the postmaster is blameable for having put too much confidence in others, but I would like to know who has not, in the course of his life, been obliged to regret being over-trustful of people whom he thought he was perfectly warranted in trusting ? That is the head and front of the offence of the postmaster—having been trustful and having not exercised that full supervision over the work of his office which he ought to have exercised. But that is a different sort of shortcoming from that with which he is charged here by the hon. gentleman, and if I were to dismiss him for that particular offence the result would be that I would ruin him in the minds of the people of Canada.

Mr. BOYCE. Will the Postmaster General state that this postmaster did not personally sign the account and return claiming credit for $500 and $680, which he never remitted ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I do not know what he may or may not have personally signed, but any person who has been in the office of Postmaster General knows perfectly well that among the thousands of postmasters throughout Canada there are those who are constantly signing their weekly returns without being absolutely aware of the facts upon which they are built up. Their clerks, their staff, make up these returns for them, and the particular case in question is one of that kind. I suppose this posmaster signed these returns trusting to their correctness, relying upon the statement made to him by his assistant or by whoever else may have had charge of the office at the time.

Mr. LALOR. Do I understand the Postmaster General to say that this postmaster receives $1,000 a year salary and does not give his personal attention to the business of the office ? I think that is the statement of the Postmaster General, and I would like to be sure about it.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I did not say anything about the salary, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lalor) may be about right as to salary. I say that up to the time of his dismissal it appears that his trouble had arisen because of his not having, up to that time, given the duties of the office his personal attention. It was not to my knowledge. Doubtless he now gives the office his personal attention, but his initial trouble arose from his not having supervised and been actually aware of the whole of the details of the office, and, in fact, not taking the actual management of it as he ought to have done. It is an office of sufficient importance to warrant the full and undivided attention of the postmaster. The hon. gentleman who introduced this question stated that after the dismissal of the postmaster he had been paid his salary up to the 31st of August last. Will the hon. gentleman inform me whether the postmaster was paid any money for services performed after his dismissal ?

Mr. BOYCE. My statement was that it appeared that the postmaster had been paid his salary up to the 31st of August, 1904. I asked the Postmaster General, if that were not correct, to contradict it. That fact is as I am informed and as I understand.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I am not able to say up to what date he was or was not paid, because I do not carry the affairs of the accountant's office in my head. I am quite satisfied on this point : that no money was paid to him for any services rendered by him after he was dismissed from his office. I will get the information on that point.

Mr. BOYCE. Is it not on record in the Postmaster General's department that this man was paid up to the 31st of August, 1904, that is, that he was kept in the employment of the government as postmaster of Thessalon and paid a salary up to that date, many months after his dismissal ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Well, the hon. gentleman has made that statement——

Mr. BOYCE. I am asking the Postmaster General if that is not the case.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman made that statement, and he knows more of the files in connection with this matter than I do. I have not looked into that point to see whether or not the money the hon. gentleman says was paid to him in August was for services rendered up to August, or whether it may not have been moneys that were owing to him up to the time of his dismissal. It is my opinion that when that point is looked into it will be found that there was paid no money for any services after the time of his dismissal. He would be entitled to nothing unless it would be for the rent of the premises.

Mr. BOYCE. I do not pretend to know more about the hon. gentleman's department than he does, but I want to tell him that if he will take the trouble to look at the papers—and he has had twenty-four hours' notice of this motion—he will find that the accountant sent him a memorandum, which is among the papers, stating that the man was paid up to the 31st of August, 1904. I do not know more than that.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. You say that the accountant sent a memorandum, to whom ?

Mr. BOYCE. To the Postmaster General, and it is in the files.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Oh, well, that is all nonsense ; the accountant never sent me a memorandum about the pay of any gentleman in the service of the government.

Mr. BOYCE. Before the hon. gentleman calls it nonsense, might I ask him to look at the files and he will see.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I have not the records of the office here, but it is impossible to suppose that the accountant sent me a memorandum telling me up to what date he had paid the postmaster.

Mr. BOYCE. I may tell the hon. gentleman that there is such a memorandum among the papers if he takes the trouble to look at it. There is a memorandum stating that this man was paid up to the 31st of August, 1904, and that the office was transferred on the 3rd of September, 1904.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I am not saying whether or not there was a memorandum——

Mr. BOYCE. But the hon. gentleman said it was nonsense.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. What I said was nonsense—and I should not have used such an undignified word—what I say is this: The hon. gentleman stated that the accountant sent to the Postmaster General a memorandum to the effect that this officer had been paid his salary up to the 31st of August. What I say is that the accountant would have no possible reason for sending to me a memorandum on any such subject, and I am satisfied that he never sent me any such memorandum. If the papers were before me at that time, there would be no occasion for his sending me a memorandum.

Mr. BOYCE. Do I understand that the hon. Postmaster General denies what I state?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I state that the accountant never sent to me the memorandum the hon. gentleman speaks of.

Mr. BOYCE. That is not the question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the hon. Postmaster General whether he denies my statement that there is among the papers referring to this matter in his department a memorandum to the effect that this postmaster was paid up to the 31st of August, 1904, and that the office was transferred on the 3rd of September, 1904?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I am not making any statement as to that, for I do not know what paper may or may not be on file.

Mr. BOYCE. Then why does the hon. Postmaster General deny things the existence of which he does not know?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The point I deny is that the accountant sent me a memorandum.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman says he does not know.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I know what is sent to me. I do not know what is put on file in the 10,000 post offices in Canada, and I say that on that point the accountant would have no reason to send me a memorandum. I am not speaking from memory. I am speaking from the practice of the department, where we have to work by rules. The accountant would not send me a memorandum of that kind, and when the hon. gentleman said that the accountant had sent me a memorandum to the effect that this man had been paid his salary up to the 31st of August, and sought to hold me responsible for his having been paid after his dismissal, I point out that the real point of that statement was, not that there had been a memorandum, but that I had been notified by the accountant of that payment. On that point the hon. gentleman is in error; there is no foundation for the statement.

Mr. BOYCE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me one question? Did he reappoint Dobey to the post office at Thessalon without looking over the papers on file in his department?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I do not recall everything that occurred on the reappointment. I recall the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Dyment) coming to me after the commencement of this session. The fact is that when an order is issued to send to the person who has the patronage of a riding for a recommendation to fill an office, the matter disappears from my attention until it is brought up again by some circumstance. Months may elapse, and long periods do frequently elapse, when positions are vacant, but it does not follow that the transaction is present in my mind until final action is taken. In this particular case, if anything was brought to my attention I dealt with it, the file would then be put away, and that would be the end of the transaction. I do recall the member for East Algoma coming to me during this session and giving to me his strongest opinion as to the innocence of the postmaster of any guilt; and on that occasion I made it my business to review the circumstances, and go through all the available information. That was the information which I desired the hon. gentleman to study as a professional man and a person familiar with weighing evidence; and I was in hopes that as a lawyer he would have seen the case as I did—that I was not warranted in dismissing the postmaster on the charge of having committed a crime, and by that act disgracing him in the eyes of the public when there was a very grave doubt, or more than a doubt as I think, as to his guilt. As I have said, I had no reason to doubt his innocence when the whole case came befor me, and I would have been doing less than my duty if I had not reinstated him under these circumstances. I was not aware until this moment of his having taken part in politics. I have never seen the gentleman, I have never spoken to him, I have never had any communication with him except in the ordinary course, and I think no one could have acted in a more conscientious way than I did in dealing with this case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the hon. Postmaster General a question? The case came before him originally upon the report of the post office inspector, which sets out the guilt of this man in the clearest possible terms, if its effect has been correctly stated by the hon. gentleman who brought the matter to the attention of the House. The hon. Postmaster General speaks of the case having come before him more fully. Upon what did it come before him more fully? There was the report of the post office inspector; was there any further investigation? I think that is a very important matter for us to know.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Mr. Speaker, I have no opinion as to the officials of this post office. I have no reason whatever to shield one of them more than another; I have no reason to shield any one of them. I have only one duty to perform, and I am only performing that one duty; but in the discharge of my duty as Postmaster General, I want to spare the feelings of people if I can do so, and if no public good is to be served from disregarding their feelings; and I will say this to the hon. leader of the opposition, who is a lawyer of standing, and who would, I am sure, take a non-partisan view of this matter. If he were to go through the file—and he is most welcome to it—I am perfectly sure that he would not have made the speech which has been made to-day. I would be pleased if he would do that, and he will see that this is not a question so one-sided as it has been represented. I ask my hon. friend if he would be willing to do that? The reason I do not wish to bring the file down is obvious to the hon. leader of the opposition.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I ask the minister what is the method of paying the salary of the postmaster at Thessalon?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. A percentage, do you mean?

Mr. FOSTER. No. I mean, does he get it quarterly, and by whom is it payable, and to whom goes the receipt from him?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I judge from the statement of the hon. member for West Algoma that he is paid by what are called salary warrants.

Mr. FOSTER. Issued where?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I think the salary warrants all come from the accountant. I am not aware of the working details; but I understood that what are called salary warrants are issued by the accountant at regular intervals, under which the postmaster is in some way entitled to be paid, that payment coming out of the revenue for the time being instead of having to be voted by parlament like the ordinary expenditure. I think that is the way.

Mr. HAGGART. Is that monthly or quarterly? I think it is monthly.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Quarterly.

Mr. FOSTER. Whence does the money issue for the payment of this quarterly or monthly salary, from the office here?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. That I cannot say; it is an old practice that has been in force I suppose ever since there has been a post office, I do not know whether it is a warrant entitling him to retain that amount or whether it is in the nature of a cheque transferring to him that money. Perhaps the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), who has been Postmaster General, can say.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not sure of it. You can see the point easily, if it is a monthly payment and he took $450 he must have known of his guilt.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. There is a very reasonable explanation of it, and that is why I think it is so unfair, with all respect, so unfair to the parties interested to make use of this occasion in this House to debate in an ex parte way a matter that ought to be dealt with judicially and in no other way. I say there is an explanation—it may not be the true one—given by one of the officers in the office.

Mr. BOYCE. Is that explanation on the file?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. My hon. friend has seen everything on the file, he is in possession of everything and perhaps it would occur to him—it does to me— that when I, as I did in this case, invite him to look into the whole case and withheld nothing from him, not even the private correspondence, the letters from anybody—I gave instructions to my secretary to place all the material at his disposal and there was no desire to conceal anything—I wanted to satisfy the hon. gentleman as to the fairness of my course and he knows what is on the file and what is not; and I would agree, returning to the question, to ask the leader of the opposition if he would care to look through that file himself, and if after looking through that file he says he thinks there would have been any service to the public by my bringing a return to this House of every document there except communications that are marked 'private and confidential' and what I could not produce without the consent of the writers, I would be most pleased to give the reports and everything to the House and they may judge for themselves.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the hon. gentleman is making an appeal to me in this regard I would say that I would be very glad to discharge any public duty which devolves upon me, but it does not seem in a matter of this kind to which so much publicity has been given, that hon. gentlemen on either side of the House would be satisfied with my report as to matters on which there might be very grave differences of opinion. I was asking the Postmaster General a very simple question, that is whether or not his fuller consideration was based upon any report of any officer of his departmetn. For example, whether this inspector or any other inspector of the department had made any subsequent report withdrawing or modifying in any material respect the report which was originally made. I ask that question because I gathered from the language of the Postmaster General in the first instance, that there must have been something of that kind, and I thought possibly he was omitting through inadvertence.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. When I made my decision to dismiss this officer I only had the one opinion of an officer. I was not aware at that time of his having given a different and conflicting opinion, but I subsequently found that it would be quite unsafe for me to act upon the opinion of that officer in regard to this particular case as to where this guilt lay and I would not act upon it; I felt I was taking a very grave risk in purporting to find a man guilty of an offence on the advice of an officer who had expressed different opinions regarding the case, and therefore, I could not place confidence in the soundness of the judgment of the officer to whom the hon. member for West Algoma has referred. Therefore, when in February last the hon. member from East Algoma (Mr. Dyment) called upon me and requested me to reinstate this officer I went through the papers and decided that that was the only reasonable course open under the circumstances. But since my hon. friend says he does not care to assume any responsibility except of a public character I shall go this far: if it should appear that some person very close to the postmaster occupying a very delicate relationship to him should have made known to the department where the guilt lay, and that it did not rest with the postmaster, that satisfied me where it did rest as this did, what should I have done? So far as this postmaster is concerned, I was satisfied that the evidence did not prove him guilty. There may be a doubt as to who is guilty, but I am satisfied the postmaster was not proved guilty, and under those circumstances I was not going to ruin that man, ruin him in the eyes of the public, a man who stands as high in the community as any person who has been for twenty years a public servant, and with this exception has been faithful and reliable, has not been charged with being short in his money or guilty of any breaches of trust. I do not think, under the circumstances, I was doing more than my duty in revoking the decision which I had arrived at from only a partial consideration of the case. All lawyers can understand that cases can be presented and for the moment you may form an incorrect impression; subsequent light may be thrown on the case and cause you to feel that you have made a mistake. That was so in this case, and I have no more to say upon the subject except that if the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) chooses to go through my file and if after reading those papers he thinks the whole file should be brought down and presented to the public, minus confidential papers, if he thinks that it does not dislodge the finding I made in May, 1904, I will produce those papers and the House can again go into the subject.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). The defence that has been made by the Postmaster General (Sir Wm. Mulock) if we are to call it a defence, or the explanation, if we apply the milder term, is really the most extraordinary I ever listened to, and I appeal to the experience of hon. gentlemen on either side of the House if they ever heard a charge brought and substantiated in the way this has, to which a reply has been made in such a manner as this has been attempted to be made by the Postmatser General. A most singular thing that he thought it his first duty to prove to this parliament and the country his own utter unreliability. What did he say? As head of a department with innumerable officials under his direction, men who, in the exercise of their office, come to be experts in investigation, who investigate matters on the spot and get all the local flavour and make themselves acquainted with the circumstances of the case right in the home where the proceedings took place—after a thorough and searching inquiry by responsible officers, extending over a considerable period, so grave was this case, under the presentation made by his officers, made to a gentleman with so kindly and tender a heart that he would not for the world do an injustice to any man, official or otherwise, that he dismissed the official. One would naturally suppose that every care would be taken before the initial sentence was pronounced against a man who, the minister says, has always had a reputation for honesty, has had twenty years' public experience, and whose conduct he was called upon to judge, and in whose case an advance judgment would not only put him out of business as an honest man and official but reflect upon his family and relatives as well. The Postmaster General, a thorough lawyer, himself at the head of a department, with all its responsibility, knowing what hinges on his decision, undertakes that most responsible of all duties—the duty of making a pronouncement against one of his fellow men—he does it deliberately and on the evidence declares that the man must be dismissed. And now he comes up and says that there is not a lawyer or judge or a man of common sense in Canada who would sustain the conclusion he came to at that time.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I cannot allow the hon. gentleman to misrepresent me. What I said was that fuller and later information brought to me showed me that my judgment in the month of May was wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman did say that and he also said the other. If he denies, I shall take his denial but I appeal to 'Hansard.' Then he goes on a second step, and says: I came to the conviction later that this official was innocent; I shall not give you the ground upon which I came to that conviction, but I will let the leader of the opposition into the secret if he will take the trouble to come over to my office; the country and this House however must not know what are the grounds upon which I came to the conviction that the official was innocent, but such grounds there certainly are. Well, the same gentleman came to a conviction and gave his sentence that the man was guilty and dismissed him. Then he says that no judge or lawyer or man of common sense would uphold that opinion, and he now asks us to sustain the conviction which he subsequently came to and in respect of which he does not furnish us any evidence or ground. Does he not see that he has read himself out of court, and there is not a bit of use in his standing up now and saying that any one of the conclusions he came to is a proper and right conclusion?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Did the hon. gentleman never make a mistake?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, often. What does the hon. gentleman ask the House to do? He asks this House to trust him for a conviction. But this has gone too far. It is impossible to stop him. This hon. gentleman who was so tender of heart that he would not break a heart—and no one wants to break hearts if it can be avoided—that hon. gentleman has stood in his place and used language just as plain and clear as was necessary to show that a certain person was absolutely guilty, who has never been tried, and against whom, so far as this House knows, there is not a tittle of evidence to prove any charge. Very tender hearted about the heart of a grown man but not so tender hearted about the heart of one who is not a grown man. Everybody on each side knows to whom the reference is made. Nobody needs to go a step further to know that the hon. gentleman has pronounced a judgment against the second person after having taken back his judgment against the first. This matter has gone so far that it cannot stop here. This House wants to know all the facts and must know them. This House wants all the papers and must have them. The hon. gentleman has not always been so tender about shielding private correspondence. There is an episode in his history, which he will not forget and which, if he tries to forget, this House and country will not, when he absolutely rifled private correspondence and made it public to the world. He issued a volume in which it could be edited, published and distributed; but when it comes to be a matter of a public official wrong-doing when the moneys of the country have evidently been used wrongly and taken wrongly—the hon. gentleman will not deny that nor will anybody. Now, however, it comes to this, every public official in this Dominion looks to-day to the Postmaster General and this government to know whether or not officials have to toe the line or whether it is permissible for them to do about as they please. What is the admission of my hon. friend? It is that there are ten thousand postmasters in this country who never know what they are signing, who do not know whether they are affixing their names to what is a correct report or not, that this is a shining example of such a postmaster, and when it comes to moneys being wrongly taken, when it comes to the misuse and embezzlement of public money, then the hon. gentleman says: we must be tender hearted; we must not punish the wrongdoer; we must not punish officials who do that sort of thing. You do not need to publish it on the streets now, you need not send a circular to every official under this government. That is not necessary. Every one will know, when the report of to-day's proceedings is circulated, that, so far as this government is concerned, they need not be at all anxious, if they are only good partisans.

The Postmaster General undertook to say to my hon. friend who brought this matter up to-day—he did not say it in so many words but implied it—that my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) had not acted honourably and had abused the right which he had given him to look over the correspondence. But had not my hon. friend the right to see that corrrespondence? Whose is it? Does it belong to Wm. Mulock, Esq.? Is it the property of the Postmaster General? It is the country's business that is being carried on and my hon. friend is simply a departmental officer carrying on this business, and this parliament represents the country and has a perfect right to all that correspondence in order to get at the bottom of this question and see that its affairs are being properly carried on. What discourtesy was my hon. friend guilty of? What courtesy was exercised by the Postmaster General when he said to him, go over and look through the files? The Postmaster General did no more than his duty, and my hon. friend exercised no more than his right. The right and the duty were side by side, and the House has the right to look into the whole matter. It goes further than the minister would have us think it goes ; it touches at the very foundation of things. Here is a department the responsible head of which is the Postmaster General ; here is all the array of his machinery. He sets that machinery to work, that machinery does its work and reports thereon, and statements therefrom come up to my hon. friend the Postmaster General for his final decision. What is the report of the inspector ? My hon. friend tries to excuse the matter by saying that somebody who was in the office paid out the money when it should not have been paid out, when the postmaster himself knew without a shadow of doubt that he was getting money which did not belong to him. What was his salary ? $1,000 a year. Suppose it was paid by monthly warrants, and suppose he has the right to take it out of the till, he can only take out one-twelfth of that per month. Suppose it is a fourth of that salary, he can only take one-twelfth of that fourth out of the till per month.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. There is nothing to show that it was taken out of the till.

Mr. FOSTER. The report of the Postmaster General's inspector shows that that money was paid out of the till, it must have been paid out of the till.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. It does not show that the postmaster knew it was taken out of the till.

Mr. FOSTER. The postmaster knew that he got it.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. He may have known there was money there.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend so trusting in this regard that he does not think a man of business getting a salary of $1,000 a year, knowing that he needed the money, knowing just how far he had drawn out his salary—I do not imagine he ever left it to rust in the till of the post office—do you mean to say it is conceivable that when he took out of the post office $450 at one payment, he did not know that he was getting something over and above what was due to him? It was inconceivable.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. There is nothing to show he knew that he was getting money out of the till.

Mr. FOSTER. Where would it come from ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. As I have said, there is an explanation. It is explained that the party who gave him this money had money for him.

Mr. FOSTER. How derived ?

Mr. FOSTER. Who left it ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The postmaster from time to time had been allowing accumulations in the hands of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not appear.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. That is the explanation that has been given to me of that amount.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not appear from the inspector's report, but what does appear from the inspector's report is this, that the postmaster admitted that he had received sums of money from his daughter, but that he supposed all the time it was from what she had placed to his credit from his salary warrant. Now does my hon. friend and the members of this House think that a village postmaster, evidently wanting his pay when it was due, did not take his pay when it was due, when he could go at one time and get $450, and directly after get $172, and shortly after $300 more. and attempt to pretend that he believed that that money was lying there at his credit? Did the post office inspector believe it ? The post office inspector informs the Postmaster General in his report that he did not believe it. Well, now, there is something more. There is not only the —taking of the money which he must have know was not his—all the worse, all the meaner, all the more reprehensible if he would allow an innocent related hand to dip into the till instead of his own. Do you mean to say that he not only did that but in order to cover it up he falsified the accounts, in order to cover it up—cover up what? His own credits of salary in arrears there. Why should he want to cover that up? In order to cover it up he made false statements with reference to sending registered letters, which the post office inspector himself investigated, and which were investigated here at the head office as well, and from both sources were found to be absolutely incorrect. He took the money out through a hand that he should have withheld from meddling with anything of that kind, took the money out, and to cover it up, falsified his accounts, took the money out and to cover it up made certain false statements with reference to sending money by registered letter, which he never sent. What graver thing could an official do? Can any one think, can the Postmaster General himself think, what graver things an official could do than that?

Now that comes to him in an official way. His post office inspector makes an inspection on the ground, reports those things and his belief in them, and that the man be dismissed. The Postmaster General sits here in his office, goes as a judge at the papers, at the information he has so received, issues his decree, and the man is dismissed. Then he gives way to evil influences and he allows the man to send in his resignation. Why should that be done? If the Postmaster General had the information which he had at that time which he now says is wrong, and on that information said this man should be dismissed, why did he allow him to resign? Is that conducive to official honesty and probity in the department of which my hon. friend is the head? Later convictions had not come to him then. These two things were done just about the same time. A man whom he decided to be guilty and worthy of dismissal, instantly, the very same moment almost, he allowed to resign, to hand in his resignation, and then gives a misleading statement to the House as to why he resigned. That was not a fair and frank statement that the Postmaster General gave my hon friend in answer to his question. Now that is what took place in his department, after a thorough investigation by his own officials. There was the opinion of his post office inspector. Every high official at least, and probably every official in my hon. friend's department, knew what was going on. The post office inspector knew it, post office inspectors other than that one knew it, the whole service became honeycombed with this knowledge of things. What is the moral effect upon a department where its own officers are snubbed, where, after investigations are thoroughly carried on, they are set aside by the Postmaster General, and where things like these are condoned? Is it in the interest of public morality, is it in the interest of official probity and the proper performance of the duties of the office?

Now what will the inspector say? My hon. friend was challenged as to whether he had made any official investigation and got reports which would upset the statements that he had made. He had no frank answer. I conclude therefore he has no answer, that he did not undertake this second part of it through officials of his department, but he arrived at his conviction from other sources. Now, Sir, it seems to me that there can only be one thing that an official can say, and that is this: It is thoroughly useless for me to make examinations and try to perform the duties of my office, because when I make the investigations, when I make recommendations, the minister simply turns me down and puts the man back again. What respect will any official in the Postmaster General's department, in that division of it, have for a post office inspector after this? The post office inspector is sent somewhere else to investigate something or some one, but the man whom he goes to investigate says: A fig for you and your office; I have got Mr. Dyment, or I have got some other Grit member behind me. I will have it made right with the minister; you may go on with your formal work. Thus you have shorn your post office inspector of every vestige of authority. You have shorn your officer of self-respect and of the respect that is due to him in the department over which he presides. You have made the name of inspection a by-word and a reproach and you have taught your department, through and through, on the case as it stands to-day, that if officials have political influence behind them they need not be honest, that they may take money and buy a house if they can make a bargain out of it, that they may take money to pay for pulp wood when they are in the speculation, that they may take money for this and for that out of the till provided they can get a relative to do it for them and upon whom they can, when the time of stress comes, throw, in an unmanly fashion, the onus of the guilt of the thing. That is what the hon. Postmaster General has taught his department and that is what, if the government sustain him, the government will teach this country. It is all of a piece. This is not the first.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. No, this is not the first.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Postmaster General had ideals when he was in opposition—he threw them aside when he became a member of the government—ideals, beautifully painted, painted with great care, as with the brush of a master, held up to those on the other side of the House before 1896 and every man on that side of the House who could not gaze upon that painted ideal and read his own image clear was represented as being a man not fit for the public service of this country. Every one of these the hon. gentleman has turned to the wall and nailed it there, and on the obverse side since he has painted actual pictures, not ideals—the Jackson picture, for instance. This is of a piece with that. The hon. Postmaster General sits there to-day with the onus upon him of having taken a criminal from the province of Ontario, made him a high public officer of this government and sent him abroad knowing his record, and with infinite chivalry that old knight, Sir Richard Cartwright, after long years of warfare stood up here and looking around, especially on the hon. Postmaster General, and knowing his former course said: I will relieve his conscience of it altogether; I will take the sole responsibility of this appointment. Chivalrous Sir Richard Cartwright! But that did not absolve the hon. Postmaster General. The hon. Postmaster General made that appointment just as much as Sir Richard Cartwright made it. It had to be made by Council. It was an Ontario appointment in a public way and by geographical responsibility as well as by ministerial responsibility the hon. Postmaster General has to take the odium of it. What has he done? He has sent a man that the judges scored, a man that reputable lawyers would not appear in court with, a man, who, if certain papers had not been lost, would have been disgowned, to represent Canada abroad, in a country where the name of a public official or agent has been from time immemorial the synonym for probity. That is the way wrong doing has been committed by my hon. friend. This, as the case appears to-day, is on a par with that. But, oh, how virtuous my hon. friend gets in a different case. The quiet little village of Kentvale, whose only disparagement in the eyes of the Postmaster General is that it is inhabited chiefly by wilful and rebellious men who will vote the Conservative ticket, has a postmaster, who, I suppose, had a heart, who had a reputation, against whom not a word could be said or has been said, and yet, because, in the village of Kentvale, a large majority voted the Liberal Conservative ticket and against the government side, my great hearted and large minded friend the Postmaster General must, forsooth, don his armour and go into the fight. There is an enemy of the public service. He must be dismissed. He drew the enormous sum of $25 a year. He has dared as a free man in Canada to exercise his political opinions and vote for the man of his choice. That never must be allowed in the public service of Canada, and the hon. gentleman decapitates this postmaster at Kentvale. Utterly oblivious of broken hearts, of lacerated feelings and of the almost infinite tenderness with which he is known to handle his fellow creatures he disgraced, in so far as he could, and dismissed the postmaster of Kentvale. But here is this man, Mr. Dobey, who conveniently, between the sentence and the execution of the sentence and the time that a new conviction comes to the Postmaster General, part of the time being paid his salary, goes into the political field with all his armour on, speaks publicly, does all he can, an active partisan out and out; yet, consistency compels the Postmaster General to dethrone and recapitate a man who votes on his convictions and is not a violent partisan and to put back into office a man with a record such as has seldom been brought down to this House and a man who was a violent political partisan. That is consistency. That is acting on principle. Oh, the pettiness, the meanness of conduct of that kind? The hon. Postmaster General owes to this House now all the papers so that we can take it in hand as soon as possible and let the people's representatives see where the rights of this case are.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, the discussion has widened a good deal and my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) who has just spoken has referred to matters which, while they are in order in a debate of this character, do not reach the immediate question which was brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce). The facts of the case, as I learn them from this debate, because I am, like the rest of the members of the House, only learning the facts from this debate, seem to be very few. Representations having been made that a certain postmaster had been guilty of misconduct, my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock), being satisfied with the information that is presented, dismisses him from office. So far there will be no question but that my hon. friend acted as he thought in the interest of the public service. But, a few months later, information reaches my hon. friend which satisfies him that a mistake has been made and that the man is innocent. The statement of my hon. friend the Postmaster General is that upon further information he believes that he made a mistake. What then is the proper course to pursue? Having dismissed the man in good faith, but as he subsequently found out through erroneous information, should he adhere to his unjust decision or should he reinstate the man in office? My hon. friend the Postmaster General says that the later information satisfied him that an injustice had been done and that therefore he was convinced that he should reinstate the man.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. May I ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) why that information is not here.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a point I was about coming to. My hon. friend the Postmaster General has stated that he thinks no good purpose whatever will be served by bringing down all the papers in this matter. He has stated that, having obtained this information, he gives the substance of it to the House and he offers to submit it in full to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), who, of course, is not bound to accept it unless he wishes. The Postmaster General has nothing to conceal, but he thinks the widening of this discussion and the introduction of other names will not be conducive to the public good, and might do individual harm. That is a fair statement of the case. The Postmaster General says he prefers not to bring down these papers. I do not agree with my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) that the House has a right to all these papers. Of course, the House has a right to dismiss the government if it wishes —but the House is always reasonable in matters of this sort, and will only demand papers when their production is felt to be conducive to the public good. If the information received by the Postmaster General was such as to lead him to believe that a mistake was made, surely everybody will see that it was only common justice that he should remedy that mistake and reinstate the officer. If my hon. friends opposite insist that the papers must be brought down, well that is a question for the Postmaster

General to consider, and I am not going to speak for him, but I can quite conceive there may be good reasons why papers should not be brought down. It constantly happens that it is in the public interest that papers be not brought down ; it is not an unusual thing to have papers submitted to the leader of the opposition, who has a certain degree of responsibility, differing perhaps from that of the hon. gentlemen by whom he is surrounded ; it is not an unusual thing to have papers submitted to him in order that he may satisfy himself that in the main justice has been done. If the Postmaster General believes he has good reason for not causing the introduction of other names by bringing down these additional papers, why should there be any assumption of partisanship or anything else that has nothing to do with the case ; why does it not present itself as a case of injustice having been done unwittingly to a public official and of that injustice being corrected in the light of further inquiry ? That, after all, is the whole case. You may broaden the discussion out into other points, but confining myself entirely to the question brought before the House by the hon. member (Mr. Boyce), it seems that it can be disposed of in a very few words. The Postmaster General dismisses an officer, and then afterwards believing that he has made a mistake he corrects the error, re-instates the officer, and tells us there are good reasons why he would prefer not to bring down all the papers, although he would gladly submit them to the leader of the opposition, so that the leader of the opposition may satisfy himself the whole thing has been done with the best intentions and without any wrong to the public interest.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The evidence has been brought out that this man Dobey was an offensive partisan in the official sense of the term. Would not that prevent the Postmaster General appointing him in any event ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not understand that the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce) bases his case on any question of offensive partisanship. I understood the hon. gentleman to present the case in a different light, and I am merely dealing with the question of the dismissal of a public official for misconduct and of his re-instatement upon inquiry and in the belief that an injustice has been done him. We may introduce other questions, but dealing solely with the case of the appointment of this postmaster, I am not able to see anything in it beyond the simple fact of a mistake having been made, an injustice having been done, and that mistake having been corrected and that injustice having been remedied by the Postmaster General under the circumstances stated.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me that the Minister of Finance has very remarkable ideas as to the circumstances under which papers should be brought down. Here is a man who was dismissed by the Postmaster General, on his own fiat, upon the report of the post office inspector, and, notwithstanding that dismissal, it would appear that this postmaster remained in charge of the office for some months, and that finally his resignation was accepted.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. He never was in charge.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I have a memorandum here on the file of the department which indicates that he was still in charge on the 19th of May, and the Postmaster General previously to that had signed this fiat that he should be dismissed.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The order may have been made a few days before the 19th of May, but it would take a little time to put some person in charge. When instructions were given for his dismissal instructions were given about the same time to have a reliable person put in charge, and the postmaster was not left in charge a moment longer than was necessary to get some one to take charge of the office. The inspector had some reliable person in his mind and, when authorized, put that reliable person in charge. That took place, I think, a few days after the order was made, and from that time forward the late postmaster, I assume had no control of the office.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The information to which I have already referred is contained in a telegram of the 19th of May from the inspector to Mr. Smith, who, I think, is secretary of the department. The telegram says :

> The postmaster at Thessalon is still in charge.

He seems to be amazed that the postmaster should be still in charge, and on the 20th of May the secretary of the department wired Mr. Henderson, the inspector :

> Present arrangements are satisfactory if the accounts and cash are kept exclusively in the hands of the young woman.

Why should you keep a man there as postmaster during a considerable period, if his conduct has been such that it is necessary to keep the cash and accounts exclusively in the hands of one of his assistants ? But the significant circumstance in connection with this is that on the 21st of May the inspector reports to the Postmaster General—I gather from the memorandum it is to the Postmaster General himself—that the postmaster is under the impression that the difficulty may blow over and that he will still remain postmaster. That is a very significant circumstance. The Minister of Finance says that he could see no good public reason why these papers should be brought down. Let us examine that for a moment. The Postmaster General does not deny that there has been at least embezzlement of the public funds; that there have been false returns; that there have been letters alleged to contain money sent forward as registered letters which did not contain money at all or which were not really forwarded at all, one or the other. Three different charges were enumerated by my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce), and I listened attentively to the Postmaster General in order that I might hear from him some denial that these three breaches of the criminal law had taken place. Now, I do not care whether it is the postmaster or whether it is some one else, an official of the department has been guilty, according to the facts which have been placed before the House and which are still uncontradicted; some person in the employ of the department has been guilty of these several offences. It is suggested by the Postmaster General that the postmaster himself—although his answers to the inspector would not lead to that conclusion—was not really guilty. I would find it very difficult indeed, without a formal investigation, without some better evidence than the mere statements of gentlemen who may have gone to the Postmaster General for that purpose; I would find it very difficult to believe that even if that money were abstracted by the assistant and relative of the postmaster at Thessalon, that that was not done at his instance and with his connivance. I would say that it would have been the duty, in my opinion, of the Postmaster General to have had a very careful, formal and official investigation before he allowed this man to escape on any such plea as that. The Minister of Finance thinks these papers should not be brought down. We have heard something of reputations—how is the reputation of the postmaster cleared by smirching the reputation of some one else? That is the way in which the defence has been put forward to-day—by attacking the reputation of a relative.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then I do not know what the Postmaster General means if he does not mean that.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Not attacking.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I do not care whether you call it attacking or not; you are transferring admitted guilt from the postmaster to the postmaster's assistant, you are doing that without any formal investigation, and when you do that you remove, you attempt at least to remove the stain from the character of the postmaster by placing that stain upon the character of the postmaster's assistant. It is in the public interest that the facts of the case should be laid fairly before parliament. it would seem to me that it is due especially to the postmaster himself that the facts to which the Postmaster General has alluded should be laid before parliament, in order that parliament may come to the conclusion that he is innocent if he be really innocent, and that thus his good name may be vindicated before the people of this country. I have been dealing so far only with the question of criminal responsibility, because if there is criminal responsibility, it seems to me that the government ought to place before parliament very good and sufficient reasons why the matter has not been followed up. There is a very significant sentence in the report of the inspector to the effect that he was thoroughly satisfied that there had been an understanding between the postmaster and his relative who was also his assistant. I do not think a judgment of that kind, which was come to by the post office inspector after a careful investigation of the circumstances on the spot, should be lightly set aside by the Postmaster General if he expects these officers to do their duty in the future.

But there is another element in the case, which the Postmaster General has not touched at all, and it is this. Let us assume for the moment that the postmaster was not really guilty of the offence which has been laid at his door by the report of the post office inspector. Let us assume that the embezzlement took place without his actual knowledge, and that he signed these false returns without actually knowing that they were false, is there anything in the circumstances of the case from one end to the other which would justify the Postmaster General in re-appointing him? Was there no other man in that town who could have been appointed to this office? It seems to me that the Postmaster General has attempted a defence only so far as criminal responsibility is concerned, and that he has not offered one word to this House in extenuation of his conduct in again appointing this man to this office without any report vindicating that man's character, certainly without any report vindicating his official performance of his duty. It seems to me that my hon. friend the Postmaster General could not have done this unless pressure of a most extraordinary character had been placed upon him for that purpose. I believe that the hon. gentleman, apart from those very strong partisan feelings which I think sometimes actuate him too much, tries to carry on his department in a businesslike way; but surely in this instance there must have been pressure of a most extraordinary character placed upon him, otherwise he could not have done what he has done.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. There was not the slightest pressure.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That still leaves my hon. friend the Postmaster General in an indefensible position absolutely. Some reference has been made to the postmaster at Kentvale, a man who was dismissed because he had Conservative proclivities, although my hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) states that he took no part in the election. I have two other instances in mind—the dismissal of a postmaster at Upper Musquodoboit in the county of Halifax, because some Conservatives met at his house. Certain Conservatives, of whom I was one, were travelling through the county of Halifax, and we stopped at his hotel. Some Conservatives of the surrounding district met at his house in the evening. He had been dismissed two or three years before for alleged offensive partisanship, but had been reinstated. The post office was removed about a mile away, and he was told that his services would be no longer required. In the same county the Kent post office was removed about a mile for the alleged reason that Miss Kent, whose family are Conservatives, must be deprived of the position in order that a strong supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite could be appointed. We know the doctrine that was laid down by the First Minister in 1897, when this matter was discussed in the House of Commons. He simply said: If any man in the public service of this country makes himself an offensive partisan, an active partisan, that is to say, if he takes an active part in the politics of his country, then I shall give him his full time to devote himself to that particular matter.' Here is a man against whom is the record disclosed by my hon. friend from West Algoma to-day, who takes the most active part that could be taken in the public affairs of this country, who goes upon the public platform and speaks, not only in one election but in two elections, and my hon. friend the Postmaster General sees fit, upon the recommendation I suppose of those whom that man assisted, to re-appoint him with this record staring him in the face. Surely we are entitled to take the words of the Prime Minister at their face value. They do not mean, as I understand them, that a man may be an offensive partisan provided he works for the Liberal party, but that he can not be an offensive partisan if he works for the opposite party. Yet from time to time, ever since that declaration was made eight years ago, we have seen the principle worked out just in the way in which it has been worked out in this case. I concur in the statement of my hon. friend from North Toronto that these papers ought to be brought down. There is no need, it seems to me, of any secrecy in this matter. Whatever aspersion may be cast by these papers on the postmaster's assistant, cannot be greater than the suspicion that has been cast upon that person by the words of the Postmaster General this afternoon. I trust therefore that the papers will be brought down, so that we may see exactly the nature of the evidence which has led my hon. friend the Postmaster General to absolutely disregard the report of his officer, who inquired into and reported upon this matter.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). With regard to the particular instance in question, I have nothing to say, because I am not personally acquainted with the facts. But the honourable and learned leader of the opposition, in the course of his remarks, made an allusion to the removal of the postmaster of Middle Musquodoboit in the county of Halifax, of the facts of which he does not appear to be cognizant. He alluded to this subject a year or so ago when bringing up the question of the wrongful dismissal of this officer on which occasion he stated that the postmaster at Middle Musquodoboit had been——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend misunderstood me, it was the postmaster at Upper Musquodoboit, Mr. Stewart, not Mr. Kaulbach.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. He alluded to both.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not allude to the one at Middle Musquodoboit.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. This very interesting locality will have the eyes of Canada turned upon it on account of this discussion to-day. The postmaster at Middle Musquodoboit was dismissed, but not on the first complaint that was made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not allude to him at all.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. And not on account of the assembly of the notables in that district to meet the learned leader of the opposition, not on account of the influx of political partisans in that district on that occasion, but it was because it had been proved by the affidavits of three or four reputable people that he had both canvassed for the opposition candidate and that he had taken an active part in the organization of that district on behalf of the Liberal-Conservative party.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will my hon. friend tell me if that is a worse offence than the misappropriation of public funds?

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. I will be able to tell something about the misappropriation of public funds too if necessary. Now with regard to the question of the removal of the postmaster at Upper Musquodoboit, that gentleman was retained in office although his partisanship was well known and was most offensive to a large number of the residents of that locality, who repeatedly wrote letters to members asking for the dismissal of that gentleman on the ground of political partisanship. Affidavits were sent that this gentleman had canvassed a number of individuals pending that election, and had used his influence and his office as the rendezvous for the choice spirits of the Conservative party in Upper Musquodoboit. I resisted for a long time recommending the removal of that individual but when it became known that in addition to his partisanship he had used personal abuse both to a number of leading gentlemen in that locality and personally to myself to my knowledge, I took upon myself to recommend that that very objectionable individual to whom the learned leader of the opposition has alluded to this afternoon be removed from his office as an object lesson to others in the vicinity that they were not to use their position and office to damage the government of which they are servants and to abuse residents in the locality.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When did the abuse take place? I am very much surprised.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. The abuse took place—I did not know the man at all. I was paying a visit to that portion of the country, and the first thing I knew I was abused by that gentleman from a wagon while passing through the woods. I did not know him, but I found out afterwards that it was the learned postmaster of Upper Musquodoboit.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman tell me when it took place?

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. It took place previous to the election of 1900.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He has been in office for four years since.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE. That only proves what I have said, that I am a long-suffering individual.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). It has been the habit of quite a considerable portion of the public press of this country, and particularly of pulpit speakers, to make the statement that Canada is so utterly dead to any sense of decency in politics that no matter what is said on either side of the House is applauded. I think if some of those editors or reverend gentlemen had been in this House to-day and had seen the Postmaster General sit down as he did amid profound silence on the other side of the House, with not a single bit of applause, they would at least admit that crimes may become so great that even partisans will not approve of them. That was the case this afternoon. I remember last year when Sir Richard Cartwright was brought to task in the celebrated Jackson case—and I must join with the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) that the conduct of Sir Richard Cartwright on that occasion was rather to be admired than that of the Postmaster General—Sir Richard Cartwright said plainly and fairly that a crime had been committed and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) omitted the most important part of Sir Richard's statement on that occasion, that while a crime had been committed a greater crime had been committed by Jackson in letting it be found out. The Postmaster General will not admit a crime has been committed although the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. William Roche) who has listened attentively to the discussion when he rose to speak would not say a word in approval of the conduct of the Postmaster General in this case. The Postmaster General has had some admirers I think among the independent press in this country, but I think after the explanation in this case they would shudder to think of that hon. gentleman being at the head of one of the large spending departments of the government of this country. He is at the head of a department where two things can be carried on, a certain amount of petty grafting and a large amount of vindictiveness, and the country generally knows that there is no minister who has pursued with greater vindictiveness officials who are not friendly to him politically, than the Postmaster General since he came into office. The hon. member for Lancaster recalls the great Grimsby case which was mentioned last year. What was the man's offence in that case? He was standing at his door and hearing from a man coming down the street the result of the poll he said: If that is the case, Mr. Gibson is defeated. The Postmaster General who is so tender hearted to-day, without any regard for that man's family or feelings drove him out of his position. I need not recall many other cases where nothing but vindictiveness was stamped on the face as the sole and only reason for men being put out of office. Let us consider how the hon. gentleman regards the conduct of his own department in other respects. We had a case the other day. A post office contract expired—and I do not know how many similar cases might be discovered if inquiry were made—and without asking for tenders, although the 'Courier' had received only $140 odd, the Postmaster General undertook to advance his salary to $160 for this mail service in utter defiance of the law.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. What law?

Mr. BENNETT. The law that the Postmaster General cannot give what he pleases to a courier.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Is there anything in the law which prevents my doing so?

Mr. BENNETT. Common decency, and I hope and trust that there is law in this country to say that the Postmaster General cannot give mail contracts at whatever figure he thinks right. Had the hon. gentleman called for tenders, the work would have been performed at a cheaper rate than it was at first, but without any warrant or authority he increases the pay from $140 odd to $160 a year. And what is the reason? Because the man is one of the strongest partisans in that district. My hon. friend from Halifax has pointed out that because a postmaster permitted people to come to his house that is sufficient to make it a rendezvous and have him dismissed. In the adjoining riding of Simcoe they go on the platform with the approval of the Postmaster General and if he will dismiss him I will give him the name of a postmaster there——

Mr. LANCASTER. I shall give another.

Mr. BENNETT. He will not dismiss him because he is one of the hangers on. How does he deal with the patronage in his department? Thousands and thousands of dollars worth of supplies have to be purchased for the use of the department throughout the Dominion, thousands of dollars have to be spent for repairs of mail-bags. Are tenders asked for this work? Boots are required for the carriers in Hamilton. Why the hon. gentleman who represents Hamilton on that side (Mr. Zimmerman) has not influence enough apparently to have $400 worth of boots for the men in his own constituency in connection with the postal service supplied by a firm in that constituency.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. My hon. friend forgets that I have only been a member of this House a very short time, but I would like to know if the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has tried to get that patronage?

Mr. BENNETT. When my hon. friend on the Liberal side cannot get it what chance can there be for my hon. friend on the Conservative side?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I have not tried to get it.

Mr. BENNETT. We have the fact that the Postmaster General does not think it beneath himself to take up to a little country town like Aurora, in his own constituency, thousands of dollars worth of patronage in order to strengthen himself. One would think he ought to be a little courageous especially when he represents what was supposed to be, until the last local elections, a Grit hive, and give that patronage to other ridings where it rightfully belongs. He tells us that no pressure was brought on him to have this postmaster reappointed. But let the House bear in mind the dates of his dismissal and reappointment. Mr. Dobie resigned on the 21st May, 1904, and was not reappointed until the 16th February, 1905. Does the Postmaster General expect any men of this House or any person in Thessalon or Algoma to be so supremely innocent or idiotic as to believe that the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dyment) was not continually pleading for the reinstatement of this official? Why, the evidence upon which he was reinstated was all before the minister when the minister dismissed him. There is not a word in that record in rebuttal of the statements made to Inspector Henderson. Mr. Henderson went to Thessalon and made a full inquiry. He found that the daughter of the postmaster there, who was his assistant, had given out of the till public moneys to her father. On one occasion she had handed her father $450 to buy a house. I need not traverse the ground of defence. The salary of the postmaster in a town of that size is paid every month. How then could the postmaster at Thessalon believe that there was $450 due him for a month's salary, when his salary is only $1,000 per year? On another occasion she gave him $172 out of the till to buy pulp wood, on another $200 and on still another $300. Why, in those sums alone there is $1,000 involved, and therefore how could the postmaster pretend, with any show of plausibility, that this was salary? The dates will show that these payments were all crowded together, and no doubt were made to meet certain exigencies not connected with the public service at all. But the fact of the matter is that in that part of the country such an offence is simply winked at. It has never been supposed that there was any administration of the criminal law in that section. Take the outrages committed at the Soo in connection with the elections there, when the very men to whom was intrusted the administration of the criminal law simply laughed at those offences and condoned them. It is notorious that the administration of criminal law in Ontario, particularly in Algoma, has been a farce. Mr. Dobey was a strong partisan and knew that he would have the support of the member for Algoma (Mr. Dyment), and of Mr. Wigg the local candidate, and of the criminal prosecutors in that district, and consequently felt quite certain that nothing would be done to him. And nothing would have been done if his case had not been brought to the notice of the House. I do not suppose that even after this exposure, the man will be dismissed. We had a somewhat similar case yesterday afternoon of an agent at Fort Macleod who put all the blame on his son, and in this case we have the postmaster at Thessalon saddling all the responsibility on his daughter. He should be dismissed for his cowardice if for nothing else. This incident gives a little insight into what is going on at Ottawa. Whether there have been other similar cases or not in the Post Office Department I am not aware, but I know from the public accounts that the Postmaster General distributes patronage in his own riding in order to assist himself, and at the expense of the public. Go all over the province of Ontario, and you will see those large iron boxes placed on the different streets for the reception of letters and other mail matter. Does any one believe that those boxes are furnished at a fair price, that tenders are invited, and the contract for them given to the lowest bidder ? Not by any means. They are given out to the strongest partisans of the Postmaster General in the little town of Aurora, and are made in a small foundry there instead of being given out to public competition. These people last year were paid $3,500 for these boxes ; and year by year the Postmaster General, in order to strengthen himself in that riding, is giving out contracts for thousands of dollars worth of supplies without tender. The House has been furnished an example this afternoon of the tension which the Postmaster General's conscience can stand. I have had similar instances in many an election contest in the province of Ontario and am in a position to judge of the elasticity of the hon. gentleman's conscience.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have some remarks to make on the matter before the House.

Mr. FIELDING. It was understood that the House would not sit to-night, and if the hon. gentleman is not going to be long we might wait a little.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Better adjourn the discussion as there are others who wish to take part in it.

Mr. SPEAKER. The only question before the House is the motion to go into supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The debate can be continued whenever the motion is again made to go into supply.

Mr. FIELDING. Perhaps we had better formally go into supply now, and then, when another day the motion is made to go into supply, the debate can be renewed.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

Mr. FIELDING. We will not meet again to-night, owing to members being engaged elsewhere. I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the House meets again, I hope the Postmaster General will be able to bring down the papers on this subject to which reference has been made, in time for any further discussion.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I will take the matter into my serious consideration.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 6.05 p.m.

Mr. BENNETT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, May 19, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 164)) to incorporate the Monarch Bank of Canada.—Mr. Gordon.

Bill (No. 165) respecting the Canadian Yukon Western Railway Company.—Mr. Campbell.

Bill (No. 166) respecting certain patents of the Ideal Manufacturing Company.—Mr. Campbell.

Bill (No. 167) for the relief of Arthur Howe Hersey.—Mr. Johnston (Lambton).

EMPLOYMENT OF ALIENS.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I beg to lay on the table the report of His Honour Judge Winchester on the investigation respecting the alleged employment of aliens by the Père Marquette Railway Company.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman explain shortly what the result of the report is ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The report finds that in a number of cases the Père Marquette Railway Company has imported aliens contrary to the Alien Labour Act. I think it would be advisable to have the report printed, and I would make a motion to that effect.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it the intention of the government to introduce any amendments to the Alien Labour law this year ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No conclusion has been come to. That is under consideration.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the Orders of the Day are taken up, I would like to inquire if there is any probability of my getting a return which I moved for some time ago, showing the number of permanent appointments made in the civil service since 1896 ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As the session threatens to be a long one, I think my hon. friend will have an opportunity of getting his return.

THESSALON, ONT., POSTMASTER.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Mr. Speaker, the leader of the opposition asked me yesterday whether there would be any objection to my laying on the table copies of the papers in connection with the Thessalon post office matter, which was under discussion yesterday. I told him I would think over the matter. I have done so ; I see no objection, and I will have copies of the papers prepared and laid on the table at the earliest possible moment.

THE RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. H. LENNOX. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question. On the 22nd of February the matter to which I wish to refer was under discussion, and after it had been pointed out that there was no provision in the Railway Act, the right hon. gentleman said :

I must say that I have a confession to make to the House, and a confession that is not pleasant to me. I did not know that the commission was not only not empowered but not obliged to make a report. I have always understood that it was part of the duty of the commission to make a yearly report of their operations ; not only of the money which we gave them to spend as to how they have expended it—and for this we are responsible to parliament—but also of their operations, what they have done, what cases they have decided, so that the public could know exactly what has taken place. We have a right to that information, and if it is found after a conference with the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Railways, who is more familiar than I am with the Act, that the commission is not bound to make such a report, I think we should enact legislation this very session to have such a report from the commission. I shall at once call the attention of the Minister of Justice to this. If the commission is not under obligation to make such a report it is due to parliament that it should be at once put under such an obligation.

I wish to ask the right hon. gentleman if that conference with the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Railways has taken place and with what result ? I ask this question as I do not see that any legislation has been introduced.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that a report will be ready in a very short time.

Mr. LENNOX. What I asked more particularly was whether the Minister of Justice is of the opinion that there is a necessity for an amendment to the Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot give an answer to-day. I do not know that he has expressed an opinion.

SUPPLY—THE RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LENNOX. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to a matter which came up on Wednesday. In reply to a question from me regarding the report of the Railway Commission, that hon. minister said :

I would say to my hon. friend that the report has not been laid before the House and the department is not in a position to lay such a report on the table, but as soon as I am in a position to do so I will submit it to the House.

Further on, when I called attention to the fact that a promise had been made, and that it was difficult to understand why the hon. minister did not carry out his promise, he said :

I think my hon. friend must be under some misapprehension as to any assurance that I gave him in respect to the placing of such a report upon the table of the House. I said that I would exercise due diligence in endeavouring to get that report and that I had been assured by the railway commissioners that such a report would be prepared. I have not received such a complete report. I was mixing up the two commissions. You are asking in respect to the Railway Commission ?

Mr. LENNOX. The Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not received that complete report yet, but I am expecting it.

As the hon. minister seemed to be under the impression that no definite promise had been made, I took occasion on Wednesday, to show that such a promise had been made at least two months previous. On the 3rd March the hon. minister then said :

I had a conference with the chairman of the Railway Commission, and he stated that the secretary of the commission was now preparing such a report. As soon as it is placed in my hands I will lay it on the table of the House.

Mr. LENNOX. Can the hon. minister state any definite time when it will be ready ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not ask the exact date. Only to-day the chairman assured me that it was being prepared, but I did not ask whether it would be ready in a day or two. I assumed it would be ready in the near future.

Again speaking definitely on the 17th March, exactly two months ago, he said :

A report has been promised, and I hope to have it within a few days.

Not only on the two occasions I have referred to, but also on the 22nd February we were definitely given to understand that a report would be brought down without delay. In view of all these promises, it was rather extraordinary that two days ago the minister said he never did make any definite promise and was not in a position to make one. In fact the matter seemed to have slipped from his mind altogether. Not only is that the unfortunate position of things, but we have not yet had the amendment to the statute which the First Minister promised us on the 22nd February nor can we get any definite information about it. It is very unfortunate that this omission should have occurred in the Railway Act, but apart altogether from that Act, we would have expected the Railway Commission to have had a specific report ready before parliament met. Not only should we have from this Railway Commission a general report on that branch of the service which is costing the people so much money, but we should have a special report from the late chairman of the commission (Mr. Blair) who made a special tour in the United States in order to acquire some expert knowledge of the working of commissions of this kind. The report of the Railway Commission itself as to all its doings and all its expenditure should have been in the hands of the Minister of Railways before parliament assembled and that report should have been embodied in the report of the minister. Yet we have the unfortunate condition of things that the minister was bound to admit two days ago that he knows practically nothing about the matter yet, that he has taken no definite action to procure definite information which the House required and as far as he is concerned it had practically slipped from his mind. Now having called the attention of the minister to it in this way I trust that some effort will be made to have this report laid upon the table of the House at once so that we may know what this commission is doing, particularly as it is a new departure, and we should be able to judge whether it is carrying out the expectations which those who framed the Act had in view at the time the Railway Act, 1903, was introduced.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). On Wednesday I stated that I could not give any definite assurance as to the time when the report from the Railway Commission could be expected. I had at that time in mind the fact that I had on a former occasion expressed to the House my hope that I would soon be in a position to lay on the table of the House the report of that board for the reason that I had been told by the chairman that such a report was in course of preparation. I have not yet received that report although I have looked for it on more than one occasion. I have however some assurance and hope that I will be able to place it on the table by Monday next at the latest. I of course am dependent upon the Railway Commissioners in the matter. It is not something under the control of the Department of Railways and Canals; I cannot force the commission to make a report, as it does not emanate from my department, and therefore I cannot be held responsible for its non-production, but I shall hope that it may be forthcoming at least by Monday next.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM. On March 3rd this question was first asked, something over two and a half months ago, and now the minister admits that he cannot force the commissioners to submit a report to him. That is one very good, strong reason why an amendment to the Railway Act should have been introduced compelling the Railway Commission to make a report to this House. The people of this country are expending large sums of money for the purpose of having a Railway Commission, and that parliament is to be deprived of all control over that Railway Commission is something I cannot understand, and I think in view of the statement made by the First Minister the government are a little lax in introducing their amendment to the Railway Bill. In this particular instance, I think parliament is entitled to a report and that steps should be taken at the earliest possible moment to have the Act amended in that direction.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to his words on February 22. He says now that he has no control over these gentlemen, but on page 1532 of the Revised 'Hansard' he says:

> I am only endeavouring to point out what I consider to be the law. I am quite free to admit that there should be a report from the commission. I am quite in accord with what has been stated in that regard, and I think that the commissioners should make a report from time to time to the Governor in Council through the Department of Railways and Canals, for as my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) says, if this commission is not in any way connected with the government through the Department of Railways and Canals, he cannot see any other department by which it would be thus connected. I quite agree with him that the natural avenue and channel between that board and the government is through the Department of Railways and Canals, but it does not seem to me that the Act makes proper provision for that.

The minister on that occasion admitted that there should be a provision for a report and that immediate steps should be taken to force the commission if they would not act, and that such a provision should be introduced at once if it was not already in the Railway Act. We have had no intimation that any step has been taken towards a remedy of that very peculiar omission which occurs in the Railway Act.

Mr. EMMERSON. I quite adhere to my expressions of a former date in connection with a report from that commission. I might state to my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) that he need not become suddenly impatient. There seems to be some weeks, at least some days before us, before the close of this session, and we must remember that there are quite a number of amendments under consideration; a Bill is now on the order paper making amendments to the Railway Act, and before that Bill goes through and is considered by the committee I think that it will be my duty and privilege to submit to the House some amendments and among these there may be found one that will cure the defect in the Act in connection with the report. We have been pretty well occupied during this session with work; at least there have been Bills that have received a little consideration, and I would not wish to interfere in any way with the progress of matters of that kind with any legislation affecting railways, but the Railway Department will have its turn in connection with legislation and I hope my hon. friend will not be too impatient.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER. I do not think it is quite fair for the hon. Minister of Railways to suggest that the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) is impatient in this matter. We have been here four or five months waiting for legislation from the government and have had only one piece of legislation which my hon. friend properly says has taken up a good deal of time. But that is not the fault of the opposition but the fault of the legislation which the government has introduced. It is legislation which is very controversial and very peculiar. This Railway Commission was appointed two years ago and for two years the Dominion of Canada has had that commission, but the people have had not a tittle of official evidence or information as to what that commission is doing, not one particle of information have the people of Canada as to whether that commission is doing anything like what was expected when it was appointed. I have a good deal of respect for the commission as a whole and for the individual members of it, but this is an instance where all public servants will do as they like if there is not some restraining or guiding hand in the shape of legislation or rules to govern them to which they must submit. Instead of lecturing the House and the hon. member who spoke in the interests of the people, I think the Minister of Railways or some member of the government should apologize to the House and the country for their laxity in this matter. It is not a matter that should be treated with levity. We have a large expenditure connected with this Railway Commission, and they were appointed to do work that is most important to the country. We do not know nor do the people of the country know at all except in cases where they have hunted up information for themselves,—sometimes at a good deal of expense, and always with a good deal of trouble,—what that commission is doing. They are not responsible apparently to the Minister of Railways or to the government in the matter of making a report. I do not see why there was not legislation introduced last session in this connection for this matter was known last session. On February 22 of this year as has been said, attention was drawn to it and the hon. member for South Simcoe then brought the matter up. The Prime Minister on that occasion said :

> I shall at once call the attention of the Minister of Justice to this. If the commission is not under obligation to make such a report it is due to parliament that it should be at once put under such an obligation.

That was on the 22nd of February of this year, and here we are practically three months later and nothing has been done. Now 'at once' might mean, I should think less than three months' time. Parliament is in session and I do think we ought to have a little more speed in this matter. To-day we were promised in a very cursory, almost off-handed way by the minister. that there will be some other measure in regard to the amendment of the Railway Act which is supposed to be dealt with this session and which is now on the order paper. It is certainly as important as any legislation that has been introduced by the government, or promised by the government. I do not think that the manner in which the Minister of Railways treats this House would inspire the public with much hope that the government are going to do any better in the future than they have been doing the last few years ; and if not, I think the censure of the people should be visited upon this government. I would urge upon the government, so far as I have any influence, at least I would request the government as representing my constituency in this House, to take immediate action. I do not wish to allow this occasion to go by without putting on record my protest and the protest of my constituents against the dilatoriness with which the government has treated this matter, the want of care, the lack of appreciation of the importance of the matter, which I think the government has evinced. This matter is one which demands a remedy at once, and we ought to have better assurance than we have yet had from the Minister of Railways that it will be attended to, and that the Railway Commission will be charged with the duty of making this report, either quarterly, half yearly or yearly, at all events at some set time, when these reports will become public documents and open to inspection by the public, so that the people can learn what is going on with regard to this matter, and all those other numerous matters that the commission has to deal with. The House desires to learn how the commission is working, and whether any other amendments are required in order to make it fulfil the intention of its appointment.

Mr. D. A. GORDON. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to a condition of affairs that I think requires his attention and the attention of the commission. I refer to rates that are charged by American roads entering Canada and passing through this country What we ask is that the same rates, the same conditions and the same privileges be demanded of them as they are obliged to grant to the people of the United States. I think this proposition is reasonable and fair, and I know it is one of great moment to the people of Ontario. The American roads entering Canada name what rates they like on commodities originating in the states for people in Canada, but when they enter Canadian territory they do not give proportionate rates. We ask that this matter be taken into consideration, and if the facts justify it, that the matter be laid before the commission to be dealt with by them. Let me say a word with reference to the commission and its acts during the past year. If there is any one who is not familiar with the decisions that have been rendered by that commission I think he has himself to blame. I do not think there is a farmer in Canada to-day but knows of the sweeping decisions that have been made with regard to rates on cattle and rates on grain. The decisions given in favour of manufacturers in regard to rates, so far as those decisions are obligatory, have been of such importance that to-day the commission is swamped with appeals ; no less than 1,450 complaints have been placed before the commission since it was appointed, and the great bulk of them I think have been disposed of. The position of American roads running through Canada has been so well discussed that it is not necessary for me to refer to it at any length now. I hope, however, that the tariffs, the minimums, and also the classifications affecting shippers, will be looked into, and that they will be made applicable to conditions existing in this country, and we firmly believe that a solution will be found to the present difficulties and complaints that require to be remedied.

Mr. EMMERSON. In reply to my hon. friend, I may say that the question he has raised is one of very great importance, so much so, indeed that it demands earnest and prompt consideration. The particular point to which he has invited attention has been referred to on more than one occasion within recent weeks. I think there was some discussion with respect to it in this House. I can give my hon. friend assurance that the Department of Railways has had the matter under consideration, and has invited the consideration of the government to action in the direction which he has indicated. I trust that before the session closes, in connection with the amendments that are to be introduced to the Railway Act, there will be found a remedy for the grievance which he alleges to exist. I may say that my own view was that there was a provision in certain sections of the Act, notably section 273; but if it is found not to go far enough, I think it is the desire of this House to make a remedy complete and beyond question.

THESSALON, ONT., POSTMASTER.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE. Before you leave the chair—I see the Postmaster General is not in his place—I would ask the Prime Minister if, in bringing down the papers with reference to the Thessalon post office which the hon. gentleman promised a little while ago, he would see that the salary warrants issued by the postmaster up to the 31st of August, 1904, are brought down ; also that a statement showing the amounts paid to the postmaster on account of salary up to the 19th of May, 1904, be included in the papers laid on the table of the House for the information of the House.

Motion agreed to, House went into Committee of Supply.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). We will take up the supplementary estimates for the current year, these being balances that are required to wind up the affairs of the current year.

Civil government—Post Office Department—further amount required for contingencies, $1,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the hon. Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) any account of that ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). I do not know anything about the item. I have no doubt that $1,000 is a small item in the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to inquire if any portion of this sum is required to pay the salary of this postmaster ? Just for the information of the hon. Postmaster General I will read a portion of a letter that has been sent to me. It is as follows :

Now, Mr. Taylor, I beg your kind indulgence for a few moments while I call your attention to the way in which the deputy returning officer and his poll clerk conducted the election proceedings at polling division No. 3, Kitley, where I was agent in your behalf. The deputy returning officer was George Milton Leverette, the village postmaster, and his polling clerk was Benjamin Franklin Stewart, a carriage maker. From the opening to the closing of the poll the deputy returning officer ran things with a high hand. Everything was trampled under foot. Oaths of office, the statutes and myself, not physically but officially, were trampled under foot and completely ignored. Never did I see such brazen defiance of law and right. It was plainly manifest that the Grit machine was doing business at the old stand as brisk as ever and had established a local branch at Frankville under management of the deputy returning officer and his poll clerk. To enumerate some of the violations of the law committed by these two election officials, I wish to say that the deputy returning officer in defiance of a protest from me placed the ballot box on the floor to the right of his chair ; when so placed it was behind the table and entirely out of the view of those present. I read the law to him, but he emphatically told me it was on the floor and was going to stay there and I might help myself if I could. All that was left for me to do was to seat myself on a chair beside it, which I did. Another thing, he said he did not have the required statutory dates to be inserted in the oath to voters, but I really did not believe him. Fortunately, however, I supplied this want by having them myself under certificate of the township clerk, otherwise I do not believe I should have been able to have sworn a voter at all that day. Again, he allowed his poll clerk to act as agent for your opponent, Gibson, in the absence of duly appointed agents. I protested, but was powerless. The poll clerk told a voter, one Frank Livingston, whom I challenged, that I was doing dirty work, and was only trying to bluff him out of his good vote. Through these encouraging words of the poll clerk the voter took the oath and voted. To-day he stands a perjured man. Something more yet. The deputy returning officer put some private mark or number on the stub of the ballots besides the number he was entitled by law to put on the counterfoil. Here again, I protested, but was told that he was doing so and would continue to do so and I might help myself if I could. I asked to see that private mark or number, but was refused. Now, Mr. Taylor, if I could afford the expense I would go to Gananoque to see you personally about these matters. Something should be done. An example should be made of these two election officials because if not they will be bolder than ever the next time. The matter, however, will be left entirely in your hands. Many Conservatives here say that the matter should be attended to and that prosecutions should follow. As for the deputy returning officer, you can do what you like with him. You can bring his case up on the floor of the House next session or deal with him otherwise as you think best.

I would like to inquire of the hon. Postmaster General if any portion of this sum is to pay that man's salary. I draw these facts to the hon. minister's attention. There is his officer, a postmaster, drawing probably $1,000 a year salary, and yet he goes and acts as a partisan, ignores the law and conducts an election in the manner here described.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. No portion of this item will go to pay the salary of any postmaster. There is in the estimates always an item for salaries. If my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) will turn to the estimates he will find that that is so. Having made an explanation and as this matter is not connected with this item I have nothing further to say, but if it is proposed to continue the discussion perhaps there may be some further question that would occur to my hon. friend.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to know if the hon. gentleman approves of this conduct on the part of one of his postmasters, and if any portion of this amount is to pay his salary will he spend some of it in conducting an investigation into the actions of one of his officers who has conducted himself in this way ? I should further like to ask the hon. gentleman, if the investigation shows that these statements are correct, will he dismiss his official ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I should think this is not the tribunal to deal with the conduct of men who are engaged in conducting an election. There is a way of reaching them under the election law. If I correctly heard my hon. friend reading that letter it was written prior to the meeting of the House and he has had it for many months in his possession. The law gives him a remedy. Every person who undertakes to act as an officer of the Crown in conducting an election is bound to conform to the law, and if he fails to conform to the law the law is within the reach of every person, my hon. friend and all others, and there are officers whose duty it is to prosecute persons who violate the Election Act. It is not the duty of the Postmaster General. It is the duty of the officers who are engaged in the administration of criminal justice to prosecute. I know nothing about the matter. I do not even know the name of the person, and it would be an extraordinary thing if I had to inquire into the conduct of officers as to the manner in which they might or might not have conducted themselves when they were appointed to positions having nothing whatever to do with their positions connected with this department.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend is quite right in saying that this letter was written some time ago, but this is the first opportunity I have had of dealing with the matter. When the estimates of the Post Office Department were taken up I embraced the first opportunity I had.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. We passed supplementaries months ago.

Mr. TAYLOR. I was not present when the items of the Post Office Department came up or I certainly should have referred to this matter then. Will the hon. Postmaster General allow one of his paid servants, drawing a salary of probably $1,000 a year, to accept a position as deputy returning officer at an election and violate the Election Act in a partisan manner as this postmaster has done ? I gave the hon. Postmaster General his name. It is Mr. Leverette, postmaster at Frankville. If public officials are at liberty to run post offices and to act as partisan agents the country ought to know it. The country authorizes him to employ these officials but he says he is not responsible for their conduct. He says that the hon. member can take proceedings under the law. There are the courts of law, but I want to take the proper course. I bring it to the attention of the hon. Postmaster General, and I ask him to deal with it, or let the country know that postmasters and all other officials under this government are at liberty to do as they please, that while being paid for their services by the country they may at the same time conduct themselves as offensive partisans.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I think it is no part of my duty as Postmaster General to inquire into the manner in which officials of my department may have conducted themselves, should they be appointed to such positions as those of deputy returning officers. I have not heard of this man's existence until this minute, and I do believe it has been the practice throughout Canada under all governments from time to time to make use of various officials for the proper conduct of elections. If these officials in the discharge of their duties as election clerks, or poll clerks, or returning officers do not comply with the election laws they are amenable to these laws. It is not my duty to follow them in all their other spheres of life ; my duty is confined to seeing that they perform their duties as postmasters, and if they undertake other duties they become answerable to some other tribunal, and that is the tribunal to which my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) should appeal. This is not the place to try that question, and I think my hon. friend would be more in order by referring the conduct of this gentleman as returning officer, to his superior in that capacity who would be interested in maintaining the proper management of elections.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Postmaster General knows that he has dismissed a great many postmasters throughout Canada for alleged political interference, and only yesterday we had the case of a postmaster with a salary of $25 who was dismissed simply because he exercised the right of franchise. Here is a man with a salary of probably $1,000, and he can be as offensive a partisan as he likes, and when I ask the Postmaster General to investigate and have him dismissed if the charge is correct, the Postmaster General says he will not interfere.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) asked me if I would investigate the manner in which this gentleman acted as returning officer.

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly, I asked the Postmaster General to investigate the charge that this postmaster has been an offensive partisan in not discharging his duty faithfully and in doing it in an offensive partisan manner. If that is true the postmaster should be dismissed.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman is evidently mixing up his grievances, and he does not make clear what he really desires. I understand from his letter and from his remarks that this officer is charged with two offences, but I thought the gravamen of the hon. gentleman's charge was that this postmaster had not properly conducted an election, and not that he was an offensive partisan in the discharge of his post office duties. The hon. gentleman referred to this man having placed a ballot box in some place contrary to law, and he seemed to dwell upon that feature of the charge. My remarks were directed to that, and I say that as to the manner in which he may have acted as an officer for the proper conduct of elections it is not for me to interfere. If there is a charge that he has contravened any of the rules of conduct for a postmaster it is my duty to investigate.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is all I ask.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. If the hon. gentleman will send me a charge against this postmaster in that respect I will have it investigated, but I would not feel at liberty to inquire into his alleged misconduct as a returning officer.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have made my charge here and the Postmaster General will see it written down verbatim in 'Hansard' to-morrow, and every word that appears in 'Hansard' will be substantiated. This man has acted illegally, and I ask if it is the policy of the government to let their postmasters act as deputy returning officers in an offensive partisan manner ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Let us not misunderstand. My hon. friend mixes up his grievances.

Mr. TAYLOR. I mixed up nothing ; I read the letter.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. He asks whether or not it is the policy of the government to allow postmasters to act as deputy returning officers in an offensive manner. It is not the policy of the department to allow postmasters to assist in an offensive manner under any circumstances, either as deputy returning officers or in any other capacity, and I am quite willing to investigate that branch of my hon. friend's complaint. If there is a complaint that as a deputy returning officer this man contravened the election law, I do not think my hon. friend will expect me to inquire into that phase of his conduct. I am quite prepared to take my hon. friend's speech and the letter, in the light that I interpret it and so far as this man's conduct as postmaster is concerned I am quite prepared to investigate that.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the Postmaster General tell us what he thinks about allowing postmasters to act as deputy returning officers at all ? The Postmaster General says that this House is not a tribunal for trying election cases, but I would remind him that it is a tribunal for trying the conduct of the Post Office Department. Does the Postmaster General want us to understand that he has no objection whatever of opportunity for money being embezzled cers ? I will leave out of the question for the moment whether this postmaster acted in an offensive way or not ; I will not consider whether it may be another case of opportunity for money being embezzled while the postmaster is not in charge of his office ; but I would ask the Postmaster General if he thinks that a postmaster should act as a deputy returning officer when in the discharge of his duties as such he must of necessity be away from his post office from about half-past eight in the morning until six o'clock on the evening of election day ? Does the Postmaster General think that is right ? The Postmaster relies upon the technicality, that he cannot investigate this man's conduct as deputy returning officer but that he can investigate it as postmaster, and that being so does he believe that the postmaster should for an entire day be absent from the post office. We all know that the party in power selects these deputy returning officers from amongst men of their own political persuasion, but I will not press that particular phase of the question for the moment. I wish to know now from the Postmaster General if he approves of postmasters acting in a capacity which must keep them away from their post offices for an entire day ?

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. I am prepared to state here that the postmaster in question, Mr. Leverette, is a first-class man, and I say further that he is a man who would transact any business he has to do in a proper way. If he is a returning officer he is a man who will discharge his duties in a legal manner, and as postmaster or in any other capacity he will be found to be a faithful officer. But, to expect that a man who only gets a couple of hundred dollars per year for running a post office shall devote all his time to that office is perfect nonsense. Such a man must undertake any business that comes in his way. I have no doubt that Mr. Leverette when he does vote will vote Liberal, and vote against the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), but I am satisfied that he will be found to be honest and faithful in the discharge of any duties that are entrusted to him.

Mr. FINLAY. I can tell my hon. friends opposite that I have a case in my county of a somewhat similar kind to that which we are now discussing. In the town in which I live the postmaster is Mr. J. B. Pearce, a Conservative who has been twenty years in the post office, and I can prove that he went out and canvassed against me, and canvassed strongly against me too.

Mr. HAGGART. The Postmaster General since he came to office has established some very bad precedents which he now finds are embarrassing. The rule used to be that every postmaster except those in cities and towns had a right to be an active partisan in an election if he wished. Because he held a little post office worth $7 or $8 a year, he was not to be debarred from taking part on behalf of either the Conservative or the Reform candidate ; and I think that was the true principle. That principle has been infringed upon by the Postmaster General, who has dismissed this postmaster without a trial and after he denied being an active partisan. It was sufficient for the hon. Postmaster General to get a note from the member of the House saying that a certain postmaster had been an active partisan in the election, and he was dismissed. I have heard the Postmaster General asked in this House if there had been an investigation, and his reply was : No, it was a sufficient reason for him to receive information from the member representing the riding that a postmaster had been an active partisan. It is small politics for any representative of the government to interfere with that kind of officer. Except in cities and towns, postmasters have a right to be active partisans on either side if they wish, and there should be no interference with them by the Postmaster General or any other person as to how they voted.

Mr. TISDALE. I agree with what has been said by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), and I will tell you how this matter has been managed in the county of Norfolk up to the present time. The local member, Mr. W. A. Charlton, the late Speaker of the Ontario legislature, was the postmaster for many years at a small village called Lyndoch. He did not attend to the post office himself, but one of his clerks did so. Mr. Charlton always stumped the riding against me. I was applied to in regard to this, but I declined to interfere with him for any political act. I said that if any one had a charge to make as to the way the office was run, I would see that it would be investigated and dealt with. In two of my elections, another gentleman who was a postmaster, and is still postmaster, though his father ran the post office while he lived two miles from the village, was president of the Reform Association and an active opponent of mine. The same kind of application was made to me with regard to him ; but I declined to go further than to have an investigation made into any charge that might be made against him in connection with the work of the post office. We have never introduced this small politics into the county on either side. So far this has been the rule followed by this government. I agree with the hon. member for South Lanark that outside of cities and towns, where postmasters are paid for giving their whole time to the service, there should be no interference with postmasters. It is a shameful practice on either side in regard to these petty offices, and I would oppose my own party indulging in it, whatever anybody else might think about it. I would be opposed to it even in retaliation. In Norfolk we have strenuous politics, but we have never found it necessary to resort to that.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Finlay) complains that a Conservative postmaster in his district took part against him in the election.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. He had a perfect right to.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, he had a perfect right to, as my hon. friend from Brockville says. When I came here in 1882, when a Conservative government was in power, there were a great many postmasters throughout my county who had taken an active part against me. One was the father of my opponent in two elections. He helped his son all he could; yet he continued to keep the post office and died in the service. I never raised a finger against him, because it was his right to do as he did. As my hon. friend from Brockville knows, the Newborough postmaster has also been an active partisan against me in every election; but I never asked for his dismissal, because he had a right to do as he did, and he is postmaster yet. But where a postmaster accepts another position, such as deputy returning officer, and carries into that his offensive partisanship, as this postmaster did, then I think it is time to complain. But the policy adopted by the Postmaster General, when a Conservative postmaster is complained against, though he does nothing more than vote, is to dismiss him without trial.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. There is no such case on record, as a man dismissed because he voted. Every postmaster has a right to vote as he likes, and he has never been interfered with.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to give the case of a man who was dismissed simply for voting. The postmaster of Beauharnois, named Doutre, was dismissed because he voted. He never took any other part in the election, and there was no investigation into his case.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I must, as far as parliamentary rules will allow me, give an emphatic contradiction to the statement of the hon. gentleman. No dismissal has ever taken place anywhere except on my authority, and I have never given authority to dismiss anybody for such a cause. The circumstances are not what my hon. friend thinks they are.

Mr. BERGERON. It is very easy for my hon. friend to say so.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. It is very easy for the hon. gentleman to make the other statement.

Mr. BERGERON. I remember the discussion here at the time. There was no investigation, it was denied that the man had done anything improper, and he was dismissed purely and simply because he had voted Conservative.

Mr. FIELDING. How is it known how he voted?

Mr. BERGERON. It is supposed that he voted Conservative. That was not even proved, but that was the reason alleged at the time. He was getting $40 a year, and he is on the street now. When my hon. friend was talking of kind-heartedness, I thought of that case.

Mr. TAYLOR.

Governor General's Secretary's office—Clerical assistance, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $250; further amount required for contingencies, $2,000; $2,250.

Mr. FIELDING. These two items have been requested by the Governor General's secretary to enable the office to complete the transactions of the year. The first is for an additional clerk, and the latter is for the general contingent account.

Mr. HAGGART. Who is the new clerk?

Mr. FIELDING. A young lady who came out with His Excellency from England.

Department of the Geological Survey—To pay Frank J. Nicolas as editor of the publications, from December 5, 1904, to June 30, 1905, at $125 per month, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $858.87.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will explain this item, as I was in charge of the department before my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior took charge of it. Dr. Bell, the superintendent of the Geological Survey, represented to me that he was under the necessity of having further aid in order to advance the publication of the reports of the survey. Mr. Nicolas has had experience in that branch of work in England, and upon the recommendation of Dr. Bell that he was qualified and that the work was absolutely necessary, I authorized the insertion of this item in the estimates.

Mr. HAGGART. He has some technical knowledge?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is what I understood from Dr. Bell. I do not know Mr. Nicolas and have never seen him, and this was done on the recommendation of Dr. Bell.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it a permanent appointment?

Sir WILFRID. No; this is only to cover his appointment to the 1st July. In the supplementary estimates for next year there will be an appropriation for him also.

Mr. HAGGART. When there is a vote taken for these extra clerks in the Geological Survey, or any other department, there ought to be a report from the deputy head showing the necessity of the appointment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have such a report from Dr. Bell.

Department of the Secretary of State—to pay Peter J. O'Donnell for services as messenger from July 1st, the date of his appointment, to November 8th, 1904, at the rate of $500 per annum, $176.36.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a case where the officer is being paid for a short time prior to his passing the examination. He passed the examination, but was actually in the service a short time before, and this is to cover his allowance during that period.

Mr. SPROULE. Whose place did he take ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is not an increase in the staff. The messenger who had the position before left the service.

Board of Civil Service Examiners—to meet extra cost of examination, $100.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the cost of the whole board ?

Mr. FIELDING. The usual vote is $3,000, and this is an addition of $100.

Mr. BERGERON. It may increase like that every year.

Mr. FIELDING. It depends upon the amount of work to be done. It may increase a little.

Charges of management—Office of the Assistant Receiver General: Halifax, $300 ; St. John, $150 ; Winnipeg, $500; Victoria, $100; Charlottetown, $200; printing Dominion notes, $25,000 ; expenses in connection with the issue and redemption of Dominion notes, $1,800 ; $28,050.

Mr. FIELDING. These items nearly all arise from small increases of $50 each. There is one new clerk at Winnipeg getting $300 per annum, and a new clerk at Charlottetown at $600. The greater part of this item is for the expense of printing Dominion notes.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there any necessity for these receiver generals' offices at all ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes ; they supply the currency for the whole Dominion. It is necessary we should have a supply of currency on hand, and they are dealing with the banks all the time.

Mr. HAGGART. Could they not be dealt with directly from Ottawa ?

Mr. FIELDING. These offices are a great convenience. Centralizing everything at Ottawa is not always popular with the mass of people. These are in a sense government banks, and they supply the currency to the other banks. It is a great convenience to the banks to obtain this currency at the different offices throughout the Dominion and not have to send to Ottawa. The system was well thought by my predecessors, and I see no reason to change it.

Mr. U. WILSON. What is the cost at each point of these offices ?

Mr. FIELDING. The sums taken in the main estimates for these offices were as follows :—Toronto, $7,300 ; Montreal, $5,800 ; Halifax, $8,000 ; St. John, $6,900 ; Winnipeg, $6,500 ; Victoria, $4,550 ; Charlottetown, $4,900.

Mr. BERGERON. Who gets those amounts ?

Mr. FIELDING. Various members of the staff in these offices.

Mr. BERGERON. Are they government employees ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes ; but in Montreal the City District Savings Bank does the duty. With that exception, they are government offices everywhere.

Mr. BERGERON. Could not that business be done through the banks without costing us anything ?

Mr. FIELDING. I have never known of a bank willing to do business for nothing.

Mr. BERGERON. Could it not be done by the government bank—the Bank of Montreal ?

Mr. FIELDING. We would have to pay that bank for doing it.

Mr. BERGERON. This amounts to $25,000 or $30,000 a year in Montreal. Would it cost that much if done by the bank ?

Mr. FIELDING. The work in Montreal is very large and the responsibility very great, and where you have great responsibility you must pay for it.

Mr. U. WILSON. How many of these bank notes were printed ? I believe this is an addition to the appropriation in the main estimates.

Mr. FIELDING. In connection with the assistant receiver generals' offices, we have also the savings banks. There are two systems, and we are gradually consolidating them. There are what are called the government savings banks and the post office savings banks. Wherever the post office has a savings bank we are gradually arranging to transfer to it the accounts of the government savings bank. My hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. U. Wilson) asked about the cost of the printing of Dominion notes. The committee is aware that the business of the country, with regard to the circulation of these notes, has enormously increased, and there is a further reason why this vote has to be larger—and it is one that has always won the sympathy of the House—the desirability of having our currency cleaner than it used to be. I am glad now there is a very great improvement ; but, of course, if we are to retire the old notes and give new ones, the cost of printing is increased. In that way we are spending considerably larger sums than in former years. The expenditure for the last year for which we have the official return, the year ending June 30th, 1904, was $129,974, practically $130,000.

Mr. U. WILSON. But this is to finish this year.

Mr. FIELDING. In the main estimates we have an appropriation of $110,000, which with this $25,000 will give a total appropriation for the year of $135,000, against $129,974 actually expended last year, so we are allowing for a small increase in the year now current.

Mr. U. WILSON. How many have you had printed ?

Mr. FIELDING. We retired last year $8,000,000 of old notes and substituted new ones besides the natural expansion.

Mr. U. WILSON. Do you know in what proportions ?

Mr. FIELDING. The $1 and $2 notes are chiefly used. The $1 is the most generally used issue. The $4 note is also used to some extent.

Mr. HENDERSON. Might I ask the hon. minister if he has considered the question of doing away with the $4 Bill which is not generally approved of by the commercial community? The difficulty is that a portion of the four is so much like a one that a mistake is apt to be made in handling the money hurriedly. I think the matter came up last session.

Mr. FIELDING. I think at one time there seemed to be some ground for complaint that the appearance of the $4 note was not sufficiently different from that of the $1 note. We made some change in the form of the $4 note for the purpose of obviating this difficulty, and I have heard no complaint against the use of the $4 note recently. There was a complaint that sometimes the original $4 note could be confused with a $1, but I have had no complaint for some time and I think the notes are sufficiently separate and distinct in appearance to guard against any confusion.

Mr. HAGGART. Would my hon. friend give us a statement of the amount of notes in circulation and the value to the government of having these notes, what the interest amounts to ?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not give that now, but before we come to the item in the main estimates which has yet to be dealt with I shall see that the information is prepared.

Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps the minister could give us the average amount issued and we could draw our own conclusions.

Mr. FIELDING. The amount actually in circulation on April 30th of this year was $47,937,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Ones and twos ?

Mr. FIELDING. Ones and twos and fours. It also includes some of the large notes not often seen by the public, which are used by the banks and which are called legals.

Mr. TAYLOR. The $5,000 notes.

Mr. HAGGART. That includes the reserve the banks are obliged to keep in Dominion notes?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, they have to use these notes to a considerable extent. The amount of our circulation has been increasing very much. In 1890, the Dominion notes in circulation were something over $15,000,000; in 1895, $19,000,000 ; in 1900, $26,000,000 ; in 1901, $27,000,000 ; in 1902, $32,000,000 ; in 1903, $39,000,000 ; in 1904, $41,000,000 and on April 30, 1905, $47,900,000. So my hon. friend will see the amount is increasing very largely.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the percentage you have to keep in gold for the purpose of redeeming them ?

Mr. FIELDING. Up to a certain sum we keep 25 per cent. We changed that sum a year or two ago. Up to a certain sum we keep 25 per cent and after that we keep dollar for dollar, so that for the larger part of our circulation we have gold to correspond.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like a full statement in connection with the general estimates as a matter of interest and curiosity.

Mr. FIELDING. I would be very glad to give my hon. friend the details then.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister give the names of the firms which print these notes?

Mr. FIELDING. They are printed entirely by one concern under contract. The work is done in Ottawa, and the printing firm is called the American Bank Note Company. It is a branch of the institution of that name in New York, but under our contract they had to erect a building in Ottawa. The whole business is transacted in sight of the parliament buildings, on Wellington street, and although the company bears an American name and has the authority and backing of the American institution, it is practically Canadian, as at least 95 or 98 per cent of the people employed there are Canadians.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How long will the contract last?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the contract will expire in 1907.

Mr. HAGGART. Are these notes printed in the same way as government notes and postage stamps ? Are they printed under government supervision? It is a very dangerous authority to grant to any printing institution any way it is done.

Mr. FIELDING. There is all supervision we can usefully employ. The matter has been carefully considered by the chief officers of the department. On one occasion I got the Auditor General to go down and examine the method employed, and in all cases we have been satisfied that all possible precautions are taken.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many officers have the government watching the work ?

Mr. FIELDING. The government have no officers now at all. Experience has not shown that it is necessary, but the whole method of printing, every detail from the beginning to the end, has been very carefully worked out, and our government officials have examined it and reported that it is entirely safe and satisfactory.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the safeguard then between the people and the Bank Note Company ?

Mr. FIELDING. Well, the only safeguard is the method by which the business is done and the reputation of the great organization which is doing this for nearly all the governments of the civilized world. I had the matter carefully examined into by the deputy minister and the Auditor General and they were both satisfied that all the precautions they could possibly take are involved in the present system.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Are the goods being handled in the same manner by the governments of other countries?

Mr. FIELDING. This concern at New York is making notes for banks the wide world over and is making notes for many countries. Some countries have their own printing departments. The United States circulation is printed at a government printing bureau. The English system I think is to have the work done by contractors. I do not think the English bank notes, &c., are printed at a government institution, but by private contractors. In the United States they have a printing bureau, but this company with headquarters in New York makes notes for banks the world over and for a number of countries. It is an old established institution of the highest reputation, and I have no reason to doubt that all safeguards that we could impose are in force now.

Mr. HAGGART. I had reason to inquire into the matter some time ago when I was in charge of the Post Office Department, and I found that in Great Britain and in all countries in Europe it is put under the charge of a certain department and then when the printing is done by contract as it is done in England, it is under the supervision of the Inland Revenue Department there and a most accurate supervision as to the paper and everything in reference to it is maintained. There is extreme danger in a company that has a contract with the government having an unlimited right of printing Dominion notes without the supervision of the government. The same thing refers to postage and inland revenue stamps, and I think there should be an efficient government supervision over them even when the work is done by contract.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I certainly believe that the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has made a very wise remark with reference to having an official of the government look after the matter. I would ask with reference to the printing expenditure of $140,000, whether the minister has taken into consideration the advisability of the government printing their own notes ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, that matter was discussed some years ago, and we thought that if we had a building specially constructed by the government, in close proximity to the department at Ottawa, in close contact with it, that would be the wiser system, and that was the system which prevailed when I came into office. So far as the system itself is concerned, it was found to work satisfactorily, and we thought there was no reason to change it. We required the contractor to put up a special building for the purpose, taking every precaution with regard to quality of paper, kind of paper and number of sheets. Whether we could make it any better by putting one of our own officers to live in the building, may be a question, but we have never had reason to believe we could make the system more efficient than it is. I grant that it is a matter of the utmost importance, and if there is a possibility of a more complete supervision we should endeavour to attain it. On more than one occasion I have thought the matter over in my own mind, and I have instructed my officials to go over the system and examine it thoroughly, I think on one occasion the Auditor General was with them ; they did so, and they were quite satisfied that all possible precautions were taken.

Mr. HAGGART. But suppose the supervisor, the head of the department, appointed parties for the purpose of defrauding the government, what possible check have you ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is no system you can think of that will not in the end leave the responsibility with somebody. I doubt if any officer of the government we could put there, on an ordinary salary, would be a more responsible person than that great corporation is itself. I doubt if any officer of the government we could put there would give us a greater guarantee than that company gives by its standing reputation. If an officer of the government were put there on a salary of a couple of thousand dollars a year, he could still be corrupted.

Mr. HAGGART. But there should be checks on that person, the responsibility should not rest on one man.

Mr. FIELDING. No matter what you do, in the end some individual must be trusted.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister of Finance, in answering my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) said that this company would put up a special building. There was a special building before. There was a very good company that were doing this work under the late government, the British American Bank Note Company, working in a special building, but they were a Conservative concern. The new concern had no building and had to put up one, that is the whole matter so far as the building is concerned. Now the question of a guarantee is altogether a different one. I think the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) is right in saying that there must be a very careful supervision over that work. We have read a great deal about things of that sort going wrong. The Minister of Finance says he has taken every precaution, no doubt he has taken great care, because he is in a way responsible to the country. I am glad to hear that the government are having a renewal of the notes oftener than in the past, so that we may have clean bank notes, ones, twos and fours. I am surprised to hear that it costs $130,000 a year to do that. I want to ask if there is not some redeeming advantage to the government in changing the notes in circulation. I am told that banks are very anxious to secure the circulation of their notes, is there not some way of compensating the government for the cost of renewing their notes, so that we may get something to the credit side of this $130,000 ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think not. Of course, a bank is allowed to issue notes up to its subscribed capital, and if it has a large amount of notes in its vaults unused and can get those notes afloat, the bank profits. The government would not profit by any increase of its note circulation because it has to keep within the limit fixed by law. In the case of silver, it would profit, because the intrinsic value of silver is much less than its nominal value, its face value. I am sorry my hon. friend referred to the old company ; it is unfortunate for him. The fact is that we did not take the contract away from that company ; we invited public tenders, and the company which made the lowest tender received the contract. The old company were not very satisfactory, and after their contract terminated the government brought action against them and recovered $50,000 in cash damages for breach of contract and got a verdict.

Mr. BOYCE. In changing the design of the $4 bills has the picture of the Soo locks been dropped ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think my hon. friend will find that interesting lock on the bills at present, it has disappeared. By the way, a criticism might as well have been offered on the fricture of the fish on the backs of some of the notes, because we had no guarantee as to what kind of water the fish were swimming in. However, the lock on the note now is a Canadian lock.

Mr. HENDERSON. Speaking of a guarantee of everything being properly carried on in the office where these bank notes are printed, to my mind the calling in of soiled notes to the extent of $8,000,000 a year is certainly a very great protection to the country, because, in so doing, if any forgeries were committed, they would readily be discovered. In the course of four or five years the entire issue would be called in, so that no very large amount of spurious notes would get into circulation until they were detected by the departmental officers. I am a little surprised to hear the Minister of Finance say that the issue of these notes is a matter of no profit to the country.

Mr. FIELDING. After the first limit is reached, the first $25,000,000. We increased it, I forget the figure to-day.

Mr. HENDERSON. Now is it absolutely necessary that the Dominion of Canada, with all its wonderful resources, should be obliged to put up dollar for dollar in gold for this issue ? You do not ask a chartered bank to put up dollar for dollar of its issue, only a fractional part of that issue it put up. If a chartered bank were compelled to put up dollar for dollar in gold, I do not think there would be much profit in banking. Nor do I see the necessity of the Great Dominion of Canada being called upon to put up dollar for dollar, to hold gold in its vaults to redeem its bills. To my mind, the pledge of the Dominion of Canada is absolutely sufficient to warrant the fact that its money is perfectly good, and that it can be accepted by all parties, at all times, without hesitation. Then, I think we would have some profit on the issue of this currency. I am inclined to think this is a relic of past days, simply something that the government has copied from governments that have gone before. We know they have copied a good dead from governments of the past. I think this is a matter that the hon. Minister of Finance should take into consideration and that in this great wealthy country he will be able to come down in the course of another year or so and say that he believes that a profit can be made out of this circulation. If we are going to have a government circulation at all I think we ought to be able to make it at least pay its own expenses, to make sufficient out of it to pay for the printing of the government notes, and that to my mind could be done by dispensing with this system of holding such a large amount of gold for the purpose of redeeming notes which I think are sufficiently guaranteed by the credit of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. HAGGART. Where is the gold held? Is it held by the Receiver General ?

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) think it should be wise or prudent that I should tell him where all that gold is ? I think he should have confidence enough to believe that the government has this gold. I would rather not proclaim on the house-tops where it is. I will be glad to tell him privately where it is.

Mr. HENDERSON. As a matter of fact is it held at all ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have very great doubt that it is actually held in gold.

Mr. FIELDING. If the effect of my answer is to create a doubt whether this amount is held in gold or not, I shall be obliged to tell my hon. friend. Seriously it does not seem a prudent thing to state where it is all held, but I will be very glad to give the hon. member private information.

Mr. BERGERON. If we pay $140,000 for the printing of these notes we must derive some benefit from the issue of them? We must have some compensation somewhere or else we would be engaged in a losing business. Where do we get the benefit from the issue of ones, twos, and fours ?

Mr. FIELDING. Suppose we do not get any benefit if the country requires it for business would it not be the duty of the government to provide this issue ?

Mr. BERGERON. Why do not the banks of the country provide that ? I do not see why we should spend $140,000 a year to provide notes of the denominations of one, two and four dollars when the banks could do it. I know that the banks are willing and axious to do it. Are we making money by the issue of these notes or are we loseing anything by the printing of them ?

Mr. FIELDING. When my hon. friend says that the banks are willing to do it, of course, the banks are willing to do it provided we allow them a larger circulation than we now give to them. If the banks want to do it all they have to do is to increase their capital and then they can issue notes right up to the extent of that capital.

Mr. BERGERON. They cannot do it unless you allow them to do it.

Mr. FIELDING. We would not prevent them. Whenever any bank has expressed a desire to increase its capital we have never raised any question. The banks no doubt would issue more notes if we wished it. The banks can only issue an amount equal to their paid-up capital, and that is not equal to the requirements of the country. Therefore, the difference must be supplied by the government.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend knows that the banks would be delighted to issue ones, twos and fours and, in fact shin plasters. I remember hearing that the banks would have been glad to issue these notes but that the government would not allow them to do so. The government insist upon issuing ones, twos, and fours. I do not see why they should not allow the banks to do so, especially when they are obliged to spend $140,000 a year, which represents a very heavy capital, for the printing of these notes. I would like my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to place upon 'Hansard' so that the people will know it, the reason why we issue these notes when we have to pay so much for the printing of them and whether we are losing that amount of money every year as a result of this system.

Mr. FIELDING. The capital of the united banks of the country is not equal to the currency demands of the country if they issued notes in denominations of ones or twos it would make no difference if they only issued an amount up to the aggregate of the capital subscribed by the different banks.

Mr. BERGERON. What difference would it make if a bank were to issue ten ones instead of a ten dollar bill or five ones instead of a five dollar bill ?

Mr. FIELDING. The main point is that you have to supply the needed currency to meet the demands of the expanding trade and commerce of our country, and if you took the united subscribed capital of all the banks and issued an equal amount of currency you would find a stringency in the money market, because you would not have enough to carry on the business of the country. If the banks want to issue more notes all they have to do is to put up more capital. Whether a note is issued in the denomination of one dollar or five dollars makes no difference in this respect. The subscribed capital of the united banks of the country is not nearly enough to carry on the business of the country.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it not a fact that the government of Canada are making a great deal of money in the issuing of these notes in denominations of ones, twos and fours ?

Mr. FIELDING. As I have already stated there is a point—it used to be $25,000,000, but we increased it a year or two ago—up to which we are obliged to carry a reserve of 25 per cent of gold. As respects that there is a profit to the country ; but after you pass that point, for every additional note you issue, you have to put up dollar for dollar and therefore there is no profit in it. We increased the limit in 1903 and that perhaps will meet to some extent the suggestion of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). It used to be $25,000,000, but believing that with the growth and expansion of Canada, we could issue a larger sum on the 25 per cent limit we expanded that in 1903 to $30,000,000, and as the country grows that limit will be raised. There is a certain sum which we may issue with a reserve of 25 per cent of gold. As respects that there is a profit, but when you pass that point for every dollar you issue you must have a dollar in gold against it and there is no profit on that.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the amount you are allowed to issue on the 25 per cent basis ?

Mr. FIELDING. $30,000,000.

Mr. HAGGART. That is $7,000,000 besides the $25,000,000. That makes $32,000,000.

Mr. FIELDING. It was increased by the Act of 1903 to $30,000,000.

Mr. BERGERON. That $30,000,000 you only have to cover by a reserve of 25 per cent ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is correct. By the Act, 3 Ed. VII, Chap. 43, respecting Dominion Notes, it is provided that :

The Minister of Finance and Receiver General shall always hold as security for the redemption of Dominion notes issued and outstanding at any one time, up to and including $30,000,000, an amount in gold, or in gold and securities of Canada, the principal or interest of such securities being guaranteed by the government of the United Kingdom, equal to not less than 25 per cent of the amount of such notes so issued and outstanding.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the country make enough money to cover the amount of $140,000 a year that is now being spent for the printing of these notes ? I want to know whether the country is redeeming this expenditure.

Mr. FIELDING. I think we do until we reach a certain amount. As respects the first sum there is a profit, but for every additional dollar we issue there is no profit.

Mr. BERGERON. If we are not making much out of it why should we not allow the different chartered banks to issue these notes? We look upon our banking system as a very good one and that being so why should not we allow them to issue these notes of the denominations of one, two and four dollars ?

Mr. FIELDING. As a matter of convenience it is better that the banks should issue notes of a certain class and that we should issue notes of a certain class, but it would make no difference if they issued ten ones instead of issuing one ten.

Mr. BERGERON. If their circulation helps them as they say it does, why should we not give them this privilege ? There are some people in Ottawa who are making money only out of circulation. If that is so, by circulating $39,000,000 or $40,000,000 in ones, twos or threes, it would help them to increase not only their circulation but their capital.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Why not ?

Mr. FIELDING. Circulation does not help them to increase capital. Capital helps them to increase circulation. They must issue their circulation on the basis of their capital. If a bank has a capital of $1,000,000 and it has only $500,000 or $600,000 of notes out, if the business has only taken up that amount, it has then $400,000 which it can issue in money, and if its own business is not expanding it can loan these notes to another bank, but the moment it reaches the limit of its capital it must stop. That is where the government comes in and supplies the difference.

Mr. BERGERON. Cannot the Finance Minister find a way to compel the banks to issue clean notes, just as the Dominion is doing ?

Mr. FIELDING. We have not thought it necessary to do more than to generally indicate to the banks that they should pay attention to the cleanliness of the notes in circulation, and I think they are doing so. The Dominion notes in circulation are vastly improved in that respect, and I think the bank notes too. We have not taken any legislative power to compel the banks, but I have no doubt they will pay attention to the matter as a result of the discussion that has taken place here.

Mr. BERGERON. The Finance Minister says he will have some slight amendments to the Bank Act ; could not he propose an amendment to cover this point ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. BERGERON. I hear constant compiaint of the dirty bills circulated by the banks being injurious to health.

Mr. FIELDING. Most of us are so happy to get these bills that we do not quarrel about their shape and colour, but I trust the discussion to-day may induce the banks to give attention to the matter.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister of Finance is of course not making any personal reference because the members are paid by cheques, the face value of which is very small I am sorry to say.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. I assume it would not cost less to print a one dollar note than it would to print a ten dollar note, and if that be the case it would seem that the point is well taken.

Mr. FIELDING. Of course it makes no difference in the cost of printing whether the figure be a 'I' or a 'X' but it has been found a matter of public convenience that these small notes should be dealt with by the Dominion, and I do not think there is any complaint about it. With the extending business of the country the banks as a rule are able to find employment for their circulation on the basis of the present arrangement.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no complaint if we do not lose money in connection with it.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Finance has told us that there are $47,000,000 now in circulation ; has he ever had a calculation made as to how much of that is lost yearly through fires, &c. Does he think that seven millions of that forty-seven millions have been lost.

Mr. FIELDING. Once it is issued it is charged up as a part of the debt of this country and must always remain so until it is redeemed. Therefore, whether it is lost or not does not concern us. True it could never be presented, but it still stands in our books as part of the debt due by the Dominion. We never write off a note until it is redeemed and destroyed.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand that a good share of the profit of the banks is due to the loss of notes in circulation ; there is hardly a fire that there are not some bills lost.

Mr. FIELDING. There was a question in olden times as to banks making profit in that way, but I do not think they claim to-day that they have a right to make such profit. Until a note is redeemed it is held to be a debt of the bank. In olden times there was a practice of writing off notes of that character, but I do not think that practice is followed by the banks to-day.

Mr. HENDERSON. Although the amount in circulation according to the books of the Finance Department is forty-seven millions, it may not be more than forty millions ?

Mr. FIELDING. There would not be so much as that lost.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the many years during which these notes have been in circulation I have no doubt that several millions have been lost. I would ask the Finance Minister to tell me, if he thinks it is perfectly safe to issue thirty millions on the basis of 25 per cent of gold, why is it not perfectly safe to issue fifty millions ? Where would be the difficulty ? What reason does the Minister of Finance give for not issuing the entire amount on the basis of 25 per cent gold ? If this were done it would remedy the complaint that the country is losing money by paying for the printing of these notes.

Mr. FIELDING. I fear that all the great financial authorities of the world will say that my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) is touching on dangerous ground. His proposition simply means what was at one time irreverently called the rag-baby scheme of currency ; grinding out the notes as fast as any one took them up and making money in that way. The financiers of the world have not regarded that system with approval. If Canada adopted the policy of issuing notes on the credit of the country without regard to limit, while we might have great pride in that as Canadians, the financial authorities of the world would not consider that our credit was thereby made good.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It has been suggested that of the forty-seven million dollars worth of notes in circulation possibly seven millions may have been destroyed. On the other hand is there not a possibility that several millions of notes now in circulation may be counterfeit ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think not. I appreciate what hon. gentlemen have said as to the necessity of extra precaution, but I think we generally discover counterfeit notes very quickly. There have been a few instances and we have traced them and generally succeeded in finding the counterfeiters in a short time and putting them behind the bars. It is quite a long time since we heard of any Canadian counterfeit notes, and so far as I know there are none to-day. We have taken all reasonable precautions, but in the light of what has been said to-day it will be my duty to look into the matter to see if there is any other precaution which can be taken to prevent the possibility of the occurence of that which my hon. friends fear.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it not possible for us to have a definite knowledge of the value of the Dominion notes now in circulation ?

Mr. FIELDING. We can only give to the public a definite knowledge as to the number issued. What becomes of them is beyond our knowledge and control. We are bound to asume for the purposes of accounts and public credit that they are existing somewhere, and so they stand on the records as a charge against us.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. With reference to the thirty million dollars in our treasury, of course I do not want to ask where it is at present, but I wish to know whether a large portion or any portion of that gold is deposited in the banks of this country, and whether we are receiving interest on it ?

Mr. FIELDING. No portion of this is held by banks in the way of ordinary deposits ; it is held in other ways. Of course we have our transactions with the banks in other respects and large sums of money are moving to and fro, but these moneys are not included in such bank accounts.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it would be a good thing for the Finance Minister to tell us now where that gold is kept.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course I am not personally interested in any way, but sometimes we hear the statement made, especially during election campaigns, that there is a chest here in which that gold is kept, and very often we hear it said on the platform that the Liberal candidate was up in Ottawa and he got into the dark room where they keep the money and had his arms up to his elbows in the gold. This is an opportune time to know whether that is true or not. I do not believe it myself, but it might be as well to have an authoritative official statement from the Finance Minister.

Mr. FIELDING. What is that ?

Mr. BERGERON. There is an idea in the country that there is a chest somewhere here in Ottawa where you keep this large amount of gold, and speakers on the stump say : so and so is a thief, because he was seen in Ottawa with his arms as far as his elbows down in the gold. Of course the more enlightened of the electors think it is not true, but I would like to have an end put to the rumour. I imagine that the money must be kept in the banks. My hon. friend has gone too far in denials until now. He is bound to say where that money is, because he has changed the ideas of those enlightened people who say that there is no money in Ottawa—that it is all in the banks, and that the payments are all made by cheques. If there is any place here where gold is kept, he is bound to say so.

Mr. FIELDING. There are various reasons for not telling, and one is that I am most anxious to protect the reputation of my hon. friend.

Mr. BERGERON. Those who are accused are on the government side, not the opposition side.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is thinking of the other government. It was not in that respect that I wanted to protect my hon. friend's reputation. After what has occurred, this display of my hon. friend's zeal to know where the gold is kept would lay him open to suspicion in event of any loss, and I think we ought not to put him in that box.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it is the duty of my hon. friend to let the public know.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see why $25,000 more is required than was estimated last year, because it surely must have been foreseen that we would require more Dominion notes.

Mr. FIELDING. The Finance Minister does not like to make his first estimate too large, because ministers generally are inclined to spend all you give them and want more. I know it is contended that the departments ought to take in their first estimates all that they want. The Minister of Finance sometimes cuts down the estimates of his colleagues, and tells them that if they want more, parliament will have to vote it in the supplementary estimates ; and that is found to be a wise arrangement. In this case he has applied it to himself. I have shown that we spent on Dominion notes a little less than $130,000 last year. Our appropriation for the present year is $100,000, to which we add this $25,000, making $135,000 for the service of the year, a small increase over last year. We must expect an expansion of this item every year.

Mr. BERGERON. Joking apart, I would like my hon. friend to say that there is not a cent of gold kept here in the vaults of the government but that everything is held in bonds or in banks. I think that should be said.

Mr. FIELDING. All the government money is held in places of safe keeping and in the usual places where it was kept when I became Finance Minister.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. minister should not leave people under the impression that there are vaults here where gold is kept.

Mr. SPROULE. I think my hon. friend is entirely too innocent if he thinks there are not ways of the 'heathen Chinee' type by which the government can get money when it wants to carry an election.

Mr. THOMPSON. This discussion has proven extremely interesting to me, as the representative of the only territory in Canada which exclusively produces gold. As I am going before this session closes to submit a proposition to the government to purchase all the gold that we produce in the Yukon Territory, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance if there is any objection to the government purchasing gold and giving therefor government certificates ? We produce somewhere in the vicinity of $10,000,000 a year.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a matter which will probably come up when we have our mint ready for operation. I do not think it arises at present in connection with any of our financial arrangements. But when the mint, the foundation of which is now being laid in Sussex street, is completed, we shall have to take that question up. While I would listen with respect to anything my hon. friend has to suggest on the subject, I would like to keep an open mind, so that we may consider it later.

Department of the Interior—further amount required for salaries and expenses of mines branch, $2,500.

Mr. OLIVER. This item is to provide for the printing of an edition in French of the report on electrical smelting of Dr. Haanel, who is in charge of the mineralogical branch. Dr. Haanel has visited Europe and made an investigation of the process of electrical smelting of iron. Provision has already been made for the printing of his report in English.

Mr. HAGGART. Is the geological department divided into two branches ? I never heard of the mines branch before ?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that the mines branch is a sub-branch. The Geological Survey does not take cognizance particularly of minerals, but the mines branch is to take special cognizance of minerals and mineral development.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not remember any legislation setting apart the mines branch.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no special legislation constituting a mines branch. Strictly speaking, it is not a branch of the Geological Survey, but a part of the Department of the Interior, designated as a mines branch just as any other department may designate the different features of its service.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The Minister of the Interior tells us that it is to look after minerals. I would naturally suppose that the geological department would have the care and investigation of the minerals of the country.

Mr. FIELDING. The Geological Survey is devoted to the exploration and survey of the country; but, as the Minister of the Interior has said, this mines branch has reference to other matters, such as the smelting of ores, and Dr. Haanel was sent to Europe to investigate that subject.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. While on this subject I would ask the Minister of the Interior whether Dr. Bell has been gazetted as director of the survey? I sincerely hope he has. He has been doing a noble work for our country for many years.

Mr. OLIVER. No, he has not been gazetted as director.

Mr. HAGGART. Who is at present the head of the geological branch?

Mr. OLIVER. Dr. Bell is acting director.

Mr. HAGGART. No appointment has been made?

Mr. OLIVER. No appointment has yet been made.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it not about time? The position has been vacant for a couple of years.

Mr. OLIVER. I have not been conducting the department long enough to be able to give any information on that point.

Mr. HAGGART. I have known Dr. Bell, who is at present acting director, for many years. I know he has taken a great deal of interest in the Geological Survey, and I think he is the best man for the place.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have had a good deal to do with this department since coming to Ottawa, and have followed up Dr. Bell's work a number of years. I hope the minister will see that he is gazetted at an early date.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—

To pay Jules d'E. Clement the difference between the salary of a second-class clerk at $1,100 and that of a first-class clerk at $1,400 per annum for the first six months of fiscal year 1903-04 (revote) .. .. $ 150 00

To pay M. C. Doyle the difference between the salary of a junior second-class clerk at $1,000 and that of a second-class clerk at $1,100 per annum for first six months of fiscal year 1903-04 (revote).. .. .. 50 00

To pay F. H. Houde the difference between the salary of $500 and that of a junior second-class clerk at $600 per annum from July 1, 1903, to December 11, 1903 (revote).. .. .. 44 44

Contingencies—further amount required.. .. .. 2,500 00

2,744 44

Mr. HAGGART. Why did you not pay the amount when you had the vote?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is the result of a misunderstanding with the Auditor General.

Mr. BARR. Do you understand each other now?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We thought it would be settled, but it could not be settled except by a vote of parliament.

Mr. HAGGART. Did the Auditor General refuse to pass it because these men had not complied with the requirements of the Civil Service Act?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No; it was purely and simply because the amount was left open for over a year on the refusal of the Auditor General, and, as a matter of justice to these civil servants, it was put in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. U. WILSON. Was it because the vote had expired that the Auditor General refused to pay?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. These three officials had been promoted and should have been paid their full salary from the 1st July, 1903. The session lasted until October, and when they claimed their salary, according to promotion and the vote, the Auditor General refused to pay the six months from the 1st July to the 1st January. From the information I have, he made no objection in the case of the other officials who were in the same position as these three, and all the others were paid. The matter remained in this way the whole of the year 1904, until at last the Auditor General said: The year has elapsed; better have the amount voted regularly by parliament.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman give us the Auditor General's letter on the subject?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is no letter. It was a personal interview with the Auditor General.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely a refusal to pay on a recommendation from the department would not be made verbally?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am informed it happens very often that way.

Mr. FIELDING. These officials go and discuss the matter with the Auditor General.

Mr. HAGGART. That is an improper way. There should be correspondence. Where an amount is voted by the House and the Auditor General refuses to pay, we should have the reasons in writing for his refusal.

Mr. INGRAM. Was the controversy with the Auditor General on the ground that these men were not entitled to be classed as first-class clerks ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No ; it was a misunderstanding as regards how the payments were to be made, and the matter remained in abeyance the whole year. I am bringing it before the House on the advice of the Auditor General himself.

Mr. HAGGART. What about the $2,500 further amount required for contingencies?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have explained that the department having increased during last year it was impossible to provide the necessary contingencies. The department has nearly doubled since 1904, and of course we had no provision made for that.

Mr. HAGGART. What will this amount be for this year and what was it for last year ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The amount in the main estimates this year is about $20,000. This will bring the amount to $19,000, but there was an overdraft in the former year of $7,000 so really it is only $12,000. This was for accounts for the year previous that were left over and had not been provided for and this amount was taken from the vote of this year.

Mr. HAGGART. Then that amount should have been voted for the year previous.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. $991.50 were carried over from the year 1902-3, and paid out of the vote for 1903-4, and the following amounts out of 1903-4 were carried over and paid out of 1904-5.

Mr. HAGGART. We do not want the details ; it is an extraordinary way of carrying on business, paying the deficiency of one year out of the following year.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is because we do not intend to do that any more.

Mr. HAGGART. The proper way is to ask for a vote for the deficiencies of this year, and then if there is a deficiency from the year before we should have a vote but let the vote for that year cover it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is included in this.

Mr. HAGGART.

Department of Finance—further amount required for contingencies, $1,200.

To provide for the appointment of a second-class clerk, a barrister, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $200.

Mr. FIELDING. The amount already provided for contingencies in my department is $12,000. This vote includes a certain part of the cost of the temporary clerks for the year, and it includes printing, stationery and sundry small items. The last item is to appoint a second-class clerk. The gentleman is a practising barrister, who does not happen to have a civil service certificate but there is no question as to his qualification.

Mr. U. WILSON. What class of barrister do you get for $1,200 ? He can not be fit to be a judge according to the discussion we have had in this House ?

Mr. FIELDING. He is a young gentleman who has recently entered the profession and is going to act in the capacity of private secretary.

Mr. U. WILSON. He gets an additional salary for that.

Mr. FIELDING. Not at present; it is contemplated he may become private secretary and some part of the other allowance may go to him later.

Mr. U. WILSON. What is the other allowance ?

Mr. FIELDING. $600, which may be paid to different persons, and a part of that has already been given to others in the department, young ladies.

Departments generally—further amount required for cleaning, &c., $2,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is an increase in the general vote in the cleaning service, for the same reason as in the Department of Printing and Stationery. It arises from the increase in the allowance of wages to the charwomen.

Legislation, House of Commons, $94,794.18.

Mr. HAGGART. I received a note in reference to this item asking that it should stand.

Mr. FIELDING. Of course if my hon. friend wishes we shall allow it to stand, but I may say that some of the minor officers of the House who cannot very well wait for the money cannot be paid unless we pass this vote. We cannot pay them until we get a supply Bill, but every day's delay is a hardship. I hope my hon. friends opposite will appreciate that view and try to help us to get this through and get a supplementary vote.

Mr. U. WILSON. I think the Minister of Finance might easily arrange to get money enough to pay the working people ; I think it is a very great hardship.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman with the best intentions is giving very bad advice. I could easily arrange in an illegal way to get money but I do not want to do it.

Mr. U. WILSON. I remember when the members were cut off an arrangement was soon made. And if you can pay members of parliament, I think you could easily afford to pay the employees of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. There was no arrangement made by me. I treated the members the same as I do the charwomen. I waited until I had the legal right to pay them.

Mr. INGRAM. Last session was prolonged after June 30th, and by reason of that fact money was drawn to pay services around this building. It seems to me strange that because this occurred we are short now. Could not that difficulty be got over in some way without our having to be called upon every year to pass estimates like this? We have had this for several years past and it is causing a hardship.

Mr. FIELDING. Of course it is a question of the number of days the session may occupy and although we may have the best intentions that the session is to be short, sometimes unexpected things happen and the delay occurs. I am afraid every time we have a session we will have some cause of shortage. In view of the great expenditures of Canada the amount that we asked for in this way towards the close of a year is not large.

Mr. INGRAM. It is a small item but it is creating more hardship than any other item we vote.

Mr. FIELDING. That is true.

Mr. HAGGART. This $94,000 is an additional amount over the amount voted last year; that is a bad system of bookkeeping, $100,000 of a mistake for one House is too much.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We did not calculate that the session would be as long as it turned out to be. We had not calculated on the power of hon. gentlemen opposite to talk as they have done.

Mr. INGRAM. The trouble is that the First Minister has not brought down his legislation.

Mr. FIELDING. Remember that this includes not only the present session but everything that occurred after the 1st of July last year, because this is for the present fiscal year. So that really a part of the expenditures of last session came into the present fiscal year. We will let this item stand.

Exhibitions—further amount required, $40,000.

Mr. FISHER. This sum is required to finish up the expenditures at the St. Louis exhibition in the course of the fiscal year, and for the preparations for the Liege exhibition that is open and in operation. I had a vote of $200,000 for these expenses in the main estimates of this year. Out of that, as an expenditure on the St. Louis exhibition in the course of this fiscal year, we require nearly $100,000. As I have already explained to the House, we thought best to take some part in a trade exhibition in England last fall and the early part of the winter, for which we spent about $18,000, making $118,000. Up to the 1st of May we have expended on the Liege exhibition a little over $60,000, making the total about $180,000. That leaves us with $20,000. Now, outstanding accounts in regard to the Liege exhibition and other expenditures we shall have to make before the 1st of July, will amount to nearly $60,000. That leaves us with a deficit of about $40,000. In the main estimates for the next year I had $75,000 to finish up the Liege exhibition, as I explained, and some other exhibitions which we wished to take part in. I expect that vote will meet the requirements, but if I were obliged to draw on that vote to pay outstanding accounts before the 1st of July I would not have enough, and would have to ask for a supplementary estimate next year. I thought it was better to close up the work of this fiscal year completely by the present vote. I hope by so doing to avoid the necessity of any supplementary item in next year's estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. What expenses does this cover ?

