
Mr. PATERSON. Let the item stand.

Item allowed to stand.

Excise—contingencies—further amount required for travelling expenses, rent, fuel and stationery, &c., $3,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the explanation of that?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is required to enable the department to meet the expenditure from April to the end of the fiscal year. Fifty thousand dollars of a vote of $60,000 has been expended and as it is desirable that business should not be interfered with owing to lack of funds this $3,000 is required to make both ends meet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You should not require a great deal more for fuel at this time of the year.

Mr. BRODEUR. Not at this time of the year.

Civil government—Department of Public Works—to provide for payment of chief engineer at the rate of $3,500 per annum from December 1, 1904, to June 30, 1905, $58.33.

Mr. FIELDING. This officer's salary was increased from $3,400 to $3,500 and this accounts for the difference.

Public Works—capital—Quebec harbour improvements, $50,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the cost of this work?

Mr. FIELDING. This is the balance required for the close of the year on account of the construction of improvements in the harbour of Quebec. The work is under contract to Messrs. Dussault and Lemieux.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the matter with the Harbour Commission ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is outside the work of the Harbour Commission. The Harbour Commissioners have certain funds at their disposal, but this is independent of them.

Mr. BERGERON. How do you manage the work in Quebec? Is the department doing some work specially outside of the work done by the Harbour Commission ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, whatever is done by the Harbour Commission has to be done out of the funds of the harbour board under the Harbour Commissioner's Act. This is a general expenditure out of the Dominion treasury.

Mr. BERGERON. How do we stand now with the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec ?

Mr. FIELDING. They have a balance at their disposal out of the present authorization of between $300,000 and $400,000, and they have works in hand and contemplated which will take all of that and probably more ; but that is independent of the appropriations referred to in this item.

Mr. BERGERON. Where does that $300,000 or $400,000 come from ?

Mr. FIELDING. Several years ago we consolidated the Acts respecting the harbour commission of Quebec, and any funds previously authorized which were not expended were carried into the new Act. There was a balance, if my memory serves me rightly, of $300,000 or $400,000. The Harbour Commissioners are undertaking works which will take all of that sum and probably more.

Mr. BERGERON. How much do they owe the country now ?

Mr. FIELDING. A very large sum ; I cannot give it off-hand. A few years ago they issued bonds which have a certain priority over the government debt. There is a considerable debt, but it does not touch this item at all.

Mr. BERGERON. No, but it touches the treasury of the country.

Mr. FIELDING. A good many harbours touch the treasury of the country.

Mr. BERGERON. I think that is the worst.

Mr. FIELDING. Quebec is a very important harbour, and we must provide for its development.

Mr. BERGERON. Would it not be a good plan to abolish all these harbour commissions and have the harbours all put under the control of the Department of Public Works?

Mr. FIELDING. That is a large question as to which I cannot give my hon. friend an answer to-night.

Mr. BERGERON. I see it stated in the newspapers that something is going to be done in that way in Montreal—that the harbour commission is going to be changed and the harbour put under the management of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I do not know whether or not the newspapers are correct; but if that is done in Montreal, why should it not be done in Quebec and everywhere else?

Mr. FIELDING. It is not yet done in Montreal, and if we wait until it is proposed there my hon. friend's question will be much more in order. It is not connected with this vote.

Mr. BERGERON. This vote of $50,000 is not to be spent by the harbour commissioners, but it is all public money, and I think it would be a very good thing if all these moneys which are now spent by commissioners were spent by a minister directly responsible to parliament.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to ask the minister whether the government intend to do anything in the port of Quebec to repair the wall which fell down last spring ? About 600 feet of the cross wall tumbled into the basin, and last week I was told that nothing had been done yet. A gentleman who was here from Quebec requested me to ask the government what they proposed to do. He said the present condition was a great injury to the trade of Quebec ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is a portion of the work which comes under the control of the harbour commissioners. I had an interview several days ago with gentlemen representing the harbour commissioners, who pointed out the necessity of the repairs to which my hon. friend has referred. It is contemplated that these repairs will be made as far as possible out of the funds which remain unexpended by the harbour commissioners. I think the carrying out of the work which the harbour commissioners desire to do will cost a considerable sum in excess of what is available in their hands ; but they are having plans made, and I understand that they will undertake very soon the repairs to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is this $50,000 to be spent ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is for the extension of what is known as the Quebec breakwater extending from the Louise embankment. That is under contract, and this is to pay the balance due to the contractors to the 30th of June.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are the contractors ?

Mr. FIELDING. Dussault & Lemieux.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the amount of their contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. $437,000.

Mr. BERGERON. When was that contract let ?

Mr. FIELDING. In 1903.

Mr. BERGERON. And this amount is over the amount of the contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it is the excess of what we expected would be required under their contract in the present fiscal year.

Mr. AMES. How much have they already received all told on this contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. The amount to the 31st of December, 1904, was $107,692.86. The deputy informs me that the amount expended since would probably amount to $50,000.

Mr. BERGERON. When was that contract to be finished ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is to be finished during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. BERGERON. If they have spent $107,000 out of a contract of $437,000, they have to spend over $300,000 this year.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. The work was to be finished during the present year, but it is probable that they will not be able to finish it.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that their fault, or what is the cause of it ? Who is supervising that work ?

Mr. FIELDING. An old engineer of the department stationed at Quebec named Valiquet. The work that has been done is very satisfactory. Apart from the fact that it has not gone on as rapidly as was expected, there is no complaint.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What penalties do these contractors have to pay for not finishing their contracts in time ? When he is answering that I would like to know what competition there was for the work, when let, and how many tenders were received. I am afraid the minister has not the information to-night, that we ought to have on this matter. I would like to know how many tenders were received,what each tender was and who were the tenders and if this was the lowest.

Mr. FIELDING. All that I have no doubt has been before the House, but I shall gladly get it again, if my hon. friend wishes it, on the supplementary item.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Would the minister tell the penalty for nonfulfilment of the contract in time ?

Mr. FIELDING. The general penalty is that when a contractor tenders he is obliged to put up a certain sum by way of security, and if he does not go on, that will be forfeited. What else can be done ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would suggest that tenders might have penalties attached that unless the contract is fulfilled the contractor will have to pay so much a day as damages. I think this is sometimes in contracts and I think it might very reasonably be put in because I do not see any reason why a man should contract to do a work and not have it done unless he can give better reasons than those generally given for not completing it in time. Apparently this contract is not half done yet.

Mr. FIELDING. As respects the adoption of a new plan in dealing with contracts that is a wide matter and while glad to have the hon. member's suggestions I would not undertake to assent to his proposition to-night. The department is acting in the light of long experience, and I have no doubt the officials take every precaution open to them. It is sometimes found necessary to extend the time of contracts.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is one-half the work done ?

Mr. FIELDING. According to these figures, no. Only $150,000 out of $400,000 and odd has been expended so that is less than one-half.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That is not very satisfactory is it ?

Mr. FIELDING. The deputy minister informs me that the latter part of the work is apt to be done more rapidly. There is always time lost in commencing the work in gathering plant, &c., so that although less than one-half has been done now that does not show that the work will not be completed within the time specified.

Mr. BERGERON. How many tenders were there and what is the amount of each tender ?

Mr. FIELDING. The deputy, speaking from memory, says there were six tenders and this was the lowest.

Mr. BERGERON. Can we not have the name ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, but I have not them now. I have no doubt all the information on this has already been given, but I do not say that is a reason why we should not give it again. When the main estimate was taken in all probability it was discussed as the matter has been running for several years.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has the main estimate for this year been taken ?

Mr. FIELDING. No ; it would be discussed in the last year or the year before. I would suggest that as this is a contract and has to be paid, we might pass this item, and when on the main estimates all this information might be brought down.

Mr. AMES. Will the minister be prepared when the main estimates are voted to answer the question of the hon. member for Lennox, as to whether there are in the contract any penalties for failure to fulfil the contract within a specified time.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly I shall be very glad to bring down the contract.

Mr. MONK. There is an exploratory voyage in Hudson bay under the superintendence of the government, and a number of the men employed on the steamer which has gone there have left orders for the payment of their salary during their absence. These salaries are not being paid because the vote of last year, as I understand, has been exhausted. Have any steps been taken to pass the necessary supplementary item in order that these arrears of salary may be settled? I ask this because a number of these men's families are in want at the present moment and I think that the supplementary estimate is really a pressing matter.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, it is included in an item which was passsed on Friday night and as soon as we complete the various votes we will have a special supply Bill to cover all these cases and to meet payments of this nature ?

Mr. TAYLOR. We will allow this to pass and have the discussion on the main estimate.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly that is fair.

Harbours and rivers—Ontario, $26,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. We shall have to ask this item to stand.

Mr. BENNETT. Before it is dropped may I ask how many tenders were received for the dredging at Fort William and Port Arthur and who were the tenderers ?

Mr. FIELDING. Nine tenders were received for the Port Arthur dredging.

Mr. BENNETT. And the names, please.

Mr. FIELDING. A. F. Bowman, Southampton ; John H. Hickler, and Neil Macdonald, Sault Ste. Marie ; the Great Lakes Dredging Company, Limited, Port Arthur ; C. S. Boone, Toronto ; Wm. Davis & Sons, Ottawa, the Port Arthur Dredging & Harbour Improvement Company, Port Arthur ; Roger Miller, Ingersoll, and M. J. Haney, Toronto.

Mr. BENNETT. Whose tender was accepted ?

Mr. FIELDING. A. F. Bowman was the most favourable.

Mr. BENNETT. And the rate ?

Mr. FIELDING. The rate was 14 cents per cubic yard of clay.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the minister any objection to giving the rates of the other tenderers ?

Mr. FIELDING. The contract is not signed although it is awarded. I would prefer the hon. gentleman to renew the question several days later. The question is a proper one, but we prefer not to make this public until the contract is signed.

Mr. BENNETT. And the Fort William names, please ?

Mr. FIELDING. The tenderers are the same, with the addition of James Morphy, Lewis Walsh, and John King, Fort William.

Mr. BERGERON. To whom was this one awarded, for Fort William ?

Mr. FIELDING. To Mr. Bowman, at 12 cents per cubic yard.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the contract been signed ?

Mr. FIELDING. The contracts are being prepared in the department but have not been signed.

Mr. BENNETT. Has any valuation been made of the Collingwood dry dock, if so by whom and what was the amount at which it was figured for the purpose of getting the bounty ?

Mr. FIELDING. The valuation made by Mr. Louis Coste was $540,000 or a little over.

Mr. BENNETT. Has a year elapsed since the official valuation was made, and what time will the bounty be payable ?

Mr. FIELDING. A year has not elapsed.

Mr. AMES. When item 65 comes up again will the hon. minister lay on the table copies of the ten offers that were made, and also a copy of the specification ?

Mr. FIELDING. If the contract has in the meantime been executed and the transaction complete, there is no objection to bringing down all the tenders, but the practice is not to make the details public while the matter is pending. In a few days the whole transaction will be completed by the execution of the contract; and if not brought down on this estimate, we have no objection to bringing the information down on the main estimates, which are yet to be dealt with.

Mr. BERGERON. Was the contract given to the lowest tenderer ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, in both cases.

Public buildings in Richibucto, New Brunswick, $1,600.

Mr. FIELDING. This is to pay the balance due the contractor for fittings, &c. A part of this was paid from the general appropriation temporarily and a special vote is required to provide for the same. The total amount of the contract for the fittings is $2,000, and the total amount expended on the building and fittings up to the 31st December, 1904, was $17,343.23. That expenditure includes, not only the building, but the electric lights, electric boxes, boiler, heating apparatus, and so forth. The contract for the building itself was $9,716.

Mr. BERGERON. Were tenders called for ?

Mr. FIELDING. The heating apparatus was contracted for separately by Mr. F. Powers, of Lunenburg, and it amounted to $799. Mr. Reid, the contractor, was asked to give an offer for the fittings, and he received $2,000.

Mr. BERGERON. How many tenders were offered ?

Mr. FIELDING. There were four for the building itself.

Mr. BERGERON. The building cost $9,000 and the fittings almost as much more.

Mr. FIELDING. In the $17,000 is included the purchase of the site, which was bought from Phinney & Steeve, Richibucto, at $800.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the size of the lot ?

Mr. FIELDING. 230 feet by 416 feet—very nearly two acres.

Mr. BERGERON. Who acted for the department in making the purchase ?

Mr. FIELDING. The department sent down an officer to examine the site and inquire from local people the value.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there an officer of the department who goes there in the public interest, or was it a favour to some friend of the government ?

Mr. FIELDING. The practice is that, when this place is not at too a great a distance from Ottawa, the chief architect sends an officer from the department. But when it is deemed not necessary to do that, they employ a local officer of the Department of Public Works. This local officer collects the opinions of these who are well informed as to the fair value of the land.

Mr. BERGERON. Tenders were not asked for, I imagine, until the government had bought the site, or, at least, knew what it would cost. So, they had $800 for the site and $9,000 for the contract. But there is a big difference between that and $17,000, which is the total cost.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman has forgotten what I said. The contract was not for $9,000 but for $9,800. There is nearly $1,000 accounted for. Then there were some extras on the contract. Then, there is $800 for lighting and $700 for heating apparatus. Then you have the fittings and so on.

Mr. BERGERON. But that is still far from $17,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. I suppose the minister has before him the items making up the total ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think I ought to have, but I am sorry to say I have not. If any hon. gentleman would rather have the details, I am quite willing that the item should stand over until the statement is prepared.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it would be better.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item stands.

Public Works—chargeable to income—public buildings—Ontario, London drill hall and armoury—electric wiring and fixtures, grading sidewalks, &c., $6,000.

Mr. FIELDING. There was a contract for the electric wiring amounting to $4,750 of which the contractors have received $950, leaving a balance of $3,800. There is due on granolithic walks $750, grading of the site $250, balance on architect's commission $376, incidentals $204 and other items up in round figures $6,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What has it all cost ?

Mr. FIELDING. The total cost to March 1st, 1905, is $193,944.67.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the amount of the contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. The contract was for $133,897.

Mr. BERGERON. What was that to cover ?

Mr. FIELDING. For the building as ordinarily understood. They are extras as set forth in the list I have before me.

Mr. BERGERON. There is a difference there of $60,000 over the original contract.

Mr. FIELDING. But then the total cost includes site, fittings, kerbs, levelling and other things of that kind which are not part of the building but which must be paid for.

Mr. BERGERON. But the point is this—the government comes to parliament and we are supposed to vote the money required for a building as they explain it to us. But we find afterwards that there are extras or incidentals that bring it up to a much larger figure.

Mr. FIELDING. I have the items set forth here, if any hon. gentleman wishes to hear them.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand the minister to say that this work is all completed. Why should the work be done before the money is voted ?

Mr. FIELDING. The chief architect says that the work is practically completed. There may be some of the outside work going on.

Mr. BERGERON. According to the figures the minister gave there is a sum due their architect. What is that for ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is for the superintending architect employed to supervise the work ; that is, in lieu of the clerk of works.

Mr. TAYLOR. But why should the government go and build granolithic walks and all that kind of thing before the money is voted and only after the work is done, come to parliament for the money ?

Mr. FIELDING. As Minister of Finance I join heartily with my hon. friend in the view he expresses. But, as acting Minister of Public Works, I may have to take a different view.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What was the original estimate for this work ?

Mr. FIELDING. The original estimate was $15,000 for the building, including, heating and lighting, and the cost has been $158,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How about the contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. These are for outside work and also for the site which cost $27,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Was not a site belonging to the government used for this building ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it was a new purchase.

Mr. BERGERON. From whom ?

Mr. FIELDING. There were a number of lots purchased from various people.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This is not on the site of the old building, is it ?

Mr. FIELDING. An entirely new site.

Mr. BERGERON. Wasn't there a drill hall there before ?

Mr. FIELDING. Not on this site.

Mr. BERGERON. What has become of the site of the old building ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is erected on a separate site that had to be purchased at a cost of $27,000, including legal expenses.

Mr. BERGERON. What has become of the old site ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is still there ; I can guarantee that it has not been carried away. I do not know whether it has been sold or not. There are some old buildings on the site that have been sold.

Mr. BERGERON. Can the hon. gentleman bring down the information about that?

Mr. FIELDING. I will.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Can the minister tell us what is the accommodation in this drill shed, what forces can it accommodate?

Mr. FIELDING. The main drill hall is 80 feet by 195. There are in connection with it eight armouries, a gun-shed, three harness rooms, several rooms for officers, band room, lecture room, room for army medical and army service corps, sergeants' mess, quartermaster's stores, bowling alley, lavatory, bathroom, room for caretaker. It is a very large and spacious place.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the government building a bowling alley ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is not an unusual thing in drill halls.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the government keeping it up ?

Mr. FIELDING. So far as the maintenance of the building is concerned, the government will keep it up. I do not know who will provide the balls.

Grosse Isle quarantine station—improvements and repairs, supplies, &c., $8,000.

Mr. FIELDING. These improvements include overhauling and renovating the steamer 'Challenger,' that is a part of the quarantine apparatus.

Mr. BERGERON. We voted some time ago an amount of money for that same purpose.

Mr. FIELDING. That was in the main estimate ; this is to wind up the affairs of the current year. The expenditures at Grosse Isle are under the supervision of the Public Works Office at Quebec.

Northwest Territories—Lloydminster immigrant building (revote of lapsed amount) $2,500.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What has been done at Lloydminster ?

Mr. FIELDING. This building was commenced in 1903-4 by the Department of the Interior ; the total expenditure has been $20,246. This sum will finish it. The vote of last year was allowed to lapse. This building was begun by the Department of the Interior and is now finished. It is charged to public works.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is it for immigration purposes ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, and the militia building is for drill purposes; but it is charged to public works. That department is the builder for all departments.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This building is also used for police purposes, is it not ?

Mr. FIELDING. The department are not aware, but it would be, I presume, used for any Dominion purpose.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They should put a fence around it and make it look a little neater. Thirty thousand dollars is altogether too much for a building of that kind, but things were done at that time with a rush.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What material is it built of?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Wood.

Public Works—income—British Columbia—Dominion public buildings—improvements, renewals, repairs, &c., $3,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Do we require to have these general votes all the time ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before the adjournment will the hon. Minister of Finance state what business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. The motion for supply will be made to-morrow.

Mr. TAYLOR. No autonomy Bill to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think not to-morrow.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thought we were promised that to-day or to-morrow for certain.

Mr. FIELDING. By whom?

Mr. TAYLOR. When it was left over last week.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know whether there has been any understanding between my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), but it will be subject to what the Prime Minister may say to-morrow. He did not intimate when he went away that it would come up.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think there was a general understanding that it would be taken up Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. FIELDING. I will have to ask the hon. gentleman to reserve that question until the Prime Minister is present.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, it will be estimates.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, estimates.

Mr. TAYLOR. Public Works ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I think so.

Motion agreed to, House adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May 30, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST—DISCUSSION OF BILL.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance, in the absence of the Prime Minister, when it is proposed to resume the discussion of the Bill establishing the new province of Alberta ? The Minister of Finance will perhaps remember that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice —who, I regret to learn, has been indisposed for a day or two—made a statement as to what, in his opinion, is the difference between clause 16 as originally inserted in these Autonomy Bills and the amended clause 16, which has not been discussed very much as yet, although it has been before the House for some time. Since the Minister of Justice made that statement—a very carefully considered statement which he read to the House—there has not been any opportunity, so far as I am concerned, to make any observations with regard to it, and if it would be convenient to the government I would like to speak on that question at as early a date as possible. In saying this, of course, I do not desire to put the Minister of Justice to any inconvenience if he is indisposed ; I merely mention it in order that my request may be conveyed to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Justice. I am unable to discuss the question until the government brings the Bills on again.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). A similar question was put to me at the adjournment last night. I then expected I would be able to see the Prime Minister this morning, so that I would be able to give an answer, but unfortunately he has not been at his office. I therefore do not feel at liberty to answer the question at present, but I will communicate with him, and my hon. friend will receive an intimation later. The absence of the Minister of Justice has an important bearing on the matter, and, as my hon. friend knows, he has been in very poor health.

GEORGIAN BAY ISLANDS—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. GEORGE D. GRANT. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to speak on a question of privilege. On Thursday last, in my absence from the House and the city, the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), during the discussion of the estimates of the Department of the Interior, made reference to the sale of an island in the Georgian bay to Mr. Frederick W. Grant, and the suggestion was thrown out here and repeated in the public press that the purchaser of this island being my brother, I necessarily had something to do with the transaction. I desire, Mr.

Speaker, in a very few words, but in language as explicit and as emphatic as is in my power to use, to say that my first knowledge of the transfer or sale of this island from the Department of the Interior to Mr. Frederick W. Grant was when I read of it in the Toronto press on Friday. I in no way approached the Minister of the Interior, nor any person in his department, either by letter or by personal interview, and, so far as my recollection goes—and I think it is to be depended upon—I knew nothing of the matter whatever. As to the merits of the purchase and sale of the island, that is a matter as to which the Department of the Interior and the Minister of the Interior can well defend themselves.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT. I did not exactly catch what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Grant) said at the outset of his remarks, but I rather gather that he stated that I had alleged that he interviewed the minister.

Mr. GRANT. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me interrupting him? I said the suggestion was thrown out; I read it from Unrevised 'Hansard,' page 6718.

Mr. BENNETT. As to the suggestion, it is for the hon. gentleman to make his deduction from what I did say, and for the public too. I did not make the statement emphatically that the hon. gentleman had at all interfered in the matter, owing to the fact that I had not seen the correspondence. Had I seen the correspondence perhaps I might have made a similar statement to that which I made formerly in reference to the hon. gentleman in connection with another matter, after I had the advantage of seeing the correspondence. On that occasion I found out this, that the hon. gentleman had written a letter to the department alleging that of his own knowledge the timber on——

Mr. FIELDING. Might I suggest to my hon. friend that we ought not to go in to another matter. This is a personal explanation on one matter and I do not think we should go into another matter.

Mr. BENNETT. With a personal reflection on another member.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. BENNETT. And I am endeavouring to get away from that.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no reflection.

Mr. HAGGART. But this is on a motion for supply.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is before the orders of the day; there is no motion for supply.

Mr. BENNETT. Then under these circumstances, the hon. gentleman having made what I may say is a personal attack on myself——

Mr. FIELDING. No it is not.

Mr. BENNETT. I have no doubt I have touched on a very ginger spot. The Minister of Finance has seen some very ginger spots lately and is always willing to jump to the rescue. I am quite willing to discuss this island matter where it is best known, and I think that when the people there know all the circumstances they will think this is about as crooked——

Mr. FIELDING. Order.

Mr. BENNETT——as the timber deal on Hope Island——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BENNETT——in which the hon. gentleman was mixed up.

SUPPLY—MANITOBA VOTERS' LISTS.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. THOMAS GREENWAY (Lisgar). I purpose availing myself of this opportunity to bring before the House a matter which is of considerable importance to the province from which I hail. I am quite well aware that in doing so I am trenching upon a policy which has been adopted by this House and by this government of adopting the provincial franchises for the purpose of Dominion elections, and I fancy that so far as that principle applies to the provinces in general it is a good policy. But if I cannot show by the statements which I propose to submit to the House that it is right and incumbent upon the government to adopt a different policy in reference to the province with which I am to deal, then I shall not say anything more about it. It will be within the recollection of those who are conversant with Manitoba politics that in the province of Manitoba adopted in the year 1902 the then government adopted a policy of personal registration; that is to say that every voter, no matter who he was, no matter how long he had lived in the country, no matter how much property he owned, no matter how well known he was, had to come at a certain time to a certain registration booth to register his vote otherwise he had no vote. At the time of the introduction of that Bill I occupied a seat in the legislature and I was very much opposed to the system of personal registration in that way. I do not know that there is such a system in any other part of the empire. If there is I am not conversant with it. The inconvenience of such a system to the province of Manitoba must be manifest to any one who is at all acquainted with its circumstances. The sparse settlement, the long distances it is necessary to travel, the expense, and the inconvenience of it altogether is very much against the system, and the results have shown that the opposition to the system at the time was well grounded. The importance of this subject will appear when I say to the House that there is not in existence in Manitoba to-day, in one single constituency for the House of Commons, a legal voters' list. We were asked to accept that law because it was commended to us as a new departure, as putting in the hands of the judges of the county courts the compilation of the lists and taking it away from partisan officials. That was the system which was adopted in 1903 in the compilation of the lists. The judges appointed the places for registration, appointed the courts of revision, appointed the registration clerks and all the details in connection with the compilation of the lists were prepared by the judges of the county courts. That certainly looked like a reasonable recommendation. That was continued for a while and the 1903 elections were held upon lists which were compiled in that way. A number of registration booths were appointed in each local electoral division, a number of days extending from the beginning of the week until the end of the week were given for the time of registration, and in that way although, it was very inconvenient and very expensive and entailed a great deal of work upon the respective parties still a fair, a reasonably fair list under that system was compiled. Now, Sir, I am one of those who think that the government having decided and the Commons having decided by the law of the land what shall qualify a voter, that the voter ought to have the means of registering his vote with the least possible expense and the least possible inconvenience. I think that is a good principle to lay down. Parliament having settled the franchise, having said what the qualification of a voter shall be, the machinery ought to be provided which will enable that individual to get registration or whatever else may be adopted for the compilation of the list and get his name upon the list with the least possible expense and inconvenience. I said that was the system which was adopted in 1903, and the judges of the county courts of the province established the registration booths, completed the lists and the elections were held upon these lists. Previously our law had been that no list would be compiled until prior to an election, so that when a proclamation was issued providing for the compilation of a list it was notice to the public that an election was about to be held and that some time within three months the list would be completed and the election held upon that list. That was the law under the government which I had the honour to lead for a number of years; that was the law which was introduced by our opponents in 1903 when this system of personal registration was adopted. But Sir, these gentlemen last year, in 1904, conceived the idea that it would be well for them to prepare lists for the purpose of the Dominion election. And they amended the law to provide that the compilation of the lists should take place each year during the month of May.

Mr. STAPLES. They did not make any provision for striking red lines through it.

Mr. GREENWAY.

Mr. GREENWAY. I will tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Staples) something about the red lines before I am done. And that reminds me that I have to deal with the hon. gentleman before I conclude the remarks I am about to make. If, after I am done, the hon. gentleman will stand up in this House and undertake to defend this iniquitous system, then I shall lose what little confidence I have in the hon. gentleman from Macdonald (Mr. Staples).

Mr. STAPLES. I can do that with a clearer conscience than that with which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Greenway) can defend his voters' list when he had the compiling of it.

Mr. GREENWAY. I am dealing with the preparation of the lists under the system established in Manitoba to-day, and I propose to deal with it notwithstanding the interruptions of my hon. friend from Macdonald. Now what did these gentlemen do? The compilation of the list which had been recommended by us because of all the details being worked out by the judges, was at once changed. Instead of leaving it to the judges, an Order in Council was passed, an Order in Council appointing the registration booths, fixing the time when these should be kept open, appointing the courts of revision and settling all the details. That was the system adopted by these gentlemen in 1904 for the purpose of preparing the lists to elect such gentlemen as the hon. gentleman for Macdonald. I shall give all the details in order to acquaint the House with the nature of this outrage—there is no other name for it—which is being perpetrated upon the people of Manitoba to-day. Why, Sir, in 1903, under the judges system, when the work was done by these gentlemen who knew the country and knew the circumstances, we had six days of ten hours each for registration. But under this precious system which I am going to discuss in a few minutes, we have one day. The Order in Council which was passed last month provided that there should be 7½ hours of registration. In 1903, when the lists were prepared by the judges, we had 480 registration booths in the province of Manitoba—I want my hon. friend (Mr. Staples) to make a note of that—we had 480 registration booths open for six days. In 1905, commencing the day after to-morrow, we are to have one day for each electoral district in the province of Manitoba—one day. It was provided by that Order in Council that that one day should be of 7½ hours; but, on account of the public feeling which was aroused in Manitoba, they have now increased it to 13 hours. This, is not, as I will show you later on, a question of time but a question of convenience. Under this new system, we are to have 40 registration booths for the province of Manitoba, instead of 480, and we are to have one day instead of 6 days. Or reducing it to hours, we had 20,790 hours for registration in 1903, and in this year of Our Lord, even by the increased time which they have given —they sent out an advertisement after the Order in Council had been passed—they have given just 520 hours. And, in an effort to make it appear that they are doing in favour of the voter they ask them to start at seven o'clock in the morning. Now, that may impress some as being a little unfair; it may occur to some hon. gentlemen who possess a love of fair-play that it is not the thing to do. All I am asking for is fair-play; all I want is that we shall have the means of preparing a complete list of the voters of the province.

Let me give some figures to show how this will work out. I take only a few constituencies, because I do not desire to weary the House. I take ten constituencies out of the total of forty, and give the extreme distances voters will have to travel in order to register their names: Avondale, 40 miles; Carillon, 78 miles; Dauphin, 70 miles. Then I come to the case of Emerson, which is somewhat peculiar. Emerson lies along the boundary, and there is a muskeg or morass in the centre, so that you cannot travel directly from one side of it to the other. People living in some of the townships of Emerson, in order to register their names, will be obliged to travel by railway to Winnipeg and thence by railway to Emerson a total of 164 miles. In Gimli, a constituency lying to the north, to reach the registration point some of the people will have to travel 210 miles; Gladstone, in a somewhat more populous constituency, 110 miles. In Kildonan and St. Andrews, the home of the old natives of Manitoba, along the Red river, they have to travel from the extreme points, 260 miles to reach the place where they must register their names; Springfield in the constituency of my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Jackson), 105 miles, Swan River, a Northwestern constituency, 145 miles. Now, Sir, that does not suit even some of the friends of the provincial government of Manitoba, and I do not think it would suit my hon. friend (Mr. Staples) if he had to travel any such distance as I have been speaking of to register his name as a voter. In the other constituencies, the distance varies from 25 miles to 75 miles. I have here a quotation from a Conservative country paper in the constituency of my hon. friend who was interrupting me. Perhaps he knows the paper; it is the Miami 'Herald' published in a nice little town in the constituency of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Staples).

Mr. STAPLES. That is the town in which thirteen were disfranchised by the red line.

Mr. GREENWAY. There are some things that the hon. gentleman talks about concerning which he knows very little. Perhaps he had better send and get a copy of the Miami 'Herald' if he has not one already. This is what it says:

> The new provincial voters' lists are to be made up in June. Carman is the only place for registration in Dufferin. The editor happens to be one of those compelled to drive twenty-one miles and return.
> He should not have grumbled, it is a mistake for a gentleman to grumble who has only to go twenty-one miles. That is far below the average, I think he is down at the minimum point.
> The editor happens to be one of those compelled to drive twenty-one miles and return or lose his franchise, and we much prefer the latter. We have always been Tory heretofore, but if registered now—well we would feel like putting a government in power that would do the square thing with the registration booth. The prospects are that the Miami boys will stay at home.

Now, Mr. Speaker, why is it that these gentlemen don't want to do the square thing? Simply because of an advantage, which I shall point out directly, that they gain by the compilation of the list of 1904, and they are determined that that list shall remain until they have another provincial general election upon it; they are determined, because the number of unregistered Liberals far exceeds the number of unregistered Conservatives. That is the reason, and I will undertake to prove that to you by some evidence which I have in my possession, giving a comparison between the system adopted by the judges and the system which now prevails. Let me give a few instances with regard to some other constituencies. The first constituency I have upon my memorandum is the constituency in which my hon. friend from Portage (Mr. Crawford) resides, Beautiful Plains. Under the judges system of registration they had 16 places of registration and 96 days for registration, six days for each place; under this government, in 1904, when they were compiling a list for the purpose of electing members of the House of Commons, they gave us 10 places and 10 days. I will give you the results in a tabular form:

Constituency.	Judges' system.		System of 1904.
	Places.	Days.	Places.	Days.
Beautiful Plains	16	96	10	10
Dauphin	17	102	11	12
Gladstone	15	90	17	18
Gimli	14	84	12	12
Killarney	12	72	7	12
Rockwood	12	72	8	9
Swan River	15	90	7	7

Now, Sir, I want to say here that that was a studied thing, that was the entering wedge that they proposed to drive home upon this last occasion to prevent the people from being registered. In the polling subdivision where I happen to reside there was a very large area, 108 square miles, with 320 odd voters in it. It had given the largest Liberal majority that was given in the previous local election, by any single polling division and therefore it must be punished, and they got two hours to do their resignation, from 11 o'clock until 1 o'clock, and one was the dinner hour. That is what they did right at my own home. I went to the gentleman who was registration clerk and asked him who was responsible for this iniquity. He said, not me. I said, I did not think it was. Now, Sir, let me come to the present system of registration and say a word or two about that. I have given you the distances that people have to travel, and I want to show you why it is that these gentlemen have adopted this course ; it is because of the incomplete list, and because they are determined that the Liberals of Manitoba shall not register. In the constituency of my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. Cyr), and in the local constituency of Emerson, where I pointed out that it was most inconvenient for electors to register, there are at least 500 available voters for registration, and there will not be 100 of them who will register, there cannot be, there is no provision for it. Let me just remind the House that under the system which we have there is a long list of interrogatories that have to be answered by each person applying to be registered. It does not make any difference who he is, what he is, or how well known he is, he has to answer these interrogatories. It takes quite a time in case there is no dispute over the qualification of the voter, and in case there is a dispute it takes longer. You could not by any possible means register within the thirteen hours that is given by the government, and in a place where there are more than 150 voters it would be impossible for them to register. In the city of Winnipeg, if my hon. friend who represents Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) were here he could tell you that there are available to-day for registration at least from 4,000 to 5,000 voters. Under this precious system it is possible perhaps to register 300 of them, and the remaining thousands have to go unregistered—purposely, systematically it is provided that they shall not register. Why, Sir, I have been surprised when I have been thinking of the manner in which our governments are run, and when I find an old colleague of mine occupying the position of Lieutenant Governor of the province of Manitoba, becoming a party to such an outrage as this, I cannot find language which I would be permitted to use here, Mr. Speaker, to characterize a thing of that kind. I am free to admit that there is a general idea that a constitutional governor is supposed to do what he is advised to do, but surely there is a limit to that. Fancy a gentleman thirty-five years a resident of Manitoba, who knows all the circumstances, who knows the conditions of the country, putting his signature to a document of that kind, by which at least ten per cent of the electorate of the province of Manitoba are to be disfranchised. I am within the mark when I make that statement. Now, Sir, I want to be perfectly candid with the House, I want to tell the House exactly how things stand. I have the voters' list here which professes to be the voters' list of the constituency of Lisgar. I will say something about that a little later on. We have heard a great deal as to the list and the disadvantage we were placed in by the compilation of it last year when we took no interest in it. I will explain that a little later on. If we were allowed to compile a fair list in Lisgar and if we had a fair list in Lisgar I am here to say in this House that the Liberals would gain at least 300 voters, and shall the doctrine be pronounced in this House or any other House that because they are Liberals they should be disfranchised? Is that a good doctrine to preach? I do not think it is.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ? Is he opposed to the principle of the Franchise Act introduced by this administration which leaves the preparation of these lists to the provinces ?

Mr. GREENWAY. I think the hon. gentleman was not present when I stated my position on that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps not.

Mr. GREENWAY. I said that as a rule I thought the policy of using the provincial franchise was a good one, but I proposed to show before I sat down that in this case it was not a good one and there ought to be an exception. I said a little while ago that we had not in the province of Manitoba a proper, legal list for any single constituency for the House of Commons. I was quite well aware of it before I came here, but to verify that belief and that opinion I sent a note, after I came down here, to the King's Printer and asked him if he would be good enough to supply me with the voters' lists of my own constituency, the constituency of Lisgar. I have in my hand what I received from him and I merely quote this to show the utter impossibility, even if the list were honestly prepared, of using the list which is prepared by the local government for the purposes of the House of Commons. I sent over to the King's Printer and he sent me this. You will remember that my constituency comprises two entire local divisions and parts of three others. I asked the voters' list for my constituency of Lisgar and I received this list. I went over the list which was quite a little chore and some people of the province of Manitoba got into trouble for doing what I did in reference to this about which I will have something to say a little later on. The list I received contained 7,344 names. There are 4,237 that belong to me and there are 3,097 that belong to somebody else. How is that? Take the constituency of Emerson. There is one township in the constituency of Emerson brought into Lisgar and because that one township was brought into Lisgar this gentleman sends me the whole electoral list of Emerson. That applies to Mountain, and to Manitou, two other constituencies portions of which are in Lisgar. If we undertook to hold an election in Manitoba to-day we would not have a list upon which to hold it, and if anybody should undertake to prepare it, because there is no provision under the law by which these lists shall be made, the Attorney General would have him arrested and prosecuted for so doing. I want to say right here that if an election were to take place in any constituency in Manitoba, so long as we have the present Attorney General at the head of affairs, and I were asked to nominate a returning officer for the constituency in which the election was to be held I would not do so. I would not put my friend in the position of being persecuted as others have been.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Greenway) to say that one division of Emerson is brought into Lisgar?

Mr. GREENWAY. I did not catch what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I understand the hon. member for Lisgar to be finding fault because one portion of the local constituency of Emerson was brought into the Dominion constituency of Lisgar.

Mr. GREENWAY. I did not find fault with it at all. I was finding fault with the list. The hon. gentleman does not understand me. I was finding fault because the list was not right, and I was finding fault because the hon. gentleman's friends persecute people who undertake to put the list right.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I would ask the hon. gentleman to state again what he said about part of Emerson being brought into the constituency of Lisgar.

Mr. GREENWAY. I said that because one township of Emerson was in the conconstituency of Lisgar, the King's Printer sent me the whole of the list of Emerson.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Exactly, that is what I understand.

Mr. GREENWAY. I was not complaining about that. I was not saying anything about what the district should be.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is exactly what I want to know.

Mr. GREENWAY. The hon. gentleman will know that another reason for complaint against the Liberals of Manitoba was that they had changed the polling subdivisions. According to the law of Manitoba it was supposed that the registration district under the law which was carried out by the judges should be the polling division. My hon. friend knows, if he thinks for a moment, that one part of the western end of my constituency and one part of the eastern end of his constituency comprise one polling subdivision and that in this subdivison there are 59 votes in my constituency and 142 votes in the constituency of my hon. friend. What is going to be done? Who is going to provide the remedy? Who is going to provide that the 59 votes shall vote in my constituency and the 142 in the constituency of my hon. friend? Somebody has to do it, somebody has done it, and because somebody has done it he has been persecuted and prosecuted by the local government. There have been a great many things said about this election. I know that the Minister of Public Works of the province of Manitoba, who has been quoted sometimes in this House and who has furnished my hon. friends opposite with a good deal of material, has told his friends in the east that they propose to carry every seat in Manitoba. Well, he was not without having some good grounds for his faith because he knew how the lists were prepared and he knew that the Liberals had neglected to take part in the compilation. This statement has been made very clearly and perhaps I might as well say here the reason why the Liberals neglected it. I am speaking for the purpose of being perfectly candid with everybody, and I find fault with my friends of the government who knew the state of affairs in Manitoba that they did not carry out their intention at the last session of parliament and give us the means of having a proper list. It was because of the understanding—I never had any personal understanding, but I know I am speaking by the book—that we are going to have a new list that the Liberals neglected the compilation of the list. It was because of the understanding that the government was going to take this course, that the Liberals, in the compilation of the lists, neglected them altogether, and it is because of the local lists which we had that these gentlemen in Winnipeg wanted to perpetuate those lists and get another advantage from them if they could. You could not have a better illustration of how these men acted than a little extract from a paper published in the town from which my hon. friend from Portage (Mr. Crawford) hails. The revision at the court house that paper says, is a production worthy of its authors. This was the revision of 1904 for the purpose of electing members to the House of Commons. Every canvasser upon the Conservative side in Manitoba was told that that was the list upon which the next Dominion elections were going to be run, and they were very eager to see all their friends get on. Here is one of the results at the Court of Revision :

As a result of the revision 65 Tories were added and 105 Grits were struck off. No Grits were added nor Tories struck off unless in error.

That is a little bit of evidence of how that list was compiled and because this clipping expresses my sentiments, I may as well give it to the House.

But there are fully a hundred Grits that should go on and a hundred Tories that should come off, but it would have cost the Liberals $500 to get their friends on and their opponents off. Such a law is subversive of the liberties of the people and cannot be too quickly wiped off the statue-book. It is the duty of the House of Commons to pass legislation at the present session for a fair and impartial enrolment of the electors for the federal elections.

My hon. friend talks about the little red line, I happen to know that after we had got the evidence with reference to these lists, we had had the greatest difficulty in the world to get a candidate on our side. I am not revealing any particular party secret that is of much consequence just now when I say that I do know there are sitting in this House, men who declared they would not run because of the failure of the government to carry out the promise which I fancy was made. They were induced to run on account——

Mr. BENNETT. Of the stuff.

Mr. GREENWAY. They were induced to run, and the result was perhaps different from what they expected. I could confront my hon. friend, who interrupted me, with a good deal of evidence on the subject, because it is important perhaps to show the motive of the crime about to be committed next month. Let me refer him to a little inadvertence of his. During the time of the registration for 1904, he received a letter from his leader in Manitoba, of which he did not take that great care he should, or it would not have got into public print. A copy of it was published in some of the papers in Manitoba, and I merely cite this to show that these gentlemen knew then, as they know now, that we did not take any part in the compilation of the lists. I shall not read all the letter but my hon. friend, if he wants to read it through and refresh his memory, can find it in the reading room.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Read it all ; it is not very long.

Mr. GREENWAY. No, it is not very long, but I need not read it all, because there is a part of it which is not pertinent to the question which I am discussing. For instance that part which refers to my old time friend Mr. Richardson :

I presume you were busy with registration this week, but so far as I can learn no effort is being made by the Grits anywhere. That means one of two things. Either they are going to change the law or there will be no election this year.

An hon. MEMBER. Is that all ?

Mr. GREENWAY. No, but that is all of that. Then I have here extracts from the Conservative papers in Winnipeg, both senior and junior, crowing over the Liberals because they had failed to have anything to do with the compilation of the lists and then were laughed at by their friends. The 'Tribune,' which is the junior Conservative paper in Winnipeg, and is perhaps a little more zealous than its old time friend the 'Telegram,' because it is its junior, published a long article headed 'The joke of the hour.' And the joke of the hour was that the Liberals did not get upon the lists which were to be used in the Dominion elections. It is no wonder then that my hon. friend was disappointed when he found Manitoba went the way it did. And the hon. the leader of the opposition received messages from the gentleman to whom I refer, assuring him that Manitoba would send a solid contingent in his favour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What gentleman ?

Mr. GREENWAY. The Hon. Mr. Rogers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not aware of any such messages.

Mr. GREENWAY. I read the messages in the newspapers but perhaps they did not reach the hon. gentleman.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not see them.

Mr. GREENWAY. My hon. friend has been paying a good deal of attention to Mr. Rogers during the session and perhaps it is well he should not forget him just now. A few days after the election, Mr. Rogers came to Toronto and gave an interview, in which he undertook to account for the defeat of the Conservative party in Manitoba, in that interview he said :

Three-fourths of the voters in Manitoba were Conservative.

I suppose he meant three-fourths of those who were on the lists, but to a good many the privilege of voting was denied.

In every polling division in the province from ten to forty voters found, on presenting themselves at the polls, that they were unable to vote. Their names were on the official lists and the red line——

This is the red line about which my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) has been dreaming.

The red line had been run through them and the deputy returning officers refused to give them the ballots.

I characterize that as one of the worst pieces of misrepresentation I know of. You have only to think for a moment of this fact. There were 545 polling places opened in Manitoba. If I take my hon. friends lowest number, ten voters, there were 5,450 votes. If I take the average number at twenty, you have twice that; and I want to say right here that in the changing of the lists, which had to be done by some one, there was not in the whole of Manitoba one hundred errors in making those changes. Of course a red line or a blue line, or some other line had to be used to strike out the votes that I refer to. They did not belong to me in Lisgar but belonged to my hon. friend. When I read that, I took the trouble to go carefully over the polling books to find out just what happened in Lisgar, and what was the result? I found that there had been six Liberals left off the list and that three Conservatives had been misplaced. That was the sum total of the errors in Lisgar. My hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) on one occasion undertook to say that his majority would have been vastly increased had it not been for the red line, but I can tell him that if it had not been for the stuffing of the lists and for the preventing of Liberals getting on the lists, the hon. gentleman would have had no majority at all.

Now, Sir, I know of no better illustration of the unfairness of the Conservative papers than their action in connection with this matter. Early in the session we had scare head lines in all the papers, from the Montreal 'Gazette' down to the Toronto 'World': 'Frauds in Manitoba; startling developments in Manitoba in the preparation of the lists.' In my more than a quarter of a century's experience in Manitoba, I do not remember of there ever having been but one special fraud attempted, and that was by a gentleman who was sent up from the east, and whose name was Freeborn, and who came up for the purpose of teaching our people how they might spoil ballots. But upon this last and worst outrage these papers are absolutely silent. Now, Sir, it is not necessary for me to go over the entire list of the evidence I have. I have a number of extracts here from newspapers to show that the Liberals neglected the lists entirely. I can give you another very good proof of the fact that the lists were not complete. For instance, in the local election of 1903 there were polled in the province of Manitoba 54,500 votes; one constituency, Gimli, which was by acclamation, being estimated. In the election of 1904 for the House of Commons, when, by the steady increase which took place in our voting power in a country which is being largely settled like Manitoba, we should at least have had 3,000 votes more, in this Dominion election there was only polled 53,100 votes. Instead of there being 3,000 votes more than in 1903, which would have been the regular increase, there were 1,400 less votes, showing that the lists were not complete, and further giving evidence of the fact that the contention of the premier, when he wrote my hon. friend, was quite correct, and that we were paying no attention to the lists. That was the position in which we found ourselves. I said a moment ago that I had gone carefully over the parts of the country with which I am acquainted and made a very careful estimate of what is the percentage of that incomplete list, and I say now that upon the 1st day of July, when this list is completed by the present arrangement—it has been decreed by that famous Order in Council that it shall be completed within one month, allowing only one day for court revision by the judges in each constituency, making it impossible for people to be registered—when that is all over, there will be fully 10 per cent of the electorate of Manitoba that will be disfranchised. I wonder if my hon. friend from Macdonald will undertake to defend that state of things. I do not believe that in the history of Canada there ever was undertaken to be perpetrated upon the people such a gross outrage as the one we are discussing just now. I bring this matter before the House to-day for the purpose of pressing upon the government the necessity of providing that a proper list shall be compiled for the province of Manitoba. Surely, in face of the evidence I have presented, there can be no hesitation as to the necessity for it. There is no legal provision for the use of the present lists. We all know, and we have the evidence of our opponents, who say that it is not complete. Is there not a spirit of fair-play enough in my opponents, whom I am addressing, to say that there ought to be a means by which every man who is entitled to vote should be placed upon the list? Is not that good, sound doctrine? I think it is. I do not believe that any party would be guilty of trying to fasten—even if they threaten, as they did last year, to sit here till the snow flies—I do not think any party would be guilty of trying to fasten such an iniquity on the people of Manitoba. In view of the evidence I have given, I hope my friends will see their way clear to remedy this injustice. I want to say to our friends here that if we would take the list as we have it to-day in Manitoba, and if we would go to the courts of revision and that it would be possible or convenient to go to in all the towns in the different constituencies, it would cost the Liberal party of Manitoba $1,000 for each local constituency, or $40,000 in all, to make that list perfect. Ought that work be imposed upon any party? Is it a good, sound principle to force any party to do work of that kind in order to get voters upon the lists? The system which we have in force now is equal to running two elections instead of one. We have to go to an elector and say: We want you to go to such a place and register your vote; and he may reply: I will not go. Then you have to persuade him, you have to take him there and see that he is registered, and possibly take him back again; and then when he comes to vote you have to repeat the whole thing all over. My hon. friends who have been running elections as long as I have well know something about that. Now, Sir, I do not think that is a fair policy to adopt. I do not think it is fair to our friends in Manitoba. I have spoken longer than I intended and longer than I would have spoken had not my hon. friends opposite interrupted me, but I think I have omitted nothing that is essential to show that the lists are incomplete and that my contention is sound, that they must remain incomplete, because there is no possible way under the system which has been adopted in the province of getting the names on the voters' lists.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I am sorry I had not the pleasure of hearing the whole of the speech of my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway), as I was in attendance at a committee of the House when I heard that the hon. gentleman was appealing to the jury of parliament in order to get what he calls fair-play, but not what I believe he considered to be the kind of fair-play that he dealt out to his opponents when he was premier of Manitoba. There may be a difference of opinion as to what fair-play is. It is well to remember, however, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Greenway) has failed to appeal successfully to his own jury in the province of Manitoba ; he was turned down by the people of his province for all time to come, and now he appears as a private member of the House of Commons and endeavours to enlist the sympathies of the members of this House against what he is pleased to term an iniquitous electoral list. Our friends on the opposite side of the House were not satisfied with the old Dominion Franchise Act. They said it was too cumbersome and too expensive, and that it put the people to a very great deal of expense and inconvenience, but if we are going to change the present system of preparing the voters' lists, and if we are going to have an inexpensive system, as the hon. member for Lisgar says he desires, then that system should apply to all the other provinces of the Dominion, and should not be specially applied to any one particular province.

Now, however, things have changed ; there has been a revolution of feeling, in the more intelligent parts of Canada at any rate, and Manitoba sent the ball rolling in the right direction. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Greenway) would never have held the reins of government so long as he did in Manitoba on broad questions of public policy. He secured his support at least on two successive elections, by appeals to prejudice and passions of the people by means of the school question. This is what retained the hon. gentleman in power so very long and not the fact of his general policy being suitable to the people of the province. Now, because they have met with defeat on a couple of occasions in Manitoba the hon. gentleman desires that an exception should be made in the province in connection with the Dominion Franchise Act, and that you should take the provincial lists wherever there is a Liberal government in power and that you should have a new list prepared by the Dominion officials where there is a Conservative government in power. He has in mind no doubt the list that was prepared for the constituency of Lisgar two or three years ago at the time a by-election was held there. The Dominion Act calls for new lists to be prepared by the Dominion officials in the event of the provincial lists being more than 12 months old. At the time of the by-election Mr. Richardson was seeking the franchise of the electors, and by the way my hon friend referred rather skeptically to his old time friend Mr. Richardson. Time was when they used to hunt in couples ; time was when Mr. Richardson and the right hon. gentleman himself used to go from hustings to hustings and he appreciated the support that he received from Mr. Richardson at that time. They are not standing on the same platform to-day.

Mr. GREENWAY. He has gone Tory.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The fact is that the hon. gentleman and his friends have changed their principles and Mr. Richardson is still standing exactly for the principles that he advocated when he was a candidate for the hon. gentleman and his party. It is the party which has strayed away from their moorings and they should not be so very unkind to Mr. Richardson because he chose to turn his guns on the hon. gentleman now and because standing to his principles, Mr. Richardson in discharging his duties as a public citizen endeavours to lead the hon. gentleman back to his first starting place. There was a by-election in that constituency a few years ago. The provincial lists were more than 12 months old and a new list had to be prepared. The Dominion Act states that in the compilation of these lists the provincial law should be followed in so far as it possibly can be followed. What was the Manitoba Act ? That the judges should prepare the list, should appoint the officials, should have the courts of revision. Was that Act followed out ? Not at all. Mr. Sifton, the Minister of the Interior of that day, ignored the provincial Act in making a new list for Lisgar. This was one of the cases where that gentleman was superior to the law of the country or thought he was superior, and he therefore appointed not the judges of the province, but one of his own political organizers, a henchman, a private citizen who had been one of his own organizers. He constituted him the board instead of the judges of Manitoba. Was that adhering to the law ? What did he do ? Did he do everything in an inexpensive manner, did he do everything to suit the electors' convenience ? Not at all. He placed the registration booths in the most inconvenient places he could for the Conservative party and he adopted the same plan for the courts of revision. He made it as inconvenient as possible for the Conservatives to get on the lists or to get out the votes. The hon. gentleman is sighing for a return to this order of things. He gets up in the parliament here and tries to enlist the sympathy of the members with a tear in his voice telling what wonderful consideration he has for the good old days. He wants to go back to the good old days in Lisgar, when Mr. Sifton manufactured the list through a private citizen, ignoring the judges of the land. He is not so anxious to use the provincial lists as when the Liberals were in power. He says: I desire to see a fair list—and you would think he was in earnest when he says that. His recollection must be very short if he cannot remember when he was Prime Minister of the province, when he used to manufacture the lists. And what kind of lists did we have then. Did he have the judges prepare the lists? Oh, no. He would not trust the judges in the province. Who prepared the list? Partisan officers appointed by his own government some of whom had to fly the country for the country's good. I do not have to go at all outside my own constituency to find an illustration of the character of the partisan officials that that gentleman appointed. The law stated that they should take the last provincial lists, the last Dominion lists, and the last municipal lists as a basis in making up the new lists, compiling them therefrom and making any additions necessary, but in making the additions when we were supposed to supply affidavits in the absence of the person appealing for registration, I have myself sent in a list of electors accompanied by my affidavit, that they were legitimate electors, qualified to vote. I handed these affidavits in to an officer appointed by the Liberal government of the day and when the lists were printed a number of these names were left off notwithstanding they were accompanied by an affidavit. This is only one illustration of many, and when the revision was being held and the present Judge Richards was the revising officer, I asked the enumerator who prepared the list how it came that these names were left off. I said: Did you not see that this man's name, (taking one instance), was on the provincial, Dominion and municipal lists and that he had been resident of the province for years? Why did you leave him off? Yes, he said, but the laws says I am to get any other information possible that is available. I asked him why he had ignored the passing over of this man's name in the previous lists and had taken outside information. I asked his authority and he refused to give it. I pointed to the Liberal candidate who was there at the time and I said: There is you authority, you took the word of the Liberal candidate for it that this man's name should not be on the list, and refused my affidavit. Is that partisanship? And when the judge, then the revising officer, heard it, he immediately put down the name on the list and called down the enumerator for his partisan action. That is only one illustration of the character of those fair lists that prevailed during the regime of the hon. gentleman who is making such a hubbub about the lists in Manitoba. Take again in the city of Winnipeg. The Ogilvie Milling Company had 30 employees in a certain mill there. These men had been on previous lists, but at this particular time it was found that 27 of the names were left off and three were put on. Of course it was only a coincidence that the three who were put on were Liberals and that the 27 who were left off were Conservatives. When the enumerator was asked how it came that these 27 Conservative electors were left off what was his explanation? Well, he said, I have an old list to go by, and I found that these three names are on the list and I put them in the new list. He was asked what list he had and he actually confessed it was an old scrutineer's book that had been used in the previous election and he put on the three names that had been marked as voting Liberal and left off the 27 although they all worked in the same mill. And this is the fair list the hon. gentleman wants: to go back to the old days when they did not depend on intimidation and bribery alone but disfranchised the electors by leaving them entirely off the lists. The hon. gentleman has stated that a great many electors in Manitoba at the present time have to go 40, 50, or 60 miles or even more in order to reach the registration courts. And he tells us: When I was in power they had so many registration districts, they had so many courts of revision; two years ago when the judges were running affairs, we had half a dozen or a dozen in each constituency, while now there is only one. In this way, the hon. gentleman compared the revision that is to take place this year with the revision that took place two years ago and when he was in power in Manitoba. But, Mr. Speaker, there is no comparison whatever. Why? Because the list of two years ago was a new list entirely on the basis of personal registration. Those who are already on the list do not need to go up and register again. We have a permanent population, you say, in Manitoba. Of course, there are always new people coming in, but those who, in the meantime, have become qualified, have the privilege of coming forward and registering at the registration booth or at the Court of Revision held some time after the registration, while the names already on the list are left on unless the parties have become disqualified in the meantime and application is made to strike them off. So, the hon. gentleman (Mr.

Greenway states only a part of the truth. Why should the country be put to the expense of making up an entire new list? That is where the hon. gentleman missed having a grievance. Had the provincial government provided for as many registration booths as when the list was being prepared, with all the extra officers and general expense, the hon. gentleman would have been the first to quote this as evidence of the extravagance of the provincial administration. But the provincial government know that this is an off-year, that there will be no provincial election. Nor will there be a Dominion election, unless the hon. gentleman (Mr. Greenway) is unseated for bribery and corruption, or unless the place of his dear old friend, whom he rather reflected upon, the Lieutenant Governor of the province, which place is to become vacant this fall, attracts him, in which event we may have a by-election in Lisgar. But why should the provincial government have the same number of registration districts and courts of revision that they had two years ago when a new list had to be prepared? And the hon. gentleman's comparison of the number of miles electors had to go now to register their names with the number they had to travel for the same purpose two years ago is entirely unfair. The hon. gentleman cannot complain of the Mountain election having been won by unfair lists, because that is one of the constituencies in which the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite had actively looked after the lists, one of the Liberal organizers going there and spending most of his time last year during the revision. They expected two vacancies in that province. The first was Dauphin, where the Conservative member of the provincial legislature was going to be the Conservative candidate for the Dominion. The friends of hon. gentlemen opposite looked well after that list. Then, they knew that the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) was discredited as provincial leader, his friends wishing to get him out of the way, were going to put him up as a candidate for the Dominion parliament, which would create a vacancy, in the constituency he then represented in the local House, the constituency of Mountain. And so they looked well after that list. But, in spite of their having a list as favourable to themselves as they could make it, the hon. gentleman's old constituency of Mountain, owing to the great upheaval of public opinion there, defeated his candidate, and, for the first time in twenty-five years elected a Conservative. Two years ago, the judges of the province revised the lists and made the nomination of the registration clerks. And, if fault is found it is found with the appointment of registration clerks by the provincial government to-day. I can only say the government have re-appointed very many of the men who were appointed two years ago. And, when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Greenway) tries to make his explanation of the 'thin red line,' I think he could hardly have satisfied himself, much less the members of this House. He attempted to show that it was because certain polling districts belonged to two ridings, and that it was necessary to have the names appear according to their proper division. I have here a fac simile of the list for division No. 9 of Selkirk—except that there are black lines instead of red—which I show to hon. gentlemen opposite to make them ashamed of the officials their friends appointed. For, this subdivision was entirely within one constituency, we find no fewer than forty-two names struck off. Many of these men were disfranchised and many more would have been disfranchised had not they taken possession of the poll and insisted upon the deputy returning officer accepting their ballots. But, even when he did accept them, he put them in a separate envelope and did not count them in the general vote. So, when the hon. gentleman attempts to account for this disfranchisement of qualified voters by saying that it was necessary in the case of subdivisions which are in two constituencies, his explanation does not explain. In my own constituency, the returning officer is an honest, straightforward man, a fellow citizen of my own. He is above doing anything of a dishonest character. But he received instructions from some person. The law states that a returning officer shall prepare, or cause to be prepared, a list which he shall supply to the deputy returning officers and which he shall certify as correct. Did the returning officer for the constituency of Marquette do that? No. My agent waited upon him and saw the lists brought into his office and unpacked. He saw the red line scored through the names and asked the returning officer what explanation he could give of it. The returning officer admitted candidly that he did not do it. My agent asked where the lists were prepared in this way, and the returning officer answered that he presumed that they were erased in Winnipeg. My agent called his attention to eleven names in a certain district where the voters were wrongly described. For instance, a man living in township 15 range 17 was given as township 16 range 17. And, because of that, red lines were scored through the names. Of eleven names thus wrongly described, ten were those of Conservatives, and all had been scored out. One was a Liberal, and there was no red line through that name, although the description was wrong as in the other cases. My agent asked the returning officer: How can you certify these lists to be correct as required by law? And the returning officer answered: I will take good care not to do anything of the kind ; I will write 'certified,' not 'certified correct.' And, if you will look at the Marquette list, which I moved to have laid on the table, you will find that that is the way it is certified. It was a quibble, I grant you; but the returning officer would not take the responsibility of certifying the lists to be correct, because he knew that they were not correct. These lists were scored before they came into his possession and scored in the office of the Liberal organizer in Winnipeg. Now, who were some of these officials ? Take one in the constituency of Selkirk. Everybody will admit that the men appointed to act as deputy returning officers and poll clerks should be men who have the confidence of the people of their districts. But in one district they had a man by the name of Duggan. He had been a bartender in the town of Selkirk. In his evidence he stated that he was a clerk in a hotel, and had previously been tending bar in Selkirk. And this was a gentleman who was appointed returning officer in that constituency, as was shown afterwards in the court. There were at poll 9, Beausejour, twenty-three names struck off; at poll 16 there were twenty-two names ; at poll 11, one name; at poll 26, fifteen names; at poll 27, seven names ; at poll 35, six names ; at poll 37, nineteen names. Some of these may have been put on poll 28, for the list for that subdivision was missing. Many of the lists which should have been sent back to the court were found missing from the ballot boxes and have never been found up to the present day. So far as we can learn, every one of these people was struck off and disfranchised, because they were not all allowed to vote at any poll, though they were entitled to do so.

Now it was invariable, so far as we can learn, there may have been a few exceptions by mistake, but the lists without exception were of Conservative electors. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman was rather venturesome to bring a question like this up in the House of Commons, with such a black record for his party. Not being satisfied with the thin red line in that constituency, they have used it in other constituencies as well. For instance in the constituency of Macdonald it was not known until the morning of the election by the Conservative portion of the community that these lists had been so doctored, and when they found it out they went to the law officer of the Crown, to the Attorney General and some arrests were made on that occasion. Investigations have been held and some of the charges have been thrown out on technicalities, for instance in one case where the charge was that they were erased from the list the word 'wilful' was left out, and on this the judge threw the case out because he held it was an error or omission. But there were other cases that never came to trial because the grand jury did not allow, as I think they should have allowed, in my opinion—I am not going to accuse them of being animated by political motives—but at any rate the grand jury did not see fit to allow other cases to come to trial. Nevertheless these gentlemen, through another process of law, are going to be made to face the music, and we will see if they can commit these crimes with impunity. I might read a great deal of evidence distinctly declaring that the witnesses had taken their lists into Mr. Leach. And who is Mr. Leach ? Mr. Leach was the Dominion Liberal organizer for the province of Manitoba. He has since secured his reward by being appointed to a position in the Department of the Interior, the usual refuge for all these gentry who were doing handy work for the Liberal party. Mr. Leach is to-day in the employ of the Dominion government as a reward for his political services. He opened an office in the city of Winnipeg, he had the returning officers send or bring their lists into him, and he even prepared the proclamations. These proclamations were prepared some time prior to the election by means of a personal canvas, and the canvas books were prepared throughout the province by the Liberal organizers long before the elections were held. In my constituency there was a gentleman by the name of McNab who had never been out of the constituency prior to holding the election, for 10 months doing just such work preparatory to scoring off those names. These lists were prepared under the direction and guidance of Mr. Leach. Can any hon. gentleman on the opposite side of the House defend that proceeding ? Who can say that it is right and proper for the Liberal organizer to take this work out of the returning officers hands, the gentleman who is by law appointed to prepare these lists ? They are taken entirely out of his hands by the Liberal organizer, and do you suppose that a gentleman of that kind is likely to do his work in a manner to commend itself to the fairness of both political parties ? Is it surprising that under these circumstances we find the thin red line doing its work very efficiently in many cases ? Let me read the evidence of one Ayotte, a deputy returning officer, when he was being cross-examined. He states that he took his list into the office of Mr. Leach, the Liberal organizer, who furnished him with his proclamation and asked him if he could fix the lists according to the proclamation, and he said he could. He is asked :

Did you leave the lists with him ?—A. Yes, sir.

Shortly afterwards he went back to Mr. Leach and obtained the lists altered in a great measure by having lines struck through names on the lists. He apparently did not take the trouble to ascertain whether the alterations made were proper or not, nor did he even examine them for the purpose of ascertaining what were the nature of the alterations Mr. Leach had made, for he goes on in his evidence to state :

Mr. Knott : Q. You did not know anything about them, that is, the lists ?—A. No.

Q. They may have been different lists altogether for all you know ?—A. Yes.

Q. They may have been lists for Macdonald or Winnipeg ?—A. Yes, they may have been.

Q. You took his word (that is Mr. Leach's) that these were the lists you wanted, with the different polling subdivisions, and that satisfied you then ?—A. Yes.

Having received the lists in this altered condition, Ayotte certified to them as being correct, although he admitted he did not know whether they were correct or not. He then went and placed them in their respective ballot boxes, which ballot boxes he had kept in the Liberal candidate's committee rooms in St. Boniface. The Liberal committee rooms in St. Boniface were the headquarters for this gentleman, where he took his lists and left them in their boxes. All the official papers transmitted to him in connection with the election from Provencher were also kept by him in Mr. Cyr's committee room in St. Boniface, but how long they were there the witness could not tell. There was no safe there where they could be locked up, and it is not known how many people had access to them during the time they were there. He did not know just how long they remained in that committee room. Now this gentleman confesses that he took the lists to the Liberal organizer ; and he took them to be fixed in conformity with the proclamation, and that Mr. Leach had them fixed for him. He went and received the lists, without knowing whether they were the same lists, then he left them open in his box in the Liberal committee room where they remained until the election. Now if that is the kind of fairness the hon. gentleman wishes to re-establish in the province of Manitoba I do not think the people of that province of either political party will agree with him. I do not think it is necessary for me to read all this evidence. Probably some time we will have an occasion to go into this matter more fully. The hon. gentleman from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) has seen fit to leave the House, therefore I do not think I need trouble you with any further quotations. I desire to say that there is no comparison whatever between the lists as prepared to-day under the Conservative government, in respect to fairness, and the lists that were previously made by the Liberal government. There is no responsible citizen in Manitoba, no matter what his politics, who would desire to go back to the old system. If you read the independent press of that province you will find them stating almost without exception that although the original lists may have taken a little more trouble to prepare, they were sure to be clean lists, and people could be sure that they did not contain the names of dead men, of men who had been absent for years, as was the case with the lists prepared by the agents of the Greenway government. People prefer to vote on clean lists, even though they are a little more expensive on account of various registrations that have to take place. Therefore there is no possible comparison between the present lists and what they were a few years ago. The Greenway law required the lists to be made just prior to a provincial election, once every four years. The present law provides for an annual revision and immediately prior to a general election a more complete revision will take place and the people will have all the registration districts they require. But this year's revision is merely supplementary to the original lists. I think when the speech of the hon. member for Lisgar is published in the province of Manitoba it will not meet with much approbation.

Mr. J. CRAWFORD (Portage la Prairie). Mr. Speaker, I was rather pleased with the remarks of the hon. member, for Marquette (Mr. Roche) who has just taken his seat because of the fact that what he said went a long way to prove the point which my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) attempted to make. I noticed that he failed to defend the position that he now occupies in so far as our Franchise Act is concerned and in so far as the conduct of the government of the province of Manitoba is concerned. There is no question but that the condition of affairs as it exists at the present time by reason of the adoption of the provincial lists of the province of Manitoba is far from what it ought to be. The remarks of my hon. friend from Lisgar, I think, in every particular, embodied a true statement of the facts. I will try simply to enlarge upon the statement he made. I may just say before proceeding with the few remarks I intend to make that we expect that our friends on this side of the House will seriously study the situation, and that our friends on the other side of the House will do the same. I believe I am not going beyond the true state of things when I say that this side of the House is not wholly responsible for the condition of things prevailing in Manitoba at the present time. We, in the province of Manitoba, knew more than a year ago, in fact two years ago that means were not being provided by our provincial authorities in Manitoba whereby we were likely to get a fair list and we knew at that time that by the adoption of the provincial list, as provided for in our Franchise Act, we were not going to get what we considered a clean and proper list for use in our election. We knew the dangers which were ahead of us at that time, and we knew some of the consequences that were likely to take place, and this is one of the reasons why we looked to Ottawa a year ago for some change in this respect. We have a condition of things existing in Manitoba to-day which I may say is a disgrace to the whole country. That condition has been brought about by the adoption of the provincial franchise for Dominion purposes. Ever since the 3rd November last we have had a condition of things existing in the province of Manitoba which should not exist and which is not calculated to do our country any good. We have heard of the use of the red line in connection with our voters' lists, to disfranchise many of our citizens who by the use of this red line were deprived of their votes when the election came on. As far as the use of the red line is concerned, I am not going to say anything about it. The red line was used in some cases and other lines were used in other cases, because it was necessary to use a line of some kind or another. I am not going to defend anything that may have been improperly done to disfranchise any elector. These points are being discussed in the courts of Manitoba to-day. The courts have been appealed to to settle whether right or wrong has been done in that respect and I will just leave it in that position. I may just say that in so far as my own constituency is concerned, I have heard of no complaint in so far as the improper use of the red line is concerned. I have only heard of one elector being improperly disfranchised in that constituency in connection with the lists which were used on the 3rd November last. I took the trouble to look over the lists and just this one complaint was made at the time to me in connection with the disfranchisement of this elector. I know the gentleman in question very well. He is just as much entitled to vote as any person in this House or any person in Canada, but he, for some reason or other, was struck off at the court of revision by the revising officer. I just mention this to show the House that it is possible for errors to creep in here and there. This is one error which crept in in my own constituency in connection with this particular voter. This is the only one out of 8,000 voters in my constituency that I have heard of as being deprived of his vote through the use of any line and that line was the line the revising officer used at the time of the holding of the court of revision. My hon. friend from Lisgar has made his statement and it is not necessary for me to repeat a great deal of what he said. But, I would just like to say that I feel that the government of the province of Manitoba to-day are trying to create the impression that certain persons representing the Liberal party had a deep laid scheme whereby the elections were to be won by dishonest and illegal practices. They have tried to prove their case. They have had a great many prosecutions started against certain individuals who were connected with the elections held last November. Ten writs were issued against different parties in Manitoba particularly around Winnipeg. These parties were arrested for illegal practices in connection with elections. These ten cases have gone through different stages of the courts. In the first instance these parties were tried before the police magistrate who is a partisan of the provincial government, a very strong Conservative and it was naturally up to him to see to it that these parties who came before him should be sent up for trial. They were, of course. Naturally we expected that. These ten cases were all sent up to the higher court and each and every one of these cases was dismissed. Not one of them came to trial. Every one of them was turned down. Now, you would think that after the government of Manitoba had had an opportunity of testing this question on ten different points in ten separate cases that would end their work, but they have a different idea about these things. They are continuing these same prosecutions, not on quite the same charges but on similar charges. They have gone so far in the province of Manitoba as to vote money for the purpose of prosecuting these cases. At the last session of the local House they voted a certain sum of money to be used to prosecute those, who, in their minds, had done something illegal in connection with the preparation of the lists used at the elections on the 3rd of November last. I consider that the prosecutions which they are conducting at the present time are not based on any real honest motive at all, but that they partake more of the character of persecution than anything else. The men who have gone through their trials in different courts have been re-arrested. This whole condition is not entirely the fault of the people of Manitoba, but it is created through the act of this House. I claim that this is merely an excuse for continuing those conditions, and that to continue those conditions is something the members of this House should not ask the people of Manitoba to submit to any longer. I do not want to throw the onus for this condition of things on one party more than the other. This side is just as much to blame as our hon. friends opposite. Had our friends opposite last year been willing that the present conditions should continue, no doubt it would have been put an end to. They are therefore just as much responsible as we are, and I am not attempting to free this side of the House from any responsibility in that connection. Let me just read a few quotations from the 'Telegram' of the 10th November, 1905, and the 'Telegram' is a Conservative paper published in Winnipeg:

> Startling was the revelation made at the police court in Winnipeg yesterday as to the way in which Conservative names were struck from the voters' lists in the province before the last Dominion elections. . . . More shameless trickery was never resorted to.

This newspaper proceeds to say that the bogus ballot boxes of the province of Ontario were hardly a more damnable device than the lists in Manitoba, and charges that the whole thing has been brought home directly to official Liberal organization. Well, I can only speak for the division I represent, and in that division I have not heard of anything of the kind existing in any shape or form. It may exist in other places; and if it does, this House, which is responsible for that condition, should make a change. That paper continuing, says:

It is now more than ever evident that this whole matter must be sifted to the bottom. When, on election day, appeals and protests came in to the Attorney General from all parts of the province against the fraud being practised on bona fide electors . . . all honest Liberals will join the Conservatives in insisting that the government will do its duty and bring the guilty to punishment.

Here it refers to Mr. Rogers:

As Mr. Rogers said at Wawanesa a few days ago, after referring to the trick ballot boxes of Ontario, there has been in this province a condition of affairs which, to my mind, is equally as serious, and even more bold and daring than the boxes. I refer to the methods adopted in certain constituencies by which, through the use of a red line, hundreds and hundreds of the oldest settlers were deprived of their rights and privileges when they went to ask for their ballots.

All I can say is that in my constituency there are some 8,000 votes, and I have yet to hear that any of those people were deprived of their right to vote through the use of the red line. The paper says further:

In view of yesterday's revelations the public of Manitoba will more heartily than ever stand back of the government in its efforts to serve the cause of justice in respect to the fundamental right of citizens to exercise their franchise.

Again on February 15, 1905, the same paper referred to the matter in glaring headlines: 'Provincial versus Dominion franchise.'

In attempting to extenuate the circumstances attending the erasure of names from voters' lists prior to the late Dominion elections, the 'Free Press' said editorially on Saturday.

To show you that it is up to this government to rectify the situation, I shall read the opinion of the 'Free Press' at that time:

In conclusion it might be said that the Ottawa government is responsible in a large measure for this whole trouble. If it had made proper lists for the Manitoba constituencies, it would not have required rearranging. By compelling the use of the local lists made for the constituencies whose boundaries do not correspond with those of the Dominion seats, they imposed upon their election officials a duty which they did not desire but could not shirk—the cutting and fitting of the local lists to the larger area. In discharging this duty they gave the Conservatives, smarting under their well merited defeat and eager for an excuse, an opportunity to raise a colourable cry of dereliction of duty on their part. We need and must have a Dominion franchise for Dominion constituencies, and the sooner the Ottawa government faces this fact and acts accordingly, the better it will be for all parties concerned.

The 'Telegram,' on the same day, says this:

Is it possible that the conscience of the organ is at last awakened, and that, scandalized at the revelations in the courts of malfeasance by Dominion officers in the performance of their duties in connection with the application of the provincial lists for Dominion purposes, it rebels against its masters at Ottawa and prefers a return to the methods condemned by its party rather than risk the repetition of the organized malpractices of its friends during the last election.

On the 25th February, the 'Telegram' again comes out on the same lines and refers to the situation as the revenge of the Liberal party:

Those who recollect the chagrin of the Liberal party in this province when they discovered the worthlessness of Mr. Sifton's promise that the Manitoba lists would be disregarded by parliament, and his advice that they need not worry about the revision, will not be altogether surprised that extreme measures were taken to retrieve the reputation of the Minister of the Interior for political sagacity.

In connection with the revision of the lists, I can only speak for my own division. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) referred to Mr. Leach and others in Winnipeg who prepared the voters' lists. But neither Mr. Leach nor any other person, except the returning officers, had anything to do with the preparation of the lists in Portage Laprairie. The returning officer had complete control and the red line used was made by them. We were greatly disappointed when we did not get what we expected a year ago and what we thought would be required to rectify the conditions that have been brought about through the adoption of the provincial law in that province for Dominion purposes. I for one can say that I was greatly disappointed and in fact it was very difficult for me to decide to be a candidate. Had it not been for the splendid record of the Liberal party since coming into power, and the great progress of the country during the past eight years, not a Liberal would have been returned in the west on the 3rd September last.

The chief reason why the Liberals were so successful in the west last election is because the people of the west were well satisfied with what the Liberal party had done for the country during the past eight years, and were more than pleased at the prospect of what the Liberal government would do for them in the future. Had it not been that hundreds of good Conservatives voted for the Liberal candidate, the prediction of the Hon. Mr. Rogers would have been verified. Let me give a few reasons why the red line or some other line was necessary. I have here the voters' lists for the district of Portage la Prairie, provided by the King's Printer, and to show the impossibility of satisfactorily working out the law as it now exists I may mention that this constituency consists of parts of seven local constituencies, but not one whole local constituency. If you look at the old redistribution and the present distribution of seats you will find that the old redistribution followed the municipal boundaries almost completely. In my constituency I have a great many municipalities but there are only the boundaries of four municipalities that are not followed, or that are cut across in any particular way, whereas in the case of the local distribution of constituencies it is one of the worst kinds of gerrymanders it is possible to frame; hardly in any case have they attempted to follow the municipal boundaries. Some of the provincial constituencies in my own district include parts of as many as five different municipalities and possibly not one whole municipality. In the Federal division of Portage la Prairie comprising parts of several local constituencies, the municipal boundaries are followed very closely and we only cut four municipalities, and that is where they run off in the direction of the north pole. The Winnipeg 'Telegram' and our Conservative friends tried to make the people believe that there was no use for the red line or any other line, and that we could have got along without anything of that kind. Well, let us see about that. I have a map here of the electoral district of Portage la Prairie which shows the division of the polls, and you will see that at the outlying portions of the division there are eleven different polling divisions in Portage la Prairie which overlap and are partly in the division of Portage la Prairie, partly in Macdonald, partly in Dauphin and partly in Brandon. There are in these eleven overlapping divisions 1,494 names of voters. I find that only 556 of these voters belong to the district of Portage la Prairie and that 815 of them belong to some other electoral division over the line. Now all these names are properly designated on the list and properly located, and in order to get the list for the district of Portage la Prairie it was necessary for the returning officer in that division to strike off 815 names. Further, in these eleven polls there were 123 names that had no location at all and the returning officer could not tell whether they belonged to his division or whether they belonged to some other electoral division. The use of the red line or some other line became necessary to get the names that belonged to Portage la Prairie and to strike off the names that did not belong to that division, but here were 123 names in these eleven polling districts that had no location at all, and the returning officer had no evidence before him to show to what electoral division they did belong. He might be personally acquainted with some of these names although it was not possible he could be acquainted with all of them and in adjusting the list he was very liable to place one of these 123 names either inside or outside their proper electoral division. I do not exactly know how the returning officer arranged it. In No. 1 poll Lakeside, which is one of the municipalities in my division, there was one qualified voter in Portage la Prairie and 90 in Macdonald polling division, and the returning officer for Portage la Prairie had to strike those 90 names off to get a list for that one man. In poll No. 2, Lakeside, there were 123 not qualified, 112 qualified and 33 without any location at all. At poll No. 2, Portage la Prairie, there were 61 qualified voters, 93 not qualified, that is, who were on the list but belonged to some other division, and 19 that had no location at all. In poll No. 4, Cypress, which my hon. friend from Macdonald knows, there were 14 names that belonged to the constituency of Macdonald, only 46 that belonged to the constituency of Portage la Prairie and 2 without any location. In South Brandon there were 34 names on the list belonging to Brandon constituency, 56 belonging to Portage la Prairie, and 6 without any location at all.

In division No. 13 in South Brandon, there are 63 belonging to the constituency of Brandon and three belonging to the constituency of Portage la Prairie. There are only three voters who belong to my division of Portage la Prairie and the others belong to the adjoining division. Now those 63 names have to be struck off to get a list for the Portage district. In No. 10 Norfolk, there are 111 not qualified that belong to the Brandon division and only 24 that belong to the Portage division and 49 who have no location at all. In No. 11 Norfolk there are 86 names of unqualified voters belonging to an outside division and only 17 that belong to the district of Portage la Prairie. In Beautiful Plains, that is my own home, in poll No. 8 there are 47 names on the list that belong to Dauphin, 145 belonging to Portage la Prairie and 12 without any location at all. You cannot tell where they belong unless you personally know where they reside. In poll 17 Gladstone, 21 belong to Dauphin, and 21 to Portage. In 18 Gladstone, 15 belong to Dauphin and 38 to Portage la Prairie. That makes 815 names of unqualified voters on the last list. The returning officer in Portage la Prairie had to strike off these names by the use of a red line or some other line in order to get a list. Out of 1,494 names, 546 were qualified and there were 123 that you could not tell whether they were qualified or not because they had no location. I am satisfied in my own mind that it is not reasonable, it is not right, that we should be forced to use lists in that condition. It is not right or proper that we should delegate to some irresponsible person, if I may speak in that way, the power or the right to revise a voters' list in this way. I do not think it is right for us to ask a returning officer or any one else to take that responsibility. I think it is up to this House to rectify that condition of affairs and make the required change. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) has not attempted to defend the situation as it now stands. He made no attempt at all to defend his friends in Manitoba and you will notice that throughout the whole discussion in connection with the preparation of the lists in Manitoba the Conservative press of that province and in other parts of Canada have failed to criticise or condemn or say anything about the operation of the present law as applied to Manitoba in the preparation of the voters' lists. There is not any question but that the returning officer has the power to make the changes. But as I said he should not be expected nor should any person else, to take that responsibility and some provision should be made here at a very early date, in fact we expect it to be done at once, so that we shall not be compelled to live under the conditions that exist at the present time. Another reason why the present law should not be continued is found in this circumstance. I have here the Manitoba 'Gazette' which gives the conditions for the preparation of the voters' lists now about to take place. My hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) has gone pretty fully into that and I can only add to what he has said in connection with the unfair manner in which the lists are being prepared at the present time. A few people possibly who live convenient to the registration booths can get their names on without any loss of time or great expense, but the great hardship is in the fact that people in Manitoba to-day, I might say thousands and thousands, if they are to get their names on the voters' lists and get the privilege of using the franchise when the election comes on, will have to travel hundreds of miles. I live in the heart of the province of Manitoba in one of the most thickly settled districts and people in that local division in order to register their names may possibly have to travel 120 miles at an expense of perhaps $10. Owing to the short time allowed for registration it would be impossible to register the number of voters who would apply for registration if all of those qualified were placed upon the list. I think there are all of 600 voters in that district not on the list at the present time. I was sorry to hear the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) make the statement that there was practically no change in the residents of Manitoba, that settlement was stationary. There is a great change in progress. More people are coming into Manitoba every day and it is increasing in population. A great change is taking place in many constituencies. I believe there are as many as a thousand votes in some districts which will not be registered because of the great expense involved and the short time allowed for registration purposes. I do not believe that in my own local division more than one-half can register in the time allowed. I have here the form which an elector has to fill out in applying for registration. The registration clerk has to fill out the form and to ask a great many questions and then there is a declaration to follow and I claim in many instances, that the ordinary registration clerk who is appointed, no matter how good or clever he may be, will take 15 or 20 minutes to get one elector registered. That means only a very few in an hour. Say he can register one in every five minutes, that is only 12 in an hour. Thirteen hours are now allowed and only about 150 names can be registered as it is personal registration and certain long questions have to be answered and the declaration read over. So it is impossible during the time allowed for those not on the list to get registered under the conditions as they are being carried out in Manitoba to-day.

Mr. STAPLES. How many persons not on the list at the present time would the hon. member say would apply for registration in any particular constituency in Manitoba? I venture to say that outside of Winnipeg there would not be more than 25 or 30 or possibly 100.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the polling division in which I live there are over forty Liberals to add, there are over twenty Tories to strike off, and in the whole division over 600 to register and I think over 300 to strike off. That is something I know about right in my own home, and throughout Manitoba there are thousands to add. And in the city of Winnipeg, I believe, there will be 5,000 voters to add. Now, the registration clerk who has been appointed for my own division, the division of Beautiful Plains, is a fine fellow, a good man. He is a good Tory, but I think he will do the fair thing. But he cannot do more than a certain amount of work in a certain time. I venture to say he cannot register the name of one voter in less than fifteen minutes. And it will take him nearly half his time to register the names of those who will apply for that polling division alone. Even in that central district of Manitoba, a district that has been settled for years, one of the most thickly-settled parts of the province, there are electors who may be obliged to travel 120 miles if they wish to have their names appear on the list. To attend before the registration clerk the voter must make a trip of 60 miles. If he fails to get his name on then, which is not unlikely, he will have to apply to the court of revision. So he will be obliged to travel 120 miles and lose four days, besides incurring an expense of possibly $10 or $15. I have here an extract from the Carberry 'News.' Hon. gentlemen know where Carberry is—on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, 60 miles west of Portage la Prairie. That newspaper says :

We boast about our fine franchise ; we lay great stress on the fact that British citizens in Canada, and in Manitoba especially, enjoy the rights of manhood suffrage ; we pride ourselves on the freedom of our institutions ; yet the Roblin government with one swoop deprives eligible voters of their inalienable right.

On June 1, John Balfour, registration clerk for Norfolk, will attend at Noble Dickie's office for seven and a half hours to receive applications for registration in this riding.

I may explain that, as provided for under the Order in Council, 7½ hours is all that was allowed for registration. But since then, as my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) has stated, the time has been increased to 13 hours. As I understand it, this has been done only by a kind of notice from the Provincial Secretary—there has been no Order in Council extending the time to 13 hours. There has been only a notice advising the registration clerks that they might keep their offices open from 7 a.m. to 10.30 p.m.

He will be there for just that one day and for the number of hours specified and during that time applicants from MacGregor, Rosehill, Douglas, Creeford, Edrans, Wellwood and Brookdale and all intermediate points must be on hand to get their names on the list or go without a vote.

Suppose a voter comes from MacGregor to register. He pays his railway fare, his hotel expenses and loses at least a full day's work. The actual cash outlay will not be less than say $3. He pays this for a free (?) franchise. If he cannot afford to pay the money or lose the time there is no vote for him. It is simply legalized robbery by the government of either money or votes. If an eligible voter comes he loses his money ; if he stays away because of the expense he loses his vote. There is nothing fair or equitable about it. Our Tory friends may say it's as fair for one party as the other.

I may say that that is the only pretense of an excuse that has been made by the Conservative newspapers in the province of Manitoba for this outrage which is being perpetrated upon us—that it is as fair for one as for the other. My hon. friend from Marquette said there was not likely to be an election this year, so there was no need of going to expense in preparing the voters' lists. I do not think I ever heard a more rotten statement from any person as such a statement as that I have just referred to. The idea of an hon. member of this House bringing such an argument forward as an excuse for disfranchising Canadians ! If there is to be no election, there is no need to go to any expense at all. But if you are going to make a voters' list, let it be an honest one and a complete one. The Winnipeg 'Telegram,' a few days ago, made some attempt to excuse the action of the provincial government. This is what they said in their issue of May 3rd, 1905 :

The present year is an off year so far as elections are concerned, and the revision will be a more or less formal affair.

As I say, that is the only excuse I have seen in the Conservative papers of Manitoba for the existing conditions of things.

That is no excuse. It is unfair to both, manifestly unjust and clearly a crime.

There are probably fifty or more voters in MacGregor and its vicinity who are entitled to registration. Does it seem reasonable that these fifty should spend in the aggregate $100 to register when the registration clerk could visit MacGregor and get their names at a cost of $5 ? The same rule applies to other points in the riding.

The 'Telegram' states that this registration is only a formal proceeding and that no election will be held on the list thus revised. If that is the case, why spend money for revision at all ? Does the 'Telegram' thus acknowledge that the Roblin government spend the people's money in farcical schemes ?

I think I have said enough to show the situation in Manitoba. We are not here defending something the Greenway government may have done ten or fifteen years ago ; we are dealing with things of to-day. It is no excuse for the outrage of to-day to say that the Greenway franchise law of ten years ago was not all it should have been. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) has practically tried to argue that because the Greenway government did something wrong some ten or fifteen years ago, that was a reason why we should not change the existing condition.

I do not know that it is necessary for me to occupy more time. But I would like to give one or two figures to show the distances that citizens have to travel from in some constituencies in order to register their names. I have here the name of one division where electors have to travel 400 miles to get their names on the list. In another division, if they had to make the return trip, they would have to travel 220 miles. In Swan River they would have to travel 145 miles each way. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope this House is convinced that the state of things we have at the present time in the province of Manitoba ought not to be continued.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon gentleman is doubtless familiar with the action of the Liberal party in the legislature of the province of Manitoba. Might I ask him if the Liberal party have at any time moved to abolish this law inaugurated by the Roblin administration ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not know that I can answer that, I have not been in the provincial house. I have not the records before me, but I have no doubt they have moved against it. But even though they may not have moved against it, that is no justification for maintaining it on the statute book. I do not see the point my hon. friend is trying to make. I want to say this in conclusion, that a number of our friends in the province of Manitoba, honourable men, have suffered from proceedings being taken against them owing to conditions brought into existence by this parliament of Canada ; they have been placed in positions in which they were forced to do certain things, and have been put to certain expense and loss of time, and obliged to defend themselves against charges. I think it would be only right for this parliament to recompense those men in some way or another, for although they have had to defend themselves in court, they have not been guilty of any illegal act, and I think they should be recompensed in some way for the abuse they have suffered and the time they have lost. I leave the situation as it now stands, and trust to the good sense of this House to rectify it.

Mr. F. L. SCHAFFNER (Souris). Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me as a strange thing that this matter should be sprung upon the House this afternoon. It certainly was sprung upon us by hon. members opposite, because evidently they have had plenty of notice that the discussion was coming on, and have been preparing themselves for it. There seems to have been some object to gain in bringing on this discussion, and my feeling is that it is because they do not wish to resume discussion of the question which has been before this House for some weeks. I believe therefore they have an object in bringing on this discussion to-day. I would like to have had some time to prepare myself ; but we have to speak offhand, as the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) did, although hon. gentlemen opposite have had some days or weeks in which to prepare their briefs. Now, Sir, I am sorry that the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) has seen fit to leave the House. There is an old saying that a man who fights and runs away, lives to fight another day. But I would not expect that of an old parliamentarian, a man of such long experience as the hon. member for Lisgar. If the hon. member for Lisgar had not made a personal reference to myself I do not think I would have detained the House with any remarks. The member for Lisgar said that he appealed to this House as to a jury. Well, Sir, I think I can give evidence to this jury on which they will have no hesitation in giving a decision to the defendant. Sir, there is no man in Canada who thoroughly understands the legislation under the Greenway government and the system of registration in vogue to-day under the Roblin government, but will say that the present system of registration is much more fair and just. The former system allowed men to vote who were dead, men who had been for years out of the country. Now the member for Lisgar said that he approved of the principle of the registration, that it was all right. Let me say that under the old administration and the old way of making up the lists, there was one man appointed for each local district to make the registration. He could go around and take affidavits all over the country. Although the registration was supposed to cease at a certain hour of the evening, I know for a fact that in my own town a number of names were simply handed in to this officer who was appointed to register the voters, and he put them on. That was done all over the province of Manitoba. If I had known beforehand that this debate was coming on I could have procured figures to show what it cost the Conservative party throughout the province to get names off the list that had no right to be there, names which had been put on under the policy which the hon. member for Lisgar advocated here to-day. Now, I cannot understand how an old parliamentary hand like the member for Lisgar could get up here and attempt to deceive this House, as he did in regard to the registration under the Roblin government.

When the Roblin government came into power Mr. Roblin said : We want a fair list. We do not want to prevent any one from voting who has the right to vote, but we want to prevent dead men from voting. The hon. member who used to represent Dauphin will remember how that system was conducted when the Canadian Northern Railway was being built up through that country. They used to take carloads of men who had not been there for some time out to that country to vote. They could do that under the old system, but under the system of personal registration that state of affairs is absolutely impossible. Well, Mr. Roblin set out to make a voters' list for Manitoba. My hon. friend from Lisgar tried to show this House how unfair it was that there should only be about 13 hours or one day in one place in a county to register the vote. When Mr. Roblin first undertook to make this voters' list he appointed about six men in each county. You must not confuse these with Dominion constituencies. We have no counties in Manitoba as you have in Ontario; we just have local districts represented by local men and then we have the Dominion constituencies. The local constituencies are somewhat small. Perhaps the average constituency in my part of Manitoba would be about 30 x 15 miles. In a constituency of this size they appointed six men at different places at which men could register their votes and this registration lasted for one week. To show you again how hard it is for those who are not legal voters to get on the list I may say that we have a long list of questions that a man has to subscribe to, and more than that he has to swear to the answers to these questions before he is enabled to place his name on the list. That is to prevent an unfair list and to endeavour to get a good list. Now, then we have six places in each constituency at which the registration lasts for six days, so many hours a day, going up to ten o'clock in the evening during which men are allowed to register. I think it is customary in most countries that you have a registration when you want to have an election. Mr. Roblin thinks that when the list is over one year old it will not be a fair list, that there will be men on the list whose names should go off because they had left the country, or men might have come into the country in the interval and would be entitled to vote. So, Mr. Roblin went a step further. On the occasion of making the first list every citizen of Manitoba who wanted to vote at the coming election had to register his name so that you can understand it would take a considerable time, and I want to say, because I went through it and know something about it, that there was ample opportunity afforded. I am not speaking for Winnipeg, but I am speaking for the rest of the country when I say that we could have registered three or four times as many men as we registered during these six days. I want hon. gentlemen to understand that what I have described is the system of registration all along the line. That system was new but I want to say and I say it without fear of contradiction that there was very little complaint about it from Grit or Tory and that they were well satisfied with it. But, it was new and some electors said : I have been in the country a long time and I am not going out to register. So, for that reason, at the first registration, it was not possible to get all the qualified names on the list. So the next year Mr. Roblin said : I will give you one day, but I will give you six places. A gentleman was appointed, he went around to these six places in each small county after due notification had been given to the voters of the district that they could go and register their votes. That does not look very much like an attempt to keep qualified voters off the list, and it is a fact that they could have registered a great many more names. Is it not fair to believe that after the previous registrations which had taken place the registration of last year would not require so much time ? But, nevertheless, hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House complain of how far men had to travel in order to register their names. I think I am correct in saying that they did not have to travel any farther than they had under the Greenway registration because under the Greenway registration there was only one place to register, whereas there are six to-day. There may have been a few exceptions to that, but there were very few. I think any hon. member who followed the argument of my hon. friend from Lisgar will agree with me that it bears out the expression I made use of at the beginning of my address to this House when I said that he was talking against time and trying to defer the consideration of something that is more important than the question which he has brought up. Those who have to register in 1905 are only some young men who have become 21 yeras of age or those who have become otherwise qualified since last year—just a few. The other names remain. The voters whose names are on the list absolutely do not have to register. No one has to register if he is already on the list. Only those who have become qualified since the last registration are required to register. That would not take very long, and I have no doubt that in all the districts outside of Winnipeg—I am not speaking for Winnipeg—they will have ample time to register their votes without any trouble. I would ask this House to compare these two systems of registration. I have tried in as few words as possible to put before the House the system of registration prevailing in the province of Manitoba and I am confident that this House will agree that the remarks of the hon. member for Lisgar are very uncalled for.

I want to allude to one matter in connection with which my hon. friend from Lisgar referred to myself. It is a personal matter but I want to show this House the fairness of the hon. gentleman. I am surprised that he would bring that matter before the House. It would be bad enough for some young man like myself who has not had the parliamentary experience that the hon. gentleman has had. When I was nominated to contest the constituency of Souris my leader, Mr. Roblin, sent me a letter and I want to explain to this House what the hon. gentleman said about that letter and what the facts are about it. I ask any hon. member of this House if he should find a private letter if he would not consider it his duty to return it to the man to whom it belongs, or would he consider it to be his duty to have it photographed and published all over the country. Further, I want to say and I say it without fear of contradiction that that letter which you have heard read, and I do not think there is anything to be ashamed of in it, was stolen from my political file in my office and I know who stole it. I had it in my office on my political file.

An hon. MEMBER. Did the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) steal it ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I have too good an opinion of the hon. member than to blame him, but it was stolen and sent to the 'Free Press' of Winnipeg. It was also photographed and sent throughout the country, and every Liberal paper in Manitoba tried to injure me. But notwithstanding all this. I was able to redeem the county by 520 majority.

Mr. LEMIEUX. How could it injure the hon. gentleman when it came from his friend the leader of the opposition ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It did not come from me.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He said it did.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend is as much mistaken about that as he is about many things.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I was referring to Mr. Roblin, the leader of the government in Manitoba.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. When you left the chair at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was replying to the attack made by the member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) upon the Manitoba voters' lists. I said that I believed this question was brought before the House this afternoon by gentlemen opposite in order to postpone the discussion on the Autonomy Bill, and in that effort I propose to be generous enough to help them to some little extent. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) tried to make out that the system of preparing the electoral lists in Manitoba was unfair and unjust, and my remarks were directed to prove that the registration under the Roblin government was far more effective and in every way fairer than the system under the Greenway government. The question is important and at the risk of wearying the House I shall explain the conditions in Manitoba. The topography of that province is different from that of either Quebec, Ontario or the eastern provinces. Beginning at the south eastern end of Manitoba we have ranges running from east to west and townships which are six miles square running from north to south. The average local constituency in the thickly settled portions would include about three ranges from east to west making 18 miles, and about 6 townships north and south or 36 miles. To show how fair the Roblin government was and how anxious it was that there should be suffcient time given for registration, the constituencies were laid off, in my part of the country at all events, into what might be called three tiers. There was first the registration clerk for the whole constituency and under him there were officers known as clerks. In the constituency which I have in mind there were three clerks in the north end, three in the centre, and three in the south making 9 clerks to register the names. They worked from Monday morning until Saturday night, their offices being open until 10 o'clock at night in order that working men might register, and I say without fear of contradiction that after the legal hour for closing at night not a single name was put on the lists. There was an absolutely new voters' list being prepared, and so we commenced with a clean sheet and every one had to register. I can say that had twice as many voters come forward to register, ample time was given to enable them to do so. Contrast that with the Greenway system under which in the local constituency of Turtle Mountain there was only one man to register, and he was located at Boissevain, to which town every voter had to come to register, or else he had to take the oath and comply with certain other requirements. Under the Greenway system I am prepared to assert that in my constituency a number of names were handed in and added to the lists after the legal hours. Another good test as to which was the fairer system is to be found in the fact that in the court of revision hundreds and even thousands of names were removed from the original lists prepared under the Greenway government, and the Conservatives were put to great expense at these revision courts; whereas, in the case of the lists made by the Roblin government comparatively few names were stricken off by the court of revision. Had I known that this discussion would be on to-day I could have given the actual figures, but at all events the fact proves that the Greenway system was not so righteous as its author would make out. The hon. member for Lisgar spoke about the Liberals not adding names to the voters' lists in 1904, but I will state the reason for that, and I will quote not from a Conservative source, but from the mouth of one John Smith, a gentleman well known to the late Minister of the Interior, as well as to the member for Lisgar. Mr. John Smith was laughing up his sleeve and poking fun at us because we were honestly endeavouring to add names to the list before the last Dominion election. It happened to be a very rainy day and any one who lives in the west knows that it can rain very hard there when it wants to. We had started out at daylight and continued work until after dark, and the rain poured down perhaps providentially, because it was of great benefit to the crops at that particular season. We endeavoured to get our men to go before the registration clerk and register their names and this John Smith and some of the other good Liberals were present and I said to them: How is it you fellows are not working to-day; it is not like the Liberals in this constituency to be lacking in effort. Mr. Smith told me to go—not to the good place, and he said: Are we fools enough to fight a general election on your lists? Well I said: I do not know whether you are fools enough to do that or not, but there is nothing to be lost in making an effort to place every man who is qualified on the list, and Mr. Smith replied: The Hon. Mr. Sifton tells us we are going to have an opportunity to make up a list for ourselves and that the government will not have a Dominion election upon your lists.

Well, why didn't they have the list? Perhaps the whole history of that would be interesting. No doubt members on the other side know more about this than I do, but we believe in Manitoba, and I believe to-night, that the hon. member for Brandon, then Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), intended to make up a list, but his friend, whom I am told loves him, the Minister of Justice, refused to sanction that outrage, for it certainly would have been an outrage had they been allowed to make an exception in the province of Manitoba and make up a list different from that in any other place. So they did vote on the list which was made up at that time. When it came to the court of revision, they did their utmost to get many off the list, but because of the fair manner in which these names are added they had very little success in removing names from the list at the court of revision. The hon. member for Lisgar referred to Emerson. He said that part of Emerson came into his Dominion constituency, and in order to get a list of Emerson, or of that part of Emerson which came into his constituency, he was obliged to get a list of the whole constituency of Emerson. I am surprised that the hon. member for Lisgar made that statement, because I want to show you, and can show you beyond any doubt, that the Liberal party is to blame for his having to do that, and that is the reason why I refer to this. I think the principle laid down by the Liberal party when making a redistribution of seats was that they would, as far as possible, make the lines correspond to county lines. I understand that Dominion constituencies in other provinces, as in ours, contain more than one local constituency, and the principle was to make the county line a division line, which certainly would have been a fair and very convenient way of dividing up the country. The line between the constituency of Lisgar and my own lies between range 12 and range 13, but that was not a local division. As it was, West Manitou, which was then called Mountain, took in a row of townships in Mountain, so that I had a range of townships in Mountain constituency, and when I wanted to get my list, a list made up by the local legislature, in order to get a list for range 13 on the eastern boundary of my constituency, I had to get all of the voters' lists for Lisgar or Mountain. That was not our fault, that was the fault of the Liberal party. Had they made this division as they should have done the hon. member for Lisgar would not have had to get all the lists for Emerson ; he would simply have had the voters' list in the different local constituencies which the Dominion constituency contained, so I think it was in very bad taste and of worse effect for the hon. member for Lisgar to make that statement.

I would like to know where the gross outrage is that the hon. member took so much pains to bring before this House in the way those two lists were made up, and I want to go further and say this, that when the Roblin government appointed their registration clerks, they absolutely did not confine the appointment to Conservatives, and I say that without fear of contradiction. I would like to ask hon. gentlemen opposite if they know of the Liberals ever using a strong party man of the party opposed to them to make up their list ? I want to say that in my own constituency the gentleman whom the Roblin government appointed as registration clerk was a Liberal. He was not only a Liberal, but, with all due respect, he was what I might call a very strong Scotch Grit, who absolutely never gave a Conservative vote in his life. Yet this gentleman conducted the registration of the voters' list in the local district of Turtle Mountain, so I think that was another indication of the desire of the Roblin government to give the people a fair and honest list. I think the hon. member for Lisgar went a little out of his way this afternoon, it was not necessary for him to make the references to some members of the government of Manitoba which he made in this House to-day. Outside of politics, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) and I are the best of friends. We are neighbours, we have always been friendly, we are friendly to-day, but the hon. member this afternoon threw down the glove, and it will be necessary for me to show that a man who lives politically in the glass house that he does in the province of Manitoba should be a little more careful, as to his statement, even although he gave us no warning of this and no way of preparing for the discussion, in undertaking to talk about members of the government and men who are supporting the Conservative party in Manitoba to-day. He referred to Mr. Richardson as a man who had changed his views and spoke of him, as is the custom of Liberal papers and Liberals, disrespectfully. I think Mr. Richardson will be known to some members who sat with him in this House as an ardent Liberal. He has seen fit to change his views. I am surprised that a man with the history of the hon. member for Lisgar would leave himself open to what might be said of himself in that respect. The hon. member sat in this House once before, not for a Manitoba, but for an Ontario constituency, and I wonder if his own history is absolutely favourable to him in connection with that one point ; I wonder if the hon. gentleman —since he wants to talk about political men who have tried to deceive the people—remembers the time up in our province when in one constituency he promised the French electors that he would not disturb their separate schools or their dual language ? I wonder if he has forgotten that ? I wonder if he forgets a little later in history when he absolutely promised the Protestants of that country that he would not move one jot from the stand and the position he had taken upon this school question in Manitoba ? I want to go a little further, and I do not think I am going outside the question after the glove the hon. gentleman threw down this afternoon, and to refer to another transaction which the hon. gentleman will perhaps not want to hear of, but I am perfectly justified in stating the case to this House to-night. We had in that country at that time two railways—the Canadian Pacific Railway, which came in first, and the Northern Pacific, which is now known as the Canadian Northern. We had an election coming on in 1899. We wanted competition in railways. The Northern Pacific was not extended to any great extent in the province of Manitoba at that time. There was a line from Waskada, a town south of Deloraine, and the people wanted to have that line extended. The question was whether this line was to be extended by the Canadian Pacific Railway or by the Northern Pacific. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) seems at that time to have been in favour of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He went through the country stating—as I shall be ready to prove—that the Canadian Pacific Railway were willing to build that road without one cent of bonus. I was not a candidate then, but I was taking some little interest in politics. And I remember well that in my own town, with the Northern Pacific running about thirteen miles to the north of us, I stated that notwithstanding the Canadian Pacific Railway was willing to build a line through that country without a bonus, we had better, for the sake of compensation, pay the Northern Pacific $1,750 per mile than to have the Canadian Pacific Railway, without competition, for nothing. The hon. gentleman and his supporters gave the people of Manitoba the impression that the Canadian Pacific Railway would build that line without a bonus. I say that without fear of contradiction. It has never been contradicted. More than that, I intend to show, even from the camp of the enemy that that was the intention. And when the hon. member (Mr. Greenway) attacks Mr. Richardson and other men for trying to deceive the people, it would be well for him to remember his own record. I regret to be obliged to bring this matter up ; I would not have done it had I not been forced to it by the hon. gentleman. There is in that province a Mr. Charles Young, who is well known at least to the members of this government. They have made him one of the commissioners of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. He was appointed to that commission, I suppose, because he was a grain buyer. They have appointed men from rather peculiar walks of life on that commission and no doubt they thought Mr. Young would know all about grades—and besides he was a solid Grit. I will have a word to quote from Mr. Young in a few moments. In the meantime, I wish to refer to what was stated by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) when speaking in behalf of Mr. Dickey, the local Liberal candidate in Souris :

At a meeting held in Harn Hartney by Mr. Greenway, on behalf of Mr. Dickey, on the night of the 24th November, he emphatically stated that the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Deloraine to Waskada was not costing the country one cent. And he dwelt at considerable length on this subject and further stated that the Canadian Pacific Railway were building the road without the aid of a five cent piece from his government.

Now, that is pretty plain. After the election some correspondence took place between Mr. Wm. Whyte, manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Mr. Baker and Mr. Greenway. It came out that Mr. Greenway had absolutely promised to the Canadian Pacific Railway that they should have their bonus—the usual bonus—for the extension of this road. I shall read a little of the correspondence between Mr. Whyte and Mr. Greenway. I am obliged to read it to show that Mr. Young, the Liberal candidate for Deloraine, was deceived by Mr. Greenway, in order to show what he said about it. Mr. Whyte wrote :

Canadian Pacific Railway.
Office of the manager,
Winnipeg, Manitoba, 13th November, 1899.

Hon. Thomas Greenway,
Premier, Winnipeg.

Dear Mr. Greenway,—In reply to your letter of the 11th instant, in which you urge the importance of an extension of our Waskada branch, I desire to remind you of the repeated promises that have been made on behalf of your government that the usual aid of $1,750 per mile would be granted for the construction of a line of railway into this district ; that with these promises before it, my company has already completed about seventeen miles of its branch line from Deloraine, and I now beg to say that upon receipt of an assurance from you that the promises referred to will be given full effect, both as regards the line already constructed and the extension desired, my company will undertake to complete this line to the western boundary of range 26, township 2, during the ensuing season.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) WM. WHYTE,
Manager.

In reply Mr. Greenway wrote as follows :

Winnipeg, Manitoba, 16th December, 1899.

Wm. Whyte, Esq.,
Manager Canadian Pacific Railway Company, City.

Dear Mr. Whyte,—I regret that your letter of the 13th of last month in answer to mine of a day or two before has remained unanswered so long.

I beg now to repeat what I stated to you recently, when I had the pleasure of a conversation with you upon the subject of the extension of your Waskada branch. It was my intention in view of the promises to which you refer, and my desire to see the line extended to the point mentioned in your letter, to have recommended the usual assistance of $1,750 per mile for the entire branch, and I am still willing to do anything I can to assist in completing such an arrangement.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) THOMAS GREENWAY.

It has been stated by friends of the Greenway government that Mr. Greenway did not mean this, did not intend to convey the impression he did. But he tries, I may say, to put the onus upon the Attorney General of the province.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Schaffner) what the building of railways has to do with the Franchise Act ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I want to show that when the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) rises in this House to cast slurs upon Mr. Richardson and other men, his own history is not such as to entitle him to adopt such a tone. I know that hon. gentlemen opposite do not want to hear this, but I shall make this point unless I am prevented by the Speaker. I have read the correspondence. Now, any one who knows Mr. Charles Young, knows that he is a man not very easily deceived. After the elections it came out that Mr. Greenway had deceived his own co-workers in the elections. Mr. Young, the Liberal member for Deloraine, wrote this letter to the Deloraine 'Times':

I take this early opportunity of informing my supporters, through your paper, of my surprise and disappointment on learning that Mr. Greenway has (notwithstanding my statements to the contrary) promised aid to the Waskada extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I can assure you that when making the statements I was telling what I thought to be the truth and knew nothing to the contrary till I saw the correspondence published in the 'Telegram' of the 16th instant. I am writing the president of the Liberal Association asking him to take such steps as may be necessary to afford my supporters an opportunity, at as early a date as can conveniently be arranged, for dealing with the matter as may seem to them best.

The letter addressed to John Renton, president of the Deloraine Liberal Association, reads :

As I told you, when in the city, the promise made by Mr. Greenway re granting assistance to the Waskada railway, has placed me in an awkward position with my constituents. At the time of my election I distinctly stated that no aid was to be given this road, and at that time, and till I saw the letters published in the 'Telegram,' I believed such was the case. Consequently I feel that I secured my election under false pretenses, and notwithstanding my having done so innocently, I feel it my duty to tender my supporters my resignation.

Now I think that shows pretty conclusively the point I stated. After attempting to deceive the people of Manitoba as he did, it was not in very good form for the hon. gentleman to get up in this House and try to throw blame upon the men who had given that province such an honest and just list on which to vote as the Roblin government has given. Now I have said all that I wish to say on this question. I understand fairly well the lists up there, I believe they are honest lists. I have tried to show how those lists are prepared ; I have tried to show that while it took six days the first year, the next year it took only one day with nine clerks, and to-day we have only one clerk and one day. I believe we have such a fair list in the province of Manitoba to-day that when the eastern provinces come to understand it, as they will understand if they read the 'Hansard,' that every one of them will be sending delegations up to Manitoba to get a copy of the very righteous and just law which we have placed on the statute books in order to carry on honest and just elections in that province.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON (Selkirk). I really do not understand what the remarks made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Schaffner) for the last half hour have to do with the revision of the Manitoba voters' lists. I have listened with a great deal of attention this afternoon to the remarks made by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) and the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche). I may say that the division I have the honour to represent is a very large one, comprising nearly all the northeastern portion of the province of Manitoba. We have in that division something like 21,000 square miles, and an area of over 13,000,000 acres. In the county of Selkirk we have four complete local divisions, and portions of three others. Now in the district of St. Andrew's one of the largest local divisions, the people have to travel from a poll called Berens River 260 miles to the town of Selkirk to get on that list. From the Badthroat river they have to travel about 100 miles to get to Selkirk. There are a large number of new settlers who will have to travel 100 miles to get on that list. From Black island where Icelanders are settled, some of whom have been there for years and who have been naturalized, they will also have to travel to Selkirk to get on the list. Take the division of Springfield, another large division. The place of holding the registration is Dugald, in the southeastern portion of the division. Now that division of Springfield takes in the eastern portion of the province of Manitoba. and goes out to Ontario. They have to travel to Winnipeg about 100 miles and then drive 16 miles to Dougald to get on that list. I say it is impossible for these people to get on that list. When it is understood here that we have to hold our Dominion elections on a list of that kind, I say it is the duty of this government to come to the rescue and to see that the people in that district have a fair opportunity to get on the voters' list. Now it is a physical impossibility to do it. In the district of Springfield there is just one place, for registration, and how are the people going to get there ? For the last Dominion elections we had a revision last year, and there were only five or six places in that district where the people could register, and I found out in the canvass I made last October and November when I took particular pains to inquire, that there were between 500 and 600 Liberals who were not on that list. Now I think it was an outrage that these people should be deprived of their rights. Many of them were foreigners, still they were naturalized by this Dominion government, they were three years in the province, and they were entitled to be on the list, and I say they should have been on it. But owing to the Act that we have now in the province of Manitoba it was physically impossible for them to get on the list. I know there were 56 men who were sent out at an expense of $2 each that they might be registered, the only people in one particular district that could be got to go the distance necessary to register.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. How is it possible for these men to go that distance and register? In the election previous to the last one how did some of these men get to the polls unless they were taken in some conveyance like the 'Minnie M?'

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I would like to know what that has got to do with it. The hon. gentleman shows that he knows very little about this matter when he asks a question like that. There is only one place to-day where these people can register, when an election is going on. They have polls fairly convenient, where they only have to travel 10 or 15 miles. I have here the voters' list of the municipality of Rockwood. In the northern portion of that district there are something like 250 Galicians. Now how many do you think were on the last Dominion voters' list? There were only 70, whereas there should have been 250. Now if they want to get on the list in that particular division they will have to go down 36 miles. I may say that the electoral division comprises 7 townships north and south, it is 39 miles by 42 miles. Now these people have to register at the town of Stonewall, within 5 miles of the southern boundary in that district, they all have to go down there to register, some of them 36 miles away in a straight line. Now these people will be left off the list. Now why is this done? There are 11 protested elections in that province, and every one in this House knows that the Roblin government does not want these names to be put on that list in view of possible by-elections. I am not at all astonished that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) and the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) are in favour of the Roblin government list, because that list was badly loaded at the last election in their favour and they know it. The hon. member for Marquette was elected the last time by a very small majority, and if it had not been for some sharp practice on the part of his friends in the Roblin government, he would not be sitting in this House today.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Tell us what it is.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I will tell you what it is. You had the officials in the local government arrest Mr. Harvey, who was working against you in that district, and you had him taken into Winnipeg and kept in durance vile to prevent him working among a population that would have voted against you.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Was he not a government officer?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. That does not make any difference.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Did he not have $700 in his pocket when he was arrested?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. That man was a British subject and just as much entitled to vote as the hon. member for Marquette is. He was made a British subject by this parliament. He had been over three years in the country, he was a naturalized British subject and he was entitled to go out and do any business that he wanted to do. But, you had him arrested on false pretenses and kept him in durance vile until he could not go back to that county. The Attorney General of Manitoba withdrew the charge against that gentleman just as soon as there was no chance of him going back to the county.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. No, the Attorney General did not withdraw the charge, but the witnesses who had been bribed were spirited away and were not on the scene. They were brought up and sent away out of the country entirely.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The hon. gentleman cannot give any proof of what he is saying. That gentleman was an honest farmer in my district. He was working as he had a perfect right to do in any part of Manitoba. There was nothing to hinder him. He was not receiving pay from the Dominion government at the time that he was engaged in this work.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I brought this case up in the House last year and I drew the attention of the then Minister of the Interior to the fact that a government official, naming him, Mr. Harvey, was engaged in a House to House canvass in my constituency. The then Minister of the Interior promised that he would at once issue instructions to that official, which would apply to all other officials, telling him that he must desist from such work, that it was against the regulations of the government.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Then the hon. gentleman could not have brought this matter up in the House because this was a matter that only happened last October before the election which was held in November.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. If the hon. gentleman turns up 'Hansard' he will find that I brought up the case of this very same official.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The hon. gentleman is talking about some other matter. I am talking about the matter that took place in October and you were a party to it because you had that gentleman arrested when there was no charge to be made against him. They withdrew proceedings just as soon as the election was over and he could not go back to work in that division.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Does the hon. gentleman say that I had him arrested ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Your friends of the Roblin government had this gentleman arrested.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. On what charge ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. On the charge of having advanced money in my riding for the purpose of influencing the election in that district.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Or had it anything to do with my riding ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Yes, they had him arrested in your riding and they took him down and prevented him from going to any riding. This is just a sample of what your friends of the Roblin government will do in any election. I have had a great deal of experience with the Tory party in running my elections in Manitoba. In 1886 I ran against Mr. Hagel. You talk about the fairness of the Roblin government. The former Conservative government started out with the same claims to fairness that the Roblin government made at the outset. The Norquay government adopted a franchise Act under which, in the first election which I ran in 1886, 44 votes were illegally added to the voters' list. Even then I was not defeated. I had a majority of 15 in 1886 notwithstanding the fact that they burned the ballot boxes. We have had a large experience in Manitoba of the way in which Conservatives will run elections. It is a most unjust law that we have at the present time on the statute-book of Manitoba. It is the most unjust law that we have in the Dominion of Canada and how these hon. gentlemen can justify it is something that it is difficult to understand. The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) spoke about an hour this afternoon and evening and what did he say ? He went on and spoke about a fair law. The Roblin government passed a fair law in 1902 when they first came in. The judges looked after it then and we had a fair list, but how long did they leave the judges in charge ? Only a very short time. The judges then had everything to do with the preparation of the lists. The judges mapped out the districts and appointed the men to revise the lists. Things are altogether different now. They have revising barristers and they select very illiterate men to collect the votes. In the county of Rockwood, that I have particular knowledge of, they have a farmer who can barely sign his own name who sat for two hours at three different places in the county and yet he pretended to make the list. I am personally aware of that matter and I do not see how hon. gentlemen of the intelligence of the hon. member for Souris and of the hon. member for Marquette can get up in this House and justify one place and one day in the large counties we have in Manitoba, or assert that under that system it is possible for us to have any kind of a fair list. Now, we come to the thin red line. The other day I sent to the King's Printer, asking him to send me the voters' list for Selkirk, the county which I have the honour to represent. What was the outcome ? He sent me a list containing the names of 9,000 voters. That was sent to the returning officer of the county of Selkirk. There are the names of 9,000 voters on this list, while in the constituency of Selkirk there are 4,824 voters, so you will see that the thin red line had to be worked all over that list. There is the red line. It does not make any difference whether it is red, blue or black. Part of this list belongs to the constituency of my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) and part to myself. There had to be a copy sent to the returning officer in Selkirk and also the returning officer in Macdonald. The returning officers, as a rule, are not all business men. We will appoint some good honest farmer in a county as the returning officer. This man had to score out the names of the voters who did not vote in Selkirk. It would not be possible to leave some 58 names on the list for one polling subdivision which belonged to the county of Macdonald, because otherwise these voters might vote in Selkirk. Four thousand and odd names had to be taken off that list before it was a proper list to be used in Selkirk. I see where this government is to blame in some respects for sending up that list. It comes from the King's Printer to me as the voters' list for Selkirk. That was sent to the returning officer in my county who is now under arrest charged with having erased names. He had to erase names. He had to score these names out. He was provided with a list containing 9,000 names when only 4,800 voters were entitled to vote. It is a list containing the names of voters partly in other counties and partly in Selkirk. I may say that the Roblin government laid out each electoral division into polling subdivisions. We did not take the same polling subdivisions that the Roblin government did in the local elections. What was the consequence of that ? These red lines had to be put in again. In the township of Grassmere, Stonewall is up in the northeast corner of the township and there are 346 names on the list. That list was sent to the deputy returning officer. For 14 years, while I represented that county in the local legislature, I had a polling subdivision in the centre of the township so as to enable the farmers to vote close to their homes, but the new arrangement made by the Roblin government necessitated a great many of these farmers travelling ten miles from their homes to poll their votes. We had to change that. I laid out the district containing the names of those who had voted at Grassmere and the district containing the names of those who had voted at Stonewall. Ninety-six had voted in the township and 250 in Stonewall. That necessitated two copies of the list and there would be 250 red lines on the list which was handed to the gentleman who was the deputy returning officer for that part of the township outside of Stonewall and 96 red lines would have to be drawn through the list for the deputy returning officer who acted at Stonewall. That is plain. The red lines had to go in. You could not work it in any other way. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he can point to one man in that district, where I had the personal supervision myself, who came up and was not on that list, and in that district there were about 1,500 votes.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You say you did not make polling subdivisions to correspond with those in the local constituencies ? Do you not think that the latter would have been a far better division, and you would thereby have avoided all this temptation put in your way when you changed your polling subdivisions.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Why should we adopt the Tory subdivisions for polling ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is not an answer to my question. You asked me why you should adopt ours, and I say because it was a just and righteous division and would have saved a good deal of trouble.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. How would you do with one polling subdivision where part of the district was in two or three counties ? You say that you made them for the convenience of the people. Well, I remember a few years ago, when a subdivision was made for the province of Manitoba, the voters' had in some cases to go 60 miles to vote just because they happened to be supporters of mine. And they had to go by a dog train in the winter. The red line had to be adopted when we were sent a list by the King's Printer. We will have to have a revision of the lists in that country because they are not fair to the public. When the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) interrupted me, I was asking him to point out—and he ought to be able to do it now because the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) has all the evidence in the trial and read a lot of it this afternoon—I was asking him to point out one man in the whole electoral division of Selkirk who was left off the lists, out of 1,500 votes. There was only one weak spot in the whole county, as far as the management is concerned, and that was a polling subdivision called Beausejour, where there were 14 names left off. But those voted all the same, their ballots all went in, and they were not all Conservatives either—there was quite a proportion Liberal—and if there had been anything like a close election they would have counted.

An hon. MEMBER. How many were Liberals ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Two out of 14, but it just shows that these were taken off in some way we have not been able to get at. I do not justify anything of the kind myself, because I have always found that one name left off the list would hurt you more than half a dozen of the other side put on. As far as I am concerned, every voter, both Liberal and Tory, should be on the list. Under the Greenway law which the hon. gentleman denounces, every man entitled to vote was on the list. None were left off in my part of the country. I have been in politics a number of years and have met politicians of both sides, and I have never heard any objections to that list as far as putting the names on was concerned. But in Manitoba to-day we have thousands of good British subjects, who will not be on the list, and the blame lies at the door of hon. gentlemen opposite from that province who are supporting the Roblin government and its present iniquitous law. It is physically impossible for many of these men to get on the list. There is one thing more I want to mention. We had enumerators who compiled the lists when the late Greenway government was in power. It was the duty of those gentlemen to take the municipal lists as a basis. That is what they did ; and if we had an election law anything like the election law you have in Ontario, I would be perfectly satisfied to accept it. Take any list as a basis. Take the municipal lists. Then let the manhood suffrage voters be put on by the judge at the court of revision. There is great objection to this personal registration. Take old timers who have been on the lists some twenty-five or thirty years, they have to come and register. During this campaign, I met one of the prominent residents of Winnipeg, who is living in the district of Kildona, which is a suburb of Winnipeg, but is in the division of Selkirk. He was a Conservative too. I went in to see if I could get his vote, and he said he would be very happy to vote for me but he had not registered, and that the present Roblin government list was an outrage. That Roblin law compels men who have owned property in the country for years and who have been on the lists some twenty or thirty years to go and register, and hundreds of them said : We are entitled to be on the list, why should we travel ten or twenty miles to register ? We had enumerators in Manitoba who went around and took all the voters they could, and I may tell you what we did in our part of the country. I held a series of meetings, just meetings for the purpose of getting everybody to attend and register and have his name on the list. I wanted their names put on regardless of politics, but the people have to come and register, and they do not know to-day what the law is and are in doubt whether they will be on the list. The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) said that the law is only there for the purpose of adding to the list, but when did they change the law? As far as I understand the law, it requires personal registration in every case. It is just optional to-day with the registration clerk to put names on the list or leave them off, and the clerk is there for the purpose of registering. I am not aware that the law has been changed so as to enable those men who are now on the list to stay on.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The law absolutely states that only those who have become qualified since last year, who have become British subjects, or have been in the province long enough to vote, need register this year.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. What about the thousands who were qualified before last year and who are not on?

Mr. LALOR. Is it not their fault if they do not get on?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. No, because they may have to travel fifty, sixty and sometimes 260 miles in the county of Selkirk to register. From Fisher river they have to travel 150 miles, from Black Island, 100 miles, from Bad Throats, 100 miles, from Gimli sixty miles, and that is the only way by which they can be put on the list. They have to travel by team and by water, with no regular boats running. There is one thing which the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) brought up this afternoon and which I do not think he was justified in bringing up. He tried to leave the impression on this House that the returning officer for the county of Selkirk during the last election was a bartender. I do not know whether he meant it or not, but he said it. I might just point out that when I was asked to name a returning officer, I settled that the proper place from which to select that official was the town of Selkirk because it was in the centre of the county. I was not there at the time myself, but I sent word to the Liberal Association to appoint a returning officer. They appointed a gentleman called Lawrence Duggan. His appointment was perfectly satisfactory to me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Yes, I have known him for some five or six years. He is not bartender; his half brother Martin O'Donohoe is the local member for the same county and he owned the hotel where this gentleman acted as clerk, and I dare say he may have gone behind the bar and sold a drink although I do not know that I ever bought one from him. However, he is as respectable a man as any gentleman in this House. I have known him for years, he does not drink himself and he is a good young man. I may also say that he has been out of the business for over two years. At the time of the election he was a clerk in a store in Selkirk, and I defy any gentleman in this House to say that before he was appointed returning officer or since, Mr. Lawrence Duggan was not a man of excellent character. The federal division of Selkirk comprises the whole of four local divisions and the local divisions returned three Conservatives by majorities of over 100 each, while I carried each of these divisions by about 125 majority. The Roblin government wanted to put some courage into their supporters and so they made charges against certain Liberals that these gentlemen were not guilty of. It is needless to say that these indictments were thrown out by the grand jury. They have now instituted proceedings against Mr. Duggan and Mr. Leach but they are not able to prove anything against them, and will not be able to prove anything because I am satisfied that everything is as straight as it possibly could be so far as Mr. Duggan is concerned. The Liberals thought of course that the county of Selkirk was stolen from them, because they had the lists so loaded in their favour that they believed they were certain of carrying the constituency. But, Sir, it was the policy of the Laurier government that was so popular in that country that carried the election, and it secured for me hundreds of Conservative votes, and these Conservatives would vote for me again if there was an election tomorrow. Indeed, if the lists were fair it would not be a majority of 500 that I would have, but a majority of at least double that. I can tell these gentlemen opposite that the policy of the Liberal government is so popular in the west, that if there was an election there now, the Liberals would carry ten seats.

Mr. LALOR. Why did'nt you carry Mountain?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. That is easily explained. I can give you a little information about that if you want to know. The five members of the Roblin cabinet were up there and they had every civil servant working for them, and three or four surveying parties were laying out ditches and offering $1,000 here and $1,000 there if certain districts gave good majorities for the government. In one particular municipality where there is a local option, the people wanted a license and the friends of the Roblin government told them that if there was a good majority for their candidate they would put them into a new municipality so that they could get a license. I can tell my hon. friends that the educational clauses of the Autonomy Bill, or the boundary question did not figure in that election.

For the benefit of the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) I wish to read the Manitoba electoral law which says :

21. Lists of electors shall hereafter only be made and revised at such times as is hereinafter provided :
(a) Provided that a new list shall be made and revised in the case of every general election ;
(b) Provided also, in the case of a by-election, the list last revised under this or any previous Act may be used if not over one year old. If over one year old, a new list of electors shall be prepared for the electoral division affected.

This law says that a new list shall be made.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is the date of that statute ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. 1901.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That has been changed.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. There is no amendment to that so far as I am aware, and there is nothing to hinder the Roblin government striking us all off the lists if we do not appear.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The hon. member knows that is not correct.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I do not. I have read the law for you.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is the law of 1901.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Then point out any changes that have been made. I think the hon. member for Marquette should apologize to Mr. Duggan ; he is not a bartender ; he has had nothing to do with a bar for a year and a half, and he was never in the real sense of the word a bartender at all. I have a number of very warm friends who have been in that business, and I dare say hon. gentlemen opposite are in the same position. I think it has been clearly proven that we have an iniquitous election law at present in Manitoba. I want a fair list ; I want to see justice done to voters irrespective of politics, and I say that it is the duty of this government to give us a revision of the lists, taking the local lists as a basis and having a revision by impartial judges. I do not want any partisan revising barristers. I want to see the lists prepared by impartial judges. When we have a government such as that now in power in Manitoba who will not give us fair voters' lists, but who have loaded up the lists in their favour and are trying to keep them in that shape, then it is the duty of this government to remedy that even if we have to stay here till the snow flies. It is the duty of this government to see that every voter in the Dominion of Canada who is entitled to vote should be put on the voters' list regardless of politics, and even though we have to stay here till Christmas or January next, justice should be done.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he wants an exception made of Manitoba in this respect ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. It may be necessary to extend it to the province of Ontario in a short time if the Conservative government there do not render justice. We may not be alone in the time to come, but I do say that in view of the government we have in power in Manitoba to-day, an exception should be made for that province. If the Manitoba government would give us a voters' list similar to that in Ontario I would be satisfied, but if they adopt the partisan system under which they can favour themselves if they have a clerk that is any way crooked, then that should be prevented. In the town in which I registered I have myself seen dozens of men to whom the oath was never administered and who were put on the lists, while dozens of other men were sworn. As I understand it the law says that a man can not be entered on the lists unless the man who proposes to put him on swears that he was unable to be present or was away from the country or something of that kind, but names were put on the list right along in my town without that precaution having been taken. This shows how loose the system is. It is the duty of this government as soon as possible to introduce an Act making an exception for the province of Manitoba, and giving us what we consider would be a fair list ; let the judges do it.

Mr. LALOR. The hon. gentleman has stated that in some cases people lived so far away that it is impossible for them to register. Is that not as fair for one party as the other ; do not Conservatives live as far away from the polls as Liberals ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I have always been in favour of making it convenient for the people, whether Conservatives or Liberals and I think we should not compel even Conservatives to come down 260 miles to register their votes.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Do they travel any further under this system than under the other ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Why?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. We had an enumerator who went around and put their names on, and there were very few put on at the court of revision. There were lots to strike off, as the hon. member for Souris said this afternoon, but very few to put on, for the list as a basis, there were always men on and there was only the cleaning of the lists to be done.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Why were there so many to strike off ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. With the municipal list as a basis, there were always men on the list who were dead or who had moved away, because they are marked residents for certain purposes of statute labour. There used to be trouble about that when we took the municipal lists as a basis, and in that way we had to clean up the list.

Mr. W. D. STAPLES (Macdonald). I am sure anything I may have to say, coming from an ordinary farmer like myself, cannot be so interesting as remarks would be coming from an hon. gentleman like the hon. member for Selkirk. That hon. member went up to Manitoba only a few weeks ago, and by hanging a map on the wall, taking a pointer and making a few scientific flourishes with it, he solved the whole boundary question that has been troubling the people of Manitoba. If he was so effective in solving the boundary question, I think we can afford to have the solution of the Franchise Act of Manitoba put in his hands. His solution would be about as effective as his solution of the boundary question of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman has been finding fault all afternoon with the registration that is taking place in the province of Manitoba, that is the annual registration. If we were under the Franchise Act of the Greenway government we would have no registration at all this year, because it was not annual as at present, and those men who are desirous of getting on the list would not have an opportunity of doing so if we were under the Greenway Act. All they have to do now is to go to the registration booth and, as has been pointed out to-night, it is as fair for one as for another. The hon. gentleman went on to say that if the lists had not been stuffed, instead of there being seven representatives here supporting the government to-day there would be ten. I want to say that if it had not been for the mutilation of the lists for Selkirk, if it had not been for the thin red line and other things of the same nature, he would not be here to-day, and I would say further that if he has a spark of principle, knowing the conditions and the methods which were adopted in order to secure his election, if he is the gentleman I think he should be, he would resign his seat and say: I did not win that election fairly and I wish to contest it over again. Talk about how he got here, about the striking out of names; there were forty-two Conservative electors struck off at one division, and he took good care that he did not mention that there were a number of polling booths in that constituency where the Conservatives went in numbers asking for ballots and were refused, and were told that there was a red line through their names and they could not vote. The hon. gentleman knows that, and he also knows that in several polling subdivisions where they asked for ballots and could not get them, they became boisterous, forced the doors, demanded a ballot and made the deputy returning officer give them a ballot and take back the ballot. As a matter of fact, what did he do? He would not allow them to deposit the ballots in the ballot box, but he put them in an envelope, and, if I am rightly informed, they again went into the booth after reconsidering what he had done with the ballots and forced the deputy returning officer to tear the end off the envelope and drop the ballots one by one into the ballot box. You talk about your ballot stuffing, your ballot switching and your bogus ballot boxes, but there is nothing to my mind, or to the mind of any fair elector, equal to the thin red line. A more effective scheme could not be thought of, and this scheme I have mentioned has been utilized, and what does the hon. gentleman ask to-day? They know they cannot go back and practise the same device, and come here asking this government to pass a special Franchise Act for Manitoba, whereby they would be able to exercise other schemes in order to be elected. It has been explained how our lists are compiled, and I have yet to find a Liberal in Manitoba who will not say that the present list there is the most fair and just that has ever existed in the province. Ask any Liberal in my own constituency, and he will tell you this. The gentlemen who have spoken this afternoon know full well that this subject has been debated on the floors of the local legislature, and the leader of the opposition there has stated that it is a fair compilation of the list, but that it is too expensive; that is the only fault he has to find with it. The hon. gentlemen say that the red line had to be used. Admitting that the red line had to be used, although I do not think it was necessary to use it, had this government taken hold of these lists at the proper time and compiled them here, then it would not be necessary to use the red line. The red line is all right if it had not been abused, but up go the lists, and where do those lists go to? Before going to the deputy returning officers throughout Manitoba, the lists went into the hands of one Mr. Leach, who sat in the Liberal committee room in Winnipeg and drew the red line just where it suited his own will. Where is this gentleman, Mr. Leach, to-day? He is under the employment of this government, as some one has well said, receiving his reward the same as many others. The hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the other side have evidently been preparing this subject. Each came here with a long brief and a pile of papers. I had secured and gathered together a number of papers relating to this subject which I have handed over to another hon. member on this side who is unfortunately away from the House this evening, and I have not the information and the facts with me that I might have presented to you to-night. I know the subject will come up later on, and then there will be plenty of time for stating facts. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. S. J. Jackson), who was in the constituency of Mountain in the campaign which recently took place has ventured the statement that the school question was not made an issue there. If the hon. gentleman will go through the archives of this country and search the papers printed and speeches made in that constituency, he will find that the school question and the boundary question were the two issues upon which the constituency of Mountain was won by the Liberal Conservative candidate.

I am glad that we have at last heard from the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway). He has sat here through this entire session which has lasted almost five months, and not a word have we heard him utter until this afternoon. But I venture to say that when the newspapers appear in Manitoba to-morrow they will contain some expressions of surprise that he has waited all this time to deal with such a question as this after having missed so many opportunities to deal with a question of more importance—though this one is important too. Why have we not heard from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Greenway) on the school question, a question on which he was returned to power time and again and upon which this government rode into office? The people of Manitoba, I venture to say, would much prefer to hear him talk on that question than on the question which he has made the subject of his first speech in this parliament.

Now, I wish to call attention for a moment to the way that this 'thin red line' did its work in the constituency of Macdonald. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) seemed anxious to draw attention to me and spoke of the little town of Miami. I wish to call attention to one incident that occurred there. On the 4th of November last, there were thirteen Conservatives went to the poll there and asked for ballots that they might vote for the Conservative candidate. Did they get them? They were coolly told that there was a red line through their names and that they were disfranchised. The statement has been made that they were probably on the list in some other division. They were not on the list in any other division, and I defy the hon. gentleman to prove to the contrary. But Miami is not the only place in which such things occurred. Take the polling subdivision at Poplar Point, and there the names of fifteen men had the red line drawn through them, men who had lived in that polling subdivision for years. Of these men every one was a Conservative. The same was true at Miami—every one of the eleven who were disfranchised was a Conservative. I have gone to considerable trouble to ascertain how many men were disfranchised in the different polling subdivisions of Macdonald, and I find that close upon 300 Liberal-Conservatives who went to the polls and asked for ballots, found that their names has been erased. I may also cite the case of a Liberal who, just before the election, meeting a Conservative in my town, said: 'Well we have got Staples trimmed.' My friends replied: 'It is not possible. .' But the answer was: 'You will find out that what I say is right, and when the polls are closed you will see the basis on which I make the assertion.' It was on the 'thin red line' that this man based his prediction. They went it pretty strong; they went it to the extent of nearly three hundred; but they did not go it quite strong enough. Now, just one other point with regard to my own town Treherne. This is a matter that came under my own observation. On the day of the election, two electors went to the poll and asked for ballots. They were told that there was a red line through their names. They came to me and asked how it was. I told them that possibly they were outside the limits indicated by the proclamation. I went to the polling booth expecting to find a copy of the proclamation, but there was none though the law requires that one shall be hung in the polling booth. After a little time I succeeded in getting a copy which I took to the deputy returning officer and told him that these men lived within the bounds of the polling subdivision and that he could not legally refuse them a ballot. Though, for a time he refused, I must admit that these were fair men—about the average of Liberals after considerable argument, I succeeded in getting ballots for the voters who had been refused them. And they voted, I suppose that had the case arisen in some other polling subdivision I could not have succeeded for in all these polls I had good scrutineers who asked the officer to allow the electors to use their franchise, but they refused.

Now, I am satisfied that this question will come up later on and I have something to say about it, for I have plenty of information on the subject. But before I take my seat I wish to call the attention of the House and country to what one Liberal newspaper has said as to the fairness and justice of the method of compiling the voters' list in use in Manitoba. I quote from the 'Eye Witness,' of Birtle, a newspaper which, I understand, is edited by a good Liberal:

> The Winnipeg 'Free Press' is working overtime endeavouring to make a mare's nest of the Manitoba Franchise Act. Had it expended half the energy during the twelve years its friends were in power urging them to give the province something better than the cemetery voters' lists that were used until Roblin's government enacted the present personal registration Bill which, while not perfect, is without doubt the best franchise law anywhere in Canada, the Liberal party would now have something in this line creditable to look back to. The 'Free Press' present harping is so out of place that every Liberal paper in the province, except its couple of echoes, are discreetly silent. A few columns on red line disfranchisement would be more to the point.

I do not think for a moment that, when all the facts are known as to the method of compiling the lists in Manitoba this House will think of enacting a special law for that province. As this newspaper states, we have the fairest method of compiling these lists used anywhere in Canada. It is a credit to Manitoba to have such a system. At the same time, I am satisfied, that as time goes on, it will be made even more perfect.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I do not rise for the purpose of participating in the discussion in regard to what has occurred in the province of Manitoba, for, like many other hon. members of the House, I have no knowledge of the facts except as they have been presented in this discussion. I wish to say that I think the principle upon which the Dominion Franchise Act is framed is one in the interest of public economy and public convenience. The preparation of a second list for Dominion elections throughout the whole Dominion would involve a considerable expense. But that to my mind is not the most serious side of the question. Everybody who has anything to do with political organization must know that the preparation of an electoral list involves a great deal of labour and time to many of the best citizens of our country, and I count among those all who take an active and intelligent interest in public affairs on either side of politics. The time that is spent and the labour that is involved in getting up electoral lists are therefore considerable, and I think we could all agree that if we can minimize that labour and sacrifice throughout the Dominion, by having one list instead of two, such a condition is very desirable. Whether we have attained perfection in that respect under our present system, may be a matter of debate. While I would contend that the present system on the whole has a good purpose and works well, if it could be shown that the system is abused in any province, by any government, Liberal or Conservative, and that the intention of this parliament respecting the free exercise of the franchise by every elector of this Dominion is not being carried out, but that there is a deliberate and systematic abuse of the system with a view of disfranchising any portion of the electors, then I think we would all agree, irrespective of politics, that a remedy should be provided. Whether that condition has been disclosed in the province of Manitoba, I confess I have not sufficient knowledge to express an opinion. I can only say that in view of what has been presented to the House this afternoon, the matter is one of great gravity, and I feel that the principal law officer of the government, the Minister of Justice, should give the matter full consideration, and I have no doubt he will do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). I was not able to follow very well the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) this afternoon in the somewhat rambling speech which he made on this occasion; but the impression that he conveyed to my mind was this, that an insufficient opportunity is given to the people of Manitoba to be registered on the electoral lists. I was not at all aware until he was corrected by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) that the opportunity which he says is insufficient is one which was not afforded at all by the government of which he was a member. So the situation as I understand it is this: Under the administration of which he was the Prime Minister in Manitoba, the lists were made up once in every four years. If any by-election occurred during the four years it was run on the old lists, and the lists were made up by partisan officers appointed by the government itself. Under the administration of Mr. Roblin the lists are made up for each general election. In addition to that, there is an opportunity given for the revision of these lists every year in order that they may be brought up to date for any by-election that occurs in the meantime; and natural opportunities for registration are not required to be so great when you are making merely a revision involving a few names, as when you are preparing in the first instance list. Now I do not understand from the hon. member for Lisgar what really he wanted. It seems to me there is no middle course. You must either adopt that which was the policy of the Conservative party from 1878 to 1896 and have the lists made up under the control of and by officers appointed by this government, or you must adopt the course upon which the hon. gentlemen entered when they came into office and make no lists at all, but simply adopt the lists of each province prepared for their local elections. The hon. member for Lisgar, so far as I was able to understand him, was perfectly willing to adopt lists in any province where there is a Liberal administration and where it is probable that lists will be favourable; but he is absolutely opposed to adopting lists in any province where there is a Conservative administration, and where he might think the lists were not quite so favourable. So far as one is able to gather from the somewhat extraordinary speech which he delivered to the House this afternoon, that was his policy, and the principle which I understood him to advocate.

Now, I do not agree with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance; I do not agree that when you have once adopted the principle of leaving these matters to the provincial administrations, you are to interfere and sit in judgment upon them simply because certain gentlemen who are partisans in any particular province see fit to complain to the central administration that the lists are not quite suited to their requirements. I was astonished when the hon. member for Lisgar and some other gentlemen who spoke here to-day, very frankly acknowledged, what some of their friends denied here last session, namely, that it was proposed to pass by the lists so made up, with an appeal to judges, as I understand is the case in Manitoba—to pass by those lists and have other lists made up in that province by partisan officers, in order that a certain advantage might accrue to their political friends. We had the intimation also later on that there were certain members of the cabinet for whom a proposition of that kind was a little too strong. The hon. gentleman for Lisgar and his friends to-day spoke somewhat tearfully and regretfully of the circumstance that their proposal was not adopted by the government. I am glad for the credit of some members of the administration at least, that they found a proposal of that kind a little too strong; I am glad of it for the sake of public life in Canada, and for the credit of some members of this administration in that regard. Here were lists that could be revised by independent officers, lists as to which there was an appeal to judges in the province of Manitoba. And I may say in passing that we vainly fought in this House for similar appeals in respect to provincial lists in the province of Nova Scotia, and members of the administration would not permit us to have even that. But here were lists that were revised by independent officers, in respect of which an appeal would lie to the judges; and the proposal coolly admitted by the gentlemen who have spoken on that side of the House, was that these lists made up by independent men, subject to revision by judges were to be passed over in order that lists might be manufactured by partisan officers. Well, if that is what my hon. friend the Minister of Finance says is under consideration by the government—I do not know whether I am to interpret his remarks in any other way—I venture to say that if he brings down a proposal of that kind, after once having committed himself and his government to the principle of leaving these matters to provincial legislation, any measure of that kind will be before this House of Commons for a very long time before it will pass.

There are many things which the opposition has to concede to the majority in this House. The rights of the minority in this House are not always regarded as absolutely sacred, but when highway robbery of that kind is suggested, because that is what it amounts to, I venture to think that the hon. member of Lisgar will find that they have attempted one of the most stubborn and difficult propositions that they ever endeavoured to put into force, and it is just as well that this should be understood before the government are committed to any proposal of this kind. We took our stand upon the principle which has been advocated by the Conservative party. We made no factious opposition to the proposition which was brought in by this administration when they changed the method of making up the lists; but when it is said that you shall have one principle for making up the lists in a province which happens to have a Liberal administration and another principle for a province which happens to have a Conservative administration and that there shall be one principle applied to provinces like Manitoba and Ontario in respect, and an altogether different principle to Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and other provinces where there is a Liberal administration—to say that we are to have anything like that in this country is going a little bit too far, and I venture to think that the administration upon reflection will think twice before they accede to the proposition which has been coolly and unblushingly made by the hon. member for Lisgar and by his friends from Manitoba to the House to-day. There has been no complaint that the revising officers are unfair or partial. Every one admits that the lists in Manitoba are prepared by non-partisan officers whose decisions are subject to an appeal to the judges of the county court. The judges hold courts of revision and independent officers deal with these lists, a privilege which we have not to-day under the Liberal legislation of the province of Nova Scotia, although we have sought it many times. It has always been denied us both by the Liberal government of the province of Nova Scotia and by this government in respect to the Dominion lists in that province. To say that these lists, revised by judges of the land are to be passed over in Manitoba, and that the lists of Nova Scotia has, to which we have no right of appeal to any independent officers, are to be taken and accepted as absolutely fair and impartial does seem to me to be a proposition that would not commend itself to the judgment of some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House for whose fairness subject to certain partisan bias which we must always expect, I have every possible respect.

I do not think this discussion has been wasted to-day. Probably before the end of the session we may hear, as my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) has said, a little more about that thin red line. We have some pretty full information about the way in which that line was utilized, and I do not think that everything has been said on this subject to-day which might be said in regard to it. For the present it is enough to say that I trust my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, does not intend to suggest to the House that there is to be one principle applied to the province of Manitoba because it happens to have a Conservative government or because its lists do not happen to be made out to the liking of some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House and another principle applied to other provinces.

Let me say before I sit down what I forgot to say before and it is this: The hon. member for Lisgar spoke of the lists made up in 1904 in the province of Manitoba as if they were designedly unfair lists to the Liberals of that province. He knows very well, every hon. gentleman from Manitoba knows very well, that the reason why these lists were not favourable to the Liberals was the simple reason that they took no part in the revision upon the promise of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), then Minister of the Interior, that these lists were not to be the lists upon which the general election was to be run. That is the reason why the lists were not favourable to the Liberals; they took no part in the revision. It is not denied that a promise was made by the hon. member for Brandon that these lists would be disregarded, and that new partisan lists would be made up for the purposes of the Dominion elections. Then, Conservatives naturally said the Liberals had made a mistake in expecting that their party friends would go so far as was prophesied. Undoubtedly the lists were not originally as favourable to the Liberals of Manitoba as they would have been if they had attended to the revision in the ordinary way. But that which was not accomplished by the Liberals by means of attending to the revision, which they would have done under ordinary circumstances, was accomplished, I know not whether at the suggestion of the hon. member for Brandon—I hope not—by this thin red line which has been spoken of this afternoon. They did not do it by means of legislature because they dare not bring that legislation before this House, but their party organizers and their party heelers did it by means of this thin red line that has been spoken of. That is the only difference. The end was accomplished after all. The lists were dealt with. They were not dealt with by legislation brought down and openly and fairly discussed in this House, but the end was accomplished by having every one of these lists placed in the hands of the Liberal organizer for Manitoba who carved them according to his own sweet will receiving them for that purpose out of the hands of the returning officers who are the servants of this parliament. I am not speaking of matters of hearsay. I am speaking of matters that were deposed to on oath by these returning officers in more than one case in the province of Manitoba. So that the thing was accomplished very well after all, not by legislation which some members of the administration shrank from bringing down, shrank from taking the responsibility of, but the thing was accomplished by having every one of these deputy returning officers hand in his list to a gentleman named Leach, the Liberal organizer for Manitoba, and Mr. Leach arranged these by means of his thin red line so that a majority of Liberals was returned at the election held in November last. The hon. member for Lisgar and two or three other hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have the audacity and hardihood in the face of these facts to stand up in this House and complain of these lists in Manitoba. I do not wonder that the hon. member for Lisgar, after he had spoken, and after he had heard a portion only of the speech of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) left this House and showed the extraordinary interest which he takes in this subject, introduced by himself this afternoon without notice, by not putting in an appearance during the remainder of the day. This is all we have to say for the moment on the subject. That hon. gentleman, an old parliamentary hand, did not even have the courtesy to let us know on this side of the House that he proposed to bring up this important subject although we hear very often suggestions of lack of courtesy if any hon. gentleman on this side of the House introduces a much less important subject without giving notice to the Prime Minister or to the proper minister of the Crown. However, he has seen fit to pursue his own course and I venture to say in conclusion that he will hear something more on this subject before the session closes.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford). This is the first time I have had the honour of hearing the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway), and I must say he has chosen a very unfortunate subject for his maiden speech and also a very unfortunate province in which to deliver such an address. The province of Ontario had some little knowledge of Liberal fairness in the preparation of lists, and we from Ontario can speak feelingly on that question. But I understand that the hon. gentleman has lately come down from the mountain, not like the prophet of old with radiant smiles, but with a scowl on his visage, because forsooth he met defeat in that constituency. Smarting under a keen sense of his discomfiture, he opens out the vials of his wrath on the Conservative government in Manitoba because that government did not satisisfy him in its preparation of the lists; and to-day, in conjunction with the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Jackson), he coolly proposes that this House shall make a difference when it comes to deal with provinces which return a Conservative majority as compared with those which have Liberal administrations. This surely is a very strange doctrine. When the Conservative party was in power, it had a franchise that was fair to all throughout the Dominion, but these gentlemen opposite, in their wisdom, saw fit to abrogate that law and disfranchise citizens who had enjoyed the right to vote for many years, many of whom, I may say, reside in my own county. These hon. gentlemen cancelled this franchise law, and they did so because there were Liberal governments in every province of the Dominion at that time. But now it appears that the province of Manitoba, having elected to return a Liberal Conservative administration, is ripe for a change, and we are told that the province of Ontario is nearly ripe for a similar change. Why is this ? Simply because the province of Ontario, by a majority of 38,000 at the last election, showed the Liberal party that the people of that province had had enough of their fairness. We know something in Ontario about the preparation of lists. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) waxes eloquent about the great disability the people of Manitoba are labouring under in going to register. Let me tell him that in Ontario that was the least difficulty we had to contend with. Our difficulties only began when we got to the registration office. It was then quite a feat to get a vote on the list. Who was the revising officer ? In every case he was a political appointee—an official appointed for political purposes—and who was bound to pay the debt of gratitude he owed those who put him in office, by keeping every possible Conservative off the list. That is what was done in Ontario for twenty-five years. Whenever we wanted to get a man on, we had to have lawyers to fight his case inch by inch ; and after he got on the list, were his troubles over ? Not by a long way. They were only beginning. He had to run the gauntlet of those who were offering money for his vote ; and if he had sufficient backbone to resist and got as far as the polls, what happened ? He was very possibly sworn, if it did not happen that his vote had already been presented by some one supporting these gentlemen. And when he did succeed in putting his ballot into the box, it sometimes happened that it was not a real box. Sometimes his ballot was put to one side and another ballot, marked for the man he did not vote for, put in its place. After that there was a good deal in the counting. We know that in some polling subdivisions, not 100 miles from the constituency I represent, where eighty-two voters swore they had voted for a certain candidate, only forty-two ballots for that candidate were found in the box. The warning of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. R. L. Borden) to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) who seemed to be somewhat carried away, was very timely. That hon. minister will find that there will be a considerable amount of indignation excited if he endeavours to apply to Manitoba or Ontario a rule he does not apply to the rest of the Dominion. We have had trouble enough fighting for our rights in the province of Ontario ; and having obtained them by a popular majority of 38,000, we shall not submit to their being taken from us. We can speak feelingly on this subject, because we have been groaning under the load for years. Year after year we have met defeat at the polls in that province —and why ? Not because the people were against us, but because we were smitten by an unseen hand, because we were robbed of our franchise, because we were deprived of our rights as citizens. That is no invention of my own. It has been told in the public glare of the courts to the disgrace of the Liberal party. These things have been revealed in our courts and condemned by our judges from one end of the province to the other. And after our ballots had been cast, and were likely to be called for in court, we know that in some cases they were burned by mistake. These gentlemen, who have raised this question to-day, have struck a very sore spot. Those gentlemen who have given us such broad hints that they are going to make a law which will apply to certain provinces because they are Conservative and will not apply to others because they are Liberal, will find they have struck a snag which this country will not stand. We are all willing to play the game and play it fairly. If we stay in opposition as long as our lives last, we are ready to do it so long as our elections are clean and free from reproach; but when the majority of the people say they want a certain man or party in power, we think it is time that man and party were put in power. These gentlemen talk of the grievance in Manitoba but they have not shown that the Conservative party has any advantage over the Liberals. If a Conservative has to travel 260 miles to get his franchise, why should not a Liberal do the same ? There is no difference in that respect between the two, but this thin red line makes a difference. It strikes the Conservatives only and the Liberals escape. How is it that the thin red line is applied to one party and not to the other ? If you have to apply it at all, apply it in fairness, and we will make no complaint. We are a comparatively small band on this side—not as big as we should be according to the wishes of the country, not representatives of the number of people who voted Conservative by any means—but that comparatively small band is not going to have its rights lightly trodden upon. The hon. gentleman has evinced a great desire to propitiate minorities, but only minorities of a certain kind. When the Conservative party was in a minority, did they show any such desire ? Not a bit of it. Every unfair advantage that could be taken was taken for 25 years in the province of Ontario by these gentlemen ; but I am thankful to say that at last we have there an upright, straight government. What was the very first act of that government ? It was to strike out that marked ballot, which hon. gentlemen held up for twenty-five years as a whip over their party friends and non-party friends to keep them in line. Mr. Whitney, however, has done away with it. He has said : Gentlemen, whether you are for us or against us, we do not wish to know ; your vote is your own ; poll it like a man ; and if you do we shall count it for the man for whom it was cast. These gentlemen who come down to this House to preach about Liberal fairness in elections little know what the province of Ontario has had to endure for the last twenty-five years and how it has had to fight for its rights.

The very first act of the Conservative government has been to say : Gentlemen, we will not take any unfair advantage through that marked ballot ; that marked ballot goes ; no matter which party you belong to you can vote by secret ballot, and you can put it into a proper ballot box, and it will be counted for the candidate you intended it for. I am sorry to say that system did not exist in Ontario under the Liberal regime. My hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Porter) can tell a tale of what happened in some constituencies last election ; he can tell what was meant by the Liberal boast, that no power on earth could defeat the Liberal party. I leave you, Mr. Speaker, to judge where the power would come from that could defeat the Liberal party. That hon. gentleman from Hastings can show the ballot box that was falsely made for the purpose of destroying the freeman's franchise. Surely the member for Lisgar is out of touch with the province in which he at present is, and if he has returned sorely disappointed from Mountain, why should he pour out his vials of wrath in this House against the people of Manitoba because their Franchise Law does not happen to please him ? He had his way for a time. His government did wrong, and they are out of power, and they are suffering for doing wrong. Under our constitution governments come and governments go if there is fair-play, and I presume that if this government is disappointed in North Oxford and London, you will hear some of these gentlemen opposite doing as the member for Selkirk does, and asking for a special law making an exception of Ontario, so far as the Franchise Act is concerned. Mr. Speaker, the snow will certainly fly before the House prorogues if any such outrage as that is attempted.

Mr. A. CAMPBELL (Centre York). I am sure the government will be glad to know now what their duty is, and that before they attempt to pass any law they will have to go to the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. R. L. Borden) and to the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) and ask them to please be allowed to pass it. A government with seventy-five or eighty majority in this House must go to these gentlemen and ask them, forsooth, if it pleases their mightyness and their holiness to be allowed to pass a law. I would like to know who is running this country. Is it this little outfit over there, this small little band that the people of Canada rejected ; these men who were told by the people from the Atlantic to the Pacific, told that their policy was wrong and that they were not fit to govern ? Is it these men who are going to hold the House up until the snow flies ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Two can play at that game. We can stay here as long as they can, and we will do it, too. What this government undertakes to do they are going to do, and they are not going to ask the opposition whether they can do it or not. It is a nice thing if the minority, a small minority, that is discredited by the people, that the people have spewed out of their mouths ; it is a nice thing if they can hold this parliament in session until the snow flies. The leader of the opposition has given us warning ; he has threatened us in plain terms : You cannot pass this law unless it pleases us. Who is 'us' I would like to know ? A little discredited band over there who, if they went back to the country to-day, small as they are, they would come back with scarcely a baker's dozen ; a miserable outfit. And the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), he has not been long in this House, and when he is in the House a few years longer, he will not be so bold and so bumptious as he has been to-night. He talks about the province of Ontario. What have we suffered from in the province of Ontario ?

Mr. BENNETT. Ross.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Ross ! Ross and his party ruled this country for thirty-three years, and I venture to say you will not rule it for thirty-three years or half that period. You were going to reform everything ; you said that the departments were reeking with corruption ; you have failed to show it, and the only thing Mr. Whitney has done is to repeal the marked ballot. That is a ballot that has been in force in England for generations, and which the people of England believe is a good ballot, and I do not care whether the Whitney government repeals it or not. He was going to repeal the Conmee Act and the Succession Duties Act, but instead of that he increased the succession duties. He has not been able to show one single thing that the Ross government has done that has not been to the credit of the province of Ontario. There never was a province governed so wisely or so well as the province of Ontario under the Liberal government, whose record will go down to generations as a wise and an honest government. There have been no complaints about the election law in the province of Ontario. The list is taken from the assessment roll and an appeal lies to the county judge, a court of revision is held, and Liberals and Conservatives have fair-play before that court. Everything is fairly and honestly conducted, and there are no complaints. There were complaints of the Dominion Franchise Act in the old days, when the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) and his friends got 200 Indians put on the voters' lists to vote for him. We all remember how Dr. Montague appealed to the Indians in Haldimand to vote for him because the Queen wanted them to do so. That is the way these gentlemen opposite conducted elections. And the member for Brantford has the audacity and the cheek to rise in this House and to denounce the system now in force in the province of Ontario. I venture to say you cannot improve on the way the voters' lists are made up in that province. It was not so under the old Franchise Act. I remember in the county of Kent when there were 1,100 appeals sent in, and the judge—he was a revising barrister then and not a judge—refused to hear these appeals at all, and we had to go to the courts in Toronto to get a mandamus to compel him to hear them. That is the way things were then conducted in the county of Kent, as I know to my sorrow, and in various other places in the province of Ontario the lists were made up in the most outrageous and partisan manner. To-day the hon. member for Selkirk has shown that men have to go 200 miles to get their names on the list. Is that not a monstrous thing ? I do not care whether it is against the Conservatives or the Liberals ; I think it most unfair, and never ought to be allowed to exist.

What sense of fairness or justice is there in that ? Sixty or seventy miles and then only allowing 13 hours of one day for each municipality. Why Sir, it is utterly impossible that they should get all the names on in that time. I remember in the town of Toronto Junction last year there were no less than 1,200 appeals for names to be added and struck off and the list is made up every year. I suppose there is one-half that number in Manitoba in any constituency, it would be utterly impossible in 13 hours to answer all the questions asked there and get the names put on or off, and so I say if such a state of affairs exists there, as has been described here to-day it is the bounden duty of the government to look into the matter and rectify any wrong that may exist. When the Tories get into power in any province they always follow their own way and conduct things in a partisan manner. They did it in the 18 years they were in power in the Dominion when we had that iniquitous franchise law, that was expensive, that put the people to a great deal of trouble and expense and which when this government came into power they properly repealed and placed the franchise as it is to-day. If they are going to repeat these tactics in Manitoba and in Ontario—in Ontario they have not done anything yet—but we will see what they will do in a year or two and I say if they are going to follow out these tactics then it is time for this government to interfere and repair that wrong. No case could be stronger than that made out by the hon. member for Lisgar and those who have spoken from this side of the House, and have stated that men have to go 60, 70 and even 200 miles to register their votes. I say it is an outrage upon the people that should not be allowed to exist any longer than it takes to repeal it, and if the case is as made out by these gentlemen then I say it is the bounden duty of the government to interfere and rectify that wrong.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). From the sadness in the tone of the hon. member for Centre York it is quite plain he has met with a fatal blow.

Mr. CAMPBELL. No, he has not.

Mr. BENNETT. Every one in this House, particularly members from Toronto, know the fatal blow he got in the last few days and what made it doubly bad is that it has come from Mr. Whitney. The hon. gentleman has in his constituency a place called Toronto Junction, which under the guidance care of the Ross administration has been the resort of all the toughs and thieves who used it for the purpose of gambling.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is not in my constituency at all.

Mr. BENNETT. Toronto Junction ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No.

Mr. BENNETT. I am going to give the hon. member for Centre York credit for one thing and that is gratitude. The kindly acts that were performed for him in past elections by this gang when in Centre York and when Toronto Junction was in Centre York are not forgotten by him and that is the reason he is wailing to-night that that gang of iniquity is broken up.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It never was in Centre York.

Mr. BENNETT. It was in the riding the hon. gentleman represented and he got the benefit of their influence, and that influence was fostered by the Ross government by reason of the fact that it got very great benefits from keeping that gang there. It is rather hard that what has happened in Ontario has happened, that for the first time in 30 years the criminal law has been administered. That is what galls these hon. gentlemen and the member for Centre York knows it better than any one. Is it not galling to think that on the 13th in London there will be no more pluggers ? Mr. Quinn is now serving a year in the Central Prison ; he voted five times for Hyman in the last election. Mr. Whitney has not done anything ? The criminal law in Ontario was paralysed and Quinn walked around the streets of London boasting of what he had done. That has all been changed and Quinn is now in prison. Where are the forms that used to go about the corridors here. Geo. B. Grey and Shipley and Lott, where are they? Under this awful man Whitney they are on the other side now, in the United States, and the member for Centre York no longer grasps the hand and sees the burly form of Lott as he walks dropping a pointer as to the ballot boxes that were going to be used and stating that it is out of the power of Providence to defeat them when these boxes were used. Mr. Whitney has broken up the junction pool room and he started the criminal law in motion. Messrs. Lott and Shipley regret it and he is making it so hot that even 'Cap.' Sullivan will not be at the station to wish the member for Centre York good luck in his trip to Ottawa and the 'Minnie M' has gone out of service as well. The member for Centre York must not say that Mr. Whitney has done nothing; he has certainly done something, he has started the criminal law in motion and we give you fair notice that in the election in London the criminal law will be enforced and the gang you have had floating from one province to another who were in Brockville, in a wonderful election, and in West Elgin and all over Ontario are not to be found now. The ringleaders Lott and Shipley have disappeared. Let the government make their appeals in London on the 13th and they will have to go with the Ross government. There is no danger of this gang being in London. My hon. friends opposite are to lose the benefit of that beautiful entourage which followed them throughout the province. I think my hon. friend had better say less about Whitney. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that there are some very uneasy friends of hon. gentlemen opposite who have had large dealings with the Crown Lands Department. It takes time always to stir up these things but you will hear of them later, they are coming and they are not coming the way of some Grit lumbermen who for years have been living on the fat of the land through the Crown Lands Department of Ontario. We have heard the old story about the infamous Dominion voters' list in Ontario. What was the fact in reference to that? My hon. friend says there were 1,100 appeals. All who know him know that everything he says has to be discounted. He was wrong in saying that there were 2,000 Indian electors in South Brant. Every one knew that this is untrue and I suppose we will have to take the same discount off his statement as to the number of appeals in a certain election. As there are about 200 Indian electors, so I presume there were about 110 appeals and there are equally as many appeals under the local law as there were formerly, the same judges hold the courts. The main and the greatest difficulty about that is that under the old Act the Indians had votes but under the present Act they have not. How many constituencies does that affect in Ontario or the whole Dominion? The Minister of Customs could be elected in the riding of Brant when there were Indian voters but he got licked in that riding and he is afraid to go back to it when there are no Indian voters there, so the Minister of Customs must have got the benefit of the Indian vote. We are not going to be threatened, we can stay here as long as hon. gentlemen can. Goodness knows the hon. gentleman is a patient waiter. The hon. gentleman has been waiting since 1896 to be taken into this cabinet. The newspapers from time to time announce that he is going in as the minister of this or the minister of that. But he is never going in as the minister of anything, as a matter of fact, and for the simple reason that he could not be re-elected for Centre York if he were taken into the cabinet.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How do you know?

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman is afraid to try it. But, after London is disposed of, he may have a chance, that is, unless the hon. member for London (Mr. Hyman) is to have another chance in Prescott or in Russell where there may be some reasonable prospect of his being re-elected.

Mr. DERBYSHIRE. He will be re-elected in London.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. member for Brockville (Mr Derbyshire) said the other night that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hyman) would be elected. And he undertook to prove it in a way peculiarly his own—he was prepared to bet any amount of money on it. Now, I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Derbyshire) will go up to London in this campaign; because as soon as his burly form is pointed out and people are told that he is the man who wishes to bet money on the success of the government party in this election, they will come about him like flies around honey. And, if he will follow Mr. Hyman in the house-to-house canvass that he is making, the people may think that they can have a nickel dropped in the slot. But I warn him that the Londoners will not be satisfied with nickels in this election. They know that the government is playing for its last stake and that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) must be elected at all hazards, and so one-dollar or two-dollar bills will be utterly useless. In proportion to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Derbyshire's) dimensions, the bill should be correspondingly large. I do not know whether this government intends to bring in a special Bill for the benefit of the demoralized Grit party in Manitoba or not. If they do, we shall examine that Bill and see what it contains. Of course, according to the old saying, desperate diseases require desperate remedies, and the condition of the Liberal party in Manitoba is such that one hardly knows whether to speak of it as a party at all or not. They had a by-election in Mountain the other day, and every one knows the result. I think there are three or four opponents of the Roblin government in the legislature, and they have been tumbling over one another, since the last election, to get in with the government side. What is the complaint that has been voiced here this afternoon ? It is that they are not going to have a thorough revision of the lists in Manitoba this year. Why, there will be no revision of the lists in Ontario this year. Hon. gentlemen on either side do not care to spend their time and money fixing up the lists in Ontario. And I will tell you why : It is because we know there will be no election. There will be no Dominion election—that is a certainty. Every man who sits in this House can console himself with the reflection that this government is not going to meet the people until the last moment. And, as to the Ontario legislature, there is not a possibility of there being an election there for four years. You could not even galvanize the parties into preparing to have an election this year. For you cannot have an election unless there is an opposition, and there is no opposition in the Ontario legislature to-day. The opposition did not challenge a vote in the House last session.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They did—on the Gamey matter. They challenged a vote on the white-wash and it was a big coat of white-wash too.

Mr. BENNETT. True ; I had forgotten about the Gamey business. But I should thought that after the knock out that Mr. Gamey gave the Liberal government in Ontario we would never have heard his name from a Liberal again.

Mr. FINLAY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) ought to be ashamed to mention his name.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not wonder that my hon. friend from East Peterborough (Mr. Finlay) is roused to some kind of protest when the name of Mr. Gamey is mentioned. Why, the hon. gentleman's political godfather was Jimmy Stratton. And I am here to-night to acknowledge that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Finlay) has one good quality the quality of gratitude. He cannot but feel a sympathetic pang when he hears mentioned the name of the man who struck Jimmy Stratton in the vital parts, the man who placed Mr. James Stratton where he is to-day—outside the pale of Ontario politics, outside the pale even of the Liberal party, for in that party to-day there are none so poor to do him reverence.

If the government bring in this Bill, we will be here to see what it contains. But so long as the people of Manitoba are almost unanimous in favour of the present government, this House should hesitate to say that a law passed at the instance of a government so firmly entrenched in the approval of the people of Manitoba is a bad law. We will wait and see what the government do. And we must be prepared to wait, for this government seems to be a waiting government. For, what is the government doing to-day ? It is delaying the session to prevent business being done. They will not let business go on. They have here this coercion Bill, but they do not move an inch forward, but they put up these tricks to delay. One after another their supporters fire their guns and retire. Was it not a pathetic sight to see the burly form of the hon. member for Lisgar, after he had emptied the vials of his wrath upon this side, retiring from the chamber while the sympathetic onlookers could almost hear the refrain of that beautiful and touching song 'Don't you go Tommy, Don't go.' They are delaying the business of the House. Let them give us this coercion Bill that we may get on with it, finish our business and go home. Let the people of London and North Oxford know what the government's policy is. Let them know whether this is a Bill, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) says it is, with little or nothing in it, or a Bill as the hon. member from Centre York (Mr. Campbell) says it is, so harmless that the system of separate schools will die out in a little time, or a Bill as some other hon. gentlemen on that side say it is, that will place on the statute-book and establish for all time the strongest system of separate schools ever known in the Dominion.

In conclusion, let me commiserate my hon. friend from Centre York on his dwindling and vanishing majority. His speech reminded me of that grand old hymn :

> Hark ! From the tombs a doleful sound
> That bids my soul arise.

I know the hon. gentleman's deep feeling of sympathy for his old friends in Toronto Junction, who, by the prompt and stern action of Premier Whitney have been wiped out, their pool-room closed up and the hon. gentleman's band of tried and trusty followers scattered to the four winds of Heaven.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Commutation in lieu of remission of duties on articles imported for the use of the army and navy—further amount required, $500.

Mr. PATERSON. The leader of the opposition asked for an explanation of this matter. There is a sum of $2,250 in the main estimates, that will be $500 short, and we are asking for this supplementary vote. He asked the reason for a vote of this kind, seeing that under the Tariff Act articles for the use of the army and navy are free. That is true with reference to officers that belong to the mess, but there are a certain number of officers who do not belong to the mess, and who purchase their supplies from Halifax merchants, it may be, or import them ; but in either case they pay the duty. This vote is to re-imburse these officers who do not belong to the mess for the estimated amount of duties that they pay. The money is not paid to the officers until there has been a certificate from the commanding officer that these officers do not belong to the mess but have purchased the goods which have paid the duty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The reason for restricting the free importations to the mess, I suppose, is in order to keep some control ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And doing it by means of a refund is for the sake of the revenue ?

Mr. PATERSON. Well, these officers that do not belong to the mess have to buy their own supplies, and whether they buy them in Halifax, or in Victoria, for the Esquimalt portion of the garrison, or whether they import them from the old country, they have to pay duty. They are not allowed to get them in free, even if they import them themselves.

Mr. DANIEL. Why is this chargeable to income instead of capital ?

Mr. FIELDING. Public buildings of this character are not charged to capital. Public buildings at Ottawa relating to the government are charged to capital, but other public buildings throughout the country are not.

Mr. DANIEL. Is this the only public building for the whole province of New Brunswick ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is not an estimate for the future, it is closing up the current year's accounts. Estimates are coming in that have to be dealt with separately.

Mr. AMES. By the application of what principle does the hon. gentleman charge a building to income, and a dredge to capital ?

Mr. FIELDING. I suppose my hon. friend is referring to dredging the St. Lawrence. It has been the custom to charge certain dredging, especially a channel like the St. Lawrence to capital. It might be difficult to give a logical reason for charging that to capital and not to income ; but the Englishman's reason for these things is : That is always the way we have been accustomed to do it.

Mr. AMES. Is the present government satisfied to accept precedents in all such matters without making any change ?

Mr. FIELDING. No ; but there is something to be said in favour of this practice. Dredging the St. Lawrence is part of a great national undertaking, which should be distinct from an ordinary small building. At all events, that is the rule which we have adopted in the past. I have not had my attention drawn to the necessity for a change, but I do not think, at first blush, it follows that a change should be made.

Mr. AMES. I am willing to admit that the result of the work of a dredge is properly chargeable to capital account ; I question whether the instrument or tool that performs the work can be rightly so charged.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a very fine distinction.

Ottawa public buildings—telephone service, $4,600.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much does the telephone service cost altogether ? This is in addition to what was granted in the main estimates.

Mr. FIELDING. The total amount required for telephones at Ottawa is $9,738.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was the vote in the main estimates ?

Mr. FIELDING. $10,000 was the appropriation up to 31st December. Since that time there have been some additional telephones put in.

Mr. TAYLOR. $10,000 was the appropriation which was asked for in the main estimates last year. Surely the telephone service can be pretty nearly estimated ?

Mr. FIELDING. Well, it is increasing all the time. It is just that class of service that increases with increasing business ; $10,000 was the appropriation voted last year.

Mr. TAYLOR. It has overrun that by about 50 per cent. That is a very poor estimate, knowing what each instrument costs and knowing how many you require.

Mr. FIELDING. There is an explanation of it which we have to give regarding one or two other items, and it is a reason that is not entirely satisfactory to myself. It is that there has grown up in the department the practice of allowing some of the accounts of one year to run over into another year, with the result that they have had to take from this year's appropriation to meet the balance due from the previous year. I think the system is a bad one ; I think it should be changed as far as possible, and I am glad to see the hon. minister is asking for a sufficient amount to close up the accounts for the current year. In that case $10,000 would be enough to pay the accounts for the current year, but if the accounts are passed over into the next year there is a difficulty in making the calculations.

Mr. TAYLOR. In 1896-97, when the government brought down their estimates, they found fault with the previous government for having pursued that practice, and in nearly every case they asked for money enough to wipe off old debts.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the right way.

Mr. TAYLOR. They did that, and it was never going to happen again ; but now with nearly every item that comes up the money is required to pay overlapping accounts.

Mr. FIELDING. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it is the better way to take a sufficient sum to close up the accounts for the current year rather than that they should be carried over. I would rather, as Minister of Finance, give a sufficient sum to close up the accounts for the year than have these accounts hanging over. That is what we are proposing to do in this case.

Ottawa public buildings—including repairs, ventilation and lighting, furniture, &c., $40,000.

Mr. FIELDING. There was an appropriation in the main estimates of $125,000. We are asking for $40,000, which will make it $165,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why are you asking for this large sum ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is a similar case. There was as much as $28,000 paid out of this year's appropriation for accounts that had accumulated. The vote proposed is intended to cover all the accounts for the current year, and we are asking for the coming year $140,000.

Mr. OSLER. Have you the amount expended on rented buildings ?

Mr. FIELDING. We are coming to an item in a few moments when I will give that information to the hon. gentleman.

Ottawa public buildings—heating, including salaries of engineers, firemen and watchmen, $18,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The appropriation in the main estimates was $87,000. With the additional amount we now propose it will make it $105,000. The chief item in this is for coal supplied by the contractors, Messrs. John Heney & Son, Ottawa. We paid last year $6.90 per ton. The general amount consumed for some years was 6,000 tons, but last year it was necessary to order an additional 1,000 tons.

Mr. DANIEL. What kind of coal ?