Mr. FISHER. This covers finishing and closing up the St. Louis exhibition and the initial preparations, the buildings and so forth, for the Liege exhibition, which is now going on in Belgium. That was opened on the 27th of April. We now have our exhibits there and our officers at work. The only expenditure in this connection which I did not foresee was the expenditure for the purchase of some of the exhibits which were loaned to us at St. Louis—mineral exhibits and some exhibits of animals and game. These were so valuable and attracted so much attention that, after consultation with my commissioner, I decided to purchase them. We paid about $15,000 for minerals. I cannot tell exactly what we paid for the animal specimens. But I would like to mention to the committee that in consequence of what we have been doing lately we have to-day a very large class of permanent exhibits. These minerals I speak of can be used over and over again. We send them to Liege just as they were taken away from St. Louis. The same is true of the game exhibits and various other things—photographs, paintings, flags and so forth, of which I have a list here. We also possess a lot of our own show cases and packing cases which we use, and which are of a strong and permanent character, showing a total investment in these things of a permanent character of nearly $60,000. We purchased these mineral specimens from the owners of the mines from which they came. Some of them we had to get ourselves; they were not on hand. We have an official catalogue of the minerals, showing the names of the mines.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Could the minister give us a statement of what he bought, who he bought it from, and how much he paid for it?

Mr. FISHER. I can do that, but it would be a pretty long statement if I were to give every specimen that we bought and the price.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Showing how that $60,000 was expended?

Mr. FISHER. The $60,000 does not cover minerals alone. I am speaking of permanent exhibits.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I want a detailed statement of the $60,000.

Mr. FISHER. I am reminded that in this $60,000 there is, for instance, one item of mineral show cases, $3,000, which were not purchased, but were made up by our staff at the exhibition. There are various kinds of shipping cases, amounting to $11,000, which were also made up by the carpenters. $12,000 out of that $57,000 represents lumber that we purchased ourselves, and hired men to make up the cases for the minerals. As I am informed, if we undertook to sell that to-day we could get more than that for it.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. This is a most unusual purchase.

Mr. FISHER. I will just instance the last exhibition at St. Louis. We had a most magnificent exhibit of cobalt silver ore, an exhibit that has never been exceeded at any exhibition anywhere, and the ore itself is of greater value to-day than we paid for it.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Where was it got?

Mr. FISHER. Near New Liskeard in the northern part of Ontario. We have also got now some quite unique specimens of mineral which could not be duplicated. They were found quite accidentally and we managed to get hold of them. We have some rather extraordinary specimens which attracted a great deal of attention and made the exhibit more effective than the ordinary value of the mineral itself would indicate. Animals and specimens of fur bearing animals we bought for the purpose of making up the game and fur exhibit. These are a little difficult to find. When we do get good ones and they are well set up they are of great value. The United States government tried hard to get our exhibit of fur-bearing animals at St. Louis for their Washington museum and they offered us about double what it cost us, but I said no, we want that for future exhibits. Animals of that kind are not easily procured. There were included in the exhibit a musk-ox, bull, cow and young one and I do not think there is anything of the kind in the world.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the object of paying such large sums for exhibits of this kind? What profit are they going to bring back to the country if no other animals of that kind exist? It is not going to enable anybody to effect a sale.

Mr. FISHER. While it would probably be hard to find any animals such as those we exhibited, we have still a very large number of musk-ox robes in this country for sale. It is quite a large business and we sell these things in a commercial way. But, when we make an exhibit to attract attention, we must exhibit something a little better than the commercial article. If we confined ourselves to the commercial article we would make a pretty good commercial exhibit, but we would not attract the attention of the ordinary sight-seer and to have the exhibit so commented upon as to serve as a valuable advertisement for the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. Some time during the past winter I was passing along Queen Street in the city and I saw a stuffed buffalo. Apparently it was either being brought back from St. Louis or was about to be sent to some other exhibition. Have we such a large number of buffalo in this country that it is necessary or advisable to spend large sums of money to make an exhibit to attract attention to our stock of buffalo with the view of providing a market for that class of animals? I am inclined to think that that time has gone past and it is more a matter of curiosity than a matter of commercial interest to the people of the country.

Mr. FISHER. I grant to my hon. friend that we have no buffaloes to sell. We have not even buffalo robes to sell to any extent, but when you are making an exhibit of fur-bearing animals, if you want to attract the attention of the ordinary exhibition visitor and the newspaper man who is describing the Canadian section, you must make it as varied and attractive as possible and you have to put in a good many things which in a commercial sense may not be valuable to the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it is rather what the ordinary man would call a fake exhibit.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think it is fair to apply that term to it at all. This exhibit at St. Louis advertised this country in a way which I do not think it had ever been advertised before. Personally I only went to St. Louis at the end of the exhibition. I had heard very flattering accounts of the exhibits there and the sensation they were creating. I think some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House said something about that when the vote was up in the main estimates. I went down there rather feeling that these reports were too flattering, but when I saw the exhibits and saw the way that the people were examining them, taking an interest in them and commenting upon them, I felt that good business had been done in advertising our country in a general way. These exhibits have been undertaken by this government and carried out on a pretty considerable scale, I grant, very largely for immigration purposes. My hon. friend will perhaps smile and say that the exhibit of a buffalo will not attract settlers. I do not say it will in that particular instance, but at the same time the variety of things exhibited and the general effect of the exhibition do create an impression on people's minds which draws their attention to the country, gets them talking about it and attracts them so as to enable our other officers to reach them for immigration purposes. I have no hesitation in saying that the series of exhibits which we have conducted during the last seven or eight years has attracted very materially the enormous influx of immigration into this country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think these exhibits should certainly be confined to such articles as the country is at the present time producing, and that we should not do anything to help people to come into the country when the particular article that attracted their attention is not to be found in the country after they do come here. It seems to me it would only lead to disappointment. I would favour very much making an exhibit of everything we can produce, but I do not see the propriety of making an exhibit of what we do not produce, simply for the purpose of making the exhibit attractive. I think there is no genuine policy in that course of procedure.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. There was a large amount of money expended on the exhibition in Japan a year ago.

Mr. FISHER. Three years ago.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. minister gave us to understand that our trade and commerce with that country had wonderfully increased. Could the hon. minister give us an estimate of the increase in our trade with that country during the past year ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the figures under my hand. I am told, however, that during the last year or 18 months there has been a very considerable increase in our exports to Japan. I may say off-hand from my own personal knowledge that the creameries of the Northwest are sending about ten times as much butter to Japan now as they did before the exhibition.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How about flour ?

Mr. FISHER. The export of flour has increased very materially also. I have not the same personal knowledge of flour as of butter, because butter has to come officially under the administration of my own department. But, I am also informed that the flour trade has very largely increased. There is a constant export of Canadian flour to Japan now which there was not before the exhibition.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Would the hon. minister tell us what each of these exhibitions has cost ?

Mr. FISHER. The Japan exhibition cost between $50,000 and $55,000 and the St. Louis exhibition about $320,000—$310,000 if we do not include what may be fairly charged to the purchase of these exhibits which were loaned to us but which since that we have prchased. I think nearly half of that may be charged to St. Louis. $310,000 was the expenditure in connection with the St. Louis exhibition up to the time of the purchase of the St. Louis exhibits. We expect that the Liege exhibition will cost roughly speaking, something over $150,000.

General statistics—to increase the salary of E. H. St. Denis to $2,500 per annum, $625.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. I wish to draw attention to some little anomalies in the census report which I think are worthy the consideration of the minister. In making a division between the urban and rural population it would appear that large stretches of rural territory are taken into the urban districts in consequence of which I very much doubt if we have a correct estimate of the rural population as distinguished from the urban population. For instance, in the city of Ottawa we have 3,000 acres of territory with a population of 59,000, but in Fredericton, New Brunswick, with a population of 7,000 we have 10,000 acres. of territory. Probably that is due to some particular method of laying out the municipal boundaries by which a large area of rural district is included in the municipality, and in consequence of which the urban district would get credit for people who live on thousands of acres in the rural district. I think some method should be adopted whereby we would be able to get the population of the cities and towns distinguished from the population of the rural districts. In Emerson, Northwest Territories, with a population of 840 there are 5,000 acres of territory ; in Winnipeg with 12,000 acres there is less population than in Ottawa although the area of Winnipeg is four times greater ; in Portage la Prairie there is a territory of 11,000 acres and a population of less than 4,000. It would seem to me that many outlying townships must have been included with the town itself in such cases as these, I would like to have some definite information in the census so that we may know what the actual rural and urban population of Canada is. Then, when the question came up on the Autonomy Bill, I could not find the figures for such towns as Calgary, Edmonton, Regina and other places, although I felt it was important that we should know the size of these places. In Calgary east there are 15,000 acres, in Calgary north 79,000 acres, in Calgary south 22,000 acres, in Calgary west 63,000 acres, so that apparently a very large stretch of country is taken in and the rural population included with the urban population. The census should show the actual figures for the towns themselves. I take a great interest in this matter, and I would like to be able to turn to the census report and find what the actual population of a city or town is. Outside of four large cities in British Columbia I cannot find the population separated. I cannot find the figures for the other provinces in the corresponding columns in which they are given for Ontario and Quebec. In New Brunswick there is a small place like St. George, with an area of 130,000 acres, enough for a whole county, and the area of the town of St. Andrews is given in somewhat the same way. I find this anomaly all through the census report. I am not finding any fault, but I would suggest that in taking the population of the Northwest Territories next year, more attention should be paid to this matter so that we may be able to get the actual urban and rural population.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad my hon. friend drew attention to this point and I will have it looked into and see if we cannot have it remedied.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 138) an Act respecting the Montreal Bridge Company, and to change its name to 'The Montreal Bridge and Terminal Company.'—Mr. Piché.

RELIEF OF CLARA BIDWELL McDERMOT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 152) for the relief of Clara Bidwell McDermot.—Mr. Campbell.

Mr. LANCASTER. This is a very peculiar case, and I think the Bill ought to stand until the Minister of Justice is present. I have read the evidence, and I am bound to say that I do not think the preamble is proven. I am quite satisfied that no judge of experience and no intelligent jury would find this respondent guilty of the allegations which are said by the preamble to be proven on the evidence printed and laid before the House. One does not like to discuss the details of these cases in public more than is necessary; but we have a public duty to perform. The whole evidence is that of two women, who notoriously and openly state their reasons for knowing to be that they are disreputable characters, and their statements are positively denied on oath by the respondent. He puts his oath against theirs; and, on reading the evidence, I am forced to the conclusion that it is very doubtful indeed whether this man ought to be found guilty under the circumstances. It is a very serious thing to divorce anybody, much more serious, I think, than many of us suppose, and has a bad effect on the country. We are in the habit of letting these Bills go through this House simply because the Senate has passed them. I am probably as guilty as any one in that respect. We do not pay one-quarter of the attention to them that we ought to do, or contemplate the seriousness of what we do. Here is a man with three children who call him father, who is entitled to their respect if he is innocent of this charge, but who, if this Bill passes, will be deprived of his rights as a father, as well as his rights as a husband, and who will be disgraced in a very serious way. I suppose most of us would rather serve a term in the penitentiary than be under the disgrace that this man will be under if we pass this Bill. We must treat this case as one requiring substantial and strict proof. There is no evidence on which any judge or any intelligent jury would convict this man of the offence charged against him. I have not been approached by anybody or been asked to oppose this Bill. This is my own action as a legislator, and I say that if we grant this divorce on such evidence as we have here, we shall open the door to a most terrible state of affairs. There is not a respectable man in this Dominion who will not be subject to blackmail and the worst sort of treatment if this evidence is held to be sufficient. There have been similar cases to this one, but corroborative evidence has always been required. This is a case in which two accomplices of the very worst character, upon their own evidence, have induced the Senate to assume that this man is guilty. He denies their statements under oath, comes all the way from British Columbia for the purpose, cross-examines these witnesses; and we must come to the conclusion that his story is more likely to be true than theirs. No intelligent jury ever convicts a man of a crime on the evidence of accomplices; and if they would, they would always be charged by the judge that such evidence must be corroborated. This is a serious matter, not only for this man, but for everybody in this country. I am probably less favourable to divorces than many people: I recognize, however, that there are cases in which divorces should be granted under our laws, but they are extreme cases, and should admit of no doubt. In the absence of the Chairman of the Private Bills Committee, who considered this Bill, and also of the Minister of Justice, who, I think, should look into it, I would move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is a very unusual course to take on a Bill of this kind. I admit that the evidence, like the evidence in all cases upon which we grant divorces, is not of the very highest character. This case has been tried by the Senate, who examined the witnesses and had an opportunity of hearing their evidence, and who unanimously came to the decision that the case was proven, and reported the Bill to us. Not only have we the evidence of these persons, but we have the conduct of this man, of whom my hon. friend speaks as a very exemplary husband—a man who left his wife and three little children and went off to British Columbia, where he remained for fourteen or sixteen years, and who, on his own evidence, in that time did not give $400 to support them.

Mr. LANCASTER. They were not needing money.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If they had needed money, they would not have got it from him. I do not know this woman at all, but I have it from the very best persons in the country that she is one of the most respectable women in the whole district, and the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Christie) is aware of that fact. She has raised three children, now grown to manhood, without any help from her husband. They are a most highly respected family, and I do not think any man, on reading the evidence, could fail to come to the conclusion that the Senate was perfectly right in unanimously passing this Bill. Any man who would leave his wife and family for sixteen years and let them drift as best they could, is no father and no man at all, and should not receive any consideration from this House.

Mr. LANCASTER. Supposing this man did what the hon. gentleman alleges, that is no ground for divorce; and it is quite clear on the evidence that his money was not needed because she returned the sums he sent her and did not want to have anything to do with him. There must be some reason why this woman, who has been wedded all these years, should want to get rid of her husband now, and we ought not to undo a marriage for the purpose of letting her marry again unless there are beyond question proper grounds for a divorce. The woman returned the money this man sent her, she returned the $100 payments, and there is no evidence that she suffered for want of his money. The charge made by the hon. gentleman against this man is one we should not listen to. We are not here as judges granting alimony to this woman. What my hon. friend alleges would be a reason why a judge might decree judicial separation and grant alimony, but we are asked to absolutely divorce this man from his wife and children, and we are asked to do it on the evidence of two most disreputable characters, whom he contradicts on his oath. I cannot see what objection my hon. friend can have to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) looking into the evidence and passing upon it before we come to a decision. This House is not going to prorogue to-morrow or next day, and the Minister of Justice will have plenty opportunity to see whether the position I take is a sound one. My hon. friend's desire for undue haste would rather indicate that the view I take is the right one. I am willing to have delay until the Minister of Justice looks into the matter. Surely my hon. friend can trust the Minister of Justice; and if the minister is convinced that I am wrong, then the Bill will pass.

Mr. CAMPBELL. My hon. friend is very anxious to have the opinion of the Minister of Justice when it suits his purpose; but I notice that when the Minister of Justice does given an opinion, my hon. friend is not disposed to follow it. Another allegation he makes is that this woman returned $100 which her husband sent her. True she did, but the fellow never sent it to her until proceedings had been commenced for a divorce. It was only then that he sent her any money and he had deliberately refused to send her any for years previously. Why, the admissions of this man himself as to the company he kept and the places he visited and his general conduct corroborate the evidence given by his wife. How are you going to contradict the evidence given by other witnesses? You will not get any respectable woman to give evidence as to the places this man frequented, and those who did, knew nothing about Mrs. McDermot and never saw her and gave their evidence in a straightforward manner. Of course the husband denies it, but he also denies Mrs. McDermot's evidence. The only witness he brought are two brothers-in-law of his own, and they testified that he was a very nice young boy when growing up, and one of them admits that the point on which he was brought to testify—that is with reference to Mrs. McDermot—occurred twenty odd years ago and he could not remember anything about it. I have no interest in the Bill other than that it was placed in my hands, and I have the best authority for believing that this woman is one of the most respectable in the whole country and raised a nice respectable family. Under the circumstances, I do not think there should be any hesitation in granting her divorce from this man who deserted her.

Mr. BOYCE. The request of my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) is, it seems to me, under the circumstances, exceedingly reasonable. It will be five or six weeks, perhaps two months, perhaps more before prorogation takes place, so that there will be ample time to have the evidence thoroughly reviewed by officers of the government competent to give a judicial opinion upon it, and therefore I do not see why my hon. friend from Centre York (Mr. Campbell) should object to the request made by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). It is of the last importance that we should exercise the greatest care before pronouncing a dissolution of the marriage tie. Canadians, I believe, are a righteous and moral people, who desire that the moral foundations, which are the basis of a good and God fearing nation, should be strengthened; and if we should exercise the haste urged upon the committee by my hon. friend from Centre York (Mr. Campbell), we would be aiming a blow at the very basis of those Christian principles which should govern our divorce proceedings and would in that way be inflicting a blow on public morality.

I have looked at the evidence in this case. I am a lawyer and so is my hon. friend from Lincoln. I have had some experience in the dissection of evidence both in civil and criminal proceedings, and the hon. member for Centre York, while he is a man of great shrewdness and great business sagacity, is not accustomed to the dissection of evidence, to the careful analysis and weighing of evidence, to ascertain what is sufficient to satisfy the burden of proof in a civil or criminal case. The hon. member for Centre York must bear this in mind that before the decree can be passed in a case of this kind there must be not only evidence of guilt of the legal infidelity which is charged, but there must be overwhelming evidence of that guilt, there must be such evidence of that guilt as would satisfy the ordinary mind that the presumption of innocence is entirely overcome. My hon. friend from Lincoln reminds me of the principle that the evidence should go further, that it should satisfy the minds of the members of the committees of the two Houses through which the Bill is obliged to pass, that there is no reasonable doubt at all about the innocence of the person charged with this grave offence. Before we dissect the particular facts which have been referred to, let us look at the procedure, the very admirable procedure which is one which makes for the protection of all classes and for the preservation of a high standard of morality in the state. The evidence as well as the Bill come down from the higher chamber to this House. For what purpose? Surely for the very purpose referred to by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), that every member of this House, as is his duty, is to read that evidence and if he thinks it falls short of the remedy sought in this preamble he should have an opportunity of stating, as the hon. member for Lincoln does now, that in his opinion the evidence does fall short of that and that the committee ought to go slowly. The hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) has not that legal knowledge, that legal capacity of weighing evidence—I do not profess to be superior in that respect, I do not profess to have that business sagacity and shrewdness which characterize my hon. friend from Centre York (Mr. Campbell)—but I do say that it is my opinion that there might be a good deal stronger evidence in this case and yet the committee might hesitate before coming to the conclusion that the grave charge made has been fully upheld. Now to show that the hon. member for Centre York is pursuing a wrong line of argument in this case I would point out to you that the line that he has taken does not touch, except in one or two minor instances, the root of the charge as recited in this preamble. My hon. friend has referred only to the questions of legal cruelty and desertion, facts which are not grounds for the granting of any divorce in this country, and which are not set forth in the Bill either. They are merely evidence of collateral circumstances, evidence which might well have been excluded by the committee, but evidence which certainly, taken alone, cannot have any weight whatever with respect to the matter under consideration by the committee of the Senate.

The fact that the witnesses are of the same disreputable class is surely a circumstance to be taken into consideration. Surely it is not the intention and is not to be the principle laid down by this committee in this case that whatever evidence comes down from the Senate is to be passed by every member of this committee as absolute and undoubted evidence of the guilt of the accused. Surely we have functions to perform, the responsibility of which we cannot shirk and if we say that upon that evidence there is a doubt then I say it is our duty to face that question boldly and investigate and if there be a question then surely no person can be hurt by the very reasonable request of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) to refer the evidence with the Bill to the Minister of Justice asking him to consider the matter and make a report in this case, so that dissection and discussion of the details is not necessary in this committe but we may have the report of the law officer of the Crown, a gentleman skilled in that work who will give the committee the benefit of his judgment, a judicial judgment and one which cannot fail to enlighten the committee one way or the another. It would be futile and I think unpleasant to discuss this matter in committee here, nor would it be pleasant or serve any good result, but to refer the evidence with the Bill back to the Minister of Justice and to ask his opinion and to ask him to lay his report before the House would be a step in the right direction and be travelling along safe ground and on safe lines.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is a course which in all my experience in this House, extending over many years, I never saw or heard of before. In all the Bills that have been passed here this is the first time that objection has ever been taken in this House and the course suggested, that we should refer this to the Minister of Justice to weigh the evidence is unprecedented. What are 216 members of this House for if they cannot read this evidence and come to a conclusion themselves ? It has now been before the House for the last two weeks, it passed the Senate committee unanimously, it passed the Upper Chamber unanimously, it passed the Private Bills Committee of this House without any objection, and now it comes before this House after the evidence has been in the hands of every member for two weeks or more and forsooth this hon. gentleman says his legal mind is not capable of weighing and deciding upon this evidence and he wants to refer it to the Minister of Justice for a judicial decision and for a report, and the other members of this House were not of a legal and judicial mind, not capable of deciding this question and should not give a vote upon it because they have not the legal training. And I myself have not the legal training to decide whether this Bill should be granted or not.

Mr. BOYCE. Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Now I think that this is a childish, I think it is frivolous, the most frivolous argument ever advanced in this House for a man of the ability of the hon. member for Lincoln, or the hon. member for Algoma, to seriously propose to refer this to the Minister of Justice for a judicial decision upon the legal point. What legal point is there about it ?

Mr. LANCASTER. The legal point is whether the evidence here is legally sufficient to warrant the stain of guilt that is sought to be put on this man.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who is to decide that ?

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that not a proper question for the law officers of the Crown to decide ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is that not for a jury to decide.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is a question that he can decide.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can decide it according to my conviction and according to my own ability. I do not require a legal mind. The Senate heard that evidence and they decided unanimously. The Private Bills Committee of this House heard the evidence, and decided to pass this Bill, and now it comes up for its third reading. We are called upon to decide it in this House, and we must decide it, we cannot shirk our responsibility. The only point that is raised is as to the character of these witnesses. I say that the character of these witnesses, according to the evidence that has been submitted, will stand on a par with the evidence of the man who swears he was telling an untruth. I say that the character of the man who says that these witnesses are not reliable, is such that he himself is not a credible witness, his conduct and his course for the last fourteen years put him exactly on the same plane as these witnesses, and I would believe them just as quick as I would him.

Mr. BOYCE. Then my hon. friend will probably concede that the evidence in favour of innocence is equal to the evidence in favour of guilt.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not at all. The evidence in favour of guilt is overwhelming. To my mind there is no evidence at all on the other side, except of this party who opposes this Bill. He brings no witnesses at all in his favour during the twelve or fourteen years that he lived out in Golden. Does he bring any one from there to prove that he was not frequenting these houses ? On the contrary he admits it, and there is no evidence except his own ; and when you take into consideration his course, the unmanly, the almost inhuman course he has pursued for these fourteen years in leaving this woman and her three children to provide for themselves—I say when a man like that comes up to give his evidence it should not be believed by the members of this House.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I desire to say that I have known Mrs. McDermot since she was a child. She belongs to one of the best families in our county, I never heard a word of reflection cast upon her. She has raised these three children for fourteen or sixteen years, I think he has been in the west for fourteen years, and was separated from her for a year or two before he left Port Perry. Her three children are as nice girls, as well behaved girls, as well brought up girls as there are in the county of South Ontario. Mrs. McDermot is as fine a woman as there is anywhere. There is not a word to be said against her, she has the sympathy of every person there. I am satisfied that this parliament never granted a divorce better justified than this one.

Mr. LANCASTER. With all deference to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Christie), I cannot agree with him, and I do not suppose I will have the sympathy of the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) in any case. But I beg to say to these hon. gentlemen that when they ask for a divorce because Mrs. McDermot is a woman of most excellent character, they offer no ground at all why she should have a divorce. We cannot open a door for that kind for divorces. Where will this country come to in twenty-five years if we are going to grant divorces simply because some woman has been disappointed in regard to her husband, and comes here and asks for a dissolution of her marriage because she made a mistake when she married ? The whole social fabric of the country would go to pieces. If the hon. member for Centre York had a constituent who was being treated in this way, I am sure he would say that the Bill ought not to pass. Because he has got the Bill in his hands, as he says, he thinks he should ask this House to pass it, although he admits that he knows very little about the case. The hon. member for Centre York asks why this Bill should be referred to the Minister of Justice any more than any other Bill ? Simply because it is a most extraordinary Bill, it is an extraordinary request to ask this House to pass a Bill on such evidence as is before us. I have read the evidence in all these cases since I have been in this House, and this is the first Bill I have felt called upon to oppose. Although some of these Bills went through on what I thought was scaly evidence, I never felt before that it was absolutely necessary to oppose a Bill, I never before found the evidence so glaring insufficient as in this case. It is because of the extraordinary nature of the case, because of the most peculiar and insufficient grounds and evidence upon which this Bill is sought to be passed that I say to my hon. friend that he ought to take the opinion of the Minister of Justice, and I am not putting him into the hands of any political enemy when I ask him to take the opinion of the Minister of Justice upon this question. Surely he will have as much influence with the minister as I would have, in convincing him that this Bill ought to pass. This is not a matter of party politics, no party question about it, it is merely a question of passing proper legislation. I must say that when the member for Centre York puts his opinion against the ability of the Minister of Justice to pass upon this question, he is asking us to go a little too far. It may be all very good talk to give to some audience in the backwoods in some part of Ontario, but I do not know of any part where that appeal would amount to very much. But I do think seriously that what the hon. member for Centre York wants, if he is honest, and I am satisfied he is, only misguided in his application of honesty—but if he really wants justice to be done in this matter, he can surely expect to get justice at the hands of the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice will not make a secret report, no one suggests that he should tell us whether we have a right to pass this Bill or not. But what I suggest is that the Minister of Justice should look into this Bill, look into this evidence, and then come to this House and discuss it with us if necessary. Nobody suggests that we are to be throttled, that we are not to have any opinion about this matter. But we would like the Minister of Justice to give his opinion upon it, and after we have got it we will still go on and deliberate as to what we should do. My hon. friend says that the character of this man is not as good as the character of these witnesses. The Minister of Justice will disagree with him. The character of the man is sworn to by two perfectly reputable witnesses. These two wretched women are self confessed wrong doers, self confessed accomplices of this man, they have been living in immorality for years, depraved women of the worst kind. They acknowledge they are not respectable. Surely their oath is not as good as the oath of a man who denies that he has done wrong, who it is acknowledged is the father of the children whose mother is his lawful wife. Surely the oath of this man is as good as the oath of these people who admit themselves, out of their own mouths, to be most depraved characters. He does not acknowledge that he did wrong, he is not as bad as they are. Surely the member for Centre York will see the difference between the man whose statement is absolutely consistent with his good character, as well as with his innocence——

Mr. CAMPBELL. His good character ! What do you make of his conduct ?

Mr. LANCASTER. His own statement is absolutely consistent with a good character for all that he is charged with and for all that must be sufficient to justify a divorce. I do not wish to put upon ' Hansard ' all the language of this report, because it is not necessary. But if my hon. friend will read the preamble of the Bill he will see that the only charges made against this man as grounds for passing this Bill, are the very things he denies. The other things which my hon. friend speaks about as showing that this man is perhaps not as careful to look after his wife and children as my hon. friend is or as I am, still, are not grounds for divorce, or, evidence against the man's character in regard to what he is accused of.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I say that they go a long way to contradict his own evidence especially when these statements are corroborated by two or three witnesses.

Mr. LANCASTER. If my hon. friend consults the Minister of Justice, or any other sound lawyer in this House, he will tell him that it does not go a hair's breadth in the direction he speaks of. It has nothing to do with it. A woman cannot secure a divorce because she has not chosen to live with her husband for so many years, and because her husband may or may not have given her as much money as she thought she ought to have. If she has a case in that respect she can go into the civil courts and claim alimony. She has no right to do anything else, and she has no right to say, that because I can convince the hon. member for Centre York, or any other person who is not in the habit of weighing evidence and therefore innocently, enough will do an injustice to somebody, that I have been wrongly and harshly treated in regard to a matter which is not a statutory ground for divorce that must be laid against him and that must be taken as a ground for divorce in connection with the evidence which was given, evidence which in my opinion is perjured evidence. If my hon. friend had had any experience in courts of law he would have known that judges always charge juries, when people acknowledge their characters to be bad, that their oaths are not worth considering, standing alone. They will charge the jury that the evidence of such characters is not to be taken unless it is corroborated. It is all very well for the hon. member for Centre York to say that justice will be done by granting this divorce. He has no right to do that. He has to consider society's welfare. He cannot divorce a husband from a wife or a wife from a husband on a certain kind of evidence and refuse to divorce another husband from his wife or wife from her husband on exactly the same evidence. There might be dozens of cases brought for no other purpose than the most terrible blackmail against almost every respectable married man who does not find it possible to live at home every day on just such evidence. All you have to do is to bring here a couple of these disreputable women to swear against any respectable man in this country and we must grant a divorce and break up the home and family because these two acknowledged disreputable characters will go before the Senate and swear something against that man, swear against a man who has never been convicted of any crime, who has not a bad character, who has never been prosecuted for anything, who has a good record and who has lived a proper life. My hon. friend shakes his head. Is he going to be a fair judge? Is he going to say that a man has not a good character who has never been convicted of wrong?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you think it is right to stay for fourteen years and let your family shift for themselves?

Mr. LANCASTER. Suppose he lived long enough to be away 114 years, what has that to do with it? Why did she not go and live with him?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It has a good deal to do with it.

Mr. LANCASTER. It shows my hon. friend's capacity for granting divorces. If that is the way we are going to test the question whether we shall divorce men from their lawful wives or wives from their lawful husbands, I do not think the hon. gentleman should undertake to support any measure because he shows that he is not competent to discuss the question. Two clergymen, absolutely respectable men, no question about their respectability, swear to this man's good character. My hon. friend says that one of them had not known him since his boyhood. He has not read the evidence very carefully. One of these clergymen was up there and saw the man in his store, knew the character of the man at the time he was doing business and at the time he was supposed to have committed this heinous offence. Are the oaths of these clergymen not to be taken against the oaths of these women of disreputable character?

Mr. CAMPBELL. These two clergymen were his own brothers-in-law who saw him at the store but they did not follow him to the place at all. They only saw him in the store.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have heard of special pleading. Here is the double distilled quintessence of special pleading. Here is an hon. gentleman who wants to discuss the question on every other ground than the issue that is before the House. Here is an hon. gentleman desiring to draw us away from the Minister of Justice who would look at this calmly and appealing to us on a sentiment of a most frightful kind, in granting or withholding a divorce which we all know is a most serious thing. The hon. gentleman has said that there is a good case in his opinion against this man. I am going to talk for a minute or two as I would to a jury if I were defending this man. Just see what we are coming to. Against this man appear two most disreputable characters who for years have been living on the proceeds of their vice. They say so themselves. There is no defamation in saying that because it is their own statement. That is the way they qualify themselves as witnesses; in fact, it is the way they qualify themselves as experts in this case. These are the only people who state anything against this man. They are bad characters on their admission, the most disreputable characters to have in the country, women of the most vicious kind, women who are dangerous to any community, breaking the law every day of their lives and liable to go to prison if they can be convicted and if the authorities are smart enough to prosecute them. On their own statement they have been guilty day after day of having led an immoral life. That is their character. Talk about their character being as good as his.. He does not admit that he is that kind of man. On the contrary, he denies it. He is backed up by the fact that he is a respectable merchant doing business in a community where these people are drawn from on behalf of this woman, who for some strange reason wants to get a divorce from her lawful husband. In that same town she could have found dozens of men to swear to the bad character of this man if it were so. If she had called that kind of evidence, if she had brought respectable people before the committee of the Senate, I could have listened with some patience if they had stated that his character was not as good as theirs. But, she does not do it, she does not bring a witness to show that this man is not to be believed on oath, but he puts into the box two men of the highest character, clergymen, who swear to what he was when he was a young man, and one of whom was out there in the place at the time he was supposed to have committed this offence with these outrageously disreputable women. Where is the excuse for the hon. gentleman saying that one's character is as good as the other ? Where is the protection for any respectable man who is not always surrounded by three or four witnesses able to prove an alibi ? What is the proposition of the hon. member for Centre York?—that if he was not guilty he should have proved it by some one else. Can the hon. gentleman prove where he was a year and two months and a day ago yetsterday ? Can he prove where he was fifteen months ago on a certain Wednesday at eight o'clock in the evening ? It is all very well to say he should have done it ? Could my hon. friend do anything else but what this man has done ? If any one made a false charge against my hon. friend such as that which has been made against this man could my hon. friend have done anything else but what this man has done ? We have to take this thing seriously. We have as much right to suppose that this evidence was given against yourself, Mr. Speaker, or myself, or the hon. member for Centre York and ask ourselves what we, absolutely innocent, would do or expect in the face of that evidence. What could we do but tell the truth as this man has done? If he were guilty would he come all the way down here from British Columbia without counsel and pledge his oath as he has done? If he were guilty of perjury he could be convicted on the evidence of these same two witnesses.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why does he not prosecute these women ?

Mr. LANCASTER. What earthly good would that be to the poor man after he was divorced ? A lot of satisfaction it would be, after a man is taken away from his wife and children, and after he and his children are disgraced for ever, to prosecute these outrageously disreputable women. When the honourable and learned Judge Britton was a member of this House he introduced a Bill providing that divorces should be granted by the courts of the land and not by parliament. As I was personally not in favour of divorces, I took no part in the discussion on that Bill, but if we are going to grant divorces in such cases as this, then by all means let us have divorce courts which will decide these matters judicially and on sound principles. My hon. friend from Centre York (Mr. Campbell) might have disposed of this matter according to my suggestion, but perhaps he forgot that by the rules of the House we will only have to prevail on him for three minutes longer in order that we may have a wider opportunity for discussing this matter and getting the Minister of Justice to throw some light on it, as the committee must then rise anyway.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is evident you want light.

Mr. LANCASTER. My hon. friend may be in a great hurry to divorce this wife, Clara Bidwell McDermot, from her husband, George Burton McDermot ; he may think it is a very wise thing to rush this legislation through, but I say again, as I said fifty minutes ago, that the consideration of this Bill should stand over until we have the opinion of the law officers of the Crown. I trust that even at this late hour, even now when the hour for private Bills is about to expire, he will accept my suggestion. I do not want to be unduly contentious with my hon. friend (Mr. Campbell), and I trust he will consent that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. If he will not consent, then so long as the lamp holds out to burn we will endeavour to bring pressure on him. He says we should not shirk the responsibility, but that is exactly what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) is doing. He is endeavouring to shirk the responsibility by rushing this Bill through without allowing the House to seriously consider the matter.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You want to shirk the responsibility and throw it on the Minister of Justice.

Mr. LANCASTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) has no right to say that. If I wanted to shirk my responsibility I could remain silent and let the Bill pass, but I assume the responsibility of pointing out what I think is wrong in this Bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If you are opposed to it, vote against it ; why do you want to talk it out ?

Mr. LANCASTER. I suppose the hon. gentleman thinks it is all right for a member to vote for or against a Bill and not give his reasons. There are gentlemen on the other side of the House who may think that good policy, but on this side even so much of a back bencher as the member for Lincoln thinks it right to state the reasons why he opposes a measure. It may be supposed that I oppose this Bill because I am not in favour of divorces, but, Sir, I recognize that the statutes of Canada require us to grant divorces in proper cases, and, so long as that is the law of the land, I will vote for divorces in proper cases. But this is not a proper case, in my opinion, because the preamble of the Bill states that about the month of April, 1901, this man did certain things, and it declares that the petitioner has proved the allegations in her petition. In my judgment, that preamble is not borne out by the evidence.

The hour for private Bills having expired, the House resumed in Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

St. Lawrence river and canals—reducing shoals west of Cornwall, $5,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Where are these shoals, and how much altogether will it require to do the work ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). The work consists in dredging shoals, one opposite Hooper's creek, one mile west of Cornwall, and the other opposite Archibald's point, about one and a-half miles west at the head of the canal and connected with the mainland. The contract was entered into with W. J. Poupore & Company. This $5,000 is required to pay off the contract, the whole contract being for $30,500.

Mr. HAGGART. Is this the first expenditure on it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. A contract was let last year, when an amount was voted towards the work, and this is the balance to close up the contract.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How much has been expended on the contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is estimated that there will be expended up to the 30th of June $30,500, and that will complete the work. In the main estimates of 1904-5 we had $25,500, which left the balance of $5,000.

Rapide Plat canal—enlargement of upper entrance, $4,200.

Mr. EMMERSON. This completes the work.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The final estimate for the whole work was $81,500. There was paid up to the 30th of November, 1904, $79,063.40. That left a balance due of $2,437.52, which, added to the drawback of $1,268.53 makes $3,705.05, which with the engineer's staff salaries, $500, makes $4,200.

Mr. HAGGART. Who are the contractors ?

Mr. EMMERSON. P. H. Gilbert was the contractor. The original contract was let in 1900. There were three tenders, and Mr. Gilbert's was the lowest.

Soulanges canal—steel bridge at power house, $500 ; construction, $36,500 ; total, $37,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. The $500 is to cover the additional cost of the superstructure. $4,000 was voted in the main estimates, and the total cost will be $4,500. The $36,500 is a balance due to Manning & Macdonald, who had a contract for construction. The contractors are making claims against the department, but this is all that the department recognizes.

Mr. HAGGART. What was Manning & Macdonald's total contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The total payments on the 13th section to the 31st of December, 1904, amounted to $682,407.75, that is covering a period of years. The amount remaining unpaid is $34,182.52, making the total amount about $717,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the minister tell us how that compares with the estimated cost by the department when the contract was entered into ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is in excess of the original estimate.

Mr. HAGGART. How much ?

Mr. EMMERSON. My engineer cannot give me that amount.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it more than double?

Mr. EMMERSON. Somewhere in the vicinity of $50,000.

Mr. HAGGART. It must be more than that. The amount expended on this contract is in the neighbourhood of $720,000. That would leave the estimated cost by the department $670,000. It would be interesting to the House to see how near the actual cost of construction came to the estimate by the engineers.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not got that information, and my chief engineer tells me he does not remember what the original estimate was. It was an estimate made many years ago, I am not personally familiar with it, but in the judgment of one of the officials the cost was between $50,000 and $60,000 in excess of the original estimate.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I suppose the hon. gentleman would not object to furnishing that estimate at a later date ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Certainly not.

Welland canal—to deepen portion of long level, $52,000.

Mr. HAGGART. How it is that the estimate was exceeded this year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was estimated that we would expend about $150,000 this year, but the contractors made greater progress than estimated and it requires $52,000 to continue the work and pay the drawback up to the end of the current year. It is estimated that the two months work will amount to $25,000 for each month, and there is a drawback of $10,000, making $60,000 in all. We have on hand $8,000 of the $150,000, so that the amount required is $52,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Does this finish it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. With what is in the main estimates, this item of $52,000 will finish the whole contract, so my chief engineer informs me.

Mr. HAGGART. How much will you have in your lowest water navigation on the long level ?

Mr. EMMERSON. At normal level we will have seventeen feet.

Mr. HAGGART. But at low water ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Fifteen feet.

Mr. HAGGART. That is a foot deeper than the navigation on the locks ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. What do you make the total expenditure on that ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $530,270.

Mr. HAGGART. That does not cover all the expenditure in deepening the long level?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, there was expended up to the 31st December, 1904, $390,270 on this long level.

Mr. HAGGART. Then this is an expenditure of $700,000 for the purpose of putting this level to what it ought to have been originally when built ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $530,000.

Mr. HAGGART. With the amount to be expended ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About $540,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When will the work be completed ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is supposed to complete the work within this fiscal year.

Trent canal—to complete survey, $25,000 ; damages by flooding, $7,000 ; $32,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the minister give us a concise account of the two different lines—the survey line to Port Hope and the line following the Trent river down, and which he thinks is the most advantageous ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We have surveyed three lines, one to Cobourg, one to Port Hope the other to Trenton. The final report giving a comparison of the different routes has not been received. The work is not yet completed. In order to meet the liabilities incurred during this current year, we will require $25,000 for the surveys on the Trent Valley system. I am not in a position to give to the committee even the judgment of the engineer, in consequence of the survey not being completed and a final report not having been made. This matter was started by the department with an open mind, and I hope to have an exhaustive and thorough report from the independent engineer—a gentleman of eminence in his profession—and as soon as that report is received, I shall lay it on the table.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How much has been expended on the survey thus far ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Up to the 1st April, $16,259.

Mr. HAGGART. I should judge that the hon. minister has had the reports of his own engineers on the different routes ; and there has been a survey of that portion of the canal which was intended to suit the people in North York. What was the result of that survey ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not the report from the engineer. We have had reports in the department with respect to the different routes, and these have been laid before parliament from time to time. This has not been laid before parliament. There was a general complaint on the part of the different parties interested or the different committees that these surveys were not exhaustive in all instances, and I have even heard it alleged by hon. members in this House that sometimes the engineers who had made these surveys did not do so with an open mind, that they were biased and I promised the House last session that a survey would be made by engineers who would stand entirely indifferent as respects the different communities or localities interested, and in pursuance of that promise this survey was commenced. I am not in a position to furnish the House with the information inasmuch as the report has not been presented as the work is not completed.

Mr. HAGGART. There is in the department the report of the engineer in charge of the Trent canal who had surveyed both routes, and his report was strongly in favour of the Bay of Quinte or Trenton route. The minister has had no report since that from the engineer in charge of the canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The report from the independent engineer has not yet come in.

Mr. HAGGART. Is an engineer at present employed by the government for the purpose ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, Mr. Watt was employed to survey the proposed routes, the Port Hope route, the Cobourg route, the Trenton route and at the other end, the Simcoe-Georgian bay route and the Aurora route.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you had any report on the Aurora route ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Not yet; there is no final report as to the result of the surveys.

Mr. HAGGART. When will the other lift lock be finished to enable them to get into the waters of Lake Simcoe?

Mr. EMMERSON. It will be completed for the opening of navigation next season.

Mr. HAGGART. Then there is to be continuous navigation for what length, the whole of Lake Simcoe and down to where?

Mr. EMMERSON. Down below Peterborough to Rice lake.

Mr. U. WILSON. When were the surveys authorized by the government to Cobourg and Port Hope?

Mr. EMMERSON. At the last session when a vote of parliament was asked.

Mr. U. WILSON. I suppose you had come to a decision before you asked for money to survey these routes.

Mr. EMMERSON. To make all possible surveys and take into consideration the whole question, to furnish such evidence as would be of value in finally determining the route to be adopted.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. With reference to the November campaign had Mr. Aylesworth any authority from the department to tell the people in the riding that the Trent Valley canal would go through Port Hope?

Mr. EMMERSON. I was not even aware that Mr. Aylesworth made any such statement. I might mention also that my attention was called by the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) to the possibility of a route by Brighton and I gave instructions to have that investigated and if it was found at all feasible to have it surveyed.

Mr. HAGGART. I think that now the elections are all over the department might accept the opinion that was given by the engineer in charge, that there is no doubt whatever that the only practicable and feasible route is the Trenton route, and that you should use all the money you have on it in the construction of the canal instead of spending it on useless surveys.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have no doubt my hon. friend is sincere but I have heard words uttered by my hon. friend from Durham (Mr. Ward) who is not, I am sorry to see, in his place, that are entirely contrary to the views expressed by my hon. friend. There are differences of opinion and I should hope to have such information placed before me as would enable me to form some judgment of my own and I shall be very pleased to coincide with either my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) or the hon. gentleman from Durham (Mr. Ward).

Mr. HAGGART. I am only forming my opinion on the engineer's report.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When does the minister expect a report of these surveys?

Mr. EMMERSON. In the early part of this season.

Lachine canal—enlargement and improvements, $12,000; slope walls, $32,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. We ask in the main estimates $24,000 and we are now asking to complete $12,000. This amount is to cover the payment of drawback, increase in quantities and extra work for Cote St. Paul and Brewster's bridges. There was an increase, the bulk of it on earth excavation. The material was found to be of a very unfavourable nature. There was also an increase in the amount of cribwork. A portion of last year's vote lapses. This work was done by contract, Quinlan & Robertson are the contractors. This completes the work. One of these bridges is at Cote St. Paul, and the other called Brewster's bridge. They both replace old bridges.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the object of separating vote 51 from vote 53, seeing that they both refer to the Lachine canal?

Mr. EMMERSON. One is capital, the other is current expenses.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Give us some idea of the extent of the enlargement of the canal?

Mr. EMMERSON. These were bridges across the Lachine canal, new bridges replacing old ones that had become decayed, and the opening was widened.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The words are 'enlargements and improvements.'

Mr. EMMERSON. That was for widening and opening the canal. This work is done by contract.

Mr. HAGGART. How much does the cost exceed the estimate of the department when the contract was entered into?

Mr. EMMERSON. The total expenditure in connection with this work up to the 1st of April, was $158,882. We are asking for $12,000 more. I have not the exact figures, but there was some excess.

Mr. HAGGART. The contract was based upon a lot of items.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was a schedule contract. There were two contracts, both relating to bridges. One contract was let to Quinlan & Robertson, that is the one at Côte St. Paul bridge, and the other was let to John Quinlan. The excess over the estimate was about $12,000 on the two contracts, and that was largely due to the character of the excavation.

Mr. BERGERON. The bridge at Côte St. Paul was an ordinary wooden bridge, has it been changed into a steel bridge?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Are there two locks at Côte St. Paul, or only one? Was the old one enlarged?

Mr. EMMERSON. The old one was enlarged and the span was increased in consequence. The old bridge was necessarily a shorter bridge, and in consequence of the enlargement the old lock had to be increased in length.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the minister know what is the size of the new lock made where the old lock was? Is it large enough to receive ocean vessels, as it was proposed to make it?

Mr. EMMERSON. They are now 270 feet in length, and they were 245 feet. The depth of water is 14 feet on the mitre sill.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Was that contract let by tender?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. It is a schedule contract, and is work that necessarily had to be done in the interest of the canal. The estimated cost of the whole work when these two slope walls are finally completed is $235,000. But this work has necessarily to be done within a very short time while the canal is unwatered, in the spring. So much is done each season. It is done by tender and contract, and the lowest tender has been accepted in all cases.

Mr. BERGERON. That must have been done during the last month when the water was out of the canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend is right.

Mr. BERGERON. How is it that there was not enough money to finish it?

Mr. EMMERSON. We are only asking for $13,000 during this year.

Mr. BERGERON. That is additional to the amount in the main estimates.

Mr. EMMERSON. In the main estimates it was $13,000. It was expected that we might not do very much during this year but the conditions were favourable and we instructed them to do the work.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount?

Mr. EMMERSON. $45,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Will that complete the work?

Mr. EMMERSON. No; it will go on for five or six years. A certain proportion of the canal will be sloped each year under the specifications.

Mr. BERGERON. It is only at the locks it is sloped with cut stone?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is all along the whole bank of the canal.

Mr. BERGERON. It is not all done in cut stone?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is not cut stone; it is dry masonry and rip-rapping.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it done by the yard?

Mr. EMMERSON. By the cubic yard.

Mr. BERGERON. How much is it by the cubic yard?

Mr. EMMERSON. For dry masonry $5.50, and for rip-rap repairing $2.40.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this season's work finished?

Mr. EMMERSON. That portion that is ordinarily under water is attended to when the canal is unwatered in the spring, and from now until the 1st of July that which is above water will be attended to. The total estimated cost of that during this current year is $45,000. We only took an appropriation in the main estimates for $13,000, and therefore we are asking for the balance for the current fiscal year of $32,000.

Mr. BERGERON. How can work of that kind be done by contract? I understand that it is generally done by the employees of the government and those who work on the canal.

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. BERGERON. How can you carry on the work for five or six years by contract?

Mr. EMMERSON. They tender at schedule prices, so much per cubic yard for concrete, so much per cubic yard for dry masonry and so much for rip-rapping.

Mr. BERGERON. It is always the same contractor?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is the first work that these gentlemen have done.

Mr. BERGERON. This year?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes; the contract was let some time last summer.

Mr. BERGERON. To be done this spring?

Mr. EMMERSON. A certain portion of it to be done this spring, and next year there will be another portion of it done.

Mr. HAGGART. Was not most of this work done when the canal was constructed?

Mr. EMMERSON. This work became necessary by reason of the deepening of the canal. When they deepened the canal the old work was destroyed; it broke down.

Mr. HAGGART. This is renewal work?

Mr. EMMERSON. Practically renewal work caused by the deepening of the canal.

Mr. HAGGART. How is the work standing where it was put in after the canal was deepened?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is standing very well, so the chief engineer says.

Mr. BERGERON. How long is it since the Lachine canal was deepened ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About nine years.

Mr. BERGERON. Has this work been going on ever since ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No ; there has been a certain proportion of this work going on since then. Delormier had the contract.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand Delormier was furnishing the stone. He had a quarry.

Mr. EMMERSON. His contract was for the other as well. He had to furnish the stone because he had a contract for the other.

Mr. BERGERON. On what part of the canal ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Between Côte St. Paul and Lachine.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that part finished ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That part is not finished. The south side has not been touched.

Mr. BERGERON. It may be kept on like that for ten years more.

Mr. EMMERSON. It would be a pretty large sum if we expended it all at one time, but it will perfect the canal to have the work done.

Mr. BERGERON. It costs $45,000 this year, and it will be about the same thing next year.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that for the work that was let under contract to Quinlan & Robertson it is estimated that the total will be about $235,000. They are doing $45,000 worth of it this year.

Mr. BERGERON. That means about five years ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Is this rip-rapping from the top of the rock excavation, or does it go down to the bottom ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It goes down to the bottom.

Mr. HAGGART. Rip-rapping at the bottom where it is in rock excavation ?

Mr. BERGERON. The work is only a few feet on the top.

Mr. EMMERSON. They lay a concrete foundation in the bottom where there is rock, and this is in order to sustain the slope of the sides above.

Mr. HAGGART. Rip-rapping at the side of the canal generally commences from the top of the rock excavation. There is a great deal of rock excavation on the Lachine canal, and if the rip-rapping was put in properly the deepening of the canal would not affect the rip-rap at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. As a matter of fact, I am informed that it did affect it, and that it fell down.

Mr. HAGGART. It should not have done so. You can deepen down the prism of the canal and the rip-rapping should only commence from the top of the rock work. It must have been very badly done, or there must have been something wrong about it, because the rip-rapping should never go down to the bottom of the rock excavation. It should only commence at the top. It is extremely curious. To my knowledge, a lot of the excavation for the Lachine canal is in rock, and that the rip-rapping should go down to the bottom is impossible. Rip-rapping commences at the top of the prism or of the rock excavation ; and if it were put in properly, the deepening of the canal would not interfere with it at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. As I understand it, in some places it was found to be necessary. In other places it only goes from the top of the rock excavation, as my hon. friend very properly says. In all cases where it was possible to do it in that way it was done. The chief engineer tells me that in certain places it was found to be necessary to go to the bottom and to lay a concrete foundation.

Cornwall canal—to purchase and fit up concreting apparatus, $2,400.

Mr. HAGGART. What do you want this on the Cornwall canal for?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is for all the St. Lawrence canals from Prescott to Cornwall. The total estimated cost is $6,230 and we previously voted $4,100.

Mr. HAGGART. Does that include a crushing apparatus?

Mr. EMMERSON. A boiler, engine, stone crusher, concrete mixer, two derricks with engines and the erection and installation.

Mr. HAGGART. It will cost as much to remove it from one place to another as to do the work.

Lachine canal—underpinning wall, basin No. 2, $10,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This wall was falling in and the work can only be done when the canal is unwatered. The estimate was $17,000 ; we took a vote of $7,000 and we ask for the balance.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the engineer's estimate for the whole work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $17,000 and we previously took $7,000 thinking we would only do that amount of work up to the end of the fiscal year, but it was found possible to complete the work. The officers of the department found they were wrong as to their expectations.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the work completed now?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. How was the estimate of the department wrong?

Mr. EMMERSON. The items are as follows: excavation, 2,000 yards at $1.15 per yard; concrete filling, 2,000 yards at $4.50 per yard; timber for supports, 2,000 lineal feet at 25 cents; planking for facing, $416; cement, $4,000; engineering, $784; total, $17,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What has become of that timber?

Mr. EMMERSON. The plank facing would be utilized and the timber for the supports would be in the stores of the canal.

Mr. BERGERON. It was a matter of complaint in the Curran bridge case that there was a great deal of timber used for the same purpose and it disappeared.

Mr. EMMERSON. This might disappear in the same way, but there are officials there to look after it and it will not disappear if they do their duty.

Mr. HAGGART. This $10,000 completes the work?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, that winds it up.

Widening tail race—to pay contractor O. L. Henault for extra time, $514.60.

Mr. BERGERON. How is it that this poor contractor did not get paid?

Mr. EMMERSON. The total payment up to May 1, 1904, final estimate was $9,234.60. The contractors claimed a much larger amount than the vote, but the chief engineer allowed $514.60. The following are the items allowed by the chief engineer: cutting down and removing piers, $180; assisting government employees, $88.50; furnishing 34 yards of displacement, $45; supplying 22 tons of crushed stone, $24.80; supplying 22 tons of Potsdam stone, $33; iron, $53.80.

Mr. BERGERON. The appropriation is for extra time and according to your statement you are paying for work and material?

Mr. EMMERSON. That must be a clerical error.

Mr. BERGERON. You had better change the wording of the item then.

Mr. EMMERSON. We will change it to 'extra work.'

Mr. BERGERON. The engineer passed on this amount and decided it was correct?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, but of course the contractor put in a claim for more.

Mr. BERGERON. I have no doubt about that; they generally ask more expecting to get less.

Improvements to flume on power house, $3,500.

Mr. BERGERON. What is this for?

Mr. EMMERSON. This work is rendered necessary on account of the proposed operation of the locks by electric power. The present power will probably be sufficient to drive all the machinery.

Mr. BERGERON. Since when have the locks worked by electricity?

Mr. EMMERSON. We are only getting ready for that. This work is necessary to enable us to do it.

Mr. BERGERON. When will that be in operation?

Mr. EMMERSON. We hope very shortly, some of the gates will be fitted this summer, and all of them, we hope, by October.

Mr. BERGERON. When you have that work done, what are you going to do with the eight or ten men who are employed on nearly every lock?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not know whether this will be a labour-saving machine or not. It may be necessary to dispense with the services of some of these gentlemen.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the use of electricity result in a saving in expense?

Mr. EMMERSON. It expedites the traffic. I will not say that it will be possible to dispense with the services of the men, because, while the vessels go through with greater expedition, they have to be guided in their passage, and men are necessary for that purpose.

Mr. BERGERON. On the Soulanges canal there are very few men employed, and with the electric system we could dispense with half the men employed on the Lachine canal to-day. Will this apply to the old locks or only to the new?

Mr. EMMERSON. If it is found to be a success, all the locks will be operated in the same way. I do not know that the use of electricity on the Soulanges canal has obviated the necessity of having men. The experience there is that only expedition is obtained, and not a lessening of the cost, because men have to be constantly on the watch as the vessels pass through.

Lachine canal—lock gates, suspension, $4,500.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is for changing the hanging gear of the locks. The present hanging or suspension apparatus is not satisfactory, in the judgment of the officials of the department, because it is very easily put out of gear. Stone cutting of races, protection beams, and other necessary work will cost $3,000, and iron beams for the gates will cost $1,500. There are five locks to be gated. The system adopted is the same as is used on the Ottawa canal, which is giving every satisfaction.

Mr. BERGERON. What has become of the invention of Mr. Manny ? Is it being put on every gate ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is being put on many.

Mr. BERGERON. Has it been found a success ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is what the officers say.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it to lock the gates after they are shut ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is to protect them from vessels knocking against them.

Mr. HAGGART. In going down ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Going up.

Mr. HAGGART. Do the vessels do any harm to the gates ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They do a great deal. We had an experience on the Welland canal where three gates were sent to glory.

Mr. HAGGART. Was the vessel going up ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. If that improvement had been on those gates, would the accident have happened ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The chief engineer thinks that while it might not absolutely prevent accidents, accidents will be less likely to happen.

Mr. BERGERON. Would it be good policy to put it on every gate ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We are trying the experiment on the Lachine canal first and then will consider the advisability of asking a vote to put it on all the canals.

To complete paving of Mill street, $2,200.

Mr. BERGERON. How much does that cost altogether ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About $49,581.

Mr. BERGERON. Besides this amount ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, the total will be over $50,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will this complete the work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Is this on government property ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, the government owns Mill Street.

Chambly canal—culvert St. Theresa Island, $2,500 ; culvert at Deneau's farm, $2,000, $4,500.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this a new culvert or repairing an old one ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is a culvert on St. Theresa island, Iroquois river. There were culverts there before. The total expenditure is $12,383. It was let by contract to a man named Finn, but he did not complete his contract, and the canal staff have been obliged to complete it.

Mr. HAGGART. You charged it against him ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Will that complete the whole thing ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the cost of the culvert at Deneau's farm ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We expended $3,059 in 1904, and are asking now $2,000 more. The total cost will be about $10,000.

Mr. HAGGART. What is this for ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is for the purpose of carrying a stream under the canal.

St. Ours landing wharf, $4,500.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is a renewal of a landing wharf below the locks, which has been in existence a very long time, and requires to be renewed. We require $4,500 to complete. The amount voted before was $6,000.

Mr. HAGGART. How is it your engineers get so far astray in their estimates?

Mr. EMMERSON. The superintendent engineer reports that a certain amount of work can be done which is larger than was expected, and on his report we ask for a vote.

Mr. BERGERON. Will that complete the whole thing ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Is the minister sure he did not promise, when he got the vote for $6,000 that that would complete the work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Speaking from general custom, I would say I did not. But if the question were asked at all, I would have asked my chief engineer and no doubt would have answered just as he told me.

Mr. HAGGART. If the minister made the statement that $6,000 would complete and it is costing $10,000——

Mr. EMMERSON. I would apologize on the spot.

Trent canal—completion of work of lowering floor of lock, $2,500.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is this in connection with the new lift-lock?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is the lock below Peterborough which was built when the canal was originally built.

Mr. HAGGART. That would be about seventy years ago. Is this one of the old locks that is now owned by the Ontario government? Is it one of the locks not conveyed to the Ontario government.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. This is right at the town of Peterborough.

Mr. HAGGART. Will this render this lock available for the present system of navigation proposed on the Trent canal?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is the object of it.

To complete new dam at Peterborough lock, $2,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to complete the new dam. The work is let by contract to a Mr. Burnet. $2,955 was expended up to the 31st of December, 1904, and this is to complete it. We asked $7,000.

Mr. HAGGART. This $2,000 will complete it?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total cost?

Mr. EMMERSON. $7,000.

To pay claim Geo. Matthews Company for damage caused by water, $600.

Mr. EMMERSON. This amount is to pay a firm at Peterborough damages for injury to their goods caused by the raising of the waters of the Otonabee river in consequence of the government's works in building a new dam at Whitlaw's rapids. The cellars were flooded and a quantity of fertilizing material and bacon damaged. The claim was investigated by the engineer and was substantiated by his report. The matter was referred to the Justice Department, and they advised a settlement and it was deemed advisable to pay the price demanded rather than have litigation in view of the opinion of the Department of Justice.

Mr. HAGGART. One would think that the engineers in building the dam would know what damage would be caused above it and would have advised the people to remove the goods.

St. Peter's canal—dredging, $1,500.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is this contract let by tender and if so, what is the price per yard?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, it is not by tender. This is down in Cape Breton where it is almost impossible to get a dredge. There are none there and we had to convey one from Sydney. We paid so much per day for the dredge which we got from the Dominion Coal Company and the conveyance and cost of the work has certainly exceeded the estimates made by the engineers.

Mr. BOYCE. Do you pay for the towing?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BOYCE. How much?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a dispute. We paid $68 a day for the dredge; that included the towing.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Can the minister give us an idea of the amount of material that was moved by this dredge?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, we have no such estimate.

Mr. BOYCE. Was the price so much an hour?

Mr. EMMERSON. So much per day.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the depth and length of the clay that was removed?

Mr. EMMERSON. There were two shoals at the St. Peter's canal which obstructed its navigation.

Mr. BOYCE. What was the extent of it?

Mr. EMMERSON. There were about $3,000 to $4,000 expended.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the department satisfied that the work is done properly?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, the only dispute is as to the time occupied in taking the dredge from Sydney to the canal. There is a dispute as to the number of days. The work was necessary in the fall of the year and they contended that the time occupied in transporting the dredge should be included, the ten days occupied in that way. It was finally settled, the officers of the department agreeing upon the matter; it will cost, including the towing, about $3,500.

Mr. HAGGART. The amount you got last year was $2,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, we are asking more.

Mr. BOYCE. Who has the work?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was under the supervision of the man who had charge of the canal. The Dominion Coal Company rented the dredge.

Mr. BOYCE. Was the Dominion Coal Company the owner of the dredge?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BOYCE. And the department paid the coal company?

Mr. EMMERSON. The work was done under the instruction of Mr. Devereaux. He is an official of the department, and has charge of that.

Mr. BOYCE. Was the work last year done under the same conditions?

Mr. EMMERSON. This was all done last year.

Mr. BOYCE. Was there any advertising for tenders?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is nothing in the shape of a dredge there at all, the nearest dredge would be in the city of St. John. The government have no dredge at their disposal.

Mr. BOYCE. That would be the converse case to the Port Arthur case, where there were dredges and nowhere else, and no advertisements were published.

Mr. EMMERSON. Inquiries were made. This work was very urgent, navigators were making complaints, and the officials of the department had instructions from me to make inquiries in all directions to see what could be done towards getting a dredge to do this work. We could not find a dredge in any of the departments, and we were finally obliged to take this dredge at Sydney belonging to the Dominion Coal Company.

Carillon and Grenville canal—guide piers, $1,017.

Mr. EMMERSON. These guide piers are at the head of these two canals. The contract was let in 1901 to Martineau Sons & Lemoine. The work is completed. The amount of the contract was $19,788.55, and this is a balance to complete.

Mr. HAGGART. Is this for extras ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No ; it is a part of the contract.

Mr. HAGGART. It is a wonder you did not ask for the amount last year to finish the contract.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will explain. These contractors had a claim in the department, this balance was in dispute, and this amount was finally adjusted by the chief engineer.

Mr. HAGGART. This is over and above the contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, it is included in the contract ; but the contractors made a greater claim. In the final estimate they put in claims, as a rule, for more work, and there is always a dispute as to the quantity. A dispute arose in connection with this contract, and it was finally adjusted by the chief engineer, and under his certificate $1,017 was agreed upon.

Welland canal—to pay Stephen Vanderburg for time lost, injured while on duty, two-thirds time, 196 days at $1.75 per day, $228.86.

Mr. EMMERSON. This man was engaged at the Port Maitland lock and was injured by falling into the lock, on the 6th of August last, and is still laid up in consequence.

Mr. LANCASTER. What was the special work he was employed at ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They were repairing the floor of the lock while it was unwatered.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was it because of any negligence of his fellow-servants, or was it his own fault ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I believe it has been the custom for years to give indemnities in similar cases. The matter was submitted to me, and, in view of the course that had been followed, I decided to ask for a vote of parliament for the amount. I am not acquainted with the details, I could not say just what kind of work he was doing, or as to whose fault it was.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am not finding fault with this, but I just wish to know the policy of the government, if, when a man is injured while at his work, they pay an indemnity without bothering to inquire, like an uncharitable corporation would, as to whether it was his fault or the fault of somebody else.

Mr. EMMERSON. We do not pay. We inquire and then submit the matter to parliament. This has not been paid. It cannot be paid until parliament votes the amount. Of course, as I understand it, the custom has been to look into each individual case and if a man is injured on duty an allowance of a certain percentage is granted unless it is the fault of the labourer or workman. In that case it is not considered.

Mr. BERGERON. And there is no discrimination between Liberals and Conservatives ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. BOYCE. It is granted irrespective of whether there is negligence attributed to the government or not ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is granted if the man is not negligent.

Mr. LANCASTER. If it is a mere accident ?

Mr. EMMERSON. If it is a mere accident.

Mr. BOYCE. You do not consider it necessary to make out a prima facie case?

Miscellaneous—salaries of extra clerks, copyists and messengers, other than those who have passed the Civil Service examination, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $1,000.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount you have expended this year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $4,000.

Lachine canal—repairs, $10,205.

Mr. BERGERON. Where would these repairs be ?

Mr. EMMERSON. These are several items that arose in connection with the working of the canal and the making of repairs for the season. I can give the different items. We replaced wooden by cast iron mooring posts on locks and approaches at a cost of $4,230.

Mr. BERGERON. That must be an unforeseen expenditure ?

Mr. EMMERSON. These were repairs of which the department had not been advised at the time the main estimates were prepared.

Mr. BERGERON. How much was there in the main estimates for this work ?

Mr. EMMERSON. $55,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Then that would be $65,000 instead of $55,000 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. What kind of repairs are these ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In addition to the posts there were the following: Underpinning crib at lower approach to lock 4, raising Wellington bridge, removing and renewing broken pivot, four 150 ton hydraulic jacks, four 25 ton hydraulic jacks for raising large bridges, building line fence and sidewalks at Côte St. Paul, clearing site of Wellington basin leased to the Moorehouse Coal Company, removing dross and stone stored for repairs and concrete wall on the south side of the tail race of the waste weir at Côte St. Paul.

Mr. HAGGART. Is that our own waste weir or the waste weir from the mill ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is one of the waste weirs at Côte St. Paul in connection with the lock.

Beauharnois canal—repairs, $4,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Are the government going to keep that canal in operation ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We have to keep it in operation. It is used to a certain extent and while it is not very important as a canal it seems to be necessary to keep it up. There are some water-powers on it. I have not been able to reach the conclusion that the canal should be abolished as a canal.

Mr. BERGERON. Has my hon. friend been approached in regard to utilizing the water-powers on the canal?

Mr. EMMERSON. The matter has been up from time to time. There have been applications made to the department from a good many sources, from corporations and individuals, for water rights. I have not been able to determine the question or look into it as I would like to. I do not know what course should be pursued.

Mr. BERGERON. There are a few vessels passing through it. It is not a very costly work, as I understand, as there are very few men employed on it. It is important however to keep it in repair as long as it is not costly because I can see that before long, if the hon. gentleman examines the subject, he may come to the conclusion that it would be a good thing to grant the right to use the water-powers. It would be an immense water-power, because there is about 80 feet of a chute. The canal is not in operation to-day to any great extent but it requires to be kept in repair because otherwise it would go to decay very soon.

St. Peter's canal—repairs, $500.

Mr. HAGGART. Where is the other item for canals ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Does my hon. friend want to discuss it now at this stage ? I expect to have it in the supplementaries for the coming year.

Mr. HAGGART. It may be discussed on the supplementaries for the coming year.

Farran's Point canal—to complete the acetylene gas plant, $300.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely you are not putting acetylene on this canal where you have so much power to generate electricity ?

Mr. EMMERSON. This is isolated; this was done some time ago and the vote is to complete.

Mr. HAGGART. Why, two or three miles of wire would connect it with the other canals. It seems to be an absurd expenditure.

Mr. EMMERSON. This was not done in my day.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it to light the canal?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Then I would advise the minister to fling it out and to connect with wires from his electric plant.

Mr. EMMERSON. I certainly will look into it; it is five miles from the Cornwall canal and about ten from the Rapide Plat.

Mr. BERGERON. Has a gentleman named Painchaud, of Montreal, written to the Minister of Railways with regard to an invention he has for making acetylene gas safer?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have had several aplications respecting improvements, but I do not remember the names.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that Mr. Painchaud's process will prevent the accidents which have recently occurred?

Mr. EMMERSON. Application has been made to the department in connection with the lighting of cars on the Intercolonial Railway, stating that this improvement is better than Pintsch gas and that the Canadian Pacific Railway were installing it.

Welland canal—lowering head of lock No. 1, $10,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the necessity for this work?

Mr. EMMERSON. The breast wall and foundation at the head of lock No. 1, was originally built about one foot too high, and it requires to be lowered in order to maintain fourteen feet navigation in the event of the retaining wall between the old and new canal giving out, as is very likely to happen at any time. The estimate is $10,000 and after the work is completed the retaining wall will not be required.

Mr. HAGGART. Is that the total amount?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is the total estimated cost.

Mr. HAGGART. Did we not have a vote for this before ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. LANCASTER. This is down at Port Dalhousie. Is not the government spending money every year to keep that retaining wall in repair ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We had to repair the retaining wall as long as it remained, but now we are going to abandon that wall.

Mr. LANCASTER. How much per year has it cost to repair that retaining wall?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is considerably out of repair now and before it gives out we want to do this work so as to obviate the necessity of any further repairs.

Mr. FISHER. There are one or two items for the Department of Agriculture which I would like to get passed to-night.

Mr. HAGGART. We did a good night's work for the purpose of getting through at 11 o'clock, and the explanations of the Minister of Agriculture are generally so brief that he might keep us here till 1 o'clock.

Mr. FISHER. I will undertake to make my remarks very brief.

Mr. LANCASTER. There are several gentlemen absent who did not expect the agricultural estimates to come up.

Mr. HAGGART. This is about the most interesting subject that comes before us and we would like a full House to hear the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. PATERSON. I have two or three small items in the customs.

Mr. HAGGART. Your items pass any time as a matter of course.

Mr. LANCASTER. We can not make fish of one and flesh of another.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HAGGART. What are you going to do on Monday?

Mr. FIELDING. After private Bills we hope to proceed with the Autonomy Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 22, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION COMMITTEE.

Mr. T. GREENWAY moved that the fourth report of the Select Committee on Agriculture and Colonization be concurred in. He said : I might explain that the committee had before them Mr. Clarke, of the seed department, who gave what they considered very valuable information regarding the investigation which had been made into the quality of seeds and into the dealings in seed. The committee ordered the usual numbers of printed reports to be distributed in the usual way—16,900 to the members, and 3,000 for the Department, and 100 for the use of the committee. The information was considered by the committee exceedingly valuable and which should be distributed as quickly as possible. For that reason they ordered that this number of copies should be printed forthwith and distributed with the same number of copies of the statute regulating the sale of seeds which we passed this session, and I may say that I think the information obtained from Mr. Clarke proves conclusively the necessity for some such Act.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). I beg to move :

That an order of the House do issue for the production of the interim report of the Commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway together with the maps and drawing of the lines located.

Motion agreed to, and interim report presented.

Mr. FOSTER. How far does that go ?

Mr. EMMERSON. From its inception down to the 31st March.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. We will have an annual report hereafter ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Act provides for an annual report, and that matter is referred to in the report from the commission.

On the table of the House will be found location maps of the different surveys made.

Mr. FOSTER. As this report is only in typewriting, I think it would be well that the minister should move that it be printed.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am going to have it printed and distributed. I move that the interim report of the Transcontinental Railway Commission now presented be printed.

Motion agreed to.

NORTH OXFORD AND LONDON BYE-ELECTIONS.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have to inform the House that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to appoint the Hon. C. S. Hyman Minister of Public Works. The writs for the elections in North Oxford and London have been issued, and nominations will take place on the 6th June.

On the Orders of the Day being called :

HALF-BREED SCRIP.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to a rather circumstantial report that is going the rounds of the newspapers which I would like him to read, and if he would be kind enough, to make some statement with reference to it to-morrow—I do not wish to precipitate any discussion of the point to-day. It has to do with the scrip issued to the half-breeds. The principal point of the report, which is being widely dstributed, is this: At first the decision of the half-breed commission was that half-breeds who were then resident in the United States should not be allowed their scrip. Afterwards, and not long ago, an Order in Council was passed providing that residents of the United States who had been Canadian half-breeds were to be allowed their scrip. Subsequently a clause was added to the Order in Council making it possible to locate the lands without the personal attendance of the half-breeds. Some inquisitive people found out what was going on. And so this half-breed scrip has been gathered up, as far as possible, for a mere song, and very valuable lands have been or are being located by the fortunate gentlemen who were inquisitive and are said to have found out. Altogether, it is a matter which I would like the minister to look into and give a statement concerning it to the House before anything else is done about it in the way of discussion. The hon. minister will find the report to which I refer in the Winnipeg 'Tribune' of May 17th. I will send him a copy which he can return to me.

Mr. EMMERSON.

COMMISSION ON FISHERIES

On the Orders of the Day being called :

Mr. G. W. GANONG. Before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to bring to the attention of the government a matter of very considerable importance affecting a large portion of the people of the county of Charlotte.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). If my hon. friend (Mr. Ganong) will allow me: The House will be moved into Committee of Supply as soon as we have finished preliminary business, and he will have an opportunity then to speak.

Mr. GANONG. That may be to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. Do not private Bills come first?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, but they are not supposed to take very long.

Mr. FOSTER. But they may.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon.friend (Mr. Foster) knows that it is very irregular to bring up matters of this kind on the Orders of the Day, and that the regular and proper way is on a motion for Committee of Supply. My hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Ganong) will have every opportunity to speak when the motion for Committee of Supply is moved.

Mr. GANONG. I may not be present.

Mr. FOSTER. We were pretty staunch upholders of the doctrine the Prime Minister advocates before 1896, but we did not make much progress with it. As it is uncertain when we shall go into supply, perhaps my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will not press his objection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am powerless in the matter. My hon. friend (Mr. Ganong) is within his technical rights—not his constitutional rights—in moving the adjournment of the House to discuss the matter. But it is contrary to all parliamentary rules as we understand them. If it is a matter of urgency, one which cannot wait, of course, that is different. But, if it is a matter of ordinary business, it should be brought up on motion for Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. This is urgent.

Mr. GANONG. I think the matter I wish to bring to the attention of the House is one of urgency. And I think the ministers who have charge of it should lose no time in looking into it. I bring the subject up because of some recent newspaper correspondence and also because of the presence of the steamer 'Constance' in Charlotte county waters—I believe, under the control of the customs—and because of the recommendations made by the landsmen who were appointed as commissioners to investigate the fishery business. Unfortunately there never has been a Minister of Marine and Fisheries, so far as I know, who has taken enough interest in the Atlantic fisheries to go around there and make a personal investigation of the conditions under which they are carried on. These fisheries form one of the greatest industries we have in Canada. The total receipts from our fisheries are no less than $23,000,000 a year. Still, they have not received anything like the attention they should have received from the minister in charge of the department. However, after considerable discussion it was decided in 1903 to appoint a commission on the subject. We might reasonably presume that the members of that commission would have some qualifications for the business for which they were appointed, that they would be gentlemen who would be able to form intelligent ideas of the fisheries and the conditions surrounding them, and would take ample time to make such inquiries as were necessary in the interest of the fishing community. The duties of this commission, as I understand it, covered the dog-fish problem, the sardine business and the lobster business—at least it was so stated in this House by one of the commission. The fishermen began to hope that they might have their business properly looked into. But when the personnel of the commission was announced, they gave up all hope of such a thing. What was the personnel of the commission? Colonel Tucker, a retired military man, who unfortunately, is quite deaf, was the chairman, Mr. A. J. S. Copp, M.P., representing Digby county, N.S., and a lawyer, was one member. Later on, I believe through some considerable stress, the department put upon it Mr. Armstrong, of St. Andrews, a newspaper man, and Mr. Bowers, of Nova Scotia, with Mr. Venning, an official of the department, completed the commission. Thus, we had on this commission two M.P.'s, one ex-M.P., and ont would be M.P.—the gentleman I had the pleasure of defeating in 1896. This was the personnel of the commission. Now, I have nothing to say against the ability of these gentlemen. They have great ability in cetrain lines. Colonel Tucker, besides his genial qualities, proved in 1896 that he had an excellent bank account. Mr. Copp also has proved his ability. In the last election he proved his ability to down the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) who had put up a candidate in opposition to him. Mr. Armstrong has proved his ability, because he has had no difficulty, as a newspaper man in a political way, in following all the turnings and twistings of the Liberal party since 1896, going back on all the pledges and promises they gave prior to that date. These are the qualifications possessed by this commission that was to decide on questions involving the interest of 40,000 or more fishermen, a business yielding $23,000,000 yearly. Now, as I say, I do not question the fitness of these gentlemen for some other business. But I do question, and question very greatly, the fitness of any one of these gentlemen for the position to which he was appointed; and I think their report, if carefully read, will satisfy any one that the recommendations they made show that they were wholly unfitted for the duties they were appointed to perform. Why, Mr. Speaker, fishermen along the shores have considered it one of the greatest farces on record that these gentlemen should come down there to carry on this investigation. And I can give evidence from their own report, a little further on, to show how farcical it has been.

They looked upon it as what it was; the appointments were made simply to help out a gentleman or two in connection with the coming elections which were anticipated after the session of 1903. If we look in 'Hansard' of 1903 at page 13653, we will find that Colonel Kaulbach pressed very strongly for this commission and gave good reasons why it should be appointed, but at that time we had the member for Digby making some statements—some mis-statements I should say—statements that were not borne out in fact and statements that he has not had the grace or decency to retract since, statements maligning the fishermen of the county of Charlotte, which I have the honour to represent, and to which I propose to refer categorically a little later on. What were the conditions that led to the outburst of my hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Copp)? The fishermen of the county of Digby have been in the habit of coming to Charlotte county harbours for bait; they have endeavoured to do just as they pleased in Charlotte county waters, and if a Charlotte county fisherman had fish in his weir they would offer any price they chose for the fish. They would go around the mouths of the rivers as I have seen them at the mouth of the Magaguadavic and with dip-nets take little fish two or four inches long and carry them away in millions to Nova Scotia to use them for bait. They did more; they came over to Charlotte county waters and ploughed up the beaches in every way, robbed the beaches of the clams, robbed them to such an extent that in one of the islands in Passamaquoddy bay, you can at a distance see what looks like chalk cliffs, almost as large as the cliffs of Dover, simply from the clam shells that these gentlemen have left there. To such an extent was this done that the people of Charlotte had to petition the local government of New Brunswick, and that government had to pass a law to prevent them stealing all the clams there were in Charlotte, and to-day they cannot do this simply because they must have a government license to take clams. But they must have some revenge, and they chose apparently their representative to wreak it on the fishermen of Charlotte.

Now just look at the conditions. In 1903 this hon. gentleman made the statements which I propose to refer to maligning the fishermen of Charlotte, prejudging the case and making mis-statements and still he is appointed on a commission that is supposed to be impartial. That is actually the condition. It reminds me of a man named Welsh who years ago lived in my county. A murder had been committed and he walked all the way to the shire town, some 20 miles, to get on the jury. He said he knew the man deserved to be hanged but he wished incidentally to draw the $1.50 a day for jury fees. This hon. gentleman says they are a dishonest people there. He does not ask for a fee but he caters for votes in his own county in the next election, and he goes on talking without any knowledge of what he is talking about. In one case he says that all the sardines are caught at Grand Manan when any one who knows anything of fishing in that district is aware that they are not caught there, but in the inner waters of Passamaquoddy bay. There are other mis-statements to which I shall also refer. I need not apologize for referring so frequently to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Copp) because he was the dominant influence all through with the commission. Anyone who reads the report will find this to be so, and it is done simply to make himself popular at home irrespective of the actual rights of the case in the county of Charlotte. I would not like you to take my opinion alone, and I shall quote you the opinion of another gentleman. We had some discussion on this subject in this House in 1904 and on page 6991 of 'Hansard' Mr. William Ross, then member for Victoria, Cape Breton, made some remarks. When referring to the qualifications necessary for the commissioners he said :

> Do not suppose, Mr. Speaker, that I aspire to be placed on the commission myself. I have a sufficient sense of my own ability to lead me to decline the offer if it were made to me. If the Minister of Railways and Canals wished to appoint a commission to deal with a difficult railway question he would appoint eminent engineers for that purpose.
> Mr. COPP. Do I understand the hon. member to say that he wished to serve on that commission ?
> Mr. WM. ROSS (Victoria). I said that I had sense enough of my own inability to fill that position, and that I would not accept it if it were offered to me ; and that, I think, would have been the proper course for my hon. friend to pursue. . . . My idea of a commission would be one composed of men trained all their lifetime to the business of fishermen.

And not lawyers. This is the opinion of Mr. William Ross then one of the representatives from his own province, of his lack of qualification to be on that commission. There is another incident to which I wish to refer in connection with Col. Tucker to show the ability of that hon. gentleman and the great interest he has taken in the fishermen. Down at Grand harbour, Grand Manan, where they made a flying visit—in fact they came in one afternoon, called some of the citizens together and said they were going to leave that evening, and the citizens advised them that if that was the way they were doing business, they had better go at once, whereupon they decided to remain over a day—one of the most profound questions he asked, one that he said should be embalmed in 'Hansard' or in his report was as to how many scales there were on a herring. It is a most remarkable thing that no one had ever determined this number or put it on record, and this gallant colonel at last inquires for that information, which would be of so much advantage to the public.

But, Sir, this commission was appointed in 1903 and they showed exceeding activity that fall—it is perfectly marvellous what activity they showed There was some little reason for it, if you will remember that the first meetings of this commission were almost coincident with an expected election. If the Grand Trunk Pacific had not held up the government in 1903 for a better bargain we would certainly have had an election that year, but there seemed to be some trouble, some hitch, they did not put the money into it, I believe the first time. The commission made some few excursions down around the islands, but they suddenly called them off as soon as they found there was to be no election. I shall take their report and look it over. The Order in Council was passed on November 14, 1903. The scope of the inquiry as stated was to look into the dog-fish question and the lobster and sardine fisheries. They started out at once for the Magdalen islands, but on that trip Mr. A. C. Copp, was not with them as the report says. He was probably preparing for the election at home. Having completed their investigations at the Magdalen islands, they proceeded to North Head, Grand Manan, in the county of Charlotte. They reached that point on December 8th and held a meeting. The next meeting was at Grand Harbour on the 9th. Just fancy going over all the fishing interests there and not even having an opportunity of going over to examine the fisheries at all in these great tidal waters, inquiring of the fishermen here and there their opinion in regard to the fisheries.

On the evening of the 9th——

And that is rather peculiar.

—a delegation came over from Campobello——

And they were supposed to go to Campobello——

—to consult the commission in regard to the lobster fisheries——

And thereby hangs a tale. This was a delegation representing Yankee canners who wanted licenses to can lobsters in Canadian territory. On the 10th they held a second meeting at Grand Harbour and they then completed their investigation. They had not commenced to deal with the question that was assigned to them, but the election had gone by and it could not work particularly to their advantage to go to other points. I think Captain Pratt let them out a little, because he said that the weather was very rough and these landsmen perhaps could not stand the swell of the sea. It was all the better for them, because, if they wanted to interview the fishermen, rough weather was the time to do it in. If the weather is fine the fishermen are around the coast attending to their business. They did not go over to Campobello. They were not allured by what Senator Byron would describe as the sun kissed waves of Passamaquoddy bay. They would have had a delightful trip in the government steamer but they did not cross the bay. They did not go over to Campobello, or Deer island, the home of the sardine fishery. If they had published this report they would not have secured a vote from one of those islands. They did not go to Seal Cove, or to White Head, two other very important fishing stations on the island of Grand Manan. Then, on page 3, they say that they resumed the inquiry in the following September just before another election was due to come on—September 3. I will not weary the House by going over the whole of the material they have here, but I may mention that on September 23 they reached Seal Cove, Grand Manan. They got through there very rapidly and then they proceeded to Lord's Cove where they held a meeting on September 24. See how rapidly they got through there. They were hustling. On the same day they held a meeting at Welch Pool, and then they went to Back bay on the mainland and held a meeting on the 26th. On the same day they held a meeting at Wilson's Beach. Next day, September 27, they were at Beaver Harbour. Then they took a little excursion to Eastport to be entertained by the Sea Coast Packing Company, and on the following day, September 29, they finished at St. Andrews. This completed their inquiry as far as the sardine business alone is concerned which represents an annual business, according to their report, of $454,000 and a total business to the Charlotte county fishing interests running well up to $1,000,000. In this cursory way these gentlemen finished up and decided what was best in the interests of the fishermen in that section. I do not want to deal with this whole report. But, they make one statement which I have here and which I shall read. The report tries to prove that the catch of sardines is depleting and ruining the fisheries. But strange to say there are at the present time more young fish in Passamaquoddy bay than ever before in the history of the country. That fact is the basis of one conclusion at which they arrive. See what a wise one it is :

In the face of the enormous catches of small fish for the manufacture of sardines, which have been annually made for the past twenty or thirty years, it is difficult to believe that the adult fish do not exist in relative quantities in outside waters.

I should think it would. I do not know how they expected to get these young fish in myriads in the inside waters, but this is one conclusion they have come to and if there are such immense quantities of young fish in the inside waters there must be a few old fish in the outside waters. I want to give the House a few calculations that these gentlemen have put on record, and which are well worthy of consideration, but before doing that I wish to take up a matter in connection with the speech of the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Copp) and that I may do him justice I shall read from his speech which is to be found at page 13,653 of 'Hansard,' 1903. He states one very evident fact, I should think, to almost any one when he said that fishermen in order to fish must have bait. Then he makes another statement that——

The fishermen of Nova Scotia, particularly of St. Mary's bay——

That is his own little barn-yard over there in Digby——

—and the Bay of Fundy, secure the most of their bait from Grand Manan, Campobello and Passamaquoddy bay.

That is probably quite true. Then the next statement he makes is that the—Sardine industry . . . should be worth millions of dollars to the Dominion.

Well, we only wish it were worth more millions of dollars, but if you read the report and the figures that I propose to give you presently you will see the manner in which this hon. gentleman proposes to make it worth millions of dollars. The next statement he makes, and it is one which I think it would be difficult for him to prove, is that :

The herring industry of the United States is wholly in Canadian waters.

He had not then been down along the coast. A gentleman was not very well prepared to go on this commission if he knew no more about the herring industry of the United States than to make a statement like that on the floor of this House. Then, he referred to Lubec as being the head centre of the sardine industry. Lubec and Eastport are the two great towns manufacturing sardines. The capital stock of the companies, he says, engaged in that industry would be from one to two million dollars. However, in his report he places the amount at $585,000. He also states that the sardine herrings run four to six inches in length, when, as a matter of fact, the average sardine herring is about seven inches in length running all the way from five to nine inches. Then, he says that :

> The fishermen are sending tens of thousands of casks of herring out of Canadian waters across to the American side.

—that belong to us and that ought to be secured for bait for our fishermen. If he will agree to take tens of thousands of hogsheads of bait the fishermen of Charlotte county will catch them. He can get the whole product of Charlotte county for bait if he wants it. There is no question about that; but he cannot send a stray vessel now and again to take out bait and expect that the Charlotte county fishermen are going to sit down in their boats and wait until the next one comes along. The Charlotte county fishermen understand their business and they have found a market in Eastport and Lubec. Is there any reason why they should not send their catch to Eastport and Lubec ? I should glory in the day when we could use all the Charlotte county fish for bait for we could supply this world and another one I believe with all the bait required. Are we to be confined to sell bait to St. Mary's bay fishermen only ? Here is another statement by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Copp). He says that our fishermen are actually prevented from buying herring in Canada by a syndicate of American canners who bind the weir fishermen of New Brunswick not to sell a single hogshead of bait or herring to any one except themselves. I would like to know where the hon. gentleman got that information ? He made that statement in 1903, and I have in my possession here a copy of the contract made by the weir owners in 1900, and there is this special clause in it :

> That in order to carry out the terms and conditions of this contract the party of the first part will comply with all the requirements of the fisheries laws of the Dominion of Canada and the province of New Brunswick.

Further on :

> It is understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto that this contract shall not be construed to prohibit the party of the first part from selling to any person or persons, company or companies, engaged in the packing of sardines in Canada such portion of the product of the weir herein named as shall be desired for packing purposes in any Canadian factory for sale outside the United States, or selling to farmers for fertilizing purposes, where authorized by law to do so, and to fishermen for bait.

That is the first contract, and the later contract made in 1905 has the same clause in it allowing them to sell to the fishermen for bait. Therefore that statement maligning the fishermen of the county of Charlotte has no foundation in fact. The hon. gentleman also states that some of the fishermen even offered $60 a hogshead. Oh, but the fishermen of Charlotte county would like to have the picture of that fellow who offered $60 for a hogshead ; it would be a rarity. If the offer had been 60 cents we would not be surprised, but when a man came over and offered $60 for what they were selling in the United States for $4, then it would be a rarity to have a picture of the man who offered $60 for a hogshead. The hon. gentleman also deprecated the idea of granting licenses to weirs. What is the reason for granting the licenses to weirs ? It is not for the revenue that the government gets out of it because the license only amounts to $5, but it is simply that the government may have control, the same as New Brunswick had to control the clam beds in order to keep the St. Mary's bay fishermen from taking off the clams ; nothing more, nothing less. The hon. gentleman states that some woman who actually lives in New York has control of a weir license down there and that she lets it for $2,500 a year. Well, if he looks into it I think he will find that that woman complies with the provisions of the law. As I understand it, any person owning real estate contiguous to the waters where fish are caught has the first right to make an application for the erection of a weir, and I have no doubt this woman owns the property on which that weir is situated. I judge it is immaterial whether or not she happens to live for a year or two in New York. She could dispose of the products of that weir just as she wished. The hon. gentleman also states that the weirs are all owned by a few people. I had a good deal of difficulty in getting the government to give me a return of the number of people who did own them, and if he looks at the return which is on file in an office up stairs he will find that there are a good many people who own weirs in these waters. Then, he spoke on the question of a license being issued for the paltry sum of $5, but as I understand it the government are not issuing these licenses with any idea of receiving any great revenue from them. There are weirs built in this section which cost from $1,000 to $4,000 and there have been instances in which the owners have not even got the $5 return out of them, so erratic are these fish which run one year in one direction and another year in another direction. So much for those matters, however, as I wish to do the hon. gentlemen justice. Now I would like to come down to this computation in the report which says that it is calculated that fully 80 per cent of the catch of sardines is out of the Charlotte waters. I think that probably was true prior to 1904, but we will accept that statement as correct. Then the report says :

> Taking this estimate of 80 per cent, the following results are shown : 80 per cent of the number of cases packed in the above county in 1904 would be 1,138,602. 80 per cent of the value of the pack would be $3,503,082.40. The price paid by United States packers to Canadian citizens would, at $4 per hogshead, be 40 cents per case, which would make the amount paid by the canners to Canadian fishermen $454,640, leaving $3,048,442.40 as the difference in the cost of the raw material, and the value of that raw material manufactured, all of which benefits would have been derived by the citizens of Canada, if the raw material had been manufactured in Canada.

Well, that is first rate, but what would the hon. gentleman have done with 1,136,602 cases of sardines if he had them packed? He could not have sold them in Canada for twenty years. The present pack used in the Canadian trade annually is less than 50,000 cases altogether, and still the hon. gentleman suggests that all these fish should be packed in Canadian waters. Then, these gentlemen go on to show how rich we would be if we would only carry out their suggestions in this report.

> In 1897 there were packed for sardines 500,000 barrels. Each barrel contains 10 buckets, that is, 5,000,000 buckets, each bucket containing 500 fish. If these fish were allowed to mature each bucket would make a barrel of herring.

Then they get very liberal and they say, well, if this estimate is too large let us divide it by two:

> If this estimate is too large, allow 250 fish to the bucket and this would give 2,500,000 barrels of 10-inch herring, which at $2 per barrel would be $5,000,000 instead of $400,000 at $4 per hogshead paid by the sardine factories.

Think of it Mr. Speaker; why a Klondike is nothing to that; just down in that little section of Charlotte county this report proposes to turn these herrings into 2,500,000 barrels. Oh, we could have fish then every day in the week. Half a barrel of fish for every inhabitant in Canada would be packed in Charlotte county then, and if their first estimate is correct there would be a barrel of fish for every man woman and child in Canada, but we would like to know where the market is going to be. Well, I do not know how the gentlemen on that commission figured on it unless they figured on putting a string on each of these small fish that comes into Charlotte county waters, and saying to it; go out and take a little recreation and get fattened up and we will pull the string and get you back again and pack you. And the hon. gentleman thinks that this should be done in the interest of the St. Mary's bay fishermen. That they should just come over and say to the sardines: Come in shore now; notify the whales, the sharks, the porpoise, the cod, the hake, the halibut, and every other fish that they must not touch them, as that they have to come back and be caught for bait by the St. Mary's Bay fishermen. One suggestion is about as sensible as the other. Let us go on with this report. That was in 1897. Then they come up to 1904, when they say the catch was double that of 1897, and the value was more than twice as much; so that while Charlotte county lost $5,000,000 in 1897, it lost in 1904 $10,000,000 because we did not know how to carry on our fishing business, and these learned gentlemen come down there and tell us how we ought to do it. I imagine that there will be more fish caught this year, and that our fishermen will get richer, at least in imagination, after reading this report, even than they were with last year's product. Really I should like to have our friend from Digby employed down there. If he should come down and play the mermaid, and sing these siren songs to the fish and bring them in shore, it would be a most desirable thing; because the fish play off shore after they grow up. You can find in the reports every where plenty of large fish off shore, and if we had some of these sweet songs from this commission, which would draw the fish to the shore, it would be an excellent investment for this country. You may talk to the immigrant of the wealth of the west or of the Klondike, but you should say to him: If you want to get rich, come down to the county of Charlotte, if you can only be sure that you can induce all the sardines that have grown into large fish to come in when you call. The report attempts to prove a scarcity of the large herring is due to catching sardines, as if an infinitesimal amount of this great food fish, not only for man but for other fish in the ocean, as all fishermen know, could in the least affect the product when every ocean is known to be full of herring. You can take Mr. Cowie's report itself, or the report of any fish industry in England, Scotland, Norway or Holland, and you will find that the same thing obtains. In one year the fish will be very plentiful, while in another year, without any apparent cause, there will be very few. Why, the commission's own report proves this. They have quoted from Mr. Pedley's report covering fifty years, in which it is stated that when herring are very plentiful in the Bay of Fundy they will not play in shore; they are in deep water, where the fishermen cannot get at them. Prof. Prince makes a similar statement. I have here a quotation from Prof. Prince in regard to the effect of the dog-fish, showing that it is not the killing off of the small fish that is diminishing the larger fish, but that the dog-fish is really accountable. Prof. Prince says:

> The direct harm that a plague of dog-fish can do is well nigh incredible. Thus in 1882 the pack of cured herring in the Shetland Isles was 134,000 barrels, whereas in 1888, owing to the presence of dog-fish, the total quantity fell to 99,000 barrels, and in 1889, even lower, that is, not more than 47,000 barrels or only about one-third of the pack two years before and repeating therefore an enormous total loss.

Showing that there are other causes apart altogether from the catching of the small fish for making the larger fish scarce. Besides, as they say, there must be large fish outside when there are small ones inside, and there were more small fish inside last year than has ever been known before in the history of the business. But, Sir, instead of these gentlemen going at the work in a reasonable way and destroying the dog-fish, the silver hake and all other fish that prey on the herring, they propose to kill off the fishermen of Charlotte county or else force them to go to the United States to earn a living, as it can easily be shown the present regulations will do. Talk about diminishing the herring, why, in England it is not an unusual thing for 20,000 hogsheads of herring to be landed at Bristol in one day. But this has no effect on the quantity of herring at all. The sea is absolutely full of these great food fish; Providence has provided them on purpose that they should be food both for man and for other fish. In 1896, we had a greater run of herring in the county of Charlotte than was ever known before within the memory of man down there. At a weir at Whitehead, Grand Manan, 300 hogsheads were taken at one time. It seems almost incredible; but that was the record catch of the county. The fish were selling that year, fine large herring, at $1 a hogshead of 10 barrels, the lowest price in many years. You can imagine how plentiful they were. They were never so plentiful before, and they have not been so plentiful since. Sometimes I have wondered what the reason was. You know during the last election we heard of the gracious acts of the right hon. the First Minister in making more wheat grow and in bringing all the benefits that have come to the country under Liberal rule. Why did he not turn his eyes towards the county of Charlotte and make the fish come in shore? One suggestion is as sensible as the other. If the right hon. gentleman is responsible for the falling off since 1896, he certainly ought to apologize to the people of the county of Charlotte. Herring, I presume, are the most erratic of any fish. Some of our Nova Scotia friends would perhaps apply this erratic habit more to the mackerel fishery, because there is more invested in it. Sometimes the herring strike the shore at one place, sometimes at another, usually in summer, but frequently in winter. Some of the best fishing on Grand Manan is in winter time. But the herring are absolutely erratic. Nobody can tell when they will come or when they will leave. Last year in St. Andrew's harbour the herring were so thick that you could take them by dipping in a fish net—there was no need of a weir—while in the river St. Croix there was hardly a fish to be found.

The year before the river was teeming with fish and St. Andrew's harbour only had a fair amount and some places along the coast had none. This shows that a good deal depends on chance, and that when fishermen invest their $2,000 or $3,000 in putting up weirs they have to take the chances of the fish striking the weirs where they happen to build them. The fish are very erratic. It is past the wit of the best investigator to determine why they vary their spawning grounds from year to year as they do. They come in schools and without a leader. They seem to start with some God-given impulse and all go in the one direction. Even when these schools are broken up by whales and dog-fish, that same impulse brings the school together again, and they go on looking for their spawning or feeding grounds in whatever direction they may be. Under such conditions it is perfect nonsense to state that the sardine business has any effect on the catch of the larger fish in and around the Bay of Fundy, or the coast of Nova Scotia, as implied in this fishery report.

I would like to quote a few of the recommendations in this report. Take recommendation No. 1, I would like to have them on record, because I believe the government will be ashamed of them some day:

> That in view of the fact that the United States government imposes an import duty on fish entering the United States when carried in British bottoms, and that as a consequence, all the fresh herring carried to the United States factories are in United States bottoms, in order to escape the United States duty, and in view of the further fact that these United States boats are allowed to enter Canadian waters for the purpose of obtaining these fresh herring without reporting regularly at customs, the Canadian custom laws be enforced in respect to the United States boats carrying such fresh herring from Passamaquoddy Bay, in the same manner as in all other ports and waters of Canada.

I am glad to say that Mr. Armstrong had the grace to dissent from this, because he was the only one on the commission who actually knew the condition of affairs down there. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs will understand what that condition is because he frequently has had it brought to his attention. The fish in tidal waters run with the tides. They run very much more frequently in shore at night and on dark days than they do on bright days. What is the result? The result is that nearly all the fish in the county of Charlotte are caught at night. Ninety per cent of them are caught at the night tides. What is essential after you have caught the fish? Read Mr. Bower's statement. In Great Britain they use steamers instead of the old trawlers. Why? Because they must get the fish rapidly to market. The fish caught in the waters of the county of Charlotte are caught at night, and to be of any value they must get to the factory at the earliest possible moment, or as soon as the factory starts work in the morning. That would be absolutely impossible if you made these fishermen go to the Customs House, because if you know anything about tidal waters you will find that it is no picnic getting around in them with the tide running seven or eight miles an hour and perhaps an adverse wind as well. In the past, through the courtesy of the government and probably without legal right, the fishermen were allowed to take their fish and deliver at Earlport without being obliged to go to the custom house for a clearance, and that was conceded because they could not have got through the custom house before the fish were spoilt. Now these people propose that every boat must enter and clear at the customs. That simply means that the fishermen will have to cease fishing because the fish will not keep. The fishermen have been in the habit of reporting to the customs every two or three days. There is no export duty, and the matter is simply one of furnishing statistics. But now this commission suggests that every time a boat comes in or goes out, it must report at the custom house—a thing absolutely impossible under the conditions in these tidal waters. I am glad Mr. Armstrong objected to that, because he was the only man on the commission who knew anything about the question. Then comes recommendation No. 2, which would be the death knell of the fishery business.

That an export duty be imposed on all fresh herring exported from Canada into the United States in United States bottoms, equal to the import duty imposed by the United States government upon the same article when imported in Canadian bottoms.

Mr. Armstrong again dissented, he being the only man who knew anything about the conditions. An export duty would simply mean the closing up of the fisheries and driving our fishermen to the coast of Maine. A great many are going there as it is. Take these factories at present located at Eastport. I know the conditions precisely. The first man who started the business was Mr. Julius Wolfe, of New York, and the industry was located there because of the fact that plenty of fish were contiguous to it. All along the American sea-board there are plenty of fish and weirs are being built there. There are three hundred now west of West Quoddy, near Lubec, and the circulating of this very report will tend to increase the number. As a result our fishermen will be employed to build and fish those weirs, and we will lose that class of our population. At Jonesport and Boothbay there are one or two factories, but the majority have centralized around Lubec and Eastport. These people have no desire to leave, but once they do leave it will mean good-bye to the Charlotte sardine factories. I know of one concern now that has an option on a site for a factory at Jonesport for $20,000; and once the transaction is closed they will build a factory there and employ our fishermen. Last year they put on steam trawlers to bring the fish up the coast. Sixty per cent of the fish are caught in our waters and forty per cent in American waters. Our fishermen are not in a position to change their methods of living and go to the prairies of the great west because their education does not fit them for the life out there, so they will gravitate down to the American coast and we will lose some of the best citizens we have in this country—men of the very highest type, not one per cent of whom are illiterate. We have the very best schools in New Brunswick according to the report of the inspector. Yet if the drastic measures recommended in this report be adopted, we will drive that splendid class of citizens out of the country, while at the same time this government is spending a million dollars this year to bring into this country classes of people, many of whom are undesirable, and two-thirds of whom are illiterate.

At the same time, if this is carried out, they will drive away probably from 3,000 to 5,000 men from our county, the best citizens we have, I do not care in what portion of Canada you go. Now, there was a letter in one of the St. John newspapers suggesting that the American canners would come into Canada and pack sardines. Why should they? We have plenty of canners. I happen to know about the canning business, for I have a number of good Liberal friends who are engaged in that business—Mr. J. Sutton Clark, of L'Etang; Messrs. Connors Brothers, of Black's Harbour, and Mr. Henry Lord, of Deer Island. What could the American canners do if they came over here and established factories in Canada? They could not find a market in Canada and they could not take the product over to the United States against the duty of $2.50 a case. A statement appeared in the papers that Mr. Pike, of Lubec, Maine, had said that he would come over here if the export duty was imposed. Well, I have here a copy of a St. John paper, in which appears a letter from Mr. Pike himself refuting that. That letter is as follows:

LUBEC, Me., May 11, 1905.

To the Editor of the 'Sun':

Sir—My attention has just been called to an alleged interview with me published in your paper of March 30. The statements credited to me are so different from the opinions which I hold that in justice to myself I feel it necessary to reply to them in as public a manner as they have been circulated. I remember the occasion of my visit to St. John in the latter part of March, and a conversation I had there with a gentleman whose name I do not know, in which the recommendations of the fishery commission were briefly discussed, and I emphatically stated, as I believe, that the sardine or herring business of the counties of Charlotte and St. John would be ruined by carrying into effect the recommendations of the commission; and I did not suggest that the situation could be relieved by the extension of the Canadian canning business, or that I would build a factory in St. John. Being fairly familiar with the business both in the United States and Canada, I would have been very foolish to do so, as the Canadian market is fully supplied with canned sardines by the excellent factories now in operation there, and our experience in the United States, where, with a population of seventy or eighty millions of people, we have been unable in thirty years to increase the annual sale beyond about one million two hundred thousand cases, together with the fact that a large portion of our output is consumed by the foreign element among the working people of the larger cities and by the poorer people in the Southern States—classes as yet almost unknown in Canada—convinces me that it will be very many years before there is a demand in your country which cannot be supplied by the canners now doing business there; and I was not likely to say that the erection of factories in Canada would have any effect in relieving the situation in which the fishermen of the two counties would find themselves should the recommendations of the fishery commission be carried into effect, or that I had any intention of building a factory in St. John.

While I am, sincerely yours,

J. C. PIKE.

It may be said that this gentleman has every interest in fighting the report of this commission. But we need to look at the question from our own standpoint. We have fish to sell, and we have no market for them. Until that market develops through the efforts of the government, which are suggested by the commission further on in the report, I believe the people of Charlotte have a right to sell the product which the Almighty has placed within their reach, as they have been doing for the last fifty years—or thirty years, to my own knowledge.

Now, I am aware that a small section of our county—I want to do justice to all parts of it—has petitioned, as I understand, though the petition was not sent through me, for an export duty. In 1897 we formed a fishery association in Charlotte county, and at that time it was strongly advocated to have an export duty put on large herring—say herring of 10 inches and upwards. I believe some petitions from the island of Grand Manan have been sent in in favour of an export duty on fish. There may be some who hold the opinion that such a duty would be a benefit. But the great majority of the people of Charlotte county are absolutely against such a measure applying to sardine herring. And, had this fishery commission report been published in West Isles and Campobello before the last election, the government would never have known that there was such a thing as a Liberal alive. Now, recommendation No. 3 is as follows :

3. That every legitimate effort should at once be made by the government to secure for Canada the manufacture of raw material from the sardine fishery, and with a view of the general development of the fisheries of Canada, that a bureau be established in connection with the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and that agents be appointed to such populous foreign centres as may be deemed admissible, the special duties of whom to be the ascertaining and securing of outside markets for the product of the Canadian fisheries and the dissemination of information regarding the trade possibilities of Canada in respect thereto.

I think that is a most excellent recommendation, and I hope that the government will take it up. And when the time comes when we can handle our own product, there is no man in Canada who will rejoice more than I shall. Because if there are protectionists under heaven, I believe that I can claim to be one of them. I have no sympathy with our friends in the United States. I have lived alongside of them for the last thirty or forty years. They are good neighbours in many respects, but they are looking after their own interests all the time. Do not let us, by any foolish or inconsiderate action, cause the ruin of our own industry. To put an export duty on these fish would be just as sensible a thing as for the United States to put an export duty on corn coming into Canada. Some people in the United States might argue : You fellows in Canada now buy our corn, but we will make you buy your starch and your glucose from us. They have the corn which we have not. We have the herring which they have not. It would be just as sensible for them to have put an export duty on corn to force the manufacture of starch and glucose there as for us to put an export duty on fish to force the canning of sardines to be done in Canada.

Recommendation No. 4 declares that the present fee of $5 on weir licenses is too low. Well, I would like to hear the argument by which that statement is supported. If the license fee were imposed for revenue, there might be something in that idea. But it has never been so considered. I do not think there has ever been such a suggestion, except as emanating from the minds of these gentlemen. And what did they say this license should be ? They recommend that the fee should be from $20 to $60. And why $20 to $60 ? Why not $500 to $1,000 ? One would be just as sensible as the other. And how would you regulate it ? A weir this year will yield $5,000 and next year not a dollar according as the fish may run. Would you base the tax on the amount the weir yields ? It is a senseless suggestion, and I am satisfied it is no use discussing, because I am confident that no wise government would think of adopting it, and discussion of it would be a mere waste of time.

Recommendation No. 6 is as follows :

6. That in view of the disputes arising in connection with the measuring of sardine herring when being offered for sale at the weirs, it is desirable that a standard measure should be adopted and they would recommend that the Inspector of Fisheries be instructed to furnish the department with such measure.

I can very well support that, because in 1897, 1898 and 1899 I advocated the same thing with the Minister of Inland Revenue, and at one time had him so far convinced that I anticipated that he was going to prescribe a standard measure. The difficulty was that many of our fishermen had their fish measured in baskets. Well, a basket is rather an indefinite thing, it may contain half a barrel or it may contain a barrel. Lately, I believe, they are measured in tubs, which are supposed to contain half a barrel. The fish are so plentiful that the fishermen are not particular. But the man buying the fish is looking for the largest measure, because the more fish he gets the better credit he has at the factory for which he obtains his fish. We should have a standard measure. I very strongly support this recommendation.

Now, those are the chief recommendations upon which I have touched. But, Sir, I do not want the House to think that I am the only one who seems to be interested in this affair in New Brunswick. It has been brought up in this House, but I wish to show you how much interest has been taken in it in that province. No less a body than the New Brunswick legislature, composed of 46 members passed a unanimous resolution against these recommendations. I propose to read that resolution as I want it to be on 'Hansard.' It cannot be said that this is a political affair, so far as New Brunswick is concerned, because the government there is in sympathy with this government and besides that the hon. gentleman who moved it is one of our most staunch Liberals, the Hon. Geo. F. Hill, one of the representatives of Charlotte, moved the following resolution:

Whereas, it has been brought to the attention of this legislature that the fisheries commission recently appointed by the government of Canada have submitted to the government the following recommendation:

(a) That an export duty be placed upon sardine herring.

(b) That the customs laws with regard to the entering and clearing of vessels be strictly enforced against the sardine boats.

(c) That the present weir license fee of $5 be increased to a minimum figure of $20, with a maximum of $60.

(d) That no new weir licenses be granted.

And whereas, this legislature is satisfied that the enactment of these recommendations would practically destroy the sardine herring fishery of Passamaquoddy bay, upon which the fishing and trade population of Charlotte county, in the province, largely depend, that until an ample market has been secured for the product of this fishery to take the place of the market the fishermen of said county now enjoy in the United States, it would be unwise to impose an export duty or take any action to disturb existing conditions; that the only immediate effect of such a duty would be to divert the fishery and the profits of the same from New Brunswick and its people to the state of Maine and the fishermen of said state; that in respect to the entering and clearing of boats engaged in the sardine carrying trade, this business cannot be successfully carried on if a strict interpretation of the customs laws in that regard be insisted on; that any increase in the weir license fee would prove a burden which, owing to the erratic movements of the fish, would prevent many of the poorer fishermen from continuing their licenses, and that the non-issuance of new weir licenses would shut out many young men from the shore fisheries of the province and compel them to leave the country or resort to illegal fishing, and that the condition of the fisheries does not warrant any such restrictions.

Therefore be it resolved, that this legislature place on record its disapproval of the recommendation of the fishery commission above set forth, and respectfully urge upon the government of Canada that, under the conditions existing in the sardine fishery, the enactment of the said recommendation is not advisable, and that such enactment would be attended with incalculable injury to a large portion of the population of the county of Charlotte, one of the most important sections of the province of New Brunswick.

And be it further resolved, that a copy of this resolution, signed by the clerk of this house, be forwarded to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and that a copy be likewise sent to the Secretary of State, with a request that the same be submitted to the Governor in Council.

On this resolution Hon. Mr. Hill spoke as follows:

I would like to add a few words to what is contained in the resolution, but I do not intend to go into details, as my colleagues from Charlotte have a better knowledge of the facts than I have. I shall therefore confine myself to a general result of these recommendations. First, as regards the export duty, it is expected that it will amount to three-quarters of a cent a pound, or seven dollars a hogshead. The average price of sardines delivered to the factory people at the weirs is four dollars and sometimes when they are plentiful it goes down as low as two dollars. That being so, it would destroy the sardine business in Charlotte if this export duty should be imposed and it would also injure St. John. All the weirs that have been erected for this fishery would become of no value. Tens of thousands of dollars have been expended on these weirs, and they would become useless, for the Dominion market is not large enough to justify the erection of large sardine factories in Charlotte county. Then as regards the strict enforcement of customs regulations against sardine boats. The sardine is a fish that is easily injured and which keeps but a short time, so that to require these boats to report at the custom-house, which might be miles away, would cause so much delay as to impair or destroy their value. As these reports are made merely for statistical purposes, it ought to be sufficient if they reported once a week. Few people have any idea of the extent of the sardine industry in Charlotte or of the amount of capital invested in it. The fisheries of Charlotte have an annual value of about a million and a quarter dollars and probably one-half of this comes from the sardine fishery. This large business would be destroyed if either of these recommendations were carried out, and we would be driving away our young men to foreign lands. Already too many of our young men go away to better their condition and this would drive them out in larger numbers. St. John county is interested in this matter, and about two years ago a large number of sardines made their appearance in the harbour of St. John. Our fishermen followed them and although they were each fined $15 by the St. John police magistrate for not taking out a license, it paid them well, for they took $25,000 worth of fish. All these boats took back from St. John large stocks of goods which they purchased there, so that their presence was not unwelcome. The islands of Charlotte contain as intelligent class of people as you can find anywhere. A people whom we can not afford to lose. They are a healthy and hardy race, and the day may come when the mother country may need their services for the navy. As Kipling says in one of his poems, 'And you called on the younger people, the men who can ride and shoot.' We all know that the control of the sea is what makes a world power, and one hundred of these hardy men are worth all the Russian Jews that have come into this country for years. As to the policy of imposing an export duty, the same thing has been proposed with reference to Manitoba wheat in the interest of the millers, that the people of Manitoba are not in favour of it. This law if enforced would cause a great deal of illegal fishing, for to enforce a law you must have public sentiment behind you. But when regulations are obnoxious to the whole body of the people they are certain to be evaded, and illegal fishing could not be prevented. It would not be well to bring about such a state of affairs. These people feel that as their fathers settled on the rocky shores of these islands a century ago for the sake of the fishing, and built their homes there, it would be unjust for the government to say now that they shall be forbidden to enter into the heritage of their fathers.

Mr. Hart said in bringing up this matter the other day I did so with the idea that it was a subject of great imoortance, which affected all parts of the province. I feel that all the members of this house should have an opportunity of considering this matter well, and I think there should be no opposition to this resolution. We do not wish to find fault with the members of the commission, but when we have men on the islands who are so much interested in this industry, I think that one of them should have been placed on the commission. If the report of the commissioners should be acted on it would result in the death of the weir fishing. The export duty proposed would be from 100 to 150 per cent on the cost of the fish, so that the fish could not be sold to advantage. The enforcement of the customs regulations would be equally objectionable, for custom-houses are only open during the day, and where fish are taken after four o'clock it would be 18 hours before they could be got to the factories. The fish taken in Canadian waters belong to the same school as the fish taken in American waters, and the catch in the American weirs has been increasing. If the Eastport canneries could not get their fish from Canadians they could buy them from American fishermen. This business gives employment to a great many people and stimulates every other industry. It is one that should not be rashly interfered with.

Mr. Hart knows well what he is talking of because he is a large dealer in groceries and sundries in the town of St. Andrews and is well aware just how valuable the proceeds of that industry are to the town in which he resides.

Mr. Osman also expressed his approval.

Mr. Clarke said: To one familiar with the sardine fishery the justice of this resolution must be very apparent, and I trust it will commend itself to the good sense of this house. The sardine fishery employs large numbers of people on the islands, and I have no doubt that from three to five thousand persons depend upon it for their means of livelihood. There is no other source from which these people can seek support. The evidence submitted to the commission gave absolutely no warrant for the recommendation made. The fishermen of Nova Scotia say that the catch of sardine interferes with the large herring fishery, but there was no evidence to support this statement. It is well known that schools of fish are very erratic in their movements, and the variation in the catch is due to this cause. The winter herring which were once very plentiful disappeared for fifteen years and then turned up again just about the time the commissioners were making up their report. The fisheries of Charlotte have not been injured by the sardine fisheries, and the catch is larger now than it was ten years ago. There is no large market for sardines in Canada. Indeed the only large market is the United States. The imposition of these regulations would ruin the fisheries of Charlotte county, and the people of Charlotte almost to a man are opposed to them. There is no more reason for an export duty on sardines than there is to any other natural product of Canada.

The resolution was then put and carried unanimously.

So that you will see, Sir, that there is a very large body in New Brunswick opposed to the findings of this Fishery Commission, and not the least the local legislature, from whose proceedings I have quoted. I think I have dealt probably sufficiently with the sardine business and now I want to take a shy at this lobster business, because, as I said before thereby hangs a tale. I turn to page 25 of the recommendations here and reading from clause 1, I find that the size limit in St. Mary's bay—of course that is the particular place that is looked after by our friend from Digby on the commission—and all the waters of Charlotte county is recommended to be nine inches. They recommend that the size limit of lobsters for the whole of the Bay of Fundy and St. Mary's bay be nine inches. There was some dissent. Mr. Bowers, being the only man who has had experience in fishing, dissented. Colonel Tucker, who has been the friend of the lobster, as the hon. gentlemen from St. John city and county know, dissented and with good reason. The evidence is absolutely given in this report of the increased output of lobsters in the county of St John where a ten and a half inch limit was imposed in place of a nine inch limit. What was the object of adopting a nine inch limit? Simply that the factories could be opened again. There are not enough ten and a half inch lobsters to run the factories and if there were they are worth more as live lobsters than as canned lobsters. You cannot take lobsters into the United States less than ten and a half inches in length. The factories with a nine inch limit can get everything below ten and a half inches and in this way get a sufficient supply. The St. Mary's bay lobster catchers carry a great many of their lobsters over to the Grand Manan factories. They recommend in the first section of this report that the limit of St. Mary's bay and Charlotte county be nine inches. This report was not published before the election. But here, is the last clause and I will read it so that you may be able to see how it coincides with the first one :

Your commissioners would urge the advisability of raising the size limit in all the waters from Halifax west to the international boundary line——

Including St. Mary's and the Bay of Fundy.

—to ten and a half inches so as to secure uniformity of size in all that district, with a view to the preservation of the lobster industry.

What is the recommendation for St. Mary's bay and the Bay of Fundy ?—Nine inches.

Mr. DANIEL. Except St. John county.

Mr. GANONG. There is no exception made ; as far as this suggestion is concerned it is a recommendation. But, if you read the whole of the report here you will see that they stultify themselves, because there is no reason given for the first recommendation at all. I put an inquiry on the order paper on February 6th, 1905 as follows :

1. What is the present legal limit of length for lobster that may be caught in the waters of the Bay of Fundy, between Point Lepreaux and the United States boundary ?

What was the answer ?

1. 9 inches.
2. What was the legal limit of length of lobsters on October 1st, 1904, in these waters?

Answer :

10½ inches.

3. If any change in the limit has been made, on what date was the change made, and on what date were the local fishery officers in that district notified of said change ?

Answer :

October 24th, 1904.

Just before the elections. I need not read further. What was the reason given in a conversation that I had with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Prefontaine) in the corridor before another gentleman who witnessed it ? I said to the minister during the session : Do you suppose to allow a limit of nine inches as reported in Charlotte county waters ? He said : I will leave it to the commission. I would be a fool to take it out of the hands of the commission. Armstrong claims that if I made it nine inches he would beat you in the election. These are the statements which he made. It was not a private conversation, because there were other parties present. Well, was this report sent in ? No, the report had not got in. He was going to leave it to the commission. The report was not in when this change was made October 24th because, on November 28, 1904, I had this letter from the minister :

November 28, 1904.

Dear Sir,—I have your letter of the 21st instant, remarking upon rumour in connection with the finding of the fisheries commission, which has recently been engaged in investigating conditions of the fisheries in the Bay of Fundy and contiguous waters, and in reply I may say that the commission has not yet submitted this report to me.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) R. PREFONTAINE.

G. W. GANONG, Esq., M.P.,
St. Stephen, N.B.

They had not submitted their report, but he had report enough in regard to the lobsters to change the limit. They became alarmed notwithstanding the assistance given by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) and they telegraph to the minister that if they wanted to get any votes on the islands they must have a nine inch limit for lobsters. Why ? Because they wanted the Yankee canners to help them out in their election, the most important lobster canners being Yankees. They had a ten and a half inch limit previously, but as a result of the representations which were made telegrams signed by the minister, or by his orders, were carried all over the county of Charlotte stating how good the government were going to be to the lobster fishermen there. It was simply a political move. There can be no question about that at all. No man can gainsay that. Then, let us have a look at the canners. I asked a question as to who had applied for and received licenses to can lobsters. Here is the reply :

None were issued in 1904.

Why ? Because there was a ten and a half inch limit. In 1905, the following applied for licenses :

J. Ingersoll, E. A. Holmes, Connors Brothers, Burnham and Morrell, J. W. Wooster, Frank Macdonald, P. P. Russell, L. C. Guptill, D. S. Gaskill.

And the following were granted :

3. J. Ingersoll, E. A. Holmes, Connors Brothers, Burnham & Morrell.

Well, that looks well enough to you, Mr. Speaker, and to hon. gentlemen in this House, but who are these people ? Burnham & Morrell have one of the biggest canning factories in Portland, Maine. They are American citizens. Mr. E. A. Holmes is one of the largest sardine canners in Eastport and is an American citizen. Our own citizens are turned down while Yankees are granted licenses to can lobsters. I know at least three of these gentlemen that were turned down; they had plants to do the business but they did not have the pull. The government wanted to use the American canners for their money and their influence to carry the election which was held there last year. Our genial friend Colonel Tucker is somewhat opposed to this, and although he signs the general report I read this concluding remark from his protest:

> With all this accumulated evidence before you I trust that you will see your way clear to establish a ten and a half inch limit in the Bay of Fundy for lobsters, and thereby check the destruction of immature fish which has caused such a serious decline in recent years in this valuable industry.

Colonel Tucker bases this statement largely upon the fact that a small lobster that produces eggs at all will not produce over 20,000 or 25,000 eggs, while a mature lobster will produce from 80,000 to 85,000 eggs. But outside of that there is the common sense view. If you were to capitalize the lobster business of the Bay of Fundy and put sensible men as directors to run it, how long do you think they would continue to sell anything below ten and a half inch lobsters? It would be considered absolutely folly to do so; you would send them to a lunatic asylum if they did. We know that anything below ten and a half inches brings an average of three or four cents while a lobster above ten and a half inches—to which some grow in one year and some in two years—will bring from eighteen to thirty-five cents, according to the statement of Colonel Tucker. Not only that, but because we are differently situated from Prince Edward Island the law perhaps would not be as satisfactory over there, for we are right within easy touch of the United States market where there is an absolutely unlimited demand for large lobsters of ten and a half inches and upwards. So far as this change to nine inches is concerned, it is absolutely ridiculous and as a matter of fact it results in a great injury to the lobster industry of Canada. Where are the lobster fishermen to-day? They have their traps ready but they cannot tell but that the Minister of Marine may say to-morrow: shut up boys; it is ten and a half inches. They only had the ten and a half inch regulation in Charlotte county for I think about two years at most when for political reasons the government shifted it to nine inches. When is it coming back to ten and a half inches? If the Yankee canners do not dominate the government I should not be surprised to see it come back to ten and a half inches inside of the next twelve months. The urgent cry just before the elections was for a change, but the question not only interested the gentleman running in the county of Charlotte; it interested the gentleman who ran for the county of Digby as well, and if somebody knew about this lobster limit, don't you think somebody knew about the recommendations in the sardine business also? I think there were a few people travelling around the county of Digby who were saying: Oh, Copp is going to get at them; they are going to put an export duty on sardines. And so the government did not dare to bring down the report of the commission until after the election, although I think the dodge was worked pretty well in Digby. It was not worked in the county of Charlotte for while the question came up as to the limit of lobsters there was no talk around Deer island and Campobello about the export duty on sardines; they did not let the fishermen there know they would make this recommendation: which could force them to abandon their homes there and go to the United States in order to get a living. It seems clear that the whole question is now up to the Minister of Marine and our friend the Minister of Customs, so far as the sardine industry is concerned. The people down there want to know what these ministers propose to do and they want to know at once. The fishing season is on down there to-day, and the people do not know the moment the steamer 'Constance' is liable to come there with a special officer on board and prevent them from taking the fish they have caught to be handled in the factories in Eastport. If the government would take a little advice from me they will never waste money to print that report; they will tear it into shreds. The idea of putting a report like that upon the archives of this country as a reference for the future is perpetrating an absolute insult on the fishermen of this country. If the government want to have a commission let them have a proper one and we will forgive them for the money they have wasted already; at best it was only a little pap to these members of parliament and ex-members of parliament. Put men on a commission who have some expert knowledge; men who know the conditions, and the conditions are peculiar as every one knows who ever travelled around these tidal waters. Put men on the commission whose judgment is worth something, whose experience will tell them what it is best to do in the interest of the fishermen and let such men formulate a plan. Do not put men on a commission who will be influenced because of a coming election. Let these fishermen who toil by the sea have justice and right dealt out to them; let them be treated fairly as the other citizens of this country are treated, and further I say, that we do not want any more of these rush orders to change regulations; we want more stability so that the fishermen who have to prepare ahead will know from year to year what they may prepare for. Every man who builds a weir has to invest his money in the purchase of material before the time comes for him to erect his weir, and if the government tells him no license will be issued then that man has his material a loss on his hands. Let the people know whether licenses are to be issued and the conditions on which they are to be issued ; let the fishermen know whether lobster traps are necessary for next year or not, and if they are necessary let the fishermen have a chance to prepare them. In my county there are at least 7,000 souls directly depending on the fishermen, and I am sure nearly as many more indirectly dependent on them, so that it is a matter of great moment as to what action is to be taken by those two ministers who have control of the business. I would not like to see our native born citizens driven out of Canada. The county of Charlotte is largely settled by United Empire Loyalists, men who love the old flag and love it well, and who are willing to stand by it, but they cannot sit down and see their families starve. They must follow business wherever business goes whether it be in the county of Charlotte or in the state of Maine. The movement to the United States has begun already and you cannot tell to what extent it will go. I have had letters within two weeks from a man who with his son left for Machiasport, Maine, they went from Grand Manan to enter into fishing on the American side and to catch sardines along that coast, because they anticipated that the government would carry out the recommendations of this commission. If these recommendations are carried out you can go among our island homes and you will find half of them closed up simply because the people cannot possibly obtain a living in Canada. It is up to the Minister of Marine and the Minister of Customs to say what they propose to do. To-day these fishermen have a club hanging over them by each of these ministers, not knowing from day to day what orders may come from the Department of Fisheries or the Department of Customs. These two ministers cannot take action too soon, and the people of this country, and the members of this House, and the constituents I have the honour to represent believe that the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Marine should take action to-day. I move the adjournment of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Lost.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, is there no one amongst the ministers to make any reply at all to this ? Certainly the allegations that are made and the inconsistencies of the report of the commission itself demand some answer. To spend the country's money with the idea of having a well qualified commission to obtain information on the question and to give the government information upon which it may base an action, to the advantage of the fisheries themselves, and then to appoint men nearly all of them without proper qualification for the special work for which they were appointed, demands an explanation. These men make recommendations which traverse each other, comparing their first recommendations with their concluding one. The recommendations themselves are traversed by men of knowledge and experience living amongst the very conditions which these gentlemen were investigating. The legislature of the province of New Brunswick, which has jurisdiction over the counties very largely interested in these fisheries, unanimously passed a resolution not only deprecating, but voiding the recommendations that were made by the commissioners in at least two important points. A fact comes out late in the day—that not only do the two recommendations as to the length of lobsters that ought to be the legal limit, traverse each other, but that there has been some communication between the Fisheries Department and interested parties whereby in a certain season, and continuing up to the present time, and for reasons which I think can be easily seen on both sides of the House, the low limit for the lobster catch, which I think every discerning man, who has studied the question and understands the conditions and knows the history of the question, would consider to be a very damaging and bad limit, was actually allowed, and that the decimation of the industry went on under that low limit, against the recommendation of the whole commission and the view of men who understand the question, that ten and a half inches should be arranged as the lowest legal limit. It seems to me that when this is brought to the attention of the House, some of the members of the cabinet who have to do with these particular branches of administration ought to make some reply in the way of explanation, so as to mitigate the circumstances as they have been set forth to-day. My right hon. friend will say that the minister who has the particular charge of this matter is not in his seat ; but I have no doubt that it will be brought to his attention, so that he can make a defence and show what he is doing with reference to the department which he administers. But one thing is shown pretty clearly, that this making of commissions for the mere sake of giving jobs to certain people, has really gone far enough. We have had commissions under almost every government in Canada since confederation ; but I think I am safe in saying that no government in the same number of years has appointed so many commissions and appointed them so badly as the present administration. To take a newspaper editor and several others such as have been taken and appoint them as a commission to examine into and give expert testimony and light and guidance with reference to our shore fisheries, I think, was going a long distance. The mysteries of the return and haunts of the fish are enough to tax the most expert. It is very difficult to show certainty and definiteness with reference to the coming and going of these denizens of the seas ; it certainly taxes the intelligence of the very best men ; and it would seem to me that when commissions are appointed, if they are meant to do any good, to really get at proper conclusions, so that the government and the country will be benefited by them, the greatest care should be taken to put the best of men upon them. My right hon. friend may say that he got good men ; but I think the country is quite of opinion that he could have got a great deal better men than he did get for the purpose for which they were appointed—a fishery commission involving so much not only in a financial way, but with reference to the whole future of our country so far as it depends on fish food.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not understand from my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Ganong) that he expected an immediate answer to the subject to which he has called the attention of the House. I rather understood from him that he wanted to make a general complaint, and then call for the information and advice of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I may say at once, in answer to something which he said himself, and which has just been repeated by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), that I do not think for my part that any fault can be found with the character of the commission which was entrusted with the important work to which this commission has given its attention ; and I think I am warranted in coming to that conclusion by the very remarks of my hon. friend from Charlotte. The commission was composed, if I remember rightly, of one of the technical officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and so far as I have heard no exception taken to the appointment of that gentleman —Mr. Venning I think a very competent man. Another member of the commission was Mr. Bowers, of Digby, who I believe has been engaged in the fishery business all his life. I do not think any exception was taken to him either and I think he is a very competent man. True, at one time he was engaged in politics ; but I do not think that should disqualify him for exercising the functions entrusted to him if he was otherwise competent. Exception has been taken to Mr. Armstrong because he was a journalist. We all know that journalists are bound to have a wide range of information, and I judge that a gentleman who is a journalist on the seacoast of Charlotte county, from the very nature of his calling obtains information which ought to make him a competent man for the business with which Mr. Armstrong was entrusted. I am further warranted in saying that from the fact that the recommendations made by Mr. Armstrong have met with the approval of my hon. friend from Charlotte. Mr. Armstrong dissented from the majority of the commission, and judging from the remarks of my hon. friend from Charlotte, that was the best evidence that he knew the subject which he had been charged to inquire into. I might say of the late member for St. John, Colonel Tucker, that though he may not be an expert, when this commission was appointed we thought it well to have him and the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Copp) on it, inasmuch as their constituents were deeply interested in the matter and it was to be expected that these gentlemen would put some diligence into the work. There was no job given to anybody. Mr. Venning is in the employ of the department. Mr. Bowers was formerly a member of this parliament, and so I think was Mr. Armstrong. And as regards Colonel Tucker and the hon. member for Digby, they had no emoluments or remuneration and could have none. Therefore the charge of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is absolutely without foundation. Coming to the crucial point, namely, the recommendations made by the commission, these are for the benefit of the government and parliament. I do not agree with my hon. friend from Charlotte that this report ought not to be printed. I think, on the contrary, there is a good deal of valuable information in it, but it is not surprising that the recommendations should not be unanimous or meet with everybodys approval. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) knows that we have had this question before us during the last twenty years again and again and that the matters which this commission were investigating, with the single exception of the dog-fish, are old friends both to him and myself. The size of the lobsters we have had debated again and again during the past twenty years, and on that point opinions seem to vary according to geography. With regard to the proposal to put an export duty on fish, I would hesitate very much before agreeing to any such policy. At first blush I would not be disposed to agree to it ; and unless there are very strong reasons in support of it, we should be very cautious about adopting it. There is another recommendation of the commission which has met with the approval of my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Ganong) and that is with regard to the disposal of the refuse in the canneries. That, I think, would commend itself to everybody. But if the recommendations of the commission are not to be accepted blindly, some good may still come from them. There is one thing as to which there is much controversy and that is the size of the lobsters. At what degree of maturity should they have been handed over to commerce ? Some suggest ten and a half inches and my hon. colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I see has allowed nine inches. I am not competent to pronounce any judgment in the matter, but the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) will agree with me—for he has had the experience when he held office—that as soon as some restriction is imposed upon some parties, the government are assailed for having injured some particular interest. Then if the complaints are acceded to, the government are assailed on the other hand for having done an injustice to some rival interest. Should we have lobster canneries in the county of Charlotte or not? I understood from my hon. friend that if we were to restore the regulation to ten and a half inches, we would send away from the county of Charlotte an industry now carried on there by American canneries, and if we keep on the regulation of nine inches, these American canneries will remain with us and our people have the benefit of that industry. I do not know that the government could have done better than appoint a commission; even though the commission is not unanimous. The selection was not a bad one and the report, though not accepted in all particulars, may give valuable information.

Mr. STOCKTON. I was not aware that my hon. friend from Charlotte intended bringing this question up to-day. This question was discussed when I was running my election. My constituency adjoins the county of Charlotte, and the difficulty with the fishermen in the city and county of St. John was why there should be a discrimination between the county of Charlotte and that constituency. I am not going into a discussion of the question to-day. I want to read that report carefully, but I am glad to hear the leader of the government say that he personally, as at present advised, is not in favour of putting an export duty on fresh fish going to the United States. Should that be done, it would destroy the fishery industry in the county of Charlotte and along the shores of the city and county of St. John. With respect to the lobster question, I know that there is some difference of opinion regarding the size of the lobsters to be caught—whether nine inch or ten inch or ten and a half All I ask is that the government before acting should seriously consider the situation and as soon as possible make known to the fishermen along the coast what the government intend to do. I am convinced that if the restrictions suggested in this report should be carried out, we will lose a large section of the population of the county of Charlotte and along the shores of the city and county of St. John who are engaged in the fishery business. I do not know that this is a political question; I hope not. It is a commercial question. It is a question as to what is in the best interest of the fish industry of the city and county of St. John and the county of Charlotte and to that extent of the whole Dominion. All I ask is that the right hon. gentleman and his government will seriously pause and consider before carrying out all the recommendations in that report, and that whatever be done will be done within a reasonable limit so that those hardy men engaged in that industry may know what to expect and we may not lose any of them from our midst.

Hon. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I am not very familiar with the problems of our fisheries, yet, as the county of Gaspé, which I have the honour to represent, is deeply interested in these matters, I desire to say a word. I am strongly convinced that the remarks made by my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Ganong) with regard to the commission are too severe. I have followed the work of that commission during its sessions, and I must say that it has rendered valuable service not only to the fishermen of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and the province of Quebec, but to the Dominion at large. First of all, as to the composition of the commission, every one must admit that Mr. Venning, who is the moving spirit of the commission, is a gentleman whose name must carry weight in these matters. Mr. Venning was not looking for a job, as the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said a moment ago. He was already one of the officers, one of the most worthy officers, of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, a gentleman whose evidence has been given before international tribunals and whose opinion upon any great question of the fisheries is certainly very weighty. I know that Mr. Venning has followed that commission and has instructed it, and has gathered most valuable evidence, perhaps, especially in the county I represent, the county of Gaspé. For instance, I am sure that the hon. members of Charlotte (Mr. Ganong) and St. John city and county (Mr. Stockton) are aware that the Magdalen islands, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence form one of the most favoured spots in this Dominion for the prosecution of the lobster fishery. Until the commission was appointed, there were difficulties there, not only as regards the size of lobsters to be taken but as regards the seasons for fishing. My hon. friend (Mr. Ganong) says that in certain counties the minimum size of lobsters allowed to be taken is 9 inches and in others 10 or 10½ inches. Well, as regards the season, it was contended on the part of the fishermen of Gaspé county that the season in the Magdalen islands should be extended because the lobster would appear in the waters of Pleasant bay about fifteen or twenty days after they had appeared at Prince Edward Island. Well, it was a question for the commission to know at what time the season should begin and up to what time it should extend—a most important question. And it was complicated by another fact. As my hon. friend knows, in the Magdalen islands—and I speak of the Magdalen islands because, as every one knows they are a great centre of the lobster fishery, there being large and important canneries there, including those of a number of American firms who have settled there and who carry on an immense trade not only with Canada but with England and France—I say, in the Magdalen islands there is a series of lagoons. It is a remarkable fact that sand bars encircle the islands, so completely that at certain hours of the day you can drive around the islands. Between these sand bars and the islands there are what are called lagoons, and in these lagoons are spawning beds of the lobsters. In these lagoons—I suppose because of defect in the regulations on the subject—and even during the prohibited season, the fishermen would ply their trade, not only destroying uselessly immense numbers of lobsters but putting upon the market a very inferior product. When the commission was appointed I directed the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) to the importance of having the commission visit the Magdalen islands, and also St. Paul's island near Cape Breton, and study the special conditions of these places as affecting the lobster fishery. The commission visited these places and collected most important information. When my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Stockton) and my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Ganong) shall have read the report of the commissioners, especially the report of the investigation that took place at the Magdalen islands, I think they will agree with me that this commission has rendered great service not only to the fishermen of the martime provinces but to the fishing industry of this Dominion.

Another thing which was studied most particularly by this commission was the presence of the dog-fish in Canadian waters. As a representative of the county of Gaspé I have received not merely scores and hundreds, but, in all, probably two thousand letters from my electors within the last two years on this subject. I do not know whether the dog-fish formerly frequented the shores of St. John county and Charlotte county, but it is only within the last two of three years that they have appeared in the waters bordering upon Gaspé. The dog-fish destroys immense quantities of commercial fish, being the special enemy of the cod, and the cod fishery is the great industry of the Gaspé fishermen. As I say, I received many inquiries from my electors to know what the government could do to help them against this pest. We know that in Australia the government authorities have paid bounties to secure the destruction of the rabbit and of other animals that menaced the success of the agriculturist. On the same principle, a system was proposed for the destruction of the dog-fish in Canadian waters. The commission have studied that question most carefully, and I am sure that when their report is published it will result in great advantage to the fishermen of this Dominion. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) has spoken to me about this matter many times since the commission reported, and he has under consideration a scheme which, I am sure, will receive the earnest support of both sides of this House and which when carried into effect, I believe will cause the disappearance of the dog-fish from our shores.

All this I say in order to defend the policy followed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. That hon. gentleman is not in his place in the House this afternoon, for he is attending a most important meeting of the Harbour Commission in Montreal. If he were here I am sure he would corroborate the explanations I have just given. I am not able to speak of the personal qualifications of the other members of the commission. But I am sure I shall be upheld by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), when I say that the fact of Mr. Venning, the expert officer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, being connected with the commission is a guarantee of the earnest efforts which must have been made by the commission to promote the best interests of the Canadian fishing industry.

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St. John City). I was not aware that this subject was coming up this afternoon, so I shall not attempt to discuss the whole report of this commission. I have no doubt that what the Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux) has said with regard to Mr. Venning is entirely correct. The subject of the fisheries at Magdalen islands I do not wish to dilate upon.

I only wish to second, in a very few words, the remarks made by my colleague from the city and county of St. John. While I am aware that a number of fishermen in the county of St. John have signed a petition or statement to the effect that they would be glad to have the limit of lobsters in the Bay of Fundy placed at 10½ inches, I must say that since they have found that that limit has been lessened and made smaller in the adjoining county and in Nova Scotia, and on the opposite side of the Bay of Fundy, they have become dissatisfied, and while they would be quite willing to have the limit on lobsters placed at 10½ inches if the limit was the same in the adjacent waters of Charlotte county and on the other side of the Bay of Fundy, they are certainly dissatisfied with having this change made in the length of lobsters in the county in which they live and do their work. What they want is uniformity in the legal limit in the size of lobsters. With regard to this report, I notice that one of the members of the commission, Colonel Tucker, who, to my own knowledge, has taken a very great interest in this matter and has posted himself very well on the subject, makes a minority report; he does not agree with the majority report, but in his minority report asks to have the limit put at not less than 10½ inches in all the waters of the Bay of Fundy. He gives very good reasons, I take it, why that should be the case. He gives the evidence of various fishery overseers; and, in addition to that, there is the statement of another member of the commission, Mr. Bowers, who, I believe, lives in Digby county, Nova Scotia, who says, with regard to the lobster fishing over in the county of Digby, that he thinks the limit should not be less than 10½ inches. Let me read what he says in the memorandum attached to the report:

Commissioner Bowers contends that his personal knowledge of the live lobster industry in Digby county, both as regards fishing and exportation, the trend of the evidence taken in Digby and Charlotte counties, and the statements made in their reports by Fishery Inspector Pratt and the fishery overseers of St. John and Charlotte counties, force him to the conclusion that the only method of preserving the lobster industry of the Bay of Fundy and contiguous waters for the enrichment of our fishermen, is by the immediate and strict enforcement of a 10½-inch size limit. In his opinion unless the size limit of the Bay of Fundy and the shores of southern and western Nova Scotia be at once placed at 10½ inches, we shall soon be in the same position as other countries whose fisheries were once thought ample to meet all demands upon them, but are now almost wholly depleted.

This is the evidence of one of the commissioners, and that, taken in connection with the strong argument which another of the commissioners makes, must force us to see the importance of dealing with this report not in too hasty a manner. At all events, the government, I think, should be very careful about carrying out the recommendations which are contained in this report. I had a personal conversation with Colonel Tucker before this report was made, and I know that he was in favour of a longer limit, and I would hardly feel justified in giving to the House the reasons which he advanced for the change, as they were given in a private conversation, but at the same time I am quite satisfied that he at least was very much dissatisfied with the recommendation to lower the size limit on lobsters in those waters. For my own part, all I am asking in the interest of those in my constituency who are interested in this matter is that there should be uniformity in the size limit of those lobsters in the Bay of Fundy, so that the same limit will apply to both the county of St. John and Charlotte county, and in fact all the other counties of the two provinces on the Bay of Fundy.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). One word with respect to the question of uniformity. The original limit for lobsters in the Bay of Fundy was 9½ inches. That limit prevailed until about a year and a-half ago, when, at the solicitation of the gentleman to whom my hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Daniel) has referred, Mr. Tucker, who was then representing the constituency of St. John, a change was made and an order was passed enlarging the limit on lobsters on the New Brunswick shore of the Bay of Fundy. That created a want of uniformity. It was contended by the people of Grand Manan and St. Mary's bay, where the water is shallow, that if you were to enlarge the limit to 10½ inches it would absolutely destroy their fishery, and at the solicitation of the member for St. John the limit was changed against the protest of the fishermen of the county of Charlotte. Their contention, and particularly that of those on the island of Grand Manan, was that as the waters contiguous to the shore of the county of Charlotte were of a shallow character, the smaller lobsters only came there and that a limit of 10½ inches would destroy their fishery. Farther up the bay, along the shores of the county of St. John, where the water was deeper, that objection did not prevail, and they wished to be placed in the same category with the lobster fishermen of St. Mary's bay across the Bay of Fundy, on the Nova Scotia shore. Their representations were very loud, they were very persistent, and they continued to be so during the last session. They had delegations here, they made representations and sent memorials, and finally, before the fishing season opened last fall, the Charlotte county fisheries were separated from those of St. John and the limit was dropped to its original length—9½ inches. That, of course, has caused a want of uniformity. The fishermen of Charlotte county did not ask to have the limit changed, the fishermen of Grand Manan were opposed to it, and they said it was St. John influences which brought about the change. It was not agreeable to them, and they wanted it put back to their original limit, pending the final determination of the question by the commission and this was done.

Motion (Mr. Ganong) to adjourn, negatived.

REPORT OF RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask leave to submit the report of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada. The report is in two parts, a report of proceedings from February 1 to June 30, 1904; and part 2nd, a report of proceedings from July 1 to December 31, 1904.

PRIVATE BILLS.

NORTHWEST TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF moved the third reading of Bill (No. 28) to incorporate the Northwest Telephone Company.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I thought we were to have a declaration from the hon. Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) in regard to this Bill. I have no objection to the Bill going through because there are one or two good provisions in it, but probably these provisions will be embodied in a general Act.

Mr. TURRIFF. I may say that I spoke to the hon. Postmaster General about this Bill. The Bill stood at his request some days ago, I spoke to him and he was quite agreeable that I should move the third reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

RELIEF OF CLARA BIDWELL McDERMOT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 152) for the relief of Clara Bidwell McDermot.—Mr. Campbell.

On the preamble,

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Chairman, before the preamble is carried, supplementing what I said on this matter on Friday evening, I think it is necessary that I should even at the risk of wearying the committee for ten or fifteten minutes, draw attention to the character of this legislation. It must not be supposed from the want of interest that is taken in these Bills that they go through the House as a matter of course because the Senate has passed on the evidence on which they are founded. The question of divorcing a wife from a husband or a husband from a wife, is a much more serious question than seems to be realized considering the rather slight amount of attention that was given by almost all the members of this House to this question on Friday evening and I think, with all deference both to the committee and to the government, that I should draw the attention of the committee for a moment or two to what I think is not generally recognized namely that a person who is asking for a divorce in any British country is asking for a privilege, is asking for something he is not entitled to as a matter of course, something that there is no rule of law or of civil conduct that he can ask enforcement of in order to secure what he is asking for. I propose to draw the attention of the committee and the government to the definition of this Act of ours as laid down in Gemmill's Work of Divorce, which, in describing what a divorce is, emphasizes the distinction between it and another legislative Act. It is this :

> A divorce is a legislative Act originating in the Senate, and when a man comes with a petition for a divorce Bill, he comes to solicit a privilege, a preference to one individual over another—an immunity from obligations which are binding on the general mass of the community, and he is bound to submit to such rules as the House in its wisdom thinks proper to lay down for the conduct of all business brought before it.

There is abundant authority given in the foot-note for the principle which is here laid down. A person coming and asking for a divorce must show something in the interest of the state, not in the interest of herself or of her husband only. We are not the judges of the civil conduct of a man and his wife, but we are here legislating in the interest of the country and in the interest of society. Although personally—and I do not wish to be misunderstood by this committee—I am opposed to divorces on principle, yet, I recognize that under our law and custom certain people are entitled to a divorce under certain circumstances, but I say they must be extreme circumstances and the divorce must be granted on the principle that it is in the interest of the state and society generally. I think every hon. gentleman will agree with me that it is not in the interest of the state that divorces should be granted lightly, frivolously, for trifling reasons, or for anything but what must be absolutely in the interest of the country. The Bill before us is brought by a woman who alleges that her husband was guilty on the statutory grounds—I do not wish to particularize in the House any more than necessary—a number of years after they had been married. The preamble of the Bill sets forth that these wrong Acts of his took place in the years 1901 and 1903 and that these people had lived together until the year 1889. We have to ask ourselves what was the condition of these people at the date of his alleged wrong-doing. They were married in 1881, the woman being twenty-one years of age and the husband a couple of years older—not an unreasonable age for either of them to be married at. They have three children living in this country. They lived at Port Perry. They lived together all right until 1889, and then they separate because the wife insisted on living with her parents and would not follow her husband to his own home. This was three years before she alleges any wrong-doing on the part of her busband. Let us ask ourselves at the threshold of this case : Are we going always to divorce people because they happen to conclude that they would rather live separately and then after having lived separately a little while bring evidence, which, perhaps, it may be necessary for me to discuss later on, of a most outrageous kind of some act upon which she may be entitled technically to have a divorce granted? It seems to me that this woman, as we say in the court of chancery, does not come into equity with perfectly clean hands. Her duty, when she married that man, was to stay by him as long as he was true and faithful to her. She preferred to disregard the obligation she took and she went to live with her father. The man waited for three years to see if she would change her opinion about that during which time there is no suggestion that he did anything wrong and after waiting three years, when she refused to leave her father and mother and live with her lawful husband, although his brothers-in-law had endeavoured to prevail upon her to do so, he went west. She now produces evidence before the Senate, for what it is worth, that after all that he committed adultery and she claims therefore that she is entitled to get a divorce from him.

I point this out because if this parliament is going to grant divorce for such causes, it may have the effect of leading the young men and young women who are growing up, to think that there is nothing more sacred in the marriage tie than this woman seems to think; that there is no more respect to be held between husband and wife than there would be between strangers where the marital relation may not exist. Should parliament allow this wouan to say: I will not live with my husband although there is no legal reason why I should not. I am the mother of three children of whom he is legally the father; having lived for nine years in wedlock I prefer to live with my parents rather than with my husband, and finding that he cannot induce me to live with him, when he goes away I will say that I am entitled to a divorce because he has deserted me and because after he deserted me he did some things he should not do. I do not want to be misunderstood; if he was guilty of what she alleges, even years after she refused to live with him, technically she is entitled to this divorce. But this woman does not seem to have treated her husband in the way she ought have treated him. She has no absolute right in this country to a divorce; she comes here, she asks for a privilege, and it is for this parliament to say whether under the facts proved it would be in the interest of the state to grant a divorce. We must ask ourselves what would be the effect, as a precedent of our granting this divorce, upon the young people of this country. I point out that the evidence against this man is most unreliable; it is the evidence of two acknowledged dissolute characters; the evidence of two accomplices who lived by the very thing which they allege against this man and which he comes to Ottawa to deny upon oath. He did not employ counsel, I presume because he did not think he needed counsel. I do not wish to imply the idea, because I am a lawyer, that this man should have employed counsel, but I do say that if he had a counsel of five years experience in cross-examining witnesses it is quite evident that the testimony of those two witnesses would be shattered. No lawyer can read that evidence without seeing sticking out all through it indications of a made-up story. These two dissolute characters give evdence as to this outrageous offence which most men would rather serve a term in the penitentiary than be found guilty of. I do not know if I am entitled to say that for all the men of this country, but from my general knowledge I think that would be a fair statement of the case. I think this House ought to say to the petitioner in this case: it may be unfortunate for you if this man is guilty, but you cannot get divorced as easily as you seem to think; you cannot ask us to take the risk of doing a great wrong to the father of your children. The evidence given against this man is of two women who at the very outset of their evidence state that they have been living by the very worst sort of vice for several years. We are not governed in this House by what a judge might direct or what a jury might find, but I say it is common sense to believe that women who will acknowledge that they have lived for years by selling their virtue, will sell their oaths if they get enough dollars to do so. These women came from British Columbia and it is fair presumption from their evidence that they did sell their oaths. I do not want to discuss this evidence in detail, but I do ask that before the House should grant this divorce hon. gentlemen should have an opportunity of looking into this evidence and dissecting it; and if the consideration of the Bill is not adjourned to enable them to do that then I would ask that they should vote against it. I think it will be found from the evidence that these two women came from British Columbia to prove a certain thing no matter how they might prove it. Their evidence is conflicting, the suspicious fact is there and one of the women places at the end of her story apparently as an afterthought, a declaration of the criminal conduct of herself, which from her knowledege she ought to have told at the very beginning. The evidence all through is full of inconsistencies and improbabilities, and it is further open to the very serious objection that it is the evidence of two of the worst kind of accomplices. Applying the principles of the criminal law no judge would allow a jury to convict on that evidence, but yet we are asked to convict on it in this House. We are asked to do something more serious than to try a man for a criminal offence, because we are asked to strike a blow at the whole fabric of society by granting a divorce on evidence which is not clear. I would like to quote to the House the words of Lord Penzance, a well known authority who in the House of Lords said:

> It seems proper, however, to present what has been said opening a broader view. In a certain sense the public has an interest in every judicial controversy between individual members of the community; hence it is, that for example, if a witness commits perjury in a mere private suit, he is indictable, for it is an offence against the public. But in a higher and different sense the public is interested in the marriage in the individual members of the community. They constitute the foundation, not only of social order, but of society itself, and without them there would be no legitimate population to support the state in its coming future. Therefore, though unmarried persons may contract the status of marriage when they mutually please, those who have assumed it cannot cast it off by mutual consent, as parties to an ordinary contract may annul its obligations. Hence, when an attempt is made, through the courts, to undo a marriage, the public becomes the party, not in the strict sense to oppose, but to see that it does not prevail without sufficient and lawful cause existing in the real facts of the case ; 'for' in the words of a learned English judge, 'society has an interest in the maintenance of marriage ties, which the collusion or negligence of the parties cannot impair.'

I will also give the language of the Hon. Mr. Scott in the Senate in 1887, when he was the leader of the opposition in that House :

It is the duty of parliament to keep well within itself the power to dissolve the marriage tie. Canada will be all the better in the years to come if we hold to that principle soundly and wisely ; I trust, therefore, that the loose doctrines which are now being propagated as to foreign divorces will be no more advocated in this House. I am quite sure they are not in accord with the better spirit of the people of this country. I know that they are held in horror by nearly one-half of the people of Canada, whose opinions are entitled to respect. I know that in those churches which do reluctantly accept the principle of divorce, and notably in the Episcopalian, the leading minds regard with dismay and terror the havoc that has been made in the social system in the neighbouring country where the permission to annul the marriage tie is so easily obtained.

I can give hon. gentlemen another authority from the Senate, that of the Hon. Senator Gowan, who said in the same debate :

Nay, more, parliament may and ought always to have in regard not merely the question as it affects the parties, but the effect in relation to morals and good order—the effect which the passing of a particular law might have upon the well-being of the community. Parliament, as the supreme power, has its duties and responsibilities, and cannot compromise the well-being of society, but is bound to consider what would most tend to the public good.

I want hon. gentlemen, therefore, to carefully keep their minds upon this, that in passing this legislation, we must do it in the interest of the public. It is not simply a question whether we think Mr. McDermot or Mrs. McDermot will be as well off if we grant this divorce ; but the question is what the effect will be on the social condition of our country. If we grant this divorce, it should be because we think the Act of Parliament ought to be passed in the interest of the community. I do not know what position the government will take on this legislation. I do not want to embarrass the government upon it. I do not want to say that the government are responsible for it in any special or peculiar way. Of course, the government are generally responsible for all the legislation that goes through this House. If the government can convince this House that the evidence is not such as would entitle us to pass this Bill I will expect them to say so. If they do not, I suppose I shall have to go on and discuss it from my own standpoint, and tell the House why I think that in all the circumstances this Bill ought not to pass.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman has referred to the fact that the woman left the domicile of her husband without any reason.

Mr. LANCASTER. She insisted on living with her father and mother in the same town when her husband wished her to live with him.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is there anything in the evidence to that effect ?

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to know if Mrs. McDermot did not contradict him in that respect ?

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LANCASTER. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that this woman denied that she had deserted her husband. I do not see where she denied it. There is no such denial in the evidence.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Read page 5.

Mr. LANCASTER I do not see any denial there. It is not disputed that in 1881 they lived in a house furnished by the husband. Then at the request of her parents, as she says herself, she induced her husband to come and live with her at her parents house.

Mr. CAMPBELL. She denied that.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have not seen any words that would constitute a denial. She lived with her husband at her parents' house until 1889. Then there was a family jar between her parents and her husband and she sided with her parents and remained with them when her husband left. She refused to follow her husband to another house. Surely you would not say that that was a desertion of the wife by the husband. The husband had a house for his wife and children. He had taken that house from a tenant in order that he and his family might occupy it, but his wife refused to go with him and also kept the children. To grant a divorce to the wife, in the presence of these facts, would be to make a travesty of the marriage vows and contract and be giving the young men and women of this country a very false idea of the duties and responsibilities they assume when they enter the marriage state. Let me put a converse case. Suppose two profligate men go into a witness box and swear falsely that they had improper connections with a most respectable married woman and suppose she comes down to this Senate and denies it——

Mr. LEMIEUX. If there were only that fact, but there are others.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is exactly the case reversed. Is there anybody here who would grant the husband a divorce? In this case two women of bad character swear away the character of this man. Their story is not corroborated. The husband makes an admission; but you cannot use one part of his admission and not the other. You must use the whole of it or none. He admits that he went to see these women, but he did so in order to collect money for goods they had bought from him. He swears that it was purely a matter of business and that he was not guilty of any improper offence. But supposing this woman had gone to live with her husband as she should have done, would there be any complaint to-day? For three years he lived in Port Perry, in the same village with her, and she refused to go to him. There was nothing to justify her refusal. After three years he went west. In going west, he was not doing anything wrong, and the fact that he went west could not be called a desertion of his wife. I have no desire to condone any wrong doing that man may have committed in the west, if he did commit any, but I am not willing to hold him guilty on the evidence of two dissolute women, and I can see no justification for the wife's conduct. The man did go west, but it was after his wife had deserted him in Ontario without any cause. I would urge the government to afford us some guidance with regard to this case. For as I have said, this case establishes a precedent. If we pass this Bill, divorce becomes only a matter of dollars and cents. Evidence such as that against this man can be bought and being the evidence of people such as I can have described it probably can be bought for a very small amount of money. Surely if there were a case against this man some reputable and disinterested witnesses would be produced to testify to the facts. We must apply the same rule to all, and, if, in this case such evidence as this, absolutely unsupported, is to be a ground for divorce we set a most dangerous precedent affecting this very serious, this vital question of the marriage relation in Canada. I have already said that the evidence of the man in this case is not contradicted, I quote from page 2 of the wife's evidence:

Q. Then where did you go to live?—A. With my father.
Q. Why?—A. Mr. McDermott wished it.
Q. That was in 1881 that you went to your father's?—A. Yes.
Q. You continued to reside with your father how long?—A. Until his death.
Q. Was there a Mr. Frederick Howard Annis present at your wedding?—A. Yes.
Q. When did your husband leave you?

These are the woman's counsel's own words, not hers. Such a leading question not have been allowed in court, but the Senate committee is not governed by the rules of a court, and so this counsel is allowed to put these words in his client's mouth. The evidence goes on:

Q. When did your husband leave you?—A. In 1889.
Q. Seven years after you went to live with your people?—A. It would be hardly seven.
Q. Within a few months of seven years?—A. Yes.

Then at the top of the next page she speaks of his chastising one of the children. So driven is she to find a cause for the divorce that she brings forward this case of the man having chastised one of his children as a reason for divorce. That is a new proposition in this country that a man is to be divorced because he chastises one of his own children when he thinks it necessary, notwithstanding that the criminal law is there to take care of him if he chastises the child unduly.

Q. You have already told us that in 1889 your husband left you.

These are her counsel's words again, not her own.

Q. Where did he go to reside?—A. He still continued to live in Port Perry.
Q. For how many years?—A. About three.

Why did not she go to live with him in Port Perry? Where was her place when they were both living in the same town? Was it not with her husband, the father of her children? Then, lower down on the same page we find this evidence:

Q. Since 1892 how often have you seen your husband?—A. Never.
Q. Since 1892?—A. Oh, once.
Q. Where did you see him?—A. In my own home.
Q. Do you remember about when?—A. I think it would be about 1899, but I am not sure.
Q. That is the only time between 1892 and the present time?—A. Yes.
Q. How long did you see him then?—A. Oh, for about twenty minutes.
Q. He did not then stay over night with you?—A. No.
Q. Who was present?—A. My aunt.
Q. You only saw him about twenty minutes?—A. Yes.

For some reason the counsel does not ask anything about the conversation that took place or what occurred. But the husband himself tells us, and the woman does not deny the truth of what he said. He explains that he went there to coax the woman to live with him; and she refused and would give no reason. What are we coming to in this country if, under these circumstances, a divorce is to be granted? How many of us are to know what the marriage tie means? Now, the man did not stop at this one effort to induce his wife to return to him. He sent his two brothers-in-law, both clergymen. They are disinterested witnesses and respectable people—both clergymen in good standing and living in Ontario. They went to the woman and tried to induce her to return to her husband. She would make no complaint of him, nor would she give any explanation, but only laughed. One of these, the Rev. Mr. Sills tells us what took place at the interview he had with this woman. I must explain that this man McDermot acted as his own counsel. He comes here from British Columbia to meet this action for divorce and he does not employ a lawyer. I suppose it was because he thought it unnecessary believing that when the Senate committee learned the facts they would see the counsel was unnecessary. He questioned the witness himself, and under his questioning the evidence was as follows :

Q. During that interview did my wife accuse me of cruelty ? What took place ?—A. Well, a general conversation with regard to the treatment by Mr. McDermot of his wife. She made no special charge against him. I asked, I wanted to know as a clergyman whether I was right in asking her to come back. I am just as conscientious about the matter as though he were a perfect stranger, and I thought it was such a great pity to have those three little children there. I had a little familly of my own. And in this case with the wife separated from her husband knowing what would occur in a few years, so I begged of her to come back to her husband again. I said 'What is the matter? ' She did not give me any particular reason, only well, he did not treat her as I treated my wife Katie, and Mr. Forneri's wife Florence: 'George had not treated me as Katie and Florence were treated. That is about all the words she used. There was nothing I could take hold of. There was nothing on which I could form a charge against the boy—

By this term he referred to the respondent in the case.

—or go and talk to him about it.

This woman could laugh and think it a great joke that she should refuse to live with her husband, the father of her three children, even though these clergymen tried to induce her to return to her husband. And this is the woman who asks this parliament to create this most dangerous precedent in dissolving the marriage tie. I have seen cases of divorce go through this House which seemed to me worthy of comment, yet, I offered no opposition, but this case is absolutely unique in the principle it involves—if you can call it a principle when that which guides us seems to be simply a refusal to act on principle. According to the applicant's own statement she has not tried to keep her husband by her side, she has preferred that they should not live together. And now, after all these years she asks for a divorce from him notwithstanding that she gives no reason why she refuses to live with him when she did so first refuse. Feeling that she could not get a divorce under these circumstances she seeks to make her case technically safe by producing evidence to prove that he did something wrong long afterwards in British Columbia such as forms a statutory ground for divorce in all countries.

And so she does—what ? She brings two, as I say, of the lowest kind of characters down here to prove the case against him. He denies it on his oath, and I do not know how it appears to the House, but it strikes me that we are bound to take that man's oath against theirs. If we take his oath and refuse to vote in favour of this divorce, what do we do ? We simply say : You and your wife shall live together ; you shall be the father of these children, as you have been in the past, and she shall be your wife ; if she wishes to marry any one else, we think she had better not ; she has nothing discreditable against you ; we accept your oath that you are not guilty in regard to the two discreditable witnesses. By doing this, I think the good of the state will be preserved, and there is nothing so calculated to undermine the whole social fabric of this country as the granting of divorces on evidence of this kind or carelessly. I have nothing more to say at this juncture. I felt, after reading this evidence, that, as representing a not unintelligent county and a progressive county in this province, it was my duty to put before the House the protest of the 34,000 people whom I represent in this House, and put their views on record as they can only be put on record through my vote against this Bill, because the divorce is not warranted by the evidence brought forward in support of it, and because the granting of such a divorce would establish a precedent that, in my humble opinion, would be very bad for the country. The government, I submit, ought to take this matter into consideration. I suggested on Friday night to the promoter of the Bill that the Minister of Justice should be consulted in reference to applying the law as to the legal evidence in the matter. I may have been misunderstood by him in the hour which we had on Friday ; he might have misunderstood me, if he thought that I suggested that we would be governed by the opinion of the Minister of Justice. I must put him right. We are supreme in this parliament. We are not obliged to go by any strict legal rules, and we must decide the case as we think best, but I think the government should begin to guide this legislation in regard to divorces to some extent, that it should look into the case and be prepared, in the near future, to lay down some rules to guide the House, or the hon. gentlemen opposite, and to assist us out of the difficulty in which I at least am placed, that I cannot see my way to divorce these people on this evidence, not so much because I say that I do not think Mrs. McDermot is entitled to it—although I do not think she is—but because of the effect on the state, if we create such a precedent. No respectable man or woman in the state would be safe under such circumstances ; all that would be necessary would be to employ two witnesses who, out of their own mouths, would admit their immoral character, people whose oaths would not be accepted in any court of justice conducted on legal principles, in order to divorce some poor woman or some poor man, whose oath would be taken for nothing, and sever the marital relations, giving an opportunity to every one who gets married to understand that if they do not get along well together, they can do as the McDermots did, patch up a case, as the Senate and House of Commons are getting so easy, and get a divorce. That is a state of affairs which we cannot have. We may build all the Grand Trunk Pacifics we like, we may debate free trade or protection, we may grant autonomy to all the provinces from Vancouver to Halifax, we may pass all the laws on a business basis we like, but if we interfere unnecessarily or recklessly in the relations between man and wife, we will go a long way towards undermining the morality of this country, and if our laws tend to produce such a result and break up homes we had better repeal them and build up a system of laws more suited to a sound condition of public and private morality.

Mr. BOYCE. I fancy the sound and safe principle to be applied to cases of this kind is the principle which is applied in all criminal cases, that is, first that the accused shall get the benefit of any reasonable doubt, and, secondly, that it were better that one hundred guilty men should escape punishment than that one should be found guilty being innocent. I am glad to say that neither of the parties in this case are known to me. I suppose that all the members of the committee are in the same position, and that we are seized of the evidence sent down from the upper chamber, simply by reason of the printed testimony which is before us. Having regard to that evidence, Sir, it is certainly open to very grave suspicion whether the evidence preponderates in favour of guilt. It is clear, as a proposition of common sense and law, that if that evidence in favour of guilt does not preponderate, then this man should not be convicted of the very serious charge which is brought against him. The marriage in this case was solemnized in 1881, and there was very little cohabitation between the man and his wife. For about fourteen years, more or less, there was a separation, and whatever took place during that separation in the shape of desertion or cruelty I submit, with confidence, to this committee, is not sufficient to establish a claim by the wife to the assistance of parliament in granting the discretionary legislation of a dissolution of the bonds of marriage. Neither desertion, nor cruelty, nor any of the minor offences which are alleged in the evidence, the beating of the baby, the cruelty to the wife, the desertion, the non-remittance, if they be established facts, none of these offences, even though they are proved to the utmost limit, are sufficient to justify a dissolution. There must be the offence proven, and proven beyond the shadow of a doubt, of the legal infidelity, which alone can bring about the legal dissolution of the marriage tie and entitle the petitioner to the remedy of release by private legislation.

I find that the main evidence is the evidence of two women of admitted bad character, women who maintain themselves by immorality, women who are certainly not entitled to the respect of the community, and whose evidence in matters of this kind must certainly be looked upon with very grave suspicion. It is, Sir, upon the evidence of those women, and upon the evidence of those women alone, except as to one or two admissions of the respondent, to which I shall refer presently, that this Bill has passed through the Senate and has received endorsation from that body. It is undoubtedly true that, although of evil character, although of evil repute, although grossly immoral in their method of maintaining themselves, although not entitled to the respect of the community, these women are competent witnesses. But they are competent only to the extent to which they give evidence, and their competency is tinged with a great deal of incredibility by reason of their mode of life. Their story is one which has to be looked at, and, if there be any weakness in it, if there be any vacillating, if there be any contradiction, surely it can only be visited by the judgment that it is unsafe to attach any importance to it such as it is sought to attach to it by this Bill.

Now, without going too minutely into the evidence and desiring to be as short as possible, I would refer the committee to the evidence which is disclosed at page 7. Without following the questions and answers as they are set out I think hon. gentlemen will see that there are in the testimony of that witness at least very grave discrepancies. For instance, improper conduct is alleged with two women named. Apart from the fact that it is substantially denied by the respondent there is this fact in conjunction with it that the same witness who swears that the respondent was guilty of improper conduct with two women specifically named was debarred from alleging improper conduct with any other women by saying it was these two and nobody else. Let us take that statement. The witness goes into the box and states that such and such people are the people with whom improper relations existed, and although others were within her purview she says that there was nobody else with whom these improper relations existed. Then, in the next few minutes, apparently in answer to a question, an exceedingly improper question, put in an improper form, a leading question, the witness makes another charge as to improper relations with another person in that house—with herself. As if it were not sufficient to allege improper relations with only two people she must throw in herself and then as if this were not sufficient she further goes on and alleges improper relations by this man with the whole household. In ordinary cases juries would look upon that evidence with a great deal of suspicion as it is uncorroborated and unsubstantiated by any other evidence of a creditable nature and they would reject it as against the positive evidence of the man that he was not guilty and explaining the circumstances under which he was in that house. I grant that some presumption is created by reason of the fact that this man went to a house of this description at all and that the committee of the Senate, in the absence of an explanation as to the nature of his visit to the house, must come to the conclusion that his visits there were of an illegal nature for the simple reason that it is an illegal resort which is carried on in defiance of the law, and that the presumption must apply as against any one who visits such a place without a satisfactory explanation of his conduct. But, the committee in reporting this Bill evidently lost sight of the fact that the knowledge and acquaintance of this man with these women was gained in consequence of his business because they both swear, if reference be had to the evidence, that they met him first not at the house, but they met him first at his store where they were doing business with him, and that in connection with his business, as he admitted in the evidence at the foot of page 8, under cross examination by the respondent himself, he went to the House. Could there be any fuller explanation of his presence there to rebut any presumption which might arise from his visit? Surely not. It is admitted that these relations commenced in connection with his business down town and that his business brought him to the house. Then, surely, that presumption is successfully negatived or explained. What more? He explains that on one occasion his visit was to proffer advice and see that a certain female received proper medical treatment. That is distinctly corroborated at the foot of page 8 by the same woman who admitted that he did go there for that purpose and that in consequence of his visit this woman was removed where she would receive proper medical treatment. From the top of page 9 down to the middle it will be seen that the visits to the house, or at any rate the visit there spoken of, was in the afternoon between the middle of the afternoon and six o'clock, and also on the lower part of the first half of page 9 it will be seen that the woman is not at all positive in regard to the date of the visits or in regard to the time of the year, although she is positive of the general allegation that this man was guilty of misconduct with two specific people. This is a case for the exercise of extreme care, and I would submit to the committee this proposition, which I fancy would be a sound one to apply in a case of this kind, that if there be evidence of this nature, largely substantiated by the direct testimony of witnesses of this character, it would not be too much for parliament to demand that before granting the relief asked for the evidence given by women of this class be corroborated by circumstantial evidence which is the safest evidence to rely upon. I mean this: The evidence of these women is brought directly in issue by the man's explanation as to the occasion of his visit and his denial of misconduct when he did visit the House. Surely these women could have obtained other evidence in regard to the visits at that house. Surely, if this man was such a notorious profligate and a frequenter of houses of that character, evidence of the fact would not be wanting. Again, Sir, surely, if these two women can upon their oaths specify acts of legal infidelity committed by this man, specify these with particular women named whom they know, it would not be too much for the Senate committee to have demanded that one or both of these women be produced, and the committee should withhold its decision until they are produced in order that the allegation may be verified by the evidence of these women themselves.

But, it appears that the hon. gentlemen composing that committee never even asked a question as to where these women were, with whom this man was supposed to have committed this act of infidelity. That is of very grave import as varying at least the degree of credibility to be attached to that evidence. It will be observed that the principal witness not only admits that she is a grossly immoral character, but that she is also particeps criminis in the same act with this man. Therefore her evidence is to be suspected and criticised in the strongest possible manner. The evidence of the woman Clark, at page 7, must be looked at also with a critical eye because it undoubtedly shows a very deplorable state of affairs. Her memory is faulty and vacillating with regard to circumstances. As to the evidence of these three women it must undoubtedly be gathered that there is not one ounce of satisfactory corroborative evidence, if there is an ounce of corroborative evidence at all. There is no identification of the women with whom these acts of infidelity were committed; they are referred to simply by their Christian names. Granted that the keeper of a house carried on for grossly immoral purposes swears to certain facts implicating these men, upon what evidence does she do so? She swears to the fact having admittedly no knowledge of the fact and she swears to that as a fact which could only be a presumption. Her evidence with regard to misconduct with the two women named is entirely hearsay and should not of itself be admitted except as circumstantial evidence. She swears to the fact and she admittedly presumes that fact; she presumes to give direct evidence of the misconduct itself, but investigation shows that the evidence is presumptive or circumstantial; she has no knowledge at all of what she is talking about; in short she is a reckless witness. There is another circumstance which I desire to point out to the committee. The women had counsel before the Senate committee, the man was unassited by counsel and he did as best he could with his limited powers to cross-examine; his idea apparently being to get a better explanation of the answers in the examination in chief. But, he elicited this fact, and it is of great importance and will be found at the foot of page 9 of the evidence:

Q. You received your subpoena from Mr. O'Brien?—A. Yes.

Q. Is he or is he not a friend of yours in a business way?—A. Well, yes, in a business way.

Q. Does he go around and stay at your house very often?

Question ruled out by the chairman.

My hon. friend from Lincoln suggests: Why did they not let him answer that question. Here is the man who obtained the evidence; here is the man who procured the witness; surely it would be pertinent to the inquiry to ask if that man also is particeps criminis. Further the evidence goes:

Q. Did you sign a deposition or declaration to Mr. O'Brien prior to your coming down here?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you sober when you signed that?

Question ruled out by the chairman.

The point I am trying to make is that that women was not cross-examined; her story was attacked; it was unsatisfactory in general and in detail; she was swearing to facts of which she had no knowledge; she admitted that prior to her coming down here to give evidence she had signed a declaration with regard to these same facts; surely it would be proper and most desirable that that declaration should be produced and compared with the evidence she was giving so that a test could be made as to her veracity. Then we come to the defence. There is no evidence by the wife except evidence tending to show minor details which are no grounds for the passage of this Bill. The evidence in support of the main charge is entirely uncorroborated and is in itself weak and vacillating and contradictory. Cross-examination directed along proper grounds was not allowed; hearsay evidence with regard to the charges was admitted in more than one instance; the respondent was without counsel and without the means to direct cross-examination along lines which would have elicited possibly a very different state of facts. That is the evidence upon which the Senate recommended this Bill, and if there had been no other evidence I say that it would have been positively unsafe to have reported any Bill for passage through the House upon such unsatisfactory evidence. But there was other evidence. There was evidence which gravely contradicted the evidence of the wife even in minor details as to non-support, desertion, and cruelty. There was evidence expressly and positively denying the charges of misconduct, and not only denying them but going further and explaining them, because the direct denial would not be so strong as the denial of the fact coupled with an explanation of that fact. At the risk of wearying the committee I desire to refer to page 10, the evidence of the respondent who says:

In reference to my poor wife's evidence I deny in toto, I deny emphatically either cruelty to my wife or children, or desertion, or want of maintenance, or cruelty in any way towards either my wife or children or any person living in the house. I deny that I ever chastised one of my children by either spanking or in any other way. The primary cause of my leaving my mother-in-law's house was the fact that I was accused of stealing $5 out of a book which Mrs. Wilcox was reading which I saw my father-in-law deliberately take and put in his pocket.

I also swear positively that I maintained my wife and gave her everything she asked for for something like a year and a half after leaving my mother-in-law's house. When taking legal advice I was told by my lawyer to pay my wife no more moneys unless she consented to remove to her own house. . . . I received this letter from them threatening me with proceedings for alimony, and my reply was always that I was willing to support my wife, that the house was still vacant, and that as soon as she moved down with the children I would at once contribute everything necessary for their support. I remained, as near as I recollect, two and a half or three years in Port Perry. My wife still refused to move down to her own home.

That was before there was any allegation of improper conduct upon which any relief could be granted in the shape of divorce; and that evidence goes uncontradicted. The wife listens to it, and does not go into the box and deny it. At the time he offered to take her to her own home and provide for her, as it was his duty to do, there was no ground on which she could apply for a severance of the matrimonial tie. Again, on page 12 occurs the following evidence with reference to a letter written with regard to alimony:

By Mr. Armstrong, for petitioner:

Q. We have no such letter or copy of it?—A. If Mrs. McDermot has my letter she must have it. When I got that letter from Mrs. McDermot I at once sent her money. I told her I was keeping store in Golden, and told her that everything she required for the children, wearing apparel, I would take great pains in selecting it. I could buy it cheaper than she could in Port Perry, and I would be pleased to send anything she asked for. In reply I got a letter back with a long list, something over $165 worth of dry goods, which I filled, and expressed them to Port Perry. I also sent the children a cheque a piece.

That is not denied by the woman; and this absolutely negatives the allegations as to desertion, cruelty and non-support contained in her evidence-in-chief. Again, on the same page, he says:

I not only did that, but on the next order for goods, as I knew that my wife was a lady who was particularly neat in her appearance and so on—this first time she told me she did not require anything for herself, she was able to provide for herself, but simply wanted goods for the children, but in the same invoice I included several articles of apparel, silk, lace and silk dress for my wife and a quantity of underwear that would come handy, and also a note attached to the goods that in the future she would take everything for herself that I felt like sending. Every request from that day till the present has been complied with. Since that date I have sent a bicycle apiece, snowshoes, watches, each one a watch and chain, and my wife has at different times sent me up orders for goods in the spring of the year that she wished supplied, and I have always supplied them. I also in December, 1904—I think that is correct—sent my wife two express orders for her own personal use of fifty each.

These allegations are not denied, and the man is taking the risk of his oath, of being convicted of perjury in a very simple manner, because he refers to express orders and express packages of which there is a record. The wife was sitting there and must have heard this evidence as to these remittances and consignments of necessaries; but she does not say that she never received them and inferentially that he never sent them. Again, on page 13, there is not only the specific denial of the misconduct alleged against him by these women, but there is an explanation of the reason of each of the visits to their house. Now, Sir, these unfortunate women who occupy this class of house have to live, and tradesmen have to go there, to take orders, to deliver goods, and to collect the money in payment for those goods; and if these people do not pay—and they have not the best credit in the world—they have to be looked after, and messengers have to be sent to them. Is any presumption of misconduct to be drawn from the fact that a man in the course of his business does visit these places? Is he to be branded as a criminal for all time because he does so in the course of his business as a tradesman? As is not denied, and as is admitted by the woman in charge of the house, he went there for the purpose of carrying on his business and collecting his debts—collecting the money out of which in all probability he sent these remittances to his wife. Is that to be a presumption of guilt against the man, or will this committee require some more tangible or definite to convict him of the charges made against him? When under cross-examination, at page 14, he does not abuse his wife. He speaks in the highest terms of her, and he further explains the occasions of the other visits to the woman Harron's house; and in the whole course of the cross-examination by counsel for the petitioner it is to be observed that the man does not falter from the story he tells. He is subjected to a very close and analytical examination, and his story does not vary generally or in detail; it stands as a straight story, and he is entitled to belief at least as much as the women who acknowledge their own guilt and their own immoral method of livelihood. Granted, then, that his word is as good as theirs, there is no case, because the evidence in favour of innocence, plus the presumption, is greater than the evidence adduced to show guilt. But it is greater, stronger, more reliable, for this reason, that he is definite in regard to the circumstances, he does not vacillate with regard to his facts, and he is not caught, as the women were caught, making statements which are wholly in variance with facts, which they themselves subsequently narrated in the same evidence. There is, in short, the story upon which this woman seeks legislative interference to dissolve that which can only be dissolved under our law as it exists at present, by this parliament. My hon. friend from Lincoln has referred in detail to the principles which we must respect in dealing with these Bills. Sir, I must confess that to my mind it is not clear beyond a peradventure that this man was guilty of the charges brought against him, which alone can be the ground upon which this Bill should become law. The relief in a case of this kind is purely discretionary.

There is no right to legislation dissolving the marriage tie, even on specific proof of legal misconduct. It is an application to the state for a privilege to a particular person, it is privilege legislation, legislation in favour of a particular person; and when we are dealing with the dissolution of so sacred a tie as the marriage tie, we cannot hedge it about with too many safeguards. And although this Bill might have to be relegated to the committee of the Senate and its further consideration deferred for another session, that would be far better than to judge this man guilty, on the evidence submitted, of the charges cited in the preamble of this Bill. If there be any doubt in the evidence, who should get the benefit? All men desire to befriend a woman. That is an obligation laid upon their manhood, but when we come to the question of dissolving a marriage upon charges such as are recited in the preambles of this Bill, it should not matter whether the petitioner be the wife or the husband. We ought to apply the same rule in each case. Let it be established as a principle that this House will reject each and every application for a divorce where the evidence falls short of proving clearly beyond reasonable doubt the guilt of the respondent, whether man or woman. I submit that in the evidence sent down by the Senate there is grave doubt, doubt so grave that a jury would not hesitate in giving the accused the benefit of it; and I think we might well, if we do not reject the Bill, send it back to the Senate in order that the matter may be more thoroughly investigated along the lines I have pointed out that no injustice be done.

Mr. CARVELL. One would suppose, from the arguments advanced by the hon. members for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) and Algoma (Mr. Boyce), that this Bill is an entirely novel proceeding and one that has never been brought before the House since confederation. As a matter of fact, however, these Bills for absolute divorce or dissolution of the vinsulum matrimonii have been granted from time to time since confederation; and if we follow the English precedent we can go back as far as 1551 to find the oldest case on record in England in which the principle of divorce has been acted upon. And so long as persons bring themselves within certain recognized principles, it has been the custom of parliament, and in later years in England and in some portions of this Dominion it has been the power likewise of the courts, to grant these Bills of divorce. Every one knows that there are certain elementary principles which must govern in divorce cases and which must be complied with before divorces are granted. This is not simply, as has been stated in the House, an action between two parties. It is an action in which a third party is interested. It is the duty of the state to see that no injustice is done, it is the duty of the state to protect society, but it is also its duty, when specific charges are proved, to mete out the same measure of justice to one party that is meted out to another. In the first place, the petitioner must come into court with clean hands. There must be no crime or guilt on his part. Has there been in this case the least attempt to prove any unbecoming conduct on the part of the petitioner? We have the evidence before us. The witnesses were brought before the Senate committee. The respondent had every chance to bring witnesses, and to my mind what has stronger weight than anything else, we have the testimony of an hon. member of this House, who represents the riding in which the petitioner lives, and who says that no more virtuous woman lives in the province of Ontario. Therefore the first, and to my mind, one of the most important elements has been settled. The next important element is that there must be no collusion between the parties. Surely no one will conclude that in this case there has been any. Then the next question is whether the ordinary cause of divorce has been proven. The hon. gentlemen who have addressed this House asked us to go back to the principle adopted by the English parliament prior to 1857 and by the English courts to a very large extent since and that is to grant to the husband a right they will not grant the wife. I do not think that such was the intention of parliament. True these hon. gentlemen did not say so in terms, but I can draw no other inference from the arguments they advanced.

Mr. LANCASTER. I said just the opposite.

Mr. CARVELL. I submit that it is a reasonable deduction to draw from the remarks of these hon. gentlemen that we should withhold from the woman the right we are willing to grant the man.

Mr. BOYCE. Not at all. Neither of us took that ground.

Mr. CARVELL. I am glad my hon. friends say they took grounds quite the opposite. That removes one very grave doubt I possessed. But if they have any doubt about the principles to be followed in the Canadian House, all they need do is read the famous Tudor-Hartt case decided in 1888 and they will conclude that the English law has not been followed in Canada, and I hope never will. I know of no more mischievous and unfair legislation than to deny to the woman the right to a divorce which would be granted the husband.

Mr. LANCASTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CARVELL. That brings me to the question whether or not the charge made against this man has been proven. It is not a question whether the wife deserted her husband or whether he deserted her, because desertion, no matter how cruel or under what extraordinary circumstances, is not in Canada—and I hope never will be—a ground for divorce. I shall not go over all the nauseating evidence given before the Senate committee, but I do submit that according to the evidence, the case of the petitioner has been proven beyond doubt. We are told that we ought not to take the evidence of the two women brought from British Columbia. Why? Because they are prostitutes forsooth.

Did the hon. gentlemen who are opposed to this Bill expect to find evidence of this kind except in houses of prostitution? Do you go to the drawing-rooms or the higher classes of society for such evidence? Do you go to our churches or our schools for evidence of this kind? If these hon. gentlemen had ever practised in the divorce courts or had had experience of this sort of legal matters elsewhere, they would know that you must go to these places to get this kind of evidence. And they would know that case after case in Canada has been decided within the last fifty years on evidence such as this. In the province of New Brunswick they have a divorce court. And I submit that it is as hard to get a divorce before the courts of New Brunswick as before this parliament of Canada, if not harder. Nine months ago I listened to a case in that court in which a divorce was granted and the only evidence given was brought from a house of ill-fame as in this case. The judge in that case—it is usual for the cases to be tried by a judge alone, though he can have a jury under certain circumstances—had no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the case had been proved.

Mr. BOYCE. Was there no corroborative evidence ?

Mr. CARVELL. There certainly was and it was just such evidence as we have in this case showing that this man had been seen frequenting these places. And you do not want better corroboration. You do not get direct evidence in these cases—and it is a good thing you do not. I would refer my hon. friends to a case showing the rule of evidence adopted in these matters. For, Sir, as I have said before, we do not get the direct evidence in these cases and are compelled to rely on circumstantial evidence. I do not believe there is one such case in twenty-five decided in this House or in the courts of this country, but the evidence is largely circumstantial. I would refer these hon. gentlemen to the diction of Lord Stowell in the Lovedon case case in the House of Lords, about the year 1832. I cite from Gemmill on Divorce, page 206 :

> It is a fundamental rule that it is not necessary to prove the direct fact of adultery ; because if it were otherwise, there is not one case in a hundred in which the proof would be attainable. In every case almost, the fact is inferred from circumstances that lead to it by fair inference as a necessary conclusion.

Now, I will not refer to the evidence of these women at all. I think it highly improper to refer to that evidence in this House and put it on 'Hansard.' I ask members of this committee to refer to that evidence of which each hon. member has received a copy. You have absolute evidence of this woman who is seeking a divorce, and you have it denied in toto, almost in toto, by the defendent himself. But there is another important matter which we must consider, and that is that the members of this committee have not had the privilege which is granted in every other court I have ever heard of, namely that those who are to decide as to the weight of evidence, must see the witnesses on the stand that they may watch their demeanour, and judge by their manner and appearance whether they are or are not worthy of credence. This House has not had that privilege. But in the Senate committee they have had that privilege. And the members of that committee and the many members of the Senate who have unanimously decided in favour of passing this Bill are in an infinitely better position to decide upon this case than the members of this committee who have only the bald facts reported to them. These women come and give their evidence. And because they are women of ill-repute their evidence, we are told ought not to be taken. I made it my business to go to members of the Senate, and they told me that these women gave their evidence with the utmost difidence, that it was almost impossible to drag that evidence out of them, and that it was evident from their actions that they were telling the truth, that they had been brought here against their will and were forced to give evidence. But we in this House do not know anything about that. All we know is that these witnesses swore to these things, and that the defendant denied them. There is another important matter. If I had read the evidence of the husband alone and had not read the evidence of the petitioner or the petitioner's witnesses, merely from the way the defendant gave his evidence, I would say that it was about as hard a piece of evidence to believe as I ever heard of. The man has double the assurance of those harlots who have been held up in such an unfavourable light here to-night. Take the man's evidence as it stands and he denies his marriage, denies that they lived together as husband and wife, denies that they had three children. Probably this was not his intention. But he specifically and categorically denies certain charges made against him by the wife in her examination, charges that are sworn to by two other witnesses. It is impossible for him to deny that he was a frequent visitor at the house of the women Harron and Clarke. He tells us that it was necessary to go there in the course of his business to sell goods to these women. Had he stopped there, he might have been entitled to credence. But he does not stop there. He says he went there to introduce commercial travellers. What for ? That they might also sell these women goods. And he tells us in the next breath that he sold nearly all the silk goods sold in the town of Golden and that these women were the principal purchasers of these goods. When a man makes his livelihood by selling goods to women of this kind and then tells us that he took commercial travellers to sell goods in direct competition with himself and prevent him from making a profit, the evidence is hard to believe. But that is his explanation of why he entered those houses of ill-fame. That alone should be enough to convince any honest man that this witness is—I will not use as harsh a word as perjurer, but is not entitled to the credence which would deny this woman the right to divorce if this committee believe that in any case husband and wife should be divorced.

Now, there has been a good deal said about whether or not this man deserted his wife, or whether his wife deserted him. As I said before, so far as the crucial point is concerned, it matters not to me which it was. I think there will be a lot of evidence found to show whether this man is worthy of belief or not. One thing is very certain—he only provided a home for his wife for about six months after he was married, and then, because he could not provide a home or did not want to do so, they went to her father's house and remained there for five or six years, after which he left. A great deal was said about his not being able to get along with his father-in-law and mother-in-law, and he tries to make out that it was never his fault. But he gives the lie to his statement from beginning to end because he admits that in one month after he left his mother-in-law's house he made an arrangement by which he gave his wife $12.50 a month and carried on this arrangement for a year. Is that consistent with the idea that he left because he could not get along with his wife's parents and was pleading with his wife to leave? Why should he put her off with a pension of $12.50 a month? If he wished to keep her with him would he not have given her everything he could? But he gets rid of her in the easiest way he can. He gives her $12.50 a month and says; Take that, for it is all you will get. And this arrangement he continued for a year or fifteen months. He lives there in the same village for two years after this; not one dollar of support does she get from him and finally after about three years he goes west and becomes, as he says himself, a Lothario. He admits it; not only admits it, but glories in it. He is what is described in the dictionaries as a gay deceiver, a libertine, a man without character, a man who glories in the fact that he sets at defiance the laws of God as well as of man.

Mr. BOYCE. I do not know how it struck my hon. friend but I know I noticed the same expression in the evidence and it struck me that he did not understand the expression.

Mr. CARVELL. If my hon. friend can point to anything in the evidence which shows that he did not understand the expression, I have not been able to see it, The evidence is simply that the counsel for the petitioner asks:

You were rather a Lothario in the west?

And he answers:

Yes.

That is all there is to it, and I would like to know how on earth my hon. friend can read into this language the fact that he did not understand the expression. I do not think the respondent will thank him for saying there is anything on earth he does not understand. If you read the evidence you will come to the conclusion that in his own mind he knows everything there is on this earth and a little of what is in the next world as well. We have this man on his own admission a gay deceiver, a libertine, a man who glories in it and who goes out there and is certainly a frequenter of these houses of ill-fame. He lives there for eight or ten years and there is not a particle of evidence that he ever offered to contribute one dollar to his wife's support, until some two or three years ago when she wrote, and then he would not give a cent until she signed a statement that it was not to be taken as a precedent that he would not be liabale for alimony. Then she sent a list of goods which she needed for her children. He tries to make a virtue of necessity by claiming that after proceedings had been started, not after the subpoenas had been issued, but after he knew that an attempt was to be made to bring the matter before the Senate of Canada, then he becomes magnanimous and then without being solicited he sends presents to the children and express orders to his wife and she returns them. If there is anything in this evidence for which I admire this woman, it is the fact that when the matter had gone to the extent it had she had the womanhood to return the money by which he was trying to buy peace.

We now come down to the last matter which I propose to mention in reference to the question whether this woman or this man should be believed and it is this. We have the evidence of the man himself that he left this woman some five or six years after their marriage, in 1889, and that in all the sixteen years intervening he has not contributed more than $400 to her support; he admits it himself. We have the evidence, as I said before, that he has led a wild, dissolute life in the west, that he has inhabited houses of ill-fame. I am taking his own admission, not the evidence of these women, and when his wife swore to the most abominable piece of evidence I ever listened to by a wife, which will be found at page 2 of the evidence, I say the man did not deny it. It seems almost too inhuman to be placed in print, it seems so bad that you can hardly believe that a man living in a Christian country would sink so low, to such a depth of degradation, that he would treat a woman as this woman was treated by him—and that at a time when he was professing to live with her as her husband. She swears at page 2:

I was in child-birth and I asked him to go for the doctor, and he refused positively and swore at me and said: damn it all why didn't I tell him before it was time to retire?

I submit that has not been denied. In the first paragraph of his evidence he denied categorically the facts that he had thrown the children under the table, bent their fingers back and driven her out of the house. He denied these charges, but he has not denied this charge.

Mr. LANCASTER. What does my hon. friend say of the fact that the woman forgave him for that and lived with him for several years after ? Is that not an answer.

Mr. CARVELL. I am not asking the committee to pass the Bill on that evidence. I am asking the committee to believe that this man is not worthy of belief, a man who is brutal enough to make a remark of that kind under those circumstances is not fit to be believed in any court in any Christain or civilized country, and that a man who is sufficiently mean to do that is one of the most despicable specimens of humanity that it has ever been my experience not only to meet but to read of. With this evidence I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the man has been proven guilty of adultery, and therefore, as I read the law, a divorce should be granted. But that raises another question. The hon. gentlemen who are opposing the passage of this Bill seem to be advocating something which so far as I have been able to read has never been advocated in this House since 1888 and I know not how long before that time. I may be in error but I have inquired from older members and I have been unable to find a single instance from 1888 when this House has ever questioned the finding of the Senate on this matter of divorce. Why has that rule been followed ? Simply because an agreement was made. In the first place they are following the custom of the House of Lords of England, a custom which prevailed in England from 1551 down to 1858 when these matters were handed over to the divorce court. Then in the old province of Canada these matters were taken up by the legislative council and after confederation was consummated these matters were taken into consideration by the Senate and have been ever since. Under the customs and rules of the Senate passed in 1888 and even before that, they have had the power, and have exercised that power, of bringing before them the witnesses, the witnesses give their evidence viva voce as in all courts of law and the committee of the Senate who have listened to the witnesses, watched their demeanour, observed the manner in which they give their evidence, forming their conclusion more I say from watching the manner of the witnesses than the actual evidence, these Senate committees have been passing these questions and their decision has been taken as final by this House as far back as 1888.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why then do they ever come before this chamber ?

Mr. CARVELL. Because under our present system of legislation it is necessary that a Bill be passed by both Houses of parliament.

Mr. LANCASTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CARVELL. If we are considering the evidence then I say we should be manly about it, I say that we should pass this Bill and give notice to the people of Canada that in future every divorce Bill is going to be contested in the House of Commons as well as in the Senate. Suppose this rule had existed in this case what would have been done ? These witnesses would have been brought before either the Private Bills Committee or a special select committee to give evidence, and members of this House would have had the privilege of going into that committee and listening to these people giving their evidence. Members of this House would have been treated as a jury is treated in a court of law, and would have been in a position to decide upon this matter intelligently on the principles of their common sense and their judgment, and they would not have been compelled to take the evidence second-hand as we are compelled to do in this case. I submit that this parliament has never adopted that principle. Let us be fair and manly about it, let us give the people of the Dominion of Canada public notice of it and let us put people in such a position that they will not leave a case half tried when they have got through with the Senate. These witnesses I presume have gone back to British Columbia. We have no way of getting their testimony or finding out whether they have sworn the truth or not. We must simply take the evidence as it was produced before the Senate. It is not fair ; this woman or her friends have been compelled to put up I suppose $500 or $1,000 in order to get this case in the position it is to-night, and now in an unfair and unusual manner, in a manner which I admit the House has a legal right to adopt but which has not been employed for fifteen years, it is attempted to hold up this Bill simply because we have not this evidence before us.

Another peculiar course was taken on Friday evening by the two learned gentlemen who have discussed this case here to-night. Then a different line of action was taken. On that occasion we were asked to submit this matter to the Minister of Justice. Think of it ! When the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) asked the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) why he wanted to submit it to the Minister of Justice, he said that he wanted to get a legal decision ; and when asked what legal decision, he said that he wanted to know whether or not there was sufficient ground on which to grant this divorce.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) is making my speech for me.

Mr. CARVELL. Am I ? I will do my hon. friend the justice of reading from the record, which, I presume, he will not deny, and I will leave it to the committee to decide whether or not I have properly quoted him. I read from the unrevised edition of 'Hansard' of Friday, May 19, at page 6511:

Mr. CAMPBELL. Now I think that this is a childish, I think it is frivolous, the most frivolous argument ever advanced in this House for a man of the ability of the hon. member for Lincoln, or the hon. member for Algoma, to seriously propose to refer this to the Minister of Justice for a judicial decision upon the legal point. What legal point is there about it?

Mr. LANCASTER. The legal point is whether the evidence here is legally sufficient to warrant the stain of guilt that is sought to be put on this man.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who is to decide that?

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that not a proper question for the law officers of the Crown to decide?

I ask is there a lawyer in this House who ever heard such a proposition as that?

Mr. BOYCE. Does my hon. friend deny that that would not be a proper course?

Mr. CARVELL. I most certainly deny that it is a proper course.

Mr. BOYCE. Well, then, my hon. friend is not acquainted with the rules of the Senate.

Mr. CARVELL. I will read rule 'O' of the Senate, and we will see what that rule says. I want to treat the hon. gentleman fairly, I want to give him all the evidence and the law I can on the question, and while I do not hope to convince the hon. gentleman, yet, Sir, I will try to make my own position tenable before the committee. Rule 'O' is as follows:

Condonation, collusion or connivance between the parties is always a sufficient ground for rejecting a Bill of divorce, and shall be inquired into by the committee. And should the committee have reason to suspect collusion or connivance and deem it desirable that fuller inquiries should be made, the same shall be communicated to the Minister of Justice, that he may intervene and oppose the Bill should the interest of public justice in his opinion call for such intervention.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman contend that the House of Commons has not the same right to invoke that as the other chamber as to the necessity for passing this Act?

Mr. CARVELL. I am willing to admit that it is only a fair inference that the House of Commons shall have the same right to invoke the opinion of the Minister of Justice on these points as the Senate, but when hon. gentlemen ask us to refer this question to the Minister of Justice in order to decide whether there has been condonation or collusion, I say away with such an idea. Where is the evidence of condonation? I ask the hon. member for Lincoln and the hon. member for Algoma to point out where there is collusion in this case. They have talked about collusion between the wife and these women from British Columbia. They have even gone so far as to——

Mr. BOYCE. I think the hon. gentleman is going beyond the mark.

Mr. CARVELL. They have even gone so far as to talk of collusion between the wife and these women from British Columbia. That is not the meaning of collusion. Collusion, as it is used in that rule, and as it is understood in law, means an agreement or arrangement between the husband and wife by which a divorce might be brought about which otherwise would not be brought about. Where is the evidence of any legal collusion in this case? What is there to submit to the Minister of Justice on the question of collusion? Then, the next thing that is mentioned is connivance. Connivance in law means that if one party, husband or wife, intentionally places either one in a position that the statutory charge may be preferred against either, they are not entitled to any redress in this House or before a court of law. Where is the evidence of connivance? Do they claim that because this woman, after being treated as she was, would not go with this man because he went off to British Columbia and associated with harlots, is responsible for his association with these women? Do they claim that she drove him into these wrongful acts? That is the only logical conclusion they can arrive at, that is the only way they can make out that there is any connivance; and if there is any connivance, what do they want to submit to the Minister of Justice? Do they want the Minister of Justice to tell them that this parliament has power to pass a divorce Bill? Do they want the Minister of Justice to tell them, as a lawyer, that if they believe the evidence of these two women they are justified in finding the charge proven, and that the Bill should pass? Or do they want to put this thing off in order to get rid of a vote upon the matter? If so, I say they are giving us a childish pretext for asking the Minister of Justice to decide upon the whole case.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is pretty hard on the Minister of Justice.

Mr. CARVELL. It is pretty hard on the Minister of Justice; I thought so when I listened to it. I thought that surely these hon. gentlemen knew the law. I do not think the hon. member for Lincoln will plead guilty to ignorance of the law and I am absolutely certain that the hon. member for Algoma will not plead ignorance of the law. There is no question about that. I wonder at them wanting the Minister of Justice to go over the evidence, to come down here and take the place of the jury, take the place which has been occupied by laymen since the time of Magna Charta, and to decide according to this evidence if this man is guilty or not. I have taken up much more time in discussing this case than I intended to, but I do submit that this parliament, in the first place under the British North America Act, has power to grant this divorce. This parliament fifteen or twenty years ago adopted the principle of allowing the evidence to be presented before a Senate committee. The Senate committee and the Senate itself, after passing upon these cases, send them down here and the recommendations of the Senate have invariably been concurred in. If this House is going to change that principle then I say the only proper thing for us to do is to pass this Bill. If we believe that this man is guilty of adultery, and I do not think there are half a dozen hon. gentlemen in this House who do not believe in their hearts that he is guilty of adultery, then I say we should pass this Bill. If this House desires that a different principle should be followed in future let us adopt that principle, make it public and let everybody who wishes know the principle upon which these matters are going to be decided, let them give their evidence before the Senate, then bring their evidence over here, before a committee of this House and then we will be able to decide intelligently, but until that plain intimation is given to the people of this country, I submit that if this man is guilty of adultery it is the bounden duty of this House to pass this Bill and let this woman have her divorce. There is only one other observation that I desire to make. The hon. member for Lincoln undertook to play upon the sympathies and credibility of the members of this House by asking us if the case were reversed and two bad men attempted to swear away the rights of an innocent woman whether every man here would not stand up and say: We shall not believe such evidence, we shall not give credence to it. But, he left out the important part of the argument. Let any woman come into this House and admit, as this man admits that she has been living with harlots for the last ten years of her life, let any woman come into this House and admit that she has been living the life that he admits he has been living, and I ask, if there is a man in this committee, if there is a member of this parliament, if there is a legal gentleman or a Christian gentleman in Canada who would not say that this woman ought to be divorced and who would not grant a divorce without discussing it for two minutes. I say that there has been no case made out against this woman, but that on the other hand there has been a strong and absolutely unanswerable case made out by the woman against the husband, and for that reason I contend the Bill should pass.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) has not referred to the main argument I made, namely: what is the interest of the country in this matter? Would the hon. gentleman tell me what good he thinks it would do the country to pass this Bill?

Mr. CARVELL.

Mr. CARVELL. My answer is this: for the past 300 years it has been the settled policy of the parliament of Great Britain to grant divorce when adultery has been proved against the woman. In 1832, the parliament of Great Britain granted a divorce for the adultery of the husband. The rule was laid down positively and absolutely by this House in the Tudor and Hart case in 1888 that adultery, unaccompanied by an unnatural crime is, as required in England, sufficient ground for divorce by the wife. If this House is convinced that the charge has been proven against the husband then it is our right beyond a question to grant the divorce, and I submit, following the practise, it is our duty to pass this Bill and grant this wife a divorce.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not yet quite understand from the hon. gentleman what good purpose is served in the country by encouraging divorce on such evidence as has been produced in this case.

Mr. CARVELL. My only answer is this: if the hon. gentleman wishes to take the position which a large and influential body in Canada take, namely, that he is unalterably opposed to divorce, then I can understand him.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am opposed to divorce except in extreme cases.

Mr. CARVELL. If he admits that divorce is proper in extreme cases, then as this is an extreme case, and on the ground of public policy he should support the Bill.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported.

On motion for the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not wish to reiterate what I have already said, but I must say that I cannot for the life of me see how any good purpose can be served to the country by passing this Bill on such evidence as we have before us. I must protest against the third reading.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE. Speaking for myself, I want to be put on record as saying that I cannot vote for the principle that any man's rights or privileges should be put in jeoparady upon such evidence as has been given in this case. I do not think that such evidence would be recognized in any court, and I say that especially should it not be recognized by this House.

House divided on the motion for the third reading.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

RELIEF OF GEORGE DANCE HARPER.

House in committee on Bill (No. 154) for the relief of George Dance Harper.—Mr. T. G. Johnston.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose there is no use of opposing the passing of this Bill after what we have seen on the other one. The evidence in this case shows a very extraordinary state of things. After reading it one must come to the conclusion that the plaintiff Harper is a fool and the respondent either an imbecile or a blackguard ; and to give a divorce on such evidence is making a farce of the House of Commons altogether.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed, on division.

RELIEF OF JANE MARIE FITZ-SIMONS.

Mr. STEWART moved that the House go into committee on Bill (No. 130) for the relief of Jane Marie Fitz-Simons.—Mr. Calvert.

Mr. TAYLOR. The evidence has not been distributed in this case.

Mr. STEWART. The evidence was distributed amongst the members some weeks ago.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Clerk of the House informs me that the evidence has not been distributed yet, so far as he has seen.

Mr. STEWART. I think I ought to know. Although Mr. Calvert's name appears on the order paper as being responsible for the Bill, it was introduced by myself, and naturally I have followed it. The evidence was distributed among the members ; I received it and read it ; and the Bill passed the Private Bills Committee without any opposition.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The very fact that the Bill has been before the Private Bills Committee, and has been dealt with by it is proof that the evidence has been before that committee. The committee could not have reported the Bill without having received the evidence. The invariable practice is for the Senate to transmit to the House for the convenience of our committee the evidence taken before the Senate committee.

Mr. DANIEL. I am a member of the Private Bills Committee, I was present when this other case came before it, but I have never seen any evidence in this case. It certainly was not before the Private Bills Committee at any meeting at which I was present, and it is news to me that that committee has reported in favour of the Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. The record in the orders is plain, that it is reported without amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was present at the Private Bills Committee the day on which this Bill passed. This and the McDermot Bill passed at the same time.

Mr. STEWART. I may say that the only objection ever offered against the passage of this Bill was on technical or constitutional grounds. The marriage took place in the United States, and when the case first came up, a lawyer appeared and objected to it being dealt with on this ground, but offered no objection whatever to the evidence. I was present at the Private Bills Committee at the last meeting, when the Bill passed that Committee, and there was no objection whatever offered to its passing by the party most particularly interested in it.

Motion agreed to, Bill considered in committee and reported.

Mr. STEWART moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. DANIEL. Before that motion is put I wish to enter my protest. I have not received the evidence and have no knowledge of the Bill having been considered by the Private Bills Committee, and I object to the Bill passing without the evidence being in the hands of the members. Not only myself but many other members say they have not seen the evidence.

Mr. FIELDING. The evidence must have been received some time ago. My recollection is it was printed several weeks ago. Perhaps the hon. gentleman received it and has forgotten.

Mr. HENDERSON. As the date of the report of the committee is the 17th of May, it could not possibly have been printed and distributed weeks ago.

Mr. FIELDING. The practice is when a Bill is received from the other House, the evidence is distributed. I am only speaking from recollection.

Mr. BOYCE. I desire to place my protest on record on the same lines as the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel).

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would suggest that in order to avoid confusion in cases of this kind, some initials ought to follow the Bill so as to show the evidence has been distributed. When a Bill is printed in both languages we put the initials 'E. and F.,' and there is no reason why we should not put the initials 'E. D.' to show that the evidence has been distributed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEWART moved that a message be sent to the Senate returning the evidence taken before the Standing Orders Committee, to which was referred Bill (No. 130) intituled an Act for the relief of Jane Marie Fitz-Simons.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill, the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Stewart), said emphatically that the evidence had been distributed. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) asked him for a copy of the evidence and he sent a copy of the evidence of a former case. If it has been printed and distributed, he should send over a copy, and until that is done the motion should stand. I do not think Bills of this kind should be railroaded through without members knowing what they are voting on.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Bill has been passed. This is a motion that a message be sent to the Senate to return to that House the evidence.

Mr. STEWART. I may say that the evidence sent over to the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) just now was handed to me by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Caldwell), who had the evidence in both cases in his hand at the same time. The evidence is somewhere between him and the Speaker's desk and it was distributed weeks ago.

Mr. CALDWELL. I thought that the evidence I sent over was the evidence in this case.

Motion agreed to, on division.

PATENTS OF WILLIAM A. DAMEN.

Mr. CAMPBELL, moved that the order for the House to go into committee on Bill (No. 129) to amend an Act respecting certain patents of William A. Damen be discharged and the Bill referred back to the Private Bills committee for further consideration.

Mr. BERGERON. Further consideration in what respect ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Minister of Agriculture said there were some amendments to be made which had been overlooked.

Motion agreed to.

FESSENDEN WIRELESS TELEGRAPH COMPANY OF CANADA.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 144) to incorporate the Fessenden Wireless Telegraph Company of Canada.—Mr. Geoffrion.

On section 1,

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to explain whether the government have a policy in regard to this company, which is a company engaging in the business of telegraphic communication. We have a general Act applying to these companies I believe ; but it is a question whether there should not be some special provision to regulate the conduct of such companies as this. Or, if there is such a provision, I would like to be informed of it. We know what has happened in the case of the Bell Telephone Company. That company has become an immense monopoly requiring the attention of a parliamentary committee. And, while it has proved of great advantage to the people, it has also proved a monopoly. It is easier to regulate these companies at the start than later on. While I have no objection to this Bill going through this stage, I shall certainly expect a declaration from the government of their policy in regard to companies of this kind, and an explanation whether this company comes under any general law regulating such corporations.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). This matter was very fully considered in the committee, and some amendments were offered to the Bill, providing that the company shall not establish signal stations or give effect to their object without permission of the Governor in Council. It was also announced to the committee by the Minister of Marine (Mr. Préfontaine) that it was his intention to bring to the notice of the House an Act relating to wireless telegraphy such as had been passed in England. He produced to the committee a copy of that Act, and said that some action would be taken in Canada along the same lines. The Bill, as now amended, certainly safeguards every interest, including those of the government, which, as we all know, has taken some action in connection with wireless telegraphy. It is provided that no station shall be placed at any point where it will be against the public interest. All interests are conserved ; and I think that the Bill, as now amended, is entitled to the favourable consideration of the committee.

Mr. BERGERON. I may say to my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) that a new section, No. 20, has been added to the Bill, providing that :

The Electric Telegraph Companys' Act shall apply to the company.

The hon. gentleman will hear the amendments that have been made to the Bill, and

I think he will see that there is no objection to passing it. It is based upon the Marconi Bill.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is copied from the Marconi Bill.

On section 8—general powers,

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does this wireless telegraph company intend also to telegraph by wire ?

Mr. BERGERON. It was explained in the committee, and upon these explanations the clause was based, that in certain places, as, for instance, in the Yukon, the company would be obliged to use wires for certain distances. It may be a very short distance, but the company could not do it without power from the parliament of Canada.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Might I ask if section 8 is intended to give the company power to transmit messages by wireless telegraphy ?

Mr. BERGERON. I have just been saying that for the carrying on of their work they need in some places wires between two points. It may be a very short distance but they could not do it without the authority of an Act of this parliament.

On section 12,

The company may enter into any arrangements with any government, corporation or person owning or controlling any line of telegraphic or telephonic communication, or any system of signalling, or any power or right to use communications of that nature, to use its lines or systems, or cables or telegraphic, telephonic or other means of communication, facilities or works, upon such terms and in such manner as the directors from time to time deem expedient.

Mr. BARKER. What is the intention of the word 'government' there ? Does it mean any foreign government, the government of the United States for example?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it would only mean any government within Canada.

Mr. BERGERON. That means local governments or the federal government.

Mr. BARKER. I do not think it is defined.

Mr. BERGERON. Those were the reasons given in the committee, that this was intended to cover arrangements with local governments.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the intention, but is it limited to local governments?

Mr. BARKER. That may be what was in the mind of the persons introducing this Bill, but I doubt whether it is the meaning of the Bill. 'Any government' must have a pretty broad meaning it seems to me.

Mr. FIELDING. They could not do anything in Newfoundland, for instance, without getting the authority of the Newfoundland legislature.

Mr. BARKER. If it were made subject to the approval of this government it might be all right. Why not make section 12 and those other sections which relate to governments read : 'subject to the approval of the Governor General in Council' ? Then there would be no objection to it.

Mr. BERGERON. That is said in some other clauses. I may say that this section is framed nearly word for word upon the Marconi Act.

Mr. FIELDING. How would it do to say 'any government in Canada' making the word 'Canada' apply to 'government' and not to 'corporation' ? They might want to make a bargain with the Western Union Telegraph Company for instance which is a foreign corporation.

Mr. BARKER. The difficulty as I see it is that if they had power under this to enter into an agreement with the United States government for example, the United States government might afterwards say that this government could not object because we had authorized it and the agreement must be borne whatever the contract was. It would get over the difficulty I think if it was provided 'subject to the approval of the Governor in Council'; then the government could always protect themselves.

Mr. FIELDING. I was not present in the committee when this matter was discussed, but I think the provisions as to stations were made subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. I am not sure if that applies to the agreements.

Mr. BERGERON. Clause 19 provides that section 195 of the Railway Act shall apply to this company.

Mr. FIELDING. What harm is there in saying 'any government in Canada'? I would make that suggestion to the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) if he is supporting the Bill.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think that even if we put that here, we can bind any foreign government. I understood in the committee that it meant governments in Canada, either this one or the local governments.

Mr. FIELDING. You could not bind a foreign government but you could bind the company in any contract it might make with a foreign government.

Mr. BERGERON. This is the first I heard of any such idea ; it was not thought of in the Railways and Canals Committee at all. This clause I may repeat is framed on the line of the Marconi Act.

Mr. BARKER. I am not objecting to it at all. I am only pointing out it may have a different meaning.

Mr. BERGERON. I have not been taking charge of the Bill, I am only supporting it to-night because the hon. gentleman who is in charge of it is not here, and I know the promoters are anxious it should pass as soon as possible.

Mr. FIELDING. If we say 'any government in Canada' and the words 'corporation, firm or person' follow it will imply that the corporations may be foreign because the limitation only applies to the first words. I think the purpose of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is reasonable, but would not the effect of my suggestion be that by limiting it to governments in Canada, the words 'in Canada' not being applied to corporations it could make bargains with foreign corporations ?

Mr. BARKER. Probably.

Mr. BERGERON. Why change it in this Bill when the Marconi Bill has a similar clause?

Mr. FIELDING. That is not a conclusive answer ; we are always learning.

Mr. BARKER. I suggest we deal with all the clauses except those that have the word 'government' in and allow them to stand for the consideration of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. BERGERON. All right.

On the question shall the Bill be reported:

Mr. BARKER. I would suggest that sections 11 and 12 be held over. They both have the same expression, 'government' and it is quite possible that the Interpretation Act may define the word 'government' for the purpose.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 11 has been adopted but it may be reconsidered if necessary.

Progress reported.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 137) respecting the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway Company.—Mr. Galliher.

Bill (No. 145) respecting a Patent, Number 69772, of the Underwood Typewriter Company.—Mr. Grant.

Bill (No. 146) respecting certain Patents of the Underwood Typewriter Company.—Mr. Grant.

QUESTION.

LIEUTENANT J. M. MILTIMORE.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. Has Lieutenant J. M. Miltimore, of the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons, obtained permission to attend the Cavalry School at Toronto ?

2. If so, was his application sent through the proper channel, or was permission granted without going through the formality of applying through his commanding officer and the district officer commanding ?

3. If he did apply through his commanding officer, was the application forwarded or returned ? If returned, for what reason ?

4. If the application was returned as being incorrect, was a correct application sent in later, or did the officer in question then appeal to the Minister of Agriculture and obtain the required permission ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. Yes.

2. As it was desirable that Lieutenant Militimore should qualify before going to camp in June next, special authority was given to the district officer commanding to send him for a course.

3 and 4. No official application in the matter reached headquarters.

ADJOURNMENT FOR MAY 24TH.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING moved:

That when this House adjourns on Tuesday next, the 23rd instant, it stands adjourned till Thursday, the 25th.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—LONDON BY-ELECTION.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, as I see that the hon. member for London (Mr. Hyman) has been sworn in as Minister of Public Works, I would like to know if the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) has tendered his resignation, as I do not see him in his seat I suppose that according to his promise he has resigned his seat.

Mr. TAYLOR. The challenge was not accepted.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. My hon. friend (Mr. W. F Maclean) made the challenge on the condition that no better candidate could be got in London, but as the gentleman who is to be the Conservative candidate in London is going to have a walk over, it is not necessary for my hon. friend from South York to resign.

Mr. FIELDING. In the absence of the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) it is not fair to suggest that somebody else would be a better candidate than he would be.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Oh, yes, he is one of the best men in Canada.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Immigration—further amount required for contingencies in Canadian, British and foreign agencies and general expenses, including salaries of extra clerks at head office, $300,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the Minister of the Interior please explain what this large sum is required for ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). This vote is asked to complete the immigration services for the year. The sum originally quoted was $672,276. The expenditures for several years have overrun the estimates. It is found impossible in practice to estimate closely the immigration expenditures from the fact that as the flow of immigration increases the expenses increase proportionately ; that is to say the increase in expenses in one year is dependent upon the success of the operations of the preceding year. If the estimate for the coming year is based only on the estimate made for the present year the immigration efforts of the past year have been successful in securing an increased immigration, naturally the estimates for the current year fall short. That has occurred in this case to a serious degree. Besides, provision was not made in last year's estimates for the shortage of the previous year and this has to be provided for as well as the increased expenditure, because of the increased immigration.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) will turn up 'Hansard' he will find that last year when Mr. Sifton was putting through his estimates he described a state of affairs quite different from that described by the present minister.

Mr. BERGERON. What would be the total cost for immigration last year ?

Mr. OLIVER. $971,276.

Mr. BERGERON. Does that include salaries and everything ?

Mr. OLIVER. Everything.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I understand the minister to say that this is to provide for the increased immigration this year ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. This is a very large increase and there was also a large increase last year over the previous year. How many immigrants came in for the last ten months ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot for the moment give the actual figures, but the estimate of the total immigration for the current fiscal year is : British immigrants, 67,548; French and Belgian, 2,572 ; other continental countries, 33,486 ; United States, 44,655 ; total, 148,261, as against 130,000 last year.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I went to the trouble to send down to Mr. Scott the other day for some information when I saw that this vote of $300,000 extra was asked for. I have the statement of Mr. Scott in my hand and it shows that the total immigration during the the ten months. July 1, 1904, to April 30, 1905, was : ocean ports, 67,808 ; United States, 31,969 ; total, 99,777. If we got the same average number of immigrants for the next two months there would be only 120,000 compared with 130,000 last year. The previous year we spent $744,788, which was a very large expenditure ; this year the main estimates contained an appropriation of $672,276 and now $300,000 is asked making $972,276, while according to this report the immigration will be less than last year. To have it as large as last year it would be necessary to get at least 30,000 immigrants in the next two months. It does seem to me that this increased expenditure is entirely unjustifiable, and unless the minister can give some better reason than he has given the item should not pass. Of course, if the money has been spent we may have to pay it, but there should be some satisfactory reason given why we should spend nearly $1,000,000 a year on immigration when our immigration system is now so well established. Long before this government came to power we had our immigration agents in the United States and the policy was initiated. It is well known all over this continent and pretty well known in Europe, that we have the best wheat producing field in the world, and that we are giving every immigrant 160 acres free of any charge except a fee of $10 for the patent. It does seem to me that this ought be sufficient inducement, and that in the future we ought not to increase our expenditure every year. When you get a business well established and in good running order that ought be sufficient without increasing your outlay. I quite understand the difficulty the minister is in, seeing he is not long in office, and that while out of office he was not much in sympathy with the manner in which the business was carried on. He is not responsible for the expenditure up to the present time, but some minister who has been in charge of the departments since Mr. Sifton retired ought to be able to give the committee a reason why this additional sum should be voted. I may say that I also asked Mr. Scott to give a statement of the expenditure up to the present time, but he does not seem to have been able to do so. He says :

> Expenditure for immigration by Mr. Preston, July 1st, 1904, to February 28th, 1905 ; by Mr. Smith from March 31st, 1905 ; at Ottawa to May 16th, 1905 ; total, $621,206.38.

This does not tell how much has been spent altogether and I can see no good reason why there should be an unsettled account in the old country from February 28 to the present time. The minister ought be able to give us the expenditure in the old country, in the United States and in Canada up to date.

Mr. OLIVER. As I have said the increase is partly accounted for by increased expenditure occasioned by the increased flow of immigrants, and partly by reason of part of the expenditure of last year being carried over to this year.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Tell us how much has been carried over.

Mr. OLIVER. I am making the general statement. I can give a particularized statement of the expenditure.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I think it would be well to let this item stand until the hon. minister can get the full information. I would also like to know whether the department have largely increased their staff ? if they have, what was their reason for doing so, where it is increased, and what the duties of the additional officers are ?

Mr. OLIVER. Three new agencies have been opened in the United States—at Syracuse, New York ; at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and Boston. There has also been an increase of effort in Great Britain. There has been no increase on the continent. I am able to give particulars of the disposition that has been made of the vote in the main estimates, and also of the disposition proposed to be made of the amount asked for to-night, if the House would care to have them.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. We would like to have them.

Mr. OLIVER. The expenditures that have been made out of the sums voted last session for the year ending the 30th of June, 1905, are as follows :—Contingencies in Canada generally, including salaries and expenses of Messrs. Hillyard, Heboe, Johnston, Charlebois, White, Ross and Ward, and expenses of Messrs. Smart, Scott, Speers, &c., $8,850.69 ; contingencies and general expenses of United States agencies, including salaries of temporary agencies, $40,-384.27; King's Printer's accounts, $1,531.72; telegrams, freight and express charges, $2,-980.58 ; salaries of extra clerks, head office, $4,847.55; medical services and expenses, including salaries and expenses of doctors, not including detention hospital, $5,217.15 ; grants to detention hospitals at Halifax, Quebec and St. John, services, supplies, &c., $7,643.16 ; grants to hospitals, $2,301.12 ; commissions on settlers from the United States, $3,399.25 ; seaport expenses, Halifax, St. John, Quebec and Montreal, $5,-135.59 ; uniforms, seaport agencies, head office, $1,639.14 ; postage, $4,235.79 ; Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, $8,000 ; Quebec and Lake St. John Repatriation and Colonization Society, $3,000 ; La Société de Repatriation et Colonization de Québec, $1,-200 ; Immigration Association of Western Canada, $2,500 ; Ottawa Valley Immigration Aid Society, $750 ; motor van, $1,250 ; miscellaneous expenses, $4,158.75.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Who uses the automobile ?

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. OLIVER. That is for the purpose of bringing the exhibits of Canadian farm products into the agricultural parts of the old country, which it is difficult to reach by railway. It is an automobile of high horse-power, upon which is constructed a van containing specimens of the agricultural products of the west, and it is managed by two men, who run it from village to village and give exhibitions. Commissioner Smith's expenses, which are for the purpose of placing immigrants, as distinguished from the expenditure for inducing immigrants to come, amount to $86,873.54 ; contingencies and general expenses of agencies in Great Britain and Ireland and on the continent, $36,605.48 ; British bonuses, as estimated by Mr. Preston, $201.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What is meant by these ?

Mr. OLIVER. They are bonuses paid to the steamship agencies to induce them to direct immigration to Canada. The Women's National Immigration Society, $500 ; Girl's Home of Welcome, $500 ; tents for Barr colonists, balance of account, $18,-900.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Can the minister tell us what the tents cost altogether ?

Mr. OLIVER. About $32,000 altogether.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where were these tents obtained ?

Mr. OLIVER. From the Militia Department.

Mr. BARR. Were they obtained by tender ?

Mr. OLIVER. They were taken over from the Militia Department.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. These were not new tents, and surely you do not pay full price for old tents almost useless.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The Barr colonists claim that the tents were absolutely useless. What prices were paid ?

Mr. OLIVER. The price was about $25 each for Bell tents, about 12 feet in diameter. They had been in use by the Militia Department. The colony came out very early in the season, and it was absolutely necessary they should be provided with shelter in some way. It was impossible to procure such a large number of tents from any other source. It was a matter of urgency, the tents were procured and had to be paid for.

Mr. BARR. Were they just tents that were abandoned by the Militia Department ?

Mr. OLIVER. They were tents in use by that department.

Mr. BARR. Had the Militia Department to purchase new tents ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly. They were used by the Immigration Department, and those still useful are available for us. Those not in use are stored in Winnipeg.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the hon. gentleman really know how many of them are stored or what became of these tents ? Let us have the whole story ? Let the minister himself find out what the tents cost and at what prices, what other firms would tender for the making of them, how many were used by the Barr colonists, and where they are now.

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman requests that information, I must provide it. But I do not think it has any material bearing on the case. It was urgent that these people should be provided with shelter, and whether the price was high or low was a secondary consideration. The immigrants could not be left to suffer.

Mr. TAYLOR. The government had in their possession all these tents and all they had to do was to borrow them from the Militia Department and they could be returned when no longer required. There was no necessity why the immigrants should suffer so long as the government had a large quantity stored up and there was no need to replace them at a price far above what they could be purchased for at public tender.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How many immigrants came out in that Barr colony ?

Mr. OLIVER As the Barr colony came out two years ago, I presume the information has already been before the House, but I can get it again if necessary.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How many immigrants are now being detained at Montreal ? I understand that a large number are detained there and are to be deported. Has the minister any information about that ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not heard about it but can get information.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I suppose this money is about expended, and I would be willing to let this go through on the understanding that we will have a perfect right to discuss these things and have the officials of the Immigration Department appear before the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization. Comparatively little has been done before that committee this year for several reasons, and we ought to have an investigation before the main estimates are passed for the coming year. I know something of the history of the hon. minister in the past and his views with reference to immigration and I trust we are entering upon a different era in that respect. I think that the amount we are spending this year, something like a million dollars, is altogether out of proportion to the work being done, and some two years ago the hon. minister was of the same opinion. Now that he occupies a position where he can control to a large extent this department, I trust he will not call on us to spend nearly a million dollars for immigration next year. Such an expenditure is altogether unnecessary. Our country is becoming tolerably well known, and while I would not be willing to abandon the field, I think our expenditure should be kept within reasonable bounds, more especially as our neighbours are not spending a dollar on immigration except for the purpose of keeping undesirable immigrants out of their country. I am afraid, from information I have, that if we continue our course, we shall have in the near future to take similar precautions. We do not only require immigrants to be carefully examined on this side, but they ought to be examined before being allowed to go on board ship. From what I have read in the American press, the American vessels are frequently loaded with the best immigrants—those who would pass an examination—and the undesirable ones are put on board ship for Canada. That accounts for the few the Americans have to reject at their ports and for the large number they reject when they come to Canada. With this understanding I should be quite willing to let the item go through because I know we need the money ; but before the main estimates go through for the coming year, we ought to have a full investigation before the committee, and the minister should give us a full account of all he intends to do with the money as well as some explanation of what has passed.

Mr. OLIVER. I shall be glad to do so. My desire is to give the House the fullest possible information. And I may say that the information in my hands is pretty full, but, of course, these questions can be discussed to better advantage before the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization than in the House. So, I can promise the hon. member (Mr. Uriah Wilson) that, whatever may be the result in the Committee of the Whole he certainly shall have the fullest opportunity before the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization to discuss all matters of policy and administration in regard to immigration.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It is matters of detail that we want in that committee, and the permanent officers of the department ought to be in better position to give these details than the minister. And we want these men before the committee.

Mr. OLIVER. I will guarantee that they will furnish all the details. I have many details here which I shall be glad to give.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the minister a comparative statement showing the number of immigrants coming in month by month this year and last year ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have the record of these coming year by year.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the minister the number coming in since the opening of navigation ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I have not that information here. The hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) suggested that the number arriving in the first ten months of this year was not as large in proportion as the number arriving last year. The point I wished to make was that it is in the remaining months of the year that we expect the large immigration.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What does the minister estimate the immigration to be from the 30th of April to the 30th of June ?

Mr. OLIVER. I think that the figures that the hon. member (Mr. Uriah Wilson) has and those that I have will enable us to arrive at it What do the figures he has show ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. They show the number arriving up to 30th April—ocean ports 66,880 ; United States, 31,969 ; total, 99,849.

Mr. OLIVER. My estimate of the whole was 148,261.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What I wanted was the estimate for the two months from 30th April to 30th June.

Mr. OLIVER. It is 49,000.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That is an enormous estimate, is it not ?

Mr. OLIVER. These are the months of large immigration. The immigration movement in winter, both from Europe and the United States, is small. I am not altogether familiar with the working of the department, but I am satisfied that the great bulk of our immigration is in the months of spring and early summer.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would like the minister to instruct his officers to give the number of immigrants for the last three weeks, that is, from April 30th to May 21st. Then, there will only be five or six weeks of the year to come and we should be able to form a better idea of the total immigration and judge what the results of this increased expenditure has been.

Mr. BARR. It seems to me we cannot impress upon the new minister too strongly the importance of being careful about the immigrants admitted to this country, for it is well known that the new comers may prove a curse rather than a blessing. We have to face the fact that the charitable institutions from one end of the Dominion to the other complain that a number of the immigrants brought into Canada have become a burden upon them. I can scarcely understand how it is that we have to deport such a large number if there is a careful medical examination made before the immigrants leave the ports whence they come. Last year we had an immigration of 134,000 adults and 17,000 children under 12 years of age. We paid for medical servince over $54,000. Yet, we find that a large number of these immigrants are suffering from diseases which it makes it necessary to deport them. So far as the instructions given by the minister are concerned, they seem to be very good, but those instructions can hardly be carried out or the results would be better. It must be that many of the agents, anxious to swell the number work in many who are not desirable immigrants for this country.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that there has been for several weeks, a considerable number of immigrants at Prescott, Ontario, who are seeking their way into the United States. But they are objected to by the United States officers. I would not expect the minister to be able to answer questions on that point at once, but I will call his attention to it so that at a future sitting he may be able to make a statement with regard to these immigrants.

Mr. OLIVER. I will make a note of the matter and will inquire into it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand the minister stated that a considerable amount of money was taken out of the estimate for the year 1904-5 to pay accounts carried over from the year 1903-4. I have been wondering if the minister was in error on that point, for it seems to me an extraordinary proceeding. Will the hon. minister inform me whether that is what he intended to say or not ? Was a portion of the estimate of the current year used to pay balances carried over from the previous year, and, if so, how much ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able at the moment to give the amount—in fact it is rather difficult to give. It is, I believe, a fact that there were accounts which, had they been properly put in and certified, and had the money been available, would have been paid out of the previous year's appropriation, but which were not paid until the current year. I do not know that that is a very extraordinary condition of affairs. I am afraid that this government or possibly every government does not square up its accounts at the end of each year. In fact I have very good reason to believe that it is not the custom of governments to be so very prompt in the payment of their accounts as to do that, and therefore, I say that there have been payments made out of the sums voted for expenditures this year to pay accounts that properly might very well have been paid the year before.

Mr. HENDERSON. I regret very much to hear the minister say that it is becoming the practice of the government to use money voted for a special purpose and apply it to another purpose. I am beginning to wonder whether parliament has any control over the expenditure of this country or not. It seems to me that we go through a mere form in voting estimates. We vote money for a specific purpose and then the members of the government—because the minister tells us that this is getting to be the practice of the government—turn around and use the money we vote for a specific purpose, for another purpose for which parliament never intended it. I do not know how to characterize that kind of procedure ; it is certainly highly improper ; shall I say it is dishonest ? What right has any minister to take the money which this parliament votes for any specific purpose and apply it to another purpose ? What control have we over the expenditure of this country if this kind of practice is to be continued ? I warn the Minister of the Interior that such a thing had better not occur during his regime if I am in this House because I shall enter a very strong protest and I believe the country will endorse me in every statement I make with regard to that. If there is one thing more than another the country will demand it is that those who are at the head of the departments, shall use the money voted by parliament for the purposes for which it is voted and that they shall not apply it to any other purpose. Is it any wonder that our expenditure is going up by leaps and bounds ? We have no control over it. We voted a large sum for immigration in 1903-4, sufficient to meet all the purposes ; we voted first a large sum in the main estimates, and then the minister came down with a supplementary estimate for sufficient to meet everything up to the end of the year. That money was cheerfully voted by parliament. Where was the necessity for taking money out of the vote for next year ? What became of the balance ? What was the authority ? What became of the money ? Was it used for some private purpose ? Was it used for some purpose unknown to this parliament ? Certainly it was used improperly if it was not available. The minister confesses it was not available. He says it was necessary to take money from the vote of 1904-5 in order to meet the obligations of 1903-4. If that is the case, the minister has done something else with the money, applied it to some purpose for which parliament never intended it and this procedure certainly cannot go on. What becomes of all the safeguards that we have on the treasury of this country ? We read away back in 1875 that the Prime Minister of that day lay on the treasury with a gun ; he had to sleep on it. Would to God we had a man to-day that would lie on the treasury box and protect it.

Mr. FIELDING. Is it not enough that they are sleeping on the treasury benches ?

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. You could not find it the other night.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. member says that we do not know where to find it. I am rather afraid there is a good deal of the vote which the Minister of the Interior obtained in 1903 which is some place where neither the member for Cape Breton nor myself can locate it.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I know.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. member says he knows. He may have a share in it ; I am not going to doubt his word, certainly he cannot give an explanation of it. The Minister of the Interior is unable to give an explanation because he told us plainly that a portion of the vote of 1904-5 had to be used to meet the expenditure of 1903-4 although that expenditure in 1903-4 was fully provided for in the main and supplementary estimates. Therefore there should have been no demand made on the vote of 1904-5. I would like the Minister of the Interior to revise his statement and then when this comes before the committee again I hope that such an extraordinary condition of affairs as that which he has brought to the attention of the committtee to-night will not prevail. It is an expenditure of which I did not expect to hear, and if the Minister of the Interior never did anything more than what he has done to-night he will deserve a good deal from the people of this country for having exposed the manner in which the moneys of this country have been misappropriated in the past. I hope and trust the minister will take warning and that no such administration of the finances of this country will occur during his regime. Let me ask the minister another question. He is asking $300,000 of a supplementary estimate to meet the balance of the expenditure of the current year. I trust that is sufficient to pay everything up to the first of July. Is that the minister's intention ? That is the intention ? Now then, there should be nothing carried over, there shall be no balance carried over from 1904-5 to 1905-6 because parliament when it votes the $300,000 will have voted enough to meet every expenditure in connection with immigration up to the end of the year 1904-5. How much of this $300,000 has been spent already ?

Mr. OLIVER. I think it is impossible to answer off-hand just now how much of this $300,000 has been spent. I was proceeding to give the House information as to how the main estimates of last year had been disposed of, and I can give the House the estimate of how it is proposed to dispose of the $300,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Perhaps I can relieve the minister. I am quite aware that in the short time he has been in the department he has not had an opportunity of familiarizing himself with the affairs of the department. We are prepared to make all allowances for that. May I ask if one half of this $300,000 has been spent? Can he give an approximate estimate of the amount that has already been spent?

Mr. OLIVER. The position is that the money has not been spent but of course expenditure has been incurred, that is a portion of the expenditure has been incurred. It would require, as my hon. friend must be very well aware, a very close accounting, to tell just how much expenditure has been incurred up to the present time, and certainly I do not know that it is necessary for the purpose of the House and I am not prepared to give the information at the moment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to say that it is absolutely necessary we should know because if a dollar of this $300,000 has been spent it has been spent without the authority of parliament and no minister of the Crown had the right to spend one dollar in that way. If I believed to-night that the government had spent a considerable portion of that $300,000 without the consent of parliament I would stay here to a very late hour to insist that the vote be reduced by the amount that has already been expended. I have warned the Minister of the Interior in bygone years—I think the hon. gentleman will find it on record last year—when we were asked to recoup the government $150,000 for money that had been spent by the minister without the consent of parliament.

I made the statement then that if the same thing occurred again, I would move that the item be struck out of the estimates. That is the duty of the opposition to-night. If we could ascertain how much of this $300,000 has been expended, how much liability has been incurred on account of it, it is our duty as a loyal opposition to stay here and to insist that the item be reduced by that amount. We must insist that the government spend no money until they have received the approbation of parliament for so doing. It is all very well for a minister to sit in his place and because he is a minister of the Crown say that he is going to use the people's money like ducks and drakes spending it here and there for any purpose that he sees fit. He has not the right to spend one dollar of it until he has come down to parliament and obtained parliament's consent. It is parliament who shall say how much we shall spend on immigration; not the minister. If parliament says we shall only expend $700,000 a year on immigration, the minister has no right to expend $701,000 nor any amount of money over the $700,000. He has no right to incur any liability beyond te amount appropriated by parliament. He must make his calculation according to the amount of money that has been voted unless he comes down and brings in a supplementary estimate. I apprehend that the hon. gentleman is asking for a supplementary vote not only to cover what is required for completing the expenses to be incurred from the present time until the first of July, but I fear very much that he is asking for that very large appropriation to cover something that has been already expended, expended without the approval of parliament, expended illegally, illegitimately, and may I say, if I can use a stronger word, expended fraudulently, because it is nothing less than that. Ministers have not the right to spend money without the consent of parliament. I hope that when he comes before the committee again the hon. minister will be able to give a complete statement of this matter and I trust that there will only be a very small portion of this $300,000 already expended. If it is only a small amount we may not complain so much about it, although we have the right to complan if there is $1,000. What I desire to impress upon the hon. minister at the commencement of his career is that he must not follow the course of his predecessors. We know that it was the practice of the previous minister, year after year, to spend the peoples money without regard to the wishes of parliament. We never can control expenditure if ministers of the Crown are going to expend money before we vote it and without the concurrence or approval of the peoples representatives and I am quite sure that the hon. Minister of the Interior at the inception of his career will desire to do his work as faithfully and as honestly as possible and that he desires to stand in good faith with the House. In order to do that I must insist that he will not presume to expend $1,000 on account of immigration or of any other branch of his department until the concurrence of parliament has been received.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think the hon. Minister of the Interior is deserving of very great credit for the exposure he has made of the practices of the government in the past. I do not know whether the slap he took at the old ministers was inended or not, but I think it has given to the committee a good insight into the conduct of these hon. gentlemen. I believe it is now up to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) the leader of the House at the present time, to give some explanation of the conduct of the government in allowing these over expenditures to go on in the various departments of the government.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to give all the information that can be given to hon. gentlemen opposite and I certainly wish to have their good-will in the performance of such duties as have been laid upon me. I think that perhaps the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) has been scarcely fair in the construction he has placed upon what I have said. I would not say at all that he was inaccurate, but, as a matter of fact, any danger that he might apprehend of fraud or trespassing upon the public right in the matter of taking money that has no been voted is, I take it for granted, very efficiently guarded against by that watchdog of the treasury, the Auditor General. There is no danger of money being taken except under an appropriation as long as that gentleman remains in office and I presume as long as any successor, if he is charged with the same duty and placed in the same control, remains in office.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Suppose the liability is incurred before it comes before the Auditor General and then suppose parliament should refuse to ratify any unwarranted action of the minister, where would the Auditor General be and where would the minister be ?