Mr. FIELDING. Anthracite.

Mr. DANIEL. That does not include all the coal ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is for the Ottawa buildings.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the coal that was burnt in this building included ?

Mr. FIELDING. All the furnace coal is hard coal, but for grate purposes some soft coal is used.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the rate at which that is purchased ?

Mr. FIELDING. For the grates they use Cannel coal, which is purchased at $8.45 per ton.

Ottawa public buildings—elevator attendants, $1,900.

Mr. FIELDING. This is asked to supplement a vote of $10,000 which was made by parliament last year to cover the cost of running the elevators in the public buildings, the parliament building, the east and west departmental buildings, the Langevin block and the Woods' building.

Ottawa public buildings—gas and electric light, $4,250.

Mr. FIELDING. We had an appropriation in the main estimates of $24,000. This is another case of arrears. The appropriation will probably be sufficient for the year's service, but there were considerable arrears, and it is proposed to take a sufficient vote to cover them. The appropriation proposed for the coming year is $24,000. We are not increasing the amount. We are asking for a sufficient appropriation to pay these arrears.

Ottawa public buildings—grounds, $1,250.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is this on account of the heavy snow ?

Mr. FIELDING. This $1,250 is to be obtained for the purpose of covering arrears accumulated during the past few years in keeping the grounds on Parliament Hill and the Lovers' Walk in proper condition. I think in consideration of the Lovers' Walk, it should be passed without objection.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I notice that the hon. acting Minister of Public Works says that this is to cover arrears. I think when he tells us about these arrears, he should be able to tell us the amount of the arrears overlapping in each of these cases.

Mr. FIELDING. It is really the amount we are asking—about $1,250. Actually it is $1,249.70. Of course, that would be paid in the early part of the season out of the general vote, and in the latter part of the season they would be short just that amount to pay current expenses.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That is not the way I understand the hon. minister is putting it.

Mr. FIELDING. Then in that case I am afraid I have been misleading my hon. friend. At the beginning of the year, out of the appropriation the balance of last year's account will be paid, and at the end of the year we will be short just that amount.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I want to know what these amounts were for ?

Mr. FIELDING. $747 will be applied to the payment of gardeners' and labourers' wages. $445.74 is for plants, manure, &c., and $56.98 for sundries. Total, $1,249.70.

Ottawa public buildings—Major's Hill park, $1,500.

Mr. FIELDING. The details are as follows : Manure and earth, $283.98 ; plants, $171.41 ; sundries, $63.65; gardener's wages, &c., $871.78.

Dominion public buildings—furniture, $5,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The number of these buildings is increasing and consequently this item increases.

Mr. TAYLOR. The government are lavish in buying furniture both for Dominion buildings and Ottawa buildings.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think that any of the furniture in these apartments is too luxurious for the parliament of Canada or in any way extravagant.

Mr. TAYLOR. I notice a large quantity of steel shelves going to the different departments.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a special vote for that. It is not covered by this vote.

Dominion public buildings—rents, $10,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This to provide the balance required to pay all rents up to the close of the current fiscal year.

Mr. TAYLOR. Surely the government knew, when they brought in the main estimates, the rent they would have to pay and should not ask an additional $10,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is on account of buildings acquired during the year in all parts of the country. At St. John, New Brunswick, the immigrant building was rented at $950. It was rented from the city council. In the Corry building on Rideau street, two floors and a basement, were rented for the purposes of the Georgian Bay Canal survey. The rent is for nine months at the rate of $5,285 per annum. The term of rental is two years or a little less, so that it shall end the 1st May.

Mr. OSLER. How many clerks are employed in the offices ?

Mr. FIELDING. My deputy thinks 20 to 25.

Mr. OSLER. In Toronto you could rent office accommodation for 150 to 200 clerks for that rental. This is simply an outrage. If this building is rented for that purpose alone, you cannot spend that money without having some sort of a job.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think my hon. friend should rush to that assumption.

Mr. OSLER. In Toronto or Montreal, to pay $5,000 for the purposes of an office connected with the survey would be simply an outrage.

Mr. TAYLOR. I draw attention to the fact that this vote is for Dominion public buildings, and you are including in it an Ottawa public building for the Public Works department. The government are paying at the rate of about 25 per cent in money for rentals. Surely the government would do better to borrow at 3 or 4 per cent and put up the buildings we require and not rent from party friends at exorbitant rates. We are paying nearly $3,000 a year for improvements on a building down on Sparks street that was rented for the taking of the census and which it was supposed, would not be required after that work was done. It was continued on at $6,000 a year and the government spent $15,000 or $20,000 in putting in an elevator and refitting the whole place. Why should the government pay these exorbitant rentals ?

Mr. FIELDING. In coming to a conclusion as to the fairness of the rental one must take each individual case and investigate it. I quite agree that these rented buildings are not the most convenient and for my part I think we should accept the responsibility of putting up a new departmental building and concentrating our offices there. But these things cannot be done in a day and for the present we have not been able to do it. I know that the Minister of Public Works has been giving his attention to this matter, but how far he has succeeded I am not prepared to say. I have not sufficient knowledge of the character of the building to contradict my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) but I cannot imagine that the department would pay a grossly extravagant price. I am afraid that nearly every one thinks the government ought to pay more than a private individual pay a grossly extravagant price. I am afraid it applies to nearly all transactions unless we look very closely after them. If there is any reason to believe that there is anything wrong about the renting of this building I would be glad to have the matter inquired into.

Mr. OSLER. This matter has been before the House for a good many sessions and each year the excuse is put forward that the matter is being looked into, and yet as the Minister of Finance says, they continue to pay extravagant rents.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not say that.

Mr. OSLER. I quite agree with the Minister of Finance that the government has to pay more than a private individual has to pay, and I entirely agree with his suggestion that the government should without any delay erect proper buildings of their own. If for the accommodation of twenty or twenty-five clerks engaged in the survey of that canal we are paying over $5,000 for that floor space, it is almost a criminal act to pay it. It is an outrageous price.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where is this building ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is the tall building immediately across the canal on the right-hand side. I have just been told that the Hydrographic Survey of the Marine Department and the Ottawa River Works have offices in this building also. However, that would not enter into the consideration whether or not the rent is fair, and in view of what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) has said we ought to make some inquiry into it.

Mr. OSLER. My criticism was based on the first statement that it was for the accommodation of the survey staff of the canal which would require twenty-five clerks. If there are more clerks it might be that the rent is reasonable.

Mr. FIELDING. I have just been told that there are other branches included. The question is as to whether that is a fair rent to pay for that amount of floor space, and in that light the number of clerks would not affect the question.

Mr. OSLER. If you rent two floors for twenty or twenty-five clerks you may have twice the room you require.

Mr. FIELDING. That would concern the amount of space but not the rent.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much are we paying for the rent of buildings in Ottawa altogether ? I cannot understand why this government will go to a party friend and tell him they will enter into a lease for a number of years if he will erect a building for them. I understand that was done in the case of the Militia building. Surely the government can get money cheaper than a private individual and erect its own buildings. In the same way, for the accommodation of the Surveyor General the government went to a political friend and asked him to put up a building promising to take a lease for so many years and paying an exorbitant rent equal to about 20 per cent on the capital invested. In 1896 the public officials were housed in buildings owned by the government, but every year you are paying higher rentals to accommodate a larger staff and doing very little more work. What rents were paid in 1896 and what rents are paid in Ottawa to-day ?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not the figures for 1896. The total rents paid in Ottawa now amount to $47,111. I myself favour the idea of the government owning its buildings, but while it might be an unfortunate thing to rent buildings all over the city it would be more unfortunate for the government to own buildings all over the city. I think we should select a suitable place, possibly one or two suitable places, and put up sufficient buildings to accommodate our officials. The moment the government try to buy land anywhere they immediately find it is very expensive, and the probability is that nothing is lost by delay, because if we push a transaction of that kind we may have to pay an extravagant price. It is one thing to pay an extravagant rent, if it is extravagant, for a year or two and it is another thing to pay an extravagant price for land. The Minister of Public Works is giving the subject his attention with every desire to carry out the policy that the government should own its own buildings, which I think is best all round in the public interest. At no distant date an important move in that direction will perhaps be made, but in view of the difficulty of purchasing land at a moderate price hon. gentlemen should not urge that it should be done too quickly.

Mr. TAYLOR. Capitalized at 3½ per cent the rental we are paying would represent $1,250,000, and that amount spent on buildings would give us double the accommodation for which we are now paying rent, and besides it would prevent us having public offices in shacks here and there throughout the city. Surely no business man, not to speak of the combined wisdom of fifteen or sixteen ministers, would conduct his private business in the way the government are conducting their business in this respect ? They are spending I presume on these buildings $5,000 a year rental. The government had to do a lot of fitting at its own expense. It is the same in every building we have rented.

Mr. FIELDING. It is a new building with very little additional cost in that case.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much has been spent in fitting it up for the use of the government for repairs and furniture and permanent works ?

Mr. FIELDING. The chief architect tells me in respect to that that there has been nothing on the building itself. There is the furniture and fittings but no alteration to the building.

Mr. MILLER. In any of these cases does the rent of the building include the cost of heating ?

Mr. FIELDING. We take an appropriation for heating. In the case of the Corry building the heat is supplied, but we do not in all cases have the heat furnished. I do not think my hon. friend is correct in saying that for that amount of money we would have twice the accommodation. For instance we have more accommodation in private buildngs than in a building like the Langevin block. That cost $800,000 and is a very fine building. I am not arguing that the present method is economical or convenient, and I would favour having a very fine and good departmental building erected where these could be concentrated.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the total cost of the Corry building ?

Mr. FIELDING. We have no knowledge of that.

Mr. BLAIN. It occupies a very small portion of land and I am informed the building was constructed very cheaply.

Mr. FIELDING. I could not give the information at present.

Mr. OSLER. In the item for buildings Ottawa, including repairs how much of that amount was included for repairs on rented buildings ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am told it is not the practice to repair rented buildings. We have to put our own fittings into the buildings but not to repair them.

Mr. TAYLOR. A session or two ago a considerable amount was spent on the Seybold building.

Mr. FIELDING. It was not for repairs but to be fitted up to suit the department.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the minister read a list of the owners of the buildings that have been rented and the price ?

Mr. FIELDING. I began to read a list of the buildings but not of the owners. In some places the buildings bear the owner's name, for instance, the Corry building and the Orme building, which I understand is owned by Mr. Orme. In most cases the owners are not given. We rent from the Slater estate five rooms for $550, in the Orme building two rooms at $250, from the Great North Western Telegraph Company, five rooms at $500 per annum. These are all the Ottawa buildings.

Mr. TAYLOR. That are included in this vote?

Mr. FIELDING. These are the new buildings, the supplementaries that are in consequence of new buildings.

Mr. MORIN. The minister said that it was no use to be in a great hurry to erect buildings in Ottawa. That is a fact, but the cost will not be growing any less next year or in two years. It has always been the case that property owners are glad to sell to the government at a high price and if you have to pay a high price it is as well to pay it this year as next. The buildings now are very much crowded, in the printing office especially you will find in a room fit for four men, six, seven or eight, and in the departmental blocks and the House of Commons every room seems to be much crowded. It is no use trying to be so stingy about it, you may as well go and put up a building if it costs a couple of millions to do it, and then the men who work in the buildings will have some comfort. They are all crowded and many of them cannot work ; they have so many machines there that they cannot hear themselves talking and cannot turn around and it is disagreeable in every way. You might as well do it first as last.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the rental of the building on Metcalfe street occupied by the Survey Department ?

Mr. FIELDING. $3,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there a lease ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was leased about four years ago for ten years.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was leased before it was built. It was run up in a hurry at a cost of not more than $15,000. I am satisfied I could build it in our town for less and the government are paying $3,000 a year.

Dominion public buildings—fuel, &c., $13,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does that include Ottawa the same as others ?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. OSLER. Is it bought by tender ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the coal is purchased by tender.

Dominion public buildings—salaries, engineers, firemen, caretakers, &c., $19,500.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister will explain this surely.

Mr. FIELDING. This applies to buildings throughout the Dominion. The provision in the main estimates was $110,000. This will make our total appropriation $129,000, and we are asking $127,000 for the coming year. The number of the employees necessarily increases as we go on. The number of buildings increased from 195 to 210.

Mr. TAYLOR. That would be 15 additional buildings, and it costs $19,000 for the salaries of the engineers, firemen and caretakers, of these fifteen extra buildings. Has there been an overlapping of the account from last year ?

Mr. FIELDING. This item is made up of the following : New appointments unprovided for last session, $8,584 ; increases in salaries, $2,878 ; temporary cleaners, jobbers, &c., $7,873 ; total, $19,385.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Who supplies the fuel for the Toronto public buildings ?

Mr. FIELDING. The hard coal for last winter was supplied by the Milnes Co., of Toronto. I am not sure who supplied the soft coal.

Ottawa public buildings, including Rideau Hall—removal of snow, $2,500.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Will the hon. minister please tell us what Rideau Hall cost us this year ?

Mr. FIELDING. This does not apply to Rideau Hall only, but to the removal of snow from about the public buildings in Ottawa generally.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. But we should have it divided so that we should know what Rideau Hall costs. I have a distinct recollection of criticisms that were made by hon. gentlemen opposite of expenditures on Rideau Hall when we were in power.

Mr. FIELDING. But, cannot my hon. friend (Mr. U. Wilson) forget some things ? I cannot give the expenditure for Rideau Hall separately.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. But we should be allowed to know what Rideau Hall costs.

Mr. FIELDING. As respects the removal of snow ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. As respects the whole thing.

Mr. TAYLOR. That will come up on the next vote.

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot divide the expenditure under this item in relation to the different buildings. But I will promise my hon. friend (Mr. U. Wilson) that, if it is available in the department, I will give him the statement at another time.

Rideau Hall, including grounds—renewals, improvements, furniture and maintenance, additional amount, $8,000.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Under this item, perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) can tell us the cost of Rideau Hall ?

Mr. FIELDING. The appropriation for the current year was $22,000. For next year we are asking $25,000. Then there is this additional appropriation for the current year of $8,000. The appropriation became exhausted in March last and there are works of renewal, repairs and maintenance to about the amount of this estimate.

Mr. TAYLOR. That means a total of $30,000 this year ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. The expenditure for 1904 was $17,000, for 1903, $21,700, for 1902, $24,350.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The Auditor General has here an item showing that Rideau Hall cost $25,056.38 besides $8,000 for fuel and light.

Mr. FIELDING. Perhaps the Auditor General groups a number of items together.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The items as given by the Auditor General for Rideau Hall are : Maintenance, $17,017 ; repairs and improvements, $5,093.43 ; removal of snow, $1,230.34 ; charged to 1904-5, $1,710.51; total, $25,056.38 Besides that, the Earl of Minto was allowed for fuel and light for twelve months $8,000. And the estimate for this year is about $44,000 as I have it.

Mr. FIELDING. No doubt the Auditor General's figures are correct for the grouping of items that he gives. But we confine ourselves to this one item, so that the figures I give are correct in relation to this.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. But the minister has not given me the cost of maintaining Rideau Hall for the year ending June 30 next.

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the figures prepared in that way. But I can give it at another stage if he desires it.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Will the hon. gentleman do it ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I will do it as well as I can.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. In the main estimates there is a vote of $22,000. Then there is the removal of snow for Ottawa public buildings, including Rideau Hall, $2,500. Then there is this supplementary vote : Rideau Hall, including grounds, renewals, improvements, furniture and maintenance, additional amount, $8,000.' I think there ought to be some explanation as to why this increased expenditure is necessary.

Mr. FIELDING. As some of these items are not confined to Rideau Hall, but include others, it would be necessary to separate them, and I will endeavour to do that at a later stage. The Auditor General groups a number of things together, and we will endeavour to do the same.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would like to have some particular day fixed, because I would like to be here.

Mr. FIELDING. I want to make this suggestion generally, that as respects all these supplementary estimates, I would be glad if hon. gentlemen would, with as little discussion as may be necessary, assist to pass them, because until we can get a Supply Bill there is a little embarrassment. But there will be ample opportunity of discussing every question that hon. gentlemen may wish to discuss. There will be another item in the supplementaries for the coming year in regard to Rideau Hall.

Ottawa departmental buildings—additional fittings for treasury vault, $3,000.

Mr. OSLER. Are these vaults up-to-date and modern ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think our vaults generally are up-to-date. We have, so far as I can learn, everything that is possible in the way of security.

Some resolutions reported.

ASCENSION DAY ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). At an earlier stage I called attention to the motion standing in the name of the Prime Minister to the effect that when the House adjourns on Wednesday it shall stand adjourned until Friday, and being informed by some hon. gentlemen that there was a desire not to meet on Friday, I agreed to hold the matter over long enough to afford an opportunity for consultation. I have since been advised that a consultation has taken place, and that on both sides of the House there is a feeling that as Thursday is a holiday, and as Friday is not usually a very busy day, we should not ask the members to come back on Friday, but to adjourn until Monday. On the information that that is agreeable to both sides of the House, I will now amend the Prime Minister's motion to make it read that when the House adjourns on Wednesday, the 31st instant, it stand adjourned until Monday, the 5th of June next.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. What will be taken up tomorrow, and what will be done with regard to the subject mentioned by the leader of the opposition ?

Mr. FIELDING. We will continue the estimates. After the inquiry to-day I sent a note to the Prime Minister, who replied, and I sent his reply to the leader of the opposition, that he will be in the House tomorrow and will confer with the leader of the opposition about it.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 31, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

ST. MAURICE VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. JACQUES BUREAU (Three Rivers) moved for leave to present a petition praying for the passing of a Bill to amend the St. Maurice Valley Railway Company. He said : The object of the amendment is to allow the railroad to cross the St. Maurice river at a point three miles east of the point mentioned in the charter. The company are very anxious to go on with that road, and find that to do it they must cross the river three miles below the point mentioned. That is the object of the amendment desired to be made to the Bill. Unless this is done we cannot go on with our railway this year.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of Canadian Archives for 1904.—Mr. Fisher.

QUESTIONS.

PRINTING OF DOMINION NOTES

Mr. PAQUET—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Do any grave reasons of state exist that might prevent the Minister of Finance from having the Dominion one and two dollar notes or all other bank notes, printed simultaneously in English and French ?

2. Are they unaware in the Finance Department that the two languages are official in Canada ?

3. Is it the intention of the Minister of Finance to rectify in the future this state of things by ordering that those bank notes be printed in the both languages, English and French ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). There is nothing in the British North America Act or in any Act of the parliament of Canada which requires or contemplates the printing of Dominion notes in two languages. The Finance Department has not contemplated the advisability of any departure from the practice which has existed under all governments from the beginning of confederation down to the present time.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—TIME TABLES.

Mr. PAQUET—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Why are not the time tables of the government railways printed in English and in French, since both languages are official in Canada ?

2. Is it the intention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to rectify the present state of things by having such time tables printed in the two languages ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1 and 2. It has not been the practice in Canada to print the time tables in French, only as advertised in papers printed in the French language. Time tables published for use of the employees have always been in English, but the employees are all conversant with that language.

The non-publication in French has not been found to cause any inconvenience.

If it be found that there is any necessity for such publication, the department will arrange accordingly.

SALE OF KINGSTON CORDAGE.

Mr. CLARE—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Has the cordage manufactured by the government at Kingston, between June, 1904, and March, 1905, amounting to 58 tons, been sold ?

2. What tenders were received for the purchase of the same ?

3. What tender was accepted, what was the price, and was it the lowest tender ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (for Minister of Justice) :

1. A tender has been accepted, but the goods have not yet been delivered.

2 and 3. The highest tender was accepted. It is not in the public interest, however, that the names of those who tendered or the prices offered should be made public until the transaction is completed and the purchaser has had reasonable time to dispose of the goods if he desires to do so.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—TIME TABLE.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St. John City). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the attention of the Minister of Railways to the new time table which is to be put into effect on the Intercolonial Railway, I think, on the 4th or 5th of this month. At the present time the express from St. John leaves that city in the morning at 7 o'clock. Under the new time table that time has been advanced one hour, so that the train leaves at 6 o'clock in the morning. I am advised that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction with regard to this change, and that it will be a very considerable trouble to the travelling public, and there is dissatisfaction among that class of people on that account. I would like to ask from the Minister of Railways if it is not possible for him to continue the running of that train leaving St. John at 7 o'clock as at present. I believe the change will be a very unsatisfactory one. I understand it relates to the Halifax express alone, and I cannot see what advantage there would be in the change. I hope the Minister of Railways will reconsider that change and, in the interest of the travelling public, allow the train to leave at 7 o'clock in the morning and not change it to 6 o'clock.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). It is absolutely impossible to arrange a time table that will suit the convenience of every section of the Intercolonial Railway without entailing unwarranted expense. Last season there were a number of trains following each other on the Intercolonial Railway between Halifax and St. John. The train referred to by my hon. friend is known as No. 2 train. There has been at the same hour a train known as No. 1 leaving Halifax for St. John. In the consideration of the time tables during the present season the great aim that I had was to suit as far as possible the convenience of the people and to minimize the cost of running trains. Nos. 1 and 2 cross each other at Amherst. I found that it was possible to discontinue No. 2 train as a through train from St. John to Halifax and also to discontinue No. 1 train as a through train from Halifax to St. John.

At the same time, we would meet the convenience of the people and the requirements of the traffic by having No. 2 train run from St. John to Moncton, connecting with the maritime express from Montreal in the morning; and the maritime express could do the whole business between Moncton and Truro. Last year the maritime express reached Moncton in the vicinity of 10 o'clock and went through to Truro. Then, 15 minutes after, No. 2 train from St. John followed, without passengers, without traffic, but not, of course, without very great expense. By the arrangement we have made, this difficulty is overcome. It is true that it necessitates the St. John passengers getting up at an earlier hour, but it meets the convenience of the travelling public along the line, because it is a local train ; it is not designed to do through passenger traffic between St. John and Halifax. As a matter of fact No. 2 train has not done that traffic for years. Originally it was a train started out with that object, and for a number of years, when the Intercolonial was a mere by-way it served that purpose. But, now that we have trains going every few hours, the Canadian Pacific Railway and other trains, this through train from St. John is no longer a necessity; it is only a bill of expense. Having regard to the necessities of the traffic, I felt that No. 2 train should leave St. John at an earlier hour and run to Moncton coming back in the evening at six o'clock and meeting the requirements of the people between these points both going and coming, and that train No. 1 should leave Halifax and run to Amherst, returning in the afternoon and meeting the requirements of the people between these points. This will obviate the necessity of running a through express between St. John and Halifax. As a matter of fact, that train has been going out at seven o'clock in the morning without passengers, without traffic. And, in the interests of the railway, and, I think, quite agreeably to the convenience of the people, there should be a change; and I have ordered accordingly. There is no great amount of traffic from St. John to local points by this through train. They have the local trains to depend upon. The suburban train service at St. John is unexceptional—they have trains at almost all hours. As to through traffic, they have a night train leaving St. John about eleven o'clock. This takes the through traffic. The Canadian Pacific Railway train, during the summer season reaches St. John about 11.30 a.m.—certainly not later than 12. The Boston train reaches St. John at 11 o'clock. The Intercolonial train connecting with that train and also with the train for Montreal leaves between 11 and 12.

Mr. DANIEL. It leaves at 11.40.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think I was sufficiently accurate in saying between 11 and 12. But, at 11.40, to be precise, that train leaves for Halifax. That takes practically the whole day business between St. John and Halifax. Recognizing that fact, I thought the country should be saved the expense of running No. 2 train which existed simply because it had been started at the time of the initiation of the Intercolonial service, and which has continued for years without any pressing necessity for it. Of course, I regret that, in order to connect with the maritime express from Montreal to Halifax we are obliged to start earlier from St. John. These are the facts, and I think the facts are sufficient justification for the action decided upon.

Mr. DANIEL. I was a little surprised to hear the minister——

Mr. SPEAKER. I would call the attention of the hon. member (Mr. Daniel) to the fact that there is no motion before the chair.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The House will be moved at once into Committee of Supply, and my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) will then have his opportunity.

SUPPLY—INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY TIME-TABLE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St. John city). I was rather surprised to hear the Minister of Railways intimate that there were so many trains leaving St. John. He said there was one out every hour I think.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said one every few hours.

Mr. DANIEL. As a matter of fact after this train leaves at six o'clock in the morning, there is no train until 11.40. This train is booked to leave the city of St. John so early that it will be a great inconvenience. The mail must close so very much earlier that even the morning papers will hardly be able to be sent out by it. I cannot see, from the statement of the minister, why the hour must necessarily be changed.

Mr. EMMERSON. Let me tell my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) that that was with a view to meeting the maritime express which runs through from Montreal to Halifax and reaches Moncton somewhere about 10 a.m. When that maritime express reaches Moncton it can take the St. John traffic, or the traffic gathered up between St. John and Moncton on to Halifax if there be any. As a usual thing there is none. It only means a little inconvenience to the St. John people to get up a little earlier. But there are few people who get up to take the early morning train. They take the 11.40 train. Ordinarily—and I speak from personal experience—No. 2 train going out hitherto at 7 a.m., goes out absolutely without passengers and it is dependent for its earnings upon the traffic which it gathers between St. John and Moncton. I think the reasons which I have stated are good and sufficient. They are substantial. They are in the interest of economy and the arrangement, as I think, does not very greatly inconvenience the travelling public excepting a few who may wish to leave St. John in the morning for some intermediate point between St. John and Moncton. They have to get up an hour earlier. I am sorry for them, but it is impossible, as I stated at the very inception of my remarks, to contrive a time-table that will suit every point. Somebody has to be inconvenienced and I do not know of any people who should be more self-sacrificing that those of St. John.

Mr. DANIEL. At the same time I think that the hon. minister is making this change at the wrong time in the year because he must be aware of the fact that the amount of travel in that district is not as great in the winter time as it is in the summer time. People naturally in the summer time prefer to travel by day rather than by night.

Mr. EMMERSON. They have a night train. They have a train at six o'clock in the morning, they have a train at 11.40 in the forenoon, and they have a train in the afternoon.

Mr. DANIEL. I still hope the hon. minister will reconsider his position in the matter and allow the time-table to remain as it was before.

Mr. J. B. MORIN. I would like to ask the hon. minister if it will be possible for him to arrange the running of the trains on the Intercolonial Railway in such a way as to connect with the Canada Atlantic Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway at Montreal so that people coming from the east to Ottawa may arrive at their destination on the same day. The way the train has been running for years we are compelled to stay in Montreal over night. There is no train for Ottawa connecting with the train from the east. If that could be arranged it would be very handy for us.

Mr. EMMERSON. I want to say in reply to my hon. friend from Dorchester (Mr. Morin) that I recognize the very great inconvenience that has resulted to passenger traffic from the east to Montreal and Ottawa. This has not been the fault of the Intercolonial Railway. I have repeatedly called the attention of the Grand Trunk Railway authorities to the matter since I have been in office, and the invariable reply has been that in consequence of there being two lines interested, that is the Canada Atlantic Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, they could not make an arrangement such as we desired and for which we had asked, but I have the assurance not only of Mr. Wainwright, but also of Mr. Hays, that immediately on the acquisition of the Canada Atlantic Railway by the Grand Trunk Railway, which will occur, as I understand it, within a few weeks, if not within a few days, a train will leave Montreal at seven o'clock in the evening whereby passengers coming up by the Intercolonial Railway on the maritime express and reaching there at 5.30 will be enabled to reach Ottawa before ten o'clock at night, or at least not later than ten o'clock.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE (Montmagny). Mr. Speaker, whilst I have the opportunity, may I call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) to the fact that there is a most serious inconvenience for people travelling from Ottawa on the Intercolonial Railway on Saturdays and Mondays? There is no maritime express.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a maritime express on Monday.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Coming up ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Going down.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. There is none on Monday coming up. A man who leaves Ottawa at the end of the week has to miss the sitting on Friday night if he wants to be home on Sunday or on Saturday evening, and if he wants to be here for the sitting on Monday he has to leave his home on Sunday night. I wonder if the hon. gentleman could afford any remedy for this most serious inconvenience suffered by people travelling to and from that part of Quebec.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT. In addition to what my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) has just said, I would beg to remind my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson) that last year I drew his attention to that fact. It is a great inconvenience to us in our district that we cannot have the ordinary express on Saturday to go down upon and on Monday to come up by. Every one suffers by this arrangement because we have either to leave one day sooner or come back one day later if we want to visit our homes. If a remedy could be provided it would be of very great service to us.

Mr. A. A. STOCKTON (St. John city and county.) I recognize the fact that it is somewhat difficult to arrange a time-table to suit all the people along the line of the Intercolonial Railway, but yet I am satisfied from the representations that have been made to my colleague and myself from the city of St. John that there will be general dissatisfaction and general inconvenience by the change proposed by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson). Under the proposed change the first train going out will be, as the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has said, at six o'clock in the morning and there will be no other train going out from St. John after that until 11.40 a.m.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is a freight train.

Mr. STOCKTON. Oh, a freight train ! People do not travel on freight trains.

Mr. EMMERSON. Between local points they do. It has passenger accommodation.

Mr. STOCKTON. We have got over the day of corduroy roads and freight trains. People travel by Pullman passenger cars in these days. These are growing times. It will be very inconvenient for the people of St. John and the travelling public generally and there will be another inconvenience. It is too early for the despatch of mails and of newspapers. They will close at five o'clock, an hour before the mail goes. The representations that have been made to my colleague and myself have pointed out very strongly that there will be very great inconvenience indeed. At all events I hope, having brought it to the notice of the hon. minister, that he will see if some change cannot be made. I recognize the fact that we ought to be economical in the running of the Intercolonial Railway, but not too much so at the expense of the convenience of the travelling public generally and the people in our own community in whom I am more particularly interested.

NEW POST OFFICE AT TORONTO.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to refer to a matter of considerable importance to the city of Toronto; that is, the proposed erection of the new post office. I notice the absence of the hon. Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock). I understand that his absence will be somewhat prolonged, but notwithstanding that fact I think the city of Toronto is entitled to some answer from the government regarding the present condition of the burnt area where it is proposed to erect this new post office. That disastrous fire occurred in Toronto considerably over a year ago and there are still acres of the burnt district remaining in the same condition in which they were on the day after the fire. Nothing has been done there. Owners and lessees are greatly prejudiced by the inaction of the government regarding the selection of the post office site and also by the delay of the Railway Commission in stating whether or not the balance of the area is to be expropriated for station purposes. The matter has been called to my attention recently by an article in the 'Globe' of Monday last which states :

> The Dominion government will expropriate all or a portion of the property on Front street between Bay and Yonge streets for the new post office when the surveyors have decided just how much of the land will be required. Mayor Urquhart obtained this information from the Postmaster General during his visit to Ottawa.

No information of that nature has been given to the House or the country as far as I am aware and I would like to know if that statement is authentic. The article proceeds :

> Mr. Alexander Asher and a number of other lessees of the property complained to the mayor that the uncertainty as to what the government would do was seriously interfering with their plans.

I personally know that to be the case. Several industries have left the city of Toronto because of the inaction of the government and the uncertainty as to what is to be done regarding that burnt area. It comes under two headings: first, that portion of the area that would be required for post office purposes; and second, the balance of that area which is now under the consideration of the Railway Commission as to whether it shall be expropriated for station purposes. Information as to either or both of these matters would be gratefully received by the people of Toronto and particularly by those who are interested as owners or lessees of this land.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). So far as proceedings before the Railway Commission are concerned we are not in a position to give any information ; that will have to pursue the ordinary course before the commission, and of course we cannot say as to what the determination may be. With respect to the post office site I am aware that the Postmaster General and the Minister of Public Works have had some conferences on the subject, but I think no final decision has been come to. I would not like to say that the property in question is not to be taken, although officially I think the matter is not yet determined. That is under the consideration of the two ministers. It may be that the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General have had an understanding but in the absence of both ministers I would not like to give a more definite answer to my hon. friends' question.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The people of Toronto certainly think that the government should take some immediate action. The fact as to whether or not they are going to expropriate for post office purposes and the extent of the expropriation for that purpose should be decided on by the government at once. This is intimately connected with the other question as to the balance of the land which is now before the Railway Commission, and it is reasonable to ask that the government should help to advance the matter by deciding one way or another with reference to the post office site. We think that the government should do something and can do something to expedite the proceedings before the Railway Commission. The matter has been standing for many months and people are abandoning their property in that area and are actually removing their industries to other cities.

POST OFFICE REGULATIONS.

Mr. J. BARR (Dufferin). I wish to call the attention of the House to a letter which has been sent to postmasters by the post office inspector at Toronto, and which I think to a certain extent infringes upon the franking privilege of members of the House. The letter is as follows :

> Post Office Inspector's Office,
> Toronto, May, 18th, 1905.
> Dear Sir,—The department is informed that under date 20th April last a package of government publications addressed to you was posted from the House of Commons, the contents of which were apparently intended for distribution by you at your office, contrary to instructions contained in departmental circular of the 15th April last.
> Be so good as to let me know precisely what this package contained and what disposition was made of the contents by you.
> (Sgd.) J. HENDERSON,
> Post Office Inspector.

I may say that this package was sent out by me to a postmaster in the county of Dufferin and signed by my frank. In reference to government publications such as the reports on agriculture and other reports which are of importance to the agricultural community but which are scarcely important enough to send in separate envelopes, it has been my practice and the practice of many other members of this House to have an understanding with the postmasters in the rural districts by which they would place these documents on the counters of their stores, so that the farmers coming to the post office could take copies if they desired. The postmasters were quite willing to do this, and it was a great convenience to the members of the House as well as to the agricultural community. The circular of the 15th of April referred to in the letter which I have read appears to have contained instructions that postmasters must not continue this practice. I made an effort to see this latter circular and I telephoned to the Deputy Postmaster General—the Postmaster General being absent—and he informed me that the circular being a departmental matter it could not be seen. For this reason I am unaware of its actual contents. We know that the corridors of this House are piled up with reports that involve too much work for the members to send out in separate envelopes, and it would seem to me that the practice to which I have referred of distributing them through the medium of the rural postmasters, is a practice that ought to be encouraged rather than prevented. At all events I am unable to see what right the inspector had to ask the postmaster to find out what was in the mail parcel that I forwarded from this House. I presume he may have been looking for such infringements as hon. gentlemen are said to have been guilty of in the past in sending out advertisements, &c., but there should be other ways of finding that out without violating the secrecy of the mails. It seems to me that this letter should not have been sent out by the post office inspector. I draw the attention of the government to the matter with the expectation that some explanation will be given. I may say that we do not hold the postmasters responsible for the distribution of mail matter sent in this way ; we merely send each postmaster a private letter asking him to place this departmental literature on the counter of his store if he has no objection, and I cannot see what harm there can be in that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry the Postmaster General is not in his seat to-day, but he is expected to-morrow or the day after when I shall make it my duty to call his attention to the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Barr). I hope that at next sitting we will be able to give my hon. friend the information he asks ; I do not know whether he will be satisfied with it or not, but at all events he is entitled to it.

Mr. BARR.

CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY—PASSENGER RATES.

Mr. J. HERRON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to inform the right hon. Prime Minister that I have had several communications from gentlemen who reside in the district through which the Crow's Nest Pass Railway runs, complaining of the high passenger rates charged on that railway which I understand amount to four cents per mile. These gentlemen consider this rate very high and they have requested me to bring it to the attention of the government and to inquire if it is not one of those matters which might be brought before the Railway Commission for investigaion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a matter which ought to be referred to the Railway Commission. I do not think the government can have anything to do with it. I shall look into it and have it investigated by the Railway Department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The government has undoubtedly the right to interfere if it sees fit.

THE AUTONOMY BILL.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to mention what has already been discussed between the First Minister and myself and that is the date at which we shall take up the remaining clauses of the Autonomy Bill. I understand that, owing to the indisposition of the Minister of Justice we cannot take them up to-day nor before Tuesday or Wednesday of next week.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Some time next week.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My right hon. friend is not able to fix the exact date ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When the subject was last discussed, I think the Minister of Justice informed us that the clauses would be taken up in the order suggested from this side. Is that the understanding of the right hon. gentleman, or will he give us an idea as to the order ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have not considered that at all. If the Minister of Justice agreed upon any order, I have no objection.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My understanding was that he would consult the wishes of hon. gentlemen on this side and follow the order we suggested.

Mr. PATERSON. I think he said he would leave the schedules to the last.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, he desired to have the redistribution clauses left until the end ; but apart from that, he was willing to leave the order to us.

SUPREME COURT, NOVA SCOTIA—VACANT JUDGESHIP.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some time ago, when the right hon. gentleman and the Minister of Justice were both here, I said I would bring up again the question of the continued delay in filling the vacancy upon the bench of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia. The answer I then received was of a very indefinite and unsatisfactory character, and I am bringing the matter up again, not for the purpose of discussing it, but for the purpose of stating that I would like more definite and satisfactory answers when the Minister of Justice and I are next in the House together. I reminded the right hon. gentleman in the first instance that there are now only six judges instead of seven, as required by law, upon the bench of the Supreme Court of the province, and that has been the condition since the month of February, 1904—nearly eighteen months ago. I do not wish to discuss the subject in the absence of the Minister of Justice, but I would like the right hon. gentleman or his colleague to be prepared to discuss that question just as soon as the Minister of Justice, whose indisposition I very much regret, is able again to take his seat in this House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The question of my hon. friend is quite reasonable, and I shall make it my duty to accede to it. I am sorry that at this moment I cannot indicate at what time my hon. colleague will be able to resume his seat in the House. But if he finds himself unable to do so next week, the public business will not suffer, and we shall proceed in his absence. If by the middle of next week, he cannot be here, I shall ask my hon. friend to bring up this question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not urging that the Minister of Justice should come here before he is quite able to attend to business, but merely desired to bring to the right hon. gentleman's notice that this is a subject which in my opinion demands discussion and which I trust the government will be prepared to discuss at an early date.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Port Hawkesbury wharf—additional amount, $700.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a balance due on the purchase of a wharf at Hawkesbury, N.S. The price was $2,950, legal expenses $250, total $3,200. We paid by cheque $2,500, leaving a balance of $700. The wharf was purchased from Mrs. Paint.

Mr. BERGERON. Is not $250 rather high for legal expenses ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Who was the legal gentleman who got that plum ?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not give the name. It was for the legal expenses in connection with the transfer of the property, but there may be more in the item than is expressed here. All these items are passed upon by the Department of Justice and no doubt the charge is reasonable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The legal expenses in the case of an ordinary transfer of a piece of property would not amount to $250 or anything like it. For $25 to $50 would be about a reasonable charge. If the Minister of Finance will consult his hon. colleague, the Solicitor General, that hon. gentleman will tell him what would be a fair charge.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Ordinarily the amount might appear rather large; but it happens sometimes that there are many negotiations in connection with the sale and transfer of property. Lately we had a transaction in Montreal in which it appeared at first sight that the amount for the transfer was large, but we found that we had to take proceedings through our agent, which increased the expense.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In very special circumstances the cost might be easily run up to $1,000 ; but I am speaking of an ordinary transfer of property where you examine a title and prepare a conveyance. From $25 to $50 would be ample for that.

Mr. BERGERON. Why cannot the account be brought down ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is no objection to that.

Mr. FIELDING. I will undertake to see that the account will be brought down when the main estimates for Nova Scotia are under consideration.

Fort Lawrence landing pier—to complete payments, $2,800.

Mr. FIELDING. This is to complete payments to contractors for the construction of the pier. It is built in Cumberland basin at the head of the Bay of Fundy. The main object of the construction of the pier is to afford accommodation to the thriving town of Amherst.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What depth of water do you get ?

Mr. FIELDING. At low water about 17 feet. It is a place of high tides.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the amount of the whole thing ?

Mr. FIELDING. The contract, cost of superintendence, &c., amounted to $16,-541.25. This vote will finish the work.

L'Ardoise—extension of breakwater up to shore, $750.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a small balance remaining to close up the transaction. The contract, inspection, contingencies, &c., amounted to $26,350. This completes the work.

Mr. BERGERON. As a matter of fact, all of these are to complete works for which money was voted before ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, in most of these cases ; but there may be some works still going on which may require future appropriations.

Quebec—Rivière du Lièvre—reconstruction of dam at Little Rapids, $3,800.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a balance necessary to complete a dam. Hon. gentlemen familiar with works of this character know that unless you finish the work you may lose all that has been done.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the whole amount ?

Mr. FIELDING. $20,000 has already been expended, and this balance completes the work.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was it done by contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I am informed that it was a class of work that could not well be done by contract.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What are the conditions under which the Dominion government build dams across rivers? I would like to know their general policy in that regard. In our section the party that wants a dam builds it.

Mr. FIELDING. This was a Dominion work for the improvement of navigation, constructed some years ago at a time when there was a prospect of considerable trade in that region. The work having been constructed as a Dominion work, when disaster came to it, it was necessary for the Dominion to restore it.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What interest had the Dominion in it ?

Mr. FIELDING. The interests of navigation.

Mr. BERGERON. What navigation is there on that river ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is practically a small canal. There is a lock there. The work was built as far back as 1886.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The hon. minister has not given us the principle on which this kind of work is done on the different rivers. There ought to be some principle governing such works. When the government takes the responsibility of damming a river in one locality, I can see no reason why it should not do the same in an another, unless there be some particular reason for the first work.

Mr. FIELDING. I might have some difficulty in explaining our own principles, but would have much more difficulty in explaining the principles of my predecessor in 1886, by whom this work was constructed. But hon. gentlemen will admit that when the Dominion has spent much money in constructing a public work and then it is damaged, the Dominion should repair it.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I am not talking of this particular work, but generally.

Mr. FIELDING. We are not voting works generally, but this particular one.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not think that is at all satisfactory. When public works are carried on by the government, there ought to be some general principle on which they proceed, and the government ought to be able to explain it.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the improvement of a river in the interests of navigation would be a wise expenditure ; and while I am not personally acquainted with the work in question, no doubt my predecessor in the late Conservative government believed it would assist trade and commerce in that neighbourhood.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I am glad to see the confidence which the hon. gentleman has in his predecessor.

Mr. FIELDING. Even if my predecessor put up a work of debatable propriety, we would be expected, when that work is damaged, to repair it. We might have some doubt as to the wisdom of building the Langevin block, but if we found the roof leaking we would consider ourselves bound to repair it.

Mr. BLAIN. Does this work serve any good purpose ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was originally constructed because of the probability of considerable traffic in connection with the phosphate trade. At present there is very considerable lumber traffic on that river, there are no railways in its vicinity, there is a considerable settlement in its neighbourhood, and this is the only means the people have of getting access to the market.

Mr. BERGERON. No doubt many lumbermen use the river for bringing down logs, do they pay anything to the government ?

Mr. FIELDING. There are no rates charged for the passing of logs, but the use of the lock has been subject to rates.

Mr. BERGERON. The policy of the government in the old days was to help to dam rivers, but they made the lumbermen pay tolls sufficient to cover the interest on the expenditure and the cost of keeping the dams.

Mr. FIELDING. There are slides and dams from which we still get revenue, but this does not come under the same head.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been money expended every year for some years on that work.

Mr. FIELDING. There has been some expended on its maintenance.

Sorel, Quebec—Ice piers in River St. Lawrence on west side of mouth of River Richelieu—re-vote of $750 lapsed, $3,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The vote of $3,000 in the first instance was insufficient and it was represented that unless further work was ordered the repairs would be carried away by the pressure. This vote of $3,000 makes the whole amount $6,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Has not part of it been carried off by the ice already ?

Mr. FIELDING. Not this season but there was danger of that happening.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. When was the original estimate made ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was made before this flood occurred. It was made in the latter part of 1903 for the year 1904-5.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It is rather strange that the engineer should not have recognized the possibility of such a thing happening and made his estimates one-half what it should have been.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend has ever undertaken to repair an old house, he must know how difficult it is to estimate the work to be done. As soon as you begin repairing it, you find that other repairs, not originally foreseen, have to be made.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is this an old job ?

Mr. FIELDING. I would not say an old job but an old work.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the line of demarcation between the Department of Public Works and the Department of Marine in some of these items ? The shops at Sorel are in the Marine Department and also a part of the channel, is there not danger of a conflict of jurisdiction ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think an understanding was come to on that point. The shops at Sorel are connected chiefly with the dredging of the ship channel, which is under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. These piers and breakwater have always been under the Department of Public Works.

Mr. BERGERON. In Sorel they are also building a beautiful dredge called the 'W. S. Fielding' for the maritime provinces, which has nothing at all to do with the ship channel.

Mr. FIELDING. The shops were originally established for the ship channel; but if they have facilities for work of that character, there is no reason why they should not employ men doing work for any part of the Dominion. The dredge is being built for the Department of Public Works, and will be transferred to it and operated in the same way as other dredges in the maritime provinces.

Mr. BERGERON. The fact is that the government have been changing their minds too often. Those works were put up at Sorel by the ex-Minister of Public Works, Mr. Tarte. His object was to build dredges which would be used all over the Dominion. It is only since his departure and the advent of the present Minister of Marine, that there has been a change, and the government have since followed a different policy altogether. That is why this government are continuing the work of building dredges there for the maritime provinces. We would have avoided a good deal of the discussion we had the other day concerning dredges in Fort William and Port Arthur, if we had dredges of our own and had not to hire dredges. It was to avoid having to hire dredges that the ex-Minister of Public Works wanted to build them for the government. And his theory was that the government could, by using their own dredges, have the dredging done for three or four cents per yard instead of forty cents which they have to pay when they hire other dredges. There seems to be a scarcity of dredges in the country or if there are any dredges they are in the hands of the government and it is no use for any one else to tender. It was to avoid that, as I remember the explanation given by Mr. Tarte in this House, that he wanted to build dredges belonging to the government that could do the work for which we pay 40 cents or 50 cents for 3 cents or 4 cents. It was accepted at that time by the government as good policy, but now it has been abandoned and that is why we are informed that the shops at Sorel are to build dredges only for the ship channel.

River Maskinonge—dredging, $3,800.

Mr. BARR. Does the government own this dredge ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, this is being done by a private dredge owned by Mr. St. Pierre. This dredge was employed at $7 per hour, the rate established some years ago.

Mr. BERGERON. Have they lots of work to do there yet ?

Mr. FIELDING. This I understand, closes up the contract for the arrangement, it was not a contract, with this gentleman and tenders are being taken for the work on the basis of so much a yard.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it navigable ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I am so informed.

Mr. BARR. Is it cheaper to give so much per yard or to pay $7 an hour ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is always a matter of debate in the House. The department is no longer following the system of hiring dredges by the hour, but are fixing a price per cubic yard.

Mr. BARR. It is to be hoped that is the case, because it is a well known fact that some of these dredges in Ontario are making $700 a day.

Mr. LALOR. I am glad to hear the department are going to drop the system of hiring dredges by the hour, that is if they have a proper system of measuring the number of yards of earth taken out. I know that from an experience that took place in my own country where a dredge was hired during 1903-4. One stipulation was that the dredge was to take out at least 1,000 yards of earth for 12 hours so that the dredge when it took out 1,000 yards stopped its work for the day, although it is a notorious fact that it could take out 3,000 yards as easily as 1,000. It seems to me to be ridiculous to hire a dredge stipulating to take out 1,000 yards knowing that that same dredge has a capacity of three times that amount per day.

Mr. FIELDING. The officers inform me it is the practice of the department in hiring by the hour to stipulate that the dredges shall take out a certain quantity a day, and if they take out that quantity they presume their day's work is ended.

Mr. LALOR. I have affidavits in my possession, and I shall probably take up the matter again, showing that in the case of a dredge employed in the Grand river at Dunnville, the contract with the government stipulated that it should take out 1,000 yards a day, and I have affidavits that the captain informed the men on the dredge and the tug men to take it easy and not hurry, because all they had to do was to take out 1,000 yards, whereas it is a notorious fact that the dredge has taken out 1,000 yards before noon and done nothing more for the rest of the day. I think the payment should be regulated by the kind of dredging and where they can take out more than 1,000 yards, I cannot see why it should be stopped at a thousand.

Mr. FIELDING. In such a case I suppose we would have to pay a larger rate per hour, but if the contract stipulated that they should perform 1,000 yards of dredging a day and the dredge did that amount I suppose we could hardly expect the dredging contractor to do a lot more work for nothing. Whether or not $7 an hour is a fair price is another matter. The contract only called for 1,000 yards a day. There is nothing wrong then in the dredge only doing 1,000 yards a day.

Mr. LALOR. I do not quite agree with the minister. As I stated there are different kinds of dredging. Where the excavating is easy and the dredge is being paid $12 an hour and they can take out 3,000 in place of 1,000 I do not see why they should not be compelled to work for the 12 hours at their full capacity and take out as much as possible. I do not see why they should be allowed to drag the job along week after week, when they could by working at their full capacity do it in one-third the time.

Mr. STOCKTON. Do I understand they pay for the $12 ?

Mr. LALOR. Yes.

Mr. STOCKTON. And they stop when the 1,000 yards is done ? I would think that is very poor business management. I could readily understand that an arrangement might be made so that a dredge should take out at least so much per day, but to say that a dredge is to be hired at so much an hour for 12 hours and be paid for 12 hours even if it works only half that time, seems to me is not very good business management.

Mr. FIELDING. The limitation being placed on the contract that he must do so much per day, when he has done that quantity of work he has complied with his contract. The price per hour was estimated on the basis of producing a certain result per cubic yard. It may be a fair price and if you take out the agreed quantity it gives a fair value for the day's work. Whether it is wise to go on and pay a great deal more with a view of hastening the work is another question. There is something in that, but if the stipulation was that the dredge was to work 12 hours and in that time to excavate 1,000 yards for which it should be paid at the rate of $7 an hour, then the excavation of the 1,000 yards would comply with the contract. The only criticism would be that in the case where the dredge was able to do more work she should be allowed to do more and be paid accordingly.

Mr. STOCKTON. The difficulty I see is that if you have a dredge by the hour and you have an inspector to see that the dredge is not loafing and you put in a stipulation that you are to pay them by the hour for 12 hours a day if they take out a certain quantity, although they may do it in 2 hours they are paid for the 12 hours.

Mr. FIELDING. Does not my hon. friend see that if there was no such regulation the dredge might put in the time loafing and take out much less ? The stipulation of 1,000 yards is in the public interest, that they should at all events give a fair day's work. The only possible room for criticism is that the dredge might have been able to do more work and should be allowed to get more pay.

Mr. STOCKTON. Does not the minister see that is the minimum amount of dredging to be done under the most disadvantageous circumstances and they must do that under any circumstances. That would be a reasonable business proposition it seems to me. But, to say that after they have taken out a certan quantity, payment goes on whether they work or not, does not seem to me to be a good arrangement to make with the owners of the dredges.

Mr. FIELDING. The method of dealing with these matters is changed now, so that in discussing this we are discussing a matter of the past. But I cannot see that if the quantity stipulated has been taken out, the sum stipulated should not be paid. My own observation is that men working either for the government or for private employers are not disposed to do more than they are paid for.

Mr. STOCKTON. Then it seems to me that the better plan would be to pay so much per cubic yard.

Mr. FIELDING. That is what is being done.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. There is another point. Every one knows that the quantity of material a dredge can take out depends upon the character of that material. I understand that the limit fixed is simply the minimum quantity that they are to take out, whatever the character of the material. But to say that because they happen to have easy work they should stop when they have taken out the quantity fixed as a minimum is an entire misconstruction of the understanding.

Mr. LALOR. If I understand it correctly, the dredge is paid according to her capacity —the more work she can do the higher the pay. To say that a dredge could get $12 per hour is all right. But that should mean that in the hardest kind of dredging they could encounter they should be able to take out at least 1,000 yards. What I cannot understand is fixing the minimum at 1,000 yards where the material is such that the dredge could do three times that amount. The dredge is hired to work for twelve hours a day, and she should work to her capacity for twelve hours under proper inspection to earn a day's pay, regardless of how great a quantity she takes out.

Mr. FIELDING. As the system now adopted is to pay by the cubic yard, we are really discussing a past transaction. But if the quantity taken out is fixed at 1,000 yards, the price might be satisfactory ; but, on that basis, if the dredge were obliged to take out more, the price would not be satisfactory. This was practically a system of piece work, and the sum paid per hour was the result of a calculation of a certain number of cents per cubic yard, which was regarded as a fair price for the work. That being the case, if a dredge took up more, her owners would expect to be paid accordingly. It all comes to a question of what is a fair price for removing the material.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The hon. minister does not intend to say that for all kinds of dredging the dredge will do the same amount of work ?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. This minimum was fixed, as I understand it, on the basis of the hardest digging—the dredge must not do less, but if the material were favourable it might do more.

Mr. FIELDING. I am informed by the officers of the department that this minimum did not contemplate the hardest kind of digging, but ordinary digging. But this has been done away with. The system adopted is that of paying by the cubic yard, which is a better system.

Mr. BLAIN. Does not the same price apply to all ? I see that the price paid in Ontario is $8 per hour.

Mr. FIELDING. The price varies according to the capacity of the dredge.

Mr. BLAIN. There seems to be quite a uniformity of price all over Canada. Am I to understand that it runs from $7 to $12 an hour ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes ; that is correct.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is on the basis of 1,000 yards ?

Mr. FIELDING. No ; the value of the dredge would depend upon her capacity.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the limit where you pay $7 or $8 ?

Mr. FIELDING. The quality was not the same for all dredges. It was based upon a fair price per cubic yard.

Mr. STOCKTON. That is, the maximum would be 1,000 yards a day, no matter how long it took to move the earth. In the report of the Minister of Public Works dealing with the different dredges, I find that the minister gives the cost per cubic yard as 5½ cents, 4 cents and as low as 3 cents per cubic yard. This dredge was given $84 per day when the contract could probably have been made for $40 or $50 based upon the amount of work.

Mr. FIELDING. No ; the very favourable rates the hon. gentleman quotes are those of the powerful dredges of the government. But ordinary dredges do not do the work at that price. It all shows the wisdom of getting more government dredges.

Mr. LALOR. That is the proper policy for this government—to build its own dredges. I understand that Hon. Mr. Tarte, when Minister of Public Works, stated that the work could be done with government dredges for from 3 cents to 4 cents per cubic yard. I cannot understand, then, why Mr. Conmee, Mr. Boone, Mr. Bowman and others should get these enormous prices when the government, with their command of capital, can build dredges that will do the work so much cheaper.

Mr. FIELDING. I agree that the construction of government dredges is the best policy, and the hon. gentleman will see that the government is making progress along that line. As to the maritime provinces, I shall be very glad to find some one there with dredges, no matter what his politics, to do the work waiting to be done. My hon. friends from Ontario are fortunate in having private dredges that can do the work. When we try to get dredges for work in the maritime provinces we are told that the dredges are busy and we cannot have them.

Mr. LALOR. If the minister will not regard politics, but will give contracts in the maritime provinces on the same basis as these contracts are given to Mr. Conmee and Mr. Bowman and some others, I do not doubt that we can quickly form a company to build a dredge and take a contract. But we will want assurance that we shall not be required to change our politics to get fair-play.

Mr. FIELDING. I will promise my hon. friend (Mr. Lalor) that if he will tender for a contract in the maritime provinces any where that comes within what I may call my sphere of influence, the lowest tenderer will get the contract no matter what his politics.

Mr. LALOR. But if there were any chance of some of us tendering, I suppose the hon. minister would insert the advertisement on Saturday and provide that tenders were to be in on Monday morning.

Mr. FIELDING. No; we will give you a fair chance.

Public Works—chargeable to income—River Chateauguay — dredging, revote of lapsed amount, $1,850.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is doing that work?

Mr. FIELDING. The Canadian Construction Company. This is work in Chateauguay basin, in the mouth of the Chateauguay river. This is money that was designed to be spent on that work, but they were not able to spend it in 1903-4. This is needed to complete the contract.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that dredge working by the hour or by the yard?

Mr. FIELDING. This dredge was at that time working by the hour. There is no work going on now at all. The work is done. The work upon which she has been engaged is stopped and tenders are being called for further work of the same class.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to call the attention of the hon. Acting Minister of Public Works to this work. I do not object at all to this work; in fact, if I remember well I asked for the work some years ago. But, the money that is being spent there to-day is being uselessly spent. The engineer, I am sure, will bear me out when I say that they are working in what is called quicksand. They have been working there for the last fifteen or sixteen years and the channel is filling up all the time. I have seen the dredge there myself very often and I have no doubt they will have to keep up the same work every year and with no good result. The pilot on one of the boats that passes there told me that in order to establish a permanent work which would stand for a long time, it would be necessary to construct crib-work to protect the channel and keep the sand from filling in. That has been done at Ste. Anne's for the same purpose, the material there being quicksand. It may cost a little more at the outset but the work would be of a permanent character. The department are spending $5,000 or $6,000 a year in dredging the river Chateauguay and no good result is being accomplished. The work will have to be done year after year because the channel will fill up, on account of the nature of the material. I call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance, who is the custodian of our money, to the condition of this work and I also call the attention of the department to it. I am sure the engineer must know that part of the river. He was there himself years ago and he knows that what I am speaking of should be done if he wants to put a stop to the expense, which is not objectionable in itself, but which is not producing the desired result on account of the unwise policy which has been pursued in the past.

Mr. FIELDING. I think my hon. friend has been misinformed and that he is confusing some other class of work with this, because I find by the memorandum which has been supplied to me that this dredging is described as being for the purpose of removing hard-pan, boulders and clay.

Mr. BERGERON. There are two places where they have been working. One of these is in the River Chateauguay where they have taken away stones. The other place that I am talking of is at the mouth of the River Chateauguay or just above the river where a channel is being made for boats coming from the lake into the river.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend will probably find on inquiry that he is mistaken, and that there is no work being done at the place he indicates. This work is for the removal of hard-pan, boulders and clay. There is sand in the river but these operations are not in the sand district at all.

Mr. BERGERON. Last year there was a dredge at the mouth of the river working in the sand and there was another one down the river. They have been working at three or four places in the river.

Mr. FIELDING. I am informed that the sand is not at the mouth of the river.

Mr. BERGERON. Well it is. I am very sorry that the engineer does not remember. There is a sand bank at the head of the River Chateauguay. Steamers passing there have to go around nearly a mile to avoid that bank. The government years ago commenced work in the channel. They have been working at that since. They were working at that last summer. I have seen the dredge at work there. It is that gap that is filling up all the time.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no question that the dredge has been working during the past season at the mouth of the river, not at the head of the river. I am told that the sand to which my hon. friend refers is not at this point.

Mr. BERGERON. It is at two places.

Mr. FIELDING. There has been work done at both places undoubtedly, but the work to which this appropriation refers was not in the sand but in the harder material at the mouth of the river.

Mr. BERGERON. That may be, because they were working at the lower end of the river and they were working also at the entrance to the river or above Nun's Island. Whether this amount of money is specially for that work or not I want to call the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that in order to make a good work at the entrance to the river it should be done in a different way from that in which it is being carried out now.

Doucet's Landing—dredging, $8,000.

Mr. BARR. Is this done by tender or in what way ? It is a very large item.

Mr. FIELDING. This was done by the old system of per hour.

Mr. BLAIN. What is this ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is in the county of Nicolet. It is opposite Three Rivers. It is the terminus of the Grand Trunk branch line from Athabaska to Doucet's Landing and there are two boats plying between Three Rivers and Doucet's Landing. It is a very important terminus ; in fact it is the only important connection between the north and south shores at that point.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the amount of money voted last year ?

Mr. FIELDING. $12,000 was appropriated in the estimates for the current year. That has all been expended and this further sum is needed.

Mr. BERGERON. That will make $20,000 ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the capacity of the dredge there ?

Mr. FIELDING. The cost of removing the material is 13 8-10 cents per cubic yard.

Mr. BERGERON. How is it that there is so much difference between the appropriation and the actual amount ? You have $12,000 and $8,000, making altogether $20,000.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, they found that the amount was insufficient to make the work effective and they require to make a further expenditure. This is practically a portion of the harbour of Three Rivers.

Mr. BERGERON. No, it is on the other side from Three Rivers.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, it is the approach to the harbour of Three Rivers and it has proved of great value to the commerce of Three Rivers.

Mr. BERGERON. It is on the south side of the river. When a department comes to council and asks for some money is the hon. Minister of Finance not anxious to know why these appropriations should not be made in a better way than that ? Who makes the valuation of such a work ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is made by the engineers of the Public Works Department.

Mr. BERGERON. They make a valuation at $12,000 and spend $20,000. That should strike the mind of my hon. friend when the department come to him for money and when he comes to parliament and asks for a vote.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I was told by the owner of the dredges which worked there last year that the bottom of the river is very sandy, and that the new harbour work at Three Rivers had caused the sand to silt over on to the other side. The river is narrow there and there are battures. The people were threatened by the navigation company that if the work was not done the boat service would cease.

Mr. AMES. The proposal is to excavate 800 feet in length and 400 feet in width. How much of that work has been done and how much is there to complete ?

Mr. FIELDING. The quantity already removed as covered by this appropriation is 144,456 cubic yards and about 100,000 yards remain to be done.

Mr. AMES. Then, about two-fifths of the work has been done at an expense of about $20,000.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not a contract for any specific amount of work.

Mr. AMES. Do I understand that new tenders are to be called for the balance of the work ?

Mr. FIELDING. Tenders have been called for the dredging.

Mr. BERGERON. Under the old arrangement $20,000 were expended and now you propose to continue the same work ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. At what cost ?

Mr. FIELDING. There are $15,000 in the main estimates for the coming year.

Mr. BERGERON. Have tenders been received ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, but the contract has not yet been awarded.

Mr. BERGERON. When you have expended this $35,000 in all, will the sand continue to silt in there and will you have to renew the dredging every year ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is expected that the work will be good in the main.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the sand not continue to drift over from the Three Rivers side ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. According to the report prepared by the resident engineer at my request that will be provided against. The plan is to deepen the channel for the boats that ply between Three Rivers and Doucet's Landing, and they will build a wharf on the south east of the existing wharf which is the property of the Grand Trunk and which at present is in a complete state of decay.

River St. Maurice—dredging, $11,200.

Mr. FIELDING. The appropriation taken for this work was only $6,000, but strong pressure was brought to make provision for more expensive work and an additional appropriation is being asked. Considering that the appropriation was only $6,000 originally the additional sum is out of reasonable proportion, but the department informs me that the reasons were very urgent and the public opinion in the district pressed the department to do a larger amount of work.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that river navigable at that point ?

Mr. FIELDING. There are very large saw mill operations going on there.

Mr. BERGERON. Do the lumbermen contribute anything to this work ?

Mr. FIELDING. The lumbermen pay fees on slides and booms which are a considerable source of revenue.

Mr. BERGERON. That is another matter altogether.

Mr. FIELDING. Dredging and work of that character would not be done by the lumbermen.

Mr. LEMIEUX. During the last five years two large lumber companies have established themselves at the mouth of the river and employ about 1,000 people.

Mr. BERGERON. I am merely asking for information as to why this money should be voted, and the statement of my hon. friend leads me to believe that the river there is navigated by tugs and barges carrying pulp wood.

Mr. BLAIN. This river has been on the pay roll for many years ; are we to continue year after year dredging it out ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is one of the three largest rivers in the Dominion and it is the river par excellence of the lumber trade in the province of Quebec. Within the last few years large limits have been sold by the Quebec government and several American firms have established themselves there.

Montmorency—wharf improvements, $2,500.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this a new work ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is a new work, and this balance of $2,500 will finish it.

Mr. BERGERON. It is described here as improving a wharf ; if it is a new wharf what do you want improving it for ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am informed there was an old wharf there, but this is practically a new work.

Mr. BERGERON. There were a great many promises made there last election ; are you redeeming your promises now ?

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend mean in the county of Montmorency ?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, Sir.

Mr. FIELDING. But this is in the county of Quebec.

Mr. BERGERON. Be that as it may, I know that last October a great many of these public works were promised to the electors of Montmorency, and more than that $6,000 was spent during the election to macadamize some roads leading to wharfs. Perhaps this work was done in advance, and you are now making provision to pay for it. I ask that as a matter of information, to make sure that the men who were promised these works shall get them. It may be that my hon. friend should be complimented for fulfilling the promises made during the elections, though they caused the defeat of a good man.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This place is in the county of Quebec, not in Montmorency. It is between Chateau Richard and Beauport.

Mr. MORIN. It must be at the Falls, and I do not think there is any need of a wharf there.

Mr. FIELDING. It is near the Falls, and the word 'Falls' should be inserted.

Mr. BLAIN. What will the total cost of this work be ?

Mr. FIELDING. About $12,300.

Mr. BLAIN. Will it be completed this year ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, in the coming fiscal year.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was the work let by tender ?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was done during election time by day labour.

Mr. FIELDING. There was no election in the summer, when this was done.

Mr. BLAIN. How is it that the government are departing from the policy they are supposed to have of letting these works by tender ?

Mr. FIELDING. This was done by day labour for reasons which the department felt were good.

Mr. BLAIN. I think the committee are entitled to know what those reasons were.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I may inform my hon. friend that in my experience in the county of Gaspé many wharfs and breakwaters have been built in recent years by day's work at much less than they were tendered for. Although the government have adopted the policy of giving contracts where the amount exceeds $5,000, yet nothing prevents the department from proceeding by day's work. In the present instance, they proceeded by day's work before this law was passed. I can cite cases in the county of Gaspé where the amount estimated by the department was doubled and trebled when tenders were called for, and they had to revert to day's work.

Mr. BLAIN. Surely some one would be responsible for that. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that after an engineer has made an estimate and the department has then received tenders, they doubled and trebled the estimate ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, and the department in those cases have refused to give the contract.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. In cases where they have refused to give a contract and have done the work by day's work, has it cost less or more than the estimate made by the engineer ? A competent engineer ought to know pretty nearly what a work will cost.

Mr. LEMIEUX. To my knowledge the cost by day's work has not exceeded the estimate of the engineer, while in some cases work done by contract has exceeded the estimate.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Do I understand that the cost of work done by day's work has come within the estimate of the engineer, while in many cases the tenders have been away above the estimate ? That seems extraordinary.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It has happened many a time.

Mr. FIELDING. That may be accounted for by the works not having been sufficiently advertised. If you have allowed only a few days, anticipating that certain men would tender, they might easily go away above the estimate, hoping to get the work without competition ; but in ordinary cases, I do not think there would be that difference.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I could cite cases in the county of Gaspé. As to the notices of tenders, my hon. friend may find them every day in the papers, and he will see that some thirty days are allowed.

Mr. BERGERON. The examples given by my hon. friend from Nicolet cannot be got everywhere. The county of Gaspé is far away, and the contractors cannot very well take their plant down there. The case under discussion is near Quebec, and the circumstances are quite different. It seems to me that when we have a law on this point, the government should observe it, and that every work costing over $5,000 should be done by contract. I have seen a good many works done by the day, and they are always very costly ; and it seems to me that it would be a great deal better for the government to observe the law. This $2,500 we are now voting has been spent and the amount in the main estimates to be voted is $6,000, so the total will be nearly $9,000.

Mr. FIELDING. $12,300.

Mr. BERGERON. That is another reason why the work should be given by tender. It is near the city of Quebec and there are contractors in Quebec.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are very busy now.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What was the saving effected between the amount of the lowest tender and the actual cost ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Let me give an example to my hon. friend. Last year we called for tenders to build a breakwater in Malbaie in the county of Gaspé. There were five or six tenders, the lowest of which was $40,000, while the estimate of the chief engineer was only $20,000. The minister did not feel justified in giving the contract to the lowest tenderer, so the work was started by day labour and the resident engineer says he will be able to keep within the chief engineer's estimate. I could give many other examples, speaking of my own county. No doubt the contractors are afraid of the distance and the cost of transport of the plant and men, and that is why they raise their prices; but it has been the invariable experience I have had in connection with those works in my county, that the system of doing the work by day labour, without contract, is the cheaper.

Mr. MORIN. Will the hon. minister tell us why Conservatives are never employed on these works? This system of having the government work done without contract is but another way of evading the election law, because they employ nobody but Grits.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I can tell my hon. friend that whenever work is done in the county of Gaspé the resident engineer appoints a local inspector, and I have invariably told the local inspector to employ both parties because it is public expenditure and both parties should be given work.

Mr. LALOR. Let me draw attention to the condition of affairs in my county. We have there a Welland canal feeder, and the men who work on it are not engaged by either the superintendent or the deputy superintendent of the canal. If a labouring man wants employment on any government work there, he must run the gauntlet of the Liberal Association. His name is brought before the association; and if acceptable, he is given an order on the deputy superintendent, which entitles him to be employed. Recently a most respectable man, who had been working on the Welland canal feeder for the last 25 years, and who has raised a fine family very much respected in the community, was suspected of having voted for me at the last election, and consequently, when the work was opened as usual, was refused employment. A friend of his called the attention of the president of the Liberal Association to the fact, and the reply was: He voted for Lalor; he had better go to Lalor to get work. That man has not got one hours' work in Dunnville this year simply because he is suspected of having voted for me. It is most disgraceful that a labouring man should not be able to get work at $1.25 a day shovelling stone or earth for the government without having to run the gauntlet of the Liberal Association or committee and getting its approval. I am a large employer of labour. I have a number of factories and other institutions where I employ labour to a large extent, but there never was a time when I would stoop to compel an ordinary working man to vote for me in order that he might get work. We have, however, the government setting this example to the employers of labour and inducing them to take means to make the labouring man vote their ticket. That is certainly a disgraceful state of affairs. It is all very well to use political influence, but it is disgraceful, on the part of any government to stoop so low as to compel labouring men to vote for it in order that they may obtain work.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister has stated that this work is going to cost $11,000 when finished. He asked $3,000 in the main estimates last year, this supplementary vote of $2,500 is to complete last year's work, and he will ask $6,000 next year. What does he propose to do with the Act respecting Public Works?

Mr. FIELDING. The Act will have to be obeyed.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It has been the law since 1886 that any new work involving an expenditure exceeding $5,000 can only be let after calling for tenders.

Mr. FIELDING. When the appropriation was taken, there was only to be an expenditure of $4,000 so that that work would not come within the rule.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend knew before starting the work that it was going to cost more than $4,000, because he has already spent more than $5,500 this year.

Mr. FIELDING. There was an estimate originally for the work, but when this appropriation was taken the department could only make its contract for the $4,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is not the way. Hon. gentlemen come down here with an estimate say to start a post office, to buy a site, get the plans and let the tenders and get say $4,000 to pay during the first year no matter whether the cost is to be $30,000 or $50,000.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the usual practice.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why was it not carried out here? There was evidently a job as my hon. friend beside me suggests; a lot of promises were made and they were carried out at election time and this $2,500 is to pay a balance not provided for.

Mr. FIELDING. It is nice to have my hon. friend say that promises were carried out. Generally the complaint is the other way. As to why the minister of the day did not treat this as a matter of contract, I cannot definitely answer, but this I can say that the engineers assure me the work performed has been well done and we have fair value for the money. There is no job, no extravagance and we have good value for the money.

Mr. PERLEY. I wish to say a word in support of what my hon. friend from Haldimand has said with regard to men employed by the government. I certainly think that if there is a vacant position of any great value it is only right and fair that the government should appoint a man with the same leanings as they have. That is a reasonable thing provided he is a good man. I take no exception to that whatever, but I certainly do not think that the ordinary labouring man should be employed or not employed by the government according to his political leanings. It seems to me that if we are going to have a free country here, men should be allowed to exercise their franchise as they see fit, and as long as they do not take an active part in politics and make themselves offensive, government employees should be allowed to vote as they like and that they should not be asked to which side they belong before they are employed for a day's work. Like the hon. member for Haldimand I am a large employer of labour myself, and I have never yet nor will I ask a man his politics before I employ him. It is a most unfair, unreasonable and unjust question to put to any man. I have here an affidavit which I shall read to the House :

Province of Quebec, County of Argentuil.

I, Hilaire Robillard, of the village of Carillon, in the electoral district of Argenteuil, do solemnly declare that for some time before, and up to the second day of November last, I had been in the employ of the federal government in charge of a gang of men working on a pier being built in the Ottawa river in the vicinity of the village of Carillon. On the day before polling, in November last, I was informed by Mr. Girard, who was supervising the construction of said pier, that my services were no longer required, no reason being assigned for such action, and I was replaced by another workman. Some time previous to my dismissal I was told by Mr. Girard that any person working for the government would be expected to vote for the party in power. I was at that time and am still a parliamentary elector, and I attended two political meetings in Carillon before the election. My political sympathies were suspected, as I did not give the assurances expected of me, and I heard divers rumours that I was going to be dismissed on account of my politics, or for political reasons. Beyond exercising my electoral franchise I took no part, nor did I participate in said election. Although I am a poor and illiterate man, I always understood that Canada was a free country, and did not exist in the exclusive interest of any political party. And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and knowing it to be of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

H. ROBILLARD.

Declared before me at the village of Carillon this 14th day of March, A.D. 1905.

D. MURPHY,
Justice of the Peace.

I think it is only fair and reasonable, as I said before, when there is a vacant postmastership or office of any kind in the Department of Public Works or of Railways and Canals that a person of the political stripe of the government in power should be employed, but beyond that it seems to me to be wrong for the government to go, and most unfair. I do not know which department this was in, Public Works or Railways and Canals, but it does not matter. This question has come up before and it seems to me a very important one. I certainly would like to get some assurance from the government that they do not expect or will not allow their officers to bring pressure on the ordinary servants and employees of the government to vote for the party in power as if the power in power were entitled to their votes simply because the government give them work.

Mr. FIELDING. I believe that the matters referred to both by my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) and my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) belong to the Department of Railways and Canals, and I have no desire to discuss the affairs of that department, but so far as the principles involved are concerned I have no hesitation in giving my opinion at once. I notice that this poor illiterate man has made somewhat of a political document of his affidavit and it strikes me if the man himself had no interest in politics somebody who framed the affidavit for him had a good deal of interest, because a poor illiterate man of his own motion would not make such an affidavit as that. If the affidavit says that any man, high or low, in the service of the government was dismissed from his labour because he exercised his franchise freely and independently, I do not hesitate to say that is wrong. Any attempt to interfere with the free exercise of the franchise by any officer or servant, I would condemn as strongly as my hon. friends. I would not encourage the idea of a Dominion official taking an active part in politics. If he takes no active part but exercises his franchise I say that whether he occupies the position of lieutenant governor or labourer, that is his right and should not be interfered with, and if any man was dismissed because of his vote, that I would condemn, but I would like to have the facts more clearly investigated. As to the general principle so long as we have the principle of party government in Canada, I fancy we will have the same discussion as we have had to-day. The party system seems to have its advantages and its disadvantages, but on the whole it seems to be the best way of working out constitutional government in the British empire. We must take the good and the evil together and one of the evils is that this question of political partisanship always comes up. Just how my hon. friend would draw the distinction between labouring men and men in higher ranks I do not understand. Are we to be told that a man who aspires to a high office can say : 'I am your friend, I have helped you, and I think when a vacancy occurs I should be considered.' But the poor labouring man who uses such an argument is told it is all wrong. If it is legitimate for a man who wants to be a judge or an engineer or to occupy any higher position to come and say : 'I have helped your party in an honourable way, I have supported you and assisted you and want to be considered,' why should not that argument be equally good for the poor labouring man ? I cannot see any difference, such as my hon. friend would urge. I have no doubt hundreds of thousands of Conservatives have been employed all over the country on various public works. In my own province I know cases that have come within my own observation where the work was given indiscriminately. I would not desire otherwise, but if a choice is made, if there is to be a preference of A to B what ground of complaint is there so long as A is competent to do a good day's work ? Why should there not be as much liberty to give a preference to a poor labouring man as to a lawyer who wants to be a judge ? I cannot see the distinction. All the interest the public has is to see that a man is not dismissed for the free exercise of the franchise, and that no man is told he cannot vote one way or the other in order to hold his place, and lastly that the work is well done at a fair day's wage. What other interest have the public in the matter ? I cannot see any ground for my hon. friend's grievances.

Mr. PERLEY. It seems to me that most of the minister's remarks do not apply to the question under discussion. This man was in the employ of the government.

Mr. FIELDING. I accept that. If he was dismissed on account of his vote, I say it was wrong.

Mr. PERLEY. But the minister will know how hard it is to prove a thing of that kind. It is a matter of common report in that section that not only this man, but six or seven others, were dismissed for that reason ; they went to a political meeting, and even had the audacity to applaud the Conservative candidate ; and, within the next few days, they were dismissed. Of course, it is hard to prove any connection between these two things. The hon. minister says something about the wording of the affidavit. No doubt the man went to a lawyer, as any of us would, and the lawyer drew up the affidavit according to the facts as stated. That affidavit, it seems to me, is as near proof as can be expected in a case of this kind. I believe the matter should be fully considered, and that the officers who have taken such action should be warned not to repeat it.

Mr. LALOR. I agree that when a government office of emolument is open it is only to be expected that the man who has worked for his party should be given the preference in the appointment. That is party government, and it is conceded to be the proper system for this country. But when it comes to employing ordinary labouring men, the position is entirely different. We should consider it a great hardship if ordinary employers of labour were to give or refuse employment according to a man's politics. I think it is very wrong for the government to set an example of that kind.

Mr. FIELDING. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Lalor) that even though an employee of the government votes against the government, to dismiss him on that account would be an outrage.

Mr. LALOR. But that is particularly true in the case of an honest, conscientious labouring man employed upon a public work. I can tell the hon. minister, and prove it beyond a doubt, that a man who wishes work on the Grand river feeder at Dunnville has to run the gauntlet of the Liberal Association committee before he can get work. He gets the order of that committee to the superintendent to engage him. But if he has voted for Lalor, or is even suspected of having done so, employment is refused him. I have in mind the case of one man, a worthy man, one who has raised a family that is respected by everybody. When he applied for employment he was told that he had voted for Lalor and so could not be given work. I say that principle is radically wrong, and the minister who is in charge of the department should issue a specific order to the officer in charge of this work stating that men are to be employed regardless of politics, so long as they are good men. The minister must know that it adds immensely to the difficulty of getting good men for these public works if the superintendent is not allowed to exercise his own judgment, but must consider politics in making his selection. I know that men who are almost worthless are engaged on public works because they are supposed to vote for the government. We do not get the worth of our money from the labour of these men.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend (Mr. Lalor) has confused two different things. I agree with him in one, but not in the other. One is the question of the dismissal of a public officer because of his vote, and the other is the question of exercising a political preference in filling a vacancy in the public service. If a man is in the public service, having got there under the Conservative regime, we assume that he got there honourably and is there by right, and there should be no interference with his right to vote as he pleases. In my own department I have men who were appointed before my day, and I never interfere with them, nor would I allow them to be interfered with, in voting as they please. But when it comes to the filling of a vacancy, I have a right to consider the politics of the applicant, provided always that I put in none but good men. But why the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lalor) should draw a distinction between the employment by the government of a labouring man and any other man, I do not understand. A private employer would not make that distinction—whatever the position to be filled, he would not consider the politics of the applicant. If he wished to engage a lawyer, he would not consider whether that lawyer was a Grit or a Tory. But is the labouring man who has done good service for his party to be put upon a different plane from any other? Why should he not be as much entitled to have a preference in a vacancy that he can fill as the lawyer who wishes to be a judge?

Mr. LALOR. With the minister's permission, I will correct him on that point. It is not a question of engaging a man, but a question whether a man must change his politics in order to get employment.

Mr. FIELDING. That would be the case in the highly paid offices as well as in any other, and my hon. friend (Mr. Lalor) sees nothing wrong in political patronage in an office that carries a good salary. I myself justify that, always provided that capable men are employed. The hon. gentleman says that in the case he refers to inefficient men are employed. I say that is wrong; no engineer should be asked to employ men on a public work who are not capable. I do not hesitate to say that this is a matter that I had hoped would not arise. I have endeavoured to see that the Conservatives as well as Liberals get a fair share of work. But if it were put to me: Here is a vacancy for a labouring man and here are two men applying, one a Grit and one a Tory, and both good men, I would support the Grit, just as my hon. friend would prefer the Tory.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) did not put it in that way. My hon. friend from Dorchester (Mr. Morin) referred to this work going on at Montmorency, for the performance of which the government asked $4,000. And they have spent $6,000 already and are asking for $5,000 to complete the work. They have done this work by day labour, yet a man who votes Conservative cannot get a dollar of that work. Is that fair?

Mr. FIELDING. I desire to be perfectly frank with my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor). If I were in Quebec and in that district, and twenty men were wanted on that work, and twenty Liberals and twenty Conservatives applied, all good men, I would give the preference to the Liberals, and I would not think I was doing wrong. And I frankly say that I would expect the hon. gentleman, if his party were in power and the matter were within his sphere of influence, to give his preference to the Conservatives.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the hon. minister would not show himself a good business man. This government professes to be a business government; yet, if you take the employers of this country, I venture to say you cannot find one who, employing men to do labour, asks what the applicant's politics are. Here is work on which the government are spending over $11,000 contrary to the law, and yet no labouring man who happens to be a Conservative can get a day's work on that job, no matter how hard up he may be. No manufacturer would carry on his business in that way. I have men in my own employ who turn out and work against me at every election. They are good men, and they have a right to do as they please. I employ a large number of men, and I never inquire of any of them what side he voted for or what his religion was. And the government ought to do the same. I would like to ask the hon. minister how much the engineer's estimate for this work was when it was originally brought down?

Mr. FIELDING. The engineer informs me that it was $9,000, if he remembers correctly. I do not want to get involved in two distinct questions. As to the value of the work and whether too much money was expended on it or not, I think, that is a proper question. But we have for the last few minutes been discussing not that question but the general principle involved in giving a political preference to one's own political friends. In private affairs you do not do that because private affairs are not conducted on the party system, but I venture to say that my hon. friend's friends in the province of Ontario will give a political preference to their own friends, they will have a perfect right to do so, and if they are attacked for it I will be one to say that they have a perfect right to give a preference to their own friends whether it be a matter of day's labour or the appointment of a high officer, always provided they appoint a man capable of doing the work and of giving an honest day's work for an honest day's pay.

Mr. MORIN. The hon. Minister of Finance did not follow the instructions given to him and to the country by the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Here in 1896 the right hon. leader of the government said that where men were working for the government it made no difference whether they were Grits or Tories they should not be removed. He said that all men would have the right to vote the way they chose and that they would not be interfered with. Contrast that with the example we had in 1900 when Mr. Blair wrote to the manager of the Soulanges canal and said to him: Have you any men in your employ who voted for Bergeron? If you have, turn them all out. This is the very man and that letter was read in this House.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This canal is not in the constituency of my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). It is on the other side of the river.

Mr. MORIN. What is the difference so long as they work on the canal?

Mr. BERGERON. Many of them work on both sides.

Mr. MORIN. Are those the instructions given by the leader of the government? Not at all. I wish the hon. Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) were here to-day. I would give him another example. Last year I asked him for a post office to be granted at Detroit where 500 people would be served. But no, I was refused because I was a Tory. Since then he has opened up two new post offices and probably from ten to twenty people will be served by these post offices. That is the way the other side of the House carries out the instructions of the leader of the government.

Mr. FIELDING. Misery loves company. I am in very good company on that question. I applied to my hon. friend the Postmaster General a short time ago to put a post office in a certain place in my own province but I regret to say that he refused to do it. So, I can sympathize with my hon. friend (Mr. Morin). We are both in the same box. We have both been treated in the same way by this hard hearted gentleman.

Mr. LALOR. It was time to strike.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I suppose that what the hon. gentleman refers to was the bolt, but I believe that at the time of the bolt they were not able to do any business. As to the other question I think my hon. friend must be mistaken about that letter of Mr. Blair. I have no recollection of ever having heard a letter of the character which my hon. friend states from Mr. Blair read in this House. If there was such a letter it was a most extraordinary one. I would like to hear from Mr. Blair on the question, but I do not think that he ever wrote any such letter as that. Certainly I would not defend any such letter. I think there must be some mistake.

Mr. MILLER. I have a much worse complaint to make against the hon. Postmaster General than that of the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Morin) and the hon. Minister of Finance. In my riding a postmaster applied for an increase of his salary. I made application on his behalf. My hon. friend the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) looked up to see what was the revenue of the office and he reduced his salary notwithstanding the fact that the postmaster was a good Grit.

Mr. FINLAY. I would like to ask hon. gentlemen opposite if it is not a fact that the Whitney government have been discharging officials in the province of Ontario right and left.

Mr. BARR. If the Whitney government follow the course pursued by hon. gentlemen oppposite during the last ten years there will be very few Grits left in office in the province of Ontario. We know that during the last ten years no government in the world has discharged as many officials on account of their political leanings as the present government has done. We have this going on all over. They are weeding them out every year by the hundreds, and I can assure you that there is only a very small remnant of Conservative officers left in the province of Ontario, and I presume that the state of affairs in other provinces is just as bad as it is in Ontario. As far as the Ontario government are concerned they have kept their hands off the officials unless there was cause. I challenge anybody to show where there has been a single official in the province of Ontario discharged by the Whitney government since they came into power without cause.

Mr. FIELDING. The same here.

Mr. BARR. I venture to say that there is a large number of officials in Ontario to-day, who, if they have not been discharged ought to have been. They took a very active part in the last campaign. They appeared on the platform and engaged in active politics in other ways. They adhered to the Reform government and did everything in their power to defeat the Conservative candidates. We have to-day for the first time in the Dominion of Canada the spectacle of the hon. Minister of Finance getting up in his place and openly and boldly declaring that to the victor belongs the spoils. That is the position he has taken and he has told us that if there are men to be found that will do the work it should be given to Grits and Conservatives should not be employed. I venture to say that the object of such a statement is to give notice to those who are employing men on public works throughout this Dominion that it is the wish of the present government that they shall employ Grits. I say it is an extraordinary course to pursue yet we have had this principle proclaimed here in this House I think probably for the first time, although it has been acted upon on every possible occasion. We do know that even away down to the working men, down to those employed on the public works they extend this principle, that they watch these men very closely that they choose their own political friends and that they dismiss men by the hundreds all over the Dominion where they find that at the last election they in any way showed their preference for the Conservative candidate. I think this is a very serious state of affairs, and I think that even Reformers for their own sake should pursue a somewhat milder course. The words uttered by the hon. Minister of Finance will echo and re-echo throughout this Dominion, and I have no doubt that the Conservative friends of Mr. Whitney will point to these words and will say : Here we have the announcement from the Minister of Finance that this government are carrying out the spoils system, and that where Tories are found to be employed on a government work in the most humble positions if they can obtain Reformers they will discharge them because they are not going to employ Conservatives. That is the position that has been taken here to-day and I venture to say again that if the Reformers were to be treated in the province of Ontario the same as the Conservatives have been all through this Dominion it would be very much worse for them. Whatever justification the Whitney government may have I hope they will not follow the example of the present government to the extent they have in weeding out their opponents; in fact, I hope no man in Ontario will ever be disturbed in so far as the provincial government are concerned on account of his political leanings, and I hope the time will never come that they will get down to the position of asking a man what his political leanings are when he is asking for employment on a public work for which the people and not the government have to pay.

It seems to me that this is a declaration which is dangerous to the public weal and it will be acted upon as doubtless it was intended to be by the friends of the government. Notwithstanding that the strongest plank in the Liberal platform was that good officials would not be interfered with, and notwithstanding that they denounced the Conservatives, for ten years the Liberal government has been decapitating Conservative officials. Then, that safety valve which we supposed existed requiring that contracts over $5,000 should be let by public tender; that has disappeared under the present government. They must know from their engineers what a work will cost before they undertake it, but their policy is to come down to parliament the first year asking for a vote under $5,000, then let the work without competition, and then come back next session asking for another vote of several thousand dollars thus escaping the law which they themselves placed upon the statute books. That is an iniquitous policy. The policy which we have heard announced to-day, that to the victors belong the spoils is also a vicious system. It came to us from the American side of the line and it is practised in Canada just as strongly and just as openly as it is in the country of its origin.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend knows I did not lay down any such doctrine.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is refreshing to hear the member for Dufferin (Mr. Barr) protesting against the spoils system. He says this government has dismissed a great many officials, but let him look around the cities of Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal at the hundreds of officials in the Customs, the Inland Revenue, and Post Office, and he cannot point to a single man who has been dismissed except for cause. Offensive partisanship or inefficiency has been proved in each case after investigation. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barr) take his advice to his friends in Toronto. Mr. Whitney does not hold a court of investigation and ask for evidence; he chops off the heads of Liberal officials. Every license commissioner in the whole province of Ontario almost has been dismissed without cause, and every license inspector has been dismissed.

Mr. BARR. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Nearly every one of them. In West York, East York, North York and in Kent these officials were dismissed and no investigation held.

Mr. LALOR. Will you say they were dismissed without cause? Will you say as the representative of Centre York that the license inspectors did their duty?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, I will. In East and West York the license inspectors were most efficient men and men who had not taken any part in politics since their appointment several years ago. Mr. Russel in East York is one of the most highly respected men in the county; he is a man who had studiously avoided taking part in politics and yet his head has been cut off without investigation or inquiry. In West York it is the same. For the few months Mr. Whitney has been in power he has dismissed hundreds of officials all over the province. The fishery overseers have gone also and all without an investigation. Mr. Whitney is fresh at the business yet; he is making good headway so far, and if he continues I venture to say there will be very few Liberal officials in Ontario in a short while. Are we squealing or whining about it? For the last ten years these gentlemen opposite have been whining and squealing because officials have been dismissed for offensive partisanship, but it is time they let up on that and turned their attention to their friends in Toronto who are doing ten times worse. Possibly there may be one official out of hundreds who has been dismissed, but I can tell you that the course pursued by this government in this respect reflects the highest credit on them. To these gentlemen opposite I say: go and talk to Mr. Whitney as you are talking here and it may do some good.

Mr. BARR. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to talk generally, but I challenge him to put his finger on a single license inspector who has been dismised without cause.

Mr. CAMPBELL. East and West York and Kent.

Mr. BARR. In East and West York they were bitter partisans and if they had not been dismissed it would have been a disgrace to the government. In the first place they did nothing to carry out the law. We all know that the license commissioners are only appointed from year to year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I refer to license inspectors.

Mr. BARR. Yes, they allowed the gambling hells to operate and they let the hotels keep open at all hours in that part of the country.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They did not.

Mr. BARR. I speak from what I know, and I say that they did nothing but draw their salaries. In Dufferin we have the same inspector, but the commissioners were changed and I can assure you that the change was a great improvement. The inspectors that have not been removed for cause now know that they have to do their duty, and that if they do not they will be dismissed. Every day there are cases brought up in this House where good officials have been dismissed for no reason whatever. I have myself pointed out that in my own county a postmaster after seven years service was dismissed without any cause except that he was a Conservative and exercised his franchise.

Mr. T. MARTIN. I am astonished to hear the member for Dufferin (Mr. Barr) make such statements in this House; I challenge him to give the name of one man in the large county of Wellington who has been dismissed by this government on account of politics. The hon. gentleman knows very well that we had a great many civil servants in Wellington who were strong partisans. It is astonishing to me that a man of as high standing as the hon. member for Dufferin would make such statements. In the province of Ontario there has scarcely been a man removed from the position he occupied in 1896 for such cause as the hon. gentleman has mentioned. I challenge him to name one man who has been removed for that cause in the large and populous county of Wellington, which contains the city of Guelph; but I can name several Conservatives who have been appointed or reappointed to good positions in that county.

Mr. LALOR. Give us the names of the ones reinstated.

Mr. T. MARTIN. I will give the hon. gentleman not only the names of those reinstated, but the names of those appointed. I will give him the names privately.

Mr. CHISHOLM. What we object to is that these men are breaking the law, which is that they must take tenders if the amount is over $5,000. They are breaking the law by doing such work by day's work, and they are using that day's work to make votes; that is the sum and substance of the whole thing; and after the announcement made by the minister to-day, we understand why they are breaking the law. If the law makers are to be law breakers, what is the country coming to?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend cannot understand why they are breaking the law, because as a matter of fact they are not breaking it.

Mr. MILLER. With reference to the dismissal of officials, the Toronto 'Telegram' a Conservative paper, some time ago urged the Whitney government not to dismiss Liberal officials from office, saying that the Laurier government in that respect had set a good example.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight a'clock.

SUPPLY.

House in committee of supply.

Pierreville wharf, Quebec, $3,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The appropriation was $6,000 and a further expenditure of $3,000 is required. It is a pile structure 150 feet long by 148 feet wide, 30 feet high and 5 feet deep at low water. It was begun as soon as the appropriations were available after the close of last session and is now completed. This will pay for the balance due.

Harbours, rivers and bridges, Quebec—general repairs and improvements, $10,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The appropriation in the main estimates was $20,000. This is for general repairs to a number of works. The largest single item is $1,086.61 for work on Yamaska Lock.

Mr. TAYLOR. This will be required up to 30th June this year?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

St. Alphonse de Bagotville wharf—repairs, &c., $1,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is to build dams in connection with the repairs to the wharf and to remove boulders from approaches to the same. There was $1,000 in the main estimates. The total cost is $2,000.

Point Edward, Ontario—dredging, $14,100.

Mr. FIELDING. The appropriation was $10,000, and we are asking an additional $14,100. There are $17,000 in the next year's estimates to be added, making altogether $41,000. It is expected that will complete the work. This is done by ordinary labour and not by contract, and it was performed with the view of hastening the completion of the projected channel 20 feet deep, extending in front of the Grand Trunk Railway sheds and the new elevator south of these sheds, thence in a southerly direction to deep water. It was done by the Sarnia Bay Towing and Salvage Company at so much per hour. It is expected this will complete the work.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Was this done without tender ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was done by the dredges at so much per hour. $15 per hour for a day's work of 1,200 yards of material.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It must be a much more powerful dredge.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, it is a dredge capable of doing better work.

Mr. BLAIN. Who is inspector of a dredging plant of this kind ? When the government engages a plant at so much per hour or day, who has to give a report as to how much work is being done every day ?

Mr. FIELDING. The work comes in a general way under the supervision of the resident engineer at London, Mr. Ling, and there was a local inspector besides.

Mr. BLAIN. What would be the duty of the local inspector and how much would he be paid ?

Mr. FIELDING. The local inspector is paid at the rate of $3 per day. His duty is to see that the quantity represented is moved and carried away.

Mr. BLAIN. Who was the inspector ?

Mr. FIELDING. The name is not among the memoranda furnished me.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand that $15 per hour was paid for this dredge, and that 1,200 yards was to be removed. Why do you pay more for this work than for the other work, where you pay $8 an hour and a thousand yards a day ?

Mr. FIELDING. The net result is the same. The price per hour varies in accordance with the quantity the dredge is able to move and the net result per cubic yard is about the same.

Mr. TAYLOR. $8 an hour for 1,000 yards.

Mr. FIELDING. No, $8 an hour was not for 1,000 yards. I stated the price per hour varied in accordance with the capacity of the dredge.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood $8 an hour was for a dredge that would do 1,000 yards in 12 hours.

Mr. FIELDING. I certainly did not mean to say that. The engineers inform me a dredge that moves 1,000 yards a day is paid $10 an hour.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the minister could give the amount of money paid for the inspection of this work.

Mr. FIELDING. $423.85 is the amount paid, although the name of the gentleman is not here.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman will see that $15 an hour for 1,200 yards is not as cheap as $10 an hour for 1,000 yards.

Mr. FIELDING. The variation on a cubic yard is very slight. It runs from 12½ to 13 cents or 13 cents and a fraction in all cases.

Blind river—dredging, $4,200.

Mr. BOYCE. What is that ?

Mr. FIELDING. In that case the dredge was paid $8 per hour with a capacity of 600 yards per day. The work was performed by Eddy & Coy's dredge, No. 1.

Mr. BOYCE. Under contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. By the usual arrangement, so much per hour, having due regard to the quantity of material to be moved.

Mr. BOYCE. Has dredging been done there before ?

Mr. FIELDING. At the time of the construction of the wharf some dredging was done there but not otherwise.

Mr. BOYCE. How long ago was that ?

Mr. FIELDING. Two years ago.

Mr. BOYCE. By the same parties ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it was done by the contractor for the wharf.

Mr. BLAIN. Whose constituency is this in ?

Mr. FIELDING. East Algoma.

Mr. BOYCE. What was the representation made as to the necessity of this dredging ? I did not know there was any necessity for any dredging in Blind river. There was always a good harbour there.

Mr. FIELDING. It not infrequently happens that after a wharf is built you discover that you want dredging in order to allow large vessels to approach the wharf.

Mr. BOYCE. I heard of some promises before the last election of dredging contracts to be given in that neighbourhood, but I expected much larger amounts. I suppose this is the performance of one of these promises ? The hon. member for East Algoma was largely interested in that and he moved his dredge up to the Port Arthur district when he saw the contracts going through.

Mr. FIELDING. Not for this dredging that is referred to.

Mr. BOYCE. What amount of dredging is necessary there ?

Mr. FIELDING. The work is already practically done. It is not contemplated that more dredging is necessary.

Mr. BOYCE. Has all the work been done by this firm ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, all under this appropriation.

Mr. BOYCE. Who is the superintendent ?

Mr. FIELDING. The work at that point would come under the supervision of the late Mr. H. A. Gray, engineer of the department at Toronto, and there was also a local inspector whose name I cannot give now.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister is very anxious to impress the committee that they are fulfilling all the promises that were made and I would remind him of a promise of some dredging in Peel given five years ago. That promise was renewed each year since that time, and even if we are not able to get it done I would like at least a renewal of the promise from the minister, and when he is in another mood of fulfilment of promises perhaps the department will be able to send a dredge to Peel to do something that is a public necessity. The late Minister of Public Works sent an inspector to examine the work who gave a very favourable report saying that some work was urgently required to be done in order that the harbour could be used. It is very close to Toronto and is found useful for vessels coming in which in rough weather cannot go into Toronto, but can enter such a harbour as Port Credit. The present Minister of Public Works was spoken to and I wish to say in justice to the hon. gentleman who is not present that he also has promised that this work would be done. The complaint is that they cannot get dredges, but I notice from the estimates each year that dredges reach other counties without very much trouble, and I hope the minister now will look into this matter so that it will not be necessary for me to bring it up each year.

Mr. FIELDING. I can only promise to call the attention of the minister to it. I must not give one of those promises to my hon. friend which he says are so easily given and not carried out. If I give it I would like to fulfil it. But, I will call the attention of the minister to it. I would not care to say more at the present time.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand the hon. minister to say that this work at Blind river has been completed ?

Mr. BOYCE.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. And that there was no sum in the main estimates of last year for doing this work ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, there was an appropriation in the main estimates of $7,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. For dredging ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the minister to say that there was some dredging done here.

Mr. FIELDING. It has no connection with this. The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce) asked if there had been any previous dredging. I said not in connection with this item but that a wharf had been built there.

Mr. CLEMENTS. While we are on this dredging item, I would like to say that I notice that there is no appropriation in the main estimates for dredging in the mouth of the River Thames. I desire to impress upon the government the importance of this matter, and I trust that before the supplementary estimates come down the government will take it into their serious consideration and see that there is a proper appropriation for the work. My hon. friend from West York (Mr. Campbell), my hon. friend from East Kent (Mr. Gordon) and the hon. members for Essex know the importance of this work. I have had several letters lately on this subject in one of which it is stated that :

> The schooner 'Stademan' is at the mouth of the river with a load of coal for the Canadian Flour Mills Company. The water is low on the bar this year. There is not over nine feet three inches, and the 'Stademan' draws ten feet. She will have to be lightened over.

I have had a number of such letters upon this work and I think that the importance of the work was drawn to the attention of the government by my late opponent, who, I think, threatened to resign if the work was not done. I hope I will not be under the painful necessity of making a similar threat. I might also state that last year the government spent a good deal of money in the River Thames making a survey with the intention of dredging the river to a depth of 15 feet. I should like the government to carry this work out. I think it is an undertaking of very great importance. The city of Chatham is an important point and we have to rely a great deal on the River Thames for shipment by boat. The mouth of the river is something that both governments have taken care of for years, but it has now got into such a state that the government must do something to give us relief.

Mr. FIELDING. I will see that the attention of the minister is called to the hon. gentleman's observations.

Mr. BOYCE. May I ask the hon. minister, if, in addition to the information which he is going to bring down about this Blind river dredging, he will tell us how much work was done for the amount that was paid out ?

Mr. FIELDING. The quantity of material removed consisting of hard-pan, clay and sand in 1,154 hours was 39,242 cubic yards. That was more troublesome and cost us about 24 cents per yard.

Barry's bay wharf—Madawaska river—to complete payments, $256.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was this wharf let by contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. That was done by contract.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is the balance to complete ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is asked to provide for payments due the contractor for additional works authorized in connection with a public wharf 100 x 25 feet built at Barry's bay on the Madawaska river.

Grand river—dredging at mouth, $6,500.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where is this ?

Mr. FIELDING. The appropriation for 1904-5 was $10,900.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was it done by contract?

Mr. FIELDING. That was done by dredges on the basis of so much per hour.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. There was nothing in the main estimates ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, there was an appropriation in the main estimates of the current year of $10,900.

Mr. BARR. Where was that dredging on the Grand river ?

Mr. FIELDING. First at the mouth of the river and afterwards at Dunnville.

Mr. BOYCE. Who is doing the dredging ?

Mr. FIELDING. The work is now completed. It was done by Mr. C. S. Boone's dredge the 'General Meade' at the rate of $12 per working hour.

Mr. BOYCE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the principle of giving out works of this kind by the hour had been discontinued.

Mr. FIELDING. That is true.

Mr. BOYCE. That was the complaint made when the original estimates were under consideration and now we find that the same policy is being pursued.

Mr. FIELDING. This work is already done and tenders are being invited for other works now on the basis of so much per cubic yard.

Mr. BOYCE. I would ask the hon. minister if it is not within his knowledge that dredges at this very moment in the employ of the Department of Public Works or the Department of Railways and Canals are receiving remuneration by the hour ?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not answer in regard to the Department of Railways and Canals, but the chief engineer informs me that work of that character is not now being done by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. BOYCE. So that we can understand that practice has been wholly discontinued?

Mr. FIELDING. Tenders are now invited on the basis of so much per cubic yard for that class of work generally. Exceptional circumstances arise to justify some special case, and if that be so it will have to be defended on its merits, but it is not the policy of the department and no case of that kind is now contemplated.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Could the hon. minister give us the page in the main estimates at which this appropriation appears?

Mr. FIELDING. It was in the main estimates for the past year, not in the estimates for the coming year. In the main estimates for 1904-5 there was an appropriation of $10,900. It will be found in the Supply Bill, I am quite sure, but I will send for the book.

Mr. BARR. Would the hon. gentleman tell us when this $6,500 was earned ?

Mr. FIELDING. Within the current fiscal year which is now approaching a conclusion. I am told that the work was finished in September last.

Mr. BLAIN. Could the hon. minister tell us where these advertisements are published, in what newspapers? Are they published in the local newspapers or in the daily newspapers in the province of Ontario ?

Mr. FIELDING. They are usually published in the city of Toronto and in the newspapers of the district in which the work is to be done.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister a copy of the advertisements referred to ?

Mr. FIELDING. If it is required I will get a copy of the advertisement calling for some of these tenders.

Mr. BOYCE. I am sure the Minister of Finance regards the incident in connection with the Port Arthur dredging with as much regret as any man in this House. In order to avoid any such irregularity in future I would ask that there might be a time fixed between the first appearance of an advertisement calling for tenders and the date at which the tenders are to be opened. Even if the Port Arthur incident stood alone it would furnish sufficient reason for a departmental rule being laid down in this connection.

Mr. FIELDING. It is difficult to lay down any universal rule. I suppose any business man would say that under ordinary circumstances probably two or three weeks notice would be reasonable.

Mr. BOYCE. In the Port Arthur case it was only three days notice.

Mr. FIELDING. Unless there were some exceptional circumstances I would say that three days would not be enough.

Mr. BOYCE. The Minister of Finance knows that the Port Arthur incident is absolutely indefensible.

Mr. FIELDING. I know nothing of the sort.

Mr. BOYCE. You heard what was stated in the House ?

Mr. FIELDING. I was not as much interested in the public works items then as I am now.

Mr. BOYCE. Then I will call to the memory of the hon. gentleman the fact that the advertisement was dated the 7th of April, it first appeared in the Toronto 'Globe,' April 11, and in the Montreal 'Herald,' April 10, and the tenders were to be opened on the 14th. The plans and specifications were to be inspected in Ottawa, and the work was two days distant at Thunder Bay which was then covered by two feet of ice. Surely the Minister of Finance must admit that this was indefensible. Will he now offer any guarantee to the House that a proper interval shall be fixed between the calling for tenders and their reception so that this thing may not occur again ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think each transaction must be defended on its own merits. I am informed that the hon. gentleman is mistaken when he says that it was necessary to inspect the plans and specifications. I am told the advertisement contained whatever information was necessary to enable parties to tender.

Mr. BOYCE. There were no specifications whatever announced in the advertisement, but simply the fact that the plans and specifications could be inspected at Ottawa.

Mr. FIELDING. I am told the advertisement contained sufficient information to enable any one to tender who desired to do so.

Mr. BOYCE. Then what was the object of referring tenderers to the plans and specifications at Ottawa ?

Mr. FIELDING. If one wants to come to the department to get more information he is free to do so. The statement is made to me that the information in the advertisement was sufficient to enable a man to tender. I think the time was extended in the case referred to.

Mr. BOYCE. But would it have been extended had attention not been called to it in the House ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know that it would have been.

Mr. BOYCE. I know that the Minister of Finance will not defend such a transaction, and if he acknowledges, as I think he will honestly acknowledge that there was no defence in this case, then I ask him if it would not be wise to fix some minimum time between the notice and the opening of the tenders.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know that any rule can be laid down except the general one that reasonable and sufficient notice should be given in every case where the government invites tenders.

Mr. BOYCE. That was the rule before but it was not respected.

Mr. FIELDING. It often happens that for some good reason it is found that the time is too short and that it has to be extended. I agree with the hon. gentleman that reasonable and sufficient notice should be given, but if he asks me to specify the number of days I would like to reserve judgment on that.

Mr. BOYCE. Would the hon. gentleman say that the minimum time should be ten or twenty days ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is better to allow each transaction to stand on its own merits. It is enough to say there should be a fair and reasonable notice that will give every man within reasonable distance an opportunity of tendering.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the Port Arthur case the time was only extended when attention was called to it in parliament, and the case was so indefensible that the Minister of Public Works had to back down and extend the time. The advertisement in that case was dated on the 7th of April, it was first published on the 11th and tenders were to be opened on the 14th so that there were only 3 days for the public to tender. It went further than that: the dredge had to be owned by a person in Canada, it had to be on the ground on the 20th of April before the ice was out of the harbour where the work was to be done, there was no allowance for towing and there was only one dredge in that locality which was partly owned by a member of this House. The government should learn from that instance that a reasonable time should be specified so that the public money may not be given away to political friends as was clearly the intention in this case.

Now, with reference to the Grand river dredging, the item under discussion, the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) was obliged to leave this afternoon, and as there is not going to be a vote in the main estimates or further supplementary estimates for this work I will either have to ask the item to stand or else get the promise of the Finance Minister that when the Ontario estimates are being discussed the hon. member for Haldimand will have an opportunity to make the remarks he intended to make on this vote. This is another Conmee-Bowman job as I understand from my friend (Mr. Lalor). This work was done by a dredge owned by Mr. Bowman, and I believe that several hundred dollars were allowed him for towing this dredge from the mouth of the Grand river to Dunnville besides the handsome price paid him for the work. No wonder that the appropriation of last year is overrun by some $6,000 if the statements made by my hon. friend from Haldimand are correct.

Mr. FIELDING. I quite agree that if the hon. gentleman from Haldimand desires to say anything on this matter, that on the general vote for dredging in Ontario he should have the opportunity for a free discussion. If there is reason to believe that there is anything wrong in the expenditure I would suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) that some of these days when the Public Accounts Committee meets, the matter be taken up.

Mr. TAYLOR. The trouble is that this money is being spent this year and we cannot get it before the Public Accounts Committee, but you will hear about it next year.

Mr. FIELDING. Wait till you see us next year.

Mr. BLAIN. I have here the advertisement with reference to the Port Arthur dredging as it appeared in the Toronto 'Globe' of April the 11th, 1905. It says:

> Plans showing where dredging is to be performed can be seen in the office of the chief engineer of the department, where also any additional information required can be obtained.

If the Finance Minister looks at the advertisement he will see that no specifications are given and that it does not even say where the work is to be done. In fact it invites tenderers to go to the Public Works Department to get information. This very incident makes it most important that some fixed time should be provided. A minimum time should be fixed and that minimum time should be ample to allow all persons who desire to tender for work of this kind, a proper opportunity to do so.

Mr. FIELDING. I think there was an earlier advertisement which contained no information on that subject.

Mr. BOYCE. That is the advertisement we quarrelled about.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the hon. gentleman's quarrel was with the lack of time and not the lack of information.

Mr. BOYCE. That was one of the principal grounds of complaint, that it only gave three days' time for an intending contractor to ascertain at what part of Port Arthur harbour the dredging was to be done, the character of the dredging and the conditions prevailing. Then, if an examination of the ground was necessary, he would have had to use a flying machine to get there, and then to cut through two feet of solid ice in order to ascertain what the bottom of the harbour was like, and then be back here with his tender, all within the space of three days. The effect of that was simply to eliminate from competition everything except the Conmee & Bowman dredges, which were ice-bound in Port Arthur harbour, and these dredges alone could perform that work. Another fact was brought forcibly to the attention of the government, the extraordinarily significant fact that no allowance was made for towing, whereas in other contracts as high as $1,500 had been allowed for towing plant to the scene of operations. That certainly was not conducive to any tenderers other than Conmee & Bowman, or the owners of the dredges then in the harbour. It was the first advertisement that was complained of and which the hon. member for Peel has cited. That advertisement, the hon. gentleman must admit, contains no such information as he thought a little while ago it did contain.

Mr. FIELDING. I was informed the first advertisement did contain such information. However, that is not the point in question; it is the time that is under discussion, and if three days only were allowed, I think that insufficient. I understand the real point of grievance was the time, and I quite admit that three days is not sufficient notice for such work.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. gentleman not now think it is high time, when irregularities so grave occur in connection with a contract involving $195,000 expenditure, that a principle was laid down, and that the government should say: We will not allow a work of this kind to be awarded except after advertisement for ten days or two weeks, so that the public will know the minimum amount of advertising that will be allowed by the department? Surely it is not unreasonable to ask this. If this thing had not been brought to the attention of the government on April 13, the day before these tenders were closed, contracts involving $195,000 of public money would have been let practically without any opportunity of tendering, and without intending contractors having an opportunity even of knowing that tenders were invited, and, if they did know, they could only tender in the dark, because they could not tell from the advertisement what the conditions were there without coming to Ottawa to inspect these plans and specifications, and probably they might have been told when they came to Ottawa that they would have to go to Port Arthur to inspect the bottom of the lake in order to verify the conditions shown in the plans. The hon. gentleman admits that the time is too short. Will he say now that not a contract shall be let except on such and such notice, or will he stick to the principle that reasonable time shall be allowed? That was the principle in vogue before the Port Arthur grievance was raised. The Minister of Public Works said that was the principle on which these contracts were let, that reasonable time should be allowed, and this he considered a reasonable time. If that was the principle of the department before this irregularity was brought to the attention of the government, surely it is not unreasonable to ask the government now to change it and stipulate that at least a certain number of days, to be increased according to the importance of the contract and the distance to a longer time, shall be allowed.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not agree that any good purpose could be served by stipulating a specific number of days. I would be quite prepared to agree that ten days' notice would be little enough for a work of this kind, and that it would be better to have longer notice, but I would not be prepared to lay down a minimum time. I think the matter will have to be left to what is fair and reasonable; and if that is not done, my hon. friends will certainly not fail to remind us of it. Meantime, I promised the hon. member for Lennox to confirm a statement I made as to a certain appropriation having been made. I presume from his having left the chamber that he did not consider it important, but it will be found on page 42 of the Supply Bill.

Collingwood harbour, $50,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is for unpaid accounts for dredging performed by C. S. Boone, by dredges Nos. 10 and 14, in channel, to 24 feet depth, and some cribwork, steps, &c. There was an appropriation of $50,000 taken for the work in the main estimates, but a larger amount of work was undertaken, and it was found necessary to ask for $50,000 to close up the transactions of the year. $60,000 is asked in the estimates for the coming year.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will discuss it then.

Mr. FIELDING. There will be ample opportunity on the main estimates.

Mr. BOYCE.

Whitby harbour—dredging, $4,050.

Mr. FIELDING. The appropriation in that case was $10,000, and a further sum of $4,050 was required to complete the payments. The dredge 'Trenton,' owned by Contractor R. Weddell, operated from August 17 to November 14, 1904, the close of navigation. The dredging was carried on between the east and west piers, alongside the north pier and in the slip beside the elevator.

Mr. TAYLOR. $14,050 has been spent?

Mr. FIELDING. The work is done.

Mr. TAYLOR. It certainly seems to me that these over-expenditures are extremely large this year in nearly every instance. The elections certainly must have had something to do with the over-expenditures. I do not know by what right the government asks for $50,000 to make certain improvements and then spends $100,000 without consulting parliament. I think that when the amount voted is exhausted the work should stop until parliament meets again and the government can ask for another vote, instead of taking carte blanche to spend as much money as they like. I think the government should ask what they require for the year, and parliament will cheerfully vote it if, in their opinion, the work should be done. I do not think the government should say: We asked for $50,000, but we had an election and spent $100,000, and therefore must have another $50,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Was the Collingwood contract completed?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. The contractor was C. S. Boone, and the work was done on the basis of so much per yard—$2.30 for rock and $1.40 for hard-pan.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice that last year this matter was pretty fully discussed, and the minister, Mr. Hyman, said:

> The total amount of the contract is $87,000, we paid on that $49,000, and this is to complete the balance of the work.

What the committtee would like to know is whether the contract referred to by the minister at that time has been completed, and if so, what amount is unpaid on it?

Mr. FIELDING. The engineers inform me that the contract there referred to was finished, and that afterwards additional work was authorized at the same rates, so as to widen the channel.

Mr. BLAIN. That does not answer the point. The minister of last year stated that the work for which $50,000 was to be appropriated was let by tender, and that the contract was for $87,000. What the committee would like to know is whether that contract has been completed. The minister now says that the work has been done at so much per cubic yard.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that that contract was completed in the manner stated; that the work was extended at the rates I have mentioned, which are the equivalent of the contract price ; and that as respects any additional work, tenders have now been called for a further contract.

Sault Ste. Marie—harbour improvements, including dredging of approaches—balances due on contract work, &c., $25,000.

Mr. BOYCE. What is this work ?

Mr. FIELDING. This work was done by contract by Mr. Joseph Battle, of Thorold, Ontario. The amount of the contract was $65,000, and there was extra work authorized to the amount of $1,200, with charges for superintendence and contingencies, bringing the whole amount up to $68,700, of which $43,659.22 has been paid, and the balance of $25,000 in round numbers is still to be paid.

Mr. BOYCE. Will the hon. gentleman state what the nature of the work was, what the extras were, and who was the person employed to superintend the work ?

Mr. FIELDING. The officer who inspected the work was Mr. Boyd. He is not regularly in the employ of the government, but was employed for that purpose.

Mr. BOYCE. Is the hon gentleman aware that Mr. Boyd is employed as wharfinger at Sault Ste. Marie at a regular salary?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know what the custom is there, but usually wharfingers are not paid salaries, but are allowed a percentage of their receipts, not exceeding 25 per cent in the Marine Department, and they are not commonly regarded as salaried officials.

Mr. BOYCE. With regard to the superintendent, the result would be that while that work was going on, Mr. Boyd would be sitting in his office, attending to his business as wharfinger, and occasionally inspecting this work. He would be getting the same fees as wharfinger whether he acted as superintendent or not. His time as wharfinger is supposed to be exclusively given to the government, while, as a matter of fact, his time would be divided between his duties as wharfinger and his duties as superintendent of this work. In short, he gets double pay for doing work that would require constant and exclusive attention.

Mr. FIELDING. I suppose that if a postmaster getting a few dollars a year in a small country post office were employed under similar conditions, we would be told that he was paid two salaries. I think the allowance made to wharfingers, unless the business is very large, is not contemplated as calling for a man's whole time. It is a small percentage on the amount he collects.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman has not stated the nature of the work.

Mr. FIELDING. The stem of the old wharf, formerly called Plummer's wharf, was lengthened by adding 250 feet in length, 60 feet in width and from 25 to 31 feet in height, and a wing turned up stream 250 feet in length, 50 feet in width, and from 31 to 33 feet in height. The top stands 6¾ feet above low water.

Mr. BOYCE. Is that all the work for which this appropriation is required ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. BOYCE. What is the dredging that is included ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is no dredging in this. The word 'dredging' is a part of the heading of the first appropriation, and they copied the same words.

Mr. BOYCE. I refer the hon. gentleman to page 5627 of 'Hansard' where he will find a number of questions and answers concerning the government docks at Sault Ste. Marie. In question 12, I asked who was the wharfinger employed during the construction of the extension of the dock and at what rate was he paid, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries replied that the wharfinger appointed by that department was retained in office, that his name is George A. Boyd, and that he was paid at the rate of $142 per month during the season of navigation out of the fees collected by him, and further that the wharfinger paid for all necessary assistance. Well, this extension work was done during the season of navigation. By question 10, I asked under whose immediate local supervision was this extension work performed, and the minister replied that it was performed under the supervision of George A. Boyd, at $3 per day. Therefore this same man was getting $142 per month and $3 per day at the same time. What was the total period during which this man Boyd was paid for superintending that work ?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot give the information. The usual practice is to pay these wharfingers by fees, and I was dealing with the usual practice, having no special knowledge of the amount of business done at that wharf.

Mr. BOYCE. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries said he was not required to give his whole time to the duties of wharfinger.

Mr. FIELDING. That would depend on the amount of business. It seems to be very considerable, and his fees would amount to a considerable sum. The Public Works Department might not have any knowledge of the fact that he was acting as wharfinger. I presume it is the same man.

Mr. BOYCE. It is said to be the same man.

Mr. FIELDING. Is it so stated in the answer to the question ?

Mr. BOYCE. No.

Mr. FIELDING. I presume the hon. gentleman knows that it is the same man when he says so ?

Mr. BOYCE. I know it is the same and a very useful man in an election.

Mr. FIELDING. That is an additional virtue.

Mr. BOYCE. No doubt that was the great factor in giving him this $3 per day extra. An election was imminent in that constituency. A great deal of money was spent and a great many votes created, and created in a manner which will yet have to be brought to the attention of this House, and which forms one of the greatest election scandals ever perpetrated in the Dominion. Votes were created absolutely without law or reason or any reasonable excuse at all in that district of West Algoma. 543 votes were put upon the voters' list in a single day without notice to anybody, and this Mr. George A. Boyd, who was not required to give his whole time to his duties as wharfinger and got $3 per day besides as superintendent, was the agent who was exceedingly active on behalf of the Liberal candidate. No doubt this was his reward. I wonder shall he be dealt with in the same severe manner as the Postmaster General dealt with the postmaster at Kentvale. Men were brought in on trains to my knowledge in parties of from six to eight to vote for the Liberal candidate in the January election. This same gentleman was very active on behalf of this government in the Dominion election and on behalf of the Ontario government in the provincial election.

Mr. FIELDING. I suppose that since all these different things happened in that election, the hon. gentleman will use the machinery provided by parliament for investigating them ? I take it for granted he has appealed to the courts to have this thing straightened out ?

Mr. BOYCE. I am glad the hon. gentleman brings that up. If he looks at the public accounts, he will see that it must have cost this country several hundreds of dollars to employ counsel to resist the demand for a writ of prohibition which I made at the moment this outrage was committed. If he will consult Judge Meredith's decision, delivered shortly before the election, he will see that the judge held that the extraordinary Order in Council was not to be followed, by which this government proposed to make voters' lists in violation of every statute in Ontario. That is what was done and that is on record, and that record will be laid before this House. It was fortunately not necessary to go into the election court, but it may be necessary to ask parliament to refer the matter to the Privileges and Elections Committee. 543 names were created in that district illegally, without any excuse, with indecent haste, in defiance of the law, and without notice to anybody. We had this upright government amending forsooth the Ontario statute by an Order in Council, which shortened the delay for appealing from 30 days to 6, and that delay was to be counted from the time these lists were made and posted in some distant lumber camp without notice to anybody. When those appeals were made I was in attendance, and these appeals were going on within 20, and at the outside, 30 days of the time those original lists were made up and sworn to, some of them, by officials of this government. Out of 543 names, over 300 were struck off by the judges on revision, as being the names of men who had not the necessary qualifications or who had not been in the district the requisite length of time.

I am glad the hon. gentleman asked for information on that score. The information was all furnished to the courts. And, although the learned judge held—and it is a matter of doubt whether he held rightly, but I am not quarrelling with that—that it was not a case for prohibition—he gave some very important dicta in the course of the proceedings as to the preparation of these lists. Nine voters' lists were made up ; they were made up without notice to anybody, although the Ontario statutes provide that thirty days' notice of the time and place for making up the lists shall be given by proclamation. The personnel of the enumerators who were appointed was peculiar. One of these who, I remember, was examined as a witness in the famous Sault Ste. Marie case, although an Indian agent, and an employee of this government, was appointed returning officer at Michipicoten Harbour, where the famous cruiser the 'Minnie M.' landed. This gentleman was in his office and saw the boat land with her crew of pluggers. He saw them take the train to the Helen Mine. He saw the train come back bringing these men. The returning officer swore that he had appointed this gentleman as deputy returning officer because of his knowledge of that district. This gentleman saw these pluggers get off the train. They entered his booth and he allowed every one to vote and took no steps in the matter. And when cross-examined in the election trial, he said he thought he must have been chosen on account of his extreme ignorance. Another of the enumerators who made up these lists was the gentleman who was found by the chancellor in the Sault Ste. Marie petition to have been the eminent George M. Sutherland, the king of the Sault St. Marie election campaign of 1903, and the famous 'Lack' Kennedy who was found to be in charge of the 'Minnie M.' expedition. This was the kind of men who made up these lists. If the hon. gentleman wants further information it can be given him later on. But, I can only assure him that, so far as concerns relief being asked from the courts it was asked for and very promptly. The machinery of the law was set in motion in two or three different directions, and, notwithstanding the activity of this government we were to alter the provisions of the Ontario law, under which no appeal could be made against these outrageous lists, and to cut off more than 300 names inside of thirty days from the time they were made up and sworn to by gentlemen of this class. And although of the balance of some 200, principally shantymen the percentage to vote for the Conservative party in that riding was not more than one or two per cent, the general body of the community were so far impressed by the fact that an outrage had been committed on the franchise of the district that they repudiated those who were carrying out that scheme.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) if the attention of the Attorney General of Ontario has been called to these outrages, and if so, what that officer is doing ?

Mr. BOYCE. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) was in the House a little while ago or not. But I may tell him that the attention of the courts have been called to the matter. And I may tell him that three counsel were employed and paid by this government, and I suppose that a reasonable amount will appear in the public accounts for their services. I would remind the Minister of Finance of that, there is very interesting reading in the judgment. And I would commend that judgment also to the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) together with the facts on which it proceeded. I was struck with the virtue shown by the hon. gentleman in commenting on certain matters before we rose at six o'clock. If he will study the facts in connection for the application for prohibition in respect to the West Algoma voters' lists during October last, he will find interesting reading and may have reason to change the view as to the absence of the virtue of every action of this government.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would rather have the evidence than your version of it.

Mr. BOYCE. May I ask the minister if there is any dredging in connection with this ?

Mr. FIELDING. The item is under a general head which includes dredging, this particular work does not include dredging.

Mr. BOYCE. There is no dredging of the St. Marie river in this item ?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Owen Sound harbour—dredging, &c., $6,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The appropriation for that was $28,000 and we are asking for $6,000 more. This is for dredging performed by the dredge 'Frank' of Mr. A. F. Bowman.

Mr. TAYLOR. Bowman is a lucky man.

Mr. FIELDING. I think Ontario is lucky to have a Bowman and others to do the work. I would be glad to have such men in the maritime provinces to do work at fair prices.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was this by contract or by the day ?

Mr. FIELDING. By contract at 13½ cents per cubic yard.

Mr. BLAIN. When the hon. minister is bringing down the information in connection with the Sault dredging, will he please bring down the contract between Joseph Battle and the government for dredging at the Sault ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am informed that Mr. Battle did not do dredging there.

Mr. BLAIN. When the item was up last year of the Sault St. Marie harbour improvements including dredging of approaches $30,000, Mr. Hyman said : 'This work is under contract. The contractor is Joseph Battle, of Thorold, and the estimated cost $71,500.' Would the minister lay on the table the contract so that we may examine it ?

Mr. FIELDING. A copy of the contract with Mr. Battle will be brought down. But the old headline for this item has been carried on, and it included dredging. But for this part of the work there was no dredging.

Little Current—improvement of northern steamboat channel in Georgian Bay, $16,000.

Mr. FIELDING. We had an appropriation at first of $25,000 for this work.

Mr. TAYLOR. How was this estimate made up ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is a work that has cost a considerable amount of money and we shall have an appropriation for it in the coming estimates.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is it under contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, with Mr. Boone, at $2.60 per cubic yard of rock and $1.40 per cubic yard of hard-pan.

River Otonabee—dredging at Peterborough, $1,200.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is this in connection with the canal ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it is for work at Peterborough. This is to pay the Department of Railways and Canals for the use of their dredge which was employed for this purpose.

Haileybury wharf—Lake Temiskaming, $3,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is to complete the wharf at Haileybury. The engineer informs me that the wharf was built, but afterwards sank and there had to be a further expenditure of money.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was it done by contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, by day labour.

Mr. TAYLOR. In what district is this work ?

Mr. FIELDING. In the district of Nipissing.

Mr. TAYLOR. There was an election there, too ?

Mr. FIELDING. There were elections everywhere, the hon. gentleman will remember. But public works must be constructed—the King's government must go on.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did it cost as much to complete the wharf after it had sunk as to build it in the first place ?

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that the wharf cost $13,000 and that extra expenditure was $3,000.

Honora wharf—revote of lapsed amount $800.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where is this ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is in Algoma. The appropriation was $8,000 and this supplementary estimate of $800 is to complete the work.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why build wharfs up there ?

Mr. FIELDING. Because we wish to be fair to all parts of the country.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have urged upon the government for many years to be fair to the district in the St. Lawrence, the township of Howe island which is thickly settled with farmers, principally lower Canadians who settled there many years ago. The government had never spent a dollar to build wharfs for them, nor will it give them a ferry or build them a bridge. Yet, the government can go up to Lake Temiskaming and build wharfs there.

Mr. FIELDING. Ferries and bridges would rightly come within our jurisdiction but wharfs are our legitimate business.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are about a dozen wharfs around this Howe island but all built by the people. At my urgent request the government has promised again and again to look into the building of a wharf there, but it has not been done. The Dominion government control the river there, but they will not build a bridge to connect the island with the mainland.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a provincial work.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, it is a Dominion work. The Dominion controls the navigation.

Mr. FIELDING. A bridge within the limits of a province, is ordinarily considered a provincial work. An inter-provincial bridge sometimes has claims upon the Dominion, but an ordinary highway bridge entirely within the province would be considered a local work. Of course, it is not always easy to lay down the line between local and Dominion authority, but I think the definition I give, so far as it goes, is correct.

Georgian bay and Pointe au Baril route—improvement of the Devil's Elbow channel between Parry Sound and Kilarney $750.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. This is the last item of the Ontario group. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there is nothing in these supplementary estimates for Toronto harbour. This is a matter which has been again and again brought up in this House, by the late Mr. Clarke and also by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) and the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp). The necessity for the work is beyond question. The government engineers have, from time to time so certified. The particular work to which I refer is the straightening of the River Don and the dredging of the harbour. When the main estimates were under consideration the attention of the minister was called to this work and he promised to take the matter into consideration. Since that time a deputation consisting of the mayor and others from the city of Toronto have waited upon the Minister of Public Works and made out what appears to be a very good case for an appropriation for this work. The minister again on that occasion promised to consider it, and the deputation were led to believe that something would be done, or at least considered. Now the supplementary estimates are completed and nothing appears. From year to year, in the past, amounts have appeared in the estimates for this work, but the work has never been done and the money has never been expended. I desire to warn the government now that Toronto harbour is a government work the same as Quebec, Halifax or any other, and the harbour is rapidly filling up for want of dredging. Material is carried down in large quantities by the River Don and deposited in the harbour. It is estimated by the government's own engineer that enough silt sufficient to cover five acres to the depth of 10 feet is deposited in the harbour every year by the action of the River Don. The result is that the eastern part of the harbour is no longer a harbour—it has ceased to be one. The slips in the eastern part of the harbour are kept open, where they are kept open at all, by dredging carried on by the city council and the harbour commissioners of Toronto. The government has spent no money on that work. The work will have to be undertaken some day and it will cost a great deal of money because of the delay which has taken place. I had hoped that these supplementary estimates would contain some appropriation for that work. However, if the supplementary estimates are not all down I hope the government will consider the matter and the Minister of Public Works will give it the consideration he promised the deputation should be given.

Mr. FIELDING. The estimates we have under consideration, I would remind my hon. friend, are only for the fiscal year which has now nearly expired—they are simply to close the transactions of the year. The appropriations for the coming year do not appear in these estimates. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) will turn to the main estimates for the fiscal year beginning 1st July next, he will see considerable appropriations for Toronto harbour. On page 54 of the main estimates for the coming year is one appropriation for Toronto harbour, eastern entrance, $28,000, and one for the extension of the Island breakwater $60,000. I do not know whether these cover what my hon. friend has in mind, but they are certainly two estimates for Toronto harbour.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I am aware of the fact referred to by the minister. But these works are entirely different from the one to which I refer. The work I refer to is the straightening of the River Don and the dredging of the main harbour. Now that the hon. minister has mentioned those works I think it only right to say that although they were provided for in the original estimates the contract is not yet let. I believe that on no less than two occasions tenders have been called for, once during the latter part of November last and once in the early part of January. Tenders were called for in the usual way and submitted to the department, but for some reason that is yet unexplained the contract was not let, the tenders were returned to the tenderers and in so far as I am aware these works have not been undertaken to this day.

Roads and bridges—Ottawa city bridges over the river Ottawa, the slides and the Rideau canal and approaches thereto, ordinary repairs and maintenance, $2,500.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why does not the province of Ontario look after these bridges ?

Mr. FIELDING. These are over Dominion works, over our own works. If we cut a canal or build a railway, or do anything which interferes with the highway, we have to build a bridge across it.

Mr. TAYLOR. These bridges are not over the Rideau canal, but over the Ottawa river.

Mr. FIELDING. And over slides and booms. These are Dominion works. We have interfered with the natural highway.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand this vote to be divided between slides and booms, the Rideau canal and bridges over the river Ottawa. I believe the government have built bridges across the Ottawa river independently of the Rideau canal. Why did not they ask the province of Ontario to do that ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Ottawa river is the dividing line between two great provinces, and the bridge there is an interprovincial bridge. This is somewhat different from a bridge entirely within the province.

Dredging—Dredge vessel repairs, $25,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is this for ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is for general repairs to dredges all over the Dominion.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much was taken for this last year ?

Mr. FIELDING. $61,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why an increased expenditure of $25,000 ?

Mr. FIELDING. The dredges are getting older and the repair work is naturally more expensive than it was in their earlier record.

Mr. DANIEL. How many dredges has the government, and where are they placed ?

Mr. TAYLOR. This simply applies to dredges of the Department of Public Works and not to those of the Department of Railways and Canals or the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. FIELDING. I am told that there are fifteen dredges, besides the tugs and scows connected therewith. All these are entirely within the Department of Public Works.

Mr. DANIEL. The dredges that are used in the maritime provinces and the St. Lawrence all belong to the Department of Public Works ?

Mr. FIELDING. The ship channel dredges are now attached to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but all the maritime province dredges are included in this statement.

Mr. DANIEL. How many dredges are there in the maritime provinces ?

Mr. FIELDING. Seven.

Mr. DANIEL. Could the hon. minister say where they are located ?

Mr. FIELDING. The 'Canada' is at Lockport, the 'St. Lawrence' in the Restigouche river, or is about to be employed there, the 'Cape Breton' is at Sydney, the 'George Mackenzie' is at Shippegan, the 'Prince Edward Island' at Charlottetown, the 'New Dominion' at St. John, and the 'New Brunswick' on the St. John river.

New dredge for Prince Edward Island, $15,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Will the hon. minister explain this ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is to provide a new dredge for Prince Edward Island, which is under construction at Toronto. The contract for the dredge, including dredge, scows, &c., is $65,000. There was an appropriation of $25,000 for the current year ; we are asking now $15,000, which will be $40,000, and there are $25,000 in the main estimates for the coming year, which will cover the cost of this new dredge.

Mr. LEFURGEY. You say she is to cost $65,000 ? Is she being built by contract ?

Mr. FIELDING. She is being built at the Bertram Engine Works in Toronto.

Mr. LEFURGEY. When is she to be finished ?

Mr. FIELDING. She is expected to be finished this summer.

Mr. LEFURGEY. When will she be available for work ?

Mr. FIELDING. She will be available for work during the latter part of this season.

New dredging plant, maritime provinces, $160,000.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask the hon. minister if this item refers to the completion of the new dredge 'W. S. Fielding' ?

Mr. FIELDING. Part of this applies to the dredge which bears that name, a name which was placed on that dredge by the late Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte).

An hon. MEMBER. Is it out of repair ?

Mr. FIELDING. No ; she is an entirely new dredge. She has not yet gone to work. She is a pretty expensive article, and I am sorry that I have such an expensive article bearing my name, but they say she is to do very good work. This includes the amount required for finishing that dredge and also for another dredge that is to be called the 'King Edward,' which is under construction at the Polson Iron Works at Toronto.

Mr. DANIEL. When will the 'W. S. Fielding' be finished ?

Mr. FIELDING. She is approaching completion now, and will likely be finished in a short time.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Where is she being built ?

Mr. FIELDING. At the government shipyards, Sorel.

Mr. DANIEL. Where will the 'W. S. Fielding' be placed at work ?

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a matter which is still not decided. I do not know whether it is the dredge or the name but there are numerous applicants for her.

Mr. DANIEL. When the construction of this dredge was being provided for, I believe the Minister of Public Works stated that she would be able to do some work at St. John harbour. It requires a special kind of dredge to do the work there and the then Minister of Public Works stated that this dredge would be suitable for that work and that she would be sent to St. John harbour when completed. Is that still the intention of the department ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is not the intention to regard this dredge as being built for any particular place ; it is built for service in the maritime provinces generally and it certainly would be capable of doing the work at St. John. I understand, however, that other provision is being made for certain dredging at St. John harbour, which will not require the services of this dredge.

Mr. DANIEL. I am aware of that. Can the minister say what action has been already taken with regard to that other dredge to which he refers ?

Mr. FIELDING. There have been some negotiations which I think are intended to make provision for the work which the hon. gentleman and I have in mind. However, it has not yet been finally arranged, although it is likely to be arranged very shortly.

Mr. DANIEL. Does the minister think it will be arranged early enough to have the work done this season.

Mr. FIELDING. No. The quantity of dredging there is very considerable and I do not imagine it will all be completed this season. I would not like to be too definite, because it is a matter which has engaged the attention of the Minister of Public Works and except in a general way I am not familiar with it.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. What is the cost of the 'King Edward' that is being built by the Polsons.

Mr. FIELDING. According to the information furnished me it will cost $220,000.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Was the contract let by tender ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Was the construction of the dredge which is being built by the Bertram Company let by tender ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. How many tenders were put in for these two dredges, and by whom ?

Mr. FIELDING. The deputy informs me that speaking from memory he thinks three tenders were put in, all from Toronto firms. There are only a few people in Canada who can do work of that character.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I am aware of that.

Mr. WILMOT. Is it the intention of the government to do any dredging in the St. John river this year ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is a dredge engaged in the St. John river every year and I think she will be continued this year.

Mr. WILMOT. I directed the attention of the Minister of Public Works to some dredging which is necessary to do on the Washdemoak river, one of the tributaries of the St. John. It is a very important and necessary work and would not be very costly.

Mr. FIELDING. Was there not some dredging done there last year ?

Mr. WILMOT. Yes, there was some dredging done in front of the wharf and it has been found very useful. The work I speak of is required in the channel of the river, and it is situated at a point near where there are quite a number of people living. The vessels that ply along the coast have too large a draught to be able to navigate there under present conditions without unloading part of their cargo, which of course, causes great inconvenience as well as loss of money. I have already drawn the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the matter and he informed me that he would direct his engineer to make a report. I ask now if the engineer has acted on the minister's instructions ?

Mr. FIELDING. I will see that a note is taken of the request made by my hon. friend (Mr. Wilmot) and I will draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to it. I am not able to give any information as to that point at present.

Mr. WILMOT. I wish also to draw the attention of the government to the fact that there are several points on the main river St. John which ought to be attended to. I have complained to this government and also to the Conservative government, that I never saw a Minister of the Public Works or any of the chiefs of the department visit the St. John river which is one of the chief rivers in the Dominion. The ministers seem to depend altogether on the opinion of the local officers, and I would earnestly urge on the government and on the Public Works Department that they should pay more attention to that important river.

Telegraph lines, Qu'Apelle, Edmonton and Moosejaw, (Wood Mountain section), $4,500.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Does the government own that telegraph line ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. How many miles of telegraph lines have we there ?

Mr. FIELDING. The line from Qu'Appelle to Edmonton, 625 miles, and the Wood Mountain section, 90½ miles.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is that the total number of miles owned by the government in the Territories ?

Mr. FIELDING. There are one or two small loop lines in addition to that.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is that the only portion of Canada the government own telegraph lines in ?

Mr. FIELDING. No ; we have telegraph lines over the coast of the maritime provinces, and also in the Yukon.

Deep Waterways Commission, $7,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is to meet the expenses of what is called the International Waterways Commission.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the amount first voted ?

Mr. FIELDING. There has been no appropriation hitherto for it. It is a work that has been undertaken since the last session of parliament, and the commission has been engaged for some time past.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are the men who compose the commisison ?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. King, the chief astronomer, Mr. J. B. Maybee, K.C., Mr. Louis Coste, C.E., and Mr. Thomas Coté, secretary.

Mr. BERGERON. Where are they now ?

Mr. FIELDING. They have been in the United States, but they have returned to Ottawa now.

Mr. BERGERON. What were they there for ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is a joint commission for the United States and Canada, with reference to all the adjacent waters of the two countries.

Mr. DANIEL. Can the minister state whether the St. John river, the boundary line between New Brunswick and Maine, is to be included in the investigation of this commission ?

Mr. FIELDING. There has been some question as to whether the St. John river would come within the scope of this commission, and the matter is now engaging attention, but no conclusion has been reached.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there a report ?

Mr. FIELDING. Not yet. They have not been long enough employed for that.

Mr. BERGERON. Will there be a report?

Mr. FIELDING. In due course there will be.

Mr. TAYLOR. Parliament was not consulted about this.

Mr. FIELDING. Matters arise occasionally on which it is necessary to take action without waiting to consult parliament.

Mr. BERGERON. Did this arise with the American government ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the commission was at the instance of the American government ?

Chief engineers' office—salaries of engineers, draughtsman, clerks and messengers, $11,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What is this for ?

Mr. FIELDING. The business of the country is increasing, and a larger staff is required.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the amount voted last year for that branch ?

Mr. FIELDING. $73,200.

Mr. TAYLOR. We were passing estimates in July or August last year, and the government must have known how much it would take to run that staff for the balance of the year.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend must remember that while parliament did not prorogue until August, the estimates were prepared long before that.

Mr. TAYLOR. But an engineer, if he is competent should be able to estimate within a few dollars what it would cost to run his department for the year.

Mr. FIELDING. In proportion to the total expenditure the excess is not very large.

Mr. BERGERON. When the minister of a department goes before Council and asks for money, does not the Minister of Finance ask questions to find out whether the expenditure is necessary or not ?

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, yes.

Mr. BERGERON. More than that, the Minister of Finance used to cut out some expenditures and act as if he had charge of the treasury of the country. There is no doubt that we are voting very large amounts of money that should have been thought of when the main estimates were made up. There seems to be a lack of business management on the part of the government.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not sure that some of these votes are not due to the fact that the Minister of Finance is apt to be stingy and to try to cut down some of the estimates; for the minister affected comes back at the end of the year and says, you would not give it to me at the beginning of the year, and I must have it now.

Mr. BLAIN. What are the rates on these lines ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is a regular rate from Ottawa by the Canadian Pacific Railway to Ashcroft, and from Ashcroft to Dawson City, the rate is $3 for ten words. It was higher and has been reduced.

Mr. BLAIN. What are the rates on the lines in the Northwest Territories ?

Mr. FIELDING. Over the Canadian Pacific Railway to points in the Territories, 50 cents for ten words. On messages from here we have to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway rates from Qu'Appelle.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the line made by Mr. Charleson ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes; the Yukon line.

Mr. BERGERON. How much did it cost altogether ?

Mr. FIELDING. About $700,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Does it pay expenses ?

Mr. FIELDING. No; the deficit is about $50,000 a year.

Mr. TAYLOR. This $43,000 is all for working expenses ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is for maintenance, including repairs and operating.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much is taken in the main estimates ?

Mr. FIELDING. $183,000. We are asking $43,000 more.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who does the disbursing or the keeping of the accounts of this Yukon line ? Is it Mr. Charleson ?

Mr. FIELDING. No; he was employed on the construction. This comes under the general supervision of the officer in charge of our telegraph service at Ottawa, Mr. Keeley.

Mr. TAYLOR. How comes it that he asked for $183,000 last year and now wants $41,000 more ?

Mr. FIELDING. The old arrears on maintenance have something to do with this.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What do the repairs cost each year ?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not that information just now, but will get it later on. The repairs are done by our own officials, and are included in the general charge of maintenance.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. This looks a very large item for a newly constructed line.

Mr. FIELDING. It has been running six years.

Mr. BERGERON. Is not that the line which a company offered to build for nothing and to carry besides government messages free? Was not that shown by the correspondence between Mr. Blair and some English company when it was taken out of his hands by Mr. Tarte and built at the expense of the government? Now, it has cost over $700,000, and there is a deficit on it every year of $50,000.

Mr. FIELDING. It would not follow that the company which made the proposal would have been able to do the good things they promised. Companies are usually generous in their offers. Mr. Tarte's view was that the construction of this line was of great importance to Canada, and that we could not afford to let it go into the hands of a company, which might not maintain it efficiently.

To pay J. C. Taché for special services as district superintendent of telegraphs at Chicoutimi from January 1 to June 30, 1905, $150.

Mr. BERGERON. What is his salary?

Mr. FIELDING. His regular salary is $1,750, and he is allowed these $300 extra for this service, increasing his salary to $2,050. He could not get an increase according to his rank without a special vote, and that is why it is done in this way.

Franchise Act—to complete cost of voters' lists for election of 1904, $10,000; new edition of Electoral Atlas, $3,500; $13,500.

Mr. FIELDING. When this item was up before I was asked one or two questions with regard to the electoral atlas that is being printed.

Mr. BERGERON. Will that be distributed to members before the end of the election?

Mr. FIELDING. The King's Printer says he is not quite sure that it will be completed before the end of the session but it is distributed to the members. I was asked whether the lists under the Franchise Act were printed every year. It is not the practice to print these every year although the Act may seem to contemplate that, but the custom is to print them at any time when there is an expectation of an election.

Mr. BERGERON. A few days ago the Printing Committee had the pleasure of visiting the Printing Bureau and through the courtesy of Dr. Dawson and his assistants we were shown everything that could be seen there. I wish to call the attention of the minister to the inadequacy of the space in that building. It is entirely too small for the work done there and I think the public service would have better results if the establishment was enlarged so that all the printing for the public service could be done there. Take the printing of the lists. That is an immense work and that building I think should be at least double the size it is to-day. As we are spending a lot of money—my hon. friend speaks of the growing time—I think money voted for that purpose would be usefully spent and although the building was enlarged last year the enlargement is hardly noticeable, it is so small. The government have a good deal of ground there and I think it would be good policy to enlarge the place as soon as possible. If my hon. friend asks the opinion of Dr. Dawson he will be convinced that the sooner that is done the better.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I presume when the lists are sent down from the various provinces, they come direct to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and he sends them to the King's Printer to have them printed. I do not suppose that after they are printed from the original copy they come under the supervision of the King's Printer himself. There are certain proof-readers no doubt, but what I wish to draw to the attention of the Finance Minister is in connection with the lists for Manitoba for the last election. There were a great many typographical errors; in fact so many that there was a suspicion in the minds of many of my own friends that they were not at all accidental. Of course I am not blaming the King's Printer for this, but some of my supporters desired me to bring it up in the House, because they thought some person, possibly in the printing office, must have been tampering with them and that an arrangement existed. For instance in the particular district where I reside, there was a list of 11 names shown to me. All these 11 names were typographical errors; instead of being put down as residing in 15-16, they were put in 16-17. This gave a good excuse to the officers who prepared the list for scoring these men off their own township and many of them had to travel many miles from their own township although their own polls were within a mile or two of their homes and when they got to these other polls perhaps ten or fifteen miles away, they found their names had not been transferred. Out of these 11 names 10 were Conservative, and the only one that was a Liberal was not scored off. I thought I would bring this up because really there were a great many errors of this character in connection with the printing of the municipal list in our province.

Mr. FIELDING. These errors are most annoying and it is very difficult to give any explanation of such a statement as the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) has mentioned. But I am assured by the King's Printer it is hardly possible that there should be any intention of any wrong-doing in the matter. The lists are read very carefully, or should be, by capable proof-readers, by reliable men who have been in the service of the department a great many years, and the King's Printer feels the utmost confidence in their good intentions. If the error has occurred some one is to blame.

Mr. BERGERON. Their eyesight is failing.

Mr. FIELDING. They are not as young as they used to be, but it is hardly possible they could have any conception of who the people up there were.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Unless there was some one to post them.

Mr. FIELDING. That is still more difficult of conception.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It is quite possible.

Mr. FIELDING. If any one was unfair enough to do it they would hardly go to the Printing Bureau and no one there would permit such a thing to be done. It is a blunder and it is unfortunate it has happened, but it is hardly possible it could be done by design. It is carelessness, but I am sure it is an accident.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It is strange it should be confined to the one party.

Mr. FIELDING. The King's Printer has never had it brought to his notice before and has had no opportunity of investigating it.

Mr. BLAIN. On the question of expenditure for printing voters' lists it seems to me that an arrangement could be entered into between the Dominion government and the local governments that would avoid the expenditure of such a large amount of money for printing Dominion lists. The minister will keep in mind the fact that the list used, in Ontario for example, for the local is the same as for the Dominion. These lists are printed every year by the municipalities and are used for the municipal elections and used as well for the provincial election when it is held every four years. I cannot understand why an agreement should not be entered into between the government of Canada and the local governments so that the list as printed by the municipalities, which is after all the list used in the election, should not be used without being sent to Ottawa to be printed at all. We have these lists printed every year and it seems to me a useless expenditure of money that the very same names should be transmitted to Ottawa, printed in new form and sent back to the different constituencies when they are already in printed form.

Mr. FIELDING. The suggestion is worthy of consideration. I am inclined to think the provincial or municipal printing of lists is not so general as my hon. friend thinks. He is particularly speaking no doubt from his own observation in Ontario. I think I am correct in stating that in some province the municipalities do not print their lists. I know I have seen in rural districts, written lists posted up and I dare say the municipalities would not care to incur the expense of printing. If it would be possible to bring about harmonious action between the Dominion, provincial and municipal authorities there might be much convenience. I am not advised as to whether it is possible to arrange this.

Mr. BERGERON. In Quebec the lists are not printed, but I do not see if they are printed in Ontario that there is any use in doing it a second time. The lists might be printed in provinces or municipalities where they are not printed. The printing of lists in Ontario, where there are 90 counties, is a useless expense.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. There is one feature connected with the printing of the lists to which I would call attention, that is the form in which the lists are got up. Would it not be possible to have them made up in a form more convenient for the use of candidates and others ? Of course it may be more convenient for the Printing Bureau to get them out in long sheets, but they are rather inconvenient for handling.

Mr. FIELDING. The printing in blank form would be convenient for the candidates and the public certainly. But it would involve more cost and more time in the printing.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Were many of the lists preparatory to the last Dominion elections printed outside ?

Mr. FIELDING. About forty of them. The details are given in the report of the King's printer.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Does the minister know what provinces they represented ?

Mr. FIELDING. They were mainly of Ontario and Quebec constituencies.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Were they printed in one particular newspaper office ?

Mr. FIELDING. They were scattered among a number of offices.

Mr. BERGERON. Liberal, I suppose ?

Mr. FIELDING. No doubt. The others would not do work for this wicked government.

Public Works—chargeable to capital—harbours and rivers—Ontario—Port Arthur and Fort Willian—harbour and river improvements, $26,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. This item was allowed to stand because an hon. gentleman who wished to discuss it was not present. He is not present this evening, but, with the same understanding as in Dunnville matter, we will allow the item to pass—that is that on some Ontario item in the main estimates the discussion may take place.

Mr. FIELDING. That will be quite satisfactory.

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions—further amount required for steam communication between St. John, Halifax and Yarmouth, $521.80.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a balance due on a contract for steamer service. Some difference arose as to whether the service had been satisfactorily performed and the minister delayed payment. But this does not change the amount of the contract.

Miscellaneous—miscellaneous printing—further amount required, $12,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The main appropriation was $40,000. This item to some extent represents the arrears—that is they have had to pay at the beginning of the year some portion of the previous year's outlay. Then the departmental reports are increasing in bulk, and besides the cost of printing generally is increasing. The wages were increased during the last fiscal year.

Inspection of staples—further amount required on account of wages and contingencies, $7,500.

Mr. FIELDING. The present vote $60,000 will be sufficient to meet the expenditure for the current fiscal year. It is difficult to estimate what the cost of grain inspection will be. Nearly the whole amount is repaid in fees.

Mr. LAKE. Have any additional assistant warehouse commissioners been appointed or are they to be appointed ?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot give that information to-night. But I would be glad if the hon. gentleman would renew his question, and to have the Minister of Trade and Commerce furnish a written reply.

Prince Edward Island Railway—Working expenses, $60,000.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to collection of revenue—railways—Intercolonial Railway working expenses, $2,000,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will have to ask the minister to allow this item to stand as the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) is not present. This is a large item.

Mr. FIELDING. I admit that the amount is large. It represents the working expenses which increase of course, with the volume of business. The receipts no not always increase proportionately, I am sorry to say. But the business is growing and the increased cost of operation must be provided for. This amount will be necessary to pay the working expenses for the current year. If my hon. friend wishes the item to stand, I am quite willing.

Unprovided items, 1903-4—To cover unprovided items, 1903-4, as per Auditor General's Report, page C—4, $280,551.40.

Mr. FIELDING. This is not an appropriation of money, but a mere formal vote which the Auditor General likes to have at the close of the year to wind up the accounts. It arises in this way : Appropriations are made to the department for the different branches of its business. It sometimes happens that the minister, the accountants and the Auditor General do not exactly agree as to the particular manner in which charges should be made. For instance, the minister has an expenditure charged in one way ; the Auditor General makes up his mind that he will charge it against another. The result is that one particular branch is exceeded while in the other there is an excess. This is not an authority for the payment of a dollar, but the Auditor General has asked that a formal appropriation be made in this way to wind up the accounts.

I understand that, with the exception of the two railroad items, we have disposed of the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30 next. I desire to express my appreciation of the assistance I have received from my hon. friends on the other side in passing these items.

Mr. BERGERON. We understand that we can discuss some of these matters when we go into the main estimates later.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly ; any of them.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business are we to take up on Monday ?

Mr. FIELDING. We have happily disposed in Committee of Supply of all the items in the supplementary estimates for the current year, save two, which have been held over and which we would like the House to consider again in committee on Monday. After that we will endeavour to have concurrence and facilitate the passing of a Supply Bill as rapidly as possible. That being disposed of, we will proceed with the main estimates. I am not quite clear as to which particular department we will take up, but we will be governed by anything that may arise, and if there be any objection to that, we will endeavour to meet the views of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the Autonomy Bill ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is arranged.

Mr. R. BORDEN. I suppose the government has made arrangements to have the Supply Bill assented to properly.

Mr. FIELDING. We will have to consider that carefully. The Senate is to meet on the 6th, and as soon as we get through here I hope to find that all the necessary facilities are provided.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 5, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

TRADING STAMPS.

Mr. LEONARD—by Mr. Foster—asked :

1. Is the government or the Prime Minister aware that the leading boards of trade of the country have adopted resolutions asking for the abolition of trading stamps ?
2. Has the government or any of the members of the ministry promised a deputation of the merchants of this country to bring in a Bill prohibiting the circulation and the sale of trading stamps ?
3. If so, will that Bill be introduced during the present session ?
4. Is the government aware that this system of trading stamps is a heavy tax upon the general trade of the country ?
5. Has the government, or has any of its members, had interviews or conversations on this subject with the attorneys of one or the other of the trading stamp companies ?
6. Does the government or the Prime Minister know that the attorneys and lawyers of the principal trading stamp company, the Traders' Advertising Company, are the honourable the Minister of Justice and the honourable the Speaker of the Senate ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister).

1. The government is aware that many boards of trade of the country have adopted resolutions asking for the abolition of trading stamps.
2. The government has promised a deputation that it would consider the advisability of introducing a Bill to prohibit the circulation and sale of trading stamps.
3. That matter is still under consideration.
4. The government is aware that it is alleged that the trading stamp system is a heavy tax upon the trade of the country.
5. The government has had a conference with parties representing both sides of the question.

Mr. BERGERON.

6. The government is not aware that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) or the Speaker of the Senate is attorney for the Trading Stamp Company. The government is aware that Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Speaker of the Senate, and the firm to which the Minister of Justice belongs have acted before the courts of the province of Quebec, and now, I believe, before the Supreme Court, with regard to the legality of legislation passed by the provincial legislature of the province of Quebec on the subject of trading stamps. I am advised by the Speaker of the Senate that he has declined the application of the company to represent them with regard to federal legislation. Owing to the illness of the Minister of Justice, I am not in a position to communicate with him on the subject.

NORTHERN ALBERTA—STEAMER SERVICE.

Mr. AMES—by Mr. Foster—asked :

1. How many miles of navigable waterway (suitable for light draft steamers) are there within the northern part of the proposed new province of Alberta ?
2. How many steamboats were engaged in this service during 1904 ?
3. What was the freight tonnage and the number of passengers carried by said steamboats ?
4. What is the tonnage, horse-power and length of beam of each steamboat engaged upon this service ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The government has no official information as to the number of miles of navigable water there may be in the northern part of the new province of Alberta, unless such information is to be found in the reports of surveyors. The matter will be investigated, and if such information is found it will be brought down. The government has no official information of the number of steamers engaged in this service for the year 1904.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE—SALARIES.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) moved that the House go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the salary of the commandant of the Royal Military College shall not exceed $3,200 a year, and that the salaries of the staff adjutant, professors, instructors, assistant instructors and staff, shall be fixed, and may be readjusted from time to time, by the Governor in Council.

He said : I beg to inform the House that I have obtained the consent of His Excellency the Governor General to the introduction of this resolution.

Motion agreed to.

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT—PERMANENT FORCE.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) moved that the House go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Militia Act, and to provide that the permanent force may be increased to five thousand men.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER. While we are on that motion, it might be well for the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) to give us some information concerning the reports that are abroad of the diminution of the militia force. I see that the minister is taking steps to increase the permanent force. I understood that that was opposed to his policy, and that he was in favour of increasing the militia. What does this mean ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In these growing days it is necessary, not only to increase the militia, but to increase the permanent force. I will give a full explanation of the point when this resolution is taken up for consideration. With reference to the question which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has put, I may say that my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) informed me a moment ago that he was going to ask that question, and I requested him to wait until to-morrow, when I expect to have a memorandum from the chief of the general staff, General Lake, which I will read to the House, for I think the matter is of sufficient importance to demand such a course being taken. In the meantime, I wish to say a single word, and that is that the so-called reduction of the militia is not a reduction in reality. There has been a reduction, I believe, in what is called the training establishment, but there has been no reduction in the general establishment of the active militia. I will give a full explanation to-morrow of what has been actually done.

Hon. DAVID TISDALE. In the meantime may I ask the Minister of Militia a question, for I confess I do not understand his explanation ? If it is true, as stated in the newspapers, that the minister is reducing the strength of nearly all the regiments or battalions, how does it come that this is not a decrease of the whole ? Is he increasing the number of battalions or regiments so as to keep up the standard number of men ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The number of the active militia is increasing all the time, and the actual peace establishment—or the war establishment, either—has not been diminished ; it is the training establishment that all the talk is about. I do not wish to go into that point now. But perhaps I ought to add this word, that, as compared with the training establishment of 1904, there has been practically no change at all. But to-morrow I will give full details as to what has happened.

Mr. TISDALE. Meantime, I would like to understand the point that the minister has made. Possibly I was a little stupid at first, but I think I see now the distinction the minister makes, and I would like to be sure. He is drawing a distinction between the popular idea of the strength of the militia and those that have been trained. Is that the idea ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is the idea.

Mr. TISDALE. Still, the standard of 36,000 or 40,000 is not increased——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is considerably over 40,000 now.

Mr. TISDALE. But the idea used to be that it was necessary to train that many. Now as I understand, although you keep up the nominal strength you propose by regulation to say that only so many of them shall train, even though the regiment may be filled up to full strength. I remember once having that very question brought up at camp. I had a regiment of the authorized strength and they were not going to pay it. I declined to take any pay at all, and I said I would arrange the pay and would march the men home, because I was within the establishment. I understand that you propose by regulation to say that although you have 40,000 men in the establishment you will not allow more than 30,000 or 35,000 to train.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. A certain number.

Mr. TISDALE. You will not allow a commanding officer, even though he is able to keep up to the full establishment, to train them all.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am sorry the discussion could not be allowed to go over until to-morrow, because it is a little awkward to give an answer on a technical subject, which is entirely in the hands of the military members of the Militia Council, without having the papers before me. I expected to have them here and they should be here.

Mr. TISDALE. It will do to-morrow.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would like in this connection to remind my hon. friend that two or three years ago there was a reduction of the training establishment which was recommended by the then military adviser of the government.

Mr. TISDALE. For that year.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. For that year, and I wish to say with regard to this alleged reduction of the establishment, that it is simply a reduction in the training establishment for the year and as a matter of fact so far as the city establishment is concerned, there is no reduction this year, but authority for the training of even the number fixed must be obtained from year to year. That is to say authority must be given for the actual number to be trained each year before the training takes place.

REPORT PRESENTED.

List of vessels registered in Marine Department of Canada as on the 31st of December, 1904.—Mr. Prefontaine.

SUPPLY—PATENTS TO HALFBREEDS.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the House goes into supply, I would like to ask the First Minister if the Minister of the Interior has informed him as to whether or not patents in respect of the half-breed claims, about which we have been talking on two or three occasions, are being issued or whether the minister took any steps to delay the issue until the papers were brought down ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot give any information to my hon. friend to-day, but I can inquire and give an answer to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Intercolonial Railway—working expenses, $2,000,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In view of the fact that we cannot possibly prorogue before the 1st of July,—there is no suggestion that we can do so—and of the fact that it has become expedient to provide for certain expenditures for the current year, I would propose, with the consent of the House, to take up the two items, 109 and 110, working expenses, Intercolonial Railway, $2,000,000 and working expenses Prince Edward Island Railway, $60,000. If the House would agree to facilitate matters we could have a Supply Bill passed in order to provide for current expenditure, the whole of the supplementaries having now been passed with the exception of these two items. I am sorry to say they are important items, and I am also sorry to say that the Minister of Railways is not here to give such a full explanation as he should on a matter of this kind. He intended to do so before his departure, but he had to leave on a domestic errand of some importance to him and he cannot be here before Thursday of this week. In the meantime I may say to the hon. gentlemen that this first item requires $2,000,000 extra money for working expenses of the Intercolonial Railway. In the supplementary estimates of the current year, there will be a similar item of $1,200,000 so that upon this occasion the Minister of Railways proposes to make the statement which he has to make every year on the policy of the government with regard to the Intercolonial Railway and the management of the railway, so the House will be given ample opportunity to discuss not only the expenditure of the coming year, but the expenditure of the past year also. If this be agreeable to my hon. friends we will take up these items and I shall give what little information I have to-day on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. This item was up the other day. and was allowed to stand at the request of the Minister of Railways who was not then ready to make a statement. He promised to be ready in a week or so and to make his statement. The great trouble about having the discussion on an item in the next supplementaries is that we have no knowledge at all as to when they will be down. If we are to judge from the general actions of the government they would leave it until about two days before prorogation and bring it down when the House is tired out, few members are here and it is almost useless to attempt to criticise it. If the Prime Minister could give some assurance that the supplementaries would be down in reasonable time and that the minister would take this up amongst the first items, so that on such an important matter as this we might have the House as fresh as possible for the discussion, I do not want to interfere with the Governor General's arrangements.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The request of my hon. friend is perfectly reasonable and if he will take my word I will give him positive assurance that we will take the item in ample time to have full discussion. I cannot say to-day exactly when the supplementaries will be brought down, but it will be at an early day, probably in the course of two weeks. If my hon. friend will take my assurance I will give all opportunity for discussing it. I have in fact requested the Minister of Railways to cut short his visit although it is important, connected with a domestic occasion, and he will be back at the end of the week.

Mr. FOSTER. Under that state of circumstances I do not think we will trouble the Prime Minister to give a partial explanation. I am quite sure he would rather be out of the explaining which this requires. We will try and get the explanation much more fully from the Minister of Railways.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no objection to that.

Prince Edward Island Railway working expenses, $60,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The same thing applies to that I suppose ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Some resolutions reported.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Civil government—Department of the Interior—salaries, including J. J. McArthur and C. A. Bigger, at $2,300 each, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $166,254.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure whether the subject to which I desire to draw attention comes under the Department of the Interior or the Department of Indian Affairs, but to make sure, I will take it up on this item. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will remember that when he was putting through these estimates, the Minister of the Interior at that time being absent, he took some items for promotions in the Indian Department—I think it was—named the person to whom the promotion was to be given and laid down the policy that if he had arrived at the maximum of his salary promotion was his due. This sum was named in order to provide for that promotion. The principle was that the person should have arrived at the maximum, and the statement was made that in this case he had arrived at the maximum. That was information which I think was not correct. The gentleman who was mentioned by the Prime Minister as having arrived at the maximum has not arrived at the maximum by quite a considerable amount, but there are gentlemen who are senior in point of service who have arrived at the maximum, and I imagine this was a case of mistake and that another name should be substituted for the one that was mentioned. Clearly the Prime Minister was explicit in the fact that it was amongst other things length of service and having arrived at the maximum which rendered one eligible for promotion, and the circumstances being equal, the man who had arrived at the maximum should have the promotion rather than the man who had not. I ask the Prime Minister to make a note of it, so that nothing shall be done in the premises until it is looked into to see that a mistake is not being made. Just at the moment I cannot think of the gentleman's name who has come to the maximum of his class and who is older in service than the one whose name is mentioned.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: This is in the Indian Department, and I was acting minister at the time and received the instructions given to me. Since there has been a Minister of the Interior I have not looked into the matter. This vote can stand and I will get the information in the meantime.

Steamboat service between Canada and Mexico, $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Does any one know what the condition of the Canada-Mexico service is now? It has been an appearing and vanishing quantity for some time; I do not know in which category it is now.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That matter is still under consideration. Tenders were first asked for a service with Cuba and Mexico; but the government of Mexico refused to subsidize any line which would call at Cuba. Therefore the question had to be considered as to whether there should be two different services, one for Cuba and one for Mexico. We have not yet received the last answer from the republic of Mexico as to what it intends to do in the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister's explanation was that there were two services contemplated, one on the Pacific coast and one on the Atlantic coast. I did not hear him say anything with reference to Cuba. I think my hon. friend has got the children a little mixed.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No. It is a fact that two services were proposed, one for the Atlantic coast and one for the Pacific coast; but there was nothing completed as regards a Pacific coast service.

National Transcontinental Railway—surveys, construction and other expenses, $290,500.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps the Prime Minister now would give some information as to what results have been reached by this National Transcontinental Railway Commission in its surveys. The Prime Minister will remember that on several occasions we recounted for his information what we gathered from the newspapers, but could not get from official sources. My hon. friend used to discount these sources of information somewhat, but they were all we could rely on. By this time I should think that we might expect the officers to give us a pretty good idea of the grades, length of line, curves, and what kind of working railway line could be constructed over the parts that had been surveyed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to say I cannot to-day give any more information than I have myself. The Minister of Railways, I think, has laid one or two reports of the commission on the table of the House. I do not know if my hon. friend has had an opportunity of reading them. I have not, but I think they are merely technical and do not go into that class of information which my hon. friend desires to have, at least as to the character of the country. As to the location of the line I think they are very minute and circumstantial and give a good account of the country, but I must say frankly to my hon. friend that I have not myself read the reports, I have only casual information as to their contents and I would not like to give information except what I have read myself. My hon. friend will agree that that is the proper course to follow.

Mr. FOSTER. If a man has not information he cannot give it. We will live in hope.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, my hon. friend will get it in print by and by.

Cattle quarantine—further amount required, $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to cattle quarantine an extra expenditure has already been made of some $29,000. The right hon. Prime Minister will recollect that ever since this parliament has been a parliament and we have had quarantine established and have looked a little after the health of animals the point has been pressed upon the government of paying for animals ordered to be slaughtered by veterinaries under the direction of the government. My right hon. friend will remember too that we have always been very cautious as to how far that principle was admitted, because, if it were fully admitted, no one could tell to what extent the expenditure could go, and it is also open to very great abuse as my right hon. friend will very readily see. Parliament had never sanctioned and no government had ever undertaken the policy of paying for the slaughter, of horses and cattle afflicted with certain diseases. It is a fact, I think, that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) takes a vote for cattle quarantine, and I think he feels that he is authorized to make certain payments by Order in Council, but I think the right hon. Prime Minister will agree with me that no new policy should be inaugurated in the way of the extension of these payments to such a degree that may entail paying out such enormous sums of money. By an extension made by Order in Council such as never was contemplated by parliament—and amongst all the discussion never received the assent of parliament—an Order in Council has been passed and the hon. Minister of Agriculture has already, he tells us, paid out about $29,000 and he has admitted that if it went on at the same rate as it probably would, a year would see $100,000 expended. He agreed with me when I said that if we carried out that policy in that way we would very soon be in for an expenditure of $500,000, or $1,000,000, or more. The point I raised was that it should not have been done without the previous authority of parliament after having the extension of such a policy discussed in parliament and getting the consent of the people's representatives. Otherwise it must be a somewhat strenuous and, I think, unauthorized stretch of cabinet authority to involve the country in so much expense as that would cost simply by Order in Council. The reply to it is a ready reply, but it is not at all satisfactory, that if parliament does not conclude to vote it then we will have to go back. That is putting the cart before the horse. You have the government pledged to such a policy and then you have the party behind the government, ready, as they always are, to carry out the government's policy in this respect; so that virtually, you force it on parliament. It seems to me that the better way is to come first to parliament, discuss it, give us the information as to what it will all amount to, and then, if parliament thinks fit to authorize the vote, the hon. minister has the right to expend under that vote. In this respect it was just the opposite, and I made the point—I think it is a good point and I did not raise it factiously—that I did not think that ought to be done until parliament had authorized it either by specially assenting to a vote, which is one way, or by a particular enactment. It certainly will lead to a tremendous expenditure of money, but what is almost as bad it will also open the way to a great deal of improper practice unless you can have sleuth hounds in almost every section of the country.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, I agree to a very great extent with what my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has said, and I want to assure him that the action in this particular respect was taken after very careful consideration and in consequence of the discovery of a state of affairs which seemed to call for some prompt action. I do not say, and I would not like to accept the theory that compensation should not be paid unless parliament has been warned of it. The theory and the practice of compensation are thoroughly understood when the vote for animal quarantine is passed. The Animal Contagious Diseases Act lays down the restrictions under which compensation for the slaughter of animals must be paid, and I think when that Act is passed and when the general vote for this purpose is passed by parliament, parliament does these things with its eyes fully open. I accept what my hon. friend says in this particular case about a new policy which had not been foreshadowed or debated and in such cases, if the circumstances will allow us to wait until parliament may be warned and the sense of parliament taken, I think it will be very much better. I would like to pursue that course, but at the same time I can quite understand cases arising, and I think in this particular instance such a case did arise, when it would be not in the public interest that action should be delayed until the meeting of parliament.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that there was a vote for this particular purpose?

Mr. FISHER. Not for this particular purpose. There is a general vote for the health of animals and out of that vote compensation for the slaughter of animals is paid. We have for many years paid compensation for hogs slaughtered for hog cholera and we have paid compensation for cattle slaughtered for what is known as Pictou cattle disease. This is the general policy and it has been for many years. We have never paid for slaughtering horses for glanders except in a few cases. We have never adopted the policy of paying for horses which are affected with glanders. We took the action to which my hon. friend refers, because we found that this disease, which is a very dangerous and a very treacherous disease, had been spreading and the condition of affairs had come to the point where drastic action seemed to be required. It was only because of what appeared to be the necessity for this drastic action that the government took the course which my hon. friend has properly described and they did it by Order in Council as the law authorizes them to do. In regard to the question which my hon. friend raises and in which I sympathize with him as to whether a new departure should be made which is going to involve such a large expenditure of public money and about which he thinks—I think rightly—that it is rightly—that it is advisable parliament ought to be consulted, I am quite willing to accept my hon. friend's suggestion, but I do it with the condition that where a condition of affairs arises which requires prompt action the authority of the Act which gives that power to the Council may be used in the public interest on such occasions and only on such occasions. I think that in this particular case such a state of affairs arose. We found, after trying for a long time to reduce the extent of glanders throughout the country without paying compensation and after the urgency of the case had been represented to us, that we had to do something to stop the spread of this disease. It was undoubtedly coming more prominently before us and we found a condition of danger existing that we had not appreciated or expected during the last session of parliament. For that reason we felt that it was our duty to act and act promptly in regard to it.

Mr. FOSTER. To what extent was that a sudden, abnormal development, or a matter of great urgency ?

Mr. FISHER. When I say 'sudden' it was just this : We had been for some time slaughtering horses that were afflicted with glanders without compensation. We found a great many more cases than we had any expectation of finding or than we had any suspicion existed. We carried on the practice of slaughtering horses. Very urgent representations were made that we ought not to slaughter these horses without compensation being granted. If we did not slaughter them disease would spread more and more, and on one or two occasions my officers reported that they were in danger of their lives almost if they carried out our instructions because the people resisted, and protested against the slaughter of their horses if they were not paid compensation. They held that if we paid compensation for hogs and cattle we should pay compensation for horses. I had either to cease to apply the regulations or I had to recommend that we should pay compensation, and an Order in Council was passed to a limited extent at first and afterwards applying to all cases. My chief veterinary who has just come back from the Northwest tells me that as a result of the work we are doing, he hopes and believes this expenditure will decrease in the very near future. Last month it was heavy, it probably will be heavy for the current month, but after that we expect there will be a decrease. I trust that before two or three months we will find a material decrease in this expenditure per month, but I warn the House that I will have to ask a considerable supplementary estimate for the fiscal year so as to make sure that I will be in a good position to carry out this policy. I am advised that it will probably be necessary to pay compensation for horses in the Northwest Territories suffering from maladie du coït. We first discovered the existence of this disease a little over a year ago. It is a very insidious disease, and it has spread more extensively than we had expected. If we neglect it, it may attain the same proportions as tuberculosis in cattle or glanders in horses, but if we endeavour to suppress it now we hope to be able to stamp it out very soon. It is in the public interest that in the case of horses running at large in the Northwest this disease should be suppressed at once.

Mr. HAGGART. If I understand the minister, there is an Act of parliament at present which authorizes him to do by Order in Council what he has done.

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. It seems extraordinary that the minister can make this expenditure without a vote of parliament.

Mr. FISHER. Of course parliament has to vote the money.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, but you made an expenditure over the amount voted by parliament.

Mr. FISHER. No. The claims for compensation are in but I have not spent the money. I have not used more money than was voted, but I am waiting to get this money to pay claims which have been made.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) to recollect that we have not violated the law either in the letter or in the spirit. We have authority from parliament to slaughter animals suffering from these diseases, but we have to take a vote of parliament every year for the money to pay compensation. Under this Act we have been slaughtering hogs for twenty years in different parts of the country, we have also slaughtered cattle and latterly we have had to slaughter horses suffering from glanders. We thought we could slaughter in a few isolated cases which were very serious without paying compensation, but the disease spread more than we expected. A man has just as much right to be compensated for the loss of his horse as for the loss of his cow or his hog. I agree that if the expenditure should reach $200,000 or $300,000 a year, parliament should be notified in advance. This year we have a supplementary vote on account of the outbreak of a certain disease, but next year as we may have to expend on that item alone a couple of hundred thousand dollars, the appropriation will be contained in the next supplementary estimates.

Mr. HAGGART. Parliament should have also the right to consider whether the compensation should be in full or in part.

Mr. FISHER. The Contagious Diseases Animals Act fixes the mode of compensation, and all payments in regard to compensation are made under the provisions of that Act.