Mr. OLIVER. The amounts which were incurred in the previous year and which the government honestly owed were placed in the estimates for the current year. They were not paid without being placed in the estimates. They have been placed in the estimates for the current year and are paid in due and legal course after parliament has voted the money. I mentioned the question of the tents supplied to the Barr colony as one of these cases. This was an account incurred two years ago and it is only being paid this year, but it is being paid, not outside of the authority of parliament, but with the authority of parliament and in due and legal form. Such is the case in regard to all these items.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why was the $18,000, which is only being paid this year for these tents, not paid last year ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am unable to answer that question at the present time, but if the hon. gentleman insists I will, of course, provide an answer. The point I make is that we are this year paying for an expenditure incurred two years ago and that it is being paid for not outside the authority of parliament, not by the authority of the minister, but by the authority of parliament.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has not the debt been incurred without the authority of parliament?

Mr. OLIVER. It has.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Very well, that is the point we are complaining of.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to say on that point further that I am not altogether in agreement with the position of the hon. member for Halton. That hon. gentleman has laid it down as a cardinal principle that not a dollar shall be taken even for immigration purposes without the authority of parliament.

Mr. TAYLOR. Or by Governor General's warrants.

Mr. OLIVER. Or by Governor General's warrants. The facts in regard to immigration are as I stated in the remarks I made in presenting the vote. When we undertake the work of inducing people to come to this country and to settle if our efforts are successful beyond the means we have provided we must either render that expenditure we have already made useless, or not provide at a critical time for immigration that has come, or we must provide for that immigration when it does come. There is no person who wishes well to the cause of immigration in this country who would say that in the case of these Barr colonists they should have been left to shiver and die on the prairie in the spring snow storms for the lack of tents until parliament had been asked to vote the money for these tents.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Was not parliament in session ?

Mr. OLIVER. Our experience is that it sometimes takes a good while to get a vote from parliament, and a woman or child will freeze to death in one night. I do not think we could afford to take chances in such a case. So long as I occupy the position I do, I will have no hesitation in asking the House to condone the offience, if it is an offence, of providing for the urgent needs of immigrants if they should come here in numbers beyond the provision we have made for them. This is more than a question of dollars and cents ; it is a matter of life and death ; it will not wait. We cannot afford to wait, and I have no doubt that both the House and the country will sustain the minister who takes immediate action under such circumstances.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This House was in session when the Barr colonists came here and when Mr. Barr was in Ottawa and proceeded to his colony. It was known for at least two months before Mr. Barr came that he was coming. Where was the foresight of this government that it did not get a vote of money to provide for these people, if provision was necessary ? There was no question of life or death about it. I want the minister to find out from his department how many tents were used, how many of these people were housed in tents, and how many have lived in these tents ? If he does not find out, we will insist on his doing so.

Mr. OLIVER. I will have the information supplied, in so far as it can be secured. That is a question of detail, but I am speaking of the general principle, that if we are to conduct an efficient immigration policy we must deal with the cases as they arise. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) used very strong language with regard to over-expenditure, but his language is quite as applicable to the former Conservative government as to this government. As far back as 1892-3 the sum appropriated by parliament was not sufficient to meet the expenditure for several fiscal years. In that year and the two succeeding fiscal years the sum of $150,000 was voted. In 1892-3 the appropriation of $150,000 was, however, not sufficient to pay all the liabilities incurred in that year, and the sum of $31,401.09 was carried forward and paid out of the next year's vote. During the fiscal year 1893-4 the sum of $149,998.80 was expended, practically wiping out the appropriation of $150,000, but there was not sufficient to pay all the liabilities contracted in that year, and it was necessary to carry over $81,874.26 to the following fiscal year; that sum was paid out of the vote of 1894-5. During 1894-5 the whole of the appropriation of $150,000 was expended, with the exception of a few dollars, such expenditure including the $81,874.26 which was contracted in the previous year and had to be paid out of the vote for 1894-5. About this time the immigration business had practically ceased, and for the year 1895-6 only $84,915 was voted for general immigration expenses.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister has been endeavouring to get sympathy for the government by speaking of the necessities of the women and children of the Barr colony, but my recollection is that these tents were required in the spring of the year; parliament was in session; there were supplementary estimates and further supplementary estimates, and the government had every opportunity to get a vote from parliament. The appeal the minister has made does not justify the government in what they did, because there was abundant opportunity to have the expenditure approved by parliament. I am aware that when the Conservatives were in power it was almost impossible to extract from the House of Commons even a small vote like $150,000 for immigration purposes, and it is no wonder that immigration in these days was not as large as we would have wished it to be. I well remember that on one occasion when the Conservative government asked for an immigration vote of $120,000, one of the Liberal opposition moved that it be reduced by $50,000. The opposition of that day grudgingly voted even that mere pittance for immigration. It is quite possible that under such circumstances the minister would expend a little more than he was warranted in doing. But the point I wish to emphasize is this: No matter what the practice has been in the past, parliament must control the expenditure of this country, and I do not think the language I have used to-night is one whit too strong. I emphasize my statement, and I hold it out as a warning to the Minister of the Interior that nothing of that kind will be permitted in the future without protest. Who has the right to say to what extent the immigration policy of this country will be pursued? Is it the minister of his own will? What kind of a king is he? No minister has the right to set up his own individual opinion against the opinion of 214 men in the House of Commons. Surely the minister will concede that he was in error when he made his statement, and that in future he must in every case limit himself to the amount voted by parliament.

I trust that the minister will remember, when he comes to deal with immigration during the coming year, exactly how much money parliament has authorized him to expend for that purpose, and will carry on the service in accordance with that amount; and that if he thinks he could bring in another 50,000 immigrants by means of the expenditure of $300,000 more, he will not expend that without the consent of parliament. No minister would be justified in pursuing any such policy. Parliament has a right to control the government's immigration policy, and does control it by the amount of money it votes for that purpose. I want the minister for the coming year simply to cut his garment in accordance with the amount of cloth this parliament provides him with—not to expend $1,000 more on immigration than parliament says ought to be spent—until such time, at any rate, as he comes down to parliament again and asks for a supplementary vote, not after he has spent the money, but before he has spent it. There is no doubt that this is the true constitutional spirit of spending public money. If ministers are going to spend money right and left, according to their own will, what is the use of parliament? We might as well adopt the estimates as a whole and say nothing about them; we might as well vote them in a lump sum, and go home, if that is all the control parliament is going to have over the expenditure. I trust that the minister will start out in the coming year with a correct idea of what his duty and privileges are in this respect, and will not go back two years or five years to copy what some previous Minister of the Interior has done, and expect that the action of any previous minister will be accepted as a justification for him. I think we would not discharge our duty on this side of the House were we to permit a procedure of that kind to go on year after year without raising our voices against it. But I apprehend that after the expiration of another year we shall not be called on to speak so forcibly on this matter, because I believe the minister will realize what his duty is, and will give effect to that.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would like the minister to bring down a statement of the over-expenditure for 1903-4 and the items for which the expenditure was incurred. The statement given to me of Mr. Preston's expenditure only extended to the 28th of February, 1905.

I would like to know how he gets his money—what authority he has for drawing it, and how he handles the financial part of his business in England ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give that just now. I will bring it down.

Mr. AMES. There is one phase of this question upon which I desire some information from the hon. Minister of the Interior. I would like to know whether at the present time any efforts are being made, either by advertisement, literature or otherwise, to induce immigrants to come from the southern portions of Europe to this country ? We all feel that we cannot have too many immigrants of a desirable class, and yet that it is very easy for us to have too many of an undesirable class. I quote from the 'Daily Telegraph' of Quebec of Friday the following :

> The Donaldson liner steamship 'Athenian' arrived in port yesterday afternoon from Glasgow. She had on board fifty foreigners who will be deported on instructions from the government officials. On arrival at Quebec the vessel was inspected, and it was found that a large number of the steerage passengers were afflicted with trachoma. A number of those slightly attacked were taken to the house of detention at Quebec for treatment, while the remainder came on to Montreal. Dr. Laberge, city health officer, and a number of his men met the boat on its arrival, and after his inspection he refused to allow any of the affected ones to come ashore.

This is only one instance. We are constantly receiving a class of immigrants who are affected with loathsome diseases, and we wish to know whether any of the money of the Dominion is being expended to attract this undesirable class ?

Mr. OLIVER. The department is not expending any money and keeps no agencies in any part of the continent of Europe except in France and Belgium. There are two or three agents in France and one in Belgium. They have, however, an arrangement with a steamship organization which operates, not from a southern port, but from Hamburg.

Mr. AMES. Is there any restriction as to the class of immigrants that steamship companies shall induce to come to this country ? Is the department supplying steamship companies with literature, advertisements or other matter, in order to direct immigrants, to this country, who are not desirable ? Is there any stipulation in the arrangement with the steamship company which binds the company to make at least an effort to recruit these immigrants from sections of Europe which can furnish us wih desirable people or is that left entirely in the hands of the company ?

Mr. OLIVER. The arrangement with the steamship organization is that only agriculturists are to be brought out. There is no intention to encourage the coming of people from the continent of Europe who are not agriculturists as well as desirable from a physical point of view. The fact that stringent medical examinations are made and that so many are deported, who are found to be suffering from disease, is evidence of the intention of the department. I presume that the reason there have been so many cases of diseased immigrants during recent months is that probably the same attention was not paid in past years, but when it is thoroughly known that this strict supervision is exercised we will have fewer instances of diseased people coming to the country.

Mr. TAYLOR. The same complaint has been made the last two or three years ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are these shipped back and dumped in Scotland ?

Mr. OLIVER. If they sail from Scotland they are sent back there. If they come from Hamburg, they are sent back to that port.

Mr. AMES. While admitting the desirability of securing agricultural immigrants, I do not think the fact that a man is an agriculturist is necessarily proof that he is desirable. It seems to me that the experience of the department should have shown it that there are some sections from which it is not desirable to bring immigrants, and the Hamburg company should be prevented from exploiting those portions of the continent. When people are found to be suffering from a loathsome disease, which is proof that they are of filthy habits, the department should notify the steamship company that we do not wish any efforts made to recruit immigrants from certain parts of Europe. Experience shows plainly where these people come from, and the steamship companies should be warned not to recruit people from those sections.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. minister says that the immigrants from the continent are to be taken from the farms, does that apply to the British Islands also ? Because a number of our best farmers in the Northwest to-day were not brought up in the rural districts. I know of one who came out from London and who never saw the green country until he left England. He was a pastry cook at home and he is now one of the best farmers in Manitoba. One of the best farmers in the Prince Albert district used to be a watch-maker in Paris. Another was a clerk in a shop in Paris. The trouble with these continental farmers is that they have to unlearn a lot and you have to instill into them the Northwest system of farming. What you want is men of energy, with a clean heart and person and free from disease, and I care not whether men of that kind come from the city or the country, they will make a success.

Mr. HERRON. We are getting a large portion of our immigration from some countries of Europe which do not furnish us with desirable settlers. Can it be possible that the government have no supervision over immigrants before they leave their native country? There is a general impression where I live that we have not been getting the right class of immigrants into the Northwest. A large percentage of the immigration is not of a desirable class, and our people would rather do without settlers than have settlements of that kind. Such people cost the country a lot of money not only to bring them here, but to assist them from time to time after they get here.

Mr. TAYLOR. Now that we have got all the information the minister has been able to give us, we might allow the item to pass on the understanding that on the main estimates the information asked for to-night will be brought down and full explanation given.

Mr. OLIVER. I have had all the questions noted down and will be able to give the House the information asked for when the main estimates are up.

Some resolutions reported.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. Unless there be some arrangement to proceed with the Autonomy Bill we shall take up the estimates; we will continue at the point where we leave off to-night, and the Minister of the Interior will have his estimates up for consideration.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. You have not withdrawn the Autonomy Bill, then?

Mr. FIELDING. No. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) withdrawn his candidate for London?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No; he will win.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.30 a.m.—Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May 23, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

HALF-BREED SCRIP.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to place before the House an answer to an inquiry made yesterday by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in regard to a matter which appeared in the Winnipeg 'Tribune.' I will read the memorandum as handed to me by Mr. Côté, an officer of the department:

In compliance with your verbal request, I have the honour to submit for your information the following report respecting the recent issue of scrip to half-breeds, authorized by Order in Council of the 13th August, 1904, as amended by Order in Council of the 17th December last, copies of which are attached hereto.

Under the Order in Council of the 2nd March, 1900, authorizing an issue of scrip to half-breeds who were born in the Northwest Territories between the 15th July, 1870, and the end of the year 1885, the claims of such half-breeds were not prejudiced on account of their residence outside of the Northwest Territories, provided their parents had been permanent residents of the Northwest Territories at the time of their birth, but under clause 6 of the regulations subsequently established and approved by Order in Council of the 6th June, 1901 (copy herewith), half-breeds who had left Canada and taken up their residence on Indian reservations in the United States and participated in the benefits of Indian life thereon, as well as all half-breed children admitted to the United States Indian schools, were excluded from participating in the grant of scrip.

On the 13th August, 1904, an Order in Council was passed, which was published for the fourth consecutive week in the 'Canada Gazette' of the 5th November, 1904 (copy herewith), in which it was stated that it was quite clear, in the opinion of the minister, that such removal did not constitute any valid reason for the refusal to recognize property rights fully matured and vested before such removal took place, and that this principle had been clearly and very properly laid down in former cases, where the right to scrip had been in question. Such Order in Council provided that the claims preferred before Mr. McKenna and excluded under the said clause 6, might be investigated by any officer or officers of the Department of the Interior, to be named by the Minister of the Interior, and that such officer or officers should have, in reference to such claims, all the authority formerly exercised by Mr. McKenna under the various Orders in Council relating to his duties or commission for the investigation of claims to half-breed scrip.

The undersigned, who was chairman of the half-breed commission for the Saskatchewan district in 1900, and a joint commissioner in 1887 with Mr. Roger Goulet, to investigate Northwest half-breed claims, was nominated by the Minister of the Interior on the 3rd October, 1904, to investigate the claims in question, and the following number of claims, in support of which the usual evidence had previously been submitted before Mr. McKenna, were accordingly reconsidered and disposed of as follows:

Claims allowed..	122
Disallowance confirmed..	108
Reserved for further evidence.. ..	26
	256

The following number of claims of persons whose names appeared on Mr. McKenna's list as having been rejected by him upon preliminary investigation on account of the claimants' residence in the United States, and in support of which evidence was subsequently filed in the department, have also been investigated :

Allowed..	14
Disallowed..	62
Reserved for further evidence.. ..	43
	119

It will, therefore, be observed that the total number of claims investigated under the Order in Council of the 13th August, 1904, is 365, of which 126 were allowed, 170 disallowed and 69 reserved for further evidence.

Re Delivery of Scrip.

It has always been an invariable rule of the department to refuse to recognize assignments or powers of attorney as authority for the delivery of half-breed land scrip, and the regulations already referred to of the 6th June, 1901, specifically provided 'that in cases in which a half-breed asks for land scrip, the commissioner has no authority to accept or act upon any assignment or power of attorney.'

It has also been the practice where the scrip certificate was not delivered to the claimant personally by the commissioner, to send his scrip by registered mail to his own address in care of any person designated therein, upon a written request being filed in the department over the claimant's own signature, attested by two witnesses, who must certify as to the identification of the claim, and one of the witnesses must also make an affidavit as to the execution of such order. The scrip, which was issued in satisfaction of the claims referred to, was forwarded on orders which were prepared in the manner above indicated.

Re Location of the Scrip Issued under the Order in Council of 13th August, 1904.

By departmental letter of the 10th March last, addressed to all agents of Dominion lands, the agents were advised that it had been decided to allow scrip, granted the half-breed residents of the United States under the said Order in Council of the 13th August, 1904, to be located in the name of the grantee thereof by the holder of such scrip without requiring the grantee to appear personally at the land agency to make his entry. It was also pointed out that the applicant for location should make the application over his own signature on behalf of the person named on the scrip note, and in all respects comply with the rules and regulations governing the location of half-breed land scrip, and that, as heretofore, assignments of these locations executetd by the half-breeds prior to the date on which the land was entered for in the manner above indicated, would not be recognized by the department.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the House to a few remarks I made last night when the House was in committee on a divorce Bill. When I spoke I had in mind another case which happened a long time ago, and my remarks had no application to the Bill which was under discussion. I say this as a matter of justice to the parties concerned in the present case. If I voted as I did, it was on account of another case.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Dominion Lands—chargeable to capital—further amount appropriation for surveys, examination of surveys, returns printing of plans, &c, $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. How much was the original estimate ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). It was $750,000 for the year 1904-5.

Mr. FOSTER. For what is this additional estimate required ?

Mr. OLIVER. The reason for the additional sum being asked, is that the estimate provided for the subdivision of 400 townships, but, as a matter of fact, 525 townships have been subdivided.

Mr. FOSTER. This increase is to cover that proportional increase in the number of townships nothing else ?

Mr. OLIVER. Nothing else.

Mr. BERGERON. So much per township ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, $950 each.

Mr. HENDERSON. In what part of the territory was the additional work done ? Was it in the section where settlement is rapidly going in, or away up in Athabaska, where, possibly, there is very little settlement.

Mr. OLIVER. This is for the work of subdivision, and no subdivision has been done in Athabaska. Some has been done in the northerly and westerly parts of the organized territories where settlement has been going in on account of railway construction.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many men are employed in this work of survey ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give the information with exactness, but between fifty and sixty parties were out.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many men to a party ?

Mr. OLIVER. From eight to thirteen men according to the work to be done. A party working in a wooded country needs more men than a party working on the clear prairie.

Dominion Lands—chargeable to income—further amount required for contingencies, &c, $12,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the main vote for contingencies ?

Mr. OLIVER. It was $37,100.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister will see that this is a very large increase for a supplementary vote—about 33 per cent.

Mr. OLIVER. The contingencies vote covers the requirements for homestead inspection, timber inspection, the expenses of Dominion lands and Crown timber agencies ; and, owing to the fact that the settlers who went in three or four years ago are now entitled to their patents, it has been necessary to increase the number of homestead inspectors in order that there may not be undue delay in giving the settlers their patents. That is one cause of the increase.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it account for the whole increase ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, but it is the principal cause.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister might give the main items of the increase ?

Mr. OLIVER. Seven new homestead inspectors have been appointed. Besides, for the same reason—the increased number of patents—the running expenses of the land offices have been to some extent increased. But the main increase is due to the large number of homestead inspectors.

Mr. BLAIN. There has been a good deal of talk about these homestead inspectors in the last few years. Since my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) has taken charge of the department we expect a good many reforms, and I am sure we shall not be disappointed. May I ask what policy the department has with regard to the homestead inspectors—whether they are to be permitted to become active politicians or not ?

Mr OLIVER. It is certainly not the policy to have them acting as active politicians, except as we hope that the satisfaction they will give the public in their work will be to the political credit of the government in power.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sure the minister (Mr. Oliver) knows the purport of the question. It has been stated, and I do not know that it has ever been denied that in the election that took place the officers of the Interior Department to a greater or less extent were made or made themselves active political workers in the campaign. I should feel like this with reference to this vote—that if the minister proposes to follow the same course that has been followed, and that in asking for the vote for new inspectors he should be asking a vote for men part of whose time is to be taken up in political work, it will take a long time for the item to pass. I do not think it is right or honest, and I do not think it is good politics in the long run. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver), from whom we expect a good deal, in this way at least, will be able to say to the committee that homestead inspectors and other officers for whom we vote money shall not be allowed to become active workers in political campaigns, that they shall be homestead inspectors, or whatever officials they are, and that they shall attend to the work assigned to them and attend to it solely. That, of course, we all admit to be the right plan and I think it is the plan which we might agree to have carried out. I would like to hear what the hon. minister's views are on that question.

Mr. OLIVER. I would not like, in consequence of any stand I would take or any admission I would make, to be thought to admit that it has been any part of the policy of the department to have their homestead inspectors act as political agents. I can assure the committee that as far as my say goes, I quite agree with my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster). To put it on the lowest ground I do not consider it good politics to have homestead inspectors or other government officials acting as active government agents. I think they can do their party as well as the country very much better service by attending to their duties and performing them in an efficient manner. I think that would reflect the most credit on the government and on the party.

Mr. LAKE. In reference to what the hon. minister has said I have a copy of the Regina 'Daily Standard' of the 14th April, at the time he was going up to contest the seat in Edmonton. There is an item in the issue of that date which says :

> Walter Scott, M.P., for this constituency, went west this morning to assist in the fight at Edmonton. He was accompanied by P. Talbot, M.P., J. G. Turriff, M.P., P. M. Bredt, assistant commissioner of immigration, and S. P. Porter, homestead inspector.

I do not know whether it is really the case that these gentlemen went up. I believe that Mr. Bredt and Mr. Porter are both exceedingly active politicians and that they were especially so during the last election. We have had some experience of them in the past if this statement is not true in this particular case.

Mr. OLIVER. This is hardly a fair subject for discussion in the committee. Mr. Scott only arrived at Edmonton, I think, the Monday evening previous to the nomination which resulted in my election by acclamation. Therefore, he did not take a very active part in the campaign. As far as the other gentlemen are concerned I never heard of their arrival at Edmonton. This is the first knowledge I have had of their ever having started for Edmonton. They certainly did not take any active part in the campaign.

Mr. LAKE. There is another question that I would like to bring up here. It is in reference to the policy of the department in regard to the Doukhobors. I asked a short time ago for the correspondence in the case of a man named Ivan Schukin, a Doukhobor, who obtained a homestead entry for the northwest quarter of section 23, township 31, range 6 west of the 2nd meridian, near Devil's lake in the Yorkton district He fulfilled his duties, took the oath of naturalization, became a British subject and was then recommended for his patent. About the time he should have been given his patent, Mr. Peter Verigin interfered and called attention to the fact that the homestead for which Schukin was asking for a patent had on it a Doukhobor village. After a considerable amount of correspondence between Mr. Verigin and the department, Schukin's entry was cancelled and he was given another entry elsewhere. It would be a very great hardship to any man after fulfilling his duties and becoming entitled to his patent to have it refused him and to be sent off some distance away to start his work afresh in a new part of the country altogether.

Mr. OLIVER. Is this gentleman a Doukhobor?

Mr. LAKE. Schukin is a Doukhobor. He with several others was persuaded by the late Mr. Crearer to make a homestead entry. Of course, it was very much in the interest of these people and the Northwest generally that they should make entries and own their own lands.. Schukin and about thirty others made their entries and cut themselves loose from the community system. When Mr. Verigin came he apparently insisted upon the establishment of the community system with the result that this became a regular part of their organization and pressure is being put upon a few Doukhobors who were beginning to make individual entries for land to force them back into the community system.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able just at this time to declare any distinct policy in regard to the administration of that particular part of the department, but I will say that I would not think it part of the duty of the government or of the department to assist in any way in enforcing the peculiar beliefs in regard to religion or social life that may be held by the Doukhobors or any other people. In regard to the case mentioned, I have no knowledge of it other than what is stated by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) but it would seem to me that whilst the person mentioned has possibly suffered a hardship it would be no less a hardship to give to him the patent for the land upon which a whole village was situated. It would seem to me from the statement of the case to be one in which there must be a hardship either to one individual or to a large number and that the department had decided that the hardship should be suffered by the one rather than the large number.

Mr. LAKE. I have a report here amongst the other papers. I did not know this opening would present itself at this moment to take the subject up and I did not get it very well prepared, but I would like to read a report from the homestead inspector of the Yorkton district in regard to this case. Perhaps it would show the hon. minister clearly what one of his officials thinks about the matter. After reporting on the land in the ordinary form and as to the value of the improvements which had been made he adds this further report :

I further report and say to my knowledge that in the fall of 1902, Mr. James Crearer, deceased, who was then immigration agent at this point, was anxious that the Doukhobors should make entries for their lands, visited these people and tried to induce them to make entries and the people did not respond as they appeared to be undecided as to what course to pursue. Mr. Crearer told Mr. Schukin that he could make entry for any quarter section in the land reserved for them, so he in good faith made entry for the above land on which he then resided. The community system did not then exist among them and everything went along all right and the others made no objection until Mr. Peter Verigin arrived in their midst and started the community system.

Mr. Schukin would not join the community so they asked him to get off the place and made it very disagreeable for him ever since and would not allow him to cultivate his homestead. I consider that it would be a hardship to turn him off as all the lands for a long distance are now entered and he would have to go a long way from his friends in order to get a homestead.

And further, the statement made by Simeon Reifen is not correct regarding the mill which he claims is on this land. It is on the S W ¼ of this section.

About half of the houses now on this land were built since Mr. Schukin obtained his entry although aware of his entry.

I understand also that ten out of the sixteen families are leaving said village in the spring to be located in other villages near their homesteads. Six families will remain for some time until their present buildings become useless which will only be a short time and they will not be disturbed by Mr. Schukin. The granary on this land was built last year although Mr. Schukin objcted to its being built. I consider him justly entitled to patent.

Your obedient servant,
(Signed) N. G. McCALLUM,
Homestead Inspector.

There is another letter from a gentleman who resides in that district, a gentleman who I think has always been a staunch supporter of the Liberal party and he takes very strong ground with reference to the Doukhobor question and as to the manner in which Mr. Peter Verigin is acting. It may be as well to have this letter placed on 'Hansard,' as I think the whole subject should be discussed and laid before the House. This gentleman writes :

Devil's Lake, Dec. 16, 1904.

Commissioner of Dominion Lands,

Dear Sir,—I take the liberty of writing you a few lines regarding the Doukhobors here. There are about thirty here that have left the company. They have got out and are working on their homesteads. They have become British subjects and are falling in line with the laws of the country.

And then we have Mr. Peter Verigin with his company. Just now they are cutting and hauling spruce logs. I don't think there will be a standing tree of any account within miles of here after this winter. They will not register births, marriages or deaths, nor yet will they become British subjects, and Peter will tell you he would like to become a British subject himself but his people would not hear of it. He is working hard to keep the company together. He tells them if they leave the company, they leave the land, for he says he owns all the land round here and they will have to move one hundred miles from here. So these men that have left the company are in doubt if they will get an entry for their land or not. I tell them they will get it and I hope you will be of the same opinion. Now, these Doukhobors that have left the company tell me that Peter Verigin was the cause of them not taking up their land when they came here. He kept writing to them not to take up land until he would get here, and when he gets here he tells them to keep to work and he would go to Yorkton and take up the land for them.

I may mention that this correspondence appears to show that a great number of entries for lands upon which these villages were situated have been cancelled and that the new entries for the men who have been deprived of the old entries have been taken up by Mr. Peter Verigin.

Of course he gets the credit of them taking up their land. One can see by the actions of those that have left the company and have fallen in line with the laws of the country that Peter Verigin is the cause of the company men not falling in line with the laws of the country. I am told that he went into the land office at Yorkton and told them that he had eighteen men dissatisfied with their homesteads and would like to change it for another. Now, this homestead that he would like to change, were homesteads of these men that had left the company, and they knew nothing of Peter Verigin trying to cancel their homesteads at that time, but they found out in time and went to Yorkton to the land office and told them that they were quite satisfied with their homesteads. There was another man here, he (Peter Verigin) went to the land office and reported that he was dead and had his place cancelled and one of his company men put on it. I know for a fact the man who Peter Verigin reported dead is going around here feeling bad about losing his place. There is another man here by the name of Eone Sugan on the northeast quarter of section 23, T. 31, R. 6, W. 2. Peter Verigin is trying hard to cancel his place.

The Eone Sugan referred to here is the man whose case I am calling attention to :

This Sugan says that he heard that Peter Verigin had written to you about it. This Eone Sugan was among the first of the Doukhobors to enter for his land. There was no company when Sugan entered for his land. Peter Verigin had not come at that time. The late Mr. Crearer, the immigration agent, was out here to see if he could get them to enter for their land, and they had a letter from Verigin at that time to not enter for their land until he got here. I was along with Mr. Crearer at the time he made an offer to any Doukhobor that would enter for his homestead the choice of any quarter at Devil lake, so Sugan said he would take the quarter he was living on. He paid his ten dollars, got his entry, has done his homestead duties. He has become a British subject. I think a man like this should not be cast to one side and a man like Verigin get the preference. Peter Verigin and his interpreter have gone into the land office and reported false statements to them. He said the grist mill was on Eone Sugan's quarter. I took the surveyor's chain and measured from the nearest point from the line to the mill. It was 3 chains, 27½ links from Eone Sugan's quarter. Peter Verigin, at the land office, said that they had quite a bit of ploughing done on it. Sugan was ploughing on his farm when a number came down to him with their teams and ploughed. They gave him ten minutes to get out of the field. He unhitched his horses and took them to the stable, and they pitched his plough into the fence. Please do the best you can for him.

Yours truly,

ROBERT BUCHANAN.

This letter is dated the 16th of Decmber, 1904. It will, I think, be found from other papers in the department that unfortunately this man's entry had already been cancelled. He had left the rest of the Doukohobors to take up land and to become a good British subject and fulfil the duties of citizenship. But apparently on the word of Mr. Peter Verigin he was deprived of his property and sent off to start life anew on another homestead. The case appears to me to be a particularly bad one. A man who becomes a British subject and tries to be a good citizen, even though a Doukhobor should be protected just the same as any other British subject.

Mr. OLIVER. I have not hitherto been aware of the facts stated by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake). He has placed them before the country in a very emphatic manner and certainly the statements he made will have to be taken notice of and the action of the department will be governed by the facts discovered on investigation.

Mr. LAKE. If it is found on inquiry that the statement I have made is perfcetly well grounded, will the government undertake to compensate this man for the loss he has been put to. I do not notice anything as to that in the correspondence, but I certainly think that if he has been turned off land which he has cultivated and on which he has erected buildings he should receive the fullest compensation.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not see that it would be possible to make compensation, and I would not like to judge the case until I have heard both sides. A very grave accusation is made against this man Peter Verigin and of course we will have to hear his side before giving a decision. I would not like to make any statement now as to what will be done in the matter. It has been suggested to me that it is entirely improbable that this man's entry was made before the village was established on the lands. As every one knows, when the Doukhobors come into any section of the country the first thing they do is to form into a village on the land so that on the face of it the probability would be that the village was on the land before this man made his entry. However, if he had an entry first I would certainly think he was entitled to it. No doubt the deparmtent took action believing it was the lesser of two evils ; an injustice to be done either to the one family or to fifteen or twenty families, and they decided perhaps to let the one man suffer.

Mr. LAKE. In reference to the question as to whether the village is on the land or not the report of Mr. McCallum says :

About half of the village houses now on this land were built since Schukin claimed his entry, although aware of the entry.

Mr. OLIVER. What about the other half ?

Mr. LAKE. I presume, although there is nothing to show it, that Mr. Schukin went on to the land with the other Doukhobors and they built the village together. That, after all, is not the point. After he and others had been established in the village, Mr. Crearer, the immigration agent, now dead, who to those people represented the power of the government, came down and asked them to make entries for their land, and according to both of these reports offered them any section they chose to enter for ; and he gave Mr. Schukin the entry for the land he occupied. I do not think the government should go back on that entry. Mr. Schukin made the entry in good faith, and since that time he has apparently resided there and performed his cultivation duties ; and if he is not allowed to retain the land it will be a great breach of faith on the part of the government, and will be likely to prevent these people leaving the community system.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, I would not like to speak of the conduct of the agent, who is now dead ; but I would call the attention of the committee to the fact that however wrong he may have been, the homesteader was certainly in the wrong in entering for the homestead, when he knew that other people were in occupation of it and had made improvements upon it, which my hon. friend knows is entirely contrary to the letter and the spirit of the Homestead Act. He entered for the homestead with the knowledge that there were other families occupying the land, whose prior rights in it were just as good as his; and although he held the homestead entry, he permitted still other people to come on that same land and build on it and occupy it. I do not think he can hold himself to be altogether the aggrieved party in the transaction. He did commit a wrong with his eyes open. He may have acted under misinformation in entering for land that was already in the occupation of other people, and he was not protecting his own interest as he ought to have done when he permitted still other people to go on and occupy and make improvements on that land.

Mr. LAKE. The hon. minister must remember that the Doukhobors were not at that time very well acquainted with our laws and customs. They were brought out in a way as wards of the government. They were put upon their land under the direction of the government officials. When the chief government official in that quarter comes to one of them and says : You can have the entry of this land, I want you people to make entries for your land ; and this man says, if you give me the entry for the land I am living on, I will make it, I do not think he did with his eyes open what he knew to be a wrong. He was told that he was at liberty to make that entry by Mr. Crearer, who at that time held a very good position under the department.

Mr. TURRIFF. I do not think the Doukhobors can make the plea that my hon. friend makes, that they did not understand the laws of the country, because, if there was one thing that was explained to them time after time, it was the homestead laws and the homestead conditions. I think I am right when I say that all these Doukhobor villages were established before any homestead entries were made. This very difficulty was foreseen, and it was suggested to the people that in making entries it would not be advisable for them to enter for the quarter sections on which the village was to be located. This man evidently had been living there for probably two or three years before he made a homestead entry at all. He knew perfectly well that this village was on this land, and I do not see how he could make the entry knowing that, because he would have to make an affidavit that there were no improvements and no people living on the land. I think the better plan if it could be managed would be for the department to allow the homesteader to retain his homestead, but to allow him the privilege of disposing of five or ten acres that may be occupied as a village, and sell it to the community. The difficulty has arisen largely in this way. At the time this homesteader made the entry, I do not suppose he had any intention of acting on his own account. These villages are all separate business communities, having no business connection with each other, the people in each village owning everything in common, and I presume that his idea in making entry for the homestead, was that it would become common property in the future ; but he has apparently changed his mind. I may say that the department did everything in their power to induce these people to make their entries at the proper time, foreseeing that there would be difficulty from delay. They did delay for a long time, and there will be some little difficulty, but I think it is a matter that can be easily got over by the department.

Mr. LAKE. I hope this matter will not be lost sight of by the Department of the Interior. I notice a telegram here signed J. W. Greenway, Department of the Interior, to Peter Verigin, Esq., and dated the 12th of December, 1904 :

Entry Ivan Schukin Northwest twenty-three, thirty-one, six west second, cancelled, being Doukhobors village site.

That means that the entry has been cancelled. I also notice another telegram here, dated Yorkton, December 13 :

Verigin acting for Doukhobors here Saturday and yesterday. All re-entries of Doukhobors completed ; forty-three entries granted them.

The reason I call attention to this second telegram is that it seems to me undesirable that one man should make a bunch of entries in that way for these communities, especially holding the position which he appears to do in the Doukhobor community. It tends to keep in their minds the idea that the lands are being entered by the community as a body, and not for the individual.

Mr. FOSTER. The question, I think, the minister will admit, is a rather serious one. It is not simply the case of this one Doukhobor, but it seems to go further than that. The peculiar system that the Doukhobors have may be the best, looked at from their point of view, and there may be, in the earlier days of settlement, some good features in it, in the way of massing together for support and bringing large numbers together, which would recommend it to a certain extent in the eyes of Canadians, who are not in favour of that system, of course. But I think we ought to keep this in view ; that if there be any person who wishes to assert his individuality and become a British subject and conform to all our laws, and work on the same line as individual holders, he ought to be very carefully supported by the department, at least to this extent, that the leader of such a settlement, who naturally has great powers, and naturally also, I suppose, wants to keep those intact and make them greater if he can, does not become in a way arbitrary and to a certain extent tyrannical, and by the great influence he has, keep down and utterly make impossible this assertion of individuality.

I think that the department ought at least to see that such influence is not exercised in an arbitrary and tyrannical manner so as to prevent any individual getting his land. Of course it is easy to say that if one is pitted against the many, the one must suffer and not the many. But you can turn that right around and say that a good many are better able to make up the loss to the one than he is to bear it alone. If this man made his entry in good faith and then is driven out, the department should seek some way of making the matter even for him, but I do not know that the department should suffer. Probably if the fault were entirely with the officers of the department, that would be a fair way to consider it ; but if the interests of the one must be sacrificed to the interests of the many, then the many ought to make compensation. I am not sure that some arrangement such as has been suggested might not be made, namely, to allow the person who entered in good faith to keep his homestead and dispose of whatever portion of it is necessary for the village. The village is not going to run over the whole 160 acres. In that way the village would get what it wants and the man who holds the property around the village would have its value enhanced. But what I would like to emphasize is this, that the department should look into this matter and see that a remedy is at once applied, if necessary.

Mr. LAKE. It is not merely one case apparently, but 43 cases. I do not know whether there were 43 villages founded previously to these lands being entered for, but I have here a letter which I had better read :

Otradnoe Village, October 18, 1904.

John Obed Smith,
Commissioner of Immigration,
Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Dear Sir,—We have just finished in finding out the homesteads which are under Doukhobors villages, and have found correctly. The list of villages and proper homesteads which are under villages we beg to inclose you herewith, kindly look into this matter, and leave those homesteads for villages, making them free from homestead entries. If any homestead entry was made for land, which is under villages, so that was made by mistake, as I told you. In every village there is one free homestead, which was given for village in wrong place, and which can be changed now for man whose land is under village.

Yours faithfully,
PETER VERIGIN.

Then follows a list of some 43 different villages. Apparently Verigin had gone in to Yorkton and changed those entries for 43 other entries. It is quite possible there may be great hardship on other men whose lands have been taken away from them with the improvements thereon.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that I can add to what has been said. It is no part of the business of the department to assist the peculiar religious ideas of any people whoever they may be. Our business is with the individual settler and to protect his rights. A very grave statement has been made which will have to be investigated and action taken. With regard to the individual case mentioned, this man does not come to us with clean hands, and therefore has not that claim for consideration which he would have if he came with an absolutely clear case. The good faith of the agent who had to deal with this man is called in question. That agent is now dead and we are compelled to take the evidence of other men as to what he said and did; and I do not know that we would be quite justified in accepting in full everything that many be said regarding this deceased officer.

Mr. FOSTER. There may be records and letters.

Mr. OLIVER. We must judge of the case as we find it, aside from the question as to what he is reported to have said or done.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. This Doukhobor matter has been before the House several times. It was a mistake bringing them into the country at all, and that was the view taken by the minister himself. They are living in communities, and I should like to know how many of them have homesteads and whether they have made any provision to repay the money they borrowed from the government. I should like to know whether the assurance given us by Mr. Smart, ex-deputy minister, that this debt would be held against the land is correct. This statement was made before they took out any homesteads, and I do not see how it could be entered against the land when they had no claim on it. How much has been paid on the debt and is there any lien on the land homestead for that indebtedness? It will be pretty hard to divide up the indebtedness and register it against the property of each individual. Some arrangement should be made by the leaders of the Doukhobors to pay back the money lent. I understand they are a rather prosperous community although they do not fall into our ways. My hon. friend the minister (Mr. Oliver) made the statement in former days that the country would be better off without them. I quite agreed with him then, and have not seen any great reason for changing my mind since.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. U. Wilson) to say that he desires certain information. His request will be attended to; and if it is the pleasure of the committee to pass the item as it stands in the supplementary estimates, I will guarantee to have an answer by the time we reach the main estimates.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The only trouble is that so many of these questions are postponed that some of them are sure to be forgotten. The hon. minister has his officer beside him, and I think he might give us at least some of the information we require at once. These questions, it seems to me, might easily have been anticipated. The official must be familiar with the facts, I should think. They have been before the Agriculture Committee time and again, and have been threshed out fully in this House.

Mr. TURRIFF. I may state that there were about 8,000 of these Doukhobors, men, women and children.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How much have they increased?

Mr. TURRIFF. I do not know. That is a matter that the local government attends to. A year ago these people had practically all made homestead entries—between 1,800 and 2,000, I think. There are about thirty-five of the Doukhobors, as I understand, who have, as it were, broken away from the communal system and taken out naturalization papers. I agree with every word that has been said by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), that those individuals who wish to break away from the communal system should be given every possible consideration by the department. I wish to say, however, that while they have been troublesome in connection with their homestead entries, the Doukhobors have been a good class of settlers. And they are doing well. I do not know whether they have been paying back what money they owed or not; but they are in a position to pay back or will be very shortly, because they have prospered wonderfully well. They are very industrious, and no doubt the work they have done under Peter Verigin has been good work. I think there is no doubt that his influence so far has been good materially—that he has been a good business head, and under him the people there have progressed very well. Still, I do not think that it is in the interest of this country that any one man should be the practical dictator over 7,000 or 8,000 people. Therefore, any encouragement that can be given to individuals to break away from the communal system, I think, should be given.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Perhaps the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) can tell us whether they follow the communal system so far as their earnings are concerned. Do their earnings go into one fund, or are they living like other people?

Mr. TURRIFF. With the exception of the thirty-five to which I have referred, I think they are all living in the communal system, that is to say, each village is a business community by itself. It has no business connection with the other villages, but in each village everything is owned in common.

Mr. LAKE. Referring to what the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) has said about the local government keeping the record of the increase, I think I ought to say that the local government have had considerable difficulty in carrying on that work. That recalls to my memory a matter which was brought to my notice some time back which I would like the minister to inquire into when he is looking up the other things in regard to this settlement. Some time last year a Doukhobor was found hanged in a stable. I would like to know whether that fact was ever called to the attention of the authorities, whether it was reported by Mr. Verigin, and whether any inquest was held.

Mr. OLIVER. It is no part of the business of this department to take notice of anything of that nature. However, I will make inquiries if it is thought desirable.

Mr. LAKE. I would like the minister to tell us whether Mr. Smart, the ex-deputy minister, is now connected with the department; and, if so, what is his position?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Smart is not now employed by the department.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It is not long since he was employed by the department as special agent in the west. I do not know what his duties were, but I believe he was paid $10 a day and expenses. Can the minister tell us how long it is since Mr. Smart was employed by the department?

Mr. OLIVER. Since Mr. Smart resigned his position as deputy minister he has not been in the employ of the government except in special service. He was employed a month or two ago in conducting a delegate of the Austrian government through the Northwest. He also made a visit to the United States, looking into the quarantine arrangements there.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. But he is not now employed by the department?

Mr. OLIVER. Not in any capacity.

Mr. FOSTER. When engaged in connection with quarantine, he was paid, I suppose, by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. OLIVER. No. Mr. Smart was not engaged in superintending quarantine, but was looking into the operation as affecting the immigration. Of course, the immigrants are the ones to get the benefit of the quarantine, and Mr. Smart was looking into the regulations from the immigrant's point of view.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. As I understand it, the $12,000 additional and the $10,000 additional are largely for clerks. In the original estimate the minister asked $12,357 of an increase, and that apparently is for extra clerks in the department. Do I understand that all these sums are practically for extra assistance?

Mr. OLIVER. The sum of $12,000 required for contingencies includes all salaries for homestead inspectors and officers who work outside. Then the amount of $10,000 is for salaries for increases in the staff in offices throughout the west. The item here says outside service,' but that means, not outside the offices, but outside the vote for civil government.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I notice that in the charges for Dominion lands the salaries for clerks amount to $31,101.27. Do I understand that that includes all the clerks in the Interior Department, or only those connected with Dominion lands?

Mr. OLIVER. Only those in the Dominion lands branch.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many officers are employed in this branch?

Mr. OLIVER. This item is for service altogether out of Ottawa, and I am not prepared to answer that question.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It distinctly says clerks at Ottawa.

Mr. OLIVER. The salaries which are provided under civil government are for what is called the inside service, and everything that is not under that head is called the outside service, whether the persons are employed in Ottawa or at outside offices. This increase of $10,000 for salaries for the outside service, is for the purpose of meeting the requirements in the outside agencies chiefly, owing to the increase of business there; and this increase of business does not occur simply because of an increase of settlement, but because the settlers of some years ago are now in a position to draw their patents, and that causes a great increase of clerical work in the different land offices.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. On page L—91 of the Auditor General's Report I notice 'Dominion Lands, salaries of extra clerks at head office, and advertising.' Then it says 'Salaries of clerks at Ottawa, $31,110.27.' Now, I understand that these votes of $12,000 and $10,000 the minister is asking for are to pay further extra clerks. In that view I would like an explanation of that statement on page L—91.

Mr. OLIVER. The figures I have here show total increases in salaries amounting to $19,239, and decreases caused by resignations, transfers, &c., amount to $9,229, leaving a net increase of $10,010. This covers the extras here in the Ottawa office, and the extra service required in the land offices in the Territories.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I realize that I cannot expect the hon. minister to be thoroughly conversant with all the figures. But I would like his deputies to explain why this appears in the Auditor General's Report in the manner it does.

Mr. OLIVER. There are a number of clerks listed as extra clerks, but that does not mean that they are employed as extras for work in this particular year. They are clerks who have been employed for a greater or lesser time, but they are not on the permanent list, and therefore they are called extras. These are in what is called the inside service, and are not connected with this vote of $10,000 we are asking for.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. They are practically permanent, inasmuch as you have kept them every year.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the amount in the main vote ?

Mr. OLIVER. Salaries for outside service amount to $137,900.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. On what page of the estimates is that ?

Mr. OLIVER. That sum of $137,900 does not appear in the estimates of this year, but in last year's estimates, on page 71, in the column of 1904-5.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister spoke of Mr. Smart's work in accompanying the Austrian delegate. What does that mean ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not personally familiar with the object of the delegate in visiting Ottawa, as that took place before I assumed office. But I am given to understand that he was the commissioner of the Austrian government, who were desirous of having exact information as to how the colonists from that country were progressing on the continent of America. This commissioner was sent out to investigate the Austrian colonies in the United States and Canada. It was thought desirable, I presume, to treat him with the greatest courtesy and to facilitate his movements and his getting the fullest information to the greatest possible degree. Therefore, the department took every means to facilitate his tour through Canada, and as Mr. Smart had been in charge of the Interior Department and of the immigration branch as well, and was familiar with the work, it was thought desirable that he should have the conduct of the delegate through Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. minister prepared to say just why Mr. Smart left his office as deputy ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no knowledge of the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems rather odd that we have had no sufficient explanation of it. Mr. Smart is supposed to have been and is generally acknowledged to have been an efficient deputy. He seems to have taken a great deal of interest in his department, and as far as the testimony from the government side of the House was concerned he was fulfilling his duties well. All at once and very suddenly he seems to have departed that office and the only explanation we got in the House from the minister was that he left it because he had a chance of bettering his financial position. Quite a long while has passed since then and Mr. Smart seems still to be here, and the fact that he is taking these special services up for the government would rather militate against that. I thought the hon. minister probably might know and be able to give us the explanation.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no knowledge of the matter whatever. The resignation was handed in before the session of parliament occurred and there has nothing come to my knowledge in regard to it. I presume that any officer of the government is at liberty to leave if he sees fit without giving any reason and I presume that is what occurred in this case.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. minister is asking for an increase of $20,000 in the mines branch of his department. May I ask what they intend doing in that branch during the coming year ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is not an increase ; it is a transfer from the civil government vote to the Dominion Lands vote. It is merely a transfer from one vote to another within the department.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. At page 71 of the estimates, under the column of increases, is placed this $20,000.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course it is an increase in the lands branch, but if my hon. friend will turn to civil government he will see that it shows as a decrease. At page 13, it shows in the estimate for civil government as a decrease just as on page 71 under the heading of Dominion lands it shows as an increase.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister stated that Mr. Smart was not in the employ of the government now in any position. How long is it since he ceased to be in the employ of the government ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give the date off hand, but Mr. Smart has not been in the employ of the government since he returned from the west in company with the Austrian delegate, which would be in the latter days of April.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think, if my hon. friend will look at 'Hansard' of only a short time ago, he will find a question which I put to the government the answer to which indicated that he was then in the employ of the government and receiving $10 a day. It is only a short time ago since that question was answered by some acting minister.

Mr. OLIVER. It probably was an error if the question was later than the 1st of May.

Mr. TAYLOR. I suppose a portion of this $10,000 is to make up extras to him since he has left the department as deputy minister ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Smart's expenses in that connection would have no connection with this vote at all. They would come in connection with immigration. This was distinctly a matter of immigration work.

Further amount required for maintenance, construction of roads and bridges, and other necessary works in connection with the Hot Springs Reservation, near Banff, Northwest Territories, $7,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the original vote ?

Mr. OLIVER. $27,020.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a very large increase, which, in a matter like Banff and the reservation there, ought to have been estimated for and included in the original estimates. There cannot be any very special reason why the vote should be increased by more than a fourth. What is the explanation of it ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to give the reason why the under estimate was made, but I can give the particulars of the items included in this intended expenditure. The vote of $7,000 is to cover the expenditures from the 1st March to the 30th June and it is estimated as follows :

Salaries for four months at $301.66.	$1,206.64
Mr. John Galt's account for preparing plans and estimates in connection with the contemplated waterworks and sewerage system in the park.	926.73
Cost of publishing a pamphlet on the park, 30,000 copies at 16 cents each.	4,500.00
Miscellaneous expenses, express, freight, telegrams, printing and stationery, travelling expenses and so on.	450.00
Balance to be spent on necessary repairs to roads, bridges and buildings in the reservation.	2,412.84
Total.	$9,496.21

There were $2,496 on hand on the first of March standing against this proposed expenditure. This leaves a balance of $7,000 required.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the salaries of the officials for the year ? It would seem as if only eight months salaries were voted unless you have made large additions to the staff which I hope has not been done. It is a very bad and a very deceptive estimate if you are going to come before parliament for a year's money and only make a three-quarters or a two-thirds estimate. Officers salaries should be seen from the beginning, it seems to me. Has there been any increase in the number of salaried officials there ?

Mr. OLIVER. The salaries, as I understand the information given to me here have not been increased nor has the number of officers.

Mr. FOSTER. Have the officials been increased ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. How does the minister explain that he is asking now for four months salary ?

Mr. OLIVER. This is the four month's salary from the first of March to the first of July, and is necessarily included in our statement of the requirements for these four months, but we have $2,000 in hand out of which cheques for salaries will be paid.

Mr. FOSTER. You are requiring no more money for salaries.

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the necessity for printing 30,000 pamphlets on Banff.

Mr. OLIVER. Generally speaking I presume it is thought desirable that when we are spending so much money in beautifying the park and building roads and making it desirable as a place of resort, we should spend some money in advertising its attractions.

Mr. FOSTER. Where was this work done ?

Mr. OLIVER. By the Rolla C. Crain Company of Otawa.

Mr. FOSTER. On tender ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to answer but I rather think it was not, because it is a very fine class of work and could not very well be let by tender.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the cost ?

Mr. OLIVER. Fifteen cents a copy.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the system of distribution ? I should think that it should be distributed amongst the great outside world to announce that we have natural beauties here and are making and maintaining parks. The method of distribution would be very important in the case of a pamplet of this kind.

Mr. OLIVER. We sent a copy to each senator and member, some were distributed to the railway companies and others were sent to our immigration agents in England and in the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the visitors to Banff increasing ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed they are increasing very largely.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Principally Americans.

Mr. OLIVER. From every country.

Further amount required for engraving lithographing and printing maps of the Dominion and Northwest Territories, $16,200.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the amount in the main estimates ?

Mr. OLIVER. $15,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The supplementary estimate is larger than the main estimate; that requires explanation.

Mr. BARR. Where was this work done?

Mr. OLIVER. The drawing of the maps is done in the geographer's office, Ottawa, and the Toronto Lithographing Company does the printing.

Mr. BARR. Is it let by contract?

Mr. OLIVER. I am given to understand there is only one company in Canada that does copper engraving.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. We did get some maps printed in Chicago and they were done very cheaply. I would prefer having them done in our own country if we could get them at a reasonable price, but it does seem to me there ought to be competition in these contracts, especially when they are for large amounts.

Mr. OLIVER. There are certain classes of work that Canada is not as far advanced in as other countries, and this appears to be one of them. If we invite competition it would simply be competition between our own country and other countries.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That was done before.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, and it may have been the better way, but there has been considerable feeling expressed against giving so much government money to foreign industries, that it was thought if we could get the work at a moderate price we should keep the work in our own country.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was the cost of these maps?

Mr. OLIVER. There are a number of them. There is a relief map of Canada costing $1,500 for 5,000 copies; a map of the new mining district in the Yukon west of Whitehorse costing $1,000 for 4,000 copies; the Peace river map costing $2,000 for 4,000 copies; the Temiskaming map, costing $500 for 10,000 copies; mounting 900 copies of the large map of the Dominion at $3 each.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who did that work?

Mr. OLIVER. It was done in New York.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is an awful price for that.

Mr. OLIVER. The map is so long that ordinary wooden rollers warp and this is mounted on steel cylinder rollers. Then there is $3,000 for printing 5,000 copies of the third edition of the Dominion map; photographing plans in connection with the map $400, and 5,000 printed copies and 2,000 bound copies of the Economic Atlas costing $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that distributed to the cabinet ministers?

Mr. OLIVER. It is not completed yet; it is sent to the members too.

Mr. FOSTER. You should send it to the cabinet ministers; they might learn something from an 'economic atlas.'

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. minister has not explained why it is that the supplementary estimate is in excess of the original estimate.

Mr. OLIVER. I really am not in a position to answer the question. I suppose the answer might be that the occasion has arisen for bringing out some of these maps, for instance, that in regard to the mining district in the Yukon, under circumstances which could not be contemplated, and therefore they were not provided for.

Mr. FOSTER. That is about the only one to which that might apply. The others might have been foreseen and provided for last year.

Mr. OLIVER. I suppose, with regard to the large map of the Dominion, the printing is done in many thousands, while the mounting is done only in comparatively small numbers as required, on account of the greater expense of mounting.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How are these maps distributed?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no definite system of distribution. They are issued to members who apply for them, and members generally apply for them for use in schools, and it is thought desirable to have such maps used in the schools.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. If there are maps or other things given to members for distribution in schools or anywhere else, all the members ought to be furnished with a list of such things; otherwise those who have opportunity of knowing about them get what they want, while others are left without them.

Mr. OLIVER. I think this might be done; while the department might print the maps for general information, those who desire to have them mounted might very well be asked to pay the cost of mounting.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a large expense merely for the distribution of these maps by members among their constituents. The man who knows about them gets them, while the man who does not know about them does not get any. I would have no objection to a senator or a member getting one of these maps; but to use them in a way as perquisites to members who apply for them is not what we are here for, and not what we ought to spend the people's money for. This matter was brought to my attention by a letter which I received from an old friend in New Brunswick, who said that So-and-so had sent fine mounted maps to three or four of his friends in that locality, but that he could not get one, and he wanted me to get one for him. I have not applied for it, because I did not know whether I could get one or not. I would have some sympathy with allowing every member to have three or four of these maps if they went into schools. To furnish maps to every school in the country is a large undertaking, and if you furnish to one why not to another. To make these expensive maps and give them to members as a piece of patronage to be circulated among their constituents is not good public policy. A simpler and less expensive way, would be to let each member have a half a dozen or so unmounted maps and pay for the mounting themselves. I do not see how you could get these mounted maps through the mails.

Mr. OLIVER. I quite agree that we should arrive at some sound basis of distribution. Evidently the House considers it desirable to provide such maps for the use of the schools, unmounted if not mounted. If a charge were made for the mounting, that would be a considerable check on the demand for the mounted maps. There is no difficulty about sending the mounted maps because they are sent by express. They can be mounted in large numbers much cheaper and better than they could by the individual.

Mr. TAYLOR. I presume that last year, when the sum of $15,000 was asked, the then minister thought that would carry him through. Is this $16,200 all expended ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is not expended, but it is contemplated to expend it. Possibly the work that will require that expenditure may be in hand.

Mr. TAYLOR. What authority had the department to incur this expenditure without having asked parliament ?

Mr. OLIVER. I fancy the department will have to ask the grace of the House in this matter.

National Transcontinental Railway—surveys, construction and other expenses, $290,500.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). This is to defray the expenses of the commission from the 1st March to June 30th, 1905, namely :

Estimated expenses from 1st March to June 30th 1905, $468,000; available out of appropriation for the year, $177,500; to be voted, $290,500.

There was expended up to the 28th February, 1905, $322,500 and from the 28th February to the 1st April, 1905, $114,505, making a total of $437,005.

Mr. FOSTER. No objection to this getting through and taking the discussion on the main estimates.

Mr. FOSTER.

Intercolonial Railway—improved accommodation and facilities along the line, $29,600; additional sidings along the line, $26,100; to eliminate two road crossings at rail level at the Cape Road Crossing near Dorchester, N.B., $2,000: $450,515.

Mr. EMMERSON. If hon. members refer to the estimates of 1904-5, they will see an appropriation of $1,000,000.

At that time I submitted a statement showing that we would require 12 passenger engines and 10 freight engines, 10 first-class sleeping cars, 20 first-class day coaches, 4 second-class sleepers, 4 parlour cars, 2 dining cars, 4 postal cars, 10 baggage cars and 150 box cars. The total expense, I explained, would be $1,383,000. I stated that it was not necessary to get the whole vote at that time, but that in the supplementary estimates I would ask for the balance. This is the balance.

Intercolonial Railway—new machinery for locomotive and car shops, $9,350.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was found necessary to have new machinery in the locomotive and car shops at Moncton for repairs and construction work. The total expenditure is estimated at $9,316.

Mr. FOSTER. Where was this machinery bought ?

Mr. EMMERSON. From machinery men in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. And tenders called for ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Who has this contract ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Machines are being supplied by different concerns. There is one in Hamilton, one in London, one in Brockville—I think it has been widely distributed. The selections were made by the mechanical superintendent, Mr. G. R. Joughins.

Mr. INGRAM. Last year the minister gave practically the same explanation, but I understood that the vote that passed covered this whole expenditure.

Mr. EMMERSON. Some additional machines were needed, according to the judgment of the mechanical superintendent. My hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) will remember that for a time the mechanical department of the Intercolonial was without a head. The services of Mr. Joughins were secured about a year ago, after the estimate was made of the requirements of the service. His experience led him to believe that this machinery was necessary. I thought it wise to instruct him to procure what was necessary for the expeditious and economical carrying on of the work in the shops.

Mr. INGRAM. I know that it is necessary to have this class of machinery in the shops, but I thought all this was provided for last year.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend will see the reason why these were not provided for in the original estimates.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the department a well-equipped shop at Moncton for the manufacture of locomotives ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. We turn out new locomotives every year. We do not make many—last year about two or three. Whenever there is time to spare from repair work, the superintendent puts the men upon construction. The parts are made as opportunity allows, and these are assembled into locomotives.

Intercolonial Railway—improved accommodation and facilities along the line, $29,600.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are these improvements ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is the completion of a station at Granton and also at Oxford road $1,000. New land had to be bought in connection with the station at Aulac, $450.

Mr. FOSTER. Why ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The station was burned down. To minimize danger we had to rebuild the station on the other side of the track, and for this additional land was required. At Boiestown we required a platform and also at Cross Creek.

Mr. FOSTER. Had they no platform before at Boiestown ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, that station is on the Canada Eastern. At Cross Creek there is a junction. A little line has been completed from Stanley to Cross Creek, and a platform was necessary. The total of these small items is $29,603.

Mr. FOSTER. But the minister has only accounted for abut $4,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. I can give them in detail.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister might run over them quickly.

Mr. EMMERSON. For ties, putting in track, $4,800.

Mr. FOSTER. Where ?

Mr. EMMERSON. On the Canada Eastern.

Mr. FOSTER. Were these to replace old ties ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was part of the work of improvement.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these charged to capital ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We purchased the road in a certain condition, and this is to improve it and bring it up to standard of the Intercolonial.

Mr. FOSTER. But the minister should not charge to capital account money spent in replacing old ties with new ones.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is an investment in the road.

Mr. FOSTER. Every expenditure on the road is that.

Mr. EMMERSON. The object is to bring the road up to standard and fit it for the modern engines and cars. I made the statement in connection with taking over the road that these expenses would be necessary in order to enable us to utilize on this line the rolling stock of the Intercolonial. On those branch roads we have had them quite a distance apart, and we have found it necessary to put them closer together. We are using heavier engines, the cars run with greater speed, and it is necessary, in order to ensure the lives of the passengers, to improve the roadbed.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the hon. gentleman any idea as to the number of ties that he used per mile before he made the change ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not remember how many there were to the mile, but they were further apart than on ordinary roads.

Mr. INGRAM. Are you putting them in now the usual number per mile, as on other roads ?

Mr. EMMERSON. We are putting in 2,600 per mile, I think, on the Intercolonial.

Mr. FOSTER. That still does not come up to the $29,600.

Mr. EMMERSON. We are expending for ties $22,241 for the whole length of the road. Then there are stations, freight sheds, platforms, and so forth. In putting in new ties we are making them closer than they were before. We are not only renewing old ties, but are putting in new ones extra. In our estimates for the coming year we will have to ask for an appropriation to replace ties that have been used.

Mr. FOSTER. That will be in current account ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there ever been any experiment with ties of any other material than wood ; and, if so, what has been the result on the Intercolonial ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The deputy minister tells me they have never used anything else but wood.

Mr. BLAIN. What about cement ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Well, that is very expensive, though it might pay in the long run. But I do not think it has been tried generally in countries where the climatic conditions are similar to those of Canada. I think they have used that material in England to some extent.

Mr. COCHRANE. How long do the ties last ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The life of a tie, of course, is dependent on the character of the wood, but it varies from five to eight years. We use a good many cedar ties on the Intercolonial, quite a number of prince's pine and quite a number of hemlock. I think the engineers use the best ties on those sections of the road where the traffic is heaviest. For instance, between Moncton and Truro is a section of the road very much used, many coal trains passing daily. I think the better class of ties are placed on this section. On the north shore there are some sections where we use cedar ties. We can get cedar cheaper on the northern division of the road than we can down in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Cedar grows very extensively, as we all know, in Quebec and in the northern section of New Brunswick, and we do not have to haul cedar ties any distance. In the eastern section we use hemlock, and also what is called prince's pine.

Mr. COCHRANE. I understood the minister to say that on the Canada Eastern the ties are too far apart, and he was asking a sum of money to put in more, and that he was also going to ask more money to put in ties all along the line. Could the minister say what time would elapse from the time he puts in additional ties, to make them closer together, and the time when he renews the old ties ?

Mr. EMMERSON. About a year and a-half. We do not have to take up the track in order to replace old ties.

Additional sidings along the line, $26,100.

Mr. EMMERSON. One of these is at Campbellton, increasing the yard ; one at Sussex, the extension of a siding, costing $674. The Campbellton expenditure includes the purchase of land, which, along with the siding, will cost $10,900. A siding at Sandy Cove, near Halifax, will cost $1,000. There is a siding at Nelson, costing $748. There is a siding at Johnson's road and at Chatham junction there is an extension. About $1,000 will be required for these items. Then at Cushman's, Chelmsford, Grey Rapids and Coughlan's, there are sidings costing about $2,700 altogether. There is one each at Upper Blackville, Weaver's and Brierly's brook, costing $1,500 ; one at Carroll's, one at McNamee's, one at McGivney's, one at Durham, one at Penniac and one at Gibson. These last that I have named cost about $4,000. There is one at Pictou landing, on the opposite side from the town of Pictou, in Nova Scotia, costing $1,600. The total of the items is about $26,100.

Mr. FOSTER. Are any of these renewals of sidings ?

Mr. EMMERSON. They are not renewals they are additions.

To eliminate two road crossings at rail level at the Cape Road crossing, near Dorchester, New Brunswick, $2,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is the balance of the expenditure made at Dorchester for a subway eliminating two level crossings. It was a very dangerous place. There have been quite a number of lives lost. There was a bad curve there and the crossings were hidden from view. I had an appropriation of $4,000 for this work last year. The balance required to meet the expense necessary is $2,000. The total cost will be about $6,000.

Mr. INGRAM. Is that the reverse curve near a bridge that the hon. gentleman brought up last year ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, that reverse curve near a bridge is at St. Leonard's Junction in the province of Quebec.

Prince Edward Island Railway—dwelling for agent at Bloomfield, $715.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that outside of the station house ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is outside of the station house.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know what the policy of the government is in reference to that, whether it is proposed now to commence and build dwelling houses for the agents. The hon. minister will see that if there is a dwelling house built for one agent in one place there will be demands upon him for dwelling houses for agents in other places. The expense of one house is small, but if this is going to be taken as the policy of the government it is going to add an immense sum to the obligations of a railway which is now not paying. It does not seem to show anything but a backward tendency under the hon. gentleman's management.

Mr. EMMERSON. I quite agree with the idea that my hon. friend is throwing out with regard to the construction of dwellings. Certainly it is not the policy of the department to construct dwellings except where it is absolutely necessary ; that is where the station is situated so that it is impossible for the agent to secure a residence near the scene of his work It is important to have the agent always right near the station. In the olden time on the Intercolonial Railway, or rather before it became the Intercolonial Railway, they started out building station houses that included dwellings upstairs for the agents. There is quite a number of these, as my hon. friend very well knows, between Moncton and St. John on what is now known as the Intercolonial Railway, but which was known as the European and North American Railway in days gone by. That was necessary because in establishing stations as they did they were unable to do so in settled communities and the station agent could not get a dwelling house. The policy is gradually changing and in constructing new stations we eliminate the dwelling house feature in almost every instance, but where it is impossible for the agent to secure a dwelling by rental near the station we find it necessary to build a dwelling house for him adjoining the station. We sometimes utilize an old building. These conditions prevail in Prince Edward Island, as I am advised, and it is necessary at this place, and I think at some other places on the island to which my attention has been invited, to do this. It is done upon the report of the officials. It is purely departmental and it is only done where it is necessary. The general policy of the department is not to furnish dwellings. If we furnish a dwelling, of course the officials get the benefit of it; but those who are not so favoured receive compensation in lieu of it; that is to say, an allowance is made for the rental paid for them. There is no discrimination. All are treated alike and it is regulated by agreement with the Telegrapher's Union, which comprises amongst its membership the station agents along the line of the Intercolonial Railway and Prince Edward Island Railway

Mr. FOSTER. Is Bloomfield in an utterly unsettled portion of the country in Prince Edward Island ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not put it in that sense. Sometimes these stations are so situated that no one else builds near them. Towns do not grow up around them. Prince Edward Island is peculiarly situated. It is an agricultural province as we know. There are no thickly settled communities. The stations are isolated. They do not gather houses and little stores around them like they do in other sections of the Dominion.

Charlottetown—extension of railway track along water front, $7,150.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is to extend the track to the wharf where the winter boat lands. We took $5,000 last year, the total estimated expenditure is $12,150.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is only one other item in the supplementaries and I want to discuss it myself.

Mr. FOSTER. Can you discuss it now ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not in a position to give some information to the committee, but if the item is passed I will discuss it in connection with another item which is reserved.

Mr. FOSTER. What item is it ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Working expenses of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. We want to have a little talk about that.

Mr. EMMERSON. I want to talk about it myself; I do not intend to let my hon. friend do all the talking.

Mr. A. MARTIN. When will this item be discussed?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am waiting for some information.

Mr. FOSTER. The session is young yet; if you are not ready take your time.

Mr. A. MARTIN. The House made an order in February last for information concerning the erection and location of a railway station at Charlottetown.

Mr. EMMERSON. Those papers were laid on the table yesterday.

Mr. R. MARTIN. There was also a return ordered with regard to the extension of branch line in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. EMMERSON. I thought that was brought down; I will inquire about it.

Gratuity to Jeffrey Foot, ex-tide waiter, Halifax, $500.

Mr. PATERSON. Mr. Jeffrey Foot was appointed a tide waiter in His Majesty's customs at the port of Halifax, Nova Scotia, on the 1st February, 1895, at a salary of $500 per annum. His age at the time of appointment was 53 years so that he did not come within the provisions of the Superannuation Act—the age limit provided by such Act being 45 years. On the 22nd January, 1903, while acting as locker at warehouse No. 14, of the port of Halifax, Mr. Foot met with an accident which greatly aggravated a disease from which he was suffering and in consequence he was permanently disabled. While discharging his duties on the day referred to a teamster came driving along at a rapid rate, the shaft of the wagon knocked Mr. Foot down, he was trampled by the horse and the wagon passed over him. His head was badly cut and he was unconscious for a considerable time. He has made a statutory declaration setting forth the cause of the accident as before stated and the circumstances as narrated are verified by affidavits of Mr. A. S. Taylor, a clerk, and Mr. A. O. Gastonguay, a merchant, who were eye witnesses of the accident. The Department of Customs gave Mr. Foot the only relief possible under the law, which was payment of his salary for 12 months. Section 10 of the Civil Service Superannuation Act provides that if any officer is constrained to quit the service before the period of superannuation, ten years, by reason of severe bodily injury, received without his own fault, in the discharge of his public duty, the Governor in Council may allow him a gratuity not exceeding three months pay for every two years service. Taking into account the extra year during which Mr. Foot was paid as a public officer his service would only amount to nine years or one year less than the period covered by the Civil Service Act. On the basis provided in section 10 of the Superannuation Act the gratuity to be allowed Mr. Foot would be $500, namely: three months salary at $500 per annum, $125, multiplied by 4 as his full service was 4½ times 2 years service.

Gratuity of two months salary to widow of J. B. Shadwell, late acting collector of customs at Whitehorse, $233.33.

Mr. PATERSON. Mr. Howard B. Shadwell, acting collector of customs at Whitehorse, Yukon, died of diphtheria on the 14th October, 1904. His daughter died two days before him of the same disease. Mr. Shadwell left a widow and four children, one a baby of six months old, and it is stated by Mr. Robert Lowe, a member of the Yukon council, that owing to sickness in the house and the cost of living in the Yukon his family is left practically destitute. Mr. Shadwell was employed from 22nd of December, 1896, and his salary at the time of his decease was $1,400 per annum. Being an acting officer he did not contribute to either the superannuation fund or the retirement fund and not being permanently appointed by Order in Council his widow is not, under the law, entitled to the usual gratuity of two month's salary.

Gratuity of two months' salary to the widow of the late John Turner, in his lifetime acting sub-collector of customs at the outport of Caribou Crossing, $200.

Mr. PATERSON. Mr. Turner died on the 29th of March last from heart disease. The correspondence in the department shows that Mr. Turner had many misfortunes in his family immediately preceding his demise, as in September, 1904, he lost one daughter, and was obliged to remove another from the country in order to save her life. Not being permanently appointed, he did not contribute either to the superannuation fund or to the retirement fund; and owing to the heavy expenses caused by his own illness and that of members of his family, the remaining members of the family are in pecuniary want. In view of the fact that he was not a contributor to either of the funds above mentioned, his family are not entitled, under the law, to the usual two months' gratuity, and, owing to the peculiar circumstances of the case, it has been deemed advisable to ask for a vote equivalent to such an amount. Mr. Turner entered the service on the 24th January, 1891, and, after serving for some years at Vancouver, B.C., was transferred to Dawson in the month of September, 1899, and to Caribou crossing, on the 6th of June, 1902.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

River St. Lawrence ship channel, Marine Department—further amount required on account of the construction of a dredge for improvement of the channel below Quebec, $100,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This amount is required for immediate disbursements on account of material and labour towards the construction of a sea-going, steel, twin-screw, suction, hopper dredge for improvements to the river St. Lawrence ship channel below Quebec, to be constructed at the government works at Sorel. Estimated cost, $350,000. The thirty foot channel at low water between Quebec and Montreal is now well on towards completion. In two or three years we will have vessels sailing between Montreal and Quebec at all stages of the tide, while below Quebec there is at one place only 20 feet at low tide. In the spring of 1901 the matter was brought to the attention of the Minister of Public Works by the shipping interest of Montreal. The officers of the Marine and Fisheries Department of Quebec, who had an intimate knowledge of this part of the river, strongly recommended the north channel, commencing below the Island of Orleans, as being better, easier navigated and more clear of ice in winter. Orders were given to the staff of the River St. Lawrence ship channel to make a survey and examination of the north channel with a view to reporting on the practicability and cost of improving that route and adopting it for navigation. In 1902 a similar survey was made of the south channel to ascertain what improvements would be required to make a thirty foot channel on the line of the present route. A comprehensive report was made on February 24, 1903, to the acting chief engineer of the Public Works Department on the question of the proposed improvement below Quebec. The engineer, who is now superintending engineer of the work being carried out on the St. Lawrence by this department, Mr. Cowie, reported that the difficulties by either route are between Murray bay and St. Jean, Isle d'Orleans. The dredger required for either would be practically the same, the material everywhere being soft. It was estimated that for either route, the cost, including the required plant, to give a thirty foot channel, 1,000 feet wide, would be about $1,000,000, and it was urged that immediate steps should be taken to provide the dredge, as it would require a year and a half to build. Mr. Cowie did not recommend the adoption of either route, but advised that the choice should meet with the approval of the underwriters, the shipping interest and the pilots. The decision as to the route need not be given at once. The Transportation Commission visited the locality, going over each channel and took evidence on the subject, and it is hoped that they will go further into the question and give an opinion. In the meantime the superintending engineer has submitted the proposal that the plant be constructed and the present south channel dredged to thirty feet and to a width of say 500 feet. This could be done, it is estimated, in two seasons. Then, if considered advisable, the dredging of the north channel Traverse shoals could be undertaken.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much has been expended ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Not a cent yet, but we are figuring on ordering the necessary material in order to start the work. The work will be done at the Sorel shipyards. It will be one of the most modern and improved dredges.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. A suction dredge ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. A suction and hopper dredge at the same time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman spoke of the Transportation Commission having visited this locality, did they make any suggestion or report ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They made a report which I have not before me. It stands to reason that if you have a thirty foot channel between Montreal and Quebec, you must also have a thirty foot channel between Quebec and the Gulf, and there are shoals at different points below Quebec where the water is only twenty feet deep at low tide.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When do you expect to complete the dredge ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In eighteen months.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then how long will it take to dredge the channel ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In two seasons the work will be done in the south channel because we will be able to get the help of other dredges now working between Montreal and Quebec. We have seven dredges finishing the work between Montreal and Quebec, and in eighteen months we shall be able to take away two or three of them and use them in the south channel below Quebec. After the south channel is dredged, we will work in the north channel.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These two channels continue only a portion of the distance ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. About thirty-five miles. One is on the north side of the island of Orleans and the other is on the south side. In days gone by, the north channel was the one used, but at that time vessels had not the draught they have now. The south channel was then adopted and greatly improved ; but at two points near Murray bay and Beauchemin, there are shoals where the water at low tide is only twenty feet. This means a delay of six or seven hours when steamers strike those points at low water.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the rise and the fall of the tide ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. About 18 feet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This will give two channels, and it is contemplated that each will be a 30-foot channel ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, at the lowest point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minimum depth. And what will be the minimum width ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Five hundred feet. The north channel, when completed, will be about a mile. It is very deep water, except at certain points. There is very little to be done on the north channel, except at the northeast end of the island of Orleans.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. minister (Mr. Préfontaine) spoke of the Transportation Commission. We do not hear very much about that commission now. It began its work, I think, about two years ago this summer. But we have not had the advantage of its wisdom, except that upon one occasion, I think, they made a short report with regard to some particular locality. There is danger that we shall have completed all our arrangements with respect to the matters this commission was to investigate before we receive its report. And it would be most unfortunate if it should advise something altogether different from the measures we are now engaged in carrying out. Of course, it is quite possible—as great minds think alike—that the government may be proceeding exactly along the lines which the Transportation Commission will eventually advise. But will it not be possible for the government to stimulate the activity of the commission a little, and so enable us, some time before the end of the present century, to find out what it is doing or what it advises ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This Transportation Commission, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) is aware, is not under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but is under the control of the Department of Public Works. I must admit there has been a good deal of delay, but it is due to circumstances over which we had no control. As he knows, one of the gentlemen on that commission was sick for a long time and died a few months ago. Another member of the commission, Mr. Fry, of Quebec, resigned a few months ago. The work of the commission was suspended because of these things. As to the work which pertains to my department—the work of the ship channel—I must say that every time we were in doubt as to what should be done, I gave Mr. Cowie, the engineer in charge, instructions to consult with them. Everything we are doing as to the ship channel proper has received the approval of the commission. Of course, in years past there was much careful study of the St. Lawrence channel and its needs by the engineers of the Department of Public Works; and, on any points that may have been in doubt, though our engineers had their own opinion formed as regards these points, Mr. Cowie has always acted with due care, and I am quite sure that any work he has recommended, and which is in process of being carried out, will be found to be such that it need not be done over again. The plan has been carefully thought out. These improvements will be finished within four or five years. Then, if the question arises of further widening or deepening of the channel, the public, especially those interested in transportation and navigation, will find that no mistakes have been made. The work has been efficiently carried on under my predecessor as Minister of Public Works, and, since it has been under my charge, I have given it my personal attention. These works have received the unanimous approval of those connected with navigation. We have been pressed by the boards of trade, the shipping federation and other similar bodies to carry out the work as fast as possible so as to meet the demands of our commerce.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am afraid the hon. gentleman (Mr. Préfontaine) has not had his rights. He had an Order in Council passed transferring to him a portion of the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the Department of Public Works. But he did not have that Order in Council so framed as to take over the Transportation Commission. I think that the Transportation Commission should have come under his jurisdiction, and then he would have been in a better position to answer to-day. When this Transportation Commission was first constituted, in 1903, we were told by the Order in Council that it was useless to proceed unless the government were advised by experts so that they could engage in some comprehensive scheme for the improvement of our transportation facilities for internal and export trade. When we criticised the government later on for proceeding with a great railway policy without appointing that commission or waiting for its report, the Prime Minister (Sr Wilfrid Laurier) gave the reason that this Transportation Commission would devote particular attention to the water-ways of Canada, which are now largely under the control of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine). But we find that, not only did the government not wait for the report of the commission before embarking upon a great railway policy, but it is not waiting for that report before entering upon a policy of developing the water-ways. I am not criticising the expenditure of money for developing the St. Lawrence route; I have always advocated the development of that route and the expenditure for that purpose of any reasonable sum. But I call attention to the appointment of a commission under Order in Council, which declares that the government cannot embark upon a comprehensive scheme without expert advice, such as would be given by this commission, and I point out though that commission has been constituted for two years and has not made a report of any value, the government is proceeding exactly as if no commission had been appointed. In other words, the government is treating the appointment and the work of the commission as a farce, and is proceeding to deal with matters on which the commission was supposed to advise, exactly as if no commission had been appointed, or as if it did not expect to receive assistance or advice from that commission which would be of the slightest value. I would respectfully submit to the hon. minister (Mr. Préfontaine)—because I think that, after all, the Transportation Commission should be under his control, if it is not—that the government should do one of two things; it should either desist from pretending that this commission is going to be of service to us, disband that commission and save the country further expense on its account, or they should insist that the commission proceed with due diligence and make out a report, so that these works can be carried on with the assistance which we expected to receive from the commission when it was appointed. I think that is a perfectly logical position.

I understand of course that the difficulties referred to by the minister have supervened; there was sickness and death, then there was a resignation. But I venture to think there are gentlemen in this country just as familiar with the interests of transportation and with the proper mode in which to deal with the development of our water-ways and an inland system of navigation, as any gentleman who is a member of that commission to-day. Let us grant that they are proper persons to be appointed to that commission, the men who now compose it; but no one of us supposes that they monopolize all the knowledge or all the wisdom with regard to this question that can be gathered up in Canada. I once more respectfully suggest, and urge, and insist that either the commission should proceed with due diligence, so that we may know from its report whether the course entered upon by the government in developing the water-ways of the St. Lawrence is a proper course, or that they should cease to make a pretense of going on with the work of the commission at all. Does the minister know, for example, whether, within the last three months—we will go further back, since this session began on the 11th of January last, whether within the last five months, that commission has held a single sitting, has taken a single step, has done any work whatever, has made any progress with the duties which were entrusted to it by parliament in the summer of 1902. I think at least we ought to have some information on that point from the minister who, although this commission may not be under the exclusive control of his department, nevertheless is a member of the government which does control that commission. It seems to me that in making that request for information. I am not at all exceeding the legitimate duty of an opposition in making inquiry with regard to the expenditure of public money.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In answer to the hon. leader of the opposition, I may say that I do not know what the commission has done since the beginning of this session ; my impression is that they have done nothing, by reason of the resignation of one of the members and of the death of another. As I have said, the commission is not under my control, though of course I am a member of the government under whose control it is. I must state also that the works which pertain to the ship channel were decided upon and were carried out without the aid of the commission, except in one or two cases where they were consulted by the superintending engineer with regard to certain improvements. The improvements of the channel were decided upon, and have been carried on, even before the commission was appointed. I understand that the scope of the commission was mostly to consider the question of transportation as regards the great lakes, transportation by water as well as by rail. It was especially for that purpose that the commission was appointed. Of course, in special cases they may have been called upon to examine certain points, they may have been sitting as experts on certain improvements, such as improvements contemplated in the harbous of St. John, as well as in the harbour of Halifax and other places. But with regard to the ship channel, I state again that the plan of improvement was laid out a number of years ago, and was matured before the commission was appointed. The commission only pronounced on this ship channel between Montreal and Quebec, as well as between Quebec and the Gulf, in cases where there may have been some doubt as regards the best locality in which to make the improvements. All the plans for improving the ship channel of the St. Lawrence have received their full approbation. I do not know when the commission will be reorganized so as to go on with their work. The hon. gentleman must understand that under present circumstances all the departments are very busy ; parliament has now been in session nearly five months and with all the work that has been thrown upon us, it is impossible to go on with much outside work. For my part I can say that I have had all I could do to conduct the affairs of my department, and prosecute the work in a manner that the public interests require.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that, and of course if this commission had been making reports and suggestions during the past eighteen months, as it might have been, the hon. gentleman's duties might have been much lightened. He may have been doing a great deal of work that should have been done by this commission.

Mr PREFONTAINE. Not as regards the ship channel.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps not. I understand the ship channel is necessary in order that ocean vessels may reach Montreal, that is apparent to all of us. We must have a thirty foot channel, we must have that highway made secure, and safe, and as perfect as we can make it having regard of course to the resources of the country. But the channel of the St. Lawrence is only part of a great system of inland water-ways that reaches into the very heart of this country. What I object to is that while this commission has been practically doing nothing for two years, so far as giving advice to parliament is concerned, we are dealing with part of this great system of inland water-ways, we are developing part of it, and we do not know whether it is exactly the development that would be best if we take into consideration the whole system of the great lakes and everything that pertains to them. It is impossible to tell how the expenditure of money in the St. Lawrence in connection with the great lakes might be modified if we had the report of a commission composed of gentlemen thoroughly acquainted with the subject, who had devoted their attention to it for a year, or six months, or eight months, and who came to parliament with a well considered report. I do not see that we are any nearer to receiving assistance from that commission than we were when it was first appointed. They have held certain sessions, they have gone to different parts of the country, they have made one interim report with regard to some locality on the great lakes. Apart from that, parliament has not had one single word of advice or assistance from that commission since its appointment. I understand the commission was constituted according to the terms of an Order in Council that was brought down to parliament, and the situation was described as urgent by that Order in Council. That Order in Council, I always regarded as a very able document, I do not know who was the author of it, but I consider that it was drawn up by some gentleman who was thoroughly acquainted with the needs of the transportation system in Canada. I always thought that the work of a commission of experts proceeding along the lines of that Order in Council would be of great advantage and assistance to parliament and to the country. What I find fault with is that, although that commission has been appointed for nearly a year, although it has been going on at a very great expense to the people of this country, although its report is urgently required, as the government then stated in that Order in Council, for the development of our transportation in connection with our great inland water-ways, nevertheless we are going on exactly as we were before the commission was appointed, with an appropriation of $100,000 here and $200,000 there; we are dealing with the work piecemeal and not according to any comprehensive or well considered scheme. What I would like to know from some member of the government before we vote many more of these appropriations is this: When will the commission really get at work, when will it make a partial or complete report and when will we have its assistance here, so that we may know whether to vote money for such a purpose as this? If my hon. friend is not able to answer that question to-night, because, as he says, he has not the commission under his control, it seems to me that the government should see to it that the information is laid at once before parliament as to the proceedings of this commission.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is rather unusual to ask a member of the government who has a department perfectly well defined to furnish certain information which he declares is not in his possession and cannot be in his possession. At the present time the commission is composed only of one man, Mr. Reford. There is not even a secretary. The secretary is dead. He died about two months ago, so that a reorganization of this commission is required to know what has been the work that has been done and what are the recommendations that are to be made. I state again that the plans of my department as regards the ship channel were approved unanimously by the commission. The superintending engineer, in the season of 1903, under my direction accompanied that commission on a tour of inspection of the whole channel with charts, maps, plans and everything connected with the works which had been executed and the works which were contemplated and for which certain amounts of money are asked to be voted by parliament in these supplementary estimates. We know perfectly well where we are going. We are executing a plan perfectly defined and known to the public generally and especially known to the shipping federation. The plan which is being executed by the department received the sanction and approval of the shipping federation years ago. We are carrying out the work as fast as we can, in order to give satisfaction to the shipping federation. As regards this part of the work of improving the facilities for inland navigation it is under the control of my department. The great lakes are not under my control except as regards aids to navigation such as lighting, but the channel of the St. Lawrence, which means that part of the national route extending from Montreal to the gulf is under my control. The work of deepening and straightening the channel and putting it in such shape that it will give satisfaction to the public has been under the control of my department since the 1st of July 1904. I am aware of what has been done. I have studied the plans and everything connected with these improvements and I have studied what is contemplated to be done. What is contemplated to be done has received the approbation of the commission, so that, whether there is a report or whether there is no report from the commission, we know where we are going and what we are doing. What we are doing has received the approbation of the shipping federation and is receiving their approbation to the extent that they are pressing the government to complete these improvements as fast as it is posible to carry them out. As a member of the government I can only state that this commission will certainly be reorganized within the shortest possible time and will be put back to work so that they can present a complete report to parliament or even an interim report as to what has been done. Although the secretary is dead and although one of the most important members of the commission is dead also, I suppose there are documents, there is a record of the expert evidence which has been given and drafts of reports which the new members of the commission can take up and deal with. I repeat again it has no reference at all to the ship channel except that the interim report which has been already made refers to certain improvements which require to receive the approbation of that commission. We have not asked for this amount without knowing what would be the result of the work. The work is approved by the shipping federation and everybody connected with navigation. We want this part of the national route to be improved and to be put in such shape as to afford a necessary guarantee to the shipping federation. We want that work to be completed as soon as possible taking into consideration the means at the disposal of the country. I think it is well understood by everybody in this House and every body outside of this House that in going on with these improvements in the way we are going on with them we are working upon a definite plan and there is no risk that later on there may be changes. If there be some changes later on they will only be changes necessary to the improvement of the work ; that is in making the depth greater than it is, 20 feet, and making the width at certain points more than it is at the present moment. At the narrowest point the channel is 350 feet wide. At some points it is 500 feet and at some other points, where it is not absolutely necessary to dredge, it goes to 800 feet and even to a mile. But, the improvements that may be made in the future in a part of the channel, after it is considered to be completed, will be only improvements in the way of increasing the depth or the width of the channel or securing increased aids to navigation so as to make it a perfectly safe route.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course the shipping federation is merely a private organization. While its recommendations may be entitled to every possible respect it has not the official status of a body such as the Transportation Commission, appointed under a statute of this country and under an Order in Council for a special and particular purpose. I understand the hon. minister to say that it has made a report in respect to the particular matter for which we are now voting this money. That report was in writing, perhaps, or was it merely informal ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It was in writing. The report applies especially to the other item of $115,000, not to this item, because it was necessary that we should secure a dredge to make the channel what it should be.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It has no special connection with this item ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was the report referred to in writing ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, it was a report in writing. I think it was laid before the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the hon. gentleman certain that it was laid before the House.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I remember making allusion to it when discussing the main estimates this year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I hope the hon. gentleman will be good enough to let me have a copy of it. The very fact that there has been a report made on this matter is the best possible evidence of the connection of the work of the Transportation Commission with the hon. gentleman's department. The work of that commission may not relate exclusively to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but it is very closely associated with a number of matters which are within the jurisdiction of that department. The difficulty is that the Minister of Marine tells us that the Transportation Commission is not within his department, while the Minister of Public Works says, that the river St. Lawrence from Montreal to Quebec and below is not under his department, and therefore he does not know what the Transportation Commission is doing . We desire that some one should be authorized to speak for the government who will be able to tell us what this commission is doing, when it is to be reconstituted, and why there has been such delay. A few years ago the government thought the appointment of this commission a very serious and urgent matter, and yet the Minister of Marine speaks to-day as if a delay of four or five months was nothing at all. When we have an office vacated under the Crown by death or resignation it does not usually take four or five months to fill it as has been the case with the office of secretary to the commission. If this commission is of anything like the importance that was attributed to it by the government when it was appointed, then the government should have reconstituted it when a death occurred and insisted that it should proceed with its work or else disband it altogether and not pretend that its work is of importance to the country. If the commission is of importance its work should proceed ; if it is not of importance let it be terminated. I do not pretend that the Minister of Marine is more at fault than any of the other ministers ; I put the same question to the Prime Minister two months ago and he gave me just about as much information as the Minister of Marine gave me to-night.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. He must have given more.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He gave no more and certainly he could not give any less. If the government regard this commission as of any importance why in the name of all that is sensible do they not take steps to enable it to carry on its work and insist on its doing so. Then if the commission does not carry on its work let the government ask the members to resign and appoint others who will attend to their duties. The Minister of Marine knows very well that my criticism is justified ; I will not press him further to-night but I will insist that the government shall give some answer at an early date.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I never intended to belittle the importance of this commission because I think its work is of the highest importance to the future of transportation in Canada. What I did say was that these works between Montreal and Quebec and Quebec and the Gulf had been planned and decided on before the commission was appointed so that whether there was a commission or not it would not prevent the progress of the work for which this vote is asked. I think it is the intention of the government to have this commission reorganized as soon as possible and to report all the information gathered.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Under what department does the expenditure for this commission come ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The Department of Public Works.

Mr. AMES. To return to the vote for the dredge, will the minister kindly tell us what is the proposed type of dredge and its estimated capacity ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In reply to the hon. gentleman I may read the following :

Description, requirements and general specifications of a sea-going, hopper, hydraulic dredge, for the improvement of the ship channel in the River St. Lawrence, below Quebec.

General description—The hull to be of steel. The vessel to be self-propelled by a pair of independent engines, twin screws, with a draft when loaded of not more than 15 feet. The capacity of the hoppers to be from 1,000 to 1,200 cubic yards. To be capable of dredging to a depth of 60 feet. The speed of the vessel when loaded to not be less than 8 knots per hour. Hull—The hull to be of the same general type as that of the dredge 'W. S. Fielding,' with at least two feet more free board, 3 feet greater width, and as nearly the same length as practicable. Well—The well to be designed so as to take a hydraulic deepening frame, with cutter of the same type as the dredge 'J. Israel Tarte,' and at the same time to have the dimensions so as to be suitable for an elevator deepening frame, if at any future time the dredge should be changed to one of the elevator type. Engines—The propelling marine engines to be similar to those of the dredge 'W. S. Fielding.' Cutter—The cutter to be of the same type and size as the one which has given excellent satisfaction on the dredge 'J. Israel Tarte.' A new pattern, however, to be made with additional knives and improved design which may be set up in the shop and revolved so as to obtain the proper shape and adjustment for the knives. Hydraulic suction pipe—The intake pipe to be similar in design to that of the dredge 'J. Israel Tarte,' but reduced in size so as to increase the velocity of the discharge into the hoppers. Centrifugal pump—The pump and connections to be similar in design and arragement to the dredge 'J. Israel Tarte.' Main marine engine—To be of exactly the same design, and made from the same patterns as the one on the dredge 'J. Israel Tarte.' With a contracted intake pipe, and a discharge into hoppers, this engine will have adundant capacity for the duty to be performed. Boilers—The vessel to be equipped with four marine boilers similar to those on the dredge 'W. S. Fielding,' only smaller, to give a capacity equal to the present equipment of the dredge 'J. Israel Tarte.' Winches—The bow, stern and side manoeuvering winches to be of the same type as the present improved equipment of the dredge 'Tarte.' Hoppers—The hoppers to be similar to those on the dredge 'W. S. Fielding' with slightly increased capacity. The doors to be replaced by circular valve gates, a mechanical attachment being proposed for starting the dumping of the material, the flushing to be done by the main centrifugal pump. Well—The framing of the well and foundations for the 'A' frames to be so designed that at any future date the hydraulic machinery could be removed and replaced by elevator machinery, to be driven by shafting from the main marine engine. Discharging features—The dredge to be designed to pump the material directly into the hoppers, but connections to be constructed in such a manner that without any important changes arrangements to be made either to dump the material into scows or to discharge it through a pipe similar to the manner of disposal on the dredge 'J. Israel Tarte.'

The approximate estimated cost is $350,000.

Mr. AMES. I understand that the dredge is a combination of the 'J. Israel Tarte' type and the 'W. S. Fielding' type ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. AMES. Is it to be built entirely by day labour at Sorel ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes. Some of the fittings will have to be made elsewhere, and tenders will be asked for those ; but otherwise the work will be done by day labour by the men in the employ of the department at Sorel, as the work was done on the 'J. Israel Tarte' and the 'W. S. Fielding.'

Mr. AMES. Can the minister tell us the estimated capacity of this dredge—the amount of work expected of her ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I gave the capacity of the hoppers—from 1,000 to 1,200 yards in 10 hours. She is supposed to work twenty-four hours like the others of similar capacity which we have.

Mr. AMES. Is it larger than any other dredge presently owned by the government ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It will be about the size of the 'J. Israel Tarte.'

Mr. AMES. Can the minister tell us what the 'J. Israel Tarte' cost to build ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I could not tell that. The 'J. Israel Tarte' was built by the Department of Public Works three or four years ago. The hon. gentleman can get the information from the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. AMES. But that is not the point. What I wish to know is whether the sum of $350,000 which we are now asked to vote is more or less than the cost of similar dredges which have been built by the government ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I must say that it is less than the cost of the 'J. Israel Tarte,' which was the first of the kind built, and on which there was a good deal of expenditure incurred which will not require to be repeated. For instance, the plans, &c., connected with it, cost, I think, in the neighbourhood of $15,000. We require to make no such expenditure on this. That being the only dredge on the continent of the kind, a good deal of the work had to be done experimentally, causing a good deal of delay, and bringing the cost of the dredge nearer to $400,000 than to $350,000. From the reports that Mr. Cowie has made, we think the cost will be within $350,000. In the construction of the 'J. Israel Tarte,' a good deal of the work was scattered, because the means for doing it were not in the shipyard ; but now all this preparatory work has been done, and will not be charged against the new dredge.

Mr. AMES. Do I understand that from the previous experience of dredge building, you have practically the plans and specifications for this dredge in the department ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, and plans on which there is room for improvement. Mr. Cowie has reported that there are two types of dredges of a debatable kind—the 'J. Israel Tarte' and the 'W. S. Fielding.' They are different in some ways, but they have been built under the same engineers ; and Mr. Robinson, a man, I am told, of very great experience, and profiting by his knowledge of the construction of these two dredges, has prepared the plans of a dredge that will be almost perfection in the class of large and expensive dredges.

Mr. AMES. Will this new dredge when completed be capable of performing any work different from that which the 'J. Israel Tarte' or the 'W. S. Fielding' can do to-day ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I may say that she will be different from the 'J. Israel Tarte' which is not a hopper dredge, nor a sea-going dredge. This one will be a sea-going dredge, and will combine the suction principle with the elevating. It will be able to work in sixty feet of water, whereas the 'J. Israel Tarte' cannot work in more than thirty-five or forty feet of water. Of course, I do not depreciate that dredge, which is one of the marvellous dredges of this continent. She has done work, where the material afforded her a chance to work continuously, at the marvellously low rate of 1⅞ cents a yard. The dredge is a wonderful dredge, and has been pronounced such by experts from the United States. But if you combine the hopper and the suction principle in one dredge, and make her sea-going and capable of dredging in sixty feet of water, you can understand the difference between the two, although this one will cost less than the 'J. Israel Tarte.'

Mr. AMES. Are any of the other dredges owned by the department sea-going dredges ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. None. The 'W. S. Fielding' is a sea-going dredge, but she belongs to the Department of Public Works, which is dredging in the gulf. My jurisdiction does not extend farther than the beginning of the gulf. At the present moment, I know perfectly well, there is only one single dredge on this continent able to do the work at St. John, owing to the difficulties of that work, due to the difference in the height of the water through the action of the tides. I think it is of advantage to the country that we should have a dredge capable of doing this special work.

Mr. AMES. This feature of the dredge that she was to be a seagoing dredge was not brought out before, I believe. I was about to point out to the minister that it would take about eighteen months to complete this dredge, and, as he has said it would take about eighteen months to finish the work from Batiscan to Quebec. So he would have at his disposal the fleet of dredges engaged in that work. But, if they are not sea-going dredges, I can see why he should have need of a new dredge of that kind. But that point, as I said, had not previously been brought out.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is a very important part of the channel, between Quebec and Montreal, which will call for the work of almost the whole fleet of dredges, except the suction dredge, 'J. Israel Tarte.' Below Cap à la Roche the material to be taken out is so hard that it was thought the work could not be done except by reinforcement of our elevator dredges. There are three or four elevator dredges that we proposed to put on this Cap à la Roche work, and it will take them probably three seasons to bring that work to a conclusion. I explain this in order that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) may understand why we shall not have the fleet of dredges available for other work for about three years.

Mr. AMES. Is it the intention of the department to keep a separate account of the money spent for wages, material and sub-contracts that go into this dredge, so that we may be able to understand, when the dredge is completed, exactly what she has cost ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. When I took over control of the shipyard at Sorel, the first thing I did was to have an inventory made of the stock there. Then I had some expert accountants look through the books to see how the expenditure had been divided and controlled. I must say that I discovered no records that would show exactly how the expenditure was divided amongst the different pieces of work. Of course, there was no urgent necessity to do so. But it became a necessity for the department under my control to have the books so kept that we should charge every cent of expenditure to each boat or dredge that would come into the yard, the simple reason for that necessity being that we were doing work not only for ourselves, but for the Department of Public Works. I have organized a system of bookkeeping by which every expenditure is charged to the special work to which it applies. If we repair a dredge we know exactly what those repairs cost; if we do a piece of work for the Department of Public Works we know what we should charge against them for it. So, it goes without saying that every expenditure on this new dredge will be entered on the books in such a way that we shall know exactly how much that dredge costs. Of course, a fair average is charged for all machines and other things that have been provided as a part of the general equipment.

Mr. AMES. So, when the dredge is completed the minister will be able to give us an exact statement of what she has cost?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Absolutely—unless of course, the books are not kept exactly as the men have been instructed to keep them.

Mr. AMES. And the minister will be able to give us from time to time a statement of the work turned out by the Sorel shipyard so that we may see whether the sums appropriated to the shipyard yield a return in manufactured and repaired articles?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Exactly.

Mr. AMES. That is important because it is necessary that we should know from time to time whether the work can be done cheaper by contract. And in this connection, I would like to ask if the minister considers the advisability of having this dredge built by contract, and, if so, why he decided in the negative?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This question has received the serious consideration of the superintending engineer, Mr. Cowie and he has consulted upon it the superintendent of the shipyards who is also a competent engineer. They came to the conclusion to do the work as we are doing it; as to the material and certain parts of the machinery to ask for prices before undertaking to do the work. All this has been thoroughly studied and we think that in doing as we have done we shall have the best satisfaction.

Mr. AMES. There is one other feature to which I would call the minister's attention. I see that this item of $100,000 is to be charged to capital account. That is to be borrowed money and to be included in the consolidated account of the country. Now, the dredge it appears to me, should not be charged to capital account because it is practically a tool, a machine, which after several years labour will necessarily be discarded and sold for old material. I think it should be chargeable to income, because it appears to me that it is not justly classed with such permanent works as the excavation of canals or the construction of railways.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It has been the practice of the government, under different administrations, to treat these expenditures as this is being treated. All the dredges and all the boats are charged to capital account, and the question has not arisen in this case why there should be a change of policy. This dredge will certainly be such a fixture that will last the lives of many of us. It will be nearly all of steel and the machinery will be very heavy and of the best construction.

Mr. AMES. The minister is probably aware that the most up-to-date business houses are in the habit of crediting themselves with a certain amount as representing machinery and then charging all machinery purchased to replace it to merchandise and not including it in the assets of the firm. The best business acounting is carried on in that way, and the Dominion of Canada ought not to be second in its methods of bookkeeping. At present while the government is enjoying an increasing revenue each year, it is possible for it to improve upon past methods. I would suggest that the government should establish a precedent in this direction and be more particular in charging items of this kind to income and not to capital. The fact that we may have charged them to capital in the past is no excuse for doing so in the future. We look to the government, with its ample revenue, to establish precedents in the right direction and here is an opportunity for them to do so.

Mr. BLAIN. How much would it cost to operate a dredge of this kind for a year and how many months during the year does it operate?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It operates about five months in the year and it is pretty hard to say how much it will cost to operate it. When the main estimates were being voted, I gave the figures which it would cost to run these dredges, and I can tell the hon. gentleman the approximate cost of running this dredge by taking as comparison our experience with the 'J. Israel Tarte' dredge. That is not the same kind of dredge, but it is doing the same work. We can work the dredge from the 15th May until the beginning of November, about five months. You cannot work the suction pump when it is frozen but you can work the elevator two or three weeks later. The 'J. Israel Tarte' we generally took in after four and a half months. She is only a suction dredge.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister made some reference to a change in the system of bookkeeping at Sorel shipyards, is there any system of auditing the accounts at the different government works?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We generally send one of the staff of the accountant's branch twice a year to the different works to audit the books. The accounts are transmitted here and the books are kept at the works for convenience sake. A duplicate of everything is sent to the department at Ottawa. Last year I sent a chartered accountant to Sorel to audit the books and see that everything was kept in good order.

To provide for permanent piers on Lake St. Peter and other places in the ship channel, including Beaujeu bank, $115,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Steps were taken by the department this season to inaugurate winter navigation, or at least to extend the season of navigation as much as possible in the spring and fall. For this purpose the floating lights, such as are largely used in the River St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec, are worse than useless when there is ice in the river. To enable any steps in this direction to be taken, it is necessary to have points, such as the turns in the dredged channel in Lake St. Peter, permanently marked by structures that will stand the ice pressure during the winter and the running ice in the spring. It has also been the custom to remove many of the lighthouses in this stretch of water in the fall and replace them in the spring after the ice has passed down. This of course cannot be done in future, and the foundations of these lights must be extended above high water mark and strengthened sufficiently to resist the ice. The amount of $115,000 is asked for to commence these improvements, including the construction of a similar pier at probably the most critical point in the river below Quebec, namely, at the sharp turn at Beaujeu bank near Crane island. The plans and specifications for this work have been prepared, tenders called for, and the contract has been awarded to Messrs. Griffing & Desnoyers, the lowest tenderers, for the sum of $25,000. The necessary expenses for examining the site, for preliminary services, and for the necessary superintendence and inspection during the construction, will add at least $2,000 to this amount. It is contemplated to construct four piers during this season. The cribwork is already done and these piers will be constructed at points on Lake St. Peter where they are necessary. We will then be able to install lights which will remain there during the whole winter. Since two or three seasons we have demands made by the steamship companies, which had steamers in Montreal after the 15th November, not to remove the buoys. We took the risk, and as late as the beginning of December ships were towed out to sea by tugs or vessels belonging to the Marine Department. This state of affairs cannot continue. If we are to have navigation as late as the beginning of December and even late in December—some years until the 1st January—it is necessary to have these piers and permanent lights at different points. That is an improvement which the shipping people have been asking for years. The two first that were installed were installed below Quebec at each end of the Traverse and they have given so much satisfaction that we have decided to build another one at Beaujeu bank. The work has been planned out, and tenders called for, and the contract will be given. It will be installed next season. Four other piers are under construction at Lake St. Peter and will be finished for the close of navigation this fall, so that we may be able to take away the buoys which are now only installed for the season and still have navigation prolonged late in the season.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that this is a new work and the plans have been approved and tenders called for. Who authorized this work? What right had the minister to spend the people's money without asking the consent of parliament?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That was part of the contemplated expenditure last year. Beaujeu Bank was specially mentioned as one of the works to be done and tenders were called for according to law. As regards the others, the work was begun by day labour by the employees of the department, in the ordinary way.

Mr. HENDERSON. From the wording of the item I take it to be an entirely new work. It reads thus: 'To provide for permanent piers in Lake St. Peter and other places in the ship channel, including Beaujeu bank, $115,000.' This does not appear to me to be the continuation of any work that had been previously undertaken, but something absolutely new, something that has originated since we last met in parliament, something that does not seem to have been contemplated, but that is a new idea of the minister and has originated entirely with himself, something that he thought he would carry out on his own account. It was a small matter, only $115,000, and the minister with his extraordinary ideas of self-importance, thought it was not worth while to consult the members of this House as to whether $115,000 of the people's money should be spent on this little job or not. Now, I wonder when we are going to get through with this kind of procedure, when the time is coming that ministers will learn that they are simply the servants of the people and not their masters, that they have no right to put their hands in the public chest and take out the people's money without asking the consent of the people. I think that time has come now. How are we going to succeed in stopping this continual drain from the public treasury? Is it any wonder that the revenues of this country are being exploited to the extent of $70,000,000 or $80,000,000 a year, when parliament has practically lost all control of the expenditure of the country? I do not like the idea of rising in my place day after day and drawing attention to matters of this kind, but I conceive it is the duty of members of this House to do so. I hope that by continuing to do so ministers will come to understand that they have a duty to perform, and that duty is, in the first place, to consult parliament as to what public works they should undertake. I need not tell the minister how that thing is done. In the first place, they come to the House and ask for an appropriation, they commend a certain kind of work. If the House approves of the work and votes the money, then it becomes the duty of the department to give effect to that resolution by carrying out the work. If parliament says in its wisdom that the work is not desirable, or that the cost is going to be too great, then, of course, they refuse the appropriation, and that will be an instruction to the minister not to continue that particular work. Now, the minister has intimated that in some way this is connected with a previous vote. If so, it is something that the House has not heard of at all, at any rate it is a very vague connection, and the minister cannot justify himself in committing the country to an expenditure of $115,000, when, by bringing down an estimate at any time after the 15th of January last, he could, if it was a feasible work, have obtained the sanction of parliament, and could have gone on in the regular constitutional way to expend the money. Here we are in the month of May, after being in session for nearly five months, and we are told that the minister has decided to do a certain work, that it is going to cost $115,000, that he has called for tenders and the work is practically going on. Of necessity it will have to be finished by the 30th of June, otherwise this vote will not be available. Now, I think we are getting too much of this kind of thing, and I trust the minister will not humiliate the House to the extent he has been doing in the past. This occurs every year in the departments. The House is practically told that they are merely here to register the acts of the government, not to be consulted, not to be taken into the confidence of the government and asked whether this expenditure is reasonable or not, whether the country can afford it or not, but simply to register what they in their majestic minds think it to their advantage to do as a political party. I hope the minister will not ask us to vote any more estimates like this ; if he does, I shall be obliged again to draw the attention of the House to the fact that such a mode of expending the people's money is not a constitutional mode.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I can relieve the anxiety of my hon. friend. As regards the Beaujeu bank, the work was contemplated and mentioned during the discussion of the estimates last year. As a matter of fact, that work has been going on since September of last year. Fortunately, that was included in the general expense of construction of aids to navigation. There was no special vote for the Beaujeu bank, but it was among the improvements contemplated. The expenditure of the department has been large, but the department has not done worse than other departments, it has striven to do the best possible with the amount available at its disposal. The work had to go on. It was contemplated in the ship channel vote, for which there was an amount of $80,000. We thought we would not be doing anything against the constitution or against the public interest in taking advantage of a number of men being out of work and putting them to work at Sorel in the shipyard, preparing for the installation of these piers, so that they could be finished at the end of this season. If we had not done so, we would probably have lost one season. Part of the work had to be done under water, and it had to be finished before the close of navigation. So that really we do not deserve the censure of the hon. gentleman. This is one of those works that, when started, must go on, even if there is no money voted by parliament, because otherwise the country would suffer loss if the work was not done at the time and in the manner contemplated. If we have a vote of half a million dollars and, in going on with the work that was contemplated when we made that estimate, we exceed the amount, the general practice is that we come before the House and ask for so much additional for that work. I could have done that easily if I had wanted to mislead the House. I could have stated that in order to complete the work of the ship channel as contemplated by the expenditure which was asked last year $115,000 was necessary ; but no, I wanted the House and the country to know what we were doing in improving the channel, so that nothing would be done in the dark. Probably it would have passed easier if I had just stated that the $115,000 was required to complete the work of the ship channel. On the contrary, I came openly before the House, and I think I should be given credit for acting openly in the interests of the public.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am sure we will all give the hon. minister credit for boldness in acting openly. Even when he gets very far astray he is not afraid to do that. He tells us that this is a continuation of the work for which an appropriation was obtained last year under the heading 'Aids to Navigation.'

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Last year there was a good deal of distinction made between Aids to Navigation and the ship channel. The ship channel was not under my control until the 1st of July, so that this amount for piers on lake St. Peter was supposed to be paid out of the amount of $500,000 voted for the ship channel. The work at Beaujeu bank was contemplated to be paid for out of the vote for aids to navigation. In order to make it clearer we have put the item in such a way that everybody can understand it.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the hon. minister himself understands it nobody else in this House does. I think he has mystifyed the matter as much as possible. He commenced a work part of which he tells us is being paid for out of the vote obtained for the purpose of improving the ship channel while another portion is being paid for out of money which, was voted for aids to navigation. Then he comes down with apparently a new item entirely for the construction of works we never heard of before :

To provide for permanent piers in Lake St. Peter and other places in the ship channel, including Beaujeu bank, $115,000.

How can any hon. member of the committee connect that with the estimates that were asked for and voted last year ? For my part I never would have suspected that there was any connection whatever, and I think the hon. minister is drawing upon his imagination very largely when he attempts to make this connection. It seems to me that it is rather an after thought. It is one of those adroit methods he has of pulling the wool over the eyes of the members of this House when he gets into a tight corner. I give him credit for that. He is an adept at that sort of thing, but notwithstanding that I stick to what I said before. This seems to me to be an entirely new item, something which has originated since we last met in parliament, something that was not provided for in the session of last year and something which should not have been undertaken until this vote was obtained and the consent of the House also obtained to the expenditure of the money. The reason I have made reference to it is because we find that there is a great tendency year after year to expend money regardless of the feelings of the members of this House, without considering whether the country approves of it and without regard in fact to any kind of economy. How is the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) going to provide means for carrying on the affairs of this country if the ministers in the various departments are going to proceed with the construction of works of which he has no knowledge and of which he has no information at the time he makes his estimates for the expenditures of the year ? It seems to me that it is heaping a great deal of trouble on the hon. minister whose duty it is to provide all the money that is necessary for carrying on the affairs of the country. To my mind it is not treating that hon. gentleman with fairness, and I hope the day will come when he will call his colleagues to account and ask them to be good enough to confine themselves to what parliament has voted in the expenditure of the money of this country and not continuously to draw upon the future for funds which the hon. Minister of Finance has had no opportunity of providing.

Mr. MORIN. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) says that he has been spending money and that he wants the country to know what he is doing and what he has done with its money. Well, I may tell the hon. minister that the country does not care a cent for information of that character. Every year items of this kind come before the House ; we are tormented almost to death with items of $50,000, $150,000 or $200,000 and every hon. minister appears to have a good reason for paying out the people's money. I tell you that the country does not care a cent when a statement of that kind is made to it. You know what was done a few years ago with the money which this House voted for the Seven Islands scheme. What can you call that ? Then, we had the Grande Vallée scheme. I would ask the hon. minister not to imagine that the people are anxious to be told of expenditures of that kind. They are not, and if the hon. minister thinks they are he is greatly mistaken. The country does not care to hear of them and they do not like to pay for them. These hon. gentlemen expend half a million here or $300,000 there and then when we call attention to it we are criticised from the other side because, as these hon. gentlemen say, we are detaining the House. Well, I say gentlemen you are the servants of the people and you are no more than the clerks of the people. You have the Minister of Finance to collect the money for you, he pays it out to you and then you go and pay it out to your Grit friends all over the country. That is just the way it stands. In all these works that you propose to do and particularly in connection with this dredge, there will not be a Tory employed. It will be a Grit shop and a Grit dredge. If a Tory goes there and asks for work he will be told that there is none. It is just the same as it is on the Transcontinental Railway, or on the Grand Trunk Pacific as we call it sometimes. A Conservative cannot get work on the Transcontinental Railway. The government will send to New York and engage Italians and Hungarians rather than give a white man work. That is the way the government tries to blindfold us ; they are spending half a million a year doing work on that ship channel and it has got to be a farce. Formerly they were dredging between Montreal and Quebec but now they are dredging away down the gulf, and they are spending money building dredges that are fit to go to London. We have a right to complain of this and we will continue to complain until the government give up doing wrong.

Mr. TAYLOR. This item is 'to provide permanent piers in Lake St. Peter and other places in the ship channel.' How many piers are to be erected in Lake St. Peter and how many elsewhere ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There are four in Lake St. Peter, which will cost more than the $78,000 in this vote, and will have to be provided for as to the balance in the supplementary estimates for next year. I think the report of the engineer states that he contemplates putting piers at each bend of the river, which would be about eight or nine altogether.

Mr. TAYLOR. You say there are four to be erected in Lake St. Peter ; where are the others ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They are not to be built out of this amount of $78,000, which will not cover the expenditure on the four piers.

Mr. TAYLOR. There was nothing said about these piers last year, and therefore this is the first time that the question has been brought before the House. The minister has undertaken work which was never approved of by parliament, and that system must be condemned.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The item of $581,000 last year for the ship channel had in view the establishment of these piers.

Mr. TAYLOR. We do not know what it had in view, but we heard nothing about these piers.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I cannot tell what was stated by the Minister of Public Works, who asked for the vote last year, but probably no details were asked from him.

Mr. COCHRANE. You contracted for jobs that were not approved by parliament.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It was approved by parliament.

Mr. COCHRANE. How could it be approved by parliament when we never heard anything about it ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There are lots of things approved by parliament that you hear nothing about.

Mr. COCHRANE. They are approved in your mind, and the people have to pay for them.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In the item of $580,000 many works were included, probably two or three hundred items, and if the minister were not asked about each item he probably would only mention the most important, which was for the dredging. I had a list before me this year, and if I were asked I would have given each item which made up the $580,000, and I suppose the same thing was done last year when the $581,000 was voted for the ship channel.

This year I took the precaution of putting in the item to read 'River St. Lawrence ship channel, Marine Department,' and as there was need of $115,000 more for the ship channel, I explained how the money would be expended to the 1st July.

Mr. COCHRANE. The expression 'ship channel' is misleading.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I did not invent it.

Mr. COCHRANE. Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise. When you speak of a ship channel, it means to the ordinary mind that you are dredging that channel, but you are now using this money to build permanent docks.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. These are permanent piers to install lights at the bends of the river.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then it is for lighting the channel ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is always considered as part of the ship channel.

Mr. COCHRANE. It has no connection with the making of the channel at all, and therefore the expression is misleading.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. All works pertaining to the channel have been considered as ship channel works.

Mr. MORIN. For my part, I cannot see that these piers will be any help whatever to navigation. I have seen the St. Lawrence below Quebec clear of ice as late as the 27th day of December, and yet navigation had been closed for over a month. When the time comes for navigation to close in the fall of the year the ships will cease to go up the St. Lawrence, and this expenditure is simply a waste of money.

Mr. BLAIN. When were these contracts let ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is only one contract let. We simply prepared the cribwork preparatory to the installation of the piers, and the four piers are being erected by day's work. The first pier was included in the expenditure last year under the head of 'aids to navigation.' Tenders were asked in September last year, and the contract was let some time afterwards. It was for $25,000, which was the lowest tender.

Mr. BLAIN. That was let about the time of the general election.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No, I think it was after the general election. At any rate, it does not make much difference ; there was not enough difference to kill a cat. Public tenders were asked through the newspapers, and there were only two tenders, one of $25,500 and the other $25,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Who was the successful tenderer ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Crevier & Lemoine. The other was Dussault & Lemieux.

Mr. BLAIN. When is the work to be completed ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think by the 1st of September. The contract was given at the end of the season in order to give the men a chance to prepare their cribwork in the winter ; but nothing is to be paid until the crib is sunk and put in place.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why could not all the cribwork for the different lights be let by tender ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We thought it was better to employ our men of the shipyard at Sorel to prepare these piers in the winter on the ice. We thought it was more economical.

Mr. INGRAM. The cribs are prepared by the government employees, and the filling is done by contract ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No filling in is given out by contract. We intend to do the concrete work. The steel superstructure will of course be done partly by the shipyard and perhaps partly outside ; I do not know exactly. But the four piers on Lake St. Peter we intend to stall by day labour as much as possible.

Mr. INGRAM. Where is the material obtained with which you fill the cribwork ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. By public tender. There is rough stone for filling and broken stone for concrete, all got by public tender.

Mr. INGRAM. Where is the material obtained ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The lumber has been obtained at different places. I can give the hon. gentleman a complete list of the different tenderers. The cement has not been delivered yet.

Mr. INGRAM. I wanted to know where the broken stone was obtained.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not know where it is obtained, but a man named Beauchemin of Sorel is the lowest tenderer. The price is $1.80 a ton.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do you buy broken stone by the ton or by the yard ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. By the ton.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems a very peculiar way.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the contract specify that the broken stone shall be bought by the ton instead of by the cord ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I never heard of stone being bought by the cord. Toise, the hon. gentleman means. The cord is not a legal measure in the province of Quebec.

Mr. INGRAM. That is news to me. I understand that it is bought by the cord in other provinces, and it seems to me that is the proper way to buy stone for cribwork. Do the specifications call for stone of any particular quarry ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We do not care where the stone comes from so long as it is good and acceptable.

Mr. INGRAM. I am simply asking for information. The government, then, does not specify any particular quarry ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No.

Mr. LALOR. I never before heard of stone being bought by the ton. Would the minister give us an idea of what a yard of stone weighs or what a ton measures ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. A yard weighs a little over a ton and a half.

Mr. HENDERSON. And the price of $1.80 a ton is equivalent to $2.70 per cubic yard. I am sure the electors of this country will not like to hear the price of that stone.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think they will.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the man who has the quarry will be delighted, but the minister has been led very far astray in regard to the price of broken stone.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I may say that a week ago I bought some at the same price for my own use.

Mr. LALOR. This was large stone for cribwork ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Stone broken by machinery for making concrete.

Mr. INGRAM. The gentleman who has that contract has a bonanza far better than the Klondike.

Mr. LALOR. What facilities were afforded at this particular place for weighing the stone ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It was weighed with a scale.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister said, in answer to a question from this side of the House, that this item of $115,000 would not be used for other places than those on Lake St. Peter, and yet as the item reads, the whole of it might be used elsewhere. If the minister's explanation is correct, I think the other words should be struck out.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I am satisfied ; let them be struck out.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. If I figure the price out rightly, it will amount to $12 per cord. The average price in Ontario would be about $4 per cord of 128 cubic yards.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not know of any measure of that kind.

Mr. LALOR. I have had a good deal of experience in contracts, including government contracts, and I never heard of such a price paid for stone in my experience as that paid by the government in this instance.

Compensation in full and final settlement of all claims to the heirs of the late Joseph Paul, of the hydraulic dredge 'Jos. Israel Tarte,' who was accidentally killed by the explosion of a boiler November 3, 1903, $4,000.

Mr. BARR. How is it that this has been standing so long ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This session there was an investigation before the Public Accounts Committee to ascertain the cause of the accident. It was ascertained that there was no defect in the boiler but that the explosion was due to the carelessness of one of those who were killed. The Department of Justice held that consequently the government were responsible to the heirs of this man and recommended a settlement in the following manner. $1,000 was paid to the widow and $3,000 paid to tutors in trust for the children.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. minister expect a similar claim from the blowing up of the Scout ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think we will be obliged to pay something. When the item for repairs and expenses of service, item 87, comes up, I will be in a position to give full information as regards the claim.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the investigation over ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Further amount required for maintenance and repairs to Dominion steamers and ice breakers, $75,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The amount voted for maintenance and repairs to Dominion steamers last year was $375,000. Since then two steamers, the 'Montcalm' and 'Champlain,' have been added to the fleet. The expenditure to the 30th April was $318,252, leaving a balance to the credit of the appropriation of $7,069. This balance has been held over for the payment of the wages of the crews, and in consequence there has been an accumulation of accounts for maintenance and repairs. The department has now four ice breakers in commission during the winter, and the fuel consumption of these steamers is very large. There is also a balance due for repairs to the 'Lady Laurier.' It will be remembered that this ship met with an accident going to the harbour at Lockeport and immediate repairs had to be made. Part of the cost was paid out of the appropriation of 1903-4 and the balance out of the appropriation for the current year. This was an altogether unforeseen accident and was charged to the vote for maintenance. The 'Stanley' and 'Minto' had also to have large repairs to machinery and engines to get them ready for the winter's work. The 'Stanley's' boilers were retubed and extra propeller blades imported from the builders for both these ships. The amount asked for will bring the appropriation this year up to $400,000, the same amount as is asked for next year. Last year it was pointed out that $325,000 would not be sufficient.

Mr. AMES. The minister will remember that on the 20th February I asked for a return with reference to supplies ordered by circular in connection with the maintenance of these Dominion steamers. That return is not yet down.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I inquired this morning if all these papers had been laid before the House and was told they had been. I shall make further inquiry and bring down any that may be missing.

Mr. AMES. I understand that a return was ordered on the 13th February concerning the purchase of supplies and on the 20th February a similar return was ordered. Those two have not yet been brought down.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If not, I shall bring them down before getting through my estimates.

Mr. INGRAM. The cost of maintaining these steamers is growing pretty fast—at the rate of $100,000 every year. Last year it was $306,094 and now it is $400,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The number of the steamers has increased also. Formerly we had only one ice breaker and now we have four.

Mr. AMES. Is this $75,000 in addition to the $325,000 previously voted and will it enable the department to reach the end of the current fiscal year without any deficit ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. AMES. Will the hon. minister give a little information as to the success of the experiment of sending an ice-breaker to Newfoundland to assist in-coming vessels ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The 'Montcalm' was sent to Newfoundland to help steamers coming in, but unfortunately none of these steamers which were coming in had any Marconi apparatus on board and the apparatus was not working at the station. Therefore the 'Montcalm' was not able to get communication with the other steamers so as to be able to assist them. So, really, the trip was of no effect on account of there being no Marconi system on ships coming in.

Ocean and river service—to provide for the construction of new boilers and repairs to hull of steamer 'Aberdeen,' $17,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Late last fall when the 'Aberdeen' came into winter quarters in Quebec we found that her boilers were out of order and had to be entirely renewed. We asked for and received a tender for the work from the Polson Iron Works. The tender was considered reasonable and we sent the boat to Toronto. She is being fitted with the boilers and is expected to be ready in two weeks.

Mr. INGRAM. Were tenders advertised for in the public press ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No, they were a special boiler,—Thorneycroft Watertube boiler. Nobody but the Polsons could tender for them. Had we not done this we should have been obliged to send the steamer to England. The tender received was considered reasonable and was so reported by the special expert, the late Douglas Stevens.

Mr. INGRAM. What could be the object of asking for tenders, when as the minister says there was only one firm ? And this is another case where the contract was entered into before the money was voted.

An hon. MEMBER. More of that.

Mr. INGRAM. Oh, that is becoming quite common with this government.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Would the hon. gentleman expect us to delay until the vote was passed and so lose the whole summer of the boat and be obliged to hire another boat to do the work ? I think that would be rather poor policy on the part of the department.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the department allow its steamers to get into such a condition that they are likely to explode so that the renewal of boilers becomes a matter of emergency ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It was a matter of emergency.

Mr. INGRAM. If so, it is no wonder that we have explosions such as that in the case of the 'Scout.' We have boilers that are allowed to get into such condition that they cannot do their work and then the government must order renewals before the money is voted, instead of keeping boilers properly inspected and arranging for expenditures in due time.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The boilers were properly inspected. As I have stated it was the end of the season and our officers thought the boilers should be renewed. We took the precaution to have them renewed so that the boat would be ready soon after the opening of navigation. Had it not been that the boat was delayed in the Soulanges canal by the ice she would have been ready now. Unfortunately she was caught in the ice, and we had to wait until the 1st of May to send her to Toronto to get the work done. The work is being done and will be completed in a fortnight.

Mr. AMES. It seems to me that this method of spending money before it is voted by parliament could be avoided by the several departments by including in their estimates a certain sum for unforeseen emergencies, to be expended by them at the discretion of the council. I think that would be much preferable to the system of calling for the money after it has been illegally spent. I am sure this House would be willing to vote a sum to each department that might be used to meet unforeseen emergencies. Parliament undoubtedly has the right to declare in advance whether the money shall be spent, and no cabinet, and no minister has the right to spend money which has not been voted.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I concur in the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames). The spending departments of the government have been considering such a scheme, though we have not yet perfected it. It is a most awkward thing when, at the end of the season, some unforeseen expenditure becomes necessary. It is always open to all sorts of criticism. If we could come to such an understanding as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) suggests, it would be in the interest of the public and of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. In the face of an unforeseen emergency making expenditure necessary, the department can always fall back upon a Governor General's warrant.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think the House was in session when we wanted the money.

Mr. SPROULE. In such a case, parliament can be applied to for a vote.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It would take too long ; it would lose the whole season.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think that the government would be justified in drawing upon the public exchequer when the parliament is in session. The House never refuses to vote money if there is urgent need for it.

Ocean and river service—further amount required for investigations into wrecks, $2,000.

Mr. AMES. Is this for additional salaries and, if so, to whom is it to be paid ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No, it is not for salaries. Parliament, voted $2,000, but the expenditure has been $4,317.95.

To pay Captain James Harrison, master of the steamship 'Grecian,' an allowance for expenses incurred by him in connection with the investigation into the stranding of the ship in Halifax harbour on February 19th, 1902, $750.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why is this ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. About two years ago an investigation was held in connection with the loss of the ss. 'Grecian' at Halifax. At the inquiry held Captain James Harrison's certificate was cancelled, but he subsequently went to England and appealed and his certificate was returned to him.

He now complains of the grave injustice that was done him and asks that his costs may be refunded to him. The appeal was instituted by the Scottish Shipmasters' Association, who consulted the highest legal authority and obtained an opinion that the master was entirely blameless in connection with the casualty to the ship. The expenses incurred by Capt. Harrison and the Scottish Shipmasters' Association amounted to the sum of $200. It would appear that Captain Harrison took a pilot on board before coming to Halifax harbour and gave full charge of the navigation of the ship into the port to the pilot. I may say that pilotage in Halifax harbour is compulsory, that is to say: the pilot is taken on board full pilotage dues are paid, but on the other hand, if the pilot is not employed only half pilotage can be collected from the ship. In England, pilotage is absolutely compulsory, and if a captain does not employ a pilot he renders himself liable to be fined or imprisoned. The Canadian law differs in this respect from the English law. The Canadian law, does not take away the responsibility from the captain, even when a pilot is on board, whether compulsory pilotage or otherwise. In England, under the compulsory pilotage, the pilot takes full charge of the navigation of the ship into port and, therefore, for any accident that may occur the pilot is solely to blame. It is a question whether the Scottish Shipmasters' Association and the legal authority they consulted, were acquainted with the Canadian law in connection with the compulsory pilotage. The department has, however, decided to refund Captain Harrison £150, towards the expenses he incurred in England and the loss of salary during the suspension of his certificate. It was more a question of fair play towards this captain than anything else. There was no legal obligation, but we thought that for the sake of the reputation of the department and the reputation of Canada we would not stand on a technicality, but we would pay the expenses of this captain in defending himself before the courts.

Further amount required for winter mail service, $3,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This service cost more last year than usual on account of the severity of the winter and the increased difficulty of navigation between Prince Edward Island and the mainland.

Mr. BARR. Is the minister making any extra preparations for the coming winter? It is contended that all was not done last winter that could have been done in order to convey the mails backwards and forwards, that there was negligence on the part of the authorities. As we have no reason to suppose that the winters are getting any milder, I would like to know if there is any way of improving this service in order to make it more effective than it has been in the past?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Last winter was more severe than usual, and navigation was interrupted a longer time than in any other year in the history of navigation between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. There was no negligence on the part of the captains of the steamers, and no one has ever charged them with negligence; they did the best they could under the circumstances.

Further amount required for the extension of the coast service and surveys on the north and northwest coasts of Canada, $65,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. This is a very large item, and we would like some explanation. Is there some new expedition to be fitted out, or is it a continuation of what is already in existence?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is a continuation of the expenditure connected with the expedition of the 'Arctic' last year. We shall have to send a boat with coal, provisions and men to join the 'Arctic.' This boat is supposed to leave in June and return by the end of July, bringing back some of the men who are sick and disabled. She will also carry some men to complete the equipment of the 'Arctic' and to station at the posts.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me we are spending a large amount of money in that region. I am not complaining of the amount at all, but it would be interesting to the House if reports somewhat extended could be given to the House that we may know the result of this expedition.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries he will find an extensive report by Mr. Low, made on his return last year.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman for drawing my attention to that. I had not seen it. I was looking rather for some special report. Anything we can learn about that northern country will be of great interest.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If the hon. gentleman will take communication of that report he will get a great deal of information, because it is very elaborate and complete.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask the minister how far northward the 'Arctic' has gone? Is there any attempt to get away into the region of the North Pole, so as to take possession of the islands lying north of the continent of North America, in the name of the King, and setting aside for ever any claim that the United States or some other country may make in that region of the world? We desire to avoid any complications such as we had in the case of Alaska. Is this expedition commanded by Captain Bernier?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Captain Bernier is the sailing master of the 'Arctic,' the expedition is commanded by Major Moodie.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have certainly a great deal of confidence in Captain Bernier's ability to sail those northern waters, or to sail waters in almost any part of the world. I think it is a great pity that the government did not avail itself some years ago of the services of Captain Bernier in exploring the northern regions of the continent of America. Even had they granted him the assistance which he came and pleaded for year after year, with a view to make that final effort to discover the North Pole, and thus advertise Canada all over the world, I think the government could have spent $100,000 with a great deal of satisfaction in that direction. We are now spending hundreds of thousands of dollars in surveying a portion of the coast of North America, which I think will bring very much less of interest to the people of this country than would have resulted from an expedition toward the Pole with a view of making that long coveted discovery. Now, here is $65,000 this year. If I mistake not, this expenditure already has gone up to the hundreds of thousands. As I said, I am not complaining about it, I think perhaps it may be money well spent, if it will be the means of preventing complications between ourselves and our neighbours to the south of us, who are also pushing out in that direction with a view to claiming something in these northern regions which we may not have laid our hands upon. I simply express my regret that the services of Captain Bernier were not obtained years ago, and that he was not placed at the head of an expedition that would once for all have settled the question of who was entitled to the sovereignty of those islands lying between the North Pole and the presently known continent of North America.

Mr. SPROULE. This is an item of $65,000. Will this be in addition to the amount which we voted last year for the same expedition ?

Mr. HENDERSON. This is supplementary.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The sum of $170,000 was transferred from the Northwest Mounted Police to the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the Hudson bay expedition. Out of that amount the department paid $29,018, balance due the High Commissioner in London for the purchase of the steamer 'Gauss,' afterwards called the 'Arctic.' The total sum paid for the 'Arctic' was $70,000 and $40,982 was paid out of the appropriation for 1903-04. The balance of the amount transferred from the Northwest Mounted Police was expended in fitting out the 'Erik' as a relief steamer for the 'Neptune.' The 'Erik' was charted from Job Brothers & Company, St. John's, to take coal and supplies to the 'Neptune.' The 'Arctic' was fitted out and provisioned at Quebec and it was found that the funds at the disposal of the government were not sufficient to meet the expenditure. Besides the 'Arctic,' the department had to make repairs to the 'Neptune' after it returned to Halifax. The 'Neptune' unfortunately met with an accident coming out of Hudson bay and the department was obliged to place the ship on the marine slip at Halifax for repairs. It was found besides damages to the bow that part of the keel was knocked off and other damages were sustained which required to be renewed. The amount asked for is required to meet all liabilities in connection with the expedition up to the 30th June.

As regards the remarks made by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) that we should have given charge of the expedition to Captain Bernier, I beg to disagree. The question of these expeditions was discussed two years ago and the first expedition was sent out under the charge of Mr. Low. It was composed of a certain number of members of the Northwest Mounted Police, because the government thought they should establish a post up there. Mr. Low made a report of the work he did and a certain number of mounted police were left there. While he was up there we thought we would send a boat, the Arctic,' up for three years to survey and visit the different points in Hudson bay, to go as far north as possible under the orders of Major Moodie, establish posts at different places, make researches, gather information and establish customs offices at different points because there is a great deal of fishing by Americans going on there. The instructions issued to Major Moodie were published at the time. They left in the month of September. They wintered at Fullerton bay. We received some letters and information from them by land during the month of April. The information that we received from Major Moodie was to the effect that some of the men would have to come back. Nobody had died, but some of the men were sick, some were unfit for service and a certain number of mounted policemen would have to be sent out to relieve them. In order to carry out the plan which was adopted by parliament another boat will have to be sent up there to take in coal and provisions as well as the men who are required to replace those who will have to be brought back. I think, after all, the best mode of asserting the authority of Canada in Hudson bay is by establishing posts in different places under resident officers of the government and by having our organization completed as much as possible with due regard to the right of the people who may be up there.

Mr. SPROULE. What has been the experience in regard to the navigability of Hudson bay and Hudson straits? I saw some time ago in some of the papers that the conditions had been found to be much more favourable than had been anticipated.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They were not specially charged with that because there is in some departments of the government a report made some years ago by Captain Wakeham who was sent specially to ascertain the possibility of navigating the bay and the straits and the length of the season of navigation. I have not the report before me, but I know there was such a report made about five years ago, and there was also the report of Lieutenant Gordon made in 1881.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this expedition not charged with the duty of making observations as to that?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, they are charged with the duty of making observations and of obtaining all the information possible. We have no report yet as to that specially, because all we have received are some letters making urgent demands and not going into details.

Mr. INGRAM. How many officers are employed in connection with the 'Neptune'?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There are none.

Mr. INGRAM. No officers?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is no 'Neptune.' There was one sent up, but she has returned. That was the boat obtained in Newfoundland which was sent up there previously to the purchase of the 'Arctic' to explore the northern part of Hudson bay. She was under the command of Mr. Low whose report is to be found at page 116 of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. INGRAM. I have here quite a lengthy report signed by A. P. Low.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. This expedition appears to have taken place in the summer of 1903.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, that was the first expedition that was sent up.

Mr. INGRAM. Exactly, and he speaks of some small repairs to this boat. I understood the hon. minister to say that there were very extensive repairs made to this boat.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They were found to be extensive afterwards when they put her on the slip.

Mr. INGRAM. I know they put her on the slip, but it says here that the repairs were very small.

The ship was immediately placed in dry dock at St. John, where a few small repairs were made to her underbody, after which she was speedily sent to Halifax, arriving there on the 20th.

That would indicate that the repairs were very small.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That was before she sailed. The repairs to which I have reference were made at Halifax after Mr. Low had left the boat, I think.

Mr. AMES. There was an item in one of the newspapers—I thought that I could put my hand upon it, but as I cannot do so I will have to trust to my memory in quoting—which appeared within the last day or two intimating that Mr. Low had refused to go to the north because the department would not give him the 'Neptune.'

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The hon. gentleman refers to something which appeared within the last few days?

Mr. AMES. Yes.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There was a misapprehension. The papers were mis-informed. We do not intend to send anybody this year to do the work which we suppose the 'Arctic' will do. The 'Arctic' will have two seasons yet to patrol Hudson bay, this season and next year so that we thought there was no reason to send out the 'Neptune' this year to go over the same ground the 'Arctic' will go over. We will satisfy ourselves with sending simply an ordinary freight boat which we will hire, to carry the men that we are going to send to the 'Arctic' and the necessary supplies of coal, &c. That is what created the impression that Mr. Low has refused to go except in the 'Neptune.' We do not ask Mr. Low to go with any other boat, but we are not sending the 'Neptune' so that Mr. Low cannot go. We have the steamship 'Arctic' there already and so there is no necessity to send another similar boat.

Mr. AMES. Is there any truth in the statement that Mr. Low considered it was not safe to take his crew in the boat the department wanted to give him?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Mr. Low is not asked to take any crew, because the 'Neptune' has her own crew, and she is a rather expensive boat. As there was no necessity for exploring the same waters the 'Arctic' is going to explore next season and the season following, we thought it would be a saving to send a freight boat with its own captain and its own crew. In that way Mr. Low will not go.

Mr. TAYLOR. What boat are you getting?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We have not decided; we are asking for prices.

Mr. AMES. Is it true that the department, on the advice of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche), has decided to charter the 'Havana'?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is no such decision. We have asked Captain Patterson his charter price for the 'Havana' for freight purposes, and he made a proposition which is not satisfactory. He wanted to charter the boat at so much a day, and we wanted to rent her for the round trip. We have not closed yet with Captain Patterson.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is he the only gentleman you inquired from?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. We have inquired everywhere in Canada.

Mr. INGRAM. Do we understand that the 'Havana' is the only boat asked to give a price?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No; we have been inquiring for two months for prices in order to send a boat up there. We want a boat to carry supplies to meet the 'Arctic' and come back. It is not for an expedition, and we consider that the 'Neptune' is too expensive for that work. We may be obliged yet to take the 'Neptune' if we cannot get any other in Canada, but any way there is nothing decided.

Mr. INGRAM. Then it is purely a departmental affair, and it is not within the power of any members of the administration as a piece of patronage?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Not a bit of it. We try to get a Canadian vessel.

To pay an honorarium to Mr. A. P. Low for his services as commander of the expedition to the north and northwest coasts of Canada, $1,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is Mr. Low's salary?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. He gets $1,800 a year, and every one knows that a man would not spend seven months in that isolated country without receiving something. Captain Wakeham and Captain Gordon, who were both employees of the government, and who were sent to the Hudson bay, were each voted an honorarium.

Mr. INGRAM. This is given as an extra on account of his taking the trip?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes; he is in the employ of the Department of the Interior as a technical officer.

Mr. SPROULE. As the House sat late last night and as to-morrow is a holiday, I suggest we should adjourn now.

Mr. FIELDING. I think that is a reasonable suggestion.

Some resolutions reported.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). These Acts were similar to Acts that have been passed already during the last few years, and have been disallowed for the reason that they were ultra vires and not in accordance with Dominion policy.

2. No.

LIGHT AND WHISTLE AT POINT LEPREAUX, NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. GANONG—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Who is at present in charge of the light and whistle at Point Lepreaux, New Brunswick?
2. When was he appointed ?
3. Who had charge of this light and whistle prior to the appointment of the present incumbent ?
4. How long has he been in office ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) :

1. George H. Thomas is lightkeeper ; Robert Lewis Belding is the engineer of the fog whistle.
2. The keeper was appointed in 1884 and Robert Lewis Belding was appointed engineer by Order in Council of April 11th, 1904.

3. George Thomas was the former lightkeeper. Frank Frauley was the engineer of the fog whistle.
4. The lightkeeper has over twenty years' service. Robert Lewis Belding, the engineer, took charge on the 1st January, 1904, and has had over seventeen months' service at the station.
5. George Thomas, the former keeper, paid about $125. Frank Frauley, the former engineer, did not contribute to the superannuation fund.
6. The lightkeeper and the engineer were not dismissed.
7. There was no investigation in either case.
8. The former keeper was in the service in 1898, when he died. Frank Frauley, the engineer is still in the service of the government, but does not contribute to the superannuation fund, as lightkeepers entering the service after 1st July, 1882, are not eligible for superannuation.

PATENT MEADOW CREEK RANCHING COMPANY.

Mr. BOYCE—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Has any lease or patent of lands in the Northwest Territories been granted to the Meadow Creek Ranching Company ? If so, when, and upon what terms ? If a lease, for what period, and upon what conditions ?
2. How much land was granted or leased ?
3. What is the annual rental charged therefor ?
4. What is the class of land covered by such lease or patent ?
5. Who applied for such lease or patent, and when ?

9. Is such transaction in accordance with the policy of the Department of the Interior ?
10. If not, what, if any, exceptional circumstances existed to justify the transaction ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. An application has been made in the name of the Meadow Creek Ranching Company for a grazing lease. The conditions have been complied with, and a lease will be issued in due course.
2. 4,800 acres.
3. The regulation rental of 2 cents per acre per annum.
4. The report of the inspector shows that the land is not fitted for agricultural purposes.
5. John R. Craig, as manager of the company, 18th April, 1904, and 27th December, 1904.

7. The names of the members of the company are not known by the department.
8. The inspector's report showed that the applicant had stock on the land, but did not give the number.

9. Instructions have been issued not to grant further applications for grazing leases pending an examination into and possible revision of the regulations.

ISLANDS IN THE ST. LAWRENCE RIVER.

Mr. WALSH asked :

1. Has this government the right to dispose of and grant titles to the islands lying in the St. Lawrence river opposite the Indian Reserve of St. Regis ?

2. Has any correspondence taken place between this government and the Quebec legislature on the matter ?

3. Has any understanding been reached in regard to it ? If so, what is the arrangement or understanding ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. The islands in the St. Lawrence river, opposite the St. Regis Indian Reserve, are under the control of this government for the benefit of the Iroquois band of St. Regis, and the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs has the right, under the Indian Act, to sell or lease after surrender by the Indians ; or, in the case of an Indian who occupies an island with the consent of the band, the same may be leased at his request, without surrender.

2. No correspondence has taken place between this government and the Quebec legislature in the matter.

3. No understanding has been had with the Quebec government or legislature regarding the disposition of these islands.

POSTMASTER AT STE. MARGUERITE DE DORCHESTER.

Mr. MORIN asked :

1. What were the reasons for the dismissal of Louis LaFlamme, postmaster at Ste. Marguerite, Dorchester county, province of Quebec, by the Post Office Department ?

2. Who recommended his dismissal ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). It was discovered that the postmaster at Ste. Marguerite de Dorchester had during a considerable period of time improperly disposed of postage stamps, with a view to the illegal inflation of the revenue of his office and to his thereby obtaining payment of a larger salary than he was legitimately entitled to. For this reason he was dismissed from office. The dismissal was purely departmental and not made on the recommendation of any person outside of the department.

SUPPLY—SALE OF ISLANDS IN GEORGIAN BAY.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. WRIGHT (Muskoka). I would like to draw the attention of the government to the condition of affairs in relation to some islands in the Georgian bay adjacent to the shores of the districts of Muskoka and Parry Sound. I understand that there have been some differences of opinion between the Dominion government and the Ontario provincial government as to jurisdiction in reference to these islands, and I would like to know whether any arrangement has been arrived at. If they are under the jurisdiction of this government I would point out that some of these islands adjacent to the township of Baxter and in that neighbourhood are assuming some considerable commercial importance. There has been a demand for these islands for summer hotel and summer residence purposes. The development of this territory is of considerable importance to some of my constituents who live on the mainland adjacent to these islands. These people find work there and also find a market for commodities which they are in a position to supply. It is of very great importance to them that these islands should not find their way into the hands of people who will hold them for speculative purposes ; it is important to them that this district should be developed and opportunities given to those who wish to build there and develop that section of country. I think the question is of sufficient importance to justify me asking the government whether they have any settled policy with regard to the disposition of these and other islands that may be under the control of the Dominion government which are somewhat similarly situated. There should be some fixed policy and I wish to ask the government what that policy is.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The hon. member, as I understand, has asked as to the course taken by the Indian Department in dealing with those islands. I may say that I was courteously given notice some days ago of the intention to make this inquiry and I have asked for the preparation of a memorandum on the subject which I shall take the liberty of reading to the House in answer to the question asked. The memorandum is as follows :

The islands on the east shore of the Georgian bay south of Moose Deer Point are claimed by this department on behalf of the Indians, Chippewas, of Lake Huron and Simcoe, who, on the 5th of June, 1856, surrendered them to the Crown to be sold for their benefit.

The first sale of islands under this surrender was made on the 24th of March, 1884, and a number of islands were sold between that date and 1887, each application being dealt with on its merits.

In 1887 the department decided as to disposition of islands generally in the following manner :

One purchaser to be allowed an area of not more than 25 acres, when an island of larger area could be conveniently divided.

As regards smaller islands, 5 acres in extent, only one to be sold to the same person, and in case of very small islands when contiguous, one purchaser to be allowed two islands.

For islands of 10 acres and over the price was $1 per acre cash.

For islands less than 10 acres, when only one was sold, the price was $10 cash, and where a purchaser was allowed two small contiguous islands the price of the two was $15 cash.

The purchaser was required to furnish at his own expense plan, description and field notes by a qualified surveyor of the island or islands applied for.

Under the above arrangement sales of a number of islands took place up to September, 1895, when it was decided to temporarily withdraw from sale the islands in the Georgian bay under the control of this department, exception only being made in cases where the survey had already been made or had actually begun. Surveys of the islands in question were made by Mr. Charles E. Fitton, Ontario Land Surveyor, Orillia, and J. G. Sing, Ontario Land Surveyor, Meaford, under instructions given them on the 4th and 17th of June, 1896.

In July, 1897, it was decided to dispose of by tender the surveyed islands in the Georgian bay, and tenders were accordingly called as per advertisement, copy of which is attached hereto. They were islands situated in the Georgian bay, opposite the townships of Baxter and Gibson in the district of Muskoka and the township of Tay in the county of Simcoe. On the 30th of July, 1897, a protest was received from the Hon. A. S. Hardy, Attorney General for Ontario, with request to either postpone the sale until a conference could be held upon the subject, or entirely abandoned, and the sale was abandoned pending settlement of question of title to the islands.

In October, 1901, the question of the disposition of islands was under consideration when the minister decided that if the islands were sold all previous applicants must be considered in order of priority or the islands must be sold by auction. A number of sales have taken place to first applicants or their assignees with the consent in each case of the Ontario government at the upset prices placed on the islands by the surveyors.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. About how many ?

Mr. OLIVER. The list of sales extends over the period from March 24th, 1884, to May 11, 1905.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT. I think it was about the year 1895 that my attention was called to these islands by a number of persons who wished to become purchasers, and I at that time saw the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, or the Deputy Minister, in reference thereto. It was then decided as the minister states to withdraw all these islands from sale. I had never understood that in 1901 the then minister had made any announcement that there would be a sale of these islands either publicly or by tender, and I was rather surprised to learn later—because I live in the neighbourhood—that the government had commenced to dispose of these islands in a manner detrimental to the interests of the Indian Department which is mostly interested. To-day the minister stated that in the case of the St. Regis reserve he would not make any sales unless with the consent of the Indians, and yet his department is selling these islands now without any consent on the part of the Indians. The department is simply throwing them away, and I need hardly say that they are thrown away to party friends. In looking over this list I see that lot 38 Island 144 Baxter township is sold to F. W. Grant for $140. May I ask the minister is that Mr. Grant a brother of the hon. member for North Ontario—well I may tell the minister that he is. I can tell the minister further that if this valuable island which is sold to this Mr. Grant for $140 were to be put up for public auction now, I have no doubt it would bring $800 or $1,000. There is about 40 acres in the portion of the island sold to Mr. Grant, and I know that islands not nearly so advantageously situated, and also points on the mainland are being sold for $75 to $100 per quarter acre. And yet, here is the pick and choice of the whole of these islands given away to the brother of a member of this House for the paltry consideration of $140. Has the minister any applications in his office for this very island ?

Mr. OLIVER. I did not make inquiry on that point ; I merely made inquiries as to the points covered by the question. I would imagine that applications in the office have been dealt with. I understand from the information given that the islands were surveyed by the surveyors mentioned and a valuation placed upon them, and that the applications for the purchase of the islands were dealt with in the order of priority and the islands sold at the prices fixed by the surveyors when they made the surveys.

Mr. BENNETT. Had it not been for the political upset in Ontario the minister would never have been troubled about these islands, because I find from inquiries made at Toronto that this Mr. Grant and other gentlemen of the same political faith had been endeavouring to steer deals through the Crown Lands Department, but that when the political change took place in Ontario it drove them to come to Ottawa. I am going to ask the minister : Has the patent issued for the grant of this lot 38 to Mr. Grant at $140 ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer that at the moment, but I will find out and give an answer later.

Mr. BENNETT. I made inquiry at the department the other day and over the signature of Mr. Pedley, I got this answer :

Letters patent have issued to Messrs. James Hall Telfer and Pringle Kerr Perry for lot 38, concession 4, township of Baxter, situate on Baxter Island, and a sale has been made to Mr. F. W. Grant of lot 38, concession 13, Baxter Island.

Might I ask the minister : Have the Indians consented to these sales being made, as he stated to-day was required in the St. Regis case ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not aware of the facts of the matter, but I take it for granted there must have been a general consent given by the Indians to these sales as far back as some time previous to 1884, or, the sales which have been made since that time would not have been made. I have not asked for that information, but of course I can get it. I would certainly say that the system of dealing with these islands which has been continued for 21 years may fairly be considered to be in accordance with the usual policy of considering the wishes of the Indians before it was acted upon.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister is unfortunate in this, that that policy was departed from, because on the remonstrance of myself and others in the year 1895, the islands were withdrawn from that process of giving them away for almost nothing. They were then advertised and bids asked for, and no one objected to that system of open sale. I remember that several friends of mine went up there and looked over the islands, and I can tell the minister that had the islands been sold when the sale was advertised an honest price would have been obtained, because there would have been keen competition. That was in 1897 before a single hotel had been built in that neighbourhood where there are now three or four; before a house had been built where there are now several splendid houses, and when there was no regular boat service while to-day there is a good boat service. The minister will see that in 1897 the then minister withdrew these islands from sale and was intending to make an honest sale of them. Then came the protest of the Ontario government and in 1901 the minister announced that the policy to be followed was that persons who made prior applications would first be considered. That was fair. If a man had gone on to these islands and built a house it was only fair that he should have the first chance to tender. The minister (Mr. Oliver) cannot go back to what happened twenty years ago, because his own predecessor said in 1897 that the policy of dealing with the islands was unfair and that there should be an open sale. It is also unfortunate for the minister that most of these purchases are strong political friends. D. S. Pratt, figures for island 35, I do not know what island that is and I cannot conjecture its worth. It is a rather striking thing that from the 23rd February down there have been some five grants of these islands. There was a perfect real estate business done by this Mr. Grant who is now an applicant for this island and I regret to see that it is handed over to him. They were stopped with the Ontario government from getting these islands, and of course they had to follow down here to Ottawa with the rest of the army of grafters. Here we have forty acres sold for $140, when I met a gentleman here yesterday who had paid at the rate of $75 for a quarter of an acre on the mainland which in point of position was very inferior to this valuable island. Might I ask if the minister made this grant of island 38 on the 11th May?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer at the moment; if I did I must be responsible for it.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the minister in office on the 11th May?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly I was in office and acting at that time.

Mr. BENNETT. Had the minister made inquiries of his department he would find that in 1897 the then Minister of the Interior stated that there was to be an honest sale of the islands, free from political pull and that they should be sold open and above board. Then came the conflict of authority between the local and Dominion government. Then came the principle laid down in 1901, that any person who had made a prior application for any of these islands would be entitled to the first chance of purchase. Now, I will state, and it cannot be contradicted, that this Mr. Grant had made no application in 1901, and that the minister was acting against all the precedents in his department. This is a particularly desirable island, one of the very choicest, as is borne out by the fact that here and at Toronto, I am informed from a search that was made, about half a dozen people were after this island; and from some of the names, I know that they were people who would be prepared to pay a large price for it. The minister has in his department to-day an offer of $450 for this island which he is selling for $140. I met a friend in my town a few days ago who asked me if these islands were being sold. There is a suspicion around that they are being sold in this underhanded manner, and at prices which are not fair and honest. I would ask the minister, was not application made to him personally by Mr. Grant, the hon. member for North Ontario?

Mr. OLIVER. I answer most unreservedly there was not. I had no knowledge of Mr. Grant in the transaction. If the sale went through since I took office, I suppose I must be responsible for it.

Mr. BENNETT. Since the minister cannot unreservedly say whether or not the application was made to him personally by Mr. Grant, I assume that is the way it came about.

Mr. OLIVER. Excuse me. I said most unreservedly that there was no interview between Mr. Grant and myself in regard to this matter.

Mr. BENNETT. Nor correspondence?

Mr. OLIVER. There was no correspondence between Mr. Grant and myself either personally, by letter or in any other way. My first knowledge of it is from what the hon. gentleman has said.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, the minister came into office and found that his predecessors had laid it down that there were to be no grants or sales of these islands in this manner, and yet he overrides this decision. I believe the minister has an offer for this very portion at an increased price; and yet he is selling it, in defiance of the Indian law—because I think I am within the facts when I say that there have been no surrenders on the part of the Indians of these islands. May I ask the minister finally, in regard to lot 38 on island 144, sold to F. W. Grant for $140, whether, if the patent has not been issued, he will cancel the sale, and cause this and other islands to be offered for sale publicly and above board ?

Mr. OLIVER. I can hardly be expected to make a definite answer to a question like that on a legal point at such very short notice; but I would think that, the arrangements having been made before I took office, it would be only proper that I should carry out those arrangements. If I find that to be the correct state of the case on inquiry, I will certainly not cancel the sale to Mr. Grant.

Mr. BENNETT. If that is the stand the minister is going to take, I am rather surprised. I had expected different from the hon. gentleman. When his attention is called to the fact that he has in his department to-day a letter offering three times the price for this island at which it is being sold to Mr. Grant, he proposes to carry out and consummate this deal. Whether the minister wants to accept my assurance or not, I can tell him that if these forty-five acres were put up to public sale to-day, I believe over $1,000 could be realized for them. It is unfortunate if the hon. gentleman should start the work of his department with actions of this kind in that part of the country. In the Public Works Department, as I said before, nobody up there expects anything straightforward, above board or honest; in the Marine and Fisheries Department it is the same; and if the Minister of the Interior is going to make a record for himself in that part of the country which will be on a par with the records of these other departments, he will pretty nearly excel the conduct of the Ontario government in regard to the Crown lands there. While there may not be as speedy an investigation of these matters as there has been of the Crown lands affairs in that part of Ontario, I can tell the hon. gentleman, from what I have seen of some of the revelations, that they are going to be very spicy indeed, as to how the province has been defrauded for years of its Crown timber dues, and how the Crown authorities have endeavoured to cover up the frauds. I expected better things of the hon. gentleman; and yet he is going to hand over this island for $140 to the brother of an hon. gentleman who has already made inroads on the Department of Marine. The hon. gentleman was in the House last session when it was shown that through the influence of the hon. member for North Ontario and this very applicant, the timber on Hope Island to the value of $3,000 or $4,000 had been given away to a party friend for a paltry $100. It is true, this is perhaps not as big a steal as that was ; but I am sorry to see that the minister has no disposition to nip in the bud transactions of this kind when they are pointed out to him as plainly as this has been. His conduct will not commend itself to his political friends in that neighbourhood ; and I need not say it will not commend itself to his political opponents. I know of Liberals who are anxious to buy these islands, and all they ask is that they shall be sold openly and above board, instead of being disposed of in the way this has been, at the cost of the general public for the benefit of some party hangers-on.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, if I have the privilege, I will only say that my hon. friend has taken care to leave upon the House the impression that there have been improper transactions in connection with these lands in general, and this island in particular, and has as far as possible connected myself with these alleged improper transactions. I will not follow him in that line of argument. I merely want to place the rights of the case, as I understand them, before the House. My hon. friend has seen fit to say that the department was trespassing upon the rights of the Indians in selling these lands. That is a very serious allegation, to which I certainly would not wish to be subject; but I would point out to the House that if the department of to-day is guilty of that offence, the department of 1884 was the one which in the first place was guilty of it and continued to be guilty of it until 1896. My hon. friend will notice, in the list of sales, a series of sales which took place in March, 1896. As to the statement made by my hon. friend that a special case is made of this particular island, part of which is being sold to Mr. Grant, I do not think the record will bear out his statement. I think the list of sales which has been placed in his hands demonstrates very clearly that his statement was absolutely and utterly unwarranted, and that there have been sales to others under similar circumstances.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the minister allow me to state that I find that Mr. Telfer was granted part of the same island for $240 and I would give twice as much for the part which Mr. Grant is getting.

Mr. OLIVER. That is not the point I was dealing with at the moment. I hope

I shall be allowed to make my statement continuously. What I said was that the hon. member, in making the statement that Mr. Grant was being dealt with in an exceptional manner in that a sale was being made to him under circumstances under which sales were not being made to other people, was making a statement of which he had the proof to the contrary actually in his hands and under his eyes at the time.

Mr. BENNETT. I call attention to the fact that there was another political friend, Mr. Pratt, given an island for a paltry $30. I do not know this particular island, so that I cannot express an opinion upon it.

Mr. OLIVER. I say the hon. gentleman is absolutely unwarranted in making the statement because he had the proof to the contrary in his hands and under his eyes. As to the method of sale, I have not been administering the department long enough to become familiar with all the details, but when I find that a certain system has been in vogue for a number of years I do not feel free to change it before making fair and reasonable inquiry. According to the memo. put into my hands, the method pursued in selling the islands is this : A valuation was placed upon them by the surveyor at the time of the survey, and sales are being made at the price so fixed, and the applicants get the preference according to priority. That may not be the best way but it may very well be accepted as a fair way, and had it not been for exceptional circumstances, such as the establishment of summer hotels on these islands, that valuation would probably stand good to-day. But, possibly, owing to these exceptional circumstances, it has varied to such a degree as to make desirable a revaluation and a revision of the system. In 1897, the minister then administering the department made preparations for a general sale of these islands by auction. At that time the government of Ontario intervened and successfully intervened, though on what grounds my memo. does not say. The intervention of the Ontario government prevented the sale. I submit that the administrator of the department is in a somewhat difficult position. If he should wish to sell the islands by auction, there comes an objection from the government of Ontario which claims to have some right in the islands. Then when he proceeds to sell them at private sale, at the price fixed by surveyors, to applicants in order of priority, he is met with objection. I would respectfully ask what hon. gentlemen opposite suggest should be done with the islands ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it considered that the government of Ontario had any right to intervene ?

Mr. OLIVER. According to the memo. in my hands, the government of Ontario intervened to prevent sale by auction, I do not know the reason.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. minister should have full opportunity of making himself acquainted with this subject. I would suggest that when he comes down again, he should be prepared to answer all reasonable questions. Why is it now the policy of the department to sell these islands by private sale when up to a certain time the policy was to sell by public tender. I do not see that the intervention of the Ontario government has anything at all to do with that question. The government can come to a conclusion as to the extent to which it will regard the wishes of the province of Ontario, but surely it cannot allow that province to control it. What we are concerned with is that these islands should not be disposed of to friends of the administration at one-third or one-quarter of what other people are willing to give. That is what I would like my hon. friend to explain when bringing down further information.

Mr. OLIVER. I was proceeding to say that after the Ontario government intervened and stopped the sale by auction, the department afterwards offered them at private sale at the public schedule prices, with the consent of the Ontario government, and that again is objected to. I ask how are the islands to be disposed of ?

Mr. BENNETT. In 1897 they were not put on the basis of so much an acre. I remember several of them were tendered for by friends of my own and they were put up to the highest bidder. Nobody has any cause to complain of that. And had this been put up to the highest bidder, though it was not worth one quarter as much then, it would have brought $400 or $500. To-day it is worth twice as much.

Mr. TAYLOR. When was the valuation made by the surveyor ? If it was about fifteen or twenty years ago, they were then worthless whereas now they are most valuable. If the government have gone on selling on the valuation of the engineers made twenty or thirty years ago, they are not selling them at anything reasonable compared with their value to-day.

Mr. OLIVER. The survey was made in 1895 or 1897.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The surveys of the islands in question were made under instructions given June 14, 1896.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. I understood that the policy of the department was to put these islands up in small lots of not more than five acres. I would like to know the cause of the departure from that policy ?

Mr. OLIVER. The papers state that the regulation, adopted in 1887, was that the lots should not be larger than twenty acres each ; that is if an island was larger than twenty acres, it was divided into lots and the price was fixed accordingly. Of the smaller, those islands, down to five acres, were sold separately. And where there were two islands of less than five acres near together, they might be sold together. What I wanted to say was that, apparently, there is some claim to a right in these islands on the part of the Ontario government.

Mr. BENNETT. They have given up their claim.

Mr. OLIVER. I would not so understand it from the terms of this memorandum ; for it says specifically that all these sales that have been made have been made subject to the approval of the Ontario government. So, I should fancy there still remains some claim as to the ownership of the islands and that, while that question of ownership remains, it is not possible for the Indian Department to dispose of the islands except with the concurrence of the Ontario government. If that is the fact, of course, this department may be to blame for not having arrived at a conclusion in regard to absolute ownership—there may be some fault to be found on that ground. But I submit that there is evidence before the House that the department have made reasonable efforts to secure the disposal of the islands at prices in the best interest of all parties.

Mr. EDWARD COCHRANE. Will the hon. minister allow me one question ? He appears to be somewhat confused why we should find fault when the Ontario government steps in and interferes with a sale by private auction. Now, somebody interferes when the minister sells by private sale. What I would like to ask is this : If he has power to sell by private sale, why has he not power to sell by public auction ?

Mr. OLIVER. The sale by public auction was the sale of all the islands. And, in that case, of course, the Ontario government's rights would have been——

Mr. COCHRANE. But if the minister has power to sell one island by private sale, has he not full power to sell them all by public auction ?

Mr. OLIVER. The difference is that the Ontario government might forego their rights in one island, but if the sale of the whole——

Mr. COCHRANE. Why don't you answer my question ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am answering it.

Mr. COCHRANE. You are going a long way around, so that nobody can understand you.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. With reference to the question asked a moment ago, by the leader of the opposition as to the interest of the Ontario government in these islands, I cannot say that I can give an explanation that will be absolutely satisfactory even to myself, because I speak from recollection and it is some time since I have refreshed my memory on the subject. I believe that in this case is involved the same question that was settled in the case of the St. Catharines Milling Company. I do not know whether my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) remembers that case. It involved a conflict of jurisdiction between the Ontario government and the Dominion government as to which could sell the timber on certain lands. It was claimed by the government of Ontario because all the lands belonged to the government of the province. On the other hand, it was claimed by the government of the Dominion because this was land reserved for the Indians and the Dominion has the management of the Indians. So there will be the same case here, and that probably is the basis of the Ontario government's claim that they were the owners of the land though that land was occupied by and administered for the Indians.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would suggest that there cannot be any good reason which would enable us to dispose of these lands at private sale for apparently much less than they can be disposed of at public auction, and yet would prevent us from disposing of them in the regular way.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is a part of the question. That is another aspect of the question——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The practical aspect.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That may be the more practical side of the case. At present, I would not be prepared to give an answer on the subject. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) will have to inform himself on the subject. At one time these islands had very little value. If they have increased it is only of late. The Minister of the Interior will look into the matter and give an explanation.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART. When the Minister of the Interior brings down the papers on this subject, I hope he will include the correspondence between the Ontario government and this government in reference to the ownership of the island. I think that perhaps the same objection was made by the Ontario government as they made to the sale of certain islands of the St. Lawrence. I remember perfectly well that their objection was not that the Dominion government had not jurisdiction over the islands at all, but that, in the interest of the public of Ontario, all these islands should be reserved for common use. They made application, I remember, to the Dominion government to make an offer of what the government would take for the whole of them. Their intention—not stated, but easily understood—was to reserve the islands as a park for the use of the general public. I am not in a position to state with certainty that the same point is involved in this case of the Georgian bay islands. But there is no answer to my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane)—if you have the power to sell at all why have not you power to sell by auction as well as by any other way ?

Mr. OLIVER. That was not his point at all.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the statement he made. The minister shelters himself behind the statement that these islands were offered at an upset price and given to applicants in the order of their application. But he must remember that the statement was made in this House by the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) that that state of affairs should no longer continue, that the public would have the right to purchase the islands by competition. That was set aside as the Minister of Interior (Mr. Oliver) says, because of any protest in the Ontario government. But since that he has exercised the power to sell without informing the House as to the altered disposition of the department in reference to these lands. We had the statement made in the House that these lands would no longer be sold by public competition. Nothing has happened since that statement was made that prevents the minister from carrying out that promise. There has been no interference of the government of Ontario that would cause or excuse any such change. The minister says that we make the sales with the consent of the Ontario government. The consent of the Ontario government would only be as to the fact of sales. If the people of Ontario have any right in these islands, their interest must be, like that of the Indian Department. that the largest sum possible should be received from the sale of them. But, instead of that, the Minister of the Interior leaves himself open to the charge of favouritism by selling to a brother of one of the members of this House one of these islands at a price, as my hon. friend has said, only one-tenth of what should have been paid for it.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER. If that matter is disposed of I would like to bring to the attention of the government another question—the scrip of non-resident half-breeds. My remarks on this subject the other day were intended to bring out information and not to take a one-sided or partisan view of the matter. To-day, my remarks shall be in the same strain. I am going to ask the minister to bring down certain papers in order to show up the whole transaction, so that we may find out the facts.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In a strictly non-partisan way.

Mr. FOSTER. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) looks rather quizzical when I make that statement ; but if he will watch, he will see that I do not go far beyond the strictly business aspect of it to-day. My right hon. friend will remember that in 1900 or 1901, this whole question of giving money-scrip and land-scrip to the half-breeds who had not been served before was debated in this House. That is the first point I make—that after the policy of the government was clearly stated, after objection to it by members on this side—and probably by some on the other side, though I do not remember,—and after a thorough discussion of that policy, the government's policy prevailed.

Now as a result of the conference with parliament—for that is what it was—the government got the right to dispose of a certain amount of the public domain towards the satisfaction of the claims of the half-breeds. It was upon that conference and public discussion in parliament that the first commission was appointed, of which Mr. McKenna was a prominent member, though I think the commission consisted of three, or four, or five, and I am quite certain there were others besides civil servants or employees of the government on it. It was a general commission. That commission went all over the ground—that is the second point I want to make—they visited the localities they conferred, after due notification was given with all and sundry who were interested, heard the evidence, made their investigation and came to their conclusions. That report was handed in in 1901, it was approved by Order in Council on the 6th of June, 1901. Now what were the principles laid down, after discussion in parliament and the revelation of the government's policy, and after that policy prevailed ? I am not going to take up every point of it, but on one point it was explicit, that with reference to certain half-breeds, those, for instance, who were not resident in Canada, who had gone to the United States and had gone upon the Indian or half-breed reservations there, and were supposed to participate in the advantages of the residence in the United States on those reservations—it was absolute in this respect that their claims were not to be allowed. I will read a summary of the report :

The claims of such half-breeds, namely, half-breeds who were born in the Northwest Territories between the 15th of July, 1870, and the end of the year 1885, the claims of such half-breeds were not prejudiced on account of their residence outside of the Northwest Territories, provided their parents had been permanent residents of the Northwest Territories at the time of their birth, but under clause 6 of the regulations subsequently established and approved by Order in Council of the 6th June, 1901, half-breeds who had left Canada and taken up their residence on Indian reservations in the United States and participated in the benefits of Indian life thereon, as well as all half-breed children admitted to the United States Indian schools, were excluded from participating in the grant of scrip.

That is an excerpt from the report which was approved by Order in Council. Well, now, commencing after this public avowal of the government's policy, after consulting parliament with reference to it, and after the acquiescence of parliament, the government got the right to dispose of public moneys to the amount of $240 to each half-breed, and to give scrip to the amount of 240 acres of land to each half-breed entitled to it, to dispose of the public domain up to that amount. Now this went on for three years or thereabouts, when a change is made, and in 1904 this policy was absolutely reversed, and under the reversal of policy, the very class of claims which had been excluded, after discussion in parliament, after the investigation of the half-breed commission, after the approval of Council—that very policy and that very class of claims were reversed absolutely. On whose authority? Not on the authority of parliament, not even after a consultation with parliament that it was proposed to reverse that policy. Parliament was not consulted at all in the matter; but the minister himself, off his own bat, undertook to recommend that money and public domain which had not been authorized to be disposed of by this parliament, by conference or by acquiescence in any way, should be dispensed to a class of claims that both parliament and the government had declared should not participate in it. That is the second fact that I want hon. gentlemen to keep in their minds as we discuss it.

Mr. HAGGART. How did parliament declare it?

Mr. FOSTER. I take the ground that parliament declared it in this way: That the government did what was right before they undertook to dispose of a lot of the domain of the country and of the money of the country, and they brought the matter before parliament, and we discussed it fully. Now it was an acquiescence by parliament; whether any motion against it was moved. I do not know. If a motion against it was not moved, parliament approved of it. If there was no motion against it, then, after discussion, even though dissent was made, there was an acquiescence by parliament. It was not in the form of an enactment, because the Dominion Lands Act, I believe, is wide enough to cover even that, though I do not believe it ought to be—that is a point I will come to a little later. So I say it was really by authorization made, I am correct in saying it was with the acquiescence and assent of parliament at least. Now for three years that went on, when suddenly this change took place, on the initiative of the minister himself, on the 13th of August 1904. Now there might be sufficient reasons why a change should be made. There might be an agitation by those whose claims had been disallowed, thinking they had been unjustly treated, and that consequently their case should be taken up again. In the Order in Council authorizing it that is not given as a reason. It might be that friends of the half-breeds interesting themselves for the benefit of the half-breeds, would bring the matter before the government and make a plea with that old idea that the policy should be reversed and that these people should get their claims satisfied. That is not given as a reason in the Order in Council. The chief reason that is given by the minister himself is this, that it was an interference with vested interests which he did not believe ought to be any longer persisted in. Well, now, is not vested interests one of the most apparent forms of property which, from time immemorial, almost, under constitutional governments, has been discussed and is absolutely well known by governments, by members of governments and by members of parliament? The minister himself in the very Council and in the very parliament in which this former policy was avowed and in which it was sanctioned, the very members of the government, the keenest minded of them, were there then just as they are now; and other members of the government at that time, like Sir Oliver Mowat, like the Hon. David Mills and other men, legal men, well versed and old politicians, were there. The question of vested rights had no force in parliament in 1901, had no force in the cabinet in 1901, had no force all the time that this policy was being discussed and was being formulated and carried out. But suddenly, in August, 1904, the Minister of the Interior makes the discovery that there has been a gross abuse and violation of vested interests, and in his report to Council he recommends that this be reversed, and he opens a way by his recommendation to have all these claims taken up. Now what is the way in which he opens up the road to these claims?

When in 1900 it was proposed to give away the public domain or the public money and a commission was mooted, found favour and was adopted, it was a public commission which was appointed. Did the minister propose to appoint a public commission? No, in the Order in Council he recommends that an officer of his department, a private employee of the department, shall have the same power that the commission had in 1900, shall traverse this question and shall take up the claims which were disallowed under that commission, investigate them and report upon them. His name is Coté and I believe he was on the former commission or secretary of it ; I am saying nothing against him, my point is that when the minister proposes to open a way to the giving away of a large portion of the public domain or public money he does not follow the precedent in the former case but appoints an employee of his own department and obtains authority to start him on examination. It does not appear from these papers that the employee so given such powers ever advertised to the public interested that he was going to undertake another investigation, ever travelled through the portions of country where these men would be found, assembled them together, took evidence or anything of the kind. I believe from what I get from these papers that all he did was to take the disallowed claims, go over the evidence that had been submitted and make his report therefrom. It does not appear from these papers that he advertised the claimants or the holdings of meetings at which to take evidence or that he took any new evidence and then he reports, and it is on this report of his that this action is taken. The minister has not brought that report down and I do not know whether it was ever given to the minister or to the council in the shape of a formal report or whether he simply gave his conclusions to the minister and to the council, but the conclusions are all that are embodied in the papers which I have. By the former commission I think 468 claims were allowed, and 388 were rejected. Mr. Coté takes up 375 of these 388 rejected claims and his conclusions are that of those 136 are to be allowed, 69 are to be held over for further consideration and are still pending, and the remainder about 170 are to be rejected. This is the new commission, a private party, an employee of the department who without advertising, without taking new evidence, seemingly without any authorization of any public investigation so far as we can tell other than that which I have mentioned, brings in the number that I have mentioned out of the claims disallowed by the former commission and reports them as having been allowed. Now what is the next thing that takes place. So far as I can learn that was done in August, 1904, but no notification of this was given in the 'Canada Gazette' until October, 1904. I think it was on October 15, 1904, that the Order in Council was published in the 'Canada Gazette.' The work was done in August, 1904. The resolution was confirmed by the Order in Council in August, 1904, but no public notice of it was allowed until October 15, of the same year. That is a point which is worth while taking into consideration as well. So far as I can learn—and I want to draw the attention of the minister to this—no notification was ever given to the half-breeds interested and no notification was given to the land agents ; there is no evidence so far as this intimation goes that the land agents were notified until March 10th, 1905. Now the most important circumstance comes in just here. As the memorandum states, as the Order in Council states, it has been the invariable rule of the department which was embodied in a regulation and passed by Order in Council that no land scrip of these half-breeds could be located without the personal attendance of the scrip holder himself. This is a most important thing to bear in mind because with people with traits of characted such as these have, amiable in many ways, but not of the most thrifty and frugal kind, it was, I suppose, found to be the only way in which they could be safeguarded from giving up their scrip improperly, or having it taken from them improperly and so the regulation of the department, authorized and approved by Order in Council, was that there should be no assignments, no powers of attorney with reference to this land scrip, that it should not be located unless located in person by the man to whom the scrip belonged and was granted and the most stringent conditions were imposed to insure that even if his scrip were transmitted to him it should be transmitted to him in a way which would ensure its being safely carried into his very presence and given into his very hand. But shortly after the passage of this Order in Council in August, 1904, in the month of December—no I do not see that there has been any letting up of that condition which I have stated in any other way than the way that I am about to bring to the attention of the committee. The only information, the first information which comes out in these papers, is that on the 10th day of March, 1905, a departmental letter was written to the Indian agents informing them that now and from that time on this land bearing scrip could be located without the personal attendance of the person to whom it was granted.

I want the Prime Minister to pay attention to this because I think it is a grave thing for us to consider, unless other information takes away from its gravity, and I am not going to say that there is not other information to be brought down. While the invariable rule was made so by a regulation approved by Council, there does not appear to have been any approval of Council to the reversal of that rule and to the carrying out of the policy of the departmental letter written in March, 1905. If I am correct and if this is all the information there is in this respect, the Minister of the Interior himself turned down the regulation made by Order in Council for the purpose of guarding the rights of the half-breed, and by his own ministerial will reversed that policy and intimated to his land agents that personal attendance was not longer a necessity. If that is so it is rather a grave matter ; there may be information which would make that different and if there is we would like to have it brought down. It was an Order in Council too, that in the matter of the assignments of scrip—referring to money scrip I suppose largely but made generally—if there was one assignment and after it another came in and then another from different parties, it was an Order in Council that the first assignment was to be the legal one. On the 17th December, 1904, the Minister of the Interior had that rescinded by Order in Council and had left the whole matter as to which of these applications should receive his assent to his own will or his own whim. It was taken out from the Order in Council which would make it go before the council; taken out from the order which would rule him, and left entirely indefinite in his own hands. Now, I come to this other point. What reason was there why, after this policy had been settled on and carried out for three years, that in August of 1904, without a scintilla of evidence to show there was pressure by these half-breeds, the minister comes in and changes this whole policy. Why? No pressure, no public interests, no anything; nothing shown except the minister's scrupulous desire that vested rights should not be any longer violated as they had been. Nothing other than that his innate sense of justice and his burning indignation which after three or four years got to the bursting out point made it impossible for him any longer to sit in Council under the idea that the vested rights of these non-resident half-breeds should not be satisfied. The uncharitable view might be, and may be a view not uncharitable, that it was the near approach of the election that stirred the matter. The elections were held in November, 1904; on August 31, 1904, the pipe-line was commenced to be laid. What else happened? If it is true that any notification was given to the half-breeds themselves who were primarily and solely interested, that their claims disallowed in 1900 had been taken up again and were now allowed; if there was any notification by the government or by the department to the half-breeds, it does not appear. But it does appear that there was notification; if not notification that information percolated to various interested persons not half-breeds; persons not interested in the welfare of the half-breeds, not caring a bawbee for all the half-breeds put altogether, but who belong to that class of people that are always clinging on the skirts of the government trying to find out something to get on to that they may make a penny out of it. Well they got on to it evidently, for about that time—after August and between August and October when the first public intimation of this went out in the 'Gazette'—various things were taking place. A man turned up somewhere in Dakota affirming that he was an agent of the Dominion government; having various Dominion papers and forms about him. But a notable thing about it was that although he said he had come to investigate half-breed claims, the thing he wanted and the only thing he tried to get was an assignment from those who formerly had rejected claims, for his own person and in his own name. I cannot do better than read an item which I find in a newspaper, which states:

> Dunseith, North Dakota, May 13.—One of the most interesting sights North Dakota has been treated to for some time occurred a few days ago between this town and St. Johns, on the highway. Early last fall——

That was in the fall of 1904, after this pipe-line had been laid and before notice was given to the country that the pipe-line was laid.

> —a man came from Winnipeg who represented himself as being sent by Dominion government to take evidence in certain half-breed cases that were entitled to Canadian scrip. He was regaled with all the paraphernalia incidental to government officials, even to the very forms used by the government, and apparently supplied by the Dominion government. With a great deal of eclat he and his henchman and two hirelings from St. Johns took a great deal of evidence, but the evidence chiefly consisted in securing orders from the half-breeds for the delivery of their scrip, to which they are entitled, to this scrip buyer. He told them it might be impossible to get the scrip, but if he did, and it would entail a great deal of trouble and expense, he would pay them $200 each for it.

He was very generous.

> These orders were sent to Ottawa and the scrip in due time issued. Another Winnipeg man, Mr. Robinson, who appeared to know a good deal about scrip, and who had paid some of the half-breeds for their scrip some time ago, found out from Ottawa that much of this scrip was issued to another agent last November, and some of it even located on Canadian lands, came amongst us a few weeks ago to claim his scrip or a refund of his money. The half-breeds told him they had never received that scrip. Mr. Robinson showed them letters from Ottawa saying their scrip was issued and even told their sections of land it was located upon. Trouble began to brew among the half-breeds and indignation meetings were being held, when suddenly the agent appeared with some money—sufficient, he thought, to satisfy the more obstreperous ones. They refused to take $200 when they were worth $1,000. The half-breeds grew more indignant, and threats were made. Warrants were sworn out and an attempt made to serve the agent. An interesting chase occurred between the deputy sheriff and the agent for Rolla, each seeing who could get there first in order to secure the ear of the states attorney. Next day, at the hearing, there were some interesting developments, when many of the half-breeds swore they did not sign the orders upon which their scrip was issued. Theibert, who was supposed to be witness to all signatures, swore he did not see many of the half-breeds sign orders on whose behalf scrip had been received. It is said Mr. Robinson scored the agent very severely in his cross-examination, and as both parties were Winnipeggers, the attorney thought the civil part had better be fought out there, but the half-breeds are making up a fund to fight their cases, and some interesting developments are expected.

That is a telegram or a communication from Dunseith, North Dakota, dated May 13, and published in the newspapers. I give it to the House for what it is worth; it shows, however, there is some smoke and may be a good deal of fire down there over this matter. Now look at the peculiar opportunities given by the method in which this had been carried out. Just before the elections, in August, 1904, the way made easy; no notification of it to parties interested or to the public until the 15th of October; in the meantime the opportunity (which according to this had been improved upon) to interested parties who must have known of it in some way or other, of getting down among the half-breeds and urging them for assignments of their scrip, offering small sums wherever they could get it, and it is said collaring quite a large proportion of them. Competition takes place in a trade, and sometimes the same scrip is assigned or is supposed to have been assigned to different persons, and these claims clash. The two persons who got the assignment at different times send in their claims. The one who had a prior right formerly has no prior right now; that is absolished; everything is in the hands of the minister alone.

That is the statement of the case up to the present time, and it is rather a grave statement of the case, no matter whether it applies to the party opposite or to any other party. All of us in this House are interested in knowing either that this is false; or, if it is true, in finding a very speedy and very sure remedy for it. Look what takes place. One hundred and thirty-six claims have been allowed of these disallowed claims. Three years or three years and a half ago you notify these half-breeds that there is nothing more for them. Do they treasure up in their memories a hope of a reversal of that policy? It drops out of their memory, and suddenly, three years afterwards, some insinuating man drops in among them and tells them: It is quite possible I may get you some scrip; I do not know; but if I do, I will give you so much for it. They look on this offer as a God-send, and are glad to accept it. One hundred and thirty-six claims of 240 acres each amount to 32,640 acres. There is 32,640 acres of good land in the Northwest, the best it is possible to get, alienated in fact from the public domain, and for whose benefit? The benefit of the half-breed claimants? Not except in the slightest degree. For the benefit of the lucky individual who gets the information and who hustles when he gets it, secures possession of the scrip and makes the location. That is made very easy now, because it is not necessary to bring the half-breed up from North Dakota and have him make his location personally. When this question was being discussed in 1900, I remember taking very strong ground against that departure. I said to my right hon. friend: I will go as far as you will in giving the half-breeds their rights and giving them what will help them; but do you think you are going to help them by giving them scrip which they can sell, the day after they get it, for a bottle of whisky, or for $10, or even for $100? You give them land scrip, but do you help them if you put into their hands the right to sell it for a mere song? If the land scrip is given, it should be given to those who would go on the land and improve it, and the government should go to some expense in inducing the half-breeds to abandon their nomadic habits and settle on these lands. My right hon. friend agreed with the principle, but, as is so often the case, he did not agree with the practice of it. His argument was: What can we do with these people? After all, we do our duty towards them when we provide them with the scrip, and if they sell it for a mere song, that is their concern; we are rid of the responsibility. I did not think that was a wise or sufficient answer, or the answer which people who had really at heart the welfare of the half-breeds should have given. However, that was the answer given, and that was the way the matter was decided at that time. What took place? Four hundred and sixty-eight claims were allowed and scrip issued, each representing $240 in money or 240 acres of land. That was $112,320 in money, or, if in land, four or five times that amount, which was actually put into the hands of speculators. Now, the Minister of the Interior may know more about this than I do, or the members from the west may know more about it than I do; but I mention this. At the moment that commission went out, and just as fast as they travelled, at their heels followed the speculators or their agents, who dogged the commission, and drugged or whiskied or wheedled the men who got the scrip, and they had it in their pockets almost before the scrip was dry after being issued, or an assignment of it. Fortunately, after all, it did not amount to very much, because up to that time the man who had the land scrip was protected, because he had to go in person and locate the land. Four years ago I was myself in the Northwest, and I heard a tale which was not a fairy tale. Somebody noticed very early in the morning a light in the land office at Yorkton. I was there at the time. Inquisitive minds act quickly in small places, and it was found out what kept the land agent up at night and through the wee hours of the morning. What was it? It was the men who had been on the trail, party followers of this government, some of whom have been highly rewarded by this government, who had the scrip, had herded up the half-breeds, and had twenty or thirty of them there putting them through personally in the small hours of the night. What benefit did these half-breeds get? I venture to say that if an investigation were made to-day, it would be found that nineteen-twentieths of those claims fell into the hands of knowing and friendly speculators within six months of the time that the commission sat. What is being done in these cases ? 32,640 acres of land, 240 acres for each scrip, that have to be located—for whose benefit ? The half-breeds ? Not a whit. For the benefit of the lucky one who got the information. How much has he paid for the scrip ? I do not believe on the average he has paid $100 for each certificate. Suppose he has, there are 32,640 acres of land which to-day is worth at least $6 per acre. In many sections of the country the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is not to-day selling a bit of land except to settlers at less than $6 an acre ; and the settler has to pay $5 an acre at the minimum, and $6 in a large part of the country. That land then represents a cash value of $200,000 ; and suppose that the minister, bold, audacious and unscrupulous, as he was—not my hon. friend who is sitting there, but his predecessor. My hon. friend cannot have all the honey without having some of the gall. If he takes the benefit of the office, he must take on his shoulders the iniquities of the previous minister. If the minister, audacious and unscrupulous as he was known to be, had come down with a proposition to take $200,000 of the people's money, and had got past the Auditor General, and had given it away to his friends, there would be something like a mild riot, though not on that side of the House. There might be some dissent on that side, but I verily believe the minister would look to his supporters to see him through. He would swear that vested rights were in question and that $200,000 was not too much to pay under the circumstances. But is it worse to take $200,000 in hard cash, unauthorized by parliament, than to take $200,000 worth of the public domain and alienate it without any parliamentary warrant ? My right hon. friend and the Minister of the Interior may plead that this is legalized by the Dominion Lands Act ; but if that power is there, ought it to be exercised by a government whose duty it is to guard the public domain and the interests of this country ? That is the way the matter stands. I am not going to condemn the Minister of the Interior ; I am not going to say anything harsher than I have just said, but what I want is to get the papers down and all of them. I want the three Orders in Council which are still missing. I want that departmental letter discussed March 10, usurping the authority of the government. I want all the applications for those scrip and the lands they represent and all the correspondence in that connection, so as to ascertain what force was brought on the minister from the outside to stir him up, if he was stirred up from the outside at all. In fact I want everything concerning this transaction. If the transaction turns out to be right, the department shall have the benefit of the adjudication, but it is now lying under grave suspicion. If this transaction is anything like what it is stated to be, it is time for this House and country to do a little serious thinking regarding the manner in which our public affairs are being carried on.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish at all to impede progress but I think it is only fair that a request for papers should be made in definite form so that we may know exactly what we are called on to produce.

Mr. FOSTER. I have made out a memo. of what I think ought to be brought down. If the minister thinks I am asking too much, let him say so. If he thinks I am not asking enough, he can supply what is wanting.

Mr. OLIVER. I merely make this request because on several occasions recently I have been asked off-hand for information, and the department is put at considerable disadvantage when such requests are not definite. No doubt it is the privilege of the hon. gentleman to criticise as severely as he can the conduct of the government and represent the action of any department in as unfavourable a light as possible, but in connection with this matter let me make this explanation. The first Order in Council defining the rights of the half-breeds to scrip was definite and comprehensive. But in giving effect to it, the commissioner saw fit to put restrictions upon the issue of scrip which had never been imposed before. There have been several issues of scrip in the Northwest. In 1885 there was an issue. Again in 1899 in the Athabaska district ; again in 1900 and 1901. It was only in 1901 that the commissioner saw fit to make this restriction debarring half-breeds, who otherwise had a right to the scrip, from participating in the grant because of their status in a foreign country. I have never been able to understand the justice of that decision. However it was given and acted upon ; but instead of the half-breeds letting the matter drop from their minds, as my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has said, they kept it very strongly in their minds. If my hon. friend knew the half-breeds as well as I do, he would know that they are a people who retain in their minds a long time a sense of injury suffered. In their opinion, the decision of the commissioner was unjust. What reason may have actuated the late Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) in moving for a new Order in Council and remedying that injustice, I am not prepared to say ; but if a substantial injustice was done, the fact that an election was approaching, was no reason why it should not be remedied. That might give grounds for the suggestion of improper motives ; but if the business of the country is to stand still because of an election, we are about to create a most remarkable and unwarranted condition of affairs. From the standpoint of the half-breeds at any rate and of the people of the west, who are more or less intimately acquainted with them, there was a general belief that the decision of the commission was unjust and that the remedying of that injustice was very proper. That remedy affected lands to the amount of 32,640 acres.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all land scrip.

Mr. OLIVER. I take it for granted that it is.

Mr. HAGGART. In what respect was the decision of the commissioner unjust? And why does the hon. minister differ from him?

Mr. OLIVER. In my opinion, if these people had certain rights by reason of their birth, these rights were not vitiated by the fact of their removing to the United States. Until they had become citizens of the United States they still were considered as entitled to the rights they had acquired by birth. It was only such of these half-breeds as had become, in fact, through a greater or less degree, Indians of the United States that were held to have lost their rights as Northwest half-breeds.

Mr. HAGGART. If I understood the minister correctly, the mere fact that they were considered Indians in the United States was not sufficient, but the point was that some of them had participated in the reservations set aside for the Indians of the United States, were receiving the annual grants and getting the benefit of the Indian schools. Was that not the reason?

Mr. OLIVER. As I understand, it was not confined to that. Any half-breed who had placed himself, directly or indirectly, partially or wholly in the position of an Indian in the United States, was debarred. The view taken by the half-breed himself—

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to get the minister's view. That view was different from the views of the commission. I would like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) to give reasons?

Mr. OLIVER. I have tried to state the reasons already, but I will repeat them. The reason why I hold a different view is the same as that which governs the opinion of the half-breed himself—that the birth of a half-breed was his title, and that his action after his removal to the United States did not in any way violate his birthright. That birthright could not be affected by his subsequent action in a foreign country. That was the view subsequently taken by the Minister of the Interior, I believe, after a full review and consideration of all the circumstances of the case—and, I believe a just and fair view. And the Order in Council of the 13th August last, was passed in consequence of that view having been taken. Now, again I say, the result of this Order in Council and of granting to these half-breeds what they and a large number of the people of the west believed to be the right, has resulted or will result, in the alienation of 32,640 acres of land. Now, whatever wrong is done to the Dominion of Canada, whatever alienation of that public domain has taken place, whatever disadvantage may accrue to this country has occurred because of this Act of, what we will say is, justice to these people, and not because of any subsequent action that has been taken. Either these half-breeds had to be refused the scrip to which they believed they were entitled as their birthright, or else that land must be alienated. There is no choice, and my hon. friend who is so very logical must take either one position or the other. That being established, I do not know that there is much more to be said. The fact that departmental instructions were issued to the land agencies to permit of entry for the land without the presence of the person to whom the scrip was issued is certainly a departure from the rule that has hitherto been allowed.

Mr. FOSTER. Do all the minister's regulations have to be approved by Order in Council?

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes. But this, I understand, was not a regulation, but an order of the minister to the land agent. I am not able to answer for the minister as to the reasons for taking that action, nor am I responsible to the same degree as in the case of the Order in Council. But I take it for granted that the reasons for this permission, quoted in this case were: The non-residence of these people in Canada; there residence at a very great distance from the office at which they must locate; their residence under the jurisdiction of a foreign country; and, possibly, the fact that, being connected as they were supposed to be connected, with the Indian Department of the United States, and deprived them, the privilege of removal that they would otherwise have. I cannot say what the reason was; but I will say this—that to have required these people to come from their residence in the United States to make their location in the land office in which they have been compelled to make it would not have relieved the country from the alienation of this land, nor would it in any way have assisted the half-breeds in holding their title to that land. It would not have inured in any way to benefit either the country or the half-breeds, it would simply have been that much money that the half-breeds would not have had in connection with the handling of his scrip. It is the half-breed, who, in one way or another, would have had to pay this cost of transportation from his residence to the land office.

Now, I am not, at the moment, going to say that it was a proper policy or that it was not a proper policy, to give this order. I am simply trying to remove the impression that was created, or attempted to be created, by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) that in some way this permission resulted in injury to the half-breeds or loss to the country. It resulted in neither injury to the half-breed nor loss to the country. There is another point to which the hon. member alluded. I think he was under a wrong impression, and I am sure he will be glad to be corrected in regard to it. In the Order in Council of the 13th of August, to which he refers, the concluding paragraph as to the assignment of scrip, is as follows :

> The minister further recommends that in case of conflicting claims from assignees of such scrip, the assignee whose assignment is filed in the department first in order of time shall be held to be the legal assignee.

My information from the officials of the department is that in this paragraph, that word 'assignment' is used in error, and that the department has never recognized assignments of land scrip.

Mr. FOSTER. But of money-scrip they have ?

Mr OLIVER. There is no assignment necessary in the case of money-scrip, I understand ; it passes from hand to hand the same as money.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, why was it put in the Order in Council ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am explaining. It was not intended to be put in the Order in Council as recognizing assignments ; it was put in the Order in Council, as I am informed by the officers of the department, in mistake. The intention was to state that orders for scrip would be accepted in the order in which they came in. And the necessity for that arises from this fact—supposing an order has come in and a subsequent order comes in in regard to the same matter. The ordinary rule is that the last order cancels all the previous orders. Now the intention in inserting this paragraph was to provide that the orders should be dealt with in the order in which they came in, that the first order should be considered first, the second order next, and so on, instead of in the way such things are usually handled, namely, that the last order cancels the previous order. But the word 'assignment' is improperly used instead of the word 'order.'

Mr. FOSTER. If that is so, of course it explains the matter in hand, but it is not an endorsement of the efficiency of the departmental officers and of the minister himself.

Mr. OLIVER. Now to prove what I say that there was in some sense an error, I may say that under that paragraph, which evidently contemplated assignments of scrip, there have been no assignments recognized. It was in force from the 5th of November, 1904, until the publication of the cancellation in February, 1905, but during that time no assignments were accepted. The cancellation took place in September, but the publication was not made until some time afterwards. It was cancelled in December because it was recognized as being an error. If the hon. member will give me a memo. of the papers he requires I will be glad to have them brought down if possible.

Mr. J. HERRON. I would ask the minister if he is aware of the fact that there are a number of half-breeds in the Northwest at the present moment who think they have not been justly dealt with, and who think they still have claims for scrip or land. In the section where I live, there are quite a number of people with such claims. They went before the commission, but they think they were not properly dealt with in some way, that their representations were not given due weight, that their claims were rejected without proper consideration. I believe that they expect even yet that a commission will go up again and take up these unsettled claims. During the winter I have received several requests to bring this matter before the government.

Mr. OLIVER. I could not give an answer to that question at the moment, but I take it for granted that if it shall be shown that substantial injustice has been done, an effort will be made to remedy that injustice. But I do not think there is any probability that a new issue of half-breed scrip will be made on any other terms than issues have already been made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course there are reasons I suppose, set out in these Orders in Council—which I have not had an opportunity to examine very carefully—upon which is founded the decision of the department to set apart by means of this scrip a certain amount of the public domain of this country for half-breeds residing in the United States and proposing to make the United States their permanent place of abode. Unless there is something in the statutes or in the compact of by-gone days which makes that necessary, I would not think it a very desirable policy. I would think it far better to restrict the allotment to such of the half-breeds of the United States as propose to return to this country to take up their permanent residence ; otherwise I think that it might not be an unfair mode of dealing with the subject, to take those portions of the public domain which otherwise would have gone to these men who have left this country and gone to the United States, and allot them to such as have chosen to remain in Canada and make this country their home. Under the statement of facts made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), it looks as if it were not so much the interest of the half-breeds that was being regarded as the interest of friends of this government; and that after all, probably not 10 per cent of the land, at least, which has been allotted under this arrangement ever benefited the half-breeds in any respect whatever; and I would infer from the facts laid before this House, that at least nine-tenths of it have gone to the comfort and sustenance of certain gentlemen who happen to be very close in touch with one or more departments of this government, and who have been enabled, by means of this arrangement undertaken in the month of August last on the eve of a general election, very considerably to improve their financial condition. However, we will have the rest of the papers down, and we will have a discussion on the subject. This seems to me to belong to the same class of cases as the wire fence case we discussed the other day, the fishing privileges which were mentioned not long ago, the islands in the Georgian bay which have been discussed this afternoon, and the bitulithic pavement contract which was also mentioned in this House a few days ago. These all seem to be very much in the same category. But of course, as the minister is not yet very familiar with his department, and as he has not yet been able to ascertain exactly what the House demands, it is only right that he should have an opportunity of bringing down the papers, when we shall make any criticism which may be called for by the additional information.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask the minister in this connection as to whether the Nixon papers are approaching completion?

Mr. OLIVER. They are ready, I have been negligent in bringing them down.

Mr. R. BLAIN. I wish to refer a moment to the sale of islands in the Georgian bay. I think the minister should be able to give to the House a statement of the policy of his department in future as to the sale of islands not only in the Georgian bay but in other parts of Canada. When this government came into power they put an advertisement in the papers offering to sell 1,000 islands in the Georgian bay, by public tender. I have a copy of the advertisement in my hand, bearing date, Ottawa, 16 July, 1897. Tenders were received up to noon of the 2nd day of August in that year, for about 1,000 islands situate in the Georgian bay. Without reading the whole of the advertisement, it says:

> The highest or any tender will not necessarily be accepted.

For myself I wish to say that I do not think this is the best mode of selling islands in this country at the present time. While it may be thought better to sell them by tender rather than to sell them by private sale, yet I am of opinion that the proper way to sell islands and other parts of the public domain is by public auction. I think the minister should make it clear to the House this afternoon that, whatever the policy has been in the past, for the future no islands will be disposed of in the Georgian bay district except they are well advertised in different newspapers in this country, and a day fixed so that every man may have an opportunity of coming in and giving his highest price. A survey was made of these islands in 1896——

> Surveys of the islands in question were made by Mr. Charles E. Fitton, Ontario Land Surveyor, Orillia, and Mr. J. G. Sing, Ontario Land Surveyor, Meaford, under instructions given them on the 4th and 17th of June, 1896.

This advertisement was published asking for tenders, and a protest was entered by the Ontario government, showing that the latter did not agree with that policy, and therefore no sale was made. But the matter was revived in 1901, and from 1901 down to the present time several sales have been made. Since this parliament has been in session, five sales have been made to friends of the government, one sale on the 23rd of February, 1905, to Robert Wood, for $105; another sale on the 23rd of February to S. Grozelle, for $45; another made on the 25th of March to Emma Poole, for $20; another on the 12th of April to A. W. Mitchell, for $50; another on the 11th of May to F. W. Grant, for $140.

My hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) who is familiar with the island purchased by Mr. T. W. Grant, a brother of the sitting member in this House for North Ontario, who is well acquainted with that section of the country and is conversant with its values has made the statement this afternoon that if that island had been sold by public competition it would have brought in the neighbourhood of $1,000 to the treasury of this country instead of $140 when sold to a political supporter for $140. If those five islands that I have referred to had been put up for sale by public competition and the value of the other four were equal to the value of the one referred to by the hon. member for East Simcoe, then instead of $360 being found in the treasury for these five islands, the sum of $2,160 would have been paid into the treasury and every man in this country would have been satisfied were he a supporter of the government or a supporter of the opposition. I do not wish to enter into a further discussion now as some other papers are to be brought down. I wish to direct my remarks for a moment to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior. While we do not wish to hold him altogether responsible for the sins of his predecessor in office yet my hon. friend has had due notice of this question because the hon. member for East Simcoe wrote him on May 18, saying that he wished to bring this matter up at the first opportunity. My hon. friend has since that date had this matter under his consideration. The hon. member for East Simcoe objected and said that in his opinion the sales should be made by public competition and now that this matter is before the minister, before the House and before the country as well—because the country takes a very deep interest in this matter and there have been charges from every province in Canada, and particularly from the province of Ontario against this government that there are certain public domains being sold to political supporters of the government in power—I thought my hon. friend would be anxious to clear the government of that condemnation if it is possible for them to clear themselves, and therefore I ask the minister if he is prepared this afternoon, and if not this afternoon if he will be prepared within a few days, to make a statement to the House that hereafter no islands in the Georgian bay district will be offered for sale by private tender or sold to a political supporter, but that every island in future shall be advertised and sold by public auction at a fixed date that may be advertised to the public.

Mr. OLIVER. If I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is perhaps well to use the time of the country at the expense which is entailed by the sitting of parliament, in the discussion at very much greater length of the sale of these islands. The hon. member for Peel has suggested a hope that I will later on make a statement according to the suggestion that he makes. Let me point out that while on one hand that may be a good suggestion in the administration of these lands, on the other hand it may not.

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear, for the boys.

Mr. OLIVER. There are there, islands I understand, varying in size from an acre or less up to thirty or forty acres. They are not, if I understand the matter aright, of any value agriculturally, but they are valuable as summer resorts to put it mildly. Now while one or two or a few of those islands may be especially valuable as sites for summer resorts, I think everybody will admit that there is not a demand for a thousand valuable summer resorts on the shores of the Georgian bay.

Mr. BENNETT. You try a sale.

Mr. OLIVER. I am suggesting the idea that if some person comes along and wishes to build a cottage upon an island in the Georgian bay that has an area of an acre, and the soil of which is as nearly pure rock as it can be, then if the country is compelled to go to the expense of advertising the sale of that island, hiring an auctioneer and selling it by auction, the system will be open to very grave objections from the point of view of the man who wants to buy an island to build a cottage on. The attempt of the government in 1897 was to sell all the islands at a single auction or rather by tender.

Mr. FOSTER. One or more?

Mr. OLIVER. I understood it was to sell them all. They were all offered for sale.

Mr. BENNETT. The advertisement was read and the minister said no tender will necessarily be accepted.

Mr. OLIVER. Surely all advertisements read in that way.

Mr. BLAIN. That is one of the chief objections, that the highest or any tender may not necessarily be accepted.

Mr. OLIVER. All government advertisements asking for tenders for supplies of any kind say that the lowest or any tender shall not necessarily be accepted and I presume the same rule is quite as applicable in the case of islands that the highest or any tender shall not necessarily be accepted because the tender may not be high enough to warrant the government in disposing of the island. That is a saving clause that must necessarily be inserted if the public interest is to be protected. I know I am not justified in taking up time to point out these details to the House, but I think since so much has been said it may be worth while considering whether there shall be an invariable rule of advertising and selling by auction every island for wich an application may be made. Let me briefly sketch the facts of the case. The islands were surveyed and they were valued by the surveyors. This schedule and these prices, as I understand, were available to applicants for the islands. Applications have been dealt with in the order in which they were made and I submit that however improvident the action of the government or whatever loss may have resulted to the country by their adopting that principle the charge of political favouritism does not lie against the government if that is the system and it has been followed.

Mr. BENNETT. In 1897, the hon. gentleman's predecessor laid it down that the highest bidder would get them.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the hon. member will not say for an instant that the government should advertise a sale of islands and say that the highest bidder should get them.

Mr. BENNETT. Not if you want your friends to get them. It is all they have left now, it is their only graft.

Some hon. members. Order, order.

Mr. OLIVER. I think I have fairly pointed out that there is no graft in this transaction.

Mr. BENNETT. Try a sale and see.

Mr. OLIVER. The arrangement has been open and above board; and if it is a fact that owing to the circumstance of the increased value of some of these islands the revenue of the Indians is suffering, that of course is a matter to be fairly taken into consideration and some arrangement possibly made, but I submit that the fact that one or two islands may have achieved a value of $140 or $400 is not sufficient ground under the circumstances of these various sales to make a charge of political favouritism. I will go so far as to say that I do not think that in this country or any other country, a man is to be debarred from ordinary business transactions because he happens to be related to a member of parliament who happens to be supporting the government.

Mr. FOSTER. Nobody contends that.

Mr. OLIVER. I may say that since these islands began to be sold, since the question of the Indian rights in the islands was settled by the action of the government in 1884, there have been altogether 104 islands sold. Prior to July, 1896, 69 sales were made of islands, or parts of islands, of a total area of 1,012·36 acres, and the price realized was $1,846.95. Subsequent to July, 1896, 35 islands have been sold, with a total area of 438·74 acres, and the price realized was $3,002.75.

Mr. BLAIN. You would not compare the value of the islands fifteen years ago with their value to-day?

Mr. OLIVER. I am only giving the facts; I am not making any comparison. Of these islands which have been sold since July, 1896, seven were sold for the benefit of the Indians to the Marine Department for sites for lighthouses or other marine improvements, with an area of 189·60 acres and at the price of $1,377.75. I submit that the facts and figures do not show that this government has been negligent of the interests of the Indians.

YUKON TERRITORY.

Mr. A. THOMPSON (Yukon Territory). Mr. Speaker, some days ago a question arose here as to the disposition of our Canadian territories after the proposed provinces have been established, and on that occasion the right hon. the Prime Minister suggested that it would be perhaps good policy if the provinces when erected would take care of the territories that remained; the idea being that the territories referred to would be allotted to the various provinces. The newspapers of British Columbia seized upon this incident to discuss the position of the Yukon Territory, and I wish upon this occasion to go upon record, as the representative of the Yukon, against any idea of that sort. I avail myself of this the first opportunity to refer to the matter, because were I to remain silent my silence might be construed to mean that the people of the Yukon, whom I have the honour to represent, were indifferent as to the disposition of their territory. I hope on another occasion to have the honour of submitting the reasons why the Yukon Territory, at any rate, should not be annexed to any province of the Dominion. We in the Yukon hope to have a future of our own.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Militia—pay and allowances—further amount required, $110,000.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). This vote is for the permanent force, which has been increased by some 200 or 300 men, and, in addition to which fact, under the Act of last session, there has been an increase in the pay, amounting to something like 20 or 25 per cent beyond the preveious rate. I may say that under an arrangement, which is not now absolutely complete, but which will be within a few days, between the imperial government and this government, by which the Militia Department is to take over the garrison at Halifax, some 400 men have been recently enlisted, and $25,000 of this vote is to pay for these men prior to the 1st July.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was announced some time ago that the imperial troops were to be withdrawn from Halifax and that their place was to be taken by men enrolled by the Militia Department. I mentioned the matter before, but the Minister of Militia was not then able to give full particulars. About ten days ago there was an announcement in the public press—I do not know whether it was authoritative or not—which declared that the imperial troops are to be retained in Halifax for about two years longer, and that the contemplated change is not to be carried out on account of the difficulty of enlisting men here.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is no authority whatever for that statement. There is no difficulty in enlisting men so far as the infantry is concerned, which composes at least two-thirds of the garrison. There will be perhaps some difficulty in enlisting artillery, and very considerable difficulty in enlisting engineers, but we expect to overcome this difficulty by obtaining permission from the imperial authorities—I may say this permission has been to some extent already secured—to enlist reservists of the imperial army. In addition to that, we hope to be allowed to enlist some of the men in the artillery and engineers now at Halifax, whose time is about to expire. It is believed by General Lake that the department will be able to assume full responsibility on the 1st July, or as soon thereafter as the imperial troops may be ready to vacate Halifax.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some six or eight weeks ago, when I brought the question of the defence of Halifax and Esquimalt to the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia, he said that he purposed to make a general statement as to the intention of the government on that subject. When are we to expect that ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend knows that there has not been an opportunity during the last six or eight weeks; but I am ready to make the statement whenever the opportunity offers and I hope to do so within a few days. I thought it would be more convenient to make it upon the item in the main estimates which was left over for that purpose, as that was a sort of notice given to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House who are interested in military matters. I hope within a few days to make a full statement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why do you require $85,000 more than you thought you would require last year ? Is it because more men are to undergo a system of drill ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This does not refer to drill. It refers to the permanent force, which I explained has been increased by about 200 beyond what was expected, and whose pay has been increased from 20 per cent to 25 per cent by Act of Parliament passed last session ; and since then the matter of taking over the Halifax garrison has come up, and some 400 men have been enlisted for that purpose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN How many men do you expect to enroll at Halifax and Esquimalt ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The present number at Halifax is about 2,000 and at Esquimalt between 300 and 400. I am led to understand that we shall be able to reduce the number at Halifax to some extent.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there to be the same equipment at Halifax in the way of guns and munitions of war ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am not in a position yet to make a positive statement in reference to that.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope, when the minister makes his statement, that he will make it full enough to cover that point. By some it is argued that we are doing a very large thing in taking upon ourselves the defence of Canada as regards these two forts. It is important to know whether the defence will be a complete and full one or not, or whether we are to have simply a company of soldiers occupying the vacant space from which the real and sufficient warriors have gone ; whether it is to be a mere station or a defensible and defending portion of our protection ; what it will entail, that is, how much load we are lifting, which may be we should have lifted long ago, in this matter of imperial defence.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I may say that it is the intention of the government to preserve these garrisons in a state of efficiency. It may be that a smaller garrison will be sufficient owing to some changes which have been made by the imperial authorities with reference to the requirements of Halifax and Esquimalt as naval bases.

Annual drill—further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the main vote?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The main vote was $600,000, and this makes the total $700,000. This is for the camps that are to come on between now and the 1st of July.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did you not ask for it last year ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is always some uncertainty as to the dates at which these camps will take place. It has been the custom, ever since I have been a minister, to take a supplementary vote during the session of the year during which some of the camps take place. That is one reason, viz.:—the uncertainty as to the dates. Another is that the pay was considerably increased by the Act of last year, and we could not tell exactly what that increase would amount to. The increase depends upon the number of years the militiaman has served. A militiaman who has served one year receives 20 cents a day additional. One who has served two years receives forty cents a day additional ; and one who has served three years receives fifty cents a day additional. The experience of last year was necessary in order to enable us to estimate at all correctly the amount involved in the increase. We are drilling more men and are getting a very large percentage who have been drilled before. A man who has had three years previous training is now getting a dollar a day. The man who has served two years is getting ninety cents a day. The man who has only served one year gets 70 cents a day. Twenty cents per day is added each year, and it is added on the ground of efficiency. The pay of the militiaman is still 50 cents. That is all the country agrees to give him unless he is efficient, but during his first year, if he proves efficient, he gets seventy cents ; during his second year he gets 90 cents, and the third year a dollar. And if he chooses to re-enlist he has a dollar a day.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the judge of efficiency ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The captain and officers. We have never had as good camps, as good order and as good results in every way as last year.

Mr. FOSTER. How many days drill now ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Twelve days, including the day coming to camp and the day going.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose none who went out last year received only 50 cents per day ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Very few. They were all so efficient that they all received the additional pay.

Mr. FOSTER. Or the officers were so indulgent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many men do you expect to drill this summer ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About 35,000.

Militia stores—further amount required, $25,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. These are stores for the camps.

Transport and freight—further amount required, $5,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The vote is $50,000. Of this amount $34,500 had been expended to the 30th January last as follows : Staff A, $8,440.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the staff here ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, and at district headquarters.

Mr. FOSTER. Has it always been the custom to take travelling expenses for headquarters staff out of the general vote ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is a special vote out of which is paid the travelling expenses of the headquarters staff. The largest item is freight. There are some other items. The inspector general and the inspecting officer are paid travelling expenses out of this vote. Also the district staff officer and the officer who comes from England.

Mr. FOSTER. Has that been the usual practice ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. What was the total amount paid last year for annual drill ? Could the hon. gentleman give us the total for the last two or three years ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They are all in the report. The annual drill, including supplies and transport, 1902-03, cost $385,190. For the year ending 30th June, 1904, it was $749,985, out of which there should be a deduction of about $142,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the amount for 1905 ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About $700,000, largely due to increase in pay.

Dominion arsenal—to increase the pay of Lieut.-Col. F. M. Gaudet, superintendent to $3,200 per annum, $700.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the Dominion arsenal ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The cartridge factory. It is turning out now ten million rounds a year instead of something less than a million. We are increasing Colonel Gaudet's salary from $2,500 to $3,200.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has he been appointed ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. For many years. I found him there when I came in. He is a graduate of the Royal Military College and a most excellent man. The position is a most dangerous one. You cannot get life insurance in it, and we thought as he had done excellent service for a number of years, he was entitled to the increase.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Indians—Nova Scotia, $7,925.

Mr. OLIVER. This is a decrease of $1,250 from the estimates of the current year. Of this reduction, $1,000 is due to the fact that in the previous year that amount was spent to provide shelters for indigent members of the band, which expense need not be repeated this year. There is also a reduction of $250 through the omission this year of an estimate for repair of roads made last year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not imagine that the minister will be able to give the information I desire at once, but I would ask him to make note of the case that I call to his attention. I have a communication from a thoroughly responsible correspondent. I know nothing personally of the circumstances, but the facts as stated in this communication are in effect these: In the fall of 1903, Mr. J. L. McDonald, was appointed teacher of the Indians at Barra Head or Salmon River, being recommended to the Indian Department by the Indian agent. He conducted the school well and the Indians had great regard for him. Without warning, about the end of March last he received a letter from the Indian agent stating that he had heard bad reports of him and that he understood these reports had been sent to the Indian Department and that the teacher would undoubtedly be dismissed unless he resigned. The agent advised him to tender his resignation. This letter was dated March 23rd, 1905. This was followed two days later by a letter which dismissed him from his position as teacher. This letter contained some very harsh adjectives in regard to this young man's character and told him to go home and never show his face again in Salmon river where he had created such a scandal. The young man was entirely ignorant of what the offence charged against him was. He became alarmed and sent in his resignation and desired to know the cause of his dismissal. He has not had any explanation since but, in consequence of his dismissal and of what has been said, reports have been circulated against him which are very prejudicial to his character. It seems that afterwards the agent sent a letter, dated April 3rd, in which he told the young man that he felt that he would be re-instated provided he could get a certificate of good moral character. This he procured. It was forwarded to the agent. But no further notice has been taken of the matter. Another teacher has been appointed. Mr. McDonald, who is a very young man, desired an investigation and still desires it. He does not wish to begin life under the stigma of having been dismissed in disgrace by the Indian Department, especially as he has no idea of the cause of his dismissal. What I would like to know is: Why Mr. McDonald was dismissed; whether there were any charges made against him; if so, what was the nature of the charges; why he was dismissed without the holding of an investigation · whether it is or is not true that he was threatened with dismissal before he resigned, and, generally, all the information to cover the matter as I have referred to it. If the minister will be good enough to have one of his officials make a note of this matter and will give the information on some subsequent occasion when his estmates are before the House, I shall be very glad. I have every confidence that my correspondent, who is a man in very high position, would not make these representations to me unless he felt absolutely that the facts are as stated. Of course, it is possible that he may have been deceived; but so far as he is concerned, I am sure that everything has been stated exactly as he believes the facts to be.

Mr. OLIVER. Note will be taken of the case, and the officials will also have the opportunity of consulting what appears in 'Hansard.' An inquiry will be made and the result laid before the House.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the amount spent for these Indians increasing or decreasing?

Mr. OLIVER. As I explained, this is a decrease.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, but how is it as compared with five or ten years ago?

Mr. OLIVER. The expenditure, taken for a period of ten years, is about stationary.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the policy in these matters?

Mr. OLIVER. The Indians are dependent upon the Indian Department, and that fact is recognized. In this case there were a number of widows and other destitute persons who were not provided with shelter. To prevent suffering it was deemed advisable that shelter should be provided for them.

Indians—New Brunswick—salaries, $1,308.

Mr. BLAIN. How many officers receive payment from this amount?

Mr. OLIVER. Ten.

Mr. BLAIN. What are the duties of the leading officers?

Mr. OLIVER. The ordinary duties of an Indian agent. The province of New Brunswick is divided into two agencies under superintendents. The Indians are grouped in small bands in different parts of the province. The northwest part is under Mr. Carter and the southeast part under Mr. Farrell. Their duties are merely to oversee the bands on the different reservations.

Relief and seed grain, $2,500.

Mr. BARKER. There is an increase here, while there is a decrease in a similar item in Nova Scotia.

Mr. OLIVER. The explanation of the increase for relief and seed grain is that the circumstances governing the requirements vary from year to year, and it happens that in this case certain bands in New Brunswick require a small increase, whereas in Nova Scotia circumstances have permitted a small decrease.

Mr. BARKER. I suppose the minister knows the peculiar circumstances that justify a decrease of $1,000 in one case and an increase in the other?

Mr. OLIVER. I have already explained the reason for the increase of $1,000 in Nova Scotia; it was to provide shelter for certain indigent members of the band last year; it was a special provision which does not require to be repeated this year, and therefore does not appear in the estimates this year. But in the case of New Brunswick there was nothing special of that kind, and this increase of $200 is merely because of small requirements, both in the matter of relief and seed grain.

Medical attendance and medicine, $3,500.

Mr. TAYLOR. Would the minister kindly tell us how many Indians there are altogether in New Brunswick?

Mr. OLIVER. 1,694.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister please explain this increase of $500 over last year?

Mr. OLIVER. The explanation is that the demands in previous years have been rather more than the estimates, and this year it is desired to provide fully for the requirements.

Mr. BARKER. If the demands have been greater in previous years, how have they been met? Has the hon. gentleman been paying without authority?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that the original vote in previous years has generally been added to by a supplementary vote. This year the desire is to take the full requirements in the first vote, so that no supplementary will be required.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many physicians does the hon. gentleman employ altogether in looking after the Indians in New Brunswick ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are thirteen physicians employed, whose payments amount to $1,915.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been any dismissals during the past year or new appointments ?

Mr. OLIVER. There have been no changes in the staff during the year.

Miscellaneous and unforeseen, $600.

Mr. OLIVER. There is an increase of $300, the reason of which is the same as in the case of the medical atendance vote, that is, that the requirements have not been met by the ordinary vote of previous years and had to be supplemented. It is desired now to make the main estimates of the present year cover the total expenditure.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman will see that that hardly amounts to an explanation, because all the grants of last year, including supplementaries, were only $300 ; in the other item he refers to all the grants were only $3,000. He is now taking more in both cases than the total of last year, so the supplementary explanation does not quite meet the case.

Mr. OLIVER. In the appropriation accounts for 1903-4 the amount for miscellaneous and unforeseen in New Brunswick is $600, and the amount actually expended was $503.77, leaving a balance of $96.23. It is desired to have the total amount available that was voted last year.

Mr. BARKER. But the hon. gentleman will see that in 1904 the vote of $300 sufficed ; why does he want to double it this year ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have pointed out that in the year ending June 30, 1904, there was a total expenditure of something over $500, and there was a vote last year of $600 in the main and supplementary estimates. For the current year, now about to close, the vote was $300, but that will not be sufficient to meet the expenditure of the year, and some of the expenditure will have to be carried forward and paid out of the appropriation for the current year.

Mr. BARKER. Some of this $600 will be taken to pay last year's debts. Is that it?

Mr. OLIVER. It will have to be.

Mr. BARKER. That seems to be a rather general feature of the administration of this government. We had on Tuesday several instances when the government were granted a certain sum of money to carry on the department, they spent just what they pleased and then they come in this year and ask for a vote to cover the deficiency.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course the fact is evident from the figures I have given that the department have asked for a sufficient appropriation for the year ending June 30, 1904. They have a small balance to the good of some $90 odd. Then last year, in the hope I presume of still further reducing the expenditure, they only asked for $300. I am informed that this will probably not be sufficient to pay all the bills and therefore an amount equal to what was asked in previous years is asked for the coming year in order that we may have enough money to pay the bills.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Why not put it in the supplementaries?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not put in any supplementaries.

Mr. BARKER. You asked during the last day or two for a lot of supplementary votes to cover money that you required to meet last year's expenditure, and why not do the same thing here, why have a different system?

Mr. OLIVER. The other votes were for different departments. The reason for this is that medical expenses are not a fixed amount. Medical expenditure of course depends a good deal on circumstances which are not within control, and I am given to understand that the expenditures have not been so under control as to be kept within the amount, but the bills are not in and we cannot tell how much the bills will be yet. As the amount was not great and the bills were not available, as the vote was evidently very small, it seems to be not unreasonable that the bills should be paid out of the vote for the year in which the bills came in.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think this thing is getting altogther too common. How are we on this side of the House to keep track of expenditures if the minister is going to permit one year's business to run into another, to simply take money that we vote to meet this service for 1905-6 and pay liabilities incurred in 1904-5. It seems to me that the minister is getting very far away from what is right and proper in the expenditure of public money. Do I understand that the Auditor General permits that sort of thing or whose fault is it? Possibly he cannot help himself but surely some restriction is placed upon the minister that will prevent this proceeding. We are voting money for 1905-6. I tell the minister that he has no right to put his hand on one dollar of that to pay any expenditure incurred in 1904-5. If he does he is committing an outrage on this parliament. He has his remedy. We have before us supplementaries for nearly every department. Why did he not see that a sufficient amount was placed in the supplementaries of 1904-5 to meet any possible balance that was not provided for in the main estimates of last year? Certainly that was his duty. As I said a night or two ago, we do not want to be repeating these things day after day but we certainly want the business of the country carried on in a business way. We understand that this is a business government, a government of business men. I am afraid that their reputation as business men and their business practices have all disappeared, because certainly they do not adopt business methods. I tell the Minister of the Interior that he has no more right to put his hand in the public chest and take one dollar for the purpose of meeting a balance or meeting accounts incurred in 1904-5, out of the appropriations which he is now asking, then I have a right to do it—and I am positively sure that I have no right nor has any other member of this House. It is a miserable practice, a bad practice, and if such a practice is to continue, I fail to see how any man can keep a check on the expenditure of this country. I hope and trust that even yet before the 1st of July the minister will see that a supplementary estimate is brought down containing a sufficient amount to meet what was unprovided for in the last year's estimates and that he will come down to the House and will obtain its sanction and then he will have a right to expend that money for the purposes for which we vote it. But he must be careful not to put his hand on a single dollar that we vote now to meet any expenditure incurred prior to the 1st of July. I think I have made myself plain to the minister and I regret that I am obliged to repeat these things day after day, but I intend to raise my voice in protest every time this occurs. It is occurring altogether too frequently, and surely when the minister has the opportunity before him, as he has yet over a month in which to secure the sanction of His Excellency to a further supplementary estimate to meet just the very items that he tells us are unprovided for. If he asks for too much, the balance unused will simply lapse on the 1st of July and drop out of sight. There will be no money lost, let him ask for plenty, but let him do it in a constitutional way. The House has never refused to cheerfully vote money for the support of Indians and their medical attendance and so forth, but we want to know exactly what we are doing and that the money we vote is applied for the purpose we vote it. I trust this will be the last time I shall have to call the minister to account for this thing.

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the minister to explain—and I would point out to the minister that this is not a matter for amusement either for the minister himself or for his department whether it is $300 as it is here or $300,000 as it was the day before yesterday, the matter is a matter of business and of system and we want to know just about where we are about these things—I would like to ask the minister how he expects to pay one dollar of last year's accounts out of money that we are granting for the coming year. I want an explicit answer to that because he is asking this money for that purpose. The only way I can see in which he intends to do it is by the abuse, the intentional, deliberate abuse of the credit account system which has been the subject of so much discussion and complaint on the part of the Auditor General, a system by which departments get a credit account of very many thousands of dollars and pay just what they please, and after the horse is stolen we expect the Auditor General to lock the stable door. Now we want to stop that. I can tell the new Minister of the Interior that there has been a great deal of this going on, especially, as we believe, in his department. We had an item of $300,000, some days ago, for immigration of which a similar explanation was given. That money granted last year had been partly appropriated for debts of the preceding year, an absolutely illegal thing to do. Because this is a very little item of $300, the hon. gentleman laughs and seems to think our criticism is a matter for amusement. It is not the amount we are criticising, it is the act. If inquiry had not been made we would have supposed we were voting this money for next year. How does the minister intend to use this money to pay his accounts of last year ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am glad to see that when the Auditor General's resignation is accepted, as it may be before long, we will not have far to go to get other equally able and useful critics of expenditure. The hon. gentlemen have asked me many questions, and I would ask them, how they expect a vote in the supplementary estimates for the current year would be used to pay medical accounts which were not presented until that year had expired. Do they think the Auditor General would allow the money voted in the supplementaries this year which expires on the 30th of June, to be applied to pay accounts that did not come up for payment until some time in July ?

Mr. BARKER. I would suggest that you should ask the Minister of Finance how that could be done.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend from Halton was fairer than the hon. member for Hamilton. He said that he would not ask that the estimate should be within possibly $100 of the expenditure, and if he will read this estimate in that light he will find we are not asking for anything more than that amount of latitude. The hon. member (Mr. Barker) accused me of treating this item with levity because it was small. I was not treating the item with levity but I was treating with levity the idea that we could control an expenditure for medical assistance. If we could get some arrangement with the Indians and the Auditor General, that the Indians would not get sick more than up to a certain amount and within a certain time then we could control the expenditure ; but unless we can do that, if we are going to give the Indians medical assistance, we have to treat them when they are sick and we have to pay for that treatment. Instead of the hon. members accusing the department of outrunning the estimates they would do well to turn their guns upon the Indians who get ill without regard to whether the estimate is large or small. It is of course very inconsiderate on their part and certainly it is leaving the department in an unfortunate position, but so far we have been unable to reason them out of that attitude.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. I called the minister's attention to the fact that we are discussing 'miscellaneous and unforseen expenditure,' and I would ask him what is that expenditure generally for ?

Mr. OLIVER. The memorandum given to me is : for some time past the money appropriated for this service has not exceeded $300. It frequently has to be supplemented in order to meet the ordinary demands for contingencies and travel. For last year the expenditure under this sub-head is $503.77 the greater portion of which was spent for the ordinary contingencies of travel to agents. It will therefore be seen that the increase in the main appropriation of $300 is demanded by the circumstances of the case.

Mr. J. D. REID. This is not for medical attendance ?

Mr. OLIVER. It includes medical attendance.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the minister to say that there were some thirteen physicians employed, and the cost was $900.

Mr. OLIVER. I said $1,915. That is the allowance paid to the physicians to attend the different bands scattered around the province.

Mr. TAYLOR. I find from the Auditor General's Report of last year that some twelve physicians drew pay, whether they earned it or not, amounting to $1,874. I do not see a dollar charged for medicine, but I find that J. S. Benson, M.D., Chatham, got $125, J. F. Desmond, M.D., Newcastle, $250 and so on up to $1,874. I am sure that each and every one of these physicians is a political friend of the Minister of the Interior and just got these snaps. I would like to see a detailed account of any of these physicians, the number of trips they made and the number of patients they attended because out of the total vote of $2,339 there was paid to physicians $1,874.

Mr. LENNOX. The Minister of the Interior says : turn your guns on the Indians. I do not think the Indians have votes and I suppose they would not be so useful to the minister as that interesting list, read to us the other night, of names that are incapable of being pronounced. The Minister of the Interior proposes to turn his guns upon an efficient public servant, namely, the Auditor General. We have been making an effort since the beginning of this session to get information from the government as to what they propose to do in this matter. In the early days of the session when the Minister of Finance was in Europe, inquiry was made and we were told that nothing could be decided until his return. When he did return he said that the matter was under consideration as to whether there would be an amendment to the Audit Act, and later he gave the information that he knew of no necessity for changing the Audit Act and he did not anticipate any change would be made. Now we have something definite. The junior member of the administration, the latest addition to the ministry, is more candid than some of his colleagues, and he announces that in all probability the resignation of the Auditor General will be accepted.

Mr. OLIVER. May I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon ; I did not make any such announcement.

Mr. LENNOX. What did the hon. minister say ?

Mr. OLIVER. I say I did not make any such announcement.

Mr. LENNOX. What did the minister say ?

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. minister will see in 'Hansard' what I said.

Mr. LENNOX. I will take it for the present that the minister, whether he said it in so many words or not, did intimate, with a good deal of glee, that we would probably soon have another Auditor General. I do not suppose he said that without knowing something of what he was talking about, and it is quite in line with what we have seen of the workings of the present administration, including the Minister of the Interior, that there is on their part a cheerful looking forward to the time when they will get rid of the Auditor General. But I want to tell the Minister of the Interior, and particularly the Minister of Finance, that although they may get rid of the Auditor

General and refuse to bring in a law which will give that efficient officer an opportunity to perform his duties efficiently in the interest of the public, they will not get rid of the public sentiment which is abroad in this country that the government have a desire to keep the law in a state of inefficiency, and if possible force the Auditor General out of the position of watchfulness which he has assumed in the interest of the public. It is just as well that the people should know it. We have time in this House for almost everything except the financial interests of this country. The Minister of Agriculture is a notable instance of that. He has time for everything except the business of the department over which he presides. We have time for every corporation which wishes to exploit anything, but we have not yet had time to take into consideration the finances of this country, which represent an expenditure which is climbing up by leaps and bounds every year, the very supplementary estimates now before the House being a notable evidence of this. I want to warn the ministry that they have not heard half as much as they will hear from the public about this very question of the Auditor General; but the Minister of the Interior has probably done a public service in announcing definitely and distinctly, if not in so many words, yet in substance, that the government are likely to get rid of the Auditor General; and he is probable saying to himself, oh, let it be soon—the sooner the better, in the estimate of the ministry.

Mr. FIELDING. As the hon. gentleman has stated that the government are very anxious to get rid of the Auditor General, perhaps it would be as well for me to remind him that the Auditor General tendered his resignation some months ago and the government declined to accept it. As for the rest, the speech which my hon. friend made about the tremendous feeling in the country in regard to the Auditor General is simply a repetition of what he said some months ago in a more extended manner. He had the assistance of the Auditor General, who expounded his views from time to time in public interviews, in the public press, and in other ways, and the result of it all was that the hon. gentleman failed to satisfy the public mind that there was any grievance against the government in that respect. The situation has not changed.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the Minister of Finance be kind enough to say that the Auditor General's resignation was brought down by the refusal of the government to amend the Audit Act?

Mr. FIELDING. The Auditor General is not the best judge of the policy of this country. The government of Canada with the advice of this parliament, will decide when the Audit Act needs amendment.

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. INGRAM. I hope my hon. friend is not going to lose his temper.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think I did. I thought I was very amiable.

Mr. INGRAM. I was asking my hon. friend if the Auditor General did not tender his resignation because the government refused to amend the Audit Act?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the hon. gentleman had better ask the Auditor General.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand that the Auditor General makes that statement.

Mr. FIELDING. Very well, I do not object to it.

Mr. INGRAM. And that is the reason the Auditor General is resigning. But the Minister of Finance wanted the House and the country to believe something altogether different, in reply to the hon. member for South Simcoe.

Mr. FIELDING. I stated that the hon. member for South Simcoe remarked that the government were very anxious to get rid of the Auditor General, but that as the Auditor General had some months ago tendered his resignation, the government could have accepted it if they wished. They did not do so, and the Auditor General remained in office.

Mr. INGRAM. And the government had a very good reason for not accepting his resignation.

Mr. FIELDING. The government have no desire to interfere with the Auditor General. Whether he resigns or remains in office is entirely his own business.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman will remember that at the time of the general election the government were not so indifferent to the Auditor General. They were particularly eager that he should remain in office until after the general election.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend has no warrant whatever for that statement. The Auditor General is free to resign or remain just as he thinks fit. No effort is made to interfere with his freedom of action in that respect. The statement that the government were trying to get rid of the Auditor General is entirely unwarranted.

Mr. INGRAM. I did not say that.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman did not, but the hon. gentleman who started the discussion did.

Mr. INGRAM. The government could have prevented the resignation of the Auditor General by agreeing to amend the Audit Act?

Mr. FIELDING. Why ought we?

Mr. TAYLOR. To guard the treasury.

Mr. FIELDING. The treasury is all right.

Mr. INGRAM. I think the country is under the impression that the Auditor General has a better knowledge of what is necessary in the administration of his department than even some members of the cabinet.

Mr. FIELDING. The country did not indicate that.

Mr. INGRAM. The question of the Auditor General was not in issue during the last general election.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend tried to make it so.

Mr. INGRAM. If the government had shown as much independence as the hon. gentleman has shown to-night, and had accepted the resignation of the Auditor General before the last general election, the country would have expressed their opinion in strong language. The government knew that, and were only too eager to keep him.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member for South Simcoe says we are trying to get rid of the Auditor General, and the hon. member for East Elgin tells us that we were trying to keep him.

Mr. LENNOX. I am sorry that the Minister of Finance has lost his temper; but it always points in the same direction. The hon. gentleman is probably one of the mildest speakers in the House except when he gets into a tight box; but whenever he does, I am sorry to say that hon. gentleman loses his temper, and his voice rises, as it did to-night. The hon. gentleman said he wanted to instruct me that the Auditor General had tendered his resignation. If the hon. minister had informed me and the other members of this House weeks ago of that circumstance, he would have discharged his duty according to British parliamentary traditions and according to the fundamental principles of government in a British country. But he has not seen fit to do so. Weeks ago the Auditor General sent in a report pointing out the difficulties which exist to-day, and the Minister of Finance, knowing that the Auditor General is not the servant of the cabinet, but an officer of parliament, should have immediately laid that report before the House. But the minister kept perfectly silent on that question until his hand was forced to-night. He comes very late in the day indeed to instruct me that the Auditor General has tendered his resignation. But the minister cannot get away from the fact that the reason the Auditor General is tendering his resignation is that the government will not make such amendments in the law and bring about such changes as will enable him to have the proper means of curbing extravagant and in many cases dishonest expenditure of the public funds. Instead of working on that line, as I said, there was a prayer in the heart of the Minister of Finance, not this session or last session, but before that, to get rid of the Auditor General, the watch-dog of the treasury. That was evidenced by the fact that two or three years ago he brought in an Act, not to enlarge the powers of the Auditor General, but to make his position virtually a name, and nothing more. If the Minister of Finance would bring about that state of things, he would be happy. But we had a perfect right, from what was said by the First Minister at the opening of this session to anticipate that there would be a consideration of this question, with the view of making the Audit Act more efficient, having regard to the changed conditions which have been brought about in the last twenty-five or twenty-six years.

We had a perfect right to have this matter considered in a frank and candid way by the minister, instead of which we have been treated to a lecture. The hon. minister taunts me with having spoken on this subject last session and says it did not bring about a change of government. Perfectly true, these things require time to work. But if the government had accepted the resignation of the Auditor General last session, as it was thought they would, if they had not eaten humble pie as they did, they would have found a different story; and although it might not have driven them from power, would at least have weakened their position. Whenever they do accept the resignation of the Auditor General, they will be condemned for their action, not because of the personality of the Auditor General, but of the causes which brought about his resignation. Whether such condemnation would drive them from power is another question. That, however, is evidently the only thing the hon. minister thinks about. But he can take warning that this matter and these various scandles which force themselves on the public notice from time to time, and the way the electorate are being treated with regard to the great question before the House—all these things combined may prove too strong even for the government's tenure of office, which seems to be the only thing they take any interest in.

Mr. FIELDING. In my wildest dreams I did not attempt to picture any such possibility as that of the Tories coming to power; and nothing was further from my mind than to attempt to lecture my hon. friend. All I did was to point out that some of his statements were incorrect, and I am not aware that I went beyond that. He said that the Auditor General resigned and that it was my duty to inform the House some weeks or months ago, and I failed to do it. When did the Auditor General resign ? I do not understand what the hon. gentleman means.

Mr. LENNOX. I did not say that the Auditor General had resigned. I did not understand that he had.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman did say so.

Mr. LENNOX. If I did, I certainly did not give expression to what I intended to say. I intended to convey the idea that the Auditor General had sent a report, and I think that 'Hansard' will show to-morrow that that is pretty nearly what I did say. He suggested amendments to the Audit Act, he pointed out the difficulties which existed, and said that about the 1st July, if improvements were not brought about or promised, he would resign. I said—and I repeat it—that it was the duty of the administration and particularly the duty of the Minister of Finance, when he got that report from a public official, a public document, a supplementary report of the Auditor General, to have laid it on the table and not let the House become aware of it merely through the press.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid that my hon. friend will now be open to the charge of doing the lecturing. He is telling me what is my duty, so that he is the sinner in that line. Let me say, however, that the Auditor General has presented no report which it was my duty to present to the House. He has been engaged in some public discussion of the question and has gone to the press for that purpose. I have no objection to his doing so. The document to which my hon. friend referred was given the public press before there was an opportunity to present it to parliament, if it were a proper document to bring before parliament, and every hon. gentleman interested in it is in possession of it now.

Mr. INGRAM. A short time ago the Minister of Finance said the government was in a better position to judge as to the amendments which should be made to the Audit Act. Well, two years ago he mustered up courage to bring in amendments to the Audit Act, but he had not the courage to force them through the House. The reason was the people gave him due notice they would not stand that kind of thing. Consequently he did not force through the amendment notwithstanding his big majority behind him. That is an indication of how the Auditor General controls this government in the matter of legislation. The elections are now over, and I suppose the government will take up again the amendments to the Audit Act which the Finance Minister proposed on a previous occasion. We had another instance of a prominent official, and ex-member of the cabinet, resigning. He was appointed to a very high position ; he knew the election was coming on. Why did he resign ? Because it was said that if the government were returned to power, he would get notice to quit, and he thought he would anticipate that notice. The Auditor General, however, is in a different position. He has asked parliament to make certain amendments to the Audit Act, and this side of the House approve of his policy. It is not unusual for an Auditor General to prepare documents and submit them to members of the opposition. He did it previous to 1896. Prominent members of the opposition in those days received very lengthy documents calling on the government and parliament to do certain things so that it was not unusual.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not say it was unusual. I did not even say the Auditor General had done so. I did not refer to the Auditor General furnishing the hon. gentlemen opposite with any documents. I made no allusion to anything of the sort.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman said he furnished the press.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman spoke of documents being furnished to the opposition. I did not make any allusion of that sort. I am not raising any question as to what the Auditor General did. I am only answering observations as to what we had done or left undone. My answer to the first observation of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Ingram) was that the amendment to the Audit Act was a matter of policy, and that in questions of that kind the government must take the responsibility of guiding and directing the House with regard to whatever action may be taken. It is not the business of the Auditor General to make amendments to the Audit Act. He may make suggestions, and the responsibility of acting must rest on the government. If they do not think the suggestions wise, they will not act upon them, and must take the responsibility at the proper time.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister has not said why the government withdrew the amendments they did propose to the Audit Act. If these amendments were so important, why did they not carry out their ideas ?