Mr. FOSTER. What I have not had made clear yet is that there was any extraordinary development of that disease which made it necessary for the minister to act at this particular time. There may have been; but glanders has always been with us, and is here or there through the country more or less all the time. What has not been shown is that there was some sudden outburst of the disease, which operated as a menace to public property, something which, unless it was immediately dealt with would have entailed a tremendous loss on the country. I do not understand glanders to be that kind of a disease, or that there was a special outburst of it at this particular time, which rushed the minister and the government into an expenditure of $29,000 over and above their vote. I think it would have been fair for the government to have said: We will take up these claims and consider them, but we have no vote from parliament for this, and you will have to wait until we advise with parliament about it. I quite understand that if you slaughter a man's hog or his cow and pay him something for it, it is pretty difficult to say that if you slaugther his horse, you ought not to pay something for it; but, after all, the resources of the country are limited, and you cannot do everything which, by parity of reasoning, you might be asked to do. A very important point made by my hon. friend here is that parliament ought to have a chance to discuss this whole matter and to fix the amount and the mode of proceeding; because there are dangers lying in this slaughter of horses and paying two-thirds of the value of the horse in every case. There is no reason at all for doing this unless there is the strictest effort on the part of the department to stamp out the disease and to prevent it coming into the country from outside. If you are going just to start an industry of paying for glandered horses, and allow the disease to come in and spread without dealing effectively with it, that is not defensible. You have to put the three things together, and very closely together if you expect to avoid tremendous expenditures. If the disease can be stamped out in a few years, so that it will be confined to a very small extent, that will be a great gain to the country and a legitimate effort for parliament to undertake in the way of co-operation. I think there ought to be co-operation, because it is helping the citizen to keep his stock in such a condition as to avoid loss.

Mr. FISHER. The whole principle of compensation under the Animals Contagious Diseases Act rests on what my hon. friend has just alluded to, that is, co-operation between the owner and the country at large. The payment is only two-thirds of the value, and under our regulations the value is fixed by the officer of the department who orders the slaughter. We have found that the valuation should not be fixed by local veterinarians, neighbours of the people whose animals were being slaughtered; and therefore we have made it a fixed rule for several years back to have the compensation fixed by a permanent officer of the department, and to have the slaughter carried out only on his order or report. I think this is necessary in the interest of the taxpayer at large, and I have been pressing on my officers the importance of seeing that while this work is done properly and effectively, still great care should be exercised to avoid any unnecessary compensation. In regard to my hon. friend's contention that no case has been made out of urgency, I thought I had explained the condition which antedated the Order in Council. We have for some time been killing horses for glanders wherever found. We found a great many more rather suddenly during the last year. We continued to kill without paying the compensation. My hon. friend can quite understand that when one or two horses a month are killed, there is no great outcry or difficulty; but when a hundred a month are killed there is an outcry which accumulates in force and makes the procedure very difficult; and our officers were being resisted and obstructed in carrying out their instructions and the regulations. Under these conditions we had either to suspend the regulations and let the disease spread, which I do not think would have been in the country's interest, or to make arrangements for carrying out the regulations satisfactorily and effectively, and the only way we could do that was to pay the compensation. We therefore passed the Order in Council for that purpose. The emergency arose under the conditions which I have described, and I think it is a legitimate reason. If we had waited until parliament met and provided the compensation, we would probably have had a continuous conflict between the officers of the department and the owners of the horses; and if we had suspended the slaugther of the horses during those months, we would have had a very material spread of the disease, which would have been injurious to the public interest, and which I do not think parliament would have supported me in allowing.

Mr. BARR. Has any consideration been given to the subject of lump-jaw in cattle, which I suppose the minister is aware has broken out violently of late in some places in western Ontario?

Mr. FISHER. If that is so, it must be from some local cause, because we have not had any report of it. The law requires every veterinarian, and even every owner of animals, to report the existence of contagious disease within his knowledge; but we have not had any report of the disease to which my hon. friend alludes. Lump-jaw is a disease which is not as a rule, carried from animal to animal. The matter from the affected animal is conveyed to the grass while the animal is grazing, and another animal eats part of that grass and thus becomes affected. But it is a disease that is quite curable in its early stages. I have known several cases to be cured in my own herd.

Mr. BARR. I may say that the department was telephoned to in connection with the matter, and I understood that the answer which came back was that they did not pay compensation for lump-jaw if any animals had to be slaughtered.

Mr. FISHER. We have never paid for it.

Mr. BARR. Is there a list of diseases in which compensation is paid?

Mr. FISHER. No, there is no list of diseases. The diseases I have mentioned are the only ones in which we have been in the habit of paying compensation. I may say that the Act authorizes the minister to pay compensation by Order in Council at any time. I am authorized by the Contagious Diseases Animals Act to pay compensation for an animal which was slaughtered for lump-jaw, slaughtered by my officers, but I never have given an order for the slaughter of an animal for that disease, because, as I have stated, it is not a very widespread disease.

Mr. BLAIN. The officers of the department, as I understand, have power to destroy a stable in which an infected animal is found. I would ask if, in the Order in Council in March last, compensation is allowed for a stable.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so, because I do not think we have ever contemplated the destruction of the stable. There have been a very few cases where we have destroyed the stables where hogs had been slaughtered, and where the stables were of such a character that it was cheaper to destroy and pay for them than to cleanse, disinfect and rebuild them. But we always give the owner the alternative, saying that if he will satisfactorily disinfect the buildings, they need not be destroyed.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister will remember a letter that I read to the committee the other evening from Mr. Brumell, of Mono Road, Peel county, stating that an officer of the hon. gentleman's department had ordered an animal to be killed and the stable to be taken down. The writer of the letter pointed out that the stable cost $25, and he lost not only the horse but the stable as well. I want to know whether, in a case of that kind, the officer of the department having fixed the value of the horse, he would have any power under the Act to fix the price of the stable, and if so, would the stable be paid for?

Mr. FISHER. I have forgotten the case the hon. gentleman mentions. But I will look it up before the supplementary estimates for next year come up.

Archives, $20,000.

Mr. FISHER. I notice that concurrence has been given to item 36 of the main estimates for next year, that was passed on the 28th of February, and to which I call the attention of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). I intended on concurrence to ask that words be added to the item allowing that expenditure to be made contrary to the Civil Service Act. I explained to the House the other night when passing the supplementaries for the current year, that until quite recently the Auditor General had considered that the archives vote was not governed by the Civil Service Act, but he has recently changed his mind, and consequently a number of employees engaged in this work, but who have not passed the Civil Service examinations, cannot receive their salaries. I think it would be unfair to turn these people out, and unless these words are added to the vote, I will not be able next year to pay some of these officers their salaries. Now, however, that the Auditor General has changed his mind, and considers that that vote ought to be paid subject to the Civil Service Act, I am going to ask the House to allow those words to be added. I was not aware that we were going to take up any of the items in the main estimates, otherwise I would have been prepared to make this explanation sooner.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister want the whole of that vote to be outside the civil service ?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the minister will have to mention specially the sums that he wants to be excepted, otherwise he will have to except the whole $20,000.

Mr. FISHER. That is not necessary. A good many of the officers have passed the civil service examinations. Until recently, the Auditor General informs my deputy, he never considered that that vote came under the Civil Service Act, and it was only during the present fiscal year that he informed my deputy that he had changed his mind, and having looked into the matter, thought that it ought to be subject to the Civil Service Act. If I was beginning work in that branch now I would only appoint men who had passed the Civil Service examination and who would consequently be subject to the Act. But before this information was given to me, some people were appointed, and some have been a long time in the service who had not passed the examination, and if this vote was taken as subject to the Civil Service Act these men would have to step out, and I would have to find others who had passed the examination. I could not give my hon. friend off-hand the details now, but I think if $5,000 of that $20,000 was allowed to be expended without the restrictions of the Civil Service Act, it would be quite sufficient, perhaps $3,000 would be sufficient.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not desire to see old officers lose their positions because of a change in the ruling of the Auditor General ; at the same time, I do not want to make the whole of the archives possibly outside of the Civil Service Act, as it would be if you made that amendment apply to the total vote. I wanted to know if the minister could specify the amount of the salaries that would be affected by the ruling of the Auditor General, or the names of the officers.

Mr. FISHER. I could not say at the moment ; but I am sure that $5,000 out of the $20,000 would be sufficient.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister thought $3,000 might be enough.

Mr. FISHER. I got $3,000 the other day in my supplementaries for this year, free from that restriction, but my deputy tells me he thinks it would hardly be enough for the whole of the ensuing fiscal year.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Auditor General's ruling affect all the salaries for 1904-5?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I imagine that $3,000 would cover it all, because you have probably got enough to cover it for the year.

Mr FISHER. No. One officer did not commence the beginning of the year, but about the 1st of January.

Mr. FOSTER. Except $4,000.

Mr. FISHER. Yes—as to $4,000, the Civil Service Act does not apply.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that might go in.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that only those who have passed the civil service examination will be employed in the Archives Branch ?

Mr. FOSTER. Unless authority is given by parliament?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. I would propose that this item be amended by inserting the words '$4,000 of which may be paid notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.'

Mr. FOSTER. That would do for this year. For next year it can be made more definite.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. With regard to the item in the Department of Indian Affairs that was reserved, the salary in question was not that of Mr. McArthur or Mr. Bigger, but of Mr. Bray. Mr. Bray is acting as the chief surveyor of the department. When we had that item under discussion some time ago, I stated that Mr. Bray had reached the top of his class and that the object was to make him a chief clerk. The item provided in the estimates for another chief clerkship ; there were already five and we asked an appropriation for six. On the information given to me, I stated that Mr. Bray had reached the top of his class. In that I was in error; he has not reached the top of his class, but it is still thought in the department that he should be promoted to the rank of chief clerk. The reasons for this have been given to me in the following words by the head of the department :

Mr. Bray was appointed on June 14th, 1884, as a third-class clerk in the survey branch. His salary was $800. He was promoted to a second-class clerkship on the 1st July, 1887, at $1,100, the minimum salary for that class, and he reached his maximum on July 1st, 1893. He remained a second-class clerk at a salary of $1,400 until the 1st July, 1899, when he was appointed chief surveyor with rank of first-class clerk, his salary for the first year not being increased.

Attention is drawn to the fact that owing to the death of the chief surveyor, Mr. W. A. Austin, in December, 1896, Mr. Bray assumed charge of that section of work. He was then a second-class clerk, and did not receive promotion to a first-class clerkship (which was Mr. Austin's rank) until the 1st July, 1899. This fact is stated to show that Mr. Bray has not been rapidly promoted.

Mr. Bray is receiving promotion not because he is at the maximum of his class, but because the chief surveyor of the department is considered now to be entitled to a chief clerkship, not only on account of professional and technical qualifications, but because of the large increase of work owing to the settlement of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories.

The department is now undertaking subdivision of reserves and the delimitation of boundaries which is constantly being called for.

Mr. Bray is in charge of all survey and engineering improvements for reserves, drainage, roads, &c., and his position requires not only technical qualifications but good judgment.

For these reasons the head of the department has recommended that he should be promoted from the position which he now has to the position of chief clerk. Mr. Bray receives to-day a salary of $1,650, and by the statutory increase of $50 a year in four years more he could reach the maximum of his class, but the deputy head recommends that he should be promoted to the position for which provision is made in the estimate.

Mr. FOSTER. The emendation which has been made in the information rather forces a change of ground on my right hon. friend, which he takes with facility equal to that with which he has pressed the claim on the other grounds. I do not know that the ground is altogether satisfactory. The right hon. gentleman says that Mr. Bray has not been very rapidly promoted. Mr. Bray commenced his service in 1884, seven years later than one clerk in the first class and three years later than another clerk in the first class, and one year later than a third clerk in the first class, all of whom have therefore performed longer service, and are at the head of their class except in one case and close up to the head of their class in two other cases, so that on the ground of length of service in the department, Mr. McGirr, especially as it stands there, has a right to the promotion rather than Mr. Bray, who commenced his service seven years later. Taking the length of service, Mr. Bray getting now $1,700 and Mr. McGirr getting $1,900, Mr. Bray has had a more rapid promotion than Mr. McGirr, and has nothing to complain of in that respect. I do not see why it is necessary that a surveyor taking charge of a branch should be a chief clerk. If he has taken charge of the survey branch following the death of Mr. Austin, it might be a fair argument that he should receive an increase of salary if that were deemed right, but you are not only giving him an increase of salary but are putting him over the heads of those who have served longer and are thoroughly efficient clerks still. Then you are putting him in a branch above that of chief clerks, where he can come to the maximum of $2,500. It does not seem to me that it is fair treatment that the old and tried servants of the department, who have been longer in the service, against whom, as I understand, nothing could be urged at all, but who are overlooked, against the principle which was so strongly advocated by the premier, that when a man got to the head of his class he ought to create a chief clerkship in order to promote him and not disappoint him. You do not want to disappoint Mr. McGirr any more than Mr. Bray, but Mr. Bray would not be stopped for two or three years, for he would get his increase while Mr. McGirr gets none, although he is seven years longer in the service and is a thoroughly efficient clerk. I am not saying anything against Mr. Bray, but it does look like a forced promotion, and certainly leaves a bitter taste in the mouth, not only of those in that class, but in every class in the service, who seem to find out that even when they have done good service and longer service, for some reason they are not preferred, but are left in the old class whilst others are put over their heads.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have nothing to retract as to the principle which I laid down when we had the discussion on this before. There is simply another principle which applies in this case. I stated on a former occasion that when a clerk had reached the maximum, if he was a good man and a deserving official, he should be promoted. I think so now ; and, as a rule, that the more aged should be promoted before those who are younger in the service. Still, my hon. friend would not take that as an absolute rule. There are reasons which I do not say apply to this case—for I know nothing of the merits of either of the men—but my hon. friend would not say that in all cases promotion should go by seniority. There may be cases where seniority ought to make way for special causes. I would not apply this rule to the present case, because, as I said, I know nothing of the men. If the case occurred in my own department, if the men were meritorious, I would promote both of them to chief clerkships, but the matter is not one in my own department, and when I dealt with it I acted on the information furnished me. The information was erroneous ; I thought then that Mr. Bray was at the top of his class, and, so far as I remember, that was the chief reason given for the promotion. In this I was in error. The promotion is not because he is at the top of his class, but it is that for the services he performed, and for the manner in which he performed these services and for his qualifications, he ought to be promoted to the rank of chief clerk. My hon. friend says : That may be true, but you pass over the head of another officer who is at the head of his class and who is a good officer, and certainly it seems to me invidious to pass over one and not the other. I do not say no to that. It may be that there is good reason to promote the other clerk, but if Mr. McGirr is not promoted that is not a reason why Mr. Bray should not be promoted. I think my hon. friend will agree to that.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot agree to that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He ought to agree. Suppose that Mr. Bray is qualified in every respect and is giving good service, and that the services which he performs are, in the judgment of the deputy head, such as would entitle him to promotion, my hon. friend would not refuse to promote him because there is another gentleman who is at the head of his class and who may be also well qualified. The logical conclusion would be that there should be two promotions instead of one, but because one is not promoted it does not follow that the other should not be. I refuse to make it an absolute rule that in every case promotion should be by seniority. I do not think my hon. friend is ready to commit himself to that principle.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If promotion is not to go strictly by seniority, and if, in the judgment of the deputy head of the department, this gentleman, Mr. Bray, is entitled to promotion, it is no objection to say that he has passed over the head of another gentleman who is his senior in the service. That may be a case, not against the promotion of Mr. Bray, but in favour of the promotion of Mr. McGirr. In that case, I think the matter might be inquired into; and, more than that, I think my hon. friend will agree, that he should not ask of me.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot accept my right hon. friend's argument or agree with him for several reasons. In the first place it is neither good ethics nor a good economical basis for a sound state of affairs. My right hon. friend will not say, that, because a deputy head, for reasons we do not know, recommends it, a man who has had a less service, who has been promoted more rapidly in the service and who is not at the head of his class by two or three years should be promoted into another class higher than that which he now occupies with the advantage of advancing yearly to $2,500, as in this case, and that a man equally as good in his service, longer by seven years in his term and who has gone to the maximum of his class should be passed over. If the circumstances are equal an injustice is being done—not perhaps an injustice because you put Mr. Bray up, but an injustice because you do not take up the claims of the one who has had longer service and who is at the head of his class. An officer who makes such a recommendation ought to have some very good reasons for passing over Mr. McGirr, who has been seven years longer in the service than Mr. Bray. I am bound to stand up for the conditions of promotion which are length of service, fidelity and capacity to do the work. Now then suppose that in point of fidelity, and capacity they are equal; Mr. McGirr has the advantage of seven years priority, he is at the head of his class and has been at the head of his class for years. He has a stone wall directly ahead of his. Mr. Bray has no stone wall ahead of him. He may go on for three years, making a step in advance every year, and bettering his position. That is a condition which I think the right hon. Prime Minister should take into account. It is no argument that because he is not the Minister of the Interior he will allow the Deputy Minister of the Interior to perpetrate an injustice if it be an injustice. For the time being he is the Minister of the Interior and if an injustice is being perpetrated my right hon. friend has to take the onus of it. Does it seem fair that Mr. McGirr, an old servant who has been doing his duty faithfully, who has reached the head of his class and has been there for years, shall be allowed to stand there facing a stone wall, and that you shall take another man who is three years from the head of his class, boost him up and say: go along, peace and prosperity and increased salary be with you; we want you to get up to $2,500? That does not help the morale of the service and it is not fair treatment to other officials. Who recommends this? The Minister of the Interior? One comes and another goes. We do not know whether the Minister of the Interior has been at the bottom of it. It may be that deputies sometimes have whims, sometimes have favouritisms, and it is the duty of the minister to find out whether or not an injustice is being done through some whim of the deputy. I think we ought to at least get a statement from the right hon. Prime Minister, that, if this vote passes, before it is put into effect, we shall have a full explanation from the Minister of the Interior and have an opportunity of seeing whether an injustice is being done to Mr. McGirr. I will ask my right hon. friend where he will be with the civil service if he takes the ground that the moment a clerk gets to the head of his class he is to be put into another class. That is a ground, which, I am afraid, my right hon. friend's colleagues, if they are careful thinkers, and look at the effect on the civil service of all this will say is not one based on sound principle. When you arrange your grades and when you have your different classes of service your theoretical idea is that within certain ranges of salary you get all you want for the service and you expect that these services will be performed within their theoretical ranges. Now and then, if a man has strong personality, excellent ability and shows merit and the like of that he will advance, but it must always be the case that a large proportion of those in the service must keep within the bounds of the classes within which they are. But, if every time a man gets up to the top of his class, in the generosity of his heart and with the country's money, my right hon. friend will say: Boost him up into another class, he will have a lot of trouble on his hands in a short time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The very last reason which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) gave is the best defence of this vote and of the promotion of Mr. Bray. I call the attention of my hon. friend to his argument. Where would the administration be, where would the ministers be, where would the country be and where would the treasury be if you admit the principle that the moment a clerk is at the head of his class he is to be hoisted up into another class? I think my hon. friend will agree with me that we have to consider not only the length of service and the fact that a clerk has reached the head of his class but we have to look also into his qualifications. One man therefore might be entitled to promotion if he has not reached the top of his class and another man who has reached the top of his class might not be entitled to promotion.

Mr. FOSTER. I want that shown.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think we have a pretty efficient service, but at the same time I think my hon. friend will agree with me that all the members of the service are not equally efficient. It is not sufficient to say that a man has been in the service for a certain number of years. He must also show that he has the qualifications that my hon. friend has enumerated of fidelity and capacity. I would add another qualification, that of the responsibility of the work that the man has to do. If a man like Mr. Bray is at the head of a very important branch of the department, I think it is a good reason why his claim for promotion should be considered. As to the merits of Mr. McGirr, I know nothing at all. I do not know Mr. McGirr. I do not know what position he has in the service. It may be that the reasons which have been given by my hon. friend would entitle Mr. McGirr to promotion; it may be that his fidelity, his capacity and the responsibility of the work which he has to do might entitle him to promotion in preference to Mr. Bray. If we apply the test of fidelity, capacity and the responsibility of the work done to the case of Mr. Bray it may entitle Mr. Bray to promotion, but if there is only one promotion to be given and if the qualifications of Mr. McGirr are such that he should be given the preference then it is a question to be considered by the minister who is in charge of the department. My hon. friend says that deputy heads sometimes have whims. All men are apt to have whims. That applies not only to deputy heads, but also to members of parliament, and perhaps a man might be considered qualified who is not qualified. However, if there is a promotion to be had, I have no objection at all that the merits of the candidates—I will not say candidates—shall be considered and that the one who is to be promoted shall be selected by the minister on the recommendation of the deputy head. In these matters the recommendation of the deputy head is not final although as a rule it goes very far towards forming the judgment of the minister in charge, and I think we had better leave the matter to the judgment of the minister in charge. I am sorry to say I have not that familiarity with the case which would enable me to give my own judgment. I simply take the representations which have been made to me.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, we will take it up again some time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that all the money you want now?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, we have not had a bad day. The Supply Bill is not quite ready, but it will be ready after eight o'clock to take the first reading and I would therefore, if my hon. friend has no objection, ask you, Mr. Speaker, to call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Printing and distribution of reports and bulletins of farms, $7,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is the usual item. I overlooked it when I was passing the items for the experimental farm; it has been for a number of years a separate item.

Mr. COCHRANE. Could not some means be devised for expediting the distribution of these reports? The report of last year is only being distributed now when it has lost a good deal of its interest to the farming community. If the reports were reduced in volume, the facts put in concise language and the reports gotten out sooner they would be more valuable.

Mr. FISHER. The experimental farms report is issued for the year ending November, and we generally get the copy into the printers' hands by the first January. The printer has been doing the work with more despatch lately, and I do not think it can be considered as dilatory if we get it printed within three months. Of course the entire edition is not out in that time, but it is distributed from the central farm as rapidly as we get it from the printer. I sometimes struggle to somewhat condense the report, but there is always so much information that seems to be of value that the director is very loth to cut it out and I sympathize with him generally. I doubt very much if the reduction of the report by a few hundred pages would make much difference in the promptness of its delivery.

Mr. COCHRANE. The facts might be couched in a great deal less verbiage. The officials appear to think they are not doing anything unless they produce a big volume, and it is pretty hard for a man coming off the farm to get at the facts.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Would it not be possible to have a complete set of these bulletins bound and given to every member of the House. Although it may be true that some of the lawyers would not care for them, still they contain a great deal of valuable information and the agriculturists would like to have them.

Mr. FISHER. As the information is collated the bulletins are printed and issued. We do not keep a number of copies for the purpose of rebinding them afterwards; the people who get them might be expected to put them together and take care of them.

Mr. BLAIN. It seems to me that a footnote should be printed on all of these bulletins informing the farmers that all correspondence which they may send to the Department of Agriculture will be carried through the mails free of postage. A very large number of the letters that come to the members of parliament are stamped, and I am quite sure that a considerable number of letters addressed to the government also bear stamps.

Mr. FISHER. It is very seldom that we get letters with stamps on them.

Mr. BLAIN. I am very much surprised at that, because it is not generally known to the farmers that correspondence addressed to the department comes free. I have addressed farmer's audiences on this point and it is often a surprise to them to learn it. It would be very simple to print a foot note stating that letters addressed to the department will go free of postage.

Mr. FISHER. It is a very simple matter.

Mr. BLAIN. If that were done I think it would encourage a more extensive correspondence with the department, although the minister may think that the correspondence is sufficient now.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, not at all.

Mr. BLAIN. I am one of those who believe that expenditure for bulletins of this kind is wise, and if necessary I would vote for a larger sum, so that the farmers in different parts of the country might be supplied with these bulletins which really contain very useful information.

Mr. BARKER. I wish to confirm from my observation what the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) has said. It is not only in the counties, but in the towns and cities, that the impression prevails that while a member can send a letter free, his correspondent cannot send a letter free to him. It is generally understood that we at Ottawa can use the post office free, but the great mass of the people, whether in the cities or the counties, do not know that they can send a letter through the post office without postage to a member or to the departments.

Mr. FISHER. I only know that in the department we do not get one letter in a thousand with a stamp on it.

Mr. BARKER. I venture to say that I do not get one letter in ten that has not a stamp on it.

Mr. HENDERSON. My experience has been something like that of other hon. members. It is not only the farmers who get astray on this question. On Saturday evening I had occasion to ride through the very rich and intelligent county of North Oxford on a very important mission, and in conversation with a gentleman who had been a parliamentary candidate in North Oxford at one time, I told him that he could send correspondence free to any member of the House of Commons, when he begged to correct me, and said it was only members who could send correspondence to their constituents. I told him that he was mistaken, that he could send anything up to 5 lbs. in weight.

Mr. FISHER. That gentleman was defeated?

Mr. HENDERSON. He was defeated, and no wonder; but the next man who is running there is not going to be defeated; they are going to change the programme. I am surprised that there is not more correct knowledge on this subject. The department has done a great deal, but postmasters ought to be instructed to direct the people when they are posting letters to members that it is not necessary for them to put stamps on them. If the department would instruct the postmasters throughout the country to that effect, that would convey the information to the people better than it could be done in any other way.

Mr. BARR. With regard to the distribution of these bulletins, I regret to say that they are not the benefit to the country that they ought to be. The fact is that they are lying around the corridors of this House to-day, as they have done in former years.

Mr. FISHER. Allow me to correct my hon. friend. These bulletins are sent direct from the farm, and do not lie around this House at all.

Mr. BARR. I refer to the reports which we have now.

Mr. FISHER. They are also sent direct from the farm to the extent of 60,000 or 70,000 besides a few which are sent to members.

Mr. BARR. They are sent to whom ?

Mr. FISHER. To people who have applied for them and to persons whose names have been given to us. My hon. friend has in his mind. I think, the reports of the evidence taken before the Committee on Agriculture, which the House manages, and which the department has nothing whatever to do with.

Mr. BARR. My hon. friend is right so far as that is concerned. I was coming to that point. I wish to bring before the House a grievance which I brought to some extent a few days ago. It might be as well to bring it to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, as we have not at the present time a Postmaster General—at least, he is on the stump, and will not return for a week or two. It has been the custom of members of this House, and I think a very wise one, to send copies of the evidence taken before the Committee on Agriculture, in parcels to rural postmasters, with the understanding that they would place them on their counters, so that the farmers, when coming to the store to purchase, might carry them away if they so desired. My experience has been that the farmers appreciated these reports very much. But to my surprise I find that the following letter has been sent to one of the postmasters in my riding :

> The department is informed that under date of the 20th April last a package of government publications addressed to you was posted from the House of Commons, the contents of which were apparently intended for distribution by you at your office, contrary to the instructions contained in departmental circular of the 15th day of April last.

I telephoned to the deputy postmaster general asking him what the contents of that circular were, but I was informed that it was a departmental regulation and therefore could not be divulged. I thought, owing to the lateness of the session, that I could not ask for a copy of that circular to be brought down. As it has been sent to the rural postmasters who have been accustomed to distribute these reports, they are afraid to place this information on their counters for fear that their heads will be taken off. The course we have been pursuing is one calculated to distribute a great deal of useful knowledge. I have been accustomed to follow that course, both in this House and in the Ontario House, and this is the first time in my political history that I have heard any objection to it. On the contrary, I think it should be encouraged. How otherwise is that evidence to be distributed ? I have endeavoured to distribute all the matter that has come to me, but I cannot find time to send it out in different envelopes. The next paragraph of this circular goes on to say :

> Be so good as to let me know precisely what this package contains, and what disposition was made of the contents by you.

I ask by what right any inspector of the Post Office Department inquires what are the contents of a package which has my frank on it ? To my mind it is a gross infringement on the rights and privileges of members of this House. The very fact of the department sending out that circular has the effect of frightening the postmasters and preventing them giving information which they would otherwise give. As neither the Postmaster General nor the First Minister is present, I think the Minister of Agriculture should look into that circular and should inform the House what it contains. It is the right of members to know what is in a circular relating to the parcels which they send through the mails from this House.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend will see that this is a matter that does not affect the item before the House at all.

Mr. BARR. It certainly does.

Mr. FISHER. Was the package to which my hon. friend refers a package of bulletins from the farm ?

Mr. BARR. One of them was.

Mr. FISHER. I shall be glad to look into that matter.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not think it matters much whether they were bulletins issued by the department or evidence taken before the committee. It is very strange that while we have a Department of Agriculture and an Agricultural Committee of this House, the reports are issued and they lie around this House ; or they may not be printed for about a year, and the result is that when they are printed they are of very little use, because they have become stale. There is another reason why they cannot be sent out separately, and that is because the regulations provide for giving the members only 5,000 envelopes of a size sufficient to hold these reports. Now what are we going to do ? Are we going to buy envelopes to send these out separately ?

Mr. FISHER. I do.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The Minister of Agriculture is a man of wealth, I understand.

Mr. FISHER. I use a portion of my sessional allowance for that sort of work.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Some people can well afford to do that, because they have got a lot of means behind. Besides that, the Minister of Agriculture not only has his indemnity, but he has officials to do this work for him. He has got $7,000 back of that again, and besides, a very large income from his private property.

Mr. FISHER. Has he ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Now I am strongly of the opinion that we ought to be allowed to send these things out in parcels. I was not aware that a circular had been issued by the department prohibiting that. I do not see why postmasters in any part of this country should not be instructed to distribute these, because they are parliamentary papers. I think we ought to have that circular at once laid upon the table of the House so that we may see what it contains.

Mr. FISHER. I will see the Prime Minister about it.

Mr. BARR. I think that in other respects there could be a great improvement in the distributions. We have in the room upstairs, I suppose, about twenty men called typewriters, and I think only one of them is a shorthand writer.

Mr. FISHER. Would the hon. gentleman pardon me for interrupting him ? Really this discussion about the distribution of literature from the House of Commons has nothing whatever to do with this vote. I have no objection at all to this discussion at the proper time, but this is not the proper time ; this vote is purely for the cost of printing and distribution, it has nothing to do with members distributing their literature from the House.

Mr. BARR. I entirely dissent from my hon. friend. We are now trying to get information to the farmers. As I said, we have about twenty of these men upstairs, whereas in Toronto last session, and even under the Reform government, there were less than twenty, and all were shorthand writers ; and the result was that members of the house had some one to help them distribute their literature, and do all their correspondence. The number of members in the Toronto legislature is less than half the number of members in this House, and yet they had nearly twenty shorthand writers at their disposal. It is utterly impossible for the members of this House to do all this work and do justice to their correspondence. I would like to ask the First Minister if he has obtained any information concerning that regulation of the 15th of April.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have received the information from the Postmaster General. I am sorry I have not got it with me, I will give it to my hon. friend to-morrow.

For the development of the live stock, dairying and fruit industries, the improvement of seeds, and the promotion of the sale of food and other agricultural products ; employees paid from this sum not to be subject to the Civil Service Act, $220,000.

Mr. FISHER. I may say that this is a regular vote taken every year for the Agriculture Department. It has heretofore been administered under the supervision of the Commissioner of Agriculture and Dairying, Prof. Robertson. Perhaps I ought at once to explain that during this fiscal year Prof. Robertson has handed in his resignation and has severed his connection with the department. I need hardy dwell upon the regret which I personally feel at the loss of so eminent, and successful, and painstaking a public servant. My only relief at his loss is the knowledge that although he has left the service of the government, Professor Robertson still serves the agricultural interests of Canada, having taken a position in the control and management of a great agricultural station or college which is to be established on the island of Montreal through the beneficence of Sir William McDonald. I had a conversation with Professor Robertson not long before this step was taken, and had the advantage of discussing with him the future arrangements for carrying on this work. I think it is not necessary to appoint anybody to take his place. Under Professor Robertson the work for which this money has been voted was divided into three divisions, each one having an efficient officer at its head. I think that each of these officers is well qualified to take charge of the divisions with which they were specially charged, when they reported directly to the deputy minister and through him to me. I have now organized this work on that basis, and it is moving very satisfactorily. I think that no harm to the public service will come from it. While I regret extremely the loss of Professor Robertson's services to the country and to myself, I feel satisfied that the departmental work will go on very satisfactorily under the charge of Mr. Ruddick, Commissioner of Dairying, Mr. Hodgson, Commissioner of Live Stock, and Mr. Clark, Commissioner for seeds and seed growing, each of these being directly responsible through the deputy minister to myself, in the same way that Professor Robertson was before. The vote is still the same vote, but it is being divided amongst these three divisions.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Why do you not take three votes and give us the sum for each ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think there is any necessity for dividing the vote. I was going to give a short outline of the way this money will be spent. The dairy commissioner has about $130,000, the commissioner for seeds about $35,000 and the live stock commissioner about $50,000. This leaves about $5,000 not devoted to any one of these great divisions, but retained for any agricultural work that may arise during the year for which no other provision may have been made. I would instance some investigations in regard to the growth of tobacco which have been carried on in recent years under Professor Robertson, but not under any one of these officers who had charge of a division under Professor Robertson. With regard to these three great divisions, I may explain that the dairy commissioner has charge, not only of the dairy work—the cool curing rooms for cheese which we have been running for two or three years, the creameries in the Northwest which we have been running for many years, and the cold storage work of the country generally—but also what is called the extension of markets for Canadian food products. This latter includes the inspection and management in regard to the shipping of our different products, the question of prices, and also the work of our officials in England, who watch the arrival of our food products in that great market. The administration of the Fruit Inspection Act and the Fruit Marks Act also come under this division, which has to do with what we call the commercial work —the management of the transportation and handling of our food products which this great branch, under Professor Robertson, has always dealt with. The live stock commissioner's branch carries on the work we do on behalf of the live stock interests of Canada, the keeping of the records which I explained to the House a little while ago, the sales of live stock throughout the country ; the work we do in connection with farmers' institutes ; the work we do in connection with the exhibitions, trying to bring them to uniform lines and helping them by supplying judges ; and also the work we do in connection with the interprovincial trade in live stock which has arisen of late years, and which has called for a good deal of supervision and assistance in the way of spreading information among the people as to the supplies of live stock that may be had from different parts of the country. The seed division will cover two main items. The first is the work we are doing to promote the use of better and cleaner seed. And now that the Seed Control Act has passed this House, and, I hope, will pass the Senate soon and will become law, the second item will be the administration of that Act. In connection with this branch we are encouraging and helping the formation of seed-growers' associations all over the country, by means of which we hope to get men interested in growing better seed for use on our farms. I regret to say that many of our farmers are careless with regard to the quality of seed they use. There is immense room for improvement, not only in the varieties of seed which ought to be used, but also in the use of good, well-matured seed, which will be sure to germinate and seed which is clean and free from weeds. When I say that our farmers have been careless in this respect, of course, a large number of our best farmers are very particular on this point, and have been doing good work both in the seed they have produced and in the choice of seed for use on their farms. Still, there is an immense number of our farmers who do not seem to understand the importance of watching closely the quality of the seed they use. The consequence has been, in many instances, that the crops have deteriorated, not only in quality, but in quantity.

This, in general outline, is the work covered by these divisions. I have a staff of, I believe, efficient and, I know, enthusiastic and energetic officers to deal with these matters, and I have proof from all parts of the country of the good work that is being done. I believe that the money spent in years past has been productive of great good, and I trust that in future increasing advantage will accrue to the Dominion through this branch of the public service.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It seems to me objectionable that the minister should have so large a vote to devote to any purpose he chooses within these very wide lines. The vote should be divided—so much for dairies, so much for live stock, so much for seed and so much for markets. When the Auditor General comes to look over this expenditure he will find no means of checking it, so long as it has been spent for any one of the things here mentioned. The minister may stand by what he says to-night or he may change—there is nothing to prevent him. If he knows what we want for each of these branches, I do not see why this vote should not be divided. If that is done, the minister can be held to account by the Auditor General. Perhaps that is the very thing the hon. gentleman does not want. I find that the vote for immigration is included in about three items, covering about $700,000 or $800,000. I think it is about time we had these estimates divided more carefully, so that we may know what we are voting, and so that the ministers may be held strictly to account for the expenditure of these large sums.

Mr. FISHER. We have not found any difficulty with regard to that in the past. I have always been ready to give full information on the subject. Occasionally, of course, one particular line of work costs a little more than is expected, but, under such a vote as this, it can be done, and so the public work can go on effectively.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What objection has the minister to dividing this up in the manner I suggest ?

Mr. FISHER. I may tell the hon. member frankly that my chief objection is that if you meet an unforeseen difficulty, involving a change in the estimates, it generally requires more discussion and explanation in the House. This vote is not changed from what it has been. The only difference is that the head has been removed and the whole has been brought under the deputy minister. Formerly it was under the control of Professor Robertson. That is the only change. Otherwise, when this was voted for Professor Robertson's branch last year it was voted just in the same way as I am asking to have it voted now.

Mr. COCHRANE. When Mr. Robertson was head he had control of the three departments for which the minister is now to have three gentlemen.

Mr. FISHER. As a matter of fact Professor Robertson had five or six departments under him and they were just as separate as they are to-day.

Mr. COCHRANE. I beg pardon, Mr. Minister. Professor Robertson had control of the three departments you have taken here, and he was responsible to the deputy minister for the conduct of these three departments.

Mr. FISHER. No, excuse me, Professor Robertson was independent of the deputy minister.

Mr. COCHRANE. He was responsible to you.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, he was responsible to me. Now the deputy minister is responsible.

Mr. COCHRANE. If you want to do all the talking let us know it. The minister is a good deal like his officials ; unless he has a great amount of verbiage to give us a little information, he does not think he is doing anything.

Mr. FISHER. I will not do it any more.

Mr. COCHRANE. We want you to do more, but it is better for the minister to answer the question and sit down and not do all the talking before the committee. I was right, Professor Robertson was responsible to you if not to the deputy and there was one man who controlled this money and now you have three controlling it responsible to the deputy and the deputy is responsible to you, so we do not know where it is going and you may spend money on departments, for which we do not vote it at all. We leave it just to your sweet will to spend this money where you see fit. We hear a good deal about the efficient work of these gentlemen but when I wanted to get from the minister himself in the committee the name of one of these gentlemen in order to get some seed, I could not get the information, but I found out from a circular sent to me that there is one man in East Northumberland whom I know very well who would not be able to supply half a dozen farmers with ten bushels apiece. I do not suppose he had any grain of the kind. I think there is a good deal of fraud in connection with this matter, and when the minister tells this House and the country that the farmers do not know enough to select the seed to sow on their farms I want to tell him he was brought up in a section of country that is not very intelligent, and he must not speak from that section of the country for the farmers of Ontario. The farmers of Ontario know how to select their seed as well as any official he has in his department and it would not take them half so long to put it in concise language so that a man of ordinary intelligence would know what it meant.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not think the minister has given a very good reason why this vote is a lump sum. The fact that it has been done before to my mind is no reason why it should be continued unless it is the best way. If the minister has an outline in his mind of what he wants for each of these departments, each of these items, I think that is the way to put it in the estimates, and then he would not spend any more than the amount specified on any particular service without coming back to the House for another vote. I think it would be better if the minister cannot do it this year to consider it another year.

Mr. FISHER. It is well worth considering.

Mr. FOSTER. I think what the hon. member (Mr. Uriah Wilson) has said is very true. The same argument that the minister uses might very well be used for simply saying we should vote to the Minister of Agriculture for such purposes as he has mentioned the sum of $525,600 in the belief that he will use it properly, in the proper proportion for each item. An estimate is for two things. It is in the first place to define to parliament what you want a certain amount of money for, and in the second place it is to give the auditing officer a chance to check according to the law and to see that no amount shall be expended except for the specific purpose for which it is voted. You put $220,000 in a lump sum and say : This is for the development of live stock, dairying, the fruit industry, improving the state of trade and agricultural products. You lump them together and it is absolutely at the will of the minister first and of Council afterwards. You could use that sum as you choose. The essence of every proper estimate is definiteness. You ought to know about what you are likely to spend on live stock, dairying and each of these other branches. There are at least five or six different specific objects there, and each vote should be divided so that it would be definite and clear ; as it is it is a lump sum. Something of this kind to a certain extent may have always been done, but I know when I had to do with estimates my purpose was to get them definitely stated. We happened this year to be questioning the Minister of Militia with reference to a lump vote. It appeared innocuous and it seemed to show that it was for a certain purpose that when we came to question him we found that he was undertaking three or four different works with it, in different parts of the country and in different provinces, and unless the question had happened to come up at that time, the city of Fredericton for instance would never have known that in that vote was included a sum to be spent for certain military works there. In proportion as you gather these different items and put them in a general vote, you do away with the definiteness of your estimates and you do away with the guard that the Auditor General has over them. The minister does more than that, he lays up trouble for himself. Influential supporters may come to him and say: Here is a project that we want you to carry out in the line of one of these things. You say: I was not proposing to spend this much. But they will reply: But your vote does not tie you, it allows you to do as you please; what we want you to do is to spend a lot of this money say for this fruit enterprise. The minister lays himself open, at least he takes away from himself this guard that he has definitely told parliament what he would use this money for, and he must keep his pledge to parliament. I call the attention of the minister to that and I would particularly call the attention of the Minister of Finance to it if he were here. I agree with what my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) has said and I think we must certainly insist on having these estimates divided. I am not going to insist as my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) did not insist that it should be done for this year, but after this I am going to make a plea with the Finance Minister who supervises these estimates that he shall ask each minister to definitely show each vote. Of course you cannot go into every detail; you must have some omnibus votes but, omnibus votes should be few and small.

Mr. FISHER. The general principle which my hon. friend has enunciated is undoubtedly correct. This vote is a large one to-day. It has been growing steadily from the needs of the country. I can remember this vote long before I came into office as a vote for some of the purposes which are included in it now. These are all cognate objects. They are not different. They are very largely interlaced; that is to say some of the men in connection with this vote attend to part of the work and attend also to other parts of the work, and it is a difficult thing to exactly divide the proportions of their time which may be applied to one piece of the work or applied to another piece of the work. I am trying to do that to a certain extent. I find that where it is possible to avoid that it is better because an officer who is shifted about from one work to another, I find, is not very likely to be effective. I therefore have been trying to get the staff divided, and when the time comes that I can divide this work I think it will be well to do as my hon. friend has suggested, but at the present time I would like to ascertain by experience how much each of these pieces of work will require.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. You will have this year to try it in.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, but it is only three months since Professor Robertson resigned and I have only begun the reorganization.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. You will have a year from the 1st of July.

Mr. FISHER. I will have a year after July in which to test the success of it after I have reorganized it if I get this little vote. I know my hon. friend is quite willing to have this little vote go through this year and I appreciate that courtesy on his part. I will say quite frankly to my hon. friend that when I ask for that item for the succeeding year I will have such information as will enable me to divide it in a way that will meet the wishes of the House. I do not take exception to the criticism that is made. I think that in regard to a vote of these proportions the criticism is to some extent justified. When this vote was originally taken it was a comparatively small affair, but it has increased from year to year and I think that when it has reached its present proportion what my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says has a good deal of justification. When it was a very much smaller vote it was not so necessary to discuss the features of it. But, I will carefully look into the question and see if, in another year, I cannot meet my hon. friend's desires so that the House can thoroughly understand what the money is intended for. I need not say that I have no intention of hiding from the House what the money is intended for.

To promote dairying interests for advance of milk and cream, to be recouped out of the process of sales of such butter and cheese, to be placed to the credit of the consolidated revenue fund, $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What was done with that vote last year and what was recouped?

Mr. FISHER. We run certain creameries in the Northwest Territories and in making sales of the produce of these creameries we advance a portion of the money at once to the patrons; then, when we come to complete the sales and get the money from the purchasers, we reimburse the treasury and the result is that at the end of the year this money is all back. But, in the meantime we have to have it in the bank to draw upon. A portion of it, I do not know how much, is drawn upon. Some years only a little is drawn sometimes it runs pretty close to the amount.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. You are out the interest, I suppose ?

Mr. FISHER. We do not charge interest. My officials tell me that it would hardly be safe to undertake the work unless we had available this $40,000. Last year we had something over $100,000 worth of butter. We had to sell that and to handle it and for that purpose my officers think that about $40,000 is needed.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Was there any loss in the transaction to the government last year?

Mr. FISHER. There was no loss except the interest. There was never any loss. The money advanced comes back and more too. We only advance a proportion of the price. We advance 10 cents a pound and the price of butter is 20 cents a pound and over.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the nature of the transaction last year and what is the policy? Are you continuing to do the same thing year after year in the same locality, or are you trying to put an industry on its legs, and then go to another locality and try to do the same thing ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think my hon. friend understands the situation. A good many years ago—I think the very first year after I came into office—representations were made to me that certain creameries had been started in the Northwest Territories chiefly in the Alberta district as private creameries and had failed and that the plant and buildings were there lying useless. I was asked to see if I could not do something to restart the industry there. I had Professor Robertson look into the matter very closely and we came to the conclusion that there was an opportunity for the establishment of a successful creamery industry in the Northwest Territories. To do that we undertook to advance some money to some of the creameries so as to put them on their feet and to manage and run them. It is in the management and running of them that this money is required. It is only those creameries in the Northwest Territories that are built; we have not for a number of years back started many new ones. I think there was one new one started last year, but most of the older ones have paid up their advances and are paying their way. We are still managing them. I have been informing the people that they must look forward in the near future to our handing over the management to the patrons. We have been begged from year to year not to do it and it has been represented that the management by government officials has been on the whole satisfactory and more successful, especially in the marketing of their products than private management. Up to the present time I have not discontinued this system, but I did instruct my officers who went there last winter to say that as a considerable number of the people there were now paying their way and doing well enough to assume the management themselves, I must insist on their taking over the management and so reducing the resposibility of the government.

Mr. FOSTER. I must say that the sting is in the tail and that the last sentence or two of the hon. minister came down to really what I did want to know. With all due deference to the hon. minister I did know exactly how this was being carried on. Is the government going into this in perpetuity?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you always going to take charge of these creameries and run them, or are you just taking hold of them and putting them on a basis where they will be established and self-sustaining, and then say to the people: Here, we have shown you how to do it, we have brought you through a certain amount of instructive practice and now you must take this over yourselves ?

Mr. FISHER. That is the intention.

Mr. FOSTER. The government surely does not intend to be running these factories in this way ? How many of these are you running in the Northwest ?

Mr. FISHER. Sixteen, I think.

Mr. FOSTER. After you run these for two or three years you must have half of them or more on a fairly good basis, and the people then will know their benefits. If you are going to go into a certain amount of that business for educative purposes, I presume you will try and get say eight of them on to a self-management basis, and then you could take up another eight districts if you wish. It is the people's work and not the work of government, and there can be no excuse for the government doing it except that by its educative influence it may point out the right way of making and marketing the article.

Mr. FISHER. I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). He has outlined the policy I wish to pursue, but every time I try to drop a creamery the people protest and beg us to continue, and so long as we are doing some of them it is not very much extra expense to do the whole of them. With the influx of settlers there will be other parts of the Northwest Territories which will want to start these creameries soon, but where wheat growing is successful, they do not care to go into dairying.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand the minister to state that for this $40,000 of advances the country was recouped by the sale of the butter, and that that money was paid to the credit of the consolidated fund.

Mr. FISHER. Oh, no. The patrons send their cream to the factory and the butter is sent to a central warehouse at Calgary and disposed of on the open market. The accounts are made up for each individual patron of the factory and when the monthly statements are prepared, frequently the butter is not sold or perhaps only part of it is sold. In the meantime we pay to every patron what is equal to 10 cents on every pound of butter which his milk has produced. Then when the sales are consummated and the money received for the butter, we pay him the balance according to the price received. None of it is paid to the consolidated fund; it is a separate fund for each creamery and nothing comes back to the country except perhaps a charge for making.

Mr. DANIEL. The item says 'the proceeds of sales of such butter and cheese to be placed to the credit of the consolidated fund.'

Mr. FISHER. Quite so, but it is not put into the ordinary revenue of the country. It is a special account for each creamery.

Mr. DANIEL. Then the country gets no money return whatever for the expenditure of this $40,000?

Mr. FISHER. The $40,000 is not spent. At the end of the fiscal year the $40,000 is intact; we simply pay 10 cents on account, for every pound of butter and we pay it out of this vote.

Mr. FOSTER. What profit do you make?

Mr. FISHER. We do not make a profit. When the price of the butter is received by our officer he retains 10 cents for every pound and pays it back to this vote.

Mr. DANIEL. In what account will the payment back to the country be found?

Mr. FISHER. The payments out of this vote and the re-imbursements are all submitted to the Auditor General by a special accountant in my department who has charge of this work; it includes an immense amount of detail as an account for each patron is kept.

Mr. DANIEL. The item states, that this money is placed to the credit of the consolidated revenue fund. Where can I find in the Consolidated Revenue Fund account a statement of the recouping of this money, or any portion of it?

Mr. FISHER. I am afraid I cannot tell the hon. gentleman exactly.

Mr. DANIEL. I have the Consolidated Revenue account here, and the only item I can see which would refer even in a distant way to this item is: 'Department of Agriculture; special account, $4,855.'

Mr. FISHER. I know in general terms how it is done, but I am afraid I cannot say as to how it appears in the Public Accounts. Perhaps I have not made myself clear to my hon. friend, who probably is not familiar with the way in which these co-operative factories are worked. Each patron sends his milk or cream to the factory and gets credit for so much butter fat; and when the total amount of the butter fat is made up into butter and the butter is sold, the money received for it is distributed to the patrons in proportion to what they have sent to the factory. Before that final distribution occurs, however, my officer pays to each patron 10 cents per pound on account out of this fund. When the final sale of the butter takes place and the money is received by my officer, he pays back into this fund the 10 cents which he had advanced out of it to each patron, and then pays the balance to the patrons in addition.

Mr. DANIEL. What we still do not understand is where the country gets recouped. I understood the minister to state that the $40,000 was merely handled, and the country got it all back. If that is the case, there ought to be some entry of that repayment in the public accounts; but I can find no such entry.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot explain that, but I think it is due to the fact that at the beginning of the year a credit is given by the Auditor General to the Department of Agriculture; my officers from time to time use what they want of it, and replace it before the end of the year. Consequently, it would not appear as impaired in any way; and, in consequence of that, I suppose it does not appear in the public accounts at all.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I think this is a fair item to stand until the minister can give us that information. Is there an officer in every factory; and if so, is he paid by the patrons?

Mr. FISHER. We pay the officers and we charge the patrons so much for making the butter.

Mr. FOSTER. How much money was actually paid out last year to these patrons at the rate of 10 cents a pound?

Mr. FISHER. I have not that information at my hand. I can find out immediately the number of pounds of butter that was made, which would show how much was paid out. Of course, my hon. friend will understand that this $40,000 might be used three or four times over during the season as needed. We pay out the 10 cents when the butter is made in the creamery. We might sell that butter in a week and get the money all back, or we might not sell it for two or three months, and consequently be unable to reimburse the fund for that length of time. It is practically a deposit to be used as working capital, and to be recouped when the money comes in.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has not answered clearly the question of the hon. member for St. John. What he wants to know is where that money comes back to the treasury. We can easily understand how it goes out; but my hon. friend from St. John says that within the covers of the book he cannot find more than $4,000 that has come back. That question has not been answered by the minister. I think we shall have to have this item stand until that can be made clear, and also because two or three of our members who are not here want to say something about these features.

Mr. FISHER. I have no objection to let it stand.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The minister might tell us how much a pound he gets for making the butter, and whether the account comes out even or shows any profit?

Mr. FISHER. We get 4 cents a pound. In the large creameries that more than covers the cost, while in the small creameries it does not cover the cost.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How do you even up the accounts?

Mr. FISHER. Where there is any money over we give it to the creamery where it is made; and where there is a deficit we pay that ourselves. We do not charge the good creameries with the losses of the poor ones.

Item allowed to stand.

Salaries and contingent expenses of the Senate, $76,576.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is the usual vote for the Senate. It shows an increase of $1,000, of which I am sorry to say I cannot give any explanation. They want that much more to carry on their business.

Mr. FOSTER. I am quite sure the House of Commons would never abnegate its right to have an explanation of this increase. We cannot vote money here without knowing what it is for.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have given the information to my hon. friend. The gentlemen of the higher court of parliament say they desire it and must have it, and cannot carry on their work without it. It is a growing time and a growing country, and the only explanation furnished to me is that these estimates are prepared by a committee of contingencies of the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one thing that grows in the Senate, vacations and holidays. Would the Prime Minister give us the exact number of days the Senate has been sitting?

Mr. FISHER.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My memory is not equal to that.

Mr. FOSTER. Has my hon. friend abandoned entirely the view, so strongly held by himself and many of his supporters, that the Senate ought to be reformed, reformed out of existence?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That was not my view, my hon. friend knows me too well. That was the view of some of my friends, but not my own.

Mr. FOSTER. I know my right hon. friend made a great deal of capital in the country on that ground.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Reforming the Senate out of existence?

Mr. FOSTER. Reforming it even out of existence; and especially one thing was going to be done, there was going to be no old——

An hon. MEMBER. Women?

Mr. FOSTER. Women, yes, or defeated candidates, men of an age so advanced that it is difficult for them to get around. Will the right hon. gentleman now tell us exactly the age of the last gift made by himself to the Senate?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, I do not know exactly, but I think he has cut his wisdom teeth.

Library of Parliament—salaries, $23,575.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is an increase in salaries of $475, made up altogether of statutory increases.

Books for the general library, including binding, &c., $13,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the government considered the need of enlarging the library building?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, the attention of the government has been brought to the necessity of providing additional space for the increasing number of volumes. A plan has been suggested to the government, but we have come to no conclusion. If my hon. friend has views upon the subject, I would be glad to hear them, because the government will approach the subject with an absolutely open mind.

Mr. BERGERON. The subject has been brought to my notice by reason of my membership of a committee of the House of Commons. I have been told that another plan has been prepared, but the session is so far advanced that unless the government has finally come to a conclusion, it will be a long time before anything is done. More space is needed. I understand that nearly half the books of the library are hidden, or are in some place where they cannot be seen.

Mr. FOSTER. Who has the selection of the new books for the library?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As my hon. friend knows, the Library Committee gives sometimes directions to the librarians, but when no directions are given to the librarians they use their own judgment. But so far as I know, the committee have no control over the librarians regarding the purchase of books, these gentlemen are absolutely their own masters. The committee has never suggested to the librarians how they should employ the money. I think my hon. friend is a member of the Library Committee

Mr. FOSTER. I am a member. It meets once, and nothing is done; that is a preliminary meeting to make arrangements for a second meeting. It meets the second time, and a report is read, and then we adjourn. We may have another meeting before the session closes. Sometimes I think there is a lack in the library of up-to-date books. I do not know whether other members have noticed it or not in their requirements for reading, but I have wondered whether the committee had advisory duties in connection with the purchase of new books.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sure that depends altogether on the librarians. There was a time when I was a more faithful attendant of that committee than I have been of late years, and my experience was something like that of my hon. friend, that a meeting was more of a social gathering than anything else. Sometimes we had a general conversation, and a suggestion was made that we should get such and such a book; but nothing was ever done, nothing is done now, the librarians absolutely use their own judgment in the purchase of the books.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another thing, and that is the failure on the part of many who take out books to return them. I do not know how it can be overcome, unless it be done by the passage of resolutions requiring parties to return books taken from the parliamentary library. The librarians are really the servants of parliament, parliament is composed of members, and if there is any collision between the parliamentary librarian and a member, the librarian generally gets the worst of it. At least all he can do is courteously to ask for the books to be returned, but if the member simply does not answer that request, the books are not returned. I think the Prime Minister himself would be surprised if he knew just how many books are absent from the library because, under circumstances that we usually forget, they are not returned. But that is not the purpose for which the library was instituted, it was to keep books in the library itself, in order to afford the advantages both of quick reading and of circulation. I was wondering whether anything could be done to facilitate the gathering in of books that go out to the different departments.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have not heard of any complaint of late. I remember some fifteen years ago when the Library Committee had rather a warm discussion over this subject, but at that time no means could be devised by which a check could be put upon this evil practice. We have to trust to the honour of those who took the books away from the library to bring them back again. Many of those books are never returned simply because of carelessness on the part of those who take them out. It was suggested that it would be a good thing to pass a rule that books should not go out—I would not say out of the library, because that would not be possible, but that books should not go out of this building. That, I think, is the only rule that would be satisfactory—that the books in this library like those in any other library of a similar nature should not be taken out of the building. But our library here is really a circulation library——

Mr. FOSTER. Very much so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Members have the privilege of taking books away, and they also have the privilege of taking them for their friends. This, it seems to me, ought not to be allowed. It is difficult, perhaps, to say that a member of parliament, at the end of the session, for instance, should not be allowed to take books with him. A good many members do that. And I believe that those who use the library most are those who return books most surely and quickly. But there are members who take away books which happen to strike their fancy and, through sheer carelessness, do not return them. Then, members facilitate the taking out of books by their friends, and this, I believe, is the cause of the disappearance of the larger number of books that are not returned. The redeeming feature of the case is that these books are generally of those that can best be spared from the library. There has hitherto been no great public library in Ottawa, and it has been difficult, when we had a large and valuable collection of books here, to keep that collection closed and not allow any of the books to go out. But, unless we have a rigid rule to this effect, I am afraid the leakage cannot be stopped.

Mr. FOSTER. The right hon. Prime Minister has spoken of this as a circulating library. Well, it has at least one of the elements for circulation. The arteries are there, but whether the veins are there, to complete the circulation by bringing back that which is sent out through the arteries, is a great question. Not only do members get these books, but this library is largely a convenience to the people of Ottawa.

Through the members, or in some way, books are circulated throughout the city. The Prime Minister says that one redeeming feature is that the books thus sent out and often lost are largely of the kind that can best be spared from a library of this kind. But that seems like saying that the people's money is voted each year for the purchase of books which are not useful in assisting members of parliament in their work and are not of the kind for which this library was instituted. I think it would be difficult to make a rule that books shall not be taken from the precincts of this House. One's time as a member is pretty well taken up during the working hours of the House, and unless one can take a book to his room and digest it there, he is denied opportunities which enable him better to carry on his work in this House. But two things might be insisted upon : That the privilege, very much abused by some of us, of handing out books to all and sundry of our friends, might be curtailed or done away with. And, then, though it might seem a drastic remedy, I think the librarian might be backed up by a rule which would enable him to say to a member that books out must be returned within a reasonable time, otherwise he would not be allowed to take out more books. I am sure that if such a rule were applied in my case it would bring me to time—I would be pretty careful to send books back that I might not be on the prohibited list. But I think the time has come when we should stop this leak. It is impossible to get some books from the library that ought to be there. You ask for them, but they are out. Who has them ? Nobody knows ; they have been out, perhaps, for three or four years. It would surprise some members of the House to see the list of the books that are out, never to come back I suppose, for they have been out so long that they have lost all knowledge of the haunts from which they came. But I think that the suggestions I make if carried out, would result in good.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The next time there is a meeting of the library committee, I will attend if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will be there, and I will support his suggestions.

Mr. FOSTER. I will be there.

Mr. BUREAU. I would suggest to the Library Committee an idea for their consideration at their next meeting. Why not create a fund by asking every member who wishes to take out books put up a cash deposit ; then, if the book is not returned in the proper time, use the money to buy another copy. That is the way they do in circulating libraries, and it seems to me that that is the proper way to do here.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest, to the leader of the House that the next Act that is passed adding to the sessional indemnity of members should carry a condition that a certain percentage of the increase shall be kept back for one or two years, to be used in supplying the deficiencies caused by books being borrowed and not returned.

Legislation—general—printing, binding and distributing the laws, $7,000.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. When will the consolidation of the laws be completed ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is expected that it will be completed this year, and that the Bill will be ready for the next session of parliament.

Legislation—general—printing, printing paper and binding, $125,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What does that cover ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This covers the expenditures of the Printing Bureau on the items stated. There is nothing new in this—it is the usual vote.

Mr. BERGERON. I take this opportunity to repeat what I said the other night. The Printing Bureau is a great institution with which, I am sure, many of the members are not familiar. The members of the Printing Committee had occasion to visit the Bureau recently and were astonished to see the work that was done there, especially in the binding of the reports submitted to parliament and the books for the library. The building is not nearly large enough for the work to be done. The King's Printer and his assistants all complain of that, and rightly. An addition has been made to the building and is now about ready for occupation, but it will do but little good, for much more room is needed. The government have a large property there, and the sooner they use it the better. There are a great many employees in the Printing Bureau, but, for lack of space they work at a great disadvantage. We are losing money because the place is so small that the employees cannot do their work as well as they would otherwise do it. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) is not here, but, in his absence I will call the attention of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to this case as one deserving his earnest attention.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am glad my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) has mentioned this matter, as it gives me an opportunity to give my hon. friend and to those who take an interest in the subject my own view. I know that the building of the Printing Bureau is altogether too small. The Secretary of State has complained to me more than once and has proposed that provision should be made for increased accommodation. I have stated more than once to the Secretary of State—and I might just as well make a confession of it now—that the selection of a site for the Printing Bureau was very unfortunate. My opinion is that we should have the whole of that space vacant, extending Major Hill Park to the bank of the river which would add much to the beauty of Ottawa, but you have the Printing Bureau just where it is, interfering with such a park. It is an ugly building, it has no architectural beauty, and I think if we were to make an addition of one-third or one-half of this building we might very well select another site and leave this site vacant in order to have what we should have, a park which would cover the whole of Nepean Point. I do not know if parliament would entertain that view. The plan would not cost much, it would cost something of course, but it would add very much to the beauty of this city in which we take a good deal of pride, and I think this idea ought to meet with some favour on the part of my hon. friends. At all events this is an idea which I have not dared to mention very often, but since the matter has come up, I would like gentlemen on the other side to think of the suggestion I have made that if we are to spend a good deal of money in enlarging the Printing Bureau, and we must do it, we might consider the advisability of putting it elsewhere and leaving the space which is now partly vacant absolutely vacant, covering the whole of Nepean Point with a continuation of Major Hill Park.

Mr. BERGERON. The new Mint is being built close to that spot which shows that the idea has not been very much thought of.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, the Mint is near Sussex Street. I would have preferred to have it elsewhere, but where it is it will not interfere with the idea I have in my mind of extending Major Hill Park along the river.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course that is another question. Whether we are to enlarge the Printing Bureau or place it somewhere else is the important thing. I believe it would be a saving of money and would improve the good work that is now done there if the building was enlarged one way or another.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I dissent entirely from the remarks of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) with regard to our losing money in this connection. An examination would reveal to any person interested the fact that notwithstanding that the printing of parliament is not entirely done at the Bureau here the country is not suffering as a result, and that being the case I think it will be found that the printing done outside the Bureau is done at rates that compare very favourably indeed with the rates paid at the Printing Bureau. I chanced to be present before the Public Accounts Committee when Dr. Dawson gave evidence. He pointed out and satisfied me that in some particular instances he was able to get work done outside the Bureau at rates very much cheaper than he could get the work done at the Bureau. I think upon close examination very many items will be detected in which it will be found that the work can be done more cheaply in printing offices as in connection with the preparation of the various reports. In some cases this could be done cheaper in Montreal, Toronto, or even some of the smaller cities. This is a matter which might very well engage the attention of the Printing Committee, and I desire once again to protest for the present at least, against any further enlargement of the Printing Bureau until it has been shown that the country is saving by it. If the matter is gone into carefully, I think it can be demonstrated to the satisfaction of parliament that this work can be done by printing concerns throughout the country at rates from which the country not only will not lose, but I have no doubt will gain.

Mr. BERGERON. I think I remember the occasion of which my hon. friend speaks. One of the reasons given by the King's Printer was that the building was too small and they could not have all the plant necessary to do all he would like to do. Secondly there was a question of printing the lists, and it was said—and there was a great deal of sense in it—that the printing of lists for British Columbia or the Northwest Territories for instance, would be done cheaper as a matter of fact in those provinces than having them printed here and sent there. Another subject was the printing of maps.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. Lithographing.

Mr. BERGERON. That kind of work can be done better and cheaper in Toronto or Montreal, because the Printing Bureau here is too small to contain the apparatus necessary. At the same time the King's Printer said he could do everything here, and if my hon. friend will go back a few years to the establishment of the Printing Bureau he will find a great many reasons given in favour of having all the printing of parliament done here, not only for reasons of economy but for other reasons. My hon. friend, I am sure, must recognize that there must have been some good reasons given for the establishment of that office here; indeed, I think it has given satisfaction and the only question I was bringing before the House was that as the business of the country is enlarging—as we are told and it is true—the printing is enlarging. The printing of 'Hansard' is a great work at the Bureau. The binding is a much greater work at the Bureau than I supposed. We have some very good experts in their lines doing that work and when congratulating the King's Printer on such good work we were told that he was handicapped by the small space in which his men were working, and that is the reason why

I for the second time called the attention of the government to it. I do not think we could vote money for a better purpose. My hon. friend may have the Bureau somewhere else, that is another idea. If parliament decided to put the Bureau somewhere else, if we knew what to do with the old building which is a very costly one, I would have nothing to say, but whether we build somewhere else or enlarge the present building it is high time to do something. One of the highest officials there suggested that the building could be heightened by a couple of stories which I understand would be the cheapest plan. The King's Printer's idea would be to enlarge the building, because there is a good deal of ground there, but of course that is not taking into consideration the plan of my hon. friend. If the building is put somewhere else, all of the demands would probably be met in the new building.

Mr. HENDERSON. To my mind the question of public printing being done outside of Ottawa was settled years ago when the present Bureau was established. I confess I have never heard any good reason given since that time for returning to the old practice of having a portion of the work done in Toronto, Montreal or any other city of the Dominion. I think myself it is decidedly better to have the entire work done here under the strict supervision of the government.

Now as to the cost being less when done in some outside office, it is quite possible that the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) may be correct. To my mind, it is absolutely impossible, with the present conveniences for doing the work, to get all the work out of the men that they can do. I had occasion a short time ago to visit the Printing Bureau along with other members of the Printing Committee. We went through the building, I think through almost all the rooms. I was astonished to see the crowded condition, and because of the way that men were huddled together it was absolutely impossible to do work. They had not an opportunity of doing the full amount of work that a man could do were he given space—not only space to work in, but space to breathe in. Having spent an hour and a half in that building, I was glad to get outside. I fail to see how in the world these people live there. The health conditions are practically abominable. How those women manage to sit there for eight or ten hours is something I could not comprehend, and certainly the sanitary arrangements are far from what they ought to be. We cannot expect to get people to do the amount of work they should do with such surroundings. We cannot expect them to perform the same amount of work if they really have not space to breathe in. It only requires a visit for a short time to see that the first requisites of health and of the opportunity to do work are absolutely wanting in every department of that building. In regard to the suggestion of the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), certainly something will have to be done, no matter whether the cost is great or small. The country is losing money and will lose money as long as the present conditions prevail, for the reasons which I have assigned. We want the Printing Bureau to be as near as possible to the parliament buildings. Many of us have occasion to go there from time to time, and it would be very inconvenient if the Printing Bureau were removed half a mile or a mile from the public buildings here ; in fact, at the present time, even when the Printing Bureau is located as it is, I think that very much better conveniences ought to be and could be provided for giving members of parliament access to the Printing Bureau for the purposes that they require to go there from time to time. I think the time has come when a foot-way should be so constructed from parliament hill across to the park and to the Printing Bureau so as to give easy access without going around by way of Wellington street and Sussex street, or going through the park, to get there. I have occasion to go at different times when I find that time actually prevents me from doing so. I find it inconvenient, and if we could be assisted in any way by such means as I suggest I know it would inure to the benefit and convenience of every member of parliament. Were it not for that I would not object at all in the construction of a new building to have it removed to a greater distance, but I fear that by scattering these buildings too much we are going to inconvenience men who have all their time fully occupied in this House if they pretend for a moment to attend to their parliamentary duties. I sympathize with the government in any desire they have to increase the accommodation. I confess that at the present time I would favour an enlargement of the present building to the suggestion of removing it a considerable distance further away, but certainly it is a matter with which the government will have to deal, and that at a very early date, because the country is increasing while the conveniences for doing that work are not increasing. I would dislike very much to see a friend of mine go into that Printing Bureau. I think it is destructive to health. I do not know what the experience of those who are working there is, but I think I made a note of it that I saw depicted on the faces of people who are working there that they are not enjoying the health conditions they ought to enjoy, that they are not able to perform the duties which this government and this country would expect them to perform, and that under the present crowded conditions they are not doing what they could do if the conditions were more favourable.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. The words of my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) convince me more strongly than ever that the Printing Bureau has undertaken a little more work than it ought to undertake, more particularly under the conditions which he depicts. In spite of what has been said to the contrary, I still stick to my opinion that this country is not a loser as the result of work being done outside the Printing Bureau, and I am quite satisfied that if my hon. friend had heard the testimony of the King's Printer before the Public Accounts Committee he would share the opinion which I hold, that the fact that work is done outside does not necessarily mean that money is lost to the people of the country. I am quite sure that if the King's Printer finds his work crowded in the Printing Bureau and if he looks around him he can have his work done without entailing any loss to himself or the country. The work would be expedited, and I have no doubt that we could get many returns before we are now able to get them if the King's Printer were to send them to outside offices. The work might necessarily have to go outside the city of Ottawa, but that is no reason why the work should not be done outside. The only condition which should be considered in this connection is that the work should be done at a reasonable price, and the prices that prevail in the printing offices of this country compare very favourably and, in some instances, as I have observed, are lower than the amount for which the work can be done here. I am perfectly well aware, as my hon. friend says, that this is not a new question. This question has probably been decided some years ago, but perhaps, after all, it has not. It is not so absolutely decided that it cannot be resurrected and considered at the present time or in the future, but I do say that it is well worth considering as to whether or not just as good satisfaction can be had by following the suggestion I made in favour of having work done outside as from having it done at the Printing Bureau under the conditions which prevail there. These conditions have been the subject of complaint here. The King's Printer, before the Public Accounts Committee, during the present session, sounded a note of warning. He said that for many years, for as far back, I think, as ten or twelve years, he has been annually bringing this question to the attention of parliament. He prepared a very elaborate report on one occasion pointing out to members of parliament the necessity that existed for the enlargement of the plant there. Of all the members of parliament, there was but one who took any interest in the matter. There was one member out of two hundred and thirteen who took sufficient trouble to read the report which he made to parliament on that occasion, and at the very earliest opportunity that member was defeated. He rather gave it as a warning that nobody should take any further stock in any reports which he put forward as to the inability of the present plant to cope with the situation. Therefore it is that I throw out the suggestion that before deciding that the plant should be enlarged it would be well to consider whether or not the work could be as well, as cheaply and as expeditiously performed there as elsewhere.

Contingent expenses in connection with the voters' lists, $40,000.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. When this matter was up a few nights ago under the supplementary estimates, I asked the hon Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) how these voters' lists were printed, if they were printed every year and distributed to members. I could tell him, as a matter of fact, that they had not been distributed to me.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think the lists are printed as fast as they come.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not think so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the intention, but as my hon. friend knows, the lists are revised at different times in different provinces. In Quebec and Ontario they are now revised about April, but it often happens that there are appeals.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The final revision takes place before a judge in Ontario.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We do not print the lists until they have the seal of the authority of the final revision. At all events it is the intention of the government to print the lists as fast as they come in.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Does the government print the lists for every constituency each year. Last parliament I know that in some constituencies in New Brunswick they had two lists before I could get one for Lennox, Ontario. I think I only got one voters' list during the whole parliament, and that before the last general election.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say how the orders have been carried out, but I understand that the instructions to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery are that as soon as he receives the lists he shall send them to the Printing Bureau.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Every year?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As fast as they come; if they come every year they are sent to the printer.

Mr. BERGERON. I think my right hon. friend is mistaken. My recollection is that the lists were only to be printed when an election was to take place.

Mr. BRODEUR. The law provides that the lists be printed every year.

Mr. BERGERON. One of the reasons for repealing the old franchise law was because of the expense of printing these lists every year. I am surprised to hear from the right hon. gentleman that the lists are now printed every year. They should only be printed when they are needed. Generally speaking, an election may not be expected for three or four years in most constituencies, and as the lists will be greatly modified before they are needed for our elections, I do not see why they should be printed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does my hon. friend think the lists should not be printed as fast as they come?

Mr. BERGERON. I cannot see the use of printing the lists when they are not needed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am glad to hear it, and when next we discuss the matter I will be prepared to give an answer to my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAIN. In the province of Ontario, the voters' lists are printed by each municipality every year, and these municipal lists with the same names on them are sent to the Printing Bureau in order to make up the Dominion lists. It seems to me that in any province where each municipality prints the voters' lists every year, it is a useless expenditure to have them reprinted in the Printing Bureau here when the general election comes off. It seems to me that if the government take this matter into their serious consideration, they must arrive at the conclusion that it would be very much better to adopt the lists as they are printed in the province each year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is quite reasonable and for my part I would favour it. I have to say to my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) that I was wrong in my statement; I am informed that the lists are printed only when they are required.

Mr. BERGERON. That is what I understood when the law was passed. How much of this vote did you spend last year?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say. This is a precaution that is taken in case of an emergency.

Mr. BERGERON. This year it may not be needed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It may not, and I do not expect it will.

Mr. FOSTER. It might be.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It might be; there is no telling what may take place.

Mr. BERGERON. It is not voted with the intention of spending it?

Mr. BRODEUR.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, but I do not see why we should not gratify even the wildest dreams of gentlemen opposite.

Mr. BERGERON. In that event I will not criticise the vote.

Fenian Raid pensions, $2,400.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the right hon. gentleman tell us something about the proposed land grant to the Fenian Raid veterans?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That matter is under consideration.

Mr. BERGERON. I know cases where the widows of some of the officers who rendered valuable service to the country during the Fenian Raid, have never received pensions in any shape or form. As I understand it the land grant will be given to those who are still living, and it would in no way benefit the widows of deceased veterans. The country appreciates the fact that we owe some debt of gratitude to these people, and the proof is that this vote is always passed without criticism. It seems to me that we should go a little further and that in certain cases where men now deceased have rendered valuable military service to the country in other directions, it would be proper to recognize the services by granting some compensation to the survivors of their families who may be in need of assistance. Would it not be proper for parliament to come to the rescue of these people in the same way that we are now voting these items?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The class of cases to which my hon. friend alludes is of a different character from the class covered here. These pensions on acount of the Fenian raid—I speak under correction—must be to persons who were wounded or disabled. My hon. friend is proposing another class of pensions for military service, out of the ordinary. We have not under our law given any pensions for that class of service. Whether we will do it or not is a matter for consideration; but that is not included in this vote.

Mr. BERGERON. Then, I am surprised that the names of those to whom we pay the pensions are not mentioned.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The names are given, and I will have them for my hon. friend to-morrow.

Compensation to pensioners in lieu of land, $116.76.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. This is a small vote, but I think it ought to be explained.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not take the trouble to get explanations of these matters, which have been on the votes for several years; but I will give the explanation to my hon. friend on concurrence.

Pensions payable to militiamen on account of the rebellion of 1885, and active services generally, $19,000.

Mr. BERGERON. That is the same thing. I believe it would be a good thing to have the names. We all know that the United States government is paying more for pensions on account of the Civil War than it did at the commencement. The pensioners, instead of dying, are increasing in number.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am informed that the names are all given in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. BERGERON. Then there ought to be a reference in the estimates to the page in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that there is no extension. These amounts were settled, and if there is any change at all, it will be a diminution.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Exactly. No new name is added. If the name drops, the amount drops accordingly. I will get the names.

Northwest Mounted Police—Northwest Territories, $535,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not intend to take up this item this evening, as I do not see present any member from the Northwest, and I would ask that $25,000 for buildings be reserved, and when we take that up, I will give all the explanations I have to give. I may say that the increase of $35,000 was due to the Bill passed this session to increase the pay of the men from 75 cents to $1 a day, not at one fell swoop, but according to length of service.

Miscellaneous printing, $40,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is to pay for envelopes, labels, paper, paper wrappers, twine, postage, &c., for the distribution of parliamentary documents during the whole year.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I am afraid it won't do it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have done it before.

Expenses in connection with the Canada Temperance Act, $500.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is taken in case we should have an election in a county. We spent nothing last year on this account, and probably will not spend anything this year; but we take this money in case there is a vote in a county.

Returns and other expenses under the Naturalization Act, $3,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the items?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is to pay clerks of courts for furnishing returns of all the naturalization papers which are issued in the year.

Mr. FOSTER. What other expenses are there?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that there are any others.

Mr. FOSTER. How many were naturalized last year?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I could not tell, it is in our records somewhere. I will get it to-morrow.

Unforeseen expenses, expenditure thereof to be under Order in Council, and a detailed statement to be laid before parliament within the first fifteen days of next session, $30,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this the secret service fund?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend understands what this is for.

Mr. BARKER. Anything spent last year?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think we spent nearly the whole of it.

Salaries and contingencies of the Paris agency, $6,500.

Mr. HENDERSON. That requires some explanation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a very old friend. Mr. Fabre is our commissioner at Paris, and has been since 1881, I believe. Everybody knows the Paris agency, especially those who have been in Paris. The duties performed by Mr. Fabre are well known. He was first appointed commissioner of immigration, but I do not know that he has been very successful in that work. In other respects, however, I think he has been a very efficient and useful officer.

Mr. FOSTER. Outside of immigration, what does he do from year to year?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that he does anything except to keep the office open and furnish information to Canadians. The number of Canadians who now visit Europe is very large. As soon as they reach Paris they go to the commissioner's office for all the information they want, and they get it. They register their names, they have their mail sent there, and are able by means of this agency to keep track of their friends. I think Mr. Fabre renders valuable service in these respects.

Mr. FOSTER. What portion of this is for Mr. Fabre's salary?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think the greater part is for salary, I could not say how much exactly. But there is the rent of the building to pay, repairs, furniture, &c.

Mr. FOSTER. Has he any staff?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He has no staff except a secretary, that he pays out of his own pocket.

Academy of Arts, $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this for pictures ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, this amount is given to the Royal Academy of Arts in this city. If my memory serves me well, this is a special vote given to a certain society in Ottawa to encourage art—the school of design, I think.

Mr. FOSTER. The right hon. gentleman may be right, but I am inclined to think his recollection is not accurate.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, let it stand.

Miscellaneous—expenses of litigated matters between the Dominion of Canada and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec (payments on account of service rendered may be made to members of the Civil Service, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act) $3,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. When is this likely to be brought to an end ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I wish I knew. It has been there to my certain knowledge for nearly forty years. It has been gradually decreased every year, but it has not yet come to an absolute termination. If my hon. friend asks me when it will come to an end, I am sorry to say I cannot give him much information, nor, I am afraid, very much hope.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is no progress being made ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand there is progress being made.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is sometimes hinted that certain gentlemen keep that matter on foot all the time ; it brings in a certain revenue yearly and it is a matter of importance to those who are interested to keep it going along. I am not convinced that the difficulties are so great that the matter could not be brought to a termination. Surely now, nearly forty years after confederation we should pretty well understand how financial matters rest between the Dominion and the old provinces of Ontario and Quebec. I really think the government should urge the commissioners to bring in a report covering a final settlement of these old questions. There may be some considerable interest involved, but a hint from the government might do much to bring the matter to an end.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I need hardly remind my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) that the mills of the gods grind slow and the mills of the courts grind——

Mr. HENDERSON. Slower still.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will not say that, nor yet will I take issue with my hon. friend on that point. My hon. friend is aware that time and again points have been decided by the commissioners, then taken to the courts, and there appealed to the higher courts. Gradually all the questions have been settled—I believe only one question now remains for consideration and decision.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is that that bridge question in Quebec ? I understand that there was $37,000 involved in some question concerning a bridge—I think it was over the Yamaska river. It seems a pity to keep this whole question open on that account. It would be better to pay for the bridge and let the matter be wound up.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think the matter to which my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) refers is the Richelieu bridge matter, which was disposed of by the courts.

Mr. HENDERSON. Possibly the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) may be right. Now that I come to think of it, I believe the commissioners decided—and decided against Quebec, did they not ?—but allowed an appeal if the parties were not satisfied. So if it is before the courts it is one of the matters still unsettled.

Mr. BRODEUR. The bridge is in my own county. A decision has been rendered in the matter. An action was taken by the proprietor against the federal government who pleaded that they were not bound to pay. The judgment went against the government. I do not know whether there has been a claim by the federal government against the provincial government or not.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is the case that had something to do with the Yuile family ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is the Supply Bill not ready ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We expect to take up the Supply Bill, then the resolution of the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) and, in that connection the subject brought up by the hon. member (Mr. Foster) about cutting down the militia establishment.

Mr. FOSTER. And clause 16 of the Autonomy Bill ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think we shall resume that on Thursday when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) is here.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 6, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Pensions payable on account of Fenian raid, $2,400.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I promised yesterday that I would give certain information asked for upon the item of pensions on account of the Fenian raid. The details are to be found in the Auditor General's Report, Vol. 1, G—16. In regard to pensions to militiamen on account of the Northwest rebellion, the accounts are to be found in detail in the same volume, same page. As far as I remember, these pensions were granted to some of the men in the force upon the report of the board appointed for that purpose.

My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asked me yesterday about the number of persons naturalized last year. The number is 4,402.

Mr. FOSTER. In what report is that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The details are in the report of the Secretary of State, page VI. But this information I have received indirectly from the Secretary of State.

I was also asked for some information with regard to another item in the pension list, that is the amounts paid to pensioners in lieu of land. This is such an old item that it is somewhat difficult to get the information; but I understand that the amount paid so far has been $8,900. A pensioner gets $19.14 per annum. So far as we can ascertain, there are only two now living.

I was also asked for information about the item in the estimates of $2,000 granted to the Academy of Arts. This amount is paid to the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts, at Toronto.

Mr. FOSTER. Then with reference to the issue of patents, in relation to scrip.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say I have not the information yet; I may get it to-day.

POST OFFICE REGULATIONS.

Mr. J. BARR (Dufferin). Whilst we are waiting for the Supply Bill, might I ask the Prime Minister whether he has a copy of that circular from the Post Office Department to lay on the table of the House?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Speaking on behalf of the Postmaster General, we have not a copy of the circular to which the hon. gentleman refers, but I may say that circular was sent out pursuant to regulations of the Post Office Department dealing with the conduct of postmasters generally. The department issued instructions that postmasters must not distribute matter which was sent to them in bulk, as it interfered materially with the collection of revenue, inasmuch as such mail matter would pass through the mails at cheaper rates than it otherwise would. That of course would not apply to a frank, but at the same time the post office authorities have found it necessary to deal with the postmasters on general principles and to instruct them as to their conduct with regard to all mail matter whether franked or stamped. If discretion were allowed to postmasters as to when they should carry out the departmental instructions, we would have endless difficulty and the postmasters would be constantly contravening their instructions in a way which would very materially interfere with the postal revenue. In this particular case the postmaster seems to have received a parcel of something sent by a member of this House. The post office authorities have no information as to what instructions the postmaster received from the sender of the package. However he was doing what was contrary to his instructions in taking the contents of that parcel and distributing them. Under ordinary circumstances if that parcel had been stamped the revenue received from it would be very much less than if the documents had been sent separately and each stamped. It is therefore evident that in the public interest postmasters should not be allowed to follow the practice complained of. If postmasters could exercise their discretion to do or to refuse to do what they are requested, it might lead to complications in regard to the personality of the postmaster and result in postmasters doing what would entail dismissal or severe reprimand from the postal authorities. The post office considers that a frank is merely a substitute for a stamp, and that franked matter is subject to all the regulations which govern stamped matter sent through the mails. The frank is accepted by the authorities as entitling a letter to go forward, but at the same time it carries with it no privilege which stamped mail matter would not carry. I do not think there is any further information to be given, but if my hon. friend desires further explanation I will be glad to ascertain it from the Post Office Department.

Mr. D. HENDERSON. We are all very glad to hear the statement of the Minister of Agriculture, because we have no desire to put the postmasters of the country in an improper position. I may say that I have been a frequent offender under the rule laid down by the Minister of Agriculture. We receive a great many bulletins, not only those emanating from the Commission on Agriculture and Colonization of the House, but other documents of a character such as pass through the mails without postage, and I have had no hesitation at any time in putting these up in parcels of from ten to twelve, addressing them to a particular country postmaster, and writing upon them 'parliamentary papers,' and a request to distribute them. I have found the postmasters always willing to hand these out to the farmers, exercising, I presume, a discretion in giving them to such farmers as are likely to make a proper use of them. I do not think that is an improper use of the post office. These bulletins are entitled to go free through the post office, whether sent from Ottawa or from our homes; and this method of sending simply avoided the necessity of my addressing them separately. I have made it a point to ask the farmers in the section of country to which they were sent, and I have found that the postmasters did, at my request, distribute these bulletins. I know no better way of getting this information into the hands of the people of the country, and I think the Postmaster General is placing undue restriction upon the liberties of members of parliament in making a strict rule of this kind. The question of revenue is not involved at all, because if a member has a right to frank a parcel containing a dozen documents, he has a right to frank each one separately. If he franks each one separately and addresses it to the individual into whose hands he wishes it to go, there is nothing lost to the revenue, and there would be nothing lost to the revenue if he sent ten or a dozen of these to the postmaster and asked him to distribute them. I do not presume that any member of parliament would think of sending out mail matter that was not entitled to free delivery, and ask a postmaster to distribute that. I do not think such a practice has taken place; I have not heard of it; nor do I think that any member of parliament would jeopardize his position by presuming to do anything of that kind. I think the Postmaster General might reasonably make an exception of parliamentary documents bearing the impress of the King's Printer, which are entitled to go through the post office free of charge. The Minister of Agriculture is certainly mistaken in regard to the loss of revenue. The revenue would not be affected one whit. I fail to see that any wrong would be done to the country, and so long as the postmaster is willing to do this slight service in accommodating his neighbour by handing around such documents as bulletins, I think there is practically no ground for complaint. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture, who is acting for the Postmaster General in his absence, to point this out to the Postmaster General, and ask him not to deprive us of this privilege which we have enjoyed, legally or illegally. I never thought that I was doing anything wrong when I was using the postal service for a very proper purpose—to promote the work of the Minister of Agriculture. Now he seeks to impose a restriction upon us. I think the farmers of the country will not care to have him stand up in the House and say that their privileges should be interfered with in this way. This is a matter of convenience to members of parliament, who are busy people when they get home. If we get four or five hundred bulletins, and have to sit down and address each one separately, and look up the post offices, my impression is that they will be found in the waste basket instead of going into the hands of the farmers. If an exception were made in this case, I am satisfied that no loss of revenue would result, and no harm would be done in any way.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend does not seem to have caught the point I was making. I had no intention of expressing the idea that the mailing of matter by members in that way affected the revenue. What I did point out was that the franking privilege carries with it no privilege that stamped mail matter does not. The frank simply takes the place of the stamp. The regulations and rules of the office have to apply to franked matter just the same as they do to stamped matter. If postmasters are to be allowed to do this work for correspondents, whether members of parliament or not, it will interfere, very materially and seriously, with the collection of revenue in the case of stamped matter. That is the view of the Post Office Department. If they are to allow a postmaster to do this under certain circumstances and not under other circumstances, the authorities contend that it would bring about confusion in the post offices. Postmasters would very often do it when they were not allowed to do it as well as when they were allowed to do it. I am informed by the deputy Postmaster General that there has to be on the part of the authorities a very constant and close watch, especially over country postmasters, because they are constanly being asked to facilitate the use of the post office for the carriage of matter without payment. It is very common for people in a country village to put things into the post office without placing stamps on them for somebody else who collects his mail at that office. That of course is clearly contrary to the interest of the postal revenue, because all such matter ought to be stamped. That is only one of many ways in which postmasters are tempted not to collect revenue which ought to be collected. Every exception made tends to increase that confusion and the chances of loss of revenue. My hon. friend has said that it is a great convenience to members to be able to call on postmasters to do this work for them. I grant that; I have no doubt of it. At the same time, the post office authorities consider that the calling on postmasters to do that is a distinct interference with their work as postmasters, and is detrimental to the public service. If postmasters are asked, they do not like to refuse. They will probably find a great deal of difficulty in refusing their representative in the House ; and yet the doing of it might seriously interfere with the performance of their duties for which they are paid by the Post Office Department. For that reason the Post Office Department does not consider that it is in the public interest that such a request should be made to the postmaster. My hon. friend speaks about the distribution of literature to the farmers. No doubt it is very desirable that that should be done as widely as possible. At the same time, I do not think that the farmers of the country are asking any special privileges or advantages which other people should not have. If this concession were to be made to members, there is no evidence or knowledge as to the kind of literature that would be sent.

A member can send a bundle to one postmaster and a bundle to another, but unfortunately in the country post offices that opportunity has been taken advantage of for the distribution of circulars and advertisements and things of that kind—I do not mean with the frank but without the frank —in the ordinary course of business. Consequently the post office authorities had to exercise very considerable supervision over the conduct of the post masters in this respect.

Mr. BARR. I regret very much that the department should have seen fit to change the present practice which has been in vogue for the last quarter of a century ; not only in this House but in the provincial parliament as well. Of course in the latter the postage must be paid. The custom is one which is worked, not only to the convenience of members but to the interest of the public. As regards the plea that this occasions trouble to postmasters, I can assure you, Sir, that such is not the case. No member would think of imposing additional trouble on the postmasters if the latter were not willing to do that work. In fact the work in that connection is exceedingly trifling. I hardly think that the Postmaster General understands the position in the country districts or he would not have made the change. All that a postmaster in a rural district has to do is to open the package and place the documents on the counter and let those who call at the office take them. In that way a great deal of useful information can be spread throughout the country and no loss of revenue occasioned. This change will put the members of this House to great inconvenience and deprive the country of those bulletins, because members will not have the time to send out each bulletin separately. It would be impossible for members of this House to do this when, as at present, they have to do so much of their own writing, unlike the practice in some of the local legislatures, where the members can avail themselves of the staff of sessional clerks for that purpose. Here, however, there is no such staff which members can utilize by dictating their correspondence to shorthand writers and having it typewritten and transmitted through the mails. I hope that the hon. the Postmaster General will consider this matter of sending out packages of official documents and also the suggestion of endeavouring to place members in the position of being able to attend to the wants of their own constituencies without the great labour, inconvenience and expense now entailed upon them.

WAYS AND MEANS—INTERIM SUPPLY BILL.

House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved :

1. Resolved, That towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 30th June, 1905, the sum of $6,364,522.27 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

2. Resolved, That towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 30th June, 1906, the sum of $37,374,535.62 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Resolution reported, read the first and the second time and agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 168) for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June 1905, and the 30th June 1906.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE—SALARIES.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the salary of the commandant of the Royal Military College shall not exceed $3,200 a year, and that the salaries of the staff adjutant, professors, instructors, assistant instructors and staff, shall be fixed and may be readjusted from time to time by the Governor in Council—Sir Frederick Borden.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). The object of this resolution is to found thereon a Bill which I will introduce presently, if the resolution carries, which will provide that the salary of the commandant shall not exceed $3,200 a year, and that the salaries of the staff adjutant, professors, instructors, assistant instructors and staff, shall be fixed, and may be readjusted from time to time by the Governor in Council; and that the details of such salaries shall appear in the annual report laid before parliament by the Minister of Militia and Defence. In fact it will be an Act to amend the existing provisions in the Act respecting the Royal Military College, which are as follows :

The salary of the commandant shall not exceed $3,200 a year ; the salary of the staff adjutant shall not exceed $1,400 a year, and the salaries of the professors, instructors and assistant instructors shall not exceed the total sum of $26,000 annually. The Governor in Council may from time to time readjust the number and duties, and, within the limit above mentioned, the salaries of the staff, and the details of such salaries shall appear in the annual report laid before parliament by the Minister of Militia and Defence.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the college has grown, and we have now reached the limit of $26,000 for salaries provided in the existing Royal Military College Act. I think it desirable, as later on there may be a further growth and expansion, that the limit of $26,000 should be removed. Parliament always controls these votes, and I thought it better that an amendment should be passed adhering to the limitation of the salary of the commandant, and to the provision with regard to the other professors, but withdrawing from the Bill the limitation of $26,000; leaving it to the Governor in Council to fix the amount of salaries, and leaving it to parliament to vote such sum as may be considered necessary.

Mr. DANIEL. Do the present salaries appear in detail anywhere?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, my hon. friend will find them in the Auditor General's Report, and they are in the report of the Minister of Militia.

Mr. DANIEL. In the Act just read is it provided that they shall be in the militia report?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The salaries shall appear in the annual report laid before parliament by the Minister of Militia and Defence.

Mr. TISDALE. What is the present amount?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We are spending more than $26,000 now.

Mr. TISDALE. Do I understand that under this amendment, by Order in Council you can change the salary and the amounts without first getting the consent of parliament?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We can do that now up to $26,000. We are not increasing the salaries, but we may want more professors. At the present moment we are unable to go beyond $26,000 in providing for the teaching staff of the college. We have reached that limit, we are beyond it now, and it was thought wise to remove that restriction, seeing that the whole matter is absolutely within the control of parliament.

Mr. BERGERON. But do you mention a limit in the new Act?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend might be able to fix a limit by calculating how much money he will require, and say that the total shall not exceed the sum fixed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is no objection to that, but I think it would be wiser to remove the restriction, because in the course of a few years the college may grow, I think it will. The number of students that can now be accommodated is only 100, and I should think that before many years the capacity of the college will need to be extended to accommodate 200.

Mr. TISDALE. What was the object of fixing a limit in the first place?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not know, I suppose the object was to prevent an expenditure beyond $26,000. But the question is whether such a limit is either desirable or necessary, in view of the fact that every year the whole expenditure is submitted to parliament and subject to criticism, the salaries are all published to the world, and are the subject of discussion here when the estimates are taken every year.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not remember having read the discussion that took place when the limit was fixed. But I can imagine that it was pointed out that, so long as we know that the expense for these professors cannot exceed a certain sum unless a statute providing for that excess is passed, it is a guarantee that there will be opportunity for careful discussion before increase is made ; whereas, if it is left unlimited, additions may be made imperceptibly and without any opportunity for discussion. If the minister would fix a sum beyond which he would not go, I should think that would be sufficient. I was glad to hear him say that he had no objection to that limitation. Even when, in the fullness of time, it becomes necessary to make an increase, it would probably be well to limit that increase and so continue the safeguard that we now have. I think this would be in the interest of the college itself, because it would be an assurance to the public that there is no danger of drifting into undue expenditure. It would be a protection to the minister also, because there are always plenty of people anxious to serve the country at a sufficient salary, and, if there is no limit the minister will be under constant pressure to increase the expenditure.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As I said I have no objection to following the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale). In looking over the history of the present law, I find that in the Royal Military Act as first passed there was no restriction of this kind, but there was a restriction as to the salaries of the professors. The Act provided :

> The salary of the commandant shall be not more than $3,000. And the salaries of the professors shall be not more than $2,000 each.

That law, which was passed in 1875 or 1876 was re-enacted when the statutes were revised in 1886. But in 1893 the law was changed and the maximum for the commandant was fixed at $3,200, instead of $3,000, the restriction as to the other professors was removed, and a limit of $26,000 was fixed to the total expenditure on this account. I think the amount that we shall require at this moment will be about $30,000, and I am willing that it should be fixed at that. Or perhaps, while we are about it, it might be better to make it a little more—say $35,000. Would there be any objection to that

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. minister knows best what he intends to do.

Mr. DANIEL. Last year the salaries of the superior staff cost $30,248.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Then, $30,000 would not be enough.

Mr. BERGERON. Why not make it $35,000 and leave it at that for a while ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If $35,000 would be acceptable I will move to amend the resolution in that way.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that we are proceeding without knowing anything at all. The minister tells us that he was limited to $26,000 under the law ; the next moment he admits that he has spent $30,000. How can that be ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will understand that I did not spend any money that was not voted by parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. But I understand the minister to say that there is a restriction in the law by which he is not allowed to spend more than $26,000 ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But each year the Supply Bill has voted more. Of course it was not consistent with the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, what the minister asks parliament to do in voting supply was to repeal that clause of the Act.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Practically.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not suppose that he ever told parliament that that was what he was doing, for I think that if he had done so, parliament would have told him that before asking for more than was allowed by law, he should seek the repeal of the law fixing the limit. But the main point is this : The minister says he wants more money. What does he intend to do with it ? What has he been doing up to the present time ? How far does he propose to change the military college either as to the scope of its work or the efficiency of its work ? If he intends to change the scope of the work and come into competition with universities and colleges, I do not think that that is a thing we ought to do. If for the military side of the work it is necessary to have more assistance, that is a fair matter for us to consider. I can readily understand that the limit was put there in the first place because there was a good deal of opposition to the government running a collegiate institution and a good deal of suspicion that it would involve too great expense. Consequently, no doubt, in the discussion it was generally agreed upon that a work such as was outlined at that time could be done with a certain sum of money, and that was fixed as the limit. I would like to know from the minister how many professors he has in the college, how many branches he is teaching and what he proposes to do in the way of extension requiring more money. We ought to know this before we are asked to amend the law so as to allow larger sums to be devoted to these purposes. I think there is a limit beyond which we are not justified in going. We have other universities in different cities—one of them in Kingston itself. These are able to cope with all the work of civil education—if that is a proper name for it. We have colleges that are well equipped ; and it is not worth while for us to set up rival institutions. The object young men have in going to the military school is to finish their education with respect to military matters.

leges and universities of the country. I think it is time for us to discuss thoroughly and may be to revise our action in this respect. Is it worth while keeping up a military college at large expense to the government simply to train young men for the civil businesses of the country? If it is not wise, and I think we all agree to that, is it wise to educate only those we can use for our military purposes, and cannot that be done for a less amount of money than that which we have to supply for the teaching and professorial work for a general grounding in the other branches of study which are pursued equally well, and may be better, at the universities and colleges? Would it not be wiser for our young men to pursue a certain course of preparation in our colleges and schools that provide the necessary qualification for entrance into the military school, and then finish their military education in that institution? Should not that be the real purpose of the military college? As it is now, I imagine you have professors there who take boys from the common school and teach them mensuration, trigonometry and the mathematics—I do not know whether you teach classics or not—and a great many things that the colleges, schools and universities are specially instituted and established to teach. The whole point I am making is: Are we duplicating unnecessarily the work of the teaching institutions of the country?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not see how you can separate the technical education, which is a proper part of a military education, from the other branches of knowledge which are indispensable to the soldier. These young men are taken at a certain age, and if they are to receive their training as soldiers it is necessary that they shall receive, not only a technical education, but that they shall receive also a general education to fit them to take their places in the ranks. I do not think it would be well to teach all the subjects of the higher classes which are taught by the universities, such as classics and so on, but when we take young men of thirteen or fourteen years of age it is indispensable that they should be taught such subjects as mathematics, geometry, geography, engineering and so on. That is indispensable, it seems to me, and I do not see how you can teach one without teaching the other. In addition to that, they must be taught horsemanship and artillery. They are taught those things which essentially belong to the education of a soldier, but they cannot have a complete education unless they also have the other branches of knowledge to which I have referred. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) asks: Are we going to train young men for the purpose of being soldiers, and after all train them for civil life? In my judgment, that is unavoidable. Luckily we shall not require all the young men that are turned out of the military college for military purposes. I say luckily, because I hope the day is far distant when we shall have war. I hope we shall never have war, but we have our college—our West Point as my hon. friend calls it—because of the possibility of having war, and the experience of other nations has proved that in the emergency of war if you have in the walks of civil life any number of men who have received a military education you have the best preparation that you can have for the defence of the country. My hon. friend has only to be reminded that at the outset of the civil war the generals who became most efficient in the American army were Generals Grant, Sherman and McLellan, who had received a military education, but who had left the army and gone into the civil walks of life. General McLellan was the manager of a railway, if I remember right; General Sherman, if I remember well, was a teacher in a college, and General Grant had gone into different occupations, but when the country was divided they came back to the army; and of all the men who went into the war, and there was no want of enthusiasm, those who turned out to be at once successful were the men who had had a military training. Let us say that every year we turn out a number of young men who have received a military education. It is an excellent training for civil life. It gives them an idea of discipline and an idea of many subjects that are of the utmost importance to them. Let the contingency of the country being plunged into war arise, and these young men will leave their occupations, come back into the ranks and form the nucleus of the defence of the country. So I think my hon. friend will agree with me that the training that is given in the military college is quite proper and necessary. It is not confined to the technical branches of the profession, but it also embraces all the subjects of knowledge which are as useful and necessary to the soldier as to any other man in any walk of civil life.

Mr. FOSTER. My right hon. friend has scarcely given me credit for the idea I was trying to bring forward. He says it is necessary that you should have your military men well trained and well conditioned in other branches of knowledge. There is no difference between himself and myself there. The only difference that there is between us in that respect would be this: Is it necessary for us to do all that in the military college, or is it not possible for us to take advantage of the other institutions of learning in which young men are grounded, and then that they should enter the military college to round off their technical and military education? You might as well say that you must teach everything at the military college from A, B, C up. You have right alongside that college in Kingston a well equipped university—Queen's. There are men in that institution who teach the arts and sciences, and the practical sciences as well. Is there no way by which there can be a co-operation between the institutions that already exist and your military college, so that you need not throw away or duplicate the work of these institutions ? Is that not possible ? The medical man is trained for his profession, but the medical colleges do not teach all the other branches of a liberal education. These are taught elsewhere, and in connection with his training and his profession, the medical training that is given in the medical college is exclusively in the line of medical knowledge. Of course, a doctor would be a very poor outfit unless he were as well as possible instructed in the elements of a liberal education, but the medical college does not propose to do that, and does not do it. It confines itself, through its experts in special courses, to the making of a doctor out of certain material, and the better the material the better the doctor.

What I am arguing for is this : is it not possible for this military institution to avail itself of the large and generous training afforded in the other institutions of learning, and for it to devote its attention specially to the making of military men. No one doubts that if you have men who have a knowledge of military matters and you do not want to keep them at mimic warfare all the time, it is a great deal better they should be engaged in other avocations of life, while of course they are a great deal better fitted if the occasion should arise, to take their share in the enginery of war. But the very same thing could be accomplished by utilizing the training institutions we have and with which we do not wish to compete, and let the military training establishment be specially for military purposes. The objection may be urged, that those whom you wish to train in the technique of war, you must bring under military discipline when they are young. Other things being equal, I suppose it would be better that you should apply the methods of military discipline from a very early age, but there are disadvantages connected with that. Too much military discipline contracts life in grooves which are not quite advantageous in the general every day rough and tumble of life. While you may sacrifice something of machine like precision because you have not the boys in your hands from twelve to fifteen years of age, yet probably the men as a whole would gain by not being so long under that strict form of discipline. I would like to know what is being done in the military college now ; how much of the work that might be done by other educational institutions, are we duplicating, and is it impossible for us to co-operate with and take advantage of the work done by these other colleges so that in the military college we might devote our efforts chiefly to military training. I do not imagine we are aiming at raising up a phalanx of great generals ; what we do want to get is a certain number of trained young men who will make efficient officers for the militia of the country, and if war ever comes, who will be the more competent to serve their own country because of their military training. We do not want to subordinate the whole of the life of these young men to military work, but we do want to form material which may be utilized if ever the opportunity should arise for actual war, and which can be availed of as directors of that less efficient military education which we give to our militia through the annual drill. It is well worth while considering whether we may not easily go to too great expense in trying to duplicate what other institutions would do for us equally well, and, not in the end to the disadvantage of the men who are turned out from the military college.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I appreciate the position which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) takes. I do not understand that he is against the military college——

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But, my hon. friend seems to think that we could spend this money better by conducting a college which would take young men from other colleges and educate them specially in military subjects after they had acquired a certain portion of their general education. I believe there is a great deal of force in that contention, and I think the time will come when we should act from that point of view, but I do not think it has come yet. If my hon. friend has read the debate which took place when the military college was founded—I happened to be in the House at the time and heard the discussion—he will find that Mr. Alexander Mackenzie who took a very active interest in the matter, pointed out that it was desirable to found a college of this kind, not with the expectation that the graduates would take up to any very great extent military careers, but to secure by a composite military and general education a class of young men who, although they might follow civil pursuits, would be of great use to the country in the event of war. For that purpose every graduate of the military college, whether he enters the active militia or the permanent force, or not, is on the list and liable to be called on as an officer of the King. It was thought, and I think the idea was sound, that the military training and the technical knowledge which the Royal Military College graduate acquired, might prove—and it has proved—of very great advantage to the country. During the last nine years we have taken one step in the direction the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) suggests. Originally the course was four years and the age of matriculation fifteen years ; we have reduced the course to three years and we have raised the age of matriculation from fifteen to seventeen years, so that thus far we have met the views of the hon. gentleman. I feel we have gone far enough for the present, though, I think later on we may take an additional step. The length of the course in the military colleges in England is two years, and those entering are expected to have a good general education.

Mr. FOSTER. At what age do they enter?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is either eighteen or nineteen years, I am not positive. Some day no doubt we will come to that position. As to interference with the other universities, or as to the allegation that this government is subsidizing a college in opposition to other universities, I do not think there is much in that, and so far as I know the other universities are not in any way jealous of the Royal Military College. They are glad to co-operate with the military college in every way. As a matter of fact, many of the graduates of the military college, after graduating take special courses in engineering and other branches in the great universities of the country. The training which the young men receive at that college is of a special character ; it is calculated to improve them in every way, physically, morally and mentally ; it is invaluable for men who are to follow a military career, but is I believe enormously valuable for men, no matter what may be their lot in life afterwards. I think we can scarcely overestimate the importance of that course. I think we do not sufficiently value the advantage which that college has been to Canada during the twenty-five or thirty years of its existence. As to the future of the college, my hon. friend has asked me very properly what is being taught at the college at the present time. I have here the curriculum, or list of subjects taught.

Mr. TISDALE. Is there a matriculation examination?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, a very severe matriculation examination—indeed, more severe than the matriculation examination in most of the universities, including an examination, I may say, in classics. In the first class is taught : military engineering, reconnaisance, science (including physics and chemistry), civil surveying, civil engineering, infantry drill, artillery drill, equitation, gymnastics and fencing, rifle practice, revolver practice. In the second class: mathematics and mechanics, descriptive geometry military engineering, artillery (theory and construction) of tactics, military administration, military law, military topography, civil surveying, French, infantry drill, artillery drill, signalling, gymnastics, rifle practice, revolver practice, workshops. In the third class: mathematics and mechanics, geometrical drawing, military engineering, artillery, military topography, English, French, infantry drill, artillery drill, gymnastics, swimming, rifle practice, revolver practice, workshops. Many subjects, of course, are begun in the first year and continued during the second and third years. With regard to the advantage of this college to Canada, I regret to say that in the past we have not been able to secure many of the graduates for our own permanent force.

Mr. FOSTER. How many have been graduated up to date?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About 400. Unfortunately, owing to the fact that our permanent force did not offer very many temptations to young men who wished to follow a military career, we have not had the advantage of having many of the young gentlemen join that force. But some of them have done so, and a few have reached senior positions; and they are most useful officers in the several departments in which they are serving.

Mr. FOSTER. How many are now actively engaged in that work in Canada ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. At present I think there are in the permanent militia force about twenty or twenty-two ; but after the closing of the present term of the college on the 1st of July there will be about forty, owing to the better prospects now afforded of a career in that force, and owing to the fact that a few years ago we carried through this House a pension Bill for the militia, which is now law. Some of those in the second year are likely to be offered positions. So that altogether the record is not too discouraging, and it augurs well, I think, for the future.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the amount expended last year?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The expenditure is not so large as it seems, because we are recouped for a very large part of it. The young gentlemen pay so much a year, which goes into the public treasury.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What is the fee?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. A $100 fee and about $200 for supplies—about $300 each. So that the actual expenditure of the country on the college is not more than $65,000 a year; and, after all, considering the work which that college has done, not only in Canada, but in other colonies and in the empire, in the way of making Canada better known, I think we are paying a very small amount of money for the advantages received. My hon. friend has asked me what the salaries at the present moment are. The amount spent yast year was slightly over $26,000.

Mr. TISDALE. What is the reason of this increase ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The increase in the number of pupils. Ten years ago the number of graduates per annum was about nine ; now it is thirty-four. The number of applications to get into the college last year was over fifty, and only those applicants are admitted who get the most marks. There is therefore now competition for admission. Those who get the highest marks come first. The capacity of the college is about 100, and each year there are about thirty-four vacancies.

Mr. TISDALE. Do you keep the number up to the maximum ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, we have to turn away a large number of applicants. Last year forty-six passed the examination, and we only had thirty-four places. There are ninety-five in the college now.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Why should there be an increase in the cost of running when there is no increase in the capacity ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have double the number of students now that we had ten years ago, and are being asked to provide assistant teachers. We have added two or three assistants to the college, who are absolutely necessary.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Are the classes so large that you require to have two professors now where one sufficed before ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About nine years ago, when I took office, the college was very much run down, and the number of students was a little more than half what it is to-day. Then the duration of tuition was four years instead of three as it is now. I do not say that there is the same amount of work done in three years that there was in four, but the military training, which was formerly spread over four years, is now limited to three.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How many additional professors have you ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Three.

Mr. FOSTER. How many altogether ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Commandant is Lieutenant-Colonel Reade, imperial officer. Mr. E. V. O. Hewett, imperial officer, is professor of strategy, tactics and staff duties. Mr. H. A. Panet, graduate of Royal Military College, was adjutant, and has been replaced by another graduate of the Royal Military College.

Mr. FOSTER. What does he teach ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He looks after the discipline of the college. Mr. C. M. B. Dunlop, is professor of artillery, administration and law. He is an imperial officer. Mr. N. A. W. Scott is a professor of military surveying and superintendent of drill and gymnastics, also an imperial officer. Captain H. J. Dawson, is assistant instructor of mathematics. Captain T. V. Anderson, graduate of the Royal Military College, is assistant instructor of civil engineering. Captain E. L. Mozly, imperial officer, is professor of military engineering. Captain J. B. Cochrane, is professor of civil surveying, physics and chemistry. Professor J. E. Martin, is professor of mathematics and mechanics and astronomy. Professor Chartrand, who died, has been replaced by Professor Lanos, as teacher of French. Mr. Lanos was formerly a teacher of modern languages to young gentlemen of the British Navy at Halifax. He was appointed a month after Mr. Chartrand's death. Professor W. R. Butler, formerly of King's College, Nova Scotia, is professor of civil engineering. Professor Alexander Laird is professor of English. Dr. L. K. Kilburn is medical officer. The recent appointments are Mr. Anderson, assistant instructor of civil engineering, son of Colonel Anderson of the Marine and Fisheries Department, a very bright young man who graduated at the Royal Military College, and Mr. Dawson, assistant instructor of mathematics. The total amount paid for salaries is $29,930, out of which is to be deducted $3,163.33 provided by statute and the adjutant, $1,400.

Mr. FOSTER. You have four hundred graduates and have employed at the most twenty-two for military purposes in this country. The others have gone into civil life ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have a very much larger number than that in the active militia and we have trebled the number employed in the different departments at Ottawa.

Mr. FOSTER. For the exclusively technical work for which this college was designed, you have out of 400 graduates made use of twenty-two ? You have some others doing clerk work in the department, which is very good if they are good clerks, and if not, they are not made any better because they happen to have gone through the military college.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They are doing clerical work in the departments.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be a proper use for graduates of the military college, but no doubt it is work which any well educated clerk could do, because it is routine work more than anything else. The thought that comes to one is this : Out of 400 graduates of this institution, you have between 22 and 40 who are engaged in more or less technical military work in Canada. The institution at present will turn out 34 graduates a year. Now, does not the minister think he has space enough and machinery enough in that establishment to turn out all the military graduates that can be employed in military work, technical and general, in this country and still leave a sufficient surplus as our contribution to the military force of the empire? What is the purpose of turning out twice as many, or three times as many, if, after their graduation they are simply to be absorbed into the ordinary work of the world? For such work they would be as well trained by other institutions. I think it is an excellent thing that some of those who go through our military college take up the military profession in other parts of the empire and do work in that way for the empire. I do not think Canada loses by that; I think she gains. If war came to Canada, this is the class of men who would come back here, and useful men they would be, too. But, turning out 34 well equipped, thoroughly instructed men every year, it seems to me you are educating all that are needed for our own service and providing all the surplus that is necessary. So, if there is an idea that because there are more applicants you must enlarge your classes and enlarge your college, I think that you can very well think over the contrary proposition which I submit and with saving of expense. Why not turn attention to making the 34 graduates that you turn out more efficient, more thorough, if they need more thoroughness, and, instead of increasing quantity improve in quality? And there is another point. Here you have a professor of surveying;—that is military surveying, of course. That is a little different from civil surveying—it is somewhat technical. You have a professor of mathematics. Now, mathematics is mathematics whether it is taught in a military establishment or any other, and however it may be applied.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But, if my hon. friend will allow me, it is absolutely necessary for instruction in artillery and engineering.

Mr. FOSTER. But there is no essential difference in mathematics taught in military college and mathematics taught in Queen's University or anywhere else. These schools and colleges are doing this part of the work of education and can be relied upon to do it. Then you have civil engineering, and to that the same statement applies. Then you have a professor of physics and chemistry. These branches are taught equally well in other institutions. You have a French teacher and an English teacher. For French, English, mathematics, physics, chemistry and civil engineering you have instructors and professors in the military college; and all these branches are taught at least equally well in other institutions. I go further and say that they are taught better. You cannot put a French teacher into the military college to give what time he can to boys who enter at seventeen years of age and expect him to do much in teaching them French. He may keep up the French they have, he may even help those who are English to learn a little more French. But French, English, and these other branches can be more competently taught to young men in the colleges and universities and schools than they can by the casual and fragmentary work which is possible on these lines in a military college. Putting all these together, it seems to me that, with proper co-operation the military college could be the means of much more efficient work in its own line. By providing a rigid examination so that only those could be admitted who were well grounded in the branches taught in other institutions, you would have classes of young men who would devote their attention particularly to the military side of their education. If that all means that you get young men even at a riper age, it would do no harm. I think eighteen would be a better age than seventeen. The reason why many of the boys who graduate at a military college do not apply themselves to military life is that they have not the military taste. I do not know whether that taste is born in a boy or not; but I doubt very much that it can be educated into any large proportion of the youth of this country. When a boy has reached the age of eighteen he knows whether his bent is towards a military life or not. If he then makes the choice of entering the military college, it is fair to assume that is because he has a liking for military life, and probably, an aptitude for it; and this is the class of young men who will be the most apt, the most easily instructed and the most efficient graduates in military science. This, evidently is what the English people think. Their military colleges take boys at nineteen years of age. I imagine, though, I cannot speak by the book, that when these applicants come to the military colleges at nineteen, they must be very well grounded in the other branches.

How favourably Kingston is situated for such a work as I have indicated. The military college is alongside one of the best educational institutions we have in Ontario or in the Dominion. Co-operation would be so easy and, so would be the increasing of the limit of age and making the course, if anything, a litle shorter. That may be a matter for very careful consideration. It may be that three years is not too long for a young man to devote to work upon the military side of his education. I think there is something in the view I have tried to present regarding the educational side of the question. Now you have, I suppose, about 30 per class.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About 32.

Mr. FOSTER. The professor teaches military matters to a class of not less than thirty. Would not a larger class be better? For instance, in teaching strategy, how to avoid your enemy, how to get on his weak side, how to deploy—can he not do that better when he has thirty or forty than when he has only fifteen? He gets up nearer to army conditions. Then the professor of artillery can just as well instruct forty pupils as ten, and do it with a great deal more vim, as he has more inspiration. The same way with military surveying. He takes his class out, I suppose, and teaches them military surveying. It seems to me therefore that your professorial staff ought to take care of an average class of about thirty. Each class, I suppose, would average about that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About thirty-two or thirty-three. I would like to add a word. I do not differ seriously from the view of my hon. friend, except that, as I have already said, I think there was something in Mr. Mackenzie's idea that it was desirable to educate a class of young men, not only fitting them for the ordinary duties of life, but carrying along with that a special and technical military education. My hon. friend has not referred to that point which I made; but he agrees with me that at the time when Mr. Mackenzie spoke there was something in that idea, and we have consequently a large number of men in this country engaged in civil pursuits whose names are in the militia list, and who took that course, and would be very valuable men in the event of stress. My hon. friend argues that we should go still further in the direction in which I have taken one step, by reducing the length of the term one year. He also proposes—I do not understand that he wishes it to be done at once, but that eventually we may take young men at a greater age, say eighteen or nineteen, with higher acquirements and higher qualifications, from the high schools and universities of the country, and give them a military education alone. I am inclined to agree very much with that view.

Mr. FOSTER. Founded upon the broader elements.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Exactly. No doubt the present college will be sufficient for many years to come to accommodate all the students we will have. But for a time at least, we must go on as we are now. When we reach the point to which my hon. friend refers, it will be necessary to do as is done to-day in the military college in England, and as is done at West Point, and apply a test. When a young man enters the West Point Academy he binds himself, enters into a solemn obligation, to join the army of the United States and serve therein for twelve years.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, because they have an army.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, we have a permanent force, and we could require our young men to join either the permanent force, or the active militia, or the imperial army. And there is a point that was overlooked, namely, that the British army offers to the cadets of the Royal Military College I think seven commissions annually, and during the whole time of the existence of this college, I think an average of seven per year have received commissions. During the war in South Africa I think there were over eighty graduates of our Royal Military College taking a creditable part, and some of them a very noble part in that war. But to come down to the point before the committee. Some of the professors are now underpaid. We have reached our limit of $26,000, and I would like the committee to grant a further sum of $4,000, making the limit $30,000. I think that would enable us to increase some of the salaries that require to be increased, and to add one or two men to the staff.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister can do that now if he pleases. I never could see any reason why you should put a limit in the statute and bind yourself to so much or to so little, because you have to get it voted by parliament.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That was my idea, but some of my hon. friends opposite wanted to fix a limit.

Mr. TISDALE. How many graduates are now in the imperial army?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think over 100.

Mr. TISDALE. It is only just to the college that that fact should be stated; because when the college was started one of the objects was to educate some of our young men, not for service in Canada solely, but also to serve in the imperial army and thus to keep up a connection between the mother country and Canada. I understand there have always been more applications by young men leaving the college than the commissions offered. I notice in Colonel Reade's report that he recommends that every young man, immediately on graduating, should either obtain a commission in the imperial army, or in our permanent militia, or should serve three years in the volunteers. I think something of that sort would be well worthy of consideration, especially as the college has now reached the point when you have more applications than you can receive. I think the time has now come when you can gradually begin to impose conditions. My hon. friend from North Toronto has suggested several improvements. You would have to raise the standard of matriculation if you carried out the suggestions he has so ably expressed, and in a good many of which I concur. We want to teach in that college as few things as possible that are not purely military, we want to make good military officers. Mathematics no doubt are indispensable, to a certain extent, so far as they have a direct application to some of the arms of the force. We know that every year the evolution of arms makes it more important that military officers should have a knowledge of all the branches which go to form a technical education. But, beyond that the only way that I can see to increase the efficiency and economy of the department is by gradually eliminating all the education that is not directly or indirectly military from the college. There is a good deal to be said in favour of the argument of establishing a maximum and that would regulate to a large extent the number of professors. I think that a request for $4,000 more is not an unreasonable one and probably in another year it might be well to take up and consider at more length and with more knowledge the requirements of the college on these lines.

Mr. DANIEL. Before the motion is carried, I would like to ask the hon. minister to explain a little more definitely in regard to the mode of admissions to the Royal Military College. As I understand it, a few years ago a certain number was apportioned to the different provinces of Canada, so many to Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces. I understood the hon. minister to state definitely that admissions were entirely by competition and the marks obtained by examination, so that now there are no numbers apportioned to different localities in Canada. Otherwise, I may say that I was very much pleased with the statement of the minister in regard to the Royal Military College. I have always taken a very great interest in that institution. I do think that our permanent forces do not receive the benefit from that college which they ought to receive, and I was rather under the impression that the government did not encourage these young men to go into the permanent militia, as the fact of their being graduates of the Royal Military College did not give them any advantage over any other young man whom the government of the day might wish to appoint. I think that is so.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, it does give them an advantage.

Mr. DANIEL. I take it, however, from the statement of the hon. minister that so far from that being the case, it was rather difficult to get these young men to take positions in the permanent militia, because the permanent militia did not offer a very prosperous career to a young man. I am very glad indeed that the conditions have changed, so that these young men now, inasmuch as they feel inclined to embrace the military profession, do look forward to commencing that military career in our own permanent militia force.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In reply to my hon. friend first in reference to the apportioning of vacancies in the college among the different provinces, I would say that I do not think that was ever the rule or the practice, but I am inclined to the view that it might be a wise thing to do. I happened to be at West Point the other day, and, among other things, I learnt there that the disposition of cadetships was territorial, or that it was among the different states—a certain number to each state, of course subject to competition and nomination. Certain prominent people, senators or the members of the House of Representatives have the right to nominate candidates for admission to West Point, but if the nominees do not pass the required examination then other nominees are put forward. I think there is something to be said in favour of territorial distribution. In that way you have in the college representatives from every part of the country, and you are leavening the whole country with whatever advantage may come from those highly trained and highly educated gentlemen. At the present time that is not the law. I think it is worth while considering, subject, of course, to the provision that a competitive examination must be passed as far as the particular district is concerned. In reference to the other inquiry which my hon. friend made, I said that the permanent force of the past did not seem to offer a tempting career, and hence young gentlemen from the Royal Military College did not apply for admission to it. There was no pension law. A man might go on serving his country until he became too old or reached the age limit, and he would then be allowed to go out on the street without any provision being made for him. That has been changed. We now have a pension law. The Royal Military College graduate has this advantage over any one else that he can receive a commission at once without any further examination, whereas an applicant from the ordinary walks of life or a college must pass a technical military examination before he can receive a commission.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 169) to amend the Act respecting the Royal Military College.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT—PERMANENT FORCE.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Militia Act, and to provide that the permanent force may be increased to five thousand men.—Hon. Sir Frederick Borden.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). The provision made for the permanent force in the Militia Law which was passed last session is for 2,000 men. The original provision was for 1,000 and during the last session it was increased to 2,000. Although it is not expected that the limit of 5,000 will be reached for some time, I thought it was desirable, while making the change, that power should be taken to increase it to 5,000, and I will give some explanation in detail as to why this is proposed to be done. The committee is aware that an offer was made by this government some time ago to the imperial authorities to relieve the War Office of the responsibility of maintaining the garrisons at Halifax and Esquimalt, and that that offer was accepted. The strength of the garrisons at Esquimalt and Halifax is something like 2,500 men, so that it will be necessary to have an amendment to the Act to enable us to increase the strength of the permanent force. The strength of the permanent force at present is about 1,200 and our limit under the law is 2,000. We must get authority to increase the strength to enable us to provide garrisons at Halifax and Esquimalt.

Mr. TISDALE. That will take 2,500 men ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, but I am informed by General Lake that probably a less number would be sufficient. In addition to Halifax and Esquimalt there is to be a depot at Montreal and a depot at some point in the Northwest Territories, to be called the Strathcona Horse. This matter has been discussed on two or three occasions and provision is being made for the erection of the necessary buildings. In addition to these two new depots, when the new provinces in the Northwest are organized it will be necessary, if we are to seriously undertake the problem of defence for the whole of Canada, to add some depots in these new provinces. I have a statement here showing that approximately a strength of 5,000 permanent force will be required some time in the future. I do not mean to say that at present it is intended to go beyond the depots now in existence with about 1,200 men, the depot at Montreal with probably 200 men, the Strathcona Horse depot with 100 or 125 men, and the Halifax and Esquimalt garrisons. I do not say it is the intention to go beyond the establishment of these depots at the present time or perhaps for some time to come, but I do say that if we are to carry out the idea of becoming responsible for the defence of this country, it will be necessary to make provision for about 5,000 men in the permanent force.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the Strathcona Horse depot be in one of the new provinces ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Which one ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Alberta.

Mr. FOWLER. At what point ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am not able to speak positively but the officers of my department report that from a strategic point of view it should be situated either at Calgary or Medicine Hat; probably Calgary.

Mr. FOWLER. What about Manitoba ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We already have a large depot in Winnipeg. I will read the statement I have here because there is no object in keeping it back. This statement comprises the whole of the depots ; those proposed as well as those now in existence.

Cavalry—three squadrons Royal Canadian Dragoons and six squadrons Royal Canadian Mounted Rifles. Each squadron numbers 150 men so that the total will be 1,350.

Artillery—Royal Canadian Horse Artillery; three batteries of 133 men each. Total 399 men.

Royal Canadian Garrison Artillery—five companies of 220 men each. Total 1,100.

Engineers—Royal Canadian Engineers, three companies 100 men each. Total 300.

Infantry, Royal Canadian Regiment, ten companies of 120 men each. Total 1,200.

Canadian Army Medical Corps ; details divided among the different depots. Total 150.

Canadian Army Service Corps ; details divided among the different depots. Total 150.

Canadian Ordnance Store Corps ; details divided among the different depots. Total 150.

That makes 4,800, and it includes all now in existence and those proposed. The distribution of the above mentioned units of the different corps will be as follows :

Royal Canadian Dragoons ; one squadron each at Toronto, Ont, St. John, Que. and Fredericton, N.B. At St. John, Que. and at Fredericton, N.B., the Royal Canadian Dragoons would replace the infantry regiments which are at present in these depots.

Mr. FOWLER. You will continue the depot at Fredericton ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, but for cavalry instead of infantry.

Mr. FOWLER. Will there not be some discussion as to that ?

Mr. DANIEL. They have already been moved.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The infantry have been moved to Halifax, but there will be a cavalry corps substituted. The infantry at St. Johns, Que., will be moved to Montreal and a cavalry detachment established at St. Johns, Que.

Mr. FOWLER. I would point out to the minister that as Sussex, King's county, is being made a military post and a great deal of money is being spent there—some of it wisely, although not all—it would be well to make Sussex the headquarters of this cavalry regiment. It is really a military town at the present time, the military camp is held there every summer ; it is the site of the new rifle range, and in order to round out the whole establishment and make it complete Sussex should be made the cavalry depot.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am afraid my hon. friend wants the earth.

Mr. FOWLER. We will supply the earth if you give us the men.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will have to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) to confer with the member for York (Mr. Crocket) and when these hon. gentlemen come to an agreement I will carry it out.

Mr. FOWLER. I am afraid we would not agree.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I hope the committee will accept my statement when I say, that what I am reading here is absolutely and entirely the result of conferences between the military members of the military council. I am told that from a strategical point of view Fredericton is an important point at which to have the cavalry station. Later on we may be able to have a cavalry depot at Sussex.

Royal Canadian Mounted Rifles : one squadron in Manitoba, at Winnipeg, three in Alberta, and two in Saskatchewan.

Mr. HERRON. Not a full regiment ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. A squadron numbers 125. There is a squadron at Winnipeg now.

Mr. FOWLER. There are no Mounted Rifles, outside of these, west of Lake Superior ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. Artillery : Royal Canadian Horse Artillery —two batteries in Ontario, at Kingston ; half a battery in Manitoba, at Winnipeg ; and half a battery in Alberta, probably at Calgary.

Royal Canadian Garrison Artillery : maritime provinces—two companies, at Halifax; British Columbia—one company, at Esquimalt ; Quebec—two companies, at Quebec city.

Royal Canadian Engineers : maritime provinces—one company at Halifax ; British Columbia—one company, at Esquimalt ; and one company distributed among the different depots.

Infantry : Royal Canadian Regiment : maritime provinces—four companies, at Halifax ; Quebec—two companies, one at Montreal and one at Quebec city ; Ontario —three conpanies ; one at London, one at Toronto and one at Fort William ; British Columbia—one company at Esquimalt ; Manitoba—a detachment ; Alberta—a detachment.

Canadian Army Service Corps—distributed.

Canadian Army Medical Corps—distributed.

Canadian Ordnance Store Corps—distributed.

The above distribution is based primarily upon the instructional requirements of the active militia as they will finally be distributed throughout the Dominion, and, secondly, upon the garrison requirements of the defended ports of Halifax, Esquimalt and Quebec. They are also generally in accord with the organization contemplated for defence purposes. This is signed by General Lake.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask the minister how he proposes to defend the city of St. John, New Brunswick ? I notice that in this scheme of defence there is no mention of that important port. Whether the minister thinks the local volunteer militia are quite sufficient for all ordinary and extraordinary purposes of defence I do not know ; but I notice especially that there is no artillery organization put down for the city of St. John. As I understand, under the original scheme of placing the permanent artillery forces of this Dominion, it was intended to put a battery of artillery at the port of St. John. So far it has not been done. I notice that the minister stated that the location of these forces is in his idea, and I presume in that of the Council which advises him, a proper distribution for defensive purposes. I cannot agree with that. I am not a military man, but I know that the port of St. John is an important point in that portion of the Dominion—that it is at the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it is one of the termini of the Intercolonial Railway, and it commands on the Atlantic coast one of the important entrances to the Dominion ; and if this scheme, which the minister has outlined this afternoon, is seriously put forward as one for locating the defensive forces of the Dominion from a military point of view, I do not think he has been happy in his choice when he entirely ignores such an important point on the Atlantic coast as the harbour of St. John.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. During the discussion of the militia estimates I shall perhaps be able to give my hon. friend some information on that point. As I said a moment ago, this paper, which I have read, has been handed to me and is signed by the chief military adviser of the government, General Lake, and I am inclined to think that on general principles it is sound and that he has signed it only after very careful consideration. I think some provision for increased artillery is to be made at St. John ; I know that a new field battery is to be organized there, under the command of a prominent citizen and friend of the hon. gentleman, with the latest up-to-date guns. Whether any detachment of the permanent force will be placed at St.

John, I do not know; I infer not. But later on, if the hon. gentleman renews his question, I shall be able to give him what information I have.

Mr. DANIEL. Has General Lake ever visited St. John?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh, yes. He was formerly here for five years, and has been all over the country.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask the minister if it is the intention to fortify any of these seaports—the port of St. John, for instance—so that the local garrison artillery would be able to defend the port in case of attack by a hostile fleet?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I believe that some work has been done in the way of ascertaining what guns would be necessary at certain points, and of placing these particular points in readiness for receiving the guns. My hon. friend knows that in modern warfare fortifications, in the old sense of the word have become almost entirely useless. Take for instance the walls of the city of Quebec. The method of protecting important centres is now by a system of masked batteries, having guns in readiness but not placing them in position until they are required for use. That is the scheme proposed with regard to Montreal. It is not necessary to advertise to the world where your guns are to be placed or in what manner it is intended to defend an important position of that kind. Some arrangements have been made with reference to St. John, but it would not be desirable to state exactly what is being done although I would be glad to give my hon. friend the information in my office.

Mr. FOWLER. Have any steps been taken to strengthen the seaport of St. John? Has any engineer gone there to examine and locate the different points where the fortification works should be put?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That has been done.

Mr. TISDALE. Has the hon. minister the correspondence between the War Office and his department regarding the taking over by this government of these two places?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) moved for the papers some time ago and his motion carried. The correspondence was not concluded, and the other day I asked him in the corridor whether he wanted those portions of the correspondence that had already taken place or would he wait until the correspondence was concluded. I said I would prefer waiting, and he said that was quite satisfactory to him. I have been expecting daily an answer with regard to the expenditure involved and so on, and it would be convenient to postpone the discussion until the supplementary estimates are brought down, when I shall lay all the papers on the table.

Mr. TISDALE. In an evening paper I see it is stated that there is correspondence going on regarding the postponing of the taking over of these points.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We expect to take over Halifax the 1st July, but Esquimalt may continue as at present for a year, except that instead of our paying the British government one-half the expense, as we are now doing, we propose to pay the whole expense next year, and in a year from July next take over the responsibility and control of the Esquimalt garrison. The force at Esquimalt is about 350, including artillery and engineers.

Mr. TISDALE. I understand the hon. minister prefers to postpone the discussion on this as well as the whole question until he brings down his supplementary estimates, and then it may be discussed to the fullest extent.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There will be a large item in the supplementaries to provide for the taking over of these garrisons; and when that comes down, I propose to lay all the correspondence on the table and have a general discussion.

Mr. TISDALE. Does the hon. minister propose to explain the reduction of the training force or does he want that to stand?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. When we go into Committee of Supply at eight o'clock would be the most convenient moment to discuss that matter.

Mr. HERRON. Can the hon. minister give us the particulars regarding the distribution of the mounted rifles at Alberta and where the different headquarters of the troops are to be?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I gave Calgary as the point where I thought the Strathcona Regiment will be located and also a half battery of artillery. There will be two more squadrons of mounted rifles ultimately in Alberta, but I am not able to give the points where they will be placed.

Mr. HERRON. There is a good deal of trouble in the southern part of that country over military matters, and we should have some explanation of that later on.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it the intention of the hon. minister now, or when the supplementaries are down, to explain the policy of the government regarding the defence of Canada? We have been hearing a good deal about what Canada should do in connection with sharing the expense of the navy of the empire and whether it should take upon itself the whole burden of its own national defence. I think we are coming now to a time when parliament should be informed what is the mind of the government. Right on the heels of the departure of the British navy from Halifax, as its winter station, comes the news of one of our Canadian vessels being held up in Uruguay and its crew being jailed ; and so far nothing has been done, that parliament is aware of, to see that these people are released. Now, I do not know whether the one has anything to do with the other or not. Of course, the members of the government do know. But I think it is now time that parliament should at least, be given some idea of the policy of the government with regard to the defence of Canada and with regard to this country taking part in Imperial defence. I would like to ask the minister whether, either on the supplementary estimates or on this item he intends to inform us of the policy of the government on this very important question ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. On the broad question to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Daniel) refers any announcement, I believe, should be made by the Prime Minister. But I may inform the hon. gentleman that I propose to discuss at some length the policy of the government and of the Militia Department as to the development of the militia in the Dominion, as to the question of the defence of this country on land, and as to the maintenance of the civil power. That I shall be prepared to discuss, and I shall be very glad to have my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) and as many others as are interested take part in the discussion.

Mr. DANIEL. Will that be on the supplementary estimates?

Mr. TISDALE. As I understand it—the general discussion on the militia has been held over, so that we can discuss any branch of the question that we please. And the minister himself will make the general announcement.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time and agreed to.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 170) to amend the Militia Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication from the Governor General's Secretary :

Office of the Governor General's Secretary,
Ottawa, June 6, 1905.

The Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate chamber on Wednesday, the 7th instant, at three P.M., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain Bills which have passed the Senate and House of Commons during the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. HANBURY WILLIAMS, Colonel,
Governor General's Secretary.

SUPPLY—REDUCTION OF THE ACTIVE MILITIA.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply. He said : Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to make the explanation which was asked for yesterday with reference to the late reduction of the establishment of the active militia. A good deal has been written in the newspapers under a misapprehension, and in order to make my explanation clear I will begin by defining what the word 'establishment' means. Establishment means a list showing the numbers in each rank which any corps is authorized to maintain on its roll. The strength of a corps means the actual number which, at any given moment, happens to be borne on those rolls. Establishments may be peace, war or training establishments. The establishment list of February 23rd, 1904, gave peace and training as identical, and war in a separate column. This would have been correct for a central camp of instruction, which was then in immediate contemplation ; but for the annual training of the present year, when the central camp of instruction has not materialized, while the peace establishments have remained actually the same, the training establishments have been somewhat reduced for lack of facilities which a central camp would have afforded. The point is that there has been no material change in the peace establishment which was fixed in February, 1904. But owing to the reasons I have just stated, it was found desirable to reduce the peace establishment for the present training, and that is what has been done. I will read a memorandum to which I referred yesterday, which has been prepared for me by General Lake, Chief of the General Staff :

From the Chief of the General Staff to the Hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence.
Establishments.

With reference to our recent conversation concerning the statements which have appeared in the public press alleging large reductions in the establishments of the militia, I submit the following explanation of the reasons which, in the opinion of the military members of the Council, were sufficient to justify the action taken.

The establishments authorized by the Governor in Council on 23rd February, 1904, were drawn up, it is understood, under the personal supervision of Major General Lord Dundonald, after careful consideration. They included both 'peace training' and 'war' establishments. The former with which alone we are concerned, were working out upon the assumption that by the time they came into force a central camp of instruction for the militia would have been acquired and equipped, at which facilities would exist for training such portions of these 'peace training' establishments as had been added to the previously existing establishments of units for the purpose of preparation for war.

The establishments of the 23rd February, 1904, must, therefore, if they are to be properly understood, be read with special reference to this assumption. As is well known, the central training camp is not yet selected. It will probably be chosen at no distant date, but though it may be hoped that it will be in running order, at least partially, in time for the training season next year, it was out of the question that it should be ready for this summer. The Militia Council had, therefore, to consider what establishments should be adopted for the present training season. In deciding what these establishments should be, two considerations had to be kept in view. The first was that the 'peace training' establishments of the 23rd February, 1904, which appeared to be based upon carefully considered principles, should not be disturbed more than could be avoided; and the second, that, in view of the many other urgent calls for expenditure for militia purposes, strict economy should be observed, and no greater expense should be authorized than was evidently essential for military efficiency. It was, therefore, decided as a general policy to adopt such portions of the 'training' establishments laid down in the lists of 23rd February, 1904, as were really necessary for training purposes with the units, and to omit all details which could not be defended upon this ground. The training establishments promulgated in general orders of the 9th May, 1905, were based upon these considerations. There appear to be several omissions and typographical errors and one or two inconsistencies in the general order as published. A further general order amending it in these respects is now in course of preparation.

Reference has been made to the need for economy, in view of other urgent militia services requiring attention. Apart from the question that all administration should be economical, the Militia Council had to face the urgent requirements of an expansion of the militia in Manitoba and the new provinces of the Northwest. The great influx of population into these regions, including as it does, a large proportion of aliens, has made it imperatively necessary to widen the extent of the militia organization of that part of the country, both for the preservation of internal order and for the fostering among that population of a Canadian national spirit. Some suggestion has been made in the press that the reduction complained of in the training establishments has been the result of the Canadian offer to take over the defence of Halifax and Esquimalt, as it has been hinted that in a spirit of false economy the government have wished to meet the expense of the garrisons of these fortresses by cutting down the militia. So far is this from being the case that the policy embodied in the new training establishments was actually decided upon in principle before the question of offering to take over the responsibility of Halifax and Esquimalt was officially raised.

As regards the alleged hardship imposed upon the corps which had already filled up the ranks of both officers and non-commissioned officers, and had commenced training before the promulgation of the new training establishments, it may be stated that the Militia Council was aware that in certain city corps the appointments had already been made, and, what is more, that the annual training had already commenced before those corps were made acquainted with what was contemplated. Realizing the difficulty in which these corps might find themselves, you, as the Minister in Militia Council, had already submitted to His Excellency a general order authorizing the training and payment for annual drill of all officers, non-commissioned officers and men who had already commenced training before that date. It was also fully intended that consideration should be given to any cases of individual hardship brought to notice, or to special difficulties which might result from the working of new training establishments.

Finally, I venture to suggest that if you should think fit to make a public statement dealing with this question, it would be well to lay stress on the fact that the Militia Council, with yourself at its head, have in view a definite policy for the future of the militia, a policy which contemplates a considerable expansion of the force and its better adaptation to the defence requirements of the country, towards which they are steadily working. The elaboration of such a policy must necessarily take time and the full effect of measures decided upon cannot immediately be made apparent, but the decisions taken by the Militia Council are taken with that policy in mind, and it is hoped that final judgment upon the general question may be deferred until it is possible to outline that policy in greater detail.

(Sgd.) P. LAKE,
Chief of the General Staff.

5th June, 1905.

I will only add one word more. That is to read the general order referred to in this memorandum as having been issued in May by which those corps which had begun their annual training were permitted to go on with the same establishment which had been adopted in February, 1904.

These are the words of the General Order:

The officers and non-commissioned officers above referred to——

This is only a portion of it——

—of the corps reserve of city corps having already commenced training for the financial year, 1905-6, will be permitted to complete training and draw pay. In future special arrangements for their training, as members of the corps reserve, will be promulgated in general orders.

There has been no change in the establishment, but this has been done: Certain officers who were not required, who were supernumerary, have been placed in a column by themselves still connected with the corps, but not to be called upon for active duty until a central camp is established in which they can be instructed and in which they can take part or until they are specially called out each year.

Mr. TISDALE. I confess I do not exactly understand the summary. I do not think the hon. minister gave any statement of the strength of the establishment and what proportion are to be drilled. I would like to show what in numbers the change really is. The establishments, except those referred to by the hon. gentleman, as I gather from that statement, will be removed into a column by themselves, and it is understood that without a special order of some sort they are no longer to be called upon. That will leave the original establishment as I understand it except those which are attached from the reserve the same as they were before ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. Then I want the total number of the establishment. How many thousands of all arms are there ? I notice in the summary for 1903-4, the following statement :

Officers..	3,567
Non commissioned officers..	7,516
Men..	31,400
Horses..	5,636

That is the complete establishment, as I understand ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Is that the militia report ?

Mr. TISDALE. That is the Militia Report for 1904. The statement also shows a considerably less number trained.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. From what page is the hon. gentleman reading ?

Mr. TISDALE. Page 26.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The total establishment of February, 1904, which is the basis of this whole question was 46,043. It is proposed to drill this year something over 43,000, and the difference is chiefly in officers and non-commissioned officers who were added in order to be trained for the contemplated expansion of the smaller company into the larger company. They are not struck off the role ; they are on the establishment ; they are simply placed in a column by themselves and notified that although they will drill this year, so far as the city regiments are concerned, in future they will not drill until authority is given for them to do so, and that will probably not be until the central camp is organized when the money necessary to train them will be properly expended.

Mr. TISDALE. Then, all this talk in the papers about the reduction in the rank and file of the establishment proper, has no foundation whatever.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Very little.

Mr. TISDALE. It makes a difference of only 3,000 all told ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Exactly.

Mr. TISDALE. There were statements in the newspapers to the effect that the number of each regiment, except the city regiments, was to be reduced, and the militia force was discussing that very warmly.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have a letter here from the Adjutant General and I would like to give my authority, because I can only speak from information which I received from the department. This is addressed by the Adjutant General to the Chief of the General Staff :

Referring to your minute of the 2nd instant, herewith is a detailed statement showing the differences between the establishments authorized by the Governor General in Council on the 23rd of February, 1904, and those set forth in the special general order of the 9th May ultimo, together with the specific reasons for each item of difference. 2. In the training establishments, 1905, officers' servants should have been disallowed in all instances.

That is a case in which there was a mistake made in favour of the regiments, so to speak.

In the training establishments, 1905, officers' servants should have been disallowed in all instances in accordance with the settled policy that all men proceeding to camps of instruction should be thoroughly trained as soldiers, their being included in the artillery establishment was an error. 3. The addition of officers, servants and batmen in establishments authorized on the 23rd of February, 1904, was an entirely new departure, as in previous years officers made their own arrangements for servants in camp. It has, however, since been decided to add the same number to all arms for training for the present year and orders to that effect are about to be promulgated.

Possibly that is one of the points mentioned in the newspapers.

4. Your attention is especially invited to the following omission, namely : bands and sergeant trumpeters. Both these items were omitted in the training establishments carefully prepared by Lord Dundonald for the past year and it was in consequence considered inadvisable to place them on the establishment for training for the present year until the matter of permanent establishments for the entire force which is now under consideration has been finally approved of.

I may say just here that I have been in the habit of going to camp with my regiment for the past twenty-five years, up to five or six years ago, and it was the invariable rule that the strength of the band was deducted from the regiment so many per company.

Mr. TISDALE. They were left on for the purpose of pay though.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. So they are now. This memo. continues :

In regard to the infantry the changes given in this schedule are these affecting the regiments having a normal establishment. 6. City corps will in addition under the provisions of a general order of the first instant relating to corps reserve, be permitted to train all officers and non-commissioned officers shown as for employment at regimental or company base. 7. It is regretted that in the preparation of the establishments of city corps some errors have been made which will be at once corrected in a special general order.

I have still another letter covering this one which was just read, and which was sent to me by the Chief of the General Staff :

Ottawa, 5th of June.

Dear Sir Frederick,—I have at last obtained the Adjutant General's official statement of the differences between the two establishments, and I send it up to you, together with the general order which passed the Militia Council on the 30th of May, which I regret to say was accidentally omitted from what I gave to Panet for you this afternoon. On looking into the question of corps having special establishments——

This applies to four or five corps in the cities who complain the most bitterly, because really the excitement in the newspapers has been confined entirely to the city battalions.

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. gentleman is slightly misinformed as to that, because the matter took such a wide range that the rural battalions began to get uneasy too. They certainly got the impression that they were to be cut down, at all events in regard to the drill.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I know that has been stated.

On looking into the question of corps having special establishments, I find that, in addition to the normal (so to speak) infantry establishment of 30 privates per company, city corps were allowed two stretcher bearers per company, total 32. General order No. 81, of June, 1904, authorized 19 privates per company extra for the 1st, 10th, 48th and 66th regiments, and 7 extra per company for the 13th regiment. This addition was reaffirmed by General Order No. 12 of January, 1905. Hence the 1st, 10th, 48th and 66th regiments should have 51 privates per company, while the 13th should have 39. It appears that the two stretcher bearers per company were accidentally omitted from the training establishments just promulgated, but, except for this omission, that training establishment gives both the normal regiments and these special regiments, which I have just mentioned, exactly the same number of privates per company which they had before its issue.

(Sgd.) PERCY LAKE.

So I think I may venture to hope that the difficulty is practically over, for the present year at least, and while there have undoubtedly been some errors made, they have been chiefly misprints and typographical errors, which have now, as I understand, been corrected.

Mr. TISDALE. I hope the hon. gentleman will not misunderstand me. I am as anxious as he can possibly be to have this matter cleared up, so that the man in the street will understand the situation ; because an impression had gone abroad that a very serious change had been made or was about to be made. From what one could see in the newspapers, and from any expressions from the force which one had an opportunity to hear, it would have had a very bad effect upon the force. That is the reason I wished the matter to be cleared up. I understand now, from what the hon. gentleman has read, that the establishments, whether special or ordinary, are left alone, and that the only changes contemplated were the additions that would be made when the central camp arrangements were carried out.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is exactly the case.

Mr. TISDALE. Assuming that to be so, was the general order which the hon. gentleman quoted from as promulgated under Lord Dundonald in reduction of the establishment, as it previously existed ? I ask that question because there were some camps organized where a very limited number were called on to drill. They were called skeleton camps. If I understand aright, that arrangement was only for one year.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Two years.

Mr. TISDALE. After that the full camp force, if mustered, would be drilled and paid. That is so now ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, almost precisely the establishment which was in existence before there was any skeleton drill in camp.

Mr. TISDALE. That is very satisfactory so far, and I am sure it will be a great relief to the force to understand it fully. That is for the present. Now, I think the minister should be prepared to go further and tell us what is to happen in the future ; because one of the most injurious things to a force such as our active militia is any tendency to frequent changes. I think a bad system well worked out is better than a good one which is constantly changed ; because changes cause uncertainty among the officers and others interested, who have to a large extent to supplement the expenditure of the government. The keeping up of a force of this nature depends altogether, as it should, upon voluntary action, and they should be informed whether any changes are contemplated, and, if so, what they are. While the minister has removed in a satisfactory way all question about the standing of the establishment, he has qualified his statement by saying that that is the principle of the department for the present. Do I understand him to say that it is in contemplation, after this year possibly, to make a reduction ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. If I may be allowed to interrupt my hon. friend,

I would call his attention to the memorandum in which General Lake says that he hopes that the public will be patient, because we are working out a general scheme or policy for the militia which cannot all be put forward at one time; and I infer from that statement that the establishment which now exists is the establishment of which he approved, and the establishment which is to be continued.

Mr. TISDALE: I do not propose to-night to go further than to get a full understanding of what, if any, changes are to be made in the force; because I understand that it was arranged that a full discussion should take place later on under an item in the supplementary estimates, and I would prefer to discuss this at the time the minister makes his general statement.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The understanding between the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and myself was that a large item should be retained in the main estimates on which a general discussion could be held.

Mr. TISDALE. There are two items on capital account, and we might hold back one of those, so as to give other hon. members, who are not here and who desire to take part in the discussion, an opportunity to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. The trouble seems to be that when we are ready the hon. minister is not, and when he is ready we are not. So far as I am concerned, with my large knowledge of military affairs, I would be glad to have the minister go right on and make his full statement, but there are some tyros in military matters not present who would be disappointed if we went on with this discussion.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We seemed to do very well this afternoon.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, we were too amiable. Better reserve one of the items in the main estimates until the end of this week or the beginning of next when we shall have possibly a fuller House.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand that some of the corps have been in the habit of recruiting over strength. In the past, it has been the practice of the government, I believe, to recognize that over strength by the issue of the extra clothing and pay and drilling either in camp or at local headquarters. Will the same practice be continued?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am informed that as regards pay there has been no exception to the rule. In some of the city battalions, ambitious officers have had a larger number than that allowed, but no extra charge was involved as regards pay. Extra clothing, however, was issued. So far as the rural battalions are concerned, there has been no over strength except in the case of a few battalions a few years ago which had ten companies each instead of eight. Three or four years ago a regulation was passed, reducing the number of companies to eight in all the militia, and I believe to-day there is only one rural battalion which has more than eight. In my own county my own battalion was reduced from ten companies to eight. There are certain regiments which for many years have been allowed over strength. One of these is the 66th of Halifax, but that has been over strength since its organization. Also the Queens Own, of Toronto, the 13th of Hamilton and the Prince of Wales of Montreal. In the latter case two regiments were amalgamated upon the understanding that while the strength of the one would not be equal to that of the two, still it would be larger than the normal establishment. That, however, is an exceptional case, and I am not in a position to say off-hand what our policy will be with regard to it.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Royal Military College, $90,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it the intention to dispense with the English officers and replace them by Canadians?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not at present.

Mr. BERGERON. Why not if we are training officers at our militia college?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Only for the reason that it is very desirable to have as officers men actually in the army and who have had practical experience. It is difficult, perhaps, to find Canadians who measure up to all these conditions. We have in the imperial army a number of Canadians, graduates of the Royal Military College. I have a very strong hope and expectation that we shall have from among these not only professors for the college, but a commandant as well—perhaps not immediately, but in the future.

Mr. BERGERON. Under the system inaugurated a few years ago of retiring colonels of the militia after five years' service, we are bringing to the head of the regiments a number of young men, while many are retired while still young men and capable of further service. I am repeating now some remarks I heard on Saturday at a review in Montreal. Of course colonels who are retired, many of course, have some line of business which they wish to follow. But it may happen that some of these men with a taste for military life, might show the qualifications to occupy some of the positions in our military college or in connection with a permanent force. I think it would be quite in accordance with the policy announced by the Minister of Militia that such positions should be offered to these men wherever possible. These men are Canadians—they are Canadians all through. They have made sacrifices for the country—for we know that a man at the head of a battalion must sacrifice both money and time in the performance of his duty. Therefore, I would ask the minister if it would not be possible and advisable to offer some of these men positions in the military college that are now filled by imperial officers? It would be a good thing for the service, and would be an inducement to such men to fit themselves for their work as head of a battalion because in so doing they would fit themselves for a career in connection with the military service.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The suggestion is certainly worthy of consideration. And I have no hesitation in saying that there are men who have occupied the position of colonel commanding a regiment in Canada, who would be fit to fill such a position as the hon. gentleman refers to. But, with all respect for the ability and experience of men who have commanded battalions, I must say that I do not think the number who could qualify to fill such a position is very great. The head of the military college is a most important and responsible position and requires very high qualifications. The man who holds that position must be a man of first-rate education in every respect, and especially a man of good education and of experience in military matters, But I think there are men coming up now in our permanent force to whom the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) would apply. I know of more than one man in the permanent force who would be quite capable of filling that position as well as it can be filled. And I think the time is coming when we must consider that point seriously.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not suggest that any of the men to whom I refer would be fit at once to be the head of the college. But they might be given positions from which they could advance in that direction. If it is the policy as I understand it to be, to give positions to our own men where possible—and it is a policy I approve, for I do not see how we can expect sacrifices from these men if the only prospect held out to them is to be colonel for five years and then drop out—it seems to me here is the opportunity to carry out that policy. I was glad to hear what the Minister of Militia said because it is in line with the view that I myself have been urging.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In that connection I might say that arrangements have been made by which officers of the permanent force will have the privilege of attending the staff college in England—two going each year. The staff college course is two years. Therefore, in future we shall always have four officers attending the staff college for educational purposes. The examination to enter that college is a very stiff one, and the age limit is thirty-five years—none of greater age are allowed to enter. And the imperial government has offered to give officers of the Canadian permanent force who pass through that college creditably temporary employment in the imperial army. And surely there can be no question that from among these men we shall in future be able to select men who will suitably fill the professorial chairs of the Royal Military College.

Mr. FOWLER. If the imperial government is giving positions to Canadians in the imperial army, we ought to be willing to offer a position or two to imperial officers.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We are doing it.

Mr. FOWLER. But I understood that some objection was raised to that. I fail to see any good ground for that objection. It seems to me most important that the man at the head of the Royal Military College should be a man thoroughly equipped for his work; and it does not make any difference whether he is a Canadian or an Englishman, or an Australian, so long as he is a British subject. I understand that a number of the professors in the military college are Canadians.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. None of the military professors.

Mr. FOWLER. But the others are?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They are all Canadians.

Mr. FOWLER. Perhaps it is better to have the commandant a gentleman who is in close touch with the imperial army, but I think that some of the military professors might be taken from our own permanent force if they have the special education.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not understand my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) to object to that. He suggested that we might have some Canadians to fill these positions. In this connection there is another observation that I might make. It is in contemplation to make an arrangement by which we may have exchanges, through the war office, of imperial officers for Canadian officers. So, if we have a place to offer to an imperial officer, a similar place would be offered to a Canadian officer when we have members of our permanent force qualified to fill the places. This will be carried out as soon as we have officers who have passed through the staff college. But it is a sine qua non—and I think quite properly so—that our officers shall pass creditably through the staff college.

Mr. FOWLER. As I understand it, no imperial officer can fill one of these positions unless he has passed through the staff college, and certainly no exception should be made. So far as my observation goes one government has never been niggardly in offering young Canadians opportunities to secure positions in the imperial service.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. This is a pretty large sum of money—$90,000. Will the minister give us a statement of the details which make it up ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As I explained a large part of this money is paid back.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I heard that statement made, but I did not hear definitely how much was paid back.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The actual cost is $65,000.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Give us the details of that $65,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The superior staff pay, estimate for the next year, that is the year we are considering now, is $30,000. The actual amount paid last year was $29,300, an increase of $700. The subordinate staff pay is $10,000, the same as last year. Clothing and clothing allowances, $10,000, the same as last year. Messing, that is supplying food, $13,000, the same as last year. Fuel, $5,000, $700 more than last year. I think some additional rooms had to be heated. Light, $100, same as last year. Printing and stationery, $4,000, $500 more than last year, more students, I suppose. Washing, $1,800, same as last year. The additional number of students do not seem to require any more washing. Advertising, $1,100, $100 more than last year, and $12 less than the year before.

Mr. BERGERON. Advertising what?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Royal Military College is advertised in some of the magazines and in the special issues of some of the larger newspapers.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not do one bit of good.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not think it does. We try to keep it down to the lowest possible limit, but my hon. friend knows how difficult it is to resist the blandishment of our friends of the press. All this advertising is done in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. I will make this proposition. When we were discussing this question before, the minister professed himself willing to let this Military Council steer matters with a view to efficiency and economy. Let him submit that matter of advertising to the Military Council and abide by their decision as to whether they will spend $1,200 next year for that kind of work, especially after General Lake's plea for economy. I know how it comes about. Some little paper gets up a Christmas edition and comes to the minister and asks for an advertisement of the military college. Now that does not bring one student; in fact, to a sensible student seeing it advertised in that way, it is rather a damper than otherwise. The minister says he has more applications already than he can fill. Now let the minister do with that the same as he is doing with his drill shed sites—I am not speaking now of Kentville, I suppose that was started in before—let it go to the council, and if they say that it is necessary in order to make a thorough and efficient military system in this country, let him spend the money on advertisements and prop himself up by the council, giving them the responsibility.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is my hon. friend serious in that?

Mr. FOSTER. I am perfectly serious. I know how hard it is to impress upon my right hon. friend any idea of economy with other people's money.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But would he advise the Military Council to come down from high matters of strategy and defence to petty local patronage of that kind?

Mr. DANIEL. I see that one of the magazines is called 'Types of Canadian Women,' that got $50. I do not know whether it would bring many students.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think if I showed the hon. member for North Toronto the list of magazines, he would not disapprove of it. A good deal of this money goes to college quarterlies, to college magazines, and one is the 'Canadian Magazine.' I think the Montreal 'Gazette' got out a special number and contained an advertisement. We have given this irrespective of political considerations. We have done it in some cases, I admit, to assist a college newspaper, and in that way we have attracted the attention of students in the other colonies. But I have no objection to accepting the hon. gentleman's suggestion, and perhaps it will help me in resisting applications, because it has taken a good deal of my time, I confess, to keep this item down to the point at which it is now.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The hon. gentleman's explanation does not satisfy me. He seems to think that because an expenditure is the same as it was last year it must be all right. I do not think that is any reason at all.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I merely stated the fact casually. My hon. friend can draw any conclusion he likes. Now I will finish the list. Transport and travelling expenses, $2,000—if my hon. friend will permit me to say it, the same as last year.

Mr. FOSTER. Transport for what?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. To pay the expenses of the cadets to and fro when they return home. We also pay the travelling expenses of the professors when they are on duty.

Mr. FOWLER. What travelling do they do?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They sometimes go to Montreal and Toronto to attend meetings of the universities, meetings where engineering and scientific matters are dealt with. Sometimes the commandant or a professor might want to visit West Point academy; sometimes they are called here on business connected with the college, to confer with the department. There are twelve professors.

Mr. FOWLER. Have they all occasion to travel?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The principal part of this expenditure is for the cadets.

Mr. DANIEL. I find that the amount paid last year for the travelling expenses of the cadets was $629; so that the larger amount is not for the cadets.

Mr. FOWLER. What are the tuition fees ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. $100 a year.

Mr. FOWLER : You charge a student a tuition fee of $100 a year, and under those circumstances I cannot see how it is that you pay his travelling expenses. It does seem to be an anomaly. I could understand if you give him free tuition that you might carry him to college and take him back home again ; but when you charge him a tuition fee, why should you pay his travelling expenses ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I suppose it is no answer to say so, but we are simply continuing the conditions which have existed for thirty years.

Mr. FOWLER. Does it not seem rather absurd ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I confess that I have not looked into it personally.

Mr. BERGERON. I know some cadets who have gone to the college and returned home again whose expenses were paid by themselves.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They are all treated alike. There is a regulation.

Mr. FOWLER. How many cadets are there ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About 95.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you pay the travelling expenses of each to and from his home ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. So I am informed.

Mr. FOWLER. I think there must be something wrong about that. I think the travelling expenses must be paid when the cadets are taken away somewhere. How many times a year do you transport them to and fro ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Once.

Mr. FOWLER. You bring them to the college and send them home ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Send them home.

Mr. FOWLER. One trip ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. If you pay the expenses of one trip, I do not see how it is that you do not pay the cadet for his holidays as well. I think you had better get the Militia Council at this college, and see if they cannot wipe out a few of these anomalies.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. At what page of the Auditor General's Report does that appear ?

Mr. DANIEL. Q—91. There were only travelling expenses paid for fourteen cadets last year.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Those were the graduates. I quote from the Royal Military College regulations, regulation No. 22 :

> An allowance for travelling expenses at the rate of four cents a mile for the number of miles beyond 500 necessarily travelled between the headquarters of the military district in which he resides and the college will be paid to each cadet at the time he is first admitted, and a similar allowance for travelling expenses to the headquarters of the same military district will be paid to each cadet who has completed the full period of the college and obtained a certificate of good conduct. No allowance for travelling expenses will be granted to those who reside less than 500 miles from the college.

That seems a reasonable and proper provision.

Mr. FOWLER. That is not the same proposition that was explained to us a moment ago.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The object is to put a man living in British Columbia, or in some other distant portion of the country, on the same footing as the man living in Montreal.

Mr. FOWLER. That is an altogether different thing. It was equalizing the difference between distant and near points.

Mr. BERGERON. Does this mean bringing a cadet to the college and paying all his expenses back home after his course is over ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is only at the beginning and the end. In addition to that, I am reminded that the expenses of the professors are paid to and from this country, and my hon. friend will see that is quite an item.

Mr. FOWLER. That will scarcely account for this large amount. You are not changing professors every year.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. One or two change every year. They do not all go out at once. There is one going out this year and another going out next year, and so on.

Mr. BERGERON. Although this is a standing vote, it may not all be spent in one year ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It may not all be spent in the year. In the coming year I think that three are going out. The expenses of cadets attending annual camp are paid, and sometimes cadets are sent out to do work for the college. They go to McGill University annually to compete with some of the students there, and we pay their expenses. Every dollar of this expenditure is accounted for and is scanned by the Auditor General.

Mr. BERGERON. Has it always been like that ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It has been the same from the beginning. My hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) wants some more information, and I want to satisfy him in regard to the vote for equitation. That is a new charge. It only began last year, when a special vote of $5,000 was taken. That is for teaching young men to ride. The reason for this vote being taken is this : Formerly the horses of the artillery were used, but it was found very inconvenient to interfere with the artillery operations, and it was decided that it would be very much better to construct stables and let the college own its own horses. I think myself it is a very much better regulation.

Mr. DANIEL. How many horses have been provided ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Eight.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the department bought horses, or are they rented ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is only a provision made this year. Horses will be bought. As a matter of fact, they have not yet been bought.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want the hon. minister, on that advertising business, to take laurels to himself that are not altogether warranted. I notice by the payments that no Conservative publications have been favoured.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Last year must have been an off-year.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is likely a sample of most of the years. The Book Lovers' Library gets $60.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is not it.

Mr. FOSTER. That is for the purpose of getting very valuable and ready, up-to-date books for the students. I have no objection to that at all, because it is really an advantage to have them get a circulating library. The 'Canadian Mining Review'——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is not a Liberal paper.

Mr. FOSTER. That is for the pure purpose of science, I suppose, $3 ; Halifax 'Chronicle,' which, I think, is pretty well determined in its politics, gets $50. The Montreal 'Herald'—well, there may be some doubt about the Montreal 'Herald,' but I have no doubt that $50 will fix it all right. Then there is the Ottawa 'Daneborg,' $30 ; that is a concession to outside neighbours, and no doubt that brings many a student to the college who would not otherwise find his way there. The 'Free Press' may be a semi-independent paper, but it does not often show it. The 'Parliamentary Guide' is, of course, not in politics, although the particular gentleman who provides it has some very strong ideas of political life, $50. The 'Rideau Press' gets $200. What is the 'Rideau Press' ? That seems to be a special paper. That must have a very wide circulation. Why should the 'Rideau Press' get $200 when a servant of so many years' standing and so faithful as the 'Free Press' only gets $50 ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think that was an accumulation for several years. I had some doubt as to whether I should give authority to pay the bill and it was finally compromised. The advertisement has been withdrawn.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that cut down by the Military Council ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am responsible for that.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the Rideau Press?

Mr. BERGERON. It is the paper called 'Events.'

Mr. FOSTER. Why should it appear in the Auditor General's Report under the pseudonym of the 'Rideau Press ?'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I suppose that is the form in which the bill was rendered.

Mr. FOSTER. The Quebec 'Daily Telegram' has $10 added to the general $50, and of course the bright rays that come from the 'Soleil' entitles it to $80, or more than half better than the 'Free Press' or the 'Herald.' Then there is the 'Military Gazette;' there might be something in that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not think any one in charge of that has been friendly to me.

Mr. FOSTER. Then there is the good Toronto 'Globe.' I hope the minister will add a little to the 'Globe' for this year. The peculiar service it has been performing of late; the way it swallowed itself in order to convince the government that it is friendly to it, deserves at least an addition of $10 if the Military Council would only pass it. Then there is 'Saturday Night.' I am afraid there is no hope for 'Saturday Night.' 'Saturday Night' has seen its last $50 from the Military Council, but I suppose the Toronto 'Star' will continue to have its $50?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is not too bad that.

Mr. FOSTER. No; they all have a political complexion.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh, my, no.

Mr. FOWLER. Why should you advertise in the 'Parliamentary Guide?' I did not think any one reads that except members of parliament and their wives?

Mr. FOSTER. It is to inform the members of parliament.

Mr. FOWLER. Surely the members of parliament know about the Royal Military College. This publication known as 'Events' and appearing here under the alias of the 'Rideau Press' is the property of the same individual who edits the 'Parliamentary Companion, so that this gentleman got $250.

Mr. BERGERON. 'Events' is not published any more.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it dead?

Mr. BERGERON. The payment ceases because the paper itself ceases.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The payment ceased last year.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the $200 a contribution for funeral expenses?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, the paper is still published I am told.

Mr. BERGERON. I don't think so.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It was published last week.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the Minister of Militia any information to give about the selection of a site in Montreal for a military school? We hear a great many stories on the street, but I would like to have something authoritative from the minister?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will be glad to give my hon. friend all the information I have on that matter. As my hon. friend knows the government of Canada own a property in Montreal now known as Lafontaine park, and which was purchased by the British government many years ago for about £40,000. Some years ago this property was leased to the city of Montreal and on about half of it trees were planted and work done to make it into what is now a beautiful park. The other half was reserved for military purposes but the city has the management of that part as well, the militia retaining the right to use it as a parading and training ground. It is about 35 acres in extent. My own view, and the view of the majority of the military men in Montreal was, that this was the proper place to construct the buildings for the new military school. I am informed however, that 30 acres of land would not be sufficient. The government also own a property known as St. Helens Island, a portion of which has been leased to the city but the larger portion is now used for military purposes. It is proposed by the city of Montreal to acquire either one or both of these properties, and an offer was made to the government to give in exchange for them other properties which might be suitable for the establishment of a depot. My own view is that it should not be done in that way. I think we should do in Montreal what we did in Toronto, namely, sell our property at a fair valuation and buy such property as may be recommended by the military authorities. The city of Montreal has asked me to receive a deputation to discuss this question; I had a telegram only to-day and I expect there will be a deputation here some time this week. That is all the information I have and all that I can give. No site has been selected. A number of sites have been looked into, but I have not the slightest idea at this moment what site will be selected nor do I know whether or not an agreement can be reached between the city and the government as to the price to be paid for either or both of these properties. I have no hesitation in expressing my own opinion that we should not give up entirely that portion of Lafontaine park which we retain control over. While I would not erect the buildings there I think the right should be retained to use it as a parade ground for the active militia of the city whenever it may be required.

Mr. BERGERON. I am very glad to hear the statement made by the Minister of Militia, and I trust the deputation from the city of Montreal will wait on him as soon as possible, because I strongly favour the idea of having a military school and a permanent corps established in Montreal so that the regiments in that city and its vicinity may be afforded facilities of instruction. Would my hon. friend say what is the school he intends to have in Montreal when the question of site is decided ? How many men will be there, and what is going to be done there altogether ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There will be a company of infantry to begin with. I think there will also be a company of garrison artillery, but of that I cannot speak positively at present. There will be a certain number of engineers, of course.

Mr. BERGERON. How many men altogether ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Between 200 or 300 of a permanent force.

Mr. BERGERON. And the different officers of the battalions in that district will go there to train ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, whenever they require to do so.

Mr. BERGERON. So that there will be altogether probably 300 or 400 men ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would think so.

Mr. BERGERON. What will become of the infantry school in St. John ? I understand that it will be devoted entirely to cavalry ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. At St. John there will be stationed permanently a squadron of cavalry—120 men and horses.

Mr. FOWLER. Under this item I would like the minister to provide me with some information in regard to the new rifle range which is being built at Sussex. For instance, who is the inspector of the rifle range, what are his qualifications for the post, what will his pay be, and how much time is he supposed to devote per day to the inspection? When the armoury was built at Sussex, the inspector of that work was a person who had no qualification whatever for the position. He was not a builder or contractor in either stone work or wood work, but a merchant tailor. I trust that the minister has taken the precaution in this particular case to procure a man for the position who has some qualification for it, and therefore I would like him to say who is appointed?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot remember the name, but it seems to me that the gentleman appointed is a lawyer, a prominent member of the militia, a very good rifle shot, and one who has devoted a good deal of time to that branch of the work. I may be wrong, but I will bring the information which my hon. friend wants.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister may be right as to the profession, but he is wrong as to the qualifications. He has evidently been misinformed. I would like him to say who recommended the gentleman. Was it the person who has the patronage of the county?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The officer of the department is supposed to have satisfied himself as to the fitness of the man before recommending him. However, I will look into this case and give my hon. friend all the information I can.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like also to be informed as to the length of time the contract is supposed to occupy. The minister will remember that the building of the armoury took about four times as long as the contract provided for. The contract price was $4,000 and there was something like $1,900 paid for inspection.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That must have been done in the Public Works Department.

Mr. FOWLER. It was. I do not assume that the minister did that, but I want to warn him.

For manufacture of reserve ammunition at Dominion arsenal, $75,000.

Mr. DANIEL. I see that the $75,000 purchase 3,000,000 rounds of ammunition, making the charge 2½ cents a round. How does that price compare with the price of ammunition of the same kind he has been in the habit of purchasing? Does the country make anything out of this manufacture, or is the price the same, or more, or less?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The only way in which we could arrive at correct information in regard to that would be by comparing the cost with the price in England; because it would not be fair to compare this ammunition with ammunition made by the trade in Canada. This is a very different article. It is a special article made up to a certain strength, very carefully prepared, with the greatest possible precaution. I am told that the cost is less than the English price, or certainly not more, and much less than the cost in the United States.

Mr. FOWLER. I think it was stated last session by the minister that he was going to have another of these cartridge factories established. Does he propose to provide for that in the estimates?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. What I said last year was that I thought the time had arrived for the establishment of another cartridge factory, but I would favour the idea of its being constructed by the trade. I said that there were people in England who had been making inquiries, and that I felt disposed to consider a proposal which I expected to get from them, provided they would agree to manufacture in Canada all the explosives which we would require for our own factory, and which they would use in their own. Negotiations have been proceeding, but they have not materialized very much. I hope that within six months the matter will have reached a business point.

Mr. FOWLER. The idea is that they may come here and establish it?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, at or near Ottawa.

Mr. DANIEL. I see that the total amount expended on this factory is nearly $225,000. How much ammunition does the minister get?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About nine million rounds. There will be a further vote of $65,000 in the supplementaries for next year. Nine years ago the amount manufactured was 1,500,000 rounds.

Mr. FOWLER. At how much increased expense?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The cost is $25 a thousand rounds and it used to be $30. Working extra hours, the capacity to-day is easily twenty million rounds. We can actually manufacture twenty million rounds, but without any difficulty nine million rounds, working hours nine a day.

Mr. FOWLER. Are these sent to the stores in the different districts?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you keep a reserve supply in the different districts all the time?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The largest reserve is in Quebec. It is not desirable to say too much about this, but I can assure my hon. friend we are looking after that matter, and there is a proper reserve at every point where it is likely to be required.

Mr. FOWLER. At the time the scare was on about the Welland canal, there were no cartridges within fifty miles of the spot.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That was the old Snider-Enfield cartridge. I do not think that will occur again.

Mr. DANIEL. Is this the Lee-Enfield ammunition?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, the new Ross rifles take the same cartridge, number 303.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that rifle is defective.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Experts who have examined the rifle, mark II, which is an improvement on the first, say it is one of the best, if not the best, in the world. We have added to mark II many improvements which have been the result of experience.

Mr. FOWLER. I am glad to hear that the government made a contract with Sir Charles Ross to manufacture another rifle to replace rifle number 1, which was defective.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is scarcely a fair inference. The original rifle compared very favourably with the imperial service rifle, but since then changes have been made and we have a rifle which cannot be excelled.

Mr. FOWLER. What did you do with the rifles already made?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. A thousand rifles were issued to the Mounted Police and 500 to the Marine and Fisheries Department, but none had been issued to the militia. The chief change is in the back sight so there is very little difficulty in placing the new sight upon the mark I rifle. I have a telegram saying that after the 1st July, rifles will be issued at the rate of from 100 to 150 a day.

Mr. FOWLER. I have seen some criticisms of that rifle.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There were very severe criticisms of the first rifle and those criticisms I submitted to Colonel Cotton. Colonel Cotton went himself to Quebec to institute a most searching investigation, and he says that in every case the criticism was not fair, and rifle mark two is free from all the defects mentioned in that criticism.

To promote dairying interests by advances for milk and cream, to be recouped out of the proceeds of sales of such butter and cheese, to be placed to the credit of the consolidated revenue fund, $40,000.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). This stood over at the request of the hon. member for St. John who wanted an explanation of the method of dealing with those advances by the Agriculture Department. On looking up the item, I find that the amount of $4,000 in the public account has nothing to do with this vote. That is a special sum sent to my department by the Orange River Colony government to pay for some live stock purchased in Canada to be sent to South Africa. The item happened to be, at the end of the fiscal year, in the hands of the government, and thus appeared in the public accounts. With regard to the $40,000 all this money is available on a special credit given by the Auditor General. The account is kept quite distinct from the ordinary business of the branch.

When revenue from the sale of butter is received, it is deposited to the credit of the vote of $40,000. For every dollar which is paid out of this vote, an equal sum must be, and is, returned to it. The amount may be expended two or three times over in the season. There is a statement in regard to this in the Auditor General's Report, page D—101 governing credit and debit account. It will be seen here that although the vote was only $40,000, the expenditure was $126,062.43—that is, the amount was paid out nearly three times over. The revenue was $156,320.76. This apparently extraordinary condition is due to the fact that a large amount had been paid in on account of sales of butter. The account runs for the season and not for the fiscal year, and the balance as on 1st July appears in the Auditor General's Report. But that balance will be entirely misleading as regards the season, because it appears right in the middle of the season for which the money is used by the department. But, of course, the statement of the account has to close at the end of the fiscal year. The revenue credited to this account does not appear in the public accounts, because the money is never actually expended, and the vote itself is not shown as an expenditure against the Agricultural Department in the public accounts. Page 33 of part 3, Public Accounts ending 30th June, 1904, shows the total expenditure for the Commissioner's Branch, Agriculture and Dairying, to be $219,993.70. This is the expenditure of the vote of $220,000. There is no item in the public accounts reports as to this $40,000 vote. I believe this is a full explanation of what my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) desired, and therefore I would ask the committee to pass the appropriation.