Mr. FIELDING. The proposed legislation was intended to facilitate public business and overcome some difficulty which the Auditor General was placing in the way of carrying on public business, We hoped that these difficulties might be removed by the voluntary act of the Auditor General. Whether he has fully removed them or not is a debateable question. That is percisely the situation. We have no desire to interfere with him and would be much pleased if he would facilitate the transaction of public business in a way we thought he was not following. It was in order to facilitate the disposal of public business that these amendments were prepared.

Mr. INGRAM. Does not the same difficulty exist to-day that existed when these amendments were introduced ?

Mr. FIELDING. I would not say the same, but I am bound to say that things are not moving as happily as they might ; but at that time we had in the House to call attention to some things in which the Auditor General had not facilitated the transaction of business. He took a different view. I am not questioning the propriety of his course, but it was a course that did not facilitate the prosecution of public business. I think that since that time the differences with him have been fewer. But I suppose that so long as there are Auditors General there will be ministers in parliament who are not always in accord with them.

Mr. BARKER. I understand the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to take the position that the government are the best judges, as a matter of policy, as to what should be comprised in the Audit Act.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly, I say that.

Mr. BARKER. I differ from the hon. gentleman, and I desire to say why. He seems to overlook the fact that he and his colleagues are the ones to be audited. The public, who desire the audit, are in a diametrically opposite position to that of the hon. gentleman. I can quite understand—not imputing any impropriety to the hon. minister and his colleagues—that if some little blunder or irregularity took place, the hon. gentleman might be inclined to look with a little indulgence upon an Auditor General who did not point it out to the public. It would be most surprising to the shareholders of a great company to be told by their treasurer that he did not think an audit was necessary, or that he was the best judge of how far the audit should go. The public of this country want to audit even the Finance Minister ; and the public, and certainly the opposition in this House, should have quite as much to say in that regard as the hon. gentlemen who sit on the treasury benches and who are to be audited. Now, this is an example of extreme irregularity in the different branches of the government in bringing down the estimates. We have a perfect right to point out, and, as the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) has said, we should continue to point out, so long as that irregularity continues, in what it consists. This session the government have brought down supplementary estimates for the year 1904-5, amounting to $6,379,342—an expenditure for the fiscal year which they had not provided for. But this amount included items for the year 1903-4, to which the Auditor General called attention, amounting to $280,551.

Mr. FIELDING. What were the items to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) refers ? I think he is referring to a purely formal item at the close which appears——

Mr. BARKER. I am pointing that out. We have the right to assume, in the absence of any remark in these estimates, that this $280,551 included everything for the year 1903-4 that had been overlooked. But two days ago the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), in giving us some of his very candid admissions, referring to item 32 for the year 1904-5, the amount of which was $300,000, said that had to be provided, because he had used the money granted last year, to pay for 1903-4. Surely that was an irregularity. When we come to the main estimates for the coming year, we have a right to assume that we are now getting truthfully and straightforwardly just what is required for the year. But when we ask the Minister of the Interior to explain increases, he laughs and tells us : Oh, we could not tell exactly last year what we wanted for particular services, and this item includes expenses for both years. But when, a few days ago, the government asked a supplementary vote of over $6,000,000 to cover the expenditure of last year, they have erred on the safe side and asked enough. What we find fault with is that we do not know for what year the money is actually being voted. How, then, can we criticise the accounts ? The time lost in the explanation given by the Minister of the Interior of this small item will cost nearly as much as is involved in the question. And we could avoid all this if a straightforward statement were given of the items as they come before us.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid I fail to see the connection between the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Barker's) last criticism and the general statement he has made with regard to the Audit Act. If I understood aright, early in the discussion the complaint of hon. gentlemen opposite was that sums belonging to the service of the previous year had been paid out of this year's appropriation, and that this was illegal and improper. Am I right ?

Mr. BARKER. Yes, that was one complaint.

Mr. FIELDING. The Auditor General, who, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, always does right as against this government who always does wrong, has passed these illegal and improper items.

Mr. BARKER. I explained that.

Mr. FIELDING. But in the explanation it appears that the Auditor General passed these things which the hon. gentleman now says are illegal. I do not say they are illegal ; I do not join in the condemnation of the Auditor General. But I am pointing out that if these statements are correct, they are a condemnation of the Auditor General.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) wants to deceive this House by stating that the Auditor General was prepared to pass these items——

Mr. FIELDING. I did not say that he was prepared to pass them, but that he did pass them. At the beginning of the year some accounts of the previous year were paid out of this year's appropriation. I would much prefer that that kind of thing should be avoided. But it turns out that the accounts which hon. gentlemen opposite say have been illegally paid were passed by the Auditor General. I do not say that they were illegally paid ; I do not condemn the Auditor General in that way.

Mr. BARKER. We know that $280,551 was set forth in the report of the Auditor General.

Mr. FIELDING. That did not touch these items.

Mr. BARKER. That is the beginning of this series of misrepresentations. The Auditor General, at page C—4 of his report, gives the details of expenditure not provided for. The Minister of Finance asks us in a supplementary estimate for the money. That is all right. But what I complain of is that, while putting that in the supplementary estimates of 1904-5, the hon. gentleman includes other similar items in the main estimates for 1905-6, and says not a word about their being for the year 1904-5. We seek to ascertain the truth by cross-examining the Minister of the Interior, but generally that hon. gentleman who has just come into office does not know the facts.

Mr. INGRAM. There is more than that. As to this reflection on the Auditor General——

Mr. FIELDING. I did not make any reflection on the Auditor General. That was done by hon. gentlemen oposite.

Mr. INGRAM. But I want to consider the correctness of what the minister has said. The other evening, when the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Prefontaine) was explaining his estimates, concerning one item he said that it was put in because the Auditor General would not pass the account, and it was necessary for him to ask for an Act of parliament.

Mr. FIELDING. There are such cases.

Mr. INGRAM. And why ? Because the government are not complying with the law. So it is hardly fair to say that the Auditor General passes these items so freely.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not say that he passed them freely ; I said he passed them.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like once more to refer to a statement made by the Minister of the Interior. He attempted to draw on the sympathy of the House and to make it appear that we on this side were opposed to that provision which was necessary for the health of the Indians. He did this in an adroit way, attempting to create public sympathy, just as he did a few evenings ago when he attempted to excuse his estimate of $300,000 for the current year by saying that when the Barr colony was brought to this country it was necessary to provide attendance for the women and children, when we all knew that this attendance was paid for, and that provision was all made years ago, and had no connection whatever with the money he was asking for. So successful was he in drawing a herring across the track that he misled even the press into the belief that the opposition was doing something very wrong to the women and children of the Barr colony. To-night he is trying the same thing. I may just as well tell him that he is not sitting on a back bench. We want to treat the hon. gentleman as a minister of the Crown, but he must not bring up such miserable diatribes as he has done to-night, and did on a former occasion, by trying to draw a herring across the track in producing arguments that have no bearing at all on the question but merely to divert attention from the facts before us. This is the second time the hon. gentleman has done this. Now I am prepared to treat the hon. gentleman as a minister of the Crown, I wish to treat him with every respect, but in all the arguments he brings forward I want him to treat the opposition in the same way. Now we have said not a single word adverse to providing the Indians with all the services they require, under either the treaties or under the law. We are perfectly satisfied that they should be carried out to the extreme limit. But we do not want to be told that because we are finding fault with the manner in which the estimates come before this House, we are endeavouring to do a wrong to those people who are not here to speak for themselves.

I think the proposition of the hon. gentleman is highly improper, and that he should, before the 1st of July, bring down a further supplementary estimate and ask for sufficient money to meet the expenditures of the Indian Department in this province, to meet all the requirements up to the 1st of July, so that there will be no such a thing hereafter as a minister putting his hand upon funds which are sacred to the purposes of the Indians for the year 1905-6, and applying them to the payment of debts of bygone years. I do not know how the hon. gentleman intends to work this account, I suppose it is by means of what he calls a suspense account. He says, how are you going to meet this case? A debt is contracted in 1904-5, it is not presented until 1905-6, and how are you going to deal with it? Well, I am not familiar with the manner in which the accounts of the department have been kept, but I have every reason to suppose that if a bill came in in 1904-5 for which money had been voted, that it would be charged up against that vote for the year 1904-5, and not of necessity charged against the vote for the following year. I assume that when the account is received it is charged up under what we may call a suspense account, it remains in that form until the 1st of July, and after that it is immediately charged up to the vote of the following year. That is a practice that I do not think should prevail. I do not see any necessity for it. I am quite sure that the minister has abundant clerical help in the shape of first-class accountants in his department to keep the two years entirely separate, and to give at the end of the year a full statement of the expenditure of that year. Now I understand that in the Post Office Department it may be two or three months before the accounts all come in for the past year, two or three months after the 1st of July. Postmasters, salaries thousands of miles away, mail carriers' salaries thousands of miles away, do not reach the department for months after the close of the fiscal year. But I understand that these accounts are charged back against the estimate of the previous year, the year to which they belong, and that when the Postmaster General brings down the report we get a statement exactly of what the expenditure of that year amounted to. Now we cannot tell what the expenditure of the Indian Department is for any year, because there is a system of running the one into the other, apparently, and we are kept in the dark. We may vote so much for 1904-5, we may vote again a certain sum for 1905-6, but we are told that the money voted for 1905-6 may be used to pay debts contracted in 1904-5. As I said before, the opposition has no means of keeping check upon the expenditure of the country. That, I think, is part of our business. I would fail in my duty did I not attempt to point out these irregularities, and I trust that after the ventilation this question has received during the past two or three days, some remedy will be applied, not only in the Department of the Interior, but in other departments, because, as I understand, this is a fault that applies to all the departments of the government.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to take the remarks of the hon. member in the best possible spirit, and assure him that, as I understand it, the general vote of the Indian Department is not open to his criticisms. In regard to this particular vote for miscellaneous and unforeseen items, these things are not of a class that are capable of being accurately estimated for. Last year, as I have pointed out, there was an effort to bring that vote to a reasonable limit; but if it should turn out that owing to unforeseen occurrences the amount was overrun to a small extent, as it may have been, though I am not sure that it has, I am sure the hon. gentleman will not place the expenditure under that head in exactly the same category as he would an expenditure for definite and fixed purposes that could be foreseen. I plead for that much latitude in regard to this particular item, and beg to assure him that I think he will find in the general bookkeeping of the department, if he goes through the items, that his requirements are fully met. As far as the Indian Department is concerned, where a vote covers expenditures that can be foreseen, they are absolutely provided for, and there is no carrying forward from one year to another.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the minister not think that he can foresee practically all the expenditure that he will be called upon to meet under this head between the present day and the 1st of July? Does he suspect any extraordinary expenditure, or is there something that he is unable to anticipate? If he has not in his mind's eye any extraordinary expenditure, let him simply bring down an estimate of what, under ordinary circumstances, would meet the case. I am quite sure that if some accident occurred, something extraordinary occurred, there would be some means of meeting the case. There are means of meeting emergencies of that kind by the Governor General's warrant. I do not mean to say that it would be applicable to this particular case. But if some extraordinary epidemic was to occur among the Indians during the coming month and it was necessary to expend a very large sum of money, I do not think there is an hon. member in this House who would find fault if the expenditure was found to exceed the estimate. That is a matter that could be explained, but there is no explanation and no attempt to explain this case. It is a common thing in the estimates to have an item for unforeseen expenses, and it applies so plainly and so specially that a minister, putting together the items for ten, fifteen or twenty years, and striking an average, can certainly get very little astray in arriving at what would be a reasonable correct estimate. I wish to take this firm stand on this question, because I believe it would be in the interest of economy, in the interest of the country, in the interest of careful administration and careful expenditure. But if we are to allow the matter to go on hap-hazard year after year without having any safeguards thrown around it, as I have already said, we lose all control of the expenditure of the country, and practically know nothing about it, allowing the expenditure to grow on us year after year, wondering indeed what has become of the money of the country.

Mr. INGRAM. How many bands are there in New Brunswick? I understand there are about 1,600 Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. There were twenty bands.

Mr. INGRAM. Does that include the Indians that were not settled on reserves ?

Mr. OLIVER. There were twenty bands located but all the Indians are not settled in those particular settlements ; that is some Indians are not in the band settlements but there are twenty bands.

Mr. INGRAM. Some of them are not settled on reserves ?

Mr. OLIVER. Exactly.

Mr. INGRAM. What does the government do with those not on the reserves that are included in those 1,600 ?

Mr. OLIVER. They are dealt with as though they were on reserves but of course they are not restrained to the reserve.

Mr. INGRAM. There is no restriction made between those settled on the reserves and those not settled on reserves ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, there is no difference. Their proper home is on the reserves, but I am given to understand they are not compelled to remain there and some of them choose to rather make their permanent residence elsewhere than on the reserve ; others prefer to make their permanent home on the reserve, but to spend the greater part of the time travelling about the province in their usual vocations of hunting, fishing and basket making.

Mr. INGRAM. Are those under the care of the doctors appointed by the department to look after the Indians of those several bands ?

Mr. OLIVER. They have the same claim upon the assistance of the medical department whether they are on the reserve or off it.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it not a fact that where they are not on the regular reserves the death rate is higher, the sickness greater than on the reserves in New Brunswick ?

Mr. OLIVER. Such is not the information of the department.

Mr. INGRAM. I think there is a reference to this in the report. The death rate was higher your report says last year from various diseases. The argument used by the minister is that the reason why you are increasing the item this year is on account of the increase of sickness among the Indians and in the last item, ' Miscellaneous and Unforeseen' where you have an increase of $300 over last year you are giving as a reason that greater sickness may prevail and for that reason you are increasing the item. You have forgotten that you have increased the item above that by $500 more than last year ; it was $3,000 last year and now it is $3,500. Therefore the argument used by the minister with respect to the increased sickness on the reserve is already attended to by reason of the $500 increase for medical attendance, and the argument would not hold good for the last item for ' miscellaneous and unforeseen.'

Mr. OLIVER. The miscellaneous as will be understood is not all for medical service, but is mostly taken up in the travelling about of agents and contingencies and in case of sickness the agents have to travel about more and exercise closer supervision.

Mr. INGRAM. You have eleven doctors controlling twenty bands and the greatest difficulty, I apprehend, among those not settled on regular reserves, and the causes that brought about the increased sickness among the Indians not on the settled reserves, was the bad sanitary condition of their buildings. The same attention is not given to the Indians that are settled on other places than the regular reserves and that may account for the increased cost of medical attendance.

Mr. OLIVER. Under the treaty arrangement with the Indians it is not within the power of the department to compel them to live within the reserves. They have the privilege of living around where they please.

Mr. INGRAM. Surely Indians desiring to have the rights given to Indians must comply with the instructions of the Department of the Interior. They must reside on the reserves to be entitled to what the department grants them. Take at Munsey or any of the other Ontario reserves if the Indians will not remain on the reserves surely the department does not have to grant them what it gives to those who are on the reserves. If an Indian desires his freedom and wants to roam at will he must do it at his own expense and cost, and the department should not be called upon to treat him the same as they would Indians who are on the regular reserves.

Mr. OLIVER. The conditions in the maritime provinces are not the same as in the Northwest ; in fact the Indians in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia do not receive any treaty payments and the government does not take the responsibility of their support as is the case with the Indians of the Northwest. The Indians of the Northwest were deprived of their livelihood by the destruction of the buffalo. In the case of the maritime province Indians they are expected practically to make their own living. The government recognizes their responsibility towards them in various ways, and one of the ways is in giving medical attendance, but the able-bodied Indian of New Brunswick is expected to provide for his own support, and as every one knows a sedentary life does not agree with the mind or inclination of the Indian, and possibly does not give him the best opportunities. Therefore it is in the securing of a livelihood that the Indians wander from their reserves, and I would take it that if the government exercised pressure to keep them on the reserve the government would thereby incur a moral responsibility to provide for their support to a degree that it is not called upon to do at the present time ?

Mr. INGRAM. That is not the point at all. If an Indian roams around at will and through his negligence becomes sick, surely it is not the intention of the department to follow that Indian around and provide medical attendance for him ?

Mr. BLAIN. The Indian report shows that the Indians of New Brunswick are divided into several bands, and there does not appear to be very much progress made by them. The inspector of the Eel river band reports :

They have no stock or farm implements ; they pay no attention whatever to education ; they are not making much progress.

The government should give some little attention to educating these Indians and especially so as the effort appears to be a success in the Northwest. Nobody objects to spending money for the welfare of the Indians, but some of it should be devoted to educating the younger Indians so that they may become self-supporting and cease to be a burden on us. The report as to the Bathurst band says :

They pay no attention to education ; they are not making any progress.

The report with reference to the Burnt Church band is more encouraging and it says :

There is a school house on this reserve and the school has been kept open for several years past. Many of the younger Indians can read and write. More interest is taken by them in education than in former years.

If the Indians of this band can be induced to educate themselves surely the same thing can be done with reference to other bands in the same province. The report as to the Red Bank band says :

Very little attention is given to education. These Indians are amongst the most progressive in this agency.

It looks as if these reports were stereotyped from year to year, and that the agent does very much as assessors do, namely look up last year's report to see what it said and then write the same thing for the current year. I hope that when the minister is installed in his office he will attend to these things, and that next year we will see a change. Some attention should be paid to educating the Indians on every one of these reserves.

Mr. OLIVER. A vote of $1,800 has already been passed for schools on Indian reserves in New Brunswick.

Prince Edward Island Indians—medical attendance, $650.

Mr. INGRAM. Are there any more doctors engaged this year than last ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are only two reserves on the island and the doctors are paid by fees according to attendance.

Mr. INGRAM. They seem to be paid a pretty fair fee ?

Mr. OLIVER. The expenditure last year was $562.80.

Mr. HENDERSON. How many Indians are there in Prince Edward Island ?

Mr. OLIVER. 292.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask if there is any grant made to the Indians at Indian Lorette in the province of Quebec ?

Mr. OLIVER. There is an agent there. They have medical attendance and relief is furnished to those who are destitute. They do not receive treaty money as do the Indians in the west, but in other respects they are dealt with in much the same way.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not finding fault with the expenditure and my question was merely a matter of curiosity. I had occasion to visit Indian Lorette not long ago and I was impressed with the comfortable conditions under which the Indians were living. Were it not that I was told it was an Indian village I never would have suspected they were Indians at all, with the exception of one or two people I saw there. They are certainly a very respectable looking class of people, and I presume that under the arrangement made with them long ago they are entitled to receive this consideration. I am glad to testify to the comfortable conditions in which the Lorette Indians appear to be.

Mr. OLIVER. They are practically self-supporting.

Indians—Manitoba and the Northwest—annuities, $141,365.

Mr. OLIVER. This item shows a net decrease of $52,307. There is a decrease in annuities, supplies of implements, seed, live stock, provisions, clothing, special clothing for chiefs, special grant to the Sault Indians, and in the expenditure on saw and grist mills and general expenses of management. There is an increase in the estimate for schools, day, boarding and industrial, of $5,910 ; a total net decrease of $52,307.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is the decrease in the annuities owing to a decrease in the number of Indians ?

Mr. OLIVER. No ; it was found that the vote in the estimates was a little larger than was necessary, and the estimate of this year is reduced accordingly.

Mr. LAKE. Has there been a decrease in the number of Indians in the last year or two ?

Mr. OLIVER. No ; they are just about at a standstill.

Indians—Manitoba and the Northwest Territories—seeds, field and garden, $1,864.

Mr. INGRAM. How are these distributed?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that they are distributed from the commissioner's office at Winnipeg to the different agencies, and the distribution to the individual Indians on the reserve is at the discretion of the agent.

Mr. INGRAM. Without any interference from any other officer?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand so.

Indians—Manitoba and the Northwest Territories—live stock, $25,253.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I would like to ask the minister to explain the method by which this live stock is purchased for the department. Is any particular stockman asked to supply a certain number of head at a stipulated price, or have all stockmen an opportunity of competing?

Mr. OLIVER. The purchase of cattle is accomplished in various ways. This year Inspector Markle has purchased the greater number of cattle required, particularly the bulls. Some of the other stock has been purchased by other officers of the department under inspection by a veterinary. All stock is subject to inspection before it is paid for.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is the stock inspected before it is shipped? Does Inspector Markle go around and inspect it before it is placed on the cars to be shipped to different reserves?

Mr. OLIVER. He inspects and is responsible for the condition of that part of the stock which he purchases. The stock are subject to an inspection by a veterinary when they arrive at the different agencies, to see that they arrive in proper condition.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The reason I ask this is that I think the government have been paying an exorbitant price for a good deal of the stock they purchase. For instance, I know a stockman who gets $125 apiece for so-called thoroughbred cattle, which he sells to the government for the Indian reserves, and he sold about $9,000 worth last year; yet those who have sold animals to this stockman have informd me that they sold them to him for $45, $50 and $55 per head. One gentleman, whose veracity I can vouch for, informed me that he was offered by this same stockman his own selection of fifteen animals at $60 per head. It is common talk in that part of the country that the government has been imposed upon by the manner in which this stock has been sold to it. I have a little delicacy in mentioning this gentleman's name, but he himself has rather made a boast as to the amount of money he has made in selling this stock to the government at $125 per head, while it is well known to all the farmers of the neighbourhood that he purchased the animals at $45, $50 and $55 a head.

Mr. OLIVER. I can understand that there is a great difference of opinion as to the value of alleged thoroughbred stock, without the different valuators being in any way dishonest. I can easily imagine that the department may on occasions have paid more than a clever stock buyer would have been able to get the animals for; but the desire of the department is rather to procure good animals than cheap animals, while, of course, not paying improper prices. But I am pointing out that in the one case the object of the buyer is to get the animal as cheap as he can, while the object of the department is to get the animal as good as possible within a fixed limit of price.

Mr. COCHRANE. By paying $120 when you could have got them for $60.

Mr. OLIVER. I am merely stating a fact, which is in the knowledge of every man in Canada, that the value of a thorough bred animal is very largely a matter of opinion and judgment.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman is not answering the statement. The statement was that a stock owner sold 15 head of cattle to the government at $125 a head and had offered them to a merchant at $60 a head.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not disputing the statement at all, but I am merely pointing out that there is the possibility of a very wide margin of difference between two perfectly honest estimates of the value of the same animals, when the question of breeding is in issue.

Mr. COCHRANE. Everybody who knows anything about stock knows that if an animal is well bred, the breeding will show on the animal.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. No one will know better than the original owner, and when an animal has been purchased for less than $60 from the original owner and then is offered to another party for $60, and is subsequently sold to the government for $125, there is something radically wrong. It is evidently a case of favouring a political friend. I do not know whether the particular inspector or Indian agent was a good judge of an animal as to breeding or not; but if he is limited to purchasing from men of a certain political complexion, he will have to pay correspondingly increased prices. Some other method of purchasing should be followed rather than that of going to certain political friends and asking them to supply so many head of cattle at so much per head.

Mr. OLIVER. If there be a discrepancy between the actual value of the animal and the price paid, some means will have to be taken to prevent future purchases of that kind. The object of the department is to secure good animals and we have limited the price to a figure which should be sufficient for a good animal. Beyond that figure the purchaser cannot go, and he is bound to get the best animal he can for the price. That may not be the best way. It is said that the agent was instructed to purchase from certain firms or dealers. Well, there are certain people who make a specialty of thoroughbred stock, and the buyer might very well be instructed to go to such. For my part I think that in the western country, there is an opporunity to purchase thoroughbred stock on terms which do not leave the matter open to question from any point of view. There is a thoroughbred stock sale at Calgary every year, where thoroughbreds are brought from all parts, and are offered for sale at public competition. I have instructed my officers to attend that sale this year and purchase whatever animals might be required.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That would be a much preferable way to buying them from the middlemen. All these animals were purchased in Manitoba for shipment to the Territories. If you have stock sales at Calgary, you could buy them there and save freight and you could buy very much better where you have competition. As regards the other suggestion of the minister, it would be better for the superintendent of Indian agencies to go direct to the stock raisers, who are known to have a number of thoroughbred stock, and save the great profits of the middleman.

Mr. HERRON. In our country it is well known that the different Indian reserves pay three or four times the value for the stock they buy. I know of another instance where 100 head of cattle were put upon one of the reserves by a speculative friend of the government. He charged for these cattle $26 a head. They would not sell in the district where they were delivered for $10 a head. That fact I know personally, because I had something to do with their delivery and inspection. The agent refused to accept the cattle and the stockman and contractor simply sent for a very important member of the government and he instructed the agent to take them over. All the cattle supplied the reserves in that part of the country have been charged at the same rate.

Mr. LALOR. I think the Minister of the Interior made a rather candid statement when he said these mistakes were not to be repeated. That is the kind of statement this country wants. If the minister will follow that precedent, he will be acting more in the interests of the department than in trying to condone its acts of the past. Judging by the criticism of that department both in and out of the House, it would keep him rather busy to do that. And I hope that, when these questions come before the department he will be candid enough with the people not to condone the acts of the department in the past. I hope also that in the future such acts will not be repeated. I think the country will have confidence that under the hon. gentleman they will not be repeated. I think the people believe that they have an honest man at the head of the department at the present time, whatever they may have had in the past. I am glad to believe that the hon. gentleman will not repeat the mistakes made by his predecessors and buy cattle from the man who happens to be the Liberal candidate, at twice the price of what they are worth. I think that the explanation made that these cattle, bought from the farmers at $45 and $50 a head were sold to this government at $120 per head shows to some extent the extravagance of the department in the past. I do not think it should be repeated even though the gentleman selling the cattle happens to be the Liberal candidate.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. We have in this item a reduction from $53,895 for the current year to $25,253 for the coming year. Surely the fact of having had a general election last November had nothing to do with this.

Mr. OLIVER. I am told that the reason for the reduction this year is that the purchases of previous years have brought the amount of stock on the reserves up to about what is considered reasonable. Of course, it is not the policy of the department to continue buying breeding stock for the reserves. The intention is to buy a certain amount and depend upon the Indians themselves to take care of that stock and look after the increase. The whole intention of the purchase in years past was that these purchases should not continue in the future; but it is hoped that the difference between the estimate of the current year and that of the coming year on this account can be continued, and that with the purchases that have already been made, there will be an increase of stock on the reserves. In regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) I do not know that it is any part of my business either to admit mistakes on the part of the department or to condone any mistakes they may have made. I have undertaken a very serious responsibility in my present office, and shall hope to discharge that responsibility so as to meet the approval of my hon. friends on the other side of the House. At the same time, I must say, that though I am of a sanguine disposition, and however great my hopes, my expectation does not by any means reach such a height as that. With regard to this item, I think it can be no question that for the requirements of the reserves in the west, at least, so long as the Calgary sale is continued, it will be the best and most economical place to purchase the thoroughbred stock. It is not the sale for other than thoroughbred stock—that other will have to be purchased elsewhere. I do not know now how this system of purchase can be improved upon, though if complaints made are well founded, perhaps its administration could be improved upon. But, in the case of thoroughbred stock, we can hardly hope to purchase the requirements for the eastern part of Canada at the western stock sale. We will try to devise something, possibly if the sale is kept up to the high standard and run on as good a basis.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The hon. minister has an estimate here of over $25,000 for the coming year. I assume that he has details of the class of animals he will purchase with this money. Could he tell how many thoroughbreds and how many of the ordinary class of stock he intends to purchase?

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman wants to know what animals are to be purchased and for what reserves?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. And at what price.

Mr. OLIVER. The following is the estimate:

Manitoba.
Portage La Prairie Agency—

Mr. HERRON. At what age are heifers required say for Stoney agency or the Piegan agency?

Mr. OLIVER. Two years old.

Mr. HERRON. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) does not think that two-year old heifers are worth $28 apiece in that country?

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. HENDERSON. I notice, with reference to the Blackfoot agency that he said he intended to purchase during the coming year twelve males at $125 each.

Mr. OLIVER. Scarcely that. We are asking for that amount of money so that we may purchase at that price. We will purchase them at a lower price if we can. But we are anxious to keep within the hon. gentleman's restrictions as to overrunning our vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. At the same time, we expect the hon. gentleman, who is going to give $125 each, to buy a good animal for the Indians, and that he will not put them off with a poorer animal and use the balance of the money for something else. That would be getting back to the old system. In the same agency the department purchased twelve males only last year. Can it be possible that it is necessary to keep on renewing the thoroughbred stock at this excessive rate ? If so, it seems to me that something is wrong. I do not know much about the Blackfoot agency but it seems to me that the purchases are pretty large. There is also a supply of heifers at $28. It would appear that this is the standard price for heifers. It strikes me as very extraordinary that heifers raised in the Northwest Territories are so much alike that they are worth just $28, no more and no less. That seems to be the standing price. It looks to me as if the agent goes out and says, I want some good heifers, $28 is my price, turn out your heifers. They may be worth $20, they may be worth $15, but $28 seems to be the standard price for heifers, the same as $125 is for the male animal. Now does the minister really think, after purchasing 12 thoroughbreds, male animals for this agency last year, that it is absolutely necessary that twelve more should be purchased next year? It seems to me there is a good deal of uncalled for extravagance and waste of money. I think the Indians should be taught to make better use of what is provided for them; they should be trained to habits of economy and industry, to take care of what is given to them. It may be that some disease has crept in and the animals have died; but unless there are some extraordinary conditions, certainly there seems to be something wrong in the appropriation we are asked for.

Mr. OLIVER. This is a very large reservation, comprising 470 square miles, and containing 850 Indians. By treaty made with these Indians the government is under obligation to provide them with support. These Indians were formerly dependent upon the buffalo, and the treaty stipulated that when the buffalo disappeared, as they must disappear with the settlement of the country by white people, the government should provide for the support of these Indians. The government has carried out that part of the bargain, but at the same time it has been our constant effort to get the Indians to be self-supporting. Although the reserve is a large one it is not generally agricultural, neither are the Indians agriculturally inclined; so you would have almost to make over the reserve and to make over the Indians before you could get them to support themselves by farming as we understand it. The only chance of getting them to be self-supporting is to encourage them to raise stock. Now the department has entered into this enterprise of providing these people with stock so that they may ultimately become self-supporting. It is still a difficult process to some extent, but that seems to be the only way by which we can bring them to that condition. I think it will be generally agreed that it would be a good policy to pursue towards the Indians to induce them to become self-supporting, and to that end we are providing them with stock by this vote.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether the Indians are in the habit of eating up their stock in the winter when they are pinched with hunger?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, the department retains a certain control over the stock, and the Indian is only allowed to kill and sell with the premission of the agent. Very strict care is exercised in that respect, and although stock is handed over to the Indians to be dealt with exactly as he pleases, at the same time certain control is retained by the agent, so far as is consistent with the encouragement of the idea of independence and of property in the mind of the Indian.

Mr. HERRON. I may tell the minister that these cattle are not worth $28, $22 to $23 would be a good price for them. You can get almost the best cattle in the North-west Territories for that price.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course the hon. gentleman is thoroughly posted in that matter, and I will request the officers of the department to take notice of his opinion. But as I have pointed out, we are not asking this money necessarily with the intention of paying that price for cattle, but we are asking it for the purpose of covering all contingencies, so that we may not have to overrun our estimate.

Mr. LAKE. In connection with these items I desire to make a remark regarding the practice of allowing Indian agents to act as magistrates. They do so under the statutes of 1886, ex-officio an Indian agent is a justice of the peace. Then he has the power of two justices of the peace in certain cases which are enumerated in that Act. He deals not only with the Indians but also with white people. A little excitement has been created in a portion of the district which I represent in regard to this matter. Now that settlements have become fairly thick throughout the Territories, and there are likely to be a good many cases in which both whites and Indians are mixed up, I think it would be just as well to have that provision removed; and if it is considered advisable that special authority should be given to the agents in respect to the Indians, then it should be confined to those agencies in the more remote districts. It will be readily understood that an Indian agent, if he is any good as such, looks upon the Indians as his especial charge, as his wards, and in any cases which come before him where Indians and whites are concerned, his judgment is likely to be biased in favour of the Indians. For instance, there are the cases where some one has taken wood or timber off an Indian reserve. The agent in the first place sets on foot inquiries as to who is likely to have taken the wood. After he thinks he has discovered the guilty parties he takes the necessary proceedings to summon them before him; so that after having acted as prosecutor he also becomes the judge. It seems to me absolutely wrong in principle that the same person should be both prosecutor and judge. In the older established settlements there are many gentlemen who are capable of acting as magistrates, and could act in all cases in which whites and Indians are concerned. So far as I can see in the Act there is no provision for an Indian agent to take an oath of office; I do not know whether he takes an oath to act in the capacity of justice of the peace, perhaps the minister will be able to tell me. Further than that, every justice of the peace who is appointed by the local government in the Northwest has to make regular returns to the Attorney General of cases which come before him, also returns to the Supreme Court of cases heard and convictions made. I would like to know whether the Indian agent acting as two—for he has the power of two—justices of the peace, makes regular reports to the Department of Justice or to the Supreme Court; what check there is upon him in that respect. I may say that I am strongly of opinion that he should not act in cases of this nature and that it would be advisable to have the act changed in this respect this session.

Mr. OLIVER. The agent is ex-officio a magistrate; he does not take an oath of office and makes his report to the head of the Indian Department. The idea of course is that the Indians are not in a position to protect themselves in law and that it is desirable they should have adequate protection within the limits of their reserve. Of course the jurisdiction of the agent only applies within the limits of the reserve and therefore can only be exercised in connection with matters that are entirely under the Indian Act or disputes between Indians and other people under that Act. While my friend admits that this is still necessary on reserves which are situated in a thinly settled country——

Mr. LAKE. I do not admit it.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, if my friend does not admit the propriety of this provision in any case, I am quite prepared to admit that with the settlement of the country and the change of conditions it is quite possible that what may have been a necessary provision at one time is not a necessary provision now and the subject is very well worthy of consideration. But at the same time, even though we do consider the changed conditions, there is one condition that is not changed, that the Indians are as has always been said the wards of the government. They are a special responsibility on the Dominion government and therefore under its special protection and it is something to be considered very carefully before a conclusion is arrived at as to whether it would be desirable to withdraw from the Indians that protection which this government is now able to accord them through the position of the agent as a justice of the peace in administering the special legal provisions which are applicable only within the limits of the reserve and which are generally considered necessary to the well being of the Indians on the reserve.

Mr. LAKE. Let me put a specific case before the minister. A number of white settlers take wood off a reserve. They may have done it deliberately or they may have done it inadvertently. It is very difficult, as the minister knows, sometimes to know where an Indian reserve begins and where it ends ; there is nothing particular to show. The agent, if he is a good agent, having the interest of the Indians thoroughly at heart, immediately that this matter is reported to him by the Indians sets to work to try and find who has been guilty of taking the wood. As soon as he thinks he has located the guilty parties he issues summonses and they appear before him. Now I contend that he is not a proper person under those circumstances to judge the white settlers, it may be, who have been brought before him in this way. He has been the man who has started out to find the offenders and then he becomes the judge as to whether those are the offenders whom he has caught, and the judge as to the extent to which they shall be punished for the offence, if he finds he has been successful in capturing the right persons. Certainly it seems to me that in all places where there are civilian justices of the peace within reach it becomes his duty to take that matter before the civilian justices of the peace. Surely the minister will not contend that the agent cannot get as full justice for the Indians before the ordinary justices of the peace as he could by taking the case himself. I agree that the Indians are the wards of the government and should be well looked after and their rights preserved to them, but we have the agents who are in a position to look after these rights and see that they are preserved to the Indians and they can do it, in my opinion, perfectly well without acting as justices of the peace between them and the neighbouring settlers.

Mr. INGRAM. With respect to the inspection of agencies, take for instance the Qu'Appelle agency, how many officers are connected with that agency ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are nine officials connected with the Qu'Appelle agency and besides that Inspector Graham who is inspector of the eastern division of agencies, has special charge of this agency of which he was formerly agent. He was afterwards appointed inspector with headquarters in this agency and special supervision over it.

Mr. INGRAM. Take the Assiniboine agency and the Moose Mountain agency for instance. Would the inspector inspect those, and if he did would his report be submitted to the department and would it be published in this report here ?

Mr. OLIVER. He is inspector of the two agencies mentioned, and his report would be printed in the next report of the department.

Mr. INGRAM. What I want to get at is who inspected it previous to the date of this report, and where is the report to be found that ought to be included in this report ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that the former inspector named Leveque, died, after a long illness, and did not make the usual annual report as inspector. The agent's report appears as usual. Mr. Graham was appointed, but he has only reported in regard to the schools, as he has not been long enough in office to make a full report.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the minister make further inquiry into this matter and give us a little better explanation a little later ? It seems a very remarkable thing that a report should not have been submitted. Is it not a fact that the report was suppressed ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed I have given the only explanation there is.

Mr. INGRAM. We are perfectly satisfied to allow that explanation to go for the present. At a later period we will perhaps be able to make some explanation too ; we are informed the minister's explanation is hardly in accordance with the facts.

Mr. HERRON. I wish to ask the minister if some provision cannot be made to keep the Stoney Indians on their reserve and prevent them exterminating the game in the Rocky mountains ? I do not suppose that the government is saving very much in the matter of maintenance by allowing those Indians to travel over the Rocky mountains, hunting the year round and depleting the greatest game country on this continent of elk, deer, mountain sheep, goat, grizzly bear and several other kinds of game. The Indians seem to be exempt from all the game laws which govern the white people, and they make a regular practise of slaughtering the game and selling the carcase. I am sure the people of all Canada would be sorry to think that our Rocky mountain game may be exterminated as the buffalo have been exterminated from the prairies. Of course, the advance of agriculture would have removed the buffalo anyway, but the Rocky mountain country is not suitable for agriculture, and its game is a great advantage in many respects. Both the minister and the hon. member for Strathcona are aware of the facts, and I trust that some steps will be taken by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) to provide a remedy.

Mr. OLIVER. This matter has been under the consideration of the department for a number of years, and the facts as stated by the hon. member (Mr. Herron) are recognized, but there are grave difficulties in the way of providing a remedy. The Indians, by their treaty, have the right to hunt anywhere on the reserve or off it, and it is considered a very doubtful policy to undertake to abrogate arbitrarily that treaty right. It seems to be a case of either the Indians exterminating the game or of our exterminating the Indians. If we prevent them it might mean the violation of a very solemn treaty obligation entered into by this government, and that is a very serious step to take. I do not say that some solution of the difficulty may not be found, and it will be my endeavour to find it, but I wish it to be understood that it is a very difficult matter. This reserve is not suitable for agriculture, but the department has endeavoured to induce the Indians to take to stock raising by supplying them with stock. So far that endeavour has met with no marked success. They are good hunters and there is good game in the mountains, and it suits their temperament better to follow the game than to herd the cattle. The situation is difficult, but I can assure the hon. member that the facts are within my knowledge as they are within his, and I shall make every effort to meet the difficulty, although I cannot make any promise as to the measure of success I may meet with.

Mr. HERRON. I am very glad the minister has recognized the importance of this question, in which the people of the west as well as the people of the east are interested. I look to some solution of the difficulty, because I know that the minister will do his best.

Mr. LAKE. The minister has stated that the Indian agents in their capacity as justices of the peace made returns to the department. Amongst the most important part of the returns of ordinary justices of the peace is the rendering of accounts of the fines and forfeitures, but, so far as I can see from the Auditor General's Report, there appear to have been none last year. Is that the case ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that there are returns of fines and forfeitures made to the government.

Mr. LAKE. I am glad to hear it. I hope the hon. minister will look into this question, which is really a very serious one, of Indian agents acting as magistrates, with the power of two justices of the peace, in cases in which whites are concerned, and see if he cannot eliminate this provision with respect to localities where there are civilian justices of the peace.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. When the minister states that there are returns of fines to this government, does that merely apply to the Territories, or does it include fines collected in the province of Manitoba, where the administration of justice is entirely in the hands of provincial officers ? I am aware that trials have taken place there in which Indian agents have acted as magistrates.

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that the fines will go to the Dominion.

Indians—Manitoba and Northwest Territories —provisions, &c., $162,521.

Mr. INGRAM. How are these provisions bought ?

Mr. OLIVER. The rule is to purchase all these supplies by tender after public advertisement, except when the supplies tendered for have been exhausted, and the term required to be filled is not long enough to warrant a further advertisement. The great bulk of the supplies are purchased by tender after public advertisement.

Mr. HENDERSON. Some of the prices seem to me to be very high indeed. For instance, I find an item like this : 100 pounds of biscuits, at 20 cents per pound. These must be very much better than the biscuits that were sent to South Africa for the volunteers. I do not object to the Indians getting a good article, but we must see that too high a price is not paid for it. Another item is 75 pounds of cheese at 16 cents per pound. I notice that there is a charge of the Canadian Pacific Railway freight on supplies, so that these prices would be exclusive of the freight paid to the Blood agency. Another item is 12 bottles of extract of lemon at 35 cents. I think it would surprise a great many housewives to learn that the Indians of the Northwest were supplied with an article of this kind costing three times as much as it does in Ontario. Another item is 200 pounds of rice at 8 cents per pound. Most people consider rice at 5 cents per pound a satisfactory food. Another item is rolled oats, 500 pounds, at 3½ cents per pound. I do not know whether this is Tilson's pan-dried ; if it is, it must be a very superior quality.

I do not think people in this part of the country are in the habit of having 3½ cent meal made into porridge. Then we have 24 cans of salmon at 15 cents. If it is British Columbia salmon, it seems to get cheaper the further east it comes. Then we have 900 pounds of sugar at 6 cents. We in this part of the country were satisfied to pay 4 cents a pound for standard granulated at the time this was bought. Then we have 4 gallons of vinegar at 80 cents a gallon. That must be a very superior quality; possibly it was adulterated with some kind of alcohol. These are a few illustrations. It seems to me that these prices are altogether out of the ordinary, and I am surprised to learn that these goods are bought by tender. I notice that 75 cwt. of lime was bought at 75 cents per cwt. Is there no stone in that part of the country? To my mind that is an extraordinary price. In the Edmonton agency, I notice that a very high price was paid for the same article—55 cents a bushel.

Mr. P. TALBOT. I have paid 75 cents a bushel for it.

Mr. HENDERSON. That must be a splendid place to sell lime. Some energetic, pushing man selling lime there could make a fortune in a few years. This is freight paid, and I have no doubt that for half the price some sensible business man would have taken hold of the matter. I am surprised at the government paying those extravagant prices. My hon. friend gets big prices for what he sells. I notice here that he sold four bulls at $125 each. A man who gets that price for his bulls can well afford to pay 75 cents for lime.

Mr. P. TALBOT. I supplied five bulls but one of them died after being taken down there and I did not get paid for it. I lost $75 on the transaction.

Mr. HENDERSON. Perhaps it was sick when sold and the hon. gentleman was not entitled to be paid for it. I regret very much that he lost his bull.

Mr. P. TALBOT. The price was $40 less than the average price I received at the Calgary sale for three yeas.

Mr. HENDERSON. I notice that $125 is the ordinary price. I am not saying that the hon. gentleman got any more for his bulls than did other stockmen. From $80 up to $125 seems to be the common price. I am not accusing the hon. gentleman of having done anything unfair. I do not believe he would be capable of doing anything of the kind because he comes from pretty near the same section as myself, and I know something of his family, and I am not charging him with any dishonesty at all. But I am pointing out that there is something peculiar about these prices. Why had such large figures to be paid? Had heavy freights to be paid, it would be different, but I understand the Canadian Pacific Railway is paid for conveying those articles to their destination, and consequently they should be laid down there as cheaply as at Ottawa or Toronto.

Mr. OLIVER. During the visit of His Excellency to that part of the country, at his special request, these animals were purchased, and they were paid for at the ordinary retail price of the locality.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the great bulk of supplies were bought by tender?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly. The hon. gentleman was in error when he said that the price paid is the price less freight. The tenders all called for prices delivered.

Surveys, $7,000.

Mr. LAKE. I would like to ask whether the hon. minister has any idea that the Indians will sell any portion of their reserves. I know that for some time past, that question has been raised with regard to the Crooked lakes agency. There is a very large extent of territory in that agency quite close to the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is not used by Indians, and is quite in excess of their requirements. The Indians might be persuaded to sell that territory. I presume it is their property which they can sell or not if they choose. Could the department encourage them in any way to give up any of the land which they really do not require in order to promote settlement? There would be a large settlement there if the Indians would dispose of any of their land.

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that there is an arrangement for the surrender of 5,000 acres of the Assiniboia reserve south of the Sintaluta. That will be dealt with during the coming summer. At other places also efforts are being made to induce the Indians to part with portions of their reserves which they do not need, and for which they will receive the full price that may be received by the government acting as their trustees. It is not possible for the government to enforce a surrender because the land is absolutely the property of the Indians.

Mr. LAKE. Is there any idea of selling any portion of the Pasqua's reserve?

Mr. OLIVER. Up to the present I have had no communications with regard to that.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the explanation of paying $15 a day to Dr. Jamieson in connection with the Berens river agency?

Mr. OLIVER. The medical attendant accompanies the agent in making the annual treaty payments.

Mr. INGRAM. Why should the doctor be paid $15 a day and $162.50 for expenses?

Mr. OLIVER. It has been the custom for many years to take the opportunity of the gathering of the Indians at the treaty points to make a medical examination of them and render them such medical assistance as may be possible at the time.

Mr. INGRAM. We had a similar case last year. I find $162.50 charged up for expenses of the same Dr. Jamieson. Does he accompany the Rev. J. Semmens ?

Mr. OLIVER. He did the last year. The Rev. Mr. Semmens was agent.

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, and this Dr. Jamieson gets $15 a day, and he has $160 in addition for expenses. He travelled around with this man for a trip I suppose to enjoy himself in this particular agency. The same rule does not apply in any other place. And then these gentlemen have rather an exalted idea of their duties, they charter boats and go into this thing very liberally.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are no special cars?

Mr. INGRAM. There are no special cars but here we have schooners $73. I do not know whether they are lager beer schooners or not. Then they have 'entertaining a party, $3.50,' 'expert interpreter, $11.' There are several items here that should be looked into as they really are very liberal and I think this Dr. Thompson has had a very good thing now for a couple of years and he should give some one else a chance. It should not be confined to this one particular agency.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. We will have that looked right into.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know what can be said in regard to this more than to repeat that it has been the custom for many years to make a medical inspection of the treaty bands at the time of making the treaty payments. It is usual to have the services of a physician. I do not know what the ordinary stipend of the position is, but fancy that $15 a day is not more than most of those talented professional gentlemen would ask especially for a trip such as this around the Berens River agency, the reserves of which are situated around the shores of Lake Winnipeg, and the chartering of boats is a necessity if the trip is to be made unless the agent and the medical man either swim or wade. There are no railroads or roads of any kind between several of the agencies, and the only means of communication is by boat and it is natural to suppose that the medical man if he is of good standing and his services are worth anything will not make such a trip as that for anything but a very fair consideration.

Mr. BLAIN. Is such a medical inspection made of all the different bands of the province of Manitoba ?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand so.

Mr. INGRAM. Oh, nonsense. On this page there are several other agencies and will the minister be good enough to turn over his report and find such an inspection for the Clandeboye reserve, the Birtle reserve, the Blackfoot reserve, or the Blood or any of them. There is not a single doctor mentioned in his report as receiving $15 a day and his expenses included.

Mr. HENDERSON. Perhaps the shooting was not as good at the other agencies. There was not the same inducement for a doctor to go out for a holiday.

Mr. OLIVER. The medical service on the reserve of the Clandeboye agency is done by a Dr. Steep who receives a yearly salary of $900.

Mr. INGRAM. I think I can say there is not another agency in the whole list in which there can be found a doctor receiving $15 a day either by the year or any other way. I understand now that the Minister of the Interior support this, and thinks it is a proper payment and that it should be paid and continued. That is what I understand from his justification of this item.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no hesitation whatever in saying that according to the custom of the department and the principle which has guided the department in dealing with the Indians for the last 20 years it is certainly a proper principle, and I fully believe it is a proper payment. At any rate if it is not a proper payment the impropriety is not in the amount of the payment or for the services supposed to be rendered, or it would only be in the qualification of the physician whose services are engaged. If he is a properly qualified physician he is worth that money.

Mr. INGRAM. I wish to point out again that in this report here the health of the band is stated to have been fairly good throughout the year. It makes a good report in that respect and the other cases are more or less like that, but there is no doctor going around and getting such high fees. It would be far better to pay a permanent doctor $600 a year so that he could be available every day in the year if necessary. But this man, for only 45 days, gets $15 a day and $150 odd for expenses.

Mr. OLIVER. A little while ago the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) accused me of finding fault with members of the committee on improper grounds ; accused me of trying to arouse sympathy in favour of the unfortunate immigrants or Indians as against the members of the opposition. Now I hope he will not accuse me in this instance when I say that in this particular case the geographical circumstances are such that it would be useless to appoint a salaried Indian medical attendant such as gives the medical attendance on all other reserves, I am given to understand, throughout Manitoba and the Northwest. This particular agency is in a peculiar geographical position. It is situated along the shores of Lake Winnipeg and various agencies can only be reached by boat in the summer and for practical purposes cannot be reached in the winter, and I think when a member such as the member for East Elgin has seen fit to do, takes the ground of strongly objecting to the medical attendance that is given to those Indians, which has been the custom of the department all the time, it is only fair that the hon. member who makes that objection and takes that position should accept and take full responsibility for it.

Mr. INGRAM. I accept the responsibility for everything I say in the House. I do not seek to shelter myself behind any person. I say that if the Indians on that reserve have health so good that the doctor's services are not required for more than 45 days in the whole year and the department pays $600, I say the department is not taking a wise course or doing a wise thing, and I understand the minister is defending this. This doctor is engaged for only 45 days out of the 365 days in the year, but is paid $15 a day and the poor Indians suffer without a doctor for the remaining 320 days, and these 45 days are all on the one trip. As my hon. friend beside me suggests, he fixed them so well in the 45 days that they have been in good health for the balance of the days.

Indians—British Columbia—medical attendance and medicines, $20,000.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister might give some explanation of that medicine.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to point out that when the next general election comes round the hon. gentleman from Brockville will be on record as objecting to a proper criticism of these items.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. No; I am not finding a word of fault. I asked the minister myself for further explanation of the medicine.

Mr. OLIVER. The expenditure during the past few years has been as follows :—1901-2, $20,468 ; 1902-3, $18,341 ; 1903-4, $15,534. Medical attendance and medicines are provided for the Indians who cannot afford to pay for them. The physicians are either upon salaries, which represent a fair remuneration for their services, the medicines being supplied ; or, when paid by grants, they are allowed the lowest charges made to poor white patients. The medicines are supplied to medical missionaries, who distribute them to Indians under their charge. Although there was a balance of $4,456 unexpended in 1903-4, it is thought inadvisable to reduce the appropriation, as some doctors are asking for an increased salary, and some provision is always necessary for a possible outbreak of small-pox or other infectious disease amongst the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER.

Industrial and boarding schools, $84,500.

Mr. OLIVER. There is an increase of $5,950. That is occasioned by establishing a new industrial school at Kootenay ; renewing tools for carpenter and blacksmith ; protection against fire for industrial school at Metlakatla ; to pay balance of cost of erection of a new school at Schelt ; providing grant for 50 pupils at $60 each ; unforeseen expenses, of which a large amount is required to provide stationery and school material.

Mr. BLAIN. How many teachers are engaged, and what are their qualifications ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are thirty-two day schools. The teachers have the equivalent of a third-class Ontario certificate. These are not industrial schools, and do not teach trades ; they are merely day schools.

Mr. BLAIN. Are they subject to general inspection ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes ; the department has a school inspector, to whom they are subject.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are these schools attended exclusively by children of Indian parents ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the experience of the department in regard to these children when they arrive at an age to leave school? Do they go back to their old haunts, or do they take advantage of the education they have received and enter into industrial pursuits, prompted by the education given to them in these schools ? Are we really getting any material advantage from this work ?

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to the British Columbia industrial schools, I am informed by the officers of the department that it is believed considerable benefit results to the Indians from their education in these schools. The Indians of the coast and in the interior have, owing to their environment and other considerations, more of an industrial turn than have the Indians on the plains, who have no tendency in that way whatever. Probably we have better results from the industrial schools in British Columbia than from a similar class of schools on the plains.

Travelling expenses, $6,600.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is an increase of $1,000 here. Who took that trip costing $1,000 ?

Mr. OLIVER. This increase is on account of the travelling expenses of the school inspector. He has to travel all over British Columbia, and visit forty or fifty schools. He was only recently appointed. He is the Reverend Mr. Green, of Vancouver.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand there was no inspector heretofore ?

Mr. OLIVER. No regular inspector. The schools were subject to the inspection of the agents in that locality.

Mr. BLAIN. As I understand the hon. minister, until the Rev. Mr. Green was appointed the schools were inspected by agents in charge of the different schools. I suppose this new appointment was made on the recommendation of some one who was conversant with the wants of the schools. May I ask if such recommendation was made, who this gentleman is and what qualifications he has for this position ?

Mr. OLIVER. The Rev. Mr. Green has been a Methodist preacher, but was a school teacher formerly, and is considered to be a very suitable man as inspector of these schools. It was thought desirable, where the government is handling so many of the said schools, that they should be under the inspection of a person educationally qualified and also with the knowledge of what a school should be, which the Indian agent would not necessarily have. Through the work of this inspector the government hope to secure more uniform efficiency in the Indian schools throughout the province.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the inspector's salary ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is $1,000 and travelling expenses.

Mr. HENDERSON. I know nothing of this Rev. Mr. Green, who may be a thoroughly good man. I would like to ask if he is qualified to speak all the various dialects in use throughout British Columbia ?

Mr. OLIVER. These schools are all taught English, that being one of the great objects of these schools. There are many dialects among the Indians of British Columbia, I understand, but, as most people know, there is a common Indian language, the Chinook.

Mr. HENDERSON. To my mind it is very commendable to teach the Indians the English language as soon as possible and not have half a dozen languages spoken by them. I believe that this course will inure to their advantage and to the advantage of the people generally.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the Rev. Mr. Green originally from Bruce county ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to say where he came from originally, but I am informed that he has been a resident of British Columbia for a considerable time. He is recognized as a British Columbian.

Mr. INGRAM. Did the hon. gentleman say that this inspector had been teaching school previous to his appointment ?

Mr. OLIVER. The initials are A. B. Green, and I am informed that his work as teacher was done some time ago, and that he was preaching up to a short time before his appointment as school inspector :

Indians—general—P. H. Bryce, M.D., medical inspector, part of salary, $1,000.

Mr. INGRAM. What Bryce is that ?

Mr. OLIVER. He was at one time in the service of the Ontario government. This is in payment of part of his salary. The Indian Department and the Interior Department combine to pay his salary.

Mr. INGRAM. Is he still an officer of the Ontario government ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Indians—general—printing and stationery—outside service, &c., $6,000.

Mr. INGRAM. Who does this printing ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that it is all done at the King's Printing Bureau.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LAKE. May I ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) if he will bring down the return which I asked for on the 6th of March showing the residents in the Northwest who have been authorized to purchase land under certain conditions ?

Mr. TAYLOR. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. We shall proceed with supply, taking up the supplementary estimates for the current year, and attempting to dispose of them if possible, reserving the main estimates for future consideration.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, May 26, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PATENTS OF HERBERT McCORMACK AND PHILLIP M. SHARPLES.

Mr. W. S. CALVERT (West Middlesex) moved :

That the petition of C. A. Masten, presented this day, praying to be permitted to lay before the House the petition of Herbert McCormack and Phillip M. Sharples for the passing of an Act for their relief in respect to certain patents for improvements in centrifugal liquid separators, notwithstanding the expiration of the time for presenting petitions for private Bills, be read now and received, and referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Explain.

Mr. CALVERT. I understand that this is a firm of Americans whose patents were issued in 1902, and who wish to manufacture cream separators in Canada. They were not until recently aware of the fact that a law was passed in 1903 amending the Patent Act. Their patents have not expired, but I believe they wish to come under the Patent Act of 1903. This has been submitted to my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), and I believe he has no objection. The only objection there can be is that the time has expired for presenting petitions, but I think it would be no injury to the House or to the country to allow this petition to be presented.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would advise my hon. friend (Mr. Calvert) not to press his motion, but to withdraw it to-day, because I shall have to take exception to it. The reasons he has advanced do not seem adequate for introducing a motion of this kind at this late stage of the session. I would ask my hon. friend to withdraw his motion.

Mr. CALVERT. I have no objection to withdraw the motion.

Mr. D. HENDERSON. I was under the impression that two or three years ago a Bill was put through the House by which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) took power to deal with all these matters. Am I mistaken in that? Has the hon. Minister of Agriculture any power to deal with these matters exclusively of an Act of parliament?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). The Act in question gave me power up to a certain date. These people did not make their application before that date, and consequently I cannot deal with their patents. That is the law in regard to old patents already issued. In regard to new patents being issued, there is a certain delay within which this section of the law could be applied, but in regard to old patents issued before the passing of the Act, I had only up to a certain date in which to deal with them. That date was allowed to pass without these people making any application. I would say in regard to this particular Bill that I do not in any way commit myself to its passage. I reserve my opinion in regard to it until I see the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. INGRAM. Do we understand that the patents have lapsed?

Mr. CALVERT. Not yet.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know the details sufficiently to say. I was asked if I had any objection to the Bill, and I said that I could not say that until I saw the full provisions of the Bill. As far as the introduction of the Bill is concerned, that is a matter for the House to deal with, because the time for the introduction of private Bills has long ago expired. It is a matter with which I do not deal.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. CALVERT.

PAYMENT OF DEPUTY RETURNING OFFICERS.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire of the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) the cause of the delay in paying some officials who acted as officers of the government in connection with the last Dominion election. I am in receipt of a letter from Millwood, in the county of Marquette, which reads as follows:

Millwood Post Office, May 16, 1905.

Dr. Roche, M.P.

Dear Sir,—Can you inform me if there is any legal reason for the delay of payment to deputy returning officers of their claims in respect to last general election, in November, now six months past? Not only my own fees as deputy returning officer, but those of poll clerk, school rent and travelling expenses out of pocket, are still unpaid for this polling district of Millwood and I presume of other districts also.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) EDWARD WALKER,
D. R. O. and P. M.

I think this is an unwarrantable delay. These officials are out of pocket personally and have been for six months, although this is an old settled portion of the country. I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if there have been many cases of that kind, and if so, what is the reason?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche) will send me that letter, I will try to give him the information on Monday. I will make inquiry. If the facts are as stated, I agree with him that the delay seems to be an unwarranted one, and it is one for which I do not know what reason can exist.

SUPPLY—HALF-BREED SCRIP.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before going into supply, I want to say just a word in continuation of the subject which we had up yesterday concerning land scrip. Since that I have been looking into the papers somewhat, and have received other communications and information, and if I had to go over the matter again to-day that I went over yesterday, I am certain that my language would not be any milder than that which I used yesterday; and in my view of the case, it seems to be much more grave than it did under my previous information. I find I will require some more information, and particularly what I want to ask the minister is this: Have the certificates for scrip of these half-breeds, which we have had under discussion, been already issued, or are they now in process of issuing, and is land being located and patents being granted, or are they under process, as a result of Mr. Coté's investigation ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to answer off-hand, but I shall be able to give the information to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. What I wanted to bring to the minister's attention is the question whether, if they are so under process, it would not be a wise thing to stop all processes of that kind until we have an opportunity of getting at the bottom of it, if we possibly can—and I think we can. As I see it to-day, the whole operation does not in the first place tend to benefit the half-breed, quite the opposite, and I am not quite sure that I would be making too strong a statement if I said that in addition to the injustice perpetrated upon the half-breed, fraud and misrepresentation play a part in this transaction so far as the information I have at hand is concerned. In order to make sure about it a deal of information is wanted for part of which I have already asked the minister and which he has kindly consented to bring down at once. Other information I am going to ask for to-day, and I wish to ask him to consider carefully whether it would not be the part of prudence to go no further in the issuance of these scrips and in the granting of land upon them and the issuing of patents until we have an opportunity of coming to our conclusion as to what underlies this whole business. You might say this is scarcely fair to the people who want the scrip and who want the locations, but I think that is offset by this consideration, that in no single case do I believe the interest of the half-breed will be harmed in the least by delay. I am afraid it has passed entirely out of the hands of the half-breed and the only plea of any justice on account of delay would be a plea which would have to be made by the speculator and we ought not to have too tender hearts for the speculator in matters of this kind. The information I want in addition to what I asked yesterday would be :

Re the Coté Commission :

Instructions to Mr. Coté, report of Mr. Coté. Number of certificates issued to date, date of issue, name and address of person to whom issued, name and address of person to whom sent, either direct or in 'care of.' In case of those sent in 'care of' names and address of persons to whose care they were addressed and date of sending, the number of locations made, date of location, name and address of person making location, description of land located. The number and date of patents issued and name and address of each patentee. Any assignments or quit claim deeds in respect of above filed with department, name and address of the assignee or party of second part. Names of all persons other than the half-breeds whose interests are concerned who have applied either as purporting to represent the half-breeds, or in their own interests as having negotiated for or purchased in whole or part the claims of the same and the dates of filing or presenting these claims and particulars of the same. The amount of money paid each half-breed as to consideration for his claim by the purchasers thereof.

That may be a difficult matter for the administration to get, but if it is so it is their own fault. I find in tracing up the history of this matter that in the case of the McKenna commission, the commissioners laid down absolutely all the way through a rule that before money scrip could be handed over to any person other than the half-breed in whose name it was given, the commissioners should be satisfied that the half-breed had been paid the full current rate for the scrip, and a good deal of the time of the commission was taken up in ascertaining that and making sure that it was done. That was with reference to money scrip. With reference to land scrip in no case would they even talk about an assignment or purchase. That went absolutely to the half-breed to whom it was adjudged and it could not be sold and was not allowed to be sold. Now the government, through its commission, at that time took care to see that with reference to money scrip the half-breed was not defrauded and that he got at least the current rate. With reference to land scrip they saw that it was not sold under any consideration ; it was not saleable. In this regard I am afraid that the department has not in any way interested itself as to what the half-breed living south of the line got from the speculator, whether he sold his land scrip for little or more and consequently it may be difficult for the department and the government to give the amounts which were received by these half-breeds. The commission remedied that by making the purchaser state what he gave right before them and the government if it had looked after the interests of the half-breeds in this case should have also insisted on the same information before making any transfer or any location and they may yet be able to get that information. That, however, may be a little difficult. I also want with reference to the first commission :

Papers wanted re McKenna commission :

Order in Council authorizing appointment of commission in 1900, plus instructions, if any, to the commissioners. The reports of said commission, the total number of claims acted upon by this commission—number allowed, rejected, reserve.

The total number of certificates issued as results of same.

1. For money scrip.
2. For land scrip.
3. The number of money scrips redeemed.
4. The number of land scrips redeemed by location, and acreage covered by same.

I hope the minister will facilitate the bringing down of this information and I would respectfully and strongly urge upon him that delay should be ordered with reference to the issuance of these scrips or locations or patents until we have an opportunity of seeing all the papers and coming to our conclusion.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Might I add a request to the minister to also look into the question of the sale or purchase of some Indian reserves in the Northwest. I understand the reserve at Fort à la Corne and another reserve near Prince Albert are abandoned by the Indians or rather taken back by the Indian Department and that these reserves have been sold, I presume possibly on public notice, but I want to know on what notice and in what papers the notice was inserted, and how many times it was inserted for the sale of these Indian reserves. I also want to know if there are any reservations being made by the department for societies or bodies or companies, church organizations, in regard to lands in the Northwest any more. I understand this has been the custom in the past and I want to know if there are any reservations being made for the future. Are homestead lands being withheld from settlement by agreement with certain companies or certain bodies of men representing land companies or representing themselves in order that they may thereby offer greater inducements in the sale of their lands by having an agreement with the department that these lands are reserved from homestead, and that no squatters are allowed on them for a certain time. I would be glad if the minister would look into another matter that has been currently rumoured as to the manner in which scrip has been secured. I shall give a detailed case. A half-breed sells his scrip, no matter what price he obtains, and it is possibly a very inconvenient matter to bring that half-breed 200 or 300 or even 500 or 600 miles and get him to enter for his scrip at the land office at that distance from where he lives. I understand the Indian agents are not always very particular whether they recognize the gentleman who presents himself as representing the owner of the scrip or not. The point I want to bring out to the minister is not the misrepresentation of some half-breed for another half-breed, but to suggest that a convenient way is to have the lands located anywhere.

I am told that there are areas in various places in the Northwest where the half-breeds have located the land quite conveniently in a muskeg. This is done by collusion with the land agent, and application is made for this area for settlement. Forthwith the holder of the land through the purchase of the scrip from the half-breed regretfully yields to the urgent wish of the department and surrenders his land, receiving in return the certificate of the department for so many acres of land. This certificate he can present at the land office at any time without bringing along his half-breed, and the land office has to recognize it. I would like the minister to kindly look into that, and see what lands have been alienated on certificates of that kind, and to what extent that practice has been carried on in recent years, and whether it is going to be recognized in the future?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). My hon. friends from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) are certainly asking for mountains of information, and I hope they will not be impatient if it takes some little time to give the information. I received a memorandum of his inquiries from the hon. member for North Toronto, and I would ask the hon. member for Victoria to be kind enough to put his inquiries in brief written shape, that I may be able to better guide the officers of the department in collecting the information. In regard to the suggestion of the hon. member for North Toronto that the procedure for the issue of a title in connection with the scrip issues under discussion should be delayed, I think it would be fair to draw a distinction between the question of the policy and administration of the department, and the question of the propriety of action on the part of those who are interested in securing the scrip. The department, I take it, is bound to carry on its affairs, and if the orders for scrip are in, and they seem to be legitimate and according to the rules of the department, it is scarcely in order to ask that delay should be made simply because the policy of the administration of the department is called in question. If there is a definite allegation of fraud in connection with this scrip, then certainly I would say it was necessary that the issue should be delayed; but I would like to have the distinction sharply drawn between a definite allegation of fraud on the part of some person or persons more or less known, and a calling in question of the policy and administration of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. The trouble is this. I think I made it pretty clear that in this particular instance it is not the interest of the half-breed that will be prejudiced by delay. My hon. friend knows just as well as I or any other member of this House, that the camp of speculators and dodgers have been following the government and the department. It is they who profit by this kind of thing and get hold of the information. They are wise enough not to locate the lands in their own names. They sell them to others and locate them in other names, and it is they who will reap the profit. I think I have made a fairly strong statement of the case; I have not made it too strong; and do not propose to make it stronger unless I have the evidence to back it up. I cannot as a member of parliament charge fraud, because I have not the papers to enable me to do so; but I say that there are evidences that usurpation and fraud have entered into this thing. If you do not prejudice the half-breed, the first claimant in the case, if you save the public domain, and if nobody is to suffer but the speculator and the profit maker, I think it is fair for the minister to call a delay and rush down the papers and let us ascertain the facts. Because a grave injustice will be done if the thing is carried out on the basis of our conversation of yesterday and to-day. There is another point. I do not know whether I am right, as I am not a lawyer; but suppose the speculator gets the land scrip, no matter how he has got it, and then he gets the location for that, and a third party becomes possessed of that location, and gets a title to it under the Torrens system, you cannot touch that third party, it seems to me. What redress is there, then? The land is absolutely gone, as it has been alienated from the public domain, the party who holds it is innocent, and it is not the best of restitution to have a mere chance of proceeding against some man in between who is sharp enough to carry on the work.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). From the statement made by the Minister of the Interior yesterday, he should have no trouble whatever in correcting this fraud, if it is a fraud, that has been perpetrated on these half-breeds. His statement was that an Act was passed by parliament and that an Order in Council was issued upon that Act, providing, in order to protect the half-breeds, that they must present themselves at a land agency, no matter to whom they had assigned their scrip, in order that the patent should be issued for it. From the statement of the minister, the Order in Council is still in effect; and I doubt very much whether a departmental order has the slightest effect in overriding the Order in Council. My opinion is that all these issues to the parties who have the scrip, being made in error or through fraud, are void, because there has been no overriding of the Order in Council by competent authority authorizing the agents to issue the patents for the land. The Minister of the Interior can promise that he will see that the Order in Council is for the future carried out, and will make inquiries as to how an issue of that kind could be made by a departmental order in defiance of an Order in Council.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that possibly the hon. member is in error in stating that the restriction on the entry of the land and the presence of the half-breed is under an Order in Council. I rather think that is under a general regulation of the department which requires that there shall be no entry for land except in person or under certain special circumstances, but it is not a part of the Order in Council authorizing the issue of scrip.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister stated specifically that these regulations were approved by Order in Council.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish to discuss the point, but I would like to have the matter as correct as possible. The Order in Council alluded to referred only to the issue of scrip and had nothing to do whatever with the location of the scrip or with the form of location.

Mr. HAGGART. I am aware of that.

Mr. OLIVER. The restriction as to personal presence and location was a general regulation of the department; a regulation that applied not only to scrip but to any dealing with land. That is as I understand it, although I may be in error. That was rescinded as shown in the papers by another departmental regulation.

Mr. HAGGART. I understood it differently. The other departmental regulation setting aside that has been approved by Order in Council, and I understood the minister to say that this is simply a departmental order.

Mr. OLIVER. I am trying to say that according to my understanding the restriction on the entry of the land is by departmental regulation, and the removal of that restriction was by departmental regulation also, and was not as I understand it, connected with the actual Order in Council regarding the issue of the scrip.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). It is entirely a question of fact. My hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) evidently understands, whether rightly or wrongly, from the statement of the minister, that the regulation obtained the force of an Order in Council by reason of the fact that it was approved by an Order in Council. And he understands that an attempt was made to rescind that by a mere departmental regulation without the intervention of the Governor in Council at all. I understand from the minister that his view of the situation is different. I hope it is as the minister thinks, because if any attempt were made by any minister of this government or any government to repeal by mere departmental regulation an Order in Council made in the public interest and for the public protection not only would the departmental regulation be void, but the minister would probably render himself criminally liable. There is not the slightest doubt of that in the mind of any person conversant with the criminal law, and the departmental regulation would have no more effect than if I or any gentleman on this side having no official status whatever, should attempt to repeal an Order in Council. The minister has spoken of the necessity of some formal charge or statement being made in connection with this matter before there should be any stay of proceedings. Let me say to the minister that when he speaks of fraud or overreaching we may understand that term in one or two ways: it may be possible under the law at present to accomplish what is in effect fraud—and I would rather think that has been accomplished if the statement of my hon. friend from North Toronto made in this House yesterday is correct—you may have fraud accomplished under the most perfect forms of law, and you accomplish that fraud when you permit by this regulation, lands and money which were destined to be an aid to these half-breeds in the Northwest (when you permit nine-tenths or nineteen-twentieths of that) to go to the hands of certain predatory individuals who are hanging on the outskirts of allotments and appropriations of this kind, as there is good reason to believe certain gentlemen have been doing in the past. The Minister of the Interior is not ignorant of the fact that it is notorious in the Northwest—at least it was notorious in the Northwest when I was there two and a half years ago—that certain gentlemen, some of them in public life even, were busying themselves very much about the purchase of this half-breed scrip. There was no secret about it; every one was speaking of it and instances without number were given descriptive of the way in which that had been carried out. We are face to face with a certain situation at the present time. The word 'fraud' is mentioned. I say that any result such as that which has been described by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is fraud virtually and in effect, even although it may be accomplished under the most perfect forms of the law as it stands at present. That is my first proposition, and I say beyond that and apart from that altogether: there is good reason to think that the forms of law have been a little infringed upon in this case—what I might call the decencies of the administration of the law so far as it can be framed by the Department of the Interior. Otherwise, I do not understand why that regulation requiring the actual presence of the half-breed which had remained in force up to the month of August last, should so suddenly have been departed from, as it was departed from if I understand correctly the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). You may have what most people would regard as fraud either under the one aspect or the other: under the aspect of the most perfect adherence to every form that has been devised up to the present time for the protection of the half-breeds, while you may have certain subtle influences bearing their fruit and certain gentlemen who are considered friends of the Liberal party participating very much more in the benefit of this scrip than these poor half-breeds themselves. Then you may have a certain phase of administration such as that to which allusion has just been made. I would not think that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior would be quite doing justice to what has been his record in the past if he allowed considerations such as those presented this afternoon to deter him very much or very long from calling a halt, if he is satisfied in his mind that the benefit of this scrip, whether land or money, has gone or is now going to persons who would not care to be described as half-breeds. I trust the minister will take this matter into full consideraion, and of course we must have a further discussion of it after all the papers are brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. Here is the memorandum:

It has always been the invariable rule of the department to refuse to recognize assignments or powers of attorney as authority for the delivery of half-breed land scrip, and the regulations already referred to of the 6th June, 1901, specifically provided that in cases in which the half-breed asks for land scrip, the commissioner has no authority to accept or act upon any assignment or power of attorney.

Then:

By departmental letter of the 10th of March last addressed to all agents of Dominion lands, the agents were advised that it had been decided to allow scrip granted to half-breed residents of the United States under the said Order in Council of August 13th, 1904, to be located in the name of the grantee thereof by the holder of such scrip without requiring the grantee to appear personally at the land agency to make his entry.

This order of June 6, 1901; what was it based upon? Was it based upon the report of Mr. McKenna, the last paragraph of which reads:

In order to remove doubt and dispose of the question which was raised, I would suggest the desirability of making it clear, that it is only in the case of money scrip that powers of attorney or assignments are to be acted upon or accepted, and that in cases where the half-breed asks for land scrip the commissioner has no authority to accept or act upon any assignment or power of attorney.

And that was approved by Order in Council of June 6, 1901. It would seem then, that this is a case of regulation approved by Order in Council and afterwards set aside by a departmental letter. What I said yesterday—what I was careful to say—was that, so far as the information contained in the papers was concerned, it seemed that a departmental order had overridden a regulation.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is a little in error yet. No assignments have been accepted on the letter authorizing agents to accept. Nor are they authorized, if I followed the papers correctly when they were in my possession, to accept entry in the name of any other than the half-breed to whom the scrip was issued. All the difference is that he is not required to be there in bodily presence, but there is no change of ownership as between the scrip and the land. It has always been the rule, as stated in the papers, and, as I believe is the fact, that the scrip is issued to the half-breed who is entitled to it. It is issued in his name, and entry is made in his name, and, until the patent is issued for the land no transfer can be made and no assignment is recognized under any of the Orders in Council, departmental letters or system of administration.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I submit to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and to hon. gentlemen on the other side, that this discussion is altogether premature. It is impossible to discuss the matter intelligently in all its bearings until all the papers have been brought down. In proof of this I would call the attention of the hon. member for North Toronto to the statement he made a moment ago with regard to the provision in the Order in Council of August, 1904, which he says—and says truly—allowed assignments to be made. But I would say to my hon. friend that, if my memory serves me well, this provision of the Order in Council of August, 1904, was rescinded in the Order in Council of December 17, 1904.

Mr. FOSTER. No, that was a mere matter of priority of assignment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think not—that is the impression I have of it. If I am wrong it only goes to justify what I have already said, that it is not possible to discuss this question until all the papers have been brought down. There was one point spoken of by my hon. friend, and I am not prepared to say what is the condition of affairs with regard to it, and that is the dispensing with the order which made it obligatory upon the half-breed to go and locate his own scrip. As to that, I do not know the reason which has led the department to change the policy, and cannot, at the moment, discuss the matter. But I have no doubt that there is some good and valid reason for it, and that this will appear when the papers are brought before the House. I would make one observation on the main point—and the only point made by my hon. friend from North Toronto, if I understood him correctly, the only one he sought to make to-day. This was to persuade the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to stay his hand and stop at once the issue of these patents. Well, I think the reason given by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior for the position he takes is a very good one. He stated that if the object of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is to traverse the policy of the department, he has not shown that the suggestion should be adopted ; on the other hand if there is evidence or even allegation of fraud, that would be a very good reason why the issuing of patents should be stopped. But my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) would not take the responsibility of saying absolutely that there is evidence of fraud. He says there is a presumption of fraud. That may be. I have no doubt that if my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), on looking at the papers, finds presumptive evidence of fraud, he will act accordingly. I believe the hon. member for North Toronto is quite sure that if the minister finds any evidence or even presumption of fraud he will act accordingly. To my mind, from the evidence we have and from the information available, the only fact which gives evidence of fraud, or upon which even a presumption of fraud can be based, is that the scrip will not be very profitable to the half-breeds. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) stated a moment ago that probably not more than one-tenth of the scrip will avail to the half-breeds and that nine-tenths will be squandered. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior will have this answer to the leader of the opposition—that ever since scrip was first issued to the half-breeds, that is since the year 1870 or thereabouts, there has not been a single issue of scrip to these people that has not been squandered by them. Whenever there was an issue of scrip there was always a following of sharks after these people to get their scrip from them for a mere song—the half-breed got nothing for it. But we had this satisfaction, that, even if the half-breeds did not profit by it, at least, when we had given them the scrip they had no grievance. But until the scrip was given them they had a grievance—and we know the consequence of that kind of thing. I remember very well that Archbishop Taché, and Father Lacombe, and Lord Strathcona when his assistance was sought on these matters, took the ground that the scrip should be non-transferable. Well, we acted upon this policy in 1899, when we made the last previous issue of scrip. We issued a commission, of which Mr. Laird was a member, as also were Father Lacombe and Mr. McKenna and one or two others. They were to negotiate a treaty in Athabaska with the Indians. They were to collect the Indians and half-breeds and give scrip to those who had not participated in the distribution of 1885. My hon. friend remembers the result, for he alluded to it yesterday. We gave special instructions to make this scrip—land scrip—non-transferable. And what took place? Why, the Indians would not participate in the treaty, and the half-breeds would not take their scrip, unless the scrip were made transferable. And we have the report—a report sent under emergency by the commissioners—that the half-breeds would use their influence with the Indians to prevent the signing of the treaty, and the half-breeds themselves would not take the scrip, unless it was made transferable. And the members of the commission who were there, Father Lacombe himself among them, then and there, to satisfy the half-breeds, asked that the scrip should be made transferable. Most of that scrip was squandered, no doubt. At the same time, by doing what we did, by adopting this policy which results in little benefit to the half-breeds, we satisfied them as a class. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said that he did not think that there were any more half-breeds who had claims. He said that after the report had been made by the commission in 1899-1900, the half-breeds who had been in the United States could not participate in this scrip and that they had forgotten everything about it. Well, he was given an answer by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Herron) who called the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the fact that there are certain half-breeds in his own riding who claim that they did not receive the satisfaction to which they were entitled——

Mr. FOSTER. I do not understand that they were half-breeds who had crossed to the United States and gone on reservations.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know about that. I only am trying to show that when the hon. gentleman says the half-breeds had forgotten about this matter, he is mistaken. I am sure of one thing—though without having looked into the matter—that there is good reason to believe that the half-breeds in the United States were claiming their scrip. I know that there is a close connection between the half-breeds on one side of the line and the half-breeds on the other side, and we have found it good policy, and I think it is good policy when we pay the half-breeds, even though they will get but a mere pittance of what is given out of the public treasury, still we find it good policy to give this scrip so as to prevent them from having a grievance which they can proclaim and parade in the Territories. As I said a moment ago, the policy is all right, and I believe we will be able to vindicate it triumphantly when the discussion comes on. My hon. friend has made the point that the half-breeds allow other parties to locate land scrip for them. When the time comes we will give an explanation of that also, as of everything else.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON. Before we go into supply I desire to make an explanation. The other day I was explaining that in a discussion which had taken place the day before on a divorce question and in which I had taken part, I had in mind another case than the one before the House. I explained the next day that it was for that reason I had spoken in the way I did, and the 'Hansard' makes me say that if I voted as I did it was on account of another case. That is not correct. I said I would have voted in the same way I did vote, but I would not have said what I did say.

TENDERS FOR PUBLIC DOCK AT COLLINGWOOD.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). This morning I communicated with the Department of Public Works my intention to ask this afternoon a question relative to tenders for the government dock in the town of Collingwood. Lately so many matters are brought up in the House, which perhaps may be characterized as scandals, that one seems to get inundated with letters from different parts, particularly I speak of the province of Ontario, in reference to matters in which the general public apparently think there is not exactly fair dealing. Perhaps the minister who may be acting to-day for the Minister of Public Works in his absence, may be able to give a satisfactory explanation of the matter to which I wish to draw attention. In the Collingwood 'Bulletin' of Thursday, May 25, I find the following:

> Tendering too low for public works is evidently an unsatisfactory way of doing business, and judging by late developments Messrs. Conroy Brothers, whose tender here for the proposed wharf here was accepted by the Department of Public Works at Ottawa, have found this to be too true to their sorrow. Their tender is said to have been $25,000, but upon investigation they discovered that there would be no money in the contract at that figure, but what could be done? The department had accepted their figure, but above this it had the firm's marked cheque for $4,000 which would be forfeited were they to get out. They considered and hesitated, but evidently got from under, a letter from L. G. McCarthy to the chairman of harbour and frontages stating that they had declined to sign the necessary documents. Mr. McCarthy also stated that it was expected that the contract would go to the Battle Estate of Thorold, the next lowest tenderers, and that he hoped to see the matter definitely settled within a few days. This firm's tender is in the neighbourhood of $30,000.

May I ask the member of the cabinet who is acting on behalf of the Minister of Public Works, as to who Conroy Bros. are, where they reside, and if the statement I have read is true, and the suggestion thrown out here that owing to their being the lowest tenderers, their $4,000 cheque was returned. I may have some further remarks to make after the minister has answered these questions.

Mr. FIELDING. I would rather hear the hon. gentleman's remarks first.

Mr. BENNETT. Who are Conroy Bros.?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not tell my hon. friend who they are, I have no means of knowing.

Mr. BENNETT. Where do they reside?—Because I understand there are different firms. I do not wish to make any remarks that might confound one with another.

Mr. FIELDING. The name is right.

Mr. BENNETT. If it is the one I am informed it is, there may be a reason why he should be dropped.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no knowledge of any firm of Conroy Bros. in the matter. There is an individual named Conroy, I know nothing of any firm.

Mr. BENNETT. Where does he live ?

Mr. FIELDING. In Peterboro.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the minister if that $4,000 cheque has been returned to Mr. Conroy ?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Then may I ask the further question,—has the contract been awarded to the Battle estate ?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will have to wait and see what the minister has to say in regard to the whole transaction, but it does seem extraordinary that Conroy Bros., having tendered as they did and being the lowest tenderers as they were, have not received the contract.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is mistaken. They were awarded the contract, but the contract was not executed—the individual, not the firm. The contract was awarded to Mr. Conroy, but it has not been executed.

Mr. BENNETT. This paper is one that supports hon. gentlemen opposite, and I think that the facts stated in this article must have been communicated from some official source. The Mr. McCarthy referred to here is the member for the riding, and Mr. McCarthy has sent word to the people in the town of Collingwood who have the matter in charge, that this firm of Conroy Bros. as they are termed, are apparently to be released from their contract, and that on the other hand the contract is to go to the Battle estate. If, however, the minister will say to-day that the department propose to hold Mr. Conroy to his contract, and that they will not surrender to him his cheque or make a forfeiture of it, and that they do not propose to give the contract to Battle Bros. at an increased figure, that will be the end of the matter, and no one will have cause for complaint. But if, on the other hand, the department should hand over this contract to Battle Bros. at this increase, as stated in the paper, I shall have something to say about it. I want to call the minister's attention to the fact that these circumstances are communicated apparently from the department itself. I can understand that under certain circumstances a cheque may be returned. For instance, if the contractor made a mistake in his calculation, or rather in his additions, in such a case an Order in Council might be passed returning the cheque to him. I will wait now with some interest to hear the minister's statement of what is to be the action of the department in reference to this contract.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not propose to make any statement as to what will be the action of the department in any matter until the moment for that action shall arise. I understood my hon. friend to ask as to whether this contract had been awarded, and I answered that it had been awarded to Mr. Conroy. The contract has not been executed, because Mr. Conroy has failed to execute it. There the matter ends. That is the whole of it, nothing scandalous. The only thing scandalous I see in the matter is the two great proneness of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) to suspect that things are wrong when there is nothing at all wrong in them. There is the transaction. Tenders were invited, and the contract was awarded.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the date of the award ?

Mr. FIELDING. There were two sets of tenders. The first tenders were invited in October last. Two were received. The lowest was considered in excess of the engineer's estimate, and the minister of the department refused to accept either of these tenders and sent back the cheques telling the parties that the tenders would not be accepted. Then he proceeded to ask for new tenders, and thereupon new tenders were received. The tender of Edward Conroy—the firm is not known in the record as Conroy Bros., though there may be other parties connected with it for aught I know—but a gentleman by the name of Edward Conroy tendered, and his tender was the lowest, and the contract was awarded to him.

Mr. BENNETT. The date, please ?

Mr. FIELDING. He was notified on the 7th of April that the contract was awarded to him. Mr. Conroy, as stated, communicated with the officials of the department claiming that he made a mistake, that his tender was too low, and that he could not afford to do the work. As a matter of fact his tender is below the engineer's estimate. He went to the engineer, the late Mr. Gray, who died a day or two ago in Toronto, and discussed the matter with him, and the engineer said that if he had made any mistake that it was his own fault, that he had no knowledge of the matter, and could give him no explanation. He tendered on the specification. He claims that his tender was too low, owing to a mistake. The department has taken no further action. No contract has been awarded to anybody and no cheque has been returned to any body except the cheques in the first instance where the parties were notified that neither tender would be accepted. Since taking the second tenders and awarding the contract to Mr. Conroy nothing has been done, and the matter stands in that position at this moment. The next lowest tenderer's name has been mentioned by my hon. friend, but the contract has not been awarded to him or to anybody else.

Mr. BENNETT. Was Mr. Battle's cheque returned ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think nobody's cheque has been returned except the two cheques in the first instance. I have not had Mr. Battle's cheque particularly before me, therefore I would not be positive about that. Mr. Battle's name has not been in the matter so much as Mr. Conroy's. The contract has not been awarded to Mr. Battle. I do not think it is likely the cheque has been returned to him, although that may be possible. I will have to make further inquiries on that point.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand the hon. minister to say that the cheques other than that of Mr. Conroy were returned. Was the Battle cheque returned ?

Mr. FIELDING. Before being too positive I shall have to make further inquiry regarding the Battle cheque. As the contract has not been awarded to him his name has not been in the matter so prominently as that of Mr. Conroy. It was about the case of Mr. Conroy particularly that I made inquiries.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the file show any correspondence between the department and Mr. Battle relative to the return of his cheque?

Mr. FIELDING. The notice of the hon. gentleman, which, by the way, was addressed to Mr. Hyman, who, he must have known, was not in town, and who, in addition, is not even a member of this House at this moment, was only shown to me between twelve and one o'clock and I made a very hurried inquiry. I have not had time to go through the file and therefore cannot answer the hon. gentleman's question on that point.

Mr. BENNETT. The envelope was addressed to the Deputy Minister of Public Works, because I did not know that the hon. Minister of Finance was acting for the Minister of Public Works. It was addressed to Mr. Gobeil, for Mr. Hyman, Minister of Public Works. I do not know how I addressed it inside. However, that is immaterial. What we want is the information. There are certain things that are not shown by the documents at all and which are evidently known to my informant, and the certain things known to my informant are that Mr. Conroy and Mr. Battle are not unknown to each other by any means, that they would probably be quite able to recognize each other if they met on the street, that Mr. Conroy had a low tender in, that Mr. Battle had a higher tender in, and that if there was no intervening tender and it could be arranged for Mr. Conroy to drop out and for Mr. Battle to drop in it would be a very nice arrangement for these two gentlemen. As these two gentlemen are very strong political allies of hon. gentlemen opposite it was thought that such an arrangement might be worked out. These tenders were called for on the 7th April. The people of Collingwood are insisting upon this dock being built, yet, although the hon. Minister of Public Works has had their cheques for two months and has had the contract ready for two months—it will be two months on the 7th of next month—the contract has not yet been signed. It is not alleged on the part of these people that they made any mistake in their additions or anything of that kind at all, but they went to Major Gray, who was the engineer of the department and who is now deceased, and alleged that their tender was too low. Has it come to this that anybody can get out of his tender by going to the engineer of the department and saying: I will not make any money out of it ? Although two months have elapsed the department has not yet called for new tenders. Does the hon. minister think that is reasonable?

Mr. FIELDING. That did not happen to be the question.

Mr. BENNETT. It is a very serious question. The people want the dock. You have called for tenders and nearly two months have now elapsed.

Mr. BERGERON. They called for tenders last October.

Mr. BENNETT. No, the second tenders were called for last April. Here is another item in this same paper relative to this same dock which did yeoman service in the last election:

Mr. McCarthy's success in securing another grant for the improvement of the harbour cannot but be gratifying to the people of Collingwood. Without any fuss or feathers he has been steadily and persistently presenting our claims and always with good results. This time the grant is an even fifty thousand dollars, a sufficient sum to provide the new wharf and to continue the dredging which has been going on almost continuously for six or seven years. The people of Collingwood stood by McCarthy when the opportunity offered, and he is now returning the compliment.

That is more than the hon. member (Mr. McCarthy) has done for the government. He had a chance to return the compliment the other day but he did not vote for them.

Mr. FIELDING. He had quite enough substitutes on the other side to make it good.

Mr. BENNETT. That may be, but if the hon. gentleman acted on principle——

Mr. FIELDING. I thought hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House acted on principle.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman acted from the motive of profit, and if it does not profit him he apparently does not support the government. This matter is not new in the department at all. It was pending before the elections last fall and two tenders were put in.

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend think one of these tenders should have been accepted?

Mr. BENNETT. I know nothing about that.

Mr. FIELDING. Then why say so?

Mr. BENNETT. I do not know why it was not. I have not the figures before me, but it was expected, according to my information, that the dock was to be gone on with long ago, and that was the reason that tenders were called for. Tenders were received nearly two months ago and the department had these tenders in their hands until this Mr. Conroy came and asked to be relieved. I am going to tell the hon. minister something now that perhaps he will admit engenders a little suspicion. I had Bradstreet's hunted up to-day. It was intimated that Mr. Conroy might be a Peterborough man. This contractor who has had a $30,000 work offered to him does not figure in Bradstreet's as having any financial rating at all. That is an additional reason for returning him his cheque for $4,000.

Mr. FIELDING. Is the hon. gentleman referring to Mr. Conroy?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, he has no financial rating in Bradstreet's.

Mr. FIELDING. Why does my hon. friend repeatedly talk of returning his cheque. I have told him that Mr. Conroy's cheque has not been returned. Why repeat again and again about returning his cheque?

Mr. BENNETT. I am simply saying that Mr. Conroy is praying for the return of his cheque.

Mr. FIELDING. We cannot deny him the privilege of praying.

Mr. BENNETT. The department knew two months ago that he was the lowest tenderer and yet the department have not even notified him and the file will not bear it out to-day that his cheque will not be returned and that he will have to go on with this work.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no need of telling him that his cheque will not be returned.

Mr. BENNETT. No, but somebody in the department tells the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) that the contract with Mr. Conroy is to be at an end and that the contract is to be given to Battle Brothers for $30,000 or $5,000 higher than the figure of the other man. We will await and my informant will await with interest to see whether this work is given to Battle Brothers and there will be no excuse for not calling for tenders again if the department intend to take the work away from Mr. Conroy who is a political friend of theirs and give him back his cheque for $4,000. I understand that Mr. Battle cuts a very small figure. You cannot take up a little local paper published in any part of the province of Ontario with a circulation of 200 or 300 that does not contain an advertisement calling for tenders for something. This very paper has an advertisement calling for tenders for supplies for Kingston penitentiary, as if anybody in Collingwood would be supplying Kingston penitentiary.

Mr. FIELDING. They only send inmates.

Mr. BENNETT. That is rather hard on Collingwood. I am going to await with interest, and I think the people of Collingwood and my informant and others who think they smell a rat, will await with interest to see what is going to be done, whether Mr. Conroy is going to be held to his contract, his cheque retained and he obliged to go on with the work, or whether it is to be handed over to Battle Brothers, and whether they are to have a $30,000 contract without new tenders being called for. If they get that extra $5,000 it will be a handsome profit on a comparatively small work. Battle Brothers are not unknown to the department. I think that one of the brothers has been a candidate in one of these ridings in either a local or Dominion election—I do not at this moment remember which. But, they are very prominent Liberals in that district, and if Mr. Conroy is to have this cheque returned by the department instead of being obliged to forfeit his cheque, and if Mr. McCarthy sends word to the newspaper—for presumably it must be from him—that they are done with Mr. Conroy and are now going to deal with Mr. Battle at the advanced rate, I think we should keep our eye on this and see what the outcome will be.

Mr. FIELDING. We shall be glad to have my hon. friend keep his eye on the affair, but I think it is a pity that he did not wait until there was some substantial ground to bring the matter up. I am at a loss to find what his ground for complaint is. What is wrong ?

Mr. BENNETT. You were most anxious to show your good faith with the people of Collingwood eight months ago to show them that you intended to build a dock there—that was during the election—and I think the government did intend to build the dock. Here to-day what are you doing? You have had the cheque of this gentleman for two months and you are not forcing him on with his contract, but are holding the cheque in abeyance and your representative Mr. McCarthy comes up there presumably and through the local Liberal paper makes the announcement that the man who put in the low tender is to be released from his contract. That means that his cheque will be returned and the other men who had the higher tender by $5,000 are given the contract and that they need not worry at all that the work is to go on at once. We will wait and see whether the work does go on, whether the Battles are given the contract at $5,000 advance without any tender or competition and whether a return is made of the $4,000 to Mr. Conroy.

Mr. FIELDING. I am still at a loss to find out what is my hon. friend's grievance; every part of this business is absolutely straight and businesslike.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. member for North Simcoe were here—

Mr. FIELDING. I am not dealing with the hon. member for North Simcoe.

Mr. BENNETT. Once before you were calling for tenders, and now you have accepted the lowest tender and held it for two months, you do not force the contract—or to go on or make him estreat his cheque. That is the complaint of the people of Collingwood to-day, that you are playing fast and loose with them and there is a suspicion there that you are going to let the lowest tenderer drop out.

Mr. FIELDING. Suspicion haunts the guilty mind; so says a famous philosopher.

Mr. FOSTER. Who says that? Give your authority.

Mr. FIELDING. I might make a mistake in my reference and I shall keep on the safe side by not giving the author. My hon. friend says the government undertook to build a dock there in 1904. Well, there is no particular reason why the progress of the country should stop in the year 1904. A great many things had to be done in that year even although we had the pleasant amusement of a general election, and so the contract was advertised in due course, two tenders were received, and there was a difference as usual and one was the lower. 'Why did you not accept that,' says the hon. gentleman. Suspicion at once, he smells a rat at once. 'You had two tenders, why did you not accept the lower?' Not the right man, the work is going into the wrong hands, there is something wrong.' There is to my hon. friend no explanation of a transaction of that kind. To his suspicious mind there must absolutely be some corruption somewhere. What is the fact? The lowest tender happened to be by thousands of dollars in excess of the engineer's estimate and therefore the minister says: I shall not accept that. Anything wrong about that? Anything corrupt about that? That suspicion is set at rest at once by that very simple explanation, of what my hon. friend would try to make out is some dreadfully bad part of the transaction.

Mr. BENNETT. It is the second set of tenders I referred to.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend dealt with the first. He said it was very strange that a contract was not awarded on the first and gives as a reason that the contract would not go to the right man. We pass from the first and come to the second.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was the amount of the lowest tender in the first lot?

Mr. FIELDING. I think perhaps the leader of the opposition will agree with me that where the transaction is not yet completed and the contracts signed, it would not be prudent to quote the tenders.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then my hon. friend should not make any reference to them.

Mr. FIELDING. I made a reference but I did not give the figures; I have not given the amount of any tender.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister must remember this that he is very extravagant often in his speech and what may be only a trifling sum may to him be thousands and thousands.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not say 'thousands and thousands,' I said 'thousands.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why is silence with regard to that more important than silence with regard to the one under consideration?

Mr. FIELDING. As respects both I do not think it wise to give the figures.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the estimate of the engineer?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think I should give that. Here is a transaction which is not completed. We are having difficulty with the contractor, he wants to get out of the contract and be rid of it. I think under such circumstances it would not be wise to give all the figures of the contract, but when we are accused of not accepting the first tender, because there is some job and suspicion and corruption in it, I think I am justified in giving the reasons why the first tender was not acepted, because it was thousands of dollars in excess of the figures of the engineer.

Mr. BERGERON. Has my hon. friend seen the figures or is he repeating what he has been told?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not seen the figures, but I have no reason to believe that the officers of the department would put figures before me that are fraudulent.

Mr. BERGERON. It might be; it has been done before.

Mr. FIELDING. I am bound to say that from all the transactions I have had with the officers of the government of Canada, I do not think that a deputy minister or an engineer would put figures before me which were not correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These figures seem to have got into the columns of a journal friendly to the government in some way.

Mr. FIELDING. Perhaps so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman can see here that this tender was for $25,000 and the other in the vicinity of $30,000.

Mr. FIELDING. I think my hon. friend will agree that it is not wise that I should either confirm or deny the figures that are given. It sometimes happens that information of this kind is obtained by the newspapers in a partial and inaccurate form. I have given the reason in answer to the hon. member for Simcoe why the first tender was not accepted. The reason was that the value of the work according to the estimates of the engineers was materially below the tender price and after consultation with the engineer as to whether there was not a mistake and whether the estimates were carefully prepared the minister was advised that the engineer's estimates were quite reasonable and safe, that the tender price was too high and for that reason and for no other the minister declined to accept the tender.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the low tender on the first occasion the tender of Battle Bros., or was it in Conroy's name?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think I should answer my hon. friend's question. I am not so sure that I should answer that, but rather than have any doubt I shall say that it was not.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the minister state who it was?

Mr. FIELDING. I think I had better not at the present time. At the same time it did not make any difference.

Mr. BENNETT. There is a lot of suspicion in Collingwood about it.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the hon. member for Simcoe will accept this reasonable explanation, that after the tenders had been received the first tender was found to be materially in excess of the engineer's estimate. Thereupon the engineer was asked whether he had made any mistake, whether he had revised his estimates and was satisfied that this was a reasonable price. The engineer replied that the estimate was carefully made, that his price was reasonable and that the work should be done for that price. Thereupon the minister on that advice decided that he would not award the contract at a price which he believed to be excessive. I think the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) will admit that that is a fair, businesslike transaction.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not think the public service will suffer by stating who the lowest man is. That is the suspicious point in Collingwood.

Mr. FIELDING. It will not make any difference and by and by when the transaction is completed the papers will be brought down and it will be seen that the low tender was several thousand dollars in excess of the engineer's estimate. That I say, was a sufficient reason why the minister should refuse to accept it after he had consulted the engineer again to see if the estimate had been carefully prepared. That disposes of the first tender.

Mr. BENNETT. Not unless I know his name.

Mr. FIELDING. I assure my hon. friend if he knew the name it would make no difference.

Mr. BENNETT. Perhaps not.

Mr. FIELDING. Would it satisfy him if I gave the name

Mr. BENNETT. It might satisfy the people of Collingwood.

Mr. FIELDING. I have such faith in the people of Collingwood that I believe when they hear the explanation on that point they will be satisfied.

Mr. FOSTER. They will know the figures.

Mr. FIELDING. They will not from anything I said. Now as to the second tenders they were invited in the usual way, the contract was awarded to the contractor whose tender was lowest. His name was Edward Conroy. He was notified that the contract was awarded to him as he was requested to sign his contract. Mr. Conroy refused to sign it. He communicated with the officials of the department, stating that he had made a mistake, that his tender was too low, that he did not feel able to do the work, and that he desired the privilege of withdrawing his tender. There is where the matter stands at this moment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How long ago was that?

Mr. FIELDING. The notice was sent to Mr. Conroy on the 7th of April to execute the contract immediately, and giving him till the 15th of April to execute it. He did not execute it. On the 19th of April he communicated with the department, asking that the matter be deferred, and he would come and see the minister with a view to presenting a statement showing why he could not go on. I presume he did see the minister. At all events, he saw the engineer in Toronto, the late Mr. Gray, and discussed the matter with him. Mr. Gray told him that he could not interfere, that if a man had made a mistake that was his own business. Mr. Conroy refused to sign the contract, and we have his cheque in our hands. Will any hon. gentleman say what is wrong in all that ?

Mr. STOCKTON. How long are you going to allow that to continue ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is opening another question. The hon. gentleman is not finding any corruption, or suspicion, or smelling a rat ; he is simply asking : When are you going to push the work on ? I can appreciate that. But that is not the line taken by the hon. member for East Simcoe ; it is the rat he is after. If any hon. gentleman says : You had better accept some tender and get the work done, that is another matter ; but, as the matter stands, we have not been able to get Mr. Conroy to sign the contract, and we have his cheque. The hon. gentleman says : Why don't you make him sign the contract ? How are you going to do that ?

Mr. BENNETT. Forfeit his cheque.

Mr. FIELDING. We have his cheque.

Mr. BENNETT. You have not cashed it.

Mr. FIELDING. But the hon. gentleman said he had authority for the statement that the cheque would be given back.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not. I said that Mr. McCarthy was authority for the fact, as stated in the paper, that Mr. Conroy would be dropped and the other man would be substituted at $5,000 advance, and I think he will be.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not dealing with the would-be's ; I am dealing with the facts as they exist up to the present time ; and when the transaction is completed and the papers are brought down, I think they will be found to be exactly as I have now placed them before the House.

Mr. FINLAY. For the satisfaction of the hon. member for East Simcoe, I may say that I was present when Mr. Conroy asked for his cheque to be returned to him, and I heard the minister refuse to give it. The hon. member for East Simcoe says that Mr. Conroy has no financial standing. I can say, of my own knowledge, that Mr. Conroy is worth $30,000.

Mr. BENNETT. I simply stated that he had no financial rating in Bradstreet.

Mr. FINLAY. There are many men worth $30,000 whose names are not mentioned in Bradstreet at all.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The matter is brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) by reason of a statement made in a public journal, which I understand is a warm supporter of the administration. That journal states the amount of the tenders now under the consideration of the department—one $25,000 and the other $30,000 ; that the man who made the tender of $25,000 does not propose to carry it out ; and that the representative of the county has practically undertaken to have his cheque returned. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance says there is no danger of his cheque being returned.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not say anything of the sort.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend suggested that ; he is more given to suggestion than to actual statement. We heard a great deal about a certain cheque that was put up by a firm in England which was going to establish a fast Atlantic service ; we heard a great deal about a guarantee of that firm, and we were assured by the Finance Minister, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and other ministers, that there was no doubt that we should have a fast Atlantic service within two or three years, because we had this cheque and this guarantee, and the coffers of this country would be enriched to that extent if those gentlemen did not carry out their engagement. The result of it all was that the guarantee was cancelled and the amount of the cheque was handed back, and handed back with interest four or five years afterwards. So that perhaps there is room for suspicion in the mind of my hon. friend from East Simcoe, when he states that there may be a good deal in what is suggested in the columns of this newspaper. What is mentioned by the Minister of Finance is not the only ground that there is for suspicion at the present time. It arises out of the very circumstance mentioned by my hon. friend from East Simcoe and my hon. friend from the city and county of St. John, namely, that the government was in a hurry to push this matter eight months ago, when there was a general election on hand, and that they are taking the situation very leisurely at the present time ? This man was ordered to sign his contract before the 15th of April, but we are now near the 1st of June, and no action has been taken either with regard to the forfeiture of his cheque or the assignment of the contract to any one else. Has there not been time to deal with the situation since that date ? I would think there has been ample time. It is true, you cannot compel this man to sign these documents except by a long procedure in the courts ; it is true, you cannot compel him to carry out the work ; but you can make up your mind within two or three days after he has refused to carry out his engagement what you will do with him. If the situation was urgent enough to call for tenders in the midst of an election campaign last autumn, one would think it was urgent enough to justify the government in taking action within four or five weeks after this man had refused to sign the contract. You may deal with him in several ways. You may come to the conclusion that he was misled in some way, that therefore it would not be right to compel him to go on with the contract, and that his cheque should be given back to him ; or you may consider that it would be right for the government to exact from him the performance of the engagement that he has undertaken. If you adopt that conclusion, you have before you the necessity of considering whether you will accept the next tender or advertise for new tenders. But it should not take five or six weeks to come to some conclusion, and for that reason I think my hon. friend from East Simcoe is amply justified in bringing this matter to the attention of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. With regard to the cheque which was returned in connection with the proposed fast Atlantic service, that was returned by a vote of the House several years afterwards and after full consideration. There is no comparison between a matter in which the money was in our possession for years and a matter which is only a few weeks old. As my hon. friend thinks things of this kind can be done in such a hurry, perhaps he will find some day that there are reasons for delays, and that government business cannot be transacted as quickly as some hon. gentlemen think.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY RATES.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. On the 17th of May the Minister of Railways and Canals occupied two or three hours of the valuable time of the House in trying to make the House and the country believe that I had made a statement in reference to the rates between Gananoque and Fredericton which was not correct. He stated on that occasion, on page 6335 of Unrevised 'Hansard' :

Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to make an explanation with respect to a question raised by my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) in connection with the freight rates on the Intercolonial.

On the 27th of April my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) spoke of the alleged increase of these rates. I quote from the hon. gentleman's remarks as they appear at page 4997, revised 'Hansard.'

The minister then quoted what I stated, and in reply to the question raised by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) he said :

Mr. EMMERSON. If my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) will pardon me, I will point out that the change was with regard to Fredericton alone—there is no change in freight rates on the Canada Eastern or any other portion of the Intercolonial. The change is only with respect to Fredericton, and there it is because the Canadian Pacific Railway controlled this situation and had secured that rate. The result is that the Intercolonial does not get the traffic to Fredericton.

At page 6354 'Hansard,' the Minister of Railways said further :

Mr. EMMERSON. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt) allow me. The increase affects the city of Fredericton alone. Right opposite, at Gibson, or at Marysville, on the line of the Canada Eastern, there is no increase on the Intercolonial.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the hon. minister say that this applies only to the city of Fredericton and that there is no increase at Marysville ?

Mr. EMMERSON. There is no increase at Marysville or at any point on the Intercolonial, except at Fredericton, where there has been an increase by the two railways, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific which made this arrangement

The Minister of Railways had read circulars from the officers of his road, and he made statements himself trying to prove that my statement was not correct when I said : That we had been shipping to Fredericton at 58 cents under the old tariff and that since they acquired the Canada Eastern we were paying 66 cents. I now hold in my hand the tariff of the Canadian Pacific Railway and of the Grand Trunk Railway. Here is Canadian Pacific Railway tariff E. D. No. 28, issued 27th of June, 1902, and here is the new one issued 1st May, 1905, effective on the 6th of March, I quote :

Canada Eastern Railway, Chatham and Fredericton branches of the Intercolonial Railway, arbitraries on page 4 of tariff 'ED,' 28, will be cancelled and the following substituted : To make through rates to Fredericton, Marysville and Gibson, New Brunswick, add to the St. John, New Brunswick, rates the following cents per 100 pounds on first-class goods : 8 cents.

The rate to St. John was 58 cents, add 8 cents and you have 66 cents. The minister stated that this tariff only applied to Fredericton, but here the Canadian Pacific Railway tariff states that it applies to Fredericton, Marysville and Gibson, and yet the minister contradicted the hon. member from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) and the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) and said it only applied to Fredericton. The Grand Trunk Railway tariff proves it more effectively. I have in my hand the Grand Trunk Railway tariff GM 10, taking effect 14th December, 1903. The tariff is given in groups to all the different points : group E to Newcastle, group F to Chatham Junction, group G to St. John, group H to Halifax, group J to Mulgrave, group K to Point Tupper, group L to Sydney, and group M to West St. John. The tariff says that from stations in the following groups (No. 8 group takes in Mallorytown, Lansdowne, Thousand Island Junction and Rideau), the rate from any of these stations to St. John was 58 cents on first-class, and that covered Fredericton. The Grand Trunk Railway did not put on an arbitrary there, but they formed a new group and in their tariff of the 10th of November, 1904, effective 15th November, 1904, they issued a statement saying that the following stations will take group N. Group N was a new group that was formed. Up to this time group M was the last group they had, but they specially got up a group to cover Fredericton, Marysville and Gibson and it says :

The following stations will take group 'N,' Fredericton rates : Fredericton, Gibson and Marysville, New Brunswick. First-class rate 66 cents.

Here we have the Grand Trunk Railway tariff showing that the increased rate applies to Fredericton, Gibson and Marysville. And yet in the face of that, the minister occupied the time of the House for a couple of hours on the 17th of May stating emphatically out of the mouths of his officers, that there was no change in tariff to any point but Fredericton while in this very tariff which I will send over to the minister he will find that the rate to Fredericton, Gibson and Marysville is 66 cents as compared with 58 cents prior to the acquisition of the Canada Eastern. I want to put myself right before the House and the country for I never make a statement that I do not feel satisfied is correct. I was absolutely correct and the Minister of Railways was absolutely wrong, and he made a statement that he and his officers ought to have known was not correct when he made it.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) is somewhat extravagant in his remarks this afternoon. He started out with saying that I occupied the time of the House recently for three hours in trying to prove that he was wrong, but he qualified that statement later on by bringing it down to two hours.

Mr. TAYLOR. 'Hansard' will not show that I said three hours ; I said from two to three hours.

Mr. EMMERSON. Now that my hon. friend has got it down to two hours, perhaps he might throw a little off that.

Mr. TAYLOR. No ; I think the discussion lasted that long.

Mr. EMMERSON. Be that as it may, what are the facts ? During the course of a debate some weeks ago the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) made certain statements in connection with freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway, and after expressing some surprise at his statements I promised to give him the information later—not to prove that he was not correct but to give the explanation of the officials of the railroad. I communicated with the traffic manager and he wrote me in reply a letter which I asked the permission of the House to read. In that reply the traffic manager stated in effect, that all points between Fredericton and Chatham Junction were on the same basis as they had originally been ; that is, they were put in the Moncton zone of freight rates. On that authority I made the statement.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not Moncton but St. John.

Mr. EMMERSON. Moncton and St. John are on a par ; and things which are equal to the same thing are equal to one another.

Mr. HENDERSON. Correct.

Mr. EMMERSON. I thought I had remembered it correctly. The point I was making is :—and my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) proves it—that it was by the action of the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway—

Mr. TAYLOR. With the consent and approval—

Mr. EMMERSON. No, not with the consent, but as against the protest of the Intercolonal Railway traffic official, they had arbitrarily fixed the rate to Fredericton ; and they were enabled to do so by reason of the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway reached Fredericton. I assume that the traffic manager, in writing to me, did not take into consideration the fact that Gibson is connected directly with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and therefore the Canadian Pacific can control the Gibson rates in the same way they can control the Fredericton rates. And Marysville—

Mr. TAYLOR. May I ask the minister why he was so emphatic in reply to the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) and the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) saying that it did not apply to Marysville and Gibson ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I made that statement because of the statement in the letter of the traffic manager to the effect that the points between Fredericton and Chatham Junction were not affected.

Mr. CROCKET. Is it because the Canadian Pacific Railway directly touches Fredericton and Gibson that they are able to control Intercolonial rates at these points ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is because the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as I understand it, have entered into an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway as to freight originating west of Montreal. Marysville is not directly on the Canadian Pacific Railway, but is distant a mile or thereabouts—it is within cartage distance.

Mr. CROCKET. It is three miles.

Mr. EMMERSON. Not from where their station is ?

Mr. CROCKET. Yes, it is certainly three miles to Fredericton.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not as familiar with it as my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket), but it is within cartage distance. In Fredericton there are factories to which freight would have to be carted almost the same distance as to Gibson or Marysville. But it is because of this position that the freight rates are made the same as for Fredericton—that the Canadian Pacific Railway controls the situation and they can by arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway change these rates. But from the points which the Canadian Pacific Railway cannot touch, that is points on the Intercolonial Railway which are not affected by compact with the Canadian Pacific Railway, the rates are precisely the same. Take Bolestown for instance or Cross Creek, or Stanley——

Mr. TAYLOR. The tariff gives all these.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes. All these points which are not controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway and cannot in any sense be the subject of contract between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, have the same rates as before. Therefore, substantially what I stated is proved by the explanation of my hon. friend.

Mr. TAYLOR. And so is the statement I made. But what I want to ask is whether the Railway Commission approved of these two new tariffs issued by these companies, that of the Canadian Pacific Railway on November 16, taking effect next day and one of the Grand Trunk Railway on March 17 ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not aware whether they were approved by the Railway Commission or even considered by them. I know that the railways have the right to file with the Railway Commission joint tariffs ; and until that commission takes action, either amending or revising that tariff, it would be effective. Whether they did file these tariffs, as provided by the law, or not, I am not personally informed.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will he ascertain whether they have been filed and approved and how long the government is going to allow them to run until they are approved of ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The government has no right to affect that.

Mr. TAYLOR. The government can control the Railway Commission.

Mr. EMMERSON. The government does not control the Railway Commission. The Railway Commission is an independent body ; it stands independent of the government, the railways and the patrons of these railways. Any shipper on the line of any of these roads has the right to ask the commission to revise the tariffs. It is true that the Minister of Railways can ask the Railway Commission to take action and decide matters to which his attention is called. But the government has no control of the decisions of the commission, nor does it decide the time when such matters should be taken up. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) has not in any way maintained his original position. He undertook to say that the freight rates from Trenton and Sydney to Brockville and Gananoque were greater than they were from Gananoque or Brockville to Pittsburg.

Mr. TAYLOR. At 37 cents.

Mr. EMMERSON. I did not take umbarge at my hon. friend making such a statement. Of course I should have been surprised to find the hon. gentleman's information correct. I made inquiry and found that the distance between Trenton and Brockville was very much greater than the distance between Pittsburg and Brockville.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not complain of that ; what I complained of was the 37 cents to Gananoque—25 cents and 12 cents.

Mr. EMMERSON. But he undertook to cast reproach in some way upon the Intercolonial by reason of that.

Mr. TAYLOR. Upon the combine. Because, I consider you are all in an arrangement.

Mr. EMMERSON. But the facts show that my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) is not looking at it in the right spirit.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am one of the sufferers.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend knows that this carload to which he refers was billed from Trenton to Brockville. The car reached Brockville, and the Intercolonial had nothing to do with it.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) cannot expect the rate to Gananoque to be the same as the rates to Brockville. An important point like Brockville of course, must have a different rate from a place like Gananoque.

Mr. EMMERSON. After the car had reached Brockville the consignee, I understand, desired to have it sent on to Brockville. It was subject to local rates over the Grand Trunk Railway from Brockville to Gananoque. No reproach can be cast on the Intercolonial for discrimination on the part of the Intercolonial in such a case.

Mr. TAYLOR. I brought it up in order that the Railway Commission might consider the grievance—a rate of 25 cents from Trenton to Brockville and 12 cents for the thirty miles to Gananoque.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) knows that there is a great distinction between the through rate and the local rate. He must have known indeed that if these statements were not true he was doing a great injustice to the management of the Intercolonial in bringing the name of that railway into question at all. The way he placed the matter before the House would lead one to conclude that the Intercolonial was at fault, that the officers of the Intercolonial were discriminating unfairly in the application of freight rates. I so understood him, and I asked for an explanation, because it is my desire, so far as I am responsible for the administration of that railway, that the rates shall not be discriminatory, that they shall be fair and equitable to all sections of country so far as it is possible to make them so. I am glad my hon. friend has made this explanation, he has clearly proved that the Intercolonial is not at fault, that the Intercolonial is not responsible for increased rates to and from Fredericton, or to and from points that are included within the Fredericton zone, and which are controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway. I thank him for bringing it to the attention of the House, and for emphasizing the fact that the Intercolonial is in no sense responsible for that increased rate on traffic originating west of Montreal.

Mr. O. S. CROCKET (York, N.B.). During the discussion of this matter the other day I asked the Minister of Railways if the increase applied only to Fredericton, and he informed me then that it did, and that there was no increase to Marysville or to Gibson. Now the statement of the member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) indicates that the minister was mistaken in the answer he gave to my question. I may say in connection with this matter, that the council of the Fredericton Board of Trade had a meeting on Wednesday night, and I have here a copy of the Fredericton 'Gleaner' of last night, containing an account of that meeting. It was stated in the course of the discussion here that the merchants of Fredericton had agreed to this increase in the Fredericton rates. At the time I was at a loss to know why they should have done so, because the letter which the minister read from the general traffic manager of the Intercolonial stated that the Intercolonial authorities themselves considered that the discrimination against Fredericton was most unfair. In the report of the meeting to which I refer, I find this :

> Mr. Hodge stated that Messrs. Randolph, Sterling, himself and other men had complained at the differential of three cents per hundred weight over the rate on all freight from Montreal and points west of Montreal to St John, Moncton and other places with which they had always enjoyed the same rate. They later met the Canadian Pacific Railway officials, and after a conference decided to accept the differential on all other classes of goods providing that they got the same rate on grain produce that St. John, Moncton and other places enjoyed.
> Mr. Randolph explained that the Canadian Pacific Railway had claimed that they had changed their rates from Fredericton north and that that justified them in raising the rate on freight coming in. The merchants claimed that this was not fair and the changes did not bring it down as far as a mileage basis. When the Canadian Pacific Railway officials offered to put the rates on grain back the merchants felt that it was better to take that offer than nothing at all. A month or so later Mr. Randolph's firm wrote complaining of the arrangement to the general freight agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Mr. Randolph pointed out that for a long haul to Sydney the rate was the same as to Fredericton.