Mr. DANIEL. My attention was called to the statement in the Auditor General's Report and I have looked it over. The balance to the debit of the account amounts to $10.63 which has been placed to the credit of the department. But I notice a rather peculiar thing with regard to it, and that is that this is not a statement for one year or one season, but includes the summer season of 1902, the winter season of 1902-3, the summer season of 1903, the winter season of 1903-4 and the summer season of 1904. The revenue for the winter season of 1903-4 and the summer season of 1904 was $23,610 and the expenditure $20,420. And that would make a difference of $3,190 for one year.

Mr. FISHER. The items of 1902 and 1902-3 appear because some of the payments for butter which had been sold in those seasons was not received until after July 1st, 1903. This is the explanation given me by the accountant.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. DANIEL. Another reason for the increased revenue is that in the summer season of 1902 there appears a revenue from Innisfail of $1,167, and no expenditure.

Mr. FISHER. That is a case such as I explained—the receipt of money for butter sold in 1902, the money coming in after the end of that fiscal year.

Mr. FOWLER. What is this money used for ?

Mr. FISHER. This is placed at the disposal of the department to make advances to the patrons of the creameries we run in the Northwest. The whole matter was explained last night, but I had not a full explanation in answer to the question of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel).

Mr. FOWLER. Does the minister propose to continue this work after the establishment of the new provinces ?

Mr. FISHER. I think we will close up the work there within the next year or two.

Mr. FOWLER. And hand it over to the new provinces as was done in the case of the eastern provinces ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, as soon as they are able to take it over.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—THERMOGRAPH RECORDS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FISHER. I beg to lay on the table a supplementary return to an order of the House dated 20th March last, relating to Thermograph records used in the transportation of perishable products in cold storage and the contracts entered into with steamship companies for installing cold storage. I may explain that I am not laying every contract on the table, but I am giving specimens of the contracts. The other contracts are exactly similar to those included in the return.

Mr. BARKER. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To-morrow, I expect the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will be here. We may take one or two minor Bills ; then go into Committee of Supply, taking up the estimates of the Departments of Trade and Commerce and Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 7, 1905.

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows :

Mr. Speaker, I beg to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of your honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to the Senate chamber.

ST. MAURICE VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. JACQUES BUREAU moved :

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the 18th Report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders that portion of the 49th rule which limits the time for receiving petitions for private Bills be suspended as regards the petition of the St. Maurice Valley Railway Company, presented this day, and that the said petition be read and received forthwith.

Mr. FOSTER. Why is this necessary ?

Mr. BUREAU. A charter was obtained last year by which the company have the right to cross the St. Maurice river at Point du Chevalier. Since then they have made surveys and they wish to proceed with the construction of the road, but they find that it will be impossible—not impossible but it will cost three times the amount to cross there that it will to cross below that point, and the amendment to the Act asks leave to cross the St. Maurice river about three miles below the point indicated in the charter obtained last year. They are going on with the construction and unless that amendment is obtained they cannot cross the river and expropriate land or have the rights on that side of the river which under the charter they have on the other side for this distance. There is no objection to the Bill by any person and it does not affect any interests in the country at all.

Motion agreed to.

PILOTAGE ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 171) to amend the Pilotage Act. He said : This is a Bill to place the pilotage of the district of Quebec, below Quebec and to the Gulf of St. Lawrence on a similar footing with the pilotage above Quebec, between Quebec and Montreal.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

TIGNISH BREAKWATER.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Foster—asked :

1. Were tenders called for the Tignish breakwater ? If so, when ?
2. What were the names of the tenderers and the amount of each tender ?
3. Whose tender was accepted, what was the amount of same ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I have to inform my hon. friend that tenders have been asked for, but the contract has not yet been given, and it is not customary to give information until the contract has been awarded.

POST OFFICE AT LESSER SLAVE LAKE.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY—by Mr. Foster—asked :

1. When was the post office established at Lesser Slave Lake ?
2. From what railway point are mails forwarded, what is the distance covered, and how often do these mails arrive ?

3. What other post offices have been established in the Territory of Athabaska, and when were they first opened ?

4. How many letters were received and despatched from Lesser Slave Lake during the last four years ?

5. What was the revenue collected and the expense incurred in connection with the Lesser Slave Lake post office ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (for the Postmaster General :

1. 1st June, 1903.

2. The railway point from which mails are forwarded to this office is Edmonton, which is 318 miles from Lesser Slave lake. The immediate point of departure for the mails for Lesser Slave lake is Athabaska Landing, which is 105 miles from the railway at Edmonton. The service is once per month.

3. Lesser Slave lake has been in operation for some time, and three other offices were authorized in February last, viz.: (a) Spirit river, (b) Peace river crossing, (c) Vermilion. In addition to the service thus in operation for the service of Lesser Slave Lake, there are two trips made annually to the far north, beginning at Lac la Biche, which gets its mails from Edmonton via Fort Saskatchewan, Whitford and Saddle lake, and ending at Fort Resolution, passing through the following settlements in Athabaska, viz.: Fort McMurray, Fort Chipewyan, Smith Landing and Fort Smith.

The Royal Northwest Mounted Police are also taken advantage of in their patrol trips. They carry a mail bag with them and undertake the conveyance and delivery at the first regular post office they come to of all matter handed to them.

4. As no record is kept of matter mailed at an office, this information cannot be given.

5. The revenue of Lesser Slave Lake is as follows : 1903, $20 ; 1904, $66.13. The salary of the postmaster is $30 a year.

The expense in connection with the service is as follows : For the monthly trip from Athabaska Landing to the post office at Lesser Slave Lake and to Peace river crossing, which is not a post office, $125 a trip or $1,500 a year is paid. For the service to the far north, which extends into the McKenzie district, $525 a trip or $1,050 a year is paid.

ESTABLISHMENT OF INFANTRY CORPS.

Mr. BELCOURT asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to reduce the establishment of the infantry corps throughout Canada ?

2. If so, in what manner, and what will be the effect of such reduction ?

TRADING STAMPS.

Mr. MONK asked :

Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation during the present session upon the subject of trading stamps ?

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). A Bill is being prepared, but I have not finally accepted the terms of the Bill, as I have not been able to get access to the judgment of the court of appeal which was rendered recently affecting a case of this description.

YUKON TERRITORY—APPOINTMENT OF MR. F. T. CONGDON.

Mr. THOMPSON asked :

1. Has Mr. F. T. Congdon been appointed legal adviser to the Yukon Territorial Council or Commissioner ?

2. Will he be permitted, in addition, to practice his legal profession privately ?

3. Has Mr. Congdon also been appointed a member of the Yukon Territorial Council ? If so, in whose place ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Congdon has been appointed legal adviser to the Yukon Territorial Council. He will not be permitted to practise his legal profession privately. He is not a member of the Yukon Territorial Council.

SUPPLY—HALF-BREED SCRIPT.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER. Just before we go into committee, I might ask the right hon. Prime Minister, in reference to the matter brought up yesterday or the day before, as to the issue of patents in the west to those holding half-breed scrip.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Upon inquiry I am informed that three patents have been issued all told. The minister has not given any orders for the discontinuance of the same, but owing to the fact that all the available labour in the department is employed preparing information for my hon. friend no more patents have been issued.

Mr. FOSTER. About what time may we expect the information and the papers that were asked for ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say to-day. I am sorry to say I did not ask about that.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, it is not necessary that they should all be brought down at once. If they were brought down as they are prepared in different sections it would answer—each section should be complete—that would give an opportunity for examination, but I want to say that before we go on with the estimates of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) we must have these papers, and I hope they will be expedited as much as possible.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

ATLANTIC AND LAKE SUPERIOR RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. H. B. AMES. Before we go into supply, I would like to ask the minister in whose department it lies, if we may shortly expect the return which was asked for by myself and recorded in this House on the 27th March last in reference to payments made to the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company. It is now over two months since that return was ordered and it has not yet come in.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will inquire about it.

YUKON TERRITORY.

Mr. A. THOMPSON (Yukon Territory). Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into Committee of Supply, I would like, with your permission, to draw their attention for a short time to the conditions which exist and the reforms that are needed in the Yukon Territory. Before, however, going into a discussion of this question, I may be permitted to state exactly the position I occupy politically in this House. I am here Mr. Speaker as an independent, and when I say that I mean it in the broadest sense of that term; that is, I am independent of every political party, and if we had in this House, as they have in the House of Commons in England, cross benches, I would be sitting there. At heart I am a Conservative, but I was elected by the united support of the Conservatives and the most influential section of the Liberal party in the Yukon, banded together under the name of the Independent Yukon party. This party, representing a very large majority of the electors of the Yukon, was successful in electing me as their representative. I, therefore, hold myself in this parliament absolutely independent, and while it is perhaps a difficult role to fulfil, I intend to follow it consistently during my term of office here.

Having said this much, which I think it is necessary to do before I go into the discussion of this question, I will now ask the House to follow me very shortly in what I have to say about the Yukon. I find, Mr. Speaker, in discussing with private members and gentlemen in this House that there is an immense dearth of information in regard to the Territory which I have the honour to represent. So much is this so that I feel it necessary to go somewhat into details that otherwise might not be necessary to give the members of this House an understanding of that country and the conditions that exist there. In the first place, let me say that this Territory is bounded on the south by British Columbia, on the east by the Rocky mountains and the 136th meridian, on the north by the Arctic ocean and on the west by the Alaskan boundary line from Mount St. Elias to the Arctic ocean, which was determined by the treaty of St. Petersburg in 1825 as the 141st meridian. From Mount St. Elias to the sea the boundary line, as you know and as hon. members well know, has not altogether been settled yet, and was very recently the occasion of international dispute between the British Government and the United States. The area of this Territory is 197,000 square miles, of which 151,000 square miles are within the watershed of the Yukon river. To give you an idea by comparison how large the Territory of the Yukon is, I will just mention—and I do not want to offend my hon. friends from Prince Edward Island when I do so—that it is sixty-six times the size of Prince Edward Island. It is nine times as large as Nova Scotia, it is seven times as large as New Brunswick, it is three times as large as the New England states, it is one-third larger than the United Kingdom and about the size of France. This Territory is watered by the great Yukon river, which has a total navigable length of 2,300 miles. The St. Lawrence river system from the west end of Lake Superior to the mouth of the St. Lawrence, is 2,384 miles in length, and remember, Mr. Speaker, that the St. Lawrence is not open for a very great deal longer period during the year than is our own Yukon. The St. Lawrence river itself is 755 miles long. The total length of the Peace and Mackenzie rivers is 2,350 miles, but there are only 1,200 miles of that system that are navigable. The Mississippi river is 1,330 miles long. The point I am making by these observations is that this great river, which empties into the Behring sea and drains the Yukon Territory, has a navigable length that is equalled by very few rivers on the continent of America. Two thousand three hundred miles from its mouth to Teslin lake, steamers of greater or less draught can navigate that river for five months in the year. The Yukon river was named by an officer of the Hudson Bay Company who went in there from the interior of British Columbia and the Northwest Territories in 1843.

His name was Campbell. He simply coined the name from the Indian name of the Yukon river, giving it the English accent; and since that time the river has had the name of the Yukon, and the territory has taken the name of the river. In 1847, the Hudson Bay Company established Fort Yukon at the mouth of the Porcupine river now in Alaska. In 1848, the Hudson Bay Company established Fort Selkirk at the mouth of the Pelly river, now in the Yukon Territory. This fort was destroyed by fire in 1852, but was rebuilt by the Hudson Bay Company in the same year; and from that time until the sale of Alaska to the United States the Hudson Bay Company divided with the Russians the whole fur trade of that country west to Behring sea. The district now known as Alaska, then owned by the Russians, was sold to the United States for $7,200,000 in 1867, at which time the Hudson Bay Company retired from the region, and they have not entered it since. Gold was discovered or first mentioned in the English writings of the time in 1868 by a man named Whymper, writing from Fort Yukon. In 1873, Harper and McQuesten went into the country to trade. In 1878, the Chilcoot Pass was first crossed from the Pacific ocean by a white man going into the interior. Up to that time communication was always obtained by means of the interior river routes with British Columbia and the North-west Territories. In 1881, gold was found in small quantities in the Big Salmon river, a tributary of the Yukon. In 1883, the United States government sent an exploratory expedition there headed by Lieutenant Schwatka. He camped where Dawson city is now situated, and photographed the slide and the mountain behind the city. In 1885, some mining was done on the bars of the Stewart river, a tributary of the Yukon. In 1888, coarse gold was first struck on Forty Mile river. In 1887, the Canadian government sent Dr. Dawson in with a survey party, and he surveyed and reported upon the Pelly and Lewes rivers. Mr. William Ogilvie, who afterwards became the commissioner of the Yukon, went in the same year to define the 141st meridian, which is the boundary line between the Yukon Territory and Alaska; and in 1888, Mr. R. S. McConnell went in on an exploring expedition. For the next few years, until 1894, reports evidently reached our government that a considerable trade was growing up in the territory, and that the trading companies all belonged to the United States. In 1894, the Dominion government sent to the territory to report on its trade and other conditions Inspector Constantine, a member of the Northwest Mounted Police. Constantine found that there was a considerable trade done, estimated the value of the gold output of that year at $300,000, collected $3,248 in duties from the trading companies, and returned to Ottawa. The report of Inspector Constantine to the government was such that they considered it necessary to organize the territory and to send him back in the following year with a squad of twenty men of the Northwest Mounted Police, and the report says that he was to represent the Canadian government in all its functions. Mr. William Ogilvie went in with Inspector Constantine at that time, again to further define the 141st meridian. Hon. gentlemen will understand what a difficult task was assigned to Inspector Constantine, and I wish here to pay a tribute to him. I do not know him, I never saw him, but he wrote indelibly on the history of that country the impress of his manhood, in giving to the miners of those early days a sample of Canadian justice. They harbour nothing but the very kindliest feelings for this man Constantine. They say that in those early days, when he had practically the government of the whole territory in his hands, he did what everybody acknowledged to be right. This was in 1895. Everything went on as usual for another year, when something happened which electrified the world. In July or August, 1896, gold was discovered in rich quantities in a hitherto unknown and unprospected portion of that territory. Up to this time no gold had been found on the stream which has since become famous the world over, and which by the way has done its share in advertising Canada and Canadian institutions throughout the world; I mean the Klondike. In 1895, an intrepid Nova Scotian named Robert Henderson was prospecting on a stream tributary to the Yukon, about twenty miles above the Klondike, and found some prospects. In the following year he crossed a small divide into the Klondike basin, and made some further discoveries, which were fairly good pay, but still not very rich. His supplies running out, he went to Forty Mile to buy more. On his way, he crossed the mouth of the Klondike river and there met an Englishman named Cormack fishing with some Indian associates. He told Cormack of his discovery on the stream which is now known as Gold Bottom. Cormack was interested, and went with two Indians to see what Henderson had in the way of prospects. He was not very well satisfied, and came back, thinking that Henderson had not enough gold there to make it worth his while to work it. On his way back Cormack and his two associates stopped for lunch at midday, at a creek now know as Bonanza; and while there, the story is that Cormack was lying down after lunch, when one of the Indians took a frying pan, which every prospector in that country carries, and strolled down to the beach of the small stream running past them and panned some of the gravel, and to his intense surprise discovered a rich prospect. They dug further and found more gold. They realized that they had made a good discovery and they staked a claim in each. They immediately put off to Forty Mile, where Inspector Constantine was, recorded their claims, came back, sunk a hole to the bed rock, and found the rich pay of discovery claim on Bonanza creek, which has yielded since that time close on $2,000,000, that is, on the 1,500 feet which Cormack and his two associates took up under the law at that time. The miners of the district, when they heard of the discovery and saw the gold, rushed to the new find. They staked claims on Eldorado, Hunker and other creeks, and prospected during that fall and winter. They took out some gold during the winter. Of course, at that time they could not market it in the Yukon; they had to go to the Pacific coast, they went down the Yukon river to its mouth, where they took ship and went to Seattle or San Francisco, where the press agents saw the gold and heard their story. The press spread the report, and the world went mad. In 1897 and 1898, we had in the Klondike region one of the greatest gold rushes of modern times. People came from all over the civilized world; Dawson city was built in a few months; fortunes were made and lost quickly; and from that time to the present a steady stream of gold has come out of that country, and it will continue to come out for years to come if we get a little help from this government to encourage this great industry. Since 1896, we have produced in the Yukon over $120,000,000 of gold. It is hardly possible for the ordinary mind to grasp that fact; but when I convert that amount into pounds or tons avoirdupois, the average mind will realize what it means when I say that it amounts to over 242 tons avoirdupois, sufficient to load twelve freight cars carrying twenty tons each, you will have some idea of the quantity. Just now in the library I saw in a book on metals that gold may be drawn into a wire so fine that 500 feet of it will only weight one grain. Well, I made a calculation, and I found that following one grain to every foot of wire, the Yukon has produced since 1896 gold enough to encircle the globe twenty-nine times.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it not a fact that the discovery made by McCormack and his two associates was practically made in the district where Henderson discovered the course of gold, and did they not learn the fact of the course of gold being there through the information they got from him?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think my hon. friend is exactly right. I never heard that Cormack and his associates discovered gold on Bonanza creek through any previous discovery on that creek by Henderson; but they were drawn to Bonanza by the fact that Henderson had made the discovery at Gold Bottom and it was on their return from Gold Bottom to Dawson that they made this discovery. The credit, however, is still due to Henderson of having made the first discovery of gold, although he did not find it in any such quantities as the Indians and Cormack did. We would be derelict to our duty if we did not do something to secure in his lifetime that man Henderson in comfort. In the state of California, I am told you will find everywhere monuments to Marshall who discovered gold there in 1849. We are now only at the beginning of the great gold output in the Yukon; and while the Dominion government has very properly provided for Mr. Henderson by giving him a position there, the Yukon Territory must sooner or later, in some more substantial way, repay him for the great discovery he made in 1896. This territory, which I have the honour to represent, is producing more wealth to-day per head than any other section of the civilized globe. But here and throughout this country, men have formed ideas with regard to the climate there, which are entirely at variance with the facts. So much is this the case that I feel bound to refer briefly to the climate of the Yukon so as to dispel if possible some of these false impressions, and also because I am convinced that we have a country there in which profitable business will be done and gold produced for hundreds of years. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) very kindly entered into the spirit in which I spoke to him of the agricultural fertility of that region, and he sent out this spring some seeds for fodder particularly, as well as some roots, so that we might do a little experimenting this summer and see if we cannot raise some of the fodder and other things which we are now importing at great expense. Hay and oats, when I left the Yukon, were selling at six cents per pound or $120 per ton, and they fetch nearly these same prices throughout the entire year. To show you that the request I made to the Minister of Agriculture to send seeds to the Yukon was a very reasonable one, I shall briefly refer to the report of Mr. John Macoun, assistant director and naturalist of the Geological Survey, who gave evidence before the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization in 1903. Mr. Macoun said:

> What an official visit to the Yukon revealed.
> Last year our acting director, by direction of the Minister of the Interior, suggested that I should go and examine the Yukon country for the government, and I went. I would not go from here until late in June, for the reason that I had been in northern countries, and I told our director: I am only going to waste my time by going so early, for nothing can be growing.' I did not leave until the latter part of June, and I reached Dawson on the 10th July last year.

Mr. Macoun had previously said that Dawson is over 20 degrees north of Ottawa:

> When I reached there I found red currants, blueberries and strawberries perfectly ripe on the hillsides on the 10th of July. Well, of course, I was more than astonished. There is a rose that grows there that we know as rosa acicularis, and on the 3rd of June last year I found it with the first flower expanded at Aylmer, Quebec, nine miles from Ottawa. It happened that Mr. Tyrrell's brother, James Tyrrell, was out on the hillside at Dawson on the 2nd of June, and he found the same species in flower there, one day earlier than it was here. To me it was an enlightenment. I had gone there with preconceived opinions of what I had heard, and this was a revelation indeed. I want to show you gentlemen what the flowering of that rose here and at Dawson meant. The same amount of heat had to be poured down on both districts to produce like results. When I reached the country I found the rose hips red and getting ripe when I thought they would be only starting to bloom. That gave me something to think about, and I turned to Mr. Tyrrell and said: 'Mr. Tyrrell, what is the cause of this flower blooming earlier here than in Ottawa?' Here is his answer. He said: 'Mr. Macoun, it is the long day and the great amount of sunlight.' I said: 'You, Mr. Tyrrell, were up at Chesterfield Inlet, on Hudson bay, and found plants that indicate perpetual frost, and still you were not as far north as here. If it was the sunlight, why does it not at Chesterfield Inlet as it does here' You see, the matter was simple. I was not going to accept this man's dictum or that man's dictum; I knew that for every effect there was a cause. Let me go back to the coast now, and we will see what I am talking about. On the coast from below Wrangel, that is down near the border of British Columbia, the great glaciers come down from the mountains to the sea, and as you go up Lynn canal the mountains come down to the sea, and you will see the glaciers starting at the mountain summits and coming down to the sea, and actually flowing into it. If you look at the map you will see that all the coast range from Wrangel northward is very high, and in all the bays and inlets there is much ice, and glaciers of immense size enter the sea. There is a great tract of country there under great glaciers and partly covered with eternal snow. In this region rise Mount Elias, Mount Logan, Mount Fairweather, rising between 16,000 and 20,000 feet above the sea. Well, the people coming up the coast believe the interior is like that, and from the erroneous opinions which have prevailed, but here is the remarkable fact, that no glacier ever was at Dawson, that Dawson has never been covered with an ice cap as it has been here, that no one of our geologists has ever discovered glacial action at Dawson or within 200 miles, or I may say within 300 miles, of that place.

The wondrous shelter belt that protects Dawson.

I stood at Dawson and turned south, and I found by the map that this mass of mountains towering 20,000 feet into the air covered with glaciers and constant snow lay between Dawson and the sea. Now, we know that the Pacific in that part and northward is almost constantly covered with fog, and the atmosphere is at the point of precipitation, and as that moisture comes into contact with these mountains, it comes down in snow, causing the glaciers. The air passing over the mountains, relieved of its moisture, descends on the plain in the interior, as a dry warm wind. This is the result of two causes, the want of moisture and friction caused by the descent of the air to the plain. So that if you wish to call it so, the conditions at Dawson are those of a perpetual chinook in the summer time.

That will be a revelation, I am sure, to hon. gentlemen. He goes on with a lengthy report with which I shall not trouble the House except to give a couple of extracts:

Mr. THOMPSON.

Spring may be said to open towards the end of April, the last zero temperature of winter occurring about the 5th of April.

That is better than Ottawa.

May with an average temperature of 44 degrees is by no means unpleasant. The 23rd May is the average date of the last frost in the spring.

I am sure that is a revelation to hon. gentlemen.

Observations of rain and snow have until the close of last summer been very fragmentary, but it is probable that the summer rainfall near Dawson is usually between 7 and 9 inches, and that the total snowfall of autumn and winter is between 50 and 60 inches. Dawson being situated near the river with high hills or mountains on all sides, is well protected from the winds, and a feature of the town, and indeed of the neighbouring country, is the long periods of calm weather which occur.

You see, Sir, Mr. Macoun was sent specifically for this purpose, so that his report is more valuable than any verbal report could possibly be.

I examined the gardens in the valley of the Klondike and the Yukon, early in July, and found everything growing luxuriantly and wonderfully vigorous. On the 5th August I examined the gardens in the Klondike, and I have that noted in my book for future reference. I found cabbage cut then, that on weighing were found to be from 3 to 5 pounds weight; these were being sold in the city.

Potatoes had also grown; in fact everything was growing beyond anything I had ever seen here.

Speaking of wheat, he said:

I took a couple of heads and sent them to the experimentalist at the Government farm here who has charge of the seed germinating process, and he sent me the report that he had planted one hundred grains. The whole hundred grains grew and made a remarkably vigorous growth; in other words there was not a weak seed in the lot, and there was not a failure, and what was more they vegetated very quickly.

Mr. FOSTER. That was wheat which had been raised in the Yukon?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes. One of the members of the committee asked:

Do you think there will be no difficulty in ripening wheat in the Yukon?

And his answer is:

When I came home, I said there was nothing doubtful but wheat. Since I came home, I say there is nothing doubtful about wheat.

Mr. Speaker, that means a great deal for Canada. It means that the area of our wheat country is very materially increased. Further, on the 13th July, Professor Macoun found nasturtiums and sweet peas in flower and the next day an eastern rose bloomed. In his official report of his investigation Professor Macoun speaking of this species of rose—rosa acicularis—says that it was gathered in flower on June 2 at Dawson city and adds:

Last spring Dr. Guillet, of Ottawa, and myself had been noting the flowering of all species at Ottawa, and this species was first detected in flower in Queen's Park, Aylmer, Quebec, nine miles from Ottawa, on June 3rd. This one simple fact shows the progress of the spring at Dawson better than a whole series of elaborate statistics, because statistics do not give the amount of heat and light given out in 20-22 hours a day.

It bloomed one day earlier at Dawson than at Ottawa.

The 15th of July was spent in the Klondike valley, and here also new revelations awaited me. The islands in the river have been cleared of brush and trees and in their stead gardens have been established in which vegetables of all kinds come to perfection. From these gardens the citizens of Dawson are supplied with rhubarb, radishes, lettuce, onions, turnips, beans, parsnips, carrots, peas, cabbage, cauliflower, Scotch kale and many other pot-herbs. Everything was in an advanced stage and gave certain promise of a large crop.

Being asked as to fruits, he gives the opinion that small fruits will grow there.

Now, I am going to refer very briefly to the words of a man whose name is revered in this country, whose fame is secure for all generations, but one who, though a Canadian, is perhaps, better known abroad even than in Canada. I refer to Dr. Dawson. Dr. Dawson was sent to explore the Yukon territory in 1887, years before the rush to that country took place. Before I finish I wish to show the House what Canada has lost in Dr. Dawson's death. His prophecies have since been wonderfully fulfilled. After referring to the journey to the Yukon, he says at page 20:

Taking into consideration all the facts which I have been able to obtain, as well as those to be derived from an examination of the natural flora of the country, and the observed advance of vegetation, which, in the absence of actual experiments, are capable of affording valuable data, I feel no hesitation in stating my belief that such hardy crops as barley, rye, turnips and flax can be successfully cultivated in the Yukon district as far north as the former position of Fort Selkirk, near the 63rd parallel, or in other words about 1,000 miles north of Victoria. Taken in conjunction with the physical features of the region, this means, that chiefly within the drainage area of the Yukon, and for the most part to the north of the 60th parallel, there exists an area of about 6,000 square miles, of which a large proportion may—and doubtless in the future will—be utilized for the cultivation of such crops, and in which cattle and horses might be maintained in sufficient number for local purposes. . . . I do not maintain that the country is suitable for immediate occupation by a large, self-supporting agricultural community, but hold that agriculture may before many years be successfully prosecuted in conjunction with the natural development of the other resources of this great country, of which by far the most valuable portion lies to the east of the line of the Alaskan boundary.

Even at that early day—1887—Dr. Dawson anticipated the discovery of gold which occurred in 1896. He speaks of the discoveries in the Cassiar and other streams in northern British Columbia, and proceeds:

Discoveries similar to these may be expected to occur at any time in the Yukon district, the generally auriferous area of which already proved is very much greater than that of Cassiar. Scarcely anything has been done as yet even in the Cassiar district toward the search for or providing of metalliferous veins and practically nothing in the Yukon district, but there can be no reasonable doubt that such deposits exist. The present activity in mining enterprise in the southern part of British Columbia——

You see how he figures it out.

—will, before long, spread to this northern region also, and then, if not before, its valuable character as a portion of the metalliferous belt of the continent will be realized.

The Yukon district with the northern part of British Columbia, measured from the vicinity of Dease lake to the intersection of the Pelly (Yukon) with the 141st meridian, comprises a length over 500 miles of the Cordillera belt of the west, which, wherever it has been examined, has been found rich in minerals and particularly in the deposits of the precious metals. The width of this particular part of the Cordillera belt is also great as it appears, so far as our explorations have gone, to extend from the coast to the eastern ranges of the Rocky Mountains in the vicinity of the Mackenzie river.

Here is a point most important to Canada:

This portion of the Cordillera region, together with that of the more southern part of British Columbia, gives an aggregate length of between 1,200 and 1,300 miles, almost exactly equal to the same metalliferous belt contained by the United States, and in all probability susceptible of an eventual mining development equally great.

And Dr. Dawson was a geologist and spoke by the book. He speaks of the quantity of timber and indicates that coal is likely to be found. And to-day, in Dawson city, we are using coal that Dr. Dawson, in 1887, foresaw that we would use in that territory. Speaking of the isothermal lines, he said:

The lines, in particular, which would represent the mean summer temperature would assume in the far northwest approximate parallelism with the Pacific coast, instead of tending to follow lines of latitude. It is needless here to recapitulate the well known causes which produce this remarkable difference in climate, but lines as already approximately drawn upon the maps, represent in a generalized form the aggregate of influences which, working together produce at the site of old Fort Selkirk on the 63rd parallel of latitude in the upper Yukon basin, an attractive landscape, decked with well-grown forests and with intervening slopes of smiling meadow, while in the same latitude in Hudson strait we find, even at midsummer, merely a barren waste of rocks and ice.

And here is another comparison to which I wish to refer :

To instance a region which reproduces the general conditions of the Yukon district and adjacent northern portions of British Columbia we must turn to the inland provinces of Russia, to which allusion has already been made in connection with climatic features. The province of Vologda, in European Russia, appears to offer the nearest parallel. It is circumstanced relatively to the western shores of Europe, as is this district to the western shores of the North American continent. Its area is 155,498 square miles, situated between the 58th and 65th degrees of latitude. The climate in both cases is a continental one, in which severe winters alternate with warm summers, and the actual degrees of cold and heat, so far as our information goes, are not dissimilar. There is no very heavy rainfall in either region, such as we find near the western coasts bordering on the Atlantic and on the Pacific respectively. The agricultural products from the province of Vologda are oats, rye, barley, hemp, flax and pulse. The mineral products comprise salt, copper, iron and marble, but the precious metals do not appear to be important, as in the Yukon district.

Horses and cattle are reared, and the skins of various wild animals, as well as pitch and turpentine, are among the exports. The population of the province is stated at 1,161,000.

Concerning this province of Vologda, the following facts will be of interest:

Agriculture is the chief occupation, and cattle breeding. In 1897 they had 243 thousand horses, 549 thousand cattle and 419 thousand sheep. Government has from 150 to 200 factories of woollen and linen fabrics, soap, leather, candles, glass, iron foundries, brick kilns, distilleries and salt works, and it supports a population which, in 1897, was 1,365,587 souls. Latitude 61-65 north. English settled in Vologda in sixteenth century, and it was a great centre of trade.

And, Mr. Speaker, that province of Vologda, in northern Russia, in practically the same latitude as our Yukon territory, has to-day a population of 1,161,000 souls, and if a province can do that in Russia our province can successfully do it in Canada. He makes one practical remark here :

To-day it may well be characterized by the term which has been employed in connection with the Mackenzie basin, a portion of 'Canada's great reserve.'

I will not trouble the House with any more from Dr. Dawson, but his opinion is concurred in by Professor Macoun. But I want to refer to one paragraph used by another gentleman, just as competent to speak upon the climatic conditions of the Yukon, I refer to Dr. Stupart, whose office is in Toronto, and who is the head of the Meteorological Survey of Canada. He gives a very fitting answer to those who have erroneous views with regard to the winter in the Yukon, for he says :

Ice usually begins to run in the Yukon river about the second week in October, but it is not until quite the end of the month, or early in November, that the river is frozen fast.

This, Mr. Speaker, is important, because I am continually asked here: "How is it that you live in the Yukon, I should think you would be frozen to death there in the winter time." Well, this is the reply taken from Dr. Stuparts report :

The temperature on the average, during a winter, falls to 20 degrees below zero, or lower, on seventy-two days ; to 40 degrees below, or lower, on twenty-one days ; to 50 degrees below, or lower, on seven days ; and to 60 below, or lower, on two days.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is not the observation of any one individual winter, it is the consensus of observations covering six winters, and it corrects the wrong impressions with regard to the cold in the Yukon, better than I can.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any way of knowing when these two cold days come ?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, but I can tell my hon. friend that he may be cock sure they will come. But when they do come, it is not half as cold there as it is here with the same temperature, because there we have practically no moisture in the air, and it is not much colder at 60 degrees there than it is at 45 degrees here, so far as human endurance goes.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Is it cold when you have an election there ?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, we had a memorable election there last December, when it proved extremely cold for some people. We have very little snow there. When I left there on the 15th February, we had about eight inches of snow, and that represented all the snow that fell up to that time. We have no thaws at all in winter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn your attention to some methods of mining. The great industry in that territory is placer mining, and I would like to refer to the methods used in extracting the gold from the gravels of the Yukon. Gold is found as dust or nuggets. Gold dust ranges from the finest gunpowder up to sawdust, and from that on. It is graded in nuggets that weigh from a few pennyweights up to several ounces. But the great majority of the gold is won in dust, what is called dust, but it is like coarse gunpowder. This gold is found in gravel. This auriferous gravel overlays a very large area of territory. It is covered by a vegetable sediment which miners call muck, a sort of black clay. Beneath the gravel is a bed rock. There are hill gravels and creek gravels; but in a general way you find first of all muck, next gravel, next bed rock. The richer portion of the pay is usually found in the lower part of the gravel overlaying the bed rock. The miner cuts a hole in this muck or black clay, with an axe down to the gravel. Then he piles cordwood over the whole, sets the wood on fire, for this muck and gravel is frozen down to the bed rock. He sets the wood on fire, thaws some of the gravel, hoists it out, puts in another fire, and repeats that operation until he gets to bed rock. When he gets to bed rock he tunnels by some process east or west, north or south, taking up the gravel by that means. He hoists it up and in winter time, usually piles it in a dump, and leaves it until it thaws in the spring. That was the primitive method used in the Yukon, and it is the method largely used now. There is another method, however, and that is by using steam power. The miner sets up a small boiler and conveys the steam through pipes and rubber tubes to a machine which he calls a 'point' which he drives into this bank of gravel. He turns on the steam, and thaws the gravel for four or five feet, and is thereby enabled to take out more gravel in a given time than by thawing with wood. He hoists this up with a steam hoist, dumps it by a self-dumper into a dump, which is of a conical shape, and one sees these rise all over the country in the winter time. There is another method used in the summer time, and that is a steam shovel, such as is used in a railway cutting. The shovel raises the gravel and throws it into a washer, where it is put through a series of washings to extract the gold. Still another method is by the use of hydraulic power, where the water is thrown under great pressure against a bank with a force of two or three hundred pounds, dislodging a large quantity of gravel. The methods of washing the gold are practically the same, that is, it is done in accordance with the laws of gravity. Gold being of greater specific gravity than any other metal, it sinks at almost the point where it is thrown into the sluice box. These sluice boxes are placed along the claim, and a stream of water is poured through them, now the gravel is thrown into the box, and the water rushing through that box carries away the gravel and leaves the gold. That principle is the one which you will find throughout the whole of the industry, the gold is separated by its own specific gravity. In this sluice box, which is about a foot wide, there are what they call riffles. These are small poles in the bottom of the box between which the gold naturally falls. The large pieces of gravel are run off by the water, the small pieces of gold sink down in the interstices beween these poles. To make these riffles they use railway rails, rocks and small round spruce poles. Now you can understand, Mr. Speaker, how important it is that we should have plenty of water in this industry. For the miner, water is a prime essential in the Yukon. Without water the miner cannot extract the gold in any paying quantity. Wood is also a very important article, and we are having a railway built in there now, and I expect to see a larger quantity brought in there than has been for two or three years past, because this railway is opening up large tracts of wooded land from which we could not formerly get wood on account of the expense of hauling. I have thought fit to go somewhat into detail in this matter so that hon. members of this House would appreciate the requests I have to make and the explanations to which I may refer to later on. We are a territory and as such we must come to this federal parliament for absolutely everything pertaining to our territory and to our one industry. This parliament and this parliament alone can give us the things that we need to foster and encourage this industry of ours.

I wish to refer briefly to some things which we need and to some things which parliament can give. The first and foremost need, the foundation, in fact of the industry in the future, is a code of mining laws. Up to the present time we have had no laws in the sense that we make laws in this House; this industry of ours has been governed and guided by regulations which have passed during all the years for laws. These regulations are passed by Order in Council and have the effect of laws passed by parliament except that they are changeable by the same body that made them, the Governor in Council, and not by parliament. I need not tell you how important it is that any industry, if it is to thrive, must have for its foundation a stable set of laws, and I know it has been found difficult to compile these regulations and formulate them into laws. I also am convinced that they are considering this matter, that successive commissioners have considered the matter, but it is still in abeyance, we still have our regulations and we have no laws. To show you that what I am talking about is not a political question but a question far above the plane of politics so far as the Yukon Territory is concerned, I shall refer briefly to the acceptance of my predecessor, the present Senator J. H. Ross which he sent to his constituents in the Yukon when he ran for Parliament. It will be remembered that Mr. Ross was our commissioner there previous to the time he ran for parliament. He said:

> I was engaged in an endeavour to revise and codify not merely the mining laws, but all the laws applicable to the Yukon when my illness interrupted the work.

Unfortunately it did.

> I think this work most essential in order that the laws may be fixed, clear and certain. With respect to the mining laws I propose to have them codified and then submitted to representative miners for criticism, alteration and approval in order that they may, as far as possible, meet with the approval of the mining community.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the hon. gentleman whether it is the circumstance that the regulations are temporary in their nature, made by the Governor in Council or is it the imperfect character of the regulations which is complained of, or both ?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is really both, but the one thing of all to which we really object is the instability of those laws, the fact that they have prevented from coming to our territory capital that otherwise would have come. You cannot get capital invested in this country or any other country unless you have for that capital a set of sound and just laws.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are these regulations changed with considerable frequency ? Have many changes been made from time to time in them so that you do not really know what laws to expect in the immediate future ?

Mr. THOMPSON. In reply to that it is only fair to say that they have not recently been often changed. I do not know that they have recently been changed at all, but in the early days of the camp when the eyes of the world were directed to that spot, when capital sought investment there they were changed and they were changed to the detriment of the territory. Latterly they have not been changed as frequently, I do not know that they have been changed at all, but the fact remains that if you take a Klondike proposition to a capitalist in this or any other country, the first thing he will ask is : What is your title ; have you a stable title or not ? and whenever he sees the title we have to a placer claim in the Yukon he says : I cannot afford to take the risk ; there are other countries, there are situations even in Canada where I can get an investment under a more suitable set of laws. That is the one difficulty. I wish, and the people of the Yukon wish, that these regulations, many of them good, the majority of them good, shall be incorporated in an Act of parliament passed by this House, and thereby become law which cannot be changed except by this House. Then the people of the Yukon will feel that underlying this one great industry of ours we have a stable and just set of laws upon which the future of the country is based, and under which I have no doubt and they have no doubt we shall progress.

Mr. FOSTER. Are all those regulations made at Ottawa or are there some of them that are made by the commissioner or assistants in the Yukon itself ?

Mr. THOMPSON. All these regulations are made here at Ottawa, and before I sit down here I am going to submit that this parliament should give us the right to make our own mining laws. At the present time they are made here in Ottawa. We have no power in the Yukon to make or to change those laws. To show you how jealously this privilege is guarded by other provinces which had the status of provinces previous to their entry into confederation, I shall refer you to the provinces of British Columbia and Nova Scotia. Do you suppose that when British Columbia entered into confederation she would give to the federal parliament one jot or tittle of her right, to make her own mining laws ? Not much. Do you suppose that when Nova Scotia entered confederation she would give this federal government one right, even the smallest right to change her mining laws ? No, Sir. She jealously guarded these for herself, she kept them and she has evolved year after year a system of mining laws which is suitable to her but which might not be suitable to this province or to Ungava or to Mackenzie or to British Columbia. The point is that every province and territory has distinctive conditions which make it imperative that mining laws should be made for that territory or province and for it alone. There may be great principles that underlie the mining business, but in detail the laws must be worked out for each section of the country. This is not a political question with us in the Yukon. Every man in the Yukon, whether Conservative or Liberal, is unanimous upon this question, that these laws should be incorporated finally in an Act of parliament and made unchangeable except by parliament. Previous to their final passage they should be taken to the Yukon and submitted to the people there who were earning their living by taking gold from the ground. They should be submitted to these people and their best opinion with regard to what is best for that territory should be obtained. A few days ago I had the opportunity of speaking here with the premier of Nova Scotia, the Hon. Mr. Murray, upon this question. I knew that in Nova Scotia they have some good mining laws, and I said to him : How did you evolve this system of laws ?

His answer contains exactly the germ of the idea which I have in respect to the people of the Yukon Territory. Speaking in regard to the coal mining industry, which I will take for the purpose of the illustration, he said : It has taken us years to evolve these laws and to bring them to a condition in which they are satisfactory to the coal miners of Nova Scotia. I said : How did you do it ? He said : We asked the coal miners to meet us in convention ; that is to send their representatives to meet us—speaking of the government—and we would send our representatives to meet them, and they would sit at a table and discuss this question, exchange ideas and come to some general understanding which would be incorporated into an Act of the legislature. Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that that is sound, that there is no better method of arriving at the best ideas to incorporate into a mining code than that very same method and that is what I am asking this government to do—to send a man to the Yukon Territory. Let me say that I have discussed this question with the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and he has entered into the spirit of it. I feel that in this matter I have a duty to perform and I wish to discuss this and other questions in the fullest and freest manner. What I want the government to do is to send a man to the Yukon Territory, there to investigate the conditions underlying this industry, who will consult the men producing gold, who will get their ideas, who will consult with the members of the Yukon Council, our legislature there, and from all these sources compile information which he can bring down here and incorporate into a set of laws which will be passed by parliament, which will stand for years to come for the Yukon Territory and which will more than anything else help us to get capital to develop the industries of that country. So much for the mining laws.

Mr. Speaker, there is another question that affects us and affects us very materially in the Yukon, and that is the export tax on gold. Originally we had to pay ten per cent royalty to the Canadian government on every dollar's worth of gold over $5,000 which was produced by any individual in the Yukon Territory. That was an exorbitant tax, so great a tax that there are few industries and few countries in the world which could live under it, and rich and all as was the Yukon, it became in time too great a drain. The government reduced it to five per cent, cut it in two, with the same exemption of $5,000. This went on for some time and then, when my predecessor the Hon. Mr. Ross was commissioner, or shortly after, the royalty was removed and an export tax of 2½ per cent was placed on the output with no exemption. Every dollar of gold that is now produced in the Yukon pays 2½ cents to the federal government.

Mr. FOSTER. That is exported.

Mr. THOMPSON. Exported from the Yukon ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. But exported into Canada as it should be and as I am going to show. That is the point ; it must be exported to Canada. Why should we pay duty on gold going into Canada ? However, I will discuss that later on. This export tax is 2½ per cent and it covers the whole product. Now, Mr. Speaker, a few years ago, when we were producing from $20,000,000 to $22,000,000 annually in gold, when the camp was prosperous, 2½ cents on every dollar's worth of gold produced was not excessive; the burden was easily borne, and if these conditions existed to-day the people would not object, but unfortunately, times have somewhat changed. Our output has fallen to $10,000,000 a year and yet an output of $10,000,000 a year is producing more gold and more wealth per head than any industry is producing in any other country in the world. But, I say that this export tax is pressing to-day a little more hardly upon us than it did four or five years ago. We in the Yukon do not object to taxation. We know it is necessary to be taxed in order to keep up our government, but I submit this proposition that in view of what the Yukon has paid to the federal treasury since 1896, in view of the advantage to Canada of the Yukon to-day in the way of a market it would be wise and expedient for the Canadian government to remit for a term of years this tax of 2½ per cent on every dollar of gold taken out. I have asked the Prime Minister to abolish it completely and he says he cannot ; but if you will not abolish it completely, remove it for ten or even five years until the enterprises there begin operating and until our gold output is on the up grade again which it will be in a very few years. At the present moment, although we are producing this $10,000,000 a year, these, comparatively speaking, are lean years, and it is during these lean years that we require relief. Remove it for three years if you like and it will be an assistance. Last year this tax gave the government $250,000. We produced approximately $10,000,000 in gold. What is a quarter of a million of dollars to a government like ours whose income is $60,000,000 a year and whose income very shortly will be $100,000,000 a year, because there is no doubt in my mind that the progress that we have started on in Canada will not stop until the income of the government is away beyond $100,000,000 a year. Here is a territory that is struggling along and while a quarter of a million does not make much difference to the government of the Dominion it makes an enormous difference to the people of the Yukon, and so I ask, that, if this tax cannot be abolished, it be remitted for a term of years or until we get on the up-grade again in the output of gold. What do they in the great republic to the south of us ? Do they tax gold ? No. And remember we are lying side by side with the district of Alaska, the people of which are engaged in the same business we are in, in placer mining, and their government does not put one cent of a tax upon the output of gold. Further than that they give a larger claim in Alaska than we do. The result is that we find that our miners are being drawn off to the district of Alaska where they can get a larger claim and where they can mine their gold without a cent of taxation. You all can understand how that will militate against the progress of the Yukon.

We have very nearly paid our way since 1896. If the Yukon field force charge and the Mackenzie & Mann charge were taken from the charges against the Yukon up to the end of June, a year ago now—I am speaking from memory and I am not quite sure of the facts—our accounts would very nearly be square. If I remember correctly at that time we had overdrawn, so to speak, or we had cost the federal treasury more than we had paid in $1,200,000. It cost the Dominion government $750,000 to put the Yukon field force there and it cost $450,000 to settle the Mackenzie & Mann bill. Add these together and they make $1,200,000, and I think I am correct when I say that if you remove these two items up to that time we had almost paid our way. It may be asked how the government would be repaid if this tax were removed. Well, they would be repaid in the very best manner possible for Canada ; they would be repaid in trade and commerce. We would have in that country, instead of the few thousand people that we have to-day, with some of these restrictions removed, a large influx of miners. The country would go ahead, we would consume more Canadian products which would be a good thing for Canada, and although the government would not get the direct taxes that are paid to-day, indirectly, Canadian producers would get larger prices and sell larger quantities of Canadian goods in the Yukon.

If that is not done I have another proposition to make and it is this, and I submit to the people of Canada that it is a reasonable one. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) asked a moment ago if that was an export tax. Strictly speaking, this tax of 2½ per cent on our gold is not an export tax, because the gold should not be exported out of Canada but it should be brought here to Ottawa.

If you will not take the export tax off the gold going out of the territory, then put it on the gold going into the United States, so that all our gold will be retained in Canada, instead of going across the line to build up American cities, as it is doing to-day. Of the $120,000,000 of gold produced in the Yukon Territory since 1896, I venture to say that not more than $20,000,000 has been left in Canada, while $100,000,000 has gone to the United States. That gold should be kept in this country.

Another obstacle, though rather a small one, to the progress of this work, is the assessment work required on the claims. At the present time a miner has to do $200 worth of work on his claim to keep it for a year. He does not object to that ; but in addition he has to pay the government $2 to get from the government official a certificate that the work has been done. This is only a small matter, and yet it retards the industry that much. I would ask the government to let the requirement of $200 of assessment work stand as it is, but to remove this $2 certificate fee ; and if it is necessary to have a certificate, let the government official go to the claim and give the miner a certificate there, instead of requiring the miner to come to the government office, as he has to do at the present time, and take two witnesses with him, to have the assessment work recorded.

Before I left the Yukon I called a convention of the miners, and asked them to give me as nearly as possible a statement of some of the more essential things which they thought were required for the Yukon, and they did so. It was held at Gold Bottom on the 11th of February, four days before I left. This is one of the things they asked : that the certicfiates of work fees be abolished, and that license fees be reduced to $5. This refers to the abolition of these certificates. The license fee at that time was $7.50. I am glad to say that when I submitted this to the Prime Minister, who was Acting Minister of the Interior when I arrived, with other things which I submitted to him in a memorandum, he saw the force of this suggestion, and at once had this fee reduced to $5, something which the people of the Yukon appreciate very much. It was also decided that creek claims should be increased to 500 by 2,000 feet, hillside claims to 500 by 1,000 feet, and all others 500 by 500 feet, with four posts. These are larger claims than we have in the Yukon at the present time. We have claims of 250 feet up and down the creek. The gold is usually found in creek bottoms, which are from 50 feet to a quarter of a mile or more in width, and the hillsides adjoining the creeks very often contain deposits of gold. The present creek claim is 250 feet by 2,000, 1,000 feet on each side of the base line. The miners ask that it shall be 500 feet by 2,000 feet, double the size. That may seem, to gentlemen acquainted with placer mining, rather large ; and on a rich creek it would be large. But we have creeks that are not as rich as Eldorado and Bonanza, creeks on which machinery has to be placed before the gold can be extracted ; so that if a man has a claim of only 250 feet, all he has after his operations is his mining machinery and a small bank account, if he is not in debt. If he had 250 feet more, in many instances he would have a comfortable nest egg left. The reference to four posts is to obviate litigation, which has been the curse of that country. Fractional claims have cost that country perhaps more than any other one thing in connection with the delimitation of claims. If a man has to place a post at every corner of his claim, there will be no doubt where the end or side lines are, and a great deal of the litigation of the past will be obviated, I hope, in the future. In regard to leaseholds, it was decided that the present system is good enough, with the addition of the absolute right to renew. This shows that we do not kick at everything. At the present time the gold commissioner, who is the head of our mining court, may under the regulations, though I do not know that he has ever done it, refuse to a man the right to renew. In the matter of grouping, it was decided that the requirements of representing the groups should be that the representation work must be such as will work to the development of the whole group. The law now allows us to group eight claims and do the work on any one. I think as a principle that is very good; but the work done on this one claim should be done with a view to develop as much as possible the whole eight. A miner was considered as entitled to have the right to abandon one claim and resume all rights upon that creek or in that district. That is, if he locates a claim, and finds, after prospecting, that it is no good, he wants to have the privilege of giving that claim back to the government, to whom it would probably be of more use than to him. The Yukon regulations regarding tailings, tunnelling, drainage, &c., should be amended to include the British Columbia laws of 1901, section 48. I am a layman, so far as the legal profession is concerned, and I am not prepared to discuss this question from a legal standpoint; but men who have studied them say that they have good regulations in British Columbia in reference to this, and I think it would be wise to incorporate them in our code. It was decided to adopt the Northwest Territories Irrigation Act. Water is the great desideratum in the Yukon. It is necessary to have water and at low cost, to mine these gravels. Our water is gradually being pre-empted by speculators applying for water rights. I am not very well acquainted with the Northwest Irrigation Act; but, as I understand it, it is this. Where water is available for irrigation purposes, a man is not given the right to take water from a certain stream to irrigate a certain piece of land, unless he proves to the Minister of the Interior that he is a bona fide investor, that he has the capital to carry out his scheme, and that when it is carried out, it will be not only good for him, but good for the surrounding country. What we really want in the Yukon is to make it impossible for these speculators to get these water rights and hold them.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that largely done now?

Mr. THOMPSON. It was done considerably last summer. Of course, it is permitted by law and is perfectly legitimate, and last summer when people saw, as they have been seeing for some years, that water has become very valuable, some speculators covered many of these water rights for a term of years, rendering it impossible for other men, who might be bona fide investors, to get these water rights, which are becoming of greater value year by year.

Mr. AMES. By what authority are the water rights issued?

Mr. THOMPSON. By the Gold Commissioner in Dawson. I am not positive whether they have to be referred to the Minister of the Interior or not, but I do not think so. I think the Gold Commissioner in Dawson has the absolute right to accept or refuse.

Mr. BELCOURT. Under regulations.

Mr. THOMPSON. Of course. These regulations to which I have referred are operating in the Yukon and are sent to our Gold Commissioner, who is head of our gold court there; but I am just giving parliament the ideas of the miners themselves, in convention assembled, of the things they need:

It was considered the prospector should be allowed to take and hold ground for ninety days by prospecting continuously without recording.

The prospector is the man to whom we owe that $128,000,000 in gold. If he had not preceded the population, we would not have a Klondike or a Yukon, and it is necessary, in order that further discoveries may be made, to encourage the genus prospector. Unfortunately, he has, to a very large extent, left and gone to other fields. He is a migratory man always, in every country, but I am anxious we should do everything possible to retain that class of men. He is a man who will take upon his back food for a few days, a frying pan, a shot gun, a little ammunition, and go out in the wilderness and prospect there day after day and week after week until his food supply runs out. Then he will come in for more and go out again. It seems to be a fever; there is a strange fascination for these men to go out and discover new gold districts. I am anxious that we should make things as easy as possible for the prospector and give greater inducement to him to go and discover new fields. For, in that vast territory, there may be a hundred Klondikes. It will be strange if there are not other deposits of gold there, because we are right in the auriferous belt, which runs from California to Cape Nome. Take a map of the western section of this continent and lay a ruler upon it, and you will be surprised to find that from California to British Columbia, to Yukon and Cape Nome, is almost a straight line due north, showing that we are really in the auriferous belt, and that further discoveries may be made at any moment in the Yukon. It therefore occurred to me that it might be possible for us to aid the prospector in this way. First, charge him no fees. Give him an absolute free claim from the time he stakes until he sells. Make the man who buys pay; but so long as the prospect is held by the individual prospector himself, give him a free claim without royalty or fee of any kind. More than that, if the prospector should discover a new creek, that creek immediately becomes a revenue bearer to the government. Claims are staked on it. In order for a man to hold a claim he must first buy a license, which costs $5. To that we do not object. We ask the government to protect us, and are willing to pay for the protection. We do not object to the $5 for a mining license, and in order that a man may hold a claim he must have that license. But I would not have the prospector charged for fees or mining license or any royalty on his claims. All the other miners, however, who came after him and staked upon the creek he discovered would have to pay to the government the usual fees; and I submit it would be good policy to give the prospector half those renewal fees for a term of years, or say until he has a bonus of $10,000. How would that work out? At present that country which he is prospecting does not give the government a cent, but the moment he makes a discovery the government begins to get returns. Is it not fair then that the government should, for a term of years, divide those returns with the prospector who made it possible for them to get anything? I am not wedded to this, but wish to do something that will induce the prospector to go out into the wilderness; and in the absence of anything else, I have thought out this scheme. The first year he gets nothing, the government gets it all, because it might be a fake discovery, and I would not encourage that. Another thing, if a man holds a claim and has to put on his representative work and wants to renew at the end of the year, that costs $10. I do not object to that. The first year the prospector gets nothing; the second year, if the claims are no good, these men who hold them will not renew them, but if they are good they will renew them, and the prospector would get half these renewals until he gets a cash bonus of $10,000. That is one method of helping the prospector and inducing him to go into the country and discover and open up large areas.

It was decided we need mining inspectors, but that they be elected by the miners on each creek, and that the Mounted Police do the desired work formerly done by the inspectors.

All the inspectors except two were discharged last fall, and the miners think that others should be elected. Their idea is to elect them as is done in Australia and some other country. These men get together and elect the man they think most suitable to inspect their claims. That is a matter I suggest in passing, to the government.

It was decided that all royalty or export tax be abolished and the British Columiba Hydraulic Lease Law should be adopted.

They are a unit on the question of abolishing the export tax. Formerly, where it bore only on the rich man who produced $5,000 and over, but now it bears upon the poor man. It bears upon every dollar you raise from the ground, and that is why it is so obnoxious. We would be willing, in any event, that it should be remitted for a term of years, if not permanently. One of the things that occupy our attention in the Yukon individually and collectively is the lien law. In that country, where labour is valuable, a workable lien law is very desirable. We found it very difficult indeed to frame a lien law that would be workable. We did frame one and passed it through the Yukon Council, but the court decided it was ultra vires. The only thing for us to do then is to ask this parliament to pass a lien law which will be operative in the Yukon. The difficulty is this. As I understand the principle of such a law, it applies against the labour of a man who is working upon something and making it more valuable by his labour. The product of his labour, so to speak, is attached by a lien law. But in the Yukon the thing is unfortunately reversed, and the man's labour decreases the value of land upon which he operates. These men work all winter, the dumps of gravel are washed up in the spring and their contents reduced to a very small quantity, and it is very easy to convey that from the claim. The consequence is the miner who had worked many weary months when he goes for his pay finds that there is no pay for him and that the claim perhaps does not even belong to the man for whom he worked. It is most unsatisfactory. A lien law which would enable a lien to be put upon the gravel in the dump seemed to be the only way out of the trouble. We did that, but, as I say, the courts decided that it was ultra vires. The title we have from the government is only a lease-holder's title, and we could not attach a lien to this lease-hold, because it had to be renewed year after year and at best was only a leasehold. I submit this to the government for their consideration, and hope that they will solve the problem for us.

Now, I wish to refer very briefly to one of the most important problems we have to face and that is the disposition of our gold. We have one product in the Yukon for export and that is the gold—absolutely we have nothing to export except the bullion. Therefore it is important to us that we should get the full value of our product when we market it. Gold fluctuates very little in value and its difference in value in different places is very little. Allowing for charge of transportation, it has the same value whether in the Yukon, in London or in South Africa. This being the case, the miner should get as near that fixed value as possible. He should not be under the necessity of selling his gold as if it were cord-wood, or hay or any commodity whose value fluctuates. At the present time, he sells his gold to the banks; and the banks make a profit on every ounce—and in some cases they make a fairly good profit. I do not want to say anything against the banks;—they have done a good work for that country, but they are making too much money out of our gold. What do other countries do? They buy the gold. The United States government buys all the gold that comes to them; and so does the British government and the French government. And I believe that Russia and Australia do the same. And Canada should do the same. There is no reason why our Canadian government should not buy every ounce of gold we produce in the Yukon. It is a pretty good thing to have a few millions of gold lying around, whether for a country or for a man.

Just in passing, let me congratulate Canada on the fact that she is going to have a mint. I do not know of any one thing that the Canadian government has done in the last decade which will have a more widespread or more beneficial effect upon the world at large regarding Canada and upon Canada herself than the fact that we are to coin our gold. I do not believe it is possible for a nation to do anything that more clearly gives it the stamp of nationhood than the issue of its own gold coins. I do not believe that the Transvaal republic did anything in the course of its career that did as much to give it a standing amongst the nations of the world as the minting of its own gold coins. Mr. Speaker, I shall never forget the moment when, in London, I saw for the first time an Australia sovereign. That coin told me more about Australia than a hundred bank notes could have done. It told me that Australia had a civilization; that she produced her own gold, and coined her own money, and stood upon her feet in financial affairs. I am sorry that Canada had not a mint years ago. I believe we would have had it years ago if the banks were not opposed to it. Of course, they are opposed to it, for every five-dollar gold piece in circulation means one less five-dollar note to put out by the banks. I am glad that the Finance Minister was able to tell us that the foundation for the mint was already laid and that shortly we shall have it in operation. In California to-day it is difficult to get paper money—I speak particularly of San Francisco. Go into a business house in San Francisco and ask for paper money, and they begin to wonder where you have come from. They say: We do not use paper money; we are afraid of it; we have the gold. In England they have comparatively little paper money—the smallest is the five-pound note. The money of the common people is the gold. Let us have fewer five-dollar bills and in their place our own five-dollar gold pieces. I do not know how it is with others, but I certainly feel richer with a twenty-dollar gold piece than I do with a twenty-dollar bill. Australia had a mint in Sydney as early as 1855, and another in Melbourne in 1872 and another in Perth in 1897. And even Newfoundland has had a two-dollar gold coin for years. Yet, Canada, though the premier colony and the brightest gem in the British crown has no gold coin of her own. Our mint is not yet ready. But we in the Yukon are ready; we are producing $10,000,000 or $11,000,000 of gold a year. —and we have to sell it to the United States. Why should it not come here to Ottawa?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. THOMPSON. Now, I have a proposition to make to the government. Suppose our government proceeds to make money—that is, they put upon our gold 'the guinea stamp,' to use the poet's phrase. My proposition to-day is that they should issue government certificates for our gold. We will take these certificates and use them for money, selling the government say $10,000,000 of gold per year. Here is a scheme for the Finance Minister to consider. Canada to-day is paying through her savings banks 3 per cent per annum to the people for their deposits. Here is $10,000,000 a year which the government may have for not one cent of interest—simply the issue of certificates which we will use as money in the Yukon. I would like to have it explained how it is that, if that were brought into effect, Canada would not save $300,000 a year in interest. There is a nut for hon. gentlemen to crack. I see my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) is cogitating over it to see if there is anything behind it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the Minister of Finance would like to see something behind it.

Mr. THOMPSON. He will have $10,000,000 of gold behind it. What more does he want?

Mr. HENDERSON. But if he deposits the gold in the vault what about the interest?

Mr. THOMPSON. There would be no interest—we would use the certificates.

Mr. HENDERSON. Perhaps it would not work out exactly that way.

Mr. THOMPSON. Well, it is something for my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) to think about.

Mr. HENDERSON. I agree with you.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am glad to find even one man to agree with my position. To me it seems feasible, but whether it is feasible or not, we are sure the government should buy our gold. This gold should not go to the United States, it should remain in Canada and help build up our own cities. Eventually no doubt, as the Finance Minister said the other day, the government will buy our gold; but in the meantime the miners are losing a good deal every year. The assay office is in Vancouver, whereas it should be in Dawson where the miner could go with his gold, put it on the counter and have it weighed by an official and get full value for it on the spot, instead of allowing a middleman to make something out of the exchange. I hope the government will do that before long. This gold question is a very interesting one to me, I have thought and read a good deal about it; and I do not see anything against the government hoarding this gold until the mint is completed. The Finance Minister told us the other day that the Dominion government had to have 25 cents worth of gold on every dollar up to $30,000,000 given out, making $7,500,000. If my memory serves me right, he told us that the total circulation of the Dominion government was about $47,900,000. For every dollar above $30,000,000 the Dominion government had to put up dollar for dollar in gold. Now if there was $47,000,000 in circulation, that meant that he had $17,000,000 in circulation dollar for dollar in gold, and $7,500,000 as against the $30,000,000, making a little more than $25,000,000 in gold which the Dominion government had to keep on hand. So you see this gold proposition is not a new one with the Dominion government. As the Finance Minister pointed out, our circulation has vastly increased. I will read what he said, which will be found in the 'Hansard' of May 17:

Mr. HAGGART. That includes the reserve the banks are obliged to keep in Dominion notes?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, they have to use these notes to a considerable extent. The amount of our circulation has been increased very much. In 1890, the Dominion notes in circulation were something over $15,000,000; in 1895, $19,000,000; in 1900, $26,000,000; in 1901, $27,000,000; in 1902, $32,000,000; in 1903, $39,000,000; in 1904, $41,000,000, and on April 30, 1905, $47,900,000. Up to a certain sum we keep 25 per cent. We changed that sum a year or two ago. Up to a certain sum we keep 25 per cent and after that we keep dollar for dollar, so that for the larger part of our circulation we have gold to correspond.

The result being that our circulation in 1895 was $19,000,000 and in 1905 it is $47,900,000, nearly three times as much. This is an argument that the government should buy the gold and keep it as against the dollar for dollar they have to get from some other source. Now what does Russia do? Russia in many things is not far advanced, but in some other things she is pretty well advanced, and one of them is her treatment of the question of a gold reserve. During the present war Russia wanted to raise a loan, and she went to France and Germany to get it, chiefly to France. The first loan went off all right. Time wore on, and she wanted to raise a second loan, but she did not get on so well with that, and the consequence was that she had to make known to the world that she had millions and millions of bullion in the vaults at St. Petersburg, and she invited the press representatives of the world to go there and see it for themselves, to take a photograph of it, and let the people see that it was there. I have in my hand a picture showing the gold in the Russian vaults, and a statement:

During the past few days the Russian government has been inviting representatives of the press to view $60,000,000 worth of gold in the vaults of the bank of Russia, in St. Petersburg. The whole Russian gold reserve amounts to $131,000,000.

Yet, they were borrowing gold in France.

It is distributed over St. Petersburg, and in provincial banks and certain foreign banks. The object of holding so large a sum in reserve when the Russian debt is a heavy burden, is supposed to be to influence the public of the world of finance, and thereby exercise an influence on the money market.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that it would not hurt Canada's credit if we had $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 of our Yukon gold stored in Ottawa, or in the banks of Canada. What did Russia do when she wanted this loan? I have here a quotation from the London 'Times.' The London 'Times' appeared to be incredulous about her store of gold, and Russia challenged the 'Times' to send a representative to investigate. The London 'Times' did not send a representative but, the 'Daily Mail' did send Mr. Henry Norman, M.P., with his kodak to take a picture. I find this despatch from London about it:

London, Thursday, March 23.—The 'Times' has received a telegram from M. Kokovtseff, Russian Minister of Finance, calling attention to a recent article in the 'Times,' in which it was said that 'Russia's gold reserve is a colossal Humbert safe, the vaunted millions in which are unconsciously lent by her dupes for their own deception.'

The minister invited the 'Times' to send a personal representative to St. Petersburg to verify the reserve in the state bank's vaults, and to send trained assistants to assist him.

The 'Times' replied, declining the invitation, and pointing out that its statement depended upon its context. It concluded by saying: 'The point is to what extent Russia can draw upon her reserve without impairing the state's credit.

That is what the 'Times' said. Now the 'Daily Mail' accepted the challenge and sent a Mr. Hands, and this is what he found:

C. E. Hands, the St. Petersburg correspondent of the 'Daily Mail,' says that he has inspected the Russian gold reserve which the 'Times' refused to do after it had been invited to make an examination by the Russian Minister of Finance. Mr. Hands says he found it a 'supremely uninteresting, tedious and depressing spectacle' of bags of coin and gold ingots. He did not make any attempt to test the amount beyond selecting a bag and proving that it was full of ten-rouble pieces, but he adds 'it is perfectly clear that an immense amount of gold is stored in the vault.' He is satisfied to believe that there is £25,000,000 there.

Now that is what Russia does when she wants a loan, she opens these vaults and shows the world that she has the gold, and the consequence is that France put up more money. It may not be good finance, but I would like some one to show why it is not good finance, even if we have not a mint, for the Canadian government to buy our gold and store it up so that the gold will remain in Canada instead of going to the Republic. There are other countries in the same position. I saw an article the other day stating that the government of the United States will have 15 tons of gold in their vaults at the end of the present fiscal year. So you see I am not advocating anything new, it is something of the first importance to the people of the Yukon, because every ounce of gold they procure they have to sell for less than what they should sell it for, and would sell it for if this government bought it. Now I said in the early part of my remarks that water was a prime essential for the miners in the Yukon.

A short time ago the government appointed a commission to inquire into the concessions that existed in the Yukon. That commission was composed of Judge Britton and Mr. Bell. Judge Britton reported for the commission and I have his report here, it is sessional paper No. 142 of 1904. I wish to read to the House Judge Britton's opinion on this water question in the Yukon. He said:

> 1. It is made abundantly clear by the evidence that in the Yukon Territory only such claims as enjoyed water facilities have heretofore been properly worked.
> 2. That wherever else gold may be found in that territory, it is there actually distributed in the banks, benches and elevated grounds.
> 3. That owing to the difficulty in procuring the necessary supply of water, successful mining has been 'seriously retarded and in many cases made impossible.'
> 5. That the extent and value of the deposits of gold in these benches, banks and elevated grounds must remain unknown until water is made available by the construction of hydraulic works, and that parties making advances for the construction of such works must necessarily take great risks with respect to their investments.
> A plentiful supply of water, distributed for use in washing gold from gravel and dirt, on such terms as miners, whether working individually or in or for companies, is the great need of the Yukon Territory.

That is the conclusion at which Judge Britton arrived after investigating the condition there. This is the way it impressed him. He was taking evidence, but he was so satisfied that he makes this remark:

> For the purpose of dispensing with further evidence upon a matter so clear, it was, with the approval of all present, formally noted at one of the meetings that it could be considered as established that there is a very large amount of gold in the district, comprising the beds, banks, valleys, slopes and hills of the Klondike river, of Bonanza, Bear and Hunker Creeks and their tributaries, and in other places in the vicinity of Dawson, and of the places particularly named, and that there is a great scarcity of water available for mining purposes in the district and places named.

Judge Britton was not only impressed with the richness of the country but with its need of water. This is one of the questions that I submitted to the Prime Minister on my arrival here, and I am very glad to tell the House as I told the people of the Yukon that he acceded to my request that a man be sent to make a hydrographic survey of the waters which supply the auriferous region in the Klondike, and the man has gone there, Mr. Thibadeau, and that surveys will be made this summer so that we will have when that information is compiled something to submit to a capitalist in order to induce him to put this water in, for water we must have. I hope that when the time comes the government itself will see fit to put the water in, but in case they do not, we will have some definite information over the signature of a government official that such and such is a fact. Briefly referring to the question of a government water system, I would like to point out to the House that this is nothing new for governments to undertake. The Australian government put in a water system carrying water 328 miles, not the Commonwealth of Australia, but western Australia, which is like one of our provinces. That system carries water 3208 miles, they use twenty-five different pumping stations and pump that water to a height of 1,447 feet and supply the mines of Coolgardie and Kalgourlie. It cost $13,000,000 but it made the Australian desert blossom like the rose, and I am informed that it is turning out, in a financial way, a good investment for the Australian government. Western Australia at that time had less than 200,000 people. Our system will not be more than seventy miles in length and will not cost more than one-third this amount and we have enough gravel in sight to ensure the future of the Yukon for 100 years to come if that is done.

I wish to refer to one other question, and that is a very serious question in the Yukon, the question of concessions. A moment ago I said that the government sent a Royal Commission to the Yukon to inquire into the question of concessions. These so-called concessions are hydraulic leases, they are called concessions as that is a convenient term. Hydraulic leases were granted by the government to various people in the Yukon, and let me say that I believe this system of concessions has always been a curse to Canada. Years before we had a Canadian government, the British government gave probably the greatest concession ever given in Canada, to the Hudson Bay Company in 1670. That company controlled practically one-half the northern half of this continent for 200 years, and then we Canadians had to buy the company out in 1870, to pay them money and they still retain one-twentieth of the whole of their tract. The Conservative government gave the Canadian Pacific Railway 25,000,000 acres of land which is untaxable for all time to come, a concession that is wrong, I do not care who did it. The present government gave concessions in the Yukon to different parties—although I hope not for all time to come—which have proved a curse to that country and will always be a curse to it until they are removed. This fact was so impressed on the government that they appointed a Royal Commission to investigate that question and with your permission I shall refer you and the House and the country to what Judge Britton found when he went to the Yukon. Under the heading :

Hydraulic leases attacked.

Judge Britton enumerates the following concessions :

1. Lease No. 9, comprising a tract of land situate between Adams creek and Fox gulch, on the left limit of Bonanza creek, having a frontage of 1½ miles, issued in favour of C. A. Matson and associates, and known as the Matson concession.

Right in the very heart of the richest gold-bearing district in the world.

2. Leases Nos. 2 and 8, comprising a tract of land situate between Boulder creek and Fox gulch, on the left limit of Bonanza creek, having a frontage of 55 claims, issued in favour of J. J. Doyle and associates, and known as the Doyle concession.

3. Lease No. 5, comprising a tract of land commencing 2½ miles from the mouth of Bonanza creek and extending up that stream for a like distance, issued in favour of the Hon. E. H. Bronson and C. C. Ray, and known as the Bronson and Ray concession.

These gentlemen live here in Ottawa.

4. Lease No. 18, comprising a tract of land commencing about 1½ miles from the mouth of the Klondike river, thence up stream for a distance of 6·72 miles, issued in favour of M. J. Boyle, and known as the Boyle concession.

5. Lease No. 10, comprising a tract of land situate on Quartz creek, a tributary of the Indian river, in the Yukon Territory, having a frontage of 3½ miles, and known as the Quartz creek concession.

6. Lease No. 1, comprising a tract of land, situate on Hunker creek, below the mouth of Last Chance, having a frontage of 2½ miles, and known as the Anderson concession.

7. Lease No. 33, comprising a tract of land, situate on Gold Bottom creek, a tributary of Hunker creek, issued in favour of C. J. Hermann, and known as the Hermann concession.

8. Lease No. 30, comprising a tract of land, commencing at the mouth of Miller creek, a tributary of Sixty-mile river, and extending up stream a distance of 3·38 miles, issued in favour of the North American Transportation and Trading Company, and known as the Miller creek concession.

He says:

There have been granted, in all, since the opening of the Yukon Territory, 40 hydraulic leases. Of these 13 have been cancelled, and 27 are standing. Of the 27, 8 have been attacked. Only 2 others were mentioned as likely to be attacked, and no one interested took the trouble within the time given, to formally lodge any complaint as to those.

He discusses the various concessions and refers to the mining regulations and proceeds :

The matter was treated in the larger way, ignoring placer claims when they formed a small part compared with the large quantity of gravel ground which it was alleged could be worked only by hydraulic methods. There certainly was not, in the earlier days after the opening of the territory, sufficient care on the part of the officials in the territory to see that the regulations were strictly complied with. . . . . It will be seen by a perusal of the lease that the conditions are exacting and carefully drawn, with the manifest intention of protecting every interest connected with the mining industry. Under these circumstances, it has apparently been thought best to accept as representation work, work done by placer methods instead of insisting upon work by hydraulic methods.

Now, there is the gist of the question. These are so-called hydraulic leases. They should be worked and worked alone by hydraulic methods, but there is not to-day in the Yukon a single one of these concessions operating by hydraulic methods, and the government, as the judge points out here very clearly, has seen fit to accept work done by ordinary placer methods as work done by hydraulic methods. What is the difference ? The difference is this : A man gets forty or fifty acres of mining land in a concession on which he does $5,000 worth of work. I will work a placer claim of 250 feet beside him and I have to do a great deal more work than he has to do in proportion and he has many privileges that I have not. It is not these concessionaries who have given us all this gold. I venture to say that they have given us only a very small proportion of the product of the Yukon. The small individual miner is the man who has produced this gold and he is the man from whom these leases have taken ground right in the very heart of the richest areas in the Yukon. Judge Britton condemns that practice. Unfortunately there are terms in most of these leases whereby a double construction can be given to them. They may be construed to mean that the concessionaries do not absolutely have to work by hydraulic methods, and that is the loophole through which the concessionaire has always crawled. He says further :

All these questions are beyond the scope of my commission as affecting the rights of parties respecting any particular concession, but are of importance for the consideration of the department upon the question of benefit or injury to the mining industry of the territory.

Here is this pregnant sentence :

The fact of these large concessions existing no doubt has a bad moral effect.

Why ? He discusses that.

A miner, on the look out for a placer location, makes a discovery, and upon application, finds that his ground is not open, because it is within the territorial limits of a concession. This annoys him, and he spreads what he calls his grievance far and wide, creating dissatisfaction among miners. Others, without attempting to prospect or locate, say they cannot, because all the ground is covered by concessions, and men who never were and never intended to be miners join in the cry against concessions.

That is his opinion: Then he offers some suggestions:

In reference to the benefit or injury of hydraulic concessions, I think it proper to make the following suggestions:

Here they are:

That placer work or 'preparation' work should not be accepted in lieu of what can properly be called hydraulic work, or hydraulic operations. An annual expenditure of $5,000 is very small for such large areas. If the conditions are not complied with, the lease should be cancelled.

Here is another important point:

The regulations define the width of an hydraulic mining location as one mile, but where it is situated in a valley, the location may extend in width to the 'limits of the valley,' if so ordered by the minister.

They may extend these limits to the limit of the valley.

A very liberal construction has been placed upon the expression 'limits of the valley,' as it has been held to mean from 'summit to summit'——

These valleys are 400 to 500 feet deep with mountains and hills on each side of them:

—as it has been held to mean from 'summit to summit' of the watershed on either side. I think that too wide, wider than the regulations were intended to authorize. Such locations should not extend beyond the summit of the first or lower hill on either side. It is too much to say that 'limits of the valley,' in defining a location, should include a succession of hills and valleys between, leading up to the summit of the watershed. The regulations should be amended.

He proceeds:

These hydraulic concessions would be more beneficial to the mining territory if they were considerably smaller——

They cover acres and acres and miles.

—or the conditions should require a much larger annual expenditure than $5,000.

In coming to the conclusion mentioned before, that in certain cases lessees had complied with the conditions of their leases, I did so because it was proper to consider, and I was bound to consider, the interpretation which the department had placed upon 'representation work' upon all the hydraulic concessions.

Now, just in regard to this question I would like to show very briefly a very small section of the argument which was submitted to Judge Britton, and which, I suppose, influenced him somewhat in making up his mind. I will not read it all. It was by the advocates who presented the case of the board of trade before the commission. This statement shows how many miles are included in a concession, how many placer claims would be worked in case these concessions were thrown open, and how much revenue the government would get from this ground from which now they practically derive no revenue. It says:

If the above estimate is correct the government would receive in entry fees when concessions are thrown open $23,000; 5,130 men would be given employment, and calculating gold at $15 per ounce, $9,618,750 would be produced on which the export tax at pressnt levied would be $240,468.87. If these same men chose to buy imported goods for themselves and families it may be fairly estimated that each would pay $100 into the customs, making $513,000 more. The revenue to the government in renewing 1,215 claims at $12 each would be $14,580, while the claims restaked would be 542, bringing $5,420. With an adequate water supply on fair terms these estimates are too low. But summarized they stand thus:

Fees receivable by government on opening above concessions	$ 23,000
Fees on claims renewed at end of first year	14,580
Fees on claims restaked at end of year	5,420
Export tax	240,468
Customs (subject to 75 per cent reduction on account of consumption of Canadian goods)	513,000
Total revenue receivable at end of first year	773,468
Reduction on account of use of Canadian goods	384,750
Actual revenue receivable at end of year	388,718

These figures are the opinions of the gentleman who argued the case for the board of trade before Judge Britton's Commission and they may not be absolutely correct, but they have in them a very large grain of truth.

This, Mr. Speaker, is no party question. I will refer very briefly once more to the platform of my predecessor, the Hon. Mr. Ross, and I find that the platform he ran upon and the platform he was elected upon contains this plank:

Resolved, That a policy should be adopted which would prevent the obtaining of concessions for hydraulicing, except in places where the dirt is of such low grade that it could not profitably be worked by other methods, and that before any hydraulic lease should issue, notice should be given by the applicant by publication in the newspapers of his intention of applying for such lease, so as to enable protests to be entered against the granting of the same; and that the owners of hydraulic concessions already granted should be compelled to carry out the strict terms of their leases, and that in default of their so doing their leases should be cancelled.

That is what Judge Britton says also. This was a plank in the platform of the Hon.

Mr. Ross when he was elected by the Yukon people to represent them in this House ; and my own views are even stronger. This land, in the very heart of our gold bearing district is locked up ; the government gets no revenue out of it, the people get no employment, and the men who own these concessions play the part of the absentee landlord in Ireland. They do not reside there ; they reside in Ottawa or somewhere else. Messrs. Bronson and Rae live in Ottawa, they hold thousands of acres which do not produce a dollar, and they have not employed labour in the past commensurate with the acreage which they have. There is nothing to be gained by the government or the people from having these leases perpetuated. The system is wrong. Make these men carry out the terms of their leases, or throw the ground open. If the government are legally bound to these men, and must stand by the contract, then they should require them to work the ground hydraulically, so that there will be no doubt that labour is being employed and that the gold is being taken out of the gravel. But now nothing is doing. These leases are lying there dormant. I suppose the rent is paid and the representation work amounting to $5,000 a year, is done to the satisfaction of the government. But the thing is wrong ; these men should not be there at all. This ground is in the heart of our gold-bearing district, and if they had not possession of it, the miners would have a chance of prospecting it and taking it up if they found that it was good enough. This question of concessions is affecting the Yukon Territory, I believe, more than anything else. It has damped the ardour of the people there. They find it difficult to go on and prospect with these blankets covering the territory. The concessions may be worth nothing, or they may be worth millions of money. We do not know what they are worth, simply because we cannot prospect them.

In almost every other country where there are placer mines, in every country that I know of except the Yukon, quartz mining is carried on. At the present time no gold is being won from quartz in the Yukon, although there are many prospects, and one mill is ready for operation. People have found it difficult to interest capital in the quartz mining of the Yukon. If to-day we had a population deriving their livelihood from that industry, hon. gentlemen can understand what a difference it would make in the stability of that country. Placer mining is more or less unstable, while quartz mining is stable. The man engaged in quartz mining invests his money for years, and the people interested in it would be glad if the government could assist them in some way, such as allowing their machinery to come in free, as some of the mills they require are made in the United States. When mills of the same kind are made in Canada, they cannot be brought in duty free ; but the mills made in the United States are in some instances better suited for the class of ore we have in the Yukon than the mills made in Canada, and our miners would like to be able to bring these in duty free. This is a reasonable proposition. It would not cost the government any money ; it might cost the Canadian manufacturer the sale of a mill or two, but it would give an impetus to the quartz-mining industry of the Yukon. While on this question of bringing in mills duty free, I might refer to another industry which has just been started there, that is, the dredging industry. Dredges are also made in Canada, but as a Canadian it humiliates me to have to admit that better dredges for the Yukon are made in the United States, for some unaccountable reason, whether because they have a larger market or not. In the Yukon we are just on the eve of a great dredging era, and I submit for the consideration of the government that they should remit for a term of years the duty upon mills and dredges made in the United States, which are more suitable for work in the Yukon than those made in Canada. If the government would do this, it would give a great impetus to the quartz mining and dredging industries of the Yukon. It would be also for the benefit of Canada as a whole, because Canada has no better customer to day than the Yukon. We produce nothing but gold. Every man, woman and child there has to be fed and clothed, and Canada supplies 80 per cent of our food and clothes. In passing, I may say that, though we are not producing a dollar from quartz mining, the export duty on gold applies to it as well as to placer gold ; so that while the government are not getting a dollar of revenue from that tax, it militates against the investment of capital in quartz mining. That is another matter which I submitted to the Prime Minister, and he saw the force of the argument, and had that tax remitted for ten years. All these things the people of the Yukon appreciate.

Another question to which I wish to refer is the importation of liquor into the Yukon. There does not seem to be any reason why the people of the Yukon should have to pay $2 a gallon on Canadian whisky brought in there, when it can be sent to Nova Scotia without the payment of a cent. This is another matter which should be brought to the attention of the government. We are Canadians as well as you in other parts of this country, and there is no reason why we should be compelled to pay an extra duty on that article—and we use a fair quantity of it. While we use Scotch and Irish whisky, the great bulk of the whisky consumed is Canadian rye ; and we feel it to be a grievance that we have to pay an extra $2 a gallon on that, while the people of Nova Scotia and the people of British Columbia do not pay anything.

Mr. HENDERSON. Who gets the $2 ?

Mr. THOMPSON. The federal treasury.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are you sure ?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not speaking by the book, but I think so. At any rate, I know that the money is paid, and that it is wrong to tax any part of this country in a way in which no other portion of the country is taxed. Why should we in the Yukon pay this or any other tax that no other province pays ? There is no right or reason in such an imposition. It is a small matter, and I refer to it only in passing, being convinced that it only requires to be brought to the attention of the government to have the injustice removed.

There is one other question, and that is the question of the Yukon Council, which makes our local ordinances or laws. I submit that there is no principle so deeply imbedded in the hearts of the Anglo-Saxon as that of responsible and representative government. When you trace the history of this race from the time that history first discovers them on the banks of the Weser and Elbe, in northern Germany, down to the present day, you will find running through it that one bright thread. You will find that wherever they are, on any section of God's footstool, they want the right to elect their own representatives to govern themselves. In the year 418, when they were on the banks of the Elbe, they had their Moot hill or sacred tree, around which they gathered periodically to elect their own overseers and settle their own communal affairs. When they went to England you find their earliest effort, an effort which they ever continued, was to have an extended franchise. And when they crossed the Atlantic ocean and landed in the United States they perpetuated the same idea ; and it was because the British government of that day refused to grant them this right, which is bred right in their bones, that it lost the half of this continent, to the British Crown. Then followed their career in Canada Take the province of Nova Scotia, where they laboured against the family compact of that day, which was the weakness of the institutions established by such governors as Lord Faulkner. Take New Brunswick, where the same thing occurred. But fortunately in those provinces the difficulty was settled without an appeal to arms. Such was not, however, the case in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. How did the struggle for this very same principle there culminate ? It culminated in the rebellion led by Papineau in Quebec and Mackenzie in Ontario. So long as this race is on this sphere, and wherever you will find a section of this race, you will find in the breasts of the people that love of self-government and that desire to elect their own representatives and legislate for themselves. So it is in the Yukon. Although we are 4,000 miles removed from here, there is in our breasts the same sentiment which has animated this race from its dawn down to the present day, and until we get there what we enjoy here, we shall not be satisfied. Trust the people every time ; grant them responsible government, and they will show themselves worthy of it. In our Northwest we have two great territorial divisions knocking at our doors for this same boon, and in a few days they will be in the enjoyment of representative institutions.

Mr. HENDERSON. With a limitation.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not discussing this question from a political standpoint, but simply the principle of representative government, and I leave party politics to my hon. friend. We are about to grant those two territorial divisions representative government ; and while I do not ask this government to give us in the Yukon what they are giving the new provinces, while I do not ask for provincial government in its entirety, because we are not prepared for that, I do ask that we should be given that government which these Territories now enjoy. It is not responsible government that these Territories have now, but it is an advance on the system we have in the Yukon. Let me tell you what that system is. We have there a legislative body called the Yukon Council, composed of ten members and a commissioner. Five of these members are elected by the people, five are appointed by the government and the commissioner presides. His position is analogous to that of lieutenant governor, except in this respect, that he occupies the dual position of Speaker of our assembly and Governor of the Territory.

Mr. FOSTER. Has he a vote ?

Mr. THOMPSON. He has the casting vote only, which is, of course, very rarely exercised. By that method of government you see that this the Dominion government always holds the power in the hollow of its hand, because it controls the five nominative members and the commissioner against the five elected members, so that should a division ever happen, as it did on one memorable occasion, when the five elected would be pitted against the five appointed, the decision would rest with the commissioner. You see, therefore, that that is not really a representative body. It is controlled from Ottawa, and the time has come when we may, without any fear, I believe, ask the Dominion government to give us greater power. The personnel of this council is composed of Mr. Sinclair, the Gold Commissioner, who is the head of our gold court and has the standing somewhat of a lesser judge ; Major Wood, who is Commissioner of the Northwest Mounted Police, and is like the general of an army with his staff under him ; Mr. Girouard, who is registrar of titles ; Mr. Lithgow, who is comptroller of finance, analogous to our Finance Minister; and there is Judge Dugas, who is the senior judge of our territorial court, and whose position is analogous to that of the chief justice in a province. I know all these gentlemen personally very well, and I know them to be all estimable gentlemen. They are Canadians down to the ground and good citizens, and in the main have done good work. But every one of these derives his sustenance directly from our federal government and, being human, must necessarily be biased at times and biased against the interests of the people. In saying that I am not uttering one word against these men personally, individually or officially, but I am simply pointing out that in the very nature of things they cannot be relied upon to advise always in the best interests of our people. What I ask is that we should give the people of the Yukon the right to elect the ten members of their council and let the commissioner preside as at present. In case the government should see fit to grant this reasonable request, I think they will not have reason to regret their course. These people are not novices in the art of self-government. Every man in that country went in there as an adept in that respect. Like myself and like you, Mr. Speaker, every man there has been accustomed from his boyhood to cast his vote for the representative he desired in the legislative halls of his province, so that you are not risking any experiment in giving the people of the Yukon these rights. I have sat in that council, and I know that the people there are quite well fitted to select men to represent them in their little local parliament, just as are the people in the other provinces to elect their local representatives.

They are the same race, they are of the same blood, they speak the same language, as the people of Quebec, Ontario, and the other provinces of Canada. I am not asking anything new, but simply that the same right that Canadians have claimed, the right that our forefathers in Canada fought for, shall be conferred upon their sons who reside in the Yukon. You can see what the effect would be. Or, if the government will not grant full elective power, then the alternative would be—and it is only an alternative and can only be adhered to for a short time—to nominate men completely outside the ranks of those who derive their support in any way from the Dominion government. We want the whole number of them elected; but if the government will not concede that, then we are prepared—I think I may say we are prepared—to accept for a time the nomination of men who are outside the government employ altogether.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. THOMPSON.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 150) respecting the Interprovincial and James Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Devlin.

SUPPLY—THE YUKON TERRITORY.

House resumed motion for Committee of Supply.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, when you left the chair at six o'clock I was discussing the Yukon council, our local legislative body in the Yukon Territory, and showing how necessary it was that we should have a body fully representative of the people to prepare our ordinances, which have the effect of laws. During my argument I referred to Judge Britton's report on the Treadgold concessions. I was interested when reading that report to notice that Judge Britton had found in the Yukon so many new words that he was unacquainted with, that he made a little glossary of them at the end of his report. I mention this in passing to show the House how difficult it is to convey to the minds of hon. gentlemen here things that may be urgently needed in the Yukon. The very terms we use there in discussing some of our commonplace events, are strange to men like Judge Britton and hon. gentlemen in this House. It is not necessary for me to enumerate them. The question of a fully elective council for the Yukon is not a new one there, nor is it one that any particular party has a monopoly of. Every platform that has been framed in the last four years has contained this plank. Again, I refer the House to the platform of the Hon. James Hamilton Ross, and with your permission I will read one of the planks:

> That the convention (that is the convention which nominated Mr. Ross) views with satisfaction the increase of the number of elective members of the Yukon council——

I should say in explanation of that that the Yukon council at first was composed only of two members elected by the people, and that the government two years ago extended the number to five. He went on to say:

> —and urgently recommend that the membership of the council be made wholly elective without delay; and further, that all matters of a purely local character be committed to the council for deliberation and determination.

That is one of the planks in the platform upon which Mr. Ross appealed successfully to the people of that territory for their suffrages; and I have no doubt that, although he is now in the upper chamber, he is of the same opinion to-day. Now, Mr. Speaker, in closing this particular phase of the question, I only have to add that the Yukon Territory to-day is the only territory organized in Canada that is without a fully representative government. I do not include the Territories of Ungava and Mackenzie, as I do not think they have any organized governmtnt at this time. The other Territories have been married off, so to speak, and there is only the Yukon Territory left. I hope that the government, after considering this matter will see fit to grant the Yukon Territory that measure of self-government which I have advocated.

A few days ago the right hon. the Prime Minister suggested that in the disposition of these Territories remaining after the erection of the two new provinces, they might profitably be allotted to the various provinces that now have representative and responsible government. A few days after that I took occasion to rise in my place in this House and, in the name of the people of the Yukon, entered a protest against its being disposed of in that manner. I did not go into the question extensively then, but with your permission I will do so briefly now. In view of the fact that we have produced so much wealth, that we are producing so much wealth, that we have a population there that is more or less permanent, we feel that we have a future of which the past is only an earnest, and that we we are fit for responsible government. I think it would be an ignominious end of our territorial career to tag us on to the upper end of British Columbia. Neither do I think it would be well from the standpoint of British Columbia, as being the best province, in fact the only one, geographically speaking, to which we could be attached. British Columbia at this moment has all the territory that she can manage, in fact, with all due deference to my hon. friend opposite from that province (Mr. Galliher), she has a little more than she can conveniently manage. The credit of the province of British Columbia is none too good, the government of British Columbia is none too safe, nor has it been as stable as it should be during the past decade. And, Sir, that fact I have just mentioned, the instability of the government of British Columbia, has done more than anything else to check capital coming into that province from abroad, as it would have done immediately after the breaking out of the Boer war. I know for a positive fact that the money markets of the world, at the breaking out of the Boer war, turned to the American continent for safe investment; I know that British capitalists turned their eyes towards British Columbia; and I also know that, because of the labour troubles that existed in that province then, these English capitalists did not invest their money there as they otherwise would have done. Now, Mr. Speaker, we in the Yukon have troubles enough of our own without desiring to graft upon them those of British Columbia.

I said that I had faith in the future of that country and when I say that I am simply reflecting the prophecy of Dr. Dawson in 1887 that he had not the faintest doubt that the Yukon Territory would still be part of Canada's great reserve. I wish very briefly to point out to the House the evidence I have regarding the future of this territory which I have the honour to represent, and in doing so I shall quote first from the Statistical Year-Book of Canada for the year 1904, and show the House what this territory has done in the way of producing wealth as compared with the other provinces of Canada since 1862. I have here the Statistical Year-Book of Canada prepared by our own Mr. Johnston whose name is sufficient as he is very well and creditably known. This book shows the quantities of gold produced by the different provinces. For instance Ontario has produced $2,124,429 in gold; Saskatchewan has produced $293,946; Quebec has produced $295,053; British Columbia, a province that has been mining—well, I have its production here since 1862 and I believe it was mining earlier than that—has produced in that time $90,271,226. Nova Scotia has also been producing gold since 1862 and the inhabitants of that province think they have produced a good deal of gold. I shall show you by comparison that they have produced very little. Their product is $16,728,319. I have given you the figures for these provinces and territories. What has the Yukon done in this time? Up to last year—that is not including the present spring's clean up which I expect will be in the vicinity of $10,000,000—up to the end of 1904, we have produced $118,000,000 in gold. How does that compare with the total output? The total output of gold in Canada since 1862 has been $217,000,000 in round numbers. Over half the gold produced in the whole of Canada since 1862 has been produced by the Yukon and the greater portion of that has been produced since 1896. In nine short years aye, in eight short years, we have produced over half as much gold as the whole of the Dominion including what the province of British Columbia has produced since 1862. Is that not a record that any province, let alone any territory, might be proud of? To show the House the extent of the gravels that we have in that territory I shall quote a letter from Dr. Robert Bell, director of the Geological Survey, whom I asked to measure for me if possible the auriferous deposits, according to the map prepared by Mr. McConnell who mapped that country. His letter is dated May 30, 1905, and is as follows:

Dear Sir,—I have had Mr. Seward, our geographer (in consultation with Mr. McConnell, who has returned from Europe), make as careful an estimate as possible of the acreage of the gold-bearing gravels of the Klondike. Mr. McConnell divides them into the river gravels and the white channel gravels. On the authority of these gentlemen, there are in the Klondike district 3,940 acres of river gravels and 4,680 acres of white channel gravels or 8,620 in all.

In order to save a written explanation about these two kinds of gravel, I have had these figures marked on the inclosed new map of the Klondike district, which has just been printed and is to accompany Mr. McConnell's last report, which has been in the hands of the King's Printer since last November. The gravels are clearly defined on the map, and with its explanation of colour, &c., you will be able to make out exactly what you want.

Yours sincerely,

ROBERT BELL.

The total length of the auriferous portions of the creeks of the Klondike district is about 115 miles, that is in the well-defined portions alone, to say nothing of the Kluane district, in the southern part where creeks known to carry gold extend over twenty-five miles. No man, even if he had the eye of a prophet, could foretell the future of that territory. In an earlier portion of my address I stated that in an inhospitable region in Russia, the Vologda district, is to-day sustaining a population of over a million souls. When one realizes what that means the imagination fails to grasp what the Yukon may be doing twenty-five or fifty years from now. Mr. Joseph McGillivray, a hydraulic mining engineer of extensive experience both in California and in the Yukon submitted for the consideration of the Board of Trade of Dawson, in 1904, a letter, a portion of which I shall read. I am now trying to show the House that this country is not a country of a day, that this gold is not going to peter out, so to speak, in a few months or years; I wish to impress on the House that in the Yukon we have a country that is not a country of to-day, but that with a little help at the present juncture it will be a country of a century and perhaps even more than that. Mr. McGillivray says:

> The following is an estimate of the amount of gravel on these white channel benches alone which measure about 27 miles in length with an average of 1,250 feet in width and 100 feet in depth. This is a very conservative estimate of the depth, as these same benches on Bonanza, Klondike and Hunker are much deeper than that, especially where they near the Klondike, where a depth of 100 feet is attained. Taking this conservative average the estimate is: 27 miles, 142,560 running feet, 1,250 feet wide, 100 feet deep, 17,820,000,000 cubic feet. Therefore 17,820,000,000 cubic by 27 would give 660,000,000 cubic yards.
> To compute the time required in which to wash this amount of gravel——

And it is the time, not the amount of gravel, that I wish to impress on the House.

> ——let it be assumed that 5,000 miners' inches of water (equalling 7,500 cubic feet per minute) was brought on to said white channel by gravitation at a sufficient elevation to give a hydraulic pressure of, say 100 feet or more. The efficiency of water in washing should be one miners' inch to every 7 cubic yards of gravel every 24 hours. Each inch is equal to 1½ cubic feet per minute. That is to say, 5,000 miners' inches of water washing 7 cubic yards to the inch every 24 hours would equal 35,000 cubic yards every 24 hours.
> As the summer mining season here is short, 130 days is a liberal estimate of the time in which to carry on such work. Thus 35,000 yards per day for 130 days would equal 4,550,000 yards each season.
> The time it would take to wash out these benches alone with 5,000 inches of water each season of 130 days, would therefore be 660,000,000 yards at 4,550,000 a year, 145 years and 70 1-7 days.

That is the estimate of the time it would take to wash out gravel benches near Dawson with 5,000 inches of water, something that we have not now and will not have for some time to come. One more quotation from Mr. McGillivray:

> I feel confident there is enough of pay gravel to last for the next hundred years at the rate it could be worked with the water system I have already described. When I say that the system could be put in for $3,000,000, I am stating an outside figure and one which would cover all the expense of installing the electric power plants. This might not be deemed advisable at the beginning of the enterprise; the initial cost for simply bringing on the water to work these grounds might possibly come under $2,000,000.

He was discussing the water system then. He proceeds:

> If this government water supply system should be put in, I see no reason why our annual output of gold should not be increased to $50,000,000 annually, and kept at that amount for many years, and what such a building up of this district would mean to the rest of the Yukon and to the wealth and prosperity of the whole Dominion, I need not point out.

I will not weary the House with any further reference to the extent of the gravels we have there. I just want to show the House now why Canada should help us in developing this vast territory. We are all your own people and we are doing our best in the Yukon to build up Canada and to perpetuate the Canadian interests. We of us who are Canadians have upheld Canadian civilization, encouraged Canadian ideas and fostered Canadian trade. Let me inform you, Mr. Speaker, that we are not all Canadians in the Yukon Territory. A very large portion of our population comes from other countries outside our own. Canada has no better customer in the world per head to-day than the Yukon. I will show you how, as I said before, we produce absolutely nothing but the gold. We have no manufactures; we have no agricultural products. We have to import everything and the people there live well. Every man, woman and child who comes over the White Pass into the Yukon has to be clothed and fed, and every man, woman and child should be clothed and fed by our own Canadian manufacturers and producers. Is there any country in the world that Canada clothes and feeds ? To-day our people are scouring the world for new markets, establishing consular agencies, of which I quite approve and I only hope there may be more of them when right here at our own doors, within our own Dominion, we have a market, which, if encouraged will prove of greater benefit to Canada than any market in Brazil, the Indies or in the old country. To show you that I am not saying anything that is not an absolute fact I will read an extract from a statement prepared for me by Mr. Bain, of the Customs Department here, and by this extract I hope to show the House what the Yukon has bought from Canada within the last few years. I hold in my hand a 'statement of Canadian and foreign goods entering northern British Columbia and Yukon Territory, via the White Pass and Yukon route, during the fiscal year 1903-4.' I will not weary the House by reading over the different months, but I will give the total which will convey to the minds of hon. members what I wish to convey and that is that in 1903-4 the Yukon Territory bought from Canada $4,034,385 worth of goods. Remember this is not a bartering trade, but it is a trade for which we pay absolutely every dollar in cash and every dollar in gold at that. With other countries you have a bartering trade. It is not so with us ; you send your goods there and get the money. Is that not a market worth cultivating ? Here you have a territory right within our own Dominion which will buy from you over $4,000,000 worth of goods per year and it does not cost you a cent to establish a consular agency there. The people within the bounds of that Territory are only too glad to come here, to Montreal, to Toronto or to the great manufacturing and farming centres of Canada and buy their food and clothing. Every pair of shoes, every suit of clothes, every shirt, every hat, every overcoat, absolutely everything that we use to clothe our bodies and to feed them has to be imported into the Yukon. Nor does it stop there. Absolutely everything we use to work our mines we have to import from the outside. In the early years of that Territory Canada did not get as much of the trade as she gets to-day, but due to the fact that the Customs Department have there a competent and efficient officer in the person of Mr. Busby, Canada and the Canadian manufacturers have, within the last two or three years, received a very much greater percentage of that trade than they did in former years. In 1898 the Canadian people only received 7 per cent of the Yukon trade. Now, in the Yukon we buy 80 cents in every dollars worth that we import into that country from Canada—eighty per cent now as against seven per cent then, due very largely to the fact that we have there men who are alive to the trade of Canada and to the fostering of that trade. We have to-day in Dawson 24 bonded customs warehouses and 5 inland revenue warehouses. Just one quotation more to show you what we have bought from Canada. There are no returns available previous to 1898 although we were doing business there for two years before that time, but since 1898 we have bought $13,976,000 worth and we have paid to the Canadian government in duties $3,412,980. These figures are from the Customs Department, they are absolutely correct and they speak for themselves. That is all I have to say upon the trade of Canada and the Yukon except to impress upon the House and the country that right here in our own Dominion we have a market that can be and should be supplied by our own people. Now I have finished.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before my hon. friend sits down may I ask him if that $13,000,000 represents entirely imported goods ?

Mr. THOMPSON. This is a 'statement showing the value of exports from and goods entered for consumption in the Yukon Territory during the undermentioned fiscal years.' Does that answer my friend's question ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, that would be imported goods.

Mr. THOMPSON. Altogether, except that some of them may have been imported from the provinces of Canada. As to that, however, I am not quite sure. Since 1898 we have bought very nearly $14,000,000 worth of goods. I say, that I have finished. If I have succeeded in laying before this House and this country the wants of the people of the Yukon I am content. I have come over 4,000 miles to Ottawa to lay before the Canadian parliament the cause of the miners in the Yukon. To me that country has a fascination that is felt by nearly every one who has lived there. But, it has more. It has a future in which I have every hope, and it is populated by a people in whom I have every confidence. They have braved everything in following the fickle wand of fortune. The work they have done in developing that country in the past eight years is simply marvellous ; but it is only an earnest of what they will do if they get some assistance from this government. On behalf of our Yukon population, I appeal to you, not as a party man appealing to party prejudices, but as a Canadian appealing to Canadians for help at the present juncture for the great Yukon.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Speaker, before my hon. friend sits down I want to ask him one or two questions. During his remarks this afternoon he said that $28,000,000 worth of gold had been taken out of the Yukon. I want to ask him how much the Yukon has paid to Canada since 1896 as royalty upon that gold, and how much the Yukon has cost the country altogether ?

Mr. THOMPSON. I regret that I cannot answer the question of my hon. friend regarding the amount of royalty and export tax which we have paid; but, speaking without the book and from memory, I would say that up to the end of June a year ago we very nearly paid our way, except for the two charges mentioned—$750,000 for the Yukon field force and $400,000 for the Mackenzie & Mann settlement. We bought nearly $14,000,000 of goods and paid nearly $3,500,000 in duty.

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON (Vancouver City). Mr. Speaker, I have enjoyed very much the speech of the hon. member for the Yukon here to-day. It has been a source of a good deal of enlightenment to all of us. Many of the things he has said I heartily coincide with, because I know a good deal about the Yukon country; for, though I have never been there, the province of British Columbia is contiguous to it. But the hon. member said one or two things which, as a representative of British Columbia, I can hardly let pass. If the hon. gentleman knew the people of British Columbia better than he does, he would not consider it a bad province to tie to. I am not prepared to say whether it would be a good thing for the Yukon Territory to be joined to the province of British Columbia; but the Yukon country produces gold alone, while British Columbia is the next largest gold producer of the Dominion, and has solved to a great extent many of the problems presented to any new gold-producing country. The hon. member has made a comparison between the Yukon Territory and the other parts of Canada in regard to the production of gold. Figures can almost prove anything. We have not complete returns of all the gold that has been produced in British Columbia from the first finding of gold in the Fraser river in 1858; because British Columbia did not then belong to the Dominion of Canada, but was a crown colony, and there was not a very accurate record kept of the gold production, so that statisticians can only guess what was taken out. But if we are to believe many of the men who worked in the Cariboo and Cassiar districts in the early days, millions of dollars which were never kept track of were taken to the United States. I fancy that the same thing would apply to the Yukon. There is no doubt that the province of British Columbia has been a very large gold producer. In the comparison which my hon. friend made, he said that the province of British Columbia produced some $90,000,000 of gold while the Yukon produced in its short history $120,000,000. But I would like to call your attention to the fact that the province of British Columbia is the great mining region of the Dominion of Canada. Last year, that is, in the year 1903-4, that province produced gold—and it was almost all placer gold—to the value of $5,373,000, silver to the value of $1,521,472, copper to the value of $4,547,000, lead to the value of $639,000, iron to the value of $6,870, coal to the value of $3,504,000 and coke to the value of $327,000, making in all a mineral production of $16,970,000. In the same year the whole of the rest of Canada produced in gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, nickel, coal and coke, $22,000,000, and the Yukon Territory produced $12,200,000. In the year 1902-3 the province of British Columbia produced $17,000,000 odd, the rest of Canada, $20,000,000 odd, and the Yukon $14,000,000 odd. I have not at hand the figures for last year, but I recollect reading in the report of the Minister of Mines that the province of British Columbia produced nearly $20,000,000, of which $6,000,000 was placer gold. I just mention these facts to show that the province of British Columbia, which my hon. friend has not a very good word for, has added pretty largely to the mineral wealth of this grand Dominion of ours. I am not here to say anything derogatory of the Yukon country. It is a grand country, producing a great deal of gold, and has been the means of opening up great riches to many men in the Dominion of Canada—not to as many as we would like; because Canadians were not the first to go to that country; the Canadian is not a miner. Outside of British Columbia and the Yukon Territory, there is very little gold mining in the Dominion. The more gold the Yukon Territory produces, the more riches there is for Canada; and the greater the mineral production of the province of British Columbia, the greater is the mineral wealth of Canada.

I agree with my hon. friend, that for many years the Yukon will produce a great deal of gold, and the same may be said of British Columbia; and I am of his opinion that it would be infinitely better for the Yukon country—I do not know whether it would be good for the province of British Columbia or not, but I think it would—to be joined to British Columbia and become part and parcel of that province. Out in the Yukon you have a fairly large population as compared with British Columbia, and in the latter province we have also a fairly large population, but spread over a considerable extent of territory, and consequently not as compact as the populations in the other provinces. We have also the same resources as the Yukon, the same class of people, we require the same laws; and if these two were joined together they would be a greater factor in the Dominion than if separate, and no doubt the production of mineral wealth would be greater. The very trouble which the hon. gentleman has pointed out as impeding the progress of the Yukon, namely, the timidity of capitalists to invest their money there on account of its unsettled laws and mining regulations, would be wiped out entirely, because in British Columbia we have, if not the best mining laws in the world, very good mining laws. We have been mining there fifty years and have solved many of the problems that are still awaiting solution in the Yukon. By the union of the Yukon with our province many of the difficulties there would disappear. With regard to the suggestion of my hon. friend, that British Columbia has not been very prosperous the last few years owing to the unsettled condition of its labour market, I might reply that in my opinion we have not had a very disastrous time in our province. True, we went through some trouble a few years ago, but it was not the unsettled condition of the labour market, nor was it strikes or other labour disturbances which were the main causes. What gave that province the worst black eye it ever had, as far as mining is concerned, was not the unsettled condition of the labour market, nor the paying of too high wages—because you cannot pay miners too high wages in my opinion—but the greed of speculators in eastern Canada, who bought up prospects and mines and capitalized them for extravagant amounts, and then sold these stocks to the general public, although they knew very well it was impossible to pay dividends on the capital floated. That has been the curse of our province, but that has gone by the board to a great extent, and the people out there are once more getting on their feet. Last year we produced nearly three million dollars more than we did the year before. That increased production was due to the fact that stable people were taking hold of our mines and working them for the minerals they contained, and were not depending for their profit on the sale of stocks and the gullibility of the public. We in British Columbia have the warmest feelings for the Yukon. Possibly 'per capita' more money went out from British Columbia to develop the Yukon than from any other part of this continent. We all have faith in that country, the majority of our people know what mining is, they have done their share towards the building up of the Yukon Territory, and the more that Territory prospers the better for our province, and the coast cities in particular. For those reasons, I should be glad to see the Yukon Territory and the province of British Columbia joined together as one province.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Kootenay). Representing, as I do, a mining district, I can appreciate to the full what my hon. friend from the Yukon has stated to this House. There are but one or two points in his discourse on which I propose to touch at present. His reference to mining machinery deserves the consideration of this House. My hon. friend said that, not only for placer mining, but quartz mining also, the machinery made by Canadian manufacturers was not equal to the American implements. No doubt that is true, but it is easily explained. Mining in Canada, both quartz and placer, is practiaclly in its infancy, whereas in the United States mining has been going on for a much longer time and on a much larger scale. In the United States the manufacturers, for many years past, have been making mining machinery and have had a large market for it in their own country and abroad. Consequently, they have familiarized themselves with a particular class of machinery suitable to the reduction of certain classes and grades of ore. For years they have been engaged in solving these problems and devising machinery to meet the requirement. In Canada, on the other hand, the manufacture of certain classes of mining machinery has only recently begun. True, for certain purposes, the Rand Drill Company make machinery equally as good as any made in the United States.

But there are other processes for the reduction of ores, and other machines for carrying out those processes manufactured in the United States that are much better suited for the purpose than are our Canadian-manufactured machines. I do not say that in disparagement of our Canadian manufacturers. They are doing very well indeed for the experience they have had and the time during which they have been manufacturing this class of machinery. But the law providing for the free admission of mining machinery not manufactured in Canada should be much more liberally interpreted than it has been hitherto. At the very least this should be the case until time and experience have enabled the Canadian manufacturer to produce an article as good and as well suited for the purpose as that produced by the American manufacturer. There are certain supplies used in mining to which the same principle would apply. For instance—though it may seem a simple thing—candles should be admitted free. In working in shaft or tunnel the miner must use a candle. Now, we have no mining candles manufactured in Canada. Therefore, that is an article that should be on the free list. There are other articles that are in the same category ; and I think that when the commission sits—as I understand it will in the near future—to consider all tariff questions, I will be prepared to furnish them with a list of those articles that are not manufactured in Canada and that, though small in themselves when combined, represent a considerable share of the cost of mining in any part of Canada. There is no reason why these articles should not be on the free list, because their free entry would not involve competition with any Canadian manufacturer. By the free admission of machinery and supplies needed by miners and not manufactured in Canada you can help the mining industry greatly. I believe that, for a time, there was an exemption in the case of mining dredges imported into the Yukon. That exemption was for a year, and, at the end of that period, it was extended for another year.

Mr. THOMPSON. Not now.

Mr. GALLIHER. I suppose that the time granted by the extension has also expired.

Mr. BELCOURT. It expires this July.

Mr. GALLIHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Thompson) referred to the mining regulations in the Yukon. Of course, were the Yukon a province, it would be entitled, like other provinces, to make its own mining laws. But while they remain a territory, with the lands owned by the Dominion government as representing the Crown, of course, the Dominion will make its own laws and regulations. But let me say—and it seems to be an opportune time to approach this subject—that mining does not receive the special attention it should receive. Mining matters come under the care of the Department of the Interior. We all know that that department covers a great variety of subjects—the Geological Survey, Immigration, Indian Affairs, Mining. I need not enumerate them all. But, it seems perfectly clear to me that this department involves a greater range and variety of duties than any single minister, no matter how capable he may be, can give proper attention to. And I contend that the mining industry of Canada has reached a stage when it must be regarded as one of our most important industries. an industry that is entitled to have a separate portfolio presided over by a responsible minister. Under this new department, if it were created, would probably come the Geological Survey, which, I believe, is more closely allied to mining than to any other branch of industry. In my opinion, and not only in my opinion, but in the opinion of all those who live in our mining sections, the time has arrived when the government should look to the establishment of a separate portfolio of mines. The existence of such a department would be a great benefit to the country. The minister at its head could give much more careful attention to mining affairs than can the Minister of the Interior who has so many other affairs in his charge. That new minister would be in a position to take the course suggested by my hon. friend from Yukon (Mr. Thompson) or some similar course—he could thoroughly acquaint himself with the laws governing mining affairs. He need not confine himself to the Yukon or to British Columbia, but could consider the mining laws of every province of Canada and those of other countries, including the laws of the mining states of the union, where mining laws were in existence before we had any such laws in Canada. And the framing of regulations by that minister, I believe, as does the hon. member for Yukon, would be greatly in the interest of the people of our mining regions and of the people of Canada generally. One of the first and greatest results of the existence of a separate department of mines under a responsible minister would be to give confidence in Canadian mining investments to capitalists abroad. In my opinion it would do far more to bring about that result than even the best laws and regulations of any separate province. If you have one federal bureau of mines with a minister presiding over it you can collect data from all the provinces, and it would be presented not in a sectional way as it might by the representative of one province who is bent upon upholding that province as the best field of investment. That information would be from reliable sources and centralized in one bureau at Ottawa it would be a source of information to people outside. This would give the greatest impetus that has yet been known to the investment of foreign capital in the mining industries of Canada.

Mr. A. ZIMMERMAN (West Hamilton). I desire to say just a word in relation to the subject so ably dealt with by the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Thompson). I wish to congratulate him on the splendid address he gave us this afternoon. It was certainly a very interesting speech. I was dissappointed in hearing his statement that although the Yukon has produced $128,000,000 in gold during the last eight years, we have received but $13,000,000 worth of trade from that country. Certainly these figures are out of all proportion, there must be something wrong. I think if the Canadian government purchased the gold produced in that country it would to some extent overcome that difficulty. The fact of all that gold going into the United States and being purchased there, means that the miners must get most of their supplies in that country. I think the time has come when we Canadians should receive the benefit of our own natural weath. The hon. gentleman also spoke with regard to free mining machinery. Now, Sir, I claim that the increase in the business of mining is so great that it should stimulate Canadian manufacturers to enter into the business of making mining machinery. That business has become great, and is rapidly growing. My hon. friend stated that it would probably be some years before mining machinery could be manufactured in this country that would be suitable, and therefore no duty should be placed on mining machinery, it should be admitted free. I claim, on the contrary, that the longer you leave the duty off the longer will you have to wait to see this machinery manufactured in Canada. Again I thank the hon. gentleman for his statement. It was a great delight to me, and I believe it will do much good in the country. It is to be desired that we hear more frequently in this House speeches of that kind that have the true Canadian ring about them.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The House is undoubtedly very much indebted to my hon. friend from the Yukon (Mr. Thompson) for the very able address with which he has favoured us this afternoon. It was all the more able that it was so temperate and judicial in tone. He has spoken his mind in a manly fashion, concealing nothing, and endeavouring to please no one, but merely to state the facts. He was enthusiastic in describing the character of the country which he represents, though I do not think he was unduly enthusiastic. We knew a good deal of the Yukon and of its possibilities, we know more of them now. If there was one part of his speech that I enjoyed more than the rest, it was the statement he made that the Yukon is not only a gold producing country, but that also it has possibilities for agriculture which few of us had suspected. If it be true that this distant part of our northern continent can produce wheat, that wheat can ripen there, I think that fact should be even more satisfactory to us than its mineral riches. Because after all, the great source of wealth of any country is not its mineral resources, but its agricultural resources; and if we have in that northern part of Canada a soil and climate in which wheat will ripen, as well as other cereals, and some fruits and vegetables, the future of that country is assured, even when, hundreds of years from to-day, the gold has been exhausted.

But undoubtedly the most interesting portion of the address of my hon. friend was his remarks with regard to the reforms which are needed in that country. On the whole the government cannot complain of the manner in which he approached this subject. He has shown that the administration has not been free from faults, but I think on the whole we can reasonably claim that the faults have been very few, having regard to the condition of things we found there seven years ago. One of the important points to which my hon. friend addressed himself was the character of the mining regulations. I did not understand that he complained particularly of the character of the regulations which exist at the present time. One thing which he insisted upon strongly was that these regulations should have the stamp of stability put upon them. He stated that of late changes had been made. I think that is true, but I am not aware that of late there has been any marked change in the regulations. But it was unavoidable that in the early days of the discovery of gold, when miners rushed in there by thousands every year—it was unavoidable, I say, that there should have been mistakes made, and it was at first impossible to give that country the institutions which have been found to be most desirable for the development of the gold industry. I would remind my hon. friend of the conversation, which he himself repeated, that he had with Mr. Murray, the Prime Minister of the province of Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia, I think, has a very satisfactory mining code at the present moment, and he asked Mr. Murray if they had always had that code, and Mr. Murray told him they had not, but it was the result of successive experiments, and of frequent conferences with the miners, and that only after long experience had they been able to evolve a code which at this moment gives so much satisfaction to all the parties concerned. No doubt some improvements can be made in the Yukon, but I do not know that at present there is much to be reformed. I noticed that one of the reforms to which the hon. gentleman wanted immediate attention to be given, was the size of the claims. At present the size of the claim is 250 feet by 2,000 feet; he would have the size doubled, so that a claim should be 500 by 2,000 feet. If I remember right, nothing in the regulations has been changed so often as the size of the claims. They have varied frequently, time and again we have made changes; but these changes were only made after consultation with the parties interested, after inquiry, and upon representations that the regulations were defective in that respect. In the early days of the Eldorado, in 1897 and 1898, the claims were very rich, and they were not as large as they are to-day. But though they were smaller in size than they are to-day, still representations were often made to us that they ought to be changed, and it was only after a series of changes that they have attained to their present size. I must say to my hon. friend that I have not heard any complaints made as to the present size of the claims, still he desires that some alteration be made in the regulations in this respect and apparently he speaks by authority.

I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Thompson) that I do not know how far it would be possible and proper or that the time has come when we should have a mining law enacted by this parliament. Up to the present time we have not thought it advisable to have mining laws enacted by this parliament because we thought it would be preferable to vest the power of passing such laws in the Governor General in Council, so that changes might be made promptly where changes were found necessary, but now that the condition of the country is more certain and is better known, and now that we have come to what we should call a condition of practical settlement, perhaps it may be advisable indeed that we should have a mining law enacted by this parliament. But, although this is the case, for my part, I have always expected that we would be informed in this matter some time or other by the Yukon Council. I have been expecting—and in this I have been disappointed, I must say,—the government has been expecting that at some time the Yukon Council would be able to send us at least the skeleton of a mining Act which could be taken up by the department here to prepare legislation. If this is not done, I do not know that the government may not profit by the suggestion of my hon. friend of sending a commissioner to interview the miners, to confer with them and report the result of his investigation and make this the basis of legislation say for the next session of parliament. It is a suggestion which is very well worthy of consideration and the government will give it due attention. The next thing to which my hon. friend addressed his remarks is one as to which I must say I hardly think I can agree with him ; it is with regard to what he calls the export duty on gold. The export duty at the present time is simply a royalty. We have given it the form of an export duty for reasons which I shall explain in a few moments but it is with a view of collecting the royalty more easily. First of all should we have or should we not have a royalty on gold ? My hon. friend represented to the government some time ago that the duty should be at least suspended upon all gold produced in the Yukon whether by placer or quartz mining. The government had no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that upon all gold produced by quartz mining there should be a suspension of the duty for ten years, and we have applied a similar exemption also to copper, but I submit to my hon. friend if he has the opinion and will persist in the opinion that there should be a suspension of the duty on gold produced from the placer mining that if there is a principle which is sound in political economy it is that a moderate tax should be put upon the production of the precious metals. This is done in many countries. My hon. friend stated that in the United States there is no such tax. I was not aware of the fact ; I take his word for it, but in most civilized nations of the world there is a small royalty put upon the gold produced. In the province of Nova Scotia which has as was stated by my hon. friend a moment ago a very good system of mining laws, there is a small royalty if I am correctly informed, not only upon placer mining which is not carried on in that province, but upon quartz mining, and for this reason I submit to my hon. friend and I would submit also to the people of the Yukon generally, that in order that they should bear their share of legitimate taxation which all parties have to bear it is not unreasonable that they should submit to a moderate royalty. If the royalty is too large at the present time that is a matter for consideration and debate. In the early days we imposed a royalty of 10 per cent and I agree that this was a very exorbitant tax. At that time, however, I do not think it was felt to be too hard, because the production was so abundant, the gravel was so rich, that I think the people submitted willingly to the tax. After a few years we reduced it by one-half and brought it down to 5 per cent, and we again reduced it to 2½ per cent. Now, as I understood my hon. friend he did not ask that it should be abolished altogether, but that it should be suspended for a certain number of years even if only for three years. Before I would give assent to this suggestion I think it would be worth while considering again as I said a moment ago, and I would like the consideration of my hon. friend and of the people whom he represents if it is not reasonable and fair that they should bear their share of the taxation which of course they have to bear like all others, and having a particular branch of wealth which is very productive indeed, I do not think it would be unfair for them to consider that after all they should bear that tax if it is too heavy at 2½ per cent, I think I would be open to consideration of this, but as at present advised I do not think it is too heavy or too large. My hon. friend suggested that if we are to maintain the export duty it should be applied only to the gold which really goes out of the country and not to the part of the gold which remains in Canada. As to that I do not think I can at all agree with my hon. friend. The export duty is made not for the purpose of discouraging the sale of gold outside the country ; it is simply to facilitate the collection of the tax because in reality it is a tax and nothing else. At the present time, by putting the tax in the form of an export duty the miner is entitled to go to the bank, sell his gold and get a draft from the bank which he can collect in the east after he leaves the Yukon. It seems to me that in the interests of the miner it is far preferable that he should dispose of his gold before he quits the Yukon and put his wealth in the shape of a draft which is safer, more easy to carry and not so susceptible of loss, and which can be cashed by him whenever he comes out into the outside world again where he can use his wealth. For this reason, I think my hon. friend will agree with me that perhaps if there is to be a tax upon gold this is the best way of collecting it. I sympathize to a large degree if not entirely with my hon. friend as to the suggestion which he has made with regard to the disposition of the gold. He suggests that the gold should be bought by the government and not by the banks. For my part, I sympathize altogether with that suggestion. I think the government should buy the gold if it was in a position to buy it, but I must say to my hon. friend that no government can buy gold unless it has a mint to coin it. Gold is a merchandise like everything else and if we buy it we must sell it. When we have a mint we will coin the gold. Every ounce of gold brought from the Yukon will then be brought to Ottawa or to an assay office at Dawson, and I think we should have one here, we should have an assay office in the Yukon. Then the miner can take the gold to the assay office and dispose of it there to the government. Then it would be brought here and be coined, it would go into circulation for the purposes of the country and what is not required for the use of the country would have to be exported abroad, like every other merchandise. This is the way it is done elsewhere, this is the way it must be done here. I must say that I could not exactly realize my hon. friend's meaning when he said that we should buy the gold and give treasury bills for it and then treat it as we treat the savings of the country when they are brought to the savings banks. It seems to be a plain business principle that if we buy gold we must buy it simply as merchandise, and I agree that the government is the proper party to buy that merchandise, because the government, having a mint, is in a position to sell it. Otherwise I do not think it would be practicable.

My hon. friend spoke of the hydraulic concessions which have been given. I may say and say in all frankness that I am ready to believe that in this respect the policy which has been followed by the government has not been satisfactory. The motive was good and if the policy was excellent in itself, if that policy has been carried out as it was intended, it would have been of very great benefit to the Yukon. My hon. friend stated and stated truly that the want, if not the chief want of the Yukon, is water. Water is almost as precious as gold in the Yukon. One thing which the miner must have and without which he cannot prosecute his industry is water. These hydraulic concessions were in every instance for the purpose of promoting water development. Unfortunately these concessions have not produced the results anticipated, and I believe the policy of the government will be henceforth not to give any more concessions. In obedience to the suggestion which was made by my hon. friend when he came here a few months ago we have sent a mining engineer up to the Yukon to make a hydrographic survey, after which we will be able to resolve a new system of disposing of the water there which, we hope, will give more satisfaction to the people of the Yukon than the system which has been pursued in the past.

My hon. friend has made another suggestion for the development of quartz mining which, I am afraid, he will find some difficulty in passing through this House. My hon. friend has suggested that we should have mining machinery and dredging plant made free; that is to say that the miners should be at liberty to import from the United States the mining machinery and dredges which they require for the prosecution of their avocation. We have a law—my hon. friend has alluded to it—which permits at the moment the free introduction of mining machinery of a class not now made in Canada, but the suggestion is that we should confer this privilege not only in respect to machinery that is not made in Canada but also in respect to machinery that is made in Canada. I am afraid that my hon. friend will find very serious opposition to this, because, after all, we have a tariff which has been adopted for purposes which were deemed sufficient by the parliament and people of Canada, and if under this tariff men have been induced to put their money into the production of dredges and into the manufacture of mining machinery, and if they were to be subjected to competition which they did not expect and which deprived them of their market, undoubtedly very serious complications would result and there would probably be very serious representations made to parliament and to the government. I do not think it would be possible to encourage quartz mining in that direction. I am afraid that the miners in the Yukon who, I understand, are now going from placer mining into quartz mining, will have to make the best of their situation, but I believe that quartz producing will be sufficiently remunerative to induce them to put their money into that industry even apart from the advantage which my hon. friend would like them to have.

My hon. friend has also spoken of the extra duty which is imposed upon liquor going into the Yukon of $2 a gallon. If my hon. friend had been here some few years ago he would have been aware of the discussion which took place on that question. There was a movement at that time to prevent liquor from going into the Yukon. There was quite a feeling in the country that the Yukon should be a prohibition country. We did not think it advisable to yield to that request, but we thought that it would at all events be advisable to put a restriction upon the consumption of liquor and it was done in this way. On the whole I think that the Yukon, although it is not a prohibition country, is a temperate country. I do not think there is a greater excess of drinking in the Yukon than there is in any other part of the country. However, we will certainly feel it to be our duty to consider the suggestion that my hon. friend makes that the extra $2 per gallon shall be dropped.

But, the most important part of the observations of my hon. friend to the House this afternoon was what he said about the Yukon Council, and his remarks upon that subject certainly ought to command our best attention. Everybody will agree with my hon. friend that the Yukon, like every other part of Canada, should have representative institutions. But, I ask my hon. friend: Is the government, or is parliament at all derelict in its duty in regard to that matter? It is only eight years since the Yukon was discovered and brought into civilization. Up to that time it was an unknown country. All of a sudden, in 1897, there was a rush of population from all over the world, not only from Canada but from Europe and America, into that distant country. Under great difficulties, in the face of great inconvenience and obstacles, they rushed into that country and things were rather unsettled. My hon. friend will agree with me that it would have been extremely unwise if we had given to this new population coming from all parts of the world representative institutions. Those who came from outside of the British empire would have been voters, but the few who came even from the British empire would have been lost, or would have been mixed with such a large number of the foreign element that it would have been extremely unwise to have given at once an elective council to this new community. We proceeded then to appoint a commissioner giving him an advisory or a legislative council composed of a certain number of officials and one or two elected members. That was sufficient for the time, and I think served the purpose very well. As the country became more settled and as it commenced to have a permanent population the system was changed and the council was constituted of five elected members and five nominated members. At that time it was impossible to do better. My hon. friend has found some fault with the character of the men who are nominated by the government. They are all, as he said, officials of the government. That is very true. At that time, four or five years ago, when this was done, I think it would have been unwise to have had any other members appointed to the council than those who were officials of the government. They had been sent from the east, they were known to the government and therefore, to some extent, the government could rely upon them. But, that time has passed, I am quite prepared to admit. My hon. friend says : I will not say whether or not the government at this moment should make the whole council elective, but if they do not make the whole council elective they should withdraw the present nominated members and appoint members who are absolutely independent of the government. I am quite prepared to consider that. I think it is perhaps a wise suggestion and I am quite prepared to consider the suggestion in favour of making the whole clause elective. That it must be made elective at an early date goes without saying, that it must be made elective almost immediately I am quite prepared to consider also, but I submit that if it should be done to-day it should not have been done before, and that the government has not been remiss in the character which it has given to the institutions of the Yukon. Let me remind my hon. friend of the fact, as I said a moment ago, that it is only since 1897 that there has been a population in the Yukon. It was not five years after the commencement of the movement of population into that Territory that the Yukon was given representation in this House, and nothing is better for the Yukon than to have a representative on the floor of this House who can speak for the people of that country and who can perform the duty which my hon. friend has performed so well to-day of informing us what is wanted by them. My hon. friend says : I speak for the Yukon; I speak for the people who are there and who have sent me here, and I say that you must change the character of the executive and legislative council as it exists to-day, you must give it new life and make it more accessible to the people. You must make it more representative than it is at the present time. I am quite prepared to agree to that. All I have to say in defence of it is that we did not know that it would be advisable to do this at this moment. The government will be bound to consider the observations made by my hon. friend on that subject.

I will not enter to-day upon another question raised by my hon. friend, as to whether or not the Yukon should be annexed to British Columbia. I would not say yes, and I would not say no. Speaking a few days ago on this subject, I stated that there were in our country some territories which in my opinion ought to be annexed to the older provinces. I spoke for instance of the territory of Mackenzie, the territory of Keewatin, the territory of Franklin and the territory of Ungava. So far as we know these districts, they are not of the same character as the Yukon. they cannot have, so far as I know, any agriculture, and where there is no agriculture there can be no permanent population. Therefore these Territories are not likely to have such a character as to induce any government to make them into provinces. But if the Yukon country is of a different character, if we are to have there a permanent population, it has certainly the space to make a province, and therefore we can leave this question for future consideration. My hon. friend does not expect or desire that the Yukon should be made a province at the present time ; but what he wants to be assured in advance is that it shall not be annexed to another province, even if it be the good, fair and rich province of British Columbia. I think I can asure my hon. friend so far, that we have no intention of marrying the Yukon to British Columbia, and if it puts an obstacle to the banns, I may say to him that I have never had that idea in my mind at all. I have only again to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for the manner in which he has introduced this subject, and for the very valuable information which he has given us, and to assure him that the government will deem it their duty to give the subject their very best consideration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in the congratulations which have been extended to the hon. member for the Yukon for the very full and well informed address which he has given to us respecting the conditions in that territory; and I think we may also congratulate ourselves that certain methods which were employed to prevent the return of that gentleman to represent the Yukon proved unsuccessful at the last moment, owing to the determination of the people of the Yukon not to permit such methods to prevail as those which had prevailed there previously. I was a little pained to observe that the Prime Minister did not meet the request for free mining machinery with that generous enthusiasm for free trade which inspired him during his tour of the west in 1894, when he declaimed against protection of any kind as bondage in the same sense that American slavery was a bondage, and declared that he would not rest in his political career until the full measure of free trade as it is in England was obtained for this country. I would have thought, from his utterances of those days, that the Prime Minister would have said to my friend from the Yukon that this was a slight instalment of that free trade towards which we have been tending so rapidly during the last eight or nine years, and that the request of the people of the Yukon in that regard would be granted at the earliest possible moment. However, it was the ill fortune of my hon. friend from the Yukon to find the Prime Minister in a somewhat unsympathetic mood in that regard. Perhaps he may be less obdurate on some future occasion.

I was glad also to receive from the hon. member for the Yukon an assurance, which has already been given in certain official publications of this government, that that 80 per cent of the trade of the Yukon at the present time is in the hands of Canadians. I am glad of this, because we have had from the Prime Minister on many occasions since what is known at the Mackenzie & Mann deal was defeated in the Senate, various lamentations that a certain railway proposal of this government to which I have just referred was not carried through, and that by means of the action of the Senate at that time the trade of this country had been thrown into the hands of the people of the United States. Well, it appears that these apprehensions of the Prime Minister and his colleagues were wholly unfounded; and I was glad that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister was so well advised as to congratulate the hon. member for the Yukon upon a result which the Prime Minister himself said a few years ago would never obtain unless the proposed railway was built. The speech of the hon. member for which he has been congratulated by the Prime Minister is the best possible vindication that could be offered of the action of the Senate of Canada in doing what it did at that time.

In regard to the many matters of interest which have been alluded to in the speech of my hon. friend—and I regret that I was not able to hear all of it, having been called out of the House during a portion of the afternoon—I would like to say just a word or two with regard to only a few of them. In the first place, as to the concessions to which the hon. member made reference, I see no reason why the government should not at once accede to the proposal which he has made, and call upon the men who have obtained concessions of gold mining territory in the Yukon, to fulfil the conditions upon which they obtained those areas. Is there any possible reason why that should not be done? We had some discussion on these matters a few years ago, the result of which was that a certain commission was sent by this government to investigate the position of affairs with regard to the Treadgold concession and with regard to concessions generally. Representations of a very strong character had been made by the miners of the Yukon at that time, charging not only unwisdom in the making of those concessions, but in some cases at least actual fraud. Well, the government propose to issue a commission, taking good care to exclude from the terms of that commission any opportunity to the commissioners to investigate those charges. They were carefully eliminated, after and in spite of debate on this House before that commission was sent forward. The commission did go forward and their report was delayed for a very long time. We urged the government to bring down the report in order that it might be debated, and eventually a certain member of the administration who has a seat in another House stated that the report would not be brought down at all. His colleagues did not concur in that view. The report was brought down after an announcement had first been made in the public press that the commission was to be cancelled, and it was cancelled. Well, there are other concessions in the Yukon, and, so far as I am able to gather from the remarks of the hon. member, the present position of affairs permits these areas to be held for future development, and the government is not calling upon those who hold them to fulfil the conditions which are essential to the proper development of that country. That is a condition of affairs which should not be permitted for a single moment. The result of permitting that to continue is that these lands are held for the benefit of men who may not intend to develop them at all, but may intend to hold them in order to obtain in the future that increment of profit which will arise from the efforts of the ordinary miners in the Yukon, and which will make those properties very much more valuable than they are at present.

My hon. friend from the Yukon referred, I think, to the representation fee?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, but not adversely.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Some two years ago we pointed out on this side that while the ordinary miner was bound to pay his representation fee, that condition did not prevail in respect to some of these concessions. It did not prevail with regard to the Treadgold concession, which was a matter we then discussed and criticised. If that condition still continues it is a subject of grave criticism, because gentlemen obtaining these large concessions should not be placed in any better position in that regard than the ordinary miner.

With regard to the necessity of stable laws and wise regulations, I do not think that the Prime Minister answered the argument of my hon. friend. In Nova Scotia the regulations, as he had been informed by the Prime Minister of that province, were made after careful consultation between those representing the mining interests and the officials of the government; and consequently these mining laws and regulations are not only advantageous to the province, but satisfactory to the miner and tend to the development and not to the stagnation, of the mining industry. The right hon. gentleman referred to this as if it were a mere question of time, and emphasized the necessity of a long time for the purpose of accomplishing these desired reforms. But the point emphasized by the member for the Yukon was that these regulations never could be made satisfactory until the government took into its confidence the mining men in that country and discussed with them the nature and character of the regulations which it would be wisest to adopt. The right hon. the First Minister did not meet that point, and that is a point which has been emphasized in this House over and over again. Over and over again we have pointed out that these Orders in Council and regulations were devised only after discussion with one or two government officials in that country—men not absolutely in touch with the mining interests and frequently in antagonism and opposition to those interests. In a country such as that, situated so far from Ottawa, you should call these mining men into a conference and proceed exactly along the same lines as those upon which the government of the province of Nova Scotia proceeded. Then, after proper conference, discussion and consideration, you could put the laws in such a condition that those who desire to invest capital will not only be satisfied with them, but also with the permanency of the laws and regulations thus made. Two years ago, when the then Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) brought down certain amendments to the law under which these regulations are made, we insisted upon one measure, that at least gave a certain publicity to the regulations, which, before that, had been altered, amended and renewed, from time to time, without the knowledge of parliament or any one except the officials of the department and the persons affected by them in the Yukon. We urged upon the Minister of the Interior of that day that every regulation and every amendment to a regulation should be brought down and laid on the table of parliament within thirty days after the beginning of the next session subsequent to its enactment. That has been done. We also obtained the consent of the government to another measure, namely, that unless parliament, by resolution of both branches of the legislature, should confirm those regulations and amendments to regulations, they would become absolutely inoperative after the close of the then session.

There are one or two other matters to which I wish to refer. There is the question of the elective council. So far as the rights of self-government in that country are concerned, the government have proceeded very much along the same grudging line as did the governments of sixty or seventy years ago. All our provinces have gone through the same experience as that through which the Yukon has been passing the last four years. First, they had government by a council not responsible to the people in any way. Then, after a time, a certain council was established, partly elective and partly appointed, with the government always taking care to retain in its own hands the absolute control. In the past my right hon. friend was a follower of the school of those who brought about the change in those conditions and entrusted to the people full representative institutions. Why is it that to-day my right hon. friend seeks to carry out exactly the same principles in the Yukon as those which were successfully fought against and overcome by the men of sixty or seventy years ago? Why pretend to give something to the Yukon, when in reality you give nothing? You had, in the first place, a council composed of men appointed by the Dominion administration who were bound to fulfil its will under pain of dismissal. When the people of the Yukon complained, they got a stone where they demanded bread. They were given the right to elect a certain number of members to the council, but this government retained in its hands the absolute control, so that if every elected member of that council was absolutely opposed to the policy of the Dominion government regarding some particular matter, this government could control the council by means of an equal number of men appointed by the government as members of that council and the casting vote of the chairman. That simply meant that the people of the Yukon were being mocked at. My hon. friend who spoke this afternoon demonstrated to the satisfaction of this House that these conditions do exist, and I see no possible ground for withholding any longer the right of self-government from the people of the Yukon, such as was demanded by their representative this afternoon. The Prime Minister, indeed, acknowledges that. But he says that the time has only come at this moment. I think the time came three or four years ago. And I venture to think that there would have been less dissatisfaction, less scandal, better administration in the Yukon, if that which was demanded by these people four or five years ago, if I am not mistaken, had been conceded to them at that time.

I was not aware that the subject was to be discussed this afternoon, or I might have extended my remarks to some of the other subjects adverted to by the hon. member for Yukon Territory. I can only say, in conclusion, that I am very glad we have on the floor of the House the gentleman who in so forcible, yet so temperate and moderate a speech, has presented the condition of that portion of Canada to the attention of the government. And, in congratulating him on the speech which he has made I desire also to express the earnest hope that the government will, at the earliest possible moment, take into favourable consideration the matters to which that hon. gentleman has called attention.

Hon. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa). The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has made a statement of facts—unwittingly I have no doubt—which is entirely disproved by the evidence. He stated that in the commission issued to Judge Britton to investigate certain matters of the Yukon the government had carefully omitted any instructions to inquire into questions of fraud——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is my recollection.

Mr. BELCOURT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) is quite mistaken. I would refer him to the commission as printed in the return included in the report of Judge Britton himself as brought down in return to an order of this House dated March 17, 1904. Judge Britton says :

> The undersigned commissioner and Benjamin Taylor A. Bell were appointed by letters patent under the great seal, dated 30th day of July, 1903, to inquire into and report upon certain matters and things more particularly mentioned and set out in certain Orders in Council bearing date respectively the 29th day of May and the 30th day of June, 1903.
> These Orders in Council state——

The sections are set out in order, and section 10 is as follows :

> 10. That it has been alleged that the hydraulic claims granted in pursuance of the regulations for the granting of hydraulic claims in the Yukon Territory have been procured by fraud and misrepresentation, and that the material conditions of the leases, have not been observed, thereby rendering the same liable to cancellation.

I have only had time to look at one or two pages of the report with regard to this point, but I find that, at page 16, in dealing with the hydraulic concessions generally, Mr. Justice Britton says, among other things :

> If there has been shown any fraud or misrepresentation by reason of which a concession has been granted, my commission enables me to deal with such. It may be taken for granted that if a hydraulic concession is only of such a mining location as is contemplated by the regulation and if that location is worked as such, it must necessarily be beneficial to the mining industry of the Yukon Territory——

And so on. Dealing with the various concessions separately under different heading, Mr. Justice Britton reports, as will be seen at page 17 :

> Within the period set out in the public notice given by the commission, protests were filed against the following hydraulic mining leases, and representations were made that these leases had been obtained by fraud or misrepresentation on behalf of the applicants, and that the holders thereof had failed to comply with the requirements of the leases of such concessions.

Then, dealing with the Matson concession, he says page 19 :

> It is of considerable importance in dealing with the question of fraud and misrepresentation that :
> 1. The application was made before the regulation ; and
> 2. That everything which could possibly be ascertained by the applicants was supposed to be known by Mr. Ogilvie and Mr. Ogilvie speaks in his letter of 16th of September, 1899, of some of those located as merely speculators. See also his letter of 11th November, 1899.
> In the face of what had been done by the holders and accepted by the department, and sentation on behalf of the applicants, and that the conditions of the lease have not been complied with.

And in dealing with the Doyle concession and the Bronson and Ray concession he refers to the question of fraud :

> In the absence of evidence contradicting Mr. Ogilive, commissioner of the territory, or evidence showing bad faith on his part, fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the applicants cannot be found.

I merely rose to call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) to a very serious error on his part, imputing to the government something which, I am sure, he would not have imputed to them had he correctly remembered the facts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend (Mr. Belcourt) has not convinced me. I remember distinctly the debate that took place in the House and the controversy between the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) and myself in regard to the appointment. The Postmsater General made a speech in which he announced that the commission would be issued, and in that speech said that it would be given the widest terms. I do not know the terms in which it was issued—

Mr. BELCOURT. I have just read them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But the proposal which the Postmaster General brought down to the House, and which, I have the right to assume, covered the terms in which it would be issued, was very much narrower than the speech which he made, and we had a prolonged debate as to the terms of the commission, in which we urged that it should be made wider. I have sent for 'Hansard,' and I think I can satisfy my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) that my remarks of a few moments ago were not at all out of place in view of what occurred on that occasion.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions—a line or lines of steamers to run between St. John, Halifax and London, $40,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This service is now performed by two lines, the Canadian Pacific and the Furness lines. The contract was entered into in November last and expired on the 31st of May. We have asked for other tenders, the time allowed for tendering to end in July next.

Mr. DANIEL. Do I understand that tenders have been asked for, and the time not yet elapsed ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes. The service is in operation now, and was last winter. We have asked for more tenders to be received in the month of July.

A line or lines of steamers to run between St. John and Halifax, or either, and the West Indies and South America, $80,700.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is an old subsidy. Under the present subsidy there are two lines of steamers which are subventioned. One subsidy for which we pay $65,000, now goes to Messrs. Pickford & Black, that is the subsidy for a service between St. John and Halifax and a number of islands in the West Indies, among which are Bermuda, St. Kitts, Antigua, Dominica, St. Vincent, Grenada, St. Lucia and Trinidad. The imperial government also pay them a similar sum of $65,000. Besides, we pay Pickford & Black $15,000 as a subsidy for a direct service between St. John and Halifax and St. Domingo. That subsidy has expired, we have asked for tenders, and have received a tender from Pickford & Black. But they have asked for certain modifications in the service, dispensing them from calling at certain islands, and as the imperial government is equally interested in the service, paying one-half, we are now in correspondence with them with regard to the matter.

Mr. AMES. Would the minister be willing to let this item stand over ? Considerable correspondence has been exchanged between various boards of trade on this matter. I did not anticipate it coming up to-night, and have not the correspondence with me.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly.

Steam communication between a port or ports in Prince Edward Island and a port or ports in Great Britain, $7,000.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. When that matter was up before, the minister promised to give some information with regard to the trips made by one of these steamers.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is the information which is furnished me by the minister.

The vote for 1903-4 for this service was $7,000, though a contract was in force with Messrs. Furness, Withy & Company, for $5,000. Of this, only $2,500 was expended. Two half trips were made in the fall of 1903, that is to say, in October, 1903, and November 28th. 1903. There was some disarrangement of the dates of sailing, owing to disaster to the 'Manchester Trader,' in the St. Lawrence. It was found that the 'Manchester Trader' would be unable to take up her sailing, and no other steamer being available, Messrs. Furness, Withy & Company, were permitted to have the 'Manchester Trader' call at Charlottetown on the Montreal service ; and it was agreed that the 'Manchester Trader' thus calling at Charlottetown should only be entitled to claim for half a trip. When the second call had to be made, the repairs to the 'Manchester Trader' were not then completed, and the department permitted the 'Manchester Engineer' to call on the voyage from Montreal, under the same conditions, that is to say, that the call at Charlottetown should be considered half a trip.

Mr. ALEXANDER MARTIN. I would like to say with regard to this item, that the service so far as it relates to Prince Edward Island is not very satisfactory. We have in our province two large articles of export, cheese and butter. At present, cheese sold for Great Britain has to go first to Montreal ; so with butter in many cases, eggs and ham and pork, they go to Montreal, where they have to be transhipped to Great Britain. Any one can see how the farmer in Prince Edward Island is handicapped in the price which he receives for these articles compared with prices received in other parts of Canada. The trips these boats make are very irregular, they call at no stated times. There is no definite time for them to sail. Sometimes they sail on the date agreed upon, and sometimes they do not. Farmers in the island are at a loss, and shippers are at a loss, to know when to prepare their cargoes for these boats. At present people have first to ship their cheese up to Montreal and then tranship it to Great Britain, or else send it to Halifax, which involves a very large expense, three transhipments, and three short hauls over railways at a very heavy railway rate, and thence to Great Britain. The apple trade with Great Britain in the fall of the year is handicapped in the same way. I would like if the government would insist upon these boats sailing at stated days in the season, which would be advertised three or four months ahead, so that the farmers and shippers would know beforehand what accommodation they were to receive, and when to bring their cargoes to the place of shipment. Sometimes when the ship does call, the shippers not knowing ahead when she would call, are not ready with their freight. But if these trips were made regularly and at stated times, the people would be relieved of a great deal of difficulty which they now suffer.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In view of the information which I have in my hands, I do not think the criticism of the hon. gentleman applies, because the contract stipulates absolutely at what times the trips are to be made. The terms are two complete round voyages, the first trip to be made in the month of October, and the second trip prior to the 15th of December. So the people of Prince Edward Island can know that in the month of October next this ship, 'The Manchester Trader' will call at Charlottetown, and then some month or six weeks afterwards it will call again. So there is no necessity of giving any notice in advance when the ship will call, because it is stipulated in the contract, and the subsidy cannot be earned unless the ship calls at Charlottetown at those stated periods. Let my hon. friend tell the people of Prince Edward Island that the subvention cannot be earned unless this ship calls at Charlottetown at the times mentioned in the contract.

Mr. A. MARTIN. All I know is what has happened there before and what may happen there again. Although the sailings of these vessels are advertised and are in the contract I know from my own experience in shipping in the province that very often when these days arrived the vessels were not there, and I remember some years ago when I was in this House, that in the spring of the year it was given out that the steamer was to call at the province and a great many farmers fattened their cattle for export to Great Britain, but when the time arrived, there was no boat, no boat called at the province to its great detriment. The same thing happened only a few years ago and I think that while two trips a year may be all right—I suppose that would supply the province with some little accommodation—I think a trip in the spring of the year if it could be arranged would be of great advantage to the farmers for a great many feed their stock during the winter and ship it in the spring, and at present they have to take the roundabout way of first shipping them to Halifax and re-shipping them from there afterwards. However, perhaps after this more regular trips may be made; I am only speaking of what has happened before and what I hope may not happen again.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This subsidy for which we are now asking is for only two trips in October and December. No provision is made in these estimates for any more trips than that.

Mr. A. MARTIN. How much is the contract?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. $2,500.

Mr. A. MARTIN. That would be only $5,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. $5,000, yes.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Then there is $2,000 more?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, I am informed by the deputy that it is hoped the service can be improved and that perhaps one or more additional trips can be provided for but at present the contract is only $5,000 for two trips. We have not been able to get anything better but we hope we can get some company to earn the $7,000 we offer.

Mr. A. MARTIN. That is the very complaint I am making, the very great uncertainty of the service. There may be three trips or there may be only two trips, that it creates the uncertainty which causes the uncertainty of freight also.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At the present time we have settled for only two trips under the arrangement, but we hope to perfect this arrangement and to provide for two or more additional trips. At present all we can be certain of is the two trips.

Mr. LEFURGEY. My hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. A. Martin) was right in his statement that on several occasions there has been a great deal of uncertainty in the sailing of these boats. I have myself known occasions when the people have been at a loss to know when if at all they were going to have a boat. I would suggest now that the two trips are certain and definite and as the government has in view the getting of another steamer for a spring trip, the arrangement should be made at least some months ahead or the people would not be in a position to know whether they are to have the spring trips or not. I would like to ask how the trips are published, in what manner the shippers become cognizant when the sailings are to be made in October and possibly six months later.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that a part of the terms of the contract is that there is to be an advertisement published 20 days in advance of the exact date at which the boat will be at Charlottetown.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Is there any authority at Charlottetown to publish this to the shippers on the island ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The notification is sent to the newspapers by the agent of the company.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I would urge on the Prime Minister that the rates of freight charged by these steamers should be the same as can be obtained at Montreal, St. John or Halifax.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is part of the contract.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. And that should be indicated in the contract ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. And there should be no doubt about it. During the last few years when these steamers went down there they charged whatever they felt like charging, and there is no rule to guide the steamer or shippers. I think it should be definitely stated and the public should know what the rates of freight are which these steamers are permitted to charge to shippers.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear. That is quite reasonable, and I am very glad to be able to inform my hon. friend that it is part of the contract that the freight rates are not to be greater between the ports mentioned than the current rates between Montreal and Manchester. There are to be the same rates between Prince Edward Island and Manchester as between Montreal and Manchester.

Winter navigation between Quebec and St. Lawrence harbours, down to Murray bay and River Ouelle, $12,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may say we have no contract. We have not been able to find any steamer to provide that service, but we are taking the appropriation in the hope that we may find a steamer this year.

Steam service between Victoria, Vancouver, way ports and Skagway, $12,500.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a somewhat important service. It is altogether performed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It is really two services, the particulars being as follows :

Route A.—Victoria, Vancouver and Skagway four complete round trips in June, July, August, September and October, three complete round trips during March, April and May, two complete round trips during May, November, December, January and February.

Route B.—Victoria, Vancouver, Naas Harbour and Skidegate, calling at way ports 2 round trips each month.

Route C.—Victoria and Ahousset Quatsino and Cape Scott and way ports, 4 round trips from April to September, inclusive as follows : 2 from Victoria to Ahousset, 1 to Ahousset and Quatsino and Cape Scott.

During remaining months 3 round trips from Victoria to Ahousset one to be continued to Cape Scott calling at way ports.

Steam communication between Prince Edward Island, Cape Breton and Newfoundland, $8,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Might I ask for the ports of call for this service in Prince Edward Island ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have a contract with Robert J. Leslie, of Halifax, who has two steamers, the 'Amelia'—300 tons capacity with passenger accommodation for twenty-five first-class passengers and 100 second-class passengers, and the 'Helen May Butler' with a capacity of about 65 tons and with adequate passenger accommodation. The 'Amelia' will sail from Charlottetown to Placentia, Newfoundland, calling both ways at Pictou, Souris, Cheticamp, North Sydney and Sydney with the option of calling at St. Pierre and Miquelon, and to omit the call at Souris on the return voyage from Placentia to Charlottetown. The 'Helen May Butler' will run a subsidiary service from and to Bridgetown and Cardigan Bridge, Prince Edward Island, calling at the public wharfs on both sides of the Grand and Cardigan rivers and connecting at Pictou with the 'Amelia.' There will be a regular semi-monthly service between the aforementioned ports.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to ask the hon. First Minister if there was not a request from the board of trade or from some other authority on the island asking that these steamers call at Summerside also? Summerside is one of the principal shipping ports off Prince Edward Island. In the schedule of these boats it is left out altogether.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am informed that there is no recollection of such a representation being made to the government from Summerside. I cannot say positively that there was none made, but the deputy informs me that he has no recollection of it.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Is it not a fact that one of these boats was lost or got into trouble lately?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, one of these boats has got into trouble. We have not yet got full details.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Is the department taking any steps to have her replaced?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, the contractors are doing their best to replace the boat; otherwise, they cannot earn their subsidy.

Mr. A. MARTIN. In these estimates I observe that there is provision for a subsidized service between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and the West Indies. Between Prince Edward Island and the West Indies there formerly existed a large trade, but that trade has been gradually decreasing on account of the large subsidies to services from both Halifax and St. John and because there have been no subsidized boats running between the West Indies and the province of Prince Edward Island. It is well known that the fisheries of Prince Edward Island constitute a most valuable industry. In codfish and other articles that province has a large production. It is a hardship to the province that while the provinces around it have the benefit of cheap transportation by subsidized boats, Prince Edward Island has to depend on its own resources for the transportation of its products. I understand there has been a proposition to subsidize a line of boats from Montreal to the West Indies. I would suggest to the right hon. First Minister that if that should materialize, Charlottetown be made a port of call between Montreal and the West Indies in order to give the province of Prince Edward Island the means of carrying on trade with the West Indies, which I am sure, would increase very largely if there was a boat calling at that port.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Alex. Martin) that we have in contemplation at the present time a service between Montreal, Cuba and Mexico. I would not be too sanguine or give too much hope to my hon. friend, but if that service comes into operation, if we succeed in getting somebody to undertake it as we want to, we contemplate having the vessels call at Charlottetown.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. When this item was before the committee on a former occasion, I entered my protest against it. It was pointed out to me, in answer to some observations I made, that this service was to call at certain ports in my own constituency, and that one of the ports was Glace bay. Upon the assurance that the present service was to make Glace bay a port of call, I withdrew for the moment any opposition to it. I find, however, that, whereas on a former occasion the itinerary included Glace bay, the list as read to-night does not include Glace bay. I would like to ascertain how it is that Glace bay has been dropped out of the list of ports at which this service is to call.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand the contractors say that they could not call at Glace bay.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. There is a very simple and a very short answer to the contractor. I am sure the contractor would not undertake to give me that answer for the simple reason that while he might undertake to fool the department he would scarcely undertake to fool anybody who is familiar with the situation. I think that in view of the fact that representations were made to the effect that this service was to make Glace bay a port of call there should be some better explanation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will take a note of it and see what we can do.

For services of wrecking plant on the St. Lawrence for the year ending June 30, 1906, $10.000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I beg to move to drop that vote. This has been transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Item dropped.

Steamboat service between Canada and New Zealand, $50,000.

Mr. MONK. We will require some explanation as to that. That is a new service.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have at the present time a growing trade with New Zealand. We have extended to them the preference which we give to British colonies and they have extended to us their preference. There is a growing trade and we have taken this appropriation in the endeavour to have a contract entered into, but we have not yet made any arangement.

Amount authorized by statute, $73,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In regard to this item there is an error which I want to correct. The appropriation last year was $224,666.66. This year the appropriation that we ask is only $73,000. This is an error. There was an appropriation of $73,000 last year for the service which we had with Japan. This year we have made an appropriation for a steamship service with France under statute which will cost $133,333, so that in reality the decrease is not, as it is stated there, $151,666.66, but only $18,333. In other words, what we propose to expend this year out of this amount of $224,000, which is authorized by statute, is as follows: $73,000 for the service between Canada and Japan and $133,000 for the service between Canada and France.

Mr. MONK. Is there a contract signed for the service with France?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes; the contract was signed in the month of February last, and it is to commence with the opening of navigation in 1905, and to expire at the opening of navigation in 1908. The contractors are the well-known firm of H. & A. Allan. The steamships to be placed on this line are the 'Laurentian' (4,522 tons), the 'Pomeranian' (4,258 tons), the 'Sardinian' (4,349 tons) and the 'Buenos Ayrean' (4,164 tons). The minimum speed is to be not less than 10 knots when loaded at sea. The terminal points are Montreal or Quebec during the season of navigation on the St. Lawrence, and Halifax or St. John during the season of closed navigation. The ports of call in France are Cherbourg or Havre at the contractors' option. Each east-bound trip may be extended at the contractors' option to a port or ports in Great Britain, but the first port of call after leaving Canada shall be a French port and the last port of departure for Canada shall be a port in France. The number of round voyages from France to Canada and return shall be not less than eighteen yearly; that is to say, during the months of May and November, inclusive, in each year there shall be run not less than two full round voyages each month; and during the remaining months, from December to April, inclusive, in each year, the remaining voyages shall be performed. The number of round voyages from France to Canada may be increased to twenty-four per annum. The subsidy stipulated is $100,000 for eighteen voyages or $133,333.33 for twenty-four voyages. The vessels are to be fitted with such amount of cold storage accommodation and under such regulations as the minister may require, and thereafter during the continuance of the contract this is to be at all times subject to the approval of the minister. The minister may at any time revise the freight rates to be charged on all articles or classes of goods. In no case shall any discrimination be made against Canadian merchants or shippers, who shall always have preference. The steamers are also to carry mails.

Mr. DANIEL. I presume the terminal points on this side of the Atlantic are left to the option of the steamship company?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

2. If any sale or sales of timber limits have been made by the Department of the Interior since 1st October, 1904, in Manitoba or the Northwest Territories, (a) where are such timber limits situated; (b) what extent of territory does each such timber limit comprise; (c) what is the name of each purchaser; (d) what is the amount of the consideration or purchase money for each such sale; (e) what were the sales made by public competition, and what were the sales made by the minister or by officials of the department?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I find that it will take some time to prepare the information asked for. It is now being got ready and will be laid on the table of the House as soon as completed.

COLONIAL CONFERENCE.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to call the attention of the Prime Minister to a despatch which appeared in the Montreal 'Star' of last evening from London, to the following effect:

London, June 7.—It is announced to-day in the most positive fashion in the Radical papers that Laurier, replying to Lyttelton's communications re the next colonial conference has 'firmly refused to take part in any tariff discussion until the opinion of this country has been ascertained at a general election.' The Leeds 'Mercury,' which is bitterly anti-Chamberlainite, rejoices over the announcement, and says that Laurier and other colonial ministers 'see through the Chamberlainite scheme and fully appreciate the difference between the pinch-beck imperialism of the protectionists and the pure gold of disinterested sentiment, of which Rosebery is the leading exponent.'

Official circles here are very reticent and will not confirm Laurier's alleged refusal, but it can be confidently stated that if the Canadian Prime Minister has refused, the conference of 1906 will not be held.

If a Liberal ministry is returned here at the next general election, their present intention is to let the conference meet in the usual course with a clear prior announcement, however, that all schemes for a preference involving a British tariff against the foreigner are impossible.

It is noteworthy that in the second report of Mr. Chamberlain's tariff commission respecting the cotton industry issued yesterday, great stress is laid on the fact that an equitable Anglo-colonial scheme of preference is essential to the future stability of British trade and the proper expansion of imperial resources.

WINDERMERE.

I desire to ask the Prime Minister whether he has any information to give to the House upon the matter set forth in this telegram, and especially whether or not the alleged policy of the Liberal party in Great Britain referred to in this telegram, if they should be returned to power in the next general election, would be likely to call into active exercise the declaration made by the members of this government, who attended the colonial conference, and renewed by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech of two years ago, when it was declared in effect that unless some preference to Canadian products should be granted in the markets of Great Britain and Ireland this government would hold itself at liberty and, in fact, would propose to withdraw the preference which has already been given to certain British products in our markets.

HALF-BREED SCRIP.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask for a little more information with reference to land scrip in addition to the small amount which has already been applied for. I would like to get all Orders in Council respecting scrip and grants thereof, either money or land, to half-breeds in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories since February 15, 1903. There is a report which brings the record up to that date, but I wish the Orders in Council which bring the record down from that date. Then I want the reports of Coté and McLeod, who were appointed commissioners for settling the half-breed claims under Order in Council of March 2, 1900, and what disposition, if any, has been made of the claims reported on by them. There were two commissions. This was for Saskatchewan. I find the reports of the other commission for Alberta and Assiniboia; but I can find no trace of any report from Coté and McLeod on the results of their work. Then I would like a return of the cases dealt with under Order in Council of the 20th of March, 1897, all claims for half-breed children's scrip, giving the applicants, assignees, locatees, patentees, and all correspondence in respect thereof. There is a reference in McKenna's report of 1901, in which he said that he had thirty reserved claims sent to him by Coté and McLeod, and of these he had allowed three, disallowed nine and reserved the other eighteen. I would like to trace what became of these disallowed and reserved. I would like also a complete set of the forms and instructions in use in the department in regard to applications for scrip, its transfer and location, including the forms of receipts for the different kinds of scrip. There are four or five or six different forms or scrip issued. I see by the papers, and I would like the printed form of each of these, together with the form of application. This is only a small Bill, and will not take a great deal of time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will endeavour to satisfy my hon. friend, but when he says that it would take only a short time, I am not so sure of that. His appetite is like that of the Frenchman, it grows by eating; the more he has the more he wants.

Mr. FOSTER. I have got that from association with my right hon. friend and imitation, they say, is the sincerest form of flattery.

THE BUDGET SPEECH.

Mr. FOSTER. Before sitting down, I would like to ask the Finance Minister if by any chance he has made up his mind whether he will give a budget speech this year or not; and if so, when? Is he waiting until all the estimates, railway subsidies and everything else are through?

Mr. FIELDING. The country is getting along so happily, that if by chance we missed the budget speech, I think the country would still prosper. I cannot think we are dependent for the prosperity of the country on the budget speech, although budget speeches do sometimes help that prosperity. I think an understanding was reached some time ago that the budget would not be brought on until the Northwest Bills were disposed of. I hope that at an early day we shall dispose of whatever blocks the way, and then the budget will come on.

THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. BERGERON. I desire to ask the Minister of Finance when we may expect a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee? Last week we had a meeting, which was postponed for lack of a quorum, and it was then understood that we would have a meeting to-day. I understand that my hon. friend the Finance Minister has been absent. Now that he is back, would he be kind enough to say when we shall have a meeting of the committee?

Mr. FIELDING. I came to-day expecting to find a meeting, and I came up this morning at some inconvenience to myself to find that there was none. So many members are absent that we cannot apparently have a full meeting at present; but I think we should have a meeting next week.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend understands that the chairman is away. He said last week that he would not be here to-day, and I thought my hon. friend might be in a position to authorize the calling of a meeting in the chairman's absence.

Mr. FIELDING. As a matter of courtesy I have sometimes been consulted, but the chairman would be quite free to modify the arrangements. I am reminded by one of my hon. friends that the chairman will be here on Monday, and I think a meeting should then be called immediately.

THE TREADGOLD CONCESSION INQUIRY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to refer to a difference of opinion which I had yesterday with my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) as to a matter connected with the Treadgold Commission of 1903. The instructions to which I referred in speaking yesterday are to be found on pages 4486 and 4487 of 'Hansard' of 1903. There was not only a debate upon the character of the instruction. But Mr. T. Chase Casgrain, then the member for Montmorency, moved a resolution in regard to them; and in the second last paragraph of the resolution attention is specially called to the fact that the provision which the opposition thought should be inserted in those instructions had not been inserted. It is possible that some further instructions were sent to the commissioners afterwards, because I observe, in the pamphlet which the hon. gentleman was good enough to hand to me, reference to an Order in Council of July 30.

Mr. BELCOURT. A return to the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That Order in Council was never before the House. The instructions I referred to were those set forth in the speech of Mr. Casgrain.

Mr. BELCOURT. I understood the hon. leader of the opposition to say distinctly yesterday afternoon that the government had refused to instruct the commissioners to inquire into the question of fraud and misrepresentation in the obtaining of the concessions. I called my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the return brought down and printed and distributed among the members of this House for some time, showed clearly that the instructions contained in paragraph 10 were distinct and clear instructions to the commissioners to investigate questions of fraud and misrepresentation, and I pointed out to my hon. friend, that the judge, in various parts of his report, had referred to those instructions, and had stated distinctly when the commission opened, that he was empowered to investigate questions of fraud and misrepresentation. I pointed out also that he had heard evidence in several cases tending to prove or to disprove that there had been fraud and misrepresentation. I pointed out that in every one of the cases referred to him in which charges were made, the judge reported that no fraud or misrepresentation had been proved. So I think the hon. gentleman owes it to the House to say that he was mistaken when he said that it is not fair on his part to say that there were no such instructions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I repeat again that the instructions which were brought down and in respect to which the debate took place in this House, did not contain any such instructions to the commissioners.

Mr. BELCOURT. That was not my hon. friend's statement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I say further than that, that the Postmaster General, upon the resolution moved by the hon. member for Montmorency, distinctly said that the government would not insert any such instructions to the commissioners. Not only that, but a division was taken on the resolution, and the members of the government, and my. hon. friend himself, voted that no such instructions should be inserted. The words of the resolution which was moved by the hon. member for Montmorency were these:

> This House regrets that by the instructions given to the commissioners to be appointed to investigate this subject and which were laid on the table of the House on the 8th of June instant, the proposed investigation is limited to the question as to whether the grant or concession to A. N. C. Treadgold and his associates of the 21st April, 1902, and other similar concessions are likely to be beneficial or injurious to the mining interests of the Yukon Territory.

That was the shape in which the instructions were presented to the House, and upon which the division was taken, and it was to that I referred in my remarks of yesterday.

Mr. BELCOURT. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I want to say that I was clearly within my right in calling the attention of the House last night to the fact that my hon. friend's explanation was not satisfactory to me if it was to other members of the House. My hon. friend stated distinctly that the government had refused to instruct the commissioners to investigate the question of fraud and misrepresentation in connection with these concessions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So they did on that occasion and changed their minds afterwards.

Mr. BELCOURT. I say that these were not the instructions of the government. The instructions were distinctly and clearly to investigate all questions of fraud and misrepresentation and I have proved that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend say that any such instructions as those he has just mentioned are contained in the instructions laid on the table?

Mr. BELCOURT. I say that the return—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not talking about the return but about the instruction.

Mr. BELCOURT. I say that the return laid on the table of this House, and which has been for months in the possession of hon. members, shows clearly that these instructions were given to the commissioners, and that the commissioners had acted upon them in every case, and reported in every instance that there was no fraud or misrepresentation in connection with these concessions. It is due therefore to the House that my hon. friend should say he was mistaken.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not mistaken. I have seen no instructions other than those to which I have referred, and I am not aware that there were any others laid on the table. The instructions which were laid on the table, and in respect of which this motion was moved, are instructions which limited the investigation to the matters to which I have referred. Upon the resolution, a vote was taken and my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) voted against any extension of those instructions to the commissioners—a circumstance which I think he should have remembered.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST.

House in committee on Bill (No. 69) to establish and provide for the government of the province of Alberta.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition informed me some time ago that he wanted to make some observations with regard to clause 16.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wish to make a few observations with regard to the supposed difference between section 16, No. 1—by which I shall designate the section as at first introduced—and section No. 2, by which I shall designate the section as now proposed by the government. In one or two speeches recently delivered by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) he remarked that I had been a long time coming to a conclusion that there is no difference between the two sections. My hon. friend was somewhat forgetful in making that statement, because he sat in the House and followed me in debate on the 22nd March, when I expressed the opinion that the two were the same in principle, were practically the same in detail, and certainly the same in substance. No doubt my hon. friend forgot that although he immediately followed me in debate and although the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), who spoke a day or two afterwards, controverted very strongly the view I had expressed.

The supposed difference between these two sections has been discussed by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The argument of the Prime Minister in favour of the amended section as contrasted with the original section was this: He said that the Act of 1875, section 11, was restricted in its operation by an ordinance, and that Sir John Thompson, who was then Minister of Justice, would have disallowed that ordinance in 1890 except that such disallowance would bring into effect another ordinance, the time for disallowing which had expired, and the conclusion of the First Minister, based upon this premise was that, under these circumstances, to bring into operation the Act of 1875 purely and simply would create confusion. I am not able to follow the argument of the Prime Minister in that regard for several reasons. The Act of 1875 has been variously called a sacred compact, a constitutional right, a solemn promise; and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick), in dealing with it on the 3rd May, said:

> Dealing now with section 16, I would like to say that the second paragraph of that section was added—although in my opinion unnecessarily—because it was not thought advisable to re-enact the provisions of section 11 of the Act of 1875. This is for the purpose of making it quite clear that this parliament was merely carrying out a solemn promise already made. That very paragraph was intended to give legislative sanction to the conditions now existing with respect to grants in aid of education.

And further on he said:

> What are we doing? I say that in the future history of our legislation and in the records of this parliament, it would be a serious reflection upon the people of the Dominion if the solemn promises made in 1875, repeated in 1880, and oft repeated since, were not carried out.

I can hardly understand the argument of my right hon. friend when he suggests that a solemn promise of that character is likely to create confusion. It seems to me that the carrying out of a solemn promise, if it is as distinct and explicit as has been suggested, could not possibly cause any confusion.

The Prime Minister is easily answered. In the first place the Act of 1875 could not be restricted by an ordinance. I take issue with him there, and I base my argument in that regard upon very good authority, namely, the authority in the first place of Sir John Thompson himself, and in the second place that of the Minister of Justice of to-day. Sir John Thompson, in dealing with this question in his report of the 10th January, 1890, said this:

> The ordinance respecting schools does not contain the provision that the statute requires it to contain, but merely contains the provision that the minority may establish a separate school in an organized public school district, thus placing the minority at the mercy of the majority, and only giving the minority the right to establish a separate school, if the majority think proper to organize a public school. It is necessary to point out that the provisions of the Northwest Territories Act, before cited, cannot be abridged by the ordinance and must be considered as still in force, notwithstanding the restrictive terms of the ordinance. In so far as it is attempted by the ordinance to declare the meaning of the Northwest Territories Act, the ordinance fails of that purpose, and is objectionable as being an interpretation by an inferior legislative body of the Acts of its superior.

That was Sir John Thompson's view, and it is a view in which I think every lawyer in this House would at once concur. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice, speaking in this House during this session, on the 10th May, voiced the same opinion. He said :

In my judgment, section 93 would bring in all the rights and privileges which existed in favour of the denominational schools in the Territories at the present time or at the 1st July coming. These rights and privileges would include all those rights which are covered by section 11 of the Act of 1875 and any subsequent legislation up to the present time, and, in my opinion,—and I must say I have given this matter most careful consideration, and it is my settled opinion—it would cover all the privileges conferred by the Act of 1875, notwithstanding the provision of any ordinances that may have been passed by virtue of that Act.

So, in view of these expressions of opinion by Sir John Thompson himself and by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick), I cannot think that there is anything in the distinction which has been claimed by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) between section 16, No. 2, and section 16, No. 1. And let this also be observed in this connection—that in the report to council of Sir John Thompson from which I have just quoted he was not dealing in any way with the character of the schools. The only circumstance to which he was calling attention was this : That whereas the Act of 1875 gave to the minority in the Northwest Territories the right to establish schools whether majority schools had been established or not, the ordinance to which he referred cut down that right, in his opinion, not in respect of the character of the schools, but in respect of the locality in which they could be established. That is to say, the Act of 1875 provided that the minority anywhere might establish a separate school ; whereas, the ordinances passed by virtue of that Act declared that the minority might erect a school in any district where a majority school had been established—in other words they might create a separate school in any established school district.

Now, the Minister of Justice read a very carefully prepared opinion with regard to the supposed difference of section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2. I have heard my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) sometimes compliment hon. gentlemen on this side of the House upon their efforts to becloud the issue. I feel very much like returning the compliment to my hon. friend on this occasion. Let us see just what the hon. gentleman did say on this subject. I am not confining myself to his opinion read in the House on May 15th, but I am also taking—as I have a right to do—the expression of his opinion given to the House and to the committee on previous occasions. Relying on all these sources of information, what do we find that section 16, No. 1, accomplishes, according to the argument of my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) and my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick), who, outside of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), were, I believe, the principal speakers on that side of the House with regard to this question ? The effect of section 16, No. 1, according to the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) in the speech which he delivered on the second reading of this Bill was as follows :

The Bill re-enacts clause 14 of the Act of 1875, and thus it is revived, crystallized and made absolutely certain.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton), no doubt, referred to clause 11 of the Act of 1875, because that clause is numbered 14 in the Revised Statutes, and in that way he got the number as 14 instead of 11. So, section 16, No. 1, revised, crystallized and re-enacted section 11 of the Act of 1875. Now, what did section 11 of the Act of 1875 mean ? What did it accomplish ? My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick), in the opinion to which I have already referred, passed over the meaning of section 16, No. 1, very lightly. He declared :

The meaning of this section was expressed in the earlier school ordinances.

That is a very important statement indeed by the Minister of Justice. I rely upon it because he was not speaking without preparation ; he was not speaking in the heat of debate ; he was reading from a carefully prepared opinion. Therefore, I attach an importance to these words which I would not feel inclined to do if I were dealing with the words of the Minister of Justice in ordinary debate. Well, then, we are to get the meaning of the Act of 1875 by referring to the earlier school ordinances. Let us see what the earlier school ordinances were, because according to the deliberate opinion of the Minister of Justice they set forth the meaning of the Act of 1875. My hon. friend the member for Brandon has relieved me of the necessity of quoting the earlier school ordinances, because he has set forth in his speech on the second reading of the Bill the effect of these earlier school ordinances, and I will read his words as a fair statement of what the earlier school ordinances accomplished. He said, referring to the Act of 1875 :

What followed the passing of this law ? There was established in the Northwest Territories a complete dual system of schools, a system of schools under which the denomination regulated the text-books and the conduct of the teacher, and by which everything which pertains to the Roman Catholic schools was directly under the control of a Roman Catholic board of education. We had in the Northwest Territories at that time under that Act, to all intents and purposes what are generally known as church schools or clerically controlled schools.

To the same effect is the opinion of certain members of the legal profession who sit on the other side of the House. For instance the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Lamont) said :

The Act of 1875 would fasten on the Territories for all time to come an absolute dual system of sectarian schools.

And the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant) said :

The minority, under the Act of 1875, might be entitled to a full system of separate schools.

And the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) said referring to the Act of 1875 :

We would fasten on the new provinces the system of clerical schools which the people abolished in 1892.

This, then, according to the direct statement of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick), the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) and other gentlemen on the other side of the House is the effect of section 16, No. 1, because it brings into force according to their argument, section 11 of the Act of 1875.

Now we come to consider the meaning of section 16, No. 2. we have to inquire in what respect section 16, No. 2, differs from section 16, No. 1. Section 11 of the Act of 1875, omitting the immaterial words—is as follows—and I adopt, for the sake of convenience, the summary of that section which is given by the Minister of Justice in the opinion which he read to this House :

Section 11, Act of 1875, empowering the majority of the ratepayers of any . . . portion of the Northwest Territories . . . to establish such schools therein as they may think fit, and the minority of the ratepayers in any . . . portion of the Territories to establish 'Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools.'

Now let us look at section 16, No. 2, and see what becomes of it. Subsection 1 of section 16, No. 2 is as follows :

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories passed in the year 1901.

Now I have already explained in this House that in my opinion section 16, No. 2, does not in any way perpetuate a system of schools in the new provinces to be established in the Northwest. The people of the new provinces in the Northwest can, under the proposed law, make any change in their system that they see fit, subject to the provision contained in section 16, No. 2, that separate schools must be at all times established in the new provinces, provided the minority claim and demand such schools. It is not a system which is being perpetuated, it is a certain limitation upon the legislative freedom of the new provinces which is being perpetuated by the legislation we have before us. Let us see what are the rights and privileges which the minority thus receive under section 16, No. 2. Let us remember that nothing in any law which shall be passed by the new provinces is to prejudically affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30. Chapter 29 of the Revised Ordinances of the Northwest Territories, section 41, is in these words :

The minority of the ratepayers in any district, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish a separate school therein, and in such a case the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools, shall be liable only to assessment of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereto.

If I understand the English language, you have in chapter 29, section 41, which is thus perpetuated as part of the constitution of the new provinces for ever, exactly the same provisions as those which are to be found in the Act of 1875. Every important or effective word, so far as I understand it, that is to be found in the Act of 1875, is to be found here. Section 16, No. 1, perpetuates the Act of 1875 in so far as that Act provides for separate schools in the Territories. That was the intention, that was the direct enactment, of section 16, No. 1. Section 16, No. 2, does the same thing indirectly. It does not directly re-enact the Act of 1875 as a part of the constitution, but it re-enacts this part of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories as part of the constitution, it re-enacts the chapter and section of the ordinances to which I have just referred, and which are thus made part of the constitution of the new provinces for all time to come. The provisions of that section are to all intents and purposes, so far as my understanding goes, the same as the Act of 1875. Let us test the question in another way. Up to the present time I have been comparing the Act of 1875 with section 16, No. 2, and I have done that because the Act of 1875 was re-enacted in section 16, No. 1. Let us now take section 16, No. 1 directly, and compare it with section 16, No. 2, and with the ordinance which is brought into force by section 16, No. 2. In subsection 2 of section 16, No. 1, omitting the immaterial words, you have the words which constitute a protection to the minority in the Northwest. I will read them, omitting all immaterial words, as my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has done in regard to the Act of 1875. Section 2 of section 16, No. 1, omitting these immaterial words, is as follows :

> The minority of the ratepayers therein (that is to say, in any established school district), whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and in such case the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools, shall be liable only to assessment of such rates as they impose upon themselves with respect thereto.

That is the essential and material part of section 16, No. 1, so far as it perpetuates the right of separate schools in the new provinces in the Northwest Territories. Now let us read chapter 29, section 41, of the Northwest ordinances once more, and see how the words of that section, which is perpetuated by section 16, No. 2, compare with those I have just read :

> The minority of the ratepayers in any district, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish a separate school therein, and in such case the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessment of such rates as they impose upon themselves with respect thereto.

There are the same identical words with one or two absolutely minor and immaterial changes, the words of chapter 29, section 41, on the one hand, perpetuated by section 16, No. 2, and on the other hand, the words of the Act of 1875 which I have just read, perpetuated as a part of the constitution of the Territories by section 16, No. 1. The expressions in both cases are in meaning absolutely the same, and in form of expression almost identical. To sum up : Section 16, No. 1, according to the view of the government as expressed by the Minister of Justice, brought into force the Act of 1875, both by means of section 93 of the British North America Act and by direct re-enactment in subsection 2 of that section ; section 16, No. 2, brings into force the same Act of 1875 by preserving all rights under chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances, in which chapters everything in this respect contained in the Act of 1875, is directly set forth and re-enacted. In other words, section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2, proceed by different routes, but arrive at precisely the same goal in that regard.

Now, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, at page 5985 of 'Hansard,' uses language which was apparently intended to suggest that under section 16, No. 2, less rights and privileges are accorded to the minority than under section 16, No. 1. I have already demonstrated, to my own satisfaction at least, that section 16, No. 2, gives all that the Territorial Act of 1875 give, because it practically re-enacts it; in truth, however, it seems to me to give more : in the first place it gives the right of separation which is the only thing given by the Act of 1875. The expression 'separate schools' is not a technical expression ; it has not so far as I understand any technical meaning ; it means exactly what it says : the right of separation. Section 16, No. 2, also gives the half hour of religious instruction and this was not guaranteed by the Act of 1875. The position then of the hon. member for Brandon is this : that he resigned as a cabinet minister because of the provision of section 16, No. 1, and he came back under the provisions of section 16, No. 2, which, so far as the character of the schools is concerned concedes all and more than all that was guaranteed by the Act of 1875. And yet, he reflects upon his colleagues by referring to his own independent action, laughs at the draughtsman who framed these clauses, and professes thoroughly to understand the effect of section 16, No. 2. I would suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) if he were here, that the next time he undertakes to set his wits against those of the draughtsman, in the preparation of Bills, it would be well for him to get some member of the profession to come to his assistance, because I think I have already demonstrated (and I intend to still more fully demonstrate) that in this respect the hon. gentleman does not know exactly where he stands, and that instead of section 16, No. 2, being any concession to the opinions which he voiced in this House, section 16, No. 2, goes further away from these opinions and from the policy which he has expressed in the past than did section 16, No. 1.

Section 16, No. 1, contains certain provisions with regard to state aid ; section 16, No. 2, also contains certain provisions with regard to state aid. The hon. member for Brandon was very much exercised about the possibilities under section 16, No. 1. He said, speaking in this House, 'Hansard,' page 3106 :

> I am fairly confident that it is an opinion that will be justified by any court to which it may be referred, that the effect of that clause will be that if twenty years from now the province of Alberta undertook to appropriate $250,000 to build and equip a provincial university, a proportionate amount of money, proportionate to the number of separate schools as compared with the public schools, would have to be set aside for the establishment of a separate school institution.

Let us look at the provisions of section 16, No. 1. They are as follows :

> In the appropriation of public moneys by the legislature in aid of education and in the distribution of any moneys paid to the government of the said province arising from the school fund established by the Dominion Lands Act, there shall be no discrimination between the public schools and the separate schools ; and such moneys shall be applied to the support of public and separate schools in equitable shares or proportions.

The provision in section 16, No. 2, is as follows :

In the appropriation by the legislature or distribution by the government of the province of any moneys for the support of schools organized and carried on in accordance with said chapter 29, or any Act passed in amendment thereof, or in substitution therefor, there shall be no discrimination against schools of any class described in said chapter 29.

The department shall have the control and management of all kindergarten schools, public and separate schools, normal schools, teachers' institutes and the education of deaf, mute and blind persons.

As will be readily seen by any hon. gentleman who has followed my remarks the effect therefore, is simply this : under the terms of section 16, No. 1, there shall be no discrimination in state aid between public schools and separate schools; according to section 16, No. 2, there shall be no discrimination in state aid against kindergarten schools, public and separate schools, normal schools or teachers' institutes. In this there is no reference to universities and no words wider than 'public and separate schools.' If we read into section 16, No. 2, the material provisions of the ordinance chapter 29, section 4, which I have just read, then section 16, No. 2, will read as follows :

In the appropriation by the legislature of public moneys there shall be no discrimination against public or separate schools.

That is what my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) is willing to accept and the provision which he was not willing to accept (ommitting the immaterial words) was:

In the appropriation of public moneys by the legislature there shall be no discrimination between the public schools and the separate schools ; such moneys shall be applied in support of public and separate schools in equitable rates or proportions.

Now, to sum up, the effect is just this. The same schools are named in section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2 ; in the one case they are named by express mention and in the other case by express reference. In the next place, if the word 'school' includes universities the danger which appals the hon. gentleman for Brandon still remains. If the word 'school' does not include universities, then the danger that appals the hon. member for Brandon never existed. That is the sum and substance of the difference, the alleged difference, the supposed difference between section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2, so far as state aid is concerned.

But the hon. member for Brandon was not quite equal to the draughtsman in another respect. Section 16, No. 1, did not define the meaning of the words 'by law' in section 93, subsection 3 of the British North America Act. Therefore there was grave doubt whether remedial legislation could be enacted by parliament by reason of laws existing in the new province while under territorial restriction. This of course would not apply to laws enacted by the provinces after they had been constituted as provinces. Section 16, No. 1, left the constitution untouched in that respect ; section 16, No. 2, defines the words 'by law,' as meaning the law set out in chapters 29 and 30. The effect of this is to give further opportunities for remedial legislation and to leave all Canada liable to be disturbed by future agitation which in my opinion should be entirely confined to the provincial arena. In this respect also the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) was not, I think, quite equal to the occasion when he undertook to revise or consider the work of the draughtsmen in that regard. The Minister of Justice said a very significent thing on one occasion in this House. He said that some censure had been passed on the draughtsman of the Manitoba Act ; he was determined that no such censure should be passed upon the draughtsman of the Alberta and Saskatchewan Acts, and I think I may fairly congratulate the Minister of Justice on this that he has at least proved himself more than equal to the member for Brandon in any little skirmishing that has taken place between them in connection with the wording of these sections.

But the draughtsman did not finish with the member for Brandon here. There is another little point that seems to have escaped the observation of that hon. gentleman. Section 16, No. 1, brought into force section 93 of the British North America Act with certain amendations. I shall read that subsection :

The provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province as if, at the date upon which this Act comes into force, the territory comprised therein were already a province, the expression 'the union' in the said section being taken to mean the said date.

Now section 93 of the British North America Act subsection 1 is as follows :

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law in the province at the union.

This therefore preserved rights in respect of denominational schools and in respect of denominational schools only. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) and a great many other speakers in this House have declared and reiterated that there are no denominational schools in the Northwest and therefore a provision preserving rights in respect of denominational schools west and in that case a provision preserving would have no force in the new provinces. In order that I may not do the hon. member for Brandon any injustice, as he is not present here to-day, I shall read his remarks upon that subject. His words are these :

> I have read these extracts for the purpose of showing that when the ordinance of 1892 was passed the distinctive character of these schools as separate schools, as denominational schools, as schools controlled by a sectarian body for sectarian purposes absolutely disappeared.

You will observe he says their character as denominational schools absolutely disappeared. He goes on further referring to subsection 1 of section 16, No. 2 :

> This section preserves the right of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority to have their school, a separate school in name, but a public school in fact, in a separate building if they wish. That is the right it preserves. It preserves secondly the right of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority in such school to have religious teaching from 3.30 to 4 o'clock in the afternoon. . . . In the first place there is no such thing as a denominational school. Whether it is a separate school or a public school, a Catholic separate school or a Protestant separate school, it is a secular school from 9 a.m. to 3.30 p.m.

Therefore according to the statement of the hon. member for Brandon, according to the argument advanced by the gentlemen from the Northweest, there are no denominational schools, and therefore no rights to be preserved, but in the amended section 16, No. 2. the word 'denominational' which occurs in the British North America Act is changed to the word 'separate.' Under the New Brunswick Act as has already been pointed out, a question arose with regard to the character of certain schools as to whether or not they were denominational and it was held that they were not denominational and therefore no rights were preserved. The word 'denominational' would not preserve certain rights but the word 'denominational' is changed by section 16, No. 2 to which I have referred and in that respect a material departure from the British North America Act is made by that section 2, although not by section 16, No. 1.

Now one or two general observations with regard to the opinion of the Minister of Justice. I pass over for the moment the circumstance that he entirely ignores the possible effect of section 2. I think on one occasion in this House he stated that section 2 of this Bill as well as of the Haultain Bill might possibly make section 93 applicable—he may have done so here.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not in my statement, but in my speech ; I argued in my speech that section 2 made section 93 applicable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I shall pass that over for the moment but I shall speak of it before I close. The Minister of Justice also declared that not a single province can exclusively make laws at the present time with regard to education. That is true in one sense and not quite accurate in another sense. As was pointed out by the hon. member for the city and county of St. John (Mr. Stockton), the legislature of New Brunswick is the only authority within the province of New Brunswick which can deal with the question of education. The same thing is true of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and British Columbia. But it is quite true—and I have no doubt the Minister of Justice meant this—that, if any one of these provinces should confer by law certain privileges on any class of persons resident within the province, then the remedial powers of the Dominion executive and of the Dominion parliament could be invoked.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is a reserve power in the Dominion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The point I desire to emphasize—and I know the Minister of Justice and I are absolutely at one about it—is that until the legislatures of these provinces voluntarily put themselves in a certain position defined by the British North America Act, they have the exclusive right to deal with the question of education. As soon as they confer any rights and privileges on the minority then they subject themselves to the remedial powers which are familiar to every hon. gentleman in this House, and if they do that they do it voluntarily, and within their own powers ; they are not acting under any compulsion, but their will is absolutely free and untrammelled.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The result is to bring them under the restriction of section 93.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Quite so, and I pointed out I think in speaking on the second reading of this Bill that possibly that very circumstance, that very provision of the British North America Act, has deterred the legislatures of those provinces from enacting legislation conferring rights by law upon minorities which they otherwise would have enacted. The moment they give the minority certain rights by law, then they subject themselves to the remedial powers of the Dominion executive and parliament, and this seems to me a very apt illustration of the truth that sometimes an attempt to force by law that which would be freely given without compulsion is in the end of no effect.

Then the Minister of Justice refers to the Bill suggested by Mr. Haultain. It is sufficient for the present purpose to say we are not discussing the Bill submitted by Mr. Haultain ; we are discussing the Bill introduced by this administration. If the administration desire to rely upon any provisions in Mr. Haultain's Bill—and my hon. friend the Minister of Justice was referring to clause 2 of that Bill—we can put the matter to a very simple test. Eliminate section 16, No. 2, as you have already eliminated section 16, No. 1 and let this question be tested upon the provisions of section 2 of this Bill which are substantially the same as those of section 2 of Mr. Haultain's Bill. If Mr. Haultain's Bill was sufficient to accomplish the purpose claimed by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, there need be no further discussion about the question at all. Eliminate section 16, No. 2, as you have already eliminated section 16, No. 1, and let all parties stand upon their rights in respect of section 2 of Mr. Haultain's Bill. I might also observe in passing that in discussing the effect of section 16 of this Bill and section 2 of Mr. Haultain's Bill, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice seems to me to have overlooked the definition of the words 'by law' which he has introduced into section 16, No. 2.

The Minister of Justice also says that he has merely defined the word 'province' and the words 'at the union' in order to remove doubt; but my hon. friend is too good a lawyer to require to be told that express legislation may be affected by definition. Here it is just the same as if he had substituted a new section containing the interpretation which he has given to those words. There cannot be any doubt about that, and I know that my hon. friend has not any doubt on that point. My hon. friend also observed at page 6201, unrevised 'Hansard,' that under the present ordinances the schools are schools of all the ratepayers. Is this intended as a distinction? By chapter 29, section 41, and chapter 30, section 8, of the ordinances, the minority ratepayers are taxed for only their own schools.

Now, I have just one further observation to make with regard to the reliance which has been placed upon what has been called the sacred compact, the constitutional right, the solemn promise, made by the Act of 1875, and to which it is alleged that the people of the Northwest Territories are entitled under the provisions of the British North America Act. I would like to observe to my hon. friend the Prime Minister that if section 11 of the Act of 1875 was a solemn compact, how does he distinguish the provisions of the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1886, chapter 50, section 110, which were first enacted in the year 1881? That section was as follows:

> Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the legislative assembly of the Territories and in the proceedings before the courts; and both those languages shall be used in the records and journals of such assembly; and all ordinances made under this Act shall be printed in both those languages.

It does not seem to me that because a particular provision was made in 1875, and another particular provision was made in 1881 by the same authority, the latter is less a pledge or a promise or a constitutional right than the former. In the one case, in 1875, a certain temporary provision, as I understand it, was made with regard to separate schools in the Territories so long as they should be Territories. In the other case, in 1881, a particular provision was made with regard to the use of the English and French languages in the debates of the council and the legislative assembly of the Territories; and if you are to call one a solemn promise and compact and constitutional right, why should you not call the other a solemn promise and compact and constitutional right? I do not at the moment have my attention called to any possible distinction which could be made in principle between the one and the other. My right hon. friend very well remembers that in 1890 there was a debate in regard to this matter, and a Bill was introduced, I think, by the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy; and eventually, at some stage of the debate, the following resolution was moved by Sir John Thompson:

> That this House having regard to the long-continued use of the French language in old Canada, and to the covenants on that subject embodied in the British North America Act, cannot agree to the declaration contained in the said Bill as the basis thereof, namely, that it is expedient in the interest of the national unity of the Dominion that there should be community of language amongst the people of Canada. That, on the contrary, this House declares its adherence to the said covenants and its determination to resist any attempt to impair the same. That at the same time this House deems it expedient and proper, and not inconsistent with those covenants, that the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories should receive from the parliament of Canada power to regulate, after the next general elections of the assembly, the proceedings of the assembly and the manner of recording and publishing such proceedings.

That gave occasion for debate, and my right hon. friend the Prime Minister supported this resolution of Sir John Thompson, saying in part as follows:

> The amendment of my right hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, tends to uphold provincial rights and local autonomy, and I am happy to extend my congratulations to the Prime Minister and to his government that more and more and day by day the force of circumstances brings them over to the principle.

I am afraid that I can hardly convey the same congratulations to the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues in respect of their attitude upon the Bills which are now before the House for discussion. The right hon. gentleman continued:

> I always have stated publicly, as well as privately, and I have never disguised my thoughts on this matter, that, in my judgment, sooner or later, this question had to be settled upon the broad basis of local autonomy.

Referring to Mr. Beausoleil, a former member of this House, he said :

I know he is acting for the best interests of his country, according to his lights, and I am sure he will give me credit that in voting as I shall have to do with the government on this question, I do so not out of any love to the government, but with the conviction that in so doing I am acting in the best interest of my party and my country.

The resolution to which I have referred was followed by legislation in 1891, which practically re-enacted the Act of 1881 which I have just quoted, but added to it the following proviso :

Provided, however, that after the next general election of the legislative assembly, such assembly may, by ordinance or otherwise, regulate its proceedings and the manner of recording and publishing the same and the regulations so made shall be embodied in a proclamation which shall be forthwith made and published by the lieutenant governor in conformity with the law, and thereafter shall have full force and effect.

The result of that was that on the 19th of January, 1892, it was moved in the Northwest assembly by Mr. Haultain, seconded by Mr. Tweed, and resolved :

That it is desirable that the proceedings of the legislative assembly shall be recorded and published hereafter in the English language only.

As I said before, if the Act of 1875 was a solemn compact, why have we not in this Bill some provision for preventing the provinces from abolishing the French language? Why have we not some provision for enforcing the compact made in 1881, which, if we are to regard the Act of 1875 as a compact, is equally binding upon us ? Our position is to apply the constitution and abide loyally by the result. This position is regarded in some quarters as intolerant, but it is infinitely more tolerant than those who rail against it.

It is said by some in this House—not by the Minister of Justice, he would be the last to say it—that the enactment of section 16 in the form in which we have it to-day will prevent any litigation or contest in the courts as to its meaning. Nothing more ridiculous could emanate from the mouth of any hon. gentleman in this House. The constitution has been interpreted by the courts, I suppose, a thousand times since 1867. I am sure it has been interpreted in the courts of my own little province at least a hundred times. It will continue to be interpreted by our courts. The complexity of human, of national affairs, is so great that it is absolutely impossible to make in any written constitution everything so absolutely plain that we shall not have recourse to the courts. The history of the United States for 130 years, the history of our own country for thirty-five years, gives ample proof of what I am saying. Those who speak of preventing recourse to the courts do not understand what they are talking about or they have very little knowledge of the extent to which our courts have been appealed to for the purpose of interpreting the constitution.

As far as I am concerned, I am prepared to stand by every compact. I am reminded by the presence of my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) that he rather misquoted me in making some observations on my speech on the second reading. He said I referred to a written contract. I did not use the word 'written.' I said I was prepared to stand by any compact. When my hon. friend, the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) endeavoured to point out a certain compact by which we were bound I asked him this question :

What I would like to know is whether the hon. gentleman contends that in this compact to which he has just referred, and which was made in London, there is anything which is not also in the British North America Act.

He replied no, there was not. Well, Sir, the position of myself and of those who think as I do in this regard is that the whole compact is in the British North America Act, and that we do full justice to all rights—to the rights of the majority as well as those of the minority—when we apply that Act to the new provinces.

My hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, was good enough, for the purpose of convenience, to place in my hands an opinion prepared, as I understand, by his deputy minister—a very able lawyer, for whose opinion both the Minister of Justice and myself have the highest possible regard—with regard, not to clause No. 16 which we are now discussing, but clause 15, and with regard to certain criticisms which I made upon the language of that section. I observe that my hon. friend, the Deputy Minister of Justice, considered that the criticisms which were made by myself and others on that clause were based on what he regards as a misunderstanding. That may be quite true, but I think there is also a misunderstanding upon the part of the deputy minister. That gentleman failed to realize that when we are dealing with clause 16 or clause 15 or any other clause of this Bill, we must in the end, on this side of the House, direct our criticism towards such amendment as will, according to the views of the law officers of the Crown, bring about the results we desire. We may have our own views as to what the clause is, but in the end the government will insist that the opinion of the law officers of the Crown shall guide them,—and properly so. No government could be administered on any other principle. Therefore the ultimate criticism which we may make upon clause 15 or clause 16 or any other clause, must naturally and necessarily have regard to the legal opinion of the Minister of Justice, in so far, of course, as it does not affect any question of principle upon which we stand. I am speaking now altogether of the framing of the sections, the forms of expression, after once the principle has been determined. But my friend, the Deputy Minister of Justice, used language in this memo. which, I understand, I am at liberty to use ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I look upon it as the statement of a public officer which is free to every member of the House, and bearing in mind that he was the draughtsman of section 15.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am aware of that. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice will stand by section 16 and will not deny himself the right of claiming that he is the draughtsman of that section. I shall read certain observations of the Deputy Minister of Justice, in this opinion, which seems to me to illuminate very greatly the question to which I have just now been adverting—the question as to whether or not the Act of 1875 constitutes a compact to which regard must be had when we are framing a constitution for the new province; and I do not think anything has been said or quoted by any hon. gentleman on this side which is more absolutely destructive of the position of the government in this regard than are the words of the deputy minister to which I now call attention. In referring to clause 15, he says :

> The criticism of the clause is, I think, largely, if not altogether, founded on misapprehension. It is, as I understand it, suggested that these words may enlarge or limit the constitutional powers of parliament or the legislature of Alberta. They can, I submit, have no such effect.

He is dealing with clause 15, which contains a reference to certain laws now in force in the Territories, and the question was whether or not, by the language of section 15, those would be continued as a part of the constitution of the Northwest Territories, so that they could not be changed afterwards, either by the parliament of Canada or the legislature of a province. It is necessary that I should state that, in order that hon. gentlemen on both sides may realize the full significance of the words of the deputy minister. I shall begin again the quotation, in order not to interrupt the continuity of Mr. Newcombe's opinion :

> The criticism of the clause is, I think, largely, if not altogether, founded on a misapprehension. It is, as I understand it, suggested that these words may enlarge or limit the constitutional powers of parliament or of the legislature of Alberta. They can, I submit, have no such effect. The Northwest Territories Act, so far as it affects constitutional powers, is merely a delegation by parliament to the assembly of the Territories of certain legislative authority for the government of the Territories provisionally. The territorial assembly is, with all its constituent authority, by the provincial Acts abolished, and two new legislative bodies are established with provincial powers. They differ in their nature from the Territorial assembly, and are in no proper sense successors to it. It cannot, I think, be argued that because the Territorial assembly had certain legislative powers, the provincial legislature, in the absence of provisions to the contrary, must thereafter have the same powers. A provision in the Northwest Territories Act, for instance, that the Territorial assembly may legislate in respect of education, could not, by reason of the clause in question, be held to confer any power with respect to education upon the provincial assembly. First, because it is no application whatever to the provincial assembly, and secondly, because the constitution and powers of the provincial assembly are comprehensively provided by the express provisions of the provincial Act.

Nothing more forcible or severe could be said with regard to the Act of 1875. The Deputy Minister of Justice, in giving this opinion, was dealing with the question of legislative power. He said that we cannot because a certain power was possessed by the Territorial assembly argue, under section 15, that any similar power shall be possessed by the provincial legislature. Tenfold stronger, it seems to me, is the argument that we cannot in any sense argue that, because there is a restriction upon the legislative assembly of the Territories, that same restriction shall continue as a restriction upon the legislatures of the new provinces. The argument is more forcible in the case of a restriction than in the case of a power. He continued—I omit some portion referring to my contention as to section 15—

> The other section to which Mr. Borden refers is section 14 of the Northwest Territories Act with regard to education. This seems to be a case where it is clearly otherwise provided by this Act, inasmuch as the provincial Acts contain express provisions determining the provincial powers with regard to education, but if they did not contain any such provisions I do not see how it could be argued that a power, which the Territorial assembly had, can without apt words be made to apply to the two provincial assemblies; they are not continuations of the Territorial assembly ; they derive no powers by reference to its constitution; they are new bodies created in the execution of special powers by parliament, and there is no room for the application to them of the laws previously defining the constitution of the Territorial assembly.

Now, I venture to submit that the observations of so eminent a lawyer as the Deputy Minister of Justice, concurred in, as they seem to be with respect to section 15, by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, apply with even more force to the argument which has been made by the government as to the necessity for embodying the Act of 1875 in the constitution of the new provinces. As has been forcibly pointed out by Mr. Newcombe, the legislative assembly of the province is not the successor of the legislative assembly of the Territories. Parliament, in 1875, was making a temporary provision for the Territories as territories. In 1905 parliament is creating a permanent constitution for the new provinces in the Northwest, a constitution which this parliament cannot alter or amend after it has once been framed. My observations on the matter which I have just referred to are connected, to a certain extent, with the discussion of section 16 and with the discussion of section 2, which is to take place, as I understand, by arrangement, at the same time. They are not, of course, directly connected with the subject upon which I first addressed the House, whether or not there is any real, substantial difference between the effect of section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2. And, while I have every possible regard for the opinion of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick)—a regard so high that when I find myself differing from him I always have a great deal of doubt as to the correctness of my own opinion—yet I must add that, after all, I do not find in the opinion of the Minister of Justice, read in this House on May 15th, anything that controverts what I have said to-day. For he took particular pains, it seems to me, not to state that there was any real difference between section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2. He only said, so far as section 16, No. 1, is concerned, that the meaning of it was expressed in the earlier school ordinances. That is all he says about it; but then he goes on to tell us what is his view as to section 16, No. 2. I do not find in his opinion, after all, anything that is diametrically—or, indeed, at all—opposed to the view which I have expressed to-day. And it gives me a great deal of satisfaction to find that, in expressing the view I have just ventured to place before this House, I do not find myself, as it seems to me, in conflict with the opinion of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). I do not know that it would be possible for me to add very much to what I have already said on this subject. I do not think there is anything very new that I have to offer; and, perhaps my hon. friends opposite may say, there is nothing very useful in what I shall add. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has been good enough to say that we differ in our opinions as to the meaning of these two sections 16—No. 1 and No. 2. I regret that we should differ; because I had hoped that on a matter of this sort the lawyers in the House who have given this question their serious consideration might have been at one. However, lawyers, like doctors, I presume, must agree to differ. Having listened with the greatest possible attention to what my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) said, when speaking on the second reading of the Bill, and to what he said to-day, I am inclined to believe that Mr. Haultain was quite right when in the interview published in the 'Mail and Empire,' and afterwards in the Winnipeg 'Tribune,' he stated that he had a great deal of difficulty in convincing the leader of the opposition to take the position he now takes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not aware that Mr. Haultain had so stated.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) was aware of it. But I will read what Mr. Haultain said. This was published in the Winnipeg 'Tribune' of May 12th, 1905, and purports to be a reproduction of the correspondence of the Toronto 'Mail and Empire':

> Mr. Haultain is confident that his contention as to the unconstitutionality of the autonomy measures, so far as the educational clauses are concerned, is sound, and cannot be successfully assailed. He goes even further than Mr. Christopher Robinson in this respect. There were those at Ottawa who were disposed to view with complacent concurrence this element of the Bills as but confirming by statute what already existed. Mr. Haultain had difficulty in convincing those that the proposed legislation was not only constitutionally defective in its conception, but would prove extremely dangerous in its application. It was some time before even Mr. Borden would recognize this, and it required deep reasoning with him to convince him that it was so, but finally he saw the weakness of the thing and the result was the magnificent speech which he delivered on the constitutional aspects of the legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask if that is Mr. Haultain's statement?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think I made it quite clear that I quoted from the Winnipeg 'Tribune' what purported to be a reproduction of the correspondence of the Toronto 'Mail and Empire.'

Mr. FOSTER. So it is a correspondent's statement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I never heard of it before.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not think that I was quite justified in drawing attention to it, because really if Mr. Haultain did make such a statement he is in the invidious position of saying that Mr. Christopher Robinson is all wrong, Mr. Borden is all wrong and Sir John Thompson was all wrong in 1891, but Mr. Haultain is all right. But those who differ from him are in excellent company.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should have a great deal of doubt that Mr. Haultain ever expressed himself in that way, it is not likely.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is what he is reported to have said in these newspapers. I have here a report of an interview with him, published in the Toronto 'News' of April 14, where he discusses the ordinances of 1892, and expresses himself in almost the same language with respect to Sir John Thompson. He does not mention Sir John Thompson, but those who are familar with all the occurrences know that he refers to Sir John Thompson. In this interview, Mr. Haultain :

Denies that the ordinance of 1892 was a stroke which swept away the dual system, as Mr. Sifton contends. Still more strongly does he deny that the law of 1892 was unconstitutional. He absolutely denies that he ever admitted that it was ultra vires. On the contrary, his written official statements are accessible, and they emphatically defend that legislation, while the ordinance of 1892 was a consolidation, and the principal portion of the educational legislation had been passed in 1891 and earlier.

As my hon. friend will see, Mr. Haultain here states himself as opposed to so eminent an authority as Sir John Thompson. However, that is by the way. I did not intend to take up the time of the House with matters of that sort ; I will now come down to these two sections.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think perhaps my hon. friend the Minister of Justice is doing Mr. Haultain an injustice, because I happen to have a copy of this interview. The report containing the opinion of Sir John Thompson was made in 1890 ; Mr. Haultain is referring to the ordinance of 1892 in this interview.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will deal with that further on. We are now endeavouring to deal with the two sections, No. 1 and No. 2, following the description given of them by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition for greater accuracy and perhaps for greater clearness. My hon. friend has said, though I am sure he did not really mean it, that I attempted to befog the issue, and endeavoured to gather clouds about these two sections instead of pointing out what is meant by them. I will endeavour now to make my meaning clear so far as it is possible for me to do so. The first paragraph of section 16, No. 1, provides :

The provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province as if, at the date upon which this Act comes into force, the territory comprised therein were already a province, the expression 'the union' in the said section being taken to mean the said date.

Now what is the effect of that provision if this Bill becomes law ? The effect would be to apply section 93 of the British North America Act to the new provinces, and section 93 would apply in this way :

In and for each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions :

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law in the province at the union.

At the time a territory came in as a province, that is what the words would mean. Now what is it necessary for us to do ? All that it is necessary for us to do is to understand the meaning of the words 'by law' and 'right or privilege.' What are the rights or privileges which any class of persons have by law in the territory at the present time ?—assuming of course that there will be no change before the 1st of July. They have at the present time by law all the rights and privileges which are guaranteed by the Act of 1875, section 11. Now what are the rights and privileges which are guaranteed to them by section 11 of the Act of 1875 ? I said that these rights and privileges have been incorporated in the earlier ordinance I referred to, the ordinance of 1884. What does the ordinance of 1884, No. 5, section 25, say :

In accordance with the provisions of section 10 of the Northwest Territories Act, 1880——

That is the Act continuing the Act of 1875, and practically it is the same Act, providing for the establishment of separate schools.

—it shall be lawful for any number of property holders resident within the limits of any public school district, or within two or more adjoining public school districts, or some of whom are within the limits of an organized school district, and others on adjacent lands not included within such limits, to be erected into a separate school district by proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor, with the same rights, powers, privileges, liabilities and method of government throughout as hereinbefore provided in the case of public school districts.

There is the reproduction in terms of the Act of 1875. Now how was that acted upon, what was the result ? The result was that you had in the Northwest Territories four classes of schools : the Protestant public school, the Catholic public school, the Protestant separate school and the Catholic separate school ; or in other words, Protestant schools, either public or separate, and Catholic schools, either public or separate ; therefore you have a dual system of education. Now what happened after that ? You have then the ordinance of 1887. I fear I may weary the House by reading these ordinances, but perhaps they may be useful for reference. Section 37 of the ordinance of 1887 provides :

In accordance with the provisions of the Northwest Territories Act providing for the establishment of separate schools, it shall be lawful for any number of the ratepayers, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, the same being a minority of the ratepayers resident within the limits of an organized public school district, to establish a separate school therein, by proclamation of the lieutenant governor, with the same rights, powers, privileges, liabilities and methods of government as herein provided in the case of public school districts.

That is the ordinance of 1887 which is reproduced in the ordinance of 1888, almost in words. There is a slight difference with respect to another section which I have not read, and which is not important for my present purpose. Now there is a departure from the principle settled by the Act of 1875 which created a dual system. This Act provides that it is only the minority of the ratepayers in a school district that have the right to establish a separate school.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That was not a question of the character of the schools; was it?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course it was a question of the character of the schools.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the Minister of Justice, so as to make me clear about it, say what is the difference between a Catholic public school and a Catholic separate school?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The difference consists in this: That a Catholic public school is a school of the majority in a district where the Catholics are in the majority, and a Catholic separate school is a school of the minority in a district where the Catholics are in the minority. There is no difference between them; they are both separate schools except that in one case it is the school of the majority and in the other case it is the school of the minority. In reality there is no distinction under the Northwest system, as I understand it, between Protestant and Catholic schools; the distinction is between the schools of the majority and the schools of the minority.

Mr. STOCKTON. Would it not be a public school in both cases; there would be no Catholic or Protestant about it?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. When the ordinances of 1888 were submitted to the Minister of Justice for revision as it is usual, he examined this particular section to ascertain how far it was intra vires of the Northwest assembly. Here is what Sir John Thompson said:

> The undersigned has, however, to call attention to another particular, in respect of which he finds that the ordinance does not strictly conform to the requirements of the Act under which it was framed.
> Section 14 of the Northwest Territories Act (chap. 50, R.S.C.) provides, that ordinances in respect of education may be made in the Territories, but stipulates that in such ordinances it shall 'always be provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Territories, by whatever name the same is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor, and also that a minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein.'
> The ordinance respecting schools does not contain the provisions that the statute requires it to contain, but merely contains the provision that the minority may establish a separate school in an organized public school district, thus placing the minority at the mercy of the majority, and only giving the minority the right to establish a separate school, if the majority think proper to organize a public school. It is necessary to point out that the provisions of the Northwest Territories Act, before cited, cannot be abridged by the ordinance, and must be considered as still in force, notwithstanding the restrictive terms of the ordinance. In so far as it is attempted by the ordinance to declare the meaning of the Northwest Territories Act, the ordinance fails of that purpose, and is objectionable as being an interpretation by an inferior legislative body of the Acts of its superior.
> The undersigned only refrains from recommending the disallowance of this ordinance in consequence of its being merely a re-enactment of an earlier ordinance which disallowance would not affect, and which was allowed to go into operation, probably because attention was not called to this provision. The undersigned has the honour to recommend that the ordinance bringing these revised ordinances into effect, be allowed to go into operation.

So that you have it on the authority of Sir John Thompson, that the ordinance of 1888, of which he was speaking at the time, was an abridgement of the rights conferred upon the Roman Catholic minority of the Northwest Territories by the Act of 1875.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Purporting to abridge it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, he said it effectively abridged it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think not.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It goes further than that; it not only purports to abridge it but it actually omits from the ordinance the words which govern with respect to the majority in any school district when that majority happens to be Roman Catholic. The words are used in the ordinance of 1884, but they are omitted in the ordinances of 1887 and 1888 and they have been omitted in every ordinance which has been passed since that time.

Mr. BERGERON. But still the law of 1875 was always in force.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course that follows, the Act of 1875 remains in force and is in force to-day in the Territories. But as a matter of fact, the Roman Catholic minority, notwithstanding that by the ordinances their powers are abridged, have been in enjoyment of all their rights which they had under the Act of 1875, and where they are in a majority in a school district they control the school, they control the trustees, and trustees control the teachers, and to-day in the Northwest the organization of the schools, whether they be public or separate, is absolutely under the control of the Northwest legislature. On that point, perhaps I may be permitted to read a brief memo. that I prepared in this connection, and which states my view absolutely, as I understand it, in such a way as it leaves no doubt about it. But perhaps I had better leave that aside until I deal with other points.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend ; I know how difficult it is——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not trying to make a speech.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is conversational ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Conversational entirely.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not quite understand the Minister of Justice, that the words he said were omitted from that ordinance which were made necessary by the Act of 1875 ; were words applying to the character of the schools or only to the locality in which they should be established.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Section 11 of the Act of 1875 reads :

When and so soon as any system of taxation shall be adopted in any district or portion of the Northwest Territories, the lieutenant governor by and with the consent of the council or assembly, as the case may be, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect to education, but——

Now these are the words :

--but it shall therein be always provided that the majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Northwest Territories or any lesser portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same may be known, may establish such schools therein as they may think fit.

That is to say the majority have the right to establish such schools as they think fit. If the majority happen to be Roman Catholic they may have what I described a moment ago as a Roman Catholic public school. These words are omitted from the sections of the ordinances of 1887 and 1888, and the only words that are repeated are :

And the minority of the ratepayers therein whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and that in such latter case, &c.

In effect there is provision contained in the Act with respect to the case of a school district in which the majority of the ratepayers happens to be Roman Catholic. That is what the original clause 16 was intended to continue. The original clause was intended to continue to the minority in the Northwest Territories all the rights that they had by law, and one of the rights they had by law was this right to organize their schools under the Act of 1875.

Mr. BERGERON. That is clause 16, No. 1.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, I am dealing with that. Now let us come to clause 16, No. 2, or clause 16 in its amended form. It gives to the minority whether Portestant or Catholic in any district the right to establish a separate school therein. That is to say, a school to which sections 41, 42, 43, 44, 45 of chapter 29 are specially applicable. In effect these sections give the minority the right to organize a separate school district in which district the minority can establish a separate school. First the district, and then the school in the district. But, after the district is erected the board of trustees, which board controls the schools, shall possess and exercise all rights, powers and privileges and be subject to the same liabilities and method of government as are provided in the ordinance in respect to public school districts.

With respect to public schools which are the only schools available to Roman Catholics in these school districts where they have a majority, the ratepayers have no rights or privileges secured to them under this clause as a result of that amendment made in 1887 and 1888. Now that is the position, and when my hon. friend said, if he is correctly reported at London, that section 41 of the ordinance which is referred to in section 16, No. 2, repeated in terms the provisions of section 11 of the Act of 1875, he must have been in error, because the first part of the Act of 1875 is omitted in section 41 of the Northwest Territories Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as separate schools are concerned.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. So far as separate schools are concerned, and that is what we are dealing with.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I say it is the same section so far as separate schools are concerned.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Section 11 of the Act of 1875 is cut in two and all that part which is applicable to a majority in a school district is omitted and that part applicable to the minority is inserted so that one-half the section is omitted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is right. I observe my hon. friend places emphasis on the expression 'such schools therein as they think fit.' That is not in the separate school but in the general school district. Does he regard the words 'such schools therein as they think fit' as qualitative, indicating the character of the schools ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think so, and my reason for so thinking is that the ordinance of 1884 enacts that the majority in a case of that kind may establish a separate school. That is the provision of section 25 of the ordinance of 1884. That is the construction put upon the Act of 1875 by the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories. Now I shall not detain the committee at any greater length upon this subject. There is the whole matter so far as I am concerned, and to those who want to listen and who want to understand it seems to me I have made myself absolutely clear. The first section 16 re-enacted or made provision rather for the perpetuation of the dual system which was provided for by the Act of 1875. That is what it did, it perpetuated section 11 of the Act of 1875. The second gives effect purely and simply to those provisions of the ordinance of 1901, which are applicable to separate schools and as I have pointed out in the opinion of Sir John Thompson, the provisions of the Ordinance of 1901 which merely reproduces the ordinances of 1887 and 1888 abridge the right of the Roman Catholics in such a way as to give to the minority in a school district the right to a separate school and makes no provision for a majority.

Mr. BERGERON. Of Catholics ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of Catholics.

Mr. STOCKTON. I think that the Minister of Justice has somewhat mystified the law with respect to the different qualities or characteristics of the schools existing in the Northwest when he seeks to impress upon this committee that there were under the Act of 1875 four conditions of schools in the Northwest Territories, that is a Catholic public school and a Catholic separate school, a Protestant public school and a Protestant separate school. I do not find that in the law. It is true that the majority can organize a section or can organize a school. If the majority of the ratepayers doing that were Roman Catholics that would not make it a public Roman Catholic school, or if the majority were Protestants that would not make it a Protestant public school, any more than a public school in the Northwest now would be a Presbyterian public school or a Methodist public school because the majority of the ratepayers happen to belong to that denomination. There is just one difficulty that I myself find in respect to the statement of the Minister of Justice and I have listened with some degree of interest that is that the rights have been cut down by subsequent legislation or by the ordinances accorded by the Act of 1875. I am not quite sure about that. I would certainly defer very largely to the legal opinion of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, but does he not think that the Act of 1875 would be a part of the constitution of the Northwest Territories. That would be a question for the Minister of Justice to consider, could the ordinances of the Northwest Territories cut down or impair the authority of the Act of 1875 ? If the legislature has granted power, that is if this parliament has granted power under the Act of 1875 with respect to education then it does seem to me that any attempt by ordinance to cut down that power, if that has been attempted, would be ultra vires of the power of the Northwest council, and if that is so, why then the Act of 1875 continues in all its power from the time it was passed until the present time.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is right, that is what I argued for about ten minutes.

Mr. STOCKTON. I understood that my hon. friend said that the ordinances of 1881 or 1884 cut down certain rights that were given under the Act of 1875. That is what I understood the Minister of Justice to say and that section 11 of the Act of 1875 had been cut in two and the part relating to public schools had been omitted and that therefore to that extent there had been a certain limitation or restriction put upon that. If you read section 11 of the Act of 1875, with all due deference I do not think that it will bear the construction that has been put upon it by the Minister of Justice. As I said it means that the majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Northwest or any lesser portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same may be called, may establish such schools therein as they may think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor. That is a power given under the law to establish the schools and that power continues to-day. There has been no cutting down of that power on the part of this legislature or any attempt on the part of the Northwest legislature in the enactment of any ordinances ; it was only granting a power to the authority of the Northwest Territories under certain conditions to legislate and make provision for the establishment of the schools ; but with this limitation, that if there was a minority in that district who wanted a separate school they could have that separate school provided they complied with the law, and that when they did that their assessments should go towards the maintenance of that separate school and that therefore it would not be necessary to put that portion of section 11 of the Act of 1875 in the ordinances that were subsequently adopted. Therefore upon that point it would seem to me that there is no cutting down, no limitation, but only an authority given by this parliament to certain authorities in the Northwest Territories to establish public schools with the limitation that under certain conditions they can also establish separate schools.

That has been continued by section 41 of chapter 29 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories so far as separate schools for the minorities are concerned, and not with respect to public schools. Now with reference to the difference of meaning between section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2, I agree with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition as to the legal effect of the language used in these two sections. No. 2 goes as far as No. 1, as originally introduced by the right hon. First Minister; and if we attempt to whittle down the meaning of No. 2 by saying that it does not go as far as No. 1, then the duty is cast upon those who argue in that direction to show where there is a limitation. I can find none in the section itself, and I have not understood the Minister of Justice to make the statement on the floor of the House that there is a less power in section 16, No. 2, than there is in section 16, No. 1. I did not understand the Minister of Justice to say so to-day; I did not understand him to say so when he made his explanation the other day. I think section 16, No. 2, is as full and ample to give separate schools to the constitutions of the new provinces as section 16, No. 1. I may be mistaken about that. I would like to hear from the Minister of Justice as to whether he is of opinion that section 16, No. 2, does not go as far as section 16, No. 1. If the Minister of Justice will make that statement, I would like him to say in what respect he is of opinion that it does not go as far.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. He said it twice.

Mr. STOCKTON. Had we not better let the Minister of Justice speak for himself? If he will stand in his place and make that statement, it will simplify the matter very much.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend said that he did not know that there were four kinds of schools in the Northwest Territories. I have in my hand the report of the superintendent of education, for 1901, on the first page of which four classes are specified: public school districts, Roman Catholic public schools districts, Roman Catholic separate school districts, and Protestant separate school districts.

Mr. STOCKTON. The report may put it that way, but the schools are not so constituted under the Act of 1875.

Mr. BRODEUR. That classification is still maintained.

Mr. STOCKTON. The fact that it is so stated in the report of the officer of the government does not make it the law.

Mr. BRODEUR. This report is accepted and published by Mr. Haultain.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it a legal document?

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose it must be. It has been accepted by the Attorney General.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it a clause of an Act?

Mr. STOCKTON.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, it is a report.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend from St. John is perhaps somewhat justified in saying that he did not catch my statement in respect to the difference between clause No. 2 and clause No. 1, in so far as clause No. 2 abridged the right of the minority, because I was unfortunate enough to read the statement as to the effect of that clause; and, in reading, one cannot make his meaning quite as apparent as he can when speaking. But I will read again what I said on that point:

> In effect, section 16 (that is No. 2) gives the minority the right to erect a separate school district in which district the minority may establish a separate school; but after the district is established, the board of trustees shall possess and exercise all rights, powers and privileges, and be subject to the same liabilities and methods of government as herein provided in respect of public school districts.

That is, the same right, so far as that particular minority is concerned, as they have under the Act of 1875. But where the minority in the Territories happens to be the majority in the school district, then they have to avail themselves of the public school; and, so far as that public school is concerned, they have no right or privilege whatever secured to them under that clause. The minority in the district, where it happens to be Roman Catholic, will have certain rights and privileges secured to it under clause 2; but where the Roman Catholic minority of the Territories happens to be a majority in the school district, then it has no right whatever. Then, there is the other abridgment referred to by Sir John Thompson, resulting from the legislation of 1891, that the organization of a separate school district is dependent upon the action of the majority in the district. If the majority or the governmet does not organize a school district then the minority is without any privilege whatever.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice has certainly said something to-day which he did not say in the opinion which he read in the House before.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have endeavoured to avoid repeating what I said. I quoted Sir John Thompson's opinion when I spoke first.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any opinion of Sir John Thompson's along the line which the hon. gentleman read to-day?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is the same as my hon. friend read.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as the question of separate schools is concerned, the expression on which the Minister of Justice relies does not occur in that particular portion of the clause of the Act of 1875 at all. I will just read it in order to make my meaning perfectly clear:

The Lieutenant Governor, by and with the consent of the council or assembly, shall pass all necessary ordinances with respect to education; but it shall therein be always provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Northwest Territories, or any lesser portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same may be known, may establish such schools therein as they may think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor.

That is so far as the majority are concerned. And further:

That the minority of ratepayers therein, whether Protestants or Catholics, may establish separate schools therein.

So far as the latter words are concerned, those relating to the establishment of separate schools, I do not understand my hon. friend the Minister of Justice to controvert the statement which I made, namely, that the effect of section 16, No. 2, is the same as that of section 16, No. 1, but he goes back and relies upon the language contained in the previous clause:

The majority may establish such separate schools therein as they may think fit.

These words he interprets as meaning that they may establish separate schools of such character as they may see fit. I venture to submit that they cannot have any such meaning. They do not refer to the quality of schools or the regulations under which they are carried on, because that would destroy altogether the legislative power already conferred upon the council of the Territories by the words I have just quoted: 'The Lieutenant Governor, by and with the consent of the council or assembly, may make all necessary ordinances with respect to education.' But if you take the view of the Minister of Justice, you absolutely take out of the hands of the council the legislative power with regard to the character of the schools, and you would have absolute self-government, in respect of the character, the regulation, the superintendence and the control of the schools, conferred upon the majority in each district. That, I submit, is not the meaning of the words 'may establish such schools therein as they see fit.' Those words are always subject to the controlling power of the Northwest Territories Legislature with regard to education. To give them any other meaning would absolutely take out of the power of the Lieutenant Governor, acting with the advice of the council or assembly, all further control of the schools. Surely my hon. friend does not contend that that is absolutely the meaning of the Act of 1875?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think that is the meaning put upon it by the ordinance of 1884.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The ordinance of 1884 cannot controvert, alter or amend section 11 of the Act of 1875. It cannot affect that Act in any way. I understand now what I did not understand before. I understand what my hon. friend the Minister of Justice meant by saying that the Act of 1875 was interpreted by an earlier ordinance. Let us understand the situation. Under the Act of 1875, you might establish a dual system of schools, if you saw fit, but you were not obliged to do so. That is the distinction. There was the power but no obligation. The Act of 1875 did not mean that the majority of ratepayers of the Northwest in any particular district could make those ordinances with regard to education, the power to make which had already been conferred on the Lieutenant Governor, acting by and with the advice of the council or assembly. Yet the very reverse is the construction to which we would be driven by the argument of my hon. friend this afternoon. 'May establish such schools therein as they may think fit.' But those schools must be established subject to the controlling power of the council or assembly. Therefore it does not seem to me that this new and very ingenious point, suggested for the first time to-day by the Minister of Justice, is consistent with a reasonable interpretation of the statute. The Lieutenant Governor in Council makes ordinances regarding education, and he must give power to the majority to establish such schools as they think fit, but not schools of such character as they think fit or subject to such regulations as they think fit, or subject to such superintendence or control or inspection as they think fit, because with regard to all these matters the power has been conferred, not upon the majority in each district, but upon the Lieutenant Governor, by and with the advice of the council and assembly.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In what respect then did the omission of the first words of the Act of 1875, section 11, abridge the rights of the minority, as stated by Sir John Thompson?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In this respect that, as I understand the report of Sir John Thompson, the Act of 1875 declared that the majority of ratepayers in any district or portion of the Northwest Territories might establish separate schools; but by the ordinance, which he thought to be beyond the powers of the Territories, that power was restricted to those districts which had been organized as public school districts, and he thought that in that respect there had been an attempted abridgment of the right conferred by the Act of 1875. At least that is the way I construe his language.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want to tire my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, but I desire to ask him one or two questions. We seem to have come down to this, that all the work of parliament is confined to finding out what clause 16, No. 1, and what clause 16, No. 2, really mean. Would not these words in the Act of 1875 'May establish such schools as they think fit' mean that the Roman Catholics, who are the ones intended to be benefited by the law of 1875——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, the minority, whether Catholic or Protestant.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend will allow me my own opinion, and that is that the law of 1875 was intended for their benefit. It must have been as hard then, as it is now, to speak of those questions.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

An hon. MEMBER. There were bigger men then.

Mr. BERGERON. There were then fresh in the minds of everybody the promises which had been made by the Canadian government to the people in that country, and it was on account of these promises that clause 11 of the Act of 1875 was passed. What I wish to know is whether these words 'as they may think fit' did not mean that the minority could have the kind of schools they wanted. There was no law then to tell them what kind of schools they should have. I want to be posted on that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You will have to post yourself. The statute is there.

Mr. BERGERON. But I should like to have the opinion of the Minister of Justice. Had they the right to teach French in the schools by the law of 1875 ? Would not that right flow from their right to establish such schools as they saw fit. And as a matter of fact, was not the French language taught in the schools then ? By the clause 16, No. 2, which puts in force only the ordinance of 1901, have they the right, whether in a separate or a public school, to teach the French language ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, but they do it as a matter of fact.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understood my hon. friend some years ago to declare by his vote that the French language was not an official language in the Northwest.

Mr. BERGERON. Where and when did I do that?

Mr. BRODEUR. In the House of Commons in 1889 or 1890.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to be shown that.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend does not remember that ?

Mr. BERGERON. No, it would have to be shown me very strongly to make me believe it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does not my hon. friend remember that that question came up before the House in 1890? A long discussion took place in this House on the question whether the French language should be an official language in the Northwest or not.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not remember the occasion. And still, less, if possible, do I remember voting that way. Now there is another point which I want to ask the Minister of Justice about. It would seem that 'separate schools' under the Act of 1875 meant a very different thing from what we understand to-day by separate schools. At that time what was understood was a separate system of schools for the minority, whether Protestant or Catholic. What we understand by 'separate schools' to-day is simply that the minority in a school district, whether Catholic or Protestant may establish a separate school, but, as a matter of fact, the teaching is all the same, whether in the public or in the separate school. Is not that the case ? It seems to me that it is only by putting questions in this way that we can properly discuss this question. When a question is put and answered, we hit the nail squarely on the head. It is far better than long discussions in which the members try each for himself, to bring out all the points involved in this measure. My hon. friend from St. John city and county (Mr. Stockton) does not see any difference between section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2. For my part I believe there is a difference, but it seems to me that the Minister of Justice has not stated the differenc plainly. I would like to get it from him, because, in this discussion it is to him we naturally look for light.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My recollection is that the Act of 1875 was passed as a result of the agitation that grew up in Canada as a result of the New Brunswick school question, and not on account of any promise it made to the people of the Northwest Territories. Of course, I do not say that definitely, but that is my impression. I have endeavoured once or twice to make my meaning clear about the difference in these two cases. The first section would give to the minority in the Northwest Territories all the rights they have, de jure and de facto, at the present time. That would include all the provisions of the Act of 1875, section 11.

Mr. FOSTER. That is clause 16, No. 1, would do that ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes. Clause 16, No. 2, would give to the minority in the Northwest Territories those rights and privileges which they have, not by the law at large as in force in the Northwest Territories, but by the particular law enacted under chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances.

Mr. FOSTER. Which would be——?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The right of the minority in a school district to establish a separate school under section 41 and following sections.

Mr. FOSTER. Now let a layman have about a minute or two to get in his question. Do I understand the matter right if I state it this way? Under the Act of 1875, the Roman Catholics if they were a majority in a district had the right to establish a school such as they thought proper. If they were a minority they had a right to have a school as laid down in the law. Now, under section 16, No. 1, these two rights are perpetuated. But clause 16, No. 2, makes a distinction. It conserves to the minority the right they had under the Act of 1875—

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, not all.

Mr. FOSTER. All the right they have as a minority to erect a minority school in the school district?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. With an exception. That is to say, the right of the minority to have a separate school in a district is contingent upon the exercise of the right of the majority to establish a public school. That is the only distinction.

Mr. FOSTER. That is right. Well, suppose there is that little distinction—they are not allowed, under clause 16, No. 2, to erect their minority school unless the majority have organized a school district.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Or the government have organized it.

Mr. FOSTER. If the majority refuse to erect a school district, it would be necessary that the government should intervene in the interest of the children of the majority in that district, and also in order not to deprive the minority of their right to organize. The other right they had under the Act of 1875, which was conserved under section 16, No. 1—the right of the majority in the district to have such school as they thought fit—is taken from them?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. If there is anything in that such as taking away the privilege in the latter case or granting a privilege in the former case, it will all depend on what you say is meant by such school 'as they think fit.' The Minister of Justice holds that this has relation to the quality or kind of school; otherwise, it would have been no privilege to them in 16, No. 1; and if that is not so, it is no deprivation to them in 16, No. 2. Now, let us look at that—of course, I do not discuss the legal aspect of the question. Is it reasonable to suppose that you could have a school system if the majority of the ratepayers in any district might establish such schools as they thought fit, including in that the power to determine the quality of its teaching, the hours and everything that goes to make up the conduct and discipline of the school? Suppose that were accepted, where would it land us? Why, the Roman Catholic majority in one case, the Protestant majority in another case, the Mormon majority in another case, the Doukhobor majority, or the Galician, or Hungarian or Polish majority, could establish such schools as they thought fit as to the quality and management of the schools. If this were so, I venture to say you could have no school system which would be worthy of the name. The majority might put in incompetent teachers. If it was a Polish majority, they might insist on teaching nothing but Polish and refusing the right to attend to an English-speaking or French-speaking boy. This is a wide power. The Mormon majority in a district could establish a school and in it teach their peculiar doctrines. If that is the meaning of it, we reason to an absurdity. It surely cannot mean that.

They may want a primary school, they may want a higher school, they may want one of different grades; such a school as 'they think fit' in that respect they can have, such a school as they think fit in respect to number and the like of that, but under this clause, always subservient to and determined by the general laws, rules and regulations which establish and perpetuate the school system. That is the point that puzzles me as a layman. If that is the interpretation, namely, that such schools 'as they think fit' refer to the matters of quality, discipline, order and everything which is taught in them, you would reduce the whole matter to an absurdity. So it seems to me the common sense principle of interpretation is not in respect of quality, but in respect of what I have spoken about in regard to the question of schools. Now does the Minister of Justice think that if the Poles were in a majority, that under the Act of 1875, and that law still has power, they could by a majority erect and establish such a school 'as they think fit,' saying that it shall be taught by a Polish teacher, who need not have a diploma, who need not have attended a normal school, who need not teach more than two hours a day, who need not do any of these things, and yet that they could avail themselves of the privileges of pay which go along with the erection and conduct of a school, and be a part of the system which is in vogue? Does he think they can do that? He does not, I do not think he can, then I think he will have to modify his interpretation of the phrase 'such a school as they think fit.' That is the practical difficulty that suggsets itself to my mind. But legal interpretations are sometimes wonderful things, and I do not know whether I am right or wrong. But I think mine is the common sense opinion.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend picks two or three words out of the section and attempts to construe these words without regard to the context. He has to look at the whole context in order to understand the true intent and meaning of each word; he has to look to the words 'Protestant and Catholic' which are mentioned further on in the section, and which are practically the governing words; that is to say, the schools which are to be established are those which will provide for the necessities of these two classes of persons. Now my hon. friend, if he is anxious to understand what the intention of the legislature was at the time this section was introduced, has only to refer to the debates of that time, and he will find that, dealing with that particular section which was introduced at the suggestion of Mr. Blake, Mr. Blake said:

> There should be some provision in the constitution by which they should have conferred upon them the same rights and privileges in regard to religious instruction as those possessed by the people of the province of Ontario. The principles of local self-government and the settling of the question of public instruction it seemed to him ought to be the cardinal principles of the measure.

His meaning was that they should have conferred upon them the same rights and privileges in regard to religious instruction as those possessed by the people of the province of Ontario; and Mr. Blake who was the father of the clause, used these words in explaining it, and pointed out that the intention was to provide for a separate school system as between Protestants and Roman Catholics. Then the hon. gentleman will find further on, if he wishes to inquire, that by the ordinance of the Northwest Territories of 1884, effect was given to that section in the sense indicated by Mr. Blake, who was responsible for it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was effect given to it in such a sense as to empower a majority of each district to establish schools of any character they saw fit?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is a separate school system.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But we are dealing with a majority school system.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The minority in a district are entitled to establish a separate school in that district; that is section 25 of the ordinance of 1884.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Upon a well recognized principle, as a particular part of this section deals with separate schools we are not to suppose, without express words, that another part of the same section is also dealing with separate schools. A particular part of this section deals with the minority schools, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic; the minority of the ratepayers, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein.

My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) had to construe the words to which he drew attention, because the Minister of Justice was founding his argument upon them—'may establish such schools therein as they think fit.' It seems to me that the results which have been pointed out by the member for North Toronto would ensue by the adoption of the interpretation of the Minister of Justice. Sir John Thompson certainly never adopted that interpretation, or we would have heard something about it in his report to council. His only objection to this ordinance, which he considered carefully, and he was a great lawyer, and would not be apt to overlook a point of this kind—his only objection was not that which is raised by the Minister of Justice to-day; his objection was that the ordinance provided for the establishment of schools only in districts where majorities had decided to create the area into a school district. Now it does seem to me, with all deference to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, that it is not possible to place such an interpretation upon this clause as that which he has suggested. That certainly was not the interpretation which occurred to the Minister of Justice in the first instance when he drew section 16, No. 1, because he himself told us in this House that he intended section 16, No. 1 to preserve the rights as they are at present, and therefore he could not have had this point in his mind then. It is obviously something that has occurred to him since.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They had all these rights in 1875.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If my hon. friend the Minister of Justice had had this argument in his mind, if he had held this opinion which he has put forward to-day, at the time he drafted section 16, No. 1, he could not have stated in this House, as he did state, that section 16, No. 1 was designed to preserve the rights of the minority as they exist in the Northwest Territories to-day. Those two things would be absolutely inconsistent; therefore I am within my right in insisting that the interpretation now relied upon is not the one that occurred to the Minister of Justice when he was drafting that clause. It did not occur to him for the very good reason that an interpretation of this kind is one to which the Minister of Justice would only resort when he found no other one would meet the case. To say that you must interpret this clause in that way is going very far indeed, much beyond any canon of legal interpretation with which I am familiar. As I pointed out, you have power vested in the legislature of the Territories to enact laws with regard to education; you have a limitation upon that, a proviso attached to it that the majority may establish 'such schools as they think fit.' But that does not permit them to establish schools of any such character as they see fit, because to do that would involve, in the first place, that they might apply religious tests: they might say, no child shall go to that school unless he or his parents make profession of a certain religion; no child shall go to that school unless his parents agree that he shall learn a certain language and no other; no child shall go to that school unless it is carried on subject to such regulations and such supervision, such control and inspection, as are provided, not by the legislature of the Territories, but by the majority of that particular school district; and I fancy that upon reflection the Minister of Justice would hardly like to persevere in a contention of that kind.

Mr. BOURASSA. There is one point that seems to be overlooked. The object of the legislation of 1875 was not to deal with the minority of any particular district, but was to deal with the rights of the minority in the whole territory, and therefore they had to provide for the same rights for every portion of the country, no matter whether a particular district contained a majority or a minority of one class or of the other. The conclusion to which the reasoning of the leader of the opposition would lead us is this, that the legislature of 1875 intended to give some protection to either the Protestants or the Roman Catholics when they constitute a minority in any particular district, but cannot give them any protection if they happen to constitute a local majority, although forming part of the minority of the whole territory. If section 11 is read, not in the light of too much legal knowledge but in a simpler light——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask my hon. friend one question?

Mr. BOURASSA. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does he consider to be guaranteed to the minority where it is a minority in any particular district, by the Act of 1875?

Mr. BOURASSA. I am coming to that, I was about to say that if instead of interpreting the Act of 1875 with too much legal lore, we interpret it simply by bringing to bear on it the common sense of the ordinary man, we might better be able to understand it. If you refer to the speeches that were made in this House in 1875, and especially to the speech of the Hon. Edward Blake at whose suggestion, and I believe under whose guidance this clause was drafted, you find that the object of it was to protect the rights of the total minority of the Territories whether it be Protestant or Roman Catholic, and whatever might be the division of territory that should be adopted by the Northwest government. That is made entirely clear by the part of the clause relating to the school districts. What they wanted to provide for was the establishment of separate schools for the minority of the Northwest Territories, and to provide for separate schools in every district whether that minority might be represented either by a local minority or by a local majority. It would be absurd to think that Mr. Blake meant to give separate schools either to the Protestants or to the Roman Catholics of the Northwest, only when they happened to be a minority in a particular district. For instance, let us take the facts as they have developed. To-day the Roman Catholics in the two new provinces are represented for nine-tenths of their population by local majorities. Was it the intention of the Act of 1875, and would it be the intention of this legislation, that one-tenth of the Catholics of the Northwest Territories would be entitled to separate schools and that nine-tenths of the Catholics in the same Territories would be entitled to nothing at all? Does the leader of the opposition intend to say that in case the majority of the people of the Northwest were Catholic, the Protestants would be entitled to separate schools only when they were a minority, but would be subject to the Catholic regime everywhere they formed the majority? The conclusion would be absurd. I believe, the whole clause means that either the majority or the minority must be considered not in the light of whether they belong to this place or to that place, but whether they belong to the Protestant or Catholic religion. What is guaranteed is the right to the majority to chose what kind of schools they would have with respect to the division that has been adopted throughout the Dominion of Canada, so far as the separation of schools is concerned. If the Catholics are in the majority they can organize Catholic schools under the guidance of the state under the same limitation that is provided in the former portion of the section; and if the majority is Protestant the majority may organize either a Protestant school or a non-sectarian school, because it is well known that on this question Protestants are not a unit and that sometimes they prefer sectarian and sometimes non-sectarian schools.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend observes of course that the word 'majority' is used in connection with the district or portion of the Territories. Does he not think the word 'minority' is used in the same connection?

Mr. BOURASSA. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought he said the word minority meant the entire minority in the whole Territories.

Mr. BOURASSA. On the contrary——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Quite so. I want to ask my hon. friend another question. Suppose there was no majority of either Protestants or Roman Catholics in the district; suppose there was one-third Protestant, one-third Roman Catholic and one-third Jews and Mormons; does he not think that the word 'majority' in section 11 would enable the majority of inhabitants to establish a school?

Mr. BOURASSA. No, I do not think so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Oh, well——

Mr. BOURASSA. I am taking the intention of the legislator as stated in Mr. Blake's speech. As the Minister of Justice has just said, Mr. Blake referred to the case of Prince Edward Island where the discussion was as between sectarian schools and non-sectarian schools. The right to have sectarian schools is claimed by Catholics, and as the Prime Minister well stated in his first speech on this subject, the right to have sectarian schools has never been claimed by the Protestants of this country as a whole. It has been claimed as a preferable system by some Protestants, but it has never been claimed as a conscientious right by any unit of Protestants in this country nor by the Protestant majority of any part of the country; it has only been claimed by the Protestant minority of Quebec. The object of the clause, as I have stated was to provide for the rights of the total minority of the Territories, and therefore when it speaks of the majority and the minority of any particular district it must mean that the majority or the minority of that district belong either to the majority or the minority of the total population of the Territories. I therefore hold that the reference to the establishment of schools as the majority may think fit, must be interpreted in the same way as the separate schools mentioned in the second paragraph, just as the word majority must be interpreted in the same way as the word minority in the second part of the section; that is: that the majority may choose to have a sectarian school whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, or a non-sectarian school; and that the minority whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may secede from them and have a Protestant school if the minority is Protestant, and a Catholic school if the minority is Catholic. The Minister of Justice has referred to the ordinance of 1884, but if the leader of the opposition refers to the ordinance of 1885—which is in fact the first ordinance adopted in the Northwest Territories because the ordinance of 1884 has never been put in force—he will find that the idea was there indicated in the clearest way possible. There was to be established public schools, non-sectarian or sectarian, for the majority and separate schools for the minority of any particular district. If the majority of a district choose to establish a non-sectarian school, then the minority could separate and establish a separate school either Protestant or Roman Catholic. If the majority chose to establish a sectarian public school then the minority could secede. That was clearly the intention of the legislature of the Northwest when it provided a council of public instruction in two sections, leaving to the total council the superintendence of the non-sectarian public schools, and to the Catholic and Protestant sections respectively the conduct of the Catholic and Protestant public and separate schools. I am not disputing the legal opinion of the Minister of Justice or of the leader of the opposition, but it will be clearly seen from the discussion in 1875 that it was the intention to give to the majority of any particular district the right to establish such school as they thought fit and that that meant that they could establish a public school, either Protestant or Catholic. I fail to see that it meant that the power of the government to regulate both public and sectarian schools was abridged by that, and I do not see how by re-enacting that legislation we would create any other state of things than the state of things that existed up to the time the Northwest legislature endeavoured to infringe on the powers that were given to the minority by this parliament, as Sir John Thompson stated.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. STOCKTON. When the committee rose at six o'clock there was a somewhat informal discussion as to the meaning of section 11 of the Act of 1875. Might I ask the Minister of Justice to give his attention to it. It says:

> When, and so soon as any system of taxation shall be adopted in any district or portion of the Northwest Territories, the Lieutenant Governor, by and with the consent of the council or assembly, as the case may be, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect to education.

I pause for a moment upon these words, and it appears to me that they govern and to a certain extent interpret what follows:

> All necessary ordinances in respect to education, but it shall therein——

That is in the ordinances.

> —be always provided, that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Northwest Territories, or any lesser portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same may be known, may establish such schools therein as they may think fit.

Now what can that mean? That under the law the council passes the ordinances relating to education, and that all schools are established so far as the administration is concerned in accordance with the provisions of these ordinances and in accordance with the free will as the case may be of the trustees or the authorities in the particular districts. It says :

Shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect to education, but it shall therein be always provided, &c.

Therefore the management, the administration of the schools under that, if you go back one section, is in accordance with the ordinances under the good judgment and common sense of the trustees or the authorities for the time being, and not as the trustees or authorities for the time being may deem fit. It is under the control of the ordinances as passed under the authority of the law.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It seems to me that a good deal of unnecessary confusion has been imported into this discussion simply because we have ignored the historic conditions under which this legislation has been arrived at. If you take this law, the Act of 1875, or indeed any law that you have in the statutes whether of Quebec, of Ontario or Manitoba, if you take them by themselves, without having any reference whatever to the historic conditions which have necessitated that legislation, you are at once confronted by a mystery which seems to be insoluble, but if you take the history, the conditions which have made this legislation necessary, or if not necessary advisable, then it seems to me that the conclusion is very simple, and that you have at once the explanation of the difficulty that was presented this afternoon. First of all as to the main point of discussion of to-day, that is the difference between section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2. In order to examine them fully, let us come at the principle, let us look first at the law of 1875 incorporated in clause 16, No. 1.

Subject to the provisions of the said section 93, and in continuance of the principles heretofore sanctioned under the Northwest Territories Act, it is enacted that the legislature of the said province shall pass all necessary laws in respect of education, and that it shall therein always be provided (a) that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the said province or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name it is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessments and collection of rates therefor.

The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) very properly asked : What is the meaning of these words, that the ratepayers in the school district shall have the power to establish such schools therein as they think fit. These words are very broad, they must be qualified in some way, they must have some meaning. It cannot be meant that they can have such schools as in their own will or fancy are fit for them. There must be some qualification necessary to interpret the clause. Everybody will agree with this. And now you have the explanation under what immediately follows :

(b) That the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor.

You give to the minority the privilege of having separate schools when the majority in that district has had the privilege of establishing such schools as they think fit, and that privilege is given not to everybody, not to the Jews, as was suggested by the hon. member for Toronto this afternoon, not to the Mormons, but to either Protestants or Catholics.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the minority ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The minority has that privilege, not the Jews, this is not given to the Jews.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not refer to the minority schools, I was arguing on the majority of ratepayers.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Exactly. But the qualification comes in and applies in the same way to the majority as well as to the minority in this matter. The privilege is given to the minority, to a certain minority, that is to say to the Protestant or Catholic minority. There must be some reason for the difference. In the discussion which is going on to-day in certain parts of the country you often hear : But if you give that privilege to the minority, why not give it to the Jews, the Mormons and the Greek Church ? I am not concerned with these ; that is a matter for the local legislature ? but so far as this parliament is concerned, we have only to deal with the law as we find it, that is to say the privileges given to the Protestant or to the Catholic minority, not to any other. When this law was first established in the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario, and subsequently in the province of Manitoba, the great body of the Canadian population was divided between Catholics and Protestants. There were very few people of other denominations. There are more now, but at that time there were no denominations to be reckoned with except the great body of Protestants and the great body of Roman Catholics and the law was made for them. Now if you give the privilege to the minority whether it be Protestant or whether it be Catholic to secede from a school which has been established by the majority since the privilege is given to the Protestants or to the Catholics, it is because there must be in the school something offensive to the conscience of the Protestant or of the Catholic. You cannot conceive any reason for distinction and separation except for that. If the separation had been given to any other body than these religious bodies, you might say there was something else in the mind of the legislature, but as the legislature has provided to give that privilege only to the Protestant or Catholic it follows as a necessary consequence that this privilege is given where something is taught in the school is offensive to the conscience of the Roman Catholic or to the conscience of the Protestant. Let us take a concrete example. Here is a school established say by a Roman Catholic district in the province of Quebec; then their catechism will be taught, the Roman Catholic catechism, that is to say the Roman Catholic form of Christianity will be taught in that school. If there is a minority there composed say of Presbyterians, of that very fine body of men, who as they claim themselves with some pride, are fed on oatmeal and the shorter catechism, that naturally is very offensive to them, and they would have the right to secede. Take the converse proposition. Suppose there is in Quebec as there is in the eastern townships, a school where the Protestants are in the majority and then the shorter catechism is taught. That would be offensive to the Roman Catholic minority and there they would have the right to secede also. Take another case. Suppose there is a Protestant school where no religion is taught and there is a Roman Catholic minority there and they want to have religion taught, it is offensive to their conscience that no religious instruction should be given to their children: there again provision is made that they have the right to secede. There are only two kinds of education which can be given in a school, secular or religious. It is conceivable and easily conceivable that religious education which is given in a school may be offensive to the conscience either of the Catholic minority or the Protestant minority if there is such a minority in that school. But when you come to secular matters it is different. And yet, Sir, in the manner in which secular education may be given, there may be something offensive to the conscience of the minority. There can be only one way of teaching arithmetic or grammar, and that cannot offend the conscience of any one, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic. But every one knows that it is not so in regard to the teaching of history, for instance. History may be taught in a manner which will be offensive to the Protestant minority or to the Catholic minority. There are some text books of history the truth of which would not be admitted by Protestants, and there are some the truth of which would not be admitted by Roman Catholics. Under such circumstances the minority may have cause for offence in the manner in which even secular education is given, and in that case provision is made that the minority may secede. Now, I need not tell the House, for it is known to everybody, that the Roman Catholic church has always sought to have for herself the privilege of secular education as well as religious education; and when the Act of 1875 was passed, the majority and the minority were given the privilege of having the education of their respective churches in the schools if they saw fit. That law, legally or illegally—I shall not discuss this point at this moment, but I shall do it later on—was interpreted by the legislature as conveying to the minority the right of having a separate organization for the tuition of their own children. There were two systems of education established—a system for the Protestants and a system for the Roman Catholics. This condition existed for some years, but it was a cause of great friction, and it was finally changed by the legislature, which passed an Act taking to the civil power the teaching of secular education and leaving religious education altogether apart. Now, this was a grievance to the minority. If you look at the correspondence which took place on this subject, you will find that the removal of the peculiar arrangement which existed, and which permitted Roman Catholics to have the organization of their own schools, was the grievance which was felt by them with the greatest acuteness. But the legislature thought otherwise. They were persevering in their views, and they would not yield upon that point. Let me now explain the law which has been substituted for the law of 1875. As I said a moment ago, the characteristic feature of the present law, which was enacted to take the place of the law of 1875, is this, that the legislature has separated absolutely religious education from secular education. Secular education has been made by the legislature the sole privilege of the trustees in every district. Under the ordinance, chapter 29, which contains a new clause in substitution of the old law, the state does not pretend to have the slightest control of religious education. At half past three in the afternoon the secular education is at an end, and then the trustees can come in and have whatever sort of religious education they desire. It may be the shorter catechism, it may be the Roman Catholic doctrine, it may be any of the doctrines of Protestants. But up to the hour of half-past three in the afternoon the state insists upon having the control of the schools absolutely—insists upon having all the teachers certificated by the state, insists on having all the inspection done by the state, insists on having all the text books selected by the state. Whether the schools are separate or public, the state has absolute control of them to-day. Now, this is a grievance on the part of the Roman Catholic minority. They have always thought that they should have the control of their schools for secular education as well as for religious education. But a question now arises, which I will not discuss at this moment, but I will do so later on, whether or not the old law of 1875 is still in force, or whether the new ordinance, which has done away with the control by the minority of the secular part of education, is in force. Now, we are asked, what is the difference between clause 16, No. 1, and clause 16, No. 2 ? The difference is simply this, that in clause 16, No. 1, the law of 1875 was enacted, giving to the minority—I suppose the Roman Catholic minority—the control over secular education as well as the control over religious education, whereas the new clause brings into force the existing law of the territories, the ordinance of 1901, by which the state has absolute control over the secular part of education, and the people have control simply of the religious part of education from half-past three in the afternoon. This is the absolute difference which exists between the old clause and the new clause. I have for my part agreed to the new clause 16, and in so doing I know that I have restricted my fellow-religionists in regard to some of the rights which they think they have at this moment. I shall explain in due time why I agreed to do so. But my duty at present is to state what the difference is, and there it is in a few words. If this law passes, as we think it ought, the legislature will have full control over the secular part of education, and the people will have full control over the religious part. The legislature does not attempt to control the religious part of education ; but if the old law had remained in force, the legislature would have surrendered its control over the secular part as well as over the religious part of education. Now, I think I have made very clear what is the difference between section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2. The motives which have influenced us in agreeing to that change I shall explain at the proper time. I do not propose to do so to-day, for this reason. I look at the House before me, and I see it absolutely disorganized. There are few members from the Northwest Territories, if there are any, present ; and as they are most interested in this question, I want to discuss it in their presence. At the present moment I merely explain the difference between the two sections.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will my right hon. friend be good enough to cite the words in the Act of 1875 which, in his opinion, give the control of secular education to the minority ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The words are there in substance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I want them in the statute.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman cannot have them in the statute if they are not there ; but I have given the interpretation as we understand it—'May establish such schools therein as they think fit.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is majority schools.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The minority schools are also provided for : That the minority of the ratepayers therein, may establish separate schools therein.' So I can only emphasize what I said a moment ago. The right to establish a separate school in a district which has been established by a majority is not given to a minority of lawyers, farmers, mechanics or any profession, but is given to a religious body—to the Protestants or the Catholics, nobody else. If that privilege is given to the minority of Catholics or Protestants, what can the reason be ? It must be that they are not satisfied with the teaching which is given in those schools of the majority, because they believe in them their consciences are oppressed. I cannot see any other interpretation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand the right hon. gentleman, his view is that these words give the right of complete control over school education : 'The minority of ratepayers therein, whether Protestants or Roman Catholics, may establish separate schools therein.' That, in his opinion, gave complete control over school education.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No. What I say is this, that if the minority are not satisfied with the manner in which education is given in those schools, they have the right to secede. In other words, the right of secession, when it is given to a religious body, can have only one raison d'être, and that is that the conscience of the minority is oppressed. There can be no other reason.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not controverting anything the right hon. gentleman has said, but am merely endeavouring to understand his argument. He says there are some words in the Act of 1875 which give the minority an absolute right to the control of the education in their separate schools, and I have read him the only words in the Act of 1875 from which that right could be deduced : 'The minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestants or Roman Catholics, may establish separate schools therein.' It is upon those words the right hon. gentleman must depend.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Exactly the same words are contained in section 16, No. 2.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very well ; but my hon. friend has forgotten that if in section 16, No. 2, these words are found; there are also other words found in chapter 29, and these words are :

No school shall be organized, whether separate or public, unless it be under the supervision of the province or the authority created by the province.

There is a board of instruction which shall decide what books that separate school shall use, which shall give certificates to teachers, and so on; and, therefore, in section 16, No. 2, it is stated:

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories passed in the year 1901.

To-day, under the ordinances, though there are separate schools, the people who have formed those separate schools have not the right to select their own books or teachers or supervise their own schools as they did before. Many of the rights which existed before the ordinances of 1892 are denied them, and therefore there is all the difference in the world between clause 16, No. 1, and clause 16, No. 2.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If those words have the construction which the right hon. gentleman claims for them in the Act of 1875, it inevitably follows that they have the same meaning in the legislation introduced by section 16, No. 2. Those words in the Act of 1875 are: 'The minority of ratepayers therein, whether Protestants or Roman Catholics, may establish separate schools therein.' In section 16, No. 2, the words are: 'The minority of ratepayers in any district, whether Protestants or Roman Catholics, may establish separate schools therein and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor, and that in such case the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessment of such rates as they impose upon themselves with respect thereto.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is from chapter 29.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These words are exactly identical.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If they have the meaning attributed to them in the Act of 1875, surely they must have the same meaning in clause 16, No. 2.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We will see about that. I do not know for what reason you can differentiate, but I would like to have some authority from the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice other than that which has come to hand up to the present, to convince me that the words 'separate schools' have any such technical meaning as has been given them by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice. The term 'separate schools' in the statute of Canada has no technical meaning. It means exactly what the statute says. It means that the minority may establish separate schools. The right hon. gentleman says that the right to establish separate schools implies the complete control of the education given in those schools. It is sufficient to show that the Act of 1875 does not declare anyhing of the kind. It simply establishes one principle, namely, the principle of separation. But my right hon. friend, when pressed upon that point, says that he relies upon the interpretation made by the territorial government when it enacted the ordinances under this legislation. He spoke of confusing the issue. There has been no confusion of the issue such as he himself created when he made that remark. There was nothing in the Act of 1875 to prevent the Territories from establishing separate schools of that character if they saw fit, nor was there anything in that Act to impose upon the territorial legislature the necessity of establishing such schools. In other words, such wide powers were given by the Act of 1875 to the Territories that they could establish denominational schools if they saw fit. There was nothing to restrict them, but neither was there anything in the Act of 1875 to impose the obligation of establishing denominational schools. The term used is not 'denominational schools,' but the right hon. gentleman has thus interpreted it. The term used is 'separate schools' and separate schools only. I see that my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) is impatient. There is evidently something on his mind which troubling him.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. In our legislation, is not 'separate schools' synonymous with denominational schools? In section 93 of the British North America Act we see the term 'separate schools' employed once and the term 'denominational schools' also employed once, thereby showing that they mean the same thing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Supreme Court of New Brunswick must have been very much astray, if that is the case.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I think that was the opinion of the Privy Council.

Mr. STOCKTON. That case was confirmed by the Privy Council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the hon. member will tell us why the term 'separate schools' is used instead of 'denominational schools' in section 16, No. 2, if they are equivalent to each other.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. It is used because they are taken as synonymous.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then would my hon. friend support a motion to restore the words 'denominational schools,' if both terms mean the same?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. That will depend on the motion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That shows how very sincere the hon. gentleman is in the opinion he has put forward. However, I was dealing with the right hon. gentleman and not with the hon. member who has just interrupted me. 'The minority of ratepayers therein, whether Protestants or Roman Catholics, may establish separate schools therein.' That is the language of the Act of 1875. The word 'separate' has no technical meaning, as I have pointed out. It is not denominational schools but separate schools. A distinction has been drawn in the courts between those. The word 'separate' simply implies separation, but the right hon. gentleman sees a great deal more in it. And why? Because the territorial legislature established a dual system of schools—clerical schools and public schools; but surely the most cursory glance at this Act of 1875 should inform him that it was perfectly competent for the territorial legislature to do that, but not necessary that it should do it. It was perfectly competent for that legislature to establish a dual system of schools. He speaks of interpretation, but we cannot get any aid from the Territorial legislation, because the Territorial legislature had no power to interpret this enactment. The ordinances of 1884 and 1887 were measures which the Territorial government passed, and which were within its powers as defined in the Act of 1875. They cannot be regarded as interpretation of that Act because they might or might not go to the full extent of the power which it conferred. The situation seems to me so absolutely plain that it is almost impossible to argue it. They had the power to establish clerical schools and public school, if they saw fit. It appears they did so by the ordinance of 1884. And, because they did so under the full powers given them, it is said they interpreted the Act of 1875 in the sense that that Act made it necessary for them to do this. According to that argument, you would say that because parliament could pass clause 16, No. 1, having the power to do so; therefore, there is a constitutional obligation on this parliament to pass that clause. It is merely necessary to state the proposition to confute it. Then, come down, in the end, to the expression 'separate school' which the right hon. gentleman defines as having a certain meaning, for which definition he has no other warrant than the interpretation—as he calls it—of the Territorial government in 1884. And merely to speak of that is to indicate in the clearest manner that no such so-called interpretation could have any effect. Suppose some one were to go to court to-morrow and contend that the Act of 1875 made it necessary to establish a dual system of schools in the Territories; and the judges should examine the Act and declare that they found no expression of that kind in it; and counsel should answer: 'Ah, but the Territorial legislature, under this Act, did establish a dual system.' Any man who would make that argument before a court, it seems to me, would not favourably impress the court; the argument would be laughed to scorn. You must distinguish between the power given by the Act of 1875, and the restriction imposed by the Act of 1875 with respect to the establishment of separate schools. There was power, I repeat, to establish a dual system of schools, but there was no obligation to do so. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) goes back to the expression 'separate schools' for his sole warrant that under the Act of 1875 the schools were to be controlled, so far as their teaching is concerned, by the particular body that established them. I cannot see any room for such an argument. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman desires to make some observation before I deal with another point.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No; go on.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This Act of 1875 must have been of a most extraordinary character, if we are to take the two interpretations placed upon it to-day by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who have spoken. According to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) it meant, in the first place, that the Territorial legislature, although it received the power to make ordinances with respect to education, was to have no control over education, but that the majority in each district was to make the ordinances, the laws, the regulations with regard to that district. Therefore, you might have not merely five or ten, but forty or fifty different systems of laws in the Territories under the provisions of the Act of 1875. It seems to me it is not necessary to mass arguments to refute an interpretation of that kind. And then my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) declared further that the majority of the ratepayers who were to establish what might be called the majority school was a religious majority and not a majority of the ratepayers. That is, the hon. gentleman's argument would mean that in a district in which there were 2,000 Protestants, 2,400 Roman Catholics, and 500 of other religious denominations, it would be impossible to establish schools, for the simple reason that there would be no religious majority. Or take another illustration: Suppose there were 2,000 Protestants, 2,400 Roman Catholics, and 500 of other denominations. According to the argument of the hon. member for Labelle it would be impossible for 2,000 Protestants and 1,000 Roman Catholics to unite as a majority for the purpose of establishing schools. You could not, by any combination have a school established in such a district. Will any hon. gentleman in this House, whether a lawyer or not, believe for a moment that such an interpretation could be placed upon the statute? Why, absurdity could not go further. Under the law the majority of ratepayers in a district can establish such schools as they think fit, and it would not make the slightest difference whether they were all Protestants or partly Protestants and partly Roman Catholics; or whether they had among them Jews and Mormons—they would be a majority for the establishment of a school. And, when these schools had been established the minority could establish separate schools. But the word 'separate schools' to my mind does not impart anything more than separation; it does not involve the idea that the separate schools so established should be absolutely under the control of the persons who established them, any more than is the majority school. I do not think that any such result could follow without a fuller and more definite expression of that intention than we find in the Act of 1875.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has travelled very far afield, but, for my part, I do not wish to depart from the point he raised this afternoon as to the difference between section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2. My hon. friend has gone back to that old heresy and fallacy of his that there is no constitutional obligation upon this parliament to pass this legislation. I shall not touch further upon that now, though I may exchange some words with him upon it later on. But let me show him again, since he has declined to see it, so far, the difference between section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2. Under section 16, No. 1, which practically re-enacted the law of 1875, there was no restriction whatever upon the power of the minority to establish such schools as they thought fit. So far as I know there was no restriction whatever. My hon. friend says that in that case, you could have many different laws for different districts. Sir, that would have been the legitimate and logical conclusion of the law. And, in order to obviate that in the Territories, they did what has been done in other places—they provided for a board of education which was separated into two sections, one to legislate for the Catholics and the other to legislate for the Protestants.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the right hon. gentleman permit me a question?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the statute conferred the absolute right to do that, how could the Board of Education interfere with them?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the laws which are meant to be interpreted by school trustees were always interpreted by able lawyers, perhaps many things would not be done which are done; but unfortunately these are often interpreted by the man on the street who does the best he can according to his knowledge. The legislature of that time thought it advisable to have two boards of education; they thought differently afterwards and abolished them, whether they acted within their right or not. Suppose the Act of 1875 did not authorize that to be done. After it had been in force for a number of years it was withdrawn, and it was held to be a grievance, and that grievance has been felt ever since. My hon. friend is familiar with the correspondence which took place between Archbishop Taché and others when this law was withdrawn in 1892, they made it the subject of complaint. My hon. friend might think that if the archbishop had been as good a lawyer as he is, he might have concluded that they had no right under the law of 1875 to this extra board. But they thought they had. Now we have enacted the law of 1875 again, so that they may not begin again. Although I have great respect for the opinion of my hon. friend, there are other lawyers besides himself in this House and out of it, who differ with him, and who believe that the establishment of the second board and its organization was a legitimate consequence of the law of 1875. And as we are not here to legislate simply for fancy purposes, but for useful purposes, we desire, in order to give satisfaction to the people, to pass such laws here as may not be exposed to the quibbles of lawyers in future years. Let us come now to the practical part of the case. What was the legitimate consequence of the law of 1875? If we take chapter 29, we find that the power to establish in a school district such a school as they think fit, is taken away from them. My hon. friend did not quote that, but it is a qualification of what he did quote, he only quoted section 41. I now quote from section 29:

> The minority of ratepayers in any district, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish a separate school therein, and in such case the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate school, shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

Then with a tone of triumph the hon. gentleman exclaimed: Is not that the same thing as we had before? Is there any difference? Is it not the same as the Act of 1875? I say no, it is not the same thing, and the reason is because there is something in this clause 29 which the hon. gentleman did not quote. It is this:

> There shall be a department of the public service of the Territories called the Depatment of Education, over which the member of the executive council appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council under the seal of the Territories to discharge the functions of the commissioner of education for the time being, shall preside.

The department shall have the control and management of all kindergarten schools, public and separate schools, normal schools, teachers' institutes and the education of deaf, deaf mute and blind persons.

Therefore, the board of education has control over separate schools. And what has the board power to do ?

The commissioner, with the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, shall have power to make regulations for the department.

For the classification, organization, government, examination and inspection of all schools hereinbefore mentioned.

That is to say, of public schools and separate schools.

For the construction, furnishing and care of school buildings and the arrangement of school premises.

For the examination, licensing and grading of teachers, and for the examination of persons who may desire to enter professions, or who may wish certificates of having completed courses of study in any school.

For a teachers' reading course and teachers' institutes and conventions.

To authorize text and reference books for the use of the pupils and teachers in all schools hereinbefore mentioned.

Then my hon. friend quoted section 41 as giving the same privileges to separate schools as given under the law of 1875. My hon. friend sees there is a great difference. Under these ordinances the minority have no longer the power to establish such schools as they see fit, they may only establish such schools as the Board of Public Education sees fit. Therefore there is a great difference. When it comes to the matter of religious instruction, however, here is what the law says :

No religious instruction except as hereinafter provided shall be permitted in the school of any district from the opening of such school until one-half hour previous to its closing in the afternoon, after which time any such instruction permitted or desired by the board may be given.

Then when it comes to half-past three, in every school, whether public or separate, the board may provide for such religious instruction as they want. The state does not follow education beyond that point. The state concerns itself only with secular education. Therfore I say again, section 29 has made a difference in the law of 1875. And here again I say that my fellow co-religionists have made a great sacrifice. It may not perhaps be a great sacrifice of power. In his opinion they may not have made such a sacrifice, but in their own interpretation of the law, they made a sacrifice, and therefore it is that we are asking for this safeguard to our co-religionists.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like the contention of the right hon. gentleman made perfectly clear. He has referred to the right of the majority to establish such schools therein as they may think fit, going back to the argument made by the Minister of Justice this afternoon. He has also referred to the Act of 1875 as possibly providing that there should be a separate board of education, or a separate board of control. Now what does he mean ? Let us not confine ourselves to vague expressions—what does he mean? Does he mean that a majority of the ratepayers in any district could, under the Act of 1875, make laws absolutely with respect to schools to be established in that district, making regulations with regard to pupils, and who should be admitted? Could they establish religious tests ? Could they make provision as to text-books ? Could they declare that certain children should not be admitted to the schools ? Could they do everything that is embraced in the expression 'pass all necessary ordinances in respect to education'? Or does my hon. friend mean that under the Act of 1875 majorities could not do this, but that there was to be a separate board of education, a separate board of control in respect of separate schools? The two propositions are absolutely distinct. We have already had one this afternoon. My right hon. friend, while apparently adhering to that puts forward another view as to a separate board of education. What is the position of the government with regard to that when they come to define the difference between section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2, because it is a very important point.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The position of the government is this: that the minority claim that under the Act of 1875 they had the right to select their own text-books. They claim also, as the correspondence of record will show, that they have a right to separate school boards. They have that or they have not, and in order to make it absolutely sure, we have abandoned that clause and taken the other.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I asked my right hon. friend one question and he slipped away very conveniently to another. The words 'as they may think fit' do not occur in respect to minority separate schools. Does not the right hon. gentleman remember the section ? I asked him a very distinct question as to the meaning of the words 'such schools therein as they may think fit.' These words do not occur in connection with the provision for minority schools, but they do occur in connection with the provision for majority schools, about which the right hon. gentleman was speaking. When I ask him about that, he leaves that part of the section and goes to the next part of the section, which does not contain these words at all.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may tell my hon. friend, without being offensive to him, that I knew these words were not to be found in the second part of the section. I read:

> That a majority may establish such schools therein as they think fit . . . the minority may establish separate schools therein.

The words are not reproduced in the second part of the section, but in my estimation it is a distinction which is unworthy of my hon. friend to say that the minority under such circumstances would not have the same right as the majority. If the majority has the right to establish such schools as they think fit, the minority has that same right also, though it is not expressed in so many words.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does the right hon. gentleman then conclude as to the meaning of the words 'such schools as they may think fit'?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I say that in the opinion of the minority the words 'as they may think fit' gave them the power to select their own text-books. That has been taken away from them. Their contention was right or it was wrong, it was legal or it was illegal, but whether it was legal or illegal they thought they had it, and in order not to create the impression on their mind we have taken that away and put in the other.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman does not contend there is any real distinction; he only says that the minority thought there was a distinction.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Let us put it that way if you want to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, after all, there is no effective argument that there is any real distinction between section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2, but that a certain class of our citizens (the minority in the Northwest) had a certain opinion, and therefore there is a distinction between section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2. If it comes down to that; if that is the argument, it seems to me that there is not very much need of discussing it further. If the government take that position, they simply abandon the contention that there is any real distinction between section 16, No. 1, and section 16, No. 2, and confine themselves absolutely to the position that certain of our citizens who are interested in this question had that opinion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If that is not a good argument for my hon. friend, it is a good argument for me, and, I hope, for many other members of this House. We should not legislate here in order to convey to men the impression that they are given bread when they are given a stone. If the minority for the last fourteen years have thought that they had been deprived of their right, but in order to have peace and harmony they abandoned that right and agreed to live under a system which has given satisfaction to everybody, it is, I think, a good reason why we should have no equivocation about it; why we should know where we are, and legislate accordingly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That would be an excellent comparison, except that the change was made, not at the instance of the minority, but at the instance of the majority.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, because if the majority and the minority had not agreed to that, there would be the same thing as occurred elsewhere, and which we do not want a repetition of here; we do not want to have another Manitoba school question, we had enough of one.

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not hope, after the discussion we have had, to shed any new light on the interpretation of section 11 of the Act of 1875, but perhaps I may be permitted to give the committee my interpretation of that section. The House is face to face with two interpretations; one given by the leader of the opposition and concurred in by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), and the other interpretation given by the Minister of Justice this afternoon. I shall endeavour to state briefly my reasons for adopting the opinion of the Minister of Justice. The interpreation given by the leader of the opposition and by his hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is what I would term a strictly narrow, judicial interpretation of the statute. It is the interpretation which a court of justice might give, and I think I am stating the case fairly when I say that the leader of the opposition informed the House that his interpretation is that which would be given by a judge if that section were brought to a court to be interpreted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What other interpretation should one put upon it?

Mr. BELCOURT. Permit me to say that in my opinion the canons which should be adopted by parliament in interpreting a statute differ in many respects from the canons which govern a court of justice. The interpretation by a judge is according to the language of the statute and that only; a judge does not look to the extraneous or surrounding circumstances which existed at the time the law was passed; a judge would simply interpret the language to the best of his ability according to the dictionary and according to jurisprudence. Parliament, in interpreting a statute, must and should adopt a much wider view; parliament, I submit, must, in interpreting a statute, look at the conditions as they were at the time the law was passed; parliament must look at the intention of the legislature which passed that law; it must look at past history; it must look at every circumstance which can in any way throw any light upon that law. We all know that the Act of 1875 was passed somewhat hurriedly; we know that section 11 was introduced after the other provisions of the statute had been discussed by the House. A subject of great importance, such as the question of education, was treated in a very short section and in very few words. It was passed with apparently no contentious discussion in the House; it was passed, as I remember, unanimously, and there was no discussion whatever as to the meaning and effect of the terms used. We know that in 1875, when this law was passed, it was but a few years after the passage of the British North America Act. It is a matter of history that in Canada so far as legislation is concerned the meaning of the words 'separate schools' is synonymous to 'denominational schools'; in the British North America Act the same sense was attached to it as to the words 'denominational schools.' We had only two kinds of schools in Canada at that time, viz., the public school and the separate school. Separate schools were introduced in Ontario in 1860, and they were then intended to be, and have ever since been, denominational schools. So it is in the province of Quebec; the separate schools of the province of Quebec are to-day denominational schools and so they are in Ontario. I appeal to any member in this House to point to me a single instance in any province of the Dominion where there is a separate school which is not, to all intents and purposes, a denominational school.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood that a great many members on the other side of the House have alleged that the separate schools in the Northwest are not denominational schools.

Mr. BELCOURT. As I understood it, the argument of gentlemen on this side is that the school which it is now intended to have under clause 16, No. 2, will be non-denominational schools. I never understood any one on this side of the House to say that the separate schools which existed under the dual system put into force by the Northwest Territories was not a denominational school.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I mean the separate schools that are there to-day.

Mr. BELCOURT. So far as I understand it, the schools existing in the Territories under the Act of 1875 and the ordinance of 1884 were, to all intents and purposes, denominational schools.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman take the ground that the separate schools in the Northwest to-day under the present schools in the Northwest Territories, at all times denominational schools.

Mr. BELCOURT. No, I do not, I did not say that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the hon. gentleman said that you could not have separate schools which were not denominational.

Mr. BELCOURT. I said that the separate schools of Canada, whether in the east or the west, the north or the south, have been, perhaps with the exception of the present schools in the Northwest Territories, at all times denominational schools.

Mr. FOSTER. In Quebec are the Protestant schools which are separate schools denominational schools?

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not know what they are de facto, but they are de jure. They can be made denominational schools to all intents and purposes under the law.

Mr. FOSTER. According to the argument of my hon. friend it is the de facto and not the de jure that ought to rule. My difficulty is that you have a Protestant school, a minority school; I suppose it does not often happen that that minority school is not made up of different denominations of Protestants. If you have Baptists and Presbyterians and Methodists, making up the minority forming a school that is a separate Protestant school, how are you going to make that a denominational school? Because the tenets of these three denominations are different. You could not teach the Presbyterian catechism because the Methodists do not like it.

Mr. BELCOURT. As far as I understand the legislation of this country, whether it has been Dominion or provincial legislation, denominational schools have been confined to two classes of His Majesty's subjects, that is the Protestants on the one hand and the Catholics on the other. That is the only distinction, that is the only division or separation which any of our laws has ever contemplated and I say when the Confederation Act of 1867 was framed it was—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That may be very true, but still would not what has just been suggested by the hon. member for North Toronto prevent the Protestant schools from being denominational in the sense which the hon. gentleman has mentioned?

Mr. BELCOURT. No, I do not think so, because the words 'denominational schools' is used in a general sense as far as Protestants are concerned. My hon. friend must admit that the expression 'denominational schools' was a distinction between Protestant and Catholic schools, exclusively, and I say all through our legislation they have been treated as such. Nobody has ever thought in speaking of denominational schools of attempting to give the Mormons, the Doukhobors, the Galicians or any other sect, separate schools, it has always been a separation as between Protestants and Catholics only.

Let us look at what were the facts, what are the historical facts in connection with school legislation in Canada. At the time the British North America Act came into operation there were practically only two religious sects in Canada; there were practically only Catholics and Protestants at the time the Act of 1875 was put in force with reference to the Northwest Territories. There were practically only two religious denominations in the Northwest Territories, Catholics and Protestants. It was never attempted to make any provision, never sought to make any provision which would confer any right on others than these two denominations. In 1875, as I have said a moment ago, there were two religious denominations only, This afternoon in order to make their argument, the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) conjured up the case of the Galicians and Doukhobors, Mormons and Jews and other religious denominations, and other denominations. Well, I think that is introducing into the interpretation of section 11 of the Act of 1875 an element which should not be introduced at all. We must look at legislation in order to interpret it properly in the light of the facts which are contemporaneous with that legislation, not the historical facts which came into existence 35 or 40 years afterwards. If this clause were taken in court to-morrow to be interpreted, I would ask the member for North Toronto, I would ask the leader of the opposition, if any lawyer would be allowed to argue that the majority mentioned in section 11 must be interpreted in the light of the extraneous facts which have been introduced this afternoon, in the light of the fact that there are to-day Mormons, Jews, and Galicians. Surely not.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the law of 1875 exist simply for the year 1875?

Mr. BELCOURT. Not at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Or for all years and all conditions? And not for each year which the law is in force.

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not think that is a difficult question to answer.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not a difficult question to answer but any judge or court in interpreting the law of 1875 would interpret it for 1905 under different conditions. How is the interpretation going to go? Is it going to go according to the conditions of the year 1875 or to the conditions of 1905?

Mr. BELCOURT. That is exactly the point I am trying to make. I submit as a matter of sound parliamentary interpretation of law, that in the interpretation of a law by parliament and not by a court of justice——

Mr. FOSTER. I am speaking of a court of justice.

Mr. BELCOURT. A court of justice would not look at the circumstances of to-day or of 30 years ago.

Mr. FOSTER. Then my hon. friend has no argument at all.

Mr. BELCOURT. I have no argument? That is a mere affirmation. I am going to make an argument and if I cannot impress my hon. friend perhaps I can impress somebody else.

Mr. FOSTER. I will try to be impressed.

Mr. BELCOURT. So far as the judge is concerned, I quite admit that the hon. member for North Toronto who took such pains this afternoon to say he was not going to argue as a lawyer, but as a parliamentarian or common sense man, argued it from the most narrow, contracted view that any lawyer could take.

Mr. FOSTER. That shows that the law and common sense go side by side.

Mr. BELCOURT. My hon. friend is well known for his ability to whittle, whittle, whittle things down to the very finest point, and when he says that he has not the legal ability or acumen to argue as a lawyer he is doing himself great injustice. I repeat that this Act must be interpreted not in the way a judge might possibly interpret it, in a narrow, judical way, but in a large, broad, what I would call an equitable way. Parliament to-day should look at the intention of parliament in 1875; it should look at the conditions of things at that time and I have no hesitation in saying, so far as I am concerned, that section 11 of the Act of 1875 contemplated and intended to give the Northwest Territories a dual system of education. That it contemplated the erection there on the one hand of Protestant denominational schools and on the other hand of Roman Catholic denominational schools. I submit that the words:

> That a majority may establish such schools therein as they may think fit.

—give the people of the Northwest Territories where they are a minority either Catholic or Protestant the right to establish according to their own religious belief, schools of their own faith according to their own views.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would my hon. friend——

Mr. BELCOURT. I was coming to that. My hon. friend was going to tell me that would be inconsistent with the first portion of the section.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, I was not, I was going simply to ask whether or not the hon. gentleman concurred in the view of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) that the majority mentioned in that part of the clause is a religious majority?

Mr. BELCOURT. Quite so, that is my view.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well then he said: You are not to consider Mormons or the possibility that Mormons and Jews and inhabitants of different religious belief from either Protestant or Catholics, may affect the situation. But if it is a religious majority we know we have in portions of the Northwest Territories, a considerable number of Mormons. For example, what will you do where you have say 2,000 Mormons, 1,000 Protestants, and 1,000 Roman Catholics? What will you do about establishing a school? What I desire to know is, does that condition under the Act of 1875 prevent the establishment of a school section at all?

Mr. BELCOURT. My answer to that is this, that the Mormons and the Galicians and every other religious sect outside of the Roman Catholics and Protestants have nothing whatever to do with the question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I see.

Mr. BELCOURT. That they are outside of it altogether.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no law for them?

Mr. BELCOURT. There is no denominational school law for them. I am speaking of the law of 1875, interpreting that law, and I say the law of 1875 as well as the Confederation Act, 1867, did not assume to bother itself with any other religious sect but these two. That is my argument, I may be wrong, but surely that is very plain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Suppose for example you had in a school section 1,000 Roman Catholics, 500 Protestants, and 2,000 Mormons. In my hon. friend's view of the law the 1,000 Roman Catholics would be the majority mentioned in section 11. He would disregard the Mormons or the Jews altogether.

Mr. BELCOURT. Certainly. That is my view, and that seems to have been at all times in our history the only view which received the consideration of parliament. In 1867, at the time of the Confederation Act, we were not worried over any class but Roman Catholics and Protestants. There was no attempt made at that time, and so far as I know there has been no attempt made at any time or anywhere in Canada, to pass legislation conferring any special right on any other religious denomination than those two.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. May I ask my hon. friend a question? Does he know the position of the Jews in regard to schools in the province of Quebec?

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Well, they are under the control of the Protestant Council of Public Instruction.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They have taken their choice.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Yes, they have taken their choice, but that proves that the law provided for only the two classes, Protestants and Catholics.

Mr. BELCOURT. That is a fact which must be apparent to everybody. Legislatures have never at any time in Canada provided for separate education except with reference to these two denominations; and if we bear that in mind, we must come to the conclusion that the only object of section 11 of the Act of 1875 was to make legislation to cover those two cases. Now, what does the law say? It says that the majority in a district may establish such schools therein as they think fit. Take the case submitted to me by the hon. leader of the opposition. If there are 1,000 Roman Catholics and 500 Protestants in a district —I take no note of the others, because it seems to me they do not enter into the account—the 1,000 Catholics who are in the majority will establish such schools as they think fit. The next paragraph of the same section provides for the establishment of a Protestant separate school. It may be said that this interpretation would be in conflict with the power conferred upon the legislature of the territory to make regulations and ordinances in respect to education. That is an objection which evidently must be met, and the way in which I meet that objection is this. I say that the Act of 1875 intended that there should be a dual system of schools in the Northwest Territories, either Catholic or Protestant, and that the legislature should be given the power to make necessary ordinances in respect to education, subject to and within the other provisions of section 11. That is, where a majority of Catholics wish to establish a school of their own, the ordinances and regulations which the legislature of the territory is given the power to make, would have to be consonant with the religious belief of that majority. That that was what was intended is evidenced by the fact that the first legislation which was passed by the Northwest Territories to put the law of 1875 into operation established a dual board, having control, one of Roman Catholic schools and the other of Protestant schools. It seems to me that we are beside the question when we import into the interpretation of section 11, elements which at that time did not enter into the contemplation of parliament, and which should not to-day. Now, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition argued this afternoon that we on this side of the House were wrong in assuming that section 11 created an obligation which ought to be respected to-day. My hon. friend argued that because in 1886 we who speak French and who want to continue to speak French had allowed (but not without protest) the abolition of the French language in the Northwest Territories, we should be willing to-day to consent to the abolition of religious instruction in the schools. I think that my hon. friend will on reflection admit that that is a rather curious argument. Is it because the Roman Catholic French Canadians of the Northwest have been deprived of the right to teach French in their schools that they must also be deprived of the right to have religious instruction in their schools? Is it because the lamb has been shorn of half his wool, that he must be compelled to give up the rest? That is a curious sort of argument. So far as I am concerned, I have no hesitation whatever in adopting the interpretation put on section 11 by the Minister of Justice to-day. I say that under the Act of 1875 the majority in the Northwest Territories, whether Catholic or Protestant, had the right to establish their own schools as they might think fit; and that there was to all intents and purposes established by that Act in the Territories a dual system of schools, to the same extent and in the same manner that that system was established in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec before confederation and as they now then exist and are maintained. If I am right in my interpretation of section 11, it follows as a necessary corollary, that the distinction between clause 16, No. 1 and clause 16, No. 2 is very evident. It is quite plain to me, speaking as a Roman Catholic and a French Canadian, that by clause 16, No. 2 we have given up something which we certainly were entitled to under the original clause 16, No. 1 and under the Act of 1875. If the Act of 1875 is still law to-day, and I believe it is, we are entitled in the Northwest Territories to a system of separate schools as a matter of right, not merely for the purpose of giving half an hour or an hour of religious instruction, but we are entitled to the absolute control of our schools. I submit that not only parliament, but even any court of justice should give that interpretation to the Act of 1875. So far as parliament is concerned, I think we have something more to do than to give a narrow and contracted interpretation to that Act. I think it is the duty of every member of this House to inquire and find out for himself what was the intention of parliament at that time—to look at the extraneous and surrounding circumstances in order to determine what that intention was and what the interpretation should be. I do not think it should be circumscribed or narrowed down to the circumstances which exist to-day; but we should go back to the circumstances as they existed at the time the Act of 1875 was passed and interpret the law accordingly.

Mr. BELCOURT.

Mr. STOCKTON. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat has given expression to some views with respect to interpretation which have somewhat astonished me. Section 11 of the Act of 1875 says that the majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Northwest Territories may establish schools. As I understand the interpretation put upon that by my hon. friend, you have to eliminate from these words 'the majority of the ratepayers,' all who cannot properly come under the denomination of Protestants or Roman Catholics; therefore Doukhobors, Jews, Galicians and Mormons would not be included in that category. I think that is the argument of my hon. friend.

Mr. BELCOURT. That is quite right.

Mr. STOCKTON. Then, if we have a district in which the people are all Jews, for instance, the parliament of this country must entirely ignore that class of people, and you cannot have any education there. Under the argument of my hon. friend you cannot institute a school system.

Mr. BELCOURT. I did not argue that. I did not say that these people were to go without education.

Mr. STOCKTON. How will they get it if they cannot establish a school system of their own?

Mr. BELCOURT. They are not entitled to schools of their own. They can get their education either in Protestant or Catholic schools.

Mr. STOCKTON. That is not the argument of my hon. friend. He said that the majority means either Protestant or Roman Catholic, and that you could not establish a public school except by a majority which should be Roman Catholic or Protestant.

Mr. BELCOURT. I did not say that.

Mr. STOCKTON. I am glad he is taking it back because he evidently did not understand exactly the force of his argument.

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not take it back. What I said was that the majority whether Catholic or Protestant, have an absolute right in the Territories to establish schools of their own, in the words of the statute, as they may think fit.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the hon. gentleman this question? He said if you had a thousand Catholics and five hundred Protestants and two thousand Mormons, Jews and others, the thousand Catholics would be the majority, and my hon. friend said distinctly yes. He would ignore the Mormons altogether.

Mr. STOCKTON. He said they could not have any schools.

Mr. BELCOURT. What I said was that if there were a thousand Catholics as against five hundred Protestants and two thousand Mormons the Catholics, as a matter of right, under section 11 of the Act of 1875, would have the right to establish schools as they might think fit, and the five hundred Protestants in the minority would be entitled to separate schools of their own. As regards the Jews and Mormons and others, they would have to go either to the Protestant or Catholic schools.

Mr. STOCKTON. That is exactly what I said was the argument of my hon. friend, and it follows that if there were neither Catholics nor Protestants in any locality, there would be no schools for the Jews or Doukhobors or Galicians or whatever else the population might be composed of.

Mr. BELCOURT. I did not say that.

Mr. STOCKTON. Where are they going to get their education if they are not free to establish schools of their own? Surely that is not the interpretation of section 11 of the Act of 1875. Let us read the English language according to the plain meaning of it. It says the majority of taxpayers. Is a Jew not a taxpayer and a citizen of this country just as much as a Protestant or a Roman Catholic? Are you going to invite those people to this country and then deny them the rights of citizenship, although they have to bear the burden of citizenship along with ourselves.

Mr. BELCOURT. That is beside the question altogether.

Mr. STOCKTON. It is not. You are going to put the burden of citizenship on these people, and yet you say that they have not the right to establish public schools in the district in which they live, if they happen to be the majority. That is what he said.

Mr. BELCOURT. No. They might establish a Protestant school or a Catholic school if they wanted to but not a school of their own.

Mr. FOSTER. Where would the rights of conscience be then?

Mr. STOCKTON. For the sake of argument I will say yes they might, but it is not very likely they would under those circumstances. There is another point that I thank my hon. friend for.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to put him a question? Are not the Jews in Montreal under the Protestant Council of public instruction?

Mr. STOCKTON. I do not know.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Well, they are.

Mr. STOCKTON. Then they are treated as citizens and better treated in the city of Montreal than my hon. friend would treat them in the Northwest, when these new provinces are organized, according to his argument.

Mr. BELCOURT. Not at all.

Mr. STOCKTON. I am glad my hon. friend sees the weakness of his argument in that respect and is willing to withdraw it.

Mr. BELCOURT. Not at all; I do not withdraw it.

Mr. STOCKTON. He sees now where his argument will lead him and he wants to withdraw it.

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not want to withdraw anything.

Mr. STOCKTON. Then I would ask him to stick to just what he has said.

Mr. BELCOURT. I would not rely upon the hon. gentleman to quote correctly what I have said, because it is evident the hon. gentleman will not state fairly what I did say.

Mr. STOCKTON. I do not wish to state anything unfair with respect to my hon. friend and I presume that 'Hansard' tomorrow will show exactly what he has said; and when he comes to read it in cold type, he will see that the interpretation I put on his argument is exactly correct and in accord with what I have stated.

Mr. BELCOURT. Not at all.

Mr. STOCKTON. I have to thank my hon. friend for another argument he has made to-night. He says that the judges and the courts would put the same interpretation upon this Act that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) would put upon it.

Mr. BELCOURT. I said they might. I did not say they would.

Mr. STOCKTON. Does he say they would not? I understood him to say they would.

Mr. FOSTER. He withdraws that.

Mr. STOCKTON. Does he withdraw that or will he stick to what he said?

Mr. BELCOURT. Perhaps my hon. friend thinks he is lending to the dignity of parliament by this manner of carrying on discussion. If my hon. friend wishes a passage of arms of that kind, he may proceed but I shall not lend myself to that line of argument.

Mr. STOCKTON. I am lending myself to the arguments which I understood he made.

Mr. BELCOURT. I would not offer a challenge of that kind to my hon. friend because I would not be in it with him.

Mr. STOCKTON. I am lending myself to the argument I understood him to make. I understood him to say that, under a strictly legal interpretation, the courts would decide according to the interpretation put upon the Act by the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for North Toronto. If I misunderstood him in that respect, I shall be very glad to be corrected. If that be the case, where do we go for the interpretation of statutes except to the courts? And if the courts decide as to what the correct interpretation of a statute is, can we come to this legislature to ascertain its meaning? We pass laws here every day, but this parliament does not interpret the meaning of the statutes which it passes. The courts interpret the meaning of those statutes; and therefore I was surprised at the statement I understood my hon. friend to make, namely, that a strict judicial interpretation would be according to the meaning put upon the Act by the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for North Toronto, but that a broad, liberal interpretation would be according to the opinions expressed in debate here in parliament. If my hon. friend admits that, he admits then the position taken by the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for North Toronto, and I thank him for that argument.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. If I may be allowed to interject a few remarks into this hair splitting controversy which we are now having, I might remind my hon. friend that the courts interpret statutes liberally according to the intention of the legislature, and I might refer my hon. friend to the decisions of the courts on the law of patents. I am not surprised that my hon. friend did not understand the argument of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) because it took him two hours this afternoon to understand the argument of the Minister of Justice, who repeated the same thing that he had said a couple of weeks ago, and it was only on a third repetition of the argument for his own benefit that my hon. friend understood it. My hon. friend has taken under his wing the Jews and all those who do not fall under the denomination of Catholic or Protestant. Well, it is quite clear, both by the law of 1875 and the British North America Act, that denominational or separate schools, which are synonymous in the law, apply only to the dual system of Catholics or Protestants, and that the Jews or the Mormons—the latter of whom seem to be the favourite protegés of our hon. friends on the other side—if they want schools of their own, must choose between the Catholic and the Protestant system, as they do in the province of Quebec, where we have the most perfect system of separate schools in confederation. That therefore is not an argument which my hon. friend can bring against section 11 of the law of 1875. This is the first time in the history of Canada that the interpretation given to that section by the leader of the opposition has been given to it. On every occasion before, when we have had a debate on the question of separate schools, the interpretation we, on this side, have given of this law has never been questioned.

It is quite clear, and if my hon. friend takes the trouble to read it over once more, he will see that the adjective 'Protestant' and 'Roman Catholic' is applied, and that when it speaks of the majority, that is only as co-relative of the rights given to the minority. Of course, the rights given to the majority must be the same as those given to the minority—you cannot deprive the great number of rights that are given to the few. So, I think that it is only hair-splitting that we have been given to-night. As to section 16, No. 2, it deprives the Catholics of the Northwest not only of the right to have their schools where they are a majority, but of a great many things they would have had under section 16, No. 1. I do not wish to go into the merits of the difference between these two proposed sections—that will come later on. But, if there are any people interested in the rights of the Catholic minority in the Northwest they are the bishops of the Northwest. And we have heard their opinion. And if there is a man who desires to see that minority deprived of its rights, it is the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton). And that hon. gentleman has come back to the support of the government because section 16, No. 2, deprived them of rights which section 16, No. 1, would have given them. These things, I think, he no doubt knew as to the relative meaning of the two sections.

Mr. PRINGLE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armand Lavergne) a question. Does he concede that under the amended clause 16, the Catholics are deprived of any rights to denominational schools other than the right to religious instruction? Under section 41, chapter 29, the minority of the ratepayers in a district whether Protestant or Catholic have the right to establish separate schools. Under section 45, that school must be established subject to the privileges and according to the method the government has provided in chapter 29. Now, under that, are the schools separate and public, placed upon the same footing except in regard to religious instruction?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. That is my opinion. And that has been corroborated by a Conservative paper in Quebec called 'L'Evenement.' That paper says that to-day denominational schools in the Northwest Territories have ceased to exist since the ordinances were passed. I may say in a few words, that the separate schools in the Northwest to-day are not denominational schools as we Roman Catholics understand that term.

Mr. BARKER. I rise only to correct an expression used by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) with regard to the meaning of the expression 'separate schools. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that throughout Canada that expression had a recognized meaning, that it meant a religious school of the Roman Catholics or the Protestants. Now, there are only two provinces, Ontario and Quebec, that have separate schools. And, certainly, in one of these two provinces the province of Ontario, the expression 'separate school' has not the meaning the hon. gentleman stated. I have here the school law of Ontario, and I find that separate schools may mean Protestant schools, or Roman Catholic schools, or coloured schools.

Mr. BELCOURT. For Catholic or Protestant.

Mr. BARKER. No. The coloured children do not go to a Protestant separate school, or the Protestants to a coloured separate school.

Mr. BELCOURT. If my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) will permit me—I was addressing myself simply to the religious distinction and not to points of race or colour. My argument was that whenever parliament or the legislatures had attempted to deal with schools in the light of religion, they made a distinction only as between the Catholic and the Protestant.

Mr. BARKER. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) was speaking of separate schools. Now, after dealing with Protestant schools the statute of Ontario says:

> And, upon the application in writing of five or more heads of families resident in any township, city, town or incorporated village, being coloured people the council of such township or the board of school trustees of any such city, town or incorporated village, shall authorize the establishment therein of one or more separate schools for coloured people.

After that I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) will desire to withdraw his expression with regard to separate schools of Catholics or Protestants. The expression means precisely what it means in English words—a school separate from the schools of other people. And when the hon. gentleman said that separate schools had a recognized meaning throughout Canada, he made a mistake in saying that it meant only Catholic or Protestant separate schools.

Mr. BELCOURT. What I said was that whenever parliament has legislated with reference to separate schools, it had recognized only Catholic and Protestants. I was not dealing with racial distinctions. Evidently there are none so blind as those who will not see. I have made the statement half a dozen times, and have made it as plainly as my command of English will allow. I say I was dealing with denominational schools and that I spoke of those alone.

Mr. BARKER. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt was defining the expression 'separate schools,' and I hold him to that, if he will allow me. He asserted that that expression had a recognized particular meaning, which meaning he gave. I quote this statute to show that it has no such meaning. And I would ask him where he finds the legislation, when he speaks of school legislation by this parliament. School law is provincial law, and he has to go to the provinces to find that law, except for the provision of the British North America Act. And so I bring to his attention the separate school law of Ontario showing that the words have no such recognized meaning as he says they have, and this is one of the only two provinces in which they have separate schools by law.

Mr. BELCOURT. Well, if my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) is satisfied, I am.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I certainly thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) was defining separate schools as denominational schools—I thought that was part of his argument. If I understood him wrongly, I am sorry. But I followed him carefully and understood him to say—and he was supported by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne)—that separate schools meant necessarily denominational schools, and therefore, as he said, the word 'separate' in section 11 of the Act of 1875 meant not merely a school separated, but meant a denominational school. If I did not hear the hon. gentleman make that argument my ears deceived me. As to the misunderstanding which occurred between the hon. gentleman and my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Stockton), I certainly did understand the member for Ottawa to say this, in answer to a question of mine: I asked him whether the majority mentioned in the first part of section 11 of the Act of 1875, was a religious majority, and the hon. gentleman said, yes. Then I asked him whether, in a community where there were 1,000 Roman Catholics, and 500 Protestants and 2,000 Mormons, the 1,000 Catholics would be the majority within the meaning of the statute, and he said, yes. I do not think my hon. friend will deny having given that answer. It seems to me a very extraordinary result. For example, in a community of 1,000 Mormons, not having a school established, if one Roman Catholic or one Protestant should enter, then the one Roman Catholic or the one Protestant would be the majority within the meaning of the Act of 1875—or I think the statute requires 5: if 5 Roman Catholics or 5 Protestants entered a community of 1,000 Mormons, then the 5 Roman Catholics or 5 Protestants would be a majority within the meaning of the Act of 1875. Well, that may be the case, my hon. friend may be right, but if so, it only adds one more to the extraordinary interpretations which we have been forced to place upon this Act of 1875. So far as the word 'separate' is concerned, I adhere, with all due deference, to the view that it means exactly what it says, a separate school, it implies nothing more. And when you draw illustrations from provincial legislation you are at once met with the illustration mentioned by my hon. friend from Hamilton, that in the province of Quebec you have a separate school which does not depend in any respect upon the religion of those who constitute the pupils.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think we have not made very much progress, and I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 9.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, June 9, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery a certificate of the election of Mr. Louis Auguste Carrier for the electoral district of Lévis, in the province of Quebec.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of dividends remaining unpaid, unclaimed balances, unpaid drafts and bills of exchange in chartered banks of the Dominion of Canada for five years and upwards, prior to December 31, 1904.—Hon. W. S. Fielding.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 173) respecting the St. Maurice Valley Railway Company.—Mr. Bureau.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to give a word of personal explanation. I notice by reading the report of yesterday's debates that in replying to a question that was put to me by the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), I gave a reply which certainly entitled the hon. gentleman to say later on in the debate, while I was absent, that I had stated something that led to an absurd conclusion. I see by reading the report that in fact I had not properly understood the question of the hon. gentleman. He asked me:

> Suppose there was no majority of either Protestants or Roman Catholics in the district; suppose there was one-third Protestant, one-third Roman Catholic and one-third Jews and Mormons; does he not think that the word 'majority' in section 11 would enable the majority of these people to establish a school?
> Mr. BOURASSA. No, I do not think so.

I had evidently misunderstood the question of the hon. gentleman. I was dealing at that time with the distinction that was established with regard to denominational schools, and meant to say that there was no other denominational school referred to in section 11 of the Act of 1875 but Protestant schools and Catholic schools, and I understood the hon. gentleman's question to mean that in case a majority would be composed partly of Protestants and partly of Mormons, they could establish any other denominational schools. Naturally the context to my remarks later on proved that I acknowledged the right of any majority to have a public school, but, as far as denominational schools are concerned, it would be either a Protestant or a Catholic school. Of course, I could have corrected this in the report of the debate so as to make my thought clear, but I considered it would be an injustice to the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) on account of the further remarks he made later on, so I prefer making this explanation and leaving the text as it is. I hope this will be satisfactory to him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Steamship subventions—for a line or lines of steamers to run between St. John and Halifax or either, and the West Indies and South America, $80,700.

Mr. DANIEL. As I understand it, tenders have been called for in regard to this service, which will be due, I think, about the middle of this month.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No; the tenders have been invited, and are now in.

Mr. DANIEL. They have been received?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. I am aware that the contractor for this service has expressed a desire to leave out the port of St. John and confine the maritime port to the port of Halifax. Our business people in St. John have been considerably disturbed over that matter, and I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether this line will in future continue to make its trips to St. John as well as to Halifax, as it has been doing in the past.

Mr. FIELDING. The contractor who has been doing the service for some years has made a proposal that some change be made in the ports of call, both as respects the West Indies and the Canadian end of the service. The matter is still under consideration, and at this moment has not been finally determined.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister cannot say at present, then, how the line will be conducted in the future, with regard to the inclusion of the port of St. John ?

Mr. FIELDING. A proposal has been made which would involve the dropping of the port of St. John and making some arrangement for carrying the St. John freight by rail to Halifax, as one alternative. That suggestion is under consideration, and up to this moment nothing has been done with regard to it. If that arrangement should be made before this item is finally passed, it would necessitate a change in the wording of the item. For the present we are following the same wording as before.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that he cannot ask for a change in the wording of the item unless he has first made up his mind what the policy is to be. If this item is voted, it will be impossible to cut out St. John. It would seem to me to be much better, if the minister has not made up his mind as to the policy, to let the item stand until he has, because I imagine that it would raise a pretty brisk discussion were he to propose to cut off the service to the port of St. John and leave the St. John shippers to run their freight around to Halifax in whatever way they could. It would be a radical change, and I think it had better be decided by the government before they ask for the vote.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the wording of the item would admit of the change if the change should be determined on, although when I spoke a moment ago I did not contemplate that. What I thought was that if a change in the wording were required, it could be made in the Supply Bill before the items were finally passed. What the tenderers propose is either to carry out the service as in the past, or as an alternative, in order to have a more rapid and more frequent service to the West Indies, to have the steamers call at Halifax only, and to have the St. John freight sent to Halifax by rail. Upon that no judgment has yet been come to by the government. If there is a desire to hold the item over, I do not suppose the Prime Minister would have any objection; but we are at present taking the vote with the same wording as in the past.

Mr. AMES. Have any offers for this service been made by other steamship companies than Pickford & Black ? Have the Royal Mail Line or the Elder-Dempster Company during the past six months entertained the possibility or made an offer for this service ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, the Royal Mail Line, to which my hon. friend refers, did not make any proposal.

Mr. AMES. I would like to say a few words as to this service, because the manner in which it is at present carried on is unsatisfactory, to the merchants of the city of Montreal at least. Either that service should be made purely a mail service and paid for accordingly, or else it should be made a truly representative freight service, which would collect all the freight that could be taken from Canada, the inland as well as the external ports, with a view to the expansion of the business with the West Indies. The merchants of Montreal are of the opinion, and I think their opinion can be very readily endorsed by facts, that if the terminus of this service could be made at Montreal, in summer at least, a very large amount of freight could be sent to the West Indies. That would not necessitate cutting out the maritime province ports, it would only necessitate adding Canadian ports in order to create a larger amount of business. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to a communication on this subject from the Corn Exchange of Montreal, which I think has been forwarded to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. On the 10th of December last the Montreal Corn Exchange passed the following resolution :

Resolved, That understanding that the term of the present subsidy for a steamship service between Canada and the West Indies expires in June next, the committee of management of the Montreal Corn Exchange Association urges upon the government the great desirability of adopting measures for the establishment of a new service to the West Indies, especially to Barbadoes, Trinidad and British Guiana, the steamers to run from Montreal in summer and the maritime ports in winter ;

That the West Indies import from the United States a large amount of products and goods which Canada could supply, and that, moreover, much of the present limited export of Canadian goods to the West Indies is now handled by United States firms, owing to the frequent steamship communication between those islands and New York and other United States ports ;

That the circumstance that so many steamship lines find freight between American ports and the West Indies would seem to show that a line from Montreal would secure enough business to warrant its establishment ;

That there is no doubt that the reason that Canada is exporting so little to the West Indies is the lack of direct steamship communication from Montreal, the present service from the maritime ports being too far removed from Montreal to ensure its successful operation in the summer months.

In connection with this resolution a statement was prepared and submitted to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in order to show the freight possibilities of the port of Montreal for such a line; and from this statement I make the following citation:

STATEMENT for the year 1903-4 of the principal imports into British Guiana, Barbadoes and Trinidad of products that are produced in Canada.

—	Flour.	Meats.	Lumber.	Butter.	Grain.
	Brls.	Brls.	Feet.	Lbs.	Bush.
British Guiana	210,226	10,000	7,000,000	497,000	.....
		Lbs.
Barbadoes	52,664	2,490,000	4,800,000	403,505	20,000
Grenada	30,725	495,000	1,000,000	30,275	23,046
Trinidad	231,160	.....	11,999,000	654,000	201,525

In addition, there are large importations of lard, oil cake, boots and shoes, live stock, machinery, cement, hardware, cottons and potatoes.

While only four of the islands are mentioned above, many of the others might be made ports of call if trade offered. There are no stocks held at St. John and Halifax from which to make shipments, and there being no steamers from Montreal to the West Indies, Ontario shippers prefer to ship by way of New York rather than via St. John or Halifax; but with a line from Montreal such shipments would naturally come here, the more especially that advantage could be taken of cheap water rates from the west to Montreal.

Last year raw sugar to the aggregate value of $13,000,000 was imported into Canada by way of New York, refiners preferring to import by that route rather than by St. John or Halifax, because they can get better railway rates and quicker dispatch; but with a line running to Montreal these importations would of course come direct.

Now, I make these citations because this is a matter that has been very seriously considered by the Montreal Corn Exchange Association. The memorial was presented to the Department of Trade and Commerce fully six months ago, and I hope the memorial was considered, because I think the matter is well worth the attention of the department. The present service is wholly inadequate and unsatisfactory, and it seems that the time has come when the service should be either a mail service and paid for at mail-subsidy rates, or it should be made an adequate freight service and paid for accordingly. An article in 'Industrial Canada' is authority for the statement that Canada's trade with the West Indies is not as extensive as it was thirty years ago, although the trade of the West Indies has increased enormously in that time. I wish to cite from 'Industrial Canada,' which, as is well known, is the official organ of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, which body has given considerable study to this matter. Here is what they say of the Pickford & Black Line, and I think it is worthy of consideration:

The Pickford & Black boats that call at only the important islands have nine days' delay in Demerara before starting on the homeward trip, and nine days' delay in St. John or Halifax before starting again for the islands. The explanation is that the boats are under contract to carry mails to the islands at stated intervals, and the smaller islands are passed by to give the more important ones a faster service.

I am informed that if the delay at each end of the right trip was done away with, the existing boats could give a ten days' service to the large islands at least and a twenty days' service to the other, which would be a decided improvement, but it is plain that until we have a weekly service to all the islands, we will be handicapped in our competition with the United States manufacturers, unless we are able to secure equally favourable freight rates via United States ports.

And again, in this same magazine, 'Industrial Canada,' in the issue of April, 1904, we have another reference to this Pickford & Black service, written by Mr. Cooper, the secretary of the Manufacturers' Association, who made a special trip to the West Indies for this purpose:

There is one great obstacle to a growth of direct trade; I refer to the inferior steamship connection. While due credit must be given to the company now operating, for the energy they have shown in developing the trade, it must be pointed out in the interest of the public generally, that the West Indian merchants regard the Canadian line (in the words of one gentleman whose opinion I esteem highly) as 'running to little purpose.' For each trip to Demerara and return the company is paid by the imperial and Canadian governments about $4,885, and from all I have learned in the West Indies, if that amount cannot secure a more frequent and superior service, with cold storage accommodation for fruits, it would be advisable to follow the example of the United States government and pay out the subsidy in the form of a fee for carrying mails. There would at least be competition where at present there is none. The chief results of the present contract under which the subsidy is paid are (1) to prevent the establishment of a competing line ; (2) to make the route a slow one for the principal ports, Barbadoes, Trinidad and Demerara, by forcing the boats to call at all the northern British islands. At all events it is hopeless to expect the boats now running to compete with the larger and more modern ones running from New York with a comparatively smaller coal consumption.

The present service does not do the work properly, but it takes enough of the work to make it impossible for a competing line to live and thrive. In the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce published in 1904 you will find this comment on the transportation facilities in connection with Jamaica :

Messrs. Pickford & Black's steamship 'Beta' has been making her usual monthly trips with regularity as regards time, and as far as this end is concerned has accorded every satisfaction in keeping with the terms of the contract. Good care seems to be taken in handling the cargo both ways and consignees' claims when arising, are usually liberally met.

When all the above, however, has been said, there is still a persistent wail regarding inadequacy of the service. And this will certainly be more keenly felt in the coming year when the demand for space will be decidely multiplied. However, with the coming of the new contract it is confidently expected that all defects and drawbacks will be remedied.

Now, if it is the intention of the government to renew the present contract with Messrs. Pickford & Black, making no modification further than to render it less efficient than it is to-day by cutting out the port of St. John and leaving only the port of Halifax, in my opinion the government is making a mistake. It seems probable that this trade with the West Indies can be worked up to a considerable business and one that will be valuable for Canada. It would seem worth while for the government to ascertain whether a first-class service of proper frequency and calling not only at the maritime ports but at the head of navigation on the St. Lawrence, could not be created which will give satisfaction to the exporters and merchants of the Dominion.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no doubt that if you like to pay for it you can get such a service as my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) suggests. You can get the 'Lucania' and the 'Campania' in this service if you are willing to pay the price. But, being Finance Minister, I have to sometimes consider the financial side of these questions.

Mr. FOSTER. Just what amount of money is being paid ?

Mr. FIELDING. The amount we pay for this service is $65,700.

Mr. FOSTER. What does Great Britain pay ?

Mr. FIELDING. Great Britain pays an equal sum.

Mr. FOSTER. A total of $130,000 ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. That is a very considerable sum of money——

Mr. AMES. For what you get for it.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) is a business man and knows something of the effect of the law of supply and demand. One hearing my hon. friend's remarks would naturally think that steamship companies should be running after this grand privilege. But, instead of that, you find that Messrs. Pickford & Black are practically the only company willing to do the work at that price. So, it does not seem that we are paying too much when they are allowed to hold a monopoly and, when the opportunity of competition comes, nobody is ready to take over the work.

Mr. AMES. Has the hon. minister made any endeavour to secure a service which shall call at the port of Montreal ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, we publicly advertised for tenders for this service in accordance with the practice of the past. My hon. friend argues that it is desirable that we should have communication with Montreal. In what I say, I do not wish to be understood as arguing against that. But I am afraid it will not be found convenient to combine this service with the one that exists. The paper the hon. gentleman quoted from points out that there is considerable delay, that these steamers call at a number of places and make a rather long voyage. That is one of the difficulties compared with the New York steamers. After some correspondence, it was proposed by the contractors—and it is a point we have not yet decided upon—to shorten the voyage by cutting out some of these ports of call, thereby creating a more efficient service for the remainder of the ports.

Mr. FOSTER. What average speed do they make ?

Mr. FIELDING. About ten knots, I am informed.

Mr. FOSTER. All the voyage ?

Mr. FIELDING. The speed at sea is about ten knots, and against that there is the delay at the islands. Undoubtedly, calling at many islands is a serious trouble. The principal markets of the West Indies may be described as Trinidad, Barbadoes and Demarara, British Guiana, which is on the mainland, though we commonly speak of it as the West Indies. These are the principal markets. But there are a number of smaller islands which have some little trade which we naturally desire to cultivate, and the British government being parties to the contract, also desire that the smaller islands shall be considered. We have been working in harmony with them in a policy which would develop trade in the smaller markets as well as in the larger ones.

Mr. FOSTER. Do the islands give anything?

Mr. FIELDING. There is no local subsidy at all. But the point of view of the British government is not perhaps exactly the same as ours; ours would be purely the commercial view, the imperial government would have another view besides. Even though the islands might have a small amount of business, and though for ordinary commercial reasons the contractors might be willing to drop an island, it is conceivable that the British government, for imperial reasons, might feel that the little island should not be ignored. That creates some little difficulty, and makes necessary some mutual negotiations in order to maintain co-operation between the British government and ourselves. I fear that if we started a line of steamers from Montreal and attempted to call at maritime ports as well, we would but add to the disadvantage under which we now labour in our competition with New York. The voyage to a distant point, say Georgetown in British Guiana, would be long, and we would find ourselves entirely beaten in the race with the New York steamers. I am inclined to think that if it becomes necessary to develop trade in the line suggested by my hon. friend, it would almost involve a separate service. We have been doing something in the direction of trade from Montreal this year by making provision for a line from Montreal to Cuba and Mexico, calling at Halifax, and that is one of the things that we have now in hand, and which it is hoped will be realized. I think if we were to insist on this line of steamers starting from Montreal, calling at the maritime ports, at one or both, and then go on to the West Indies, we would find ourselves at a great disadvantage in the competition; and that would lead to the conclusion that if there is a prospect of business at Montreal to the degree the hon. gentleman suggests, it would necessitate an independent service during the summer months.

Mr. DANIEL. This West India service originated quite a few years ago. It was begun by St. John people and started from the port of St. John, and it is really a St. John conception entirely. The service up to the present time has been regularly proceeding to and from St. John. Lately the board of trade of the city of St. John made some complaints, and sent a memorial to the government in regard to this matter. They referred to the delays, which have also been referred to by the hon. member from St. Antoine Division, Montreal (Mr. Ames), and the great number of lay days. They think that is a serious objection to carrying on successfully the business. It does appear to me that one of the difficulties with regard to this service is that the contractor, instead of fitting his steamers in size and accommodation to the business, is rather trying to make the business conform in size to the equipment of his steamers. The memorial which the board of trade sent to the government requested that the government, in asking for tenders, should ask for an improved service, with modern steamers, with greater capacity, from 3,500 to 4,000 tons, with a maximum speed of 13 knots an hour, with fan ventilation and ample cold storage for carrying perishable cargoes. We know that to do a successful business with a tropical country like the West Indies, steamers should be equipped with proper cold storage and fan ventilation facilities, not only on account of those products and commodities which we export, but also on account of those commodities which we import from the West Indies, especially fruits and things of that kind. We could only expect to do a successful business by having vessels properly arranged for that business. From the standpoint of the members of the board of trade in St. John, they complain very bitterly of the number of lay days at Halifax, and they state that in consequence of the large number of lay days, perishable goods on these steamers were injured very materially, and to that fact it is due to a large extent that we are not doing that extensive flour export business from St. John which would otherwise be done. That business is going to New York, whereas, with an efficient and proper service, the export of goods from the port of St. John would be very materially increased indeed. As a matter of fact, that business has increased in the port of St. John during the last three years from 17 to 24 per cent, and it is increasing all the time. The complaints that our people make there is largely on account of the unnecessary delays which this steamer makes in the maritime ports, instead of going rapidly to the port of destination. I hope that the government will not entertain any idea of throwing the port of St. John out of this business. I think it would be a mistake in so far as the business of this country is concerned. Not merely the commercial business of handling which accrues to the port of St. John would be increased, but if a proper service were inaugurated, the exports from that port coming from the west as well as from the immediate vicinity, would be very much increased. Now the contractor makes arrangements in order to increase the exports by his line from the port of Halifax, to pay the excess of freight on goods coming from the north shore of the province of New Brunswick to Halifax, which goods, on account of the shorter haul and less freight, would naturally find their port of export at St. John. The contractor himself pays the difference, and gets that business carried over the line to the port of Halifax ; whereas, under ordinary circumstances, that business would find its way to the port of St. John and thereby increase the total export business from that port. However, if the hon. minister is not in a position to state to-day what the mind of the government is with regard to that matter, since I am very much interested in it as representing the city of St. John, I would ask that this matter stand over, and not be considered until the government has made up its mind with regard to what policy they will pursue. I think that is not asking too much.

Mr. FIELDING. There can be no objection to the item standing over. But I do not think it is profitable that we should enter to-day into the conflicting statements that have been made with regard to the amount of business that is offered at St. John. I offer no opinion, except to say that the contractors made representations as to the amount of business they had been able to get at St. John, and their representations do not harmonize with the information which my hon. friend representing that city has received. However, I did not think it was worth while our discussing it to-day, because we desire to hold the matter over so as to allow us to look into both sides of the question, and I will undertake to say that it will be thoroughly investigated before any decision is reached. In regard to the efficiency of the service it is well to remember that if you are calling at a number of islands there will be inevitable delay. You may get a vessel that in some respects will be better at sea, but not better suited to the different ports, and perhaps not so well, because, if you have a larger vessel with a heavier draught, she cannot approach many of these islands. You could not make some of these islands except with the assistance of lighters.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the case now.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has been over the ground and so have I, and we know the difficulties of it. However, we all have a common desire that we shall encourage our West India trade as much as possible and if by a separate service by the St. Lawrence, or if by any arrangement we can make with this present line of steamers, we can get a better service I am sure the government will be no less desirous than my hon. friends opposite to accomplish it. Although we are told that this service is not a very efficient one, and that this is a liberal subsidy, we must still bear in mind that there is nobody chasing after it. Messrs. Pickford & Black are not making a very large sum out of it ; in fact, they have been having a very uphill fight. My hon. friend is correct in saying that the service originated in St. John, but my information is that the contractors who undertook it from St. John found it so unprofitable that they were glad to get rid if it. It has not been a very big bonanza for anybody. There is not a great deal of money in it.

Mr. DANIEL. The parties who originated the business at St. John undertook to do it with unsuitable vessels—vessels not sufficient for it in any way and the consequence was that they did not make it a success. The amount of business which this line has done during the past year is over a quarter of a million—$268,000 odd, I think is the amount.

Mr. FOSTER. In and out ?

Mr. DANIEL. In and out. I am quite aware of the case of the contractors. Mr. Pickford supplied me with a complete statement of the case which he laid before the government, and I know the position he takes, but I think if the hon. minister will allow this item to stand it would be better.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. Before the meeting of the congress of the Chambers of Commerce which was held recently in the city of Montreal the matter of trade with the West India Islands came up before our board of trade and a delegation was appointed, of which I was one to go to Montreal to meet the representatives of the West India Islands, particularly those from the island of Trinidad and see if we could not arrange to send them goods from our own section of the country. We had an interview with them and ascertained the things which we thought we could ship to the West Indies. Among other things we thought we could ship cheese, which we produce in large quantities, butter, flour and what they call bread. Perhaps I might inform the House that what they call bread is what we call shanty biscuit or sea biscuit, the flour to manufacture which we could supply. We could also send them pot barley which they use in very considerable quantities, boots and shoes and that kind of thing. We found among the other things that they required different grades of flour—low grade and high grade. It is sometimes very important that we should know where we can send our low grade flour which is not very easily sold sometimes. We can always sell the finest grade of flour, but sometimes, if we have a grade which is not very good, to get a market for that is desirable and important. After the representatives of the West India Islands had gone away we had considerable correspondence with them. I conducted the correspondence myself. I think the time is not far distant when we shall undertake to ship goods from our section of the country to the West Indies. But, our people have always urged upon me that they did not like to go to the trouble of sending goods all the way to Halifax and shipping them from there. They thought there should be a service from Montreal so that they could undertake the shipment from there. I would like to draw the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to this fact too: There has been a great deal of difficulty in having our beet sugar factories maintained in western Ontario, and in fact in any part of the Dominion of Canada because they could not get a sufficient supply of beets to run these factories long enough to make it pay. My hon. friend from East Kent (Mr. Gordon) who is interested in a beet root sugar factory at Wallaceburg undertook to solve that difficulty. When the supply of beets became exhausted he brought in raw sugar from the West India Islands and has been using that instead of the beets and making a complete success of it. If we could get a supply of raw sugar from the West Indies and in this way secure facilities for sending our own goods back in the same vessels, I think it would be an advantage and I do not see why it could not be carried out. I wish to direct the hon. minister's attention to the fact, and when this question comes up for discussion again I may have something further to say upon it. If there is anything I can do which will assist my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Ames) I shall be glad to do it.

Mr. FOSTER. Although the hon. Minister of Finance is going to keep the item over, probably, as we have commenced the discussion of it, it might be as well to say what we have to say to-day. I acknowledge, in the first place, the difficulties of establishing a satisfactory service with the West Indies. They have been greater probably than they are now. It may be that the late changes in the sugar business, in its aspect towards the governments in Europe, has made the conditions a little more favourable in that one direction, but favourable as they may be made in that way there are some very great difficulties in having a satisfactory line and establishing a satisfactory commerce with the West Indies. We have to take that in as the first idea, but right alongside of that we ought to put this idea: I do not know that there is any section of the world with which we ought to be, comparatively speaking more anxious to establish and sustain a good trade than with the West Indies. For various reasons. They form a counterpart to our temperate and cooler zones, they are kindred countries and the future may hold within its possibilities a union between Canada and these British West Indies of some kind or another, and ought to hold without doubt the possibility of closer and better trade relations as between the two. So, we ought not to be discouraged by difficulties to the point of discontinuing a service which does not seem to be as satisfactory as it might be. On the other hand you must take this into consideration: We give now $132,000 or $133,000 a year as a subsidy. Everybody will admit that it is better to give a larger amount for a proper service with the view of establishing something which shall be self-supporting, or which will gradually grow to be self-supporting than fritter away the very large sum of $130,000 a year and make a fair or reasonable progress towards a self-supporting service. Therefore, it would not be unreasonable to offer a larger amount for a proper service which would stimulate trade, which would gather legitimate trade between the two countries which is now carried by the United States of America and make the service self-sustaining in the end.

I think we ought to very carefully look over the whole matter. I do not want to find fault with any department, but I know what most of the departments chronically suffer from. They get into routine habits; we vote the money and they pay it out, and not very much activity is displayed towards bettering or even keeping track of these services. We are paying out over $2,000,000 yearly on steamship subsidies of this kind, and earlier in the session I found on inquiry that the Department of Trade and Commerce could not give to the House a statement of what is done in the way of traffic by these different lines to which we are paying so much of the country's money every year. I made a plea then that the department should keep its hand on every subsidized service and be prepared to lay on the table of the House a report as to what these steamship services were doing in the way of developing trade, especially with a view of ascertaining whether it is ever possible to make themselves sustaining or whether the money had not better be given towards some prospective self-sustaining services. We cannot discuss this matter intelligently now; we do not know the amount of commerce carried on between Canada and particular ports in the West Indies so that we may determine whether some of these that are useless should not be cut out. What I am pleading for is, that we should have a thorough supervision, so that parliament could have from the department all the information possible with regard to the expenditure of this $2,000,000. You cannot carry on such a service between Canada and a tropical country like the West Indies unless you have modern machinery in your vessels. Outside of salt fish, you may say that almost everything we export to the West Indies is of a perishable nature. Any one who has been in the West Indies knows how quickly things perish there, not only to satisfy the capacious appetites of the coloured population but from the efforts of the torrid heat. We will find it a very hard task with slow vessels and no refrigerating machinery to do any kind of a decent trade with the West Indies. If it is worth while doing this it is worth doing well, and if we do it well we must pay for it. Sooner or later I want to see every one of these services self-sustaining, or cut off. I have had a talk with Mr. Pickford, not to any very great extent; my hon. friend has had all Mr. Pickford's figures and has gone through them. I understand the point of view of the contractors and they have a great deal in their favour, but I hope the minister will not make any change at present. I would suggest something like this: Let us utilize the good common sense we have in this country. If the department would gather together representatives of the Board of Trade of St. John Halifax, Montreal, Quebec, Toronto and the western cities, and go into this whole question either here or in Montreal, with a view of solving how best we can increase our trade with the West Indies, I think good would result. That is the first point; there is another point which ought to come subsidiary to that but which very often has taken precedence of it, and that is the question. Can anything be done for a particular town or particular city? I confess to a weakness with regard to particular cities just the same as other people, but the prime idea should be as to what is best to make greater the commerce of the entire country. Then, as far as you can, utilize such place as will best suit that plan. But I do not think we should lean altogether to the sentimental idea in reference to a city which wants a steamship service. The department should next year keep its hand on this and other services and find out exactly what we are doing; which are the ports that give most return and what they give, and then in this conference of level-headed and wide-awake business men a conclusion could be come to as to the service between Canada and the West Indies which would be best adapted to our needs. If it is impossible for us ever to have a self-sustaining traffic between the two countries, then perhaps we should reconsider our policy. If the conclusion should be arrived at that not only for trade reasons, but for national and imperial reasons we should persevere in this policy, then let us persevere along proper lines. These are some thoughts that have been running through my mind; I have not given expression to them in the way of captious criticism for I would be very sorry to see the service between Canada and the West Indies fail. Its record has not been as good as it ought to be. There may be some reasons why we have not a larger commerce now than we had 15 years ago, but it is not very encouraging, and it ought make us pause to consider whether or not we can do better.

Mr. AMES. One last word before leaving this subject. I should like very much if the government would take into serious consideration the idea of endeavouring to obtain offers from some responsible steamship company for a service between Montreal and the principal commercial points in the West Indies. I believe that the amount of trade now offered and that will offer at Montreal for a service of this kind, and which now passes to American ports, would be sufficient to induce responsible lines to put on a good service. For a great many years we have been carrying on via Halifax and St. John this service to the West Indies, and our steamers have been stopping at many points at which there is little more than mail matter to be left off. That is an accommodation train service accomplished by boats that have been in this trade for 30 or 40 years. It seems to me that the time for such a service is about over, and that we should now consider the establishment of an express service from the principal shipping port of the Dominion to the most important shipping ports of the West Indies. Just by way of ascertaining what may be done in that respect would it not be advisable for the department to put themselves in communication with some possible tenderers to ascertain whether a new line of this character might not be established largely as a commercial enterprise without such immense assistance from the government as the minister has intimated may be necessary?

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). Any person cannot fail to notice the very wide discrepancy between the member from Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the member from Montreal (Mr. Ames). The latter wants an express service conducted by the most roundabout way. The member from Toronto wants to expedite it. The only way to expedite ocean communication is by going on the shortest route with the fastest possible speed. To get high speed on the Atlantic towards the tropics requires vessels of high engine-power and correspondingly small carrying capacity. This, of course, must increase the rate of freight and also may damage the products. Large engines and boilers in the tropics make a vessel very hot, and consequently the products are heated so that when the article is removed from the ship and brought into contact with the hot air of the tropics, decay sets in very rapidly. The reasons why the trade in the West Indies is diminishing are twofold. First of all is the very high price of fish, which brings other articles into competition. Fish is about twice the price it was. Secondly, the acquisition of Porto Rico and Cuba, the two best markets in the West Indies, has very much diminished the spread of our markets in the West Indies, and the steamers require to call at such a large number of ports in order to obtain the volume of trade. These little islands, which were formerly insignificant, are now very necessary items, because we cannot find the consumption unless we use all the ports, and that is the cause of the falling which was reprobated by the member for Montreal, to endeavour to secure markets and also to endeavour to obtain services through all these islands. Although the speed of the ships may not be very great, they are adapted to the carriage of the articles. If you have boats of high speed you run extreme risk, and also the increase in the carriage of freight is material. The next desideratum is to have the nearest port of shipment, and we all know that Halifax is the nearest point in Canada to any other part of the world.

Mr. FIELDING. The discussion is a very interesting one, and I am sure will prove advantageous to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in considering the action to be taken. I may say that some portion of the information which the member for North Toronto suggests is already in the possession of the government, and we could, if necessary, furnish statistics showing the volume of business annually done by these particular vessels. But if it is thought well to have that branch of the departmental work made broader and fuller in the future, I have no doubt we will be able to get somewhat fuller statistics and interesting information. There is one other thought worth remembering, not as a reason for doing nothing, but to enable us to realize the difficulties, and that is that the West Indies are not large customers for the class of products which Canada is most anxious to make. Canada is making a high grade of goods, but the West Indies, after all, can only be a limited market for that class of goods, because, as is well known, the bulk of the population of the West Indies are coloured people who are not very wealthy, and they are not seeking for Manitoba hard wheat and the finest bacon and cheese which Canada makes. There is a limited demand for these things, but if we are to have a very extended trade in the West Indies for these goods, I am afraid we will have to work down instead of up and be prepared to sell goods cheaper. That is a difficulty in the way; the bulk of the people there are poor. There is a smaller number of white people who desire a better class of goods, but the merchant who sends goods to the West Indies is made aware of the fact that the people are generally poor. Many shippers will tell you that it is not profitable to send goods to the West Indies, because the people will not pay the prices they want. I suppose we are only human; and if they desire cheaper goods, we will find some one in Canada to make them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where is their business done now?

Mr. FIELDING. Largely in the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. They must make the goods cheaper.

Mr. FIELDING. They do in some cases; the goods are cheaper, but not of as high grade as the Canadian goods.

Mr. FOSTER. But they are a go-ahead people.

Mr. FIELDING. They are, but they cultivate the market and make what is wanted. That is the objection made against the English manufacturer. It is said that he makes the thing you ought to want, whether you want it or not, while the American or the German will make what you want, and if you want it bad he will make it bad. We have not been educated in Canada up to adapting ourselves to the markets.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the discussion ceases with regard to this item, I would like to urge that it is extremely desirable that our commercial connections with the British possessions in the West Indies should be preserved; and even if assistance to the steamship service, looking at the present, does not seem to be a paying proposition, regarding it from a commercial standpoint, I would be very reluctant indeed to cease any subsidy or take any step which might to a still greater extent divert the commercial interests of the British West India Islands to the United States. At the present time I think the United States have a very great advantage, with regard to some of the islands at least, by reason of the better steamship communication they possess from the port of New York and possibly from other ports. There are those in this country who look forward to the possibility that some time in the future this country may have more than a commercial alliance with the British West Indies, that some time in the future those islands, or some of them, may be brought within this Canadian confederation. Whether that be a dream or not, it certainly is extremely desirable that we should not take any retrograde step, nor withdraw from any policy which was designed to preserve commerce, so far as it can be preserved, between the British West India Islands and Canada.

With respect to the maritime ports, I fully appreciate the point of view which has been put forward by my hon. friend from St. Antoine division of Montreal (Mr. Ames). At the same time, so far as the maritime ports are concerned, there is this to remember, that, in the first place, during the winter months the maritime ports are the only ports by which that service can be kept up, and, so far as the summer months are concerned, one would suppose that if the Intercolonial Railway is ever to fulfil any of the functions which it certainly is expected to fulfil under the scheme of the government brought down to parliament last session and the session before, it ought to fulfil the purpose of making the necessary connection between the city of Montreal and points west of that city and the steamship service between Halifax and the West India Islands. If the Intercolonial Railway cannot fulfil that object, it seems to me its usefulness has, to a very great extent, departed. A steamship service from Halifax and St. John to the West India Islands is, I think, desirable. It may be desirable at some time in the future to establish, possibly upon a more commercial basis, as the member for Montreal (Mr. Ames) has suggested, a steamship service from Montreal. Perhaps that should be done in the immediate future, but the maritime provinces of Canada have had in the past a very large trade with the British West India Islands ; they have a very considerable trade at the present, and I believe that with the expected development of the fishing industry of the maritime provinces that trade ought to increase rather than diminish in the future. I am speaking in the presence of the members for Halifax, one of whom at least, the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Carney), has had a great deal of experience in this trade in the past, although he is not engaged in it at present, and his opinion on the subject would, of course, be very valuable.

I would desire that the service between the maritime ports and other ports of Canada and the West India Islands should be as expeditious as possible. But there are a great many islands to be visited ; there are a great many points from which traffic, both passenger and freight, must be gathered up ; and I do not suppose that we can at the present time have both an express service and what my hon. friend from Montreal has very aptly called an accommodation service. If we make that so-called accommodation service the very best that the resources of the country will reasonably permit, and that the traffic at present would reasonably require, we may perhaps in the future reach a development in traffic between Canada and the West India Islands which will enable us to have not only what might be called a freight service, but an express service as well. I do most heartily concur in the view that has been put forward by my hon. friend from Toronto, that parliament should be exactly advised what we are receiving in return for these enormous subsidies. We have asked for that information, perhaps not so directly as it has been asked for to-day, but in a more piecemeal fashion, in the debates on the estimates in the past. I would think it only businesslike on the part of the Department of Trade and Commerce when it comes to parliament for these subsidies, to be prepared, without any request from this side of the House, to state the exact results which the country is obtaining from every subsidy which this House votes for such purposes. That is the method which any business corporation would follow in dealing with such information when asking their shareholders for an appropriation of money. My hon. friend from North Toronto says that the departments frequently get into a rut with regard to matters of this kind. There is danger not only of the department, but of the government and the House, getting into a rut unless we have information of this kind whenever these estimates are voted. We must not get into the habit of voting them as a matter of course, because they were voted last year and the year before and the year before that.

Mr. FIELDING. What information does my hon. friend want ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to know, with reference to any of these subsidies for promoting business between Canada and any other country, what the net results have been—the volume of trade, to what extent any increase in the volume of trade can be attributed to the service furnished by us, or to what extent any diminution in the volume of trade is due to the fact that the service has not been up to the standard required, in what way we are affected as to that commerce by the competition of foreign countries, and in what way the competition of foreign countries has been made formidable by better steamship services or better means of communication than ours. All these, it seems to me, are proper matters to be considered and debated by parliament. They are matters which any business man would take into consideration. I hope we shall get a little more out of the usual rut in these matters, and that the department will come down with information which may stimulate some debate and lead to some useful suggestions and perhaps to a better system in the end.

Mr. FOSTER. In speaking about this matter before, what I suggested, and what I would suggest again, is that a report be prepared. Piecemeal information of the kind we get while the estimates are being voted is not so satisfactory. You cannot sit down and size the whole business up, and make up your conclusions with regard to it. If the department would make a report on the steamship subsidy services by itself, it could easily be used, and the members could thoroughly study and digest it.

Mr. FIELDING. No doubt in the future we shall be able to do more in that respect from the information now being collected.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I would like to remind the premier that during the session a delegation from my province waited on the Minister of Trade and Commerce to see if it were not possible to extend to the province of Prince Edward Island a service somewhat similar to the one that obtains with the province of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The province of Prince Edward Island labours under a great many disadvantages. In this respect I suppose it labours under more disadvantages than any other province of Canada. Before it can have a share in the cheap freights which follow these subsibized boats, its produce has to be shipped over the Prince Edward Island Railway, over the straits, and then from Pictou to Halifax—three short hauls over a railway on which the rates are exorbitant. I do not know that there is any district in Canada of the size of Prince Edward Island which does more business with the West Indies than that province—in fish, in horses, and many other products which the West India market require ; and if the object is to develop trade with the West Indies, surely you are not going to leave that province out of your reckoning. The scheme proposed by the hon. member from Montreal, of a steamer from Montreal calling at Prince Edward Island, would be of some service ; but I am afraid, from what I learn, that it is not likely to eventuate for some time ; and if any of those boats at present running from Halifax and St. John to the West Indies could not conveniently call at a port of Prince Edward Island. I would suggest that a steamer might be subsidized for two or three trips a year from the province. If that were done, I think the amount of money it would require would be amply repaid by increased trade between that province and the West Indies. There are some trips made by steamers at present, but they are handicapped by the fact that a steamer running from Halifax has a subsidy, while a steamer running from Charlottetown has none. Then, these boats have many ports of call. Why not lessen the number of ports of call in the West India Islands and increase the number of starting points in Canada ? I brought this matter to the attention of the committee on a former occasion. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) very kindly promised that, if a line were established between Montreal and the West Indies, the province of Prince Edward Island should be made a port of call. I feel grateful for the promise. Now that the Minister of Finance seems overburdened with funds let him subsidize a steamer that will make three or four trips during the summer between Prince Edward Island and the West Indies.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that in the application to which my hon. friend (Mr. A. Martin) referred, while a desire is expressed for an extension of communication, generally, there is a special wish to have communication with the Island of Cuba. We hope to have made an arrangement with a line of steamers to cover the route from Montreal to Cuba, calling at Prince Edward Island. To that extent, I hope the hon. gentleman's wish will be met. As to the other boats calling at Charlottetown, he will see at once that a vessel starting from St. John or Halifax, for the West Indies could hardly call at Charlottetown.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Why not start from Charlottetown ?

Mr. A. MARTIN.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman is the first to make the suggestion. But though one can make a suggestion on this point, it takes a number to make an arrangement. For instance, there is the contractor, who is to furnish the steamer and pay the bills ;—he wishes to have something to say in the matter. We have had nothing to indicate as yet, that a commercial enterprise could be successful on the basis of starting from Charlottetown, calling at St. John and Halifax and going in to the West Indies.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Then subsidize both.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman is so anxious to be a martyr that he forgets the good things his province already enjoys. They have several steamers running between the island and the mainland to bring them into touch with the other lines. Of course, it would be very nice to have lines of steamers running from every port in the Dominion. That of course, is impossible, all you can do is to take the main ports. The hon. gentleman says that they have some lines running between Prince Edward Island and the West Indies that receive no subsidy. I suppose that what he means is that sometimes a steamer makes a special voyage over the route, but there is no regular line.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I did not suggest that there was.

Mr. FIELDING. I thought the hon. gentleman suggested that we were subsidizing steamers to compete with existing lines. Of course, the sending out of a special steamer may happen anywhere. But such a trip is undertaken at the will of the owner, and having no fixed time is not much accommodation to the public. We realize the position of Prince Edward Island, and if there were reasons to believe that a subsidized line from that province to the West Indies could promote business, there is every inclination on our part to consider it.

Mr. A. MARTIN. In this large sum of money—over $1,000,000—for steamship subsidies, the province of Prince Edward Island shares to a very small extent indeed. As to the minister's suggestion that you cannot subsidize a vessel from Prince Edward Island to the West Indies, I would remind the minister that he is doing that very thing in another case—giving a subsidy for two or three trips from Prince Edward Island to Great Britain. This is not a regular line. I feel sure that if he would do the same thing to improve communication between Prince Edward Island and the West Indies, it would increase the trade of Prince Edward Island considerably. Years ago the trade between Prince Edward Island and the West Indies was a very large and lucrative one. And the Minister of Finance himself has pointed out that our trade with the West Indies has not increased as it ought to have done. That is a question for the government to deal with. We are paying a subsidy of $146,000 to develop trade between here and South Africa. Our whole trade with that country is only about $2,000,000. The West Indies are much nearer to us and we already have a good trade with them which our neighbours to the south are taking away from us. Now, in this 'growing time' of which we boast; now that Canada's prosperity is advancing by leaps and bounds, will the government, by penuriousness, allow this important trade to be lost?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. A good deal might be done to develop a trade in horses from Prince Edward Island to the West Indies. In those islands light horses are in demand. Under present arrangements they must be shipped either by rail or steamer—usually by rail—to Halifax. If special rates could be given to shippers by the Halifax line it would be a great advantage. Let those rates continue until a regular line from Montreal is established. The freight on the short hauls from Prince Edward Island to Halifax is excessive, so much so that the men who ship from Prince Edward Island by way of Halifax are not in as favourable a position as those who ship from Montreal, or even from Hamilton, Ontario.

Mr. FIELDING. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. A. McLean) mean special railway rates?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Railway and steamer rates. As there is a subsidy given to the steamer, the Minister of Trade and Commerce could regulate that. It is a recognized practice with the railways to grant a cheaper rate on goods intended for exportation than on goods intended for consumption in Canada. If that principle were applied to the trade between Prince Edward Island and the West Indies, it would be a great boon.

Mr. FIELDING. I was under the impression that the railway rates in that region were pretty moderate, and that no grievance could arise on that account either as against either the Intercolonial or the Prince Edward Island Railway. Sometimes the criticism is made that the charges are too low.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I do not think the minister (Mr. Fielding) was in the House when I made a statement which he will find can be verified. Take a car of cattle from Prince Edward Island and land them in Halifax and the freight on those cattle to Halifax will amount to $65. The distance is about 200 miles. You can take a car of cattle from Guelph, Ontario, and land it in Halifax, after a trip of 1,000 miles, for $65.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. What is the Intercolonial portion of that?

Mr. A. MARTIN. That has nothing to do with the question I am discussing. I am simply showing the minister that we do not get the benefit of the long haul to Halifax. We want a rate per mile over these 200 miles the same as is charged over any other part of the Intercolonial, and more especially if these goods are intended for export. I do not think that is an unreasonable suggestion, and I hope the minister will try to have it carried out.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. I venture to suggest to the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Martin) that if he makes a calculation he will find that the rate charged on the Intercolonial between Pictou and Halifax is lower than the rate charged by any other railway in Canada. I think he will also find that the higher rate charged between Charlottetown and Halifax is due, to a large extent, to the steamboat charge between Charlottetown and Pictou. That is unfortunate. But I want the hon. member to recollect that a few years ago a proposition was made to this parliament to bring about a state of affairs which would result in lowering that rate. The hon. gentleman was not here at the time, but a number of his friends from Prince Edward Island appeared before the Railway Committee of this House and protested against any interference with the present system of transportation between Prince Edward Island and the mainland.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Who was it that appeared here, and what was the proposition?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. The proposition was to establish a rival line of steamships, a rival line of transportation between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and delegations appeared before the Railway Committee from all parts of Prince Edward Island protesting against any interference with the present system of transportation.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I do not know what the hon. gentleman's remarks have to do with the question under discussion. I think a transportation company was incorporated, the Act passed this House and was sent up to the Senate, where it was given a three months' hoist. The hon. gentleman says the Intercolonial is not responsible for these rates; I think it is. I know that the Intercolonial is the route over which this freight goes, and I know the Intercolonial is the road which charges these rates.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Does the hon. member mean to say that the Intercolonial charges a $65 rate from Charlottetown to Halifax?

Mr. A. MARTIN. A part of that rate is paid to the boats, about $15 or $20 would be the water charge, the Intercolonial would charge the rest. It is the short hauls which make the rate from Prince Edward Island so high.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend has to recognize the fact that Prince Edward Island is an island—for the present, at all events, until certain events happen. Now if he is correct in his impression that the ralway rates on the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island lines are excessive, that is a matter for investigation. I am glad my hon. friend takes that view, for sometimes we have to fear criticism, not in the maritime provinces, that the rates on these roads are too low. I am glad the hon. gentleman puts forward the other side of the question I think, however, he will find on inquiry that the railway rates on the Intercolonial and on the island are not excessive, they are probably as low as the railway rates for an equal distance in any other part of Canada. If that is not the case, then it is a proper subject for investigation; because, while we are trying to run the Intercolonial as a public convenience, we have certainly no desire to charge rates higher than those which are charged by a private company. I think it will be found on examination that if there is a difference between the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island railway rates on the one side and the company rates on the other, for a given mileage, it is in the way of higher company rates.

Mr. A. MARTIN. It is the short haul rates which we complain of. As to Prince Edward Island being an island, the province can't help that. We joined the confederation at the urgent request of the other provinces, but I do not know that they appreciate us now, they do not at least show it in the treatment they give us. On our side we are losing our population, we are losing our trade, and I am sure the Finance Minister does not desire that. I think this is one of the means that will check it, and if the Minister will take that means, he will do a service to the province; if he does not, the population will continue to decrease. We have lost 18,000 people since the census of 1891, taking into account the natural increase, when there should be a large increase.

Mr. HENDERSON. Coming back to the question before the chair, I notice that the government seems to be taking power to subsidize a line of steamers from either St. John or Halifax, or from both. I understand that the subsidy has heretofore been paid to a line of steamers from Halifax by way of St. John, and thence on to the West India Islands.

Mr. FIELDING. From St. John to Halifax and the West India Islands.

Mr. HENDERSON. Now I understand the government have under consideration the idea of running this line of steamers only from Halifax, and leaving out the port of St. John. Now I wish to draw the minister's attention to this point: These two cities are rival cities, they are both looking out for trade; and after so many years of a service between Halifax and St. John and the West India Islands, assisted by the government, I do not think it likely that either of these cities will quietly submit to seeing an advantage given to the other. I think the minister can rest assured that if he limits this service entirely to the city of Halifax, he will find an agitation at once started for another service from St. John, and that instead of one subsidy he will be called upon to provide for two subsidies. I think that is a very likely thing to occur, and I know the hon. gentleman has no desire to waste the resources of this country in subsidizing more lines than are necessary. Even at the expense of perhaps saving a day's time in this voyage I do not think it would be wise to limit the service to the one city only. It might be that the government would meet all interests better and save money to the country by continuing the service as it has been in years gone by, and not now taking it away from either one city or the other and giving the rival city a decided advantage over the one which is not to receive the service. That is the only point I desire to make, and I draw the hon. minister's attention prominently to the fact that he can rest assured from what I know of the people living in the city of St. John that they will not quietly submit, but that they will at once begin to agitate and continue to agitate until they secure the service which has been provided for them in bygone years if it should be taken away from them.

Mr. INGRAM. Just a few words in respect to the freight rate question. I did not understand my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. A. Martin) to complain of the rates in the sense in which the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has referred to his remarks. We have the statement of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals to the effect that if the rates were the same on the government railways as they are on the other lines of railway, instead of having a deficit, the government would be able to show a surplus. No doubt hon. members on this side of the House will find fault with the administration of the government railways because they charge rates that are complained of by the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals. If the government are charging a lower rate on their line of railway than other lines are charging then I think other roads will have good ground to complain. As I understand my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island he complains that it costs the same amount to transport a car of cattle from Prince Edward Island to Halifax, $65, as it does to carry it from Guelph to Halifax, and that therefore an unfair charge is imposed upon the people of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN. I did not complain particularly of the rate on the car to the other point, but I complained of the high rate charged on the people of my province.

Mr. INGRAM. Quite so. But the hon. Minister of Finance must not run away with the idea that we in Ontario do not complain in the same way. They complain in every province of the Dominion of the rates which are charged by some railway companies for the short as against the long haul. That is a general complaint throughout this country; farmers and shippers all over this country are complaining. They think it is unreasonable and that is one of the very questions which the Railway Commission should inquire into and readjust. This has been the complaint all over this country for years. Personally I take the view that if the railway companies did not take advantage of their lower rates for long hauls they could not give the rates they give now for short hauls, that if they charged high rates on long hauls that would be cut out by American competition.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I hope my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Alex. Martin) will profit by all this.

Mr. INGRAM. There are many other hon. gentlemen in this House who take exactly the view of my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, but the railway companies take a different view. They make their argument something on the line that I have already stated. On shipment from Chicago to Portland through Canada the proportion of the rate which the Canadian roads handling that trade receive is very low, and if they did not carry it at a low rate the trade, instead of passing through Canada, would pass through the United States to Portland. As a result of making this low rate they are in a position to get the trade, and by reason of getting the trade are in a better position to offer low rates to the Canadian people for short hauls. That is the argument, and I think there is common sense in it. Let the Railway Commission hear the complaints of shippers, farmers and others, especially those shipping cattle, let the question be fully discussed, and let the commission give their ruling as to what should be done in the matter of the long and short haul. In reference to the government railway do I understand the hon. Minister of Finance to say that the people of the lower provinces who have the advantage of government railways in their provinces are not satisfied with freight rates even though the rates are lower than the rates charged on other competing lines? Do I understand that the people of the eastern provinces insist on having lower rates than competing lines are able to give them, and that as a result there is a deficit in respect to the service of the government railways? If that is the position, then we will argue it from that point of view. Am I correct in understanding that to be the hon. gentleman's statement?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know what my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) may or may not understand. He could not have received that understanding from anything I said because I did not touch upon the subject at all. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Martin) said that the railway rates are too high and I said in reply to that, that the statement was sometimes made that the Intercolonial Railway did not charge enough. I cannot put my hand on any particular member but I have heard it said a dozen times and I was glad to have my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island bear testimony to the fact that the rates were not too low, at all events. He wants them lower.

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN. I have here a copy of a resolution passed at the annual meeting of the Maritime Board of Trade. I suppose my hon. friend the Minister of Finance would pay a good deal of respect to the opinion of the Maritime Board of Trade on a question of this kind?

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly. I respect my hon. friend's opinion too.