So it seems that the wholesale grocers of Fredericton did assent to the rate being maintained, to the increase being maintained, on other classes of goods than on grain products, because they could do no better. But the board of trade, at a meeting, on Wednesday, passed a strong resolution protesting against this discrimination. I may say that the people of Fredericton feel that the discrimination is most unfair and unjust. It is not only the merchants of the city of Fredericton who are interested in this matter, but it is the people who purchase the goods ; the farmers, the mechanics and the labourers of the city of Fredericton and the county of York are paying this increase, and the whole community is very much opposed to this discrimination, and very much disappointed that it has resulted from the acquisition by the government of the Canada Eastern Railway. The great argument, I may say, that was made in the county of York with reference to the acquisition of the Canada Eastern Railway by the government was that if the government did not acquire it the Canadian Pacific Railway would, and that we would be entirely in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway in regard to freight rates. It is rather disappointing then to say the least, to hear the admission made upon the floor of this House by the Minister of Railways that the Canadian Pacific Railway now controls the freight rates of the Intercolonial to Fredericton—that is the admission which I understand the minister to make that at Fredericton and all points that are touched directly by the Canadian Pacific Railway, that road determines the rate. That is a matter of great disappointment to the people of Fredericton. Now the correspondence which the minister referred to the other day shows that, as I said before, the Intercolonial authorities themselves recognize the injustice of the discrimination, and I do hope that the Minister of Railways will exert his influence to have that discrimination removed as speedily as possibly.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Debates—amount required to cover expenditure for session of 1904 paid during present financial year, $31,503.74.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the main vote ?

Mr. SPEAKER. This is largely owing to the fact that the session of 1904 was so long. The session was estimated at 130 days, but it exceeded that by 41 days. These 41 days had to be taken into consideration this year. The items are as follows: Amanuenses for 'Debates' reporters during the extra period, $1,291.50; printing and binding, printing paper, $29,066.01. This represents the accounts of the Printing Bureau for work done after the first of July, 1904, to the end of the session. Seven hundred dollars is for the preparation of the analytical index. The Debates Committee ordered this index to be prepared last year.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the index of the 'Hansard?'

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it being carried out this year as I think it was last year, namely, that the whole index is not in each volume of the 'Hansard.'? I want to call the attention of the speaker and the committee to this, because it seems to me to be a very inconvenient way. I send for the 'Hansard,' quickly or not in order to look for a certain thing. I do not know how many volumes of the 'Hansard' I may be obliged to get before I get the particular volume that I want. It used to be always so that no matter what volume of the 'Hansard' you got you had the complete index of all the volumes.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that is still so.

Mr. FOSTER. No, as I understand it now, you do not have a complete index in every volume of the 'Hansard.' You have an index for each volume, and consequently you may have to send for and look up all the volumes before you get the one you want. That is very inconvenient and I do not think the little amount of expense that would cover the paper, because that would be about what it would be, is a sufficient reason why we should not have a complete index in every volume.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member is in error about that, although I speak with some hesitation about it, but my recollection, being then a member of the Debates Committee, was that the intention was that each volume, consisting of approximately 2,000 columns and being of a uniform size, should have an index of the contents of that volume, the complete index of all the volumes to be in the last volume.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I mean; you only get the complete index in the last volume.

Mr. SPEAKER. Oh, yes, I see. You want the index in all?

Mr. FOSTER. I want it in all. It is now very inconvenient.

Mr. SPEAKER. The idea of the committee at that time, as I well recollect, was that it would be a very convenient thing to have the bound volumes of the 'Hansard' put into the hands of the members at the earliest possible date. If that is done it is manifestly impossible to have a complete index in each because the complete index cannot be ready until all the volumes are out. The idea of the committee was that, instead of having these loose volumes prepared by the pages, a volume of 2,000 columns should be printed and bound and placed in the hands of members, rather than, as has been the custom, that they receive these volumes two or three months after the session was over. That was what the committee had in view and the change was made for that reason. If it is not considered wise to take that course it would be a proper thing to refer the matter back to the Debates Committee to consider it further. My hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who is a member of the committee, will probably remember the reasons which actuated the committee in making the change.

Mr. TAYLOR. We have our hands full of trouble on the Debates Committee every session. Last session a change was made. The government appeared to have had a gentleman that they had to find a job for in the person of Mr. McGillicuddy, and it was suggested to change the system of indexing the 'Hansard.' It was proposed that we should get up an analytical index, he was engaged to do it and the whole system was changed. But, the members found it was so inconvenient that at the first meeting of the Debates Committee this year we changed the system and went back to the old system, and in every volume of 'Hansard' for this year and future sessions, until the government have another gentleman that they want to find a job for, there will be found a complete index. The Debates Committee recommended and the House has approved of it, that we should revert to the old system of having a complete index in every volume of 'Hansard.' That will go into operation this session.

Committees—additional amount required, $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of that?

Mr. SPEAKER. That is in connection with reporting and the payment of witness fees for the Telephone Committee and the Agriculture and Colonization Committee.

Stationery—additional amount required, $10,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the main vote for stationery?

Mr. SPEAKER. I have not that at hand. The reason that this additional vote is asked is owing to the length of the last two sessions. The stock was very much reduced, and then the Toronto fire prevented the stationer from securing from local people the necessary supply with the result that quite a lot had to be imported from Massachusetts and heavy express charges had to be paid upon it. But, the principal reason why this additional vote was required, was because of the length of the last two sessions, one of five months and the other of seven. The main estimate I find now was $15,300.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I would call the attention of the committee to the quality of some of the note paper which is supplied to members of the House. I have made application for paper over and over again and I have been supplied with paper of a very poor quality. I have been supplied with paper which was not worth more than two or three cents or at the most five cents a quire. On one occasion when I sent for note paper I was told that all the note paper was in our boxes. I think there is a great deal of favouritism and partiality shown in the stationery office.

Mr. SPEAKER. I will call the attention of the stationer to the hon. gentleman's remarks.

Sessional clerks, $11,700.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the original vote for that ?

Mr. SPEAKER. $13,810.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the cause of that ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The same remark I made a little while ago in connection with another item, that is the extra length of the session of 41 days to be provided for this year, applies to this.

Mr. FOSTER. How many sessional clerks have we ?

Mr. SPEAKER. There are 30.

Mr. FOSTER. Now will the Speaker tell us what is the duty of those clerks, whom do they serve and at whose wishes do they do their work ? I would like to know and I do not know what the position is, whether the members are to get any use of them or have they special duties or how is it ?

Mr. SPEAKER. These clerks are strictly under the direction of the clerk of the House and their first duty is to serve requests from the House, to prepare papers, copy papers, or do any departmental work of that character.

Mr. FOSTER. That is from the clerk of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. From the clerk of the House, which is called for by reason of the action of the House. Then if they have any extra time, as they frequently have, it has been the custom, as far as I can gather, for them to serve members. Any statements or copies in connection with departmental documents that are asked of it is their duty if they have the leisure time to prepare at the request of the members. They are liable of course to be called upon to attend on the select committees and to prepare statements, documents, or serve them in any way. These are in a general way the duties of the sessional clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. These sessional clerks are all clerks. They do not do the work of messengers or anything like that ?

Mr. SPEAKER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the legal number provided for ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I am informed by the clerk that there are 30 sessional clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. And you have now ?

Mr. SPEAKER. We have a full list of 30.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the statement was made that the sessional clerks were 52.

Mr. SPEAKER. The messengers alone are 52.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not speaking of the messengers. We are on the vote for sessional clerks and I asked how many sessional clerks there were and the answer I got was 52.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is wrong, there are 30. 28 permanent sessional clerks and 2 extra sessional clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. How many sessional clerks are being paid out of this vote ?

Mr. SPEAKER. These 30.

Mr. FOSTER. And are there not more than 30 ?

Mr. SPEAKER. No. There are no more sessional clerks than these.

Mr. FOSTER. This vote that is now being taken is simply to pay for the 30 sessional clerks and for no other service ?

Mr. SPEAKER. For no other service for the extra 41 days.

Mr. FOSTER. For the extra 41 days and for the 41 days you want a vote of $11,700 for clerk hire ? And for an ordinary session you take a vote of $13,810. That does not seem to quite fit in. Forty-one days as compared with the ordinary session ought not to give an increase of $11,700. That would give for 30 clerks a large amount of money.

Mr. BELCOURT. As I make it the total vote of the main estimates with the vote now asked of $11,700 will make a total of about $24,000. The session lasted about 180 days and the sessional clerks are paid $4 a day. That would make $120 a day and if you multiply 120 by 180 you have a total of the two estimates about $21,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What I was getting at was that if it requires $11,700 for 41 days, if the original vote contemplating the usual session, called for $13,810 it ought not to take $11,700 to cover the extra 41 days.

Mr. BELCOURT. The hon. gentleman will see at once that $13,000 would not cover a session to which would be added 41 days. In other words the original estimate of $13,000 was not sufficient for the session lasting as the one we had last year lasted.

Mr. FOSTER. Who made the estimate for last year ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I forgot ; the Speaker or probably the clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. Why does the Speaker bring before the House an estimate which he knows is not sufficient for the ordinary session ?

Mr. BELCOURT. Because the estimate has always been based for years and years on a session of a certain number of months. The session last year not only was 41 days longer than usual, but more than twice 41 days, so that the original estimate was found to be far out, owing to the extra time.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I presume the intention of the government was to have a very short session when they brought that in. They did not intend to inflict that iniquity on the Northwest. Now they realize that the snow is likely to fly before they get away.

Mr. BELCOURT. This is last year.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It will take possibly until next Christmas to explain to the people of the country——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is very clear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is very clear that a great iniquity is being perpetrated on the Northwest.

Mr. BERGERON. Better make the estimate for a year now to be sure for the future. Where are these sessional clerks to be found ; have they a room in the building here ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Are they for the use of members for anything connected with the House ? If we have any translation to make or anything of the sort can we get that work done by them instead of paying out of our own pockets to have it done ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I explained a few moments ago in the absence of my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) that the first duty of these clerks is to serve the House and to serve any committee of the House in the preparation of information or documents and if they have time, as they frequently have, beyond that it is their duty to attend upon requests of members of the House, prepare documents or statements for them or anything of the kind they can do.

Mr. BERGERON. Those for the committees as far as I can remember are old permanent clerks who are clerks of the Committees. They are to be found in the committee rooms where they act as secretaries.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they sessional clerks?

Mr. BERGERON. No, I would call them permanent employees, the clerk of the Agricultural, Railway, Standing Order or other committee would be a permanent employee. I am talking more especially of the sessional clerks. I may say I do not know where they are and I very seldom see them. I am asking this because very often we have some translation to do. To-day I have some translation to do and I have either to pay for it or do it myself if I have time. I ask that as a matter of information.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think they could be called on to do that. It depends altogether on how much of their time is taken up in the direct service of the House for which they are procured.

Mr. FOSTER. What I would like to know is, what is this direct service which requires the employment of thirty-two sessional clerks ?

Mr. SPEAKER. If papers are called for by the House, they make copies of these.

Mr. FOSTER. Not returns from the departments ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, copies of these. The department makes one copy, and further copies are made by the sessional writers ; perhaps half a dozen copies are called for. A great deal of their time is taken up in that way. I do not think that they could be called on to do any work that members might wish them to do ; but if they have leisure, they might accede to the request of members who want them to prepare matters of that kind. They occupy a room near the entrance to the gallery, where they are provided with desks and typewriters.

Mr. FOSTER. We have had these thirty-two men employed for a long time, and the House has never yet had any return showing the services they have rendered. Could we not be informed just how many copies of reports they have turned off in the course of a session ? For instance, we ask for a return ; the minister lays it on the table of the House, and the clerk may ask me if I would like a copy of it. If I said I would, that is the work of a sessional clerk. When a return is brought down to the House, it is either printed or not printed. If it is not printed, I undertake to say that very few copies are required by the members during a session. I do not know that in the years that I have sat in the House I have ever asked for a copy of any of these papers to be made for me by the sessional clerks, and I think that is true of most of the members. The conclusion I have come to—it may be wrong—is that for thirty-two clerks the amount of work taken out of them in preparing duplicates for the use of members is comparatively very little, and I would like to have a return of the work that is really turned out by them. We should not have thirty clerks and not keep any tab over them so as to know what they are doing. When you take away that work, what other work is there for these men to do ? In the twenty years that I have been in the House I have never had any sessional clerk do any work for me. If other members are in the same position, what are these clerks doing ? But if some members have work done by them, and know how it is done, could we not have a director of sessional clerks to whom any member could apply when he wanted the services of a clerk ? For instance, if I want a piece of work done, I do not want to go to the rooms and hunt up a clerk for that purpose. If there were a director of the clerks, I could go to him. As it is, if we pay clerks we ought not to have to waste our own brain and nerve energy in preparing statements, so long as they have leisure to do it. Is there any method, and if so, what is the method that is adopted in that respect ?

Mr. SPEAKER. As I said a little while ago, they are, in the first instance, under the Clerk of the House, to whom application can be made by members at any time for copies of documents ; and I am told by the clerk that application is frequently made to him and also direct to members of the staff of sessional clerks. There is a chief of that staff, Mr. Stewart, and applications can be made to him at any time in the same way. I should have said also that eight members of this staff are assigned to the post office in the House, and are there practically all the time sorting. I think there is a great deal in what the hon. member has said, that the House ought perhaps be better apprised as to what the duties of the sessional clerks are, and what reports and documents they have prepared, and I will ask the clerk to procure a statement to that effect and lay it before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Is care taken to see that the sessional clerks are really men who are capable and can be trusted to prepare, for instance, a statement which I might want for use in the debate on the budget ?

Mr. SPEAKER. So far as I can learn, they are all pretty reliable men. It may be that in the future more attention should be paid to their being stenographers or typewriters ; but, so far as I can learn, they are good, reliable, trustworthy men, capable of doing any reasonable work which a member might ask to have done by them. Of course, they are answerable for their conduct to their chief, and particularly to the Clerk of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. How can we know when they are at leisure ? There is no way of finding that out unless we ask every day.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the only way would be to apply to the chief.

Mr. BERGERON. I believe that they are available mostly to members on the government side. We do not have much benefit from them. With such a number of clerks, we should have our share of them whenever it is necessary in the public service. I am told that in the Ontario legislature there are thirty clerks who are, I imagine, like these, paid by the House, and who are at the service of the members. If I am well informed, each of these clerks is at the disposal of three members. They are very good clerks, and the members utilize them. I would also call Mr. Speaker's attention to the fact that we are at a great disadvantage so far as accommodation is concerned. As to the messengers, I must say that they are really very attentive, but we have a good many round the House who seem to be assigned to some kind of special work. I have remarked during this session that the doors of the House are very badly kept. I have seen strangers on the floor of the House, and it seems to me that should not occur when we have so many doorkeepers. I have seen men coming through those doors behind the Speaker's chair, and I have even seen a man sketching the House through the open doors. Indeed I have seen men at the back of the chamber, and on one occasion a man was smoking there. It seems to me that we have enough messengers to take care that the precincts of the chamber are kept sacred, and I would ask the Speaker to look into the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. The attention of the sergeant-at-arms has been called to the matter and I do not think my hon. friend will have cause to complain in future. It is proper that the chamber should be kept for the members, and that the corners should not be a loafing place for officials of the House or any one else. There is no doubt that the accommodation for the sessional clerks is most miserable at present. These twenty-two men are crowded into a room where they cannot live in comfort and health. I believe that question is receiving the consideration of the Department of Public Works together with the general question of better accommodation for the members of the House. As the business of the House has increased and the staff has been enlarged, there is a manifest lack of accommodation for the members, who have not at their disposal the facilities they should have for their comfort and convenience in the discharge of their duties. That whole question is at present engaging the attention of the Internal Economy Committee, and particularly the Minister of Public Works. I am in hopes that at some early day he will be able to make a statement to the House which will be satisfactory to hon. gentlemen.

Mr. INGRAM. The sessional clerks have never refused to typewrite and give a copy of the returns laid on the table of the House, but as I understand it the hon. member for North Toronto was asking the Speaker whether the sessional clerks are competent to secure data for the budget speech for instance, or for a reply to the budget speech. Do I understand Mr. Speaker to say they would be competent, and prepared to do that class of work ? Suppose a member wanted to make a search in the Library for some particular information, do we understand that it would be part of the duties of a sessional clerk to procure that information ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I would not think that all of them would be competent to do that work, although I am perfectly satisfied that some of them are quite competent. It has come to my notice in previous years that they have done work of that class, but I cannot say at this moment how many of them would be capable of doing it.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it part of their duties to do that ; and if it is a circular should be issued to every member of this House informing him of that fact, so that each member of the House should know exactly where he stands in regard to it.

Mr. SPEAKER. Their first duty is to the House, and one could only know definitely whether they could do that work by applying to the chief. If any members of the staff were at leisure at the particular time a member applied, I think their duty would be to serve that member and I think they would be willing to do so. If, however, it is to be a generally recognized rule that members may apply to these officials to do such work, the present staff would not be at all adequate and it would have to be largely increased.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not think these men should be allowed to do that sort of work for an instant. Last session, I do not know what it is this session, we had the respected Admiral from Goderich who was utilized by some members of this House to pick up data for them. It is all right for the First Minister to have Mr. Farrer to prepare his speeches and get data and that sort of thing, but I do not think this House should pay members of the Library staff or members of the sessional staff to procure information which may be used in speeches.

Mr. BELCOURT. The gentleman you refer to was not a sessional clerk.

Mr. BERGERON. He was employed to do work he did not do ; he was employed by the Debates Committee and he did not do anything last year.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have in my hands a note sent into the chamber last session drawing 'Dear Sir William's' attention to a certain column in the 'Globe' where he would find an item with which he could 'slug Sam.'

Mr. BERGERON. Who wrote that ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. McGillicuddy.

Mr. FIELDING. How did you get the note ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The note was brought to me.

Mr. FIELDING. Did he send it to you by mistake ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. You may be sure that he did not intend it to be sent to me, at all events the note is in my possession and I want the Minister of Finance to understand that.

Mr. FIELDING. I presume you sent it to the proper person ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That would cut no ice.

Mr. FIELDING. Did he send it to you by another man's note.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I want these gentlemen to understand that they are not here to do work for members on the government side of the House, and I object to these sessional clerks being employed for any such purpose as hunting up data for the speeches of gentlemen opposite. If one member has a right to have that done, every member of the House has a similar right.

Mr. SPEAKER. The statement I made was that every member in the House should have the same right in the matter.

Mr. BELCOURT. In justice to the gentleman referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) I should say that he was not on the staff of the sessional clerks, and he is not now.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What was he doing in the name of goodness ?

Mr. BELCOURT. Last session the Debates Committtee recommended that he should be employed for the purpose of preparing an index of all sessional papers from the year 1894 to the present time. The last index of that kind was brought up to 1894 and on the recommendation of the Debates Committee this gentleman was employed to continue it. The index is prepared and is being printed now.

Mr. FOSTER. What is he doing now ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not know. I am told he is employed by the Debates Committee.

Mr. BERGERON. That is not the information I have. I understand that this gentleman, together with a French gentleman, was employed last year to make an analytical index of 'Hansard,' which was a new idea. I may say that we have altered that a little and gone back to the old system of having the index attached to each volume of 'Hansard,' as the members desired and as I think is the better way. The French gentleman has done his work thoroughly, but the English gentleman of whom I spoke had not done anything. The Debates Committee received a letter from that gentleman explaining that the reason why he had not done anything was that he had been sick, and we accepted that explanation. I have been told that during the time that he was supposed to be sick he was doing something else. I imagine that is what my hon. friend refers to.

Mr. BELCOURT. The work he was required to do was undertaken because of a report in favour of it by the Debates Committee last session. The gentleman was here a part of the session and he was not receiving any salary or indemnity from the House or the government. Towards the close of the session the report of the committee was made to the House, and adopted in favour of having this index prepared. I was mistaken when I said a moment ago that it covered ten years. It covered fourteen years—from 1890 to 1904. The work has been completed and is being printed.

Mr. BERGERON. What is it ?

Mr. BELCOURT. An idex of the sessional papers from 1890 to 1904—really an index of the journals of the House including the sessional papers and the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there no index of that ?

Mr. BELCOURT. Up to 1890, yes ; but the last fourteen years had not been indexed.

Mr. HENDERSON. Returning to the question of the sessional clerks, I would like to ask the Speaker if all these 32 men are employed in the sessional clerks' room ? I have gone in there frequently, but had no idea there were such a large number on the staff. Are any of them employed by the members in the different rooms ? Or, of course, they may work in relays, some in the early part of the day and some later, which would account for one not seeing so many in the room at once.

Mr. SPEAKER. A couple of these men are employed by the whips, one on either side. One of them is employed partly in attendance upon the deputy speaker's room and there are eight in the post office. Allowing for such cases, the number working in the sessional clerks' room would be about from eighteen to tweny-two.

Mr. HENDERSON. I must say that I have always had a good deal of delicacy in asking any help of the sessional clerks, not knowing exactly what I had a right to expect. But it is only due to Mr. Stewart the chief of that staff, to say that I have always received the utmost courtesy and have never been refused anything I asked. At the same time I have avoided asking for the copying of documents in a good many cases not knowing what was my strict right. But, if we as members of the House are entitled to more privileges than I have hitherto claimed, I would be glad to be informed, for I would avail myself of them, being one of those who believe in taking all they can get. I have often wondered if the sessional clerks were available to assist in the private correspondence of members. We are called upon to write a great many letters, yet not in such fashion that we have continuous employment for a typewriter. To have the assistance of a clerk for one or two days in the week would be a great help.

Mr. SPEAKER. If, on application to Mr. Stewart, the chief of the staff, it were found that members of that staff were available, I do not know why they should not be used for that class of work.

Mr. INGRAM. So far as the whips secretaries are concerned, they are overworked now. Owing to their position they are called upon to work long hours, and a lot of work is imposed upon them. I think a great deal of this is due to the fact that members do not think they have a right to ask the ordinary sessional clerks to typewrite documents, and so the whips' secretaries are called upon to do the work. If it were better understood that sessional clerks generally could be called upon for that class of work, it would relieve these other officers of much of the work they are now called upon to do.

Mr. SPEAKER. While I indicated that it is probably the right of members to avail themselves of the services of these officers, it must be apparent that with perhaps twenty clerks available, if 215 members exercise that right to any great extent, it would be impossible for these men to do much else than serve the members of the House. Of course, such work could only be expected of them when they have time to do it, and that can be ascertained by application to the chief of the staff. But where these clerks have the time, I do not see why their services should not be availed of in that way. The chief of the staff will see to it, I suppose, that they are not required to work too many hours in the discharge of their duties.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that Mr. Speaker went a long way when he authorized the use of sessional clerks to assist in the private correspondence of members. I do not know where we should end if we began that. It seems to me that either we have too many clerks, or we have not enough, or we have not the right kind. The work of a working member of this House is very arduous. He has a large private correspondence that he is bound to take care of. Then he has a large correspondence of a public nature that he has to take care of. Then, there is the work of the House. My own experience is that, as compared with what it was fifteen or twenty years ago, the work of this House is very much increased. The multiplicity of things that claim our attention, the rapid succession in which new questions are forced upon us, make it arduous drudgery for even the best man to keep even with the work of the House. One almost feels like giving it up in despair and deciding to run the chance of making what show he can in the House with as small a modicum of work as possible. In some legislative assemblies they give every member a clerk or amanuensis. That seems extravagant at first blush, and it is certainly expensive. But to give each member a clerk or secretary may not in some respects be any more than the public man who gives his work to the House and country is entitled to. But we have not yet come to that, and it must be a good while before we will come to it.

But I think it is possible that if we had a staff of sessional clerks, the right men, competent, varied in their ability to work, stenographers, quick at summaries, calculating definitely and well, and doing their work so that it can be thoroughly relied on—I think there is a class of work that a moderately large number of clerks of the right kind could do for members, under the direction even of the clerk of the House, or of a director of the staff, divided so that it will be perfectly fair and even for both sides of the House, and all members of the House, a class of work that they might do with advantage to public business. Now something like this for instance : There was laid on my desk to-day six different returns with reference to certain subjects. Now, when I saw them my heart sank; I said to myself : How ever am I going to get through with that, analyse it and bring it here in the course of ten days or so, ready for the discussion which we have invited upon it ? For instance, it is relating to a matter which we were discussing to-day and yesterday. Now it would not be a partisan thing, I think, and it would be a public benefit, and would do a great deal to help the working members of the House, if, when a return like that comes down, they knowing what kind of information they want to get from it, a tabulation, were just to write a little memorandum of the tabulation they wanted in that return, and hand it over to a competent sessional clerk and have him make that tabulation. It would not be a partisan piece of work, you are not directing him as to what he shall say against the government or for the government, you are after a certain tabulation out of all these returns. I do not know whether I will ever get that done myself, if I have to do it. But there is a species of work which I should think a competent staff of sessional clerks could do, and do fairly well, and could alleviate the members of this House, for the public good and the public service. But if you come to say that we will have clerks here who will take up the private correspondence of members, I am afraid that we will go so far in that direction that it will simply become an impossibility, and will end in a worse state of affairs than we have to-day. But I would like, Mr. Speaker, and the clerk of the House to think it over, and see whether we can have, say, 25 or 30, or more if necessary, thoroughly good, first-class men, typewriters, stenographers, summarists, men who know just how to take hold of papers and give you a summary that you require out of them, and have them under competent direction and distribution to do work of that kind for the working members of the House. That is a thing which I think we might improve upon, because otherwise it comes to this, that even the best workers of the House, appalled by the tremendous amount of labour they have put upon them in order to get through the work, will fall behind hand in their work, and the public interests will suffer in that respect.

Mr. SPEAKER. It will be apparent that the class of men the hon. gentleman refers to would have to be a superior class of men, and probably we would require to pay them a little more than we pay the present staff. Any one can see at once with what great utility they would serve various members of the House. The clerk of the House and myself will take the matter up and see if we can make some suggestion, at all events, to the House to be dealt with at some future day.

Leather trunks, 240 at $25 each, $6,000.

Mr. FOSTER. How is that thing carried out ?

Mr. SPEAKER. According to a report of the Joint Committee on printing.

Mr. FOSTER. Who makes the trunks ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The contract is on tender, I understand, given out by the Printing Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. Is value got for these trunks ?

Mr. SPEAKER. They seem to be very good.

Mr. BERGERON. Tenders were invited, and two houses tendered. They brought in some samples which were examined by a special committee of the Printing Committee and were found satisfactory. The contracts were given to two houses, and the members were invited to go and choose for themselves which house they should get their trunks from.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FESSENDEN WIRELESS TELEGRAPH COMPANY OF CANADA.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 144) to incorporate the Fessenden Wireless Telegraph Company of Canada.—Mr. Geoffrion.

On sections 11 and 12,

Mr. BERGERON. When we last had this Bill under discussion clauses 11 and 12 were allowed to stand because there was a proposal made by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to add a word. I did not take upon myself at that time to accept the suggestion, because I was only acting for the promoter of the Bill, but since then I have been authorized by the hon. member for Chambly and Vercheres (Mr. Geoffrion), who is in charge of this Bill, to accept the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Finance. Section 11 reads like this: The company may enter into any agreements with any government, and if I remember well the proposal of the Minister of Finance was to add the word 'Canadian' so that it would have nothing to do with any foreign government. I therefore beg to move:

That the word 'Canadian' be inserted before the word 'government' in the second line of section 11.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Is that word going to qualify 'corporation' and 'person?'

Mr. BERGERON. The difficulty the other day was that in not mentioning which government was intended it might mean a foreign government, although I understand it means either this government or a provincial government, and the hon. Minister of Finance proposed, so that there should be no doubt about it, to put in the word 'Canadian' before the word 'government.' I move to insert the same word in section 12.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Would it not be better to say 'any government in Canada?'

Mr. BERGERON. It is only a matter of phraseology; that is the meaning of it. By putting in the word 'Canadian government' it serves also the purpose of qualifying the word 'corporation' or 'person.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it is intended to give the company power to enter into agreements with the governments of any of the provinces, I think the expression 'Canadian government' is not very appropriate.

Mr. BERGERON. How would it do to say 'with any Canadian government?'

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, I would think that you might say, 'any government in Canada, or any provincial government.' Provincial governments are Canadian governments in a certain sense but they are not Canadian governments in the ordinary sense.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, put it in good English.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it the intention to restrict the words 'corporation' or 'person' in the same way?

Mr. BERGERON. Not persons, but corporations.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Would you make it read 'any government or corpoation in Canada?'

Mr. BERGERON. All right. I will therefore move that sections 11 and 12 be amended by inserting in the second line of each after the word 'corporation' the words 'in Canada.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How will it read then?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER (reading):

The company may enter into agreements with any government or corporation in Canada or person, &c.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I do not think that is a very good way of wording it. The words 'in Canada' might be held to apply to the verb enter into' and not to 'government.' Why not say that they may enter into agreements with the government of the Dominion, or with any province or with any corporation or person?

Mr. BERGERON. The clause as it stands is the very same clause that was in the Marconi Act. The other evening when it was suggested that these words be added I did not take it upon myself to accept them, but since I have been authorized to do so. It is the same clause that they have in the Marconi Bill. The Minister of Finance will remember that the other day when discussing the Fessenden Wireless Telegraph Company we left two clauses aside in order to consider the insertion of the word 'Canadian' before 'government,' to be sure that the company would not be dealing with a foreign government and we are moving to add these words now.

Mr. FIELDING. The member who has charge of the Bill and who, in his absence, has handed it over to my hon. friend, mentioned this to me to-day. I think that from any point of view we need not object on behalf of the government. Whether the amendment carries out as fully the intention of my hon. friend as he desires I do not know, but I do not see any objection to the suggestion of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) to insert the word 'Canadian' before 'government.'

Mr. BARKER. I would have preferred to have seen the whole power subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and then the powers could be made as wide as you like.

Mr. FIELDING. The Bill already contains a clause with respect to the erecting of stations, and in the practical working out of the scheme they have to come to the Governor in Council, but this particular clause relates to agreements, and I do not think this is especially subject to the Governor in Council.

Mr. BARKER. If the agreement clause is made subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, I see no objection to making it as wide as you please.

Mr. BERGERON. Clause 19, which has been added, makes the whole Bill subject to the Governor in Council. You might put it this way :

The government of Canada or of any province in Canada or with any corporation or any persons, &c.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Speaker suggests to me that it might read :

The company may enter into agreements with any government, corporation or person in Canada or any province thereof.

'In Canada' might cover it without any reference to the provinces. The expression 'in Canada' would apply not only to 'government,' but to the persons and corporations as well.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think the intention would be very well carried out by putting in the word 'Canada' before 'government.' You do not want to restrict the corporations or persons.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the company are content to have it in the form my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The section will then read :

The company may enter into agreements with any government in Canada or with any corporation or person for the purpose, &c.

The same amendment will be made in section 12.

Sections, as amended, agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported and read the third time, and passed.

FARMERS' BANK OF CANADA.

On the motion that the amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 124) respecting the Farmers' Bank of Canada—Mr. Martin (Wellington)—be concurred in.

Mr. FIELDING. The amendment I find consists in the striking out of a clause in the Bill. This, I may say, is a Bill to extend the time for the organization of a bank. During the interim certain proceedings have taken place, and a clause was inserted in the Bill as passed by this House validating anything that may have been done in the way of organization in the meantime. The Senate has moved to strike that clause out, and the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill is satisfied, I believe, to have the Bill go in its amended form.

Motion agreed to, and amendment read the second time, and agreed to.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 114) respecting the Mantoulin and North Shore Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 116) respecting the Algoma Central & Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Sergeant-at-arms—House of Commons—Sessional messengers, $13,200.

Mr. BARKER. In regard to these items under the heading 'sergeant-at-arms,' I desire to ask Mr. Speaker what the present position of the sergeant-at-arms is in regard to purchases for the House of Commons. It will be recollected that last year a discussion occurred upon this subject, and as I understand, the position taken then was that up to a very recent period the sergeant-at-arms had been accustomed to make purchases, but that a year or two ago the Committee on Internal Economy had changed the position of the sergeant-at-arms in that respect, and while they left to him the care and custody of all property in the House, they made some change with regard to purchasing ; but there was some difference of opinion as to what the change really meant. It was said that the purchases in the future would have to be made under the direction of the committee and either the Speaker or the clerk, I am not sure which. But it was assumed by the then Speaker that that did not at all alter the duty or right or privilege of the sergeant-at-arms to make the purchases. That is, as I understood it, the sergeant-at-arms might still be considered to be the proper person to make the purchases, though he might only make them under the immediate direction of the committee or Mr. Speaker or the clerk of the House. I would like to know exactly what the present position is, and what the intention for the future is in regard to such purchases ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think there is no very radical change in the matter. A resolution was passed to the effect, I believe, that before any purchases are made there must be a requisition from the sergeant-at-arms, who in the first place has to pass upon the propriety or impropriety of the purchase ; and before he can purchase outright, this requisition must be passed upon by the Speaker or the Internal Economy Committee. As far as the act of purchasing is concerned, that is now as it has been always, done by the sergeant-at-arms, with this one qualification which was made a short time ago : There have been requisitions made to the department of the sergeant-at-arms for furniture by various members in connection with their rooms, and from time to time it appears that applications which either were or were not refused by the sergeant-at-arms branch were made to the Public Works Department in an indirect way—at all events not through the sergeant-at-arms—and were granted in some cases where they had not been granted by the sergeant-at-arms branch. This manifestly led to difficulty in keeping books and to the inconvenience of having applications made to one department after refusal by another. On consideration the Internal Economy Committee came to the conclusion that in the case of furniture, the requisition should first come from the sergeant-at-arms and be passed by the Speaker to the Department of Public Works. The purchase of furniture is now made entirely by the department of Public Works, but a written requisition must first be made by the sergeant-at-arms branch. All other supplies that have heretofore been purchased are still purchased by this branch and on the initiation of the sergeant-at-arms.

Mr. BARKER. Do I understand that everything except furniture for rooms in the House of Commons is purchased by the sergeant-at-arms ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that is true.

Mr. BARKER. Upon the requisition being approved the sergeant has absolute power to make the purchase and is the only person authorized.

Mr. SPEAKER. The requisition is made by him in the first instance and is passed upon by the Speaker, or, in case of a considerable amount, by the Internal Economy Committee. But in all cases except furniture the purchase is still made by the sergeant-at-arms.

Mr. FOSTER. What does Mr. Speaker mean by furniture for the House of Commons ? Does it include furniture for the members rooms and the furniture necessary for the work rooms of the offices and servants ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it includes all wooden furniture.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it take in furniture for the Speaker's rooms?

Mr. SPEAKER. It would take in what would come in under the term furniture.

Mr. FOSTER. Just wooden furniture ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, I think that is as far as the resolution goes.

Mr. FOSTER. Has Mr. Speaker a copy of the resolution ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think I can get it in a few moments.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is desirable that these regulations and orders made by the Internal Economy Committee should be laid before the House. I have been in the House nine years and I do not know anything about this committee, what it does or what its functions are, or what it is supposed to do. I never before heard of it doing anything, and I am much surprised to learn now that it has actually made an order about something. That fact might be regarded as so unusual anl almost unconstitutional, that a copy of anything this commission has done for the last nine years should be laid on the table at the earliest possible moment. I do not even know whom I should call upon to undertake that, but in case there is any one within the sound of my voice who has anything to do with it—apart from the Speaker who I presume may be ex-officio a member—I would ask him to have a copy of the regulations laid on the table. We want to know how we are governed ; that is true as regards the whole country and it should be true also of the House of Commons.

Mr. SPEAKER. Last year a report of that sort was, I think, laid before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. How many sessional messengers are there ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Thirteen permanent and fifty-two temporary. At the beginning of the session there were fifty-five temporary but some have been dropped from the list for one reason or other so that there are three less now.

Mr. FOSTER. How are these messengers distributed ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Some of these permanent messengers are in the galleries, at the doors, and in the rooms. The temporary messengers are pretty well distributed all over the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the messengers that we see on the different landings and near the telephones included in this ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. By what system do you know whether fifty or fifty-five messengers are necessary ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the actual authorized number is fifty but it has grown a little beyond that. I do not know how it came to be fixed at fifty, but an effort will be made to get it down to that number.

Mr. FOSTER. There appear to be 'servants' as well as 'messengers'?

Mr. SPEAKER. There are twenty-five charwomen and eight servants.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are the servants located ?

Mr. SPEAKER. They are employed in different parts of the building looking after the coal and ice and telephones.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the legal number of these ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Five.

Mr. FOSTER. These exceed the legal number as in the other case.

Mr. SPEAKER. The authorized number of charwomen is twenty.

Mr. FOSTER. And you have how many ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Twenty-five, including two attendants in the ladies' cloak room, established this year for the wives of members.

Mr. FOSTER. The Speaker seems to have a large number beyond the authorized number. Whose province is it to make sure that the duties call for that many servants ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The sergeant-at-arms, of course, is the head of this department. There is at present a little excess. We are looking into that, and have been for some time, to see if we cannot reduce the staff to the exact limits.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the excess come over from last year ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes. There has been no increase this year except the two attendants in the ladies' cloak room.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice that last year the excess amounted to sixteen above the authorized number. Mr. Speaker tells us that this has been reduced by three and that he purposes to reduce the number to that authorized.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, just as soon as we can without undue hardship to any servant.

Legislation—House of Commons—Sergeant at Arms—pages, $3,645.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the number of pages ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Nineteen.

Mr. FOSTER. And the authorized number ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Sixteen.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any probability of the number being reduced ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, we will see what we can do about it.

Legislation—House of Commons—Sergeant-at-Arms—one additional messenger, 10⅔ months at $500 per annum, $444.44.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this an additional employee ?

Mr. SPEAKER. That is for a messenger put on permanently, and the sum voted is to pay the balance of the year since the date of appointment. He was previously employed, but is now made permanent.

Mr. FOSTER. That is an addition to the permanent list ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, that is the condition I found.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Speaker the resolution from the Internal Economy Commission ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, this was a resolution passed on March 24th, 1905.

That owing to the fact that confusion is likely to arise from the practice that has been growing up of a portion of the furniture procured for the House of Commons being purchased by the Department of Public Works and a portion by the sergeant-at-arms, in future all such furniture as may be necessary, be purchased by and through the Public Works Department on requisition signed by the Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not put it entirely in the hands of the Public Works Department ?

Mr. SPEAKER. So far as the purchase is concerned. But they make purchases on requisition from the sergeant-at-arms.

Mr. FOSTER. The resolution does not say that it is on requisition of the sergeant-at-arms.

Mr. SPEAKER. In practice that is how it is done. The sergeant-at-arms inquires into the advisability of the purchase. If he decides in favour of it he makes a written requisition. These requisitions are numbered. The requisition is submitted to the Speaker, who initials it and it is then forwarded to the Public Works Department, who attend to the purchase.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand this to be the course : Where furniture is considered necessary for the House of Commons, the requisition originates with the sergeant-at-arms. He makes his inspection and decides what is necessary. He makes up his list, which is in the form of a requisition. There is a conference with the Speaker, who, if he approves, initials the requisition. Then the matter is entirely out of the hands of the sergeant-at-arms and of the Speaker ; the Public Works Department purchase as it pleases and delivers the purchase. Then that is paid for by the Public Works Department ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no appropriation in the House voted for that furniture. The requisition originates here, but the money vote is with the Public Works Department.

Mr. SPEAKER. It will have to be.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether that is the best form in which to have it or not. Certainly, the sergeant-at-arms is responsible for the custody and care of all this furniture. It seems to me that it ought to be clear beyond doubt that he has to requisition for it and has to be the judge of what is necessary. Of course, I do not wish to cut the Speaker out from his proper place, which is to supervise and, in the end I suppose, to say what he thinks is necessary. But one thing I wanted to make sure about is that it is not the Public Works Department that is to judge what furniture is necessary for the House of Commons. The Minister of Public Works is a political head. The sergeant-at-arms, as is well known, has no politics, he is not a political head, but an officer of the House. If the initiative were left to the Minister of Public Works there would be everlasting pressure upon him to order things not really necessary. I understand that it is clear that the initiative does not rest there but with the sergeant-at-arms, who has the responsibility for the care of the furniture.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not the intention. In the past purchases were made through these two channels, and there seemed danger of abuse arising. It may be a debatable question whether it should be left with the sergeant-at-arms or with the Public Works Department. So far as the actual purchase is concerned, it would seem that, purchasing so many things as they do, including large quantities of furniture for all the departments, the department of Public Works would have facilities for the purchase of goods of this kind. In any event the intention was to make it plain that the initiative should be with the sergeant-at-arms' branch, the purchasing only being left with the Public Works Department.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, with reference to prices, which would depend on the quality of the furniture. I might think that if I had the courtesy of a room in company with others and wanted some furniture, I should have very excellent furniture, and I might pitch my demand pretty high. I should think that in such case it would be the sergeant-at-arms who would be the judge of the kind of furniture that should be used, both as to quality and price.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that is the intention, that the sergeant shall pass upon the articles, and state about what kind and what price they shall be, as a certain desk, for example, or something of that character.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask Mr. Speaker what is the precise position as to all other purchases. I understand now that with regard to wood furniture for the House of Commons, the sergeant-at-arms has the initiative to recommend what is required, and the purchases are made through the Public Works Department. There are at least one or two other branches who make purchases. But where is the initiative of those purchases ? By whom are they made and certified ?

Mr. SPEAKER. When I took office I found that certain things were being purchased without apparently any requisition to start with, though I did not find this to any great extent, and I am not going to make any complaint about it. But I decided that in each case there should be a written requisition to start with, something which could be placed on file. That written requisition will now be made by the sergeant-at-arms, after investigating the need of the purchase ; in every case that will be the duty of the sergeant. I do not exactly know what the hon. member meant as to the other branches. He may refer to certain purchases made by the clerk ; for example, books for the use of the clerk in his library, or certain publications of utility which may be distributed among the leading officials to assist them in their work. Matters of that character will be dealt with in the same way by the clerk ; he will make a requisition, and the purchase will be carried out in the same way.

Mr. BARKER. Where the sergeant-at-arms makes a requisition, and I presume it has to be approved by the Speaker, which seems to be reasonable, who makes the purchase then ?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is passed at once to the Speaker, and after he looks it over and initials it, he sends it back to the sergeant. After that nobody has anything to do with it but the sergeant-at-arms, he makes the purchase himself, he certifies the account, then the account comes regularly back to the Internal Economy Committee at its next meeting. This committee consists of four members of the government and the Speaker, and they pass upon all accounts before they are paid.

Mr. BARKER. In explanation of these accounts, I may say that last year, although the then Speaker seemed to have a very clear notion, practically the same as the Speaker now has, that the sergeant-at-arms made all the purchases, that was not the fact. On page 8991 of the 'Hansard' of 1904, the then Speaker said :

He——

That is the sergeant-at-arms.

—is responsible for the purchase and custody of the goods purchased not only in connection with the Speaker's department, but the whole House.

Now, that was not the interpretation of this order that had been made in May, 1902, by the Internal Economy Committee :

The question of the puchase of supplies by the sergeant at arm's branch having come up for consideration, the commissioners record their opinion that in future all such expenditures shall be made under the direction of the Speaker and the Internal Economy Committee.

Now, the interpretation of that by the then Speaker was that while the Speaker and the committee directed the sergeant-at-arms, still the sergeant-at-arms made the purchases, and presumably certified them. But, as a fact, that was not the procedure, because we found in the Auditor General's Reports that accounts were passed and paid without the certificate of the sergeant-at-arms. Now, I think I clearly understand what Mr. Speaker tells us, and what he says is perfectly satisfactory, so far as I am concerned, it appears to be a perfectly proper arrangement. But although that was the understanding of the late Speaker, it was not the practice, having regard to what appeared in the Auditor General's Report ; and I think it was not the practice as understood by the Clerk of the House, because in a letter of his, dated October 7, 1903, reported at page 9001 of 'Hansard' of last year, he answered the Auditor General to the effect that the account had been passed by the Board of Internal Economy, and that he, the Clerk, had certified it. So that under that order of 1902, which was interpreted by the then Speaker and the committee to mean that the Sergeant had control, the Clerk of the House had a different view of it, and accounts were being sent in to the Auditor General without any certificate from the sergeant-at-arms. I simply mention this as a reason for making these inquiries in rather a particular manner. I can only add that I am perfectly satisfied with the arrangement as it is now stated.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask a question with reference to the audit. If I understood the discussion which took place last year, in reading it over, it seemed to be the contention of the late Speaker—whether it was the opinion of the Internal Economy Committee I do not know—that the House of Commons expenditure should not be audited, and it was not necessary that it should be audited by the Auditor General, that it was exempt from the Audit Act. But the fact remains that a large payment was made not to the satisfaction of the Auditor General, and, so far as I know, it has never been certified according to the demands of the Auditor General. Now, the present Speaker, if he has looked into it, knows quite well that the Auditor General was asked to audit the House of Commons expenditure, and that there was a resolution of the House, I think in 1880, which affirmed that, and I should hope there would be no more of the contention that it was not necessary and proper, and a wise thing, to have this expenditure audited by the Audit Department. I do not think that even the House of Commons wishes to take itself out from under the most stringent audit of the Auditor General's Department.

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot say at the moment what the position is, but I will look into it.

Mr. FOSTER. Are inventories taken yearly or at stated periods, and how is track kept in reference to our purchases and what becomes of them in the general run of things ? Looking at some of these expenditures one would think that there must be stacks of this stuff somewhere. It seems almost impossible to have worn out with fair usage all these things which have been got within the last few years. Take the Speaker's apartments. The past Speaker does not seem to have shown himself to be a master of economy ; either that or there must have been a tremendous falling out of supplies, furniture and that kind of thing in the Speaker's apartments in preceding years. I find that the expenses made by the past Speaker in the two or three years of his official life came up to a large amount. In two years they went up to about $8,000. I never had the idea that the Speaker's apartments were so poorly furnished and so badly depleted that it would require all that amount of money to refit them, and I think there was a little bit of a reign of extravagance during the regime of my hon. friend the late Speaker, which was not emulated by his predecessors and I hope will not be emulated by his successor. In fact, I think, taking into account the enormous purchases that were made, the present Speaker must find that there is an embarrassment of riches rather than anything else and that he will need very little for the next two or three years.

Mr. SPEAKER. I quite agree on the question of the utility of having these inventories ; in fact, I have already written expressly asking that there shall be inventories at stated periods so as to check purchases and compare them with previous purchases. I think that will be attended to with fair strictness.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I came in perhaps a little late to hear all this discussion, but I would like to know from Mr. Speaker, or whoever is in charge, how a member has to proceed to get what I may regard as a share of the furniture that is provided for members of parliament. This is the seventeenth session I have attended this House. I never had a desk such as is furnished to many members, I think I can fairly say, except a desk in the House of Commons and even that is at times tampered with. I have had from my seat trinkets that I placed here thinking they were safe, stolen during the present session. I do not know any reason why I should not have these advantages as well as others. Perhaps I have been too modest in not asking for them, but I never became acquainted with the procedure of how to get anything of that kind. I go about a great many rooms, I see beautiful desks and ample provision made for locking up anything of a private character, papers as well as other matters and I wonder how these are obtained, whether it is through favouritism, or whether I am not supplied simply because I have been too modest to ask for anything of that kind.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the reason.

Mr. HENDERSON. It may be the reason but I never became acquainted with the mode of procedure, and I do not know whether I should get on the right side of the Speaker or the right side of the sergeant-at-arms or make friends with the Minister of Public Works. Or, is it because I am on the left side of the Speaker that something of that kind is not held out to me ? There are a great many rooms in this House well furnished with every provision of that kind. I think I may safely say that there are anywhere from 100 to 200 desks provided for members. If one member is to get a desk another member should have the same thing without asking for it. It should be presented to him for use during the session. I do not think he should be humiliated by having to get down on his knees to any officials of the government and beg for such a thing. It seems to me that if these conveniences are for general distribution, which they seem to be, they ought to be provided without any requisition. I may say this, however, that a desk for myself would be very little use because I have practically no place to put it consequently that may be the reason why I have not made a requisition. I find that others have abundance of room in which to place these desks. How that is obtained I do not know. Why I should not have obtained the same privileges I assume is just owing to my modesty in not asking for them and in not troubling the officials of the House. I think the time has come, when, if these privileges are accorded to one man, they should be accorded to another and that without his asking for them. It is a known fact, it is known to the sergeant-at-arms that there is a necessity for having some place where a member can lock up his private effects because the sergeant-at-arms is quite well aware that the House of Commons is not the safest place in this world to leave a penknife or anything else that is of the value of five cents; in fact it is very dangerous to do it. Here we are making laws, we have enacted the Criminal Code and I believe there is no place where the Criminal Code is more frequently violated than in the House of Commons. I am not accusing the members of being the guilty parties.

Mr. BERGERON. Not even the ministers.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not the ministers certainly. I am not accusing the Speaker, or the sergeant-at-arms ; I am not accusing even the pages, but somebody does it. That is a well known fact. To my mind some steps should be taken to protect the House of Commons. I think this country is big enough and rich enough to afford a salary to two policemen to stay in this chamber all hours of the night, every hour while the House is not in session to keep their eyes constantly on every desk or on every part of this chamber and see that no one is permitted to come into the House to remove anything that does not belong to him. I have been told that this was attempted, but that the very men who were employed were the men who did the work. All we can say is that we will get two more to watch these two. It seems that something will have to be done. I think it is necessary even to set a good example to the country. I draw the attention of Mr. Speaker to this matter and I hope and trust that steps will be taken to sacredly guard everything that is left in the House by members and that it will not be possible to say that the Criminal Code of which we are the authors is more frequently violated in the House of Commons than in any other place in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER. There appear to be two reasons why the hon. member (Mr. Henderson) has not a desk. One is undoubtedly his modesty and the other is that he has no place to put it. I can assure my hon. friend that if he will apply to some of the new members he will very quickly get on to the way of getting a desk. The new members are very much more assertive in that direction than old members ; at least, they have been the last three or four years.

Mr. FOSTER. How was it with yourself ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The usual way in which members are in the habit of getting desks is by applying for them, and if my hon. friend is not too modest there may be hope for him in that direction. I can assure him there will be no discrimination, there has been no discrimination. The desks are allotted as they are applied for and as we can get them for the members on either side of the House. I quite agree with something that the hon. member said just at the end. My attention has been called repeatedly to petty thefts around the House and some that are not very petty, and I believe that there is an absolute necessity for us to secure efficient police or detective service around this House. I believe a couple of detectives could earn their salaries well in the saving of the theft of articles that are stolen from time to time around this House. That is another matter that has recently been engaging the attention of the sergeant-at-arms and myself.

Legislation—Senate—further amount required for contingencies, $15,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What is that? Who can answer for the Senate ?

Mr. FIELDING. Nobody. I really think we will have to take these items as being self-explanatory for I am not able to give any explanation that is not set forth there. The further amount required for contingencies arises from the length of the session no doubt. The leather trunks are due to the fact that it is the privilege of senators to have trunks as well as members of this House.

Mr. W. JACKSON. What about the extra $25 for leather trunks ? The amount of this vote would provide for more trunks than are required.

Mr. FIELDING. There is enough for 90 trunks ? Then we will have to reduce it by $25 and pass the item.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend cannot give any explanation of the $15,000 ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is doubtless owing to the length of the session. My hon. friend is doubtless aware that these items are sent to us by the officers of the Senate and we can hardly do anything more than accept them. The Senate is rather sensitive about our inquiring about what it does with its leather trunks.

Mr. BERGERON. It is the amount required for contingencies. Considering that the Senate has sat about 15 days they should hardly want about $15,000 more.

Mr. FIELDING. Perhaps if they sat more frequently they would not want so much for contingencies.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is required for the last session because parliament sat into this fiscal year.

Mr. BERGERON. Did the Senate sit much more last year than this ?

Mr. FIELDING. The session was longer; whether the Senate sat or not is another question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much was the original amount ?

Mr. FIELDING. The amount voted for salaries and contingencies which, I presume, corresponds to the same item, was $75,576 in the main estimates.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I must say that I do not see any particular reason why they should not come any nearer to it than $15,000. The hon. Minister of Inland Revenue suggests that it may be due to the circumstances that the session of parliament extended into August but I do not see how that would affect this.

Mr. BRODEUR. Because I suppose last year the amount which was voted for the current year was $75,000. Of this amount they must have spent a certain sum for the two months or nearly two months in which we were in session during the present fiscal year and so of the sum appropriate for this fiscal year a certain amount has been taken for the payment of expenses incurred during the months of July and August 1904. I do not know whether it is because of that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In that case we would expect that the appropriation for the previous year would be very much cut down, that would be the logical result of that argument, but I have not heard of that. But they do not allow any appeal from this I suppose.

Mr. FIELDING. I believe there is no appeal.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Next year they may ask $150,000.

Mr. FIELDING. Such is our system. I have not the full particulars of the items for voters' lists with me.

Mr. BERGERON. I see here there is some new edition of an electoral atlas.

Mr. FIELDING. I shall state in general terms the object of this vote and then if any hon. members desire any further information the item may stand. Generally speaking the increased cost of the franchise lists is due to the large amount of work that had to be done and the King's Printer reports that the amount is not sufficient under the previous appropriation. The electoral atlas is a book published from time to time containing maps of every constitutency in Canada. As there has been some readjustment of the constituencies, a new edition is necessary, and this vote is for that purpose.

Mr. BERGERON. It will be distributed to members ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, as usual.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is that issued yet ?

Mr. FIELDING. No. It is in course of preparation. The other item is a general one owing to the larger amount of work caused by the printing of the voters' lists for the general election. I would like hon. gentlemen to intimate the points on which information is wanted, and I will have it when the item comes again.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The only point on which I would like information in connection with this is as to the preparation of the voters' list for the recent election in Edmonton. I made some inquiry with regard to this list from the King's Printer. I received an answer, the exact purport of which I forgot, but I could not very well understand what it meant. He said they were not strictly speaking voters' lists, but lists of electors, prepared, I think, for the information of the enumerators. I want to ask some questions with reference to that when the matters comes up again.

Mr. FIELDING. I will see that information and explanation on that point are prepared.

Further amount required for hydrographic surveys for the River St. Lawrence below Quebec and Pacific coast, $30,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was the amount originally voted, how was it expended, and why do you want this amount more ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There was no vote for this service, because it is a new service undertaken by the department because of the British government having withdrawn their service from both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. These surveys used to be made by the British government, with their own officers and steamers, and they notified us last year that they had ceased that service. Therefore we are obliged to undertake it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much did you have voted for it last year ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Last year $40,000 was voted for hydrographic surveys, but not for these. What was provided for was the lakes and part of the St. Lawrence. The upper part of the St. Lawrence is almost finished. Two months' work will complete the surveys between Montreal and Quebec, and Lake St. Louis will be finished this season. The surveys on Lake Superior and the other upper lakes will take two or three seasons. On the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast nothing has been done yet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I want to understand this. The hon. gentleman says the British government has abandoned the work which it was doing. What work was it doing, through whom was it doing it, and why does it abandon it ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The work that has been done by the British government went to a certain point of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, I think only as far as Belle Isle. So we have all the Atlantic coast to survey and to prepare charts for navigation. The present charts are quite unreliable in many respects. For instance, the chart of the River St. Lawrence was so unreliable that it was reported to the department for a couple of years that steamers had touched in the centre of the channel opposite Murray bay. Surveys were made, and for one season we could not discover anything, because the surveys were made not continuously but only occasionally. But towards the end of last season, after a thorough search we discovered a shoal about three-quarters of a mile long where there was only twenty feet of water at low tide. Fortunately the channel is about a mile wide at that point so that it was only once in a while that steamers would touch. Nobody knew anything about it ; it was not marked on the charts. This shows the importance of the service and the importance of having these charts prepared with great care. The British government have abandoned doing this work, as they have abandoned doing many things for Canada, because, they said, we have gone far enough, and this work belongs to Canada. The service falls on our shoulders, and we are obliged to take it up. This $30,000 will provide for the organization of the service until the 1st of July, including boats, provisions, and so on. Every member of the commission will appreciate the importance of having these surveys made with all possible diligence. There are two or three important lines on the Atlantic, especially the Canadian Pacific Railway line, and the navigation is developing very fast. In a couple of years there will probably be large steamers plying between Vancouver and Port Simpson, carrying provisions, materials, &c. There is such a deficiency of charts for the Pacific coast that when the boat which carried the expedition which visited Port Simpson and the North Pacific coast last fall ran on a rock which was never suspected. Fortunately, the captain of the government boat was very careful, and the boat not going very fast at the moment, there was no loss of life and no serious damage to the boat. These surveys are very important in the interest of navigation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How did the British government carry on their surveys ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. On the Pacific coast they rented a boat, an old one, but a very good one ; and they had engineers and all the necessary organization to take the soundings, and make a general survey of the bottom of the sea, showing the gulfs, bays, &c., around the coast. They did very good work, which will help us in carrying on our work ; but it will serve only as an indication. The work they have done on the Atlantic coast dates back forty or sixty years. That coast will all have to be resurveyed, and for that purpose we are going to use a boat which we used to have for the tidal service. This year we were short of a boat and we suspended the tidal surveys on the Atlantic coast. We will use the 'Gulnare' which will save the renting of another steamer, and we will try to execute that work regularly and properly. I took over the work last from the Department of Railways and the Department of Public Works. The survey between Montreal and Quebec is almost completed and the work is very nicely done. The charts are being engraved and will be distributed to mariners as is done in every other country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What portions of the coast are these charts for ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The charts which are being engraved are from Montreal to Quebec, except a small portion near Quebec which will be completed in about two months. Between Montreal and Kingston will be completed this summer. The work on the Great Lakes commenced two years ago is now well advanced, but it will take at least one year more before we can publish the charts.

Mr. BERGERON. By whom is this work done ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is done under the supervision of Mr. Stewart a highly qualified engineer who has been at the head of the department for the last ten or twelve years.

Mr. BERGERON. Is he an officer of the government ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes. He is a graduate of Kingston, and is aided by certain permanent officers as well as by temporary engineers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has he charge of the work on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes. Unfortunately one of our best young officers, Mr. Tyrwhitt, died a few days ago, and we must get some one to replace him. It is very peculiar and important work requiring engineers of high qualification.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do you propose to re-survey and re-chart the whole of the Atlantic coast ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. So much as concerns the navigation of the St. Lawrence. We do not propose to go further than Belle Isle ; we will take up what has not been done by the British government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand from the minister that the work done by the imperial government fifty years ago along the Atlantic coast required to be resurveyed. Do you include the southern coast of Nova Scotia, the Bay of Fundy, the entrace to St. John Harbour ; do you propose to resurvey and re-chart that ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, everything.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the Marconi station at the entrance to the Gulf in operation ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There are at present six stations in operation and they are rendering the most valuable service. The Glace Bay station was the first established in 1902, in order to test the system and now it is running perfectly. Six stations have been established since I came to the department at an average cost of $8,000 a station, and there are six more to be established.

Mr. BERGERON. Then a vessel coming up the gulf will be reported from station to station.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There will be a complete chain of stations until they get to the St. Lawrence.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the distance between each station ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The average distance is 200 miles and they communicate between themselves and the steamers.

Mr. BERGERON. Where will the other six stations be built ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. At Fame Point, Cape Race, Cape Ray, Heath Point, Point Amour, Cape Rich, Whittle Rocks. Of course the stations are not in a straight line because they are situated both on the Belle Isle route and on the Newfoundland route. When the other stations are erected both of the routes to the St. Lawrence will be fully equipped. I can say without boasting that when this station shall have been established, we will have a most perfect Marconi system.

Mr. BERGERON. Then these stations are not all in line ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No ; there is a map showing where they are established.

Mr. BERGERON. That might be laid on the table.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I will bring it down with pleasure.

Mr. BERGERON. Will my hon. friend please let us know how he is satisfied with last winter's experiments with the 'Montcalm' ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I can only give that information generally, and from memory. We are perfectly satisfied with the boat's work. It is acknowledged by every one connected with navigation that, with the severe winter, had it not been for the 'Montcalm' breaking the ice at Cape Rouge from early winter, the ice would not had left the channel until the 15th of May, on account of the vast accumulation. It will be remembered that the ice in the gulf delayed steamers for five or six days. The ice was so thick and solid that, had it not been for the work of the 'Montcalm,' the route would not have been cleared until the 10th of May. The 'Montcalm' kept the river clear of ice from Cape Rouge for two or three miles to the piers of the Quebec bridge. It did not prevent the ice from forming at certain points where the river is very narrow, but the keeping of the channel clear alone helped the departure of the ice so much that the 'Montcalm' herself was nearly caught in the spring movement. No accident took place, because the ice-shove was ahead of the steamer and she was following it. The boat has proved very solid and very effective in every way. I went myself with some of my officers and some people connected with navigation at different times to be present at the work while the steamer was breaking her way through the ice. The last time I was there there were several members of parliament from the west in the party, and they were really astonished at the work done. The boat broke a channel in ice that was twenty-five or thirty feet thick—ice that was stuck to the bottom in some places. I would not say that if I had not witnesses, members of parliament, who saw it as I did. The boat would break as much as 600 feet in a day over a width of 200 feet. Of course, this work was done at a time when the ebb-tide would carry down the ice. The effectiveness of the boat was interfered with by one thing that could not have well been foreseen. She was brought out from Scotland late in the season, arriving in Quebec about the beginning of December. She had two sets of blades. That is, she had two propellers, and she had six extra blades for her propellers. These blades were broken at different times, and, although we ordered a new set, only one set arrived in time to enable her to continue effective work. The day when the members of parliament were aboard she had only one complete propeller, the other one having only one blade. But even with this disadvantage she did the work I have mentioned. After she had got through this work she was ordered to go down and meet the steamers that were supposed to be kept back by the ice. She went down almost to Newfoundland, and there came face to face with an immense field of ice about ten miles long. The 'Montcalm' is fitted with the Marconi system. But, unfortunately, the boats that first arrived were not fitted wih the system, so she could not communicate with and could not give the help they expected from her. Therefore, she returned to Quebec. We wished also to send her down to Seven Islands, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, to make an experiment in maintaing navigation during the winter, but, owing to the circumstances I have explained, this could not be done. The other ice-breaker, the 'Champlain,' though a very much smaller boat, kept navigation open on the ferry route between Murray bay and St. Denis wharf throughout the winter, except for a few hours during particularly stormy days. Altogether our experiments show that navigation throughout the winter is perfectly feasible, even under the most unfavourable circumstances, because last winter was, as everybody knows, a season of extreme severity.

Mr. BERGERON. The 'Montcalm' was in service all winter ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, except for a few days when her propellers were being fitted with new blades.

Mr. PREFONTAINE.

Mr. BERGERON. How many has she in her crew, and what is the expense per day ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The crew numbers forty, and the expense is $150 a day.

Mr. BERGERON. What is done with the steamer in the summer ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. She is on the lighthouse service in the gulf.

Mr. BERGERON. And the minister intends to continue this steamer in this ice-breaking service next winter ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Steamboat inspection—to pay the widow of Douglas Stevens, late inspector of Dominion steamers and fog alarms, a gratuity equal to two months' salary, $250.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I must ask that this item be dropped, to be renewed in the supplementary estimates for 1905-6. There has been a mistake in a calculation, the amount necessary to cover two months' salary of this late officer being $283. The item will be struck out in the meantime.

Marine hospitals—further grant to St. John, New Brunswick, Fernhill cemetery, to provide for the putting in order and for the perpetual care of the seamen's lots, $1,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this something new ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Parliament voted $1,000 for a lot to be known as the 'Seamen's lot' in Fernhill cemetery. It is used for the interment of seamen dying in the marine hospital. The grant was insufficient, and the cemetery is in bad condition. We have made an arrangement with the authorities of the cemetery that this $1,000 will be paid, and they will for ever maintain the cemetery in good condition.

Post Office—compassionate allowance for the family of the late Mr. Patrick Callery, letter-carrier at Montreal, who was accidentally killed whilst on duty, January 25, 1905, the amount to be applied for the benefit of his widow and children in such manner as may be determined by the Treasury Board, $1,000.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General). Patrick Callery, letter-carrier at Montreal, was knocked down and run over by a horse and sleigh while returning home after work. The injuries he received resulted in his death about half an hour after the accident. Mr. Callery was appointed letter-carrier on the 19th of May, 1873. At the time of his death he was in his 61st year, and had been in the service 31 years and 7 months. During that time he was a contributor to the Civil Service Superannuation Fund. He left a widow and two children.

Mr. BERGERON. I know that case well, and I think the government never asked for a more commendable vote. He was an old servant and a very faithful one.

To complete payments for mail service for year ending June 30, 1905, $100,000.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. About $85,000 of this amount is for the ordinary land service, the increase being due to the general expansion of the service, the increased prices asked for nearly all contracts put up for tender. During the last calendar year 409 new post offices were opened, forty per cent of them in Manitoba, the Northwest Territories and British Columbia. Nearly all those new post offices necessitated new services. Of this amount $15,000 is required for railway mail service, the increase being due to the establishment of new services and greater frequency, placing postal cars on trains where baggage cars had been in use.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the amount of money voted in the main estimates last year ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. $2,561,700. We require about $100,000 more to complete the payments for the current year. It is entirely the same service, but we are expanding every day now.

To provide for the salary of A. W. Cairns, post office inspector, moved from Winnipeg to the Northwest Territories, at the rate of $2,000 a year from April 1, 1905, $500.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Mr. Cairns, who was assistant post office inspector at Winnipeg, has been appointed post office inspector in the Northwest Territories from the 1st of April last, at a salary of $2,000. That is the minimum salary of the appointment, and the amount of $500 is asked to provide for his salary for the balance of the current year. He has been in the service since March, 1882, and has been assistant post office inspector since the 1st of July, 1885.

Mr. BERGERON. When he was deputy inspector his salary was $1,500, I suppose ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. No matter what his salary was in some other office, if he is taken from that and put into another office, the vote made for the first office ceases. This is a vote to the office, not to the man. In his new appointment he is given $2,000 a year.

I wanted to lay upon the table some papers I promised to the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce). I told him I would do so, and I will do so now. But I am afraid I cannot do so, according to the rules of the House, until Mr. Speaker takes the chair.

Mr. BERGERON. They might be laid on the table by any member of the government when the House rises.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I will do it then.

Fisheries protection service—further amount required to provide new boilers and repairs to the hull of fishery protection cruiser 'Petrel,' $17,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The 'Petrel' was taken away from the service of the lakes and was replaced by the 'Vigilant.' The 'Petrel' was too slow a boat, because the American poachers got away from her, and she could not do the service that was necessary. We have sent her to New Brunswick where there was need of a boat for the service of the department. Before sending her down we had her inspected, and it was discovered that her hull was in bad condition, and that new boilers were required.

Mr. BERGERON. Where were these repairs made ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. At Polson's in Toronto, after tenders were asked. She has gone to New Brunswick now.

To pay honorarium to R. N. Venning, chief clerk of the fisheries, for special services in connection with the Russian seizures, as per Order in Council, December 28, 1904, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $500.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is this ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Mr. Venning is an old employee of the department, who has been sent out as a special officer in connection with investigations of this character. He was in Paris when the Behring Sea investigation took place and when these commissions have taken place during the last twenty years Mr. Venning has been sent out from the department. He is a very competent officer and we generaly allow him a certain amount.

Further amount required for salaries and disbursements of fishery inspectors, overseers and guardians, $20,000.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries if the government have given a license to any party or parties to fish in Moose Lake, or if any application has been received by the department for the exclusive privilege.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I think there has been an application received for fishing rights in Moose Lake but it has not been entertained.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. In other words the department do not mean to grant the application ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The reason I ask that is that I am informed that an application has been made and that the parties have stated that they are going to receive the exclusive privilege. I am glad to hear such a license is not to be granted. I might ask the hon. minister if he is in receipt of any protest from parties in regard to the closing of Lake Manitoba ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, I have received quite a number of protests against the closing of Lake Manitoba but after going into the question thoroughly I have considered that I acted rightly and in accordance with the wishes of the people in deciding that this lake should be closed to summer fishing for a few seasons.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What they complain of particularly is that there was no notice given to the smaller fishermen in advance. And that they have therefore suffered a hardship.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not think they could plead ignorance. The matter was before the department for quite a while. As far back as last fall there was an agitation to close the lake for summer fishing. There were petitions in favour of it and counter petitions. Of course, we did not know what position we would take, and it was not until January that I had an opportunity of taking up the question of considering it and deciding it on its merits. At that time, of course, we all supposed that the people round there would know about it. The only serious complaint we received was from a gentleman named Macauley, I think. I do not remember the name now. He complained that he had filled his ice house and was prepared to go on with fishing in the spring. We looked into that case, but we did not consider that the gentleman was justified in doing what he had done. He only had a one-year's license, because these licenses were issued every year, and a man with only a license for one year is scarcely justified in going to a large expense without inquiring whether the lake is going to be kept open or closed.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I understand that there were some protests received from citizens of Portage la Prairie. When I visited the province of Manitoba two or three weeks ago I heard that citizens of Portage la Prairie had sent in strong protests to the minister against the closing of the lake. It appears that there is a short line of railway from Portage la Prairie to this lake which is largely used for excursion purposes and as a resort for the people of Portage la Prairie; they intend deepening the harbour there, and I think the government were about to grant, if it is not already granted, a sum for dredging to be done for that purpose. They claim that if fishing is done away with it will practically render the harbour useless to them and will result very detrimentally to the citizens there as well as to this railway. That is the principal reason advanced, but besides that a great many people take issue with those who claim that it is necessary for the protection of the fish to have a close season. As to that point I am not in a position to judge. But many people who live in Portage la Prairie claim that there is no likelihood of the lake being depleted of fish by keeping it open at the present time.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I went thoroughly into the question. I do not say that I am an expert, but from the officials I gather that there was only one salvation for the lake and it was to close it to summer fishing for two or three years. The lake is being depleted very fast. If these gentlemen that my hon. friend mentions have gone into an enterprise which depends on this class of fishing in that lake during the summer we could not render them a better service than by closing it for two or three summers so as to put the lake in the condition it was in former years. It is in a very bad condition at the present time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why is it necessary to have this additional sum placed in the supplementary estimates? Why was it not placed in the original estimates?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is found that $85,000 for salaries is not adequate to meet the expenditure. In 1896 and 1897 the appropriation was reduced from $100,000 to $85,000. At the time negotiations were between the provinces of Ontario and Quebec and the Dominion government as to certain jurisdiction an amount was placed in the estimates without being in a position to determine as to the amount required. Last year a similar amount of $20,000 was placed in the supplementary estimates, bringing the total up to $105,000. Since 1896 it has been the practice to vote in the main estimates only $85,000 leaving always a further sum to be voted in the supplementary estimates. I think that is bad policy. We should ask for what is necessary and my intention in future is to ask for exactly the amount that is necessary and not leave any back account. We will place the right amount in the main estimates in the next financial year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should like to make an observation as to the work done by many of these overseers, although as I am informed, a great many of them do no work at all. These men are supposed to prevent poaching, but in a great many cases, as men who are familiar with the facts inform me, they really do nothing. They do not pretend to do anything. It is a mere sinecure from which they enjoy a small salary and travelling expenses. One of these overseers, for instance, simply takes his own horse and wagon, drives around and charges up his alleged travelling expenses. That is the explanation which was given to me in this House about three years ago. That is not desirable. There is work that these men ought to be doing throughout the country. The laws regarding the observance of the fishery regulations are not observed. Public opinion is against their observance in some localities.

The men who ought to be protecting the fisheries and enforcing the observance of the law are looking on, practically conniving and paying no attention to their duties, taking good care never to be on hand when the laws are being broken. Representations have been made to me from various parts of the maritime provinces in regard to this, and I think the minister should take the matter up and see that men are appointed who will, whether it be popular or not, enforce the law. One man in my late constituency of Halifax, a most excellent officer, who went about on all occasions in the performance of his duty and did his duty fearlessly and well was dismissed and after his dismissal offered to continue in office without any salary, travelling expenses or indemnity whatever, simply because he took an interest in the preservation of the fish. I am sure he was supported in the position he took by every one who knew him in the country and who had any interest whatever in the preservation of the law. However, he happened to be in the habit of voting for the Conservative candidate, and it was thought better to put him to one side, although he was an excellent and fearless officer and to appoint some one who simply shut his eyes and winked at violations of the law. In some localities in the maritime provinces, the law is being violated by the friends and neighbours of the officers, they know it is being violated and take no steps to prevent it. Public money paid out under these circumstances for this purpose is worse than absolutely wasted and I would like to know from the minister whether or not he has heard anything of these circumstances, whether he is cognizant of them. There is no doubt about the accuracy of the information. The whole administration of this law seems to be a farce. Men are paid a small salary and very considerable sums for supposed travelling expenses which simply means remuneration to them for the employment of their own horse and carriage. Then they wink at the violation of the law. I have not time for sport of this kind myself and I do not know these things personally, but I am told by men who take an interest in the matter that the law is openly violated. We should not proceed in that way, but either give up any appearance of attempting to enforce the law or put men in these positions at a reasonable salary who will see that the law is carried out. One or the other course ought to be adopted. I am sure the minister will agree.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I agree as to the breach of the law and regulation but we have such a vast territory that with all the good will in the world it is almost impossible under the present circumstances to have these regulations and laws followed up to the letter. I have had complaints and have tried as much as possible to remedy the complaints in every case. As regards the special case mentioned by the hon. gentleman I may tell him he may rest assured that I would never discharge a good officer for such a reason as he has mentioned.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I hope not; this was long before the hon. gentleman's time.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Good officers are too difficult to secure and maintain in office. When they do their duty I certainly would not countenance any complaint made against officers who would follow the letter of the law and be rather severe. If the hon. gentleman were in my place he would find it very difficult to have the regulations followed as they should be followed. People will try to evade the regulations. We have the lobster regulations which provide that lobsters of a certain size must not be taken. Well, unless we had an overseer or inspector on every fishing boat it is almost impossible to detect frauds or the offences that are committed. In order to avoid the taking of seed lobsters what had we to do last year? We made an experiment which has proved very satisfactory. We offered to establish ponds where the seed lobsters would be deposited and we would purchase them. We succeeded in that way last year in saving over 500,000 seed lobsters. Probably out of this 500,000, 250,000, a quarter of a million, would have been sacrificed. This goes to show how difficult it is to have these laws followed, but I am sure that the service is not worse, than it was before and I should think that it was better. We have tried to organize it on the best footing possible and I am not going to give up the work until I am satisfied that proper protection is given to such a great industry as our fisheries. If any suggestions are made as regards improvements in inspecting and better protecting the fisheries I am ready to accept them from whatever side they come; it makes no difference to me, I am ready to do what is in the public interest in this matter because I think there is no politics whatever, it is purely and simply a question of public interest that is at stake.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. One association in the maritime provinces, I think, has made a suggestion to the minister that if he would accept their recommendation with respect to the appointment of an overseer they would undertake to assist in every way in the enforcement of the law, and they believe the law can be enforced. The difficulty is that men are appointed in that particular locality who do not pretend to attempt to enforce the law but simply regard the appointment as a mere sinecure bringing them $25, $50 or $100 a year and who make no effort whatever, as every one knows, to enforce the law. These people who are interested in the presenvation of the fish say that if the minister will accept their recommendation they will endeavour to secure and recommend a fearless man who could be expected to carry out what he undertakes and if such a man is selected all the members of this association interested as they are in the preservation of the fisheries will join and give their support to that man and in that way certainly enforce the law very much better than it is enforced at present.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not know of the organization to which the hon. gentleman alludes, but I know of an organization in New Brunswick from whom I have accepted all suggestions of that kind willingly and with the greatest pleasure and I have acted upon them. There is a great complaint of some people who do not want these rules to be applied as they should be applied, and if such an association puts itself into communication with the department I am quite sure they will accept the suggestion. I think they have already done so. If not, I shall be glad to give the name of the president or some of the officers to the hon. gentleman or some of his officials.

Further amount required for the building and maintenance of fish-breeding establishments, $10,000.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I believe the hon. minister informed the House some time ago that it was his intention to establish more fish hatcheries on lake Winnipeg. The hon. gentleman, I believe, was in receipt of a board of trade resolution or a series of resolutions from the town of Selkirk some time in the early part of this year, in which they complained of the manner in which the hatchery at the town of Selkirk was being operated, and also made some suggestions in regard to increasing the hatcheries on that lake. One of the clauses of the resolution reads :

The said hatchery has never hitherto been made use of to more than a small fraction of its capacity, due chiefly to the imperfect means used for procuring the whitefish ova, past experience having shown that attempts to procure ova for this hatchery by means of gill nets have been almost if not absolutely failures, and it is desirable to make use of some better and more certain method of procuring the said ova.

They go on to make further suggestions : First, that the hatchery at Selkirk be operated to its full capacity, secondly, that additional hatcheries be established at Berin's river or Big Black river or at some other convenient location on the east shore of Lake Winnipeg ; and, third, that a full equipment of pound-nets be provided to procure an ample quantity of whitefish was to supply the hatcheries to their fullest capacity. I would ask the hon. minister if he has responded to this resolution by establishing additional hatcheries, improving the method of securing the ova, and making arrangements to operate the hatchery at Selkirk at its fullest capacity ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I may say that I sent out Mr. Cunningham, the inspector, to Manitoba and British Columbia during the last few months. He returned about a month ago, and has made certain recommendations in the sense which the hon. gentleman has mentioned. He has recommended the establishment of another hatchery in the lakes of Manitoba, besides the enlargement of the one at Selkirk. I think all these matters will be settled in time. Of course, I cannot go faster than the money is voted. I have exceeded the vote of last year by $10,000 owing to some pressing work in British Columbia, which was done so quickly that the money is due before the 1st of July, and it gives my officer a chance of going elsewhere. I am perfectly alive to the situation in the west as regards improvements in hatcheries, and if I had the money available, I would give speedy satisfaction to the people there.

Further amount required to pay persons employed in the Department of Marine and Fisheries for services in connection with the distribution of the fishing bounty, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $600.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the meaning of this ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Every year there is a certain amount voted to pay those who make out the cheques for the distribution of the fishing bounty. It is never certain whether the expenditure will exceed the amount voted. This year it exceeded the amount by $600. There are about thirty girls employed doing this work in the winter.

Lighthouse and coast service—further amount required for maintenance and repairs to lighthouses, $75,000.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I need not say that it is the desire of the department to efficiently maintain these aids to navigation. The appropriations which have been granted in the past have not been entirely sufficient, owing to the fact of the rapid increase in the number of aids to navigation, and the further fact that many of the lighthouses were without the required repairs. An additional amount is asked to place the system in an efficient state of repair, and when granted the ordinary vote should be sufficient to maintain it in proper shape. The department has never been able to catch up with the repairs which have been required, and it is deemed in the interests of the service to take steps at once to carry these out and to bring the different lighthouses up to a state of efficiency. In order to avoid as much as possible the heavy repairs which have been necessitated in the past, the department is more and more building permanent piers of steel and concrete rather than structures of wood as formerly. The first cost of these is of course larger, but money is saved in the greater length of life. It is desired to minimize as much as possible the maintenance vote, and, as intimated above, the department is taking every possible step to carry this out. The introduction of steel skeleton towers has been a feature in recent construction by the department and the substitution of concrete piers for aids formerly built of timber. The total number of light stations, lightships, and fog alarms in the Dominion on June 30, 1904, was 796 and lights shown 9,996; the number of steam whistles, fog horns, bells and guns, 99; the number of lighthouses, 783. The increase in the number of aids to navigation in recent years rendered it desirable to increase the facilities for their proper inspection and operation. The large increase in the tonnage and size of the vessels on the great lakes necessitates a closer supervision and more frequent inspection than has obtained heretofore. Also the extended coast line of Canada, rivers, harbours and other navigable waters, require a large number of buoys. Annually the number of buoys have been increased, but in the past year the increase has been larger than in any previous year, causing a correspondingly larger expenditure. The cost of the buoy service alone last year, which was charged to maintenance, was $125,000. I beg to refer you to the report of the department, page 3, which gives an interesting report of the lighthouse service. A large number of lighthouses were built soon after confederation and extensive repairs are now required in order to put them in good condition. A number are in such shape that practically new towers will require to be built, and, as it is important that the lighthouses should be kept up to the highest standard, this cannot be accomplished without the expenditure of money. I am personnally aware of the representations that were made in years gone by as regards this service. I remember that when I belonged to the Board of Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, delegations came year after year asking for improvements in this respect. At that time the steamers navigating the St. Lawrence were not at all what they are now; the aids to navigation which were sufficient ten years ago have now become obsolete; and not only have they to be replaced as rapidly as possible but more quickly than we can do it, because the steamers are increasing in size in greater proportion than our improvements. Under these circumstances, I think this is money well spent in the interests of the country, and it will yield its return in proper time. I think everybody is convinced of the necessity of these improvements.

Mr. BARKER. The minister has been addressing himself, I think, to several of the sub-items. As regards the vote for the maintenance and repairs of lighthouses, will he tell us what the previous amount was that was voted for that purpose for the year 1904-5.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. $500,000.

Mr. BARKER. It would be convenient if the amount voted in the main estimates for a particular service were put in a separate column alongside each supplementary item. It is most extraordinary that in a well managed department there should be $75,000 out in the estimate of money required for a year's repairs. This is not a question of building additional lighthouses; it is simply to repair existing structures.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is impossible to say in advance how much it will cost to keep these aids to navigation in proper condition for you never can know what damage will be done by ice and so on. If we were to allow three months of fine weather to elapse without doing necessary repairs the steamship companies would complain bitterly and with reason that the country was not doing its duty in this respect. We have decided to maintain these aids to navigation in the best possible condition in order to satisfy the shipping federation. It might be interesting to give the committee information as regards the beneficial effect of these improvements on the commerce and navigation of the St. Lawrence route. I have information here which it is just as well should not be made public with reference to that matter, but people generally do not know that the St. Lawrence route is a more expensive route than the route to the Atlantic ports of the United States. I have a letter from Sir George E. Drummond, who imports large cargoes of raw sugar every year. Every one admits the patriotism of Sir George Drummond, and we know that he would rather take his trade to the St. Lawrence than elsewhere, but sometimes as a matter of business and under certain circumstances he is obliged to import via Boston and Portland where the cost is from 25 to 30 per cent lower than via the St. Lawrence. I do not wish to dwell on this or to go into exact details which might be detrimental to the St. Lawrence route, but it is well known to all business men that the insurance rates to the St. Lawrence are from 25 to 50 per cent higher than to Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Newport News, Norfolk and other United States ports. Even with the comparatively small work we have done in the last few years, I am glad to say that last year the insurance rates were reduced by 20 per cent on first-class risks and that reduction is of great advantage to Canadian trade. Mr. R. Wilson-Smith, of Montreal, who publishes a financial journal estimates that the total amount of marine insurance on the St. Lawrence route per year is $400,000,000, hull and cargo included, and the premium paid on that is $3,500,000 no difference being made between Montreal and Quebec. The rates on the St. Lawrence are from 35 to 50 per cent higher according to the season than the rates to United States Atlantic ports. The Allan Line, Dominion Line, Reford steamers, and Canadan Pacific Railway line are all rated as first class; the Manchester and Furness lines, second class, and tramp and outside steamers are included in the third class. The reduction of 20 per cent in the rate made in 1904 is quite a gain to the trade of the country as you will see by estimating it on the total premium paid. If we had the St. Lawrence route in such condition that it would compare with any of these United States ports I have mentioned in the rarity of accidents, and if the rates were reduced 30 per cent of 50 per cent in all—the 50 per cent excess rate only applies to tramp boats and steamers of the third class—the fifty per cent reduction would mean for one season of navigation $1,500,000 according to these figures given to me by this expert, and thus the saving effected in five years after the improved system had been completed would represent a very enormous sum of money indeed.

The boards of trade of Quebec, Montreal, Halifax and St. John have all been making representations to the department, and not only have they been making representations, but they have approved of what we have done. I will not repeat here the resolutions of congratulation to the department and the government that have been passed by these bodies. This is certainly the most important question that comes before parliament. If we spend a great deal of money in establishing these Marconi stations, in putting in sub-marine bells and fog alarm systems, in trebling or quadrupling the capacity of the lights and adding to their number—if we do all we can to make accidents impossible, unless pilots or masters will run their boats ashore for the fun of it or through gross negligence, it stands to reason that the whole country will benefit. This is not a question of politics or of government policy, as between one party or another, for everybody agrees on this subject. The conditions must be met, and met as rapidly as possible. And even with our greatest progress, we shall not be able to keep up with the increased size of the steamers on the route. We have already two immense steamers, the 'Virginian' and the 'Victorian.' The Canadian Pacific Railway has given a contract for two others of even larger size. The tendency is constantly to increase the size of vessels. Let us give the greatest protection to them that we can. Money spent in that way will receive the approbation of every one, even of those who are not interested in navigation. This is not a new idea by any means. Before I had the honour of occupying my present position I was connected with navigation in an indirect way as harbour commissioner of Montreal for four years. I took a great interest in those matters and mixed with people connected with navigation, and I knew that whatever was wisely done to improve the navigation on this route would receive the approval of business men, whether they are directly connected with navigation or not.

Mr. BARKER. I did not raise any question as to additional aids to navigation. I was not discussing that, nor did I expect the minister to explain it. The item concerning which I asked an explanation was the first item—maintenance and repairs of existing lighthouses. The hon. gentleman received last year a grant of $500,000 for the year's repairs. Apparently he has expended $575,000. That was money required to repair existing structures. With any proper care on the part of the officers he ought to have been able to judge more closely than he seems able to do what he needed for repairs, for $575,000 is a considerable sum to expend in one year for repairs beyond what he called for originally.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This is for maintenance also.

Mr. BARKER. Maintenance is a part of repairs. This is for maintaining existing buildings, I take it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No; maintenance includes supplies for the different services.

Mr. BARKER. Supplies in the way of oil, and so on?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. Then that seems to be rather worse. I suppose the department ought to know very closely how much will be required for supplies for existing lighthouses for the year. There seems less excuse for being $75,000 out than if repairs were the only item. I simply point out that there must be a great deal of looseness in the estimates, when the hon. minister is $75,000 out in an item of this kind. I think it requires some explanation of how the error was made. There would have been no objection, I take it, last year to grant the hon. gentleman $575,000 or $600,000 if he had said he needed it. But he told us he only wanted $500,000, and that was given. Now, he has spent $75,000 more than the House authorized.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. There is an item which the hon. gentleman loses sight of. I made allusion to it in the beginning of my remarks, but I suppose that I did not make myself clear. Take, for instance, the buoys. Some of these cost a good deal of money, and they are sometimes broken, destroyed, or even carried away by the ice. Sometimes we are obliged to abandon some of these aids to navigation, because it is too late to take them away. There is a tendency, as hon. gentlemen are well aware, to keep navigation open as late as possible in the fall, and so it often happens that it is too late to recover the property.

Mr. BARKER. Is not that sort of thing covered in the third item ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No ; that was for a special locality, as I will explain in a moment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I cannot understand is why it is that, within a month of the close of the fiscal year, the hon. minister should be asking for $581,810 for the construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation. Is it possible to expend all that sum within five weeks ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I may say that the progamme of improvements laid out by the department for the present fiscal year has been carried out much more quickly than we had reason to anticipate when the vote for 1904-5 was passed last session, and the department was then under the necessity of suspending urgent improvements required for the great national waterway or carrying out the same and obtaining the necessary allowance in these supplementary estimates. I have here a number of resolutions from the Shipping Federation of Montreal and the Montreal Board of Trade, in which the efforts which the department has made are approved, and stress is laid on the necessity of continuing the same. I may say that the programme is as follows :

1st. To improve our existing fog-alarms, and bring them up to as high a standard as any in the world.

2nd. To improve the coast lights in the Gulf and River St. Lawrence and on the Atlantic sea-board by the substitution of modern dioptric quick-flashing apparatus for the inferior apparatus installed.

3rd. To improve our buoyage system by the substitution of lighted for non-lighted buoys, on the principle that if a buoy is required for day navigation, a lighted buoy is required for service at night. On the sea coast it is our endeavour to light ' outside the danger,' which is the proper scientific principle.

4th. To improve the pilotage system of the Dominion.

5th. To install Marconi and submarine signal systems, at the same time that we are carrying out and bringing up our existing aids to navigation to a high standard second to none in the world, we are endeavouring to meet the needs of the growing trade of the country by building new lighthouses, new fog alarms, and placing more buoys.

This amount, $581,500, is in the way of being spent by 1st July and will complete the work that has been undertaken. It is impossible in advance to say what the reconstruction of a lighthouse will cost. Some of them are in very remote places, and we have taken in hand those that are most remote, those in the gulf first. Some of them which were estimated to cost $5,000 have cost as much as $11,000, when done by days work, and under great difficulty. I have here a list of those improvements which are being executed, and which will be finished by the 1st of July, at various points in Quebec, Nova Scotia and Ontario, amounting to $65,000, things that have to be completed. It is no use to bring back our men and leave this work half finished. All these things have to be done in order to satisfy the shipping people. Although all these expenditures were not authorized, they were all contemplated, so there is no misrepresentation. The work has been done, it is there and it renders it possible for navigation to open a little earlier than would have been the case if we had suspended the work.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand that this $581,500 has been an over expenditure ; and that is additional to the amount we voted last year.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It was contemplated that this amount would have been voted sooner. When we brought in the main estimates we did not suppose that we should go so far in the season with the expenditure, or that we should have to ask for supplementaries now. As I have explained, expenditure has gone on faster than we anticipated, and we did not want to lose time in making these improvements. They had to be made, these works undertaken had to be completed. I think we have followed a good policy in executing these works as we have done. I must say that we have been asked to do a great deal more than we have done, and we are asked to do a great deal more in future, but that which has been done will remain of permanent advantage, and will be of great benefit to the marine interest.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the amount that was voted last year ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. $852,000.

Mr. LENNOX. And we have to expend in addition $581,500.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Now the minister has a very charming manner, and it is very hard to complain when he fails to answer exactly the questions that are put to him. He has been asked twice at least whether we are to expend this $581,000, or whether it has already been expended ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It has been partly expended, about fifty per cent has been expended.

Mr. LENNOX. That is what we wanted to know. Last year we voted $852,000, and now we are asked to vote an additional $581,000. Already, without asking the leave of parliament, one-half of that amount at least has been expended. Now we are not inquiring whether there has been a wise expenditure; but surely if we are to have parliamentary government at all, if we are to adhere to the system of voting moneys before they are expended, we must come a little closer to that condition of things than we are in the minister's estimates. I do not see how the minister can justify taking first $800,000, and then expending an additional $581,000 in advance within the current year. He should know, he should anticipate the requirements, and know how much the country can afford to expend upon this matter much more closely than he has done. I venture to say it is not a good system of parliamentary government for the minister to allow this condition of things to arise, it is not a thing that ought to be tolerated without very severe comment by an opposition. It is an extraordinary request to ask parliament to sanction an expenditure of public money if we are to have a great deal more than one-half the original amount, probably seventy-five per cent, added to the previous vote. I think the minister will see himself, the necessity of adopting a different system in the future. Let him take parliament into his confidence, let us understand what is contemplated, because it is very difficult to believe that the minister could not have foreseen a great deal of this expenditure a year ago. We want the hon. minister to promise to do better in future.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They shoved me into this a little against my will. I understand that under ordinary circumstances this is not the policy that should be followed, but I do not know how in this case it would have been possible to have done otherwise. If we had not gone on with this expenditure of $581,000 it might have been increased to $700,000 or $800,000 next summer on account of suspending the work and beginning it over again.

To provide for repairs to lighthouse, steamer 'Scout' and for expenses on buoy service, $21,000.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries would kindly give us some information in regard to what the government propose to do in improving the communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. I understand that a delegation has waited on the government within the last few days and another delegation was here about a month previously. I would like to know if it is proposed to add a third steamer in order to test if it is possible to fulfil the terms of confederation by building a new and more powerful steamer than they have provided at the present time and also if surveys are to be made this summer in regard to a tunnel.

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I understand that at the present moment there is a delegation here making representations to the government on this question. The question as presented to these gentlemen involves an expenditure of about $10,000,000 if the scheme of the tunnel were to be accepted. As regards a temporary scheme or the addition of another boat it will be considered at the same time as the other question. I am not in a position as one of the members of the cabinet to make any declaration today on this matter. There is no doubt, if anything can be done to improve the service, the disposition of the government is to do it.

Mr. A. MARTIN. In 1900 the sum of $30,000 a year was granted in perpetuity in the province for the non-fulfilment of the terms of confederation. Perhaps the hon. minister can tell us whether any claim has been made by this delegation for the period between 1900 and the present time and what the government propose to do in regard to it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The matter is under consideration and I am not in a position to make a declaration now.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Finance. I asked for the papers in regard to this matter some time ago and it was promised that they would be brought down. The hon. Minister of Finance made a certain statement in this House. That statement is contradicted by members of the local government who are in sympathy with the minister and with the government which is here at the present time. I asked for the correspondence which has not been brought down and I would like to know if I will get it in the near future.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not remember if my hon. friend's motion for the papers was passed or not. But if the papers are brought down I think they will prove the accuracy of what I said. As far as the claims made by the local government are concerned I must do these gentlemen the justice of saying that they are claiming everything in sight. There has been no lack of claim on their part. If everything is not arranged as they wish it will not be from any want of claiming on their part.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Perhaps the hon. minister has raised their expectations a little too high previous to some election or something of that kind, and I suppose that if he has done that he will be responsible for it, but at any rate the province is only claiming what every one admits is fair and equitable. But the papers, I think, will settle the matter, and it is very important while these delegates are here that we should have these papers. I asked for them over a month ago. The statement made by the hon. Minister of Finance is completely contradicted by members of the local government and by the premier of the province. If the hon. minister is correct then the leading member of the delegation that waited on the government a few days ago is incorrect in the statement which he made in the legislature.

Mr. FIELDING. My statement I do not think is contradicted because it was made on the basis of an Act of this parliament and the Act speaks for itself. That cannot be contradicted, the document is there and I do not think it is open to debate. Did the hon. gentleman's motion for papers pass the House?

Mr. A. MARTIN. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. If the motion has passed and the papers have not been brought down I will make it my business to inquire because if they have not been brought down they ought to be brought down.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Would it be possible for the hon. Minister of Finance to say whether a third boat is to be provided for this year and placed on the route? Of course it is all very nice now, but another winter is coming and in view of our experience last year and many others, I hope the government will not leave it to the last minute but will provide the necessary amount without delay.

Mr. FIELDING. That is one of the matters which the delegation has pressed upon the government and it is now under the consideration of council. If it is to be dealt with it will have to be in the supplementary estimates for the coming year which have not yet been laid before the House.

To pay expenses incurred in extending navigation till December 15, 1904, maintaining all necessary lights and fog alarms in operation, keeping the harbours at Fort William and Port Arthur open, removing keepers after the above date, $15,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was this attempt successful?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Very successful. The quantity of wheat which was in store at Port Arthur and Fort William was larger by many millions of bushels than at the close of navigation in the previous year and by keeping navigation open in that way the grain people interested in the transportation of grain caught up to the previous year.

Mr. LENNOX. When was this first thought of? Is it a matter that can be anticipated, or has it to be provided for by a supplementary vote every year?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It depends on the season. In some seasons navigation closes earlier than in others, but last year it closed earlier than in the former season.

Mr. LENNOX. There is a certain time at which navigation closes and this was carried on after the ordinary time?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes, on account of the shortness of storage at Fort William.

Mr. LENNOX. Therefore, it is a thing that has to be thought of from time to time as necessity arises?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

THESSALON, ONT., POSTMASTER.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM MULOCK (Postmaster General) moved for leave to lay on the table of the House certain papers connected with the affairs of the Thessalon post office. He said: In connection with this motion, I would crave the privilege of the House to make a few very brief observations. When this matter was before the House some days ago I had not the papers before me, and was not aware they would be referred to by the hon. gentleman who made the motion. I could, therefore, speak only in general terms. Since then I have perused these papers, and would state precisely my connection with the matter and the circumstances under which I acted. In May, 1904, in the ordinary course of my duties, I found upon my table the report of the inspector for that month reporting irregularities at the Thessalon post office. I considered the statements sufficient to warrant an order for the dismissal of the postmaster, and so directed; and, in the ordinary course, the report, with my authority or direction upon it, went out to the department to be treated in the ordinary way. One or two communications came to the office during that interval. One is a letter from the postmaster himself, wherein he explains that the shortage was not caused by himself, but by his assistant. Another communication was a private communication from the daughter of the postmaster, wherein she herself states that she is responsible for the trouble that had been brought upon her father. While the matter remained in that position, the postmaster having resigned and the present member for Algoma having been called upon to make a recommendation of a successor, he did not do so, having his reasons for it, doubtless, one of them being, as he says in one letter to me, that he did not wish to have to fill the vacancy on the eve of a general election. That seems to be his idea, but he had no acquiescence or authority from the department to do more than make his nomination. The matter did not come before me in any way until in the following month of February of this year. Then, on the opening of this parliament, the member for East Algoma stated to me that I had reached an unjust decision in dismissing the postmaster, and asked me to review the circumstances. I called upon the department to lay before me all the papers, and they then laid before me some papers, and then, for the first time, I had before me the report of the month of April from the same inspector. The report upon which I acted was the report of May, 1904. In that report the inspector threw the responsibility upon the postmaster, but in the report for April, which then, for the first time, was laid before me, the inspector did not throw responsibility upon the postmaster. In the report of April the inspector found a shortage of some $500, and that forms part of the shortage no doubt that he again referred to in May. But in dealing with the shortage in April the inspector, referring to the postmaster, said :

He admitted that heretofore he had entrusted the verifying of the stamps and the postal notes wholly to his daughter and accepted the figures she gave him as correct. His supervision of the accounts being chiefly in seeing that the debit and credit accounts were correctly made up and the remittances sent to the bank as required by the regulations.

Further on, he again says, speaking of the whole matter :

I observed when in Thessalon that several members of the postmaster's family are allowed access to the office and there is not the care taken of the office that I considered necessary at an office like Thessalon. I am satisfied the postmaster's statement is absolutely correct, and that he has never used any post office funds and there is no reason to believe the daughter has done so either.

I say this report of the month of April, dealing with part of the shortage, inasmuch as it did not throw any moral blame on the officers, was put on the files in the ordinary way ; I suppose the authorities of the department not considering it important, and it was not called to my attention. Whatever be the reason, that report was not before me until I called for all the papers connected with the history of this affair, and in February last this report came to me, and when I found that the inspector, the same officer, in the month of April, in dealing with part of this shortage, had stated :

I am satisfied that the postmaster's statement is absolutely correct and that he never used any post office funds and there is no reason to believe the daughter has done so either.

I felt I could not accept his judgment in a case of this kind, and accordingly I gave the postmaster the benefit of whatever doubt there was and directed his re-instatement. In the next report of May, 1904, he added that the daughter was in feeble health and suffering from some internal malady that was likely to involve some serious operation. All those circumstances weighed with me, and when I reviewed the case in February of this year I felt no good purpose would be served, and I did not think public opinion would call upon me to give further publicity to the affair, and I felt a desire to throw a veil of charity over what I supposed to be some shortage or infirmity on the part of the officer really responsible, and for that reason I did not desire to give publicity to the circumstances, inasmuch as the postmaster himself had made good the shortage, and, so far as I knew, had borne an unblemished character, was a man in good standing, and had been for over twenty years in the service of the government, and there never had been a charge of anything against him during his long period as a trustee of public funds. Whether I was justified or not in fact, I had ample precedent for it. If I were to enumerate to this House the many instances that I find on record wherein my predecessors—not one minister alone, but going back for years, many ministers, have taken a charitable view of cases presenting features which, on the surface, would call for apparently the severest treatment—I say if I were to recite to this House instances of this kind, it would be found that I was not the first Postmaster General that had exercised a discretion of this nature in favour of the persons in office.

I would be perfectly willing, if any one desired, to discuss the record of previous ministers. If it was considered just to postmasters to have been forgiven by previous ministers, I think I would have more than justification for what I have done in this particular case. I would not consider it a justification. Each case must be considered on its merits, and no person can sit in judgment satisfactorily upon another who in cases of this kind exercises a discretion which may at the time seem to him right, but which may perhaps not stand the absolute criticism of those who demand nothing but hard and harsh justice. Accordingly I recommended the reinstatement of this postmaster. He told me first of all in a letter marked confidential that the fault lay with his daughter, and the daughter said that the fault lay with herself. It may have been true ; I do not know whether it was or not. The inspector who in one month declared the postmaster guilty, had said in the previous month that he had not touched those funds. The hon. leader of the opposition thought there should be an inquiry. Perhaps he was right. I am not prepared to challenge the correctness of that view. I would not have laid these papers on the table but that the discussions which took place practically defeated the object I had when I reinstated the postmaster and did not direct any further inquiry. I thought that the trouble was in that family, and that there was no good purpose to be served after the public funds were restored, by my taking proceedings to find out whether or not the daughter was really the guilty party. Accordingly the matter rested as it did, and but for the publicity apparently given to the action of either the daughter or the father, I would not even now have taken the course which I have taken. But since my object was defeated by the discussion in this House, I decided that I would then do what the leader of the opposition said ought to have been done at an earlier date, and I directed that the matter be inquired into by the chief superintendent of the Post Office Department, Mr. Ross, and some other inspector along with him. Mr. Ross is at present in Winnipeg, and on his way back from Winnipeg he will with some other inspector make an investigation, and see where the fault lay.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE. Mr. Speaker, I was desirous of further discussing this matter with the hon. gentleman before the House, and this morning gave him notice of my intention to mention the matter in the House this afternoon. But it stood over, and I had not any idea that the hon. gentleman would bring the matter up at this late hour of the night. I would ask whether it would be possible to leave the matter open for discussion at some subsequent time ? I cannot reconcile, so far as I have heard them, the remarks which the hon. gentleman has made and the explanations which he has tendered, with the facts as they exist to my knowledge out of the reports on file and in the reports on file; and the hon. gentleman's former statements and some of the statements he has made to-night are absolutely irreconcilable. If what remarks I have to offer to the House have to be made now, it will be at some considerable inconvenience ; and I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that an arrangement be made so that this matter, which I am anxious indeed to lay before the House, can be fully discussed later on upon the papers which are brought down. While on my feet, I wish to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that he has not brought down all the papers on the file. I have looked over the papers which he has brought down, and there are a number of very important letters which are not among them. There are memoranda having a very important bearing upon the financial transactions involved, which are on the file and in respect of which no privilege can be claimed, but which the hon. gentleman has not brought down ; and there are specific documents which I asked for in the House, and of which I gave the Prime Minister a memorandum, none of which are included in the return. I refer to the very important documents called salary warrants, which must show, and I think do show, that no excuse can be made such as is offered now, that the postmaster thought he was dealing with funds due to him out of salary warrants. The statement also, for which I asked, and of which I gave a memorandum to the Prime Minister, as to the amount paid to the postmaster for six months preceding the 19th of May, 1904, is not brought down. Then I would ask that an opportunity be afforded me of further mentioning this matter when all the papers are down and when the hon. the Postmaster General is in his place ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman will have every opportunity to discuss any question affecting the public service on any day that a motion is made to go into Committee of Supply. He cannot be deprived of that right. As to the hon. gentleman's statement that I have made some statements which vary from the papers produced, if he will be good enough to state what he refers to, I might address myself to that point.

Mr. BOYCE. I was hoping that the hon. gentleman would have brought down all the papers, so that the discussion could have been directed to the subject with all the papers before the House. It will be futile for me to continue the discussion now, with only probably one-half the papers before the House. I am quite ready to discuss the matter with the papers that have been brought down. I think possibly I can point out to the hon. gentleman some defects or inconsistencies in the statements which he has made now as contrasted with those which he made when the matter was first mentioned in the House. But I should like to have an opportunity of mentioning the matter later on when the hon. gentleman is in his place in the House.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The hon. gentleman knows quite well that there will not possibly be an opportunity of discussing the matter again for some time when I shall be here.

Mr. BOYCE. Will the hon. gentleman not be here on Tuesday ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. No, I am leaving town to-morrow night. I may be in town again next week, but I am not sure of my movements after to-day. I am not aware of any papers on file which have not been brought down. I did not arrange or review the papers. The instructions were to produce the papers, and I am surprised if any of the papers on file are not produced. I do not claim any privilege ; on the contrary, I am most pleased to furnish any papers connected with the matter, and therefore I am surprised to hear that any papers having any bearing on the subject are not brought down. The other day the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) stated that some payments were made to the postmaster after his dismissal. On that point he had superior knowledge, because he had been examining the papers with a view to discussing them and I had not seen them for many months. I said in a general way that I thought it impossible that moneys had been paid to the postmaster after he ceased to render service. I asked the secretary of the department to make an explanation and I found that salary warrants had been issued until some day in August. The explanation of the secretary is among the papers, and I thought it was very fair.

Mr. BOYCE. That is the explanation of three days ago.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Yes, I asked for the explanation after the discussion. The transaction passed out of my hands when I directed the dismissal, and the subsequent proceedings whether regular or not were departmental, and the departmental explanation has been placed on the file. Whether it is satisfactory to the hon. gentleman or not it is the explanation, and it is no doubt true as well. If there are any papers on file that should be brought down and are not brought down I shall call the attention of my deputy to it to-morrow. As to future discussion the House can have an opportunity every day that the House is moved into Committee of Supply. The hon. gentleman did mention he would bring the question up to-day and I remained here until five minutes to four, but as the hon. gentleman is aware we had a very important witness from England before the Telephone Committee, and I crossed the floor and told the hon. gentleman that I desired to be present as chairman. The hon. gentleman was quite agreeable to that. I would prefer going on with the matter in Committee of Supply, but it did not occur to me at the time that I could not move to lay the papers on the table when the House was in committee, and therefore I mentioned in committee that I would wait till the speaker was in the chair; I did not observe my hon. friend in the House at the time.

Mr. BOYCE. Did the hon. gentleman not get a memorandum from the Prime Minister as to further documents?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The Prime Minister handed me a memorandum and I gave it to my secretary who I am sorry to say is very seriously ill; he has not been in the department for the last few days, and I am afraid he will be absent for many days, which perhaps may account for any slip that may have occurred. I did not look at the memorandum what was in it.

Mr. BOYCE. It was a memo. asking that there be added to the papers to be brought down, the salary warrants for six months preceding the 19th of May and a statement of the amounts paid to the postmaster for the six months preceding that date, and up to the time he ceased to be paid by the government.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. There can be no possible objection to the production of such papers. I am afraid to charge my memory with what the hon. gentleman has said, but if he will give me a memorandum I will be responsible to see that these papers are added.

Mr. BOYCE. With regard to the other papers, if the hon. gentleman reads the report of the last discussion in 'Hansard,' he will see that the papers now brought down must be defective because papers were referred to by their date on that occasion which are entirely omitted.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman should go over the file carefully and send to the department a list of the papers which he thinks or knows to be in existence, or which may be on file, and we will try to meet his wishes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that will be quite satisfactory, and as the Postmaster General says, the matter can be brought up on any day when the House is moved into Committee of Supply? It is a pity the Postmaster General did not have an investigation made before the appointment as he now proposes. It would strike me that I would hardly be prepared to correct the report of May by the report of April; I would rather be inclined to correct the report of April by the subsequent and fuller report of May.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. It is very easy to be wise afterwards.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Further than that, so far as putting the blame on the daughter is concerned, if there is any one consideration in the whole affair that would incline me not to reappoint the father it is the very fact that he endeavours to cast the blame of this upon his own daughter, or upon some one who stands in the relation of daughter to him. That appeals to the Postmaster General in a different way. It would be the last reason in the world why I should reappoint that man, and I do not think I will change my mind after reading the papers. However, we may look at these things from different standpoints.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What government business will be taken up on Monday?

Mr. FIELDING. We will proceed in supply and I would like if possible to dispose of the supplementary estimates. The largest of the items are in the Public Works Department, and I hope with the assistance of the deputy minister to be able to give the House all the information necessary so that we may get a supply Bill through as early as possible.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 29, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

Mr. MORIN asked :

Who recommended a post office to be opened at St. Abdon, in the county of Dorchester, Quebec ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Postmaster General). The post office at St. Abdon was opened by the Postmaster General on recommendations which he considered sufficient to induce him to do so.

DISMISSAL OF POLICEMAN CASTONGUAY.

Mr. BOYER—by Mr. O. E. Talbot—asked :

1. On what date was Alexander B. Castonguay dismissed from the federal police ?
2. For what cause ?
3. On whose report ?
4. Did this report incriminate other policeman ?
5. Have these also been dismissed ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Justice) :

1. December 13th, 1904.
2. For gross misconduct at Government House on the night of the 16th November, 1904.
3. On the report of the Commissioner of Police.
4. Two other policemen were incriminated in the same report.
5. One of these latter was dismissed and the other suspended for sixteen days.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Some time ago I asked a question as to whether this man had been employed in the Marine and Fisheries Department. The answer of the minister was that he was not so employed. I have data to the effect that he had been employed up to the date on which my question was placed on the paper, and his services were then dispensed with. If such was the case, the answer of the minister was equivocal and misleading. I desire the First Minister to look into that.

COLLINGWOOD DRY DOCK.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

1. Have any payments been made to the Collingwood Dry Dock Company, by way of bounty or assistance, by the federal government ?
2. If so, what are the amounts and dates of payments ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.

BRACEBRIDGE DRY DOCK.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT—by Mr. Bennett—asked :

1. Who is the local superintendent of the government dock recently constructed, or being constructed, at Bracebridge, Ontario, and where does he reside ?
2. How much per diem was he paid ?
3. How much was he paid for such services to date, and will he be paid any further amount for such work ?
4. Upon whose recommendation was he appointed ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

1. P. L. Clairmont. The address known to the department is Bracebridge, Ontario. We have no other address.
2. $3 per day.
3. (a) $448.68 ; (b) The services of a clerk of works will be required until the contract is completed.
4. Mr. Clairmont was appointed by Mr. Henry A. Gray, resident engineer, after consulting with well informed people in the vicinity.

COLLINGWOOD GOVERNMENT DOCK.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). If the House will permit me, I will answer a question which was put to me the other day during the discussion with respect to the construction of a dock at Collingwood. I was asked about the return of the cheque of Mr. Battle, and I stated that while I was positive in regard to Mr. Conroy's cheque, I desired to make further inquiry. I find that after the tender of Mr. Conroy was accepted and the contract awarded to him, all the other cheques were returned. The cheque of Mr. Conroy is still held in the department.

JAPANESE DISCRIMINATION AGAINST CANADIAN GOODS.

On the Orders of the Day being called.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER (Hamilton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the government to a letter which appears in the Yarmouth 'Telegram' of Friday last. It may have been already brought to the attention of the proper department, but it seems to me to be a matter of very great importance, and therefore I now call attention to it. It is copied from 'Industrial Canada' :

Mr. C. T. Grantham, manager of the Imperial Cotton Company, Hamilton, sends us the following letter from their New York selling agents, which may be found of interest as illustrating the difficulties which Canadian manufacturers are meeting with in endeavouring to market their goods in Japan :

New York, April 22, 1905.

Dear Sir,—I regret having to report that in spite of continued efforts, we have found it impossible to sell any of the Canadian goods for export to Japan. During the past six or eight months we have sold very large blocks of goods manufactured in the United States for export to that market, but, in spite of our best efforts, and of offers, of price concessions, we have not been able to ship a yard of your goods to Japan.

Knowing that your goods were equal in every respect to the American made duck, we were forced to look for some other reasons for the discrimination against the Canadian goods. We found, in the first place, that there was a preferential of five per cent, in favour of the duty on American duck. In order to offset that, we offered the Canadian goods at five per cent less than the American goods, so that they might go in through the customs on the same basis. Even at this price concession, we were unable to effect any sales, in spite of the fact that the Japanese were most desirous of obtaining goods promptly, and were thoroughly scouring the American markets for goods which could be delivered at an early date. We then found out that the reason we could not effect sales was not so much on account of the prices of goods as because there was a sentimental prejudice in Japanese official circles against Canadian-made goods. It seems that the Japanese feel that they were discriminated against by the Canadian government, and that the Canadian government was not willing, at some time in the past, to make the same arrangements with Japan as with the United States and England.

I believe that it is more on account of this prejudice than for any other reason, that we cannot effect the sale of your goods in this market, and if it is in any way possible for you to bring about more friendly relations between your government and the Japanese officials, we believe that it will materially help the trade of the Dominion.

Yours very truly,
J. SPENCER TURNER COMPANY.
H. H. Lehman, secretary and treasurer.

This is a very important matter for the consideration of the government if it has not already been dealt with. I shall send the letter over to the hon. minister.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The point to which my hon. friend refers has already been brought to the notice of the government. It arises out of this condition: The imperial government made a treaty with Japan some years ago under which certain privileges were granted and we had the opportunity of joining in that treaty. All things considered it was felt that if we should adhere to that treaty Canada's freedom of action in other matters would be embarrassed, and it was not deemed wise in the interest of Canada to assent to that treaty so that it might be applied to Canada. The consequence is that Canadian products do not get the preference which British products would under that treaty and which are granted to the products of some other countries. In order to get the advantage to which my hon. friend refers we would have been obliged to give up some degree of that freedom which Canada has desired to have in regard to its own legislative action. I am speaking from recollection of what occurred some years ago but that is substantially the condition. We declined to join in this British treaty and therefore we lost some advantages which might have been derived if we had accepted that treaty.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend recollect what was the chief factor in causing this action of the government, what possibilities they would have let themselves in for had they accepted the treaty and at about what time this occurred?

Mr. FIELDING. Some years ago. It relates to the operation of the favoured nation clause, and also my recollection is that it affected our freedom of action on the labour question.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see it is rather important to know if it debars us from participating in the great increase in the commerce of Japan. Perhaps the minister may bring down a little more information, the terms of the treaty or an abstract of it, showing in what way we would have been affected.

SUPPLY—PURCHASE OF MILITIA CAMP AT KENTVILLE, N.S.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Some four or five weeks ago I notified the Minister of Militia that I purposed bringing up during the course of the session the purchase of a site for a militia camp at Kentville, N.S., and he then explained that he was familiar with all the details of the case and that it could be explained. In justice to the Minister of Militia the House and the country I think it is proper that we should have an explanation, the best possible he can give. The statement as furnished to me contains the following data: It shows that the government expropriated about 640 acres of land for the purposes of a camp ground, I believe, at or near the village of Kentville, N.S. That land was previously owned by a number of people, but before the expropriation proceedings it was purchased by Messrs. H. P. Dodge, and H. H. Wickwire, members of the local legislature of the province of Nova Scotia, staunch Liberals and members of King's county. I have here a statement which shows how a number of these lands were purchased, contained in a newspaper published in the locality, and I may as well show the manner in which these lands were acquired. For instance one was purchased from John Redden, et al trustees, &c., by Williard H. Fulton, barrister, Halifax, Race Track, Kentville 26 acres, May 30, 1902, for $1,250. Then there was a transference of the same property from W. H. Fulton and his wife to H. H. Wickwire, barrister, Kentville, August 1st for the same consideration. He was content with a small fee.

Mr. FOSTER. He did not get any profit.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Then Stephen Belcher, sheriff King's county to Branton H. Dodge, Kentville, merchant; land in pine woods, 60 acres, July 21, 1902, $110. That is a little over $2 an acre. Then the Robinson heirs sold to the same purchaser 208 acres for $218.40, a little over $1 an acre. James Fanning and wife, same purchaser, land in Cornwallis, 31 acres $400, some $131 an acre. Then the rector and wardens, Parish St. John, same purchaser Glebe lands, pine woods, 25 acres $100, $4 an acre.

Mr. BLACK. What authority is it that the hon. gentleman is quoting from?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If the hon. gentleman will preserve his soul in patience I will give the statements. It is for him to prove that they are wrong. These are from records of the courts, and if the hon. gentleman will preserve his soul in patience——

Mr. BLACK. What is the authority?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am assuming the authority for these statements here and it is for the hon. gentleman to show that they are incorrect.

Mr. BLACK. I think I am within my rights in asking what the authority is.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Samuel Chipman and wife——

Mr. BLACK. Am I right or wrong?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—Boston, same purchaser, land and pine woods one acre, $20.

Mr. BLACK. I am rising to a point of order. I demand the authority from which the hon. gentleman is reading. I want to know the name of the paper?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They were not purchased from Doukhobors.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. member is within his rights in insisting on the authority.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I may say that they were not purchased from Doukhobors or Galicians. The St. John's church I presume is an English church and consequently the land would be worth only one-twentieth as much as if purchased from some other concern, from a Doukhobor. Walter B. Reid, farmer, same purchaser, lot 3 acres, the price is left blank here. The heirs of Hanley Chipman, same purchaser lot in pine woods, 10 acres, $20, $2 an acre. Geo. Carter, farmer, same purchaser, lot in pine woods, 1 acre, $120. Wilson Young and wife, same purchaser, lot in pine woods, 12 acres, $120. H. H. Wickwire, same purchaser, race track Kentville, 26 acres, August 26, 1903, $3,000. That is the same track that was sold previously for $1,250. That is the difference in the price. These 377 acres were purchased for $2,358.40, $6.26 an acre, including the value of the buildings. All this was transferred to Messrs. Wickwire and Dodge, M.P.Ps., staunch supporters of the Liberal government of Nova Scotia, and I presume of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Militia in the province of Nova Scotia. The later conveyance I have no report upon, but I presume the Minister of Militia will be able to furnish that. The statement I have is that this propery is largely an expanse of sand covered with a few pine trees and scrub and that it has always been considered of little value. Let me say that this would not in any way detract from its value as a drill ground. On the contrary I should say that the fact that it is a sandy soil would be a great advantage from the view point of drill purposes, although not from the view point of agricultural land. After Messrs. Dodge and Wickwire had acquired this, Mr. Crawley, of Wolfville, a Liberal, was appointed arbitrator and Mr. McIlreith, of Halifax, another Liberal, acted for the government and W. E. Roscoe, of Kentville, for the local members. I am informed that Mr. Roscoe is a gentleman with a record in the Liberal party. He is the confidential representative of some of the leading Liberal ministers and others in the province of Nova Scotia, and I am informed he has of necessity to be called in in very many of these delicate technical matters requiring adjudication in this section of the country. The value which these witnesses put on the property ranged between $50 and $70 per acre which you will see is a very great price considering what Messrs. Dodge and Wickwire paid for the same property a short time previously, namely $6.20 per acre including a number of buildings. The final decision as to how much the government shall pay for this camp ground is in the hands of Judge Burbidge, and it is understood that it will not be had for some time to come.

Mr. BENNETT. Who appealed to Judge Burbidge?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not know. The hon. minister will be able to tell us. I am merely bringing this up in order to have from him a full explanation. According to the Auditor General's Report, nearly $25,000 have been expended on the rifle ranges on this camp ground.