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN. The Maritime Board of Trade at a meeting held at Moncton on August 17, 1904, passed a resolution, and I think my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will agree that it bears out what I said on the subject. The resolution is as follows :

> Whereas, shipments from points on the Prince Edward Island Railway to points on the Intercolonial Railway, and shipments from stations on the Intercolonial Railway to stations on the Prince Edward Island Railway, are subject practically to three short haul rates, winter and summer, the ferry service on the straits charging a short haul rate, and
> Whereas, shippers on the Intercolonial Railway from points on the mainland to stations in Cape Breton, notwithstanding the ferry service at the straits or Gut of Canso, are only charged a continuous railway haul——

How is that? From points in Nova Scotia, the province from which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance comes, to Cape Breton across the Gut of Canso, there is no such thing as a short haul railway charge. A long haul rate is charged for goods shipped to Cape Breton which also has the misfortune to be an island. It appears that the hon. Minister of Finance has some antipathy towards Prince Edward Island, but in the case of Cape Breton the antipathy does not show itself to such an extent as it does in the case of my own province.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Alex. Martin) whether the cars of the Intercolonial Railway run over the Prince Edward Island as they do to Cape Breton and whether in his opinion that does not make a difference.

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN. Our complaint is that they do not. We hope they are going to do that very soon.

Whereas, shippers on the Intercolonial Railway from points on the mainland to stations in Cape Breton, notwithstanding the ferry service at the straits or Gut of Canso, are only charged a continuous railway haul, the resulting overcharge on shipments to and from the island on fifteen ton carloads of eighth-class produce on an eighty-mile haul is equal to the difference between $45 and $28.

That is quite a difference on a 15 ton car; you pay $45 in Prince Edward Island and it goes to the island of Cape Breton which is attached to the province of the Finance Minister and it gets there for $28.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Is the hon. gentleman aware that there is a special ferry charge on freight going to Cape Breton?

Mr. A. MARTIN. This is what the Marine Board of Trade says, and the ferry charge is included.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Never mind that; is it not a fact that there is special charge for ferriage across the strait of Canso?

Mr. A. MARTIN. This includes the ferry charge because the resolution says so. It says:

The resulting overcharge on shipments to and from Prince Edward Island on fifteen ton car loads of eighth-class produce on an eighty-mile haul is equal to the difference between $28 and $45, as compared with an equal haul on the Intercolonial. Rates on first-class goods show a much greater injustice against Prince Edward Island shippers to the mainland than mainland shippers to the island.

Therefore, resolved, that in the opinion of this board the rates of freight from all points on the government railroads to and from Prince Edward Island should be adjusted on the basis of a continuous rail haul.

That is what I suggested before; put it on the basis of a continuous rail haul in place of three short hauls.

Resolved, that the same principle apply to shipments originating at Prince Edward Island points and transferred to the Intercolonial Railway.

Resolved, that copies of this resolution be sent to the Minister of Railways and our maritime representative at Ottawa.

I suppose this resolution was sent to the Minister of Finance, and I am not astonished he has overlooked it in the multitude of business he has to attend to. That is what the people of Prince Edward Island want, and if they had a proper rate from Prince Edward Island to Halifax for export to the West Indies they would be satisfied without a subsidized boat at all. We are at present handicapped with these high inland rates and shut out of the market. We have to depend on the speculative genius of the people of Prince Edward Island to do for themselves a trade with the West Indies, whereas the people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are doing it at the public expense.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not want to set my opinion against the view which my hon. friend presents, but as I understand what the Maritime Board of Trade asks, it is that we should deny the existence of these three short hauls and call them one. There is a short haul in Prince Edward Island over a narrow gauge railroad, there is a short haul over an independent steamship line to the mainland, and there is a short haul over the Intercolonial Railway. We are to deny the existence of these and say that there is only one haul. That is a very simple proposition, but I am afraid it is expensive.

Trade and Commerce—administration of Chinese Immigration Act, $4,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This item is solely for the payment of salaries for the administration of the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the tax now?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. $500, since the 1st of January, 1904.

Mr. FOSTER. How many Chinese have come in?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. For the year 1904 we collected $3,200, but out of this sum there were $1,700 collected from 17 Chinamen who had entered previous to January 1, 1904, the tax not being collected until after that date. Only three Chinamen have come in paying $500 each, and that was paid by the Canadian Pacific Railway on account of three Chinamen deserters.

Mr. FOSTER. Only $1,500 has been received?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And $4,000 paid out?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. To whom is that $4,000 paid?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To Mr. Newberry, collector at Victoria, an extra salary of $400; to Mr. Beckwith, preventive officer, $200, to Mr. Mong Kow interpreter, $1,000; to I. G. Pickard, stenographer, $60; and to George Wynne, caretaker, $60. At Victoria there is paid to J. M. Bowell, collector of customs extra salary, $400; to C. E. Yip Yen, interpreter, $800, and to F. Bowser, landing waiter, $200.

Mr. FOSTER. What really is aimed at is keeping these Chinamen out of Canada ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is practically what is aimed at.

Mr. FOSTER. And the $500 fee is practically prohibitive ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. So it is.

Mr. FOSTER. For what reason in the world can you want two interpreters paying them an aggregate of $1,800 a year. The steamship companies do their own interpreting and the only reason you want an interpreter would be that when you pounce upon an unfortunate Chinaman and tell him to whack up his $500 or get out, he may talk to you then you want to understand his frame of mind just at that moment. It seems to me you could easily get an interpreter for these three Chinamen without having one interpreter kicking his heels up at $1,000 a year and another at $800.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The present law has been in force only one year and the service has been continued as it was before. We did not know how events would turn out ; they have turned out practically to prohibit Chinese immigration, but it has not altogether prevented and extinguished Chinese trade. There are a good many Chinamen who come in bond.

Mr. FOSTER. How many have come in ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know how many have come, I have no information but at all events there is a Chinese population of about 20,000 on the Pacific coast in Canada alone. It is not increasing at the present time, but, as far as my memory serves, at the time of the last census it was about 20,000 and it is still at that figure. There is no increase but there is a movement of population going to and fro between China and British Columbia. The services of this interpreter are not only for the purpose of collecting the $500 from the men who come in, but are also required owing to the fact that there is a China trade going on constantly. I said a moment ago, and I think I am right, that the services of the interpreter are attached to the customs generally, although these services are mostly required for the purposes of the passenger traffic. I think they are also required for the purpose of the freight traffic. I met in 1894 one of the Chinese interpreters in Victoria, and from what I gathered he makes himself generally useful in the Customs Department. Perhaps I was misinformed, perhaps his chief services were connected with the collection of the Chinese tax which was in existence at that time, but I was under the impression that he made himself generally useful in the customs and I can assure my friend that at Victoria and Vancouver these interpreters were necessary to the Customs Department.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the minister had bettter look into that. It seems like an illustration of what I said a while ago that you get into a certain rut in the department and you go on voting and paying whether the business is going on or not. I cannot see why if the Customs Department want an interpreter it is not the business of the Customs Department to employ and pay him? I imagine we paid them because of the large number of Chinamen coming in and that no doubt kept them employed ; now when you have a prohibitive tax you cannot need these men for the administration of the Chinese Act, so I should think the Prime Minister had better look into that and see whether that vote cannot be done away with. You pay $600 and $800, altogether $1,400 to collectors in connection with Chinese immigration. If your immigration tax is really prohibitive, and you are only getting in three or four Chinamen in the course of a year I do not think you can justify that vote. If the customs officers are not getting enough pay as customs officers, give it to them, but let the customs pay it, certainly they cannot have much to do in connection with Chinese immigration. That looks also like the survival of an old vote which there has not been enough energy in the minister of the department to revise. I must say again to my right hon. friend that we find it very inconvenient to have what ought to be a live department like the Department of Trade and Commerce administered from the dead house, so to speak, that is from the house that my friends opposite used to signify as the moribund house. It would be a great deal better in these live matters if we had the minister here. We have had examples of that this year. You cannot expect the Minister of Customs who has a large department to administer to bring these estimates down and show any knowledge of them and he did not do that ; it is not to his discredit. The Minister of Finance is also a busy man or makes a pretense of being busy.

Mr. FIELDING. It is the same thing.

Mr. FOSTER. About the same thing I suppose as far as his conscience goes. I think he has enough work to keep him going, and he cannot be expected to understand this department ; he cannot understand it unless he lives in it; and I would suppose you could take one of the supernumerary departments, such for instance—when you get through this Autonomy Bill—as the Department of Justice ; you might put the Minister of Justice up there and bring the live department down here.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He has had enough to do already.

Mr. FOSTER. Well he has to keep a check over the Department of the Interior and so long as that is run in the way it is I think it is well he is down here but we want to have the Department of Trade and Commerce down here also.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would have no objection to have the Department of Trade and Commerce here as it was before; I would have no objection at all but I do not know that it is less effective because the head of the department has been transferred from one chamber to another. The only inconvenience is that the man who has to handle the estimates in this House cannot be so well supplied with the information to which the hon. gentleman is entitled. I am sorry I have not all the information because I learn myself as I go on in this matter. My hon. friend must not suppose that there are only three Chinamen who have come into Canada because only three have paid the capitation tax of $500. There are others, there are three classes of Chinamen and my hon. friend will realize that when there is a population in our own country of 20,000 Chinamen and when they insist on going back to China during their life—because if they do not they must go back when they are dead,—there is necessarily a trade going on all the time. There are four classes of Chinamen, first of all there is the Chinaman who is subject to the capitation tax, that is to say on his first arrival when he comes here to work in Canada. Then there are Chinese who are living here, and are returning under registration to China. A certain number are registered, those who have their certificates and have paid their capitation tax, and they are entitled to go back to China for one year. Therefore there must be an examination of these men at the customs house, to see that they are the proper men they must be examined orally and their papers must be examined also, and therefore the services of the interpreter are required for that purpose. Then there is also the Chinaman in bond.

Mr. FOSTER. Dead or alive?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They are very much alive sometimes. We are a growing and progressive country and we do not import only goods in bond, but Chinamen also. We have to look after these men; they have to be carefully checked, because we do not want to mix our Chinamen with the American Chinamen, we must keep them separate. Then there is the Chinaman who is exempt altogether, the trader or the student who is above these little inconveniences, and for these reasons it has been found that the services of the interpreter were necessary. I am quite sure if my hon. friend had been here two years ago and had these estimates when the capitation tax was $100 and there was a pretty brisk trade in live flesh between this country and China, he would have had no fault to find with the employment of these two interpreters. Since that time the capitation tax has been increased, and it has almost prohibited that passenger trade. It was increased only two years ago, and my hon. friend I think cannot expect, and I do not think that on reflection he will insist, that the department should at once have cut off its employees. We have to see how it will work out, and therefore perhaps it will be advisable in the future if the trade is so restricted——

Mr. FOSTER. Why do you need one at Vancouver, as well as at Victoria. Victoria must be the first port of call?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Some are landed at Victoria and some at Vancouver, There is a Chinatown in Vancouver and one in Victoria also.

Mr. FOSTER. Which is the first port of call?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Vancouver.

Mr. INGRAM. The right hon. gentleman referred to examining the Chinamen orally and also examining their certificates. As I understand it there is a further examination required. All Chinamen I think look very much alike.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. INGRAM. And in order to get over the difficulty you have to have measures as to the height, &c., and these are recorded.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. These would require to be examined as well.

Mr. INGRAM. You will continue I suppose to measure them in the same way?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This can be done by somebody else than the interpreter. They are all carefully examined and marked.

Mr. INGRAM. I presume that the Chinamen who leave Vancouver or Victoria for China and return are remeasured, so as to make sure that others are not being smuggled in, in place of those who left.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes. With regard to the item of $50,000 for commercial agencies, I suppose my hon. friend will expect me to give a statement of the agents and their localization. Mr. J. S. Larke is stationed at Sydney, Australia, D. H. Ross, at Melbourne, Australia, C. M. Kittson at Cape Town, South Africa. He was the representative of the Ogilvie Milling Company in South Africa for the last three years, and we appointed him on the death of Mr. Jardine. He is a Montreal man.

Mr. FOSTER. He devotes all his time to this?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes. A. F. A. Poindron is in Paris, France.

Mr. FOSTER. You have a commercial agent there besides Mr. Fabre?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Why could not Mr. Fabre attend to this service?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Because I do not think Mr. Fabre, who is a success in other directions, would be a success as a commercial agent. Mr. Poindron had been stationed in Montreal for a number of years in connection with Canadian trade, and is a very competent man. Mr. Fabre, as my hon. friend knows, is not at all versed in commercial matters, and we thought it better to have a man who made trade his business.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has this gentleman been there ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Since the fall of 1902.

Mr. FOSTER. How often has he reported ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He reports regularly. I will give a statement by-and-by in regard to the reports of all the agents. The next is P. B. Ball, at Birmingham, Eng.; J. B. Jackson, at Leeds and Hull, Eng.

Mr. FOSTER. Has not my hon. friend ever had any thoughts as to whether this is an acceptable appointment for Canada or not ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will come to that in a moment. I am now giving the list. P. B. MacNamara, at Manchester, Eng.; W. A. McKinnon, at Bristol, Eng.; Alex. MacLean, in Japan ; A. W. Donly, in Mexico ; C. E. Sontum, in Norway ; E. E. Burke, in Jamaica ; Edgar Tripp, in Trinidad ; S. L. Horsford, in St. Kitts ; R. Bryson, in Antigua. With regard to the system followed, this is the way it works. The Canadian commercial agents in various parts of the world are under the constant and direct supervision of the department at Ottawa.

Mr. FOSTER. What officer is in charge of them ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. O'Hara. Their reports are forwarded regularly upon a very large variety of commercial and general topics of information. Their reports are carefully edited and promptly printed in the Weekly Report issued by the department. The Weekly Report is distributed free all over Canada to any persons interested.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you find out the persons interested ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. By circulars and inquiries.

Mr. FOSTER. As a matter of fact, how many of these go out monthly ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. 1,150 every week.

Mr. FOSTER. How many are published ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. About the same number. All commercial agents, when in receipt of trade inquiries, forward the same to the department and the inquiries are published in the Weekly Report. Parties in Canada requesting addresses of the same obtain them by return mail, upon application to the department. When an address is furnished a correspondent in Canada, the commercial agent is advised, so that he can notify his client of the name and address of the interested party in Canada. Uniform instructions have been sent to all the commercial agents, which has reduced their work to a systematic basis. A complete index of the Weekly Report is published every six months and sent to the regular recipients of the report. A comprehensive index of all the trade inquiries received from commercial agents is kept in the department.

With regard to Mr. Jackson's appointment, which I know has received some criticism, and as to which we had a debate in the House last year, I would like to read to my hon. friend the following letter :

The 'Trade Review' Publishing Company,
687 Craig Street,
Montreal, April 22nd, 1905.

F. C. T. O'Hara, Esq.,
Superintendent of Commercial Agencies,
Department of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—We take the liberty of congratulating you upon the splendid reports issued by the commercial agencies throughout Great Britain. It seems to us that you could make arrangements with trade publications in Canada for a larger issuance of the information contained in the reports, as we think it would be a good thing for the manufacturers in this country. We are satisfied in many instances the commercial agencies could be used direct by manufacturers to extend their trade in the various districts throughout Great Britain where your agents are located ; at any rate they could ascertain the possibility of doing business in their respective districts and thus save the manufacturers the necessity of incurring the expense of sending a representative there direct.

It seems to us that the manufacturers of this country are not availing themselves to the extent they might of the valuable information issued each week by the commercial agencies throughout Great Britain. You will observe in our issue of April 7th, on page 43, we publish in full the report of Mr. P. B. McNamara. At that time we also had at hand a report from Mr. J. B. Jackson, which we would have given at length, but the space at our disposal did not allow us to do so.

We would simply say in conclusion, we have been closely following the reports issued by Mr. Jackson since he has received his appointment, and we are pleased to go on record as saying, said reports compare favourably with the reports issued by any of the American consuls throughout Great Britain, which we receive from week to week. We make this statement in reference to him because of the somewhat unfavourable criticism that was passed upon him at the time of his appointment. And we further make this statement for one who is and always has been a staunch Conservative, and believe it is only right that when an injustice is done an individual it is a duty to repair that injustice as far as possible.

We beg to remain
Yours truly,
(Sgd.) HENRY HARVEY & COMPANY,
Proprietors 'Trade Review.'

With regard to the general work of the agencies, I would like to communicate to the House the following from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association :

Canadian Manufacturers Association.
Toronto, April 29, 1905.

The Right Honourable
Sir Richard Cartwright,
Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Dear Sir,—I have the honour to inclose herewith a resolution adopted at the last meeting of the executive council of this association with reference to the commercial agency branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Submitting the same for your consideration, I have the honour to be,

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) R. P. YOUNGE,
Secretary.

Resolution adopted at the regular meeting of the executive council of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, held at the head office, Toronto, on Thursday, April 20, 1905 :

Resolved, whereas, the Department of Trade and Commerce of the Dominion government has increased during the past year the usefulness of its commercial agency service :

(1) By publishing the reports of the commercial agents and the foreign trade inquiries weekly instead of monthly ;

(2) By extending the scope of its work and appointing agents to new fields, and

(3) By providing for more frequent visits to Canada by its foreign agents in order that they may be kept familiar with Canada's increasing possibilities in export trade.

Therefore, be it resolved, that the Canadian Manufacturers Association express its appreciation and tender its best thanks to the Honourable the Minister of Trade and Commerce, for the assistance given to increase Canada's export trade by the development of the commercial agency service as above.

Mr. INGRAM. I have read many of the reports of our different commercial agencies, and in nearly every instance I have found complaint of the way goods were parcelled and shipped and of the state in which they arrive at their destination. This you find, for instance, in the reports of Mr. Larke. He has been in Australia for several years. I am not aware he has ever paid Canada a visit since he first went to Australia.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He sails tomorrow for Canada.

Mr. INGRAM. It seems to me that if the commercial agents were brought home to Canada for an occasional trip, and, while here, addressed meetings in Toronto, Montreal and other important centres explaining to the people what is necessary in the shipment of their goods to the points in the territory for which the agent is appointed, it would do much to educate manufacturers and shippers on these points and so would overcome this difficulty. I believe that some organized body have already made this suggestion to the government. I am not sure, but it runs in my mind that that is the case.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these reports sent in weekly?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They are asked to report at least once a month and more frequently if they have anything to report.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not in a position to criticise very much the reports of the commercial agents, for I have not been receiving them. I would like the minister to ask that my name be put on the list of those to whom these weekly bulletins are sent so that I may see what is in them. We are paying about $45,000 for our Canadian agencies, so called; and the field covered is not as wide as it should be, even at that amount of money. In fact, our agents do not cover a very large territory. I see that there are none in the United States of America.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I omitted one name. We appointed an agent in Chicago last March—Mr. Arnaud from Annapolis.

Mr. FOSTER. The United States consular service, although a poorly paid one, is most thorough.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. And I notice, in reading the United States consular reports, that those who make them take a great deal of pains in gaining and compiling information. They do not distribute themselves over a large area, with a paragraph referring to each thing, which is a very discursive and not very satisfying method. They take one particular subject at a time and make a thorough examination of it; and, when their report is sent in, their government has in it almost everything that can be said upon that subject. The Prime Minister will see what I mean if he will examine the United States consular reports. I notice that our reports are fragmentary—very fragmentary. For instance, take Mr. Jackson's report of May 3rd. He has four items. One is the trade of Bradford with the United States during the month of April; the second gives the trade of Huddersfield with the United States during the month of April ; the third gives the expenditure, income, &c., of the Leeds tramway; and the fourth notes that a good deal of dissatisfaction is being expressed as to the shipments of stale and over-kept bacon from the United States, and that Canadian bacon is steadily gaining ground. While all this is good information, I do not know that it is information that greatly stimulates the trade of Canada. It is a nice thing for a man to know just what the trade of Bradford with the United States in the month of April was, but it does not lead to anywhere. It is not merely a fragment, but it is a mere point of a fragment. When you have got it read. there is not much of it that you can keep or use. While such things may be good if they are well selected, I think it would be still better—if our men are capable of doing it; and I am sure that they are, many of them at least—if they would take up one subject of trade and make a thorough investigation of it and give all there is in it, so that those who read can make up their minds as to what field it opens if any, and whether they should go in to possess that field.

Further, the sending out of 1,100 copies of these reports each week is something; but it is not very much. If you take the trouble to gather this information, tabulate it and print it, then, it seems to me you ought to give it a wider circulation. I suppose the present circulation is mainly among producers and shippers, but, no doubt, a good many of the 1,100 copies circulated go to persons not actively engaged in commerce. What the government ought to do is to get this information before the trading and producing public, and it might be worth while to consider whether means cannot be taken to give this information a wider distribution.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What would my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) suggest?

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest a little active propaganda. I would communicate with the members of parliament and ask them to give the names of manufacturers, producers and shippers in their constituencies to whom these reports could be sent. That is a thing that members would like to do, because they would like to have this information in the hands of those of their constituents who are interested. Then, boards of trade, manufacturers, associations and other bodies of that kind ought to co-operate. I daresay they do co-operate but that co-operation might be made more active. It may be worth considering whether the information could not be utilized in the trade papers. The point I make is that along with the fragmentary information, our agents ought to be asked to take up certain subjects so that the department here could make a thorough examination into the conditions. Take the fruit trade, the bacon trade, those are pretty well established, but there are other trades which are not, a lot of things we produce and that we want a market for.

Mr. TAYLOR. Butter and cheese.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but these are pretty well developed now. But there are many other things for which we want to find a market. Now if they would take up these and make an exhaustive examination and put into brief form all the information there is, where the demand chiefly is, the prices paid, and everything of that kind with reference to any article of export, they would give very valuable information, which I think would be more useful than the fragmentary information now given.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The suggestions of my hon. friend are very practical, and I am happy to tell him that in part they have already engaged the attention of the government. I will ask the department to send my hon. friend the bulletins which have been issued in the past, and which will be issued. He will find in them something that will interest him.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another remark I would like to make. I have been led lately to question whether these monthly returns of exports and imports, and tabulations of trade, were fulfilling the object which the department had in view. Are they really read? They are pretty bulky, they are a blue book, and there is a general disposition, when one gets a blue book, to throw it away somewhere. A blue book requires almost a technical education to understand it. A new member coming to this House knows what I mean. He gets a blue book, and he goes to an older member and says: Where am I to find out this thing? Well, it is in the book, but it requires a particular training to find and utilize it. If that is so with a new member of parliament, it is a great deal more so with a busy man outside. I have been led to question whether these monthly reports, coming out so long after the month in which they are dated, being so voluminous, and in part technical—whether they are not largely defeating the purpose we had in view, and whether better results would not be attained by the government in picking out certain points of interest and issuing a bulletin with reference thereto, putting the facts clearly so that the lay mind could understand them. I have been looking over some of these this morning, they are almost the size of a blue book, and they are incomplete. I doubt whether our commercial men freely read them. I would like to have the views of some commercial men here as to whether they do use them, whether they are of much value, whether it would not be better to take up some particular subject in the form of a bulletin and present the statistics in regard to it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would not like to give any opinion on the question raised by the hon. gentleman, in the absence of the Minister of Customs, under whose purview this subject comes.

Mr. FOSTER. The Department of Trade and Commerce issues them.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think they are prepared by the Customs Department, and issued by the Trade and Commerce. But I can say from my own knowledge that there is one class of the community which scans these reports very closely, and I think would not like to have any change, and that is the manufacturers. To my certain knowledge they follow these reports very closely from day to day, from week to week and from month to month, in order to see in what line and in what direction trade is moving. As to the rest of the community, I have no personal knowledge how much interest is taken in them. I think my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) will corroborate me in saying that these reports are closely scanned by the manufacturers.

Mr. INGRAM. In comparing the reports of the Department of Trade and Commerce with those of the Customs Department, I find in a few instances that the figures do not agree. Now in the reports which have been referred to by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), the title itself would lead one to suppose that the figures were not correct. That matter has already been brought up in the House this session, and the Minister of Customs stated that the figures were correct. If that is true, then why put in the title on these books the word 'unrevised.' That alone would lead the public to suppose that the figures were not as accurate as they might be.

Mr. FOSTER. The unrevised figures would have reference to the last month.

Mr. INGRAM. They are a monthly report, and the title would lead one to suppose that the figures are not vouched for by the department as being accurate. Therefore the public cannot have full confidence in it. Here is a report to the end of the year, and you desire to find out some information for the first two or three months of the following year when you go over the monthly reports and have your figures worked out, you are not certain whether the figures are accurate or not.

Mr. FOSTER. In the desire to get up as nearly as possible to date, they put in the figures of the last month, even though they have not been revised. It is a close approximation.

Mr. INGRAM. I presume we have a right to assume they are as nearly correct as they can be. The Minister of Customs says that they are as correct as they are in the yearly report. If that be true then the words used make a person who is looking up the facts believe that he is simply getting the figures of the total amount of the supposed actual trade done.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend from North Toronto has just given the exact reason why they are issued in that form. To come back to the subject that he mentioned a moment ago I may say to my hon. friend from North Toronto that the subjects which have already been treated in the weekly reports of the Department of Trade and Commerce are as follows: Butter and cheese to the West Indies; butter and bacon in Great Britain; Danish methods in marketing products in Great Britain; boots and shoes in the West Indies, and Canadian flour in the West Indies.

Mr. AMES. I notice there the item of boots and shoes in the West Indies. When that statement was prepared was it sent to the manufacturers of and the wholesale dealers in boots and shoes throughout the Dominion?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that to a large extent it was and to everybody on the list. I am informed also that a large number of circulars are going out daily to firms not already on the list asking if they desire the report.

Mr. AMES. With a particular report such as this which so obviously interests a class of manufacturers, the manufacturers of boots and shoes for example, I should think it would not be necessary to write in advance and ascertain if they wished bulletins sent, but that bulletins or instructions from the department should be sent to all of that class throughout the Dominion. They would all appreciate it. While the probabilities are that the regular reports of the department published by the department would not be read and considered, this one special report which affects their business would be welcomed, I am sure.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Bounties on iron and steel, manufactures of steel, on lead contained in lead ore, and on crude petroleum—to cover expenditure in connection with the administration of the Acts, $11,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the whole expenditure on these items up to date?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The total amount paid last year is a pretty large one. The different amounts are as follows:

Pig iron	$ 553,982 15
Puddled iron bars	11,668 99
Steel ingots	347,990 17
Articles manufactured from steel	15,320 85
Lead	195,627 09
Binder twine	25,452 04
Crude petroleum	167,204 47
Total	$1,297,245 76

Mr. INGRAM. How does this amount compare with the estimate of the amount which would be paid out on account of these bounties made by the hon. Minister of Finance last year?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not remember that I made a definite estimate of the amount. If so I do not recall it at the moment. I will look it up however.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would the right hon. Prime Minister say whether the bounty paid on crude petroleum is for the full twelve months or only for a fraction of the twelve months?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is from the 8th of July to 18th of January.

Mr. HENDERSON. So the amount paid does not give us an idea of what the yearly amount will be. The statement is only for a little over half a year.

Mr. INGRAM. I think the estimate of the hon. Minister of Finance was about $300,000.

Mr. FIELDING. I did give an estimate in regard to the bounty on petroleum.

Mr. INGRAM. I think it was about $300,000 but I would not be sure.

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot recall it. I think that is the only case in which I gave an estimate. It entered into the calculation as to the duty.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand the bounty on petroleum is paid monthly or at short periods. Why have we not a statement since January? It seems to me that the statement should be brought down from a later date.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. These statistics were prepared some time ago.

Mr. HENDERSON. They are somewhat ancient.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, somewhat ancient. We can give him some more modern history if my hon. friend desires it.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will get it on the supplementaries.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. My object in asking the question was to ascertain what is the probably yearly amount we are called upon to pay.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will have it here the next time.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be over $300,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, this fact we have just brought out sets one thinking. But, I suppose this is not a proper place in which to criticise the system of bounties. I never thought when I used to be here that I would ever look into the face of a Liberal government and have the information given to me by the head of the government, especially its present head, that the enormous sum of one million and nearly five hundred thousand dollars would be paid out for bounties.

Mr. HENDERSON. It avoids the adoption of a protectionist tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the right hon. First Minister give us the details of the expenditure?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The expenditure in connection with the iron and steel bounties is as follows: James A. Russell, supervisor for Nova Scotia, salary $1,400 a year; James McNeil, assistant supervisor, Sydney, $900; James G. Parmelee, Sault Ste. Marie, $1,000; Hugh Murray, $250; lead, G. O. Buchanan, Kaslo, $2,400; James B. Harvey, supervisor, Petrolia, $1,200; L. B. Jackson, clerk, Petrolia, $420; James Spierman, excise officer, Sarnia, $200; C. J. Coffey, Moncton, $200. Then with regard to binder twine there is a name which is somewhat familiar, J. L. Haycock, Kingston, Ontario——

Mr. FOSTER. How do you spell him: Hay——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I thought my hon. friend was familiar with the name.

Mr. FOSTER. I wanted to see how it was spelled so that I would be sure of it. Is that the last surviving remnant of the Patrons of Industry?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I only know him as inspector of binder twine and supervisor of bounty.

Mr. FOSTER. What do you pay him?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. $1,600.

Mr. FOSTER. It is worth $1,600 to collar the whole business.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is money thrown away.

Mr. INGRAM. He is a little Czar to administer the law.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 165 respecting the Canadian Yukon Western Railway Company.—Mr. Campbell.

On the order being called for,

Second reading of Bill (No. 172) for the relief of Philip Vibert.—Mr. Zimmerman.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I know nothing about this Bill. It has been put on the order paper in my name and I decidedly object and ask my name to be withdrawn.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Stand.

Order allowed to stand.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Trade and Commerce, $65,600.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asked for some explanation as to the methods which were observed by the government for the payment of the bounties which we were discussing this afternoon. Under the Acts providing for these bounties it is enacted that regulations shall be made by the Governor in Council for the purpose of checking the way in which they are to be paid. Orders in Council have been passed providing that the work shall be superintended by an officer of the government who is stationed in each of the different premises, the regulations provide further that the officer in charge is to see that all quantities of ores and the different ingredients which go into the making of the metal shall be carefully examined into, that they shall be weighed and that he shall satisfy himself of all the quantities that have entered into the metal, so that the officers in charge at the different works at Sydney or Sault Ste. Marie follow from day to day all the operations of the manufacturer. They weigh all the quantities of ore that go in and satisfy themselves from day to day of everything that takes place in the manufacture. When that is done the company makes a claim for the quantity upon which they think they have earned bounty, and the claim is checked by the officer on the books of the company. Then it is transmitted to Ottawa to the accountant, who goes over it as far as he can and then the claim is sent to the Auditor General for payment.

Mr. FOSTER. If the payment is so much on each ton of pig-iron then what about the payment on puddled bar ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The same methods are followed.

Mr. FOSTER. How much is paid now on pig iron ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. $2.25 on Canadian and $1.50 on foreign ores.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that decrease each year ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It decreases each year. It has to run, I think, two or three years more.

Mr. FOSTER. After you have paid the $2.25 on pig-iron that pig-iron is put through processes which make puddled bars ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And then you pay on it again how much ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On puddled bars $2.25.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the steel ingot come from, puddled bar ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is made into pig-iron and then steel ingots afterwards.

Mr. FOSTER. The next is steel ingots, what are they made from ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They are made from the pig-iron, as I understand.

Mr. FOSTER. And how much is paid on steel ingots ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. $2.25 a ton upon the steel ingots.

Mr. FOSTER. And the steel ingots are made from the pig-iron ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. So that you pay really $4.50 on the perfected process in each case ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is $2.25 and $2.25. On pig iron which is made of ore 50 per cent Canadian, $2.25, and on pig-iron made from 50 per cent foreign, $1.50.

Mr. HENDERSON. I presume that is about right. The bounties originally were $3 for converting the ore into pig-iron, $3 more for converting the pig-iron into steel, but there is a gradual reduction year after year, until the whole thing is wiped out, I think in about seven years from the time the law was passed. I think that the Prime Minister is about right when he says that it is $1.50 for this year, as this reduction has taken place during the last three years.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the process with reference to the crude petroleum?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have an officer by whom the quantities are ascertained. The claims are made by the companies, and, when verified by the officer, are transmitted by him.

Mr. FOSTER. How much is paid per gallon?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. One and one-half cents.

Mr. FOSTER. For every gallon pumped —is that it?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, the bounty was applied in July last. It was paid up to what was in store, and since then it has been paid upon what was pumped.

Mr. HENDERSON. How frequently are the payments made?

Sir WILFRIL LAURIER. About monthly.

Mr. FOSTER. This crude petroleum is pumped at the different wells and then run into a central tank?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And the quantity is calculated at the central tank?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And the bounty paid on that? Then, the bounty is paid to the purchaser and not to the producer?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, to the producer.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, it must be measured in some way before it goes into the central tank?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that there is no difficulty about that. There is a system of checking the amount pumped from each well into the tank.

Mr. INGRAM. Many of the wells are owned by private individuals. A man may have an oil well in his garden. But the pumping of the oil from that well is done by a power which is used to pump perhaps twenty other wells. The well owner pays so much for the pumping and he gets so much for his crude oil. To pay the bounty, of course, it must be known what each well produces.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that the quantity pumped from each well into the central tank is measured as it goes into the central tank. I may say that all the expenses that were mentioned this afternoon of checking the operations for the payment of the bounty are borne by or recouped to the government by the companies to receive the bounty.

Mr. FOSTER. Tell us how the binder twine is done and how many pounds were made?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have here the figures to show the production in detail.

Mr. FOSTER. That bounty was paid to the Kingston Penitentiary binder twine factory as a matter of bookkeeping ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes. The total production was 16,165,048 pounds ; the manilla fibre used was 7,473,754 pounds ; and the total amount of bounty paid was $25,452.04.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any restriction put on the sale price of bounty-fed binder twine, or do the manufacturers fix their own prices ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They fix their own prices.

Mr. TAYLOR. I notice that most of the factories produce about two pounds of binder twine to one pound of manilla used, all except the Kingston penitentiary, where they use a pound of fibre to a pound of twine.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that take in all our bounties ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That takes in all our bounties, so far as I know at this moment.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the bounty on binder twine ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. 75 cents per 100 kilos, and one kilo is equal to 2·20 pounds.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the lead bounty work satisfactorily in British Columbia ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that it does.

Mr. INGRAM. I notice that some of the newspapers say that it is not satisfactory, and that the miners would prefer a straight duty on lead.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would not be surprised at that. It is difficult to satisfy everybody. If a duty were placed on lead, it would seriously interfere with the manufacture of paint, and therefore it would necessitate a pretty extensive revision of the tariff. The government will perhaps take that matter up for consideration on the next revision of the tariff ; but in the meantime they considered that the best way of protecting the lead industry was by means of a bounty.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before we pass from the binder twine, is the First Minister able to say whether the bounty will be a complete offset to the export duty charged by the American government on manilla coming from the Philippine Islands ? Will it place our manufacturers on a par in that regard with the American manufacturers ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say that my information on that point is not such to enable me to commit myself to a definite statement. I know that such was the intention when the bounty was put on.

Mr. INGRAM. I notice that $195,627 has been paid in lead bounties. Suppose the paying of a bounty on lead ceased, in what position would our lead producers in British Columbia be ? If a straight duty were imposed, they would be protected and would be receiving some benefit.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As I have explained to my hon. friend last year, when the lead men came to us for assistance, representing that they had established an industry in British Columbia, which employed some 500 men in producing lead, that they had lost their market in the United States as the result of a combine there, and that unless we came to their assistance, the whole of the money which they had put into the industry would be wiped out and the men employed in it would be deprived of their work, I dare say they would have preferred a duty to a bounty. But the government considered that they could not at that moment impose a duty on lead without interfering seriously with other industries of which lead is the raw material. All the manufacturers of paint use our lead, and this is a growing industry, and a very rapidly growing industry, as my hon. friend knows. If the government at that time had been prepared to revise the tariff, I do not say but that they would have taken into consideration the request of the lead producers. Whenever the time comes for revising the tariff—and that time cannot be very far distant, for our tariff has been in existence for about eight years—the Minister of Finance may think it advisable to revise his policy in regard to lead, and may replace the bounty by a duty. I do not say that in the way of forecasting events, but the matter is fairly open for consideration.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, I understand from the right hon. gentleman's remarks, that the paint manufacturers wished to import lead from the United States. I suppose that was their objection to having a duty imposed on lead.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No. I say that if a duty had been put on lead, whether it came from the United States or from Canada, it would have so seriously interfered with the price of the raw material of the manufacturers of paint that their industry would have been placed in serious jeopardy.

Mr. HENDERSON. That involves a pretty deep question—whether it would have increased the price of lead or not. Is it not possible that by means of a good round duty you would have succeeded in developing the lead industry in British Columbia to such an extent that we would not require to import any great quantity, while the competition amongst the miners would have kept the price as low as it is at present, with the bounty added ? That is a pretty big question, and perhaps the First Minister does not desire to go into it to-night; but I think that is the true protective principle—to develop that industry with a view not only to maintaining and increasing it, but with a view to bringing down the price of lead.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As my hon. friend has rightly stated, this is a very big question, and his view that the imposition of a duty does not increase the price of the manufactured article to the consumer is one which is not generally shared by those who have to pay the duty. They say that it does increase the price of their raw material. I have heard the argument of my hon. friend before, and no doubt I shall hear it again. I will refer him to the example I have seen very often when we are asked to increase the duty. We are told it will not increase the price, but there will be so much competition from within that the price will remain just as it is. But with respect to the raw material used in the manufacture of that article the man always says : Hold on, you cannot increase that duty without increasing the price at the same time.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should think the Prime Minister, with his sunny ways, might be able to persuade him of his fallacy.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My sunny ways do not always succeed, with my hon. friend, at all events.

Mr. INGRAM. I was pointing out that we were paying $195,627 in bounties, and when this bounty ceased, if there was no duty put on, then our lead producers would be in no better position than they were before the bounties were put on.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is another question we will have to take up in due time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is it the duty of Mr. Haycock to ascertain the quantities made by each one of these factories, and arrive at the amount of bounty they are entitled to ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. When it is not in stock.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That was in the past.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was there not another one in Toronto, Mr. Adamson ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, Mr. Adamson is dismissed. The total of the salaries for the two divisions is $59,480.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman speaks of two divisions ; where is the line drawn ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. East and west of Fort William.

Mr. INGRAM. To Montreal?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To Montreal.

Mr. HENDERSON. Fort William is included in the western division?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Fort William is included in the western division. This is a very important branch of the service and perhaps my hon. friend would be interested to know in what manner the work of weighing and inspecting grain is performed. The inspection of grain in Canada has become from year to year a work of the greatest importance, constantly increasing and constantly necessitating improvements in the methods adopted to insure the reputation of Canadian grain in the foreign markets. There are two divisions at present under the Grain Act, which two divisions comprise the whole of Canada. The western division with headquarters at Winnipeg and the eastern division with headquarters at Montreal. Mr. David Horn, until recently, was chief inspector of the western division, and Mr. Edward Craig was chief inspector of the eastern division. By an Order in Council, however, Mr. David Horn has been appointed chief inspector for the Dominion, so that the two inspection divisions as at present, and any future divisions which may be erected, may be brought into harmony throughout the Dominion. Upon the arrival of every grain train in Winnipeg, when it comes in, night or day, Sundays or holidays, a staff of grain men must be on hand so that samples may be taken from each car expeditiously in order that no train may be delayed. Mr. Horn has at Winnipeg a staff of from twenty to thirty according to the season of the year ; six of these are duly examined deputy inspectors holding certificates. As soon as the train pulls in and the conductor hands in his way bill, the inspectors are allowed to make a list from it. With this list they go out to the track, open the cars as they come to them, according to the list. They usually go in gangs of three, that is to say, two samplers in charge of a deputy or foreman of experience. With a specially contrived instrument he stabs the grain in from seven to ten or a dozen places, and places each sample in a cloth on top of the grain at the door of the car. The foreman mixes these various samples and satisfies himself that it is a fair average of the car. This sample of about two pounds is then placed in a bag, ticketed with the number of the car, &c. This sample is then taken to the grain inspection office and carefully examined by expert inspectors. A careful lookout is maintained for cars in bad condition, for leakages, &c. If any irregularities are discovered they are immediately reported. The certificates are issued accordingly and the trains proceed to Fort William or Port Arthur, the necessary documents being sent by mail to the grain inspection offices there. Samples of all the grain inspected are kept at the Winnipeg office. The system at present in vogue is found to be eminently satisfactory, as is attested by the reputation of Canadian certificates in the foreign markets. The system at Montreal is very similar; though at this point the work is not so heavy as it is in the west, and somewhat different from the large quantities of United States grain having to pass inspection at Montreal, whereas at Winnipeg the inspection is wholly of Canadian origin. I think the service has been performed satisfactorily. In so far as I know no complaints have been received against the men who do that work.

Mr. FOSTER. What grades are given in the inspection of wheat?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I could not say at this moment, but if I had the statute at hand the only thing I could do would be to read the Grain Act passed last year. The grades are fixed by statute and the quality of the grade is fixed by a board of examiners appointed by the government. The standards are fixed every year as the quality varies from year to year; the crop is not the same every year. Samples are taken in advance and distributed among the officers who keep them as the standards of the different grades. The samples are also sent to the corn exchanges in Great Britain.

Mr. FOSTER. You say that United States grain in Montreal has to pass our inspection?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the system in regard to the grain that is taken to the seaboard in the winter? Is that accompanied by a certificate from one of the inspectors from the west or from Montreal?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It applies to all grain for export. A certificate has to be taken either from Montreal or Winnipeg.

Mr. FOSTER. Are no grains tested that go through except they are for export?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They are all inspected whether for foreign or domestic use.

Mr. HENDERSON. A year or so ago there was a good deal of complaint about the Montreal inspection. It was not accepted in the old country as readily as the western inspection. Have there been any complaints recently in regard to that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. None at all.

Mr. HENDERSON. That was the case, I am aware. The standard did not seem to be so high. I am glad to know it has been overcome. Do I understand that Mr. Horn is the chief inspector for the entire Dominion?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then Mr. Craig is reduced to a subordinate position as the inspector for the eastern division?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Who is the inspector for the western division?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Horn.

Mr. HENDERSON. He is chief inspector and also inspector for the western division?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is no doubt Mr. Horn is a very capable man.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think he is believed to be the best man in the Dominion of Canada for that purpose. That is the opinion both east and west in so far as I have been able to learn. In regard to the change in Toronto from Mr. Adamson to Mr. Campbell, did the government have any special reason for discharging Mr. Adamson? He was an officer who had occupied that position for some considerable time. Could the right hon. minister tell me if Mr. Campbell had any special qualification? The appointment was criticised somewhat in Toronto when the change was made.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Adamson was dismissed upon the special recommendation of Mr. Horn. As to the qualification of Mr. Campbell, he passed the required examination and passed, I understand, one of the best possible examinations.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the examination passed? What is the board?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At Toronto. The board of examiners which fixes the standards is the board which makes the examination.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any record of the amount of grain examined at Winnipeg, Montreal or Toronto?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend will find the information in the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce, page 740.

Mr. FOSTER. This whole business amounts to $92,500. Who pays that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There are specified fees charged for inspection and for weighing. I am informed that the capacity of a car has now so much increased that the government are contemplating almost duplicating the fees for weighing carload lots.

Mr. FOSTER. What amount of fees were collected last year?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Toronto produce grain inspection, $3,111.68; Montreal, grain inspection and samples sold, $4,599.20; Manitoba inspection division, grain inspection, warehouse licenses and samples sold, $53,157.43.

Mr. FOSTER. According to that the government is in for about $30,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I should think that the grain business ought to pay for its own certificating.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. The government should see that the fees charged would cover the expenses.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have just said that we were contemplating increasing the fees.

Mr. FOSTER. In the meantime the country lost $30,000 last year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That fact has already engaged the attention of the government and it seems to be reasonable that the fees collected should be commensurate with the expenditure.

Mr. INGRAM. It is estimated that there will be 90,000,000 bushels of grain in the west this year. Our present inspecting staff costs us $95,000 a year and I would like to know if that same staff will be able to inspect the increased production. If so the chances are the receipts will double the expenditure.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say as to that, but I suppose we will be guided by Mr. Horn, who the member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) states is a very competent man. He would no doubt be able to estimate in advance whether he will want any extra men or whether he can perform the service with the present staff. I have no doubt that the department will confer with Mr. Horn on the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand the policy of the government is to make this business pay its own charges.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say if that is the policy of the department, but I am of the same mind as my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) and think it would be my policy if I had charge.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the certificating that gives the character to and fixes the price of the grain; it must be of great advantage to the trade as a whole and to the producer ultimately.

Mr. INGRAM. Under the Act of 1903 the Governor in Council had the right to fix the fees to be charged and I do not think that has been amended.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have the right.

Mr. AMES. I have only just come into possession of the correspondence which was brought down in response to a return moved for by me on the 22nd of February, in reference to the reasons why the nominations of the Montreal Board of Trade were not accepted on the Grain Survey Board named for Montreal. We were given to understand on the 27th of February, by the Prime Minister, that good and sufficient reasons for ignoring the recommendations of the Montreal Board of Trade would be found in this correspondence. The Prime Minister then said:

> I do not mean that the fact that Messrs. Carruthers and Metcalfe were passed over would indicate anything against these gentlemen. I do not think it would be fair to imply or accept anything of that kind, but the Minister of Trade and Commerce informs me that these gentlemen have been passed over for good and sufficient reasons which will appear upon the face of the papers when they are brought down.

The papers have now been brought down and although I have looked them over very carefully I can find no good and sufficient reasons given. The reasons are referred to in one or two instances here. In a letter of the 4th of October addressed to the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and signed, J. S. Norris & Co., a firm of Montreal grain shippers, these gentlemen call the attention of the government to the fact that great dissatisfaction exists in Montreal because the nominations made by the Montreal Board of Trade were not given effect to by the government. Mr. Norris writes:

> Both Mr. Carruthers and Mr. Metcalfe have been long identified with the grain trade here, and without doubt possess superior qualifications for acting on that board.

Turning to a letter of October 12th, which is a reply to this letter of Messrs. J. S. Norris & Co., by W. G. Parmelee, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, I find this statement:

I do not propose entering into an argument upon the subject at all, but I know that your opinion is very different from the opinion of the Department of Justice to which the question was referred in the first instance. The decision of the department, as communicated to this office, is as follows :

Then follows the decision of the Department of Justice. In another letter of the 8th of October, signed W. G. Parmelee, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, and addressed to the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, this statement is made:

The change in the personnel was not made without due consideration and it was deemed advisable that there should be a change, the reasons for which would take up too much space if enumerated.

It will be seen, therefore, that no reasons are given in the correspondence. Now, Sir, there are two questions involved in this matter. The first question is : The slight which was offered to the Montreal Board of Trade by the government in making these nominations. Whether or not we accept the interpretation given to the Act by the Minister of Justice, the fact remains undisputed that on the 23rd of August, Mr. Parmelee wrote to the secretary of the board of trade as follows :

The Act of course provides for a recommendation by the board of trade of fit and skilful persons to compose the grain survey board, and the full provisions of the Act must be complied with before the new board is in a position to act. Your board will do well to make their recommendation so that they may be considered by the Governor in Council as early as possible.

And then, when the recommendations were made the reply which we received in Montreal was that the recommendations in a large measure shall not be adopted, that the government is not bound to adopt them and that the Minister of Justice has given an opinion to that effect : in fact that the recommendations might or might not have been made at all, and yet the government would have felt perfectly free to go ahead with their nominations. The board of trade at the present day cannot see why they should be called upon to make any suggestions at all if their suggestions are to have such little weight with the government, but I cannot help feeling—and in this I know I voice the sentiments of the grain trade and the board of trade of Montreal—that there is some personal reason on the part of certain officials connected with the grain board at Ottawa or Montreal which has operated against the nomination of Messrs. Metcalfe and Carruthers, and if we knew the whole facts it would be found that not so much the efficiency of the service is considered as certain private reasons that have not yet come out in the correspondence, and I think we ought to have some explanation that would be at least acceptable by the Montreal Board of Trade and the Montreal Grain Exchange, as to why Messrs. Metcalfe and Carruthers were not accepted when nominated.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I take some exception to the first statement which has been made by my hon. friend, that the Montreal Board of Trade have reason to complain that the representations which they made to the government were not accepted in their entirety. I have only to observe to my hon. friend that the power of appointment rests upon the government and not upon the board of trade. The board of trade can do nothing but make suggestions.

Mr. AMES. Would it not have been courteous to the Montreal Borad of Trade, in case any nominations which they made were not acceptable to the government, to have asked the Montreal Board of Trade to have made other nominations until a sufficient number of nominations were made to enable the government to choose a board which would be mutually satisfactory ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend asks me if it would not have been courteous for the department to ask the Montreal Board of Trade for other recommendations since the first ones had not been accepted, I think as a point of etiquette, although I am not prepared to discuss it, there might be something in it. My point is that I do not accept the view of my hon. friend if I correctly understood his idea to be that the government was bound to accept the recommendations of the board. The government in this case has to consult somebody as to the making of the appointments, and I imagine there are no better parties to be consulted in a matter of this kind than the board of trade. But upon the advice that the government receives the government has to exercise its best judgment, and if for reasons sufficient for themselves they think the recommendations which have been made are not the wisest that could have been made, if they have reason to take some exceptions to them, I think they are quite within their rights in not accepting them. As to the matter of courtesy I have nothing to say. I do not think it is a thing which after all amounts to very much if the relations have not been as tender and gentle as they might have been. I believe there is something in what my hon. friend says that there is an impression in Montreal—in some quarters, not everywhere—that there has been some hidden reason why the nominations of these two gentlemen have been passed over by the government. In addition to that my hon. friend says : We are entitled to know what these reasons are ; the government are not expected to act on caprice or by whims, and if they passed over the recommendation of a respectable body like the Board of Trade of Montreal they must have had some reasons for that and we should know them. The government of course must accept the responsibility of their action, and I do not know but I presume that if the government have passed over the names of these two gentlemen and substituted two other names, who I think are very competent, they had some reason for that. There could be no reason at all why the action of the government should not be scrutinized in every way. My hon. friend thinks we ought to know these reasons ; I have only to say that I cannot give him the reason at this moment. When my hon. friend brought the matter up on January 27, I called upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce and reported to him the views which had been expressed by my hon. friend when I saw his notice on the order paper, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce told me then that he had good and sufficient reason for the action which he had taken. I shall be happy to confer with the Minister of Trade and Commerce again and I shall be happy to discuss the matter with my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) at a later stage, and to give the reasons which have actuated the department in the action of which he complains.

Mr. AMES. I think it would be in the general interest of the grain trade and of that harmony which should prevail between the government and commercial bodies if the matter should be a little more thoroughly ventilated. There is a feeling—how just it may be we do not know—which is not entirely one of satisfaction with the local officials connected with the grain inspection of Montreal. I have myself been in receipt of considerable correspondence from grain importers in Great Britain making severe criticism on the grain inspection officials of the city of Montreal, and there is a feeling that the government was influenced to some extent in their action in this matter by the fact that those nominations were not acceptable to certain officials stationed at Montreal in connection with the grain trade.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. All I can say at this moment is that if there are any reasons to suspect any official of the government at Montreal it would be the duty of my hon. friend to give his reasons, not here, but to the department so that the department may take action if it deem it advisable. I have had, so far as I am concerned, no complaint against any official, but if there are some officials who are under suspicion it is not fair that they should be held under suspicion. The matter should be investigated and if they are found guilty they should be removed from the service, but if they are not guilty their record is clear and nothing more should be heard of the charges. I think my hon. friend will find when I give them the reasons and the documents upon which the government has acted that perhaps he will have cause to change his mind as to the reasons which have influenced the government.

Mr. AMES. Possibly.

Mr. HENDERSON. On this point I regret that I have not the wording of the statute before me, but my impression is that when we passed this Act last year provision was made that the Board of Trade of Montreal and the Board of Trade of Toronto should recommend to the government the persons that might be appointed to these positions. I certainly for one—and I attended meetings on 10 or 11 days of a sub-committee examining the whole Act but my impression is that we intended to provide that out of these recommendations the government should make the selection of inspectors, and I am somewhat surprised to learn from the member for Montreal (Mr. Ames) that this has not been carried out, that the government, for some reason which the Prime Minister has not made known, had gone outside apparently of the recommendations. I think certainly that if there was any good reason why these men should not be appointed, it is just as well the country should know it, because there has been, as my friend (Mr. Ames) has said, for some time a suspicion that everything was not right in connection with Montreal inspection; in fact it was not acceptable in the old country at all. That was the reason why I asked the right hon. gentleman with respect to whether or not complaint had been made during the past year in that regard. I was very glad indeed to hear that the difficulty complained of here had been removed, but it seems that there are still some inquiries with respect to the same thing. Whether it is owing to some particular officials there not being acceptable or not discharging their duties properly, for my part I am entirely unable to say, but I would say that it is of the utmost importance to all grain shippers that complete confidence should be established in Montreal grain inspection, not only among the people of this country but more especially among the people of the old country who are receiving the shipments of grain. Had the government followed the course laid down in the Act, and named the men recommended by the Board of Trade, I think it would have tended to remove a good deal of the difficulty that seems to have prevailed in the last year or two, and have established complete confidence both in the old country and in this country. But it would seem as if political or some other influence had prevailed, and no doubt the shippers and the receivers of goods from the old country will still be under the impression that the right men are not in the right place.

Mr. AMES. May I say a word in reply to my hon. friend from Halton ? He has, I think, to a slight extent misunderstood my remarks. So far as the individual gentlemen are concerned, the nominees of the government are perfectly satisfactory. The only question at issue was that the Montreal Board of Trade thought that the government could only act on their recommendation.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought so too.

Mr. AMES. That is certainly what any layman would read in the law, and the board of trade were considerably chagrined at having been invited to make nominations and having their nominations turned down. They thought they should at least have been asked to make new nominations, because, without disputing the power of the government to make the appointments, they thought that the nominations should first come from the board of trade. But I wish it to be understood that we have no criticism to make of the personnel of the board. The gentlemen composing it at present are in every way fitted for the duties they are called on to perform.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would further say that when the government received the communication of the board of trade, the Minister of Trade and Commerce thought he was bound to take exception to two of the names recommended, and he did so. But he was of the same opinion as the hon. member for Halton and the hon. member for Montreal, that the government could not go outside of the recommendations of the board of trade; and it was to clear up that point that he asked the opinion of the Minister of Justice, who advised him that he was not bound to take the recommendations of the board of trade, but that those recommendations were merely sent to them as a means of attaining an end, and that he could exercise his own judgment, which he did. I am glad to have from the hon. member for Montreal his confirmation of the fact that no exception can be taken to the gentlemen appointed.

Mr. AMES. Allow me to put one further question. Supposing a British shipper of grain is desirous of having samples of the standards that are fixed on this side of the water, in order to enable him to purchase by letter rather than by sample, can he on demand obtain such samples practically free of charge?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am informed that he can. He can have those in England without applying in Canada at all, because all the samples, when determined in Canada, are sent to England.

Mr. AMES. That does not quite meet the case, which I have in mind, the case of a large flour milling firm in Cardiff, Wales, who import large quantities of wheat, including Canadian wheat. They recently applied to the department in Montreal for samples of grain, and received a very curt reply from the local inspector to the effect that there were no samples of the kind of grain they asked for. I transmitted this letter to the department, who I know appreciate the situation. What I wish to know is whether this Cardiff miller can secure samples direct from Canada; because it is probable that the samples in possession of the British exchange could not be divided for the purpose of distributing them among several millers. Would it be possible for this large milling concern—and it is greatly in the interests of Canada that they should purchase largely Canadian wheat—to produce direct from Canada their own samples of the current standards of wheat, corn and other grain?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say that I cannot give my hon. friend the information to-day, but I will have the matter inquired into, and have it given to him officially.

Culling timber,, $17,100.

Mr. HENDERSON. How many of these cullers are there now?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. And what are their duties?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At present there are six.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are they located chiefly in Quebec?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They are located in Quebec. The trade which necessitated these cullers is more and more diminishing, and it will not be very long before the office will have to be abolished altogether. The position of superintendent is vacant, and we have not filled it. In fact, I think the department has prepared a Bill for next session, with a view to dealing with this subject.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the object of this culling?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is to measure the square timber coming to the harbour of Quebec for exportation, and to give certificates of measurement. If there is a dispute between the purchaser and the vendor as to the quantity, it is customary to have the culling done; or if a man brings a raft down and wants to have an official statement of the measurement of the timber in it, he obtains it from the cullers. These are the principal services which they render.

Mr. DANIEL. Is Quebec the only port where this is done?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes. It was formerly a very important office.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why do the owners of the timber not pay for the measurement of it? Why is it charged to the government?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend has asked me more than I can explain. I can only say that it has been so for fifty years.

Mr. DANIEL. In St. John and everywhere else, so far as I know, there are sworn surveyors, and the expense is paid by the owners of the timber ; and one would think that would be followed in all the cities and ports.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The office of the cullers has been in existence for some fifty years, and at one time I believe it was thought to be an absolute necessity. That was at a time when millions of square timber were shipped from Quebec every year. I remember—I think it was 1876—the lumbermen who were then in the House agreed and pressed upon the government the diminution of the number of cullers. A certain number were superannuated, each receiving a pension of $200 a year. This year, the amount asked for pensions is diminished by $200 as one of these gentlemen has died. I think we may have here a precedent to dispose of the other cullers in the same way. My impression is, as representing the city of Quebec, that the time has about arrived when we should do something with regard to that office, either to completely abolish it or to re-cast it on some other plan.

Mr. HENDERSON. I notice that the government ask for the same amount—$4,200—as last year, notwithstanding the fact that one of the cullers has died.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The amount for the payment of cullers is the same, $4,200, but the amount for superannuated cullers, which was $4,200 last year, is reduced to $4,000 because of the death of one of these superannuated cullers.

Public works—chargeable to income—harbours and rivers—Nova Scotia, $387,260.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it the intention of the government to proceed to-night and put through all the items covered by this large vote ? We are almost defenceless on this side of the House ; we are scarcely equal to the occasion. I trust the minister will not press these matters in view of the fact that we have no Minister of Public Works in the House. I have no doubt he hopes to have one within two or three days. But in the absence of the Minister of Public Works we can hardly hope for a full explanation of these votes. Having adjourned early last night and the night before, I think we might follow in the same line, and not proceed to deal with an important vote like this with so few members present. The works represented in this list of items are scattered all over Nova Scotia. And, the opposition not having a single representative from Nova Scotia, will be obliged to get its information from some other source than its own members. So, it cannot be expected that we can duly criticise these items with such a thin House. I trust the minister will not take advantage of our weakness on this occasion and try to press through so many items as are covered by this vote.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no disposition to press these matters unduly. We have been getting along very pleasantly with our estimates—we certainly have no reason to complain. I would suggest that this item should not be proceeded with to-night. At the same time I would not like to accept the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) that we should not proceed with any of these items unless the Minister of Public Works is in his seat. We may find it necessary, in order to keep the business of the House moving, to take up some of these votes. But, if there is any item that any hon. gentleman wishes held over, that can be done. Instead of taking up Public Works we might take up some miscellaneous items not of so controversial a character as the vote for Public Works. A number of these are merely formal votes, and, I think, will not require any particular explanation. If there is any item that is objected to, we will let it stand. And, in any case we will have an early adjournment.

Mr. HENDERSON. In half an hour.

Mr. FIELDING. All right. If, on any of these items, the information is not ready, yet, as these matters are of a formal character, the committee might be good enough to let the items pass with the understanding, that, on the supplementary estimates, further information will be given if desired.

Miscellaneous—Academy of Arts, $2,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought that was disposed of.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not marked as passed. This is the usual grant to the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts. It is for the encouragement of the fine arts, and is paid to the president of the Royal Canadian Academy.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. In Toronto ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Royal Canadian Academy holds its exhibition in different parts of the country. I think Toronto is the headquarters.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not know whether the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is able to give me the information I desire, yet, in case he may be, I will put a question. Is it intended to introduce this session an amendment to the Criminal Law with relation to Art Unions incorporated in the old country, which are at present forbidden by our criminal law to carry on their operations in Canada ? I understood from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) that he would introduce this session an amendment which would allow art unions incorporated in the old country and known to be of high class, to do business in Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. I am sorry I cannot give my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) a definite answer. I am heartily in sympathy with the view he expresses. I am familiar with the subject, for it was called to my attention when I was in the old country by gentlemen of high standing connected with the Art Union. The difficulty is to draft a clause which will distinguish between genuine art unions having for their object the encouragement of art, and other concerns that are mere lotteries. My hon. friend from St. Antoine division, Montreal (Mr. Ames) will remember that there were a number of institutions operating in Montreal under the guise of art unions which did a good deal of harm. In the effort to suppres these it appears we have shut out bona fide organizations. Now, all over the country there will be found genuine objects of art which have been distributed under their system, and no harm has come, but on the contrary much good, by supplying the homes of Canada with fine pictures at a moderate cost. I sympathize with the view that we should endeavour to get a form of words which would allow bona fide art unions to be formed without admitting the mere lotteries. But up to the present time there has been a difficulty in getting a form of words which would serve a good purpose without at the same time admitting evil. I will remind the Minister of Justice of the matter again to see if we can carry out the object which I think the most of us will concur in.

Grant to the imperial government to cover Canada's proportion of probable losses in connection with the operation of the Pacific cable, $125,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This cable is a joint concern between the imperial and colonial governments, and this is the proportion of the loss which is chargeable to Canada. This is an estimate made of what the loss is likely to be. We had to pay a sum in a previous year, I do not exactly remember the amount, but I think it corresponds with this, and this estimate is based upon past experience.

Mr. AMES. In any case, this item is one which we are in honour bound, at least to pay, whatever it may be. The amount is determined, I understand, at the end of the fiscal year, and we pay directly to the imperial government.

Mr. FIELDING. We pay to the commission, and the imperial government is the centre. It is an obligation, the proportion of Canada is fixed. The exact amount is not fixed, because that is a matter of business at the close of the year.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is Canada's proportion ?

Mr. FIELDING. I would not risk saying, lest I make a mistake.

Mr. INGRAM. Does Australia pay any proportion and what ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the various colonies pay in proportion to their interest, as laid down in the arrangement. They are to be charged with the sum which will represent their share of the earnings, and of course they would share in the profits, if there were any.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. It seems to me, either that this cable is badly managed, or else it was not necessary. There seems to be something radically wrong in the whole concern.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, it was thought to be necessary as a part of a large colonial policy in which we must take a little risk. Probably it has been somewhat disappointing financially, but all these important undertakings, in their early stages, are apt to involve some loss. But we hope to do better. My hon. friend is aware that the Postmaster General has just left for the old country in order to be present at a conference in relation to this matter, and we hope that some better arrangement may be made. However, as my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Ames) says, we are obligated to pay our proportion, whatever it may be, and this is the estimated amount required for that purpose.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not object to pay anything that we are really and in duty bound to pay. But I would like to have a statement of the whole cost of the business. It would be much more satisfactory, before voting this large amount of money, to have the whole statement on the 'Hansard' so that members of the House may become familiar with the transaction.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a large item, and my hon. friend's criticism is so reasonable that, if it is his wish that this item should stand, I will offer no objection.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. When may we have the information ?

Mr. FIELDING. Very soon.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Will it be given before six o'clock on Monday ? I am here generally all the rest of the week.

Mr. FIELDING. I will promise not to give it before six o'clock on Monday.

Mr. INGRAM. Does this item cover our proportion of the loss in laying the cable in any way ?

Mr. FIELDING. No. This cable was laid at a very large cost, and bonds were issued representing the capital outlay. Interest has to be paid on that capital, and also working expenses. There is found to be a deficiency and this is Canada's estimated proportion.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. At what rate were the bonds sold ?

Mr. FIELDING. On very favourable terms, because it was looked upon as an imperial undertaking.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have an impression that Canada's share is one-sixth.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is more than that.

Mr. HENDERSON. That was my impression, about one-sixth. In that event, the entire loss would be about three-quarters of a million dollars. The minister, I understand, is not able to inform us what the total loss is. As it is a matter of interest, perhaps the minister could give us the information on that point. I have no desire to prolong the discussion. The member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson), however, would like to have further information. Perhaps the minister would be able to tell us tonight what the entire loss is. Would it be more or less than three-quarters of a million dollars?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not give my hon. friend the information, but I think it is only reasonable the House should have the figures asked for, and I will let the item stand until the information is furnished.

Consolidation of Dominion statutes which may be paid, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act or in the Act respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, $20,000.

Mr. INGRAM. Is item 231 passed, with regard to matters between the Dominion and the provinces ?

Mr. FIELDING. That item is to wind up all these old accounts between the Dominion and the provinces that have been in the hands of arbitrators. The operations are necessarily very slow. Most of the matters referred to of this class have been dealt with, and those that remain are now being considered. I hope we will see the end of it, while some of us are still on earth. I have been urging both the counsel for the Dominion and the counsel for the provinces to push it to a conclusion.

Mr. INGRAM. What is in dispute yet ?

Mr. FIELDING. There are some questions at present respecting interest, but most of the matters have been disposed of ; some however, are still outstanding. One in particular was referred to the Exchequer Court, the matter of interest on certain balances in favour of the provinces, whether we are bound to pay them a high rate of interest, as we think, the rate of interest they demand.

Mr. HENDERSON. What interest is the government now paying to the province of Ontario on the trust money held by the Dominion ? Is it still 5 per cent, or has it been reduced to 4 per cent, as it was proposed at one time by the Finance Minister ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think that is one of the points in dispute. My recollection is that we are only paying 4 per cent, but their intention is that it should stand on a par with provincial subsidies, and that the interest should be 5 per cent.

Mr. HENDERSON. If there is to be a judicial decision given, of course, we will all learn in due time if we remain here. I always had the impression that it was really a fixture by the British North America Act that we in Ontario received 5 per cent on these trust funds. The matter of subsidy, I do not think, has anything to do with it because the question of subsidy is not based upon the matter of interest. The whole question, as I understand it, is whether we in Ontario shall receive 5 per cent from the Dominion on this trust money, on account of the common school fund, the grammar school fund and the Upper Canada building fund. This view in regard to the question has been raised. I may be wrong, but I am under the impression that it was fixed by the British North America Act that these funds were to remain in the hands of the Dominion and that the Dominion was to account to the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada at the rate of 5 per cent. It did seem to me a very strange proposition when the hon. Minister of Finance proposed to reduce the interest to 4 per cent notwithstanding the fact that interest had fallen all over the country. This is part of the revenue of Ontario. However, I presume, if it is in court, it will have to be determined by the Supreme Court, or by whatever court it is being reviewed. I understood from the hon. Minister of Finance last year, I think, that after the 1st of July the proposition was to pay 4 per cent?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was somewhat curious to ascertain whether 5 per cent was received up to the 1st of January and whether he proposes to pay 5 per cent on the 1st of July and let the courts decide. Then, of course, if the province of Ontario is entitled to 5 per cent, the Dominion would have to make it up.

Mr. FIELDING. In any case we will have to abide by the decision of the court. My impression is that we never recognized the right of the provinces to 5 per cent, but whatever the judgment of the court is we will have to submit to it.

Mr. HENDERSON. How was the 5 per cent arrived at in the first instance?

Mr. FIELDING. The claim was that the rate was 5 per cent as in the case of the subsidy accounts. The word subsidy account, although it is used sometimes in our department, is not strictly correct. There are items which appear sometimes under the head of subsidy accounts whereas they are not subsidies. Strictly speaking the subsidy is only the 80 cents per head, but any balance of capital remaining at the credit of the province shall earn 5 per cent under the British North America Act. Whether this is one of the balances which should earn 5 per cent under the British North America Act is a question to be determined.

Mr. HENDERSON. Of course the hon. Minister of Finance is not quite correct when he says the 80 cents per head is the only subsidy. In 1884, the provinces were granted an additional subsidy.

Mr. FIELDING. Not in that form.

Mr. HENDERSON. The province of Ontario was granted $142,414.

Mr. FIELDING. Not as a subsidy.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Act of parliament says it is to be paid as subsidy.

Mr. FIELDING. It is a sum placed at their credit. It is as broad as it is long.

Mr. HENDERSON. $142,414 certainly was the interest on a large sum which the Dominion of Canada admitted for the purposes of a settlement might be due to the province of Ontario, not actually owing, but in order to meet the demands for better terms at that time the Dominion of Canada generously admitted that such a liability actually existed, but never proposed to pay over the actual sum. They always held themselves liable only to pay over what was equivalent to 5 per cent interest, to use the term which my hon. friend is using in the Autonomy Bill in regard to Alberta—a sum equivalent to 5 per cent. Of course, it may be that the hon. gentleman's intention is to reduce that subsidy of $142,414. If he does it is going to materially affect the revenue of the province of Ontario and I do not know of any reason why it should be done. It was a matter that was settled in 1884, and we thought it was settled for all time to come. However, the item was passed, I believe, the other night, we allowed the government $20,000 to meet the expenses in connection with this arbitration, and I hope that before another year has passed we will see the end of it.

Consolidation of Dominion statutes, which may be paid, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act or in the Act respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, $20,000.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. HENDERSON. Who are the commissioners who are revising these statutes? They seem to be slow in their work.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They have been appointed for about three years and they will carry out their work, notwithstanding that they have the statutes for the last sixteen years to consolidate, in half the time which was taken at the last revision in 1886.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What is the remuneration which will be paid? Give us the system.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If my hon. friends want to get many details I will have to ask them to allow the matter to remain over, because, when my estimates were on, I asked specially that that particular item should remain in order that I might make a complete statement to show the progress which had been made and also to be in a position to say when the revision will be completed. I will say, speaking from memory, that the revision will be completed within the next month or two with the exception of the Criminal Code and the index to the statutes. The Criminal Code is being done separately and has not progressed quite as rapidly as the other part of the work. The commissioners are the late chief justice of the Supreme Court, chairman of the board; my own deputy is the next commissioner; with him is associated Mr. Power, also of my own department, who has had large experience in these matters and the registrar of the Supreme Court, in fact, I may say that I have taken as many officials as I could because I thought they were perhaps more competent to deal with these matters as they have had large experience in regard to the statutes. There are also engaged on this work Mr. Roscoe, of Nova Scotia; Mr. Sirois, of Quebec; Mr. Robertson, of Collingwood and Mr. Cameron, of Goderich.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Are there five?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Outside of my own department and the Supreme Court, I think there are four. I thought the House ought to be put in possession of the facts and that I would ask the Deputy Minister of Justice to make a complete statement to show first how far the work has progressed, the statutes that have been revised, the cost up to the present time and the estimated cost to complete the work.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. When could that be ready?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will have it on Monday.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Would it not be well to have that statement go on 'Hansard'?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think it would be well to have the item stand over. When the matter was up before my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) put a question or two to me and I said if he would allow it to remain over I might give him the information he asked for.

Mr. HENDERSON. The matter I wish to refer to has no reference to the statement made by the hon. Minster of Justice. I think the hon. gentleman has made a satisfactory statement. I hope that this revision will be completed at as early a date as the hon. minister says it will be completed. Perhaps, if any mistake has been made at all in regard to this matter, it has been in the fact that the government have allowed sixteen years to pass without having a revision. It may be all right for lawyers who keep their statutes indexed regularly, but for the ordinary justice of the peace or layman who has occasion to refer to the statutes it is absolutely impossible to get anything out of the old consolidated statutes or to know what the law of the land is. But that is not the question I wish to refer to. I want to refer to the indexing of the statutes. Whatever the hon. Minister of Justice thinks of it, I desire to tell him that I regard the index as absolutely useless to the ordinary man and I believe it is next to useless to the members of the profession.

I wanted to find the Inspection Act in this volume to-night, and I had to give it up. The index is distributed all over the statutes, one part here, another part there, and sometimes not there at all. To any one not in the legal profession the index is absolutely useless and even to the legal profession I believe the index is unsatisfactory. I trust that the index of the revised statutes will be in simpler form, so that we can make some use of it. I have been told that the index to the Ontario statutes is far superior to the index to our Dominion statutes. I am referring now specially to the Acts of each session; I had occasion recently to search for a particular Act and I was unable to find it. I showed it to a good lawyer in the House and he succeeded in finding it after some trouble, but he too complained that the index was most unsatisfactory. The Minister of Justice is so familiar with statutes that I have no doubt that what is easy to him is very difficult to us, but nevertheless I have the idea that he will say that in his judgment the index could be vastly improved. I trust he will make a suggestion to that effect in the proper quarter.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am in no way responsible for the index to the sessional statutes, and so far as I am personally concerned, and without wishing to criticise those who are responsible, I have to say that this index is nothing more or less than atrociously badly done and is of very little use. The index to the revised statutes will proceed largely on the lines of the index of 1886. So much importance is attached to this index that I have been advised to secure the services of a gentleman who has no connection with the commission to do the work. This gentleman has had in the past considerable experience in making indices, and I have been told that he has had some connection with the index of the revised statutes of Ontario. I am not committing myself to employ this gentleman, but I am perfectly convinced that we should get the best expert advice obtainable for the purpose of making that index. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) that the statutes ought to be revised as nearly as possible every 10 years. It would be more convenient to the public; the revision could be made more easily and altogether we owe it to the bar and to the general public. For one reason or another this revision has been extended beyond the time originally thought proper and the result is that a great deal of work has to be done. I have asked for a report as to what has been done on the revision up to the present time, and had I known this item would come up I believe I could have had that report before the House.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it the intention of the government to submit the draft report of the commission on the revision of the statutes to a committee of this House?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The work has to be approved by the House. The commission simply revises the statutes, giving effect to the intention of parliament and making such verbal changes as are thought advisable, but of course the roll must be submitted to and approved by parliament.

Mr. INGRAM. The statutes are revised every ten years in Ontario and referred to a special committee appointed for that purpose.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That will be for parliament to decide next year.

Mr. HENDERSON. The consolidated statutes will not be available until next session ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Justice agrees to a large extent in what I have said respecting the index, and I hope he will take some quiet opportunity of giving a hint to the official of the government who has charge of making the index.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think he is an official of parliament.

Mr. HENDERSON. Whoever he is, I hope the hint will be conveyed to him that he ought to change the system.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I think there could be an improvement made in the index of the Ontario statutes as well.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I agree with the Minister of Justice and with my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) with regard to indexing the new volume of the consolidated statutes. So far as the statutes are to be regarded as a work of reference, a great deal of their value depends upon the index, for if the index is not satisfactory the labour of finding what you want is intolerable. I must say that I have never seen in any volume of consolidated statutes either of the Dominion or of the provinces—I speak more particularly of the statutes of Nova Scotia with which I am more familiar—I have never seen an index that is anything like up to the mark, and I trust there will be an improvement in the index to the revised statutes. I was under the impression, until the Minister of Justice spoke just now, that the work of the commissioners would be completed so that the revised statutes might become law during the present session.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Criminal Code will not be ready.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the Minister of Justice expected earlier in the session that the work would be completed in time to be enacted by parliament his year.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am afraid that cannot be done unless we deal with the Criminal Code as a separate work, and I do not think that would be advisable.

Mr. R. L. BORLEN. I do not think it would.

Expenses of litigated matters which may be paid for services in connection with litigation, $15,000.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have not my memorandum on this item with me and I would not be in a position to give information on it to-night. It is the same amount that has been voted annually since 1896, and if there are any inquiries I shall be prepared to answer them on another item.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Justice might procure the memorandum and if there is anything of importance in it we might ask it on another item. If the minister would be prepared with the information on another item this one might pass.

Relief of distressed Canadians other than in the United States, $500.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is administered by the Department of the Interior ; it has reference to distant countries.

To pay grant to Canadian Mining Insitute, $2,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is an apparent reduction but my impression is that a supplementary vote will have to be taken. The amount was originally $2,000 and was increased to $3,000, but the increase was not noted and unless there be something I am not aware of to cause the reduction there will have to be a vote in the supplementaries. It is a grant paid to the Canadian Mining Institute, which holds an annual meeting, has a library in Montreal and is a representative organization of the mining men of Canada.

Mr. INGRAM. I notice the Department of the Interior has asked for some money for a purpose largely on the line of this mining institute to cover just such purposes as this.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a grant to a society just as we make grants to various public bodies under various conditions. The government do not expend it but the society expends it for what we know to be good purposes.

Mr. INGRAM. My point is that an item was passed by the Interior Department to assist in mining and the like of that. It seems strange that they should reduce this amount to the Montreal organization if they are doing a good work in connection with mining.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the purposes are quite different. This is a society as I have explained. They have gatherings and then there are visiting bodies from the neighbouring country. I think it is recognized as a very excellent body and the money is well expended. It is not part of the Interior Department except as that department advises it.

Mr. INGRAM. I was referring to an item of the Interior Department for obtaining technical knowledge, &c., in connection with mining.

Mr. FIELDING. We had an item with regard to certain experiments which were made with regard to the electrical smelting of ores and things like that. These experiments are being made through the Department of the Interior directly, but I think it is rather a different class of work from this.

Mr. INGRAM. I have no doubt it is.

Grant to assist the Canadian Assqciation for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, $2,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Does this association make any report which is given to parliament ?

Mr. FISHER. They have issued a report of their annual meeting which was distributed some days ago. I think it is sent to the members of parliament but it is not laid on the table.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not often complain of an item being too small, but I honestly think that the government in this case have struck a very low figure indeed. This question is attracting a great deal of attention in the country and a certain amount of money is required for the gathering of information and in other ways making a strong attempt to improve the condition of the people and suppress this terrible disease. $2,000 to my mind is a very small sum when we consider the large sums which we vote for other purposes. We have just voted $2,000 for a mining institute. To my mind this is a far more worthy object. We had a discussion on the matter of tuberculosis in the early part of the session and I regret very much that the member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) who takes a deep interest in that matter is not in the House to-night. I think he would have liked very much to have been here and make a statement with reference to it. I simply express my opinion that the item is very small indeed considering the vast importance of the subject.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business do you expect to take up on Monday after private business is disposed of.

Mr. FIELDING. The Militia Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 12, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CERTIFICATES OF IDENTIFICATION FOR MEMBERS.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON. Mr. Speaker, I think it was understood the other day that in order to avoid the necessity of carrying a bundle of cards, one for each railway in Canada, as the railways in this country are obliged to furnish transportation to the members of the House of Commons, according to the Railway Act of 1903, clause 275, paragraph 5, a certificate should be issued to each member by the Clerk of the House which would serve the purpose on all railways. I therefore beg to move :

That the clerk of the House do sign and furnish to members of the House of Commons certificates of identification for transportation on railways in Canada.

Motion agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT OF LONDON MILITIAMEN AT NIAGARA.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to draw the attention of the House to an item which appears in this morning's 'Citizen.' I took the liberty of notifying the Minister of Militia this morning of the item and of asking him to look into it. The item reads as follows :

London, Ontario, June 11—(Special).—As the by-election here on Tuesday is likely to be close, whichever way it goes, the government is putting forth every effort to deter Conservative voters from exercising their franchise on Tuesday next. The latest scheme has been worked through the Militia Department. Six soldiers at Wolseley barracks have suddenly been ordered to report for duty at Niagara tomorrow. Every man of the six is a Conservative, and there is naturally a deal of indignation among Mr. Gray's friends at this mean political move on the part of the militia authorities.

I have not any further evidence before me than what is contained in this item ; the facts are, though, that there is at the present time a camp in the city of London, and one would naturally suppose that this is the camp where these soldiers would be employed. The headquarters in Toronto for the permanent force is the source from which instructors would usually be drawn for Niagara. It may be stated that some of the soldiers from Toronto have been drafted away to Halifax to form a garrison there, and that therefore the London camp must be called upon to furnish men for certain duties at Niagara, but the fact stands forth that the camp at Niagara does not open until to-morrow, the date of the election, and the troops will not reach Niagara until tomorrow night. Therefore, there was no necessity, under any consideration whatever, to order these men from London before they had an opportunity of casting their ballots in the election to-morrow, whichever way they cast them. It does not matter to me how they vote, but they should have had this privilege, and then they could be in camp at Niagara to-morrow night in ample time for any instructional duties they may be called on to perform. The camp will not begin instructional work until Wednesday at the earliest. I trust the minister will be able to let us have full information in connection with this matter. It must be borne in mind that although these men are members of the permanent corps they lose none of their rights as citizens, that a soldier has every right which is possessed by any other citizen, and he should have his franchise the same as if he were an ordinary citizen. For some reason or other, the permanent corps, although the wages paid are high, as the rate has been increased, is not kept up to the establishment at all ; they are several hundred, I believe, short of the establishment at the present time.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Although the pay is better than the men would get in the ordinary walks of life. The minister will be able to tell what the situation is. While explaining this matter, the minister might take the opportunity of explaining some correspondence which I understand he had with the Liberal candidate in Toronto in relation to the increased pay of the soldiers on the eve of the last election. It is very strange that this correspondence should take place between the minister and an ordinary candidate, but perhaps the minister knows nothing about this London affair; it may be another case of the Minister of Agriculture and the Eastern Townships—that he is the minister of the district; it may be that this time the minister of the district of London is exercising his functions in sending these men off without the authority of the minister. My object in speaking to the minister this morning primarily was that he might take some steps so that the men might not leave London until to-morrow. The train leaves in the afternoon in plenty of time for them to reach Niagara in the evening. If the men who are taken must be Conservatives, I take that as a compliment. The great majority of the men in the militia are Conservatives, and when they are selected as instructors I venture to say the great majority will still be Conservatives, because they have always been found to be the most intelligent men in the militia.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That seems to be peculiar to the force, not to the rest of the community.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Although I take it as quite a compliment to the force that the Conservatives predominate in it, and are the most intelligent in it when called upon for service, I would like to know the explanation of this case, and what steps the minister has taken in this regard.

I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it would have been sufficient for my hon. friend simply to have made his inquiry without trying to weave into the discussion a number of things which have no bearing upon it. I do not intend to follow him, but I will give to the House the best explanation I have of the matter to which reference has been made in the papers. I may say that this morning my hon. friend called me up by telephone, not so very early, and asked me if I had read this article or comment in the 'Citizen.' At that time I had not read it, but later on I did, and at about the same time I received a telegram, which was at my office when I arrived there this morning. It was in the following language:

London, Ontario, June 12, 1905.

Sir Frederick Borden,
Minister of Militia, Ottawa.

Reported several men from barracks ordered to Niagara to-day. Tuesday is election day here and I should like it arranged to permit the men to vote before they leave.

(Sgd.) C. S. HYMAN.

So evidently, although the 'Citizen' seems to have absolute knowledge, and my hon. friend also, as to the politics of these non-commissioned officers and men, my friend (Mr. Hyman) seems to have a different view with regard to them.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a state of uncertainty.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. So I think, so far as politics are concerned, we may consider the matter square, and not of very much consequence in the approaching election. Now, as to the military side, I shall read a memorandum which I have received. I may say that when I reached my office I at once asked for an explanation of the item in the 'Citizen.' I had heard nothing of the case, knew nothing of it absolutely, and this is the explanation which has been sent to me by the Adjutant General:

The non-commissioned officers detailed to proceed from London to Niagara, were detailed for the following reasons:

1. The number of infantry to be trained at Niagara being largely in excess of that being trained at London necessitated the employment of a larger number of non-commissioned officers of the permanent infantry for instructional duties than could be furnished from No. 2 regimental depot (Toronto).

2. No. 2 Company, Royal Canadian Regiment (Toronto), is under orders to proceed to Halifax and may have to move at any time on a few hours' notice.

Under these circumstances, it became a matter of urgent necessity to make sure that, as far as possible, a sufficient supply of experienced non-commissioned officers would be available for duty at camp at Niagara.

This is the regimental order, a copy of which was sent to me by the Adjutant General:

Extract from Regimental Order No. 330.
8th June, 1905.

Detailed for duty:

The undermentioned non-commissioned officers will proceed from No. 1 Regimental Depot, Royal Canadian Regiment, to Niagara camp for instructional and other duties in connection with the camp there. They will report to the C. S. O. at Niagara on the 12th instant on arrival. These non-commissioned officers will, at the conclusion of the camp, be taken on the strength at No. 2 Regimental Depot until further orders.

No. 3407 Q.M.S.I. E. H. Price.
No. 3536 Q.M.S.I. A. B. Blake-Forster.
No. 3005 Col. Sergt. D. Cranston.
No. 3095 Sergt. M. O'Connell.
No. 3776 Sergt. W. Beales.
No. 3040 Sergt. G. Evans.

Q.M.S.I.'s Blake-Forster and Price will report to the Adjutant of the Canadian School of Musketry on the morning of the 3rd proximo.

On receiving the telephone message from my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) and the telegram, which I have read, from (Mr.

Hyman), I made inquiry as to the whereabouts of the men, and I found they were some two or three hours on their way to Niagara. Consequently I sent this telegram to Mr. Hyman :

Ottawa, 12th June, 1905.

Hon. C. S. Hyman,
London, Ontario.

Am informed by the Adjutant General the order cannot be cancelled as the detachment has already started for Niagara, and services urgently required there.

(Sgd.) F. W. BORDEN.

Now, one word more in conclusion as to the men going on Monday instead of to-morrow : I know enough about the camps to know that it is always important to have a number of non-commissioned officers on hand at the beginning of the camp to assist in laying out the ground and to carry out the instructions of officers in preparing for the large number of troops who are to come in. This is all the explanation I have to give, and it seems to me it ought to be accepted as ample.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM. The hon. Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) has referred to a telegram sent to him by Hon. Mr. Hyman, also his answer to it. I do not understand from his remarks that he intends to give these men opportunity to vote to-morrow in London. Now, I wish to point out that this is a matter which has been talked of pretty freely in London, and has found its way into the public press in that city. I may say to the Minister of Militia also that the politicians in London are regarded as a 'slick gang,' to use an expression that they themselves would use. This little by-play has been very well arranged, and I have no doubt it has worked out just as the hon. gentleman has stated. And any one who knows the facts knows perfectly well that if these men had been left in the city to vote they would not have voted for Mr. Hyman. So, it is arranged that they are not to be there, and this little by-play is gone through for the benefit of the public. There is the whole case in a nutshell. I am surprised that the Minister of Militia and Defence makes no effort to arrange that these men are to have an opportunity to vote.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would be interesting to know the precise time when this matter came to the attention of Mr. Hyman. It has been referred to in the press of London this morning, and it seems a little peculiar that no telegram was received from that gentleman until reference had been made to the matter in the public press both of London and of Ottawa. It seems a little peculiar, to say the least of it, that Mr. Hyman should know nothing of it except from the press. We have had a somewhat higher opinion of his knowledge of what was going on at the present moment in the city of London than to suppose that he needed information on such points as this from the public press. I heard of it before to-day myself. On Saturday night I heard the rumour that these men were to be sent away, and I got a telegram on the subject very early this morning from certain Conservatives in London. It is rather remarkable, certainly and, whether remarkable or not, it is quite timely, that Mr. Hyman should telegraph when he did.

Mr. BARR. After the men had gone.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When they were two or three hours on their journey, Mr. Hyman, because considerable indignation is aroused in London, sends a telegram. And this telegram, the minister produces with a certain smile and a certain look out of the corner of his eye. And he turns to my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) and says : 'It does not look as if there was much politics in it ; besides the men are two or three hours on their way and it is impossible that they can be recalled.' It looks like a very well devised piece of play, a very pretty little game. But I do not think that any one's understanding of the real situation will be altered by the fact that Mr. Hyman sent a telegram at nine or ten o'clock this morning after the men had gone and when he, no doubt, thoroughly understood, that the decision of the Department of Militia would be that they should not be recalled. The telegram I received spoke not of six men, but of seven men who are supposed to be Conservatives, and who only on Saturday were ordered to start from London to Niagara this morning. I think it would take a little more than Mr. Hyman's telegram or any such explanation as we have had this afternoon to convince any man in this House, or in this country, that there was not some little design in all this. It was very easy to bring in a pretty little report from some gentleman of the Department of Militia pointing out the necessity—the 'urgent necessity,' for it is stated that this is not only a 'necessity,' but that it is 'urgent'—that these men should start on Monday, the day before election. I think we shall all have our opinion on the subject. While their instruction may be necessary for camp on Wednesday, there is not a word in the communication read by the minister which, to my mind, leads to the conclusion that the men are wanted there before Wednesday. The minister speaks of the necessity of having a number of men on hand to make preparation for the camp. But, surely, with the hundreds of men to be assembled there to-morrow every preparation for the instruction which is only to begin on Wednesday could have been made without bringing these seven men from London. We are not to believe the reverse of that even from the minister's statement. Well, it seems to me this is a pretty small piece of business to come down to after all—on the eve of an election in London, a by-election, the verdict in which, according to the statements of members of the administration will be significant, it is a pretty small piece of business to send seven men from London to Niagara under circumstances that do not leave much room for doubt in the mind of any man who examines the evidence as to the real motive which led to the making of the order at that particular juncture.

Hon. D. TISDALE. I think a little inquiry in regard to dates may be of interest here. The general order has no date, but it must have been issued some time before the regimental order. The general order is the order changing the usual practice and providing for the sending of non-commissioned officers from London instead of from Toronto. An apparently good reason is given for that by the Minister of Militia—the fact that the permanent corps at Toronto has been ordered to Halifax—

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is not going for some time.

Mr. TISDALE. But it has been ordered, and that is the important thing. Now, the regimental order is dated June 8—last Thursday. We have no information here except that these men were ordered away on Saturday. Whether these men were good Tories or Grits, I can well understand that they would make some pretty strong remarks about this order. No good Canadian, no free man could fail to resent such an order. I feel very strongly about this. We know how difficult it is to get good men to join the permanent force on account of the fact that in this country there are better prospects for any young man in any civil employment; and conduct of this kind is not calculated to improve our chances of getting good men. This is the first time such a thing has happened, and no effort therefore could be spared to ascertain whether there was anything intentional in it. One would judge from the circumstances that this step must have been contemplated some time ago because there was a general order to the effect, and there was likewise a knowledge in the department that an election would take place on that day in the city of London. I am not making any charge against the minister because I believe he would be above any trickery of this kind. In my opinion it was the doing of some of the smart Alecks connected with the election contest in London, it was only this morning the news came up in public, but whether there was any design or not the circumstances are very suspicious, and no time should be lost in ordering these men back to London in time to cast their votes. I am no prude but for the sake of decency and honesty and manly conduct the hon. minister should at once see that these men are not debarred from exercising the most sacred right of citizenship. We hear a great deal said about the corporations of this country taking part in elections but what shall we say of a department of the government which would stoop to such a course. We certainly should have from the Minister of Militia an assurance that these men can get back and vote for the candidate they prefer. Nothing short of this will satisfy public opinion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I agree, with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, that this would be a very small piece of business—a conspiracy entered into in order to deprive men who have the right to vote under our law, from casting their ballots. But my hon. friend the leader of the opposition will agree with me that it would be a still smaller piece of business to charge the Department of Militia with having been guilty of an act of this kind, unless there is absolute proof. There is no evidence whatever that the thing which is complained of has been done designedly, and I can understand that it has been done in the ordinary routine of the Militia Department. A camp is opening to-morrow at Niagara, and as I understand from the statement made by the Minister of Militia, corroborated by the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), these men, non-commissioned officers, have to be there to discharge their duty on the opening of the camp; and therefore, if there had been no election, they would have had to go just the same; and probably the militia officers who made this order did not think, it did not occur to them at the time, that there was an election in London on Tuesday. They had in mind only their military duties, and they had to provide a certain number of non-commissioned officers to open the camp, to be there, not on the day the camp opens, but on the day before, to prepare the ground and to do whatever was necessary to be done. If that be so, can it be charged that the Department of Militia acted in connivance with the Liberal candidate in order to help his election? I would be sorry for my part to believe it. I do not believe it, and I will not believe it, at all events, until some fact is brought forward to justify the charge. Now it has been said there was a little by-play between Mr. Hyman and the militia officers, because Mr. Hyman only sent his telegram to-day. Well, as I understand it, nobody knew of this order until Saturday, on Saturday there was a rumpus and excitement, and Mr. Hyman, who is a very busy man to-day, might have been there this morning or yesterday, and somebody on the Conservative side came to Mr. Hyman and told him this order would deprive a certain number of his opponents from voting, and Mr. Hyman, with that chivalry which characterizes him, at once telegraphed to the Minister of Militia.

Mr. INGRAM. At the last general election which was held on the 3rd of November, and on the second day before it, the pay of these men was raised 25 cents a day. What was the object?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That addition to the pay was decided on in the previous session of parliament, and that order was only giving effect to it, there was nothing new in that. My hon. friend knows as well as I do that this increase in pay had been decided on by Act of this parliament at the previous session. Therefore, I think that there is no ground for suspicion of any collusion. I have only this to say, that I hope we shall cease to cast aspersions upon one another's good faith unless there is clear evidence.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not wish to animadvert in any way upon hon. gentlemen opposite, but it does seem to me that there is a disposition on the part of some of them always to find fault and to attribute improper motives. Now I take no exception to what my hon. friend from South Norfolk has said, I think his statement on the whole is very fair, and I feel disposed, if it can be done without injury to the public service, to act upon the suggestion he has made. I wish to say, however, that I knew absolutely nothing about the general order, or about the reasons for it, until my attention was called to this matter this morning. There was no collusion or connivance. I do not believe there has been anything improper intended in any quarter. There is something like a hundred men in the depot at London, and this is a proposal to move six selected men, I presume the best men for the purpose, from London, men who are wanted for instructional purposes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there not a camp held at London?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In telegraphic communications—and several have been passed to me on this subject—emphasis is laid upon the circumstance that there is a camp being held in London at which these men are really wanted. I do not know how correct that may be, but it is a circumstance which lends colour and force to the belief, on the part of the Conservatives of London at least, that the men have been ordered to Niagara for reasons connected with the election contest in London.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I can understand that, but as I have stated already, the whole of the company stationed at Toronto from which the non-commissioned officers would naturally be drawn to take part in the Niagara camp, has been ordered out in readiness to go to Halifax at any moment, and is liable to be ordered to Halifax at any moment.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER. No actual date is set?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, but ready and liable to be moved at any moment, and that is the reason, and I believe it is the only reason. But in view of the fact that such improper motives are attributed to the department, and with a desire to prevent the evil effect attendant upon all these accusations which are hurled against the management of the militia, and which are calculated to have a prejudicial effect upon the militia, I am prepared to accede to the suggestion made by my hon. friend from South Norfolk, and I will send at once to the Adjutant General to come here and see whether an arrangement can be made, without the public interest suffering too much, by which these men can be returned to London and sent back on Wednesday or on Tuesday night. If my hon. friends opposite will accept that statement, perhaps the incident may be closed—and I will inform the House later on as to the result of my inquiry.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the minister has met the case very fairly indeed, and I hope he will not insist on the conditional words at the end of his promise—'if it can be done without the public interest suffering too much.'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will put a broad interpretation upon that.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we are all common-sense people. Now that Rojestvensky's fleet is under the sea and various other matters have happened, I do not think that great peril will ensue to this country if these men are allowed to go back and vote on whichever side they please. The right hon. gentleman stated that we had nothing but circumstantial evidence on which to base our suspicions; and then he made an argument on the other side which stood equally on circumstantial evidence. I think the gist of the whole thing lies here: That rightly or wrongly, a large number of people in this country will think that a game is being played with the militia, and I do not think we can afford to have that done. I am quite willing to attribute the most chivalrous feelings to all politicians and all public men, and especially to the present members of the ministry, and prospective members of the ministry; at the same time, I am not disposed to think that the candidate running in London in the ministerial interest is not a very sharp and wide-awake politician, and I think that at the present time in London both candidates will believe that eight votes are worth making a struggle for——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Only six.

Mr. FOSTER.—or six are worth making a struggle for and it is hard work for me to believe that Mr. Hyman was so diligent in attending to his church duties yesterday, or resting on the Sabbath day, as not to know that from Saturday to Monday morning at nine o'clock something was going on in this direction. I think the hon. minister is well advised and that he meets this side of the House fairly when he virtually says that these men shall go back and be allowed to vote.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am very much pleased that the hon. minister has taken the stand he has in this connection. Now, however, that the matter is up I will just repeat the case. I make the statement without fear of contradiction that that telegram from Mr. Hyman was arranged for.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would like to know what the hon. gentleman means ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I make the statement that the telegram was arranged for. It is a piece of by-play, as my hon. friend has stated. These men were sent away because they were Conservatives. I would ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence to follow this matter up. I take his word that he knew nothing about this thing when it was going on, and I am sorry that he allows ministers from various districts around there and in connection with other departments to meddle with his department. We had the instance of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) meddling in his department, and now we have an instance of some one on behalf of the Minister of Public Works meddling in connection with the militia. I want to tell the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence to-day that although these are only six or seven men and although they are only privates they are entitled to their franchise as much as are any voters for Mr. Hyman.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If that little babbling Sbarretti message boy will kindly keep quiet we will get on very nicely. We want these men to have their votes in London. They are entitled to their votes and if we can secure them for them they are going to have them. If they vote for Mr. Hyman all right ; they are exercising their franchise. If they vote for Mr. Gray it is all the same ; they are exercising their franchise and no one has a right to question that. I venture to say that the grounds have already been located and laid out. The hon. minister's argument was that these men were wanted to lay out the camp. I will venture to say that every regiment has sent its men in advance to prepare for the camp. These instructors are not the men who will be employed to lay out the camp. The men who lay out the grounds are not the men who go from London but from Toronto. The grounds are laid out by another set of men altogether.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT. Under instructions.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Not at all. It is a few hours' job at best. Then it is said that they are there to receive the regiments when they come in. There is a little too much at times of paternally looking after the regiments when they come into camp. I have had a considerable amount of experience in regard to that matter and I have never yet seen the necessity for any non-commissioned officers stepping in to receive a regiment when it comes in. These men are not attached to apron strings, they can look after themselves and not one of these non-commissioned officers will be necessary in the camp at all. I was going to ask the hon. minister to give these men permission to go back, but I want the hon. minister to follow this matter up still further. In connection with Colonel Gregory we have an instance of an officer commanding a district interfering in the most objectionable way—and we will hear more of that, I hope, before the end of the session—to get rid of Colonel Gregory. Some officer has furnished the names here. Some officer has been asked to send these men to Niagara. I want the hon. minister to be good enough to bring down all the correspondence in connection with it. Who demanded the sending of these men to Niagara camp ? Who selected the men who were to go ? Was it by chance that six or seven Conservatives were selected ? Possibly there were none others to go. If that is the explanation, all right. I would like to ask the hon. minister how many non-commissioned officers are there amongst the hundred men at the London camp. I trow he will find that there are very few left in the London camp and he must know that these men are wanted in London for one week more. Do I understand the hon. minister that he is going to furnish these men with transport and sustenance in going from Niagara to London and from London back to Niagara ? I trust the hon. minister will not only give them permission to go but that he will furnish them with transport and sustenance at the cost of the Dominion of Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think that is against the law.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Not at all ; these men are in the service of the country. I wish the hon. minister to take that into consideration also and see that these men get their transport furnished to them back to London and back to Niagara again.

Motion (Mr. Sam. Hughes) to adjourn, negatived.

PRIVATE BILLS.

RELIEF OF PHILIP VIBERT.

Mr. HALL moved that Bill (No. 172) for the relief of Philip Vibert—Mr. Zimmerman—be read the second time.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I see that my name still appears on that Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. No, it has been struck out.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 173) respecting the St. Maurice Valley Railway Company.—Mr. Bureau.

QUESTIONS.

RAILWAY BETWEEN MADOC AND ELDORADO.

Mr. NORTHRUP—by Mr. Ingram—asked:

1. What bonus, if any, was paid for the construction of the railway between Madoc and Eldorado, in the county of Hastings ?
2. To what company was it paid ?
3. Why is the road not operated ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. $21,888 paid January, 1889.
2. To the Belleville and North Hastings Railway Company.
3. Cannot say ; not aware that it is not operated.

BRIDGE OVER LACHINE CANAL—ATWATER STREET, MONTREAL.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. To whom was awarded the contract for the building of the bridge over the Lachine canal at Atwater Street, Montreal ?
2. What was the price fixed in said contract?
3. What was the date fixed in the said contract for the delivery of said bridge ?
4. Why were tenders called for a second time in connection with the said work?
5. Who was the lowest of the first tenderers?
6. Who was the lowest of the tenderers after the second call for tenders ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). Does that refer to the substructure or superstructure ?

Mr. MONK. To the bridge.

Mr. EMMERSON. The contract has not been let. I was asking my hon. friend fairly as to whether he referred to the substructure or the superstructure ?

Mr. MONK. I refer, of course, to the work that has been given out.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then, I will have to ask my hon. friend to let it stand. It only came under my notice this morning, and I knew that the superstructure had not been let at all. I will have to make some further inquiry.

Mr. MONK. It refers to the work that has been or is being done.

Mr. EMMERSON. I presume my hon. friend refers to the substructure of the bridge ?

Mr. MONK. Yes.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE—SALARIES.

Bill (No. 169) to amend the Act respecting the Royal Military College—Sir Frederick Borden—read a second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. TISDALE. You do not seem to have fixed a maximum expenditure here as you promised.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. At the conclusion of the debate on the resolution, I understood my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) to state that there was no particular point in filling in the amount, and I rather thought that idea was accepted.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that, but I qualified it by saying it was my individual view. The resolution is wide enough to allow an amount to be fixed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Very well. I move to amend the section by inserting after the word 'council,' the words 'but shall not exceed in all $30,000.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This clause limits the salary of the head of the Royal Military College to $3,200 per annum ; I suppose there are allowances also ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, there is a house and a good many other things besides. The salary was increased to that amount in 1893.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. My opinion is that the educationists of this country both civil and military are not paid as they should be. I would be very much pleased if the resolution should read that the salary should be 'not less than $3,200,' instead of, 'not more than $3,200.'

Mr. TISDALE. Including the allowances the salary provided is a very comfortable one and it has enabled us to get a very efficient officer.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would move that the clause should read that : the salary of the commandant shall not exceed $3,200 a year ; the salaries of the staff adjutants and professors, instructors and assistant instructors and staff, shall not exceed a total sum of $30,000 annually.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT—PERMANENT FORCE.

On the order being called :

Second reading of Bill (No. 170) to amend the Militia Act.—Sir Frederick Borden.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I make a suggestion to the minister before we proceed to consider this order. It will be pretty difficult to go into a full discussion of this Bill unless we have the correspondence that has passed between the imperial government and the Canadian government with reference to taking over the defences at Halifax and Esquimalt, so that we may know what is the position of each government in connection therewith. As a layman I say this is important, because it seems to bring out pretty sharply the line of demarcation between a standing army and the militia of the country ; at least it is showing a decidediy strong tendency towards the establishment of a regular army—not very large, 5,000 men—but still it brings up the whole question as to how far this country should go in that direction and whether it is possible for us to provide sufficient money to have a respectable standing army and at the same time do full justice to our militia, the real arm of our defence. The cost of regulars as high and although you may have only 3,000 in addition to those you now have, the sum total that will be required for the maintenance of these 3,000 men will be pretty large. Then in the second place, if we take over these fortifications, if there is no other way but that we shall do that, we incur an unknown expense of large proportions at the least, which may become very large under circumstances that may occur, it is well for us, I think, to talk over this matter before we have committed ourselves, before the second reading of this Bill, and see whether or not there is not another and a better way by which the same object can be brought about of retaining these defences and retaining them in the only way in which they would be useful, that is as absolutely modern and up-to-date fortifications and defences, therefore, it seems to me to be necessary to have that correspondence, and be able to look over it before the House should be called upon to pledge itself to a policy which is proposed by the government of taking these stations over and of laying the foundation of a regular army. Another point on which I would like information is as to the cost. I find that in this and that newspaper calculations are made as to what the cost will be. These estimates may be near the mark and they may be a long way from it ; we have to rely upon what our department gives us, and I would like the minister to have his Council, those with whom he consults, make very careful estimates as to what will be the added cost. As I understand it, we have now about 1,200 men belonging to the permanent force.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Something over that.

Mr. FOSTER. And provision has been made to increase that to about 2,000. We would like to know what that extra cost will be when our standing force is brought up to 2,000. Then we would like to know, with as much certainty as we can possibly have, what the extra 3,000 men will cost as distributed in the two stations, with all that is necessary to keep them efficient, taking into consideration the difficulty—and I think my hon. friend will find a difficulty—of getting eligible Canadians to go into the permanent force at the very low rate of wages for which the British government has been able to keep regulars in its service. It is becoming more difficult for them to do this, as I find by the conferences and discussions that are taking place in the British parliament. And in the United States they find it difficult to recruit men unless they pay them well. I do not imagine that in the future this item will keep at the figure at which it is to-day in the regular British service. I think we will have to face the idea of having that largely increased instead of remaining at the present rate. Well, then, if you are going to put 3,000 men at Halifax and at Esquimalt, and undertake the care of these fortresses, we do not want to do that simply to have two toys and somewhat expensive toys, one at each end of our country ; we want to have a station at the Pacific and another at the Atlantic which will be absolutely serviceable and up-to-date in every respect. We do not know the conditions upon which we are entering into this. We have to keep up the fortifications, and, that being so, we must face the cost of keeping them up-to-date and of going as far as modern improvements make it necessary to go, discarding one set of arms and taking another and more expensive set as circumstances require. That, of course, is a matter upon which we cannot get estimates, but we can get estimates as to what it will cost for the men themselves and their keep, and what it will cost per year for keeping up the fortifications to the point of proficiency at which, I suppose, we aim to keep them, or we would not undertake them at all. Then, when we get that as a foundation, we will be able to discuss the general principle as to whether Canada should not be dependent almost entirely upon its militia rather than attempt even a small standing army, and so to keep down the permanent force to what is absolutely necessary for instructional and educational purposes, and to go no further than that. I do not know what military men think of the circumstances which have developed in the South African war and the present war, but it does seem to me that things have taken on a very different aspect. I think that numbers and shooting power are what should be aimed at by a country that wishes to defend itself, and therefore by Canada, even though we do not now, and I hope never shall, think of undertaking an aggressive war, but still we have a country so vast and so rich that we must make its defence fairly well assured, and it seems to me that the lessons of the wars that have just passed go to show that what you want is men who can handle arms and shoot well and have numbers of such easily available. It is apparently the large numbers that avail, together with proficiency, and it is not so difficult a matter to knock an army into fighting shape now as it seemed to be under the old regime, when it was thought that no one was fit for warfare except the regulars who had been almost born and bred to it. These are the considerations which led me to ask the minister to allow this item to stand until we have obtained the information for which I have asked. Then, too, the House is very thin, and this is a very interesting question to all military men. We shall not lose by having as full a House as possible to discuss the question when once it comes up. So far as I am concerned, I feel very much disinclined to vote money for anything that appears like a standing army. We must have instructors and we must have a nucleus. So far as that goes, we ought to have it efficient, no matter what the cost. If we go beyond that and have even a small force of regulars, very costly and without any power of multiplying itself in case of actual war, I think we would be adopting a policy that would not redound much to the benefit of the country. Of course, I speak with diffidence in this, because I am not a military man.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I must congratulate my hon. friend upon the progress which he is making, and I welcome him very much into the discussion of these important matters. I wish that more hon. gentlemen would take the trouble to read and think about them. But I will say while I entirely acquiesce in his desire to postpone the discussion of this Bill, I think it might be proper that I should say one or two words to set his mind at rest as to one or two points in which I think he misunderstands the position.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not take it amiss, in fact I should prefer to have the minister give as much information as possible, because it will help us in the consideration of this measure.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. What I wish to say at the outset is that there is no intention whatever to take any steps towards the establishment of a standing army; there is no intention to depart in the slightest degree from the policy which was adopted by this country shortly after confederation, and which has been followed ever since, of providing depots of a permanent force for the purpose chiefly of educating the active militia of the country, upon which we would almost exclusively rely for defence.

I am afraid that my hon. friend, in his desire to acquire information, has been looking in the wrong quarter. I myself have seen recently one or two articles which absolutely misrepresent the situation. I do not mean to say that this misrepresentation was intentional, so perhaps it would be more accurate to say that the writers misapprehended the situation. As I have said, there is not the slightest scintilla of evidence to prove the allegation—nor is there the slightest particle of truth in that allegation—that we are going to establish, or have any idea of establishing, a standing army. So far as it goes, the fact that we are going to take over the garrisons at Halifax and Esquimalt and substitute for the units of the imperial army of these two places Canadian soldiers, might be said to be some excuse for the statement that we are establishing a standing army; but only so far. And, in that connection, let me say that it is the intention of the Militia Council and of the government to utilize these two depots just, as all the other depots are used for instructional purposes of the militia—that at Halifax for the militia of the maritime provinces, and that at Esquimalt for the militia of British Columbia. Now, whether we should or should not take over these two garrisons, whether we should or should not relieve the British taxpayer of the expense of their maintenance, is a question of policy, a question on which we may reasonably differ. But the government has made the offer, the offer has been accepted; and so far as the government is concerned, it is committed to carry that offer into execution. I was under the impression—I am still under the impression—that the House, including my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), and the country generally, would approve of this additional step in the direction of assuming responsibility for the defence of Canada upon Canadian soil.

Now, as to the policy outside of these two garrisons, I said a moment ago that we are continuing a system adopted shortly after confederation, the policy of maintaining a permanent militia force—not a standing army, but a number of officers, non-commissioned officers and men, permanently employed, chiefly for instructional purposes but incidentally for the purpose of guarding and taking charge of fortifications at different points. At the outset confederation was limited to four provinces, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. A little later Prince Edward Island came in. Depots for the permanent force were established at Toronto, London, Kingston, Quebec, St. John's (Quebec) and Fredericton, for the purposes I have just indicated. They are maintained still, at very much the strength at which they were maintained in the early days of confederation and for the purposes for which they were established. But the country has grown. There is a Northwest. And when the province of Manitoba, became a province a depot was established there.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the minister allow me at this point to ask him how about the Strathcona Horse, of Calgary?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I was coming to that. The province of Manitoba was established, and the idea of an instructional force was carried out there, a depot being established at Winnipeg. In the Northwest Territories, it was not thought wise to establish the militia. Instead of the militia, a force of police, known now as the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, was established in the unorganized section of the country. In the province of British Columbia there was a British garrison. Now, we are about to establish two new provinces. The work of defending and maintaining civil order in these provinces will devolve upon the militia force. It is proposed to continue in these provinces the work begun in the east, of establishing instructional depots, and the depot referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes), that of the Strathcona Horse will be one.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. minister, but I would be glad if he would explain the reason why we should establish depots in the new provinces when we have still the Northwest Mounted Police? I have not heard that that body is to be abolished. The mere fact of their being autonomous provinces will not change the condition in that respect.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It will, to a very large extent. In addition to what I have said in the early years the question of defending the Northwest was a question that was not seriously considered; the practical question was largely the defence of the eastern and more populous provinces. These Territories are becoming populous and new provinces are being created. The scheme of defence which was begun in the east, is being gradually carried through the west and through British Columbia to the Pacific coast. And the idea is—and I believe it is a sound one—to carry out this policy of organizing a chain of depots of the permanent force from the Atlantic through the older provinces, through the Northwest, through British Columbia, to the Pacific coast—depots which will be in touch with each other and which will form the nucleus of an effective militia which will afford instruction to all the militia.

Now, I have explained very briefly, and perhaps imperfectly, the scheme which we have in mind—which is no new scheme but is simply the amplification of the policy established long ago. Now, to come to the Bill. Last year the policy was to increase the permanent force from 1,000 to 2,000 men. In the early years of confederation, 1,000 men were sufficient for the few depots in the east. But the country has grown and we thought 2,000 would be necessary. Now, it is proposed to add a depot at Montreal, to increase the force by this additional depot and by one in the Northwest. I am now advised that it is desirable to increase the number in the Northwest, not immediately, but eventually, in order to carry out this scheme. And we are now taking over the garrisons at Halifax on the one hand and Esquimalt on the other.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there at present a depot in Montreal?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. FOSTER. And you propose to put one there? You have one at St. Johns and one at Quebec—pretty close quarters.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The depot at St. Johns is on the frontier and is of special importance for that reason—just as the one at Fredericton which would not have been placed there but for a similar consideration.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand the depot at St. Johns is for cavalry. It would not be quite the same thing as the other.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. Now, I would have said, if I had been anxious to proceed with the Bill to-day, which I am not specially, that we could very well have taken up this Bill and taken the power—because taking of this power is all the Bill amounts to—to increase the permanent force to 5,000 men. Of these, 2,000 or thereabouts will be necessary for the garrisons at Halifax and Esquimalt, and something less than 2,000 for all the other depots, leaving a margin of perhaps, 1,000 to be filled in later on. I explained the other day that while this number would not be required all at once, there was no doubt that, with the growth of the country, in the near future 5,000 would probably be required, and that I thought we might as well take authority now to raise that number instead of coming back at some later date. But I believe 5,000 is the full number that will be required by Canada for many years.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the number now?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About 1,250, not including those who have been sent to Halifax. But that is not enough, the normal number would be about 1,500 at present, if Montreal were included.

Mr. BERGERON. That is, you are increasing the number to 3,800, as a matter of fact?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. Now with regard to Halifax and Esquimalt, I will not speak at present.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that correspondence nearly ready ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am waiting for the final touches, the final answer, from the war office, certain details which I hope to have at any moment. I do not think I can add any more except to say that the information which my hon. friend has asked for is being prepared. As a matter of fact, when the debate comes on which has been promised upon one of the large items of the militia vote, I expect to lay on the table of the House a memorandum, and to put it in the hands of every member, which will show what the expenditure is, and what is involved in all this scheme.

Mr. BERGERON. Would the hon. gentleman say what will be the number of men in garrison at Halifax when it is full ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The present number is about 1,800 to 2,000 of British troops. I am told by General Lake that he expects to be able to do the same work with from 1,200 to 1,400.

Mr. BERGERON. As a matter of fact, is it not true that it is very hard for my hon. friend to fill up that establishment ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. I am glad that question has been asked, because it gives me an opportunity of reading to the House a letter which I received just as I came in, from the Adjutant General. It is as follows :

Dear Sir Frederick,—I desire to call attention to an article in this morning's 'Citizen' on military matters. In this article it is stated that we cannot get sufficient recruits because the pay is too small. This is not the case. The Canadian soldier is the highest paid soldier in the world to-day, receiving as he does $15 per month during the first year of service, with a material increase in the second and third years. As paragraphs of this nature are calculated to hinder recruiting for Halifax and Esquimalt, I trust you will take steps to have this statement in regard to insufficiency of pay publicly contradicted.

As a matter of fact we have had no difficulty whatever in getting all the recruits we wanted. The statement is absolutely without foundation, and calculated, as the Adjutant General says, to cause unnecessary trouble and worry.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I understood from the statement that the minister had difficulty in getting recruits, that there were only 900 now, when the statute calls for 1,200.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I know my hon. friend relies upon reports in the papers, and will not accept my official statement. I am sorry, but I cannot help it. I can assure my hon. friend, if he ever gets into office, he will find that these mischievous reports, and intentionally mischievous reports, are very injurious, and will be very injurious to his administration.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is the Kingston battery establishment filled up now ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not wish to be cross examined ; but I have stated here, I am told, that the force is practically full.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That letter does not say the force is full, it merely defends the pay, and shows that the reason the men are not enlisting is because of insufficiency.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Then I am not able to understand the letter of the Adjutant General. But as I do understand it, it means that we have no difficulty in getting all the permanent troops we require. Now one more word as to this standing army question, as to the allegations that are made, without the slightest foundation, that in order to be able to increase the number of depots and to take over the garrisons of Halifax and Esquimalt, we are cutting down the militia, we are robbing Peter to pay Paul. There is not the slightest foundation of truth in that statement at all. We are taking over Halifax and Esquimalt to relieve the British taxpayer, and not to cut down the militia. There is no intention to reduce the expenditure upon the active militia because of taking over these two forts. It would be what might be called an Indian gift to do anything like that. While we would be relieving the British taxpayer, we would not be strengthening the British Crown and its power in this country if we were to cut down the active militia, while using the money saved in that way to pay for the garrisons at Halifax and Esquimalt. No such contemptible idea has entered into my mind, or the mind of any member of this government. I can not understand the motive which anybody would have—I am not addressing anybody in this House, but outside of the House—who may pretend to be a military critic, in putting forward a statement of that kind. On the 31st of May last the correspondent of the London 'Times' in this city cabled to England a statement, which was published in the 'Times,' to the effect that in order to be able to take over the Halifax and Esquimalt garrisons every regiment in Canada had been denuded of one of its companies, and that there had been a general reduction all along the line of the active militia. The statement is absolutely without foundation. If the man who sent that cablegram did not know any better, it was his duty to this country—I believe he is not a native of this country—it was his duty to this country, and his duty to the newspaper to whom he was sending his correspondence, and his duty to this government to come to me or to the department and get proper information before he sent a mischievous cablegram of that kind.

Now as a matter of fact, the active militia is being increased continuously every year ; every year since I came into office there has been an increase. This year there will be 6,000 or 7,000 more men of the active militia trained in camps than ever before in this country, at any rate since 1870 at the time of the Fenian trouble. There is no truth, I repeat it again, in the statement that we have adopted the policy of establishing a standing army here ; and there is no truth in the statement that we are taking over and paying for garrisons at Halifax and Esquimalt at the expense of the active militia, and such a statement is as unfair as it is untrue.

Mr. BERGERON. Accepting the hon. gentleman's explanation that he is not doing this to the detriment of the militia of Canada, as a matter of fact, what will be the cost to the taxpayers of Canada of these two garrisons at Esquimalt and Halifax ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. An estimate made by the War Office places the cost at £200,000 for the present establishment, $1,000,000 a year for the two. Our pay is higher than their's and probably there may be more money required in that respect, but if, as the chief of the general staff thinks, a small garrison will be able to do the work as effectually as it is done now, I think it is probable a million dollars will cover the whole expense, not including, however, the expenditures, referred to by my hon. friend from North Toronto—incidental to armament and so on. I have no doubt that the requirements are very fully provided for at the present time, but of course we all know that the character and types of guns are constantly changing, and in the future there will be some additions and perhaps some considerable additions for that purpose.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that if a discussion is going on there should be a motion for the second reading of the Bill, or a motion to adjourn.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I thought the second reading had been moved. I move that the Bill be now read the second time.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. minister stated that the establishment was completed. I hold in my hand the minister's own report and I find that the establishment of the permanent corps for 1904 was 1,245. The strength on December 31, 1904, was 959.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am sure my hon. friend does not wish to draw inferences from that report which are not correct. That may have been the number then, but I stated that at the present time the strength of the corps is nearly 1,300.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This is the latest and only information that the public has in the matter. The hon. minister is a little out of place in censuring any one for taking the official figures of the strength of the corps which are given as 959. To know the strength we turn to the report of the minister. The minister must not think that the public can learn these things by intuition.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But if the public prefers to read the reports of persons who are unable to give the information rather than to read the statement I have made in the House I cannot help it.

Mr. TISDALE. I would like to add a word to what the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has said on two lines. The first and most particular information we want is as to the expenditures past and present. I will try to give a little summary so that the minister may have the information prepared as far as he can obtain it : (1) the number of men kept by the British government in these two garrisons ; (2) the number of men the department propose to ask the House to confirm and the number they propose to substitute. In all possibility it may be much less or much more.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As definite as possible.

Mr. TISDALE. I would like a positive statement of the estimate of the number that would be required.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As definite as possible.

Mr. TISDALE. As definite as possible, but in figures ; (3) the estimated expenditures of the war office, if they have it, on these men and all other expenses, if they have it, connected with the maintenance of the establishment and the pay, or in any way connected with the garrison ; (4) the estimated expenditures of the cost of the number of men who are to be substituted and their incidentals ; (5) the estimated expenditures of the fortifications themselves for the year. I think we are entitled to this information and that is all I wish.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will give all I can.

Mr. TISDALE. Not only what you can, because I will explain why I want it as fully as possible. It may be a little trouble but those who with yourself are responsible should figure out what you propose.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We are doing that.

Mr. TISDALE. In other words there may be anticipated a very large expenditure. It will all depend on how these fortifications are manned and armed at the present time.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend will see, if I may interrupt him, that this is something that it is impossible to give because I do not know and I could not find out, I fancy, without the greatest difficulty, what the nature of the defences of Halifax are. It is known to be one of the most powerful fortresses in the world, but very few people know the number of guns, and it is not desirable that they should know.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not want to know the number of guns. Without the expenditures I am foreshowing it is impossible to determine this important question. This information would have very great weight upon the question of principle which is involved. The hon. minister has assumed that the members on both sides of the House are in favour of this principle, but when the hon. gentleman assumes to believe that the House and the country are in favour of the principle of the government taking over these fortifications and supplying these garrisons I am not prepared at all to agree with him. I am not at all prepared to agree to the principle in my present state of mind and with the information I have. At all events, I know that there are a great many other people in this country, some of them military who have mentioned it to myself, and others who are not military, who are not in favour of the proposition laid down in this House and in the country that the government should take over these garrisons and these fortifications. It depends on circumstances, so far as I am concerned, before I make up my mind. This country and this House are in favour of Canada doing more towards defence, but I am not at all satisfied for myself, and I do not believe the country is, until we know more about it, that I should vote in favour of this proposition. I merely say this now because the hon. gentleman assumes that the House is in favour of the proposition and if later on some hon. gentlemen object to it, I do not wish it to appear as if we have assented to it at one time and objected to it afterwards. The care of fortifications is an entirely new work for the Dominion of Canada. We have no experience in regard to it. The hon. minister has made a very grave admission, a most serious admission and possibly it might be well for me to follow that up a little and call his attention to it. He frankly admits he has no idea of the nature of the magnificent defences, preparations and armaments at Halifax. That is what I complain of and what the people object to, if I do not disagree with him. We have no idea of what it is going to cost or of our capabilities of manning and properly handling these defences. This is practically a matter in which we have no experience because as a rule the militia have nothing to do with fortifications and are not capable of manning them because they are not trained to such work. In these modern days it is believed that forts are no good. It is accepted as a general proposition and it is only in exceptional cases where enormous expenditures are being made and where they are always ready to change the equipment as the evolution of the day indicates the necessity of new styles of arms that a fortress proves effective. It is most important that parliament should know what the government is committing this country to, and that we are capable of maintaining and providing for these defences if the empire is going to rely upon us. The minister has practically admitted to-day that he knows nothing about it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, I said it was impossible for me to tell what type of guns would be used, but I do not think there is much difficulty in getting the expenditure, not perhaps to a dollar but practically.

Mr. TISDALE. Do you know what it means to undertake the defence of two fortifications that ought be second to none in the world so that the fleet of Great Britain may be safe under the guns of these forts. That is a thing that requires serious consideration. I want to know what the cost will be for five or ten years to come. I will go as far as any one else to endorse any reasonable expenditure for the defence of Canada and the empire, but I want to be sure that we know what we are undertaking and I want to be certain also that our maintainance of these fortifications so vital to the empire, will be thorough. I would have a great deal of hesitation about committing myself to this proposition without further information. I agree to a certain extent with my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) in regard to a standing army. I suppose there is a distinction between a permanent force and a standing army; the difference may be in the name but a rose by any other name would smell as sweet. So far, our permanent force has been confined to schools of instruction, to aiding the civil power so that the volunteers may not be involved, and as forming a nucleus which we may rely on in case we want to call out a large military force. But now you are going to put the permanent force into fortifications, and they must be instructed in the most modern military tactics.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Is not that desirable for Canada ?

Mr. TISDALE. Desirable for Canada if we are to defend these outposts of the empire.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We will never acquire that military information unless we begin.

Mr. TISDALE. Don't begin too fast, and don't begin unnecessarily, and don't forget that you are now undertaking not only to defend Canadian interests but imperial interests as well. It is one thing to provide for the defences of Canada alone, and it is another thing to undertake the defence of the empire.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Canada is a part of the empire.

Mr. TISDALE. If these fortifications were only for the defence of Canada it would be an entirely different thing. I do not want to oppose this proposition if I possibly can avoid it, but I certainly must know what we are doing before I support it. Speaking as a Canadian I would be proud to make an expenditure for the joint defence of the empire and of Canada, but it goes past pride and becomes conceit when any one thinks that the defence of Canada is more important than the defence of the empire. I will join with the government in any reasonable expense, but I want first to know what we are about.

Mr. BERGERON. I wish to ask a few questions so that when we come to the discussion of this measure the minister may be prepared to give me the information. The minister told us that the militia has increased since 1896; is that in number or expense ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Both.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the strength of the militia to-day ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. 48,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the present cost of the militia as compared with its cost in 1896.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot say exactly but it is very much more than it was in 1896.

Mr. BERGERON. I am putting these questions so that the Minister of Militia will have the information when we come to discuss this Bill.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In 1896 the annual drill cost about $425,000 and for the present year it will cost between $700,000 and $800,000, but a large part of that is due to the increase in pay which has been almost doubled.

Mr. BERGERON. Whatever may have been the cause, the expenditure of the Militia Department to-day is very nearly double what it was in 1896 ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think so.

Mr. BERGERON. When this question comes up again, will my hon. friend be in a position to say what induced the government to replace British soldiers by Canadian soldiers in the garrisons at Esquimalt and Halifax ? Was it the result of correspondence with the imperial government ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The papers will be laid on the table as soon as completed.

Mr. TISDALE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Grant to the imperial government to cover Canada's proportion of probable losses in connection with the operation of the Pacific cable, $125,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. By the arrangement contained in the statute the expenditure is to be borne by the four governments in the following proportions : Canada contributes 5-18 ; Australia, 6-18 ; New Zealand, 3-18 ; Great Britain, 5-18. The cost of the cable is about $2,000,000, and the account stands as follows :

Details of receipts.	£	s.	d.	Amount. £	s.	d.
Balance on March 31, 1903.				28,562	15	1
Received from H.M. Treasury out of the parliamentary grant in aid..				75,374	5	4
Traffic receipts...	81,832	15	5
Less paid out of the Atlantic Co.'s and C.P.R. Co. for the insertion of date and time..	2,008	11	0
				79,824	5	5
Interest on money placed on deposit..				294	7	10
				184,055	13	8

It is provided in the Act that the capital cost shall be extinguished in fifty, and that is why the annuity is provided, of which first payment is given in details of expenditure I am about to read :

Detals of expenditure.	£	s.	d.
First annuity payment.	77,544	18	0
Head office (salaries and expenses)..	4,568	3	3
Head Office (advertising, canvassing, engineers fees, royalties and cost of remitting money home..	1,259	18	4
Cable stations (salaries and expenses)..	31,763	7	2
Cable ship (salaries and expenses)..	15,933	11	5
Provident fund—contributions to (Statement V)..	1,299	19	6
Transferred to cable repair—reserve and general renewal fund (statement VI)...	35,500	0	0
	167,869	18	8
Balance on March 31, 1904...	16,185	16	0
	184,055	13	8

The revenue is therefore £79,824 sterling plus interest £274 or a total of £80,118 and the expenditure £167,869, leaving a defict of £87,751 sterling.

Mr. BERGERON. Are you co-owners of the cable ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. By what arrangement?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The contract was made between the imperial government and the colonies I have mentioned in 1899 or thereabouts. There is a trust created by the four governments to manage the cables. The trust is composed of the representatives appointed by the different governments. Our representative is Lord Strathcona and the late manager of the Montreal Bank, Mr. Lang.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this managed as a commercial enterprise ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes ; we have borrowed the cost of construction, two million pounds. It is expected we shall repay the interest and extinguish the capital debt. The deficit is upon the running of the cable.

Mr. HAGGART. The net receipts are £79,000, what is the expenditure ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. £167,000.

Mr. HAGGART. A loss of £80,000 per year ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Out of that £77,000 goes to the annuity fund for the extinction of the capital borrowed.

Mr. FOSTER. What has been the income from the traffic receipts for the last five years ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The cable has been only in operation for two years, and I have not the information the hon. gentleman asks. Our expectations have not been realized, which is largely due to the competition of the eastern companies, which have the advantage of a contract made by the South Wales government before the federation of the Australian colonies. The traffic has not been as large as we expected, but it is increasing.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand that New South Wales entered into an arrangement with us which it is not exactly carrying out. Has that question been settled ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No ; we have made representations again and again to the South Wales government, but we have had no satisfaction.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that cable laid?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On the Pacific coast from the shore of the island of Vancouver to Australia, passing by Fanning island, the British island to the north of Honolulu.

Mr. BERGERON. Are there other cables in that direction or are the others on the Atlantic?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the only cable between Australia and the American continent on the Pacific ocean.

Mr. BERGERON. Then there must be another one on the other side ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is another one on the Atlantic.

Mr. BERGERON. But it has no connection with the one we are talking of.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The object was to have continuous communication over British territory from Australia to British Columbia, then across Canada and then by the Atlantic cables to Great Britain.

Mr. BERGERON. We have nothing to do with the cables on the Atlantic?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, the Atlantic cable belongs to the commercial company.

Mr. BERGERON. We are interested in the one on the Pacific ocean.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Nothing else.

Mr. BERGERON. We are at the mercy of the one on the Atlantic.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The trouble is not with the Atlantic cables, but at the other end.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not understand that Australia has defaulted in her payment of five-tenths of the cost, but it has not given good commercial support to the cable, not such support as by the negotiations she would be bound to give. Apart from the New South Wales contract is there amongst the other Australian colonies an indisposition to carry out their arrangements as regards commercial assistance to it? Are they giving commercial support to the proposed eastern extension?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not prepared to answer the hon. gentleman except as regards New South Wales. These negotiations were commenced before confederation in Australia and we made an arrangement which was completed with the Australian government and which was made with the Australian government and not with any other. But before confederation had been completed, New South Wales had made an arrangement with the eastern company and that is what we complain of. We have been protesting against that and asking the Australian government who are a party to that to in some way do away with this monopoly which they have given to the eastern company. Our representations up to the present time have been unavailing. New Zealand has supported us and has protested just as vigorously as we have because New Zealand is equally interested with us, but I am sorry to say that up to the present time the matter is still where it was and we have received no satisfaction on that point.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish the minister would get the information as to the two years' traffic receipts?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall.

Mr. BERGERON. Does anybody control these despatches from the other side that come by cable; I mean principally political despatches from the different countries in Europe ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That has nothing to do with the system.

Mr. BERGERON. It may not have with this one, but I would like some information.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This cable is carried on upon commercial principles, the government has nothing to do with it. The trust which sits in London which has built and manages it, carries it on on commercial principles. We have no control over the despatches which are sent over. I dare say in time of war we might exercise the power which all governments possess of seizing the post office and the telegraph, but in time of peace, which I hope we shall always have, although we are annually increasing our militia, there is no more control over this cable than over the cables on the Atlantic.

Mr. BERGERON. Then we are not much interested in this; it is more between Australia and England ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, the reason why Canada went into this cable enterprise is that we want to develop the trade between Australia and Great Britain through Canada. First of all we want Australia to do her telegraphic business by this cable over Canada and we want Australia to send her goods to England over Canada. There is no reason in the world why we should not carry the whole of the passenger traffic of Australia through Canada, and I believe the time is not far distant when this will be done as we improve our communications both on the Atlantic and the Pacific. On the contrary there is every reason in the world to think that every passenger who goes from England to Australia or from Australia to England must pass though America for the reason that he would thus avoid the fatigue, annoyance and misery of a trip through the Indian ocean and the Suez canal. If a passenger leaves Australia to go to England all the time he is on or near land he is in the temperate zone, he avoids all discomforts and I have no doubt that all this will tend to the same object.

Mr. BERGERON. It is costly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It has been costly.

Mr. FOSTER. I think there was another consideration; Canada was to contribute as the others did in order to have a line which should not pass over foreign territory and so be an all-British line. I shall not borrow any trouble with reference to that cable; I was in favour of it from the first, and I am still; I believe it will work out all right, but my right hon. friend has got to do a little hustling if he expects to see the Australian passengers going across Canada to England in this way. It must take him less than twelve years in the future to get a fast Atlantic service if he expects this.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is part of it.

Mr. FOSTER. You will get Australian passengers when you can carry them to London faster than they can be carried in any other way and one means of doing that is to have a fast Atlantic service. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman what particular business carried our Postmaster General to London at the present time. Was it in connection with this ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Have there been developments?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Nothing has developed; it is simply that the conditions to which I have alluded are not satisfactory at the present time in Australia. We want if possible to rectify the position which has been created by the contract given by New South Wales to the eastern company. It is partly that and partly to see how far the expenditure can be reduced, to see in what shape the commission is and to look into the matter generally.

Mr. FOSTER. Does Australia meet us in London?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, by specially accredited agents.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not see how we can curtail the expenditure; we are in a contract and are bound to carry it out.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is our business, we are interested in it and it is part of the business to meet in London and see whether or not the expenses can be curtailed. We want to have the books examined, to see if the expenditure can be curtailed, and if the business of the company can be increased. There is one way in which we know the traffic can be increased; that is if we can get rid of the contract between New South Wales and the eastern company.

Mr. FOSTER. Do we vote any money for the improvement in Ottawa each year or is that statutory.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is statutory.

Mr. FOSTER. Do we get any report of the expenditures?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Yearly?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yearly.

Mr. FOSTER. We have none for this year; I have been searching for it but have not been able to find it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am pretty sure there is a report.

Mr. INGRAM. That is in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. FOSTER. The expenses are there, but we want more than the expenses, and I would think that when we give away $60,000 a year for fifteen years we ought to get a report each year of how this money is expended.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am quite satisfied there is a report; whether it has been brought down or not I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not seem quite right that we should vote this as a statutory matter and get no report as to how the money is expended. Was it a condition that the city should supplement our vote?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, the city does not supplement it.

Mr. FOSTER. But as a matter of fact the city does?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The city is represented on the board.

Mr. FOSTER. But does not supplement the vote?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then all the work which has been done by that commission is done on the basis of our 15 years' vote. Another thing that I think we ought to know is whether the commission is mortgaging more than that vote of $60,000 a year for fifteen years. I have heard it mentioned that extensive improvements are projected over and above what has been indicated, and, that in order to meet these, bonds are to be issued based upon the vote that we give. We ought to be very careful to see to it that these securities, issued to get ready money, do not cover more than the fifteen-years' vote that we give. And I think we ought to have, every year, a report from that commission as to the work done. In saying that, I am not raising any objection to the commission's work, so far as I have seen it, or to the vote. I think that the work so far as I have seen it is exceedingly well done. But it would be satisfactory to have a report, so that we might see how our money is expended.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is most reasonable. I am sure that there is a report, and if it has not been brought down I will give instructions to have it produced. The statute in this matter was passed when my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was in the House—in 1898 or 1899. At that time we provided for a ten-years' expenditure. We have amended that since, and have provided that the expenditure should be extended for fifteen years. At the same time, we have authorized the commission to issue debentures mortgaging some part of the revenues that they are to receive during these fifteen years, to enable them to purchase land. By the first statute, the commission were restricted to a certain yearly expenditure. But it was urged, and, on reflection, we thought it advisable, that the commissioners should be allowed to make purchase of lands to lay them down for parks. The idea we had in mind at that time was to allow the commission to make a large expenditure on Rockliffe Park. They were authorized to issue debentures, and they have done so. They have purchased about 80 acres of land on the bank of the Ottawa river near Rockliffe Park and have laid it out for a park. In my opinion they should purchase double that quantity. I think all cities make the mistake of not having sufficient parks. As Ottawa will undoubtedly be a large city, a large park should be secured immediately. I shall be surprised if the report is not down, but, if necessary, I will give instructions to have it brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the government takes care that securities are not issued beyond the amount voted; otherwise we may find ourselves, one of these days, with a number of fine improvements, but with a call on parliament for an extension of this vote. The vote amounts to $900,000, which is a munificent donation for the purpose. I wish to say, however, that the city ought not to feel, because of this large prospective expenditure, that it should cease its efforts or should fail to co-operate with the government to make the city what all feel that it should be made. The city ought not to rely on this vote for all its park improvements. Public spirited citizens are doing something for the extension of Ottawa's parks, at Britannia and Aylmer there are beautiful outing places which have been provided by corporations. I do not think the city ought to feel that all such great improvements will hereafter be made by the government or by corporations. I think the donation we have given is a large and generous one, and, with proper co-operation of the city and the corporations, it should do everything that is necessary for the beautification of Ottawa. Ottawa lends itself to beautification. The extension in the direction of the rifle range, in my opinion is a most excellent idea—that is certainly a most beautiful part of the city. When the project is carried out it will make a range of driveway and park the equal of which few cities will be able to show.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I quite share my hon. friend's opinion. The city of Ottawa ought not to rely altogether on the government in these matters. At the same time, the city has a good deal to do in the way of improving such a rapidly growing city—a good deal to do upon the streets, for instance.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and it is doing it very well.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The commission, so far, has been making the driveway, which is a great addition to the attractions of the city. It is proposed to extend that driveway down to the Ottawa river at the Chaudière.

Mr. FOSTER. What route will that take ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say.

Mr. FOSTER. Will it come from the Experimental Farm down to the river ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the route all within the city limits ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know. Talking with one of the commissioners some time ago, I learned that their object is to reach the river, take in some of the islands in the river and make a park there.

Mr. FOSTER. How shall we get across ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. By bridges. I think they will not be very expensive. Another, and, in my opinion, more important part of their project is to make a park of that portion near the range. I think it will be one of the finest parks on the continent.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one point that is not yet quite clear. Besides what you might call the establishment of the work, there must be maintenance from year to year. I suppose that they have to rely on the $60,000 a year for both construction and maintenance, would they not ? In the issuing of their bonds have they covered the whole of our vote, or have they taken the precaution to allow for the up-keep of the system. Or, who pays for the up-keep—is it the government, the commission, or the city ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that that question has ever been brought to my attention. I always had it in mind that the city would have to provide for the maintenance and I have not heard any opinion to the contrary. As to the reserving a portion not covered by the debentures issued, I may say that I am informed by the Minister of Justice that these are limited to $250,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That seems to provide for maintenance.

Public works—chargeable to income—public buildings—New Brunswick, $108,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it proposed to proceed with the votes for public bridges ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There was one item left over.

Mr. FOSTER. I have great faith in the ability of my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur), but I do not think he is quite big enough to undertake the public works with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) so near the denouement——

Mr. BRODEUR. But perhaps we could deal with some of these items for public works. We might take, for example, those for the province of Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. I would much rather take some estimates for which we have the ministers here.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, the day after to-morrow we will have the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) here.

Mr. FOSTER. Are all the main estimates passed ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I promised that we would give plenty of time to discussing the Intercolonial Railway and we propose to take that up to-morrow. In the meantime, the House is pretty thin and rather demoralized——

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has been in that division for some time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is very hard to please. He insists that we shall elect a Minister of Public Works, and then he does his best to prevent us electing him. And when we propose to go on with the Public Work estimates he objects because there is no minister here.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what an opposition is for.

Mr. BRODEUR. In connection with public works for New Brunswick, there is an item which was allowed to stand—the drill hall at St. John. The Minister of Militia was to give some information with regard to that, but I do not see the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) in his place just now. Perhaps we had better postpone consideration of that item until he gets back. In the meantime we will take Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we shall have to do the same with the Quebec items, because there does not seem to be any Quebec man now in his seat.

Mr. BRODEUR. I told the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) that we would take up the main estimates and public works for Quebec, but he is not present.

Mr. INGRAM. I saw the member for Beauharnois a few moments ago, and he said he could not be in until after six o'clock.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Harbours and rivers, Quebec—Anse à Beaufils —extension of pier, $1,500.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (for the Minister of Public Works). This vote of $1,500 covers the estimated cost of completing the extension of the piers or retaining walls on both sides of the stream. The work was commenced in 1904-5. There was an appropriation in 1904 of $2,000. There has been expended to the 1st January, $1,458.48.

Mr. BERGERON. Does my hon. friend remember the first work commenced at Anse à Beaufils? I am surprised to hear the hon. minister state that this work was only commenced in 1904.

Mr. BRODEUR. The extension was only commenced in 1904-5, but I understand work has been going on there for some time. I see that the total amount expended has been $9,000. It began in 1887-8.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it a wharf ?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to create a harbour at the entrance of the cove and this is a kind of protection wall. The object is to enable the fishermen to get into the Anse à Beaufils without any difficulty.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is it ?

Mr. BRODEUR. In Gaspé ?

Mr. BERGERON. On the St. Lawrence ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Does that finish the whole thing ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, that completes it.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, we will see next year. I am sure we will see an item for Anse à Beaufils again.

Mr. BRODEUR. There may be some repairs next year.

Anse aux Gris Fonds—improvements at mouth of river, $3,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote is of the same character. This $3,500 is for continuing the improvements commenced at the mouth of the river that flows into the Anse aux Gris Fonds.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that ?

Mr. BRODEUR. On the Gaspé coast, on the River St. Lawrence. It is not very far from Anse à Beaufils.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is that river navigable ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, the Anse à Beaufils is not. This is a work constructed at the mouth of the river in order to form a harbour and provide a shelter for the fishermen.

Mr. BERGERON. When was it commenced ?

Mr. BRODEUR. 1904.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the total estimated cost of the work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $5,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that given by tender ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, there was only $1,500 voted last year and it was done by day's work. Mr. Morin conducted the work.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why is it that these public undertakings are done by day's work ? There is no excuse for it at all. This was a new undertaking and it should have been let by tender. Was this done about the time you were having an election ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a kind of work that it is difficult to find contractors to undertake. I am informed that the department asked for some tenders at a place called Grands Mechins and that they could not get anybody to tender.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is a very astounding thing that you cannot get contractors to undertake work like that in that section of the country. Is that in the neighbourhood of Seven Islands where work to the extent of $60,000 has been done by day labour ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed by the officials of the department that they called for tenders for work of the same kind but unfortunately they could not get anybody to tender.

Mr. COCHRANE. If you will vote some money for wharfs in Ontario I will venture the assertion that you will find contractors who are willing to build them.

Anse St. Jean—extension of pier, $1,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that ?

Mr. BRODEUR. In Chicoutimi and Saguenay, on the Saguenay. This is a vote of $1,000 chiefly for the completion of the work. There was an appropriation last year of $1,200.

Mr. BERGERON. But, that was spent.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. How is it that you had an appropriation of $1,200 last year and that it will cost $1,000 more to finish it ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Because the full amount was not voted last year, and it has been found that this sum is required to complete the work.

Mr. BERGERON. The estimated cost last year was $1,200 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, the appropriation was $1,200, but the total estimated cost was $2,200.

Mr. BERGERON. Will this $1,000 finish the whole work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Baie des Peres, Lake Temiskaming—reconstruction of wharf at Ville Marie, including dredging approach, $2,500.

Mr. BERGERON. Why are we called upon to build wharfs there ? This is not on a river ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, but it is on Lake Temiskaming. As my hon. friend knows there are many places where we have wharfs on Lake Temiskaming. There are many steamboats running on that lake. Baie des Peres is certainly one of the most important places on the lake.

Mr. BERGERON. How large is Lake Temiskaming ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Seventy-five miles long by about four miles wide. As my hon. friend sees it covers a very extensive territory.

Mr. BERGERON. How could you get a dredge there ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a dredge belonging to the Public Works Department on the lake.

Mr. BERGERON. She must have been built there.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Barachois de Malbaie—breakwater, $4,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. The total estimated cost is $16,000, and it is intended to call for tenders.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is this ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is Gaspé county, on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there a village there ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It must be an incorporated village. The work was asked for many years ago ; there is a petition dated 1881 from the Hon. Mr. Fortin asking for a breakwater at that place. It is the centre of a large fishing trade, where sixty or seventy fishing boats are employed in the summer, and the population must be between 1,500 and 2,000.

Mr. AMES. I know the place ; I was there last summer. It is a large shoally bay, with a barachois at the entrance.

Belœil guide piers and booms—to make good damage by ice, $500.

Mr. BRODEUR. There are piers below the Grand Trunk Railway bridge at Belœil to facilitate the passage of steamers and barges through the narrow swing bridge, where the current is very swift. This vote it to repair the piers and booms.

Bic harbour—wharf at Pointe à Coté, $5,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Why has nothing been done there ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Because there was some difficulty with regard to the purchase of a site. No money has been spent.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that work very useful ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand it is ; Bic is used by the pilots.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there not some difficulty about that work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not that I know of.

Mr. BERGERON. I think I have some correspondence about that, and I may have to ask the hon. gentleman to come back to the item again.

Mr. AMES. Do I understand this wharf will be built to Massacre Island ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, from a point eastward.

Mr. AMES. Will you interfere with the present high-tide approach to the existing wharf ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Canton Fabre, Lake Temiskaming—wharf,$2,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The item is prepared according to the estimate of the chief engineer for the construction of a wharf on lot 31, township of Fabre.

Mr. AMES. Will this be reached by the new railroad ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No ; this is on the east side, in the province of Quebec.

Mr. AMES. I understand the Canadian Pacific Railway contemplates building a branch on the east side.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that it is forty-five miles away from the railroad. It is in the county of Pontiac.

Mr. AMES. Would any considerable population be served by that wharf ? It is a long and narrow lake, and the steamers stop practically anywhere and put passengers off on either side of the lake in the ship's jolly-boat. Unless there is some population, there is no use in building this wharf.

Mr. McCOOL. When Mr. Tarte was Minister of Public Works he visited Lake Temiscamingue, and a large deputation waited on him to represent the need for a wharf at that point, and he promised that it would be built. The shores are very bluff, and in a high wind it is nearly impossible to land with the jolly-boat from the steamer. The only means of access they have in summer is by steamer.

Mr. AMES. What is the population ?

Mr. McCOOL. There must be at least 200 families within reasonable reach of the wharf.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What do you mean by reasonable reach ?

Mr. McCOOL. Within a radius of four or five miles.

Mr. AMES. Is it a farming population ?

Mr. McCOOL. Yes.

Mr. AMES. I suppose the freight will be mostly bulky material, such as hay, which could not be taken in the jolly-boat.

Mr. McCOOL. Yes ; and getting in lumbermen's supplies.

Mr. INGRAM. When did Mr. Tarte promise to build this wharf ?

Mr. McCOOL. It is not in my county ; it is in the county of Pontiac ; but I happened to be present when the deputation waited on Mr. Tarte. It was two or three years ago.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman's memory is not very good when he cannot tell within a year.

Mr. BERGERON. In works like these at Bic harbour and Canton Fabre, it would look as if they were promised on the eve of the election last year ; and now that the election is over, I do not suppose there will be much need for them.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think that is correct. There was a petition some years ago asking for the wharf, and a vote was put in the estimates last year, but there is a difference of opinion amongst the settlers as to whether it should be at Lavallée bay or Quinn point, and no decision has yet been reached.

Chambord wharf, $2,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to complete payment on the contract. The conttract was for $9,250. It was given to the lowest tender, Mr. Arthur Tremblay, of Roberval.

Mr. AMES. Why do you want $10,500 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $1,250 are for superintendence and contingencies.

Mr. AMES. We think an architect's charge of five per cent quite ample for the construction of a house. Why should the charge for building a wharf be greater ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are other things and ten per cent is the amount always allowed.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it not an employee of the government who is in charge ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, Mr. Taché, and then there is a lcoal inspector, Mr. A. Lemay, who gets $2.50 a day and the expenses of these gentlemen have to be paid also going from place to place.

Mr. AMES. Why not include the contingencies in the first amount and make one item ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have always thought it better to give the contractor's price in one item and the supplementary expenses in the other.

Champlain, Quebec—wharf repairs and additional, $2,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to complete the wharf at that place. The work is done by day labour. The estimated cost was $8,200. We spent only $6,200 and require $2,000 to spend during the next fiscal year. This is no increase but simply a revote. This work is done by day labour because it is the repairs to an old wharf and is better done in that way than by contract. It was almost impossible to specify what work has to be done. It will be finished by about September.

Chateau Richer—harbour improvements, $6,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is the balance required for improvements made by day labour, namely, the removal of rocks on the bar and the construction of a breakwater, the appropriation was $9,000. Château Richer is in Montmorency county.

Mr. MORIN. What kind of boats go there ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Vessels carrying firewood, iron and other material and bringing return cargoes of supplies of all kinds. The total number of schooners and bateaux at that place last year was 35 with the total carrying capacity of 3,500 tons.

Mr. MORIN. Will you make the wharf longer than it is now ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. MORIN. How does it come that although a wharf was built there years and years ago and the people have always used that wharf, you have this year to spend so much money at that place? I suppose there was no election there?

Mr. BRODEUR. Trade I understand has been increasing and they require some more accommodation. The cargoes carried by these vessels last year were valued at $50,000. My friend will see it is not a useless expenditure.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that on the Island of Orleans?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, it is on the mainland.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The importance of this place has increased lately because of the valuable stone quarries there. Stone is taken from there for the harbour improvements at Quebec.

Mr. MORIN. Could not the people who have a quarry there build a wharf for themselves? It is easy for them to come to the government and ask them to build a wharf because they want to carry stone from that place. You might just as well give the money to a farmer. If a farmer goes to the west and has to buy a horse or two, a wagon and harness, you might as well rig him out with these things as to rig these fellows out with a wharf. Is that the case or not?

Mr. BRODEUR. This work was constructed many years ago. It was commenced in 1884-5.

Mr. MORIN. And before that too.

Mr. BRODEUR. The note I have here gives that date and it is simply carrying out the same policy as was adopted by the former government. I do not think it would be good policy to let these works fall into decay; I do not suppose my hon. friend would recommend that.

Mr. MORIN. I do not see how that would happen. I have shipped from that wharf, and it must be remembered that the tide has to rise about eight feet before the water reaches the wharf; you cannot load or unload unless the tide is away up and when the tide is down the water is half a mile from the wharf. It is not a great place for business there and I do not see why a wharf is so much required.

Mr. BRODEUR. If my hon. friend has been shipping there himself, he must understand that it is a useful work, and he must admit too that there are in that section of the country wharfs which have been built which cost a great deal more than this work, and I do not think there should be any objection to such a small amount as has been spent there in comparison with the amounts spent in some other places. My friend knows that other places have been asking for wharfs reaching to low tide and we have been spending large sums of money. There is no comparison between the amounts spent in those places and the small amount spent in this place. There is a great deal of trade there, the extensive quarries are being exploited and I think it is a very useful expenditure which has been petitioned for by the inhabitants of the place.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to have the name of the foreman, the amount that was paid, the rate of wages that was paid to him and to the men, the number of men employed, and where the material was got.

Mr. BRODEUR. The foreman was Ed. Vezina, I shall get the other information.

Mr. BERGERON. When was the work commenced?

Mr. BRODEUR. Last year, in July or August.

Mr. BERGERON. It was done during the election time, as a matter of fact.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose so; the appropriation was voted last year and would become available some time in July or August and the work would then be commenced. If the elections happened to take place in that time of course the work must have been going on.

Mr. BERGERON. I am not making any insinuations at all; I am only mentioning the fact that the work was done during the election.

Mr. COCHRANE. I recollect distinctly that on a job of this kind there was a foreman attending to the construction of the work, a gentleman employed in buying the timber, and another gentleman who got so much per cent of the money invested in purchasing the material. The minister would not say I am sure that in a job like this it would be hard to get the material by contract. It becomes serious when you have a lot of officials and hangers-on about election time, when you have a job of this kind going on month after month and year after year with a lot of men employed at big wages.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed this is going to complete the work.

Mr. COCHRANE. I never complain about where money is spent as long as it is properly spent, but I do not think that any minister or any official of the minister can get the work done as well as it can be done by contract. And it is of no use to tell me or to tell this committee that it is impossible, either in Quebec or any other place in Canada, to get the material by contract. Here is a work, that, as I understand it, is on dry land when the tide is out, but is reached by the sea when the tide is high. Are the men able to work when the tide is in? If not, are they paid just the same?

Mr. BRODEUR. The wharf is not submerged at high tide, but at high tide the water reaches the wharf. In many places wharfs are built so that vessels reach them at low water, but this one is built so that it is reached only at high water, and it is so built for the sake of economy. It is one of the least expensive works in that section and for that reason.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that this wharf is being completed by day labour. How does the minister get over the Act of parliament that declares that all works over $5,000 shall be done by contract? Under what authority does the minister presume to do this by day's work. Of course, I do not hold the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) responsible for this, as I suppose that it was not under his direction that the construction was undertaken. But he is here to defend the action of the Minister of Public Works. This is another of the many cases in which ministers come down and tell us that they are constructing public works by day labour though the Act explicitly says that such works shall be done by contract. What explanation has the minister to give for the conduct of the department on this occasion ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Perhaps I did not make myself very clear in my opening remarks. There are two kinds of work to be paid for under this vote. One is the removal of rocks. My hon. friend knows that such work cannot be very well done by contract, because it is not easy to ascertain how much work will be required. I understand that it is impossible to find contractors who will undertake such work for a fixed amount. Then there is the work on the breakwater pier. This is not all construction, but includes also repairs, and this kind of work it is almost impossible to have done by day's labour. And this is not a violation of the law. The Public Works Act provides that works over $5,000 shall be done under contract. But the same law provides that if the work can be more effectively done by day labour, it shall be done in that way. This is an instance.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister may be right. I have not the statute before me. But I shall be very much surprised if there is a provision in the Act such as he has suggested—that it is left by the minister to have the work done by day's labour if he thinks it is desirable to do so. I certainly have not so understood the law. I have always understood that where the expenditure is over $5,000, the work must be done under contract. I have before me the proposed amendment to the law which provides that the minister shall invite tenders for public works, unless there is an emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest, or the work can be more efficiently and expeditiously done by the officers of the department, or in case the estimated cost is less than $5,000, or where it appears to the minister that it is not advisable to invite tenders. It may be to this proposed amendment that the minister refers.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, that makes the law more stringent than it is.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to know how the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) interprets this law? If I am mistaken in what I have always supposed to be the law, then it would appear that parliament has practically no protection. From what the minister (Mr. Brodeur) tells us, if the work involved an expenditure of $100,000, the minister would be as much within the law in doing it by day's work if the amount involved was less than $5,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is done in some cases——

Mr. HENDERSON. We regret to see that it is so in many cases. I hope the Minister of Justice will have the law amended to make it more stringent ; because the only protection we have is that there should be competition in works of this kind.

Mr. INGRAM. Under this amendment, it would not even be necessary for the minister to go to the Governor in Council for their approval. That simply means that the whole thing is a farce.

Mr. BRODEUR. There are cases in which it is impossible to have work done by contract. There are parts of the country where the contractors will not tender for such work as this, as they cannot estimate the cost. And there are cases where works constructed by day labour have been found cheaper than they could possibly have been had they been done under contract. There is no intention on the part of the department to evade the law. But, where the work cannot be advantageously done by contract, it is done by day labour. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) asked me to quote the law. It is found in the Revised Statutes of 1886, section 13 :

> The minister shall invite tenders, by public advertisement, for the execution of all works, except in cases of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest, or in which, from the nature of the work, it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is there any evidence that it can be more expeditiously done by officers of the department than by contract ?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is a question for the department to decide. This is not a question of construction, it is a question of repairs ; and the hon. member knows that it is almost impossible to make specifications in regard to repairs. You must have some construction first before you can make any repairs to it.

Mr. INGRAM. We are not arguing that all work must be done by contract ; in many cases of repairs it would be impossible to have them done by contract. But this is a new work attached to an old work ; in other words, this is an extension of a pier, it is an entirely new piece of work, and therefore it should be done by contract.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is the removal of rocks. I am informed by the officer of the department that it is found much more economical to have that work done by day labour than by contract. It would be impossible, almost, to get anybody to tender.

Mr. MORIN. Are you removing rocks from a hill ?

Mr. BRODEUR. From the bar opposite the village. Vessels were liable to strike the rock, and it was thought advisable to remove that rock in order to give better transportation facilities.

Mr. MORIN. From the wharf out to the channel is about three-quarters of a mile, and you have rocks and boulders all the way across from the wharf to the channel; and then there is a bar above the wharf that extends for miles with nothing but rocks and boulders.

Mr. BRODEUR. Then my hon. friend sees the need of removing these rocks for the protection of the road.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the only thing you have to do, to remove the rocks and boulders?

Mr. BRODEUR. And repair the breakwater pier.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this harbour owned by the government, or is it private property?

Mr. BRODEUR. The work done so far has been done by the government. This work was begun in 1884.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the property vested in the Crown?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. When was it purchased, and how much was paid?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not got the information here. The work was begun in 1884, perhaps the records have been destroyed by the fire. All harbours are vested in the Crown.

Mr. BLAIN. This matter was up several times before, and I notice that a considerable amount has been appropriated each year to purchase these properties from private individuals. When this very item was up for discussion last year my hon. friend from Halton asked the question:

> Is this vested in the Crown, or is it private property?
> Mr. HYMAN. Probably it will be vested in the Crown. The actual deed has not passed, but an agreement has been made for the purchase from a private individual.

It is fair now that the minister should tell us what amount was paid for this property, and the name of the persons who owned the property.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed by the officers of the department that an approach has been purchased. That is the reason why that statement was made last year.

Mr. BLAIN. I would ask if the agreement referred to last year by the minister has been carried out, has the property been purchased, and is it now vested in the Crown?

Mr. MORIN.

Mr. BRODEUR. It has been bought from a man named Guiguère, for $800, and is now vested in the Crown. It was bought about five months ago.

Mr. MORIN. Will the government receive any revenue from that wharf?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, the law provides for certain charges to be made at these wharfs.

Mr. MORIN. I like to see a government clever, but there is such a thing as being too clever. Now the government has given subsidies to build a railway from Quebec, and they are giving more money to build wharfs and remove rocks. I may tell the minister that the railway goes right over the wharf twenty feet from the water. There should be an end to these things. I am willing to help people who need to be helped but those people have a railway there and that railway goes right past the quarry. They had even to dig down to the wharf to build this railway because there was a heavy grade there. The railway almost touches the wharf. When these people have a railway for their accommodation what is the use of going to the expense of building a wharf?

Mr. BRODEUR. Is that a steam railway?

Mr. MORIN. It used to be a steam railway. Now they are operating the same road by steam and electricity. They run electric cars every ten minutes in the day in the summer time and in the winter time they run steam cars about every hour in the day.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend knows the locality very well and he knows that most of the traffic that is carried on there is carried on by means of schooners. It is quite true there is an electric railway built nearby, but most of the traffic is carried on by schooners. Most of the traffic is between Quebec and the south shore of the St. Lawrence. My hon. friend knows that there is no bridge connecting there. My hon. friend who lives on the south shore has told us that he has been shipping from his place to that point.

Mr. MORIN. I said that I shipped to and from there, but not from my own place. I shipped from the north shore.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend knows that there is some traffic on the south shore.

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

Mr. BRODEUR. And that it is necessary to have a wharf?

Mr. MORIN. That is perfectly right, but I am opposed to giving too much to the same people. Somebody else needs a railway or a wharf or a bridge or the help of the government. I always have objected and I will object as long as I am a member of this House to favouring one man and crushing another. This money belongs to one man as much as it does to another, and everybody, as far as it is in the power of the government, should be protected. If the government have $100,000 to give let them give it but not give it all to one man. Let everybody have his share. That is nothing more than right.

Mr. BRODEUR. Equal rights.

Mr. MORIN. Yes, Sir. We had the promise from the right hon. leader of the government in 1895 that when he got into power his government would be a government of reform and a government of example. I am looking for the example, but I have not seen it yet, and I hope the government will never display it.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is not a fair hope.

Mr. MORIN. Well, it is politics. It is all very well to make promises and then never fulfil them.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the object of purchasing that piece of land my hon. friend spoke of buying a little while ago ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It was to get access from the high road. My hon. friend knows the conditions that exist at Chateau Richer. This is a place below Montmorency Falls. The adjoining parish is L'Ange Gardien, the next is Chateau Richer and the next is Ste. Anne de Beaupré. They have a stone quarry on the north side in the main road and in order to get down to this harbour which has been a harbour within my recollection for the last fifty years, they have to cross from the main road through the property of this man Guiguère to get to the wharf.

Mr. BERGERON. How did they get to the wharf before that?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I suppose they trespassed upon this property. The wharf has been extended as a result of these improvements and the improvements in the trade of the place. This particular place is the centre of two great industries. It is a great place for quarries and in addition they export an immense quantity of fire-wood. I suppose that two-thirds of the fire wood, that goes to Quebec comes from Chateau Richer. All that fire wood comes in bateaux from that place. My hon. friends know that the tide rises and falls there for 14 to 18 feet and in order to get that wood out of there it is necessary for the bateaux to go into the wharf.

Mr. BERGERON. When was that land bought ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Within the last four or five months. The deputy minister does not remember at this moment the exact date.

Mr. BERGERON. That would be in December or January ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Can you not tell when the property was bought ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The deputy minister will find that out for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BERGERON. It seems extraordinary that you cannot tell when the property was bought. There must be a deed. You must find out when that property was bought. If this has been an important harbour for fifty years and it was found necessary five months ago to buy some property it does seem extraordinary, and we are entitled to get that information. I would ask my hon. friend to take a note of it and give us all the information.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Desjardins—Allumette Island—River Ottawa—wharf, $1,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to complete. It is under contract.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that ?

Mr. BRODEUR. On the Ottawa river not very far from Pembroke.

Mr. BERGERON. Which county ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Pontiac.

Mr. BERGERON. If I am not making a mistake this is a revote ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. The amount of money to be spent on that wharf will be $11,000; $10,000 could only be spent to the first of July and the rest is a revote. That is proof of economy.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, we are trying to do what my hon. friend from Dorchester (Mr. Morin) says.

Mr. MORIN. The hon. member from Dorchester is right.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will not go as far as that.

Doucet's Landing—dredging, $15,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote covers the estimated cost of forming a basin 800 feet long, 450 feet wide and 13 feet deep at low water on the east side of the railway wharf at Doucet's Landing of the Arthabaska and Three Rivers branch of the Grand Trunk Railway, where steamboats calling at this landing can remain safely at anchor during stormy weather.

Mr. BERGERON. We voted some money for this the other day.

Mr. BRODEUR. It was to pay for work done during the current year. This is for next year. Tenders have been called for this work.

Mr. BERGERON. What will be the cost of the whole work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $15,000 will complete it.

Mr. BERGERON. How much was spent before ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The total expenditure for many years back has been $39,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What was spent last year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $20,000.

Mr. BERGERON. We voted $8,000 the other day in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BRODEUR. That was to pay for work done during the current fiscal year.

Mr. BERGERON. Do you mean to say you spent $20,000 in one year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, for dredging.

Mr. BERGERON. And $15,000 more ; that will be $35,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. $35,000. The work is being done by contract.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is doing that ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The work has been awarded to Mr. Randolph McDonald.

Mr. AMES. Were there any other tenders ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes ; and he was the lowest tenderer.

Mr. AMES. Did Mr. Randolph Macdonald have the same advantages that were given to the contractor in the Port Arthur case ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes ; public tenders were called for, and he was the lowest tenderer and got the work.

Mr. BERGERON. At what price ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Nine cents per cubic yard.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the material to be dredged ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Gravel and boulders.

Mr. BERGERON. We were told by the Solicitor General the other night that the dredging was to remove sand, and I pointed out that it would be futile to go on dredging sand year after year unless you put in some protection work to prevent the sand from drifting back.

Mr. BRODEUR. It would cost more to do that.

Mr. BERGERON. It might cost more at first, but it would be cheaper in the end. How much money has been spent at this place ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The total amount expended was $39,334.62 to the 31st December, 1904.

Mr. BERGERON. And in addition to that we have the $8,000 and the $15,000 now, which makes over $62,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Will this complete the work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. And when you have the work done, what kind of boats can use the wharf ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Boats having a less draught than 13 feet.

Mr. AMES. Why did the government discontinue dredging by the hour and substitute by the cubic yard ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Because of a discussion in the House it was thought better to call for public tenders and have the work done in this way.

Mr. AMES. How many tenders were there ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Three ; one at 9 cents, one at 15 cents and one at 22 cents.

Mr. AMES. Did the government pay for the towing of the dredge from Cornwall to Doucet's landing ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No ; Mr. Macdonald had extensive works on the north shore, and the reason his tender is so low is that he will take the material from the south shore and use it for filling on the north shore.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this wharf to be used by a railway company ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The wharf there is owned by the Grand Trunk.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the Grand Trunk Railway contribute anything ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No ; this vote is for dredging, and is not for the wharf.

Mr. MORIN. Some years ago Mr. Tarte told the House that the dredging in the St. Lawrence could be done for three cents per cubic yard, and now you are paying Mr. Macdonald nine cents.

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Tarte was referring to a very powerful new dredge called the 'J. I. Tarte,' which works in clay, but this work is in gravel and boulders, and besides we could not expect that a contractor should have such an extraordinary dredge as the one owned by the government.

Mr. MORIN. I understand you very plainly now.

East Templeton wharf, $6,500.

Mr. PERLEY. How much is this wharf going to cost altogether ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $6,500. This is a revote; nothing has been done.

Mr. PERLEY. Is this wharf used very much by the public, and will there be any revenue from it ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a wharf there now belonging to the Ottawa Navigation Company, and it is intended to get that wharf for the use of the public.

Mr. PERLEY. Does the government propose to buy this wharf from the Navigation Company ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was the intention, in order to make it a public wharf.

Mr. PERLEY. Well——

Mr. BRODEUR. I made a mistake ; I am told that the wharf is to be transferred from the Navigation Company to the government, and the government will make the necessary repairs and have the wharf for public use.

Mr. BERGERON. If it is in the same condition now as it was when I last saw it, it is in a very bad state of repair.

Mr. PERLEY. The result of this would be that the Ottawa Navigation Company would get a new wharf built by the government without any expense to themselves. This wharf has been in existence for a great many years, and it appears to have been satisfactory to the people for what small use they made of it. A certain amount of business has always been done by the public at that wharf.

Mr. BRODEUR. The company wants to have the prior use of the wharf, but the department will not accept it on that condition, and negotiations are pending. Perhaps there will be no final result.

Mr. BERGERON. In what county is it ?

Mr. BRODEUR. In the county of Wright, a few miles from here.

Mr. PERLEY. It seems to be the policy of the government to build many more wharfs than they formerly did. East Templeton wharf did well enough in the old days. Before undertaking to build new wharfs, does the department have any report to show what use will be made of them by the public and the expected revenue in each case ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, a report is made by the officers of the department in each case before any money is voted.

Mr. PERLEY. On March 6th last, I asked the acting Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) a question with regard to two wharfs on the Ottawa, from neither of which was the revenue sufficient to warrant the expenditure of public money. One was at Greece's point, county of Argenteuil, on which was spent $5,452.19. Last year the gross revenue was $60.93. Then there is the wharf at Hull, across the river, built by the government at a cost of $54,000, which last year was used by only some ten boats, and for the use of which no wharfage is charged. I have passed this wharf a great many times and have never seen it used until a couple of days ago when I saw a small row boat landing at it. While the building of wharfs is very necessary when required for the public convenience, in many cases they are built where they are not needed by the public at all. With regard to the wharf at East Templeton, has the hon. minister any report to show that it will be used by any company other than the Ottawa River Company, which is quite well able to take care of its own wharfs.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed by the chief engineer that a report was made in the usual way before the appropriation was asked for last year. With regard to the two wharfs to which the hon. gentleman refers, they are not under the control of the Public Works Department.

Mr. PERLEY. On the 6th March, I asked a question about the wharf at Greece's point, and it was answered by the acting Minister of Public Works.

Mr. BRODEUR. The chief engineer says that this wharf is under the control of the Department of Railways and Canals. The one at Hull was built by the Public Works Department. The other one is in connection with the canal.

Mr. PERLEY. How much revenue does the hon. gentleman expect from this wharf, according to the report, and what use will be made of it by the public outside the Ottawa Navigation Company ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The department has no information on that point because the revenue is collected by the Department of Marine and Fisheries ; but I am sure, from the information we have, that the revenue will be sufficient to meet the interest on the expenditure.

Mr. PERLEY. Then it will be very different from these other two wharfs on the Ottawa. The one that cost some $5,000 gives $60 revenue, and the one that cost $54,000, gives no revenue.

Mr. BERGERON. Have the company and the government come to any agreement?

Mr. BRODEUR. Nothing has been decided between the company and the government, the transfer has not been made yet by the Ottawa Navigation Company, and negotiations are going on between the department and the company. The company wants the prior use of that wharf so that they would be entitled to order any boat away which might be there when they wanted to use it, but the department did not consent.

Mr. BERGERON. Will this money be spent if no satisfactory arrangement is come to?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, we will not spend anything before the transfer is made to the department.

Mr. AMES. The wharf should certainly not be built if any preference is to be given the company.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is why no money has been spent so far in connection with that wharf.

Mr. PERLEY. How have the public managed at East Templeton up to date?

Mr. BRODEUR. They were using Maclaren's wharf.

Mr. BERGERON. So that this wharf has not been used at all?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, by the Ottawa Navigation Company.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it fit to be used?

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, it is being used by the company.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the government allow steamboats to use a wharf which is dangerous to the public?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have no control over that. The company takes all the risk itself, and will be responsible for any accident.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister lay on the table the report under which he proposes to purchase the wharf?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly.

Escoumain wharf, $8,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to provide for building a public pier, which is under contract. The cost altogether will be $11,478, and the usual amount for superintendence and contingencies, $1,522. $10,000 were voted and $5,000 of that is a revote, so we will be spending only $5,000 and $8,000 or $13,000.

Gatineau Point—repairs to wharf and to retaining wall above it, $1,100.

Mr. BRODEUR. This expenditure is to be made on a retaining wall for shore protection built some fifty years ago. It is being done by day labour.

Mr. BERGERON. Do any steamboats stop at the wharf at this place?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for repairs to the retaining wall.

Mr. BERGERON. Are we bound to keep it in repair?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, because it is built by ourselves.

Grands Mechins breakwater, $20,000.

Mr. BRODUEUR. This is a work for which tenders have been called but nobody has tendered. It is for the construction of a breakwater here, extending 603 feet from the eastern side of the harbour of Grand Mechins to afford better protection. This is in Rimouski county, fifty-four miles from Little Metis and eighty miles from Rimouski.

Mr. TAYLOR. $5,000 has already been spent.

Mr. BRODEUR. $5,000 was spent during the winter for timber. We called for tenders and nobody would make any tender, but we had to buy the lumber and it has been delivered during the last winter.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are you calling for tenders again?

Mr. BRODEUR. We will call for tenders again.

Mr. AMES. By whom will the harbour that will be formed by this work be used, by the local fishermen and traders or will this accommodate the larger vessels that pass down the northern Gaspé coast such as the 'Campana' and the 'King Edward'?

Mr. BRODEUR. It will be for the fishermen and for the general trade. This will provide a depth of 17½ feet and will be sufficient, the chief engineer informs me, to accommodate vessels such as the 'Campana.'

Mr. AMES. If it is purely a local expenditure for the protection of the fishermen it is a large amount, but if it makes a harbour sufficient for the 'Campana' it is a national expenditure and a considerable sum might be permitted.

Mr. BRODEUR. The object is to afford shelter to the fishermen and also landing and shipping accommodation. The only railway connection these people have is the Intercolonial Railway which passes Little Metis fifty-four miles from there, so those people have no accommodation at all.

Mr. AMES. As the minister well knows that coast is not served by railway, but by steamers passing up and down and also by the local trading schooners. There are times frequently, when there is a southeasterly wind, when it is impossible for vessels, even of the size of the 'Campana,' to take on freight from the shore, especially when barrels of cod oil, one of the large exports from that district, are being taken on board. If this affords a protected roadstead in which large vessels of the size of the 'Campana' can enter and load in comparatively still water then it is a worthy expenditure, but if it will not assist in any way the trade of the coast and is only to be used to protect the fishermen or a few vessels loading timber, it is a large expenditure.

Mr. BRODEUR. The object is to afford protection to vessels like the 'Campana.'

Mr. AMES. Then it would be better for the government if necessary to make an expenditure of $5,000 more in order to make an inclosed harbour 17½ feet deep.

Mr. BRODEUR. As a matter of fact the estimated cost is $30,000. We are simply asking $20,000 but shall have to ask a further sum. This is the amount supposed to be spent during the coming year.

Mr. AMES. There is no harbour from Rimouski to Gaspé where vessels the size of the 'Campana' can enter.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is not. And there have been some cases where there has been great danger in storms to steamers passing up and down. If a harbour can be obtained for $25,000 or $30,000 the expenditure is legitimate if it will afford a port with sufficient depth of water to enable vessels to load and unload in safety.

Mr. AMES. How long a roadstead will you have with a depth of 17½ feet? That depth will be all right provided you have it for a length of 500 or 600 feet along the pier, but if you have it only on the face of the breakwater that will not help you very much.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that the depth will be from 12 feet to 17½ feet for a length of about 500 feet along the pier.

Grosse Isle quarantine station—extension of landing pier to deep water, $10,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is an amount asked for by the Department of Agriculture in connection with the quarantine. It is to make provision for the extension of the west or landing pier of Grosse Isle to secure a depth of 30 feet at low water, spring tide, along the face. This will allow the largest ships entering the St. Lawrence to reach the wharf at any stage of the tide.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is a revote?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, nothing has been spent.

Quebec—harbours, rivers and bridges—general repairs and improvements, $25,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to cover the cost of repairs to piers, bridges, &c., where they become necessary as well as to provide for the travelling expenses of resident engineers in the province of Quebec during the year. The amount spent last year under this head was $19,477.77.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know whether the Department of Public Works have received a request from the parish of St. Timothée, in the county of Beauharnois. There is a wharf there built by the government many years ago and the keeping of which in repair is also the business of the government. But it has been allowed to fall into very bad condition. I understood that a promise had been made that it would be repaired. The authorities there were to have communicated with the department, but I do not know whether that has been done or not. But I would ask if the repairs of this wharf could not be carried out under this vote. They would not cost very much.

Mr. BRODEUR. How much?

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose $1,000 would put the work in very good shape. At present it is in a dangerous condition.

Mr. BRODEUR. The officers of the department advise me that they have not received any information on the matter. But they will take note of the case and the department will look into it.

Lake St. John—dredging, $4,000.

Mr. AMES. Where is the dredging being done?

Mr. BRODEUR. At the mouth of the river at Roberval and other places on Lake St. John.

Mr. AMES. Can the hon. minister say at what other places?

Mr. BRODEUR. At the mouth of the three different rivers, the Metabetchouan, the Peribonka and the Mistassini.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the dredge belong to the government?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, and this is to pay the running expenses of the dredge.

Mr. AMES. If I remember well, the dredging is to remove the sandbars at the mouths of these rivers. Is the government able to hold the work that it has done? Having dredged a channel, what steps do the government take to make the work permanent?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that the channels are held with difficulty. In the supplementary estimates there will be an item for the construction of retaining piers.

Mr. AMES. The government will have to do that, for it is mere waste of money to dredge without building retaining piers, particularly at the Grand Discharge.

Laprairie—ice piers and protection walls—works of reconstruction and repairs, $5,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to complete the work under contract.

Mr. BERGERON. Who has this contract?

Mr. BRODEUR. Messrs. Amyot and Lemay of Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the amount of the vote?

Mr. BRODEUR. Their contract was for $29,650.

Lavaltrie—pile wharf and dredging, $5,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What depth of water will be had there?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for the boats of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company running between Montreal and Chambly. The depth will be from ten to twelve feet.

Le Tableau, Descente des Femmes—wharf on River Saguenay, $6,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This covers works to be executed at Descente des Femmes, the completion of a wharf on the north shore of the Saguenay river. The wharf has to be sheeted with four-inch plank and a portion of the floor is to be completed.

Mr. BERGERON. There are several wharfs on the Saguenay. In which parish is this ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is on the north side and about fifty miles below Ha, Ha, bay.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it a new wharf ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there a parish there ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a village there —a new settlement and a progressive one. They have no other means of communication than by this wharf.

Mr. AMES. Is that to be done by day's work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. AMES. What wages do you pay labourers in the Saguenay district ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $2.50 for foremen, and $1.25 to $1.40 to others.

Mr. BERGERON. When was the $1,000 spent ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The work was begun last year. There is a mistake in this item. Instead of being $6,000 it should be $600. It is an error in the printing.

Little Pabos—harbour improvements, $4,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to make further provision for extending 100 feet in a westerly direction the breakwater built in 1889, in order to afford shelter to the fishing boats that frequent the locality. It is at the mouth of the river.

Mr. AMES. That river is subject to great floods in the spring, and a breakwater built there would need to be carefully made.

L'Ile d'Alma—removal point of rock, $1,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to remove by blasting some rocks which obstruct navigation. It is in the county of Chicoutimi, on the river of that name.

Mr. MORIN. It is very strange that the government should spend money at that place. There is a ridge of rocks in the river, and the government proposes to blast the rocks so as to make the river wider. If the government is going to make canals of all the rivers, streams, creeks and brooks in the country, they have a big job before them.

Lower St. Lawrence—removal of rocks, &c., $3,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is the ordinary vote taken every year. It is proposed to spend this money in the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure.

Magdalen Islands—breakwaters and piers, $20,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to make provision, in accordance with the estimate, for carrying on, during the coming fiscal year, projected works in connection with breakwaters, piers and wharfs in the Magdalen Islands, with a view to affording better shelter and harbour facilities, not only to a large number of fishing vessels, but also to steam sailing vessels and row-boats, and the coasting trade and fishing industry of the lower St. Lawrence.

Mr. BERGERON. You spent $20,000 last year and $20,000 is asked for this year. Does that cover all the work to be done ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. The chief part of this work is to be done on the islands of Pointe à Elie, Grindstone, Bassin and Albright. These wharfs are being extended and deepened.

Mr. BERGERON. The other day I understood from the Solicitor General that on account of the sandbar between the island of Amherst there is only one place where vessels of a certain dimension can go. There is enough water on both sides of the island for large steamers.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that they stop at Pointe à Elie, Grindstone and Bassin.

Mr. BERGERON. They generally get a tender to go ashore.

Mr. BRODEUR. That was when there were no wharfs.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the object of this ? Is it for large navigation or particularly for the fishermen ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is for large navigation. It is in order to connect these islands with the outside world.

Mr. BERGERON. Do large boats ply between the Magdalen Islands and other ports ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a regular ferry from Pictou to these islands. Besides there is provision for sailing boats and large fishing boats.

Mr. BERGERON. How many boats are there plying between the islands and Pictou ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is only one ferry.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that every day ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Every week; perhaps twice a week. I am not sure.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there just one vessel?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a direct line between Pictou and the Magdalen Islands.

Mr. BERGERON. What other vessels are there?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are schooners, sailing vessels and large fishing boats. These people are living especially by the fishing industry.

Mr. BERGERON. I know that a number have complained that they have not communication with the outside world.

Mr. BLAIN. There has already been $40,000 expended upon these Magdalen Islands improvements, and we are now asked for $20,000 more. This makes $60,000. May I ask the hon. minister if this will complete the work, or will next year find a similar amount of $20,000 in the estimates?

Mr. BRODEUR. I cannot say that there will be no money expended at any place in the future, but I may say to my hon. friend that this money covers the improvements at the three places I have just mentioned—Pointe à Elie, Grindstone and Bassin. I cannot say that no more improvements will be undertaken elsewhere.

Mr. BLAIN. It is pretty hard to judge whether these amounts should be voted or whether we should ask for a general explanation.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have been informed by the officials of the department that the breakwater at Grand Entry has been destroyed, and it will require some work there.

Mr. BLAIN. I asked this question for the reason that I notice that the same explanation is given about this work each year. Last year, when a vote of $20,000 was asked, the minister said that he thought this would complete the work.

Mr. BRODEUR. At these places?

Mr. BLAIN. Then he qualified it by saying that a very small amount might be required for further improvements. This year the hon. minister comes along and asks for $20,000, giving about the same explanation, and saying that possibly further amounts may be required in years to come.

Mr. BRODEUR. In some other parts of the islands. There are several islands.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that. It is quite a safe ground, but it is rather severe upon the treasury to say that $20,000 each year shall be voted for an expenditure at this one point.

Mille Vaches—landing pier, $5,000.

Mr. MORIN. Who recommended this work to be done at Mille Vaches?

Mr. BRODEUR. It has been recommended on the report of the officers of the department. Mr. Taché recommended it.

Mr. BERGERON. Which county is this in?

Mr. BRODEUR. Chicoutimi and Saguenay.

Mistook (Delisle)—wharf, $4,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that?

Mr. BRODEUR. Chicoutimi and Saguenay.

Mr. BERGERON. Why is it called Mistook?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in the township of Delisle, and it is called Mistook.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that on Lake St. John?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. How many government wharfs have we on Lake St. John?

Mr. BRODEUR. Six or seven.

Mont Louis—wharf and approach, $6,500.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is this?

Mr. BRODEUR. In Gaspé. It is to complete the block of cribwork.

Mr. BERGERON. How much will it cost?

Mr. BRODEUR. $8,000.

Mr. BERGERON. We have already voted $9,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. The total expenditure from the 31st December last is $8,000.

Mr. AMES. What depth of water will this give?

Mr. BRODEUR. 14 feet.

Mr. AMES. That will let the trading steamers in?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend says we have expended $8,000?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. And he is asking for $6,500 more. That will be over $14,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Which county is that in?

Mr. BRODEUR. Gaspé; it is on the north shore, and we cannot construct anything at a less cost than that.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it a wharf or a breakwater?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to complete a block of cribwork 185 feet by 20 feet, reaching to a 14-foot depth at low water. This is being built in Mont St. Louis bay, at the mouth of the river of the same name ; and we also propose to construct an approach to the wharf 365 feet long and 20 feet wide on top.

Mr. BERGERON. Do steamers go there ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No ; the steamers are not going there now, because there is no accommodation.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the 'Campana' be able to stop at that wharf ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Montmagny—wharf on the 'Bassin,' $6,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that ?

Mr. BRODEUR. In the county of Montmagny.

Mr. BERGERON. I see you have a vote for $6,000. You could not spend all that next year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We would not spend any money during the elections.

Mr. BERGERON. Will that cover the whole work ?

Mr. MORIN. Here is a supplementary vote for $2,500 for that very place.

Mr. BRODEUR. For this year ?

Mr. MORIN. It does not say.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is mistaken, I think.

Mr. MORIN. I do not believe he is.

Mr. BERGERON. There is $2,500 in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is it not for Montmorency ?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes ; it is for Montmorency.

Montmorency Falls—crib work revetment wall along harbour front, $6,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote of $6,000 is asked to be taken to make further provision for building a cribwork revetment wall 8 feet wide, 8 feet high and 1,200 feet long along the harbour front of the new municipality of Montmorency Falls. This wharfing will afford landing and embarking accommodation to small boats and at the same time prevent the present embankment of stone-filled cribwork, the face timbers of which are decayed and here and there broken, from toppling over on to the beach when the high spring tides would undermine and destroy the harbour. This work is being done according to the report of the engineer.

Mr. BERGERON. How much will it cost?

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. BRODEUR. $12,500.

Mr. BERGERON. What was spent before ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $6,000 has already been spent, and this $6,000 is to complete. The contract is $12,000. There was voted last year $4,000, and we voted the other day $2,500 and then there is $6,500 to complete, making $12,500 altogether.

Mr. AMES. When the cribwork is finished will you have a permanent wharf ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. AMES. The old wharf was made almost exclusively of slabs and sawdust and was rotting away all the time.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The old wharf was where the old Hall mill used to be and there is a cotton mill there now. This new wharf is immediately east of the old wharf along the shore. The old wharf would cost more than it is worth to repair it.

Mr. AMES. It would be waste of money to try to repair the old wharf. What depth of water will this new wharf give ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Four or five feet at the outside ; it would be more at high tide. It is near the Montmorency Falls and there are a number of industries there. This new wharf could be used by a certain number of light draught vessels, but as a matter of trade and commerce it is not very important.

New Carlisle wharf—extension of pier, $10,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. Tenders are being called for the total estimated cost is $25,000.

Mr. AMES. You ought to have no difficulty in getting contractors at New Carlisle. Will this complete the work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It will complete 200 feet which is estimated at $25,000.

Mr. AMES. Is this the wharf that was injured by the steamship 'Admiral' ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. That damage was repaired and this vote is for new construction.

Mr. BLAIN. How much further than 200 feet does the government propose to extend the wharf ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We expect this will give us the necessary depth.

Mr. AMES. The steamship 'Admiral' has been taken off the route this year and a larger and better steamer requiring more wharf room, substituted. The old wharf was big enough for the 'Admiral' but I question if it is big enough for the new steamer.

Mr. BRODEUR. There will be 14 feet at this new wharf.

Nicolet River—dredging, repairs to piers, &c., $6,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the estimated cost of this whole work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The total expenditure up to the 31st December, 1904, was $186,000 ; that extends over a great many years.

Mr. BERGERON. Will this vote complete the work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It has to be maintained and kept in proper order and repair.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that river navigable?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, for small boats plying on Lake St. Peter.

Mr. BERGERON. How far do they go up the river ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no navigation on the Nicolet river except from the St. Lawrence to the town of Nicolet which is situated near the mouth of the river. There are five saw-mills there, and Nicolet is rather an important place. This money has been spent under the previous government and as a matter of fact I do not think the present government has spent much money there except for repairs. This vote is for dredging.

Mr. BERGERON. The chief engineer is now present and I wish to know if some permanent work cannot be done there which would prevent this annual expenditure. If this place is going to fill up all the time we might try and prevent it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed by the chief engineer that the filling up will continue and that all we can do is to dredge it out.

Mr. BERGERON. Could not some permanent cribwork be put in ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The chief engineer informs me that would not meet the difficulty.

Mr. BERGERON. How much does it cost a year to keep that river in order

Mr. BRODEUR. About $6,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Then it is a kind of annual permanent charge

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. AMES. How is this dredging done ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Tenders have been called for and the contract awarded to Mr. Macdonald.

Mr. AMES. Not to Mr. Poupore this time?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. AMES. At what price ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Twelve and a half cents per cubic yard.

Mr. AMES. What did Mr. Poupore offer to do it for ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know. I only know there were four tenders ranging from 12½ cents to 16 cents.

Notre Dame du Portage—wharf, $5,000.

Mr. AMES. Is that government property at Notre Dame du Portage ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Does this finish the work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. We won't see any vote for it next year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not unless there is a revote.

Peel Head bay, $2,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Who owns that wharf?

Mr. BRODEUR. The government. It is an old wharf which was purchased on the 5th May from Mr. Ewing for $1,500.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there much navigation from this to Missisquoi bay ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, there are a lot of fishermen there, and there was some dispute between the Vermont authorities and the government with regard to fishing.

Mr. BERGERON. What kind of navigation is there ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Barges and tug boats which come from Lake Champlain.

Portneuf wharf, $4,000.

Mr. MONK. Is that new ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, it is to be built along the west bank of the river.

Repentigny wharf, $15,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to complete the wharf now under contract. The amount voted was $10,500 and we have added to that $5,000 for a new site and improvements. The estimated cost was $17,500.

Mr. AMES. From whom did you purchase the new site and what was paid for it ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I can get that information.

Mr. MONK. Having begun the wharf at Repentigny, it is our duty to complete it, and therefore I do not take exception to the work. In a general way that wharf is of some use. But the point I want to make is this. I think the time has come to restrict our policy of building new wharfs and pay more attention to the completion of our transportation system. When this system was inaugurated of building little wharfs here and there, some of them absolutely useless—some in order to suit the demands of an individual, others merely to give contracts to some friends in the vicinity—the problem of transportation had not reached the importance it has gained in the last four or five years. On last Saturday the hon. the Minister of Marine courteously invited members of parliament to visit a very important link in the transportation between east and west—the harbour of Montreal and the channel between Montreal and the middle of Lake St. Peter. Upon that trip were a number of members of parliament and some business men whose opinion is of the highest importance—business men who have helped to make Montreal what it is to-day. I was informed by some of them that if we are ever to reach the position we are entitled to in the system of transportation between the east and the west, we should alleviate the burden which at present weighs upon the port of Montreal in the shape of dues and charges. They supplemented that information by telling me that the larger portion of the United States and ports with which we are competing have no such charges at all as weigh upon the harbours of Montreal, Quebec and our ports in the maritime provinces.

Does it not seem to my hon. friend that as men of business who know the conditions of trade, we should direct all our effort not only to improving the channel between Montreal and Quebec and improving the ports of Montreal and Quebec and making them free ports, but also to giving the same advantages to our winter ports in the maritime provinces, that unless we do that we will not attain the position in the transportation trade of this continent to which we are entitled? Does it not seem to the government and to my hon. friend of far greater importance that we should devote our money to not only improving the port of Montreal by sweeping and deepening the channel between Montreal and Quebec, but also to diminishing the burden that weighs upon the port of Montreal. Are the people of Repentigny not much more interested in the carrying out of that improvement in the channel and port of Montreal than in the building of a $17,000 wharf at Repentigny itself? If the port of Montreal acquires the importance which is assigned to it by those who know what is the destiny of that port, if we do what I have just suggested to the minister, will not the people not of Montreal—I do not speak of it at all in a parochial or narrow sense—but the people of the whole province, to go no further than the province of Quebec, be immensely more benefited than if we spent a little money here and there to build wharfs where they are not absolutely necessary. I have seen time and again in our ordinary estimates large quantities of money voted from year to year for wharfs which it has not been deemed necessary to commence. The money has been voted in some cases three and four times. There cannot be any very urgent necessity as the member for Beauharnois pointed out a moment ago, there cannot be any very immediate or pressing need for a wharf, the construction of which is in this way put off from year to year, whereas on the other hand the necessity of immediately perfecting as far as possible and in every imaginable manner our system of transportation in order not only to benefit ourselves but to enable us to compete successfully with the American ports is something urgent, something that is being continually spoken of in the press and impressed upon the government by all who have any interest in it. What I say applies to the whole of these estimates and I think that whatever may be the small, temporary advantage which the government can derive by performing a little work here and a little work there upon these wharfs, the government would have the support of the whole country and in fact of each one of these places for which this money is voted, if it promulgated a policy with reference to our general system of transportation and adhered to that policy by devoting all our money available for the improvement of our harbours and rivers to the immediate improvement of our system of transportation generally. I believe that any improvements made in the direction I have indicated either at Montreal or Quebec or at our winter ports and any effort in the direction of making free national ports of Montreal and of these other ports would be a policy which if adopted by the government and vigorously pursued would have the support of the entire country. It is a question of changing our system, for I do not say that the present system is peculiar to this government. It has been the system for fifteen years past at least. But I say the time has arrived to make that change and the expenditure should be centralized in the direction of perfecting our system of transportation.

Mr. BRODEUR. The two questions which have been raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) are certainly very important questions. First, should we continue to build wharfs in different places? Let us speak for a moment of some cases in Quebec, and secondly, what should become of the port of Montreal. As to the building of wharfs in different parts of the province, I think that this work is perfectly justified and has been carried on for several years. Long before this government came into power, large sums of money were expended for the construction of wharfs in different places and it has been found advisable to keep these wharfs in proper repair and at the same time to build some new ones where it was necessary. It seems to me that the construction of these local wharfs has tended to develop to a large extent the trade which is now carried on in the city and port of Montreal, because those wharfs were for the accommodation of boats most of which plied between Montreal and those different places, and instead of being to the detriment of the port of Montreal, I think that these wharfs have tended to develop to a large extent the trade which is now carried on in Montreal. With regard to the port of Montreal itself it is a very broad question whether Montreal should be a free port or whether St. John, Quebec and Halifax should be free ports. Parliament has not had occasion this year to discuss this question but I hope before the end of this session some time may be found to discuss such an important issue. I am not so sure as my hon. friend seems to be that the whole country is asking that Montreal should be made a free port now. I never heard such an expression used by the members representing other parts of the country, but I suppose that if it was the general consensus of opinion in the country that Montreal and those other ports should be free ports, the question should be certainly considered as quickly as possible by the government. I suppose my hon. friend does not expect to-night that the government will make any declaration as to its policy with regard to Montreal or those other ports being free ports. I must add that at the same time we have been spending large sums of money in these different harbours, we have been taking money from the public chest for the construction of wharfs in Montreal. We have used public money for some improvements in Quebec and we have done the same thing in St. John and Halifax when it was necessary. Take the port of Montreal. What would Montreal be without the large expenditure which has been made in it by the central government for the opening of the channel between Quebec and Montreal? Therefore I do not think the port of Montreal has been neglected by this government and in every instance the government has spent money to aid the development of the port as much as possible.

Mr. AMES. Did I understand the minister to say that an opportunity would be given this session for the discussion of this question of making Montreal a free port?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly; any member would be free on a motion for supply to discuss such an important question, and it looks as if the session was to be rather long and so we might have an opportunity of discussing that question.

Mr. AMES. That is not quite what I gathered from the minister's remarks. I gathered that some legislation was in contemplation on the part of the government, the nature of which would afford occasion for considering this whole matter, not that it might be brought up by any private member on going into supply.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think the government has come to any final decision as to that and as to the bringing in of any legislation.

Mr. AMES. As to whether they will or will not bring in any legislation?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. MONK. I did not contend that the whole country wanted Montreal to be made a free port, nor did I discuss the question of freeing our great national ports. What I wished to point out was that year after year, ever since I entered this parliament in 1896, and long before, it has been the custom to devote perhaps half a million dollars to the building of wharfs where there is no urgent necessity for them, merely to satisfy some particular individuals who desire the wharf or who desire a contract to build a wharf. That was the system before this government came into power, and it is still continued. I invite the attention of the minister and the government to this point—whether we have enough money to do this in the face of the competition with our great ports and the ports in the United States. The Americans are expending immense sums not only to free their ports—if the information given to me last Saturday is correct, they are free ports at the present moment—but to make them absolutely perfect for the handling of merchandise. I ask is it not advisable, in the face of that rivalry, for the government to adopt a system different from the one that has prevailed for twenty years, to adopt a policy rendered necessary by the present needs of transportation and to spend it according to some well-considered and definite plan? Now, a part of the plan that has always been adopted, if not expressly then impliedly, by the government is to improve the navigation on the St. Lawrence between Quebec and Montreal—that link of our transportation system which has been brought to our notice by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries lately. Would it not be better for us to perfect that link? We are deepening the channel and we invite vessels drawing thirty feet and more to come up to Montreal. But what is the use of spending these vast sums upon the channel of the St. Lawrence if, when the vessels arrive at our ports, contrary to the plan adopted in the United States, they are oppressed by heavy charges which never diminish? If this system were adopted, we could not have these diversified votes every year.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think they are of great use in developing the country.

Mr. MONK. I do not deny that if we had enough money to build wharfs all over the country, we should do it. I have no doubt also that within very restricted limits, these votes result in enhancing the commerce at Quebec and Montreal. But the question is, what is the most pressing need? My hon.

friend says that we have spent money in the port of Montreal. I do not deny that. He must recognize however, that of the millions expended to improve the port of Montreal, the government has merely guaranteed——

Mr. BRODEUR. We have spent money besides.

Mr. MONK. I will come to that in a moment. But the greater part of that immense sum is only guaranteed by the government, the government has good security and in the payment of interest the harbour of Montreal has never defaulted. The government has built a wharf at the foot of the current, if that is what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) alludes to. That involved an expenditure of some $300,000 or $400,000, I think.

Mr. BRODEUR. It was $700,000, I believe.

Mr. MONK. It was originally stated that it would cost less than $500,000. Perhaps the figure has gone up since then. The debt of the port of Montreal, if I mistake not, is some $8,000,000, for which, as I say, the harbour is responsible, and in the payment of interest on this it has never defaulted. But I say that, so long as that harbour is not on the same footing as Newport News, Baltimore, New York, Boston and Portland we have no right to spend money on wharfs all over the country. If we do so, we shall see our shipping go to the United States.

Mr. AMES. The remarks of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) make it necessary to call the attention of the government to the fact that the wharfs they have built at the lower end of the St. Mary's Current, the Fielding wharf, the Laurier wharf and the Sutherland wharf, are so situated that it is almost impossible for vessels to come in and go out without running aground on the shoal immediately below.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think my hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. AMES. Only this morning, one of the vessels leaving the Sutherland wharf ran on the shoal immediately below and is stuck there at this moment, with all the tugs they can get, trying to get her off. The government should remove this shoal which is almost opposite and immediately below the Sutherland wharf.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand that it is the intention of the Department of Marine and Fisheries to remove that obstruction. But we have no information in the Public Works Department as to that.

Mr. AMES. I sent for the paper containing the item to which I referred and I now have it before me. It speaks of a vessel called the 'Tampican.' The headings says:

(Translation.) The 'Tampican' goes aground on a shoal, at Maisonneuve.—An investigation anticipated.

Then it goes on to speak of the 'Tampican' running on the low ground immediately opposite the Sutherland wharf. The point is that the government have only half done their work, unless they remove this shoal.

Mr. BRODEUR. Did the vessel go outside the channel?

Mr. AMES. (Translation.)

At five o'clock this morning, within a few yards of the wharf, opposite the street Pius the IXth, at Maisonneuve, the Leyland liner 'Tampican' went aground at the foot of Letourneux street, on a shoal. For several hours, three powerful tugs have tugged away and exerted every effort to move the stranded steamer from her awkward position.

The 'Tampician' has on board a full cargo of hay, lumber, &c., and a few hundred head of cattle, bound for London and Leith, and the consensus of opinion is that they will have to lighter part of her cargo, in order to set her afloat again.

In the other papers there is a plan showing where the vessel is aground.

Mr. BRODEUR. This work is under the control of the harbour commissioners of Montreal; but the channel within the limits of the harbour is under the control at present of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. All the works which have been done within the limits of the harbour of Montreal are in the upper part of the harbour. which is entirely under the control of the commission, I mean the deepening of the channel at that place. I see by the map published in the papers to-night that the vessel went outside the channel.

Mr. AMES. But the vessel, in getting away from the wharf, found it impossible to get under sufficient headway before the current took her and twisted her round and landed her aground on that shoal. The government should have included in their work the removal of that shoal so as to make the three piers of real value to navigation.

Mr. BRODEUR. According to the map I have seen, I do not think the criticism made by my hon. friend as to the side of the wharf is correct, because I see that near the wharf the depth of water is 32 feet. But this vessel, instead of going near those wharfs, went on the shoal outside the channel entirely.

Rimouski—extension of pier and dredging tidal basin, including repairs, $30,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to make provision for continuing the harbour repairs already commenced, for extending the usefulness of the government pier at Rimouski, and to permit dredging to be proceeded with without harm to the cribwork. The work will cost $50,000.

Mr. AMES. I would like to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that the conditions which have made the expenditure on this Rimouski pier in the past necessary and valuable, have at the present time almost disappeared. When it was contemplated to build this Rimouski pier it was used as the terminus from which the mails were brought down to the steamer, and the small steamer which acted as a tender used to go along the north side of the pier and get the mails. It was also used for pilot boats to come in and shelter. Now, as the minister knows, steamers do not stop any longer opposite Rimouski, but go on to Father Point, and the mails also are taken on board at Father Point, therefore there is little trade left for Rimouski. Moreover, I think that pier is already half a mile long, and for the first half at least the water is not more than four or five feet deep on either side, and it is only at the end that you can get any depth at all. Now it is proposed to continue spending thousands of dollars to extend that pier further out where it is impossible to get deep water. It seems to me that the usefulness of that pier to-day has to a great extent passed away. It is quite ample as it stands to serve all existing purposes. The need of that pier has practically passed five miles down below to Father Point.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand there are no shipping facilities at Father Point, the shipping facilities are at Rimouski, and all the shipping which is done by the railway is done at Rimouski. Now the work which is proposed does not only cover the repairs which are needed to the wharf now in existence, there is no extension provided ; but the item is to construct at that place a basin. We will build another wharf at the end, and then vessels will come in there and be sheltered, and will be in a proper position to take on cargoes.

Mr. AMES. Only three years ago the entire end of that pier was completely refitted with new timber, and the shed was reconstructed. There should be very little repair required on that wharf at present. You have already a basin on the north side sufficiently large for all the vessels that come in there. I have been down to that pier many times in the summer, and have rarely found more than two or three small schooners there of twenty or thirty tons burden. The extension pier was used as the terminus of the Intercolonial for the transhipment of the mails. So long as tenders came there to receive the mails, just so long that wharf had some usefulness ; but now that all that has been transferred to Father Point, the wharf becomes simply a local wharf.

Mr. BRODEUR. The information I have, on the contrary, is that we have not proper shipping facilities for the local business.

Mr. AMES. None of the lumber is ever loaded on that wharf, it is always lightered out from the mill. The lumber mills are on the other side of the bay.

Mr. BRODEUR. My information is that it is loaded from the wharf.

Mr. AMES. That is a large amount of money to spend for a wharf that has only local use.

Mr. BRODEUR. We will try to make it national.

Mr. AMES. You cannot, with four feet of water.

Rivière Batiscan—dredging channel at mouth, $8,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is under contract, awarded to Mr. Poupore, the lowest tenderer, at 13½ cents per cubic yard.

Rivière Chateauguay—dredging, $4,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is proposed to continue dredging operations during the fiscal year in Chateauguay basin, at the mouth of the river.

Mr. BERGERON. In the circumstances that prevail at the mouth of that river, you will have to go on for ever spending thousands of dollars every year for dredging.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that it would cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to provide the necessary works, and it is not certain that the permanent works suggested by my hon. friend would be sufficient.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this in the river itself ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, at the mouth of the river.

Mr. BERGERON. Near the island ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. There is quicksand at that point. The government that preceded this one worked at this point and the present government are working there now. They have kept on spending so much every year, whereas, if cribwork was constructed, in the long run it would be better.

Rivière Chateauguay—enlargement at discharge into St. John river, $2,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to provide for the enlargement of the waterway of the Chateauguay river at the point where a portion of its waters pass into the St. John river at the time of the debacle.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the meaning of that ? Is that our River Chateauguay ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, this is to provide for the enlargement of the St. John river.

Mr. BROWN. The St. John reaches from the River St. Lawrence to the River Chateauguay.

Mr. BERGERON. I never heard this part called the River Chateauguay before. You were working there last year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, this is the same vote.

Rivière du Loup (Fraserville)—harbour improvements, $20,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is being done by contract.

Mr. BERGERON. I know that a wharf was built there not long ago.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to make provision in accordance with the estimate submitted by the chief engineer for the construction of a pier parallel to that now in existence at Rivière du Loup and at a distance of some 800 feet to the north-westward therefrom, the object being to form, by dredging, a spacious protected basin or artificial harbour, with a ruling depth of from 10 to 20 feet at extreme low water, spring tides. This is the same thing as in the case of Rimouski.

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) Mr. Chiarman, upon this vote for the harbour improvements at Rivière du Loup, I would like to call the attention of the minister to the fact that we are always keeping in mind the scheme of enlarging the harbour, which has been submitted to the government two years ago. The plans and specifications are ready, and I would like to know if it is the intention of the government to begin that work at an early date ?

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) There is nothing definitely settled upon that point, that is to say, as to inviting tenders. As my hon. friend is aware, that work will require a considerable amount of money ; the cost will exceed $200,000.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) What is the nature of the work projected ?

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) The idea would be to build a new pier or embankment parallel to the one already existing, so as to make between these two piers a basin into which large vessels and trans-Atlantic steamers could take their cargoes from these piers.

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) The exports of lumber from Rivière du Loup are presently 40,000,000 feet per year. Unfortunately, the oceanic steamers are unable to come near the present pier, which is used by the boats of the Richelieu Navigation Company, and they are obliged to lay at anchor. Should this new pier be constructed, there would be a depth of 23 feet at low water, and the steamers could then easily get into the basin. As soon as these facilities are afforded, over 1,000,000 feet of lumber may be easily exported from Rivière du Loup every year.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) Where will that pier be constructed ?

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) At a distance of about 800 feet from the one now existing at Pointe des Sauvages.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) On which side ?

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) The intention would be to build a pier 800 feet long further below the existing wharf, so as to create a basin.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) On the river itself ?

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) Yes ; almost opposite Hotel Bellevue.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) This new pier would then face the road to Fraserville ?

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) No ; that road is on the hill. The new pier would be at a distance of 800 feet from the one now existing. It would be the second wall of the basin.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) Has this matter not been talked over two years ago ?

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) Yes ; and nothing has been done yet.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) I would like to know if plans are really made at the present time for this work ? Has any land been bought ?

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Yes ; from Mrs. Dansereau.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) What is the area of the land bought ?

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) I think it is about 70,000 feet from the road down to the river.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) What is the price paid for it ?

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) $9,000.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) Was it valuated ?

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Yes ; by three valuators.

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) The valuation has been approved by the Deputy Minister of Public Works.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) This work will cost over $200,000 ?

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) That is the estimate. You must not forget that it will be the finest seaport below Quebec.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) First you asked for an appropriation of $20,000, did you not ?

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) We asked at first a vote of $32,000, upon which we have expended $12,000.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) I suppose these $12,000 include the price of the land, $9,000, and the legal expenses connected therewith for notaries and lawyers ?

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Yes; the price of the land and the incidental expenses, costs of survey, &c. The $20,000 we ask this year is a revote. If we use these $20,000 it will make a total of $32,000.

Rivière du Loup (en haut)—dredging and improvements at mouth, $15,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. By contract with Mr. Randolph McDonald.

Mr. BERGERON. We had an amount of money voted the other day for that in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BRODEUR. It was for work done in the current fiscal year.

Mr. BERGERON. How much is that?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember the amount but I suppose it must have been $2,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, more than that. How much money has been spent altogether?

Mr. BRODEUR. So far there has been expended $21,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Now you are asking for $35,000 more.

Mr. BRODEUR. We are asking for $15,000 more.

Rivière du Lievre—reconstruction of dam at Little Rapids, $35,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote is called for by the chief engineer to reconstruct works built in 1887 and 1890, in connection with the dam swept away by the destructive land slide, October, 1903.

Mr. BERGERON. How much has been spent to date on account of this work?

Mr. BRODEUR. We spent $20,000 last year; there were $3,800 in the supplementary estimates, and there are $35,000 more to complete the work.

Mr. BERGERON. That is a large amount of money.

Mr. BRODEUR. There was a lot of damage done, and I think the money was well spent.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the work done by contract?

Mr. BRODEUR. It cannot be done by contract, because the department cannot ascertain the nature of the work to make specifications. We expect to complete it next year.

Rivière Maskinongé—dredging, $6,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. The contract is awarded to Davis & Sons, Ottawa, at 15 cents.

Rivière Ouelle—pier, repairs, &c., $5,600.

Mr. BERGERON. We had better stop here now; we have done a very good day's work.

Mr. BRODEUR. Could we not finish the Quebec items?

Mr. BERGERON. Personally, I have no objection, but some of our friends have gone away with the understanding we would stop here. We have done a pretty good day's work.

Mr. BUREAU. Let us take the items for the Rivière St. Maurice.

Rivière St. Maurice—channel between Grande Piles and La Tuque, $12,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What is this expenditure for?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is work that was done by the government dredge. We have a dredge on the Rivière St. Maurice, and this vote is for her maintenance and the payment of wages.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that dredge kept there all the time?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Since when?

Mr. BUREAU. The dredge has been there for several years. This is to improve that part of the St. Maurice river which is navigable for 80 miles, between La Tuque and Grande Piles. There are sandbars which form at different places, and the only way to remove them, in order to enable the logs to come down and the boats to get through and allow the lumbermen to get in their supplies, is by dredging. There is another item in the estimates for the building of a dam, and when this dam is built, it will raise the water and do away with the necessity for the dredging in that part of the St. Maurice river.

Mr. BERGERON. The work at Nicolet and Chateauguay seems to be similar to this. I am not criticising this vote, but I think it would be better to do some permanent work there than to be constantly spending money in dredging, which has to be repeated year after year.

Mr. BUREAU. The other item for the dam will do away with the necessity for this.

Mr. AMES. What depth of water do you get in the St. Maurice river between Grande Piles and La Tuque?

Mr. BUREAU. Five or six feet at the lowest water.

River St. Maurice—dam at Grande Piles, $19,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote will provide for the construction of a dam 940 feet long at the head of the Grande Piles falls, with the object of increasing the boom area in order to afford accommodation for the continually increasing cut of logs on the St. Maurice river and its tributaries.

Mr. BERGERON. Why was this work not commenced last year ?

Mr. BUREAU. They have been taking soundings which is very difficult work at that particular spot, and it took considerable time before a decision could be arrived at as to what kind of a dam would be built. We have the report of the engineers, and soundings have been made in different places during the last two years. This year plans are ready and have been submitted to the department.

Mr. BERGERON. How much will it cost ?

Mr. BUREAU. I believe the estimate is $50,000 or $60,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Will this dam do away with the necessity of constantly dredging the river between Grande Piles and La Tuque ?

Mr. BUREAU. The object of the dam is threefold. In the first place, it will back up the waters for eighteen miles and make the river navigable, in the second place, it will afford accommodation for storing the logs, and I may say that within a few years the capacity of the St. Maurice river has increased from one-half million pieces to six million pieces this year. They have now no place in the river to store these logs, and the further back they have to go in order to get the logs the longer it takes to get them down to the mills. If there is no storage for these logs in the river, then the result will be that the cut of this year could not be got out until next year. Proper storage for the logs would more than double the producing capacity of the St. Maurice river. In the third place, below Grande Piles the water is sometimes too low in summer for the drive, and the mills have to suspend work. The river is shallow and full of rocks in that place. This dam will raise the water and facilitate the driving of the logs. It will also do away with the necessity for dredging, it will increase the capacity of the St. Maurice river and facilitate the driving of logs.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are the lumbermen interested in this?

Mr. BUREAU. There are quite a number of lumber concerns on the river. I cannot tell you all from memory. There is the St. Maurice Lumber Company, the Gres Falls Lumber Company, Alexander Baptist, the Burrill Lumber Company, the Union Bag and Paper Company, the Laurentide Paper Company, the Belgo-Canadian Pulp and Paper Company, the Burgess Sulphite Fibre Company.

Mr. MONK. Do I understand this is to cost $60,000?

Mr. BUREAU. I think it will cost more than that.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me that we are spending this $70,000 to help the lumber companies.

Mr. BUREAU. They are paying for it.

Mr. BERGERON. In what way ?

Mr. BUREAU. In boom and slide dues.

Mr. MONK. We would get that revenue anyway from them.

Mr. BUREAU. I do not think so.

Mr. MONK. I have no doubt that these great lumbermen contribute in a variety of ways to the national revenue; I contribute myself, we all contribute. But, the question is whether it would be proper for the government to contribute to this work, which is for the benefit of private property. It is admitted it will cost $70,000. My hon. friend said it would improve the navigation to the extent of eighteen miles at that point, but navigation there extends over ninety miles. We should certainly obtain some assistance from the lumber company.

Mr. BRODEUR. I thought my hon. friend wanted everything free?

Mr. MONK. I never urged that. What I said is that a lot of these expenses should be cut down and the money spent on perfecting our transportation system. It is unfair, when we require to spend so much on that system, that we should sacrifice nearly $100,000 to advance private interests.

Mr. BUREAU. Every log that goes down to the St. Lawrence contributes to the revenue of the government. We had eighty steamers last season which came to Three Rivers to load deals manufactured at our mills, and should this dam be built double this number of steamers could take their cargoes of deals at Three Rivers, but the hon. gentleman thinks they should go to Montreal. He says that this ought to be paid by the lumbermen. Not at all, every log that comes through the slides and is stored on the St. Maurice river, is an addition to the revenue of the country. The lumbermen have agreed that if the cost of this dam is more than represented by the saving in dredging and the increase of revenue, from the greater output, they will contribute.

Mr. MONK. I expressed no such desire as to bring this trade to Montreal, but I do pretend that the money would be expended to much better purpose in improving our transportation system. This expenditure is for the benefit of a lumber company, and when it comes to building a dam which will cost $100,000 and afterwards have to be maintained by the government——

Mr. BRODEUR. We will be getting a revenue.

Mr. MONK. Yes, but we are spending largely already in the interest of that locality. That the lumbermen should contribute to this work made in their interest is only fair.

Mr. BRODEUR. When the hon. gentleman speaks of private interests he should bear in mind that there are very large industries in that section of the country which have become developed to a wonderful extent during the last ten years.

Mr. MONK. I understood that this expenditure was for the purpose of facilitating the bringing down of logs.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, the erection of that dam would have the effect of increasing the lumber industry in that vicinity. To-day the situation is not absolutely favourable to the driving of logs in that section of the country. The water is rather shut off and at some seasons of the year it is difficult to drive the logs. It is expected that by the construction of this work, the driving of the logs, will become a certainty and can be made at all seasons of the year and that consequently an increased business will be done in that section of the country. This dam is also going to raise the level of the water in that section. To-day we have to spend $12,000 a year for dredging there. We expect by the construction of this dam that this work will not be necessary. It is a very good piece of work. Besides that my hon. friend says it is going to benefit a private interest. He calls the millions of money invested in those works private interest. Besides that we draw a revenue which is going to increase from year to year. Last year and the year previous we got $29,000.

Mr. MONK. That is less than we expended for ordinary yearly charges and repairs.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is one view of the case where we get some revenue out of the expenditures, and I do not know why my hon. friend should object to expenditures being made in that section of the country when in other places large sums of money are being expended without any revenue at all to the country.

Mr. AMES. There are two issues involved. The first one comes from the fact that we are apparently creating a precedent that at some future date may be dangerous. The conditions of high and low water are the same as exist in all rivers where lumbering is carried on. You find the same difficulty in the St. John river where there is the greatest difficulty in getting logs which are cut in one winter down to St. John to saw them the same year. If you come to the rescue of these lumber people on the St. Maurice, will you not have similar demands from the lumbermen on all of the other important lumbering rivers? They will ask to be enabled to carry on their industry with similarly favourable conditions to those on the St. Maurice.

Mr. BUREAU. Does my hon. friend know that there are only three rivers under the control of the government; the others are all in the hands of private corporations? The River St. John is not under government control.

Mr. AMES. The government have control over the River St. John. You will find that we will be asked to vote sums for other rivers besides this. The minister speaks of the revenue to be derived. There is nothing in that argument as this will simply enable that revenue to be derived more quickly; for the lumbermen must pay the dues sooner or later on every log cut on the head waters of the St. Maurice.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend knows there are over 60 miles of navigation in this district on the river and I suppose there can be no objection to the general policy of the government in seeing that the proper dredging is made in that section of the river. It costs us to-day more than $12,000 to do that dredging and it is thought that by this dam that will be avoided. This dam will cost us $100,000 and at 4 per cent that is $4,000 a year, which is a great saving.

Mr. AMES. The minister has anticipated what I had intended to say in that particular connection. It does not seem to me that the dredging in the stretch above Grande Piles will be discontinued, and therefore that item of $12,000 will not be expended.

Dredging eastern channel, $15,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is under contract to Mr. Poupore at 12½ cents.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the standard for that price?

Mr. BUREAU. In this case they have to carry the dirt three miles which adds to the expense.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. BRODEUR moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. What business is to be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. BRODEUR. I believe that the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) stated this afternoon that we would take up the Intercolonial discussion to-morrow.

Mr. BERGERON. A statement will be made by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Emmerson)?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. And we hope to go into Committee of Supply taking up the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 13, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

EMPLOYMENT OF LONDON REGULARS AT NIAGARA.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Minister of Militia whether or not any orders were sent to the men who were mentioned yesterday ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Which would permit them to arrive at London in time to vote to-day ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall read what took place. I sent for the Adjutant General as promised, and immediately after the conclusion of the debate yesterday this telegram was sent :

General Otter,
Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario.

If you can spare the services of non-commissioned officers sent from London, and any of them wish to vote, you will return such to London at once with orders to report again at Niagara on Wednesday.

(Sgd.) ADJUTANT GENERAL.

This morning the Adjutant General received the following reply :

Niagara-on-the-Lake, 13th June, 1905.

Adjutant General, Ottawa.

Non-commissioned officers from London have been given opportunity to return to London for purpose of voting, but do not desire to avail themselves of such.

(Sgd.) BRIGADIER GENERAL OTTER.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The telegram I received on the subject was that the men received permission, but too late to make London in time to vote.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They had plenty of time ; I can assure my hon. friend there were two trains available after the telegram was received.

INSTRUCTIONS TO RETURNING OFFICERS IN BY-ELECTIONS.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). I wish to draw the attention of the government to what I believe is a serious irregularity in connection with the by-elections which are being carried on in North Oxford and London. The government is aware that clause 65 of the Dominion Elections Act reads as follows :

An elector if required by the deputy returning officer, the poll clerk, one of the candidates, or an agent of a candidate or by any elector present shall, before receiving his ballot paper, take such oath of qualification as by the law of the province he may in the like case at a provincial election be required to take.

That is part of clause 65. Then when we come to the form of the oath that has been sent out to the deputy returning officers by the returning officer at Woodstock, we find that it does not include the clauses in the Ontario Elections Act or the Dominion Elections Act with reference to bribery. Clauses 8 and 9 of form 18 in the schedule to the Elections Act of the province of Ontario are not included ; all the other clauses with reference to the bribery of voters are included. These clauses read as follows :

8. That you have not received anything, nor has anything been promised you either directly or indirectly, either to induce you to vote at this election or for loss of time, travelling expenses, hire of team, or any other service connected therewith, and (9) that you have not directly or indirectly paid or promised anything to any person either to induce him to vote or to refrain from voting at this elecion.

These clauses have not been placed in the form which has been sent out by this Dominion government. We received notice of this yesterday at Woodstock, and at 2 o'clock we interviewed the returning officer, Sheriff Brady, of Woodstock. I called his attention to the form that he was sending out, a copy of which I received from him and have in my hand, and called his attention to these clauses not being placed in that form. He at once telephoned to Ottawa to the Secretary of State, and after holding considerable consultation with the Secretary of State, he came to the conclusion that the answer was not satisfactory. He then sent a telegram to the office of the Secretary of State, and in the afternoon received a reply stating that the government would do nothing in the matter. I believe that this is a very serious position for any government to be placed in, to send out forms such as I have in my hand, from which the bribery clauses have been entirely omitted.

And I might say further that I urged the returning officer to insist on having these clauses in the form sent to the deputy returning officers throughout the country. He refused to do it, stating that the form the government sent him was the one that would be used and that he had already sent them out to the deputy returning officers. And I certainly believe that this is a matter of vital importance not only to the people in the ridings in which elections are being held to-day, but to the whole country. I understand that in the last Dominion election these were the forms used in many different parts of the country. I certainly believe that if this is the manner in which the people of the province are to be treated, if only part of the oath is to be placed in the form to be used, I cannot help but see that it is a scheme, on the part of the government, might I say, to take advantage of the honest electors and the honest people of this country ?

I move, Mr. Speaker, that this House do now adjourn.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, I must inform the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) and the House that this is the first information I have received of anything of the kind suggested by him in his remarks. The Secretary of State has not communicated with me on the subject. Had the hon. gentleman given me notice of his intention to bring the matter forward, I would have informed myself with regard to it. He says—or rather, he insinuates—that there has been a conspiracy on the part of the government to deprive the electors of their rights. I must tell the hon. gentleman that this language is absolutely uncalled for and unwarranted—there has been no conspiracy of the kind. I never heard of the matter until this moment. I can hardly be expected, under the circumstances, to give the hon. gentleman information as to the papers sent by the Secretary of State to the returning officers. But I am sure that nothing unusual has been done, but that the regular course has been followed. Had I been informed by the hon. gentleman that he intended to make such a statement as he has made, I would have made it my duty to call upon the Secretary of State to ascertain what had actually been done. But I am sure that nothing has been done by the Secretary of State that is not according to the law, and I hasten to repel the insinuation of the hon. gentleman that in the election there has been any difference in the form sent out in one county from that sent out in others. All the forms were the same; either all were right or all were wrong. It is not fair to the government, it would not be fair to anybody, that such grave insinuations should be made when the hon. gentleman who makes them had the opportunity at once to call the attention of the government to the matter and receive an explanation. It is not possible now for me to give any answer to the hon. gentleman except to say that my old colleague, my venerable colleague, the Secretary of State is incapable of doing such a thing as has been insinuated against him. Hon. Mr. Scott is an old man, a respectable man if there is one in the country, a man now approaching fourscore years. It is not fair to him to insinuate against him that in his old age he would be guilty of such an act as has been suggested. It is probably like the telegram of Mr. Cousins of Medicine Hat ;—when we have the full information before us, it will probably be found another roorback.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont). The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) does not seem to feel indignation that the plain provisions of the statute have been violated, not only in the elections now going on, but in the general elections of November last. But, that a matter of this kind should be mentioned even in what seemed to me, the moderate terms used by my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) seemed to excite the right hon. gentleman to grave and indignant rebuke. I should have thought that there might be some room for indignation in the mind of my right hon. friend that the statute had been violated, that an act had been committed, which, if committed wilfully, I suppose would render some one liable to indictment under the common laws of England for malfeasance in office. I am not saying that it was done wilfully. But I have heard from a number of my friends on this side that exactly the same thing was perpetrated in the last general election, and with somewhat extraordinary results. I am told that in one riding the oath was taken in the mutilated form for a time, but after the deputy returning officer had been informed that he was to modify the oath sent out by the administration of which the right hon. gentleman is the head, the result was that it was not taken in that form by certain electors. I have before me, handed to me by my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), the form of oath which was sent out by this government. I do not care whether the Secretary of State sent it out or what member of the government did so. My right hon. friend is responsible for sending it out, for he is the head of the administration ; and every gentleman who sits on those treasury benches is responsible for this violation of the statute, which I am assuming is not wilful, but which certainly merits investigation and discussion in this parliament and in this country.

Now, what are the circumstances ? By section 65 of the Dominion Elections Act, the oath which is used in the province must be used in Dominion elections. These provisions of the statute are quite distinct, and I will not trouble the House by reading it, for my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) drafted these provisions, and no doubt, has them in mind as well as the debate that took place when this statute was enacted by this parliament. We are referred, therefore, to the oath in use in Ontario, in order to ascertain the proper form of oath to be submitted to electors in these by-elections, for the form of oath in use in the province must be used in Dominion elections with certain modifications which are not material for this purpose.

In Ontario we find this ' Form 16 ' which I exhibit to the House and which bears this title : ' Ontario Form 16. Form of Oath in ordinary cases to be administered at an election to a voter by virtue of manhood suffrage, made applicable to Dominion elections.' Now we come down to the Ontario statute, and we ascertain whether or not this form corresponds with that known as 'Form 16' in that statute. Perhaps in order to make the matter perfectly plain I had better read the whole document:

Ontario form 16. Form of oath in ordinary cases to be administered at an election to a voter by virtue of manhood suffrage made applicable to Dominion elections.

Ontario Act, section 98. Dominion Elections Act, 1900, sections 21 and 65:

1. You swear (1) that you are the person named or intended to be named by the name of in the list of voters now shown to you in the poll book.

2. That you are a British subject by birth or naturalization.

3. That you have resided within this province for nine months before the (2) day of , being the day fixed by the statute or by by-law authorized by statute for beginning to make the assessment roll in which you were entitled to be entered as a person qualified to vote.

4. That you were at the date aforesaid in good faith a resident of and domiciled in the municipality in the list of which you were entered; that you have resided in this electoral district continuously from the said date (3), and that you are now actually residing and domiciled therein.

Then follow the alternative forms:

(3) That you have resided within this province for twelve months before the (2) day of , being the day up to which complaint could be made to the county judge under the Ontario Voters' Lists Act to insert the name of any person in the list.

(4) That you were at the time aforesaid in good faith a resident of and domiciled in the municipality in the list of which you were entered; that you have resided in this electoral district continuously from the said date (3), and that you are actually residing and domiciled therein.

(5) That you are entitled to vote at this election and in this municipality.

(6) That you are of the full age of 21 years.

(7) That you have not voted before at this election, either at this or any other polling place.

So help you God.

Now, that is the end of the form and up to the words 'so help me God' it corresponds exactly with the form in the Ontario statute, but the Ontario statute which is made applicable by the enactment of this parliament contains two further clauses which I will now read and which are absolutely absent from the form which was sent out not only during the general elections, as I said, but during these two elections that are now proceeding. These clauses are as follows:

(8) That you have not received anything, nor has anything been promised you, either directly or indirectly, either to induce you to vote at this election, or for loss of time, travelling expenses, hire of team, or any other service connected therewith.

(9) And that you have not directly or indirectly, paid or promised anything to any person, either to induce him to vote or to refrain from voting at this election.

So help you God.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

I think this is a subject which has been before the House one way or another during the present session, because my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) moved for all these forms, and if I am not mistaken some reference was made to this circumstance either by him or by some other hon. gentleman. At all events my hon. friend from Hamilton brought it to the attention of the House by moving for the forms. I think that when two of the most important clauses of the oath are omitted from a document sent out to the returning officers throughout this country only a few days ago, when these two clauses are omitted from a document prepared by this government and for which document my right hon. friend the leader of the government is as much responsible as any one of his colleagues, we require something more than a mere airy rebuke to my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) for mentioning this matter. Does not my right hon. friend think that when a returning officer, at the instance of my hon. friend from Lambton, brings the matter, both by telephone and telegraph, to the attention of this government on the day before the election, some other answer should be given to that returning officer than that this is a matter in which the government cannot interfere and in which nothing will be done. Conservatives not only in these elections, but during the general elections in November last were compelled to go to the trouble themselves, as far as possible, of bringing the provisions of the law to the attention of the deputy returning officers. I am bound to suppose, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that this is a mere oversight, but it is a most remarkable oversight, as I think my right hon. friend himself will admit. For what possible reason, under what possible misapprehension could a department of this government, having a trained and competent staff, venture to prepare a document of that kind leaving out two clauses, the omission of which may be made to answer a certain purpose which would not be a very creditable purpose, I am sure. Under what circumstances could this have arisen? Have the government been in ignorance during the last four or five months of the character of the document which they sent out during the last general election, a document which was used, as I understand it, not only in the province of Ontario, but in the province of Quebec as my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) informs me? It seems to me a most remarkable thing, if the circumstance is as stated by my hon. friend from Beauharnois, that the bribery clauses of the Ontario oath should not only have been omitted, but that the bribery clauses of the oath according to the provincial laws of Quebec should also have been omitted from the form sent into that province. You might understand how one mistake might be made in regard to a particular province, in regard to the province of Ontario, but will my right hon. friend or any member of his government inform me how it should happen that the bribery clauses of the oath in other provinces have been omitted ? I must confess I cannot understand it for the present and I venture to hope that my right hon. friend will, if he is not able to do so to-day, on some future occasion, give to the House some further explanation than that which he has vouchsafed this afternoon.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, in order to discuss this question intelligently and in such a way as to be of use to the House it seems to me that it would have been proper to have placed those who are standing in defence of the government in possession of the facts. I must confess that I had not heard of this matter until it was mentioned a moment ago by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong). Accidentally I happened to see my hon. friend the Secretary of State in the lobby. I put a question to him as to the forms used in the elections in the county of Oxford and he told me that they are the forms which have been used during the last two general elections.

Mr. BARKER. They are not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have the form here which was sent out in the general elections of 1900 and it includes this clause —in the province of Ontario, at least.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I make the statement on the authority of the Secretary of State, with whom I was speaking within the last two minutes. Of course, I am not in a position to verify the accuracy of the statement made by my hon. friend opposite at this moment, because I have not the forms before me. It seems to me that there is only one way to dispose of a matter of this sort. This is a most serious charge ; it is a most important matter and it should be investigated. Now, we have a Committee on Privileges and Elections which has been formed especially for the purpose of looking into matters of this sort and if we had this matter referred to that committee we could thoroughly investigate it, get at the facts, speak from the book and be in a position to make statements and not insinuations. I would welcome a reference of this matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I think the sooner we have it the better. I am speaking with the consent of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister when I say that we would welcome an investigation at any time the matter is brought before that committee.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not a matter of insinuation. Why does my hon. friend the Minister of Justice say that it is ? Here are the two documents.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have not seen them.

Mr. FOSTER. I will let my hon. friend see them in a moment. But had he not better keep his assertion that they are insinuations only when they appear in print over the government's own signature until he has seen them ? Why should he make that assertion before he has the papers before him ? The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) nearly went into hysterics at the wrong that had been done to his venerable and gray haired colleague. If that colleague had the facts of this matter first brought to his attention by telephone, if he were not careful enough or intelligent enough to give an answer, and if given he was appealed to by telegram he gave the decision that it was all right and that the government would not interfere, can the right hon. leader of the government or any member of the government say that they are entirely without blame in this regard and that it was not brought to their attention ? To whose attention should the matter be brought if not to that of the Secretary of State ? What is the Secretary of State there for if he is not there to make wrong things right ? If he does not know enough to do it he should consult with his colleagues and with the Prime Minister and see that it is done right. But, he neither did it himself nor consulted with his colleagues, it seems. With an obstinacy that is characteristic of him he said that nothing would be done, that it was all right. Did he consult the right hon. leader of the government in the matter ? If he did not then he took a great deal of responsibility upon himself and he took a responsibility which the right hon. gentleman cannot disengage himself from but must share equally with him.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the matter with hon. gentlemen opposite? Something seems to have struck the risible nerve of my hon. friend there and he cannot contain himself. In 1900, the government of which my right hon. friend is head, and of which the present Minister of Justice was the Minister of Justice then, made this up and in that form which purported to be form 16 of the Ontario Act they gave an exact rescript of that form in which appeared these two sections which were omitted from the next form :

(8) That you have not received anything, nor has anything been promised you, either directly or indirectly in order to induce you to vote at this election or for loss of time, travelling expenses, hire of teams or any other service connected therewith.

(9) And that you have not directly or indirectly paid or promised anything to any person in order to induce him to vote or refrain from voting at the election.

That was the form issued by the government in the year 1900, and under the Secretary of State who is in office to-day. Why the change? Now, when we come to the by-election for 1905—I am not speaking of the general elections now for I have not the form before me—what do you find? There is the same assertion at the top that this is No. 16 of the Ontario Act oath to be administered, and a lie at the bottom of it. Who was it that authorized the lie? Who was it that deceived the people of this country and every deputy returning officer and every voter, by saying to him as he came to vote: this is the oath that the Ontario statute provides for; this is all you need take so far as the Ontario law is concerned; and then excise two principal clauses from that oath in so far as bribery and corruption are concerned. Who did it? It was not my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden); it was not even my bold and audacious friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) so lacking in courtesy as to dare to bring up at this hour in parliament a thing of such a shameless and glaring kind as this. A conspiracy, said my right hon. friend. Who charges a conspiracy? He may talk conspiracy if he likes, but he has got to acknowledge utter and crass neglect or something worse on the part of the department which once knew what was right and did it, and which next election knew what was right and did wrong. That is just as bad as conspiracy. I say that whether there was design or not, there is the plain fact: there are the two instructions, one of 1900 and one of 1905; there is the statute of Ontario which has the oath out of which the principal parts have been excised by the Secretary of State of the government of which my right hon. friend is the head and of which the Minister of Justice is now and was then the Minister of Justice. In the general elections last fall, when hon. gentlemen opposite were using every kind of influence they could; when they exercised their immense influence to draw sums of money from contributors right and left and used it with the most lavish hand that was ever known in this Dominion of Canada, there was a reason why the bribery oath should be left out. To-day there may be the same reason why the bribery oath should be left out. It is left out. It is not our fault it is left out. It was this government that left it out knowing what they should have put in, and doing what they should have done in 1900, but neglecting to do it to-day.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). For a number of years I have taken a very great interest in the election law. On a former occasion I introduced a Bill with the object of amending the Election Act, and as I thought improving that law, and I am happy to say that the suggestions I made then have since been embodied in the statute. This matter which at present is engaging the attention of the House was discussed by many of the newspapers in the province of Ontario on account of what they called the mutilated oath that was used in the Dominion elections. In order to have the subject brought before parliament the hon. gentleman from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) moved on the 15th of February that all the forms used in the last Dominion election be laid on the table. They were laid on the table of the House, and I took pains to verify the mutilated oath in these papers. The form of oath used in 1900 contained the anti-bribery clauses but at the last general election I was surprised to learn that clauses 8 and 9 were omitted from that oath. I thought it proper to prepare a form of oath and placed it in the hands of the scrutineers in my constituency so that if an elector should be sworn the proper oath should be administered. In some cases the deputy returning officer refused to administer any other oath than that forwarded to him by the government. In one instance, the returning officer persisted in having the oath administered in part, but at the expiration of an hour he concluded to administer the oath the scrutineer handed to him, and he did so for the balance of the day. The Minister of Justice is very careful that we should speak by the book and I shall do so. On the 15th of February, the hon. member for Hamilton moved, for these papers and during the discussion on the Autonomy Bill I informed the Minister of Justice that I intended to bring up a matter in connection with his department. This very matter is the matter I then referred to. I did not expect it would be brought up to-day, but it would have been brought up before this were it not for the discussion on the Autonomy Bill. In order that I may do no injustice to the government, I shall state the absolute facts of the case as they are and I am prepared to stand by these facts as a member of this House. I have committed them to writing and I now give this statement to the House:

For the past thirty years or more, in fact ever since the enactment of anti-bribery legislation, the ordinary form of election oath has always included what may be described as the standard anti-bribery clauses. The substance of these clauses is the sworn statement that the voter has not been bribed and that he has not bribed any one else. Every ordinary oath of qualification used in Ontario, not only in Dominion elections but in provincial and municipal elections as well, during all these years contained these clauses, till the last election when the form of oath printed and distributed for use by the Dominion officials for the first time, and without any change of law or circumstances whatever to justify it, unexpectedly and unaccountably left them out. It is well known that voters are often stopped from voting by being confronted with the anti-bribery clauses, and scrutineers during all those years had only to ask for the administration of the oath and every one understood that that oath included anti-bribery clauses.

Why then were these clauses that had always heretofore been included, and which Conservative scrutineers and workers expected would still be included, quietly left out in 1904? Such a change, even if proper, should not have been made without special attention being called to it. But no notice whatever was given of it. Not even in the instructions to the returning officers or their deputies was there the slightest reference to it.

Any one familiar with the practical workings of matters at an election booth will understand how this omission of the bribery clauses would operate. It must be remembered that the election oath is not something that every voter has to take. No ordinary voter has to take the oath unless one of the scrutineers demands that he shall take it. The ordinary arrangements at a polling place are that the scrutineers are given a list of voters with certain names marked to be sworn. The scrutineer may or may not know the circumstances or reason why it is thought proper to swear a particular voter. His list is marked by the chairman or committee in charge of the division, usually on private and confidential information. The scrutineer depends on his marked list, and his duties are to watch the proceedings at the poll and swear the persons marked to be sworn. The instructions to the scrutineer always are to insist on the whole oath being put in each case so as to cover all grounds of objection, including bribery. The instructions to Conservative scrutineers last time were the same as usual, no one for a moment suspecting that the bribery clauses would not be included as they had always been in the ordinary form of oath. The government officials and deputy returning officers who had received the forms were the only persons that had a chance to know that these clauses were left out. Whether they discovered the fact before the election or not is a question. Some of them no doubt did but at any rate they kept it a secret from their political opponents. Unfortunately things have reached such a pass in our part of the country at least that the returning officers, deputies and clerks are, with a few exceptions, as much or almost as much partisans as the Liberal scrutineers. In the majority of cases, as things go now-a-days, the person appointed as deputy returning officer in a polling division is one of the most active Liberal workers of the division, often the chairman and nearly always a member of the Liberal committee of workers.

This was the state of affairs on the morning of last 3rd of November when the poll opened. What would happen? A voter would come in whom the Conservative scrutineer had instructions to swear. The scrutineer would ask to have him sworn, supposing as he and all the Conservative workers did that the ordinary oath contained the bribery clauses. The oath would be administered without the bribery clauses. In some cases perhaps no one would notice the omission, every one taking it for granted that the official oath was all right and in the usual form. If the Liberal deputy did notice it there would be slim chances indeed that he would tell the Conservative scrutineer of it. If the Conservative scrutineer noticed it he might perhaps ask to look at the official form to see that it was read correctly, and when he was shown that it had been, unless he was an expert in election law, there was small chance of his having anything more to say. The device of administering two oaths in order to catch the anti-bribery clauses was something he had never before heard of. There is often too a repugnance on the part of scrutineers especially in country places to asking directly or specifically to have the bribery clauses administered to one of his neighbours. If he did speak of the bribery clauses he would be told by the deputy, as I am informed was actually done in a number of cases in Elgin, that that was the oath and all the oath that was supplied. In short the effect of the conduct of the government officials would be that no voter would have to swear either that he had not been bribed or that he had not bribed any one else unless the surreptitious omission of the bribery clauses was discovered and unless the means of remedying it were known to and insisted on by the scrutineer. As a matter of fact there were but very few cases in the province where the bribery clauses were administered.

And let me say in passing that I have inquired from other members from the province of Ontario on this side of the House, and I find that the same thing existed in their parts of the province; and I have no doubt since I examined the official documents laid on the table of the House, that the same form was used all over the province.

As I have said, even if the omission of these clauses from the oath was justified it should not have been done without attention being called to the change. Notice should have been given not only to the officials and deputies but also to the public or at any rate to the candidates on both sides. But, as I have before stated, not a word was said about it. Not even the deputies were notified of it. A perusal of the instructions to the returning officers will show that they were word for word the same in 1904 when the clauses were left out as they were in 1900 when they were in. I have them both here.

But there was no just cause whatever for leaving these anti-bribery clauses out. They were left in in 1900 and the sections of the Act prescribing the oaths (sections 21 and 65) were precisely the same in 1900 as in 1904. Section 65 says 'that an elector if required shall take such oath of qualification as by the law of the province he may in the like case at a provincial election be required to take, such changes having been made in the form of oath as are necessary to make it applicable to the election being held.' We have then to go to the Ontario Election Act (I have it here) and we find that the form there prescribed (see section 98) in Form 16 in schedule 'A' to that Act. This is the oath of qualification required by the provincial law. It contains the anti-bribery clauses (numbers 8 and 9) as all such oaths for more than a quarter of a century back have always contained them. This form 16 then is the oath of qualification which the Dominion Election Act prescribes. Yes, it will be said, but some changes in it are authorized by the above quoted provision of section 65. That is right, but note carefully what changes. Such changes and such only as 'are necessary to make it applicable to the election being held.' What then are these changes? Just what were made in 1900 and not one iota more—the omission from the end of the first clause of the oath the words 'in the poll book,' because in the Dominion election the official list is not in the poll book, as it is in the provincial, but is a separate printed list. Not for one single instant can it be contended with the slightest show of reason that it was necessary to omit the anti-bribery clauses in order to make the provincial oath applicable to the Dominion election. These clauses are as strictly and as emphatically applicable as any other clause in the oath. The bribery aimed at by these clauses is forbidden by section 108 of the Dominion Act in the same terms as it is forbidden in the provincial Act. These omitted clauses word for word are in fact contained in Form 'R' of the Dominion Act, showing if further proof were needed that they are not repugnant but are absolutely applicable to the Dominion elections. Moreover the oath of qualification Form S in the old Dominion Act which the present provincial oath takes the place of contained these clauses in the same exact words. Neither in precedent nor in theory was there the slightest ground for leaving these anti-bribery clauses out. Why was it done?

But there is still another and perhaps a more serious aspect of the case yet to be pointed out, and that is that this altered form which was printed and sent forth by the government officials purports to be what it is not. I have here one of the emasculated forms that was actually sent forth and used by the officials. While it omits the anti-bribery clauses it is so headed as to lead one to believe that it contained them. It is headed Form 16. Form 16 is a well known form and well known to contain these anti-bribery clauses. What is sent forth as Form 16 is not the genuine Form 16 at all, but a false, mutilated and misleading form. Just look at it and compare it with the genuine form in the Ontario Election Act or with the form actually used by the government in 1900 (I have them both here) and see what a deception and a fraud it is. Its heading also states that it is the form of oath for use in ordinary cases and this leads to the supposition that it is the only and all the oath applicable to such cases. If it was intended merely to be supplemental to another oath, or another oath to it, why did it not state so on the face of it either in the heading or in a foot note?

From whatever point of view we regard it, this oath matter is utterly indefensible.

The foregoing is the position of the case in brief. It is an absolutely correct and unassailable presentation of the facts and circumstances of the matter. But some excuses are attempted.

It is said that Form 16 is not an oath of qualification, that only part of it, namely the part without the bribery clauses is what is meant in section 65 by 'oath of qualification.' There is nothing in such a contention. For thirty years and more all ordinary oaths of qualification used at elections contained these anti-bribery clauses. Form S and Form X in the old Act (which I have here) which are headed and called oaths of qualification contain these identical clauses. This very Form 16 of the Ontario Election Act, and the whole of it, is described and referred to in the Ontario Election Act itself as 'the oath of qualification.' (See section 94, subsection 5 of Ontario Election Act). It is mere twaddle to pretend that the whole of Form 16 is not what is referred to and intended in section 65 as the oath of qualification. And section 65 justifies no omissions from it whatever. Any changes necessary to make it applicable to Dominion Elections are authorized. That might mean that if the anti-bribery clauses were not properly or appropriately worded for Dominion Elections the wording might be changed, but in no wise could it mean that these clauses were to be wholly left out.

Again it is said that because anti-bribery clauses are contained in Form 'U,' and Form 'U' might be administered, therefore it was right to leave the bribery clauses out of Form 16—in other words that Form 'U' and Form 16 were merely supplemental to each other and that one was not intended to contain anything that the other contained.

Such a contention is altogether wrong, even apart from the fact that the mutilation of Form 16 would, even on such a ground, be a direct violation of the provisions of section 65. Form 'U' has a primary and direct purpose of its own namely to head off persons who are disfranchised by reason of having been found guilty of bribery or corrupt practices at some former election. Peruse section 7 of the Dominion Election Act, and the Act and sections referred to in section 7 and this will be abundantly clear.

Moreover the official who prepared the mutilated oath did not proceed on the ground that nothing must be duplicated in the two oaths. I want the right hon. gentleman to mark this. If he had he would have left out not only the bribery clauses (8 and 9) but also clause 7 (as to not having voted before) which, unlike the bribery clauses, is retained in the mutilated form though it is also in Form 'U.'

Excuse is also attempted for departure from the course that was followed in 1900 of leaving the bribery clauses in, by pointing out that there had been in 1900 a clerical error in the heading of Form 'U' which was corrected in 1901. That could in no view be any justification for the change, and if the state of the heading furnished any reason at all one way or the other, the condition it was left in in 1904 made it more necessary to have Form 16 complete in itself then than in 1900. For the erroneous heading was corrected before the elections of 1900, by official instructions from the Department of the Secretary of State, dated 12th October, 1900, directing the deputy returning officers to 'absolutely ignore' that erroneous heading as it was inserted by mistake. I have here this official instruction; it is pasted right to this Form 'U.' The heading as it now stands and as it stood in 1904 indicates that the oath Form 'U' is intended for a special class of persons and not for general or ordinary cases, while as it was in 1900 with the official instructions to ignore the heading altogether it might be inferred that it was for general and ordinary use. The fact also that a special instruction was issued in 1900 regarding it would specially draw attention to the fact that there was such an oath and that it was expected it would be used.

Never before was it necessary to administer any additional oath besides the ordinary one in order to catch a voter on bribery.

If the oath Form 'U' had even been printed and distributed like Form 16 it would have made things a little less objectionable.

If the law does not require the anti-bribery clauses to be inserted or rather left in Form 16, and if it was proper to send that mutilated oath forth without them, then there was a time (from 1898 to 1900) when no anti-bribery clauses could be administered to a voter at all. The present section 65 upon which the matter under discussion hangs is, so far as it relates to the oath in question, taken word for word from section 45, subsection 2 of the 1898 Act; and this was the only oath which could under the 1898 Act be administered to a voter. Can it be supposed that it ever was the intention that no voter should be sworn as to bribery?

Wholly unjustified, false, mutilated and misleading is the fitting characterization of the thing that was sent forth and used as the official form of oath at the last Dominion election.

I make this statement to the House, and it is a statement of the facts in connection with this mutilated form of oath. Why that was done, I cannot understand. There was no justification for it. There is no amendment to the Act which necessitated it; and whoever did it, did it with a purpose. Will my right hon. friend pretend to say that all the deputy returning officers throughout Canada, who were furnished the election documents which were laid on the table of this House, were sufficiently well posted in the Election Act of Canada to choose, when a scrutineer asked one of them to swear a voter, from the three separate oaths which one they should administer? Would any hon. gentleman pretend to say that?

Mr. GALLIHER. Pretend to say what.

Mr. INGRAM. That if, an elector going into his polling booth, the scrutineer of either party asking the returning officer to swear him, any deputy returning officer would be sufficiently well posted in the election law to take out of three different oaths make a complete oath to administer to the elector?

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not know that our deputy returning officers in British Columbia are any more intelligent than those in other parts of Canada; but I remember being in a polling booth, when the deputy returning officer asked the scrutineer: Which oath do you want administered—the qualification oath or the bribery oath?

Mr. INGRAM. Your election law in British Columbia is different from ours; but speaking for the province of Ontario, I have stated exactly what occurred, and I say there was no justification for amending the oath and making it any different from what it was in 1900. Then it was a correct oath, and any deputy returning officer administering it, would be administering the oath in full. I want to point out in addition that the first oath was a correct and a convenient form, why therefore should it have been mutilated and the bribery clauses struck out? There was no justification for that, nor was there any change in the election Act which required a change in the oath at all. That is where the government made a mistake, or an official of the government mutilated the oath which was required to be administered.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON. Like my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, I do not wish to imply that this was done in that particular case with design, but the circumstances are rather extraordinary and so is the coincidence; because, as my hon. friend has said, the very same thing was done during the last election in the province of Quebec. I had not examined the papers which were in the polling booth, when my attention was called to the matter in Valleyfield, where there is a very large vote. Let me read to the House the oath that was there given to the elector. This is the English form of the oath prescribed by section 143 of the Quebec Election Act, 1903, made applicable to Dominion elections pursuant to the provisions of the Dominion Elections Act, 1900, in that behalf. This is the oath :

You swear (or affirm, as the case may be), to answer the truth and nothing but the truth to the questions which will be put to you ; so help you God.

1. Are you the person meant or intended to be meant by the name entered as follows (name of the elector entered on the list) on the list of electors for this polling division ?

2. Are you a subject of His Majesty ?

3. Have you been naturalized in any other country or taken thereto the oath of allegiance?

4. Are you of the full age of twenty-one years ?

5. Have you voted before to-day at this election, for this electoral district, at this or any other polling station ?

6. Not being a proprietor and residing out of Canada for over a year, have you returned to this country with your family, at least one month before the election with the intention of remaining therein ?

That is the oath that was administered to the voters in the county of Beauharnois at the last general election.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The matter is absolutely new to me and I desire information. The hon. member says that this is the form of oath administered in the Beauharnois election. Was there not another oath against bribery ?

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all. When my attention was called to it—we know what is done during elections, we know how fidgety our friends are, and when they came to me and said : 'This is an extraordinary oath ; there is nothing at all in that, and we want to get the oath which should be given to the electors, 'I went to the poll and saw the deputy and asked him if he had not any other form of oath. He said : No. I said : That is nothing. He said : This is the oath I found among my papers, and it is the one I am going to administer. I asked for the Act, and although I had not the local Act in my pocket, I took the Dominion Elections Act and showed him clause 65. I have found that in my province the officials on election day are generally our most bitter opponents. I do not say they are dishonest, but they will not listen to anything, they pretend to stand by their duty, and when a man says : 'This is what I found in the box and I will not use anything else but that,' I cannot tell that man he is dishonest, although I know he is a bitter opponent of mine and has been working against me. I read clause 65 of the Act, which is as follows :

An elector, if required by the deputy returning officer, the poll clerk, one of the candidates, or an agent of a candidate or by any elector present shall, before receiving his ballot paper, take such oath of qualification as by the law of the province he may in the like case at a provincial election be required to take, such changes having been made in the form of oath as are necessary to make it applicable to the election being held, and shall also, if so required, take the oath in the form 'U.'

Now, what is the form of oath used ? It is very much a repetition of this for the first paragraphs, but this is what is essential, and I imagine that is why it was drawn in this form. This is the form :

That you have not received anything, that you do not expect anything, nor has anything been promised you directly or indircetly, to induce you to vote at this election, either for loss of time, travelling expenses, hire of team, or for any other service connected therewith.

That you have not, directly or indirectly, paid or promised anything to any person either to induce him to vote or to refrain from voting at this election.

That you are not otherwise disqualified from voting at this election.

So help you God.

I asked the deputy returning officer in the poll at which I was to add these words to the oath he was taking from the elector. There is not a man in this House who will say it was not the intention of the legislature that the two oaths should be given. The deputy returning officer refused to do so, although I showed him the law. He said: "Mr. Bergeron, I have nothing to do with that ; I have received instructions to put this oath." And he did not do it.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT. Was not the returning officer supplied with a copy of the Election Act in the box ?

Mr. BERGERON. I took the Dominion Electoral Act in the poll and showed it to him, but how could I force him to administer the oath ? The consequence was that in every poll in Valleyfield I could not get any other oath administered but this. I do not say it was done intentionally. I do not want to imply that the government have done that intentionally, but it is a most estraordinary thing that it should be done first in our province and now in the province of Ontario. Would it not be better, and avoid mistakes, if, since we are obliged by law to take the oath of the local Act and apply the federal Act to it, we should have a printed form of the local Act, the whole Act as it is in the local and in the Dominion Acts, and then there would be no mistake ? I only mention this matter, because we have been talking about it in connection with the other case. In my county I found in every poll that I could not obtain from the deputy returning officer what the law required. He had no instructions to that effect, and he would not comply with the law as passed by this parliament.

Mr. SAM. BARKER. The Minister of Justice has complained that this question is sprung upon him without reasonable notice. I wish to confirm what has been said already from this side, that there was no intention to spring this subject at all. It would not have been brought up for some days to come had it not been for the extraordinary conduct of the government in respect to the pending election in Oxford. I understand that a complaint was made in Woodstock about the form being used, and a telegram was sent to the government asking instructions, and I am told—the right hon. gentleman can tell me whether I am right or wrong—that the government's answer was to stand by the forms sent and no others. Under these circumstances, we on this side thought it our duty immediately to bring these questions up. I personally would have preferred to have the discussion later, because I have not papers here which I intended to use when this subject would come up; but as it is now, we may as well discuss the whole matter. It has been said by hon. gentlemen opposite that this is a mistake of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. I contend that it is nothing of the kind. These instructions are the instructions of the government issued by the Clerk of the Crown, but subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and the government is directly responsible for the instructions issued. Section 21 of the Dominion Elections Act provides this:

> Immediately after the issue of the writ of election the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall transmit to the returning officer a sufficient number of copies of voters' lists, if there are any, one copy of this Act, and of such instructions approved by the Governor in Council as are required to carry out the election according to the provisions of this Act.

Therefore, Sir, the instructions which we are discussing are not, strictly speaking, instructions of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, but instructions approved and adopted by the government. Same clause goes on:

> The instructions referred to in subsection 1 of this section contain forms of the oaths referred to in sections 65, 66 and 68.

The instructions shall contain the forms of the oaths in sections 65, 66 and 68. Let us see what section 65 says?

> The elector, if required by the deputy returning officer, the polling clerk, one of the candidates, or any agent of the candidates, or by any elector present shall, before receiving the ballot paper, take such oath of qualification as by the law of the province he may in the like case at a provincial election be required to take.

That form shall be part of the instructions. In November, 1904, or in the present by-elections, what form was given in connection with the provincial law? The statute does not say part of the provincial form, but the whole of the form.

> Take such oath of qualification as by the law of the province he may in a like case at a provincial election be required to take, such changes having been made in the form of oath as are necessary to make it applicable to the election being held.

Of course some of the words have to be changed; the provincial election had to be made the Dominion election, and so on.

> And shall also, if so required, take the oath in the form 'U.'

If so required. If not required to take the form 'U,' is he only to take part of the provincial oath. Surely, if the candidate or an elector did not call upon the form 'U' to be sworn to, the oath called for in section 65 was the whole provincial oath? To say that the provincial oath was to be supplemented by form 'U' is it seems to me, an absurd reading of that section. But if we take the Quebec form read by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) we will see the utter absurdity of that contention. Take the form issued in November last by the Dominion government for the elections in Quebec together with form 'U' and administer both of them to an elector, and you will not comply with the law. There is more in the province of Quebec affidavit than you will find in the form issued by the government and form 'U' put together. The Quebec Election Act, 1903, chapter 9, section 143, has what may be called the bribery clauses in the form of questions. It is in this form:

> Has any promise been made to you or to your wife or to any of your relations, friends or other persons, to induce you to vote or not to vote at this election?

Neither in the form issued by the government or in form 'U' are the words 'or not to vote.' And who will say that this is not a very material part of the oath? Why, it is a very common practice among certain people who run what is called the machine in the various provinces, to pay a man not to vote. A man does that by perhaps spoiling his ballot or putting in a blank ballot, and in the province of Quebec he can be sworn that he has not received anything not to vote.

> Have you received anything, either personally or through your wife, or through any member of your family, or in any other manner to induce you to vote or not to vote at this election, or in relation to your vote at this election?

There are no such words to be found in the form issued by the government or in the form 'U.'

> Have you been guilty of or participated in any corrupt practice whatever which disqualifies you from taking part in this election?

That goes further than form 'U.' Form 'U' is an affidavit that he has not been convicted, and this not only reaches the man that has been convicted, but the man who has been guilty and not convicted. The Dominion government substituted for this Act in the province of Quebec, two clauses neither of which cover this clause. I take it that that knocks from under the feet of the government the contention that section 5 allowed 'U' to be substituted for part of the provincial oath and the ground that had covered it for both together cannot cover it in the province of Quebec. Take the form read by my hon. friend from Beauharnois and add to that the form 'U' and you do not get the provincial law. In the law of Nova Scotia there are the same bribery clauses, but of course in different terms, and the same thing applies to the election law of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island which has special forms of bribery clauses. The form of the bribery clauses in each province differs. And yet with regard to the elections in each province the bribery clause is struck out, with one exception and it is rather a curious one. The only form of affidavit in the Dominion in the November elections that had the bribery oath was that used in the Northwest Territories. Why the government thought the Northwest Territories required it I do not know, but that is the fact. Now with regard to what occurred in Hamilton as in other places ; after some hours of polling some of my friends in Hamilton discovered that this mutilated form of affidavit was being used. The gentleman who was acting as returning officer, a lawyer and a very honourable man, the moment his attention was called to it, he issued instructions to all the deputy returning officers to correct the form. He had not the slightest shadow of a doubt what his duty was and he complied with it immediately, and I found by an examination of the polling returns afterwards something which convinced me that the change in the form of the oath had done good. In East Hamilton we had a system of checking by our agents which amounted to the agent keeping a duplicate of the poll clerks' book, so that every agent knew the order in which every man voted, and he had each marked 'sworn' or 'refused' and so on. After the election I took some trouble to go over many of the polling divisions and I found that up to a certain point man after man who had been marked in the canvassing books to be sworn by our side took the oath. But after a certain time we found refusal after refusal by men who were tendered the oath. I cannot say absolutely that the first men knew that they were not to be subjected to the bribery oath, but the result did seem to lead to that conclusion.

I know that throughout the city men who were interested in these things pointed out that they could not control the elections without that bribery oath and they were convinced that it was known broadcast throughout the city that there was no bribery oath in the form. I have no doubt at all that in cities, at all events, where the news would go pretty quickly, it would have a most serious effect upon any man's election to let it go forth that the people could get their votes in without any fear of having the bribery oath administered. There is no doubt about that. Every one knows that is the case in cities where news gets around quickly. Then, what is the case in a county? It is utterly hopeless when a thing of that kind occurs for any man to correct anything wrong in the form if he does find it out. In a county it would be absolutely impossible to send out new forms to all the polling divisions and have the matter corrected. The mischief is done and it cannot be remedied. Fortunately in the city of Hamilton we were able to secure a remedy, because, having a good honest returning officer, he was very prompt in correcting it. But, the extraordinary thing, as has been pointed out here, is this: Having the printed form used in 1900 following strictly the provincial Act to go by, these officers like all other officers, repeat their forms; they do not go through the form of redrawing them. They have printed forms and they use them over again. How was it that clauses 8 and 9 were struck out of that affidavit? What object could there be in striking them out? Surely it must have been plain to any man that the striking of the bribery clauses out of that affidavit was a most serious matter, and I cannot believe that the clerk of the Crown in Chancery or any other official would have dared to have taken out these clauses without authority. I cannot believe that he would have taken these clauses out and then have submitted the form to the Governor in Council without having called attention to the omission, or that experienced politicians like those sitting around the Council Board would not have thought that there was something extraordinary in striking these clauses out of the affidavits in the forms which had been already used.

I want to say one word more on this subject, not quite relating to the forms of the affidavit, but bearing upon the manner in which the government issues its writs to the returning officers conducting these elections. I intended to bring this subject up on a future occasion, but I shall do so now and end the matter. In East Hamilton, the gentleman who was appointed returning officer and who, I repeat, is a most respectable man—I have not a word to say against him, I have no suspicion of his conduct, I believe he is a perfectly honourable and straightforward man and that he did his duty—was a junior partner in the firm of Chisholm and Loggie, the senior partner in which was the president of the Reform Association of the city of Hamilton, one of the most active men at the headquarters of the Liberal Association up to the time of the election and during polling day. Not only that, but the firm of Chisholm & Loggie, carrying on business as lawyers, have, as most lawyers have, a vault common to the firm and open to the clerks in the office. The ballot boxes, after the poll, were returned to that office and kept in the vault of that firm for three or four days. The keys of this vault were not carried around by the returning officer in his pocket—some thirty keys—but they were in charge of the clerks of the office. For three or four days these ballot boxes were practically under the control of the president of the Reform Association of Hamilton after the election. I am not finding fault with the returning officer. I am quite satisfied that he would do nothing wrong or be a party to anything wrong, but I do say it is an outrage that the government should have appointed a returning officer to carry on an election of that kind knowing, as the government must have known, that the papers and the ballot boxes after the election were under the control of my opponent just as much as they were under the control of the returning officer.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). Mr. Speaker, I think the argument presented by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) must have convinced the House that there was good reason for the change in the form of the oath which was sent out. As most hon. members know the law is not the same in all the provinces and the laws of the provinces are not the same as the laws of the Dominion. We are by section 65 of the Dominion Act, permitted to use the forms of the provinces. Does that mean that we introduced into our law a provision admitting all the disabilities of the provinces? Not at all. All those which agree with our laws are admitted and that is why, in section 65, we say that it shall be permitted to us to change the provincial form. For what reason do we change the provincial form? I will take the instance which has been given by the hon. member for Hamilton. In the province of Quebec it is settled by law that a man who has been proven guilty of bribery is disqualified from voting. Under our Dominion law it is a doubtful question, if I do not mistake. Then, was there not a good reason for a change in the form of that province? This disqualification, I maintain, which we have put into our provincial law could not be introduced into our Dominion law by a form of oath administered under the provincial law. It was not the intention of this parliament to disqualify electors who were disqualified by the provinces. I do not see anything to laugh at in my argument.

Mr. TISDALE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Demers) thinks I was laughing he is mistaken.

Mr. DEMERS. This is a serious argument. It was not the intention to disqualify electors who are not disqualified under our law. This being the fact it was a sufficient reason for changing the form of oath of the province which change is authorized by section 65. I go further. Hon. gentlemen opposite may make a great noise about this question but if they have the practical side of the question they have not the common sense nor logical sense. According to their contention we should have sworn these people twice for the same thing. It would not have been enough that the oath should have been administered according to our federal law, but we should have been obliged to have come under the local laws and to have sworn them twice. Would it be practicable to have the people sworn twice?

Mr. INGRAM. May I ask the hon. gentleman what oath 'U' is intended to cover?

Mr. DEMERS. It is because oath 'U' is not useless, it is because the government had the right to make changes in the oath of the provinces that we have made the provision of section 65 that any voter, before being allowed to vote, shall be obliged to take the oath in Form 'U.' My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) says that one officer refused that. His duty was plain. If so that officer was acting in bad faith and the party aggrieved had a right of action against him, but I do not believe that all over his county all of the officers understood their duty in the same way.

Mr. BERGERON. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Demers) allow me one question? Why have only half of the provincial oath in this form? Why not have the whole thing there so as to avoid any officer refusing to comply with the Dominion Election Act or refusing to administer the oath according to the Form 'U.' I am reading from the statutes of the province of Quebec, four paragraphs which have been omitted in this form which are nearly identical with the Form 'U' of the Dominion Elections Act. Why was not the whole form put in of oath to be administered to the voters?

Mr. L. P. DEMERS. I say we have a law here which is our law. By section 65 we do not intend to bring up in our elections all the reasons of disqualifications of the provinces, but we only intend to cover those causes of disqualification covered by our law. If you have disqualification for a certain Act under your Quebec law, it does not follow that the man is disqualified from voting under the Dominion law. Of course, he may incur a penalty, but if there is no disqualification under the federal law, do you think it is the intention of section 65 to disqualify him from voting, I say no. I say that section 65 is there for the purpose of permitting us to retain that part of the local laws which is necessary. And it is for this very reason that it has ben put in words so plain, under section 65, that the Form 'U' shall be used.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman means 64.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS. No. 65. And section 68 says that no voter can receive a ballot if he refuses to take the oath in the Form 'U.'

Mr. BERGERON. But if the returning officer will not offer it ?

Mr. BRODEUR. He will have to do it.

Mr. BERGERON. But he does not.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS. I cannot accept the argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron)——

Mr. BERGERON. I am sorry the hon. gentleman (Mr. L. P. Demers) will not take my word for it, because this happened to myself.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS. Then, why did not my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) prosecute the officer ? The case was a clear one. The law declares that no voter may have a ballot who refuses to take the oath according to the Form 'U.'

Mr. BERGERON. But if the form of oath is changed ?

Mr. L. P. DEMERS. It must have been an exception. I cannot believe that that course was followed all over the riding.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes ; and if you will make an investigation I think you will find it in other counties as well.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is contended that the form of oath supplied to the returning officer is not sufficient, that it does not cover the ground. Well, I think there is a good deal of misapprehension of the facts and that there was nothing in the instructions sent to the returning officer to justify the indignation expressed by my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong). These instructions are to be found in the book which I have in my hand. This book contains the Dominion Election Act. A copy of the book is sent to the returning officer in Oxford in the election that is now in progress. It is stated at page 2 :

> The oaths prescribed under sections 64, 65, 74 and 75, forms 'T,' 'U,' 'V,' 'W,' first schedule, are administered viva voce ; you will instruct your deputies that, when occasion demands it, they will swear the voter direct from the copy of the Dominion Elections Act which is supplied to them.

I think that is very clear. Section 65 of the Dominion Election Act declares that two oaths can be administered under that Act, first the qualification oath under the law of each province. There is an oath which can be administered under the law of the province of Quebec ; there is a different oath with regard to manhood sufferage which is administered in the province of Ontario. There is no form of qualification oath in the section itself other than the form of oath as supplied to the returning officer. That is the form of oath which my hon. friend from East Lambton saw in the hands of the returning officer.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is one of the forms. May I state that the part of the oath with regard to bribery and corruption is omitted. Sections 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 are there, but 8 and 9 are not there.

Mr. BRODEUR. And they should not be there. And for this simple reason ; section 65 says :

> Any elector, when required by the deputy returning officer, the poll clerk, one of the candidates or an agent of a candidate, or by any elector present shall, before receiving his ballot paper, take such oath of qualification as by the law of the province he may in the like case at a provincial election be required to take, such changes having been made in the form of the oath as are necessary to make it applicable to the election being held, and shall also, if so required, take the oath in the form 'U.'

Mr. BERGERON. And if he refuses.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will come to that. I do not speak of whether the returning officer performs his duties faithfully or not but I am speaking of the law and of the way it is carried out in North Oxford.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where are the words in section 65 on which the hon. minister (Mr. Brodeur) relies for striking out clauses 8 and 9 of the former oath ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I say the words are to be found in the interpretation of the article itself. There are two forms of oath which are mentioned in this section 65. One is the form of oath which the voter is required to take under the provincial law. In the province of Ontario, by the provincial Act, a man can get a vote under the manhood sufferage provision. Well, he gives his oath as required by this form. This form is not in the statutes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know it is not. I think I did not make myself clear. You leave in seven clauses of the oath provided under the provincial law, and you omit two.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are the words in section 65 on which you rely for including the seven clauses and leaving out the two ? I would invite the hon. gentleman's attention to the language, particularly to the words :

> And shall also, if required, take the oath in the form 'U.'

Mr. BRODEUR. It strikes me this way : there are two forms of oath prescribed under section 65 ; one is with regard to the provincial law and the other as to what is called the bribery clauses and which are included in the Form 'U.' As there is not, under our law, any form as to the provincial law the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery sends to the returning officer a form which may be different in one province from the other according to the law of each province. Besides that, if the candidate or his agent at the poll wants the elector to be sworn as to bribery, he simply puts to him the different questions which are included in form U, and which, according to these instructions, he is to administer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not quite follow the hon. gentleman. The statute says that the instructions referred to in subsection 1 of this section shall contain the forms of oath referred to in sections 65, 66 and 68. Now, you have a bribery oath, under either the province or the Dominion, probably under both. What is the justification for omitting any form of bribery oath from the forms inserted in the instructions ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Because I do not see the necessity of inserting it. The first oath is with regard to the qualification—whether the man whose name is on the list is entitled to vote.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to make my question plain to the hon. gentleman, because I want to appreciate his argument. The instructions contain the forms of oath, but these forms omit any reference to bribery, as set out in either the provincial or the Dominion statute. What is the justification for that ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am trying to explain the difference which I find in the two forms of oath described in section 65. The first one is with regard to the qualification of the voter, not with regard to bribery. The second one is whether the voter has committed any acts of bribery ; and the instructions, which are sent to the returning officer, prescribe that he shall instruct his deputies, when the occasion requires it, to swear the voters from the Dominion Elections Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend regard the oath in Form 'U' as a qualification oath ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No ; I regard it as a different oath. The oath referred to in section 65 is the qualification oath, apart from the question of bribery ; and section 65 says that the elector shall also, if so required, take the oath in Form 'U.' That is the reason the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, who is not an officer of the government or of the House of Commons merely, but an officer of parliament, sent the form of oath as required by the law in each province, and also gave instructions to the returning officers to administer the oath with regard to bribery. That is the situation, and I do not think there was any reason at all for the hon. member for Lambton raising this question. There was certainly no intention on the part of anybody to deprive any elector of his vote or to permit anybody to vote who was not entitled to do so. The returning officers have their instructions ; and if to-day, in the London or Oxford election, somebody shall call upon a deputy returning officer to swear one of the electors because he is suspected of receiving a bride, the deputy returning officer has all the necessary instructions for that purpose. I am sorry, for my part, that the time of this House has been wasted in the discussion of a question which seems to me to be absolutely clear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the hon. gentleman sits down, I would like to ask him one final question, because I have not fully appreciated his argument. The statute prescribes certain forms of oaths. Is his contention that all forms shall be sent forward except the form as to bribery, and that is omitted ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No ; my hon. friend is mistaken. The form as to bribery is sent, like all the others ; but instead of it being sent on a detached form, the returning officer simply receives instructions that if somebody calls on a voter to take the oath, he is to administer it from the book.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I point out to my hon. friend that, not only must the instructions be approved by the Governor in Council and be sent forward, but the forms of oath must also be sent forward with the instructions. All forms of oath have been sent forward except the form with respect to bribery, which has been omitted. The Election Act, the instructions and the forms, these three things have to be sent forward.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is mistaken. The forms which have been sent to the returning officer in North Oxford are of two kinds. One kind are forms regarding the qualifications under the Ontario Act. The reason they have been sent in detached form is that they are not in our law. But the returning officer also got the form which could be administered under the latter part of section 65.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not say the latter part ; it says under the whole section.

Mr. BRODEUR. Under the whole section. The first part of section 65 was sent to him, and the second part is in this book ; and it is declared on page 2 of the instructions that if somebody calls upon the voter to take the oath under Form 'U' then the deputy returning officer shall administer it under this Act. So that the two forms were in the hands of the returning officer, the form with regard to qualification and the form with regard to bribes. Consequently, there can be no reason or justification for asserting that there has been any intention on the part of anybody to deprive the electors of their right to vote.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the Dominion Elections Act says that that is the form of oath that shall be given when men are asked to take the oath. The minister refers to a form of oath with reference to the manhood franchise. I admit that that is sent along ; but not only is that sent, but part of the oath with refernce to bribery and corruption. Of that oath there are only seven clauses included in this form, and I would like the minister to explain why the other two clauses, which are contained in the local Election Act, are omitted.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They have no place there at all in law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend regard the oath as an oath of qualification ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I fear I shall be violating somewhat on the rules of the House if I speak again, but I have managed to get hold of the statutes and understand the matter somewhat better than I did a while ago. I am quite prepared to express the opinion now deliberately that, after having considered the matter, the form of oaths supplied is the only one that can be supplied under the law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am prepared to state my opinion exactly the reverse of that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then I shall proceed to give reasons in support of my opinion. Section 21 of the Dominion Elections Act provides :

Immediately after the issue of the writ of election, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall transmit to the returning officer a sufficient number of copies of the voters' lists, if there are any, one copy of this Act, and of such instructions approved by the Governor in Council as are required to carry out the election according to the provisions of this Act. (With a copious alphabetical index prefixed), for the returning officer himself, one copy for the election clerk and one for each of the deputy returning officers, and also for each deputy returning officer a blank poll book and all the blank forms necessary for the purposes of such election, except Forms 'E,' 'I' and 'P,' which the returning officer shall himself cause to be printed.

2. The instructions referred to in section 1 of this section shall contain forms of the oaths referred to in sections 65, 66 and 68 of this Act, the same having been made applicable to the election being held, and in the case of returning officers in the province of Prince Edward Island they shall be accompanied by the sections of the provincial law relating to the qualifications of voters.

These are all the documents that are to be sent to the returning officers under the law ; and beyond complying with the requirements of the law, the government cannot be held responsible.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is Form 'U' ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If my hon. friend will only restrain his ardour for a moment, I shall try to enlighten him. The instructions to the returning officers approved by His Excellency in Council are to be found at the beginning of this book which is sent to each returning officer. These instructions show that copies of the Franchise Act 1898 and copies of the Dominion Elections Act of 1900 are sent them. The copies of the Franchise Act are necessary because there are to be found the qualification of a voter. Copies of the Dominion elections Act are equally necessary because there the returning officer will find what the voter is required to do when he tenders his vote. Section 65 provides that an elector, if required by the deputy returning officer, the poll clerk, one of the candidates or an agent of one of the candidates or by any elector present shall, before receiving is ballot paper—do what ?

Take such oath of qualification as by the laws of the province he may in the like case at a provincial election be required to take.

He shall take the oath of qualification—not the oath of disqualification for bribery. He shall take the oath which qualifies him to vote, not the oath regarding something which may debar him from exercising that right, and he shall, take such oath as by the law of the province he may, in like case, at a provincial election, be required to take :

Such changes having been made in the form of the oath as are necessary to make it applicable to the election being held.

He is required to take the oath of qualification with the changes necessary.

Mr. INGRAM. What are they ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I shall point out what they are. In addition he shall take the oath required in respect of bribery. That is the additional oath he is required to take, and that is the oath given him in the Form 'U.' Now let us go back to the instructions. There you will find at page 2 :

Sections 50 to 79, inclusively indicate your duties and those of your deputies and other officers, from the granting of the poll to the close of the proceedings on polling day.

The oaths prescribe under sections 64, 65, 74 and 75, Forms 'I,' 'U,' 'V,' 'W,' first schedules, are administered viva voce ; you will instruct your deputies that when occasion demands it, they will swear the elector direct from a copy of the Dominion Elections Act which is supplied them.

That is to say if the returning officer is called upon to administer the oath in Form 'U', he is instructed to administer it from the form contained in the Dominion Elections Act.

Then with respect to the forms of the other oaths the instructions provide :

Forms of the other oaths prescribed by the provincial law, adapted to the purposes of the present election, are furnished to you herewith.

Mr. BARKER. What do you say they are ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I say they are here.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman is speaking of a change in the Ontario oath.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We are speaking of the Dominion Act.

Mr. INGRAM. In the oath administered by the law of the Dominion, the only change is the words in the poll-book. If the instructions that both he and the hon. gentleman beside him quoted to-day govern, will the hon. gentleman point out what are the changes in the instructions given in 1900 as compared with those given in 1904 ? If in the first instructions, the government issued a certain form, what changes are there in the instructions in 1904 to compel the government to change the form ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Because the form of oath sent out in 1900 was a form that was improper under the law. That is the reason. The form of oath sent out in 1900 contains provisions with respect to disqualification imported into it from the local law, which had no place in our Dominion law at all.

Mr. INGRAM. Did not the government issue the order——

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. INGRAM. Fair-play is a jewel, but evidently that is not the case here.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman desires to ask a question, it is within the right of the gentleman who has the floor to answer it or not.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have not the slightest objection, and I do not think I have ever shown that I am animated by any such spirit as that imputed to me, but I do not think it is in the interest of proper decorum in debate that hon. gentlemen who have not the floor should interject speeches as we go along.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I rise to a point of order. If the Minister of Justice will not allow the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Ingram to put a question, I raise the point that the hon. minister has spoken once already.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I cannot be bullied into answering a question or doing anything else, and I want the hon. gentleman to understand it.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not want to make a speech but am eager to get at the facts. The hon. minister has referred to a change made from 1900 to 1904.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I rise to the same point of order that was raised by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) with regard to the Minister of Justice. If the point of order was good in his case, surely it ought to apply to the hon. minister who is now interrupting him.

Mr. INGRAM. (reading) :

Department of Secretary of State,
Ottawa, 12th October, 1900.

Official Instructions for Deputy Returning Officers.

The heading to Form 'U,' page 59 Dominion Elections Act, is misleading and should be absolutely ignored. It does not in any way represent the provisions contained in the form, and was inserted there by mistake.

So the statement the Minister of Justice makes that this change was made, was absolutely and fully covered in 1900 is incorrect. There has been no change since 1900.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Either my hon. friend argues that the instructions in 1904 differed from those in 1900 or they did not.

Mr. INGRAM. No.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Well what is he complaining of ?

Mr. INGRAM. Why was the form changed ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The form is different ?

Mr. INGRAM. The from is different.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then as the form is part of the instructions and is changed, I argue that the instructions are changed.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to know the point of law that was changed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My point was that section 65 requires the two oaths, one the oath of qualifications as required by the law of the province, changes being made in the form of the oath such as are necessary under our Dominion law and in addition to that the oath in the Form 'U.' Now what is the qualification of a voter. The qualification of a voter is prescribed by section 6 of the Franchise Act. Section 6 provides that :

No person possessed of the qualifications generally required by the provincial law to entitle him to vote at a provincial election, shall be disqualified from voting at a Dominion election merely by reason of any provision of the provincial law disqualifying from having his name on the list or from voting——

So that if a man is disqualified under the Provincial Act by reason of some act of bribery, he is not disqualified as a result to vote under the Federal Act, and section 6 is the section which covers the point that a voter is entitled to vote and cannot be deprived of his right to vote because of some disqualification which is peculiar to the provincial Act, and as a result the oath of qualification required by the provincial law must be amended so as to cover the provisions of section 6 of the Franchise Act. But with respect to the bribery clauses this provision is contained in the form which is supplied to the returning officer, which form constitutes part of the Election Act and which his instructions say he must deliver in that form, assuming as the hon. member for St. John and Iberville (Mr. Demers) argued a moment ago, that the provisions of the Dominion Election Act were different with respect to disqualification from the provisions of the provincial Act which should supersede the other, could a voter be called upon to take an oath which would require him to be placed in contradiction under the Dominion Act to what he would swear to under the provincial Act. Is it proper that with respect to disqualification for bribery, two oaths should be put different in words and different in substance ? My argument is that section 65 of the federal Act, properly construed, requires simply that the oath of qualification, which is the oath to be adapted from the provincial Act, should be sent out in a special form and the oath with respect to bribery in the Form 'U' be administered in the form given in the Act.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to ask the minister whether he considers section 7 of the form sent out in Ontario a qualification or not ? Is that a part of the qualification, paragraph 7 of form 16 ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No, that is not the qualification.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does that not give away the case ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Certainly not, because the same thing is contained in this oath. They ought not to be in it. The same thing is done in this oath ; not in the Form 'U' which is covered by our own Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the form of 1904 right ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The form of 1904 is right and this form here is right. The form of 1900 is the one which I say is in contradiction with the terms of the statute.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us see what occurred here in connection with this election. I think I ought to put on 'Hansard' what really occurred so we will have something to go upon. We have the returning officer James Brady, telegraphing to the Secretary of State as follows :

Woodstock, Ontario, 12th June, 1905.

R. W. Scott,
Secretary of State, Ottawa.

Form of oaths numbers sixteen and seventeen supplied does not contain clauses eight and nine, the Conservatives are taking exception to the form, saying it is not a complete oath. Shall we have new forms of oaths printed including clauses eight and nine and have them sent out by special messenger to deputies to-night as to-morrow is election ?

JAMES BRADY,
Returning Officer.

The answer to that telegram is as follows:

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Ottawa, 12th June, 1905.

James Brady,
Returning Officer, Woodstock, Ontario.

Clerk of Crown in Chancery states you have been supplied with all forms supplied to other returning officers in Ontario. If you have any doubts, get legal opinion. Copies of Form 'U' referred to in section sixty-five are not sent out. The oath is read to the elector.

That is the reply that was sent.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER. It seems to me that the refutation of the arguments of the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Minister of Justice is contained in section 7 of form 16. Section 7 says :

That you have not voted before at this election, either at this or any other polling station.

The Minister of Justice contended that the old form sent out in 1900, the form which contained the full oath, was adopted in mistake on the part of the department, under that form when the bribery oath was required to be put to an elector it could be put and there was the form before the returning officer, and there could be no such question as that which arose in Beauharnois. The minister says it was wrong to send that out, because it contained more than the qualification—because it contained all the disqualifications as well—but here we have this oath which is set forth by the Minister of Justice as being the only right and correct thing and it contains the very same objection as that contained in the old instructions of 1900. That is why I asked the Minister of Justice whether he looked upon section 7 as a qualification or a disqualification. If the acceptance of a bribe by an elector is a disqualification, certainly for him to have voted before at that election is a disqualification as well.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In one sense it is but in another it is not.

Mr. FOWLER. I am surprised that the minister would say it is not a disqualification.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did not say that, I said that in one sense it is a disqualification and not in another. I said to have voted before at an election is a disqualification so far as the elector's right to vote is concerned, but not as to his right to be on the voters' list.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Bribery is not either.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to have the Minister of Justice prove that because a man accepted a bribe that is such a disqualification that he should not be on the list. I think the minister will find some difficulty in finding anything in the law to justify a statement like that. As I have said, that is a refutation of the whole argument. If you have a right to have a portion of the disqualification in an oath you have a right to have the whole thing in that oath, and I cannot quite agree with the hon. gentlemen who have spoken from this side of the House who have, so far as I have heard, said that they disclaim the idea that the government have wilfully done this thing.

Mr. TAYLOR. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not know that they have wilfully done this thing, but I say I am prepared to believe and the evidence shows conclusively that they have done this thing. It is done for a purpose I believe as firmly as I believe anything. I have listened to the arguments and I have listened with considerable amusement to the Minister of Inland Revenue floundering in his argument. Usually he is very clear, but he had such a bad case that he floundered badly in this instance. The Minister of Justice stated bad law in order to try and bolster up a bad case, and from all these things I am perfectly convinced that this is done wilfully, done for the purpose of making it difficult for justice to be done and for an honest vote to be cast, because the hon. gentlemen know perfectly that in these two elections to-day, if an honest vote of these two constituencies were cast, the government candidates would certainly be very badly defeated.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh, riding for a fall.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (Leeds). When I spoke approvingly of the statement of my hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. Fowler) that these forms were sent out with malice aforethought, I heard from the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) a very loud Ha, Ha! as though my approving of that utterance afforded him amusement. Well, we have a right to take that view, considering the telegrams that have been read and that are now on 'Hansard,' from the returning officer—not from the deputy returning officer—in North Oxford, and from the government in reply. The returning officer's telegram sounded much as if he were determined not to use any other forms than those supplied by the government. He telegraphed to the government for information, saying that the Conservatives were claiming that the form of oath should contain sections 8 and 9 of the provincial form and that he should get others printed to replace those that the government had sent him. Then, though he asked for instructions he as good as said these were the only forms he proposed to use. And the government telegraphed him back to engage a lawyer to interpret the instructions given to him. In the general elections of 1904, the same forms were supplied to the deputy returning officers in the province of Ontario. And in my own constituency I know of two cases where the deputy returning officer refused to put any other oath than that furnished in form 16. One was the case of a man working for myself. I found that he was going to drive away out in the country and vote and also that he had been paid by the secretary of the Reform Association; that a horse had been furnished him and a man put in his place to work for him. I telegraphed Mr. John R. Dargavel. The hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Derbyshire) knows Mr. Dargavel and knows that he is as honest a man as there is in the country. Mr. Dargavel was acting as scrutineer at the poll at which this man proposed to vote. When the man filed an appearance Mr. Dargavel asked to have this man sworn, stating that he had been paid to go out. The deputy stated that there was nothing in the form of oath against bribery. Mr. Dargavel had a copy of the provincial Act and read the clause, and challenged and defied the deputy returning officer to put any other form of oath than the one contained in that statute. The would-be voter said that if there was going to be any row about it, he would not vote, and left the booth. But the fact is that the deputy returning officer refused point blank to submit any other oath than the one supplied by the government. The other case is that of the postmaster who acted as deputy returning officer at Frankville, a case to which I referred the other day. This deputy returning officer refused to administer any other oath than the one supplied. And I am told that the same thing happened in many other cases. And that form of oath was supplied, I have no hesitation in saying, in order that a voter might take a bribe and then swear in his vote. And the same thing is done in Oxford and London. As I have said, the telegram of the returning officer for North Oxford shows clearly that he was of opinion that the forms of oath supplied by the government were the only ones to be used. It must be remembered that, while a copy of the statute is sent to the returning officer, and the deputy returning officers do not look at the provincial Act or any other Act; they regard their instructions and their forms as sufficient. And I feel confident that these were prepared expressly to mislead these officers. It was the opinion throughout my riding, and, I believe, throughout the province, that the object was to omit everything that would prevent a man from being bribed and then swearing in his vote.

Mr. BERGERON. Although I have spoken once already, yet, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has spoken a couple of times I may be allowed to say a word in order to correct myself. At first I said that I did not believe that all this was done on purpose to affect the elections in London and North Oxford, and I gave some explanation of what had happened lately in my own county. But I must say, that after the defence made by the minister, and after two or three lawyers on that side have exposed their own differences in trying to explain this law, I am beginning to think that perhaps I was wrong. Think of these differences, and then imagine a poor candidate in the province of Quebec having to fight the government in spite of this and every other disability. He has in his county twenty-five or thirty deputy returning officers who are most active partisans and who have been working against him until the very morning of voting day; men who have never gone through the Election Act, never been instructed as to its provisions, but who are there to carry that election by every possible means. With such a law as we now have in force, and in view of what we have heard one would think that the Minister of Justice and several of his colleagues would go around to every poll and tell the deputy returning officer : 'You had better pay attention and do your duty, or there may be an action of damages against you.'

M. O. E. TALBOT. What about the eighteen years before 1896 ?

Mr. BERGERON. I am coming to that. What we have now is all the result of the change in the law. Every Liberal I have heard on the platform has boasted that of all the promises they made they have carried out one—they have made a change in the Franchise Act. But, now that the local governments are becoming Conservative I should not wonder if they would want to change it again. If they did so it would only be another example to prove what we already know, that their principles are not principles at all but a mere matter of opportunities. The law is not carried out at all. Every candidate should be in possession of the names of the deputy returning officers two days before the election, and these deputies should be instructed in the duties of their position. But that is not done. We can hardly even speak to the returning officer—we have to approach him with a great deal of care. And as to the deputies we are not given the names of a single one. And the same is true of the poll clerks. I have known cases where deputy returning officers were changed three times in the night before polling day. This happened in St. James division. But the hon. member for St. John and Iberville (Mr. L. O. Demers) has great consolation for us. He tells us we have a good action for damages against the deputy. That is consolation indeed, particularly when we are in opposition. Why, I caught some of my opponents in St. James division redhanded, putting bogus votes into the ballot boxes. And I had these men put in jail, but the Minister of Justice let them out. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. O. E. Talbot) speaks about the eighteen years before 1896. Before 1896 we had a Franchise Act which, while it may not have been perfect was at least the same for all the provinces. To-day, every farmer carries under his arm to the polling place the form of vote he wants to take. Every provincial law must be consulted before we can know who is entitled to vote for a member of the House of Commons. And this is the reason why I believe that all this was done with a purpose. Unless you have perfectly honest men as deputy returning officers, men who are versed in the duties of their office, it is impossible to obtain justice. The law is not carried out, notwithstanding all the explanation of the Minister of Justice. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery sends a box containing the forms, and those forms must vary according to the province.

We say : Where are the forms ? The deputy returning officer is an ordinary man. If he is a man of intelligence and even if he is a very honest man he is not versed in all the intricacies of what we are discussing here to-day. He says : I have received the forms. That is the answer that my deputy returning officer gave me. He spoke to me in that way. He was an honest man. I do not believe that man wanted to do an injury to me. He said : I have received these forms and it is my duty to administer the oaths which are incorporated in them. I read the law to him but he said : I am very sorry, but I have to follow my instructions. I say that many of them will do the same thing even if they are honest men. Would it be any more costly or any more cumbersome to the government to have all of form 16 under the Ontario Act printed on the paper which is the cause of this discussion ? Why not include these two paragraphs which are the only ones making it necessary to administer the oath to the elector so as to ascertain whether he is worthy of voting, whether he is an honest man, whether he has been bribed, whether he has been bought or whether he has bought anybody ? These are the only two paragraphs of the oath that we look upon as serious. Why do anything that would suggest an error or something that is worse than an error ? Why not have the whole thing printed upon this form here or upon this for the province of Quebec ? Why not mark it or write it and say this form is part of the provincial Act and part of the Dominion Act, but it only makes one form of oath for the elector to take ? I wanted to give some explanation of what I said before. I have done it because I am commencing to be convinced that there is a design in this. It is done in a very clever way. Elections have been going on to-day in two constituencies. All of these deputy returning officers are politicians. They are strong friends of hon. gentlemen opposite and even if they are honest men, if there is any doubt it will be decided in favour of the government candidate. If there is one thing more than another that we are all interested in it is that elections should be impartially and honestly carried on in this country.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) who has just taken his seat has been referring to the difficulties the poor candidates who are now running in the Conservative interest in the province of Quebec have to face in order to get returned, and he says that the returning officers have been suspected of not being disposed to give them fair-play. I ask him how elections were carried out during the 18 years previous to 1896? I will not make a speech about it, but I will just mention a certain instance and quote the law in order to show the difficulties we also had to meet under the law as it was then in existence. I remember that in 1893, in the parish of Ste. Perpetue, in L'Islet county, 27 voters were disfranchised. Why? They had a form of oath in the law then in existence, Form X, paragraph 2, which read as follows:

> That my application to have my name so registered was refused; that I have duly appealed from such decision of the said revising officer, pursuant to the provisions of the said Act.

It was then understood and agreed that if a man's name was not on the list, if that man took an oath that his name should have been on the list, provided he made his application in time, if his application were not accepted, he had the right to vote, but there was nothing to cover the case of the voter whose name had been placed on the list but which had been stricken off by the paid heelers of the party, and I remember that at this particular poll, 27 good Liberals were disfranchised because there was not an oath which would apply to them. Yet, here is the hon. member for Beauharnois rising in his place as the representative of the party of purity of those days, but forgetting the difficulties against which we had to contend for 18 years. Up to 1896 we had to follow the salaried officers of the former government from parish to parish in order to endeavour to secure fair-play for the people and to see that not only the names of Liberals, but those of Conservatives who were entitled to vote were put on the list. I remember that for three weeks I followed a salaried officer of the government in the province of Quebec to see that the people got fair-play. I spent $350 of my own money to see that fair-play was given to the people, but when the lists were issued we found that the names of 375 voters had been stricken off the list although they had formerly been put on the list. These are the things we had to fight against up to 1896, and I think it is with very bad grace that these hon. gentlemen opposite now find fault with the condition of things prevailing at the present time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I may be permitted to say one or two words in reply to what has fallen from my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) I would like to do so. The object of the Dominion Elections Act, 1900, was obviously to make plain to the returning officers throughout the country what form of oath should be used. It was absolutely necessary that the form should be made plain, because you were using the provincial forms which varied according to the different provinces, and you were also providing for certain purposes a form for use throughout the whole of Canada. You therefore had a form of oath which varied in each province but a portion of which was the same throughout Canada. It would seem obvious that under these circumstances the provisions of section 21 of the statute should be followed strictly, and I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of Justice is able to argue that they have been followed strictly. I will point out why I think that. Section 21 provides that the returning officer—omitting matters that are immaterial—should receive a copy of the Act, the instructions approved by the Governor in Council and the forms of oath referred to in sections 65, 66 and 68. These are the three essentials as to the information which should be given to the returning officer for the purpose of carrying on the election. Now, we come to section 65. Section 65 says that the voter——

> Shall, before receiving his ballot paper, take such oath of qualification as by the law of the province he may in the like case at a provincial election be required to take, such changes having been made in the form of oath as are necessary to make it applicable to the election being held——

My hon. friend the Minister of Justice says that only part of the oath prescribed by the provincial Act is the oath of qualification. The statute speaks of the oath of qualification not such part of the oath as relates to qualification. The statute provides that he shall:

> —take such oath of qualification as by the law of the province he may in the like case at a provincial election be required to take, such changes having been made in the form of oath as are necessary to make it applicable to the election being held, and shall also, if so required, take the oath in Form 'U.'

The elector may be required to take the provincial oath of qualification and also to take the oath in Form 'U'. If the argument of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice were a correct argument he would have to admit that the form sent out in 1904 is an incorrect form, because it contains the provision which is embodied in both the provincial form and the Dominion form; that is to say that the government sent out to the returning officers in the month of November last a form of oath which contains these words:

> That you have not voted before at this election, either at this or any other polling place.

The Minister of Justice seems to think that anything that had been provided for in Form 'U' must be omitted from the provincial form. You have there exactly a provision contained in Form 'U.'

Mr. BRODEUR. In the provincial statutes there is a definition of what bribery is and there is also a definition in the federal statute. Then, if we are going to adopt the oath as it is incorporated in the provincial law, we should have the elector declaring whether he has been guilty of corrupt practices under the provincial laws. That is certainly not the intention of parliament because our law provided for the declaration of the corrupt practice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) has not observed the words I read :

> Such changes having been made in the form of oath to make it applicable to the election being held.

I was dealing with the point on which the Minister of Justice rested his case : that the provincial oath is an oath of qualification, and the oath in Form 'U' is not an oath of qualification. The argument which says that whatever is in one oath should be eliminated from the other, would demonstrate absolutely that the form of oath sent out in 1904 is wrong, because it contains a provision which is also found in Form 'U.' The essential point about the whole matter is this : that you are to send out the forms. The Minister of Justice says they have sent out the forms, and he refers us to the instructions, and the instructions are in these words :

> The oaths prescribed under sections 64, 65, 74 and 75, Forms 'T,' 'U,' 'V,' 'W,' first schedule, are administered viva voce. You will instruct your deputies that, when occasion demands it, they will swear the elector direct from the copy of the Dominion Elections Act which is supplied to them.
> Forms of the other oaths prescribed by the provincial law, adapted to the purposes of the present election, are furnished to you herewith.

That is not what the statute says. The statute does not say the forms of the other oaths prescribed by the provincial law are to be sent herewith. The statute says :

> The instructions referred to in subsection 1 of this section shall contain forms of the oath referred to in sections 65, 66 and 68.

And that, for the very reason that because you have adapted to Dominion purposes oaths contained in provincial Acts ; because you are also supplying a certain form applicable to all the provinces under the Dominion Elections Act, the statute makes it absolutely necessary that the exact form for each province should be sent forward to each deputy returning officer. The way the matter has worked out shows the absolute necessity for that. If the statute intended that, it was wise, and in no other way can you work it out satisfactorily, as has been shown by the practical experience of hon. gentlemen in this House.

If you leave the deputy returning officer to work this out for himself under the form of instructions the Minister of Justice has referred to, you will have exactly the same difficulty which prevailed in nearly every electoral district in this country. You have adopted an extraordinary procedure ; you have adopted, not only the provincial voters' lists, but part at least of the provincial form of oath. You have added to that the Dominion form of oath, and it is essential therefore, when you put your instructions in the hands of the returning officer, that you shall make them so absolutely plain to him that any man reading the instructions and reading the forms will know exactly what to do. We complain that you sent a form to the returning officers which some returning officers at least claimed to be an exclusive form. Every line and every word of these instructions will not be present to the mind of a deputy returning officer when he is carrying on an election in the hurry and confusion and controversy that sometimes arise in a polling booth. But if you have a form placed before him which contains everything that any voter can be required to swear to when he comes to vote, then you will not have the difficulty that has occurred. It may be that a very intelligent and studious returning officer, or deputy returning officer, if he cut out from the Dominion statutes what was necessary and added it to the form placed before him, might get along all right ; but this statute was designed to give him a form which, when he had it before him, would guide him exactly in the course which the law intended. Notwithstanding the argument of the Minister of Justice, I venture the statement that the forms which have been sent out are misleading ; that they are not the forms which are contemplated by the statute ; that the intention was that the forms sent forward with the instructions would contain everything that the deputy returning officer would be required to administer to any voter. Whether I am right in that or not, I am sincerely of that opinion, and I venture to think that the Minister of Justice, after what he has heard to-day, will conclude that that would be a wise way to carry out the law. If the law does not mean that at present, then the law should be amended in that direction.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think I should make a statement to the House. The impression may have gone abroad that the Secretary of State is responsible for these forms as they went out. I sent for Mr. Fraser, who acted as Deputy Minister of Justice in the absence of Mr. Newcombe, and he tells me that I am responsible. Mr. Fraser prepared a memorandum for me on the 23rd of August, 1903, suggesting this change, and I approved of it. Therefore, I should take the responsibility for the same.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If I may be permitted one more word, I would say that we know a little more of what has taken place in these elections that have just been concluded, and the result of which we shall know presently, than we knew when my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) brought the question to the attention of the House. I concluded from the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) that it would not have been possible for an elector to be sworn to-day as to whether or not he had accepted a bribe in contravention of the law. We now know that such is not the case. It was open to any elector to challenge the vote of any other elector and to put to him the oath as to whether or not he had received a bribe and was disqualified. That is now beyond doubt, because, although the form that was used in 1900 has been amended by striking out paragraphs 8 and 9, which refer to bribery in the province of Ontario, the returning officer was supplied with a form of oath to be administered to the voter, which is contained in Form 'U,' and which is :

You swear or solemnly affirm——

That you have not been disfranchised under the provisions of the Act to disfranchise voters who have taken bribes, or for corrupt practices, under the Dominion Elections Act, 1900.

That you have not voted before at this election, either at this or at any other polling place;

That you have not received anything, that you do not expect anything, nor has anything been promised you directly or indirectly, to induce you to vote at this election, either for loss of time, travelling expenses, hire of team, or for any other services connected therewith ;

That you have not directly or indirectly paid or promised anything to any person either to induce him to vote or to refrain from voting at this election ;

That you are not otherwise disqualified from voting at this election.

This is as broad as the oath under the Ontario law, and therefore no injustice could have been done to any one. I would say further that these very forms were used in the elections in November, 1904, and, although seven months have elapsed since that time, I have not heard that any particular injustice has been done to anybody. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) says that he could not have this form with regard to bribery used in his election. That may be, but I do not know of any election in which you do not hear some complaint that there has been an irregularity. Even in the forms used for the ballots irregularities have been committed, and committed most innocently. There is the Wentworth election case, now before the Supreme Court, where forty voters were disfranchised by an act of the returning officer, and, had they not been disfranchised, the Liberal candidate would have been returned. That cannot have been done in bad faith, because if the returning officer in Wentworth was a political partisan, as it is said he was, it was his own party which suffered. I quite agree with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and with everybody else who has spoken on that side, that we should endeavour to make the law as simple as possible ; and if we have printed forms of oaths to distribute, perhaps it would be less confusing to the returning officers if the other forms in this book were included. If that is a proper suggestion, I have no doubt the government would be anxious to have it carried out ; and for my part I shall be glad to bring the matter at once to the attention of the Secretary of State. Because the returning officers are partisans, it does not follow that they are dishonest ; on the contrary, I believe they are honest men, who desire to do justice. But as these laws are only brought into operation once in four or five years, they are liable to be forgotten ; so that the simpler the forms are the better. Certainly the Minister of Justice has no objection to having the matter attended to ; and he has thrown out the excellent suggestion that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, where it can be threshed out, and where members on both sides of the House can give their opinions. For my part, I would be glad to act on this suggestion if it is agreeable to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the Minister of Justice what is the reason we did not establish a general form of oath when we passed the Act ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Because there are different qualifications in the various provinces. After having listened to the discussion, I think myself that the instructions to the returning officers should, in the spirit of the Act, contain every form of oath, instead of referring to an oath in the Franchise Act or in any other Act, as at present. Every form of oath should be embodied in instructions themselves.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to hear the hon. Minister of Justice make that remark. After the discussion which has taken place, I think it must be admitted that the Prime Minister's rebuke to me was quite uncalled for. I can only say that I believe I was doing my duty in bringing this matter before the House and the country. If the form of oath is not satisfactory, is it not wise for us to change it and make it satisfactory ? I might also say, with regard to notifying the government, that I did what I could in that respect. I went to the returning officer and urged upon him the necessity of adding to the form which he had sent out to the deputies, these clauses which we have been discussing this afternoon. In doing that I believe that I was doing what was right ; and I think the argument here this afternoon proves that it would have been wise had these two sections been added. You cannot expect men throughout the country to pick out of the Acts what is suitable for the occasion. I sincerely hope that before long the Minister of Justice will see that the forms sent out in future shall have these bribery clauses included. When the right hon. Prime Minister says that the government is not responsible, I cannot agree with him.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not say that ; I say we are responsible.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am very glad to hear it. I understood the right hon. gentleman to say that the government were not responsible for the present situation. However, so far as our judgment goes on this side of the House, this oath, as it has been administered, is to a certain extent a mutilated oath, and I hope the time is not far distant when the government will arrange to have these forms sent out in a proper way.

Motion (Mr. Armstrong) to adjourn, negatived.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Public Works—harbours and rivers—Quebec—River Ouelle—repairs, &c., $5,600.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR—(for Minister of Public Works). This is to continue the heavy repairs which were begun in the spring of 1904. The expenditures from the 1st of July to 31st December, 1904, was $2,985.83. This will complete the work.

Ottawa river—wharf near the mouth of Rivière du Lievre, $4,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to make further provision for the construction of a public work at Masson or Buckingham Junction, some 20 miles below Ottawa, so as to give shipping falicilities. It is government property. The total estimate is $8,500 and this $4,500 will complete.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What is the policy of the government with regard to building wharfs ? They seem to favour some particular places and utterly ignore others. We have never had a wharf built by the government in the riding I represent. Would the minister state what are the conditions which will induce the government to build a wharf ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The policy is the same as that which was carried on by our predecessors, namely, to construct wharfs for the accommodation of the public where the public interest demands it.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. We should have something more definite. Because the Conservative government set the example is no reason why this government should follow it. If wharfs are to be built indiscriminately, without regard to any definite plan or condition or policy, you will have people in every locality asking the government to build their wharfs. Why should not these works be left to private enterprise ? In the part of the country where I come from, the wharfs are built by private individuals, but I do not see why we should not have them built by the government, if the government is to follow the policy of building them wherever the pressure is strong enough to influence it.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is the duty of the government to see that shipping facilities are given wherever they are required for the development of trade. There are localities where private enterprise will do the work. On the Ottawa river there are wharfs which have been built by private companies, but these companies will not allow the public to use them and exercise a monopoly over them. It is thus frequently found advisable in the public interest, in order to afford shipping facilities to the whole community, that the government should construct these works.

Mr. BERGERON. I think the first reason the hon. gentleman gave is the best one, and that is that he is following the example of his predecessor. But he evidently forgets that his party, when in opposition, took days and days to criticise these expenditures by the late government. Evidently they were not sincere in their criticisms since they say they are carrying out the same policy.

Rivière Richelieu—dredging at Isle St. Therese, $5,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This work is being done by a dredge belonging to the government. It is a revote.

Mr. BERGERON. There cannot be much hurry for the work since the money has been voted three times.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, it was only voted once, namely, for the year 1904-1905, and this is a revote.

Mr. BERGERON. Has anything been expended yet ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, but the dredge is there now.

Mr. BERGERON. Will that be the whole cost ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have been dredging in this river for some time, but this is the first time at that place.

Mr. BERGERON. At that place ?

Mr. BRODEUR. At this place ; it was the first time the dredging was done. This is on the Richelieu river between Lake Champlain and Chambly.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the depth of water maintained on the Richelieu ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Ten feet. Between St. John's and Lake Champlain there are large boats.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Between Lake Champlain and the River St. Lawrence is there a minimum depth of 10 feet ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is controlled by the depth of the Chambly canal, 7 feet.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that done by contract or how ?

Mr. BRODEUR. By government dredge.

River Saguenay—dredging, $75,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is dredging at Chicoutimi which is being done by our own dredge. It is for the improvement of the navigable channel of the Saguenay, by dredging through shoals below Chicoutimi. The intention is to carry the depth of water there to 23 feet. The dredging is now being done to 17 feet so as to allow temporary relief and it is intended afterwards to continue it to 23 feet so as to allow vessels and steamships to come up the Saguenay river to Chicoutimi.

Mr. BERGERON. Are these vessels that go to the gulf ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, trans-Atlantic vessels. There is a large export of pulp from the mills there. I think one of the largest pulp mills in this country is established at Chicoutimi.

Mr. BERGERON. How do they get there to-day ?

Mr. BRODEUR. They are loaded by lighters.

Mr. BERGERON. How far do they come up the Saguenay ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Within 9 miles of Chicoutimi.

Mr. BERGERON. And this is to bring them to Chicoutimi ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. AMES. Will the work of one dredge cost $75,000 in a single season there ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed it is intended to put two dredges if we can find another one.

Mr. AMES. The average cost of the dredge is less than $100 a day ; that would mean 750 days of dredging. Do you plan to give 750 days of dredging this season ?

Mr. BRODEUR. If we can get two dredges.

Mr. AMES. That would take ten dredges working two and a half months each ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We work seven months.

Mr. AMES. 750 days on one dredge would be equivalent to five dredges working 150 days each. I do not see how you are going to spend that with two dredges ?

Mr. BRODEUR. If we can get the dredges the money can be easily spent. I am informed by the department these dredges are working day and night so that makes two days for each one.

Mr. AMES. Do you mean it costs $200 a day ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It would be $400 if there are two dredges.

Mr. AMES. Does it cost $200 a day to run a dredge day and night ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. AMES. There are a good many fixed charges and it should not cost twice as much to run twenty-four hours as to run twelve hours. I think we should have fuller details as to the number of men engaged, &c.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the number of that dredge ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is the 'International.'

Mr. BERGERON. How much can she do in a day ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is supposed to do about 1,500 yards in that kind of material.

Mr. AMES. I do not think the minister catches the point I am making. He wants $75,000 for dredging and states it takes $100 a day, for each dredge. That would mean 750 dredging days. It would require five dredges working 150 days each to use up the $75,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed by the chief engineer there are 216 working days during the navigation season. These dredges are working day and night, that would make $400 a day, and this for 216 days would make $85,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Are they working there now ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'International' is going out there. My hon. friend will see that $75,000 is not too much.

Mr. BERGERON. She will not work five months this year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We will begin on the 1st of July and work until the end of the season and then next spring until the first of July. We are voting money to be expended during the fiscal year 1905-6 which includes from July 1st, 1905 to July 1st, 1906.

Mr. BERGERON. Why is this revote of $25,000 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Because we only spent $30,000 last year.

Mr. BERGERON. When was the work commenced ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Minto' began to work in July, 1904.

Mr. BERGERON. How much did she spend last year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There was spent for the 'Minto' $11,032.73, for the tug $2,000 and for the 'Champlain' $1,250. And the sum of $15,000 on account of dredging in the upper basin of the River Saguenay was transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries to recoup it for disbursements.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How much will the whole work cost ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The whole work of making a twenty-foot channel will cost in the neighbourhood of $300,000. It is to enable transatlantic vessels to reach Chicoutimi.

Mr. BERGERON. What kind of material do they take out there ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Sand, boulders and hardpan.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there any danger of the channel filling up again with sand ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that there is not.

Rivière St. Louis—improvements, $7,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This revote of $7,000 is to make improvements in dredging the channel of Rivière St. Louis. The channel is to be six miles long, thirty feet wide and six feet deep at ordinary low water. It is carried on with a view to prevent the overflow of the land adjoining the water-course.

Mr. BERGERON. Can this work be completed for $7,000 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No. I am informed that the money voted last year will have to be revoted.

Mr. BERGERON. There was $15,000 voted last. A dredge was built, costing, I suppose, $8,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is the amount spent.

Mr. BERGERON. It has taken all the time to build the dredge, and she has not done any work. If she is not set at work, the money spent in building her will be lost, because she cannot be taken away. But this six miles of dredging cannot be done for $7,000. Unless money is voted, the money already spent will be lost.

Mr. BRODEUR. The total cost will be about $25,000. As my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) knows the dredge was completed too late to work last season, and it is only now that she is ready to work.

Mr. BERGERON. But unless money is voted in the supplementary estimates, the dredge cannot go on.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is the vote.

Mr. BERGERON. But there is nothing to pay for work done between now and July first.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, $15,000 has been voted.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the dredge at work now ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, but she is getting ready for work.

Mr. BERGERON. This new dredge was built last year, but, because she was completed too late in the season, or for some other reason, she has not done any work. She should have been ready this spring to earn the money voted last year. And I do not see how she is to go on working through the whole season when only $7,000 is voted.

Mr. BRODEUR. The dredge was not wholly completed last year, and the work necessary for completion has occupied the present season. But I am told she is now ready for work and will soon begin.

Mr. BERGERON. This $7,000 will not go far. Is there to be a vote in the supplementary estimates ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The chief engineer informs me that $7,000 will cover the work that will be done this season.

Rivière St. Louis—feeders—opening waterways between Ste. Anicet and Ste. Barbe, $10,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote is asked to carry on projected improvements at the head of Rivière St. Louis with a view to securing an outlet for drainage waters and so preventing the rising of Lake St. Francis as a result of the dams built in 1840 by the united provinces of Upper and Lower Canada at the head of the Beauharnois canal.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that work going on ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No work has been done. That is why we are asking a revote of the whole amount.

Mr. WALSH. Was work done there in the fall of 1904 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There was some work done for a few weeks.

Mr. WALSH. About what time of the year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The expenditure was from 1st July to 1st December—I have no more definite date.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that only a few men were on that work about the latter part of October and early in November ?

Mr. BRODEUR. That may be ; I do not know.

Mr. BERGERON. What work is to be done ?

Mr. BRODEUR. As I have explained, the government intend to secure an outlet for the water which, coming from the St. Lawrence now overflows the land in that locality. The people there claim—and it would seem that their contention is correct though I have no information on the subject myself—that this overflow has been caused by the action of the government. So, this money is voted to prevent the repetition of this overflow. I am sure the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Walsh) will not object to the expenditure.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to know where the $5,000 was spent ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was only $500.

Mr. WALSH. In 1904-5 there was a vote of $15,000, and I see now that there is a revote of only $10,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. The estimates before us were prepared about the beginning of January, and it was expected that a certain amount of money from the vote of last year would be spent before the expiry of the fiscal year, 1st July next. That is the reason a revote of only $10,000 is asked.

Mr. WALSH. I do not object to the vote but I would like to know whether the work is actually to be proceeded with ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is not going on at present.

Mr. WALSH. But we understand that it will be prosecuted.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know whether the government has taken any definite steps as to that, because we must ascertain whether the cost will not be too large.

Mr. WALSH. I believe that a survey and estimate have been made ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, there was an estimate that the work would cost $96,000.

Mr. BERGERON. This amount for improvements at St. Louis for which $15,000 was voted last year and this item of——

St. Louis, feeders—opening waterways between St. Anicet and Ste. Barbe, $10,000.

—are as matter of fact the same work. It is a good thing and should be done. Work has been carried on here for many years. A great many works have been carried on in the River St. Louis in the last twenty-five years but they have not all been completed. My hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue understands very well that there is a good deal of politics in this.

Mr. BRODEUR. There was.

Mr. BERGERON. This work lies between Huntingdon and Beauharnois which were before the last election both represented by friends of the government. The government came to the conclusion that it might exercise an influence in favour of their friends to have a certain amount of money voted for this work. Consequently $15,000 was voted for the improvements at St. Louis. The question as to the best method of doing that work was discussed for a long time. The government or the department finally came to the conclusion that it would be done better by a dredge. This is a matter in regard to which there is a difference of opinion. My own impression is that it might be done better in another way. But, it was decided to have the work done by a dredge. Any money which was appropriated for the deepening of the river was expended on the construction of a dredge. The work of constructing the dredge was carried on until a few days before the election. They were paying one superintendent $3 a day to superintend another superintendent and so on. A few days before the election the dredge was working so hard that it broke down. After the election it was so late in the season that it had to stop work. Another $15,000 was voted for opening the waterways between St. Anicet and Ste. Barbe but my hon. friend does not know whether anything is going on or not. The government have not made up their mind how much it will cost. I want to be more just to the government. I have no doubt that before they decided to ask parliament to vote that money they found out how much the work could be done for. I think the estimate of $96,000 is too high. If the officers of the department search the files they will find that there is a report which was made by Mr. Parent, the engineer of the canal some years ago, in which he estimates that the work can be done for a great deal less by doing it in a different way. This is the first time I have seen the item placed in this form 'opening waterways between St. Anicet and Ste. Barbe.' Formerly it was to make a kind of dam to keep the water in Lake St. Louis.

Mr. BRODEUR. Was there not some work done in the old days?

Mr. BERGERON. There was some done but not much. It was a great deal harder to get money from the government then than it is now. This vote will go through but as Huntingdon and Beauharnois are not now represented by the same men the work will no doubt stop.

Mr. BRODEUR. Quite the reverse. We are doing some work on the River St. Louis.

Mr. BERGERON. On the River St. Louis you built a dredge. Unless that dredge is put to work this money will be completely lost because she cannot be taken anywhere else. She has to stay there and unless my hon. friend places some more money in the supplementary estimates to keep that dredge at work until the end of the season the money already spent will have been spent in an almost useless way. I think it is very important that some work should be done between Anicet and Ste. Barbe. My hon. friend, I am sure, will find that the amount of money which he has mentioned there is necessary, but before the government asked parliament to vote $15,000 for that part of the work they surely must have had an idea of how much it would cost, and they must know that the work there was promised to be done. It was promised by Mr. Loy and his friends and it was promised by the former Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) very often in my presence. It is a good work, it should be done and I call upon my hon. friend to see that the money which is voted is spent in prosecuting this work to as great an extent as possible.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know why my hon. friend should complain so much of the action of the government. The money has been voted. He says that he was eighteen years asking for the money to do this work and that he could not get it; yet, because we have begun the work and because we have begun the construction of a dredge which was absolutely necessary, my hon. friend complains. He suggests another way of doing the work. I would like to know what other way—by pick and shovel?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think it will be much more expensive than to do the work by dredging even if the dredge could be used only in that place. It is a work which will cost some money and I think that if the work were done by pick and shovel it would not be done as satisfactorily as it would be done by a dredge to say nothing of the fact that it would cost a great deal more. My hon. friend should not complain of the fact that the late member succeeded in having money voted for this work after my hon. friend had been unsuccessfully asking for it for eighteen years. If the late member was fortunate enough to have the necessary money voted for that work which he declares himself to be a very necessary work, what has my hon. friend to find fault with? Now, the work is going on. The dredge has been completed and the work will go on. The money which has been voted, I understand, will cover the expenditure on account of that dredge during the year.

Mr. BERGERON. Now that the money is voted it should be expended for the object for which it is voted. I say it is a good object. If Mr. Loy were here he would not thank my hon. friend at all. That money was promised to him about five years ago and it was put in the estimates every year but it never amounted to anything until the election came on and Mr. Loy himself has complained that he has been played upon. He has complained that the work was not done as it should have been done. This was an election promise and if my hon. friend met Mr. Loy I am sure he would tell him so himself. I cannot ask for any favour, as I have no right to ask a favour of my hon. friend.

Mr. BRODEUR. Why not?

Mr. BERGERON. No, no; I would not do it. I give credit to the government that they did vote the money and I take it as an indication that they intend to have the work done although they do it very late. The object is good.

Mr. BRODEUR. We had $15,000 voted last year and more than $8,000 has been already spent.

Mr. BERGERON. But you expended it upon the construction of a dredge. There is no work done yet.

Mr. BRODEUR. But, it is in connection with that work. I do not know why my hon. friend should complain because he admits that the dredge could be used only there. The dredge has been built for that purpose and it is beginning the work about which my hon. friend should not complain at all.

Mr. BERGERON. Why did the dredge not begin to work until May? She is not doing anything now, I understand.

Mr. BRODEUR. Because it was not completed.

Mr. BERGERON. It was completed last fall.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is not the information I have.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the hon. minister if any work is going on there. The only work which has been done there was done by this pick and shovel brigade which you speak of just before the last election. A few men were set at work before polling day.

Mr. BRODEUR. If there is too much complaint about the pick and shovel brigade I will drop the item pure and simple. Stands.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know that we should allow this item to stand. The hon. minister is not running the whole House. There is no use of getting mad because we choose to criticise an item. I think the hon. minister had better keep his temper.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am keeping my temper.

Mr. HENDERSON. Because a member from that section of the country chooses to offer a little fair criticism I think the hon. minister is not doing justice to his usual reputation in this House by standing up and threatening to drop the item.

Mr. BRODEUR. We will consider it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will give the Minister of Inland Revenue the credit of being courteous generally, but he made a mistake in attacking my young friend (Mr. Walsh) and threatening to drop this item. The minister can suit himself about dropping the item, but he should not drop it because a member on this side thought it his duty to offer reasonable criticism.

Mr. WALSH. If the minister had allowed me to finish my explanation, he would have understood my position. The work was promised by friends of the government, and I have no criticism as to that, but the men whose property is affected came to the conclusion that the work was not to be prosecuted, and they asked me a great many times to inquire about it. That was my object in mentioning the matter. Personally, I have no interest, but the people there have been promised it for years and they are interested. Nothing has been done to proceed with the work this year, and that is why I asked what was the intention of the government.

Mr. BARKER. I object to this further example of the very improper method in which the government deals with these matters. Last year $15,000 was granted for this work ; apparently a small sum was expended, and the minister tells us that up to the 1st of July next $5,000 will have been expended, and he asks a revote of $10,000. It transpires that the minister has an estimate of what this work is going to cost, which he says amounts to $96,000, but he says that estimate is an exaggeration.

Mr. BRODEUR. I said the estimate was $96,000, but I did not say it was exaggerated. That statement was made by the hon. member for Beauharnois.

Mr. BARKER. I have protested time and again against taking these small votes from year to year for a work that in the end will cost a very large sum of money. I am told by hon. gentlemen on this side that this is a deserving work, but we who do not know the locality are entitled to be told what the entire expenditure will be without being asked to vote blindly. Some of these expenditures would never be endorsed by parliament if we knew what their ultimate cost would be.

Mr. BRODEUR. The excavation is estimated to cost $69,000 ; the improvements at the mouth of the river, $6,000 ; three bridges, $6,000 ; clearing of the River St. Louis, $7,000 ; and $8,000, or 10 per cent, for superintendence and contingencies. The work may be done in a way to cost less than $96,000, but new surveys would have to be made for that.

Mr. BERGERON. Who made that report ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Michaud, the engineer of the district.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there not a report made by Mr. Parent some years ago ; an entirely different report ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The chief engineer informs me there is no record of it in the Department of Public Works, although it may be in the Department of Railways and Canals. Twenty years ago the government did work in connection with this scheme.

Mr. BARKER. Does the minister gravely tell the House that $5,000 has been expended, and that he does not know what this work is going to cost ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There have been only $500 spent.

Mr. BARKER. The minister said $300 or $400 had been spent and that the balance of the $5,000 would be expended up to the 30th of June.

Mr. BRODEUR. No. There was an expenditure of $548 up to the time these estimates were prepared, and it was then estimated, in January last, that $4,439 would be expended up to the 30th of June, but that money has not been expended.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why does not the minister ask for a revote of the balance of the $15,000 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Because the estimate had been prepared in that way, as I explained.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was the $451 spent for ?

Mr. BRODEUR. In pick and shovel work on the land.

Mr. TAYLOR. What work has been done for that expenditure, and why was not the balance of the vote of last year expended ? Is it the intention of the minister to discontinue the work altogether ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I will report to the Minister of Public Works what has been said with regard to this work, and I suppose we shall have to examine the question and see whether it is advisable to continue the work or not.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman said he would drop the item.

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly, if the member for the county wants to have the item droped.

Mr. TAYLOR. He did not ask to have it dropped. He was giving it fair and honest criticism, and the minister off his own bat suggested that he would drop the item. It looks as if the $15,000 was put in last year for election purposes, and now that the election is over the minister is ready to drop the item and not go on with the work.

Mr. BERGERON. This work is not the same as the work I was speaking of. The object of the vote is to prevent the waters of Lake St. Francis flooding the farms of St. Anicet and Ste. Barbe. The report of Mr. Parent, an engineer of the government some years ago, recommended the building of a dam, which seems to be the more natural plan for preventing the waters of Lake St. Francis flooding these farms. The dam was partly built by the government years ago, and if it were continued, there would be no need of having waterways or bridges. That is always the idea I had of that work, and I am convinced that the figures of its cost was a great deal less than the amount mentioned by my hon. friend for the proposed work. This is a very important work, as most of these farms are valuable, and they are covered with water for a long time in the year. I was glad to see the money appropriated for this work, but why was the work not commenced in time? We hear that a few men were there with picks and shovels; but that was not serious work, which is also evident from the fact that my hon. friend is willing to let the item stand. These are two different things, although they may both be connected with the River St. Louis. I want to hear what my hon. friend has to say before I give further criticism of the item.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. member for Beauharnois evidently thinks that it would be better to proceed in some different way from that suggested in this vote. This vote is for the opening of waterways, but my hon. friend thinks it would be better to extend the dyke which was commenced some years ago, and he says there is a report of Mr. Parent to that effect. There is no such report in the Public Works Department; but in view of the remarks of my hon. friend, I think it is the duty of the Public Works Department to look into the matter and see whether the suggestion he makes is better than what is proposed in this vote. Under the circumstances, I think it is perfectly justifiable to wait until the minister is here and can inquire into the matter and see whether it is better to adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend is not serious. I am not proposing any plan; I am not managing the affairs of the Public Works Department; I take things as I find them. The present engineer of the department has made a report; the department have acted on that report, and have proposed a vote to parliament. I want the department to carry on their own works. I was answering my hon. friend, who said that the report mentioned the sum of $96,000. I am not going to prevent my hon. friend spending that money if he wants to spend it or thinks the expenditure of it is necessary. In answer to that, I said I had seen a report in which the estimate was a great deal less, and according to which the work was to be done in a different way. The report I saw was that of an engineer, but of course I am not competent to judge between the two reports. All I ask my hon. friend is to carry out the work for which the money was voted last year. It will be childish for him to say: we will wait to find out whether you are not right or wrong. If he would agree to take my opinion on everything, of course let him accept this with the rest; but if he wants to leave the item out merely because I have pointed to another report, I am opposed to that.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote is asked for on the advice of a local engineer. My hon. friend informs me that there is another report, not in the Public Works Department but probably in the Department of Railways and Canals, because the engineer who made it was then the engineer of the latter department.

Mr. BERGERON. It is true that Mr. Parent was the engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, but when I was urging the Department of Public Works to have the work done—because we have been asking to have it done for twenty-five years—that department asked Mr. Parent who was on the spot, to make a report, which he did.

Mr. BRODEUR. The chief engineer informs me that he never knew anything about that report of Mr. Parent, and he infers that as Mr. Parent was then the engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, his report must be in that department. If my hon. friend however says it is in the Department of Public Works, we will look for it there. The object of the government is to drain these lands because it is complained that if they are now covered by water, that is due to some works which the government built in connection with the canal. That is why I think my hon. friend is mistaken when he says that the report must have passed through the Public Works Department.

Mr. BERGERON. At that time the whole thing was in the Department of Public Works.

Mr. BRODEUR. But my hon. friend is referring to a report which was made at a time when the Public Works Department was not included in the Department of Railways and Canals. My hon. friend says that the plan we are proposing is much more expensive than that recommended in the report of Mr. Parent. Does he then think that I would be justified, in the absence of the minister, in committing the department to an expenditure which could be reduced, if my hon. friend's statement be correct. If we can save $20,000 or $25,000 in the draining of those lands by the adoption of the suggestion of my hon. friend, we ought certainly to adopt it.

Mr. BERGERON. I am not speaking as an engineer, and I would not say that Mr. Parent's report is the better one of the two. My hon. friend should take the report of Mr. Michaud, and ask parliament to vote the money, and there will be nothing to prevent his having the work done for a less amount of money if possible. But he should not try to throw the responsibility on me if nothing should be done.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not doing that, but I say that my hon. friend is making a very valuable suggestion. He says there is a report somewhere, according to which this work may be done for less money. No money has yet been spent, why then should the government go on without looking up this other report ?

Mr. TAYLOR. That will not prevent my hon. friend allowing the item to pass. Then he can consult with the minister, and when we come to concurrence, if the minister thinks we ought to drop the item, let him drop it. But my hon. friend should not get up in a huff and say : Because my hon. friend criticises, we will drop the item.

Mr. BRODEUR. All I said was that the item should stand for the reason given by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). But I am quite willing it should pass with the understanding that the minister himself will look into it.

Mr. WALSH. I do not believe that the hon. minister wants to be unfair to me, especially as I am a young member. I certainly was not opposing the vote. On the contrary I wanted to know whether it is going to be expended, because we have been asking a long time to have this work done, and this waterway will have to be built some time or other.

Mr. BRODEUR. What does my hon. friend think about a dyke ?

Mr. WALSH. You will still have to make a waterway as well as a dyke. This land was flooded on account of some works erected at the mouth of the canal by the government, and the government recognized its obligation by paying many years ago the damages caused to some of these lands. In order to drain the lands, there must be a ditch or canal to connect with the St. Lawrence river. A dyke would not be sufficient.

Mr. BRODEUR. Suppose a dyke would be made on the bank which would prevent the water overflowing, and that was found less expensive than a canal, does not my hon. friend think it would be better to adopt that system ?

Mr. WALSH. That is not practicable because there is a river there which flows into the St. Lawrence, and the water is backed up this river and overflows the lands. It is necessary that a waterway be built on that account, because by closing the outlet you are preventing the water from being drained off.

Rivière Verte—improvements at mouth, $5,800.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to cover the estimated cost of completing the work commenced in 1904-5 near the mouth of the river, together with a widening and deepening of the centre of the channel, and is required to carry away the water of the swollen stream in the spring. The object is to prevent the properties on this side of the river being eroded by ice and currents in the spring.

Sacré Cœur—wharf, $9,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is required to complete the wharf, 210 feet long, which is being built on the north side of the Saguenay, at this place, about twelve miles above its mouth. The work is under contract.

St. Alexis, Ha Ha bay pier, $17,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is also under contract. It is to complete the pier 1,448 feet long began in 1899-1900. There will be a depth of 9 to 10 feet at low water spring tide.

St. André de Kamouraska wharf—repairs to earth approach, &c., $6,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for the accommodation of another block of cribwork, measuring 100 feet wide, 20 feet in diameter, in order to accommodate the increasing traffic. The present structure is only 24 feet long and altogether too small for that purpose.

Ste. Anne de la Pocatière—reconstruction of pier, $1,200.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to cover the estimated cost of rebuilding the pier which was destroyed in 1905.

Mr. BERGERON. What county is that in ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Kamouraska.

St. Charles Borromée—wharf, $4,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote is asked in order to make further provision towards the construction of a small wharf. It is in the county of Chicoutimi.

Ste. Famille, Island of Orleans—extension of wharf, $700.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that a new wharf ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is an old work.

Mr. BERGERON. When was it built ?

Mr. BRODEUR. About twenty years ago.

Mr. BARKER. Will this complete the work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Ste. Fidèle wharf, $11,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to complete the payments for 1906 in connection with the public works being built at Ste. Fidèle in Charlevois.

Mr. BARKER. Will that complete the work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, it is expected to complete it.

Mr. BARKER. Is that the estimate given to the department that it will complete ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, according to the estimate of the department.

Mr. BERGERON. $3,000 was voted before which will make $14,000 in all.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

St. Francois, Island of Orleans—approach to isolated block, $10,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to make provision for the construction of a length of 200 feet of cribwork to the isolated block. It stands at a distance of 650 feet from high water mark. It is proposed to call for tenders. This is in Montmorency county.

Mr. BERGERON. That is a revote ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The department had no time to prepare plans last fall. The plans are being prepared now.

St. Francois de Sales—wharf, &c., on River James, $7,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to make provision for the construction of a block from the river.

Mr. BARKER. Why was that not expended last year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand the department had no time to prepare the plans.

Mr. BARKER. The department took a grant before the first of July for this money?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, it was after July 1st that parliament prorogued.

Mr. BARKER. A month afterwards. Was nothing done last year, was no estimate made ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Nothing has been done, no.

Mr. BARKER. Was there any reason for granting it last year when it was known the work could not be done ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was expected the work would be done last year, but the plans could not be prepared.

Mr. BARKER. Had the November elections anything to do with it ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is true the elections were held then, but we might expect the plans could be prepared ; there were many works to be carried on.

Mr. BARKER. There are four items here, one after the other all in the same position, money granted last year and not a dollar has been spent. These grants were made two or three months before the elections. I think the inference is fair, it was all done in August or July, preparatory to the autumn elections, and not a dollar was spent, and now the government come back this year for renewals of these votes.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is mistaken. For most of the works for which money was voted last year the plans were prepared. Parliament prorogued late and it was not known before the appropriation was voted whether the money would be at the disposal of the department or not. I must mention the fact—I do not know for what reason the criticism is made—but in my district there was a public building in which I was much interested, it was of the greatest importance to me that the work should be done, but I could not get the plans prepared. The officers of the department did their best, they worked day and night upon different works for which money was voted, but the money having been voted so late in some cases the plans could not be prepared.

Mr. BARKER. And the electors were allowed to live in expectation.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think this had anything to do——

Mr. BARKER. No ?

Mr. BRODEUR——with the election. And I am sure the member for Laval (Mr. Leonard) will not say that.

Mr. BERGERON. Are plans prepared during the winter ?

Mr. BRODEUR. They are being prepared now.

Mr. BARKER. Are they ready ? You have had a whole year.

Mr. BRODEUR. They are just about ready.

St. Fulgence wharf, $5,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This covers the estimated cost of extending the block and span high water wharf commenced in 1904 on the north side of the River Saguenay, 10 miles below Chicoutimi.

Mr. BARKER. Will this complete that work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. The estimate given to the government shows that this $5,000 will complete the work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

St. Gédéon Islands—wharf, $2,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This work is under contract, it is to complete.

St. Jean, Island of Orleans—repairs to wharf, $5,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What county is this in ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Montmorency.

Mr. WILMOT. I would like to inquire if the provincial government is called upon to give any share of the expense for the construction of these works ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, they are public property. It is repairs made to a wharf which belongs to the government.

Mr. WILMOT. The reason I asked was that in the River St. John, New Brunswick there is an amount here :

To provide for contributions to local government, not to exceed one-half the first cost of wharfs built by them in tidal waters.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand that is in virtue of an understanding between two governments.

Mr. WILMOT. I should think a similar understanding should be made in both cases.

Mr. BRODEUR. These are inland waters, I understand ; but the present work is on the River St. Lawrence.

Mr. WILMOT. The River St. John is a very important river.

Mr. FOWLER. The St. John is a navigable river, as the St. Lawrence is.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is it of as much importance ?

Mr. FOWLER. No ; but the same principle applies.

Mr. BRODEUR. This work was built many years ago, and the vote is only for repairs.

Mr. WILMOT. I am not complaining of this expenditure, but I think that if the Dominion government build wharfs on the St Lawrence, they ought to build them on other waters.

St. Simeon wharf—extension, $15,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is under contract.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the nature of the work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to complete the work in connection with the approach to the isolated pier at St. Simeon, which is being built under contract. The amount of the contract is $19,062.67, and the contractor is Napoleon Trudel.

Mr. INGRAM. How many tenders were there ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not that information, but I can get it if the hon. gentleman desires. The tenders were advertised for publicly, and the contract was given to the lowest tenderer.

Terrebonne—wharf with approach, on River Jesus, $7,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Are the plans ready for this ?

Mr. BRODEUR. They are being made ready. It is just the same case as the other.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Are those works being carried out simultaneously with those that are in process at St. Francis of Sales for which a vote has just been taken ?

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Although the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Walsh) does not seem to take any stock in the statement made by the government when asking a vote from the House in connection with such works, I may tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Léonard) that they will be carried out in the proper time. I am quite sure that the works at St. Francis of Sales will be dealt with in the same way as those at Terrebonne which have just been referred to.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I do not find any fault with the works contemplated here; on the contrary, I believe that they will serve a useful purpose. I entertain no doubt about their being carried out, owing to the fact that both the county of Terrebonne and that of Laval will be benefited by those works.

Mr. DESJARDINS. (Translation.) Those works concern not only the county of Terrebonne, but also two other constituencies. They will prove useful to the three counties of Laval, Terrebonne and L'Assomption.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) As I said a little while ago, I find no fault with the contemplated works ; but I wanted to know whether they were to be carried out this year, and whether the government intended to redeem a promise made long ago.

Yamaska river—dredging, $10,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is under contract.

Mr. BERGERON. Who has the contract ?

Mr. BRODEUR. William Davis & Son, of Ottawa. This is dredging at the mouth of the River Yamaska, which empties into the St. Lawrence. The work has been going on for some time.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the object of this work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is at the mouth of the river and allows navigation of the Yamaska, which is navigable for several miles above this place.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not true that there are certain saw-mills on the Yamaska, and that this work is done to benefit these mills, and should be done by private enterprise rather than at the expense of the country ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No ; there are no mills there that I know of, and I know the place very well.

Mr. FOWLER. What vessels ply there—ocean steamers ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, but market boats running between places on the river and Sorel.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me the same argument that would justify this work would justify work on the St. John. If the Yamaska empties into the St. Lawrence, the St. John empties into the Bay of Fundy.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think that dredging in New Brunswick is done by the government.

Mr. FOWLER. Only in the harbours, not in tributaries of the St. John.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that there were two dredges working on tributaries of the St. John last year.

Mr. BERGERON. Did we not vote some money in the supplementary estimates for this dredging at the mouth of the Yamaska ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes ; $12,200 has been spent so far. It must have been $2,000 that was voted in the supplementary estimates. I have not the figures before me.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the material that is taken out ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Soft and hard clay and quicksand.

Mr. BERGERON. Does not that quicksand fall back into the channel ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not to a very large extent.

Mr. BERGERON. How far is the river navigable from its mouth ?

Mr. BRODEUR. About fifteen miles, I suppose. My hon. friend will remember that some years ago, in order to afford navigation on that river, the government built a lock there, which has cost a large sum of money.

Mr. BERGERON. That lock supports navigation for what distance?

Mr. BRODEUR. For about fifteen miles.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the matter with the lock now?

Mr. BRODEUR. The lock is there.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it in operation ? Was it not carried away by an accident?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, it is a very useful work.

Harbours and rivers—Nova Scotia—Apple river wharf, $3,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the hon. minister to make a brief explanation of each one of these items stating the county in which the proposed work is, the purpose for which it is required, the amount that is already expended, the total amount that is estimated for the completion of the work, and the probable date of completion in each instance. If the hon. minister will give us these particulars it would save time.

Mr. BRODEUR. This breakwater and wharf is in Cumberland county. This is a vote which is asked to be taken to make provision according to an estimate submitted by the chief engineer for completing a breakwater and wharf at Apple river during this year. The total cost of the proposed work will be $6,000. The Apple river falls into the Chignecto up at the head of the Bay of Fundy. At its mouth there is a good and well sheltered harbour.

Baddeck—wharf, $5,000.

Mr BRODEUR. This work is in North Victoria. This revote is asked to be taken to make provision towards the construction of a public wharf 40 feet wide at Baddeck, which will reach a depth of 18 feet at low water on Little Bras d'Or lake as requested by the inhabitants of the town. It appears that there is no port on the island of Cape Breton from which there is shipped as much of the soil as from Baddeck, that the imports as well as the number of passengers landed here are large and that all imports to and exports are by water. The appropriation for the current fiscal year was $5,000. No money has been expended. There are three sites which have been offered, but no definite choice has been made as to these sites.

Mr. BARKER. Have the plans not been prepared until now?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, the delay is in regard to the site.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. minister has omitted to state the total cost of the work and the date of completion.

Mr. BRODEUR. The maximum estimate of the cost of the site is $5,000. The whole work will cost $15,000.

Barachois—boat harbour, $1,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This revote is to make provision for protecting the anchorage at Barachois in rear of the shingle beach, by constructing a light breastwork that will arrest the heavy surf, also blasting with dynamite a narrow ledge or rock which obstructs the entrance to the boat harbour. There was an appropriation of $1,500 last year but no money was spent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will that complete the work?

Mr. BRODEUR. The cost will be that amount.

Bass river—repairs to wharf, $500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for the purpose of completing repairs commenced in 1904 on the Bass river wharf in order to place the structure in a serviceable condition.

Bay St. Lawrence—boat harbour, $5,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This work is in North Victoria. This revote is asked to make provision towards converting Macdonald's Pond in to a safe boat harbour, and it is to complete the work of opening a channel 30 feet wide across the beach which closes the entrance of this pond at low water. The total cost of the work contemplated will be $10,000.

Mr. FOWLER. We had an experience in connection with making a boat harbour in the constituency of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). In that instance they cut a channel through to an inland body of water. After they had got the channel completed the water ran out. Have the minister's engineers looked into this matter carefully to make sure that the same thing will not be repeated?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed by the chief engineer that they will look into that question.

Bear cove—breakwater, $5,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This work is in Digby county. This vote of $5,500 is asked to make provision for the construction of a breakwater at Bear Cove between Cape Cove and Meteghan, each four miles distant, that will afford protection to the fishing boats of the locality. The total cost is $4,500.

Beckerton—public wharf, $2,700.

Mr. BRODEUR. This revote is required to complete during the year the block and span wharf which is being built at Beckerton. The total cost will be $4,200.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is Beckerton ?

Mr. BRODEUR. In Guysborough county.

Breton cove—boat landing, $4,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is under contract. This is to complete the wharf which is in course of construction. The amount of the contract is $5,585.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That seems to be a very large amount for a mere boat landing.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, this is the report of the engineer.

Mr. FOWLER. What county?

Mr. BRODEUR. North Victoria.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why should a boat landing cost so much as that?

Mr. BRODEUR. That was the lowest tender that was received.

Mr. FOWLER. Who has the contract ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Reid & Archibald.

Mr. FOWLER. Has any work been done yet?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is expected that $2,250 will be expended up to the 30th June.

Bridgewater—dredging, $5,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This work is in Lunenburg county. This revote is to be applied towards dredging the River La Have and extending the channel as far as the steamboat wharf, five-eighths of a mile below the bridge in the centre of the town of Bridgewater.

Mr. BARKER. Why did you not do the work last year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It will be done by a government dredge, and there was no dredge available.

Broad cove—repairs to wharf, $3,700.

Mr. BRODEUR. In Inverness county. This work is according to the estimate of the chief engineer ; nothing has been spent.

Carlos' breakwater, $5,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. Guysboro county. This is to make provision for a breakwater 900 feet long which it is believed will afford protection for the boats.

Mr. BARKER. What is the total cost of this work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It will be $29,000.

Clark's harbour—removal of rocks from channel, $4,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in Shelbourne county.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any estimate of the total cost ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There cannot be any definite estimate because they do not know what quantity will have to be removed. The population there is 1,500, and the total expenditure has been $14,000 so far.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You would not go into a work of that kind without some idea of what the total cost will be. It might be reasonable to do it if it would cost $25,000, and not reasonable if it would cost $500,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is expected that this amount will cover the whole expenditure, but that is not certain.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it a river harbour ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Country harbour—removal of obstructions, $2,200.

Mr. BRODEUR. The estimated cost of this is $2,200.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the intention of the government to make Country harbour the terminus of the Grand Trunk Pacific ? I think a former member for Guysboro' advocated that.

Mr. BRODEUR. It might be a good place for that purpose if there is not too much objection to it.

Mr. OSLER. Nearly the whole of these are revotes. Why do you put them in the estimates from year to year ; there is no election now.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is the intention to carry them out this year.

Cow bay (Port Morien)—repairs to breakwater, $20,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to make provision for carrying on during the fiscal year repairs and improvements and extensions in order to insure the stability of the breakwater still standing, and restoring it to the original length. The total probable cost is $225,000.

Mr. INGRAM. How much has been spent ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Over $200,000 was spent some years ago.

Mr. INGRAM. Do you mean that now you intend to spend $225,000 or only $25,000 more ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The cost of restoration and repairs will be $225,000 more.

Mr. OSLER. What business is done there ?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Coal mining.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What company ships from there ?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. The Newcastle Company.

Mr. OSLER. How much coal was shipped last year ?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. I have not the figures for the output last year but it was about 40,000 tons. They have been developing during the winter and the intended output during the coming season is about 1,000 tons per day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is this the place where the Archibald mine was ?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That mine was acquired by the Dominion Coal Company ?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Dominion Coal Company do not ship from there ; this is a new company ?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. This is a new company called the Gowrie Blockhouse Collieries.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Developing a new seam ?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why do they not ship from the same place as the Dominion Coal Company ?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. The Dominion Coal Company have abandoned the piers at Cow bay. This colliery company have no connection with the railway, and are entirely dependent on their own wharf for the shipment of their coal. They have erected a short distance from this breakwater a pier, and this breakwater will protect that pier. They cannot build their pier sufficiently large to accommodate their traffic until the breakwater is restored to its former condition. The work on Cow bay is a very old work on which twenty years ago or more a very large amount of money was expended. Ten or twelve years ago about 200 feet of that breakwater was carried away, and nothing was done to save it. The result has been that during the last eight or nine years a large amount of money has had to be expended to preserve what remained of that work. What did remain has been preserved and is in fairly good condition now ; but in order that the breakwater may become useful to the port, it is necessary that it should be restored. The coal company cannot carry on their work unless the breakwater is restored.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the total quantity of coal supposed to be in the seam that is being developed ? Will it continue at the rate of 1,000 tons a day for any great length of time ?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Yes. There are millions and millions of tons of coal in the area held by these people.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the seam under the Archibald seam ?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Yes, and their property is a submarine area. They have now reached their own property, and last year they drove their levels in order to get a considerable output this season.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It amounts, I suppose, to building a shipping place for this company ? I do not say that may not be justifiable.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. I am perfectly willing to admit that it is the most important purpose that this breakwater will serve. At the same time, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that Cow bay is a very important fishing community, and the people who have fishing craft are entirely dependent on the breakwater for the safety of their craft. The present coal company are not using the breakwater for the purposes of their own shipment. They are erecting their own pier at a very considerable expense; but this breakwater is necessary to protect it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In other words, the breakwater forms a harbour, and it is to be put in the same position for this company that it was for the Archibald company years ago?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Precisely so.

Mr. BARKER. I would ask the minister to give us the details of the $225,000 that this work is likely to cost. What are the different portions of the expenditure?

Mr. BRODEUR. To construct and complete the dock removing the ballast deposit along the inner quay face and placing concrete blocks or quarried stone on seaward face and outer end of portion of breakwater still standing, $89,700; restoring the breakwater to its original length by constructing 260 feet of native timber cribwork filled with concrete placed along the continuation of the inner face of the work, and protecting with concrete blocks or quarried stone the seaward side of the proposed extension, $135,800.

Mr. AMES. Is it the intention of the government to do this by day labour, or will they call for tenders?

Mr. BRODEUR. By day's work.

Cow Bay Run—breakwater to protect outlet of harbour, $500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote is required for the purpose of completing the breakwater of strong ballast cribwork 125 feet long by 25 feet wide, which is being built outside of Cow bay run at the entrance of Halifax harbour in the county of Halifax.

Culloden breakwater, $2,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to make provision towards the construction of this breakwater for the protection of fishing boats. It is in the county of Digby.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What will be the total cost of this and the previous item?

Mr. BRODEUR. This will cost about $20,000.

Mr. OSLER. What is the size of the place?

Mr. BRODEUR. The population is about 1,000 fishermen.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the work started yet?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the cause of delay?

Mr. BRODEUR. Plans are now being prepared.

Mr. FOWLER. I might suggest a reason to the minister for all these votes. He will remember that we had an election last year, and previous to that election these promises were of course all made. That is the reason.

Cunningham Point—wharf on Milford Haven river, $2,360.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in Guysborough county and is to provide for lock and span work. Total expenditure $2,360.

Mr. INGRAM. This is exactly the same as the other case. Are the plans ready yet?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, nothing is ready yet.

Devil's Island—breakwater, $4,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is under contract.

Mr. INGRAM. Is that in North Oxford?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, it is in Halifax county.

Mr. INGRAM. I thought from the name it was in North Oxford.

Mr. BRODEUR. $5,900 is the amount of the contract.

Digby pier—repairs and renewals, $1,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this the contract which was made by the member for Digby with the town of Digby?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know anything about that contract. I think that happened before the election and did not give any bad result.

Mr. INGRAM. Was it not to be $5,000?

Mr. FOWLER. That was what the member for Digby was to get.

East Chezzetcook—breakwater, $4,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for extending the breakwater a distance of 400 feet. It will have a total length of about 800 feet and cost $8,000. It is in the county of Halifax.

Freeport—landing pier, $14,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to provide for the protection of the landing pier on the east side of Grand Passage. It is to be let by contract this year. The lowest tender is $13,700.

Gabarus—harbour improvement, $20,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to provide for all improvements during the present year and is required to give protection to vessels entering during south-westerly gales. The contract is for $19,000 given to the lowest tenderer. It is in the county of Cape Breton.

Georgeville wharf—extension, $1,300.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in the county of Antigonish and is required to add a wing of 400 feet long. The expenditure will be $2,300.

Habitant river—wharf at Canning, $16,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in East King and is to provide for the construction of a wharf on the north side, which will have a river front of 20 feet, mean depth 129 feet. This is the estimated cost.

Harrigan cove—wharf, $800.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to provide for the construction of an approach 700 feet long, 20 feet wide. It is in Halifax county and the total cost will be $2,000.

Indian harbour—wharf, $1,400.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is also in Halifax county, and the total cost is $2,000.

Inverness (Broad cove) Mines harbour—repairs to harbour works, $10,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for the extension of the harbour works built by the Inverness Coal Company. The total cost will be $10,000. The work will not be started until the property is transferred to the Crown.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How is it that a harbour on which you propose to spend money can be private property ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We are having it transferred to the Crown because if it were left in the hands of a private corporation, that company would have the monopoly and could prevent others using it. It belongs now to the Inverness Railway and Coal Company.

Mr. OSLER. This is to provide the coal company with a wharf and get the government to spend $10,000 on it ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It will be transferred to the government.

Mr. OSLER. Why should the government take it over ?

Mr. BRODEUR. In order to give the general public the use of it.

Mr. OSLER. I am interested in some shipping in Lake Ontario in connection with the Niagara Navigation Company. We have had to build our own wharf. We have to keep it in repair. Other people must have a public wharf more or less and if the government are doing this it would be a good thing to transfer the wharf and get the government to keep it up.

Mr. BRODEUR. The company would then be willing to pay wharfage dues ?

Mr. OSLER. Certainly, if the government would take charge of it. On the face of it, this looks like a private wharf, owned by a private company, which is getting the government to relieve them from the responsibility of keeping it up ; and they make it a public wharf, the company getting the full benefit of it as they do now.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have a case in mind where a private company absolutely refused to transfer the wharf unless they got private use of it ; they would not allow the public to use the work as they chose. I do not know whether it would be good policy for the government to take over all the works, but I suppose where it is for the public advantage it should be done.

Mr. OSLER. What other necessity is there for this work ?

Mr. McLENNAN. The Inverness Coal Company agreed with the government to hand them over this harbour in the interests of the public, provided that parliament would make a grant in behalf of that harbour, in order that it would be improved to accommodate the public. There is now a town of about 3,000 inhabitants that has sprung up around that mine and in the vicinity of that harbour. The present company purchased these works from the original company who used them, but the present company have built a railway for their own purposes, and ships their coal at the Strait of Canso ; they have abandoned this harbour and these works altogether, so that it is the public that is now interested in the repair and fixing up of this harbour for public use.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it an artificial harbour ?

Mr. McLENNAN. It was a large pond—a small lake, in fact—and the original company that owned the mines cut a narrow isthmus that existed between this small lake and the sea and built two piers to protect the entrance to this harbour, and used it in a small way to make small shipments of coal when they were first developing that coal property, but they sold out to the present company, who built their own railway to ship from the Strait of Canso, where they now have one of the finest shipping places perhaps in North America ; it is just as good and extensive a shipping place as that of the Dominion Coal Company in Sydney, and they thus have no use whatever for the Broad Cove harbour, as it was formerly called. I say again it is the public that are interested in opening up this harbour, a considerable business having sprung up around the mines. The public are thus interested in the opening up of this harbour and having it for use, in order that the business interests of the place may be encouraged, particularly that a fair amount of competition may be set up with the company's railway, running sixty miles, over which almost every article of consumption for that town must be carried.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the nature of the work ; completing piers, dredging the harbour, deepening the channel, or what ?

Mr. McLENNAN. There are two piers built for the protection of the entrance to the harbour, in other words, to keep sand from being banked up at the entrance of the harbour. These piers have been wrecked by storms from time to time, and the company at present owning them, having no particular interest in maintaining them, allowed them to go to wreck, and the object of the government now, in the public interest, is to keep the company to the original engagement, that is to hand the harbour and these old works over to the public on condition that the government would rebuild those piers and otherwise render the harbour fit for shipping purposes. There is no doubt the company would use the harbour for local shipping of their coal in a small way to local ports as well as the public, but the government would not make a grant without the company first arranging to hand over the harbour to the public. The company are now hesitating to hand these works over, and until they do so the government refused to go on with the work, and the prospects are that the entrance to that harbour will very likely have to be expropriated by the government in the public interest, in order that this grant may be used for the purpose for which it was voted.

Mr. AMES. When the piers are built, will they be covered by the company with tracks and constructions of various kinds for handling the coal, so that the company would have a practical monopoly of the use of this harbour ?

Mr. McLENNAN. Oh, no ; they are simply brush and stone for the protection of the entrance to the harbour. The facilities for handling the coal are entirely within the harbour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the total amount ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $10,000.

Mr. FOWLER. It is understood that before the government spends this money they will have handed over this inside harbour that the member for Inverness speaks of ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That, as I understand, is a condition precedent to the expenditure of the money.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is the reason no expenditure has been made.

Mr TAYLOR. The member for Invesness said the government would have to expropriate it.

Mr. McLENNAN. Unless the company would keep up to their promise.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand the owners have agreed to transfer.

Mr. AMES. The money should be voted provisionally that no share of it would be spent in purchasing property.