An hon. MEMBER. What was paid for the land?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The arbitrators allowed $38,400 for the land and a large area had been purchased for a comparatively trifling sum by Wickwire & Dodge. The arbitrators allowed $38,400 for 641 acres.

Mr. BOYCE. What was the total amount paid by Dodge & Wickwire?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have the total only for the 377 acres and for that they paid $2,358. This amount of $25,000 expended on the rifle ranges is from $6,000 to $7,000 above the contract price. I find also that the stop-block was constructed of hemlock timber instead of cedar which the contract called for. Perhaps the minister will make a note of that point. I have here a short extract from the speech of the hon. minister delivered in the House. In that speech he said :

With regard to the rural districts and the smaller towns, where there is only, say, one unit, my idea is that we should construct a substantial building which can be headquarters, armoury and storehouse, and with a room sufficiently large for a lecture room, where the officers who take an interest in military matters can bring their men in the evening, and, by means of blackboards and so on, illustrate military affairs and give necessary instructions. My plan will include every village of any importance in the Dominion of Canada.

That is almost on a par with the promise of the right hon. the First Minister, after he got into the little Dundonald trouble with the Minister of Agriculture last year, when he proposed to arm every one, old and young, with one of the new Ross breech loading rifles. I should like to see a few scattered throughout the province of Ontario. The minister continued :

We have reverted to the old system of keeping arms at company headquarters. I may be permitted to remark that in my own county we have a regiment of infantry of eight companies, and two squadrons of cavalry, yet we have only an old wooden drill hall in the town of Kentville, which was built some years ago. There has not been $1,000 expended on a building to house the militia in my county during the nine years I have been a minister. I tell my people that they must be patient. The time will come, I hope, when they will all be housed, and I will ask some of my hon. friends to emulate my example and be patient.

That does not agree with the Auditor General's Report. In the Auditor General's Report of 1901, I find the following :

J. C. Reeves, fitting up armoury, per contract	$1,325
Less drawback	132
	1,193

I presume that drawback was the 10 per cent. As a rule, I understand, the rake off is 20 per cent.

Rockwell, C. F., superintending work at armoury to June 29th, 1901, 50 days at $2.50, $125.

In the Auditor General's Report for 1904, Vol. 2, Q—115, I find the following :

Rifle ranges, lands for military purposes, Kentville, Nova Scotia, $24,709.73.

C. L. Dodge, inspector, 131 days at $2.50	$327 50
Wm. Rand, surveys and expenses	448 13
A. B. Ward, construction of field stages	785 00
R. T. McIlreith, legal services	591 88
Account witness fees, King vs. Dodge	$ 200 00
Paid for labour	865 69
John J. Lyons and James Whyte, rifle butts, ranges and sheds	20,463 55
Sundry expenses	1,027 98
Total	24,709 73

I wonder is this the gentleman who was connected with the purchase of these lands, or was he one of the gentlemen who sold some land ? I think we had his name before in connection with the matter.

Then in 1904 I find by the Auditor General's Report, Q—33, there was paid :

C. L. Dodge, supplies to Aldershot camp drill, $2,892.92.

That of course, would be legitimate expenditure, but it looks as though these contracts were kept within the hands of these professional gentlemen in connection with the Liberal party in that province for political purposes. If the hon. minister has any satisfactory explanation to give, I am sure he will be glad of an opportunity to make it. If he has none, it is the duty of this House to have the facts probed to the very bottom. This system is one which seems to have taken hold, not only of the other departments, but even the Militia Department. It is trifling with the proper method of awarding contracts, and the making of these deals should be stopped and the people be given full value for their money. I do not know what explanation the minister can give for paying $50 to $60 an acre for land, the average price of which was only $6.20 per acre.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). It is quite true that the hon. gentleman informed me some time ago that he intended to bring this matter up. I suggested that it would be more convenient to bring it up on the militia estimates ; and as I heard nothing from him for some time, I rather assumed he proposed to follow that course. Had I known he was going to bring the matter up to-day—I only got his note ten minutes ago—I might perhaps have been able to bring some information of a more detailed character than I can give at this moment. However, let me inform the House at once of a fact, of which I informed the hon. gentleman, namely, that this matter is to-day sub judice. It is to-day in the hands of the Exchequer Court as a result of the Militia Department having taken possession—as it had a right to do—for the Crown of this property. As the land is situated in my county, I thought it much preferable that the property should be expropriated and that the court constituted to deal with questions of this character should declare what the property is worth. It seems to me that the statement which my hon. friend made here should have been made before the court. Some hon. gentleman wanted to know who Judge Burbidge was.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No, no.

Mr. BENNETT. I asked who appealed to Judge Burbidge.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have just given the answer. The land was expropriated. By that fact it became the duty of Judge Burbidge to ascertain, from the best information available, the value of the land and the price the Crown should pay.

Mr. BENNETT. I heard the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) make the statement that three gentlemen had acted as arbitrators——

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Crawley acted as arbitrator, I understand.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I did not say that.

Mr. BENNETT. I heard the statement made to which I refer, and so I asked who had appealed to Judge Burbidge?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, that is not the position. Judge Burbidge, as is the custom of the court in certain cases—the general custom if I understand aright—named a proper officer to take evidence on the point. In this particular case Judge Burbidge named Mr. Crawley, a very respectable barrister of the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know what took place in the present instance. But, as I understand the practice, sometimes the judge takes the evidence himself. Sometimes he refers the question of value to a referee who has authority not only to take evidence, but to make a finding, while in other cases he entrusts the case to a referee merely for the purpose of taking evidence, the finding being reserved for the judge himself. I do not know in which category this was.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It was in the last category.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have seen references to the matter in the newspapers, and my recollection is that the matter was referred to Mr. Crawley for the purpose of taking the evidence and reporting a value to the court. I understand also that he had reported the value and that the Crown had appealed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am not familiar with these technical points. But I know this—that it remains for the judge to give his final adjudication as to the value of the land.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the minister have any objection to say what connection Messrs. Crawley, of Wolfeville, Mr. McIlreith, of Halifax, and Mr. Moscoe, of Kentville, had with this matter?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As I understand it, Mr. McIlreith is the agent of the Department of Justice in Nova Scotia; Mr. Crawley was appointed the referee——

Mr. FOSTER. By the judge?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, directly by the court—and Mr. Roscoe, I have heard, although I have had nothing to do with him in this particular matter, was the lawyer employed by the owners of the land.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the minister state what were the first steps taken in order to get hold of this land and when they were taken?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The first steps as I remember were taken about two or three years ago by the Militia Department expropriating this property for a camp ground for the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. STOCKTON. Will the minister allow me to ask a question? If the government expropriated, did the department at once take proceedings under the Exchequer Court Act to ascertain the amount to be paid?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Immediately.

Mr. STOCKTON. When was that done?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not know the exact date, but I think it was between one and two years ago. I think it was during the camp a year ago last summer.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. minister stated that one of these gentlemen represented the owners. I presume he referred to Messrs. Dodge and Wickwire, the Liberal members of provincial parliament for the county.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) insists very much upon mixing up these Liberal members of provincial parliament with the matter. I do not see much in that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who were the owners—that is all I want to know?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I stated that I did not know who the owners were and I cannot make it any more emphatic than I have made it already. This property was owned by somebody—I do not know who the owners were; I have nothing to do with the owners. Acting as a member of the government, acting for the Crown and in the interest of the public, I ordered the expropriation of that property, and saw to it that the matter was referred to the proper court in order to have the value of the property ascertained. The proceedings are still going on. And I doubt very much, myself—and I suggested that to the hon. gentleman—I doubt very much the propriety of bringing a matter of this kind here while it is still sub judice. Now, I do not know that there is very much more to say. This matter was one of the stock campaign arguments during the time of the last general election. I fought it on the platform in my county. All sorts of veiled charges were made against me. It was suggested that some impropriety had been committed. But, when I stated to the people of my county the facts, as I have stated them here to-day, my statement was accepted as satisfactory, the result being that I received a majority of 1,200 in my county, in that election.

Mr. FOSTER. There were a good many arguments to back that up in your county were there not?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) understands as well as any of us, I think, what kind of arguments are used in an election.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I understand.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I believe there was a minimum of that kind of thing in my county—it was unnecessary.

Mr. FOSTER. If that was the minimum, the maximum must have been awful.

Mr. EMMERSON. Was there a ballot-box missing in that instance?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There was nothing of that kind. In fact, this is a case of much ado about nothing—the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) has discovered a mare's nest. I do not know that I have anything more to say, except this: There was an evident intention or desire in some way to show, by quoting an extract from a speech I made in this House some time ago, that I had mis-stated the facts in that case; that while I had stated in the House that not $1,000 had been spent on militia buildings for the militia of my county since I have been minister, enormous sums had been spent—amounting to $20,000 or $25,000—in constructing rifle ranges. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) even showed that some $1,200 or $1,300 had been spent in improving an old drill hall in that county. Now, I am prepared to admit that, to the extent of the difference between $1,000 and $1,200 or $1,300, I was in error in saying that only $1,000 had been spent in militia buildings in my county for the use of the corps immediately concerned, the corps having their headquarters in my county. The evident intention—the unfair intention—on the part of the hon. gentleman was to show that my statement was not true and that thousands and tens of thousands had been spent in my county for the militia of my county, when the hon. gentleman knew perfectly well, quite as well as he will after I have told him again, that all this expenditure, except the paltry $1,200 I have referred to, was expended for the whole militia of Nova Scotia. This expenditure was for the establishment of a rifle range, one of sixteen targets and one of the best rifle ranges in Canada, and securing a camp ground of 640 acres—a mile square—for the use of the militia not only of the whole province of Nova Scotia, but of part of that of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick as well. I have the satisfaction of knowing, from the highest military authorities in this Dominion, that the camp ground at Kentville is one of the best if not the best in the Dominion of Canada to-day.

But the hon. gentleman tries in some round-about way to cast suspicion of wrong doing upon this transaction. Where is the wrong doing? It was not for me to say and I am not saying whether the land was worth one dollar, or ten dollars, or twenty dollars, that is none of my business. The value of the land has been submitted to the proper court to ascertain and it will be ascertained. It is the duty of the judge to get the best evidence with respect to the value of the land. I may say, however, Mr. Speaker, that this camp is situated within a mile of the shire town of my county, the important town of Kentville. This 640 acres of land are well situated, surrounded by orchards on every side, with a railway passing along the whole of one side.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have just made an inquiry by telephone to the officers of the Exchequer Court as to the position, which was not very clear. I found that the claim was referred to Mr. Crawley for inquiry and report. Mr. Crawley took evidence and reported in favour of the claimants, fixing the value of the land at $38,400. The Crown appealed, and the judge sent back the case to Mr. Crawley for further inquiry and report. That is the situation of the matter at present.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As I said, it is sub judice, it is open to change. It is the duty of the judge to make up his opinion as to the value of the land, and I do not think it can be in safer hands than in the hands of Mr. Justice Burbidge, where I am sure the interest of the public as well as the interest of the owner of the land will receive every due and fair consideration. Now what more is there to be said? That is the whole story, it seems to me. The value is to be fixed, the land has been expropriated, everything is above board. The records are there to show. I have not familiarized myself particularly with what has been done, I only know that the greatest care was taken to assure that the interest of the people of this country might be served.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister did not seem to deal with that part of the statement that $35,000 had been spent on the rifle range, and that the contract had been exceeded by $6,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is not a word of truth in that statement. I am glad my hon. friend has called my attention to it, because I agree with him that it requires an answer. The intention to construct the rifle range on these grounds was published in the newspapers in Halifax, and I think in the newspapers in this city, so that it was open to all the people of Canada to tender, and the lowest tenderer got the work, an Ottawa firm. There were several tenders, but the people who got the work are men who have done a great deal of work of this kind, are experts in the matter. They constructed the rifle range in Ottawa, they constructed the rifle range in Montreal and at Three Rivers, they have constructed many rifle ranges throughout Canada, and in every case they have received the contract only after open competition, and after due advertising in the public press. That is the way they got the tender at Kentville. I do not know whether one kind of wood was substituted for another or not, but I do know that the engineers in my department are exceedingly careful in all such matters, that the most careful inspection is insisted upon; and if any change or substitution took place, it only took place under the authority of the chief engineer of the Militia Department.

Mr. FOSTER. As to the appropriation.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is an annual vote of $75,000 for the construction of rifle ranges, and as I understand it the $19,000—I think this range cost $19,600, possibly $20,000—was taken out of that vote.

Mr. FOSTER. The contract price has been adhered to?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Absolutely. When the estimates come down there will be a further opportunity to discuss this matter, and if any additional information is required I will be glad to give it.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, before these estimates come down and are taken up again, the minister might, in justice to the House, lay on the table whatever papers in connection with the matter are in his possession.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not like to say anything more about it until I see these papers. I will say this much, however, that I would like to get $38,400 for 640 acres of land in that part of Nova Scotia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not know whether $38,400 will be paid for it or not. But I can tell my hon. friend that he will find in that part of Nova Scotia, which I think he has visited, lots of land, farming, lands and orchard lands, which he could not buy for $600 an acre.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) read from the local papers some comments with reference to this land. The minister says, and no doubt it is quite true, that this subject attracted a great deal of attention during the last election in his riding. I do not wonder that it did. Why, two local members of parliament, by inspiration I presume, had gone around the country and bought land at $2 an acre, and in a very short time afterwards found they could sell it for $60. This must have been pretty exceptional land, with all due deference to the county, and the minister does not contradict it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I did not think it was necessary for me to go into that. I have no idea what they paid. All I know as to the value of the land is this, that some thirty years ago about twenty-five acres of land which was made a hunting park, which is a part of this range, was purchased in the native condition, you might say, for $25 and acre. I ascertained that fact, and that is all I know about it. But I feel quite confident that a fair valuation for that land would be anywhere between $20 and $30.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, it seems that that part of it which is the race track they sold at a fairly good price. But whatever prompted the two local members to go and buy 60 acres of land at $2 an acre, must have been a question that suggested itself to the electors of that riding.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And they answered it.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman knows how they answered the question up in Edmonton a few weeks ago on the school question.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No doubt of it.

Mr. BENNETT. And they will answer the same question later on in Ontario.

Mr. FIELDING. Don't forget Quebec.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman may set that off against Centre Toronto. But be that as it may, not only do we find these two inspired local members buying 60 acres of land, but, upon inspiration that came from Ottawa, they go back and buy 200 acres more at $1 an acre. then there is another batch of it picked up at $10 an acre. The result is that as soon as it changes hands it advances from $1 and $2 an acre to about $60 an acre. We do not know and we have no intimation here as to who this Mr. Crawley is, or how Mr. Crawley came to be appointed. We have no intimation here as to how the case was conducted on behalf of the Crown, and it will seem as strange to the country as it was to the electors there. Perhaps the hon. minister may enlighten us why it is that these local members should go and pick up 300 or 400 acres of land which they could buy at $1 and $2 an acre and which had lain there useless for years and that suddenly an intimation is given to these gentlemen that this land is to be used for a large militia camp ground. The hon. minister states that this is a desirable tract of land, being surrounded by magnificent orchards. It must have been the irony of fate that there should have been beautiful orchards around a tract of land that went begging at $1 an acre. It must have been struck by lightning.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. You ought to go down there and see it.

Mr. BENNETT. I might have seen it for a long time if it could be purchased at from $1 to $2 an acre. It strikes me that it is a fair matter for discussion and I think the hon. minister should endeavour to let us know what made these gentlemen wake up so suddenly and buy this waste land at $1 and $2 an acre that immediately advances to $60 an acre. Perhaps an inkling was given to these gentlemen in the same way as it was given to certain gentlemen in regard to the half-breed scrip in the Northwest. It seems that there was an Order in Council passed that was never made public until months afterwards, and when it was made public there was nothing left. The senators and members from the Northwest interested had picked up all the scrip that was going begging. I hope the question will be renewed again when the estimates are under discussion, and that the hon. minister will enlighten us as to why these local members were permitted to pick up this land at $1 and $2 an acre and to sell it afterwards at $60 an acre.

Mr. FIELDING. Has it yet been established that it is worth $60 an acre? Why does my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) assume that the government agreed to pay $60 an acre for it? The matter is still before the courts, and if the land was purchased recently for $1 or $2 an acre is it not a reasonable assumption that that fact will be investigated by the judge of the Exchequer Court, and that whatever weight is entitled to be attached to that argument by the court will be given to the transaction by Judge Burbidge? Would that not be a more reasonable assumption rather than to take it for granted that Judge Burbidge is going to authorize the payment of $60 an acre for that which was purchased for from $1 to $2 an acre? If it is a fact that the property was purchased recently for $1 or $2 an acre, that fact undoubtedly would be investigated by Judge Burbidge and it would have whatever weight it was entitled to in fixing the value of the land.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would Mr. Justice Burbidge, having referred this matter to this gentleman in Nova Scotia, Mr. Crawley, be in a position to know if this land had been purchased for this price, if it had not been represented to him here in this manner?

Mr. FIELDING. It is the business of Mr. Justice Burbidge to know all these things. That is the purpose for which he holds his court. In regard to Mr. Crawley, I know nothing of his relations with this transaction, but I know that Mr. Crawley is a most respected barrister in Nova Scotia, a son of the late Rev. Dr. Crawley, a man whose name is honoured throughout Nova Scotia, and I have no hesitation in saying that I would have the fullest confidence in the perfect fairness of any transaction with which Mr. Crawley is connected.

Mr. BENNETT. It would seem that some person must have confidence in Mr. Crawley and as Mr. Crawley has made his report Judge Burbidge will have to deal with exactly the same evidence when it comes before him. If Mr. Crawley's judgment is good, I do not assume it is going to be appealed against. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will recollect a very remarkable case in Quebec. I refer to the case at Levis. This was a most extraordinary case. Perhaps the case with which we are now dealing may outrival it but it is hardly possible that it could do so. The Levis case was one in which the Intercolonial Railway desired to acquire a lot of land. The then Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Blair, sent down one of his trusted agents. He went around and saw the proprietors and they were all ready to sell at $1 a foot. When he made his report what happened? The minister, Mr. Blair, initialled the report and recommended the purchase of the land. Mr. Archer, a barrister of Montreal, and a partner of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) and Mr. Pugsley, were retained by some of the parties and what happened after that? The price was advanced from $1 a foot to $2.50 a foot. Then came a letter from the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) advising Mr. Blair to accept a figure 300 per cent more than had been originally offered by the parties who owned the land and that was backed up—this is all on record in 'Hansard'—by the statement that the Prime Minister has recommended that the deal should be made on this basis. Then there was an appeal to the Exchequer Court with the result that the augmented price was allowed. I think that experience has taught us that these appeals have not resulted in the country getting cheap property in the long run. I know nothing about the merits of this case, but I do remember the Levis case in which, as a result of the interference of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, this land doubled and trebled in value.

Hon. R. LEMIEUX (Solicitor General). I do not know what happened in the case of the St. Charles branch expropriation; I am not familiar with that case in which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) says that Judge Burbidge increased the value of land 300 per cent. But, there is one fact that is very patent to the House. It is that according to the Exchequer Court Act the judge has the right to refer any case to an arbitrator, or a referee if it pleases him. I appeared on the Exchequer Court in Quebec representing the Crown in a certain claim of Mr. H. M. Price of Quebec in which the court referred the case to the registrar, Mr. Audette. A report is made on the facts by the registrar, or referee and then the judge is free to accept or reject that report. He applies the law to the facts. It has happened not once, not twice, but in hundreds of cases in which reports were made by a referee or arbitrator or registrar that the judge would not accept his report. He would reverse the report. It happened in one case in which my firm was interested sime months ago in the matter of Paul vs. the King. The report of the referee was in favour of our clients, but when it came before the court it was reversed. It happens every day. The judge is entitled under the Exchequer Court Act to refer a case to a referee or arbitrator. Therefore, there is nothing very surprising in this case in the fact that it was referred to an arbitrator in the province of Nova Scotia. The judge is not bound by the report which is made by the arbitrator or referee.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is not the judge bound by the evidence taken by the referee? I ask that question because of a remark made by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). The hon. Minister of Finance said that it was the judge's business to get the evidence and to find these things out. Is it not a fact that the judge will take no evidence except such as is brought before the referee where the investigation is made?

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the judge is not there himself the registrar is there. The registrar acts for the judge in fifty cases out of a hundred usually. The court is there, the court controls the case, and my hon. friend, I am sure, would not say that Mr. Justice Burbidge would accept only one-sided evidence in that case.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am not suggesting anything of the kind. I merely want to see that we understand each other.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend knows that the court is always represented by the registrar.

Mr. LANCASTER. I want to find out whether the judge had before him such evidence as was reported by this referee. The judge does not hear original evidence; he simply goes on evidence taken by the referee.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The judge decides, not on one-sided evidence, but on full evidence. The court is conducted on legal lines. There has been no complaint on that score.

Mr. BELCOURT. It is quite open to the judge of the Exchequer Court, when he proceeds on the report of Mr. Crawley or any other person, to order further evidence if he is not satisfied with the evidence before him. He is in no sense bound, as my hon. friend would intimate, by the report of Mr. Crawley. He may order either a new reference or a hearing of evidence before himself as Exchequer Court judge; or, after hearing this evidence, he may order a new hearing, he may set aside Mr. Crawley's report entirely. So long as the case is not decided by the judge himself, it is open to further evidence.

Mr. MONK. Does my hon. friend the Solicitor General know whether any decision was rendered in the Exchequer Court in the case referred to by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett); and if so, what figure was fixed by the court for the indemnity?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am not aware that any amount was fixed by the Exchequer Court. I understood from my hon. friend that it was not referred to the Exchequer Court, but that the amount was fixed by the department.

Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps the Minister of Railways would be informed on that point—what the expropriation at Lévis cost per foot.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not familiar with it. It was some time before I was in the department, and I do not know the facts. I have heard of that, as I have heard of the St. Charles branch case.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would ask the Minister of Militia to be good enough to bring down and lay on the table as soon as convenient the data in this matter. I may say that I do not propose waiting to take it up on the militia estimates. I find that the militia estimates are passed on some evening, conveniently, when certain gentlemen happen to be out of the House. The estimates are then quietly slipped through.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman knows that an item was reserved in the estimates.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I know. That is also held to the end of the session, and passed through in the same way. I would like the hon. gentleman to bring down the name of the owner of these 640 acres that were purchased for a drill ground, the cost of the ground, the award of the commission, the nature of the timber used in the butts, whether cedar or hemlock—he can get a report from his engineer on this point. I do not think I have laid myself open to the charge of being unfair. However, I will not discuss that, as I shall have another opportunity of doing so. I want the report of Mr. Crawley to the Exchequer Court judge brought down.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. How can I get the report?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am notifying the government, and the hon. Minister of Militia is a member of it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If my hon. friend will allow me, it seems to me that every object will be served when this case is completed. I have no doubt that the judgment will be given in a short time, and I shall be glad to lay the judgment, the evidence and all the papers connected with the case on the table of the House.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER. The minister will see that when the judgment is delivered that will end it. Maybe we can throw a little light on the matter to help the judgment.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think the Minister of Militia, instead of feeling hurt at this matter being brought up, if he has the interest of the country at heart, should be glad that we are strengthening the hands of Judge Burbidge and helping him to get this collateral evidence. I trust that the minister will have all this information brought down at an early date.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will bring down such papers as I can get. I have not any idea of the owners of the land, except from what I have read in the newspapers and what the hon. gentleman has said. Any papers in the department bearing on this matter I shall be glad to bring down at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. FOSTER. We are not discussing this question from any other standpoint than that of the public interest, at the present time at least. The minister has heard today that that land, that was bought for $1 an acre, was sold to the government through the medium of interested parties, who no doubt got information that it was to be taken for such a purpose, or would be likely to be taken, and were therefore quite willing to go into the speculation. Neither of these gentlemen would have bought one arpent of that sand land unless he expected to turn it over in a speculation. Now that the minister has heard of this immense bill, which must have astounded himself, of $38,400 for this land, on the report of the referee, based on evidence obtained by one of the most able and not one of the scrupulous lawyers in the province of Nova Scotia, against a young man, not the ablest or the strongest, on the part of the Crown, he must see that it looks like a plant. I am not saying that it is, but it looks like it. The minister says that he cannot get at the value of the land. He can easily ascertain from whom Messrs. Dodge and Wickwire got this land, for he can get at the record of the transfer; there is a way by which the evidence of those who sold the land in the first place can be got, if they did not give it in the Crawley inquest; and if it transpires that that land was bought at $1 an acre by these people, not for their own use, but in order to palm it off on the government for $38,400, I do not care a penny if the case went through a thousand exchequer courts, it is a transaction that should be sat upon. If anything ever smelt like a plant, this does; and the minister will not do his duty unless he finds out what that land cost these go-betweens; and if it turns out that they got it for $1 an acre, it is the duty of the government not to pay that money if there is any power in the universe to prevent them.

Mr. FIELDING. I agree with my hon. friend. That is what the Exchequer Court was created for, and I would assume that, with the case left to be dealt with by that court, the public interest would be looked after. I assume that evidence was brought forward as to the proper price to pay for the land.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Exchequer Court has nothing to do with that.

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, yes; the Exchequer Court has the right to inquire for further evidence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Exchequer Court does not initiate the procuring of evidence. That is left to the parties—the Crown on the one hand and the claimants on the other.

Mr. FIELDING. Perhaps it is not a material point, but Mr. Justice Burbidge is himself a native of King's county, and would have enough knowledge of the value of land around there to enable him to make due inquiries.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Justice Burbidge does not take the evidence.

Mr. FIELDING. He can.

Mr. FOSTER. He simply appoints the referee.

Mr. FIELDING. At his discretion.

Mr. FOSTER. That will be the evidence taken by the referee. Who brings the evidence, who engineers it? Dodge &

Wickwire. Through whom? Through a very able lawyer, to say the least of it, who defends the case for the government. Mr. Tremaine, of McIlreith & Tremaine. Now the evidence is so engineered, it is so made to appear to Mr. Crawley by some means or other, they may be fair or they may not, that he gives a judgment that the land is worth so much.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He does not give a judgment but an award.

Mr. FOSTER. It is an opinion which is equivalent to a judgment. That comes before the Court of Exchequer and Judge Burbidge may have as much personal knowledge as he pleases about that land but he is bound to take the award of Mr. Crawley.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, no.

Mr. FOSTER. At least that is what I think. The court will in nine cases out of ten do so, and I do not think the government's responsibility is ended because this matter has been so engineered as to bring its final decision before the Exchequer Court instead of simply an ordinary arbitration. But there remains the fact that cannot be laughed or sneered away, that men who became interested in the matter because they knew something was in the wind, bought land at the rate of a dollar an acre for which they are now seeking to get $38,400 in gross from the government, and I do not think the government has quite cleared itself, its skirts are not clean if that be a correct statement of the case, even though they shelter themselves behind the judgment of the Exchequer Court which has to work under certain limitations and can be——

Mr. FIELDING. When I stated that Judge Burbidge might employ his personal knowledge I did not mean to assert that he is at liberty to use that personal knowledge in fixing his judgment. The hon. member for Simcoe interrupted to say that he could not use that knowledge. I grant that, but he can use that knowledge to make further inquiry, he can——

Mr. FOSTER. Under the same engineer.

Mr. FIELDING. He can take any machinery he likes to get the information, and I presume Judge Burbidge will do that.

Mr. STOCKTON. You say that Judge Burbidge can institute that inquiry. Is not the government represented on one side by its agents, and is it not the duty of the agent, if there is evidence to be precured, to place it before the judge?

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly.

Mr. STOCKTON. It is not the duty of the judge to go around hunting evidence. It depends on the manner in which the case is presented to the judge how he will form his judgment and conclusion, and if the evidence is not there, no matter what Judge Burbidge's information may be as to the value of the ground in that country he is bound by the evidence placed before him. The Solicitor General shakes his head to say no, but I tell the Solicitor General that would be the judicial course for Judge Burbidge to take, according to the evidence presented before him and he is not responsible for the evidence placed before him. It is the agent of the government who is responsible.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have a very high regard for the opinion of my hon. friend, but surely he knows that when the report of the referee goes before the judge, the judge is not bound. Section 98 of the Act provides:

> The Supreme Court or Exchequer Court, or a judge thereof, may, if it is considered for the ends of justice expedient so to do, order the further examination, before either the court or a judge thereof or other person, of any witness; and if the party on whose behalf the evidence is tendered neglects or refuses to obtain such further examination, the court or judge, in its or his discretion, may decline to act on the evidence.

So it is not final, it is an every-day occurrence in the Exchequer Court that a referee is appointed; it happens in 99 cases out of 100 in the province of Quebec from the very obvious reason that Judge Burbidge is not familiar with the French language.

Mr. STOCKTON. If the evidence is placed before the referee and the case is adjudicated upon by the referee and the matter goes before the judge and the government takes no other action, then in 19 cases out of 20 the judge takes the judgment of the referee. I tell the Solicitor General that is my experience in the courts.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend has had a very wide experience. I have acted for the Crown for only two years, but I know that in 50 cases out of 100 when a referee is appointed by the judge of the Exchequer Court, and when the report is made to the judge he does not accept that report; generally speaking, he does not accept it, he requires further examination or sometimes he rejects it completely. That is my experience for the last two years and that is the law.

Mr. STOCKTON. Does he do that of his own motion or on motion of counsel for the government?

Mr. LEMIEUX. On his own motion, without the government interfering. He is above the government in these courts.

Mr. STOCKTON. Will the Solicitor General state a case to me in which without the suggestion of counsel for the government the judge has taken the matter into his own hands and gone further and called further evidence ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It has been in every case where the judge has differed with the referee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to hear of one case. I have been practising in the Exchequer Court a great many years and I never heard of one. My hon. friend (Mr. Stockton) asked the Solicitor General for one case where the judge of the Exchequer Court without suggestion or motion from counsel for the Crown had overruled or asked for further evidence in respect of a report of a referee. Now I have a very fair knowledge of the practice of the Exchequer Court, at least up to two or three years ago, and I say I never heard of such a case and I do not think any other lawyers in the House except the Solicitor General ever heard of such a case. He says he can name 50 ; I would like him to name one.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I shall name one at once, the case of Paul against the Crown. In that case——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Without suggestion from counsel for the Crown.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Without any suggestion whatever.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is one.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I remember this one, there are so many I cannot recall the names for the moment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When was that case decided ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. A few months ago. Here is what happens. The referee is appointed, the evidence is heard by that referee. There are two counsel, one acting for the Crown, sometimes the Solicitor General, sometimes an agent of the department. The other party is represented also by his counsel. Then the report is made to the judge and the judge without any interference takes it upon himself not to accept the report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is where the counsel for the Crown do not object.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He does not consult even the counsel for the Crown, my hon. friend knows that surely.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I never saw him do it. My knowledge of the practice of the Exchequer Court is this : that the judge of the Exchequer Court, like every other judge in every other court I have heard of, leaves the conduct of the case to the counsel on each side. If he has taken a new course it is within the last two years, at least so far as cases from the province of Nova Scotia are concerned. I have been engaged in a good many cases and never knew him to do anything else. If counsel for the Crown declined to cross-examine witnesses brought by the claimant the judge of the Exchequer Court would not say a word. If counsel for the Crown declined to produce any evidence in contradiction to that brought by the claimant, the judge would have nothing to say, and if the counsel for the Crown made no objection when counsel for the claimant made motion for a judgment, the judge of the Exchequer Court would, so far as my experience goes, confirm the report.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The judge has acted differently to my knowledge and the law is there permitting him to ignore the report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not the point. My hon. friend does not seem to be able to understand the point. When counsel for the Crown raises objection there is a most ample power for the judge ; every one knows that. But the Solicitor General says that the judge of the Exchequer Court is in the habit of practically taking the case out of the hands of counsel for the Crown and doing their duty himself.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am not saying that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It must be because he has learned a certain distrust of these counsel for the Crown that he has taken this course. He never did it in my experience certainly. He always supposes that counsel know more about their own cases than he does and leaves it to them to shape their case as they see fit. He leaves it to them to argue the case as they see fit, just as the judges in every court do. The judges do not raise objections which are not put forward by counsel on behalf of their own clients. To do so would be to take the case out of the hands of the counsel ; and most counsel, if they found a judge undertaking a course, which my hon. friend says is now the universal practice in the Exchequer Court, would simply take off their gowns and retire from the conduct of the case. I should certainly do so if the judge of any court undertook to conduct my case for me and to raise objections on behalf of my client that I did not propose to raise. It seems to me most unusual, yet I am bound to accept my hon. friend's statement that not only has it occurred in his practice but it is the almost universal practice.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I shall state the case again, as my hon. friend appears to believe I do not understand the question. I say that many times a judge may not sit personally in a case but appoint a referee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not what we are discussing. Every one understands that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The referee will make a report and the judge is not bound by that report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman went a great deal further. He said that where the counsel for the Crown made no objection whatever to the report, the judge would take the case out of his hands and himself conduct the case.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I never saw it done.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It happens every day in the Exchequer Court.

Mr. LENNOX. The position taken by the hon. the Solicitor General in very extraordinary. There are a good many lawyers in this House, and I think he has stated a position new to almost every and perhaps to every lawyer in the House. The position he takes is that the judge of the Exchquer Court is not the judge but really the counsel, and the counsel, I understand, on behalf of the Crown. The Minister of Militia took the position, in the first instance, and it was followed up by the Solicitor General and the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt), that of his own motion and without any suggestion from counsel the judge of the Exchequer Court would take the matter into his own hands and practically say to the counsel: You sit down. I am going to conduct this case. Well, although I am not a lawyer of prominence, I would not put up with any such treatment from any judge. I know that in some instances a judge will undertake to ask a question or two but very rarely indeed; but to say that in fifty cases out a hundred a judge will take the matter in his own hands is a very poor compliment indeed to the counsel acting for the Crown and a very poor compliment to the government who engage such counsel. It is well the people should know—assuming that the Solicitor General is correct—the kind of baby counsel which the Crown must have engaged cases before the Exchequer Court, because no counsel of sufficient ability to conduct an important case before the Exchequer Court would put up with that kind of treatment.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Let me point out to the hon. gentleman the last line of section 98:

> The judge may, in his discretion, decline to act on the evidence.

Mr. STOCKTON. That is not what we are discussing. In the ordinary course of his duties, the judge has that discretion under the Act, but he would only use it on a suggestion from the Crown counsel, and the position taken by the Solicitor General to-day is that the judge of the Exchequer Court is the counsel for the government and not the judge as between the Crown and the subject to see that fair compensation is given for property taken. Well, let me say that the judge is not the counsel. He is there to hold the scales evenly betwen the Crown and the subject. The counsel on either side present the case as they think best, and the judge adjudicates on the case as presented.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Solicitor General will find almost the same words in any statute defining the powers of a judge. Certainly the Court of Appeal may in its discretion grant a new trial, but it does not act on that discretion without an application from counsel.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Exchequer Court has very exceptional power. You would not find the same in any court, but it is to be found in the statute governing the Exchequer Court.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the Minister of Finance be good enough to obtain the evidence in connection with this report of the referee and have it laid on the table?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know that we have any access to the court which is not open to my hon. friend. We all stand equal before the courts. He is as strong a man before the courts as the Minister of Justice.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The government might pay for the copying of the report and a private individual might have to pay for it himself.

Mr. FIELDING. If that is the only difficulty, I do not think it need make any trouble.

Mr. FOSTER. In the event of further evidence being taken, would the government take measures to ascertain the price at which these intermediaries got the property at first? Even though that evidence be so arranged that the award of $38,400 is confirmed, after the statements made in the House that a large proportion of this land was bought at $1 an acre, will the government not take such measures as may be necessary to avoid paying such an extraordinary, such a criminal amount for that land?

Mr. FIELDING. I shall call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the statement made. He is responsible for the management of this case, as for all others before the Exchequer Court, and if the evidence already taken is in any way insufficient, I presume my hon. colleague will find it his duty to seek further evidence. I can offer no opinion. All I can say is that I shall call his attention to the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all my hon. friend can do. What I wanted to have was if possible a promise not to pay that amount of money with the acquiescence of the government.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I may add that from the moment the Department of Militia decided to take expropriation proceedings—as was done in the case of the rifle range at Ottawa and as is usually done—the whole matter was handed over to the Department of Justice, and it went out of the hands of the Militia Department.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Arts, agriculture and statistics—Archives—further amount required, including the salary of F. W. Grey, from March 1, 1905, at $75 per month, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $3,000.

Hon SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). For a number of years we have had an officer of the archives branch in Paris picking out documents bearing on Canadian history. These are to be copied. But the force who have been copying these documents have not been able to copy nearly as many as have been picked out. The result is that, while documents have been discovered bearing upon our history—and copies of which we ought to have—to a number sufficient to fill about 3,000 volumes, we have actually copied and on the shelves here only about 300 volumes. The archivist has asked that we should proceed more rapidly with this work and this we have been doing for the last few months. An additional amount is required for this work. Moreover the archivist has been trying to prepare an indexed catalogue of the works of his branch. There has never been a complete reference book of the papers and documents. For the work of preparing such a catalogue Mr. Grey has been engaged. I found it necessary to pay him $75 a month, which the Auditor General says is not consistent with the Civil Service Act.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is Mr. Grey?

Mr. FISHER. He was professor of literature in the University of Ottawa until last fall. He has special qualifications for this work, being a well educated, well informed literary man. To explain why this item is put in this way: 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act' I may explain, that, until recently the archives vote was supposed to be used without reference to the Civil Service Act. The Auditor General had allowed people to be appointed to that branch without passing the civil service examination. Hitherto I have been going on that assumption. But, not long ago, the Auditor General made up his mind that this was not consistent with the Civil Service Act. For the purpose of paying the people who had been engaged on the original understanding, it is necessary to put in these words.

Mr. FOSTER.

Arts, agriculture and statistics—for the purpose of assembling at Ottawa and nationalizing live stock records of the Dominion, $5,000.

Mr. FISHER. I wish to reduce this vote, by $2,000. I shall have to ask for the whole $5,000 eventually, but I find that I shall not be able to spend more than $3,000 on this service before July 1st.

Mr. FOSTER. I received a letter a short time ago from the Holstein breeders. I have not the letter at hand at the moment, but as I recollect it, they seemed to think that too much respect had been paid to the freight handlers' side of the question. The minister will probably know to what I am alluding and will be able to explain it.

Mr. FISHER. I think I can explain it. Probably my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has received the same representations which have been made to myself. I do not think the difficulty he mentions is exactly the one which is most dwelt upon by the Holstein breeders. In assembling the records so that the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa might be able to affix the official stamp to the pedigree certificates, I found, on investigation, that it was absolutely necessary, as a practical matter, that the keeping of the records should be conducted here and not at other points in the country.

Mr. FOSTER. That is it.

Mr. FISHER. The Holstein breeders have desired to keep their records still at a place called St. George, in Western Ontario. I have had to say to them that I did not see how it was practically possible for us to affix the stamp of the department to these records, and examine them in the way we ought to do before affixing that stamp, unless the records were kept here. All the other record associations have agreed to transfer their records here. I have made that a part of the conditions on which the official stamp could be affixed, and I have informed the Holstein breeders that I am ready to do in their case what I have done in the case of other breeders, but I cannot see how I can make them an exception, when I have made this condition a sine qua non with the other associations.

Mr. FOSTER. That would seem fair at first glance. But are there no exceptional circumstances in the position of the breeders of Holsteins? I understand they have hitherto kept their records at St. George. I suppose they have an office there and that all breeders of Holsteins send in their pedigrees to that office?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, I take it their objection is that they would be put to expense by establishing an office here?

Mr FISHER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then what is it?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know what it is. I have been given various reasons for it, but the Holstein breeders have given no reason except that they desired to keep their records at St. George. Other breeders' associations have transferred their records from the places where they were formerly kept. More of them were kept in Toronto, and these have been transferred to Ottawa. Some records were kept in Nova Scotia and some in New Brunswick, and these have been transferred here. There are some in Quebec which I hope will be transferred here within a few weeks or months, some who have made objection. But they all agree without exception that it is in the interest of the whole work that the records should be transferred here. The Holstein people are the only ones that have yet held out any objection.

Mr. LENNOX. How many associations will transfer their records here ?

Mr. FISHER. I think about a dozen.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand the minister will expend $5,000 altogether, and $3,000 now. Would he tell us how this money is to be expended?

Mr. FISHER. I must premise that explanation by one or two statements. The nationalization of the records is for the purpose of combining all the records so that there shall be only one herd book for any one breed. There have been in some cases several herd books.

Mr. LENNOX. The statutes said only one association.

Mr. FISHER. The Dominion statute said there should be only one national association, but there have been several local ones. For instance, in the province of Quebec there is a herd book in which various kinds of cattle, sheep and swine are all registered. Each individual breed has been registered in Toronto, called The Dominion Swine Breeder's Records. But in the province of Quebec, Yorkshire swine and Berkshire swine have been registered. Now the object of the nationalization of the records is to do away with all these, so that there may be only one national record. For that purpose we have got to assemble here the various records that have been in existence. We find that with those records are certain books and documents which it is necessary to have here for the proper carrying on in future of this work. When an application comes in for registration, we have to refer to the books to see whether the pedigree is right for registration. I have had to make financial arrangements with some of these smaller herd books for the purpose of getting their books made up. For instance, I have had to pay to the Nova Scotia Department of Agriculture, $300 in consideration of which they have agreed to send all their books and documents up here. I have made an arrangement with Mr. Henry Wade, of Toronto, for a number of books which are his private property, not the property of the Breeders' Association but which are very necessary to have for my officers here to carry on this work in the department. I have had to pay $500 for those books. I have had to make an arrangement with the New Brunswick government and pay them $600 for what they have. I expect to have to make an arrangement with the Quebec breeders for some of their records, I do not know how much I shall have to pay. Besides that, we will have to purchase a considerable number of record books. For instance, we will have to procure volumes of shorthorn records in England, we will have to have in some cases certain record books in the United States, so as to be able to refer back when an application comes in ; we have to buy these books. The record associations themselves have books many of which we will have to obtain for the purpose of the department. It is for these purposes that this money is needed. We have already made arrangements which involve an expenditure of nearly $2,000, and I expect before the 1st of July to have to expend another $1,000. The rest of this money I will not expend until after the 1st of July. I hope $5,000 will cover our needs, but I am not sure of it.

Mr. LENNOX. The $5,000 are the initial expenses to put it on a working basis ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. I hope that will do, but that does not mean for the expenses of the current year. That will come in under the vote for the live stock division, which I will ask parliament to grant in a short time.

Mr. LENNOX. That will be granted from year to year to keep it going.

Mr. FISHER. That will be part of a large vote which I ask parliament for my live stock association.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Prospectively, how much will that vote be?

Mr. FISHER. It will be larger for the next fiscal year than it is for this year. It covers many objects. I think I shall have to ask for about $50,000 next year. I may say that is part of the large vote which appears in the main estimates of $220,000 to cover the agriculture and dairying branches which used to be under Professor Robertson.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like the minister to state about what he thinks the actual expense will be of the change that was made by the recent Act, that is, to keep this national register in operation once it is assembled here at Ottawa.

Mr. FISHER. I think it will cost about $3,000 a year in the future.

Mr. LENNOX. Who gets the fee ?

Mr. FISHER. That fee goes to the Breeders' Association, we have nothing to do with it. The agreement which this association signed with me specifies distinctly that I shall have nothing whatever to do with their finances, because those are the finances of the individual breeders' associations. I may say that those breeders have met together and have appointed a small committee, of whom Mr. Robert Miller is the chairman and this committee have the management of their affairs. All we do is to provide for the necessary examination of the certificates of pedigree. We have to supply them with house room for their work when they are brought here, and supply the stationery.

Mr. FOSTER. The information I have is to the effect that there was a convention held in March, 1904, to discuss this matter and to organize, and that the stock breeders generally did not consider it wise to change their offices for various reasons. Their objections in that regard were set at rest by statements made by the minister, and by the live stock commissioner. Who is the live stock commissioner?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. F. W. Hodgson.

Mr. FOSTER. All the stockmen who had gathered and had discussed the matter were not favourable to the central office being established at Ottawa. He says that the breeders left that convention in 1904 thinking that they had been met sympathetically by the minister and the live stock commissioner, but they were disappointed, when, in the months of January and February last, they were met by the commissioner who referred to them certain letters from railroad freight managers which were in the line of favouring the central office at Ottawa. Most of the breeders associations fell in on that account with what they were not very well satisfied with the exception of the Holstein breeders association, and they stood out against it. A memorial, I dare say, has already been received by the hon. minister from the breeders belonging to that association. My informant says :

> We do not want to be coerced into doing that which we do not believe to be contrary to the interests of our association.

He seems to think that it is the live stock breeders in conjunction with the railway people who are pressing for this. What interest would the railway people have in it ?

Mr. FISHER. I will explain that when my hon. friend sits down.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the chief part of the information outside of the memorial which the hon. minister has.

Mr. FISHER. I will explain to my hon. friend that his correspondent is mixing up two things that are entirely different. The question of the railways, which I will deal with at once, has nothing whatever to do with the transference to Ottawa of the records. For some time back—perhaps for six or seven years—my department has been dealing with the railways with the object of securing special rates for thoroughbred live stock in Canada. We have been very successful in this inasmuch as when a certificate of pedigree has been presented with a way-bill of registered live stock the railways have given as low as less than half the usual rates.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be for breeding purposes ?

Mr. FISHER. For breeding purposes and only for thoroughbred registered stock. That was done through the mediation of my live stock commissioner.

Mr. LENNOX. Would that include shipments for exhibition purposes too ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. LENNOX. Would it include sending stock to exhibitions ?

Mr. FISHER. That is another matter. We have also obtained special rates for exhibitions, but what I am speaking of are the ordinary shipments by farmers which are made every day in the year. If a farmer in western Ontario wants to buy a bull for the improvement of stock in Ottawa or in this neighbourhood he can get about half rate on the shipment of that animal if he presents a certificate showing that the animal is thoroughbred. In the same way, if you want to send an animal to the Northwest Territories, or the maritime provinces, or anywhere in Canada, this arrangement is made for the special purpose of encouraging the improvement of stock. We appealed to the railways and after a good deal of negotiation and trouble we got a special rate. I must congratulate the railways upon being sufficiently public-spirited to agree to this arrangement in the interest of live stock men. Difficulties were constantly arising as to what pedigrees should be recognized. There were different kinds of pedigrees and the railway companies frequently made complaint to us, as the department at whose instigation and at whose request this privilege was given, saying that they were troubled and bothered because they got all sorts of pedigrees issued by different associations and they did not know which to recognize. This came to a head last winter when the railway companies threatened that they would have to abrogate the privilege. When it came to that point the question of the nationalization of records was proceeding, and we expressed the hope that in a short time we would be able to issue national records when all other records in Canada would be practically wiped out or ignored. In the process of these negotiations the railways came to the live stock commissioner and through him to me and they said : We will continue these rates, but we want you to indicate to us which records we are to recognize. My colleague, the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), has also come to me and asked what records he should recognize of animals brought in from abroad for breeding purposes and entitled to free entry, and I have instructed my live stock commissioner to go into the matter to see what report he can make upon it. While the movement for the nationalization of records was in progress the suggestion was made, either by the railways or the live stock commissioner—I forget which—that we should get up a certain form of record or pedigree, that that should be the recognized form and that the railways, when they get that kind of form, would know at once that it was the recognized pedigree and they must give the better rates. That negotiation is in process to-day and I think it is very well understood that the railways are only going to recognize pedigrees which are stamped by the Department of Agriculture.

But, that point has nothing whatever to do with the transference of the records to Ottawa. It is a matter of general application. It is a matter with which personally I have very little to do except to authorize my live stock commissioner to go ahead. It is a matter in which the live stock commissioner, working in harmony with the officials and the representatives of different breeders' associations, has been negotiating with the rest. That matter as to the transference of the records here has been described a little incorrectly, or, at least, certainly not consistently with my interpretation of what occurred. My hon. friend says from this letter that at the convention that took place a year ago last March in Ottawa the live stock men asked for the nationalization of the records but wanted to keep their records in their own hands. I said certainly that I would not consent for a moment on behalf of the Department of Agriculture to interfere with the management of the records, but I did point out very clearly to them that to do the work which they asked me to do, namely, to affix the departmental stamp to each pedigree as it was issued, required that an officer of mine should have access to their books, should have an opportunity of looking over and investigating the way in which they were issuing their pedigrees, or else I could not take the responsibility of affixing a government seal to these pedigrees. If I did that without examining into the method pursued it would be a mere perfunctory operation which would be of no value to them, which would do no good and which might discredit the department. If it were to be anything more than a mere perfunctory operation it would require that my officer should see how the certificates were issued by each record association, and that he should satisfy himself that they were carrying on that work not in a way dictated by us but in accordance with their own rules and regulations. That is the whole sum and substance of our supervision.

Mr. FOSTER. Then they will have to have an office here and keep the books here ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. I do not see how that work could be satisfactorily performed unless the issuing of these pedigrees by all these associations is carried on here. That is the whole sum and substance of the difficulty or difference or grievance. I may say that up to the present time every breeders' association which has been in negotiation with my department has acceded to my request in that respect, with the single exception of the Holstein Breeders' Association.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it a matter of compulsion, or is it optional with themselves ?

Mr. FISHER. Entirely optional.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. They may come around yet ?

Mr. FISHER. They may. I wrote to them the other day, impressing upon them that they would stand in the way of their own interests if they held out in this case.

Mr. BLAIN. What explanation do the Holstein men give ?

Mr. FISHER. I have had no explanation, except that they do not wish to move to Ottawa, the present holder of the office preferring to retain it in his own hands.

Mr. BLAIN. What is his name ?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Clemons.

Mr. HERRON. Where is the office of the Holstein Breeders' Association at present ?

Mr. FISHER. At St. George, in the county of Brant.

Mr. HERRON. I may say that the people of the west consider that the live stock department in charge of Mr. Hodgson is doing a very valuable work in the way of bringing the western men and the eastern men engaged in stock interests together. That department has done a great deal to advance the interests of the stockmen of the west, especially by securing for us better facilities for shipping stock on the railways. I hope the work will be continued.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like the minister to inform the committee whether he will continue to incorporate other associations, or whether the policy will be limited to those now in existence ?

Mr. FISHER. By the law I can only incorporate one association for each breed. There are some breeds which are not incorporated, but I would be very glad if they could fulfil the conditions to be incorporated, and I have instructed the Live Stock Commissioner to encourage that as much as possible. For instance, there is no association of the breeders of thoroughbred horses in Canada. Canadian breeders have to register in the United States. I think it would be very desirable, in the interest of horse breeding in Canada, to have such an association, and I would be glad to encourage it in every way. However, it is quite open to the breeders of thoroughbred horses to have such an association or not, just as they choose. There is no coercion on the part of the department, but my policy is to encourage and help it in every way possible.

Mr. LENNOX. I understood that the Act which was introduced a little while ago was by way of compromise to get over a difficulty and have the various associations concentrated here. Having that in view, I thought probably the policy of the government would be not to establish any more associations, with the object of completely nationalizing this matter in the end, by getting the various associations to surrender their rights and to come under the control of the government. I am not saying that would be the best policy, because I am not sufficiently informed to form an opinion, but I want to know if that was the view of the government.

Mr. FISHER. With regard to getting the associations under the control of the government, my policy is the very opposite. I think it is in the interest of the country that the management of these associations should be in the hands of the breeders and not under the control of the government or of any department. At the same time, I think the department can serve these people in a limited way, and I want to do that. With regard to forming new associations, there can be only one association for each distinct breed or class of animals. Where one is already formed, no other can be formed.

Mr. LENNOX. What I referred to was the registration being in the hands of the government and other matters being in the hands of the different associations.

Mr. FISHER. The breeders do not think so, and I have not wished in any way to interfere with that feeling on their part. In all my communications with them I have been very careful to insist that the government would take upon itself just as little interference with their work as was possible to carry out their views, and what I am doing is being done only at their request. I want it thoroughly understood by the country that neither I nor any other officer of my department desires or will be permitted to encroach in any way upon the rights and privileges of the breeders themselves in their own sphere.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I think what brought up this whole question of nationalizing the records were the difficulties which the breeders had with the railways, which they have had for several years in connection with the shipping of thoroughbred live stock. The people of the west could get a thoroughbred animal brought to the west from any place in the east at half rates. The difficulty arose in regard to horses. The Clydesdale Association is the recognized association; but there is another association called the Draught Horse Association, which relates to horses which are not thoroughbred Clyde horses, but which may be part Shire and part Clyde. That association issues pedigrees, and these horses were coming out to the western country and being sold as thoroughbred horses. The railways got on to this, and notified the thoroughbred association that the arrangements made with them would be cancelled unless carried out as agreed. That induced the breeders to look into the matter to see what could be done, and the question came up of nationalizing all associations, with headquarters at Ottawa; and the breeders of thoroughbred stock are very anxious that this should be carried out. The minister has stated correctly that the management of every different breed is in the hands of the breeders, while the seal of the government is put on the certificate of any association when the government is satisfied that it is a proper one.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. Is there any standard of what constitutes a thoroughbred animal? I suppose there is no means in the hands of the government for checking the registration of animals which are not thoroughbred, though they may be known as such in different sections of the country. It seems to me that in order to make the certificate valuable, there ought to be some means of showing that an animal is really a thoroughbred animal of a certain recognized class.

Mr. FISHER. The breeders themselves are very jealous in regard to that; I do not think anybody could be more so. As a safeguard, however, I may say that under our Dominion Act for the incorporation of record associations the rules and by-laws of the association have to be submitted to the Department of Agriculture and approved before the charter is issued. Then the pedigrees have to be issued under these rules and regulations and the chief use of my officer in examining the pedigree before he stamps it with the official seal is to see that it is issued properly, subject to those rules and regulations. We have first of all to acknowledge the correctness and the propriety of these rules and regulations and then all we have to see is that the pedigree is issued under those rules and regulations. If the rules regarding a society did not secure that it should be a properly bred animal we would not sanction them and would not give a charter of incorporation to that society.

Mr. STAPLES. I have had a little experience in bringing stock to the west. Two or three years ago I purchased a number of heifers in the east at a certain price, getting about two-thirds of a carload of pure bred live stock. Then I filled up the car with high grade heifers, but I found that I could not get the benefit of the special rate for that reason. I do not know whether anything could be done in connection with the railway companies to give a person who wanted to bring out say half a carload of pure bred stock and the balance grades the benefit of the special rate. I figured the matter out from every point, and I found that it was to my advantage to pay the regular shipping rate, the carload rate, and take the full carload. I only wanted about twenty pure bred, and when I put in the other ten I found it was cheaper for me to pay the regular rate. It is not every farmer who can afford and has the capital to invest in a full carload of pure bred stock and therefore he receives no benefit from the special rate. Some arrangement should be made between the association and the railway companies whereby farmers would be able to get the benefit of the special rates. I was told by the railway companies that if every one of these had been thoroughbred except one I would have to pay the full rate. It would be a good thing for the breeders in the east as well as those in the west if some arrangement could be made whereby we would have a special rate on less than a full carload.

Mr. FISHER. Arrangements have been made for a special rate for the carriage of pure bred stock. Of course if you do not take a carload you cannot get the carload rate. The arrangement most usually practised is for two or three people to combine together and take up a carload, in which case they get not only the benefit of the rates, but also cheaper care. However, I shall bring the matter before my live stock officials and see if some improvement cannot be made.

Mr. STAPLES. It is not easy to go among your neighbours and find out which one wants to get thoroughbred stock. I am speaking of an individual case.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the scale of rates that the railroad will give under the Dominion Association of record as compared with the rates that are being given already to the individual breeders' association ?

Mr. FISHER. There is no difference. Lately we have had just as good rates as we expect to have in the future unless we can make better arrangements.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it will not make them any higher ?

Mr. FISHER. I hope that perhaps in the future we will be able to get better terms than in the past. What I meant was that the railways found so much confusion regarding pedigrees that they threatened to take away the advantage.

Cattle quarantine—further amount required, $40,000.

Mr. LENNOX. How much was the old amount?

Mr. FISHER. A hundred and fifty, I think.

Mr. ELSON. I wish to ask the minister what course is usually pursued in regard to quarantining cattle?

Mr. FISHER. That is rather a broad question. Does my hon. friend mean cattle coming into the country?

Mr. ELSON. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. They are kept for ninety days in quarantine at the quarantine station when coming in from Europe or any port not in America. We have no detention on the American frontier, except that if they do not bring a certificate that there is no disease where they came from with certain exceptions, and if they do not bring a turberculine test certificate we detain them until they are tested. That takes two or three days.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to ask for some information with respect to the spread of glanders among horses. I have a communication here from a gentleman in my own county. I shall not read it all but shall quote a paragraph or two. He says :

About August 1st last I bought a horse from a farmer near here, and about September 30th the government veterinarian called and found the said horse to have symptoms of glanders and ordered same to be destroyed, which was done in his presence, but nothing whatever has been done by way of remuneration for this horse which cost me $65.

Further on he says :

I was put to about $25 expense by being unable to use my stable and by pulling down and rebuilding same. You will kindly take this matter up for me with the proper parties, which I hope will act wisely in the matter.

(Sgd.) J. M. BRUMMELL,
Mona Road.

February 14, 1905.

This seems to be a case of hardship, but it is possible the minister may be able to give the committee a satisfactory explanation. In looking over the report of the Dominion veterinarian, Doctor J. G. Rutherford, I find several references to the question of the spread of glanders among horses. At page 11 of that report the gentleman says :

I regret to have to report that it has been necessary, during the past year, to deal with a large number of cases of glanders. The disease has, as usual, prevailed to a greater extent in the Northwest Territories than elsewhere in the Dominion, 219 horses having been destroyed there during the year. This is a considerable increase over previous years.

The minister will notice that the spread of glanders in the Northwest Territories is on the increase. Further on he says:

The serious outbreak discovered in the Ottawa district in August, 1902, has claimed a great deal of attention, and largely occupied the time of several of our officers.

A number of minor outbreaks have also been dealt with in Ontario and Quebec, while several cases have occurred in British Columbia. The disease made its appearance in the Yukon Territory during the winter months, and a considerable number of horses have been destroyed by the territorial authorities. 313 horses have been killed during the year by our officers, while a very large number of contact animals have been submitted to the mallein test and dealt with on the system outlined in my report of last year.

Coming to the question of compensation, at the same page, he says :

I would, however, strongly recommend that some compensation should be paid to owners of horses slaughtered after reacting to the third test, so long as they show no clinical symptoms of the disease. While there may be a question as to the necessity, or even the wisdom, of paying compensation for horses killed when clinically affected such animals being highly dangerous not only to other horses but also to human beings.

It appears, in the opinion of the chief veterinary, that horses afflicted with glanders are dangerous, not only to other horses with whom they come in contact, but to human beings such as the man engaged in taking care of them and working them.

Further on he says :

The experience of all other countries goes to show that the payment of a reasonable compensation for animals destroyed is one of the strongest inducements to owners to report outbreaks of disease to the proper authorities.

Then he gives the number of horses destroyed by the various veterinary inspectors in different parts of the Dominion. When a veterinary surgeon enters a farmer's stable, finds a horse affected with glanders, and decides, after thorough examination, that the animal should be killed and orders it to be killed for the better protection of the other horses in that neighbourhood, it seems to me that the government should make some provision for the payment of at least some portion of the amount which the farmer has to lose. Take the case of the gentleman I have mentioned, who bought a horse for $65, which the veterinary ordered to be killed. It was killed in his presence, so that the owner lost the $65 and in addition had to pull down and rebuild his stable at a cost of $25. The animal was killed in his own interest to some extent but also, according to the report of the chief veterinary, in the interests of the other owners of horses in that neighbourhood. It will be remembered that this man bought the horse from one of his own neighbours, which the veterinary surgeon ordered to be destroyed. I think that the law should be so changed that when an animal of this kind is killed the government should pay him some compensation.

Mr. FISHER. I agree with my hon. friend, but the question is one that has come up a good many times in this House, and there has always been very considerable disinclination shown by parliament to the payment of compensation. My hon. friend can well remember the discussions we have had regarding the payment of compensation in the case of animals infected with tuberculosis, which were killed to prevent the spread of the disease, and the same question has arisen on other occasions in connection with other diseases. There have been sporadic cases of glanders throughout the country, but more largely in the Northwest than in the east, and the department did not see its way clear to grant compensation, in the face of the views expressed in parliament. No doubt there were some individual cases of hardship. In fact some came before me that concerning which I felt the greatest hesitancy, but at the same time I did not see how I could give compensation without being properly authorized. The disease, however, seemed to be spreading, and it was represented to me that it was because no compensation was being paid. On this account the owners of animals afflicted with the disease were keeping them concealed and using them and spreading the disease, whereas if compensation were allowed they would perhaps have drawn the attention of the veterinaries to the cases and have been willing to have the animals slaughtered. After discussing the matter very carefully with my colleagues last summer and also in consequence partly of certain discussions here when we amended the Contagious Diseases of Animals' Act, I eventually recommended the passing of an order which would authorize me to pay compensation where the animals were clinically affected. An animal is clinically affected when the disease is apparent to the ordinary uneducated eye. The owner could see that the animal was diseased without knowing what the disease was. Under such circumstances we felt that the animal had reached the stage when it was practically worthless and therefore we need not pay any compensation. However, we passed the order on the 19th September last, authorizing me to pay compensation when the animals were not clinically affected, but reacted to the mallein test, which is supposed to be an absolute proof of the presence of glanders. My veterinary said that the danger of spreading the disease was not so great in the case of animals clinically affected as in the case of animals which had come in contact with those and had become merely affected by the disease but did not show it, but in which the disease was liable at any moment to show. The result was that when an animal was found to have come in contact with one clinically affected, we tested it with the mallein test. But first of all we made regulations by which, at the option of the owner, he might have the animal quarantined. Otherwise it would be slaughtered and no compensation given.

This went on some little time, and we found a great deal of feeling throughout the country. Some people got compensation and their neighbours did not. It was difficult to explain the difference between one case and another. The ordinary person who did not receive the explanation could not understand the difference and many felt they were being badly treated. This occasioned a great deal of difficulty. And we found again that people who had clinically affected horses were using them as much as they could, but trying to conceal the symptoms, and probably spreading the disease. Many representations were made to me by members of parliament and others throughout the country; and, eventually, after careful consideration, it was decided to undertake a vigorous campaign against the disease and stamp it out as far as possible. For this purpose, we decided to pay compensation in every case and to slaughter all horses affected, wherever found, without reference to the desire of the owner. On that understanding a further Order in Council was passed on the 25th of March last, authorizing me to slaughter horses affected with glanders and to pay the compensation which the law provides in other similar cases.

Mr. BLAIN. What would that be ?

Mr. FISHER. Two-thirds of the value of the animal as estimated by the veterinary surgeon who authorizes the slaughter. This is the same as in the case of other animals slaughtered under similar circumstances. I find that, since this Order in Council was passed and with the activity with which I considered it necessary to prosecute this campaign to stamp out this disease, we are killing a great many horses and paying out a very large amount of money. I shall be obliged to ask parliament, for the next year, to give me a very considerably larger sum to deal with this disease in this way.

Mr. BLAIN. How much has been paid out since this order came into force in March last ?

Mr. FISHER. Since the commencement of payment, the sum paid out is $29,000.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Mostly in what part of the Dominion ?

Mr. FISHER. Wherever a case has occurred.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Where has the disease been most prevalent ?

Mr. FISHER. In the Northwest. At present there are two or three outbreaks in Quebec that have been occasioning a good deal of trouble. But the Northwest appears to be the chief seat of the disease. It is about a year or a year and a half ago that we first found cases in Quebec. There have been a good many about Ottawa. Last summer or fall, about 75 or 80 horses were slaughtered within five miles of where we sit.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Can that be traced to the importation of western or Mexican horses ?

Mr. FISHER. No, I do not think so. That statement has been made, and it may be correct; but we have no proof, and I think we would have had proof if it had been true.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. This is going to run into a large sum of money.

Mr. FISHER. Yes. I have told my colleagues that I would probably have to ask for $100,000 additional.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the hon. minister paid out any sums for horses in the Northwest ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I think so. We have been dealing with every part of the country exactly the same.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. A great many horses were killed by order of the veterinary of the Mounted Police at Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. FISHER. When ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Last November and December.

Mr. FISHER. If they were not clinically affected we would pay compensation for them. I have already explained that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Some complained that the veterinary had ordered horses to be killed that need not have been killed. I refer to the country east and north of Beaver lake.

Mr. FISHER. I can look up that instance. We have constantly had representations of that kind, and I have had them carefully looked into. I have been disposed to deal with such cases on the principle of giving the owner the benefit of the doubt, because I have felt that often it was a case of hardship. Still, I never had authority to pay compensation for the slaughter of horses for glanders until September 19th last. Many cases occurred before that—scattered cases. There were many cases of hardship in the Northwest in the case of settlers whom I would have been glad to deal with generously had I had authority to do anything, but I could not give compensation because the Order in Council was not passed until September 19.

Mr. STAPLES. Does the hon. minister include Manitoba when he speaks of the 'Northwest.'

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. STAPLES. How long is it since compensation was paid in Manitoba ?

Mr. FISHER. None was paid until September 19.

Mr. STAPLES. Have they been receiving compensation there since September 19?

Mr. FISHER. Any horses that were slaughtered by any of my officers since the 19th of September last were compensated for provided they were clinically affected. This was up to March 25, when the Order in Council was passed to allow me to pay for any horse slaughtered on account of glanders.

Mr. STAPLES. I have had a good deal to do with this question of glanders in Manitoba since I came here, because in my own district the people have sustained great losses. I have taken up this question with the chief veterinary officer, but he has only been allowing compensation in Manitoba since January last. I understand that compensation was not given until some arrangement was made between this government and the government of Manitoba. I think it would be only fair in Manitoba to those who have sustained losses through this cause that the rule should be made retroactive so as to place the people of Manitoba on the same level as the people of other provinces. During the months of December and January, I believe, about twenty-five horses were slaughtered in my own district for which no compensation was given. Those in other provinces who had sustained similar losses having been compensated, I feel that we are entitled to the same treatment.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Staples) is not fully seized of the facts. The orders for the slaughter of the horses to which he has referred were issued by the provincial government of Manitoba, and with that work I had nothing to do. While we were at work in this matter the provincial government also entered upon the work. The provincial government asked my department to take over the business of settling for horses killed on this account in Manitoba. I agreed to do this, but, at the same time, I said I could not be responsible for what the provincial officers had been doing, that I could only act through my own officers. The arrangement was concluded about January between the chief veterinary officer of the department and the provincial authorities. Since that time, I understand, the provincial government have not been doing any work in this line, but my officers have been doing the work. I will deal with Manitoba just as I have dealt with every other province, but I cannot undertake to pay compensation for horses, the order for slaughter of which was issued by the provincial government and carried out by the provincial officers. We only pay compensation under any circumstances, for any animals in any part of the country, the slaughter of which has been ordered by my own officers.

Mr. STAPLES. The provincial authorities, I understand, have turned the whole matter over now to the Dominion authorities, but when this matter was under the jurisdiction of the provincial government, and when those who had their horses slaughtered asked for compensation, the answer they invariably got was : We have nothing to do with it, it is under the jurisdiction of the federal government. Now, the provincial government, as I understand, were getting ready to hand over the entire jurisdiction to this government, the department here were willing to take it over. Now, as this transfer was contemplated ever since September, I think that those parties in the province of Manitoba who have had to lose their horses should receive compensation up to that date. I know farmers out there who had to slaughter their last horse, and they can ill afford to suffer the loss. There is another question. I would ask that the government here appoint local veterinaries as well as district veterinaries, I understand that the officers now looking after glanders in Manitoba are appointing certain veterinaries whose jurisdiction covers large districts. The local council asked that you should appoint as well a local veterinary in each municipality, and let them report to those who have jurisdiction over a larger district. I think the minister will see the force of that. A disease breaks out, and by the time you reach the man who has to issue a certificate, and before the horse can be slaughtered, the disease may have spread. There is another difficulty. According to the Act a person is not entitled to compensation unless the horse reacts to the third test. The trouble is that the moment the farmer—I won't say all the farmers, but a certain class of horse dealers—the moment they see a horse has the sign of glanders, they immediately trade him off. I believe that if fair compensation was granted for a horse that showed the slightest sign of the disease, we would much sooner stamp the disease out than we can do when we have to wait until the horse reacts to the third test.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Staples), not unnaturally, confuses these different orders. When we dealt with the question of the mallein test, we gave a certain option to the owner, that if he was not satisfied with the first test he might hold his horse in quarantine, in which case he could not sell it except under severe penalty, and the purchaser could get back at him without any trouble. He could hold the horse in quarantine and afterwards have it re-tested. This was an option which we gave to the owner, because sometimes he was not satisfied with the first test. But it is only when the owner desires to do so, and if the owner so desires and takes that option, we also say that we do not then undertake to pay compensation. If he is going to get his compensation he must hold to the first test. If he is not satisfied to do that, he can hold his horse in quarantine, and if it is retested and found to be diseased, he will have to lose his chance for compensation. We do that for the purpose of discouraging the holding of an animal in quarantine which we believe is diseased. I may say that the mallein test is looked upon by veterinaries as a pretty fair test, and we believe that a horse which has re-acted to the mallein test is diseased and ought to be slaughtered. If a man insists upon holding his horse after it has re-acted on that test, we think he ought to lose his chance of getting compensation. If he were to sell it in the way my hon. friend points out, he would be subject to a severe penalty under the law, and the purchaser would be easily able to get back his purchase money.

Mr. LAKE. I am glad to hear the Minister of Agriculture say that he has decided to grant compensation in all cases in which horses are slaughtered with the intention of trying to stamp out this disease of glanders. Only the other day, in one of the smaller newspapers of the Northwest, I saw a statement to the effect that the department had decided to grant this compensation in cases where there were clinical symptoms. It is a question in which I have been taking some interest, and I was surprised to find that it was not made more generally known that the department had changed its policy in this respect. There is another question that I would like to bring up in connection with this change of policy on the part of the department. On the 19th of September last, apparently, the minister was first authorized to grant compensation for horses which showed no clinical symptoms, but which re-acted to the mallein test. Between that time and the 25th of March, when the new policy was adopted, there have been a considerable number of horses slaughtered. It is not always quite certain, even when the symptoms appear to be clear to the veterinary who happens to be examining, that a horse is affected with glanders. Veterinaries are liable to err just as much as doctors. I am convinced in my experience with outbreaks of glanders in the Northwest that many mistakes have been made, that horses have been condemned as having clinical symptoms and have been slaughtered by the government officers which have not been affected by glanders at all. Now, it is probable there were many such cases between the 19th of September and the 25th of March, and I think it would be good policy in consideration of any cases of hardship which may have occurred during that period to make this order retroative, at any rate, as far back as the 19th of September last. I think no harm will be done by doing so. I further think that information in regard to the new policy of the department should be spread broadcast through the country. A great effort ought to be made to stamp out this disease. I think when it is known that the government will pay compensation, even when there are clinical symptoms present, it will encourage the owners of horses to bring out any horse which is under suspicion and have it examined. In this way the department will be more likely to stamp out the disease.

Mr. FISHER. It would be difficult to make this retroactive. I am afraid if we once began that we would never know where to stop. I would not like to start it.

Mr. STAPLES. Suppose I were able to testify from personal knowledge of cases where men had lost their horses slaughtered, and suppose that what I said was corroborated by other strong evidence, in that case I think compensation should be allowed. I might ask the hon. minister why it was that the province of Manitoba was not considered until some time in January, when other provinces were receiving compensation ?

Mr. FISHER. It was due to some objections the Manitoba government themselves had to handing over the work to us. We had been negotiating for some time and we were ready to do it, but they did not seem to want us to take it over.

Mr. LENNOX. Did not the Order in Council apply to all Canada ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. It was not undertaken in Manitoba because the local government officers were doing the work.

Mr. STAPLES. Why had you not the same right to go into Manitoba and deal with the disease there as you had in other provinces?

Mr. FISHER. Because the local government was doing the work.

Mr. STAPLES. They were doing the work because it was very necessary that they should do it until it was taken over. I do not see any reason why the province of Manitoba should be held up when all the other provinces in Canada were being assisted.

Mr. FISHER. They were not held up in the slightest degree.

Mr. STAPLES. They did not receive the same assistance.

Mr. FISHER. That was their own fault.

Mr. STAPLES. Will the hon. minister consider the advisability of appointing a local veterinary surgeon ?

Mr. FISHER. We tried that but we found that it does not work well at all. The local veterinary is frequently influenced by the feeling in the neighbourhood and we have to send a man from some other place. It is the duty of any local veterinary, whether called in or not, if he knows of a case, to report it immediately to the department. We have found that the handling of these cases, especially where compensation is concerned, by a local veterinary is very unsatisfactory and I could not undertake to return to that method.

Mr. BLAIN. Are the horses to be killed under the instructions of one veterinary examiner and as the result of one examination, or under the instructions of the government veterinary examiner without any corroborrative evidence ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, they are to be killed on the report of the government verterinary. That is the case in regard to the slaughter of other animals—hogs, cattle and horses.

Mr. BLAIN. I rather agree with my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) that the hon. minister should have made this Order in Council a little better known to the people of Canada, and I think, that, particularly when the House is in session, these special orders which are passed by the government should be made known to the House at least. Here is a special Order in Council passed on the 20th March when this House was in session by the instruction of the hon. Minister of Agriculture himself ; yet, the House has been in session continuously since January 11 to this moment and the hon. minister has never thought it to be his duty to make a statement to that effect in the House so that the members would know it. When Orders in Council are passed regarding important questions touching the whole of the people of Canada I think the hon. minister should make a statement to that effect, so that members of parliament should be well informed on these questions. My hon. friend shakes his head.

Mr. FISHER. I only shake my head because that is not the practice.

Mr. BLAIN. I am condemning the method because it is not the practice. Here is the hon. Minister of Agriculture, having charge of the duty of checking the spread of a very dangerous disease among horses, a certain Order in Council is adopted and then cancelled and a very important Order in Council is passed on the 19th of September, a few days before the issue of the writs for the general election. It may have some significance perhaps, but I will not discuss that. nor another Order in Council passed on March 20th. I am very much surprised that the hon. minister did not think it his duty to stand up and make a statement so that those representing different districts throughout Canada interested in this question would have an opportunity of communicating the contents of this Order in Council to their constituents instead of having to wait for several weeks for the people to be informed on the question. I condemn legislation by Order in Council.

Mr. LAKE. In reference to the question of whether this provision should be retroactive or not I wish to point out that it appears that a man whose horse was examined on the 25th March by the veterinary inspector, and found to have clinical symptoms, will receive compensation for the horse. If the veterinary happened to get round to his neighbour the day before, that neighbour would receive no compensation for his horse. It seems a case of hardship and there will be a great deal of heart burning in certain places in regard to this matter. As the department have practically agreed that this compensation should be granted for all horses slaughtered they should have gone one step farther and made the 19th September the date from which the payment of compensation should begin.

Mr. FOSTER. If the committee will pardon me a moment or two there is a question that is raised here which is I think a somewhat important one. Is this legislating by Order in Council for the payment of public money without the authorization of parliament ? If you can do this it seems to me you can do almost anything.

Mr. FIELDING. There must be an appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. There must be an appropriation, but there must be an appropriation for an expenditure in view of that legislation by Order in Council. No such policy as this has been pursued in Canada before. The Minister of Agriculture is launching out under an Order in Council which includes a ciass of expenditure which has not before been recognized by parliament but which is distinctly outside of the policy heretofore in vogue. For instance, there was no authority at all at a certain time to pay even part of the value of any horses which were killed on account of this disease. I think that policy remained up to or within a very short time ago—up to September, do I understand the minister ? Am I right in this that up to September there was no payment for horses that became diseased in this way and were slaughtered by the orders of the veterinary ?

Mr. FISHER. There was no provision by Order in Council, but the statute always has contemplated that provision being made by Order in Council at any time.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be, but the hon. minister comes down this afternoon and says that as a result of this Order in Council he will expend probably $100,000 this year. Does my hon. friend and does the government not think it would have been wiser to have brought the matter before parliament before such an expenditure was engaged in and made necessary, or does the government think that it is the proper way to launch the country into very large expenditures on a policy not before contemplated or authorized by the House? If by Order in Council you can take up new expenditures not heretofore authorized by the House, and if by Order in Council you can go on with operations which will call for hundreds of thousands of dollars it is taking the wrong step first, and what the hon. Minister of Agriculture should have done was to have come to the House and explained the grounds for his belief that a new policy should be introduced, and if after discussion parliament agreed with and endorsed it, then a new expenditure might be engaged in. It looks very much like bringing the country into a large expenditure simply under action by Order in Council.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend to a certain extent, perhaps, is right, but still not quite. There is a large vote every year for the protecting the health of animals and for cattle quarantine. That money is first of all voted by the House and it is then expended under the Animals Contagious Diseases Act, which Act authorizes the payment of compensation under Order in Council. The power was fully in existence when the vote was passed. It has been exercised in days gone by in regard to other diseases, and power was clearly and distinctly given by the Act to Council to pass an order at any time in regard to this class of payments.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is stretching it.

Mr. FISHER. To-day, for instance, there is $40,000 additional on this year, which is very largely due. Of course, if the House says that it will not grant the money, the Order in Council will have to be rescinded.

Mr. FOSTER. That same argument could be used in every case. I think it would be better to ask the House for the money first. My hon. friend talks about $100,000. If he makes a policy of this kind general throughout the Dominion, $100,000 would be a small amount compared with what he would have to pay. It would amount to hundreds of thousands. Then the point comes, how far should the government, acting for every individual in the country, bear the whole or the major part of the expense? Then, the minister will have to be very careful of two things: first, what diseases come over the border, and, secondly, what steps are taken in our own country to stamp out these diseases? A very profitable trade could be carried on in old and diseased horses if the government paid two-thirds of the cost in every case. In the third place, he will have to be careful about the veterinarians he appoints, on whose recommendations the money is paid. I quite agree with the minister that local veterinarians should not be relied on in every case. Not that they will not be found honest, but the pressure upon them is often too great to withstand.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. HERRON. I was going to ask the minister at six o'clock if this compensation allowed for animals slaughtered to prevent the spread of contagious diseases applies to anything except horses with glanders ?

Mr. FISHER. It does not apply to horses with any other disease. We pay compensation as a regular rule for hogs that are slaughtered for cholera. We also paid for many years for cattle affected with the Pictou cattle disease, a disease prevalent in a very small area of Nova Scotia and in Prince Edward Island. By the law the minister can pay compensation, but as a matter of practice the minister has never done so except on Order in Council. Council passes regulations authorizing such payments and the regulations do not authorize any payment of compensation except for hogs slaughtered for cholera, cattle affected with the Pictou cattle disease and for horses affected with glanders.

Mr. HERRON. The reason I asked the question is that in the locality where I live a very serious disease has broken out among horses this last year. Is the minister aware of the fact ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. HERRON. The maladie du coït.

Mr. FISHER. I think we have authority to pay compensation for horses affected with maladie du coït. I must have it looked up but I think that is the case.

Mr. HERRON. That I believe is a more serious and fatal disease than glanders at the present moment.

Mr. FISHER. It is very serious.

Mr. HERRON. And if it spreads to any extent I am certain it will be more serious. At present it prevails in a portion of Alberta, but we have had some hundreds of horses affected there in the last few years. I know one herd in particular where 20 mares and an entire horse worth about $1,000 have been under quarantine for 12 months before I left home. The owner has been ordered to slaughter the horses, but the animals are still alive. I think the government are experimenting to some extent with the disease at a large quarantine station at Lethbridge. I would like to know the results.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend is quite correct in what he says about this disease. It was introduced from the United States some little time ago. It was only recently, I think perhaps 15 or 16 months ago, that the chief veterinarian adviser of the department found some cases of it. Knowing the very serious character of the disease immediate active steps were taken to examine into the condition of affairs and as my hon. friend says it was found that there was a considerable number of affected animals. To act promptly we wished to see at first whether there was any necessity for slaughter, and we therefore cellected all the animals we could find affected with the disease in a certain quarantine station. My chief veterinary inspector went up and consulted with the horse owners and ranchers in the neighbourhood and some considerable number—speaking from memory I think over 200 horses—were collected in the quarantine grounds to which my hon. friend refers. We have been watching it there. The disease is chiefly visible at certain times in the year; in the spring it is more likely to be found than at any other time. My hon. friend probably is aware of the nature of the disease. The chief veterinary officer, Dr. Rutherford, is at present up in the Northwest examining further into the condition of affairs. He has been up there now two or three weeks and is going to stay there two or three weeks more for the express purpose of investigating the condition of affairs. We have not slaughtered animals for the disease yet wherever we find them; we quarantine them and if we slaughter them we will probably have to pay compensation according to the advice I receive from the chief veterinary officer. Here is a regulation relating to it:

> Every owner, breeder or importer of, or dealer in horses, shall on perceiving the appearance of maladie du coït, among the animals owned by him or under his special care, give immediate notice to the Minister of Agriculture and to the nearest veterinary inspector of the Department of Agriculture of the facts discovered by him as aforesaid.

Then it goes on about the entire horses and the rules against their running at large.

> No animal which is affected with maladie du coït shall be permitted to run at large or to come in contact with any animal which is not so affected.

And the officers were authorized to quarantine places where these horses had been, and they have power to isolate and quarantine these animals.

> The veterinary director general may, from time to time, order the slaughter, castration or other disposition of animals affected with maladie du coït.

Mr. HERRON.

We have not yet taken power to pay compensation. I believe that when my veterinary adviser returns, if the report is such as to require any slaughter of these animals we will be obliged to pay compensation. The law requires two-thirds of the value of the animal to be paid up to a certain sum. I hope within a few weeks to get a very complete report on the present condition of affairs, and until that comes I would not like to say anything more definite at the present time.

Mr. HERRON. Can the minister say where the disease came from? Is it supposed to have originated somewhere in Montana or Wyoming?

Mr. FISHER. There is a certain section of the United States where this disease has been common for a good many years. It was restricted in the United States by severe precautions and the authorities there asserted and our reports from there indicated that it was very circumscribed. Just where the disease came from into Canada we do not know. It had evidently been in the country for some little time before any report was made too late probably to make any satisfactory statement as to where it came from. I have no doubt it came across the line but just where I cannot say.

Mr. STAPLES. How any veterinary surgeon inspectors are there in Manitoba, who are they and where are they located?

Mr. FISHER. I am speaking rather from memory. There are Dr. Little, of Winnipeg, and Dr. McGillivray, also of Winnipeg, Dr. McGillivray, I think, did not reside in Winnipeg. I think he went there to live after he had been appointed one of our officers. Dr. Torrance is another. Then there is Dr. Robertson, who is at Emmerson, I think, and there is Dr. Schultz, of Gladstone.

Mr. STAPLES. Has each doctor a district?

Mr. FISHER. Each has authority anywhere in the province, but each probably does his main work in some district. Those in Winnipeg are liable to be called out of the city from any part of the province.

Mr. STAPLES. Upon what date did the minister take over the control of matters with regard to glanders in Manitoba?

Mr. FISHER. I have not the exact date. I think it was some time in January or the beginning of February. Of course, we always had a certain authority in these matters of animal diseases, just as the provincial governments have. We have always had officers in Manitoba and were doing certain work. But the provincial government were dealing with glanders and ordering the slaughter of horses affected with that disease. So long as they were doing that work, we did not think it wise, nor did they, that both authorities should engage in it. But, when we made changes affecting the whole Dominion including Manitoba, it was suggested that we should take over the whole matter and that the Manitoba government should cease to deal with it. Eventually we came to an arrangement of that kind.

Mr. STAPLES. Then, I am to understand that, owing to the minister not exercising the authority he has, and the fact of the provincial government dealing with the glanders question, those who were unfortunate enough to have horses slaughtered on this account will receive no compensation. In view of the fact that people suffering similar losses elsewhere were compensated, I think that is hardly fair. I would like an explanation from the minister why Manitoba is not dealt with the same as other provinces from September, when the Order in Council was passed up to the time when this department took control of them.

Mr. FISHER. Of course, the work done by that provincial government was done under the provincial laws. I am not familiar with these laws, but I am informed that there was a provision by which certain of the municipalities could enforce the law.

Mr. STAPLES. But the provincial law could not prohibit the Minister of Agriculture from exercising his authority under the Dominion law?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. STAPLES. Then, I claim that the rule should be made retroactive and that these people should be compensated.

Mr. FISHER. That is a matter that may be open to argument.

Mr. HERRON. I was glad to hear the minister speak of maladie du coït and to know that he has recognized the importance of this matter. It is a far more fatal disease than glanders, and the shipping of a carload of horses from where it exists may spread it all over Canada, for it is a hard disease to check. If there is danger of it being brought in from the United States the horses coming from that country should be examined with the greatest care. I would urge the minister to guard carefully against the spread of the disease where it exists.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The minister has referred to the provincial law giving the municipalities jurisdiction in regard to glanders. I think this was optional. Some of the municipalities gave compensation and some did not. I read in one of our local papers that one of the Dominion officials, Doctor Schultz has been in my district and, in conjunction with the local veterinary, has ordered the shooting of a number of horses for glanders. That particular municipality gave compensation. But I see that they have had a great deal of glanders in a district probably forty miles in length and that many horses had to be destroyed. The municipality has suffered so much that they have given notice of the repeal of the by-law for it was too great a drain on the municipal treasury. I presume that the horses shot now will be compensated for by the Dominion government. Do the officials to which the minister has referred make reports at stated intervals to the department, or do they report to the head office in Winnipeg? Is there any superior in Winnipeg to whom they report?

Mr. FISHER. Every case is reported here direct—a separate report for each case.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Doctor Little, Doctor McGillivray and Doctor Torrance are all in Winnipeg. Are all on an equality, or is there any to whom the others report?

Mr. FISHER. All report here direct. Speaking from memory—as the chief veterinary officer is in the west, and I have nobody at hand who can give me the exact information—I think that one of these officers was given some general charge of the whole province. But they all have authority in all parts of the province and they all report here and not to any officer in Manitoba. But one of them is looked upon as the leader.

Mr. STAPLES. Doctor McGillivray?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I think so.

Mr. STAPLES. What salaries do these officers receive?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say offhand, but I think they receive from $1,200 to $1,500 a year?

Mr. STAPLES. On what principle are these officers appointed? Why are they all selected from Winnipeg?

Mr. FISHER. They are not. Dr. McGillivray did not live in Winnipeg until he was appointed. Dr. Schultz did not live in Winnipeg. There is another of these officers living in Crystal City. I think that Dr. Little and Dr. Torrance were the only two who lived in Winnipeg until Dr. McGillivray moved there. And I think the reason Dr. McGillivray moved to Winnipeg is that as the railways centre in there one can more quickly and cheaply reach any part of the province from Winnipeg than from any other place.

Mr. STAPLES. Other veterinaries made application for appointment. For instance, take the southwestern part of Manitoba. There was one veterinary in Carman, a thoroughly eligible man, from a political as well as from every other standpoint. And Carman is a central point. Yet this gentleman did not get the appointment. Upon what principle is the selection of those officers made ?

Mr. FISHER. My chief veterinary officer is a Manitoba man, and I referred the matter largely to his opinion, as he knows about it more than I do or anybody else, having lived in that province many years and having been a member of the local legislature there, where he had a great deal to do with the framing of the Manitoba law with regard to veterinary work.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Does the $1,500 include travelling expenses ?

Mr. FISHER. No ; they send in their expenses.

Mr. LENNOX. It would be satisfactory to the committee if the hon. minister would explain how he finds that he has the power to appropriate the money he did last year for the purpose of compensating for the destruction of cattle. At the time that we granted the appropriation last year there was no law in force enabling him to grant compensation to any one in the case of the destruction of cattle on account of glanders.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, there was.

Mr. LENNOX. There was a law enabling us to make compensation, but no provision for compensation until an Order in Council was passed. At the time we were making the grant there was no Order in Council. Consequently there was nothing at that time before the House which would authorize the paying of this money. It was only subsequently, on the 29th of September last, that the Order in Council came into force.

Mr. FISHER. Under the 12th section of the Act the Governor in Council may order compensation to be paid the owners of animals and also make regulations. Those regulations are embodied in an Order in Council, and then we pass an individual Order in Council for every individual payment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the minister, in fixing the compensation, observe the limit set forth in section 12 of the Act of 1903 ?

Mr. FISHER. Always.

Mr. LENNOX. This afternoon he said that the limit was two-thirds the value of the animal.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, up to a certain point.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister did not say that.

Mr. FISHER. I think I did.

Mr. LENNOX. He simply said that the amount paid was two-thirds the value of the animal. Will he explain now what it was he did say ?

Mr. FISHER. I followed the regulations exactly. There was an Act passed last year changing the compensation from one-third in some cases and three-quarters in others to a flat third all through. The statute of 1903 covers the whole Act. Then last session we passed an amendment with regard to compensation alone.

Mr. BLAIN. Can the minister tell what amount of money was paid in compensation between the passing of the Order on the 19th of September, to the final order that was passed on the 20th of March ?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say exactly, because the statement is not divided according to those dates, but from October 22, which was the date of the first payment under the Order in Council of September, to February 20, there was $8,942 paid. I could not say how much was paid in each province ; but in round figures it was chiefly in the Northwest Territories and Quebec. There was not one case in the maritime provinces.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the minister might give us the figures.

Mr. FISHER. Up to the present date, $29,000 ; up to the 20th of February about $9,000, that was about a month before the change. That is as far as I can give the figures.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. How do the returns look for the present month ?

Mr. FISHER. They are pretty heavy. Since this decision to pay for all cases was come to, on an understanding that a most determined effort was to be made to stamp out the disease, I have given orders to my officers to be more active in the matter. I think that within the last month they must have reports coming in for close on to $20,000.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is there any prospect of overcoming the disease ?

Mr. FISHER. I could not say that yet.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is the payment of this large amount of money liable to be attended with any abuses in the way of claims ?

Mr. FISHER. I think not. I have been trying to guard against that. I do not know whether my hon. friend was in when I said that we only ordered the slaughter on the report of our permanent officers, and it is on their valuation of the animal that we pay, we do not allow outside valuation. That is the case with all the animals slaughtered for which we give compensation. The veterinary who orders the slaughter fixes the value. Then the Act limits the amount of value which may be put upon an animal, so much for a thoroughbred, and less for a grade animal.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What is the average price paid for horses, on a two-thirds valuation ?

Mr. FISHER. I am told the payment lately has come to nearly $100 a piece.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. That is a big price for a western horse. Could the hon. gentleman tell us what class of horse it is, is it an ordinary western horse that seems to be affected, or is it the progeny of horses that have been taken from the east ?

Mr. FISHER. The horses that come into contact most frequently are the working horses, and in many cases these teams are worth a great deal more than we are allowed to pay compensation for. The horses that are running free we have not got at yet, to any extent.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. You may have a great big proposition.

Mr. FISHER. It is a serious proposition, I grant.

Mr. LENNOX. There is a possibility, it seems to me, that the minister may have to pay in cases that he does not contemplate. The Order in Council referred to, or a summary of it, provides, as the minister says, for compensation in the cases dealt with by subsection 2 of section 12 of the Animals Contagious Diseases Act, of 1903, as amended by chapter 6 of the statutes of 1904. Section 12 of Act of 1903 says :

The Governor in Council may order a compensation to be paid to owners of animals slaughtered under the provisions of this Act.

Of course the general provisions of this Act in that regard would be the preceding section 11 :

The minister may, from time to time, cause to be slaughtered animals suffering from infectious or contagious diseases, or suspected of being affected, and animals which are or have been infected by or in close proximity to a diseased animal or animals suspected of being affected by a contagious disease.

But if the minister will look at section 10, he will find that where the animal is offered for sale it may be seized by any inspector, and so on, who should report the seizure to the mayor, or reeve, or any justice of the peace having jurisdiction, and such mayor, reeve or justice of the peace may call in a veterinary to examine the animal. That is a summary of the clause. Of course it provides that the animal may be destroyed by the officer appointed by the minister, but it also provides that the animal may be destroyed on the order of the mayor, reeve or justice of the peace, on an examination which need not necessarily even be an examination made by one of the veterinaries appointed by the minister. I think that is pretty clear. I am not saying it is a very material point, but it does away with, or brakes in upon what the minister contemplates, that is, that he shall have through his officers complete control of the matter.

Mr. FISHER. Section 12 gives the Governor in Council latitude of paying compensation or not, just as they like.

Mr. LENNOX. Certainly.

Mr. FISHER. The Order in Council only authorizes the payment of compensation when the slaughter has been ordered by an officer of the department ; consequently, I think that fear which the hon. gentleman has expressed in regard to the latitude allowed under section 10 would hardly come in.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. minister might possibly be able to carry it out in that way. It says that the inspectors are authorized to slaughter, and then it says that the minister is authorized to order compensation to be paid to the owners of animals which are slaughtered under the provisions of section 12 and the amendments thereto. Section 12 provides for compensation where an animal is slaughtered under the provisions of this Act. Section 10 provides for the slaughter of an animal in a way which is not contemplated by the Minister, and I am very far from saying that it would be just to deprive a person of compensation because his animal happened to be slaughtered by order of a justice of the peace or mayor or some one of that kind upon an inspection by a local officer when this provision is made in the Act. I think it embraces a larger class of cases than that which he has referred to.

Mr. FISHER. I only referred to that to show that there is no danger.

Mr. LENNOX. I hardly think it is a danger. I think it is right enough, but it extends farther than the hon. minister would have us understand.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. minister if the veterinary surgeons who are employed in Manitoba at salaries amounting to $1,500 and expenses are employed the year round working exclusively for the government, or are they carrying on their own business and doing what the government require of them ?

Mr. FISHER. They are supposed to give all their time to our work and they are employed the year round.

Mr. HERRON. Does that apply to the veterinaries in the Territories ?

Mr. FISHER. In the Territories the work is done almost exclusively by officers of the mounted police, who work under my department in that respect. They are employed in their work as members of the mounted police and we make them a special allowance for the work they do for the Agricultural Department. But, I have some special officers in the Northwest and what I have stated applies to these. I would like to say that there is an officer in Winnipeg, Dr. Torrence, who is not paid by the year but who is paid so much a day when he is employed. He does not give his whole time to our work.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. minister say who these officers report to and from whom they get their instructions ?

Mr. FISHER. The chief veterinary officer, Dr. Rutherford.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has the hon. minister gentlemen employed in Ontario in the same way ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see that we have here in Ottawa, G. W. Higginson. Is he in connection with the department ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, he is paid. He is an officer giving his whole time to our work. I think that Dr. Higginson lives at Rockland. He is doing certain work there in that neighbourhood for us.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then there is Mr. A. E. Moore.

Mr. FISHER. Dr. Moore is a permanent officer who makes his headquarters here, but who travels all over the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. He is one of our most valuable officers.

Mr. TAYLOR. J. D. Whyte ?

Mr. FISHER. He makes his headquarters at Sherbrooke, Quebec, and works all along the frontier between Quebec and the United States in connection with the health of animals as well as travelling through the English speaking parts of Quebec.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see in the Auditor General's Report the name of M. Philps, Chatham. He draws a salary of $50 ; his livery expenses amount to $48.50 ; pair of rubber boots $6 and travelling expenses $15.05. What does Mr. Philps do ?

Mr. FISHER. He has been working in connection with the outbreaks of hog cholera. He requires rubber boots to go into the hog-pens. We have to provide all our officers with rubber boots. They put on these boots to go into the hog pens and when they come out they take them off and wash them thoroughly so as not to carry infection. If they went into the hog-pens with leather boots the infection would be carried by them.

Mr. TAYLOR. He gets a salary of $50 and his livery bill is $48 ?

Mr. FISHER. Quite possibly.

Mr. CLEMENTS. May I ask the hon. minister what information he has from Essex and Kent relative to the hog plague ?

Mr. FISHER. My information is that it is lessening to some extent. I cannot speak more positively than that. This spring we have not had so many reports and we have not had so many deaths as we had last year.

Mr. CLEMENTS. May I ask the hon. minister if the officials who have been employed for the last four or five years are lessening in number ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think I have taken off any of the officers yet. I hardly think the situation would justify me in doing so, but just as soon as it will justify it there will be a decrease.

Mr. CLEMENTS. While I am thoroughly acquainted with the regulations regarding the hog plague there I may say that complaint is made that hogs are allowed to be taken from one township in which they have the disease and in which a quarantine has been ordered by a veterinary surgeon into another township where there is no disease perhaps ten miles distant. Is that a fact ?

Mr. FISHER. No, that is not a fact unless the hogs are being taken to a packing house. We allow hogs to be shipped from a township which is quarantined because of the presence of disease to a packing house when they are fit for slaughter. Of course, this refers to animals that are free from disease. We do not allow them to be shipped to any other place, but we have a special provision allowing hogs to be shipped to a packing house on condition that they are immediately slaughtered. We had a good deal of difficulty in regard to that because people sold hogs which were not ready for slaughter and upon arriving at the slaughter house, finding that they were not fit for slaughter, they were resold to farmers in the neighbourhood. We traced innumerable outbreaks of hog cholera to that cause. We made a regulation providing that the hogs were to be immediately slaughtered and the packing house people were strictly enjoined against shipping them out or selling them alive. Since the enforcement of this restriction the number of outbreaks of hog cholera has materially decreased in the neighbourhood of slaughter houses.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The disease has abated in my district to such an extent that we think the number of veterinary surgeons now employed to inspect these hogs is unnecessary. Instead of being veterinary surgeons they are hog inspectors who are employed to inspect the class of hogs that the hon. minister has spoken of and which are being sent to these factories. If a heavy fine were imposed upon these factories receiving these hogs for re-selling them, it would be a great saving to the country and the hon. minister would be able to reduce the number of officers who are drawing large salaries in my district amounting to $1,200 and $1,500 a year and expenses.

Mr. FISHER. We allow the hogs to be shipped provided they are healthy, and therefore they have to be inspected by some competent person who can say whether they are healthy or not. The people there have been very urgent indeed in their request to us that we should give as much latitude as possible for the shipment of hogs. My hon. friend himself, I am sure, has had representations as to the stringency of the quarantine, and we have had similar representations from municipal authorities as well as from individuals. I have done everything I possibly could to make the quarantine as little irksome as possible. For that purpose I have retained inspectors with the view of enabling the people to ship out such hogs as they might, so that their feeding operations should not be interfered with more than was necessary in the public interest. I confess that the work is quite expensive, but it has been done in the interest of the people there, and I think it was justifiable, because those people make their living and derive the profits of their farms largely from the hogs they ship. We have to continue the inspection for some time after the outbreak, because we cannot be sure that the disease will not reappear.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I admit that it is a difficult question, and the minister has my sympathy to some extent. He knows that my district is probably more heavily affected in this matter than any other in the Dominion. There are a great many complaints there, and I think they are quite justified. Where a farmer had only three or four hogs affected out of 100 or 150, it seemed wholly unnecessary to kill the whole herd. Owing to the way the farmers were treated by the inspectors, they simply evaded the law, and I do not believe there has been one farmer in a hundred in the last year or two who reported the disease to the inspectors at all. I believe there are a number of inspectors there who should be dismissed. These men feel that they must do something for the money which the government is paying them; but it would be far better for the government to deal with the local inspectors, who, I think are more capable of taking care of the matter than the officials the government has there at present.

Mr. ELSON. I would ask the minister what progress is being made in stamping out sheep scab, which was found to exist three or four months ago in the province of Ontario?

Mr. FISHER. I am afraid I cannot give my hon. friend much information on that subject. The officers of the department have been watching it and following up cases wherever they could find them. I have not heard of any particular report within the last two or three weeks. Before that a considerable number of cases were discovered. My hon. friend knows that it is a disease which we do not require to slaughter for. It can be cured by proper treatment, and we impress that fact on the farmers. We have even gone so far as to send inspectors where we have heard of cases, and have given full instructions. We of course quarantine the affected flocks and have them thoroughly disinfected and cleaned. I think we have located every case; I do not think there is any case that we have not dealt with. In the spring, when the farmers shear their sheep, they are pretty sure to notice any symptoms of the disease, and every case that is discovered is treated. I do not think there is a flock infected in Ontario to-day which has not been attended to. More than that I cannot say.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What does the department term the hog disease that exists in my riding?

Mr. FISHER. We generally call it hog cholera.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Our veterinaries state that it is not hog cholera, but a certain plague. I may say that there are scores of farmers whose hogs have had this disease, but they have not reported it, and in a great many cases their hogs have got well. They have simply killed two or three which were sick, out of the flock, and the rest have got well. I think it is entirely unnecessary to kill the number of hogs which the officials of the department have demanded to be killed in the past.

Mr. MACLAREN. In what section of Ontario does this sheep disease exist?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think I ought to say that, because I should have to speak entirely from memory, and I might make a mistake.

Mr. WILLIAM WRIGHT. I would like to call the attention of the members of this House to the over lapping of authority between the Dominion government and the local governments in regard not only to diseases of animals, but to various agricultural matters. We have local government officials as well as Dominion officials dealing with the matters which we have been discussing tonight. That seems to be an unnecessary overlapping of duties, and some arrangement should be made to have the authority vested exclusively either in the Dominion or in the provinces. There may be good reasons why this work can be handled better by the Dominion government, but they have not become manifest to me yet from the discussion that has taken place or from anything that I have been able to read on the question. I think these matters could be better handled by the local governments, which already incur very large expenditures for these purposes. I think we ought to look into this question and see whether a reduction of the expense could not be made, either by a joint arrangement between the Minister of Agriculture of the Dominion and the Ministers of Agriculture of the various provinces, or by transferring the whole business to the Dominion or to the provinces. The position seems to be this, that any province that takes hold of this matter energetically, and stamps out disease in the province would only have for its pains the privilege of putting up its share of the expense, while other provinces would throw the responsibility entirely on the Dominion ; thus a premium would be put on the carelessness of those provinces. But if the Dominion undertakes the responsibility, it should handle the business exclusively. I would like to ask the minister whether any steps have been taken with a view to coming to an arrangement with the various provinces with regard to matters touching agriculture in general.

Mr. FISHER. Of course, there is no line or organization which can prevent the passage of contagious diseases from one province to another. If one province is neglectful of these matters the other provinces will suffer. The constitution seems to allow provinces to pass laws relating to the health of animals, and also enjoins on the Dominion parliament to do this, too. We have passed certain laws. Those laws the provincial governments may enforce or not, just as they like. The provincial governments have power to pass laws also. In Ontario, for instance, there is quite a strong law against glanders, but at the same time the provincial government have taken no active steps to enforce that law. Some years ago they did for a number of years, but they have not done anything recently, and one of the most expensive enforcements of that law was here in Ottawa, where we had, a year and a-half ago, to slaughter a large number of horses in this neighbourhood. The provincial government knew perfectly well that the disease was in existence. We had another reason why it was difficult for a provincial government to do this. Some cases of the disease spread across the bridges here into Quebec, and we traced cases of glanders across the river and up into the lumber camps which had come straight from Ottawa, and the people there complained that this disease came straight from the province of Ontario. It was a matter which was not provincial, but interprovincial, and it seems that, under such circumstances, the provinces have a rather fair claim that the Dominion government should deal with these things. I confess that since I have been in office dealing with these things the work has grown a good deal. We have demands to do things, and, in view of the interests involved, I have tried to meet the demands as much as possible. That is one reason why the vote has increased, and I suppose that as the country increases and the industries increase, the people will demand more attention to their interests, and we will have to give it as time goes on.

Mr. LAKE. I wish to ask the minister whether he has decided on a policy in regard to the retention or otherwise of the present quarantine ground near Estevan ? I understand a certain amount of that ground has been permitted to go into the hands of private individuals, which has broken up the block as it originally existed. The land is good arable land, and the citizens of Estevan, I think, are very anxious that it should be settled up. I think myself that considering that the land is already broken up in this manner, it would be a wise thing to move the quarantine ground a little further west, where good pasture can be obtained in a single block.

Mr. FISHER. I am speaking a little from memory, but I know in the case of one or two of these grounds up there we have passed them over into the hands of the Interior Department for the purpose of settlement. I am not quite sure of the one at Estevan, but we have rather found out by experience that we do not need such large areas for quarantine purposes as we originally retained, and, unless I am mistaken, I think that ground, or a large portion of it, has been handed over to the Interior Department already. I shall look into the matter and let my hon. friend know.

Mr. BLAIN. Where can we find the reports of these inspectors ? The minister stated that they report to the chief veterinarian for the Dominion. Do the officers in Ontario give a weekly or monthly report to him ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think that there is any general report. When they find a case of disease they send in a special report of that case. These are not published, but they are on the files of the department, where any member of the House can see them. We do not undertake to publish them ; the report of the department simply gives the report of the chief veterinary inspector. Reports such as I spoke of a little while ago are reports of individual cases of disease.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand the minister says that when a veterinarian goes out and finds a case of disease he make a special report to the head of the department here. These gentlemen are employed for the full year—365 days. There are a good many of them who scarcely find a case at all during the 365 days, and therefore no special report is made.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken in that. I do not suppose there is a week that every one of them does not send in something.

Mr. BLAIN. Special cases ?

Mr. FISHER. Cases they have dealt with. We keep them busy ; I can assure my hon. friend they are all as busy as they can be.

Mr. BLAIN. I know they are busy. Some of them have been very busy during the last election. My hon. friend beside me suggests that a large number of them are in London and North Oxford at the present time.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so.

Mr. BLAIN. I think these men are not overworked, to say the least of it, and that they should give a written report, so that the members of parliament and the country can understand just what they are doing. I could give some cases right at the present moment of what some of these gentlemen are doing. I rather think they have a great deal of liberty. The minister shakes his head. That is all very well, but I know what I am talking about on this point.

Mr. FISHER. Would my hon. friend give a special case ?

Mr. BLAIN. The minister would like me to mention a case. If he would look over the large number of days in which they are not giving any report and ask them for a report of those days, I think he would find something that would be rather interesting, and that he would give them more work than they have been doing in the last three or four years. I think these men should give a weekly written report to the department, so that it would come under the inspection of the members of this House, in order that the country might fully understand that these gentlemen are at work and would not have too much leisure time to work on special cases.

Mr. FISHER. I can assure my hon. friend that they have not much leisure time. I have had to appoint extra officers every now and then, because there is more work than the officers appointed can do. They make constant reports. I do not know that any of them make reports at definite times. There are sometimes two or three in a week, then perhaps not a report for a week and then another batch ; but there is a constant stream of reports ; there is constant communication with the central authorities here, both asking instructions and giving information. They do as much as my hon. friend suggests and, in many cases, more than that.

Mr. BLAIN. Do these officers have passes on the railways ?

Mr. FISHER. I am told that three of them have. Three of them are especially engaged in supervision of the railroad traffic in animals. Dr. Orchard is the chief. He has a pass. He is the special inspector of cars which carry live stock, and he has a pass on all the railways. Mr. Peterson, while not a veterinary surgeon, is connected with the Department of Agriculture in Manitoba and represents the department in certain ways. He has a pass on the railways of Canada. Dr. Rutherford himself has one.

Mr. BLAIN. I see in the Auditor General's Report that more than one of these officers gets $1,000 per year and expenses. What do those expenses include ? Do they include railway fares and living expenses while on the road ?

Mr. FISHER. They include the disbursements they are obliged to make while on government business. They have to give details, which must pass the accountant of the department and then pass the Auditor General.

Mr. BLAIN. A man could not make very extensive travelling for twelve months during the year on an expense account of about $200. I see one for $300 and some very much less. Compare that with the expenses of a commercial traveller, who gets $5 a day for travelling expenses, and you will see that these men cannot do much travelling and must be engaged in some other business.

Mr. FISHER. Some do work in the locality and have no railway travelling at all. Others travel more. We do not pay them so much a day like commercial travellers.

Mr. BLAIN. If they are driving, you would have to pay their livery fare and their living expenses on the road. It is absolutely impossible that these men can be devoting their full time for the year when their travelling expenses are only $200 and some less. They cannot be engaged in very active work at that rate.

Mr. TAYLOR. What are the duties of W. W. Starkey, of Brampton, which is in the constituency of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain).

Mr. FISHER. I think he is an inspector of cattle yards and sheds in Toronto.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Some of these gentlemen were quite busy in my election last November. While I have every confidence in the head veterinary surgeon, I am not aware that any of his officials has ever prescribed for the hog cholera which is prevalent in my riding. If we are paying officials a salary for attending to these matters, they should be able to prescribe a remedy for that disease.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know of any remedy for it.

Mr. STAPLES. Up in the province of Manitoba during the last couple of years we have sustained serious losses from the mange in horses. Is the department taking any action towards stamping it out ? When it gets among the horses it makes them weak and useless for their work. A good many people keep using the horses thus afflicted, and there seems to be no restriction to prevent the disease spreading.

Mr. FISHER. I was not aware there was any great spread of the disease in Manitoba. There is a good deal of it in the western ranching country, and we have been taking active steps to reduce it. We issued bulletins a while ago with instructions how to treat the horses so afflicted, and our officers in Manitoba have instructions to deal with it wherever they find it.

Mr. STAPLES. I will give the hon. minister a list of certain districts where I know it exists.

Mr. FISHER. I shall be very glad indeed to have it.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Does this appropriation of $40,000 include the cost of enforcing that order about mange ?

Mr. FISHER. Part of it would go to the enforcement of that order.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. About how much ?

Mr. FISHER. I could not say. We discussed that a little while ago and I have no further information than I gave then. Dr. Rutherford is in the Northwest but the trouble with the mange is later in the season than now. I know of no new developments regarding it at present.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I endeavoured to get the cost of enforcing the order last fall and the minister informed me that when the supplementary estimates would be down, he would be in a position to give the details.

Mr. FISHER. I forgot about that but in the next supplementaries I will give the information.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I also asked the cost of the different tanks provided by the government at different points. I also asked when these vats were built and the approximate cost. I see that there were four.

Mr. FISHER. I shall get that also. The expense of handling the whole matter came to about $17,000 but that does not include the cost of the tanks. These were put up out of an appropriation to public works for cattle quarantine. I will get the figures for my hon. friend.

Mr. LENNOX. With regard to making the order in March apply to last September, if the minister will look at the Act carefully he will agree that in the amended Act of 1904 coupled with section 12 of the Act of 1903, it is optional with the Governor in Council to give compensation or not, but once compensation is given it can only be given in one way. The government can give compensation or not, but, if it gives compensation, it must give it in accordance with the terms of the statute and cannot discriminate as between animals exhibiting a greater or less degree of disease. The minister pointed out—and it is very reasonable—that, in case of clinical symtoms, the government did not contemplate paying under the Order in Council of last fall. But the Act, after providing that the minister can provide for the slaughter of animals to prevent the spread of contagious diseases, goes on to say :

> The Governor in Council may order compensation to be paid to the owners of animals slaughtered under the provisions of this Act.

I need not read subsections 2 and 3, as they are repealed by the Act of 1904, and others substituted. Under the subsections repealed there is a limit to the compensation to be paid, but under the new provision there is no limit except that it is to be two-thirds of the value of the animal before it became affected with infectious or contagious disease, or it came in contact with or in dangerous proximity to animals affected. Thus it is provided by the statute that the compensation should be a certain thing. I submit to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) and also to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) who has had a very long experience in the construction of statutes, that the government have the alternative of giving compensation or not giving it, but there is no discretion in the Governor in Council in the amount of compensation or the conditions under which it is to be given if any is given. Therefore, I would submit that you cannot legally or fairly discriminate as to cases arising between the Orders in Council of September, 1904, and the Order in Council of 1905. I am glad that it is so, because I believe it will be a good thing if the minister could see his way to remedy what will be to some extent a grievance—that these people in the west by reason of, I will not say the conflict, between the authorities, but of lack of adjustment between them, should fail to receive compensation in any way. I do not ask the minister to decide the matter now, but to look into it carefully. If he will turn to what I understand to be the embodiment of this Order in Council in this blue book and read the express provision there, I think he will be convinced that it is a fair reading of the provision that compensation should be made to these people that had animals slaughtered between September last and March last. I quote from page 173 of the report of the Minister of Agriculture, the latter part of paragraph 9 :

> And the Minister of Agriculture is hereby authorized to order compensation to be paid to the owners of such animals at the rate set forth in subsection 2 of section 12 of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, 1903, as amended by chapter 6 of the statutes of 1904.

That is, compensation should be made, if made at all, to the extent of two-thirds of the value of the animal without discriminating as to whether the disease is ascertained by examination by the eye or by scientific test.

Mr. FISHER. I am ready to look into the matter, because I should be glad if I am allowed to make compensation in any case of hardship.

Mr. STAPLES. I am glad that the minister (Mr. Fisher) has agreed to look into the subject. The people of Manitoba only ask fair play in this matter. The people of the other provinces have been compensated since September and I do not see any reason why, especially as evidence can be brought to show that these animals were slaughtered on the certificate of a veterinary, the owners should not be compensated just as the owners of animals similarly slaughtered in other provinces have been.

Civil government—office of the Auditor General—

To provide for the salary of 1 chief clerk from June 1 to June 30, 1905, at $1,900 per annum.. .. ..$	158 33
Further amount required for clerical and other assistance..	3,000 00
Further amount required for printing and stationery..	300 00
	3,458 33

Mr. FIELDING. These are items which the Auditor General has asked for. The first is for the creation of an additional clerkship, and the others are for clerical and general assistance and stationery.

Administration of Justice—further amount required for miscellaneous expenses including Northwest Territories, $20,000.

Further amount required for travel of judges—Manitoba, $1,000.

Further amount required for travel of judges—Northwest Territories, $500.

Mr. FIELDING. The amount estimated for the year 1903-4 proved to be entirely too small, and accounts amounting to $16,000 had to be carried over and paid out of this year's appropriation. The increase is owing to the rapid increase of criminal business in the Northwest Territories, and that is also a consequence of the rapid increase in our population there which, with all its good qualities, has a few criminals.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I conclude that has something to do with the cost of the immigration which we have talked of in this House a good many times. We have not been careful enough to see that we got the proper class of immigrants. I hope that in future we will not require an increased vote for the administration of justice in the Northwest.

To provide salary of W. T. Archibald as Dominion parole officer, from May 1 to June 30, 1905, $333.33.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who is this officer?

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Justice has appointed an officer to look after prisoners when they leave the penitentiary, and I think he renders the most useful kind of service possible. This is an officer of the Salvation Army, who has given a great deal of attention to that class of work, and the Minister of Justice is utilizing his services with great profit to all concerned.

Franchise Act—to complete cost of voters' lists for election of 1904, $10,000.

New addition of Electoral Atlas, $3,500.

Mr. FIELDING. I promised to get some further information, and I hope before the evening is through I will have my officer here who understands that item.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How often are these printed and distributed? I know they have not been distributed so far as my riding is concerned, at least I have not received any.

Mr. FIELDING. I will have to allow the item to stand.

Mr. TAYLOR. While the minister is getting information, we want to know what benefit this new addition of the electoral atlas is.

Mr. FIELDING. That item was mentioned the other night. This electoral atlas is a series of maps of the various electoral districts of the country, and they have to be reprinted from time to time when changes are made by redistribution.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Will the minister bring down information showing how often the voters' lists are printed?

Mr. FIELDING. I will ascertain that.

Payments for legal services re legislation respecting Sunday observance—R. U. McPherson, $1,362.04; J. A. Patterson, K.C., $95.35, $1,457.39.

Mr. FIELDING. These gentlemen are both barristers at Toronto, and the government have agreed to pay them for their legal services to the Dominion Lord's Day Alliance in having the question of Sunday observance raised in the Supreme Court. These gentlemen were employed by that organization to prepare a Bill for the observance of the Lord's day. They were heard before the members of the government on several occasions. Questions were raised as to the authority of parliament to pass the Act, as to whether it was within the jurisdiction of this parliament. Up to that time Sunday observance had been treated as a provincial matter, but the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1903 had decided that certain legislation of Ontario was ultra vires, and by reason of this decision the Dominion organization came to Ottawa for further legislation. The question of jurisdiction having been raised, a reference was made to the Supreme Court.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is Mr. Patterson a partner of Senator Kerr, of the other House ?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not the information on that point. I suppose any of my hon. friends can answer that question.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will let the item pass, but will the hon. minister inquire?

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend says that he needs the information I will promise to get it for him.

Mr. TAYLOR. We need it.

Mr. FIELDING. Does he say that he does not know already?

Miscellaneous—for legal expenses, $1,800.

Mr. TAYLOR. In connection with what branch of the service?

Mr. FIELDING. These are for legal expenses incurred in the Finance Department partly in connection with the Martineau case and partly in connection with the prosecution of counterfeiters in Toronto.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Who were the lawyers ?

Mr. FIELDING. The information was furnished me, but I cannot put my hand on it at the moment. We will let it stand.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let it pass.

Miscellaneous—'Canada Gazette,' further amount required, $1,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is due to the increased expense of the 'Canada Gazette.' The information I am furnished with is that the particular item which caused the additional expense is the publication of the railway tariffs which were published under the new Act. This caused some additional printing.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How much was the main estimate?

Mr. FIELDING. $7,000. This is the cost of printing irrespective of the question of receipts.

Item allowed to stand.

Miscellaneous—printing—further amount required, $12,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is due to the length of the session. It is to cover the extra expense of last year's printing which was very heavy, amounting to $14,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is this in connection with the Printing Bureau or printing outside ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was all done at the Printing Bureau.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did the length of the session make it greater? Would it cover the 'Hansard'?

Mr. FIELDING. No, this would not cover the 'Hansard.' 'Hansard' is a separate item.

Mr. TAYLOR. What does it cover?

Mr. FIELDING. I would prefer that the item should stand as the information furnished is not complete enough. It says that it is due to the length of the session, but it does not show the particular branches for which this work has been done. A memorandum has been sent by the King's Printer, but I will get further information.

Item allowed to stand.

Miscellaneous—commutation in lieu of remission of duties on articles imported for the use of the army and navy—further amount required, $500.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does that really mean ? I do not object to it but I would like to know what it means. I thought these things were imported without payment of duty.

Mr. PATERSON. So they are and this is an amount that is the equivalent, I have not the particulars with me but I can get them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not objecting to it, but I simply want to understand it. If these articles are imported without payment of duty why do you require any commutation?