Mr. BRODEUR. The committee may be sure that no money will be spent unless a transfer is made to the government.

Mr. BARKER. That is, all the money is to be spent on work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. There are no payments for property ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it is very much like the case of the harbour at Glace Bay last year, where some money was voted on the understanding it was not to be expended until the harbour to be converted into a public harbour should be transferred from the company. In that case, as in this, the harbour had been created, and it was practically an artificial harbour, used entirely for the purposes of a corporation and controlled by that corporation. The promise then made to the committee was, and the one I understand that is being made nows is, that the money will not be expended unless there is such a transfer as will make the harbour available in every way for the public use, so that it will cease to be a private harbour or private work, and will become, to all intents and purposes, a public harbour, just the same as if it had been a public harbour from the commencement. That is what I understand from the minister.

Janvrin's island wharf, $600.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote is to complete the wharf on the north side of this island. To complete it will cost $600.

Mr. INGRAM. What has been spent so far ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $2,000 has been expended and $600 is required to complete.

Mr. AMES. What county is this ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Richmond.

Mr. INGRAM. In the orignal work, was not $2,000 supposed to cover the whole expenditure ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes ; but the sum of $600 is required to complete.

Mr. INGRAM. But the $2,000 was a vote for the whole thing, and now you ask $600 more.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. We want to know what the additional work that you are to do is ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is because the work cost more than we expected.

Mr. INGRAM. That is the only reason ?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is the only reason.

Mr. INGRAM. And the first estimate was not a correct estimate ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not absolutely correct ; we have to ask $600 more.

Mr. INGRAM. That estimate is rather wide of the mark—a vote of $2,000, and then you must come and ask for almost one-third more, $600.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is not a very big difference.

Mr. AMES. How many people live at Janvrin's Island?

Mr. BRODEUR. About 200 people, I am informed.

Mr. AMES. What country is that in?

Mr. BRODEUR. Richmond.

Jersey cove (or Eel cove)—wharf, $3,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to make provision for the construction of a wharf at an estimated cost of $4,300. This is in the county of North Victoria.

Larry's river breakwater—extension, $1,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to make provision for the completion of a square of cribwork 16 feet wide extending 160 feet long. The total cost will be $4,500.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it under contract?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, it is being done by day's work.

Mr. AMES. In what county is it?

Mr. BRODEUR. In Guysborough.

L'Ardoise—extension of breakwater up to the shore, $7,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in the county of Richmond.

Mr. INGRAM. The government let a contract for $24,000 for this work, and now they come down for nearly one-third as much more.

Mr. BRODEUR. The main contract was for $24,880. Inspection and contingencies, $1,470—total, $26,350. There has been expended in 1903-4, $104. Supplementary estimate for 1904-5 to cover the salary of the inspector as above, $750. Appropriation for 1904-5, $18,000—total $18,854.27. And the vote required is $7,500 to complete.

Litchfield breakwater, $1,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in the county of Annapolis, and it is required for a breakwater the construction of which is expected to be completed in the next fiscal year. The total is estimated at $4,000.

Little Brook—repairs to breakwater, $5,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to complete the work. The total cost is estimated at $5,030. This is in Digby county.

Little Judique—boat harbour, $1,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in the county of Inverness, and it is to improve the entrance to the pond at the entrance of the Little Judique river to enable the fishermen to enter with their boats at all stages of the tide.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much will be the total cost?

Mr. BRODEUR. An examination will be made, and if the work can be done for $1,000 it will be done.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that supposed to be approximately the cost?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What county is it in?

Mr. BRODEUR. Inverness.

Lunenburg—dredging harbour, $5,000.

Mr. INGRAM. At last?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is a revote and it is to carry out the work of improving Lunenburg harbour in accordance with the estimate, which is $8,000.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the money be spent this year?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, we expect that there will be a dredge ready to do the work.

Mabou—bridge, $1,800.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to make a bridge in Inverness harbour. The vote is to make provision for the construction of a pile wharf at Mabou bridge for general shipping and landing purposes. The total estimated cost is $1,800.

Mr. AMES. The county of Inverness is being pretty well treated—Long Point, Little Judique, Mabou, Broad Cove—pretty nearly every port on the western side of Cape Breton has something done for it.

Mr. McLENNAN. That county has a coast line of 150 miles.

Mr. AMES. The hon. gentleman should leave something for next time. The whole thing will be exhausted by 1908.

Mr. McLENNAN. It won't be necessary.

Mahone bay—dredging, $5,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This will be done by the government dredge.

Mr. AMES. What county is it in?

Mr. BRODEUR. In Lunenburg.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the total cost?

Mr. BRODEUR. About $25,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it just ordinary dredging.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What depth of water is there now, and what is it proposed to obtain?

Mr. BRODEUR. The present depth is about 9 feet, and it is proposed to obtain a depth of 13 feet. It is being filled up with sawdust from the mills.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there not an Act of parliament against that?

Mr. BRODEUR. I believe there is a law to that effect.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it due absolutely to the filling up of the stream with sawdust ?

Mr. BRODEUR. That and the ordinary silting of the river.

Mr. FOWLER. It would not be a very expensive work to dredge out saw-dust.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is not only sawdust in the river. I am informed by the chief engineer that it is very expensive to dredge sawdust.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What do you dredge it with ?

Mr. BRODEUR. With a hydraulic dredge. That is really why the work has not been done.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is a hydraulic dredge ?

Mr. BRODEUR. A suction dredge.

Main à Dieu—breakwater on west side of harbour, $7,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is required for completing the breakwater which is being built. This is a payment on the contract. The contract was for $8,925.

Mr. INGRAM. What county ?

Mr. BRODEUR. South Cape Breton.

Mr. INGRAM. Is there another work of that kind in Inverness county ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We will see later on.

Mr. INGRAM. I mean Margaree.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is further on.

Malignant cove—close piling end and sides of channel piers with creosoted piles, $1,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in Antigonish and is required to cover the cost in connection with close piling of the outer ends and 30 feet in length of the sides of the entrance piers of Malignant Cove harbour which has been undertaken to make good in a permanent manner the damage done by the teredo. The total cost is $1,000.

Margaree harbour—improvements, $1,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in Inverness county. This vote is required to cover the estimated cost of completing the following works in process at Margaree : (1) Rock excavation to secure a clear depth of 8 feet at low water along the channel face of the pier on the west side of the entrance to Margaree harbour over a distance of some 200 feet from a point 200 feet from the inner end outwards. (2) Urgent repairs to the outer end of this pier commenced in November 1904 to make good damage done by a storm. The total cost will be $1,500.

Mr. INGRAM. This is not the total cost of the works there ?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is the total cost of the work contemplated here.

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, but it is not the total cost of the works constructed by the government.

Mr. BRODEUR. There has been expended in late years up to the 31st of December, $28,000.

Mr. INGRAM. I want to know why the local government, having expended money on this wharf we should refund it to them ?

Mr. McLENNAN. The local government of Nova Scotia had all these wharfs and smaller harbours in charge before confederation. It was only after confederation that they were handed over to this government and paid for. That harbour has been under improvement for the last 35 or 36 years and this amount is simply to complete the work of blasting rocks from the entrance to this harbour. It is rather a commodious harbour and as the hon. minister stated an expenditure of something like $25,000 or $30,000 has been made by the government in the past thirty years in its repair. I may say in regard to this small appropriation that the lateness of the session last year prevented this money from being expended for the simple reason that the coast there is facing the north and as the prevailing winds are north, these appropriations could not be expended. Hence, it is that the appropriations of two years are mixed up in this list.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the hon. gentleman quite sure that the money refunded to the provincial government was money expend ed by themselves on this harbour ?

Mr. McLENNAN. I know it from personal knowledge.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the general policy been pursued that moneys expended by the government of Nova Scotia previous to confederation, 38 years ago shall be refunded by this government ?

Mr. McLENNAN. It certainly was the policy of this government to take over all the works that were considered of Dominion importance and refund whatever money was expended upon them by the government of the province.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to find out whether this has been the policy of the Dominion government since 1867.

Mr. McLENNAN. The hon .gentleman's friends were good enough to take these works over and pay for them.

Mr. BARKER. Is the Dominion government returning to the province of Nova Scotia moneys expended for the maintenance and repair of these works 38 or 40 years ago ?

Mr. McLENNAN. I cannot say in regard to repairs, but I do say that the Dominion government took over all these works, breakwaters and harbours of Dominion importance, and they refunded whatever expenditure had been made on these works by the provincial government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I never knew that before.

Mr. McLENNAN. Well, it is a fact all the same.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When did it take place? I am asking for information.

Mr. McLENNAN. I cannot say really what year, but I know it was done. By reference to the records it will be shown that it has been done. I do not know whether it has been done in the case of other provinces, but I am sure it has been done in the case of Nova Scotia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is to say that money expended on public harbours and breakwaters by the provinces before confederation has been refunded by the Dominion government?

Mr. McLENNAN. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. That has not been general.

Mr. McLENNAN. There was a wharf at Port Hastings in the Gut of Canso, and there was a wharf at Point Hood in Inverness, built by Nova Scotia before confederation, and these wharfs were taken over by the Dominion government.

Mr. TAYLOR. At the time of confederation?

Mr. McLENNAN. I cannot say it was done just exactly at confederation, but I do say that the Dominion government took over all these works of Dominion importance and whatever outlay was made by the government of Nova Scotia was refunded.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the hon. minister if moneys expended by the province in the maintenance of breakwaters or harbours before 1867 are being refunded to the province by the Dominion government?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have absolutely no information as to that. I was reading over the notes while the discussion was going on, but I do not see anything that covers the point mentioned by my hon. friend. I do not know whether that statement is correct or not. I have nothing in my notes about that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister's answer about not having it in his notes reminds me that when Sam. Weller was asked if he saw his father, he looked into the ventilator and said he did not. We would not expect to find much in the minister's notes about the subject introduced by the member for Inverness.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You would have as good a chance to find it there as anywhere else.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the Minister of Justice would give his views on the subject.

Mr. HENDERSON. The British North America Act, 1867, provides that the public works and property of each province enumerated in schedule 3, shall be the property of Canada. Schedule 3 specifies these works to be: Canals, and waterpowers connected therewith, lighthouses and piers and Sable Island, and public harbours. Public harbours are specially mentioned as being the property of Canada and there is nothing in the British North America Act about the province being indemnified for any expenditure on them.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have been informed that in 1884 some public works were bought in this way from the provincial governments of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the money has been paid to the provinces I do not think you could recover it.

Mr. BRODEUR. The government in power in 1884 was, my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) will say a very good government, and I am surprised they would have done anything unconstitutional.

Mr. BARKER. That was probably a refund of expenditure made by the provinces after 1867.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like the minister to give us the date of the payment of this money to the local government. If it was before 1867, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan) is correct, but if it is since 1867 we ought to know it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will ask the officers of the department to get the information and I will give it to the House on concurrence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There may have been in the early history of confederation some moneys expended by provincial governments after the date of confederation on works which became the property of Canada. The payment would likely be to recoup the provinces for that expenditure.

Mr. McLENNAN. I presume that was why it was done, but I know the fact that it was done.

Mr. INGRAM. If that is the case it will make a difference.

Margaretville—general repairs to and extension of breakwater, $1,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in Inverness county?

Mr. McLENNAN. No.

Mr. BRODEUR. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; it is in Annapolis county. The total expenditure is estimated to be $4,100.

Meteghan cove—restoration of breakwater, $4,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in Digby county; the total expenditure will be $4,000.

Mr. AMES. There was work done there in 1903-4 to the extent of $2,500. Has that work been washed away?

Mr. BRODEUR. No. This vote is for the completion of that restoration work. The damage was raised by the teredo worm.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the expenditure?

Mr. BRODEUR. The restoration has cost $10,000, but there has been spent altogether at that place $38,802.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will this finish it?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is expected to.

Mill cove—breakwater, $13,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in the county of Lunenburg. The total cost will be $13,500, and we will call for tenders.

New Campbellton—ballast wharf in Kelly's cove, $12,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in North Victoria. The total cost will be $12,000; tenders have been received but the contract has not been awarded.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What has given occasion for this work?

Mr. BRODEUR. Development of coal mines.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have heard something of mines at Kelly's Cove and I would like to know what development there is.

Mr. BRODEUR. Coal was struck in the neighbourhood of Kelly's Cove and it proving valuable the mines were opened up. The mines are owned and managed by the Cape Breton Coal Company, and since they came under the new management, they have been more extensively worked, and the output has been largely increased.

Newport landing—wharf, $5,200.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in the county of Hants. This vote is for completing the work, the total cost of which is placed at $6,200.

Noel wharf—repairs, $1,200.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in the same county. The total cost of the repairs will be $1,200.

Ogden's pond—to complete protection works, $800.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is Antigonish county. It is to cover the expense of protection works on both sides of the channel.

Pembroke breakwater, $800.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is under contract. The amount of the contract is $7,970. This is to complete. It is in the county of Hants.

Pleasant bay—wharf, $6,700.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for the formation of a small harbour which will afford landing facilities and shelter to small vessels and fishing boats by constructing a cribwork and pier extending to 5 feet depth at low water. The total cost will be $8,000. This is in Inverness county.

Plympton—repairs to breakwater, $2,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for completing the repairs commenced on the breakwater in order to place the structure, which has been badly damaged, in a thoroughly sound condition. The total cost will be $2,500. It is in the county of Digby.

Port Greville—extension of breakwater and repairs, $8,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in the county of Cumberland. The total cost will be $12,000. It is under contract to Mr. Thomas B. Charlton.

Port Hastings—wharf, $4,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for the construction of a wharf at Port Hastings in the county of Inverness.

Port Hood harbour—closing northern entrance with brush and stone work, $10,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for closing the northern entrance of the harbour of Port Hood by a dam 3,860 feet long. The total cost will be $60,000. It is done by day labour. $20,000 was spent last year. It is in the county of Inverness.

Mr. INGRAM. The total expenditure to June 30, 1904, was $61,592.20, besides $2,708 for dredging, and now you are asking for more money.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is not the same work.

Mr. McLENNAN. That is not the same work at all. The work to which my hon. friend refers is the old wharf which is built inside the harbour. The work to which this vote refers is a breastwork of brush and stone built across the northern entrance to the harbour in order to prevent the harbour filling up with sand, which is washed in by the northerly winds and the seas, thus rendering the harbour next to useless.

Mr. AMES. Have previous appropriations been made to open the northern entrance to the harbour ?

Mr. McLENNAN. No, not at all. Unfortunately the elements opened it.

Mr. INGRAM. So that this harbour, instead of costing $60,000 will cost something like $125,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am only speaking of this work, not of the other improvements made in the same harbour.

Port La Tour—extension of breakwater, $11,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for the completion of the breakwater at that place. It will cost $24,000. It is in the county of Shelburne and Queen's.

Scott's bay—extension of breakwater, &c., $2,100.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for the extension of the north breakwater, a distance of 75 feet, which will necessitate the construction of cribwork. The total cost will be $3,100.

Mr. INGRAM. I cannot let that last statement about Port Hood go. I have made another discovery, and my friends must be fully aware of it, or they would not allow that statement to go unchallenged. I showed an expenditure in one case of $60,000 and in another of $63,000, making a total of $123,000, and I am surprised at gentlemen nodding assent to an incorrect statement which they must have known was not correct. We are not supposed to be acquainted with every detail of the public expenditures. Here is an item of $482,000 and another of $191,000, and I think that a statement assented to in that way is not a proper thing for the officers to do. I find on pages 53 and 52 of part IV of the Report of the Public Works Department a statement which shows that there are $61,500 and $2,000 in one instance. Let me read from the report to show how careful we have to be to get the correct information :

The harbour of Port Hood is on the west coast of Cape Breton island, about twenty miles to the northward of the northern entrance to the Strait of Canso.

The harbour was formerly a secure one, Smith island, which forms its west side, having been connected with the mainland by a range of sand hills. In 1893 the sea made a breach through this protection ; the opening, at first narrow, was enlarged by the tidal currents with increasing rapidity until it was entirely swept away. The harbour is now unsafe during northerly gales, except in a small cove on the east side of Smith island.

In March, 1902, a report was submitted on the closing of the northern entrance in which the estimated cost of work suggested varied from $482,000 to $291,000, according to design and location.

During the fiscal year 1903-4, the sum of $2,968.85 was expended in constructing a length of 330 feet, 28 feet wide on top, of a proposed breakwater, and in procuring materials for its construction.

This would appear to involve the idea that the department intended spending a very large sum at this point, an expenditure something like $482,000, and the information the hon. gentleman is giving is misleading.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think that the criticism of my hon. friend with regard to the officers of the department is justified. It is true that the statement he read has been made, and that it was estimated that this work would cost a much larger sum than I have mentioned. It is true that the officers reported at first that it would cost a much larger sum, but the chief engineer, with his usual ability, went to work and found out some other means of doing the same work and getting the same results. Instead of spending the larger sum, we are simply providing for an expenditure of $60,000, and we expect with that to reach the same conclusion. So that my hon. friend was entirely mistaken in trying to infer that we are not giving proper information.

Mr. INGRAM. If the hon. minister had given at first the information he is now giving us, that would have been perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was asked what would be the probable cost, and I said $60,000. I am not saying that my hon. friend was unfair, but he thought he had a point against us when he was simply relying on the first report, which has since been abandoned.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the hon. member for Elgin was perfectly justified in the statement he made. He read from the report of the Department of Public Works. Why was that statement put in that report unless it was intended to be information for the public, and surely we had a perfect right to accept that information ? I do not think the hon. gentleman has any right to cast any reflection on the hon. member for Elgin when that hon. member read from the minister's own report.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think he might have asked the question how such a statement came to be made, without reflecting on the officers of the department. In this instance, instead of being open to censure for what they have done, we ought to declare that they done their duty most admirably.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The fault is not with the officers, but with the minister, in not making that explanation in the first instance.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am taking the responsibility.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend will understand perfectly that when I allude to him I am alluding to a gentleman who is not very familiar with the department, and am simply doing so as an illustration for the time being. Where there has been a departure from the course intended to be followed, and a departure which makes the information before the House absolutely inaccurate, it is only right that the minister should make that explanation in the first instance. I realize perfectly that in this case the minister is not very familiar with these estimates, and we must make some allowance for him. That explanation should have been given in the first instance. Why are you closing the harbour ?

Mr. McLENNAN. I think I gave the reason a minute ago. The sand along the coast is getting washed into the harbour and destroying the anchorage there entirely. Just as has been read from the report of the Department of Public Works, the harbour had been closed at the northern entrance, and about sixty or seventy years ago it was an excellent harbour with excellent anchorage—not only serving the purposes of a local harbour, but those of a regular harbour of refuge along that western coast. The object now is to bring back, as it were, the old order of things, and form a beach or a protection breast-work across the northern entrance, which has been broken into by the elements. It is quite true that the resident engineer reported that the closing of the northern entrance to Port Hood harbour would cost the amount which the hon. member for Elgin has stated, but the present chief engineer devised a plan by which the object in view could be secured for the amount of money stated by the minister. This will be done by substituting brush and stone, built after a particular plan, and so compactly put together that to-day there are 950 feet or so of this breast-work completed, the result being, as the chief engineer predicted, that the sand, which used to be washed into the harbour, is washed up against this breast-work, and a regular mound of sand is thus forming along that work, so that one-third across the entrance to that harbour is now shut across by means of a mound of sand which this breast-work has served to form. So far as regards the 930 feet of breast-work already constructed, it is an entire success ; and every person who knows anything about public works of that character has no hestitation in saying that the plan is most successful.

Mr. INGRAM. I am not going to let this go for a moment or two. We have been very liberal in allowing items to slip through very easily, but it is not to be expected that we on this side can follow each item carefully and peruse the reports of the department minutely in the few minutes we have at our disposal. The generous offer made by the leader of the opposition with respect to the Nova Scotia items was with a view of getting all this information without having to ask questions. In reading this report, I was surprised to find this in two different places. That is why I referred to the $482,000 and the $291,000. Now, the minister says he proposes to expend about $60,000 upon this work, but the other statements are contained in the report. Apparently they are going to abandon the report, although this is the report which was brought down for the year ending June 30, 1904, and laid on the table of the House this session.

Mr. BRODEUR. When I explained the item, I was asked what would be the total probable cost and said it would cost $60,000. That is the work that is contemplated and is going to be done according to the late report of the chief engineer, but in the first instance the chief engineer reported that the cost would be as stated by my friend and as he says in the report, but it was found it would be more expensive and the chief engineer reported on another plan which has proved to be as effective and would cost less.

Mr. INGRAM. And that as we understand now would cost about $60,000.

Shelburne harbour—dredging, $4,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for dredging to remove a strip 150 feet wide and 300 feet long to 8 feet depth at low water ordinary spring tides, from the eastern part of a shoal in Shelburne harbour running practically northeast and southwest which is a hinderance to most of the shipping business done along the water front of that town. It is in the county of Shelburne and Queen's.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the depth of the water now ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a shoal there ; it is from 4 to 5 feet.

Skinner's cove—boat channel and protection works, $8,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in Pictou. It is to complete the excavation of the projected channel into Skinner's pond where fishermen's boats can be taken for safety and the protection of this passage on both sides with walls of cribwork. The total cost will be $10,500.

Summerville wharf, $2,500.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in Hants, and is to complete the block or ordinary round log well fendered and fully ballasted cribwork about 80 feet long, 26 feet wide and 24 feet high, at the outer end of Summerville wharf. The total cost will be about $3,500.

Three Fathom harbour—restoration of beach protection works, $1,200.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in Halifax county and is for continuing the restoration of the beach protection works commenced in 1901-2. The total cost will be $1,200.

Victoria beach—wharf, $58,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in Annapolis county on the north side of Annapolis basin, two miles from the Pictou landing pier.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think this was supposed to be constructed in connection with a railway that was projected. What is the position of that railway.

Mr. BRODEUR. In connection with the railway from Victoria bridge to Middleton which is now nearly completed.

Mr. PICKUP. It is owned by Mackenzie & Mann and is run in connection with the Halifax and Northwestern.

Wallace harbour, $12,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to make provision for carrying out works which are recommended to be undertaken in connection with the ferry slips on both sides of Wallace harbour.

West Arichat—landing pier, $7,200.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in Richmond and is to provide for the construction of a landing pier to extend to 15 feet depth at low water spring tides off Bosdet point. The total cost will be $7,200.

Mr. AMES. What was the estimate last year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The same estimate. We are going to call for tenders and expect to do the whole work during this fiscal year.

White Head wharf, $4,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in Guysborough. It is to provide for the construction of a block and span wharf 175 feet long at White Head which will reach a depth of 16 feet at low water. The total cost will be $4,000.

Wolfville wharf, $6,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is in King's county. It is to replace the present pile work structure at Wolfville by a wharf of solid cribwork strong enough to withstand moving ice fields and heavy seas. This is expected to be the total cost.

Yarmouth harbour—retaining walls, $10,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for building levees and bulkheads to retain dredged materials preparatory to season's work of new suction dredge.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. BRODEUR moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Two Bills of Mr. Préfontaine's will be taken up and then I will make a statement in connection with the Kentville rifle range. After that Supply, either of the Railway Department or a continuation of Public Works, probably railways.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

Mr. BRODEUR

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 14, 1905.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PACIFIC BANK OF CANADA.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 175) respecting the Pacific Bank of Canada. He said : The reason why this legislation has not been presented to the House before this session is that it was thought we would be able to make arrangements so that it would not be necessary to secure the passage of the Bill. We find, however, at the last moment that we cannot do so, and I therefore ask leave to introduce the Bill.

Mr. D. HENDERSON. When are we going to cease introducing Bills ? How long does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) expect this session is going to last ? If we continue as we have been doing we may be here until next winter. There is certainly no necessity for this Bill at the present time, because nobody claims there is any need for new banks. This charter might just as well lie over until another year, and we would be saved the necessity of passing Bills out of order continuously, practically violating a well established rule of the House. I only rise to protest against this, and I hope that those in charge of the legislation of the House will take note of it, and that no further legislation will be introduced this session, with the view of concluding the session as soon as possible.

Mr. GALLIHER. If I were making this request in connection with a Bill that had not already been before the Standing Orders Committee this year and passed by that committee, and if the rule in connection with the introduction of Bills had not been suspended, there might be some justification for the observations of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson). But for that I would not be making this motion to-day. All this has been done, and, as a matter of fact, I think I am quite within my rights in presenting the Bill even now, because once the motion is passed for the suspension of the rule there is nothing to prevent me from introducing the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 174) to amend the Grain Inspection Act as regards the selection of commercial grades and samples.—Mr. Fisher.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Louis Auguste Carrièr, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Lévis, introduced by the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Wm. Paterson.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 176) to amend the Inland Revenue Act. He said: The main object of the Bill is to harmonize the different sections of the Inland Revenue Act. Several amendments have been passed since the consolidation of the statutes in 1886, and in some cases we have still in the law clauses, which are not in harmony with the principle adopted when these amendments were made. The main object of the Bill is to incorporate these changes in the Act in order to harmonize the law, and in order that these amendments may be incorporated in the new revision of the statutes. There are, however, some other amendments of greater importance. We provide in the Bill, for example, that the bonds which are to be given by licensees shall be given by guarantee companies instead of being given by individuals. We also provide that distillers who are using malt in their distilleries, instead of being bound to manufacture the malt themselves, may get it in bond from the malting houses. We provide that malting process, instead of being carried on from eight in the morning until six in the afternoon, may begin at seven in the morning. It is also provided that spirits may be denaturized, not only with wood naphtha, but also with all other material that could produce the same result. We provide that snuff may be sold in packages of one-twelfth of a pound.

Mr. BERGERON. Are these changes all going into the proposed Bill?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

POST OFFICE AT HAMILTON COVE, QUEBEC.

Mr. AMES asked:

1. When was the post office established at Hamilton Cove, Ashuanipi, Saguenay County, Quebec?
2. How often do mails arrive and depart, from what point are they forwarded, and in what manner?
3. What other post offices have been established in Ashuanipi, Mistassini and Abitibi, of the province of Quebec?
4. How many letters were received and despatched from Hamilton Cove during the last four years?
5. What was the revenue collected and the expense incurred in connection with the Hamilton Cove post office?

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (for the Postmaster General):

1. The Hamilton Cove post office, which is in the district of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, and not in the Ashuanipi district, was established on the 1st June, 1883.

2. Hamilton Cove is served tri-weekly from Les Escoumains by horse and vehicle.

3. There are no post offices in any of the districts mentioned.

4. As no record is kept of the mail matter received and despatched, the information asked for cannot be furnished.

5. The revenue of the post office at Hamilton Cove and the salary of the postmaster during the past four years are as follows:

	Revenue.	Salary.
1901	$ 51 92	$ 34 00
1902	50 00	34 00
1903	63 16	42 00
1904	103 54	64 00

The service between Hamilton Cove and Les Escoumains, including three other post offices, costs $356 per annum.

HALF-BREED SCRIP.

On the Orders of the Day being called.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER. Before the orders of the Day are called I would like to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior, who is back from his wanderings, battered and torn, but still looking in his right mind, to the fact that we have been waiting anxiously for those papers from his department with reference to scrip. I hope my hon. friend has not forgotten all about it. I would like him also to bear in mind that the session is so far advanced that it would be well if we could get these as quickly as possible. I hope my hon. friend will have them for us certainly this week.

Mr OLIVER. The papers asked for are in course of preparation, some of them could be presented now. They cover so large an amount of ground that the work of preparation is very great. But they will be presented as fast as they are prepared, some of them I will present to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope we will get them in a day or two.

THE BY-ELECTIONS.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to congratulate the hon. members for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) who are back from their wanderings. May I congratulate also the hon. member for South York that he did not fulfil his boast of resigning his seat to contest the election for Edmonton, and later on to contest the elections in London or North Oxford. Now I think it is up to him to resign his seat for South York and try to get elected in his own constituency.

Mr. FOSTER. There is nothing before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I want to know if he has tendered his resignation.

VACANCIES IN THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to inform my hon. friend the Minister of Justice that I have observed some intimation in the public press, and I have had some private advice, that there are two vacancies, one on the judicial bench of Ontario and one on the judicial bench of Manitoba, one of which has been vacant for some time, I refer to that one in the province of Ontario, the chief justice of the Exchequer Court division of the High Court of Justice. I was not aware there was any vacancy in the Supreme Court of Manitoba, the Court of King's Bench, but I observe a reference to it in the press. Would the Minister of Justice be good enough on some future occasion to inform the House how long these vacancies have been existing; and would he be good enough at the same time to give a statement as to the vacancies that exist on the bench of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia since the resignation of Chief Justice McDonald, in the month of January, 1904? I have intimated my intention of discussing the vacancies in the Supreme Court in Nova Scotia, but since that time I understand the only vacancy on the bench of that court has been filled. At the same time I would like to have information of this precise character; I would like to know, from the commencement of 1904 up to the present time, during what periods any vacancies have existed, and what they have been; and the same with regard to the courts of Ontario and Manitoba. I am not aware of any other vacancies in the superior courts of justice in this country at the present time; but if there are any others, perhaps the Minister of Justice would also intimate what they are.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The vacancy in Manitoba has been caused by the death of Mr. Justice Bain. The judge died a few weeks ago. As to the vacancy in Ontario, I think it could hardly be called a vacancy, because there has never been provision made for the appointment. The position has never been filled.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would rather call that an accentuated vacancy.

IMMIGRATION OF SKILLED LABOUR.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to give notice to the Acting Minister of the Post Office Department that to-morrow I propose to bring up a question which has been placed in my hands by the Toronto District Labour Council. It has to do with certain allegations that have been brought to the attention of the government with reference to the close connection between a gentleman by the name of Leopold, and W. T. R. Preston, Dominion Government Agent, by means of which connection, as the allegation states, mechanics and skilled workmen are sent out to this country under a promise of employment which has not been fulfilled, and that great injustice is done to these men and great suffering is incurred by them; and also that the proceeding is not in the true interest of labour.

CORRESPONDENCE RE ROYAL MINT.

Mr. MONK. Before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to remind my right hon. friend that it is now some time since the correspondence with the imperial government was called for in regard to the establishment of a branch of the Royal Mint in Canada. I think we will require it in a few days.

SEAMENS' ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 147) to amend the Seamen's Act —Mr. Prefontaine—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the minister say on what date this measure was discussed before?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). This Bill is to replace Bill (No. 38), which has been withdrawn. The first Bill contained only one clause, and met with a good deal of objection, as it did not provide for certain eventualities. This Bill covers entirely the ground for which the measure was asked by the shipping interests of British Columbia. I could not explain the Bill better than it explains itself.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the real difference between this Bill and the Bill that was introduced before ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The first Bill meant simply that the dispositions of the Seamen's Act did not apply to the province of British Columbia, without giving further explanations. This Bill gives all the explanations and the way in which the measure will be acted upon.

Mr. INGRAM. Does it refer to employing British subjects ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No, the Act does not mention anything about that. It provides that the shipping master, instead of being obliged to do this work, may appoint another person to make these arrangements with the seamen.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the Minister of Justice took some part in the discussion of this Bill when it was previously before the House. If he has drafted it, I have no doubt he could explain to us precisely what its effect is.

Mr. AMES. In looking at the Seamen's Act, chapter 74 of the Revised Statutes, to ascertain the full meanings of the three sections which it is proposed to make not applicable to British Columbia, I find that section 7 reads as follows :

> No person who sells any spirituous liquors, and no tavern keeper or boarding-house keeper, shall be eligible for the situation of shipping master or deputy shipping master.

If this section does not apply to British Columbia, it would appear that any saloon keeper or seller of liquor may be a shipping master or a deputy shipping master. It has hitherto always been considered inadvisable to have that class of persons acting in this capacity. What special reason has induced the minister to make them eligible in British Columbia for this important position ? Then, under clauses 16 and 18, the fees established elsewhere are 50 cents on engagement and 30 cents on discharge ; but in British Columbia these limits, which protect both the seamen and the captain, are to be abolished, and hereafter any fee may be charged which may be considered mutually satisfactory, subject to the Governor in Council, replacing that of the schedule. There must be some reason for making these important changes.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The reasons I gave when the Bill was last before the House. As regards section 7 not affecting British Columbia, if power is given to a shipping master or deputy shipping master to appoint any one to act as an intermediary to hire seamen, it makes no difference who makes the engagement. At present in British Columbia the shipping master gets only 50 cents, which is not a large enough remuneration to induce the proper men to make up crews, and the result is that the masters are obliged to go to Seattle or some other part of the United States to secure crews. They have to pay $25 or $30 to American agents to get the proper crew, because under our law they can get nobody to engage seamen. It is necessary to make the provision as broad as possible, so that anybody can do this kind of work. It is provided in section 2 that the Governor in Council shall establish a rate of fees. Of course, the Governor in Council will be guided by the recommendations of the boards of trade. It is at the request of the board of trade and the shipping interests of British Columbia that this is done. I understand perfectly well that the first Bill did not go far enough, and would probably have been ineffective, while this one, after being considered by the Department of Justice, has been found to meet the case.

Mr. AMES. While I can see that there may be conditions in British Columbia which may make it necessary to pay more than the stipulated price for the engagement of seamen, I have not as yet heard any reason advanced which, to my mind at least, is sufficient why a certain class of persons who for good and obvious reasons have been considered in other provinces ineligible to act as shipping masters, should be permitted to act in British Columbia. There are reasons all over the world why it is inadvisable that men who engage sailors shall be saloon keepers. Is there any special reason why in British Columbia it is necessary that this class should be considered eligible ? The dangers are considered that a man who runs a boarding-house or a saloon or an hotel, should be the person who would supply sailors for an outgoing vessel. For my part, unless there be some very strong reason to the contrary, I should have to record my vote against section 7.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It has been represented by the shipping interests and the board of trade of Vancouver and Victoria, that under the present law seamen cannot be engaged in British Columbia ports because the shipping masters will not accept the legal fee of 50 cents per head. Ships are now obliged to go to United States ports and pay very large sums to secure crews. It is asked that under certain conditions the shipping master shall have authority to appoint any one to act in his stead and receive whatever remuneration may be fixed by the Governor General in Council. There may be objections elsewhere, but under existing conditions in British Columbia there would appear to be no objection to the boarding-house keeper acting as an agent to hire sailors. I understand why the law was made so strict a few years ago when it applied to the province of Quebec, but the conditions are not the same in British Columbia as they were then in Quebec, and in my opinion this Bill is in the public interest.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As it stands at present the remuneration is unlimited until the Governor in Council fixes the fee.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That will be done at once.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why should you depart from the usual form which says that the person who is to receive the fees shall be entitled to such fees as are appointed by the Governor General in Council? We all know that eventually the remuneration to the shipping master is deducted from the wages of the sailors, and although the Bill is an improvement on the one originally introduced, it could be still further improved by simply providing that such fees should be paid as would be appointed by the Governor General in Council.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not think there would be any objection to that amendment.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The leader of the opposition suggests that in the end these fees are taken out of the pockets of the sailors, but as a matter of fact on the Pacific coast these fees are paid by the ship-owner or the shipping company which owns the vessels. Ships sailing from Vancouver or any other Pacific port cannot at the present time get a crew in our province, because nobody will act as a boarding-house keeper, it being forbidden to keep sailors and ship them under the existing law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the fee does not eventually come out of the pockets of the sailor?

Mr. MACPHERSON. It does not. Suppose a man is running a boarding-house and keeps five sailors for six weeks, their indebtedness to him would come out of their wages, but the fact is that the fees to-day paid by ship-owners on the Pacific coast for shipping crews, is much in excess of what the seaman's wages would be. I know some instances in which ships have paid as high as $50 per man for a crew, and my hon. friend can easily realize that the seaman's wages would not stand a charge like that. I know one instance where $100 per man was asked in the city of Portland, but that was an excessive charge and it of course drove the ships from that port. To-day, in Vancouver, Victoria, Nanaimo, Westminster, or wherever a ship may come, she will load her cargo of lumber or fish, and then, having enough men on board to take her to Port Townsend, she will go there to ship her crew and buy her provisions. It thus happens that every ship that leaves Vancouver without purchasing supplies will spend anywhere from $10,000 to $15,000 (according to the length of the voyage) at an American port. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) will easily see that under the present law nobody will take any particular interest in getting crews for the shipping masters at 50 cents per head. It is quite true that danger might occur by allowing indiscriminate rates to be charged, but that it is not at all likely because there is more or less competition with the American side. In the meantime the present law works to deprive British Columbia ports of quite a considerable amount of trade in supplying outgoing ships. If this Bill is passed it will remove the grievance in so far as British Columbia is concerned, and no bad results will follow even if ships have to pay $10 or $12 per man, because they would not go to the American side and pay sometimes five times as much. At all events it would preserve to the British Columbia ports the trade of supplying ships.

Mr. FOSTER. At first sight this legislation seems objectionable because it is removing one part of the country from the operation of the general law, and you need a very strong argument to justify that. I do not see how this Bill is going to better the thing unless it betters it at the expense of the sailor.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Not at the expense of the sailor.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us analyse the thing. A ship-owner is willing to pay almost anything for seamen; my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) has known of a bonus of from $50 to $100 per man. That is a very great inducement. Suppose the ship-owner applies that bonus in the way of wages, if men are to be got by any fair means such a bonus or any considerable bonus added to the sailor's current wages should certainly bring the employee to the employer. Suppose the ship-owner is willing to pay a bonus of $25 per man, and that he advertises that he will pay that to the sailor in addition to his regular wages it ought to get him men if they are to be obtained by any fair means.

If men are not to be got by any fair means, we do not believe in getting them by any unfair means. All that the shipping master gets in this instance is the opportunity to appoint a man to act in his place. But it is virtually the same thing. He does not do it himself but appoints a deputy to do it for him. In what will the success of the deputy consist? It will consist, not in the amount of extra wage that he offers the sailor, because the sailor will not get that. The extra inducement will go to the deputy as the middle man ; and consequently he will have to get the sailor into the ship by some other method. What will be that method ? It will not be, as a rule, the bounty given by the shipping agent to induce an honest and sober sailor to take employment with a certain shipmaster. The deputy shipping master will rely on other inducements. You place in conjunction the greed—I am not speaking in an offensive sense—of the boarding-house people and that of the shipping owner. To do what ? To overcome the disinclination of men to take service on a ship. Then the only way in which this boarding-house keeper can get his aim accomplished and his men shipped will be by bringing to bear some influence other then betterment in wages. I take the same exception that my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) takes. I think that to leave out section 7 would be ill-judged and ought not to be done. If you had the best class of people to keep boarding-houses and hotels to cater for that trade, you might have the respectability of the person to vouch for the absence of unfair means ; but if you have no such guarantee, you know exactly what will be the result. The best class of hotel and saloon keepers will not bother with that business. It will fall into the hands of keepers of cheap sailors' boarding-houses, whose aim will be to have as many boarders as long as possible, get them into their debt for rum or food or other things, and then put the spur of necessity on them. The boarding-house keeper would say to the sailor who is sufficiently in his debt : You have to ship now ; here is a chance for you. He will get out of that sailor his own profits as well as what he gets from the ship-owner himself. That is the alliance which there will be between the boarding-house keeper and the ship-owner, and it is one the law should not sanction. It may be made outside the law, and often is but we ought not to make the law so wide open that it will allow this kind of thing to be done. Why can ship-owners get sailors in Seattle and not in Vancouver ? It must be either because of the lack of men or because of the lesser wages offered. If it is due to the lack of men, you will not get them by honest means by these inducements, and I do not think we ought to make it proper to get them by dishonest means. If there are more men willing to take that kind of life for a fair wage in Seattle, the law of demand and supply will have to take its regular course, even though it operates against the supply consideration which my hon. friend speaks of. With reference to the other, I cannot think that in the end it will not be the sailor who will pay for it. He will pay at both ends. Take the boarding-house end where he has a bill run up for food and drink, and he will pay the ship-owner, who will recoup himself by a deduction from the sailors' wages in some way or other. There may be some ship-owners who will be generous enough not to do that ; but in the majority of cases, they will pay themselves out of the sailors' wages. So that the poor sailor will be fleeced by the boarding-house keeper and the pay of the go-between will also come out of him. I should be glad if there was some way of doing this without going into this kind of business, but if it must be done I protest most strongly against section 7 being taken out of this Act.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The hon. gentleman asks why men can be got in Seattle or Port Townsend or Tacoma and not in Vancouver. The reason is that under our Act no boarding-house keeper is allowed to ship crews, whereas on the American side they can do so. Any man on the American side can enter into the business of boarding-house master or keeper of a sailors home, as it is there called. When a man leaves a ship he does not like or on which his time is up, he goes to one of these sailors' homes and puts his name on the list. He will say : I want to go out on the first or second boat or I want to stay here three or four weeks. We all know that when a sailor gets his money in his pocket, he thinks he cannot spend it too quickly. In three or four days he is dead broke and has to trust himself to the tender mercies of a boarding-house keeper. The latter will keep him three or four weeks, and he may be a very respectable and honourable citizen because he is doing a perfectly legitimate business. That is the case on the American side.

Mr. FOSTER. It is possible.

Mr. MACPHERSON. And probable as well. But under our law, if a boarding-house keeper keeps a man for say four weeks and has a Bill against him at the rate of $3 or $4 per week for board and lodging, he cannot go to a ship captain and say : I have a man here whom you may have, but I want $16 to pay for his board. If he were to do that, he would make himself immediately liable to the penalty and could be fined $500.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Because under the Act he cannot take remuneration as shipping master.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not remuneration as shipping master.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Of course not, but he dare not do it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If you are going to pass a statute which is to be used for a purpose that is not apparent on the face of it, that is the strongest objection for passing it. We are dealing with the question of the remuneration of a shipping-master. If we mean something else, let us say it. If we mean that the boarding-master may deduct the sailor's wages, let us say so; but not let us lend ourselves to the project of deducting from the sailor's wages the amount which he owes for boarding and doing that under the guise of paying the shipping-master.

Mr. MACPHERSON. That is not what I said. According to the Bill introduced, a shipping-master will have the power of saying to the boarding house keeper : I appoint you my deputy. Then the captain may come along and get his crew.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You mean that he will be taking his pay for board under the guise of remuneration as deputy shipping master.

Mr. MACPHERSON. He would deduct his board. At present he can deduct his board any way if the captain will pay him ; but he cannot enter into the business of boarding-house keeper, because, according to section 7, he cannot ship anybody. According to the Bill that we desire to have passed now it will be possible for a man to go into the boarding-house business and ship men without incurring any penalty. I recognize the fact that a danger may underlie any act that allows the shipping of men to go into the hands of irresponsible people, but I do not think there is any crime in the passing of a Bill like this. The American boarding-houses are carrying on their business within sixty miles of our ports. They are doing a large and remunerative business. Shippers want crews and they want to buy their supplies. We are obliged to tell them in British Columbia that they can load our timber, our fish, our coal, or any of our products, but we cannot supply them with anything else. They have to go to the American side to get their men and provisions. There is an obvious necessity for the boat leaving our harbour, being towed down and paying double towage at the same time although that does not enter into the spirit of the affair at all. If we are discriminated against it is because the present Act is applied so strictly to us in British Columbia. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) can see that quite easily. He, being a lawyer, can foresee all kinds of trouble that may result from the passing of the Bill, and he can anticipate all kinds of subterfuges that may be raised. He says that the law may bear heavily upon some people. It is bearing heavily on some people to-day if his argument is correct ; it is bearing heavily upon the shipper and the sailor and there is no Act that we can pass that will relieve the shipper or the sailor. But, we can drive away from our shores the legitimate trade we have to-day by continuing the Act which is at present in force.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how it is that if they have to go to the United States to get their crews, they are driven over there by the same Act to get their provisions ? If you sold your commodities as cheaply as they do on the other side they would get their supplies where they loaded their freight.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I would like to tell my hon. friend that when the captain has got his boat loaded that boat is worth $300 or $400 a day and the boarding-house master in the port at once says : I will ship your crew, but I will only do it under certain conditions. The conditions are that you shall get your crew from me, that you will pay me so much and that you shall buy your supplies from people I name.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If the members of the committee will allow me to read the representation which has been made by the Board of Trade of Victoria, British Columbia, I think we will probably understand the question better. Here is a communication that I received in May, 1904.

May 2nd, 1904.

Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—This board has had under consideration the disadvantage under which vessels loading in British Columbia are operated in consequence of it being necessary to go to United States ports in order to secure crews.

A committee has reported upon the matter, and I am instructed to transmit the accompanying copy of their report and on behalf of the board to ask your good offices in securing the desired relief.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) F. ELWORTHY,
Secretary.

You have in this letter a declaration under the authority of a responsible officer of the Victoria Board of Trade which affirms that at the present moment the masters of ships are obliged to go to the United States to secure their crews. A report made to the board of trade by a certain number of members appointed to look into this question reads as follows :

To the president and members, Victoria, British Columbia, Board of Trade :

Gentlemen,—Your committee appointed to report upon the conditions under which crews are at present shipped on foreign-going merchant vessels in British Columbia ports beg to report as follows :

The regulations now being enforced in regard to the shipping of crews on foreign-going vessels are prejudicial to the interests of Canadian trade on this coast and must inevitably work in favour of United States ports.

The shipping masters will not undertake the responsibility of finding crews for outgoing vessels and captains are not permitted to employ any other person to assist them in securing crews.

In a recent case in Vancouver, that of the ship 'Linlithgowshire,' five men had been shipped by a boarding-house master, and a prosecution was instituted, fines being imposed amounting to $500.

Since this case has been before the courts of British Columbia, all the boarding-house masters have ceased entirely to procure crews.

It was disclosed that this prosecution was instigated by the Puget Sound boarding-house masters for the purpose of preventing crews being obtained in British Columbia ports, and with this object in view it is understood that agents from Puget Sound frequent the British Columbia ports for the purpose of compelling the authorities to enforce the regulations to the utmost to the serious injury of Canadian shipping interests.

Vessels arriving here from long voyages invariably lose a portion of their crews by desertion, and often a whole crew of seamen has to be replaced by the time the vessel has completely loaded.

The Canadian regulations have always made it difficult to secure crews with facility, whereas the boarding-house masters in the United States ports on Puget Sound are always ready to supply crews, and in many cases have yearly contracts with the ship-owners.

Although the charges made by these men are often extortionate, owners of vessels would sooner pay these excessive charges than have their vessels delayed after loading, and it has been not unusual to tow vessels, after loading, to Puget Sound ports to pick up their crews.

The extra cost involved by this course has caused a discrimination in freight rates against British Columbia, and it has also resulted in vessels obtaining their sea stores in the United States port instead of at the British Columbia loading port. Recently the authorities at Vancouver have refused to give clearance to a loaded vessel unless the full crew was first shipped, the captain desiring to proceed to Puget Sound to procure a crew.

The postion therefore is that the captain is unable to secure a crew at Vancouver because no one is permitted to give him the necessary assistance, unless gratuitously, that he cannot legally bring in a crew from Puget Sound, and that he cannot get a clearance, even for Puget Sound, without a crew.

Nothing but harm is done to Canadian interests by the creation of such a dead-lock, and it is evident that the present regulations should be modified without any delay.

Owing to the proximity of American ports to Canadian on this coast, the conditions are quite different to those on the Atlantic coast, and if the ship-owners find themselves under a disadvantage in British Columbia ports, the injury to trade is immediate and direct, owners protecting themselves by raising freight rates. At the present time the shipments from British Columbia ports by cargo vessels consist of lumber, coal, salmon, ore and general produce, and it is vital to all these trades that shipments should be made at as low freight rates as are current elsewhere on this coast, and especially on Puget Sound.

It has not been easy to keep a supply of seamen for foreign-going vessels in British Columbia ports owing to the inducements held out by the agents of the Puget Sound boarding-masters.

The shipping-masters have never made any effort to provide crews for vessels, and the only assistance to the shipping interest in this essential matter has been given by boarding-house masters.

The majority of unemployed seamen in Pacific coast ports, having left their previous ship without being paid off, the only remuneration which the boarding-house master can receive must be out of the seamen's advanced note, and any sum paid by captains for procuring crews.

In the past in British Columbia ports, under, perhaps a not too strict interpretation of the law, certain boarding-house masters have undertaken to provide crews with results satisfactory to both captains and seamen.

Your committee is informed that the fee charged here has been $10 per head, and on Puget Sound from $35 to $80 per head.

On the other hand the wages paid to seamen here have usually been 25 per cent higher than on Puget Sound where the seamen are made to accept lower wages to compensate for the extra amount charged to captains by the boarding-house master.

Your committee is of the opinion that a continuance of the practice of boarding-house masters charging a moderate fee for securing crews in British Columbia ports will be to the advantage of seamen and all other parties concerned, and your committee would recommend such an amendment of the regulations as will permit this.

It seems to your committee that under subsection 'c' of clause 11 of the Shipping of Seamen Act, shipping masters should be allowed to license not more than two reputable persons in each port who would be authorized to assist captains in securing crews, and that for such services a fee of not more than $10 per head should be paid.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Sgd.) J. J. SHALLCROSS,
JOHN G. COX,
HARRY F. BULLEN.

These are prominent members of the Board of Trade of Victoria, whom I know personally, and who not only made these representations in writing in May, 1904, but made further representations to a special meeting of the Board of Trade of Victoria last September. I think the law proposed will afford them relief and will secure what they require.

Mr. BARKER. Is it contemplated, that, under section 2 of this Bill, the Governor in Council may establish a tariff of fees, and that that tariff shall supersede the right to contract for any sum ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It is intended to establish a rate of fees approved by the Governor in Council which shall not be exceeded. Except for that, of course, a man will be free to make his own agreement.

Mr. BARKER. I would point out that the Bill repeals, as regards British Columbia, section 18, which is the only clause in the statute that protects the parties in respect of fees. That section provides that the shipping master or deputy shipping master who has charged more than the established fee shall be liable to a penalty and to dismissal.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. More than that, for my part, I cannot see why section 7 should be repealed. But sailors are notoriously improvident; they are notoriously liable, as the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) has stated, to spend their wages foolishly. And, if you provide that the deputies of the shipping master may be persons who are engaged in the business of selling spirituous liquors, you are passing legislation that in my opinion is unwise. These men have been referred to as wards of the nation because of their improvidence when ashore. They should be wards of parliament, and parliament should not pass legislation that would be likely to increase their tendency to improvidence.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Then we have no wards of parliament in our part of the country—we have no sailors.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is to be regretted. But there may be some worse things than having no sailors. I am anxious to further the commerce and shipping of Vancouver; but I am not anxious to place on the statute-book of Canada legislation of this character even for the object stated here to-day. You may appoint as deputies of the shiping master, not only men who are keepers of boarding-houses, but men who engage in the sale of spirituous liquors.

Mr. MACPHERSON. It does not say so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It suspends section 7, and the effect of that is what I have stated. If that is not the object, then remove this repeal of section 7, and you will remove one very grave objection to the Bill so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Well, allow the prohibition of liquor sellers to stand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We want to have that feature of this Bill eliminated at least. So far as the other part of it is concerned, it seems to me that we are going at this in a wrong way. The hon. member for Vancouver has some personal knowledge of the circumstances. As I understand, the difficulty is due to the fact that there is no means of recovering in British Columbia the moneys due to the boarding-house keeper. From what the hon. gentleman says, as I understand him, a boarding-house keeper will keep a sailor for three or four weeks; and, even when he does procure a berth for him on an outgoing ship—because we know boarding-house keepers, even if they are not deputy shipping masters, do this work by interviewing masters and so on—he has no means of reimbursing himself for what the seaman owes him.

Mr. MACPHERSON. It goes a little further than that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well that is part of it at least. If this is the principal part of it, it does not seem to me that we are going at the matter exactly in the right way by this legislation.

Mr. MACPHERSON. This is not drawn for the benefit of boarding-house masters, but for the benefit of the shipping of the ports of British Columbia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that; but the means taken is to provide a way by which boarding-house keepers may recover money owing to them by sailors.

Mr. MACPHERSON. That is an incident.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is the main incident, because it is contended that boarding-house keepers, unless they have this power, will not engage in this business. That is the whole argument, is it not?

Mr. MACPHERSON. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what I understood.

Mr. MACPHERSON. While the boarding-house master may not have means of reimbursing himself, this legislation was not suggested by that class of people, nor, in my opinion, is it drawn up with the object of advancing their interest. It is to enable us in British Columbia to get seamen.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, but by this means.

Mr. MACPHERSON. How are you going to do it otherwise? Of course, the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) knows that these sailors are in boarding-houses. But while we are splitting hairs over this thing, our trade is going by the board. We in British Columbia are convinced that, if this Bill passes it will be one of the best things of recent years for the benefit of our shipping. After all, sentiment does not figure very much when the interest of a whole trade is at issue.

Mr. FOSTER. But there must be some limit;—you must not push that too far.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Of course.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It seems to me that in drafting legislation, the first thing required is to understand what you want. Our legislation on this subject, as found in the revised statutes is wise legislation, passed because of abuses of a most serious character that had grown up in our Canadian ports. It was intended to suppress an evil in the maritime ports known as the evil of crimping, as a result of which more crimes were committed, I believe, than through any other cause in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. You had an experience of it in Quebec.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. A terrible experience. At last public attention was aroused by the murder of a man—I have forgotten his name—by Captain Pelletier; and the result was the passing of the statute from which this chapter of the revised statutes was taken. The law now provides that a sea captain must hire his men by the assistance of what is known as a shipping master. A shipping master in each port has the power to appoint a deputy shipping master.

The intention of section 7 was to prevent boarding-house keepers and saloon keepers from being deputy shipping masters. That was the intention, and that is the intention to which we must give effect now, otherwise it is likely to lead to most serious results, with regard to saloon-keepers especially. Now what are the conditions prevailing on the Pacific coast which make a change desirable at the present time? In British Columbia ports as in other ports, where vessels go to discharge their cargoes or take on their cargoes, as we know perfectly well, when a seaman reaches his port of destination and is entitled to his discharge, he almost invariably leaves the ship. I do not suppose that of the seamen on board ships generally, there are 5 per cent who remain beyond a voyage. When he reaches his port of destination the seaman obtains his discharge, if he is entitled to it; if he is not entitled to it, and he can get out of the vessel in any way, as a majority of the men can, he goes to the boarding-house keeper who takes hold of him and keeps him away. So that either the seaman leaves the ship because he is entitled to a discharge, or he is induced to leave by the boarding-master, but the result is that the vessel is without a crew. As a consequence of existing legislation, it is represented that in British Columbia, the captains there cannot get their crews, and as a consequence they are obliged to go over to the United States ports in Puget Sound where this law does not apply, and where they secure their crew through the aid of the shipping master who happens to be a boarding-house keeper or a saloon keeper. The reason, I think, of that is that the ship captain who wants to get his crew knows a boarding-house keeper who has probably at his place four or five men, and the latter knows that in the adjoining boarding-house there may be four or five more. So he goes to this man and says to him: Pick me up a crew of fifteen or twenty men and I will give you so much per head for them. The result is that that this boarding-house keeper is interested in securing a crew, and he goes about it deliberately and gets the crew. The law as we have it would prevent the captain from charging to the seamen the honorarium he is obliged to pay to the boarding-house keeper. He could charge to him what would be the amount of his board, but unless that honorarium is included in the board, the captain cannot charge it to the seaman, and very properly so. But the question is how are we to meet that difficulty which obliges the vessel owners to go to these Puget Sound ports for the purpose of getting their crews, and when they get their crews they also take supplies, and we lose thereby a considerable amount of trade. What are we to do to remedy that difficulty? That is to say, what ought we to do to enable a captain to go to an agent—and I say that agent should not be a deputy shipping master, it is improper he should be a deputy shipping master—but what we can we do to enable the captain to go to an agent and get that agent to pick up these men and to bring them before the deputy shipping master and make them sign a contract in the ordinary way. All that is required to be done, if it is found desirable, is to amend the law so as to increase the fees that are paid to deputy shipping master in order that he may procure these sailors without the intervention of an agent. If it is desirable we should do it, let us increase the fees paid to the deputy shipping master—if my recollection of the statute is correct only one-half of these fees would be charged to the seamen. Why can't we proceed in that way? Why can't we make provision to increase the fees of the deputy shipping master in such a way as to offer him an additional inducement to get a crew, instead of the captain being obliged to go to the boarding-house keeper and directing him to do all these things for the purpose of getting a crew? It seems to me we ought to be able to secure our object in that way, by giving the deputy shipping master that inducement which is necessary to enable him to go to the boarding-house masters and get from them the crew that he requires. It seems to me that is a solution of the difficulty, because there is a difficulty for which we ought to find some solution. But I do not think we will solve that difficulty by making the boarding-house keepers deputy shipping masters.

Mr. FOSTER. With that state of things, it does not seem that it is necessary or expedient for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to attempt to go on with this Bill. It is another example of attempting to do things in an improper manner.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. On the contrary, this first Bill was prepared and submitted to the proper authorities. This second Bill was proceeded with in the same way. I have done what I was requested to do by the Board of Trade of British Columbia, I have been acting under their advice, or I have been attempting to come to their rescue.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not want to suggest that this Bill should not go through in the form in which it is unless that is the intention of the House. I understand from my hon. friend that the Bill was submitted to the Department of Justice, and a second Bill was redrafted by the department. I accept all the responsibility for it.

Mr. GALLIHER. I have listened to the explanation of the Minister of Justice and there is one point that strikes me forcibly.

If I understand the argument of my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson), and also the resolution of the board of trade read by the Minister of Marine, it seems to me absolutely essential, in order that you may have sailors there to take service on the ship, that there should be some place where sailors could be taken care of in the interim. It is all very well to say that the agent or deputy shipping master could go out and gather sailors, but where are you going to get the sailors if there are none to be had? Who are going to keep the sailors there in the meantime? Now to-day the boarding-house keepers make a business of that; they take the sailors in and take care of them during a certain time, and the sailors are there and ready to take service on board ship. It seems to me you cannot reach your object in any other way. If you have no sailors there, and there is nobody to take care of them in the meantime the deputy shipping master or his agent will have great difficulty in finding them. I do not see how the business could be worked out along the lines suggested by the Minister of Justice, for the above reasons.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Let me point out the inconvenience that, in my experience, results from the system such as the one intended to be established here. Here is a boarding-house keeper who happens to have six or seven sailors at his place. He takes these sailors and gets them so drunk that they do not know what they are doing. He takes them to the shipping master, who takes them on board ship without any knowledge on their part of their port of destination, or of the nature of the contract they have entered into. The boarding-house keeper may get a large fee, I understand that he gets $10 or $15 per head, or, is as in the case pointed out, $80. You will have in consequence a system of crimping established, and you will have these shipping masters or deputy shipping masters interested in inducing these men to desert, and in consequence, forfeiting their wages, and inducing them to go and live in these boarding-houses, so that they may make a profit in re-employing them.

Mr. GALLIHER. You cannot have many advantages without some disadvantage. This Act can be improved by making a boarding-house keeper a deputy shipping master, and as such he can be made responsible for any act of his. We can reach these people by the criminal law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If a half dozen men are sent to sea in that condition do you suppose you will ever hear anything about it again?

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not think the fear that a half dozen men may be sent off to sea in this condition should be held up as a bugbear to interfere with the trade of British Columbia ports. You cannot constitute yourself the guardian of every man in every walk of life; we all have to take chances; the sailors' is a roving life and it does not matter much to many of them what port they sail for. I do not think we live in an age when crimping can be carried on as it formerly was in England.

Mr. FOSTER. And here.

Mr. GALLIHER. And here perhaps. The ports of Vancouver and Victoria are not very large and it is easily possible to have such supervision over these boarding-house keepers who may be appointed deputy shipping masters, as will keep them well within the mark. I do not believe any bad result will follow, and in the meantime British Columbia ports will get the trade they are entitled to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I appreciate the fact that a serious grievance exists in British Columbia at present. It is quite easy for a member of this House to play the part of critic on any legislation, but if the minister will allow the matter to remain in abeyance for a day or two I will undertake to see if I can draft some clause that will meet the object we all have in view.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Very well. I was about to suggest that we could provide against persons who sell liquors from being appointed as shipping masters, but if you exclude boarding-house keepers you are in no better position than you are now. I tried to solve the difficulty on the request of the boards of trade of the Pacific coast, but I understand the objections very well. I move the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

PILOTAGE—DISTRICT OF QUEBEC.

Bill (No. 171) respecting the port and pilotage of the district of Quebec—Mr. Préfontaine—read a second time and the House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FOSTER. Before section one is read by the Chairman would the minister explain just what is the condition of things now and what are the reasons that led to this very decided change? How would things be bettered by placing it under the minister and in that way bringing it immediately under the party patronage system; none too good, none too conductive to discipline and morale in the force. Prima facie it would seem to be a step backward, to take it from a non-partisan board, as I think this is, and put it under the direct control of a party minister. I suppose the minister knows, as any one who has had to do with these things knows, that the harbour and river police business in Quebec has not been a bed of roses for any one who has attempted to administer it, and even with the buffer of the commission between the minister and the force it has been a source of perennial trouble. Does the minister think he is going to make it better if he takes it away from the commission and puts it where every follower of his and where every adherent of his throughout the district will feel that they have a right to interfere in the appointments and everything of that kind. But worse than that, it brings immediately to every member of the pilot force the idea that he has to get political pull and political influence in some way if he wishes to better his individual condition or the condition of the force as a whole. It seems to me that in going from the commission to the minister and opening up all the influences, it is not a step in the right direction. Of course the minister will agree with me that this is a very important branch of the service.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was not in the House two sessions ago when this matter was discussed. For years past the shipping federation has unanimously agitated for a revision of the laws governing the pilots. In the year 1887 a strike took place amongst the Montreal district pilots who were then under the control of the harbour commissioners, and a commission was appointed to inquire into the whole question. For twenty years past the shipping interests have agitated in favour of putting the pilots under the administration of the Marine Department, and it is only the year before last that the objections of the pilots themselves and of the Montreal Harbour Board were removed, and that a Bill was passed putting the licensed pilots between Quebec and Montreal under the control of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. That was to put the Montreal pilotage division under the Department of Marine and Fisheries ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes. There were strong representations to the government, and we were taken to task for not having the courage, as it was alleged at the time, to take the whole pilotage under the control of the department. I explained then to the House that there were two sides to the question, that I knew that the shipping interests were unanimously in favour of that being done, or that there would be somebody responsible for the conduct and qualification of these men. I said that we would try with the pilots of Montreal, who were ready to work hand in hand with the department and to submit themselves to the regulations that might be made by the department. Since this clause has been in force, now nearly two seasons, not only the shipping federation, which represents the ship-owners, but the pilots themselves, are perfectly satisfied. But there has been some agitation as regards other places. Last year a very serious accident happened on the Saguenay river through the incompetence of one of the pilots, resulting in the loss of a vessel and its cargo to the value of $250,000. Then the shipping people asked us to take away the Saguenay river at least from the pilotage authorities of Quebec and put it under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and last year I introduced a Bill for that purpose. The department succeeded in getting the corporation of the pilots of Quebec to select four or five of their number who knew the Saguenay river very well, and place them under the control of the department. The result was that last year there was scarcely any accident, and matters went on better than they had done before. This year the corporation of the pilots of Quebec, in view of the way matters had gone on between Montreal and Quebec, came to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and asked that they should be put under the control of his department. They felt that that would be more satisfactory to them and that the regulations would be better attended to ; and therefore, with the consent of the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec, I bring forward this Bill with the view of having the whole of the St. Lawrence pilotage under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The pilots' organization will of course keep its entity as it is, while the Department of Marine and Fisheries will be the pilotage authority as regards examinations and regulations for the admission of pilots, and all that is necessary to guarantee to the shipping interest the elimination as much as possible of all dangers from incompetency.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these regulations now taken in hand by the Department of Marine and Fisheries ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes. The pilots have their own corporation and regulations, but the pilotage authority will rest with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries instead of with the harbour commissioners. The harbour commissions are composed of a large number of men—in Montreal 11 and in Quebec 9 or 10. The shipping people believe their interests will be better served in this way. The masters, mates, engineers and captains are all under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and are obliged to pass their examinations and get their certificates from the department ; and the shipping people ask, why should not the pilots be in the same position ? They say that the pilots should be put under such control that the shipping people would know where to place the blame if a pilot committed an offence or an error or proved incompetent. He could be dealt with by somebody who would be responsible to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What privileges do the pilots retain to themselves as a corporation ? Do they regulate their own apprenticeships or the manner in which new pilots are to be brought in, or does that go to the department ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That goes to the department. When we took the authority over the pilots between Montreal and Quebec, the shipping federation met with the president of the pilots, and they agreed upon certain regulations for the best interests of themselves and the public in general, so that this body should inspire confidence. The result has been most satisfactory in the district of Montreal, and I do not see why it should not be equally so in the district of Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. As soon as this Bill is passed, the Pilotage Board will no longer exist ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The Harbour Commission of Montreal is still in existence, but it has no jurisdiction over the pilotage ; and the same will be the case with the Harbour Commission of Quebec.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is a provision in the Harbour Commissioners' Act, giving the Harbour Commission authority over pilotage, and that provision will no longer have any effect.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad to hear from the minister that things have improved in the Montreal district. If he can effect an improvement at the other end, and gain the confidence of the shipping men, which has not been very full, I am afraid, during the last few years, it will be a good thing. Meantime, I might say what I commenced to say. My fear in the matter was that the element of patronage and political interference would be allowed to creep into it. If that can be kept out of it, I believe the change might be beneficial.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The rules will be the same for everybody. The board of examiners is composed of officials of the department. Sometimes they take an outsider to aid in the examination. I do not think that the question of patronage has ever arisen.

On section 2,

Mr. FOSTER. Who regulates the distribution of those pilots ? I notice that ever and anon difficulties arise. Some shipowners, not being able otherwise to get the pilots they want, employ them by the year. Also, who regulates the coming in of apprentices and the terms under which they can come in ? Also, whether there is an arrangement for the pooling of the earnings ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. In the district of Quebec the earnings are pooled and divided at the end of the season under the authority of the pilots' corporation. In the district of Montreal there is no pooling. There is a very serious question at present among the Montreal pilots arising out of the system of allowing pilots to be engaged by the year by steamship companies. It has become a very serious question as to what regulations we will adopt in order to distribute the work more equally. That question will be taken up by the shipping federation and the department within a few days, and I think we will come to some arrangement that will be satisfactory.

Mr. FOSTER. Will this rule of distribution in the Quebec portion belong to the pilots or the department ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. It will come under the department, and the distribution of the work as well as the money will be subject to some regulations. It is not likely, however, that the department will reverse the present condition of affairs without due examination of all the circumstances.

Mr. FOSTER. Always keeping in view that the pilots are made for the shipping service and not the service for the pilots.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Of course. As regards the regulations governing apprentices, these will come under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The moment that this pilotage business comes under the Department of Marine, the minister will have to see that proper regulations for the admission of apprentices are made, and also for their yearly examination. We find that in the district of Montreal, unless a complaint was made, a pilot would not be called on every year to pass an examination as to his eye-sight and hearing. We have established a rule, with the consent of the pilots, that they should pass an examination every season and get a certificate as to their eyesight and hearing to show that these have not failed so much as to prevent their attending to their duties. We have also stipulated what kind of examination they shall be subjected to.

Mr. FOSTER. What happened the vessel in Montreal harbour the other day which went ashore ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I have given instructions for an investigation. Her going ashore must be due to gross carelessness or something wrong with her machinery.

Mr. FOSTER. It could not be that a new sand-bar had been created ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No.

Mr. OSLER. Have the laws and regulations of the pilots' association to be approved by the minister ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. They have to be submitted to the Governor General in Council.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Intercolonial Railway—general vote, $7,000,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have from time to time, during the past three or four months, forwarned the House regarding the probable outcome of the year's operation of the Intercolonial Railway. In my detailed statement of some months ago, I rather predicted a large deficit. The information available up to this moment has confirmed my worst fears with respect to that deficit. This has been an extraordinary year for us in several respects. The snowfall in the maritime provinces last winter was beyond all precedent in the history of those provinces. For nearly two months traffic was practically suspended, except at certain intervals. These conditions not only immensely reduced the revenues of the road, but entailed an unparalleled outlay. We have been obliged to burn the candle at both ends. While traffic was paralyzed, suspended, the expenditure has been going on. Detention wages alone is an item of serious moment. Trains were sent out and men were under pay; but owing to the conditions, these trains were prevented from earning, though the expenditure went on. I cannot at this moment more than estimate the probable shortage of revenue as compared with working expenses for the current year, but the amount will no doubt be between a million and a half and two millions of dollars. Until full and detailed information is had, I think it would be improper to do more than give a general outline of the facts which have led to this result. While I am prepared to say that this is an alarming condition, I am also in a position to say that during the fiscal year there have been no undue appointments, no creations of office; but that normal conditions have prevailed in that respect But with respect to wages, we have made one very important change—we have been obliged to pay very much higher wages than have prevailed heretofore on the Intercolonial.

Coming to such details as I can give, I may say that, in the first place, the operation of the Prince Edward Island Railway for the nine months ending 31st March last was unusually expensive. The revenue fell off to the extent of $11,957 and the working expenses increased by $65,289 as compared with the preceding year. This result was largely due to the snow blockade. For example, the cost of handling snow in the year 1903-4 was $11,715; but the cost under the same head for the current year was $32,175. A further increase is explained by the addition to the wages. The men are paid, in many instances fifty per cent more than they have been paid hitherto. Still, we have not exceeded the wages that are paid by the other railways of Canada. The Intercolonial, within the last year, has simply been levelled up to the standard of the wages paid by other railways in this country. I do not think we are paying exorbitant wages—I am satisfied that we are not; we are simply paying a fair wage to the men of the Intercolonial as compared with the wage paid elsewhere. I do not feel that I should apologize for the fact that we have increased these wages. We have an army of men on the Intercolonial who are worthy of recognition. They are a splendid force of railway men and are entitled to what was granted to them. Perhaps it was delayed too long. But it is certainly unfortunate that this increase in wages serves to make the deficit of the past year one that is not pleasing for the people, or for me as Minister of Railways to contemplate. The increase in wages, in addition to that which we paid during the preceding year is somewhere about $750,000—that is to say that the Intercolonial to-day is paying practically the same number of men about $750,000 more than formerly, to say nothing of any additional men. Now, I know as a matter of fact that the work that is being carried on, particularly in the mechanical department, gives very much better results than before Take, for instance, in the repair of cars. We have increased the number of men, about 20 per cent, but we are realizing in work an increase of nearly 100 per cent. This is due to the fact that our system has been so much improved. Last year we were turning out in the repairs of passenger cars about 16 to 18 a month; this year we are turning out 29 or 30 a month. In the repairs of locomotives, with an increase of say 20 per cent in the number of men, we are turning out 66 per cent more engines.

Mr. BARKER. That is in the number of engines, not the quantity of work? The hon. minister (Mr. Emmerson) must remember that nearly all his cars and locomotives are now new.

Mr. EMMERSON. The amount of work has been greatly increased. By the re-organization of the shops and the system of change-hands and so on, they are accomplishing very much greater results than they hitherto accomplished. There was an increase in the wages account of $3,588, and $8,985 for additional ties on the Prince Edward Island road. The added cost of repairs, fuel and station expenses made up the remainder. It is, however, on the main line of the Intercolonial that the chief loss has occurred. This loss does not directly arise from a falling off in the revenue. As compared with last year, the income has actually been greater to the extent of a few thousand dollars than last year. Had it not been for the extraordinary conditions bearing upon the operation of the road, the revenue would probably have shown a sufficient increase to largely reduce the deficit.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the minister the receipts and expenditures for the couple of months in which he says that the loss occurred ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I will show that before I conclude my remarks.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the loss on the Prince Edward Island road ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not that separately. It is desirable that members on both sides of the House should view this matter from a practical standpoint, and not from a political standpoint. It is simply a question of dealing with a railway that, I think, is run fairly free from political influences, a railway that is managed practically by the same persons that have been there for years. The same general manager, the same chief superintendent, in fact all the officials are to-day identically the same as were there twenty years ago. We have the Intercolonial on our hands as an essential part of the pact of confederation, and we have reached the stage where we must calmly realize the full extent of our obligations in that regard. I do not feel like apologizing for even a deficit on the Intercolonial. I realize that the Intercolonial was part of the pact of confederation, I realize that it was constructed over a route that was not commercial, I realize that it was practically military and political influences that located that road.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the minister be good enough to say why it was not constructed over a commercial route ?

Mr. EMMERSON. For this reason, that it was constructed away round on the northern shore of the province of New Brunswick. It was not constructed through the centre of the province, it follows the route of the St. Lawrence, making a long detour. To make any earnings at all on our freight or passengers, we have to carry them hundreds of miles further than does the Canadian Pacific Railway, which runs through practically the same field. The Canadian Pacific Railway goes direct, we have to send our freight hundreds of miles further round, and our mileage is greater, the cost of operation is necessarily greater, but our returns are no more. We are not in a position fairly to compete with other railways. The government of Canada constructed the Intercolonial, it built an excellent road ; but the government of Canada afterwards subsidized a railway to run in competition with the Intercolonial. Therefore, the Intercolonial is not only in competition with that additionally subsidized railway, but it is in competition with the route all along down the shores of the St. Lawrence, down into New Brunswick, down to the Sydneys. The Intercolonial must also compete with the water system. It is true that that competition does not exist during the winter months, but our freight rates are necessarily affected, even though we do not have that competition in the winter, for the reason that we have to enter into contracts upon this basis. Shippers say 'If you will give to us certain freight rates throughout the year, we will patronize your road, not only in winter, but in summer as well.' Under these conditions we are seriously handicapped in freight rates, not merely with one company, but with many companies. And naturally precedent governs, particularly in the matter of the government railway. Precedent is very strong, and if you fix a certain rate in connection with the Sydneys, for instance, you are called upon to have proportionate rates fixed over the whole of the Intercolonial. There can be no discrimination, there must of necessity be uniformity. The ordinary company can do as it will, that is to say, they can withhold here or they can extend there.

Mr. BARKER. Just the reverse ; the ordinary company is bound by the commission and you are not.

Mr. EMMERSON. Well, there are ways and ways of doing it. We are bound by reason of its being a government road. There can be no favourites, there must be uniformity. The very moment you establish a precedent with respect to one thing, that precedent must prevail all over the line. Under these conditions I must say that the Intercolonial is to be congratulated, even under the results that are shown. Of course we do not take into consideration the cost of the canal system of Canada. The canals were constructed as part of the highways of the country. For long years tolls were charged, but in the interest of trade and commerce these tolls were abolished. There is an annual current expenditure of upwards of $1,000,000 on the canals. In whose interest is that expenditure made ? It is true that last year we had $1,000,000 deficit on the Intercolonial Railway, but there was also $1,000,000 deficit on the canals of Canada. The canals were a part of the compact of confederation. They were made free in the interest of the trade and commerce of the country. Now, the Intercolonial Railway was established as a bond between the old provinces of Ontario and Quebec and the provinces known as the maritime provinces. It was established to promote trade. It did promote trade. It is true that the freight rates are not high, but I repudiate the idea that they are not high simply in the interest of the maritime provinces, because, if they had been higher, there would not have been that trade created between these upper provinces and the lower provinces which has resulted.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister says that the freight rates are not as high as those of other railways. Would he give us a practical statement of what is the difference per ton per mile between the rates on the Intercolonial Railway and those on other roads ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not the exact calculation, but I know that the freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway have been less by some fifty per cent.

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, nonsense; you have it in your own reports.

Mr. EMMERSON. The statement is before the House. It was laid on the table. The information is here. Take the tariff of the Canadian Pacific Railway or the tariff of the Grand Trunk Railway and compare it with the freight tariff of the Intercolonial Railway, and I say that you will find that the Intercolonial Railway tariff is all the way from 25 to 80 per cent less than the freight tariff of these different railways. Perhaps that is a condition of things that should not have prevailed.

Mr. BARKER. Are you speaking of through or local rates ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am speaking very largely of local traffic. Necessarily the through tariffs must be governed by that of the other railways. Necessarily, if we accept freight at Montreal for St. John, we are governed by the Canadian Pacific Railway tariff, because they have the direct route, they have the shorter mileage, and we are compelled to carry that freight away around a much longer distance at the same rate. The local tariff rates are much less than are those of other railways, and therein is a very great loss.

Mr. BARKER. I understood the hon. gentleman to be arguing a moment ago that the low rates he was speaking of were not for the benefit of the maritime provinces, but for the benefit of the whole Dominion. Now he says that the low rates are local rates.

Mr. EMMERSON. I stated that most distinctly, and as to the other rates, because of the long distance we have to carry the freight, there is a greater cost, but notwithstanding that fact the rates are based on the shorter mileage of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We expend a greater amount of money in order to carry that freightage to its point of destination. It is also true—I admit it frankly—that our local rates are lower. I think they should be increased. I think they necessarily must be increased in the interest, not merely of the road, but in all interests. I think I may safely say that we have now passed the stage when it is possible to make ends meet. On the one hand, the freight tariff is practically fixed. The rates are exceedingly low as compared with those charged by the different railway corporations in Canada. On the other hand, we have an ascending scale of operating charges. Chief among these is the wages. The very moment you increase, by even a farthing, the wages of any of the employees you have what is practically not a controllable element ; that is to say, it becomes a fixed charge. You can never reduce. It is easy to increase, but you can never reduce.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Lots of railway companies cut down their wages time after time.

Mr. EMMERSON. But a government railway never could. I make the statement unequivocally and unhesitatingly that the government cannot, in justice, pay a lower scale of wages to its employees than that paid by ordinary commercial railways.

Mr. OSLER. Why ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Why ? Because the government cannot do it. Is it right, or fair, or just, that the government should pay a less rate of wages to its employees than that which is paid by other railways ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. No ; but if other railways are reducing wages, does the hon. minister say that the government also should not reduce wages ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am making this statement, that even with our increased wages we have not reached the limit of the other railways. The men in the car-shops and the men in all departments of the Intercolonial Railway are not paid in excess of what other railway companies are paying ; in fact, instead of the government establishing the standard of wages, the government has simply followed in the line of the other railways, and all appeals that have ever come before me and all appeals that have ever been made to other Ministers of Railways in times past, as I know from personal experience, were made on the basis of the established rate of wages paid by other railway companies. Under these circumstances, we have simply followed on tardily, I admit, but we have followed on, and we are yet under the standard as established by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. In keeping to the rule of paying our men in accordance with the rate of wages which is paid by the commercial lines, we have been compelled, during the past two or three years, to grant very large increases to our employees in all branches of the service, and to this item of wages may be charged the principal cause of the financial results which we are now compelled to face. Fuel, ties, lumber, steel and all classes of materials are much dearer than they were three years ago. All these charges swell the operating expenses. We have not been able thus far to adopt the remedy of increasing the rates, which a railway corporation might apply. That is a very difficult thing to do. I think I can say frankly that there is no subject upon which the people are more sensitive than that of increasing freight rates on a government railway. From one end of the railway to the other, from the Sydneys to St. John and from Halifax to Montreal, the very moment the suggestion of an increase is made, that moment you meet with opposition. That is necessarily the outcome of government operation of railways.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Not necessarily.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, necessarily from this standpoint: the people say this is our line, this is our railway, we own it and we are going to run it in our own interests. I know that it is difficult for people in other parts of Canada to properly take into consideration the feeling that exists with respect to that very feature of the Intercolonial Railway. I have known it, I have felt it, I have been made to feel it. The very fact that you run your canals free, the very fact that these canals are operated without charge to those who take advantage of them, is used as an argument by those who would seek low freight rates on a government railroad. It is stated very freely all over the maritime provinces that if it were in the interests of confederation to construct canals and make these canals free, it is also in the interests of the confederation that the Intercolonial Railway should be operated at the least possible cost to the people who are interested in using it. I know that it is not a pleasing thing for me as Minister of Railways to stand up here to-day and acknowledge these things; it certainly is not a gratifying fact. We are all judged by results—circumstances are not taken into consideration, peculiar conditions are not thought of—it is the results that are looked to, and upon these results I stand measurably condemned before the people of Canada as the administrator of this railway during the present fiscal year. But, I want the people of Canada to bear in mind the conditions; I want them to realize the circumstances; I want them to travel over that railway from the 1st of July last down to the present moment and take into consideration the history of the road. If there has been any mismanagement I certainly have yet to learn of it. We have the same general manager, we have the same officials; there have been no offices created, there has been no extravagance; we have been buying as we bought heretofore by tender, there has been no favouritism to characterize this road during the past year as compared with previous years; the conditions have been normal as to purchase, as to operation, as to the employment of men; and yet we have a deficit which may reach nearly $2,000,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend says 'hear, hear'; he seems to gloat over the fact.

Mr. TAYLOR. Bad management.

Mr. EMMERSON. No doubt my hon. friend will say that.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the expenditure on capital account too?

Mr. EMMERSON. The expenditure on capital account is very large. I have not the figures at this moment before me but it is shown in the report.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the expenditure for last year; I want the expenditure on capital account for the current year.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have not those figures.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is the $2,000,000 deficit calculated to the 1st of July or to the present time?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is only an approximate estimate. I am figuring that up to the 1st of July the deficit will be between one and a half and two millions.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would the minister bring, after six o'clock, the exact deficit as well as the expenditure on capital account?

Mr. EMMERSON. I shall endeavour to do so. The question of rates on the Intercolonial must sooner or later receive serious consideration. I am free to admit that even though the canals are free, even though the people of the west have the advantage of free freightage over the canals without tolls, and even though there is an expenditure of $1,000,000 or more annually on the canals for the benefit of the trade of the country, yet, I feel that so far as the Intercolonial Railway is concerned there must be some attention given to the freight charges. It certainly cannot go on from year to year that we should have a very large and increasing deficit, and under these circumstances I would feel that this is a matter which should receive very serious consideration. I desire as briefly as possible and purely in a general way, to go over some of the accounts connected with the operating expenses. In the maintenance of way department there has been an increase for the nine months ending 31st of March last as compared with the corresponding period last year, of $252,808. The principal items of this increase were: Snow and ice, $126,641; ballasting, $59,608; ties, $42,426; buildings and platforms, $15,480, and snow fences, $5,482. Against this increase there was a decrease aggregating $70,762, so that the net increase was $182,625 for the nine months.

Mr. TAYLOR. There was an election during that time.

Mr. EMMERSON. There was an election yesterday too, I believe.

Mr. TAYLOR. You spent a lot of money up there too.

Mr. EMMERSON. However that may be, I do not think that the election affected the deficit very much. The maintenance of way has to do with the keeping up of the high character of the Intercolonial, that is, its roadbed and condition; and the additional charges for ballasting and ties show that this work has not been neglected during the past year. In fact, the standard of the Intercolonial is being maintained. In the department of maintenance of way, the increase of the wages list for the nine months to the 31st of March last, amounts to $97,000. We paid out that additional amount to the same number of section-men along the line of railway for the same work which they have been doing for years for $97,000 less. This additional amount is not due to any added number of men; there have been none added; but it is due simply to the increase in wages. I am not taking into consideration the amount that was paid out in connection with the snow blockade. That of course, was exceptional. We require to have special men in addition to the regular trackmen. In the mechanical department the expenses of the nine months reached $3,098,482, showing an increase over the same period of last year of $621,563. The chief items making up this increase were: wages of drivers, firemen and cleaners, $81,660; fuel, $174,938; repairs to engines, $114,908; repairs to cars, $232,462; oil, tallow and waste, $8,398; snow ploughs and flangers, $6,948; and superintendence, $9,112. During the past year we have repaired a great many more cars and engines. The rolling stock of the Intercolonial to-day is in a condition which certainly bears splendid comparison with that of previous years. In fact, I think I can safely say that at no time in the history of the Intercolonial has the rolling stock been in a better condition than it is in to-day. All the old cars—that is, the first-class, the second-class, the baggage cars and all that description—have been in the shop, and they are certainly in a much better condition to-day than they were at this period last year; and I congratulate the superintendent of motive power on the splendid way in which he is attending to his duties in that direction. They are turning out more engines and cars daily and monthly; they have a better system; they have the work systematized in such a way that the best results are being accomplished. The men who are receiving higher wages are making greater and better returns for those wages than they have heretofore done. A greater number of men are employed, it is true; but the principal reason for the increase is the higher scale of wages paid to every class of men in the shops.

Mr. BARKER. How many new cars of all classes have been put on the Intercolonial Railway in the last four years?

Mr. EMMERSON. I can get a statement of that.

Mr. BARKER. The minister is talking of a large increase of cost for repairs. With a large increase of new cars, that ought to go down.

Mr. EMMERSON The average increase to all classes of employees in the shop was two cents per hour, and you can very readily realize what a burden that means. Take the men not merely at Moncton, but at Halifax, Sydney, St. John, Lévis, Rivière du Loup, Montreal, everywhere along the line of the railway. In the traffic department the increased cost of operation was very large. The chief items were: station expenses, $38,842, which is almost wholly an increase in wages. During the last session of parliament, as probably many hon. members know, there was a delegation here representing the telegraphers' union. Their schedule was gone over, and their wages were increased, with the result that during the past year they have been paid $38,842 more than the same number were getting in the previous year. The wages of trainmen during that period were increased by $116,608. I am prepared to give full details with respect to the comparative rates of pay of all classes of employes affected by the increases to which I have referred. Summing up the items of increased operating expenses to which I have alluded, the account would stand as follows, maintenance of way, $182,025; mechanical department, $621,563; traffic department, $145,447; making a total of $949,028. Adding this sum to the deficit of last year of $900,751, the shortage indicated for the current year would be $1,800,000. Until the year is completed, however, it would perhaps be imprudent to speculate as to what the actual amount of the deficit will be. That it will be large there can be no doubt. It is also certain that this result will be made the subject of general criticism. I think I may fairly ask, however, that judgment be suspended until full and accurate data are available for consideration in the light of the special conditions which have developed during the past two years in particular. As I have said, we have added to our wage account. It is only within the last two years that this has been felt, and it is unfortunate perhaps for me personally that it should have taken effect during that period, but these are the facts. I am not disposed to apologize for those increases. I think they were justified, I think they were warranted from every standpoint. I think that the men employed on the Intercolonial Railway are as good a class of men as are to be found anywhere in Canada. For intelligence, skill and attention to duty they are certainly not exceeded by any other class of men throughout the Dominion. There is no railway which can present a better aggregation of men than does the Intercolonial Railway. They were entitled to recognition, they certainly were entitled to as good wages as are paid by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway; and I feel that I only did them simple justice when I acceded to their demands.

I may fairly be asked for my opinion as to the outlook.

Mr. FOWLER. Did the hon. gentleman state the deficit on this year's operations?

Mr. EMMERSON. I said that it would range between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000.

Mr. INGRAM. I think the hon. gentleman said $1,849,000.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said that if certain things were true, it would be about $1,800,000. That is an approximate amount.

Mr. BARKER. Up to the 30th of June or to the date of your latest interim reports?

Mr. EMMERSON. Up to the 30th June. All my conjectures are based upon the year's operations and on certain results we have up to the 31st March, and even up to this moment. Taking it all in all, on the 30th June our deficit will not be less than $1,800,000 and it may reach $2,000,000. Of course a good deal will depend on what the operations of this month may be. This is usually a good month; and if we have favourable conditions, that very dark picture may be brightened up to some extent. Of course as regards the conditions at the close of the year, I could very much better give an explanation then as to the year's business and I prefer to leave it until then. It is not worth while my speaking of the conditions of the Intercolonial Railway or its prospects, but I simply recite the facts as they appear to-day. I think that I can fairly ask the sympathy of the House in facing the task of administering the Intercolonial Railway under the new circumstances which now prevail. Two ways of reducing the deficit are open to us. One to increase the freight rate generally and the other to carry, by means of better equipment, traffic at a lower cost. I do not know that the former method could be immediately applied, but the latter merits a trial. If we can equip that road so as to minimize the cost of carrying the traffic, that certainly would benefit the railway. Let me say that the cost of carrying the traffic over the Intercolonial Railway compares favourably, acording to the March returns, with any other railway in Canada. We are not paying more for our material. In fact we are paying less.

Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON. We are getting our materials for the Intercolonial Railway at less cost than do the other railways. We are not paying more wages, but there is this element which must not be lost sight of. We have to go mile after mile in order to earn the same results as are earned by the other railways. We have to travel additional miles and get no more returns than they do. That certainly figures very largely in our balance sheet at the end of the year, and we ought to recognize it. I have stated that the latter method, the method of obtaining proper equipment and thus lightening the cost of transportation merits a fair trial.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman overlook the fact that that has been going on the last four or five years? Every expenditure for the last five years has been justified on that ground and yet the minister tells us that it is impossible for this line to compete with others.

Mr. EMMERSON. For the past year the Intercolonial Railway has been short of motive power to the extent of seventy-five engines, and that has materially added to the expenses of running the railway during the last winter. And, more than that, we should have on the Intercolonial to-day at least fifty additional engines, if we are ever measurably to keep up with the increased traffic of the road. That point must not be overlooked—that there has been a great increase in the traffic and there has not been a corresponding increase in the motive power nor in the cars. Why, last winter, I could not go into my office, without being assailed with telegrams from all over the system complaining of lack of cars. When I telegraphed to Moncton, the only result was to ascertain definitely that we had not enough cars. And we were absolutely short of engines. Only last week the engine of the morning train going out of St. John broke down, and absolutely, there was not a spare engine anywhere in sight. We haven't them. Now, the people of Canada have a splendid railway, and that railway needs to be properly equipped—it certainly should be equipped so that it can take care of the traffic that offers. And, though I am not able to present a very pleasant picture of the current year's operations, yet, in my judgment, the Intercolonial is the greatest asset that Canada has. It has served its purpose, and is serving its purpose—that of cementing the provinces together.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Then the minister is not going to let it be sold to the Grand Trunk Railway?

Mr. EMMERSON. Not through my vote That railway should remain an asset of Canada.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And be extended.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would be willing to extend it. Every move I have made has been in the direction of extending it.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. minister has extended the deficit most successfully.

Mr. EMMERSON. Oh, my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) speaks for another railway. I admit that the deficit has been extended, and I am not going to apologize for it. It has been done in the interest of Canada; Canada has got the benefit of it. My hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) is in favour of government ownership of railways, I believe?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes.

Mr. EMMERSON. And I suppose of canals as well? Well I do not think that the expenditure of $1,000,000 for running the canals for a year would be a matter calling for apology. Nor do I think one should apologize for spending even $2,000,000 in the interest of the country in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. If it is deemed a desirable thing that the Intercolonial should be carried on so as to make ends meet, it is possible that both the methods to which I have referred should be adopted —on the one hand the improvement of the equipment, and on the other hand the increase of the freight rates. That is a matter calling for most serious consideration. And, as it is six o'clock, I will leave hon. members to consider what I have already said and resume after recess.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. EMMERSON. I trust that my explanations with respect to the Intercolonial are found to be satisfactory by the committee, and I do not think I need to dwell upon the subject any longer.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the hon. gentleman mean that statement for sarcasm, that the explanations he has made are satisfactory to the House?

Mr. EMMERSON. I hope the explanations are satisfactory, whether the results of the year are satisfactory or not. I do not wish the committee to commit itself in that way.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman means that he delivered his statement in a pleasing manner.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, in a frank manner.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister promised to give us a statement of the expenditure on capital account.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am unable to do so, I found it is not in the office.

Mr. HAGGART. We have certainly listened with a good deal of interest to the statement of the Minister of Railways with respect to the position of affairs on the Intercolonial Railway, and a more lugubrious state of affairs, although it may have been a candid one, than that made by the Minister of Railways, was never before made in this House. We have been promised from year to year on account of the large expenditure which was being made on the Intercolonial, a better state of affairs than has previously existed. Let me state briefly what the position was on the Intercolonial under Conservative management. From 1891 to 1896 the Intercolonial was brought to a position where the revenue nearly met the expenditure. For the three years, 1891, 1892 and 1893 there was a surplus. In 1894 and 1895 there was a slight deficit, amounting to about $50,000 per year. The expenditure nearly balanced the receipts from 1891 to 1896. There was a comparatively small expenditure on capital account. The statement was made by myself in this House that the Intercolonial Railway, under proper management, with the rates which are at present in force, could be made to meet all expenses. What have we seen from 1896 to the present day? Let me tell you what the position of the Intercolonial was on the 30th of June, 1896. The total expenditure on capital account was $55,267,000. The expenditure on capital account up to the 30th of June, 1904, was $72,735,000. Then we have the extraordinary statement made to-day by the Minister of Railways that the difference between earnings and expenditure, independent entirely of capital account, was between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000. The Minister of Railways stated that the amount of the loss he estimated at somewhat more than $1,800,000, and that probably at the end of the year it would be $2,000,000. I asked the minister for an explanation, and the explanation he gave was that it was to a large extent owing to the unusual amount of snowfall in Prince Edward Island, in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and that consequently there was an enormous extra expenditure. He stated also that to bring the payment of wages on the Intercolonial up to the standard that was in force throughout the Dominion, it would be necessary to increase them about twenty per cent. What is the expenditure on capital account? Why do we not get that from the minister? It is the simplest thing in the world for him to furnish the information. Why have we not got it? I find that the amount expended on capital account during the current year is $6,195,250, which with the deficit on the Intercolonial Railway amounts to $8,195,000. For this current year the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals explains that the receipts are nearly the same as they were last year. The total receipts therefore on the Intercolonial were in the neighbourhood of $6,200,000. In order to earn this $6,200,000, this country has expended $8,195,000 on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway. Does it not seem extraordinary to the House ? This is the most extraordinary presentment of the management of the road that ever was made in this House since I have been a member of it,—$8,195,000 expended in cash out of the pockets of the people of this country when the total receipts from the railway are in the neighbourhood of $6,200,000 ! No wonder that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was modest in the presentment of it. What excuse does he offer to the people of this country ? His excuse is that the people in the maritime provinces believe that they are entitled to some recompense for the canals which the people of the Dominion enjoy. What reason has he to advance that argument ? I have heard both the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) advance that argument. In the settlement of the indebtedness between the provinces, when the provinces were confederated into the Dominion, we had canals existing in the country. We had a debt. The debt was apportioned between the provinces and it was assumed by the Dominion as a whole. There was an allowance made for the expenditure we had made upon the canals up to that time and any expenditure upon the canals since that time has been fully compensated by like expenditure or by larger expenditures in the maritime provinces for works of public utility in these provinces from which the Dominion government does not receive a cent in return. I hope that will end the argument that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has made in reference to the maritime provinces being entitled to the free carriage of goods, because it amounts virtually to the free carriage of goods in the maritime provinces, in compensation for the free use of the canals. What benefit has this section of the country or what benefit is the province of Quebec receiving from the building of the canals ? The canals have been built for the purpose of diverting the trade of the Northwest both on the Canadian and American sides of the boundary through our Dominion and for the purpose of giving us the advantages which might accrue to us from the transportation of that trade through the Dominion. No especial benefit accrued to the people of Ontario or to the people of Quebec as a result of the construction of those canals. It was of no advantage to them. What advantage was the building of the Sault Ste. Marie canal ?—no more advantage to the people of Ontario and Quebec than to the people of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. It was a grand undertaking for the purpose of developing the Northwest and diverting that immense trade—which I suppose could be further diverted by the deepening of our canals to an extent which I have advocated hitherto—through the Dominion of Canada for the benefit of the whole Dominion. Not one dollar has been expended for the purpose of building these canals, but an equivalent expenditure has been given in compensation to the maritime provinces. Enough about that. We have no objection to that. As the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has introduced the local issue into his argument let me say that the people of Ontario and Quebec have no desire whatever to secure any large return from the expenditure upon the Intercolonial Railway. What does the expenditure amount to at the present day ? The expenditure to the 30th June, 1904, on the Intercolonial Railway amounted to $72,735,935. Add to that the deficit during the present year and this $6,100,000 expended on capital account and it amounts to over $80,000,000. Notwithstanding the fact that we have made this enormous expenditure which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals declares was necessary in order that the people of the maritime provinces might be compensated for the expenditure which has been made to provide water communication in this section of the country, we have been obliged to expend during the present year on capital account and to meet the deficit over $8,000,000. But, it does not end there. The hon. minister foretells what he intends to do in the future. He says that the only way to bring matters to a different position from that in which they are at the present moment is to increase the facilities for transportation in the maritime provinces. He says that they want at least fifty more locomotives on that railway and that a further expenditure will be necessary for the purpose of bringing things to a level. We have heard sufficient about that. When the Drummond County Railway was taken over by the Dominion government, what was the promise made by the Minister of Railways and Canals at that time ? He stated that the Intercolonial Railway was opening up a new era, that there was life being put into the old concern, that they were no longer to keep on doing business on a back street, that they were to occupy premises on the front street and that the result would be one of financial benefit to the people of the country. What has the result been ? The result has been just as it has been depicted by the hon. minister who has presented this statement to us here this evening. I do not understand how it is that the Finance Minister allows an expenditure on capital account for the purpose of carrying on the work of this railway and for the purpose of making up the deficiency in the revenue amounting in all to $8,195,000. We remember the glorious picture which the hon. Minister drew of the finances of the country ; yet, last year for the purpose of balancing the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway there was an expenditure on capital account of $8,195,000. The hon. gentleman undertakes to give us the reasons for it. He states that they have been bringing up the wages to the level of that attained upon other roads, and he states that the freight rates that they collect on the Intercolonial Railway are not mercantile rates and that they are not such as other railways charge for the carrying of freight. Most of the business done on the Intercolonial Railway is a local business. All the expenditure which has been made during the last twenty years for the purpose of increasing the volume of through traffic had not increased the through traffic of the Intercolonial Railway at all. The development which has taken place on the Intercolonial Railway from 1892 when the receipts were about $3,500,000 to the present day when they are $6,200,000 has taken place simply as a result of the development of the maritime provinces themselves.

The local business has increased, the through business initiating in the maritime provinces has increased, but the through traffic from or to Montreal has not developed one bit. The minister should have placed before the House a statement as to the freight rates charged on the Intercolonial Railway and a comparison with the freight rates charged by other railways. He ought to know the receipts per mile carriage for local freight on the Intercolonial Railway and also for through freight. He could have got that information in his department, but he did not go to the trouble of giving it to the House. In like manner he should have been able to tell the expenditure on capital account for the current year. We know that in 1896 the capital expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway was $55,000,000, and we know that to-day it is $81,000,000. Since these gentlemen opposite came into power they have increased the capital expenditure by $26,000,000. They have promised from year to year that things would be better, but it has gone from bad to worse. Will the people of Canada continue to endorse this ? The fact that the Intercolonial Railway has been put into the position it is in to-day by this government can have no other object than to disgust the people of Canada with the management of the road, and with state management of railways in general, and to force them to seek a remedy in the management of this railway by a commission, or its sale to a syndicate, or the turning of it over to some of the large railway corporations of this Dominion. I warn the people of the maritime provinces that it is to their interest that the Intercolonial Railway should make a better showing ; I warn the people of the maritime provinces that it is to their interest that the Intercolonial Railway should be a state-owned and state-managed railway ; I tell them that under other management than the present, the result would be that the Intercolonial Railway—it might not pay interest on its cost, although it possibly could—but certainly there would be no difficulty at all in making the receipts and expenditures balance. The returns show that there has been a large development of trade in the maritime provinces. From Dalhousie to Sydney and Halifax and St. John, the railroad runs through a country which ought to make it as good a paying investment as a railway in any other part of the Dominion, if it were under proper management. The Minister of Railways tells us that there was a capital expenditure of nearly $3,000,000 at Moncton, with the result that the repairs of locomotives can be done cheaper now than hitherto. Well, we do not know anything about that, but we do know that there is an immense expenditure for repairs on the road. He told us that he built four locomotives last year, but I venture to say that he could have bought these locomotives in the market for just one-quarter what they cost to build in Moncton. Just fancy an institution that can only turn out four locomotives a year competing with the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway, whose workshops will turn out one a day ; with the Baldwin Works, which have a capacity of ten a day, or with the Kingston Works, which can turn out thirty or forty a year. The Minister told us that the deficit was to some extent caused by putting the men on the same scale of wages as the employees of other railways throughout the country. He should have given us specific information, and made a comparison between the wages paid on the Intercolonial Railway and the wages paid on other Canadian railways. He is perhaps right when he says the government cannot afford to pay lower wages than private corporations pay, but there is no necessity for the Intercolonial Railway paying less. When I took over the management of the Intercolonial Railway I found a surplus of labour to the extent of nearly 1,600 employees on the road. I gradually got rid of that. There was a little kicking at the time, but it soon subsided, and the fact of the matter is that so long as you do not increase the freight rates those who use the railroad do not care whether you have double the number of employees necessary or a less number than is required. There must be a large number of employees on the Intercolonial Railway who are not necessary for the operation of the railroad. But the alarming part of the statement of the minister is that this unfortunate condition of the Intercolonial Railway is not going to end. He threatens to increase the freight rates, but I tell him there is no necessity for that. The minister told us that the freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway are from 20 to 80 per cent less than they are on the other railways. He gave us no exact figures to prove that, but I venture to say that that statement is incorrect. I state that for the carriage of local freights, which is the chief business of the Intercolonial Railway, fair remuneration is received. The inference from the whole thing is that the management of the Intercolonial Railway is not what it used to be The Minister of Railways endeavours to justify himself by saying that the chief employees of the railroad have been the same for the last twenty-five or thirty years. That is true. The deputy minister, who is directly responsible to the minister, is the same man, and Mr. Pottinger, the general manager, is the same. He is perhaps getting a little old for the position, but the duty of the Minister of Railways to the country is to judge by results. If the results of the operation of the Intercolonial Railway is not what he thinks it ought to be, his duty is to get other employees. But I will say this in favour of Mr. Pottinger, from what I know of him, that if he is given instructions by the minister, he will carry them out to the letter, and if the instructions are such as they ought to be to the man who manages the Intercolonial Railway, the showing will be entirely different.

What justification has the Minister of Railways or his colleagues for the enormous deficit on the Intercolonial ? He promised last year that there would be increased freights this year. I tell him that there is no necessity for anything of the kind ; proper and economical management of the Intercolonial Railway would yield a result entirely different from what we have at the present moment. What must the people of the country think of the justification offered by the minister for a deficit and an expenditure on capital over and above the receipts for the current year of $8,100,000, or nearly $2,000,000 in excess of the total receipts of the road ? Oh, we are told, the people of the maritime province think that their freight ought to be carried at the rates which prevail at present, because the people of the other provinces have the right of free transportation over their canals. I have proved that for every dollar expended on the canals since confederation nearly an equal amount, according to population and according to the amount paid by the people, has been expended in the maritime provinces, in return for which the people of this Dominion never received a cent. If my statement is correct, we are in this position, that for the purpose of carrying freight on the Intercolonial Railway, we are taking $8,100,000 out of the pockets of the people of this country. I absolve the people of the maritime provinces for not paying their fair share of the freight on any goods carried on that railway. I say the rates are fair. The railway passes through a country in which, if economically managed, it ought to show a good revenue for the expenditure—not on capital account, because that has reached over $80,000,000 at the present moment. We are entitled to a detailed statement showing a comparison with rates on railways similarly situated in any other part of America, to see whether the people of the maritime provinces are paying a higher rate than they ought to pay. Matters will be worse in a few years than they are now.

The Minister of Railways has told us what he intends to do under the arrangement with the Canada Atlantic Railway. The Intercolonial, he assures us, will have a brilliant future, just as the same thing was predicted on the acquisition of the Drummond Counties Railway. I venture to tell the minister that any arrangement he makes with the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the running of trains over the Canada Atlantic from Montreal to the Georgian Bay, will be to the advantage of the Grand Trunk Railway—that any sum paid by the Dominion of Canada for the purpose of securing running powers over that road will be greater than the net receipts resulting therefrom, and that the result of acquiring those running powers will be a greater deficit on the Intercolonial than exists at the present time. The position of affairs in this country is alarming. The expenditure is increasing by leaps and bounds. Is it possible that the people of Canada, with the enormous expenditures which they are making in every part of the country, will be able to bear an expenditure of $8,000,000 a year for the purpose of running the Intercolonial Railway ? Bad crops in the Northwest for one year would put the finances of the country in a very serious position. The public debt is not decreasing, and it cannot decrease when a road which ought to be at least self-sustaining is costing the country so much. Yet the Minister of Railways could to-morrow make such arrangements with a couple of companies or with a syndicate that instead of an expenditure of over $8,000,000 a year the country would receive $750,000 a year for the Intercolonial Railway. Is the minister forcing the country to that position ? Why should he do so? There is no reason for it. The Intercolonial Railway is a benefit to the people of the whole Dominion especially to the people of Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces, and a means of inter-communication. It is built, as I stated before, on as good a line, if economically managed, as any line of railway in the country. Oh, we are told, it runs against water communication. What is the position of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway from the ports of Sarnia and Windsor to Quebec? They run against the finest system of water communication in the world for six months in the year. The Intercolonial Railway is in no different position in that respect from the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk. To a certain extent the Intercolonial parallels the St. Lawrence river from Point Lévis throughout the province of Quebec ; but when it reaches the maritime provinces, it passes through nearly the centre of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. What different position does it occupy, then, with reference to earning powers, from the other railways? None whatever. Besides that he says it does not follow commercial lines. And yet that line from Quebec down to Moncton, which is at present a non-paying one, is to be met by competition. The people are asked to build for the Grand Trunk Pacific another line for the purpose of competing with it.

The hon. minister says that the freights charged upon the Intercolonial Railway are competitive freights against the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has a shorter line of communication. Well, then, in what position will we be when the Grand Trunk Pacific is built? You say that that will give a shorter line from Lévis to Moncton, but it will be another competing line in opposition to the Intercolonial Railway. It is time for our people to be alarmed at the position. We have statement after statement from Ministers of Railways, from one year to another, as to what the probable results will be in the future, and in that respect the present Minister of Railways differs from all his predecessors. He does not want to paint a bright future for the Intercolonial Railway. He says that there is bound to be a large deficit next year unless we give him unlimited powers for the purchase of locomotives and freight cars, so that he may be able to cheapen freight rates. I suppose another necessity in that respect would be to reduce the gradients. That whole matter would involve an expenditure, not of $8,000,000 a year only, but greatly in excess of that amount—and for what? For the purpose of making both ends meet. A more extraordinary statement I never heard from a Minister of Railways. The only way, he said, to remedy the deficit is to increase the rates of freight, and he does not think he can increase them, because there is a feeling in the maritime provinces against any increase on account of free tolls on the canals. But he also suggests another remedy. We are, he says, short of seventy-five locomotives, and we ought to have easier grades and an increased number of freight cars; and when we have these we will be able to carry freight cheaper and lessen the deficit. But he ought to be prepared with a financial statement showing what the expenditure in these respects will be and how much cheaper he can carry freight if he has these improvements made. But, Mr. Chairman, it will be the same old story next year and year after year. So long as the management continues to be as it is at present, we will find a continuous record of increased deficits.

There is another little detail. I see that the capital expenditure at the end of 1905 was $4,665,265 on the Intercolonial Railway. That is the capital expenditure during that year, and on the Prince Edward Island Railway it was $1,335,975. The hon minister states that the receipts of the Prince Edward Island Railway are about $11,000 less than last year, and the increase in working expenses is $65,000. Last year the deficit on that railway was in the neighbourhood of $90,000. Add the increased expenditure this year of $65,000 to the shortage in receipts compared with last year of $11,000, and you have $76,000 to the bad on these two items alone. The hon. minister has not given us the actual deficit or the expenditure on account of capital on the Prince Edward Island Railway, but he says that the difference between revenue and expenditure upon that road must be in the neighbourhood of nearly $90,000. Add that to the deficit of last year, and you will find that for the purpose of running a little narrow gauge road—which ought not to have cost more than $4,000,000, but on which the capital expenditure is $6,000,000—you have a deficit or nearly $200,000 per year. What excuse can there possibly be for any such state of affairs? I would say to the management of that road: If you cannot run things better, I will try something else. The hon. minister ought to have taken such a course, both on the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway, instead of coming down with that de profundis speech of his, in which he says, in the most melancholy of tones: I regret deeply to have to make such a statement. I would try some experiment, and see if the management of these roads could not be made more conducive to the interests of the people than they now are. Will the country accept such an apology? Will the country endorse such an exhibition of incompetency and extravagance? I am afraid that the people do not look narrowly into the expenditure of this country. They do not criticise the enormous extravagances of the gentlemen who are our rulers at present. If they did as any commercial concern would, look into their own business more closely, the results would be very different. Here we have a Minister of Railways blandly presenting us with a statement of these two roads, showing mismanagement in every line—one of these roads 1,300 miles long and the other about 230 miles long; one a narrow gauge road, and both running through as fine a country as there is in Canada. Both are roads which ought to pay, and yet the hon. gentleman comes down with a statement showing a deficit between revenue and expenditure of nearly $8,000,000, namely, $8,000,000 on the Intercolonial Railway and $1,335,975 on the Prince Edward Island Railway. I have not got all the figures as to the expenditure on the Prince Edward Island Railway, but I will venture to say they are between $900,000 and $1,000,000, making a deficit of $9,200,000 taken out of the pockets of the people for the purpose of running two mismanaged roads under the direction of the government.

I have my duty to perform; I have presented the facts to the people, and if the people will submit to a continuance of this mismanagement, I have nothing more to say. But it puts an end to all prospect of state-ownership of railways in this country. It is the most fatal blow that ever was struck at that policy. It shows that under the management of a government, such as now constituted, we can expect no economical management of any state concern. It puts back for fifty years in this country the prospect of state-ownership of railways or of state-ownership of any public utility. Nor do the conditions justify any such lamentable exhibition as we have had. As the Minister of Railways himself says, the government can buy materials cheaper than any other railway owner in the country. Under the system in vogue when I was manager of the Intercolonial Railway, when we invited tenders for supplies, I found that I got supplies of the best quality, because they were tested, whenever there was a dispute, by the McGill College in Montreal, whose decision was final, and we got them cheaper than any other railway in the country.

On a government railway you can get men at cheaper rates and men who will serve more faithfully than under private management. But, if you build work-shops greater than are needed, if you undertake extraordinary expenses for useless purposes from one end of the line to the other, of course you cannot look for success. When I ceased to have charge of the railway in 1896, I had reports from the officers who are at present in charge of the system stating that the system was in a better position than when we took charge of it. And not only was the position of the road improving, but expenditure on capital account had nearly ceased, as ought to be the case on the Intercolonial. There is no justification for expenditure on capital account on an old railway. The same is true, except for the expenditure on the branches with regard to the Prince Edward Island road. That capital account of the Intercolonial should close, as I said before. Mr. Chairman, I have set before this committee and this country the broad facts of the management of the Intercolonial; and if the people will submit to such management, they will submit to anything.

Mr. S. BARKER (Hamilton). I do not intend to enter to-night into any criticism in the shape of a reply to the speech of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson). On two occasions since I entered parliament, I went through a very considerable amount of labour to analyse the annual report of the Minister of Railways of this government and to lay before the House, in some detail, the conclusions at which I arrived. But I found so little attention paid by hon. gentlemen opposite to any word that was uttered in criticism of the government management of the Intercolonial, that I consider it would be an absolute waste of my time and of the money of this country to spend an hour in the criticism of any Minister of Railways under this administration. I say that frankly, I say it deliberately; for, having spent weeks at examination of the long and most extraordinary reports issued year after year by the government as to the management of these railways, I felt that that labour was absolutely thrown away, and time occupied in addressing the House worse than thrown away, because it involved an expense to the country. I have said before in this House that in criticising, and giving my reasons for the criticisms, that if any ordinary company in Canada or the United States, were managed as the Intercolonial is managed under this government, the directors of that railway company would be liable to criminal indictment for the manner in which the business was administered.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BARKER I say that deliberately. And I know whereof I speak. I have had some experience in railways; I have had thirty years' experience; and I say, deliberately, that if a board of directors of any ordinary railway company laid their accounts before their shareholders and the public in the way in which the accounts of the government with regard to the Intercolonial are presented, those railway directors would find themselves in jail; and I defy contradiction of that statement.

So I am not going into the details to-night. I object to going to all that labour for the third time. But the minister of Railways has made one statement in my presence to which I wish to refer. I had not intended to speak at all, but after he had made the statement to which I refer, and while sitting here at my desk, I tested the accuracy of his figures. And I will give the House the result of that test and will leave the House to judge how far they can trust accounts as explained by the hon. minister. The hon. gentleman said that the Intercolonial was 75 locomotives short of the number it ought to have for the proper conduct of its business. Am I right?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. Well, after the hon minister made that statement I took the mileage and locomotives of the Intercolonial Railway and of the three other principal railways of Canada, the Canadian Pacific, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Northern. And I found that the Intercolonial has more locomotives to the mile than any of these roads. And I will prove it. At page I—6 of the Report of the Minister of Railways we find it stated that the Intercolonial has a mileage of 1,322 miles. And, at page I—115, of the same report, we find that the Intercolonial——

I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, to be obliged again to call attention to the point to which I referred a few minutes ago, the manner in which this committee is conducted, as illustrated by what we see,—gentlemen standing up and talking all over this chamber.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BARKER. I have stated that the Intercolonial has a mileage of 1,322 miles. At page I—115, of his own report we find that the minister has on the Intercolonial 299 locomotives in use and 3 locomotives in repair—a total of 302. That means that he has one locomotive for every 4⅓ miles of the system. In the same report we find that the Canadian Pacific Railway has a mileage of 8,062, and the locomotives owned and hired number 999. So that the Canadian Pacific Railway has 1 engine for a small fraction over 8 miles on the average—about half as many, in proportion, as the Intercolonial. The Grand Trunk Railway has a mileage of 3,158 and has 699 locomotives or 1 for every 4½ miles. So, the Grand Trunk Railway, with its enormous traffic, has a smaller number of engines proportionately than has the Intercolonial. The Canadian Northern has a mileage of 998 miles and 98 locomotives, or 1 locomotive for 10 1-10 miles. Here is the summary :

	Miles.
Canadian Pacific Railway, 1 locomotive for each	8
Grand Trunk Railway, 1 locomotive for each	4½
Canadian Northern Railway, 1 locomotive for each	10 1-10
Intercolonial Railway, 1 locomotive for each	4⅓

I put that as a sample of the sort of statements we get from the Railway Department.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. As a friend of public ownership, and as one who still at times advocates that principle in this House and elsewhere, I cannot agree with the statement made by the Minister of Railways. His statement is a very discouraging one ; and I agree with the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) that if a better showing cannot be made in favour of public ownership, the country will not long stand what we have of it to-day. There is nothing miraculous about public ownership. Public ownership must be vindicated by a sound business administration, and by nothing else. Now have we had a sound business administration of the Intercolonial ? So far as I can gather, we have had anything but that. There has been a political administration of it, there has been an extravagant administration of it, and there has been a use of it, or rather a misuse of it in the interest of other railways that happen to be rivals. Now if we are to have public ownership tried in this country, and the experiment is well worth being tried, there must be sound business administration, and good results must be shown. The road must be put into the hands of men who have no connection whatever with politics. We have seen public ownership of railways in Europe, and in every country in Europe, a budget is brought down every year containing an explanation of the state ownership of railways and its results. There is not a Minister of Railways who comes down in any of those parliaments who makes such a speech as has been made here to-night; on the contrary, he brings down a business statement, he shows his railway is being administered as a business proposition, he is showing a profit on the construction of the road, on the capital invested in the road, and he is showing that the people are getting lower and lower freight rates and a better service in every direction. Now public ownership, public administration of railways in all the countries of Europe has proved to be a success, and it is proved to be a success because it is under sound business administration and not the kind of administration we have in this country. That being the case I say we ought to make an effort to have a similar administration of our national railway. And why is not the experiment tried ? Why does not this government say : We are determined to make the experiment of a business administration of our public railway ? Let them get a man like Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, or Sir William Van Horne, or Mr. Chas. M. Hays. Let them do like the city of Glasgow, which gets a Dalrymple to administer its street railways, and the consequence is that it has the finest street railway system in the world. They are doing it in connection with telephones in the old country, they are doing it in connection with everything else, both by municipalities and by the state, and the basis of it all is that the administration is put into the hands of business men, and politics are not allowed to interfere.

Why can't we do that in this country ? Why can't we have the experiment made in public ownership by a proper administration of the railway we have ? It is a great railway, it is a great proposition, it could be made to pay, it could be made to pay in the maritime provinces which they say is a poor country. I agree with the hon. member for Lanark that it is a good place to try the experiment in. But let us first of all make the revenue pay the expenses, without any regard to capital account ; then let us try to pay on the capital account, and if we can do that we can extend the state system all over this country and bring great relief to the people. In Ontario we do not want to see the Intercolonial ruined, we do not wish to see it made a by-word to the people. We would like to see it prove a success in the maritime provinces, and see it extended through Quebec and into our own province of Ontario. We would like to see the Intercolonial brought into Toronto, brought to the Niagara frontier, brought to the Detroit river, brought to the Georgian bay, and finally to the upper lakes. But we never can hope for that under such an administration as we have at the present time, and necessitating such a statement as has been made here to-night. Why, Sir, it brings the blush of shame to any one, to any citizen of this country, to hear the statement made here to-night that the railway is being run as a first-class railway with a third-class traffic, and is producing this enormous deficit that has been produced. If the character of its traffic is only that of a third or fourth-class railway, if the department is spending so much money to maintain it as a first-class railway, I want to see it maintained as a first-class railway, and I want to see it administered as a business proposition and nothing else, and as state owned railways are administered in every other country in the world. They are a success in Australia, they are a success in New Zealand. In Australia they found a Canadian railway man to take hold of and improve their system. We have got railway men in this country who can make a success of the Intercolonial to-day; we have railway men in this country who if you give them charge of that road, will make it pay running expenses out of receipts, and begin to build up a surplus against the investment on capital account. Why can't we have it? Why cannot the Liberal party take up a proposition of this kind and show that they can do something with it? The only thing I can see is that they have some ulterior purpose in view, they wish to discredit the principle of public ownership. We know what the Prime Minister said about public ownership in a speech made in this House when he tried to discredit the principle. Why don't they try and make it a regulator of transportation? In the United States they are trying now to improve transportation by increased government regulation, and if they are not successful in that, the only thing left is government ownership and they must come to that. If they come to that in the United States it must be on the principles of a business administration, and a man like Roosevelt will take hold of the railways in that country and administer them as a business proposition, and not as a political proposition.

Now I ask the Minister of Railways to tell the people of this country why he cannot make that railway pay. If it is not paying because the freight rates are not high enough, let the freight rates be raised. No member for the maritime provinces will stand up here and justify that road being run with freight rates that don't pay. They must do either one of two things, increase the rates or reduce the expenses. I agree with the hon. member for Lanark that the first experiment to make is in the reduction of expenses, and in the meantime an administration on business principles instead of a political administration. I hope some effort will be made in that direction. Let them try to get feeders for that road, and make alliances that will bring business to it. But unfortunately every arrangement that has been made up to the present with other roads is in a way to milk the Intercolonial, and turn it in as a feeder to other roads instead of making other roads feeders to it. The government went into what they called a great national transcontinental system of railways, they are expending millions and millions of the people's money, but they take good care not to make the Intercolonial a part of the system. Why are we building another railway down in the maritime provinces to compete against this road we now own, when the Minister of Railways confesses there is not sufficient traffic for three? On the contrary he should have used the Intercolonial as the basis of a thoroughly national system, and extended that system to the west and ultimately to the Pacific. But on the contrary we have given all the opportunities to a private enterprise, the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the result is that we are not having anything approaching to state ownership or a state owned railway, in this country, but the state is being bled enormously to build up great private railways which are not sufficiently checked nor sufficiently regulated. Now in this country we do not seem to have enough confidence in ourselves to make the experiment of a state owned railway as it ought to be made.

I deplore that fact. The hon. Minister of Finance will soon be in a position that he must justify the expenditure of state ownership we have here or be prepared to abandon it, because it is not sound financially and cannot be justified. The justification that was given here to-night as against the canal system in the west will not bear investigation. It has nothing to stand on. My hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has dealt with that and dealt with it in a convincing way. The hon. Minister of Finance and the government will be in such a position that they cannot justify what is taking place to-day and the call will go forth for an increase in the rates and a reduction in the expenses of the Intercolonial Railway. That is the worst thing that can happen to the people in the maritime provinces. They ought to take a pride in the state owned railway. It is their servant, it is operated in their interest and they ought to take a pride in seeing that the state owned road is made a success, and that the railway is not something that ought to be milked and depleted and run in an extravagant way. Let them take an interest in having low freights, but let them take an interest in its economic and sound business administration. If they do that they will benefit themselves and the whole country and they will see the demand for public owned railways in this country increased. I could talk for a long while this evening in favour of state owned railways, but I do not wish to do so. I only wish to enter my protest against any such statement as that made here to-night that the deficits have increased and are likely to increase. On the contrary the statement ought to be that the prospect is that deficits are soon to end on the Intercolonial Railway and that it will not only pay its running expenses out of its traffic receipts but that it will soon be earning enough money to pay something on the investment. That is being done by all other first-class railways, whether state owned or private, and it is the only principle on which to administer a railway. You must make it a commercial success. There cannot be any other reason for the existence of a railway than that. It must be made to pay, the traffic over the road must maintain it and any proposition in favour of any other kind of railway, whether state owned or not, cannot be justified. In Germany some of the railways are for the purposes of defence, but even these railways are made to work in with the commercial and business interests of the country and they are not only using them for the defence of the country but they pay from the point of view of aiding the trade of the country. In no country is the excuse made that a railway, because it is a government road, ought to be run at a loss. If the Intercolonial Railway is a round-about road why cannot it be shortened? It is easy to make a short cut but that short cut should not be made in an extravagant way. If the Prince Edward Island Railway can be improved and they say it can be improved an expenditure should be made for that purpose, but once it has been improved the road should be run as a business proposition and its receipts should pay the cost of its maintenance. If we do that we will do something for public ownership and we will see the idea spread. I am more than discouraged to hear the statement which has been made here to-night that to all intents and purposes a state owned railway cannot be made a success. What is this weakness in the Canadian people that of all the people in the world who have an organized government they cannot succeed in the successful operation of a public owned railway? There is very little competition. There are no railways cutting into the Intercolonial Railway except the Canadian Pacific Railway and that does not count in respect to local traffic at all. When we have conceived a great principle we ought to realize it and make it a success. If hon. gentlemen say that there is some kind of weakness in us as a nation, that our public men are not of the character to administer a trust of this kind, let them say it boldly, but I repudiate that idea as a Canadian. I say that there ought to be sufficient patriotism in the men engaged in public life here to take that railway out of politics, put its administration into the hands of a commission or of one strong man who knows his business and who would have no political interference, as I would like to see it, if we did that I am sure that we would find a way of making the traffic pay the cost of maintenance. Canadians are equal to that, but the confession is now made, as it has been made year after year in this country, that in some way a state owned railway cannot be made a success, and if that confession continues to be made I have no hope for the idea of public ownership of railways in this country. I say that public ownership is a great and growing principle. It is extending all over the world. It has justified itself in connection with railways, it has justified itself in connection with various municipal utilities and it is justifying itself in every direction today. It is a success in England, it is a success in Germany, it is a success in France, it is a success in other colonies such as Australia and New Zealand, and if it can be made a success there it can be made a success here, if we only try the experiment. Let the government take this department absolutely out of politics. Let them provide a new administration for the Intercolonial Railway. Let this new administration be composed of smart, able railway men. Let us try that experiment for three years. Let us try it between now and the next election even if it does cost some votes in the maritime provinces. The everlasting love of office seems to be the inspiration that actuates almost all of our public men. Why do they not form an ideal and try to realize it in connection with our public affairs? Surely ideals are better than love of office and better than votes, and if that is the case let them take the ideal of public ownership and try to realize it. If they do I believe the people will give them credit for it and be disposed to keep them longer in office rather than remove them. But this everlasting idea that we must not disturb this voter's interest, or the interest of that province, or else it will go against us in the next election must be got rid of. We must adopt a sound administration in connection with the Intercolonial Railway and if we do it will pay its way from this onward. Instead of having a deficit the cost of maintenance will come out of the traffic earnings and in a short time there will be a surplus which can be applied to the payment of the interest on the cost of the road.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I want to correct a few figures I gave in reference to the expenditures on capital account and the deficit on the Intercolonial Railway. I find on looking over the report that the amount of the expenditures on the Intercolonial Railway on capital account for the current year was $4,214,750. Then, there is to supplement that in the supplementary estimates, $450,515. That makes a total expenditure on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway, independent of the running expenses, of $4,665,265. To this add the deficit on the Intercolonial Railway which the hon. minister says is $1,860,000, or which may be $2,000,000 at the end of the year, and it makes $6,665,265. The amount of the expenditures on capital account on the Prince Edward Island Railway last year was $1,003,300. In the supplementary estimates for this year there is a vote of $85,050, making an expenditure on capital account for the current year of $1,101,825 to which is to be added the deficit between the expenditures and receipts of $200,000—I am estimating that but I think I am a good deal under the mark—making $1,335,975. I stated that the total deficit for the current year was $8,100,000; I find that it is $8,001,240.

Mr. OSLER. I do not propose to criticise the statement of the Minister of Railways; I do not think it is worth criticism. The short speech of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) was quite within the mark. I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to one phase of this matter. It is quite true that it has always been the custom to charge the deficits of the Intercolonial Railway to capital account, but that is making a false representation to the country and making the people believe that the Intercolonial Railway is providing for itself.

Mr. FIELDING. What does my hon. friend mean by saying that it has always been customary to charge the deficit to capital account?

Mr. OSLER. It has been customary.

Mr. FIELDING. To charge the deficit to capital account?

Mr. OSLER. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not charged to capital account; it is charged to the debt of the country.

Mr. HAGGART. The deficit every year is added to the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway; it is not paid out of revenue.

Mr. FIELDING. How could you pay it out of the revenue of the Intercolonial Railway when that revenue is not sufficient. It is paid out of the general revenue of the country.

Mr. OSLER. It is added to the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. HAGGART. You are wrong; I looked into it to-day.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. FIELDING. The meaning of the expression 'capital account' in our public accounts is well known, and when the hon. gentlemen says that the Intercolonial Railway deficit is charged to capital account he is mistaken. It is charged to the general revenue of the year.

Mr. OSLER. Not of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FIELDING. The general revenue of the Intercolonial Railway is not enough. The receipts of the Intercolonial Railway are credited to the revenue of the year and the exepnditures are charged in the outlay, so that the deficit is charged against the income of the country for the year.

Mr. OSLER. The deficit is made out in such a way that the country does not realize the immense amount of money it costs us yearly to maintain that railroad. It is the custom to charge the deficit of the Intercolonial Railway in this manner, but it is a wrong principle. Until the country knows exactly what this railroad is costing them, and until the government realize their responsibility and operate this railroad in a business like manner, the present condition of things is likely to continue.

Mr. FIELDING. When the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) takes the capital, expenditure and deficit for the year and charges and treats it all as the deficit of the year. I think he is unreasonable. The money charged to capital account, if properly applied, always goes to the betterment of the property, and the interest on capital expenditure is a legitimate charge on the year's operations, but to charge the whole of the year's capital to the deficit account is a method of calculation that my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) would not like to have had applied in his day.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Alexander Mackenzie when Minister of Railways said that the Intercolonial Railway was a completed undertaking, and that the capital account should have ceased altogether. That is my argument, and my statement is that the capital account or whatever you call it is expended on the railroad for the year, and in that way there is over $8,000,000 taken out of the pockets of the people of the country this year.

Mr. FIELDING. When my hon. friend takes the deficit for the year and adds that to the capital expenditure for the year, he is unfair. The money expended on capital, assuming it is properly applied, goes to the betterment of the property and you only have the right to charge the interest on that capital to the annual output.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) was taking the capital account and he was adding to that the deficit which must be paid from some source, and he said the Intercolonial Railway cost the people of this country that much more than the people receive out of it. The Minister of Finance says that we should not charge the deficit to capital.

Mr. FIELDING. You should not charge the capital with the deficit.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What will you do with the deficit ?

Mr. FIELDING. You have to pay it out of the general revenue of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Suppose a private corporation were operating a railroad and there was a deficit of $1,000,000 a year, and you had deficits of this kind accumulating year after year ; in the end that must be met by a fresh supply of capital or you must close up your railroad. It seems to me that the deficits on the Intercolonial Railway as on any other railroad must in the end be paid out of capital. The Minister of Finance says we have not added the deficit to capital from year to year.

Mr. HAGGART. As a matter of fact we have.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Finance says not.

Mr. HAGGART. I say we have.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am assuming for the purposes of argument that we have not. It seems to me that that only makes the conditions worse, because while we have $76,000,000 of capital account, in order to get the true position of affairs we should have added to that year after year the deficit, which if this railroad were owned by a corporation would have to be added to capitalization or provided for in some way. I do not know much about railway accounts, but I think that is common sense. While we must accept the statement of the Minister of Railways as to some of the causes which in his opinion have led to this extraordinary result during the past year, it seems to me that the hon. minister did not give any satisfactory explanation as to why there is so remarkable a difference between the results of the operation of this railway and the results of the operation of the other great railways in Canada. I understand that the percentage of expenditure to receipts on these other railways is from 65 to 70 per cent while on the Intercolonial Railway the percentage of expenditure to receipts is 110 to 115 per cent. That is a very remarkable difference. We know that some peculiar conditions have to be taken into consideration in connection with the Intercolonial Railway.

We know that the Intercolonial Railway competes with water carriage more than any other railway in Canada; we know it runs through a portion of country in the provinces of New Brunswick and Quebec, which is not very thickly settled; but outside of these reasons and the low rates which were mentioned by the Minister of Railways, I do not know of any reason which should operate to make the results so very different. It is remarkable that from 65 to 72 per cent of the gross earnings are sufficient to operate railways in other parts of Canada, and even in the same portions of Canada, while in the case of the Intercolonial it takes 110 or 115 per cent of the gross earnings. What is the reason for that? Is there not some other reason than what the hon. Minister of Railways has given us to-day ? My right hon. friend the Prime Minister declared in a speech within the past fifteen or eighteen months that the whole system was vicious. The Minister of Railways seems to have given very good evidence to-night that there is something wrong about the system, otherwise he would have been able to have set forth a different result from what he did. If the system is vicious and brings about such an extraordinary result as he has presented, how is it that we do not hear from the government some statement of the particulars in which it is vicious and some proposal or policy by means of which that vicious system can be modified so as to become at least less vicious and produce better results? There is no use of calling on the House and the country year after year for a million or a million and a half to pay off a deficit, or for three or four millions to be spent on a capital account that should have been closed long ago, and saying without any explanation that the whole thing is vicious. There is not much logic or reason or statesmanship about that.

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend think the capital account should have been closed? I know that the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) thinks so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That, I suppose is the proper principle to follow except so far as extensions are concerned.

Mr. FIELDING. And betterments.

Mr. BARKER. No ; betterments out of revenue.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not profess to speak as an expert, but I think the usual principle is to make the expenditure out of revenue except for extensions, for an absolute change, for a better class of rails, making due allowance for the old ones——

Mr. FIELDING. Or increased rolling stock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Only so far as it does not supply the place of rolling stock purchased in the first instance.

Mr. FIELDING. Quite correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think we are very far apart; so that it might be sufficiently accurate to say that the capital account should have been closed long ago. At any rate, the additions should not have been so extensive as they have been in past years. It is no use to state bald results, and simply to say that the system is a wrong one. If the results are bad, let us know a little more in detail the reasons for these bad results and the mode in which they can be alleviated. I do not think the Minister of Railways has given us much information. He has argued along very general lines and made very general statements, but he has not given us any proposal or laid down any policy or made any suggestion which, so far as I was able to follow him, would lead to any amelioration of these results in the future. We must remember that these results have obtained during a period in which the country has been very prosperous and has been developing very rapidly, and in which railways all over Canada and the continent of America have been showing better results than ever before in their history. During that very period, when you might have expected some better conditions on the Intercolonial Railway, when there has been to my knowledge an enormous traffic over it in the maritime provinces, you not only do not have better results, but you have worse results, and that in face of the declaration made by this government in 1898 or 1899 when they extended the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, that that extension would put an end for ever to those deficits of which we had heard so much in bygone days. My right hon. friend sat where he does to-day and heard his then Minister of Railways and Canals proclaim that in no uncertain words. But instead of the extension to Montreal producing any such results as were then predicted, it has produced the results set forth by the Minister of Railways this evening. If the system is vicious and the conditions are bad, why do we not have some policy or suggestion looking for an amelioration of those conditions?

Mr. OSLER. The Finance Minister says that expenditure on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway should be charged to capital, and that only the interest should be charged against revenue. That would be all very well if there were a profit from the expenditure of capital. The Minister of Railways told us to-night in his very lucid speech that we had come to the point where we must realize that the Intercolonial Railway must be operated at a loss. That being the case, do not let us deceive ourselves, but let us boldly face the fact and let the people of this country realize that all the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway is practically a charge against the revenue of this country. The Intercolonial has been in operation as a finished road for the greater part of twenty five years. It is quite true that during the first ten or fifteen years in the life of a railway, expenditures for renewals, increased sidings, &c., are charged pretty much against capital. But having taken two trips over the Intercolonial last summer, I think the roadbed, the rolling stock and the railway generally is in a first-class condition.

Therefore there should not be any necessity for an expenditure exceeding the ordinary expenditure on a completed railway. Very few of the items now charged to capital account on the Intercolonial Railway would be charged to capital account by any ordinary railway company. We are deceiving ourselves by adding year after year $3,000,000, $4,000,000, $5,000,000 to capital account, on which there is no apparent possibility of our obtaining any returns. Therefore that money should be charged, not to capital, but to revenue, because it is so much less in the operation of the railroad. The extraordinary thing to my mind is that item after item is for extensions of sidings and extensions of accommodations, and yet, according to the minister's own statement, the gross earnings for this current year are not greater than they were two or three years ago. That is something no one can understand. The Intercolonial Railway is doing a large business, it is participating in the increased business all over the country, and as is has not, according to the hon. minister, changed its rates for passengers or freight it ought, in the ordinary course of things, to have received a very much larger gross revenue this year than it did the year previous. That is quite apart from the increased expenditure. But if you take the trouble to look over the items charged to capital account in the public accounts in 1904, you will see how utterly absurd they are, especially on a road which is not doing, according to the minister's statement, any increased business. The statement of the minister can have only one meaning, and that is that the business on the road to-day is not greater than it was two years ago, and yet an enormous sum has been expended the last two years on rolling stock and on renewals of rolling stock, so that the road ought to have a very ample supply of rolling stock for its business. Take item after item in this long list of expenditures charged to capital account, and you will find such items as increased accommodation at small stations, $662.57, siding to wharf at Campbellton, $1,250. Although there is no increase in business, these little sidings here and there are charged to capital account. Then there is a new freight shed $1,228, dwelling for agent $1,699 and freight house $1,300 charged to capital account, and these on a road which has been in operation for 34 or 35 years and has been a finished road for 25 or 30 years. No private corporation would dream of charging these items to capital account.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does an ordinary corporation charge to capital account ?

Mr. OSLER. Nothing except permanent extensions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It depends on whether there is an increase of revenue ?

Mr. OSLER. When a road has been put in first-class order, when all its bridges and other permanent structures are completed, there is no charge for maintenance or renewal added to capital account. Take such items as these charged to capital account: Alberton, new station, $24; Oxford and New Glasgow branch, $206.16. One item after another of this description, some of them large items, are charged to capital account when they should have been charged against revenue. I think that the hon. the Minister of Finance, when he brings down his budget, ought to face this question, because as this account is now made, the account of the new transcontinental road will be made. He should let the people know exactly what that new road is going to cost. Taking the statement of the Minister of Railways that we cannot expect anything but deficits on the Intercolonial Railway in the future, we are simply attempting to deceive ourselves when we do not charge the whole amount expended on the Intercolonial to revenue.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to recall to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance the argument he was so ready with two or three years ago, when, in this House, I called attention to the very objectionable system of the government of charging the renewal of rails to capital account. What did the hon. gentleman say ? He said : Oh, what difference does it make whether you charge it to capital or working expenses, the country has to pay all the same. If that be so, if the capital expenditure plus the deficit goes to the general debt of the country, what is the use of finessing about whether it is correct to make the charge to capital account or not. It is quite true the deficit is not charged to the capital of the Intercolonial Railway, but the debt of this country to-day is so much greater by the deficits on the Intercolonial Railway. During this administration, the Intercolonial Railway has run short by nearly $3,000,000, including the present year. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say for a moment that our national debt is not thereby so much increased ? That I take to be practically what the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) means, and the people do not seem to understand that our deficits on the Intercolonial Railway are running up the debt of this country. The hon. gentleman speaks as if calling the loss a deficit, wipes it off. But somebody has to pay the money; it must come out of the pockets of the people; it is added to the debt of the country. What is the position in the year reported upon in the Blue-book before us ? The Minister of Railways, who thinks he has made a most satisfactory report, has paid $114 to earn every hundred dollars we got in, and according to him that is satisfactory. If that were satisfactory to him in his own personal affairs, he would soon be wound up. No man is able to pay $114 out of $100 by any process I have ever learned unless he goes into debt, and this country goes into debt every year it has a deficit. Of that there can be no question. The Finance Minister may say that the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway is not added to by these deficits. That is quite true. We find at page ii 32 the whole thing set forth, and you find millions upon millions added from year to year to capital expenditure and in another column the deficits, but they all come out of the same pot and the country has to foot the Bill. Whether you call it technically capital account or not, the country has to pay it. What my hon. friend means is that the people ought to understand that.

Three years ago I argued that very large sums improperly charged to capital should be charged to revenue and that there should be no concealment of the real loss on working by turning over to capital account—But the hon. gentleman wanted a surplus on these occasions. He was then congratulating the country that in every line of our public finances there was a surplus. His surpluses were made out of deficits. He had a deficit on the Intercolonial, but he charged it up to another account, to capital, and, having pulled out the plum of a surplus in this way, he said : 'What a good boy am I !' But the hon. gentleman knew what he was doing, and I am afraid the Minister of Railways of that time knew also. He was covering up his tracks ; he was charging to capital what he ought to have charged to income. He simply ran the country into debt ; and then he said : 'What difference does it make whether you charge it to capital or anything else, for the country has to pay it just the same ?' All we say on this side is, tell the truth ; charge to revenue what ought to be charged to revenue, and let the country know the exact condition of affairs. But the hon. gentleman preferred to have a little surplus to add to the general balance, although the railway accounts were thereby all wrong. And the Minister of Finance knows it as well as I do, and I defy him to say that he does not. He knew that the system pursued by the ex-Minister of Railways was wrong. He knew that that gentleman was replacing steel rails that ought to have been replaced out of revenue and was charging them to capital account. The hon. gentleman knew that was wrong ; he knew that no railway in the world would tolerate that kind of thing. But it suited him then to say : 'Oh, what does it matter ; the country has to pay it anyway ?' That was the position he took then. But now he is very particular whether things shall be charged to capital account or to revenue account. If the hon. gentleman would tell the people the facts, if he were ready to tell them that the country had to spend $114 in order to get $100, he could hardly join in the congratulations offered by the Minister of Railways upon the 'satisfactory' showing he has made.

Mr. FIELDING. It was very kind of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) to tell us what the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) meant, because it may be very helpful to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler). I was not dealing with what that hon. gentleman meant, except so far as what he meant could be gathered from what he said. He said that deficits on the Intercolonial were charged to capital account. I said he was mistaken, and I repeat it. All the explanations as to what the hon. gentleman meant will hardly help. The receipts of the Intercolonial form a part of the revenue of the country. And the expenses charged to income—not dealing, for the present, with the capital—are charged on the other side of the account; and if the receipts are not equal to the expenditure there is a deficit, and that deficit is paid out of the general revenue of the Dominion. The expression 'charged to capital' has a meaning in our public accounts and in the general discussion of our public affairs.

Mr. BARKER. So far as the railway is concerned.

Mr. FIELDING. Not only so far as the railway is concerned, but with regard also to public works. 'Charged to capital' means that that portion of our expenditure is not to be made out of our ordinary annual revenue, but represents some special service.

Mr. BARKER. If the minister will allow me, I will recall to his memory the fact I pointed out, two or three years ago, that what was properly chargeable to revenue should be charged to revenue, and the same with regard to capital, in order to show the true position; and the hon. gentleman said that it did not make any difference—that the same paymaster had to pay it in any case.

Mr. FIELDING. That is where the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) is not fair. He insists: Tell the truth. I accept that, with one amendment: Tell the whole truth. If he looks up the debate—I am sure he will remember it—he will find that I said that it was important to have the accounts properly kept, but that in the end the result was that the country had to pay the cost. When the hon. gentleman said that I suggested that it made no difference whether an expenditure was charged to capital account or revenue account, he is stating that which is entirely wrong—I never made such a statement in the sense he has suggested.

Mr. BARKER. Will the minister be good enough to tell me, then, what possible application his remark could have to the argument I was making when he said that the country would have to pay it in any case?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend (Mr. Barker) will have to go back and read the whole debate in order to see the application of my remark. I do not propose to do that to-night, but I have a distinct recollection of the circumstances. I had not the pleasure of hearing the statement of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) to-day, and therefore I do not intend to go into the debate as to the general question of charging to income or charging to capital. But I have heard some of the speeches in this debate, and I must emphatically dissent from the rule laid down by the hon. member for West Toronto as to charges to capital. He has read a number of items that are charged to capital account and made merry over them. He found a charge of $24 for a station charged to capital account. Well, if a new station had been constructed and $24 was due on it, why would it not be right to charge it to the same account as the previous expenditures on the same building? What difference does it make that it is only $24 if it is really part of the expenditure?

Mr. OSLER. Does the hon. gentleman say that this was a balance due on a station?

Mr. FIELDING. I presume it must have been. I do not think they would start to build a station for $24 and charge that to capital account.

Mr. OSLER. That is the way it was stated.

Mr. FIELDING. And it was fairly stated. It was charged to the same account as the other expenditures on the building—for it is a fair presumption that is how it occurred.

Mr. OSLER. But there is no presumption in this item.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman would not pretend that they could build a new station for $24?

Mr. OSLER. There is nothing in the item to show anything else.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) knows that he is putting an utterly preposterous interpretation upon it.

Mr. OSLER. No.

Mr. FIELDING. Will he pretend to say that he understands that the railway could build a new station for $24?

Mr. OSLER. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, if the hon. gentleman is absurd enough to try to believe that, I suppose I can hardly say anything to convince him to the contrary.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I know a sixteen-dollar station on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. INGRAM. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) that there are a number of stations that have not cost more than $24. I could name such stations on different railways in this country. It is by no means a remarkable thing.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman knows that, he ought to give the Minister of Railways credit for greater economy for putting up a station for $24.

Mr. OSLER. There are many buildings put up along new roads in this country that cost less than $24. I know of such roads in the west.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) makes the statement, and I am not allowed to contradict him. But he must allow me to entertain a lingering doubt as to his acuracy. Another item to which the hon. gentleman called attention was one of $1,200. Well, if this represented a new building, if it meant an addition to the property of the Intercolonial, why not charge it to capital? It is a perfect legitimate charge.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) convinces me that he is absolutely unacquainted with railway matters. He has made the statement that I am very ridiculous. I say that his statement is so ridiculous from the railway point of view that I am amazed that he should make it. Here is a railway which is not earning money, a railway which has been built and in operation long enough to get into first-class condition, a railway whose capital account should have been closed ten or twelve years ago. I can tell him that there is not a railway managed by business men that would think of charging these items to capital. The Minister of Railways has stated that we must expect a deficit in the management of the Intercolonial. That being the view of the case, what is out duty? Our duty is to let the country know the truth, to let it know fairly and squarely that every dollar we spend on new railway stations, on renewals, on locomotives, is a charge that has to be paid out of the current revenue. It is absurd to add to capital that which is not going to make any return. It is nonsense to say that you are adding to capital account that which is not adding value to the work. The Finance Minister said that the value is there for all time. There is no value in an expenditure on railway property where there is no return coming from it. Therefore, all the money you expend on the Intercolonial from a business standpoint, the standpoint the government ought to adopt, no matter for what cause, unless it is distinctly going to produce a revenue, should be charged against operating expenses and the revenue. Let us know exactly what it costs; and until we do that, the country will not realize that the Intercolonial must be managed differently from the way it is now being managed.

Mr. FIELDING. Now we have the hon. gentleman giving us another most extraordinary doctrine of finance, more remarkable than those which were given by gentlemen preceding him. I understand him to say that because there is no return of revenue to the treasury on that item, therefore it must not be charged to capital but to income; he stated that in a clear and emphatic manner.

Mr. OSLER. In connection with the operation of this railway, yes.

Mr. FIELDING. In connection with any work for the Dominion government.

Mr. OSLER. No.

Mr. FIELDING. What is the difference?

Mr. OSLER. The minister must not put words into my mouth that I did not use. I am speaking now of one particular transaction, one particular item; and I say that when you are going into a new enterprise and expending money, then such expenditures are quite entitled to be charged to capital account. But when you have a railway that is already completed as the Intercolonial is, these items are a charge not against capital but against revenue, because the road will not bear them, it will not justify these charges, and then the money is thrown away so far as revenue is concerned, and should be charged to revenue.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a doctrine that the Intercolonial capital account should have been closed many years ago, and is a fad of the hon. member for Lanark.

Mr. BARKER. Supported by high authority.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. member for Lanark referred to the statement as having been made by Mr. Mackenzie.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, he made that statement in the House here.

Mr. FIELDING. Did not that hon. gentleman add money to the capital account of the Intercolonial long before the advent of the hon. member for Lanark as Minister of Railways? Did not he himself as Minister of Railways add to the capital account of the Intercolonial after Mr. Mackenzie made that statement?

Mr. HAGGART. I did.

Mr. FIELDING. Of course he did. Then I take the position that the Intercolonial capital account should not have been closed years ago, and that if Mr. Mackenzie were alive to-day, in the light of the new conditions, he would not say so. Close the capital account of the Intercolonial! Do they not know that the Intercolonial has had large sections added to it, that after its final completion it was enlarged by the additional Rivière du Loup road?

Mr. OSLER. Do not deliberately misunderstand me. My statement was made in connection with a road that is already completed and in running operation for many years, and has nothing to do with the extensions of that road. I know the Minister of Finance does not suppose that I suggested that new extensions should not be charged to capital account. For instance, the expenditure on the Drummond county entrance into Montreal is a legitimate charge to capital account. If the account is closed you cannot add anything to it.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend from Lanark added to the Intercolonial the Prince Edward Island Railway; and the money paid this year for the extension of that new line in Prince Edward Island he says should be treated as part of the deficit of the year. So that even according to his contention, they are all wrong. But let us get away from the mere question of extensions. The hon. gentleman is a director of a great railroad, and I speak with deference to his views of the matter. But I am bound to say that his doctrine on finance is so utterly preposterous that if Sir Thomas Shaughnessy was in the gallery and heard him, he would be ashamed to have him as a director.

Mr. OSLER. And I can tell the Finance Minister that if Sir Thomas Shaughnessy heard him he would be ashamed to have him on the board as a director.

Mr. FIELDING. We differ in our estimate of what Sir Thomas Shaughnessy would think, that is all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps you will agree to refer it to him.

Mr. FIELDING. No, for I am sure the hon. gentleman might get an inside interview with him, which I could not get. However, leaving aside for a moment the question of extensions, we know that during the past ten years there has been such an advance in railroad operation in this country that many railroads have had practically to be rebuilt. For instance, where we had 56-pound rails before we now have 80 and 100-pound rails.

Mr. INGRAM. That is a very old story.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, of course it is an old story, and so is the Lord's Prayer, but some people have to be taught it all the same. Don't we know that where railways had small locomotives ten years ago they now have to have big ones? And in consequence of big locomotives we have to take down light bridges and build heavier bridges. None of these things belong to extensions. But you have your railroad improved, you have bettered your conditions by putting down heavy rails where light ones were before, by putting on heavy locomotives where you had lighter ones before, by building stronger bridges, by lengthening out curves, by changing grades, by doing all these things you may not have a new railroad but you have added enormously to the wealth of your property, and you charge all these things properly to capital account.

Mr. OSLER. The Finance Minister has referred to arguments that were made in this House in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway many years ago. This increased bridge accommodation, these heavier engines are as well known to us as the Lord's Prayer, and it is not necessary to remind us of them. There is almost no item in this account that I can see that refers to the items the minister has mentioned just now. The enormously increased expenditure on the Intercolonial for the items which the minister has mentioned, is no justification for these outrageous charges, and have not resulted in an increased business.

Mr. FIELDING. That is another question.

Mr. OSLER. I beg your pardon. If a mans' business does not warrant the extension of his warehouse he is a fool to add to his warehouse. The Finance Minister knows as well as I do that there are certain expenditures that are perfectly legitimate to charge to capital account; there are certain other charges that are not, such as every item in this long list which, in a well built and completed railway, ought to be included, especially where the railway is not earning interest on its cost, not only that but it is not earning its running expenses. Now I do not want for a moment to suggest that the Intercolonial is not an enormously valuable asset to Canada; I do not suggest that it should be run without any profit to the country, because it is of very great value. But I say that the country ought to know exactly what this luxury is costing, or what this work of necessity is costing. I say that as these accounts are juggled—there is no other word for it—in this statement, the country does not know what this road is costing.

Mr. FIELDING. I object to the word 'juggled' as being entirely unjustified.

Mr. OSLER. I did not mean it in an offensive sense.

Mr. FIELDING. I accept the hon. gentleman's explanation. The accounts are kept in precisely the same manner as they have been kept from the beginning of confederation, and I say they have been kept properly too.

Mr. BARKER. I want to say a word about the question of capital account. The hon. gentleman seems to be surprised that there should be any recognized principle about a going concern finding whatever is necessary to carry on its business. The recognized principle is, and you will find it laid down in Adam's work, that a going concern has to provide without adding to its cost or its capital whatever may be necessary for its business from time to time. The principle is exactly the same as that which applies to a merchant or a manufacturer who wants to make some improvement about his premises. For instance, a merchant might want to put in plate glass windows. He does make a mortgage to pay for them or add them to the cost of his establishment. His business warrants the improvement and he puts plate glass windows in because the improvement is going to pay him and he is going to get a revenue immediately from it. That is the principle which must be applied. You must not add to your capital account. It is a check upon keeping your improvements in step with your business. The difficulty about that has arisen in this way: A very large number of railway companies found, when they wanted to put in heavier rails or get heavier locomotives or whatever the business at that time warranted, that they had not the money and these railway companies had to put a capital mortgage on their property. So, they did things which were contrary to the true principle—I can give the hon. gentleman the authority for it—which is that a going concern must maintain itself and keep up with the business of the times, and if it cannot do that it should show by its revenue accounts that it is losing and not cover it up.

Mr. FIELDING. That is what we show.

Mr. BARKER. No, it is nothing of the kind. What does the hon. gentleman do? Instead of incurring debts on revenue account he turns around and says: Give us $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 and we will pay for these things. Does he pay interest on this $1,000,000? Does he charge a cent of interest to the Intercolonial Railway? If he issued $10,000,000 of government debentures to improve the Intercolonial it would not add one cent to the annual charge of the Intercolonial Railway. Yet, the hon. gentleman says it makes no difference. He must go on with the improvements, buy locomotives, improve the stations, provide heavier rails, more equipment to the mile. He says: Let that go on; give them all they want. These betterments are worth $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 but the Intercolonial Railway does not have to pay any interest. It can make a profit on the betterment, which does not cost it anything. Well, it is the business of the government, but government business should not be conducted on that principle. The government should charge to the revenue of the road every item for the improvement of its business because it gets back the results of the improved business. Then, you will know whether your road is a paying road or not. You have expended on the Intercolonial some $70,000,000. If it were $170,000,000 you would make no difference in the charge against revenue of the road. Go on and spend all you like, that is the principle the Minister of Railways and Canals has been going on for the last ten years. The hon. gentleman speaks about a $24 station. I have seen charged to capital account the price of a bucket at a station. I have seen charged to capital account a chair in the Halifax office.

Mr. FIELDING. That would be quite correct.

Mr. BARKER. I can only say that if the auditor of a railway company, of the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway, wanted to charge a chair, put into an office, to capital account, the general manager would probably think that he had gone crazy. I do not think there is a business man in this House who would say seriously that a little article of that kind bought in the ordinary course of a railway company's business, should be charged to capital account. Here, the accountant goes over the list trying to reduce his expenses to the lowest possible point and picks out a pail here, a whitewash brush there, and a chair in another place, as was done at the Halifax office, and charges it to capital account. That is the principle the hon. gentleman is going on. If the hon. gentleman constructs even 50 feet of siding for the purpose of doing more business and getting more revenue he charges that 50 feet to capital account, and it goes into the debt of this country. I think that in appealing to business men I can say this is simply ridiculous. The proper principle is that a going concern carries itself along and where there has been any departure from that has been the result of absolute necessity on the part of the company which could not raise the money at the time.

Mr. FIELDING. I think we had better have an exact statement of the facts about that bucket before we base any charges upon it.

Mr. BARKER. I referred to it before.

Mr. FIELDING. All the buckets that will enter into the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific are going to be charged to capital account, and the hon. gentleman will have a splendid chance to introduce buckets and hold them up before the House and say: You should not charge them to capital account.

Mr. BARKER. I do hold that on a railway which has been working for fifty years it should not be charged to capital.

Mr. FIELDING. I want to take exception again. It is my misfortune to have to take exception to the statements of those who make a profession of knowing so much more than I do about railways, but the hon. gentleman has laid down another dangerous doctrine as the true doctrine, and that is that a railway as a going concern must provide its own improvements.

Mr. BARKER. That is the strict principle.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the principle other companies adopted ?

Mr. BARKER. I told the hon. gentleman that these other companies from sheer necessity were obliged to charge these improvements to capital account and that was their only excuse for doing so.

Mr. FIELDING. Then, it is only bankrupt companies, I suppose, that do it ? Very well then ; I have my hon. friend put on record on that point. I am obliged to disagree there again because when the Canadian Pacific Railway applied for the last amount of additional capital they said that one of the purposes for which they wanted that was to buy additional rolling stock for the road.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman made some comment as to the way the accounts were kept.

Mr. FIELDING. I said they were all right.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman said that the accounts are kept in the same way as they were in my day in reference to revenue and what should be charged to capital. My orders to the accountant of the Intercolonial Railway were to charge nothing to capital account unless he had strict instructions from the head office to do so. All the expenditure on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway, when I was at the head of the department, were expenditures which perhaps ought not to have been charged to capital account but which were required. One was a large expenditure in St. John and there were expenditures at two or three other places of a similar nature which the officers of the Intercolonial Railway thought ought not to be charged against them. My instructions were that all the expenditures—and that is the only proper way—on the Intercolonial Railway should be charged to revenue and expenditure. The hon. gentleman spoke about placing new steel rails upon the road. I laid as many steel rails per year as have been laid under the administration of the hon. gentleman, and I never thought of charging them to capital account. They were charged to revenue account. I did not even charge the difference between the weight of the rails taken up and the weight of the rails put down to capital account. There is only one way of doing it. Unless some abnormal expenditure is required in connection with the railway, or unless a new railway is being built, you should cease your capital expenditure altogether. The hon. gentleman says that there were many expenditures added to capital account which were for additions to the Prince Edward Island Railway, but he did not say one word about the $4,666,000 which was added to the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway nor justify that expenditure as being for additions to the road in any way whatever. It is true that the $1,100,000 capital expenditure on the Prince Edward Island Railway includes the Hillsboro' bridge, but was that a new line.

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly; it is an extension.

Mr. HAGGART. If it is a new branch altogether it is justifiable to charge it to capital account. My criticism was chiefly directed against the Intercolonial Railway, and I say that there was no justification for charging one dollar of that $4,466,000 to capital account.

Mr. EMMERSON. This question of expenditure on Intercolonial Railway capital account is brought up year after year, but it seems to me that some hon. gentlemen do not consider the fact that we have a capital account in connection with our canal system. Year after year we vote millions for capital expenditure on our canals and millions for the working expenses of these canals. If you apply to the canals the principle which my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) would apply to the Intercolonial Railway, then, the canals are completed and the capital account for them should be closed.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the object of that comparison ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That if the people of the country want to know what is expended on canals and what is expended on government railways, these facts must be taken into consideration. Not long since the Canadian Pacific Railway got power to issue a loan of $20,000,000 for the express purpose of betterments to their road.

Mr. BARKER. Was it not for extending the road ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No; a large proportion of that amount was for betterments of the railroad, and the Canadian Pacific Railway did not seem to think it wrong to have a capital account. It has been asserted here to-night that the gross earnings of the Intercolonial Railway are not increasing. That idea is seriously erroneous.

Mr HAGGART. It was your own statement.

Mr. EMMERSON. I made no such statement.

Mr. BARKER. I said the net earnings were not increasing.

Mr. EMMERSON. Let me point out that the increase of gross earnings in 1902-3 over 1901-2 was upwards of $650,000; the increase of gross earnings in 1903-4 over 1902-3 was $14,000, and it is estimated that for the current year the increase in gross earnings will reach $400,000. My hon. friend (Mr. Osler) said that this was a finished concern; that its earning power was at a standstill and that therefore we should close the capital account——

Mr. HAGGART. The railway report shows that there was a decrease in gross earnings last year as compared with the year before.

Mr. EMMERSON My hon. friend is entirely wrong. An increase in gross earnings is shown by the report, and it is estimated that this year the increase will be $419,474.

Mr. BARKER. Do you not see that if you pay $114 to earn $100, the greater the gross earnings the more you will lose ?

Mr. EMMERSON. That is another question altogether. It was stated here that the gross earnings of the Intercolonial Railway were not increasing, and I have shown by the figures that that statement is erroneous.

Mr. BARKER. What I said was that the net earnings were growing worse from year to year. There was nearly $1,000,000 short last year, and the minister tells us that this year there will be $2,000,000 short.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon friend from Toronto (Mr. Osler) and my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) made the positive statement that although we had extended the railway, the business had not increased. I have shown that that statement is wrong. Furthermore, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) looks at the figures he will find that in the capital expenditure of the Intercolonial Railway last year is included $800,000 for the acquisition of the Canada Eastern, and that fact he has ignored. The other expenditures charged to capital account last year were for extensions to the road, improvements, betterments, double tracking at different points, and the strengthening of the bridges on the Drummond County section which are not adapted for the passage of the very heavy engines used at the present day. If the cost of management of the Intercolonial is only to be computed upon the basis of capital expenditure, I think it is only a fair proposition that the same method should be applied to the canals. The people of the country want to know what the Intercolonial is costing them by way of capital and other expenditure. They also want to know what their canal system is costing them. I think we should look at this matter fairly. The Intercolonial has many burdens ; but it is doing and has done a great work in connection with the building up of this country. It is a splendid road, and it is kept in condition. I think the conditions prevailing on the Intercolonial to-day are such that no man will say that there is a better road anywhere in America. Its train service is modern and up-to-date, and its roadbed is in splendid repair.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. I would like to ask a question of the hon. member for Hamilton in reference to capital account. Suppose a mine were discovered on the line of the Intercolonial, and a town sprung up there suddenly, and the management came to the conclusion that it would be necessary to construct a new railway station there, and also a hotel costing say $500,000. We understand that the Grand Trunk Railway Company, now that they are taking over the Canada Atlantic, propose to build a new railway station and a hotel in Ottawa. Would not these two items be properly charged to capital account ?

Mr. BARKER. With regard to the hotel, we might perhaps go into the question whether or not the hon. gentleman would allow me to sell whisky and a number of other things. With regard to the new station, I would say that, on the principle on which all such accounts are kept, if there were business forthcoming from that time that would justify the building of the station, then the station should be built and the revenue from the mine should pay for it.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. I am not asking what should pay for it. I am asking whether that should be charged to capital account or not ?

Mr. BARKER. No, it should not. It is a strict rule that a going concern maintains itself. The principle is that the going concern adds to its facilities according to the business it sees before it from these improvements, just as my hon. friend would in carrying on his business as a merchant.

Mr. LEFURGEY. On this item of the Murray Harbour branch and the Hillsboro' Bridge, the minister promised to bring down the contract and some other things.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think the papers were all brought down.

Mr. LEFURGEY. We have not received any notice of the papers having been brought down up to the present time. I do not think we can very well proceed with this item until they are brought down.

Mr. A. MARTIN. The minister is in error. I asked for papers with regard to railway extensions in the province and also for papers in regard to expenditures on railways and canals in Canada, and these have not been brought down.

Mr. HAGGART. I think the hon. minister must have them in his desk, as the clerk of the House has not received them yet.

Mr. EMMERSON. Instructions were given to have all that information prepared, and I was under the impression that it was brought down. I shall certainly have it prepared for my hon. friend.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Before the item passes we would like to know what the minister is doing with regard to railway extension in the province. With regard to surveys from Stanley bridge, I think there are some in the department, but would like to know what the government propose doing ? There are also in the department, as the minister knows, some claims for damages sustained by parties in connection with those surveys, and the papers with regard to these ought to be laid on the table.

Mr. EMMERSON. Does my hon. friend mean the papers relating to the land damage claims ?

Mr. A. MARTIN. Yes. The minister knows that some demands have been made on him which the department very unfairly refused to pay, and there is a report of his own engineer in his department which gives some information in regard to them. I would like to see those papers.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not think it has a bearing on this at all. That is on the Murray Harbour branch ?

Mr. A. MARTIN. No, on the Stanley and New London branch.

Mr. EMMERSON. We will have an opportunity of discussing it on the supplementary estimates.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would suggest that as the information promised is now down, we should let this item stand until the supplementaries are down.

Mr. EMMERSON You could pass it now and discuss it then.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Will the hon. gentleman give us the assurance that there will be some items in the supplementaries on those lines ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I can say that to my hon. friend.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. On the 13th March there was an order of the House for copies of all correspondence, &c., relating to land damages claimed on account of lands expropriated on the Murray harbour branch of the Prince Edward Island Railway. That has not been brought down. We were also promised the contract between the government and the contractor and we have not yet got it. This item cannot be intelligently discussed until that information is before us.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As the papers are not down, it would be perhaps better to take this item up with the supplementaries.

Mr. EMMERSON. There will be an item in the supplementaries on this very matter when the whole item can be discussed.

Mr. LEFURGEY. When will the supplementaries be brought down ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Some time next week.

Mr. R L. BORDEN. I think we are justified in insisting that the papers should be down before we pass this item.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have no desire to prevent discussion and only suggest that, in order to expedite business, we should pass it now, and discuss it later on in the supplementaries. My hon. friends will then have no cause to complain of lack of information.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The other course would be more desirable and there will be no time lost.

Item allowed to stand.

National Transcontinental Railway—surveys, construction and other expenses, $1,328,500.

Mr. HAGGART. There was a map brought down which partly explains what surveys have been made, but we have no report of the expenditure.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is all contained in the report of the commission.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there any information in it in reference to gradients and curvatures ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It has very full information.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have never received any copy.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was laid on the table three weeks ago and ordered to be printed immediately and ought to be here now. I cannot understand why it is not.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister will see we cannot discuss this without any information. But if the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) wishes it, we could make an arrangement under which this matter could be discussed on an item in the supplementary estimates. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, so far as I am concerned ; but I do not wish to press it upon any other hon. member. The only conditions I would make are that we shall have the printing expedited—the printed copies should have been in our hands long ago—and that the supplementary vote to which reference has been made shall be brought up at a reasonably early date. With that understanding, we can pass this item.

Mr. EMMERSON. Do I understand that objection is taken to item 87?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, that item stands.

Public Works—chargeable to income—harbours and rivers—New Brunswick—Cape Tormentine—improvements and repairs to harbour works, $22,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote is to provide for works required to make good the damage done by the teredo, the harbour works having been greatly weakened by that destructive sea worm. This work is in Westmoreland county.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I understand that a great deal of money is spent every year on this work, as the storms are very heavy and the waves break over this work. It is stated that the work is not rip-rap. It is open to the storms and in the first storm of the autumn some portion is apt to be carried away. It is contended that it is absolutely necessary that this should be rip-rapped with heavy stone.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is what is being done by the department, as it has been found that the work done hitherto is not satisfactory.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Has a contract been let for this?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, it is done by day's work.

Chance harbour—breakwater, $1,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This work is in the county of St. John. The item is a revote to provide for the completion of a small submerged breakwater. The estimated expenditure on the work is $4,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the work be completed this season?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, it is hoped so.

Clifton (Stonehaven)—breakwater—improvements and repairs, $9,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for maintenance.

Mr. TAYLOR. That can hardly be, for only $2,500 was voted last year, whereas $9,000 is asked this year.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is intended to render the harbour more secure and to prevent the waves bringing in sand and filling in the harbour and reducing its depth. The total cost will be $9,000 according to the estimate of the engineer.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is this being done by contract?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, by day's work.

Dipper harbour—breakwater, $35,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is under contract.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will this complete the work?

Mr. BRODEUR. This sum of money will complete it. But it may not all be spent this season.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the total cost?

Mr. BRODEUR. The estimate is $48,000.

Mr. BLAIN. How much was expended last year?

Mr. BRODEUR. Three thousand dollars. It is estimated that $33,000 will be spent before the end of the fiscal year. This work is in the county of St. John.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose there have been some changes during the last year that increased the estimate. I noticed in the discussion of the item last year the minister stated that the total cost would be $30,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that new plans have been made.

Mr. BLAIN. I would regard that as rather unusual, that the estimated cost was $30,000 as stated last year, and then the following year new plans are prepared increasing the amount to $48,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. Tenders were called for on the original plans and none came in; so the plans had to be changed and new tenders asked for.

Durham—wharf, $15,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. Tenders have been called for and received, but the contract is not yet awarded. This estimate is for a wharf to be built at the eastern end of the parish of Durham, which will give a depth of six feet in low water and fifteen feet in high water. It is a new wharf.

Great Salmon river—groyne and breakwater combined, $4,300.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is also in the county of St. John. Some tenders were called for but none were received, and we will have to call for new tenders. Nothing has been spent during the past year.

Miscou harbour—wharf, $8,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is under contract, in Gloucester county. The contractors are Messrs. Burns and Charleson. It is a new wharf. There are about 70 houses on the island including 11 lobster factories, two of which are engaged also in canning salmon. The population is estimated at about 500. The occupation of the people is mainly fishing for lobsters, herring, salmon and smelts. Farming is carried on to some extent.

Mr. FOWLER. The lobster factories are mere sheds. The whole bunch of them would not be worth $2,000, and you are spending $15,000 for a wharf to accommodate about 50 houses.

Mr. TURGEON. If the hon. gentleman lived on the north shore he might change his opinion. The lobster factories there represent a large amount of capital, thousands of dollars are invested in each one of them. There is an immense trade in bringing provisions to these factories, but they are without any shipping facilities.

Mr. FOWLER. How many months in the year are they in operation ?

Mr. TURGEON. For about three months Operations commence early in the spring and last into the middle of the summer. A large amount of provisions is brought in from the west. There are deep sea fishermen there also. Ten or twelve years ago there were 25 or 30 deep sea fishermen there who had large schooners, but they had to abandon the business because they could not get their schooners into the harbour. They belonged to Miscou harbour, but they could not use the harbour for the want of shipping facilities. Now they will be able to use their own harbour. They are about to build another wharf which will give the island communication with the mainland. Cargoes of flour come every week from the west.

Mr. INGRAM. How long has all this been going on ?

Mr. TURGEON. For years and years. Unfortunately the government has neglected those people.

Mr. INGRAM. I can tell the hon. gentleman that all the exports he is talking about do not amount to $75,000, and the imports only amount to $50,000.

Mr. TURGEON. I cannot give the figures, but I know there is an immense trade done there which requires these facilities.

Mr. INGRAM. The contract price is $13,700. Why are you increasing that amount ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not asking for a larger amount. The contract is for $13,700, but there is superintendence and contingencies in connection with the execution of the contract, which raise the amount to $15,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Would the minister excuse me for going back to the Salmon river item, and tell me when are these tenders to be called for.

Mr. BRODEUR. They will be called for as soon as possible, this season.

Mr. FOWLER. I suppose the minister is aware that the mill property at Salmon river is owned by a private corporation. Are there any people living there except those who are working for this corporation ?

Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is a public work.

Mr. FOWLER. I say there are no people served except the people of this corporation. I know the property very well. It is a mill property and it is owned by an American corporation.

Mr. BRODEUR. It belongs now to the government.

Mr. FOWLER. I am speaking of this place, Salmon river. There is no public interest, but that of the people who are engaged by this corporation. The facilities you put there will simply be for the advantage of this corporation.

Mr. DANIEL. This corporation exports a good deal of lumber, does it not ?

Mr. FOWLER. I say that. Does this property belong to the government ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It belongs to the government.

Mud cove—breakwater, $1,600.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for a small cribwork and breakwater 80 feet long which it has been decided to build at Mud Cove on Grindstone Island at the head of the Bay of Fundy.

Mr. BLAIN. How much was expended last year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $1,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is $1,000 of a revote ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Where did the hon. minister say Mud Cove is ?

Mr. BRODEUR. In King's and Albert county.

Mr. FOWLER. What point ?

Mr. BRODEUR. At Grindstone Island which is 30 miles long and a quarter of a mile wide.

Petit Rocher—breakwater, $25,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is under contract.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the amount of the contract ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $32,900.

Mr. BLAIN. Will that complete the work?

Mr. BRODEUR. That will complete if it can be spent during the year.

Pointe du Chêne—repairs to breakwater, $15,000.

Mr. BRODEUR—This vote of $15,000 is required to make provision for carrying out the undermentioned works of reconstruction and repair on the Pointe du Chêne breakwaters in order to make good damage caused by the severe storm of November 4, 1904, and to strengthen the harbour works generally which have been much weakened by the teredo, by protecting the seaward face or the outer breakwater with a stone slope to break the force of the waves and placing additional stone along the outer face of the inner breakwater.

Quaco—harbour improvements, $27,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote is asked for to make full provision in accordance with the estimate submitted by the chief engineer for extending the east piers at the entrance to Quaco harbour a distance of 250 feet to protect this high water harbour effectually from southeast seas. The total cost will be $27,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Will it complete the work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes

Mr. DANIEL. Will it be finished this season ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We hope so.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that an extension of the present breakwater ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. It will cost $30,000 will it not ?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is a revote of $16,500.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is a revote of $16,500 out of $20,000 and you are asking for $27,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. The amount has not been expended. We expected that a certain amount would be expended by the first of July, but it will not be expended.

Richibucto—extension of north pier, $19,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote is required for completing the projected 300 feet extension of the new work off the north beach in Richibucto harbour. It is under contract.

River St. John—including tributaries, $16,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is the ordinary vote.

Mr. WILMOT. What is proposed to be done ?

Mr. BRODEUR. These are the general works of improvements on the river.

Mr. WILMOT. What is the nature of the improvements ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I might give the hon. gentleman what was done last year. It is the same class of work that is going to be done this year :

Repairs to tow paths, removal of obstruction to barge navigation, &c., English Toladi, river St. Francis, to lengthen present structure in timber	$200
Trout river, Little Madawaska, improving channel	50
Rocky river, blasting at and near forks	100
Green river, blasting near Little Forks	150

Mr. FOWLER. Under whose direction is this expended ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Shewen's.

Mr. FOWLER. No money is expended without his instruction ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Without his supervision and instruction.

Mr. WILMOT. Is any provision made for dredging ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not out of this vote. There is another vote in regard to dredging.

Mr. WILMOT. There will be dredging done, I suppose ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, there are two dredges there now.

Mr. WILMOT. Are they at work now ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is one which is working now.

Mr. WILMOT. In what locality ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The chief engineer cannot give the information now as to the exact locality.

Mr. WILMOT. There are localities on the river where dredging is required.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will my hon. friend be kind enough to mention the places ?

Mr. WILMOT. Dredging is required at Oromocto shoals, nine miles below Fredericton, and on the Washadermoak river which is a tributary of the St. John.

Mr. BRODEUR. Surveys of the river are being made just now.

Mr. WILMOT. What report do the surveyors make ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No report has been made yet.

River St. John—to provide for contributions to local government not to exceed one-half the first cost of wharfs built by them in tidal waters, $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to say in connection with this item that it does seem to me that the time has arrived when the Dominion government should pay the whole of the cost of these wharfs. The finances of the province are not in a healthy condition and the total cost of works of this character constructed in other provinces is paid for by the Dominion government. I think that New Brunswick should be placed on the same footing as other provinces in respect to this matter. It is very important to navigation that you should supply these facilities to the people along the St. John river. This is just as important as it is to build a wharf at Miscou where this lobster industry is carried on. The St. John river is the highway of commerce running through the centre of the province of New Brunswick and, I do think the Dominion government should defray the whole cost of these wharfs instead of compelling the local government; which is very ill able to do it, to pay half the cost.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand that is in virtue of an agreement between the local and federal governments. I suppose the agreement will have to be carried out until it is changed.

Mr. FOWLER. I might relieve the mind of the minister by saying that I have not the slightest doubt the local government would be perfectly willing to cancel the agreement if the Dominion government would take on itself the burden of providing the whole cost. I know this custom has existed for many years, but there always comes a time when it is well to change, and it seems to me the Dominion government should now consider whether they will not provide the whole cost of these different constructions along the St. John river.

Mr. BRODEUR. That might be discussed when we are considering the relations between the Dominion and the provinces.

St. John harbour—repairs and extension of protection work at base of Fort Dufferin, $500.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this an annual vote?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. FOWLER. What repairs were necessary?

Mr. BRODEUR. The timber decays and has to be renewed.

Mr. FOWLER. Could it not be built of stone and made permanent?

Mr. BRODEUR. It would cost a large sum of money.

Mr. FOWLER. But it might be cheaper in the end.

St. John drill hall, $10,000.
